36. In principle, as I have explained above, it is for the Member States and the contracting authorities to determine the method of calculating an anomaly threshold constituting an 'abnormally low tender'. In any event, EU law provides guidelines for specifying the subject matter of the details that can be required of anyone who submits a suspect tender. (22)

37. The Bulgarian Government submits that the identification of abnormally low tenders may be based only on arithmetical calculations, like that referred to in the national legislation. In its submission, that approach ensures an objectivity which cannot be ensured if the identification of suspect tenders is based on the contracting authority's subjective assessment. (23)

38. I do not agree with that argument. The contracting authority has to identify tenders which appear suspect (and are therefore subject to the inter partes examination procedure) in the light of all the features of the subject matter of the invitation to tender. Comparison with the other, competing tenders, however useful it may be in certain cases for the purpose of identifying any anomalies, cannot be held up as the sole criterion used by the contracting authority. The examination of all components, as such, of the tender enables the contracting authority to determine whether, despite appearances and the distance between its price and those of other tenderers, (24) the suspect tender is sufficiently genuine.

39. In addition, the Court has ruled that the use of a mere mathematical criterion may be contrary to the development of effective competition in the field of public procurement. That is what occurred in the cases giving rise to the judgments in Fratelli Costanzo and Lombardini and Mantovani:

– In the former case, the Italian measure treated as abnormal, and excluded from the tendering procedure, 'tenders with a percentage discount greater than the average percentage divergence of the tenders admitted, increased by a percentage which must be stated in the call for tenders'. Pursuant to that call for tenders, tenders which did not exceed the basic amount by at least 9.48% were automatically eliminated. (25)

– In the latter case, the percentage giving rise to the contracting authority's obligation to undertake an examination of an anomalous tender was fixed at 'a measure equal to the arithmetic mean of the discounts, in percentage terms, in the case of all tenders admitted, increased by the average arithmetic divergence of the discounts, in percentage terms, which exceed the said mean.' (26)

40. The Court held that 'a mathematical criterion in accordance with which tenders which exceeded the basic value fixed for the price of the work by a percentage more than 10 points below the average percentage by which the tenders admitted exceeded that amount would be considered anomalous and consequently eliminated, deprives tenderers who have submitted particularly low tenders of the opportunity to demonstrate that those tenders are genuine ones, so that application of such a criterion is contrary to the aim of Directive 71/305, namely to promote the development of effective competition in the field of public contracts'. (27)

41. On that basis, it may be inferred that a national provision pursuant to which the sole criterion for assessing whether a tender is abnormally low is that its value is 20% lower than the mean value of the tenders submitted by the other tenderers does not comply with EU law.

42. The obligation to examine the genuine nature of all the competing tenders is intended to ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment, in accordance with which public contracts must be awarded. (28)

43. That aim would be undermined if national legislation were to confine to mere percentage criteria (in relation to the other competitors) the situations in which a tender may warrant the classification of 'abnormally low', thereby superseding the provisions of Article 49 of Directive 2009/81 and Article 69 of Directive 2014/24.

C. Statement of reasons for and judicial review of the contracting authority's assessment of whether an abnormally low tender exists (questions 4 and 5)

44. Article 55(2) of Directive 2009/81 provides for the right to a review of decisions taken by a contracting authority. (29) The provision is aligned with the rules laid down in Directive 89/665/EC (30) and, as the Commission points out, ensures respect for the rights laid down in Article 47 of the Charter. (31)

45. Generally, and in accordance with Article 55(4) of Directive 2009/81, Member States have an obligation to make available 'review procedures … at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

46. In relation to abnormally low tenders, the answer to this second block of questions must be approached from a twofold perspective:

– First, by reference to the explicit or implicit nature of the contracting authority's decision regarding the genuineness of any of the competing tenders.

– Second, by reference to the judicial review of the contracting authority's assessment.

1. Nature of the contracting authority's decision (and any reasons on which it is based)

47. In referring to abnormally low tenders, Article 49 of Directive 2009/81 does not impose on a contracting authority an indiscriminate obligation explicitly to state its views on whether the tender concerned is abnormally low.

48. Rather, that obligation arises if, 'for a given contract', the contracting authority considers that 'tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services'.

49. As I have already stated, the obligation on 'the contracting authority is …, first, to identify suspect tenders', (32) in the light of all the characteristics of the subject matter of the invitation to tender and, as the case may be, the relationship between each characteristic and the other characteristics.

50. If the contracting authority takes the view that none of the tenders thus assessed is abnormally low, it is not required to issue an ad hoc statement to that effect. I agree with Mühlbauer and the French Government on this point: mere acceptance of a tender by a contracting authority implicitly demonstrates the latter's belief that that tender is not abnormally low.

51. An ad hoc determination is necessary only where, after noting that a tender may be abnormally low, the contracting authority has allowed the tenderer (under Article 49(1) of Directive 2009/81) to demonstrate its genuineness by asking it to provide the details which the contracting authority considers appropriate.

52. On completion of that inter partes procedure, the contracting authority must, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, assess 'the merits of the explanations provided by the persons concerned' in order to take the 'decision as to whether to admit or reject [the] tenders' that were initially suspect. (33) Naturally, that decision must be supported by a sufficient statement of reasons.

53. Therefore, where it is suspected that a tender is abnormally low, and following the appropriate inter partes examination procedure, the contracting authority must decide whether to admit or reject that tender. When it does this, the contracting authority must set out its view in a reasoned decision in order to respect the rights of the person concerned. (34)

54. That follows from Article 35 of Directive 2009/81, pursuant to which the contracting authority must, 'at the earliest opportunity, inform candidates and tenderers of decisions reached concerning the award of a contract'.

55. On the other hand, if the contracting authority does not consider prima facie that any of the tenders might be abnormally low, no inter partes examination procedure will take place and there will be no explicit decision in that regard.

56. In those circumstances, the decision bringing the tendering procedure to an end will implicitly include a decision not to regard as abnormally low any of the tenders submitted. The reasoning on which that decision is based is simply the lack of any evidence which would have necessitated the specific examination of a suspect tender.

2. Judicial review of the decision that a tender is abnormally low

57. In order to determine how the required judicial review of the contracting authority's decision should be carried out, it is necessary to distinguish between the two situations referred to above: either the contracting authority has explicitly stated its view on the suspicions aroused by a particular tender or it has done so implicitly, by deciding on the outcome of the procedure for the award of the contract without expressing any doubts as to the genuine nature of that or any other tender.

58. Even though it is Directive 2009/81 that is directly applicable, I shall refer to the Court's case-law in relation to Directive 89/665, (35) since, as I have noted, the former directive contains rules that are similar to those in Directive 89/665 as regards the institution of proceedings.

59. The review to which the general provision in the last subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 refers extends to all decisions by the contracting authority which apply EU law in that field. (36)

60. Decisions by the contracting authority which are open to review in this way include, of course, those that award a contract by selecting one of the tenders, but also others of a different kind which have a bearing on the legal position of the parties concerned. (37)

61. Directive 89/665 has not 'formally laid down the time from which the possibility of review, as provided for in Article 1(1), must be open'. (38) The Court's position is that it must be ensured that decisions by contracting authorities can be reviewed effectively and as quickly as possible. (39)

62. The EU legislature has entrusted to the Member States with the task of laying down the 'detailed rules' of the procedures for reviewing decisions by contracting authorities (Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665). (40)

63. It is therefore open to Member States, in principle, to legislate on applications for review of decisions adopted by a contracting authority by providing that they are to be made either jointly or separately (with/from the main challenge). Directive 89/665 neither prescribes nor excludes either of those mechanisms.

64. If Member States, availing themselves of their procedural autonomy, choose to prescribe a joint challenge, they must do so without contravening the purposes of Directive 89/665 in relation to the required effectiveness and speed. They must, in addition, take into consideration:

– the fact that the directive 'does not authorise Member States to make the exercise of the right to apply for review conditional on the fact that the public procurement procedure in question has formally reached a particular stage'. (41)

– the fact that, depending on its characteristics, national legislation which 'requires, in all cases, a tenderer to wait for a decision awarding the contract in question before it may apply for a review of a decision allowing another tenderer to participate in that procurement procedure infringes the provisions of Directive 89/665'. (42)

65. However, it must be borne in mind that the safeguarding of the principle of legal certainty 'would be undermined if candidates and tenderers were allowed to invoke, at any stage of the award procedure, infringements of the rules of public procurement, thus obliging the contracting authority to restart the entire procedure in order to correct such infringements'. (43)

66. The case-law laid down in that judgment cited above is linked to the Court's case-law in connection with the action for annulment provided for in Article 263 TFEU.

67. As the French Government has observed, only measures the legal effects of which are binding on, and capable of affecting the interests of, the applicant by bringing about a distinct change in his or her legal position may be the subject of an action for annulment. (44)

68. With regard to acts or decisions which are drawn up in different stages, the measures which are open to challenge are those which definitively determine the position of the decision-making body 'upon the conclusion of an administrative procedure, and which are intended to have legal effects … and not intermediate measures whose purpose is to prepare for the final decision …' (45)

69. The Court has held that, for the purposes of the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, the concept of 'decisions taken by the contracting authorities' must be interpreted broadly, as the wording of that provision – which 'refers generally to the decisions of a contracting authority without distinguishing between those decisions according to their content or time of adoption and does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature or content of the decisions to which it refers' – 'implies that every decision of a contracting authority falling under the EU rules in the field of public procurement and liable to infringe them is subject to … judicial review'. (46)

70. That interpretation of the concept of 'decisions amenable to review' led the Court to consider that a decision of a contracting authority allowing an economic operator to participate in a public procurement procedure constitutes such a decision. (47)

71. However, the generosity of that interpretation (48) has been limited in all cases to positive decisions, actually adopted by the contracting authority – in other words, decisions which entail an act of will whereby a contracting authority adopts a position when a legal provision requires it to make a decision.

72. As I have pointed out, it is important to differentiate between:

– Decisions in which the contracting authority explicitly states its view on any suspicions which may have been aroused by a particular tender, bringing to an end an inter partes examination procedure for determining whether or not that tender is abnormally low. In my view, that decision, in either of its two possible variations, affects the interests of tenderers, in particular, any tenderer whose tender is rejected for being abnormally low. The alteration of such a tenderer's position in the tendering procedure, together with the autonomy of the procedure in which the contracting authority has made its determination, lend support to the classification of that decision as one which is final and amenable to judicial review from the time it is adopted.

– Implicit decisions of the contracting authority which, in the absence of any doubts as to the genuine nature of the tenders, become part of the decision awarding the contract. Such decisions must be challenged before the courts using the appropriate action for contesting a final decision of that kind.

73. In so far as is important for these proceedings, it can be inferred from the information available that the contracting authority had no doubts which led it to suspect that either tender was abnormally low. Therefore, it did not have an obligation to commence the appropriate examination procedure.

74. In acting in that way, the contracting authority did not adopt any decision which Directive 2009/81 provides may be the subject of a separate review at that time. I stress that, under Article 49 of that directive, the contracting authority was not required to adopt an express decision on whether all the tenders were abnormally low but rather only to follow a certain procedure before rejecting any tenders which it 'considered' to be abnormally low.

75. As the French Government maintains, that article and, in parallel, Article 69 of Directive 2014/24, in conjunction with Article 47 of the Charter, mean only that, for the purposes of applying for a review of the award of the contract, a tenderer who has not been selected may challenge that award on the ground that the selected tender is abnormally low. (49)

V. Conclusion

76. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court of Justice give the following reply to the Varhoven administrativen sad (Supreme Administrative Court, Bulgaria):

'(1) Articles 38 and 49 of Directive 2009/81/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 July 2009 on the coordination of procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts by contracting authorities or entities in the fields of defence and security, and amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC, must be interpreted as meaning that contracting authorities have an obligation to check, in all cases, for the presence of any abnormally low tenders. For those purposes, the number of tenders submitted is irrelevant, as is the fact that it is not possible to apply the criteria laid down in that respect by national legislation; a situation in which contracting authorities must, by reason of its direct effect, comply with Article 49 of Directive 2009/81/EC.

(2) Article 55(2) of Directive 2009/81/EC, read in conjunction with Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, must be interpreted as meaning that, if the contracting authority has no reason to commence the procedure for examining whether a tender is genuine, its assessment may be subject to judicial review in the context of proceedings against the final decision awarding the contract.'

6 Order for reference, paragraph 41 in fine.

7 The Bulgarian Government states (paragraph 9 of its observations) that the technology and materials used for identity documents require or contain classified information and they therefore come under ‘sensitive equipment’ as referred to in Article 2(b) and (c) of Directive 2009/81.

8 According to the order for reference (paragraph 22), the contracting authority ‘took the decision and gave notice of a single contract in accordance with Directive 2009/81’, complying with recital 24 of that directive rather than relying on the option made available by recital 13 of Directive 2014/24. In accordance with Article 16(2)(b) of the latter directive, in the case of mixed contracts, ‘where part of a given contract is covered by Directive 2009/81/EC, the contract may be awarded in accordance with that Directive, provided that the award of a single contract is justified for objective reasons.’

9 Paragraph 22 of the order for reference.

10 References in legislation to abnormally low tenders have been, and continue to be, a constant in EU public procurement law since Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition, Series I 1971(II), p. 682), Article 29(5). Such a reference was included in Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), Article 25(5); Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), Article 37; Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 12), Article 27; Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), Article 30(4); and Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), Article 34. That wording was repeated in subsequent generations of that legislation, such as Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), Article 57; Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), Article 55; and Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243), Article 84.

11 Paragraph 23 of the order for reference. After transcribing that provision, the national court maintains that the criterion of treating as abnormally low a tender that is more than 20% lower than the mean value of the tenders submitted by the other tenderers 'implicitly requires that there are at least three tenders, whereby one tender is assessed against the mean value of the other two tenders.'

12 The Bulgarian Government (paragraph 34 of its observations) takes the same view: where there are only two tenders, there is no objective identification criterion for categorising those tenders as abnormally low, meaning that it is impossible for the contracting authority to suspect that one of the tenders is abnormally low.

13 Although, naturally, it is for the referring court to interpret national law, the question could be asked whether, in fact, the Bulgarian legislation provides for comparison of the price of a tender with the mean value of the other tenders as a simple, non-exclusive, indication of an abnormally low tender. From that perspective, the contracting authority could use other, alternative criteria which, although not specified in that legislation, would enable it to identify whether a tender is in itself abnormally low.

14 The Commission draws attention to this in its 'Guidance on the participation of third-country bidders and goods in the EU procurement market', Communication of 24 July 2019, C(2019) 5494 final, paragraph 2.1.

15 That consistency is evident, in particular, in the judgments of 22 June 1989, Fratelli Costanzo (103/88, EU:C:1989:256; 'judgment in Fratelli Costanzo'); of 27 November 2001, Lombardini and Mantovani (C-285/99 and C-286/99, EU:C:2001:640; 'judgment in Lombardini and Mantovani'); of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others (C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191); of 18 December 2014, Data Medical Service (C-568/13, EU:C:2014:2466); of 19 October 2017, Agriconsulting Europe v Commission (C-198/16 P, EU:C:2017:784); and of 10 September 2020, Tax-Fin-Lex (C-367/19, EU:C:2020:685; 'judgment in Tax-Fin-Lex').

22 In accordance with Article 49 of Directive 2009/81, those details may refer to: (1) the economics of the construction method, manufacturing process or services provided; (2) the technical solutions chosen and/or any exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the execution of the work or for the supply of the goods or services; (3) the originality of the work, supplies or services proposed by the tenderer; (4) compliance with the provisions relating to employment protection and working conditions in force at the place where the work, service or supply is to be performed; (5) the possibility of the tenderer obtaining State aid. The wording of Article 69 of Directive 2014/24 is substantially identical.

23 Paragraph 18 of the Bulgarian Government's written observations.

24 In the judgment in Tax-Fin-Lex, the Court did not rule out that, in certain circumstances, even a zero-price tender may be admissible (that is to say, not abnormally low), no matter how much it may differ from the other tenders submitted.

28 This is reflected in recital 69 of Directive 2009/81.

29 'Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities/entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible … on the grounds that such decisions have infringed [EU] law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.'

30 Council Directive of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33). Article 55(2) of Directive 2009/81 reproduces the wording of the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, which means that the Court's judgments on the latter directive may be applied by analogy.

31 The Commission refers to recital 36 of Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665/EEC and 92/13/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31). According to that recital, the directive 'seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second subparagraphs of Article 47 of the Charter.'

---

32 Judgment in Lombardini and Mantovani, paragraph 55.

---

33 Judgment in Lombardini and Mantovani, paragraph 55.

34 As the Court observed in the order of 14 February 2019, Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco (C-54/18, EU:C:2019:118, paragraph 33), according to settled case-law 'the effectiveness of the judicial review guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter requires that the person concerned must be able to ascertain the reasons upon which the decision taken in relation to him is based, either by reading the decision itself or by requesting and obtaining notification of those reasons, so as to make it possible for him to defend his rights in the best possible conditions and to decide, with full knowledge of the relevant facts, whether there is any point in his applying to the court with jurisdiction, and in order to put the latter fully in a position in which it may carry out the review of the lawfulness of the national decision in question'.

35 The considerations set out below (points 59 to 64) incorporate those which I set out in the Opinion in Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras (C-927/19, EU:C:2021:295).

36 Judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others (C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268; 'judgment in Marina del Mediterráneo', paragraph 26): 'the wording of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 assumes, by using the words "as regards … procedures", that every decision of a contracting authority falling under EU rules in the field of public procurement and liable to infringe them is subject to the judicial review provided for in Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of that directive.'

---

37 Ibid., paragraph 27. The Court therefore supports a 'broad construction of the concept of a "decision" taken by a contracting authority [which] is confirmed by the fact that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature or content of the decisions it refers to'.

38 Ibid., paragraph 31.

39 Judgment of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others (C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 74).

---

40 Judgment in Marina del Mediterráneo, paragraph 32: 'It is settled case-law that, in the absence of EU rules laying down the time from which a possibility of review must be open, it is for national law to lay down the detailed rules of judicial procedures governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from EU law', subject to the limitations inherent in the principles of effectiveness and equivalence.

---

43 Judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 51 and the case-law cited). However, the principle of legal certainty cannot be decoupled from the requirement of the effectiveness of the directives in the field of public procurement.

---

44 See, for example, judgment of 26 January 2010, Internationaler Hilfsfonds v Commission (C-362/08 P, EU:C:2010:40, paragraph 51).

45 See, for example, judgment of 17 July 2008, Athinaïki Techniki v Commission (C-521/06 P, EU:C:2008:422, paragraph 42).

46 Judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras (C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 105).

47 Ibid., paragraph 106, citing the judgment in Marina del Mediterráneo, paragraph 28. Also regarded as amenable to review is '… a decision by which a contracting authority refuses to disclose to an economic operator the information deemed confidential submitted to it by a candidate or a tenderer.'

48 Although it may initially appear otherwise, I do not believe that such a broad interpretation is inconsistent with the case-law which, for the benefit of legal certainty, prohibits tenderers from claiming at any time that there have been infringements of the rules governing the award of public contracts. Both lines of case-law come together in an exercise which weighs legal certainty, on the one hand, against the judicial review of legality, on the other. The aim is to strike a balance with the criterion of the relative autonomy, as regards their content, of the successive decisions of the contracting authority. Thus, for example, the possibility of review has been ruled out in the case of 'acts which constitute a mere preliminary study of the market or which are purely preparatory and form part of the internal reflections of the contracting authority with a view to a public award procedure', as stated in the judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 35). Since all the acts in the procedure are preparatory to the final award of the contract, not all of them provide the same density of content, and only those which have a level of decision-making that is sufficient to endow them with a certain amount of autonomy are open to challenge.

49 According to the order for reference, that is what occurred in this case, since Veridos was able to challenge the award of the contract by relying on the abnormally low nature of the tender submitted by Mühlbauer.

Judgment

1 The present request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), read in conjunction with the principles of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services enshrined in Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between, on the one hand, Caruter Srl and, on the other, S.R.R. Messina Provincia SCpA (‘SRR’), Comune di Basicò (Municipality of Basicò, Italy), Comune di Falcone (Municipality of Falcone, Italy), Comune di Fondachelli Fantina (Municipality of Fondachelli Fantina, Italy), Comune di Gioiosa Marea (Municipality of Gioiosa Marea, Italy), Comune di Librizzi (Municipality of Librizzi, Italy), Comune di Mazzarrà Sant’Andrea (Municipality of Mazzarrà Sant’Andrea, Italy), Comune di Montagnareale (Municipality of Montagnareale, Italy), Comune di Oliveri (Municipality of Oliveri, Italy), Comune di Piraino (Municipality of Piraino, Italy), Comune di San Piero Patti (Municipality of San Piero Patti, Italy), Comune di Sant’Angelo di Brolo (Municipality of Sant-Angelo di Brolo, Italy), Regione Siciliana – Urega – Ufficio regionale espletamento gare d’appalti lavori pubblici Messina (Region of Sicily – Urega – Regional Authority for Public Works Procurement in Messina, Italy) and Regione Siciliana – Assessorato regionale delle infrastrutture e della mobilità (Region of Sicily – Regional Infrastructure and Public Mobility Department, Italy) concerning the award of a public contract for the supply of a service consisting in the sweeping, collection and transportation for disposal of sorted and unsorted solid urban waste, and for other public cleaning services in 33 municipalities grouped within SRR.

Legal context

3 Under recitals 1 and 2 of Directive 2014/24:

‘(1) The award of public contracts by or on behalf of Member States’ authorities has to comply with the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and in particular the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, provisions should be drawn up coordinating national procurement procedures so as to ensure that those principles are given practical effect and public procurement is opened up to competition.

(2) … the public procurement rules … should be revised and modernised in order to increase the efficiency of public spending, facilitating in particular the participation of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in public procurement …. There is also a need to clarify basic notions and concepts to ensure legal certainty and to incorporate certain aspects of related well-established case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union.'

4 Article 2 of that directive, which is entitled 'Definitions', provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

'For the purposes of this Directive, the follow definitions apply:

(10) "economic operator" means any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities, including any temporary association of undertakings, which offers the execution of works and/or a work, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market;

5 Article 19 of Directive 2014/24, which is entitled 'Economic operators', provides, in paragraph 2 thereof:

'Groups of economic operators, including temporary associations, may participate in procurement procedures. They shall not be required by contracting authorities to have a specific legal form in order to submit a tender or a request to participate.

Where necessary, contracting authorities may clarify in the procurement documents how groups of economic operators are to meet the requirements as to economic and financial standing or technical and professional ability referred to in Article 58 provided that this is justified by objective reasons and is proportionate. Member States may establish standard terms for how groups of economic operators are to meet those requirements.

Any conditions for the performance of a contract by such groups of economic operators, which are different from those imposed on individual participants, shall also be justified by objective reasons and shall be proportionate.'

6 Article 58 of that directive, which is entitled 'Selection criteria', provides, in paragraphs 3 and 4 thereof:

'3. With regard to economic and financial standing, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary economic and financial capacity to perform the contract. For that purpose, contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a certain minimum yearly turnover, including a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the contract. In addition, contracting authorities may require that economic operators provide information on their annual accounts …. They may also require an appropriate level of professional risk indemnity insurance.

4. With regard to technical and professional ability, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary human and technical resources and experience to perform the contract to an appropriate quality standard.

7 Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, which is entitled ‘Reliance on the capacities of other entities’, states:

‘1. With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. With regard to criteria relating to the educational and professional qualifications … or to the relevant professional experience, economic operators may however only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required. Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 19(2) may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.

2. In the case of works contracts, service contracts and siting or installation operations in the context of a supply contract, contracting authorities may require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself or, where the tender is submitted by a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 19(2), by a participant in that group.’

Italian law

8 Article 83 of decreto legislativo del 18 aprile 2016, n. 50 – Codice dei contratti pubblici (supplemento ordinario alla GURI n. 91, del 19 aprile 2016) (Legislative Decree No 50 of 18 April 2016 – the Public Procurement Code (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 91, 19 April 2916)) (‘the Public Procurement Code’), relating to the criteria for selection and assistance in compiling the tendering documentation, provides, in paragraph 8 thereof:

‘The contracting authorities shall state the participation requirements which may be expressed as minimum levels of capacity, together with the appropriate means of proof, in the contract notice or in the invitation to confirm interest, and shall carry out formal and substantial verification of the delivery capacities, technical and professional skills, including the human resources of the undertaking’s staff, and the activities actually carried out. With regard to the entities referred to in Article 45(2)(d), (e), (f) and (g), the contract notice may state to what extent those criteria must be fulfilled by the various competing participants. The agent must in any event fulfil the majority of the requirements and provide the majority of the services. The contract notice and the invitation to participate may not include other requirements other than those set out in the present code or other legal provisions in force, or they will otherwise be excluded. Such requirements are, in any event, void.’

9 Article 89 of the Public Procurement Code, relating to the reliance on the capacities of other entities, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘For a particular contract, the economic operator, whether as a single operator or a member of a group within the meaning of Article 45, may fulfil the requirements relating to the economic, financial, technical and professional criteria laid down in Article 83(1)(b) and (c) necessary to take part in a tendering procedure, and, in any event, excluding the requirements laid down in Article 80, by relying on the capacity of other entities, also participants in the group, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. …’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

10 SRR announced an open tendering procedure for the award of a contract for the supply of a service consisting in the sweeping, collection and transportation for disposal of sorted and unsorted solid urban waste, and similar waste, and for other public cleaning services in 33 municipalities grouped within SRR. The contract, for a period of seven years, the total value of which was EUR 42 005 042.16, excluding VAT, was subdivided into three lots. The contract notice specified the economic/financial capacity and technical capacity requirements for each lot. For the purposes of the award, provision was made for the application of the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender, to be identified on the basis of the best quality-price ratio.

11 As regards Lot 2, the value of which was EUR 19 087 724.73 in respect of service provision for 11 municipalities, the contract was awarded to the temporary association of undertakings consisting in the ditta individuale Pippo Pizzo, Onofaro Antonino Srl and Gial Plast Srl ('ATI Pippo Pizzo'), whereas the temporary association of undertakings consisting in Caruter Srl and Gilma Srl ('ATI Caruter') was ranked second.

12 Caruter brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court for Sicily, Italy) against the decision awarding the contract to ATI Pippo Pizzo. ATI Pippo Pizzo also brought a counterclaim against the decision admitting ATI Caruter to the tendering procedure.

13 By judgment of 19 December 2019, that court upheld the principal action and annulled the admission of ATI Pippa Pizzo to the tendering procedure and the award of the contract to ATI Pippo Pizzo. Ruling on the counterclaim, the court also annulled the decision admitting ATI Caruter to the tendering procedure.

14 That court noted that, in accordance with Article 83(8) in conjunction with Article 89 of the Public Procurement Code, reliance by an agent on the capacities of other economic operators of the group is permitted, but the agent must in any event fulfil the majority of the conditions for admission to the tendering procedure and provide the majority of the services in relation to the other economic operators. However, in the present case, the ditta individuale Pippo Pizzo did not, on its own, fulfil the requirements laid down in the contract documents at issue in the main proceedings and it was not able to rely on the capacities of the other undertakings of the temporary association of undertakings of which it was the agent.

15 Caruter brought an appeal against that judgment before the Consiglio di giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily, Italy), the referring court. ATI Pippo Pizzo for its part brought a cross-appeal against that judgment.

16 The referring court considers that the interpretation of the Public Procurement Code by the first-instance court, according to which the agent must, in any event, fulfil the majority of the admission requirements and provide the majority of the services, could be contrary to Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, since that latter provision does not appear to limit the possibility for an economic operator to rely on the capacities of other operators.

17 In those circumstances the Consiglio di giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Does Article 63 of Directive [2014/24], concerning reliance on the capacities of other entities, in conjunction with the principles of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services enshrined in Articles 49 and 56 [TFEU], preclude the application of the Italian national rules relating to "criteria for selection and the supplementing or amending of tendering documentation" laid down in the [third] sentence of Article 83(8) of the [Public Procurement Code], according to which where recourse is had to reliance on the capacities of other entities (referred to in Article 89 of the [Public Procurement Code]), the agent must in any event fulfil the majority of the requirements and provide the majority of the services?'

Request for an expedited procedure

18 The referring court requested the application of the expedited procedure to the present case, pursuant to Article 105 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court.

19 In support of its request, the referring court stated that the present case raised a question of principle having a bearing on the decisions of economic operators wishing to rely on the capacities of other undertakings in order to participate in a tendering procedure, and maintained that that question is the subject of numerous cases before the Italian courts. Furthermore, the continuation of the procedure for the award of the public contact at issue in the main proceedings depends on the decision of the Court, given that the referring court has already ruled on all the other arguments. Lastly, Lot 2 of that public contract concerns the supply of a service consisting in the collection and transportation for disposal of solid urban waste, and for other public cleaning services in 11 municipalities in the region of Sicily. The total value of Lot 2 is EUR 19 087 724.73.

20 In that regard, Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure provides that, at the request of the referring court or tribunal or, exceptionally, of his or her own motion, the President of the Court may, where the nature of the case requires that it be dealt with within a short time, after hearing the Judge-Rapporteur and the Advocate General, decide that a reference for a preliminary ruling is to be determined pursuant to an expedited procedure.

21 So far as concerns, first of all, the fact that the question referred is the subject of extensive litigation in Italy, it should be borne in mind that the expedited procedure under Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure is a procedural instrument intended to address matters of exceptional urgency (orders of the President of the Court of 31 August 2010, UEFA and British Sky Broadcasting, C-228/10, not published, EU:C:2010:474, paragraph 6; of 20 December 2017, M. A. and Others, C-661/17, not published, EU:C:2017:1024, paragraph 17; and of 18 January 2019, Adusbef and Others, C-686/18, not published, EU:C:2019:68, paragraph 11).

22 The large number of persons or legal situations which may be affected by the question referred does not, as such, constitute an exceptional circumstance justifying application of the expedited procedure (order of the President of the Court of 8 March 2018, Vitali, C-63/18, not published, EU:C:2018:199, paragraph 17 and the case-law cited).

23 With regard, next, to the fact that the outcome of the dispute in the main proceedings depends on the answer to be provided by the Court, it is apparent from the case-law that the mere interest of litigants in determining as quickly as possible the scope of their rights under EU law, while legitimate, is not such as to establish the existence of an exceptional circumstance within the meaning of Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure (order of the President of the Court of 8 March 2018, Vitali, C-63/18, not published, EU:C:2018:199, paragraph 18 and the case-law cited).

24 As regards, moreover, the allegedly urgent character of the works to be performed under the public works contract at issue in the main proceedings, it should be noted that the requirement to deal rapidly with the dispute pending before the Court cannot derive solely from the fact that the referring court is required to ensure the rapid settlement of the dispute or from the mere fact that the delay or suspension of the works the subject of a public contract could have adverse effects on the persons concerned (see, to that effect, orders of the President of the Court of 18 July 2007, Commission v Poland, C-193/07, not published, EU:C:2007:465, paragraph 13 and the case-law cited, and of 8 March 2018, Vitali, C-63/18, not published, EU:C:2018:199, paragraph 19 and the case-law cited).

25 Lastly, so far as concerns the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, it is settled case-law that economic interests, however important or legitimate they may be, are not sufficient to justify in themselves application of the expedited procedure (order of the President of the Court of 16 March 2017, Abanca Corporación Bancaria, C-70/17, not published, EU:C:2017:227, paragraph 13 and the case-law cited).

26 In those circumstances, on 13 January 2021 the President of the Court decided, after hearing the Judge-Rapporteur and the Advocate General, to refuse the request for an expedited procedure.

The admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

27 The Italian Government contends that the request for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible on the ground that the issue raised is hypothetical, given that the relevance of that request in relation to the specific subject matter of the main proceedings has not been established.

28 In that regard, according to the Court's settled case-law, in the context of the cooperation between the Court and the national courts provided for in Article 267 TFEU, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case, both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where the questions submitted concern the interpretation of EU law, the Court is in principle required to give a ruling (judgment of 4 December 2018, Minister for Justice and Equality and Commissioner of An Garda Síochána, C-378/17, EU:C:2018:979, paragraph 26 and the case-law cited).

29 It follows that questions concerning EU law enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to give a ruling on a question referred by a national court only where it is obvious that the interpretation, or the determination of validity, of a rule of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see, to that effect, judgment of 26 February 2013, Melloni, C-399/11, EU:C:2013:107, paragraph 29, and order of 26 March 2021, Fedasil, C-134/21, EU:C:2021:257, paragraph 48).

30 In the present case, it should be noted that the question referred concerns the interpretation of provisions of EU law, in particular Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, and that the order for reference sets out the factual and legal context in sufficient detail to enable the Court to determine the scope of that question.

31 Furthermore, it is not apparent that the interpretation sought bears no relation to the actual facts or the purpose of the dispute in the main proceedings; nor does the problem appear to be hypothetical. While Article 63 of Directive 2014/24 permits contracting authorities to require only that 'certain critical tasks' be performed by the lead undertaking of a group itself, it is apparent from the order for reference that the undertaking to which the contract at issue in the main proceedings was awarded was excluded from the tendering procedure on the ground that it did not carry out 'the majority' of the works, as required by Article 83(8) of the Public Procurement Code.

32 It is, therefore, apparent that the referring court needs an answer from the Court of Justice on its request for interpretation if it is to be able to give a ruling.

33 The request for a preliminary ruling is, accordingly, admissible.

Consideration of the question referred

34 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation requiring that the undertaking which is the agent of a group of economic operators participating in a public procurement procedure must fulfil the majority of the requirements set out in the contract notice and provide the majority of the services under that contract.

35 First of all, it should be noted that, as is apparent from the order for reference, Directive 2014/24 is applicable to the facts at issue in the main proceedings. In addition, it should be pointed out that the provisions of that directive must, by reason of recital 1 thereof, be interpreted in accordance with the principles of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services as well as with the principles deriving therefrom. It is, therefore, not necessary to examine separately the question referred in the light of Articles 49 and 56 TFEU (see, by analogy, judgment of 10 November 2016, Ciclat, C-199/15, EU:C:2016:853, paragraph 25). Since, moreover, the present request for a preliminary ruling raises no new point of law with regard to the principles of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services or the principles deriving therefrom, it is sufficient to deal with the question referred for a preliminary ruling by referring to Directive 2014/24.

36 Article 63(1) of that directive provides that, with regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability, an economic operator may, for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, and that, under the same conditions, a group of economic operators may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities. Furthermore, Article 63(2) states that, for certain types of contracts, including service contracts, 'contracting authorities may require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself or, where the tender is submitted by a group of economic operators …, by a participant in that group'.

37 However, by requiring the undertaking which is the agent of the group of economic operators to provide 'the majority' of the services in relation to all the members of the group, that is to say to provide the majority of all the services covered by the contract, Article 83(8) of the Public Procurement Code lays down a stricter condition than that provided for by Directive 2014/24 which merely authorises the contracting authority to provide, in the contract notice, that certain critical tasks are to be performed directly by a participant in the group of economic operators.

38 Under the system established by that directive, it is the contracting authorities that may require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself or, where the tender is submitted by a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 19(2) of Directive 2014/24, by a participant in that group whereas, according to the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings, it is the national legislature that requires horizontally, for all public contracts in Italy, that the agent of the group of economic operators must perform the majority of the services.

39 It is true that the second subparagraph of Article 19(2) of Directive 2014/24 provides that Member States may establish standard terms for how groups of economic operators are to meet the criteria relating to economic and financial standing and the criteria relating to technical and professional ability referred to in Article 58 of that directive.

40 However, even if the capacity to perform critical tasks falls within the notion of 'technical ability', within the meaning of Articles 19 and 58 of Directive 2014/24, which would allow the national legislature to include that capacity in its standard terms provided for in Article 19(2) of that directive, a rule such as that contained in the third sentence of Article 83(8) of the Public Procurement Code – which requires the agent of the group of economic operators to perform directly itself the majority of the tasks – goes beyond what is allowed by that directive. Such a rule is not limited to specifying how groups of economic operators are to guarantee they possess the human and technical resources necessary to perform the contract, within the meaning of Article 19(2) of that directive, read in conjunction with Article 58(4) thereof, but relates to the actual performance of the contract itself and requires, in that regard, the agent of the group to perform the majority of the services.

41 Lastly, it is true that, according to Article 63(2) of Directive 2014/24, in the case, inter alia, of service contracts, contracting authorities may require that 'certain critical tasks' be performed by a participant in the group of economic operators.

42 However, notwithstanding the slight variation between different language versions of Directive 2014/24, it is clear from the words 'certaines tâches essentielles [certain essential tasks]', used in several language versions of that directive, including those in French and Italian ('taluni compiti essenziali'), and also from the words 'certain critical tasks', used in other versions of that directive, including those in Spanish ('determinadas tareas críticas'), German ('bestimmte kritische Aufgaben'), English ('certain critical tasks'), Dutch ('bepaalde kritieke taken') and Romanian ('anumite sarcini critice'), that the intention of the EU legislature is, in accordance with the objectives set out in recitals 1 and 2 of that directive, to limit what can be imposed on a single operator of a group, following a qualitative approach rather than merely a quantitative approach, in order to facilitate the participation of groups such as temporary associations of small- and medium-sized undertakings in public procurement procedures. A requirement such as that set out in the third sentence of Article 83(8) of the Public Procurement Code, which extends to the 'provision of the majority of the services', is inconsistent with such an approach, goes beyond the targeted words used in Article 63(2) of Directive 2014/24 and therefore undermines the objective pursued by EU law in that area of attaining the widest possible opening-up of public contracts to competition and of facilitating the involvement of small- and medium-sized undertakings (judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 27).

43 Moreover, while Article 63(2) of Directive 2014/24 merely authorises contracting authorities to require, in the case, inter alia, of service contracts, that certain tasks be performed by a participant of the group of economic operators, Article 83(8) of the Public Procurement Code lays down the requirement that the agent of the group alone must perform the majority of the services, to the exclusion of all the other participating undertakings, and thus unduly restricts the meaning and scope of the words used in Article 63(2) of Directive 2014/24.

44 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 63 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation requiring that the undertaking which is the agent of a group of economic operators participating in a public procurement procedure must fulfil the majority of the requirements set out in the contract notice and provide the majority of the services under that contract.

Costs

45 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as precluding national legislation requiring that the undertaking which is the agent of a group of economic operators participating in a public procurement procedure must fulfil the majority of the requirements set out in the contract notice and provide the majority of the services under that contract.

Legal framework

3 Article 1(1), fourth subparagraph and (3) of Directive 92/13 provide:

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/25/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243)] or Directive 2014/23/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts], decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

4 Under Article 2a(2) of Directive 92/13:

The communication of the award decision to each tenderer and candidate concerned shall be accompanied by the following:

– a summary of the relevant reasons as set out in Article 75(2) of Directive 2014/25/EU, subject to the provisions of Article 75(3) of that Directive or in the second subparagraph of Article 40(1) of Directive 2014/23/EU, subject to the provisions of Article 40(2) of that Directive,

5 Article 2c of Directive 92/13 provides:

'Where a Member State provides that any application for review of a contracting entity's decision taken in the context of, or in relation to, a contract award procedure falling within the scope of Directive 2014/25/EU or Directive 2014/23/EU must be made before the expiry of a specified period, this period shall be at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting entity's decision is sent to the tenderer or candidate if fax or electronic means are used or, if other means of communication are used, this period shall be either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting entity's decision is sent to the tenderer or candidate or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of receipt of the contracting entity's decision. The communication of the contracting entity's decision to each tenderer or candidate shall be accompanied by a summary of the relevant reasons. In the case of an application for a review concerning decisions referred to in Article 2(1)(b) of this Directive that are not subject to a specific notification, the time period shall be at least 10 calendar days from the date of the publication of the decision concerned.'

6 Article 2(1) of Legea nr. 101/2016 privind remediile și căile de atac în materie de atribuire a contractelor de achiziție publică, a contractelor sectoriale și a contractelor de concesiune de lucrări și concesiune de servicii, precum și pentru organizarea și funcționarea Consiliului Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (Law No 101/2016 on remedies and review procedures relating to the award of public procurement contracts, sector-specific contracts and works and services concession contracts and on the organisation and operation of the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints) is worded as follows:

'Any person who considers that his rights or legitimate interests have been infringed by an act of a contracting authority or by a failure to take a decision on an application within the period prescribed by law may seek the annulment of that act, the obligation of the contracting authority to issue an act or to take corrective measures or to recognise the alleged right or legitimate interest, [before the Consiliu Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Complaints) or a judicial body,] in accordance with the provisions of this Law.'

7 Article 3 of that law provides:

'1. For the purposes of this law:

(f) persons who consider themselves wronged means any economic operator that satisfies the following cumulative conditions:

(i) they have or have had an interest in a procurement procedure;

(ii) they have suffered, are suffering or risk suffering harm as a result of an act of a contracting authority capable of producing legal effects or a failure to respond to a request relating to a procurement procedure within the period prescribed by law.

3. For the purposes of paragraph 1(f)(i), persons shall be deemed to have or to have had an interest in a procurement procedure if they have not yet been definitively excluded from that procedure. Exclusion shall be definitive if it has been communicated to the candidate/tenderer in question and if it has been found lawful by the Consiliu [Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Complaints)] or a court, or if it can no longer be the subject of a review procedure.'

8 In accordance with Article 8 of that law:

'1. Persons who consider that their rights or legitimate interests have been infringed as a result of an act of a contracting authority may apply to the Consiliu [Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Complaints)] for the annulment of that act, to impose on the contracting authority the obligation to adopt an act or corrective measures and for the recognition of the alleged right or legitimate interest within the following time limits:

(a) ten days, with effect from the day following the date on which the existence of the act of the contracting authority considered to be unlawful became known, where the estimated value of the public/sectoral contract or concession is equal to or greater than the value thresholds above which the transmission of public procurement notices for the purpose of publication in the Official Journal of the European Union is mandatory, in accordance with public procurement legislation, the legislation on sectoral contracts or the legislation on works and services concessions; …'

9 Article 49(1) of that law provides:

‘In order for the action to be resolved in judicial proceedings, persons who consider that their rights or legitimate interests have been infringed may apply to the competent court, in accordance with the provisions of this law.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

10 The CFR published a call for tenders in the context of a sector-specific, public procurement procedure for the award of a works contract for the renovation of a railway line.

11 On 13 March 2018, the tender submitted by the consortium RailWorks, the leader of which is Alstom Transport, was declared admissible, however on 5 July 2018 it was excluded by the CFR on account of considerations relating to RailWorks’ ability to perform the subject matter of the contract.

12 By judgment of 19 October 2018, the Tribunalul Bucureşti (Regional Court, Bucharest, Romania) dismissed the action brought by Alstom Transport against the CFR’s decision excluding RailWorks’ tender and designating the BraSig consortium as the successful tenderer. By judgment of 20 December 2018, the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania) upheld the appeal lodged by Alstom Transport against that judgment and annulled that decision. It also found that RailWorks’ tender was admissible and that the CFR was obliged to reassess BraSig’s tender taking into account the criticisms levelled against it by RailWorks.

13 On 12 February 2019, following the reassessment ordered by the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest), RailWorks’ tender was declared admissible and, by letter of 19 June 2019, Alstom Transport was named as the successful tenderer for the contract in question.

14 On 5 July 2019, Alstom Transport brought a new action before the Tribunalul București (Regional Court, Bucharest) seeking, inter alia, the annulment of the CFR’s decision declaring BraSig’s tender as admissible and compliant, and of the report on the procurement procedure and all the documents relating to the procedures for evaluating that tender. Moreover, Alstom Transport asked that court to require the CFR to exclude that tender on the ground that BraSig had repeatedly attempted to influence the members of the CFR evaluation committee in order to place RailWorks’ tender at a disadvantage.

15 By judgment of 8 August 2019, the Tribunalul București (Regional Court, Bucharest) dismissed that action as being out of time. In that regard, that court considered that the time limit of 10 days laid down in Article 8(1)(a) of Law No 101/2016 started to run not from the date on which Alstom Transport became aware of the report on the procurement procedure, but from the date on which the outcome of that procedure had been communicated to it.

16 Alstom Transport brought an appeal before the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest), the referring court, against that judgment. In support of its appeal, it stated that, by the letter of 19 June 2019 concerning the outcome of the procurement procedure, referred to in paragraph 13 of this judgment, it had been informed only of the assessment of its own tender and that no information concerning the procedures for evaluating the tender submitted by BraSig was apparent from that letter. Alstom Transport submitted that it was not until 25 June 2019, the date on which it had access to the procurement file after having requested it on 20 June 2019, that it became aware of the report on the procurement procedure and, implicitly, of those evaluation procedures. Consequently, in its view, the time limit of 10 days referred to in the preceding paragraph of this judgment started to run from 25 June 2019.

17 In those circumstances, the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Are the third subparagraph of Article 1(1), Article 1(3) and Article 2c of [Directive 92/13] to be interpreted as meaning that the period within which the successful tenderer in an award procedure may apply for review of the decision of the contracting authority declaring admissible the bid submitted by a tenderer placed lower in the ranking must be calculated by reference to the date on which the interest of the successful tenderer arose, that is, upon the lodging by the unsuccessful tenderer of an action against the outcome of the award procedure?’

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

18 As a preliminary point, it must be noted that it is apparent from the documents before the Court that the referring court is asking the Court not about the interpretation of the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 92/13, but about the interpretation of the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of that directive.

19 Thus, it must be held that, by its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1), Article 1(3) and Article 2c of Directive 92/13 must be interpreted as meaning that the period within which the successful tenderer for a contract may apply for review of a decision of the contracting entity declaring admissible the bid submitted by an unsuccessful tenderer may be calculated by using as a point of reference the date of receipt of that decision by that successful tenderer even if, at that date, first, the unsuccessful tenderer had not or had not yet applied for review of the outcome of the award procedure for that contract and, secondly, the successful tenderer had not received the relevant information concerning the procedures for evaluating the unsuccessful tenderer's bid.

20 Since Article 1(1), fourth subparagraph, Article 1(3) and Article 2c of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2014/23, are analogous to, respectively, Article 1(1), fourth subparagraph, Article 1(3) and Article 2c of Directive 92/13, the case-law relating to those provisions of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2014/23, is also relevant to the interpretation of the provisions of Directive 92/13 at issue.

21 The fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 92/13 requires the Member States, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/25 or Directive 2014/23, to ensure that decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed as effectively and as rapidly as possible. The imposition of time limits for bringing actions which will be time-barred if those time limits are not complied with enables the objective of rapidity pursued by that directive, which requires operators to challenge promptly preliminary measures or interim decisions taken in public procurement procedures, to be attained (see, by analogy, order of 14 February 2019, Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco, C-54/18, EU:C:2019:118, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

22 Setting reasonable time limits for bringing proceedings must be regarded, in principle, as satisfying the requirement of effectiveness under Directive 92/13, since it is an application of the fundamental principle of legal certainty and is compatible with the fundamental right to effective legal protection (see, by analogy, order of 14 February 2019, Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco, C-54/18, EU:C:2019:118, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited).

23 Therefore, in accordance with Article 2c of Directive 92/13, where a Member State lays down time limits for bringing an application for review of a contracting entity's decision taken in the context of, or in relation to, a contract award procedure falling within the scope of Directive 2014/25 or Directive 2014/23, the time limits for challenging that decision are to be determined according to the manner in which the contracting entity's decision is communicated to the tenderers.

24 Thus, the period must be at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which that decision is sent to the tenderer or candidate if fax or electronic means are used. If other means of communication are used, that period is either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which that decision is sent to the tenderer or candidate or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of that decision. In the case of an application for a review concerning decisions referred to in Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 that are not subject to a specific notification, the time period is at least 10 calendar days from the date of the publication of the decision concerned.

25 In the present case, the Romanian law provides that the 10-day period begins to run, for all tenderers, including the successful tenderer, from the day following the date on which the existence of the contracting entity's act became known. Thus, a successful tenderer who intends to challenge a decision declaring admissible the bid submitted by an unsuccessful tenderer must make its application for review within that time limit, irrespective, first, of whether or, as the case may be, when, that tenderer applied for review of that decision and, secondly, of the fact that the successful tenderer has no information concerning the procedures for evaluating the unsuccessful tenderer's bid.

26 While both the national court, in its request for a preliminary ruling, and the parties to the main proceedings and the European Commission, in their respective written observations, address the condition of having an interest in bringing proceedings, it must be noted that that court chose to limit its question solely to the issue of the starting point of the period for applying for review.

27 In that regard, it should be noted that Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 provides that Member States must ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

28 That provision is intended to apply, inter alia, to the situation of any tenderer which considers that a decision allowing a competitor to participate in a tender procedure is unlawful and is likely to cause it harm, that likelihood of harm being sufficient to justify an immediate interest in bringing an action against that decision, leaving aside harm which may also result from the award of the contract to another candidate (see, by analogy, order of 14 February 2019, Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco, C-54/18, EU:C:2019:118, paragraph 36).

29 Thus, Directive 92/13 does not, in principle, preclude national legislation which provides that any application for review of a contracting authority's decision must be commenced within a time limit laid down to that effect and that any irregularity in the award procedure relied upon in support of such application must be raised within the same period, if it is not to be out of time, with the result that, when that period has passed, it is no longer possible to challenge such a decision or to raise such an irregularity, provided that the time limit in question is reasonable (see, by analogy, order of 14 February 2019, Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco, C-54/18, EU:C:2019:118, paragraph 40 and the case-law cited).

30 It follows that a successful tenderer may be required to comply with a time limit for applying for review of a decision by the contracting entity allowing an unsuccessful tenderer to participate in a public procurement procedure, even if that decision forms part of the decision designating the successful tenderer as such and even if, on that date, the tenderer has not or has not yet lodged an action against the latter decision.

31 Nevertheless, it cannot be excluded that, in the context of the particular circumstances, or having regard to some of their rules, the application of national rules on limitation periods may entail a breach of the rights conferred on individuals by EU law, in particular, the right to an effective remedy and the right to a fair trial, enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (see, by analogy, order of 14 February 2019, Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco, C-54/18, EU:C:2019:118, paragraph 43 and the case-law cited).

32 In that regard, it should be recalled that effective procedures for review of infringements of the provisions applicable in the field of public procurement can be realised only if the periods laid down for bringing such proceedings start to run only from the date on which the claimant knew, or ought to have known, of the alleged infringement of those provisions (see, by analogy, order of 14 February 2019, Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco, C-54/18, EU:C:2019:118, paragraph 45 and the case-law cited).

33 To that end, the contracting entity's decision that is communicated to tenderers must, in accordance with Article 2c of Directive 92/13, be accompanied by a summary of the relevant reasons.

34 That summary of the relevant reasons, which must accompany both the decisions of contracting entities which are notified specifically to tenderers and those which are published and which are not subject to a specific notification, is intended to ensure that the tenderers concerned are or may be aware of a possible infringement of the rules applicable to procurement procedures.

35 In the present case, subject to verification by the referring court, the relevant reasons for the contracting entity's decision allowing BraSig to participate in the procurement procedure at issue could be inferred from the report on the procurement procedure referred to in paragraphs 14 to 16 of this judgment, which, under Romanian law, must be made available to the tenderers concerned by means of a face-to-face consultation.

36 However, such a legal guarantee of access to the reasons for contracting entities' decisions is not equivalent to the communication, when those decisions are published or notified, of the relevant reasons for those decisions to tenderers.

37 Thus, in those circumstances where the relevant reasons for a contracting authority's decision have not been brought to the tenderers' attention either by means of a publication or when that decision was notified, the period within which the successful tenderer in an award procedure may apply for review of the decision of the contracting authority declaring admissible the bid submitted by an unsuccessful tenderer starts to run not on the date on which that decision was received, but the date of the communication to that successful tenderer of the relevant reasons for that decision, ensuring that the successful tenderer knew or ought to have known about possible infringements of EU law vitiating that decision.

38 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred must be that Article 1(1), fourth subparagraph, Article 1(3) and Article 2c of Directive 92/13 must be interpreted as meaning that the period within which the successful tenderer for a contract may apply for review of a decision of the contracting entity declaring admissible, in the decision awarding that contract, the bid submitted by an unsuccessful tenderer may be calculated by using as a point of reference the date of receipt of that decision of the contracting authority by that successful tenderer, even if, at that date, that unsuccessful tenderer had not, or had not yet, applied for review of it. On the other hand, if, during the notification or publication of that decision, a summary of the relevant reasons for it, such as the information concerning the procedures for evaluating that tender, was not, in accordance with that Article 2c, brought to the knowledge of that successful tenderer, that time limit must be calculated by using as a point of reference the communication of such a summary to the same successful tenderer.

Costs

39 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(1), fourth subparagraph, Article 1(3) and Article 2c of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, must be interpreted as meaning that the period within which the successful tenderer for a contract may apply for review of a decision of the contracting entity declaring admissible, in the decision awarding that contract, the bid submitted by an unsuccessful tenderer may be calculated by using as a point of reference the date of receipt of that decision of the contracting authority by that successful tenderer, even if, at that date, that unsuccessful tenderer had not, or had not yet, applied for review of it. On the other hand, if, during the notification or publication of that decision, a summary of the relevant reasons for it, such as the information concerning the procedures for evaluating that tender, was not, in accordance with that Article 2c, brought to the knowledge of that successful tenderer, that time limit must be calculated by using as a point of reference the communication of such a summary to the same successful tenderer.

Legal context

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides:

'1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65)] unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 37 of that Directive.

This Directive also applies to concessions awarded by contracting authorities, referred to in Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1)] unless such concessions are excluded in accordance with Articles 10, 11, 12, 17 and 25 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, works and services concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] or Directive [2014/23], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

…'

4 Article 2 of that directive, entitled ‘Requirements for review procedures’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.’

5 Under Article 2a of the directive, entitled ‘Standstill period’:

‘1. The Member States shall ensure that the persons referred to in Article 1(3) have sufficient time for effective review of the contract award decisions taken by contracting authorities, by adopting the necessary provisions respecting the minimum conditions set out in paragraph 2 of this Article and in Article 2c.

2. A contract may not be concluded following the decision to award a contract falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] or Directive [2014/23] before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned if fax or electronic means are used or, if other means of communication are used, before the expiry of a period of either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of the contract award decision.

Tenderers shall be deemed to be concerned if they have not yet been definitively excluded. An exclusion is definitive if it has been notified to the tenderers concerned and has either been considered lawful by an independent review body or can no longer be subject to a review procedure.

Candidates shall be deemed to be concerned if the contracting authority has not made available information about the rejection of their application before the notification of the contract award decision to the tenderers concerned.

The communication of the award decision to each tenderer and candidate concerned shall be accompanied by the following:

– a summary of the relevant reasons …, and – a precise statement of the exact standstill period applicable …’

6 The eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Costituzione (Constitution) provides:

‘Appeals in cassation against decisions of the Consiglio di Stato [(Council of State, Italy)] and the Corte dei conti [(Court of Auditors, Italy)] are permitted only for reasons of jurisdiction.’

7 The first paragraph of Article 360 of the codice di procedura civile (Code of Civil Procedure) provides:

‘Judgments delivered on appeal or at sole instance may be challenged by an appeal in cassation: (1) for reasons relating to jurisdiction; …’

8 Under the first and second paragraphs of Article 362 of the Code of Civil Procedure:

‘An appeal in cassation may be brought … against a decision given by a special court on appeal or at sole instance, for reasons relating to the jurisdiction of that court.

The following may be appealed in cassation at any time: (1) positive or negative conflicts of jurisdiction between special judges, or between them and ordinary judges; (2) negative conflicts of attribution between the public administration and the ordinary judge.’

9 Article 6(1) of the codice del processo amministrativo (Code of Administrative Procedure) provides:

‘The Consiglio di Stato [(Council of State)] is the court of final instance in administrative cases.’

10 Article 110 of the Code of Administrative Procedure provides:

‘An appeal in cassation may be brought against a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato [(Council of State)] for reasons of jurisdiction only.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11 On 13 December 2017, USL launched a tendering procedure for the purpose of awarding a public contract with a value of approximately EUR 12 million, on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender, to an employment agency for the temporary supply of personnel.

12 A ‘minimum threshold’ – set at 48 points – was stipulated for technical offers, and tenderers awarded points below that threshold were to be excluded.

13 Eight tenderers participated in the process, including Randstad, GI Group Spa and a temporary association of undertakings formed by Synergie and Umana (‘Synergie-Umana’).

14 On 3 October 2018, after evaluating the technical offers, the procurement committee admitted GI Group and Synergie-Umana to the next stage, relating to the economic assessment of tenders. Randstad, which was in third place after the evaluation of technical offers, was excluded, its technical offer having been awarded one mark less than the minimum threshold.

15 On 6 November 2018, the contract was awarded to Synergie-Umana.

16 Randstad brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d’Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d’Aosta, Italy) disputing, first, its exclusion from the tendering procedure and, second, the regularity of that procedure. Its action thus concerned not only that exclusion, but also the award of the contract to Synergie-Umana.

17 In support of its action, Randstad argued in particular that there had been a failure to divide the call for tenders into lots, that the assessment criteria were imprecise and that the appointment of the procurement committee was unlawful. USL and Synergie-Umana contended that the pleas in law by which Randstad contested the regularity of the tendering procedure were inadmissible. They argued that Randstad did not have standing to raise those pleas, since it had been excluded from that procedure.

18 By judgment of 15 March 2019, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d’Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d’Aosta) rejected that plea of inadmissibility. Since Randstad had participated lawfully in the tendering procedure and had been excluded from it on the basis of the negative assessment of its technical offer, Randstad did, according to that court, have standing to challenge the outcome of the procedure in all its aspects. On the merits, however, that court rejected all the pleas put forward by Randstad and, therefore, dismissed the action in its entirety.

19 Randstad brought an appeal against that judgment before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), reiterating the pleas it had raised at first instance. Synergie and Umana brought cross-appeals, criticising the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d’Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d'Aosta) for having ruled Randstad's pleas challenging the regularity of the procedure, and thus the ensuing award of the contract, to be admissible.

20 By judgment of 7 August 2019 ('the judgment of the Council of State'), the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) rejected on the merits the ground of appeal by which Randstad disputed the mark awarded to its technical offer. Upholding, moreover, the cross-appeals brought by Synergie and Umana, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), by that judgment, varied the judgment under appeal to the extent that the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d'Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d'Aosta) had declared admissible, and therefore examined the substance of, the pleas put forward by Randstad to challenge the regularity of the procedure.

21 In support of its decision, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) held, in particular, that Randstad, 'which was excluded from the tendering procedure because it did not pass the "stress test" of the minimum threshold to be attained by the mark awarded for the technical offer by means of a pair-wise comparison, and which did not succeed in demonstrating the unlawfulness of the tendering procedure as regards the award of that mark, is … not only ineligible to participate in that procedure, but also lacks standing to challenge its results from other aspects, since it has a purely factual interest, analogous to that of any other economic operator in the sector that had not participated in the tendering procedure'.

22 Randstad appealed to the referring court, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation, Italy), against the judgment of the Council of State. It maintains that the latter has infringed its right to an effective remedy as affirmed in particular in Article 1 of Directive 89/665. Randstad refers in that regard to the judgments of the Court of Justice of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448); of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199); and of 5 September 2019, Lombardi (C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675).

23 According to Randstad, the ground of appeal alleging infringement of the right to an effective remedy is among the reasons of 'jurisdiction' on the basis of which, according to the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Constitution, appeals in cassation against decisions of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) are permitted.

24 The other parties to the main proceedings contend that not only is that appeal in cassation unfounded, it is also inadmissible. They argue that it concerns the legality of the assessment made by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) and does not therefore relate to the issue of the jurisdiction of the administrative courts.

25 According to the referring court, the refusal of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) to examine, in a case such as that in the main proceedings, pleas relating to the irregularity of the tendering procedure undermines the right to an effective remedy, within the meaning of EU law.

26 According to that court, in order for the uniformity and effectiveness of EU law to be protected, it must be possible for an appeal in cassation to be brought against such a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), pursuant to the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Constitution. Such an appeal would constitute the final remedy thereby preventing a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) that is contrary to EU law from acquiring the force of res judicata.

27 In that regard, the referring court considers that, where the application or interpretation of national legal provisions by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) is incompatible with the provisions of EU law as interpreted by the Court of Justice, it is exercising a jurisdictional power which it does not have. In reality, in such cases it is exercising a power to create law which is not even within the national legislature's competence. That constitutes a lack of jurisdiction which should be amenable to appeal.

28 That being the case, the referring court notes that it is apparent from judgment No 6/2018 of the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court, Italy) of 18 January 2018 concerning the interpretation of the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Constitution (ECLI:IT:COST:2018:6, 'judgment No 6/2018') that it is not permitted, as Italian constitutional law currently stands, to equate a plea alleging infringement of EU law with a plea relating to 'jurisdiction', within the meaning of the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Constitution.

29 In application of that judgment, exceeding judicial authority, which may be contested by means of an appeal to the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) for reasons of jurisdiction, refers exclusively to two types of situation. First, such an appeal could be brought where there is a total lack of jurisdiction, that is, when the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) or the Corte dei conti (Court of Auditors) asserts its own jurisdiction over an area reserved to the legislature or the administration, or when, on the contrary, it declines jurisdiction on the erroneous assumption that the subject matter absolutely cannot be the object of any judicial review. Second, an appeal relating to the exceeding of judicial authority could be brought where there is a relative lack of jurisdiction, when the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) or the Corte dei conti (Court of Auditors) asserts jurisdiction over a subject matter attributed to another court or, on the contrary, declines it having wrongly concluded that jurisdiction lies with other courts.

30 The referring court considers that if it had to adhere to that interpretation of the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Constitution, it would have to declare Randstad's appeal in cassation inadmissible. It seems to the referring court, however, that that interpretation is incompatible with the right to an effective remedy, within the meaning of EU law. Should that be the case, it would be necessary to disregard the lessons to be drawn from judgment No 6/2018 and to examine the substance of Randstad's appeal in cassation.

31 The referring court states that, according to the consistent case-law of its own combined chambers prior to the delivery of judgment No 6/2018, in the event of an appeal against a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), the review of the external limits of 'jurisdiction' within the meaning of the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Constitution extended to cases of fundamental distortion of the law which could constitute a denial of justice, such as the application of a procedural rule under national law in a manner incompatible with the right to an effective remedy conferred by EU law.

32 The referring court therefore seeks a ruling from the Court of Justice on whether the right to an effective remedy, as laid down, in particular, in the second subparagraph of Article 19(1) TEU and in the first paragraph of Article 47 of the Charter, is such that it cannot be impossible, as it would be in particular under the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Constitution as interpreted by judgment No 6/2018, to rely, in the context of an appeal in cassation against a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), on grounds of appeal alleging an infringement of EU law.

33 Furthermore, in so far as the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has refrained in the main proceedings from asking the Court of Justice about the relevance, for the present case, of the judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448); of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199); and of 5 September 2019, Lombardi (C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675), invoked by Randstad, the referring court should be able, in the context of the appeal brought by that undertaking, to put that question to the Court.

34 In those circumstances, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Do Article 4(3) TEU, Article 19(1) TEU, Article 2(1) and (2) TFEU, and Article 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the [Charter], preclude an interpretative practice such as that regarding the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution, Article 360(1) … and Article 362(1) of the Italian Code of Civil Procedure, and Article 110 of the Italian Code of Administrative Procedure – under which provisions an appeal in cassation against a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) may be brought for "reasons of jurisdiction" – such as that which emerges from Judgment No 6/2018 of the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court) …, in which it has been held, marking a departure from the approach previously taken, that the remedy of an appeal in cassation, on grounds of a "lack of jurisdiction", is not available for the purpose of challenging judgments in which the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has applied interpretative practices developed nationally but in conflict with judgments of the Court of Justice, in sectors governed by EU law (in the present case, public procurement) and with regard to which the Member States have waived their right to exercise sovereign powers in a manner incompatible with EU law, with the effect of consolidating infringements of EU law that might have been rectified using the remedy of an appeal in cassation and of undermining the uniform application of EU law and the effectiveness of the judicial protection afforded to individuals in legal situations of EU significance, contrary to the requirement that EU law be fully and duly applied by every court in a manner necessarily consistent with its correct interpretation by the Court of Justice, regard being had to the limits on the "procedural autonomy" of the Member States in the structuring of their rules of procedure?

(2) Do Article 4(3) TEU, Article 19(1) TEU, and Article 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the [Charter], preclude the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution, Article 360(1) … and Article 362(1) of the Italian Code of Civil Procedure, and Article 110 of the Italian Code of Administrative Procedure from being interpreted and applied, as they have been in national judicial practice, in such a manner that an appeal in cassation before the Combined Chambers [of the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation)] for "reasons of jurisdiction", on grounds of a "lack of jurisdiction", cannot be brought for the purpose of challenging a judgment in which the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), ruling in a dispute involving issues concerning the application of EU law, refrains, without reason, from making a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling, where the conditions relieving a national court of that obligation, which have been exhaustively listed by the Court of Justice [in its judgment of 6 October 1982, Cilfit and Others (283/81, EU:C:1982:335)] and which must be strictly interpreted, are absent, contrary to the principle that national rules and procedural practices, even those arising from legislation or the Constitution, are incompatible with EU law if they prevent a national court (of last instance or otherwise), even temporarily, from making a reference for a preliminary ruling, with the effect of usurping the Court of Justice's exclusive jurisdiction to interpret EU law correctly and in binding fashion, of making any conflicts of interpretation between the law applied by national courts and EU law irremediable (and promoting the consolidation of such conflicts of interpretation), and of undermining the uniform application and effective judicial protection of the rights enjoyed by individuals under EU law?

(3) Do the principles expressed by the Court of Justice in its judgments of 5 September 2019, Lombardi [(C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675)], of 5 April 2016, PFE [(C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199)], and of 4 July 2013, Fastweb [(C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448)], in connection with Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 2(1) of Directive [89/665], as amended by Directive [2007/66], apply to the case in the main proceedings in which an undertaking has challenged its exclusion from a tendering procedure and the award of the contract to another undertaking and the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has examined the substance only of the ground of appeal whereby the excluded undertaking disputed the points awarded to its technical offer, which were below the "minimum threshold", and has examined as a matter of priority the cross-appeals brought by the contracting authority and the successful tenderer, has upheld them and has declared inadmissible (and refrained from examining the substance of) the other grounds of the main appeal disputing the outcome of the tendering procedure for other reasons (imprecise tender assessment criteria in the tendering specifications, failure to justify the marks awarded, unlawful appointment and composition of the tender committee), in accordance with national judicial practice according to which an undertaking that has been excluded from a tendering procedure has no standing to bring a claim disputing the award of the contract to a competitor undertaking, even by way of the lapse of the tendering procedure, it being necessary to determine the compatibility with EU law of the effect of depriving the undertaking of the right to submit for the court's examination each and every reason for which it disputes the outcome of the tendering procedure, in a situation where that undertaking's exclusion has not been definitively established and where every competitor may argue a similar legitimate interest in the exclusion of its competitors' tenders, which could make it impossible for the contracting authority to choose a regular tender and make it necessary to launch a new tendering procedure in which every tenderer might participate?'

The request for an expedited procedure and the procedure before the Court

35 In its request for a preliminary ruling, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) requested that this reference for a preliminary ruling be determined pursuant to an expedited procedure under Article 105 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, on the ground, in essence, that the dispute in the main proceedings raises grave uncertainty about fundamental constitutional issues under national law, that there are numerous similar disputes pending in Italy, and that the dispute in the main proceedings concerns the field of public procurement, the importance of which in EU law was emphasised.

36 Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure provides that, at the request of the referring court or tribunal or, exceptionally, of his or her own motion, the President of the Court may decide, after hearing the Judge-Rapporteur and the Advocate General, that a reference for a preliminary ruling is to be determined pursuant to an expedited procedure where the nature of the case requires that it be dealt with within a short time.

37 It must be borne in mind, in that regard, that such an expedited procedure is a procedural instrument intended to address matters of exceptional urgency (judgment of 15 July 2021, Commission v Poland (Disciplinary regime for judges), C-791/19, EU:C:2021:596, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

38 In the present case, on 21 October 2020, the President of the Court decided, after hearing the Judge-Rapporteur and the Advocate General, to refuse the request made by the referring court, referred to in paragraph 35 above.

39 The fact that the case concerns an important aspect of the organisation of the courts of the Member State concerned is not, as such, a reason that establishes the exceptional urgency necessary to justify an expedited procedure. The same is true of the fact that a large number of persons or legal situations are potentially concerned by the questions referred (see, to that effect, order of the President of the Court of 18 September 2018, Tedeschi and Consorzio Stabile Istant Service, C-402/18, not published, EU:C:2018:762, paragraph 15) or that the dispute in the main proceedings relates to the field of public procurement (see, to that effect, order of the President of the Court of 13 November 2014, Star Storage, C-439/14, not published, EU:C:2014:2479, paragraphs 10 to 15).

40 Nevertheless, having regard to the nature and importance of the questions referred, the President of the Court decided that the present case should be given priority treatment in accordance with Article 53(3) of the Rules of Procedure.

41 In addition, pursuant to the third paragraph of Article 16 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union, the Italian Government requested the Court to sit in a Grand Chamber.

Consideration of the questions referred

42 As a preliminary point, it should be borne in mind that, according to settled case-law, in the procedure laid down by Article 267 TFEU providing for cooperation between national courts and the Court, it is for the latter to provide the national court with an answer which will be of use to it and will enable the national court to determine the case before it. To that end, the Court may have to reformulate the questions referred to it (judgment of 15 July 2021, The Department for Communities in Northern Ireland, C-709/20, EU:C:2021:602, paragraph 61 and the case-law cited).

43 The first question concerns the effective judicial protection of rights conferred by EU law. It concerns, essentially, the question whether that protection is undermined if the highest court in the judicial order of a Member State does not have jurisdiction to set aside a judgment delivered in breach of EU law by the highest court in the administrative order of that Member State.

44 As the Advocate General noted in point 59 of his Opinion, Article 2(1) and (2) and Article 267 TFEU, mentioned in the first question, are of no relevance for that purpose.

45 It must be noted, first, that Article 2 TFEU concerns the division, between the European Union and its Member States, of the competence to legislate and adopt legally binding acts. The rules set out in that respect in paragraphs 1 and 2 of that article are unrelated to the question of jurisdiction raised by the referring court.

46 Second, as regards Article 267 TFEU, it must be recalled that this is part of a system intended to ensure judicial review of compliance with EU law, such review being ensured, as can be seen from Article 19(1) TEU, not only by the Court of Justice but also by the courts and tribunals of the Member States (see, to that effect, judgments of 13 March 2018, European Union Copper Task Force v Commission, C-384/16 P, EU:C:2018:176, paragraph 112, and of 25 February 2021, VodafoneZiggo Group v Commission, C-689/19 P, EU:C:2021:142, paragraph 143). In the context of that system, the procedure provided for by Article 267 TFEU is an instrument of cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts and tribunals, by means of which the former provides the latter with interpretation of such EU law as is necessary for them to give judgment in cases upon which they are called to adjudicate (judgment of 5 July 2016, Ognyanov, C-614/14, EU:C:2016:514, paragraph 16 and the case-law cited). Yet the issue raised by the referring court in its first question, which, as is apparent from paragraph 43 of the present judgment, concerns the extent to which the highest court in the national judicial order must, for the purposes of ensuring the effective judicial protection required by EU law, have jurisdiction to carry out a judicial review of judgments delivered by the highest court in the national administrative order, is not in itself related in any way to the mechanism for cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts provided for by Article 267 TFEU.

47 Accordingly, the first question must be reformulated so as to remove Article 2(1) and (2) and Article 267 TFEU from the substance of that question.

48 In so far as the referring court refers moreover, in its first question, to the right to an effective remedy set out in Article 47 of the Charter, it should be borne in mind that, under Article 51(1), the Charter is addressed to the Member States only when they are implementing EU law.

49 In that regard, it must be noted that, in the field of public procurement at issue in the main proceedings, Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 lays down the Member States' obligation to provide for effective reviews. It follows, as the Advocate General stated in point 67 of his Opinion, that, in that field, the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, enshrined in the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter, is relevant, in particular, when the Member States establish, in accordance with that obligation, detailed procedural rules governing the judicial remedies which safeguard the rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 128 and the case-law cited).

50 Accordingly, the first question must also be reformulated to encompass Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, which must be read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter.

51 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the first question must be understood as seeking to establish whether Article 4(3) and Article 19(1) TEU, and Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as precluding a provision of a Member State's domestic law which, according to national case-law, has the effect that individual parties, such as tenderers who participated in a procedure for the award of a public contract, cannot challenge the conformity with EU law of a judgment of the highest court in the administrative order of that Member State by means of an appeal before the highest court in that Member State's judicial order.

52 On that point, it must be noted at the outset that, by virtue of the principle of primacy of EU law, rules of national law, even of a constitutional order, cannot be allowed to undermine the unity and effectiveness of EU law (judgment of 22 June 2021, Latvijas Republikas Saeima (Penalty points), C-439/19, EU:C:2021:504, paragraph 135 and the case-law cited).

53 The effects of that principle are binding on all the bodies of a Member State, without, inter alia, provisions of domestic law relating to the attribution of jurisdiction, including constitutional provisions, being able to prevent that (judgment of 18 May 2021, Asociaţia 'Forumul Judecătorilor din România' and Others, C-83/19, C-127/19, C-195/19, C-291/19, C-355/19 and C-397/19, EU:C:2021:393, paragraph 245 and the case-law cited).

54 Consequently, where it is proved that a provision of EU law which imposes on the Member States a clear and precise obligation as to the result to be achieved has been infringed, the national courts must disapply, if necessary, the provisions of domestic law leading to that infringement, even if they are constitutional provisions (see, to that effect, judgment of 18 May 2021, Asociaţia 'Forumul Judecătorilor din România' and Others, C-83/19, C-127/19, C-195/19, C-291/19, C-355/19 and C-397/19, EU:C:2021:393, paragraphs 250 and 251 and the case-law cited). Where the incompatibility of a provision of domestic law with EU law arises more specifically from the interpretation of that provision adopted by a court of the Member State concerned, that case-law must be disregarded (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 38 and the case-law cited).

55 It is important, therefore, to consider whether a limitation on the ability to bring an appeal in cassation against judgments of the highest court in a Member State's administrative order, such as that derived in the present case – according to the interpretation given in judgment No 6/2018 – from the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Constitution, is at odds with the requirements of effective judicial protection imposed by EU law, and therefore with the unity and with the effectiveness of EU law.

56 As regards those requirements, it must be noted that the second subparagraph of Article 19(1) TEU obliges Member States to provide remedies sufficient to ensure effective legal protection for individual parties in the fields covered by EU law (judgment of 26 March 2020, Miasto Łowicz and Prokurator Generalny, C-558/18 and C-563/18, EU:C:2020:234, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

57 The principle of the effective legal protection of individual parties' rights under EU law thus referred to in that provision is a general principle of EU law stemming from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States, which has been enshrined in Articles 6 and 13 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed in Rome on 4 November 1950, and which is now reaffirmed by Article 47 of the Charter (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 July 2021, Commission v Poland (Disciplinary regime for judges), C-791/19, EU:C:2021:596, paragraph 52 and the case-law cited).

58 That being so, subject to any EU rules on the matter, it is, in accordance with the principle of procedural autonomy, for the national legal order of each Member State to establish procedural rules for the remedies referred to in paragraph 56 of the present judgment, on condition, however, that those rules are not – in situations governed by EU law – less favourable than in similar domestic situations (principle of equivalence) and that they do not make it impossible in practice or excessively difficult to exercise the rights conferred by EU law (principle of effectiveness) (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 March 2021, Konsul Rzeczypospolitej Polskiej w N., C-949/19, EU:C:2021:186, paragraph 43 and the case-law cited).

59 Thus, EU law in principle does not preclude Member States from restricting or imposing conditions on the pleas which may be relied on in proceedings in an appeal in cassation, subject to respect for the principles of equivalence and effectiveness (judgment of 17 March 2016, Bensada Benallal, C-161/15, EU:C:2016:175, paragraph 27).

60 As regards observance of the principle of equivalence, it appears, in the light of the information provided in the order for reference and at the hearing before the Court, that the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Constitution, as interpreted in judgment No 6/2018, limits, according to the same procedural rules, the jurisdiction of the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) to hear and determine appeals against judgments of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), regardless of whether these are based on provisions of national law or of EU law.

61 In those circumstances, it must be held that such a rule of domestic law does not breach the principle of equivalence.

62 So far as the principle of effectiveness is concerned, it must be borne in mind that EU law does not have the effect of requiring Member States to establish remedies other than those established by national law, unless it is apparent from the overall scheme of the national legal system in question that no legal remedy exists that would make it possible to ensure, even indirectly, respect for the rights that individuals derive from EU law, or the sole means of obtaining access to a court is effectively for individuals to break the law (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 May 2020, Országos Idegenrendészeti Főigazgatóság Dél-alföldi Regionális Igazgatóság, C-924/19 PPU and C-925/19 PPU, EU:C:2020:367, paragraph 143 and the case-law cited).

63 In the present case, while it is for the referring court to ascertain whether there is in principle such a remedy in the Italian legal order in the field of public procurement, there is ostensibly nothing in the request for a preliminary ruling or in the observations lodged before the Court to suggest that Italian procedural law in itself has the effect of making it impossible or excessively difficult to exercise, in this area of administrative law, the rights conferred by EU law.

64 In circumstances in which such a legal remedy does exist, making it possible to ensure respect for the rights that individual parties derive from EU law, it is, as is apparent from the case-law referred to in paragraph 62 of the present judgment, entirely open – from the point of view of EU law – to the Member State concerned to confer jurisdiction on the highest court in its administrative order to adjudicate on the dispute at last instance, in relation both to the facts and to points of law, and consequently to prevent the dispute from being open to further substantive examination in an appeal in cassation before the highest court in its judicial order.

65 It follows that, provided it is established that a judicial remedy such as that described in the preceding paragraph exists, a rule of domestic law such as the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Constitution, as interpreted by judgment No 6/2018, also does not undermine the principle of effectiveness and reveals nothing that would indicate any infringement of the second subparagraph of Article 19(1) TEU.

66 That conclusion cannot be called into question on the basis of Article 4(3) TEU, which requires the Member States to take any appropriate measure, general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of the obligations arising out of the Treaties or resulting from the acts of the institutions of the European Union. As regards the system of remedies sufficient to ensure effective judicial review in the fields covered by EU law, Article 4(3) TEU cannot be interpreted as meaning that the Member States are required to provide new legal remedies, which they are not however required to do under the second subparagraph of Article 19(1) TEU.

67 In the particular field of public procurement, Article 1 of Directive 89/665, read in the light of the first paragraph of Article 47 of the Charter, does not, moreover, militate against that conclusion.

68 It is apparent from Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 that, in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f thereof, the decision taken by the contracting authority in a tendering procedure falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24 or Directive 2014/23 must be capable of being reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible as to its conformity with EU law in the field of public procurement or with national rules transposing that law. Article 1(3) makes clear, moreover, that such reviews must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

69 In so far as individual parties have access, in the relevant field, to an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law, within the meaning of the second paragraph of Article 47 of the Charter, which appears to be the case – subject to verification by the referring court – in the Italian legal system, a national rule of law which prevents substantive assessments by the highest court in the administrative order from being open to further examination by the highest court in the judicial order cannot be regarded as a limitation, within the meaning of Article 52(1) of the Charter, of the right to a fair trial laid down in Article 47 of the Charter.

70 However, it must be borne in mind that, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, the admissibility of reviews referred to in Article 1 of Directive 89/665 cannot be made subject to the condition that the applicant adduces evidence that the contracting authority will have to restart the public procurement procedure if the review is successful. The mere existence of such a possibility must be regarded as being sufficient in that respect (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 September 2019, Lombardi, C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675, paragraph 29).

71 It follows that in a case such as that in the main proceedings, where Randstad, as a tenderer excluded from a tendering procedure, brought an action before the administrative court at first instance that was based on pleas aimed at demonstrating the irregularity of that procedure, the substance of that action had to be examined.

72 In the case of tenderers which have been excluded from the tendering procedure, Article 2a of Directive 89/665 makes clear that these are no longer to be deemed to be concerned and the contract award decision must not therefore be communicated to them if their exclusion has become definitive. However, where those tenderers have not yet been definitively excluded, the contract award decision, accompanied by a summary of the relevant reasons and a statement of the standstill period for conclusion of the contract following that decision, must be communicated to them. It is apparent from reading paragraphs 1 and 2 of that article together that compliance with those minimum conditions is intended to enable such tenderers to seek an effective review of that decision.

73 In accordance with Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665, the exclusion of a tenderer is definitive if it has been notified to that tenderer and has been 'considered lawful' by an 'independent review body' or can no longer be subject to a review procedure. That directive, which seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 45), must be interpreted in the light of the second paragraph of Article 47 of the Charter. In those circumstances, the term 'independent review body' within the meaning of Article 2a of that directive must, for the purposes of determining whether the exclusion of a tenderer has become definitive, be understood to mean an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law, within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter.

74 The fact that the exclusion decision is not yet definitive thus determines, for those tenderers, their standing to challenge the contract award decision, and that standing cannot be weakened by other – irrelevant – factors, such as the ranking of the excluded tenderer's offer or the number of participants in the tendering procedure (see, to that effect, in particular, judgments of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraphs 57 and 58, and of 5 September 2019, Lombardi, C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675, paragraphs 29 to 32).

75 In the present case, by deciding that the independent review body seised at first instance, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d'Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d'Aosta), should have declared inadmissible the pleas calling the award decision into question, on the ground that Randstad had been excluded from the procedure, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) disregarded the rule, laid down by the EU legislature and recalled in the case-law of the Court of Justice, that only the definitive exclusion, within the meaning of Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665, can have the effect of depriving a tenderer of standing to challenge the award decision.

76 It must be noted, in regard to the facts of the case in the main proceedings, that it is apparent from the file available to the Court that both at the time when Randstad brought the action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d'Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d'Aosta) and at the time when the latter gave its ruling, the decision of the procurement committee to exclude Randstad from the procedure had not yet been considered lawful by the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d'Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d'Aosta) or by any other independent review body.

77 It would thus appear that the variation of the judgment of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d'Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d'Aosta) by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), declaring inadmissible that part of Randstad's action by which the award of the contract to Synergie-Umana was challenged, is incompatible with the right to an effective remedy guaranteed by Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 2a(2) of that directive. Consequently, the judgment of the Consiglio di State (Council of State) is also inconsistent with the first paragraph of Article 47 of the Charter.

78 However, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, where, subject to verification by the referring court, national procedural law in itself permits interested persons to bring an action before an independent and impartial tribunal and to assert effectively that EU law, and provisions of national law transposing EU law into the domestic legal order, have been infringed, but where the highest court in the administrative order of the Member State concerned, adjudicating at last instance, wrongly makes the admissibility of that action subject to conditions that have the effect of depriving those interested persons of their right to an effective remedy, EU law does not require that that Member State make provision – for the purpose of addressing the infringement of that right to an effective remedy – for the possibility of lodging an appeal before the highest court in the judicial order against such inadmissibility decisions from the highest administrative court, where no such remedy is provided for under its national law.

79 In that situation, the remedy against the infringement of Directive 89/665 and the first paragraph of Article 47 of the Charter resulting from the case-law of the highest administrative court lies in the obligation, for every administrative court of the Member State concerned, including the highest administrative court itself, to disregard that case-law which is not in conformity with EU law, and, if that obligation is not fulfilled, in the possibility of the European Commission instituting proceedings against that Member State for failure to fulfil its obligations.

80 It is moreover open to individuals who may have been harmed by the infringement of their right to an effective remedy as a result of a decision of a court adjudicating at last instance to hold that Member State liable, provided that the conditions relating to the sufficiently serious nature of the breach and to the existence of a direct causal link between that breach and the loss or damage sustained by the injured party are satisfied (see, to that effect, in particular, judgments of 30 September 2003, Köbler, C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 59; of 24 October 2018, XC and Others, C-234/17, EU:C:2018:853, paragraph 58; and of 4 March 2020, Telecom Italia, C-34/19, EU:C:2020:148, paragraphs 67 to 69).

81 In the light of all of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 4(3) and Article 19(1) TEU, and Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as not precluding a provision of a Member State's domestic law which, according to national case-law, has the effect that individual parties, such as tenderers who participated in a procedure for the award of a public contract, cannot challenge the conformity with EU law of a judgment of the highest court in the administrative order of that Member State by means of an appeal before the highest court in that Member State's judicial order.

82 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 4(3) and Article 19(1) TEU and Article 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as precluding a provision of domestic law which, according to national case-law, has the effect that individual parties cannot, by means of an appeal in cassation to the highest court in the judicial order of that Member State against a judgment of the highest court in that Member State's administrative order, challenge the failure, without reason, by the latter court adjudicating at last instance to submit a request for a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice, despite there being some uncertainty as to the correct interpretation of EU law.

83 However, it is apparent from the file available to the Court that Randstad does not put forward in its appeal in cassation any grounds of appeal alleging that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) refrained, contrary to the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU, from submitting a request for a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice, as Randstad confirmed when questioned in that regard at the hearing before the Court of Justice.

84 It follows that, in the context of the proceedings before it, the referring court is not obliged to determine whether, in the light of the requirements ensuing from EU law, the Member States are required to make provision in their legal system for appeals to be brought before the highest court in the judicial order when the highest court in the administrative order has refrained from putting a question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling; the answer to the second question is therefore irrelevant for the purpose of resolving this dispute.

85 Since it bears no relation to the subject matter of the dispute in the main proceedings, the second question is, in accordance with settled case-law, inadmissible (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 July 2021, Ministrstvo za obrambo, C-742/19, EU:C:2021:597, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

The third question

86 In view of the answer given to the first question, there is no need to answer the third question.

Costs

87 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 4(3) and Article 19(1) TEU, and Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, must be interpreted as not precluding a provision of a Member State's domestic law which, according to national case-law, has the effect that individual parties, such as tenderers who participated in a procedure for the award of a public contract, cannot challenge the conformity with EU law of a judgment of the highest court in the administrative order of that Member State by means of an appeal before the highest court in that Member State's judicial order.

Randstad Italia SpA

Umana SpA,

Azienda USL Valle d'Aosta,

IN. VA SpA,

Synergie Italia agenzia per il lavoro SpA

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation, Italy))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 89/665/EEC – Article 1 – Right to an effective remedy – Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union – Obligation for Member States to provide for a review procedure – Access to review procedures – Action for annulment of the decision awarding a public contract – Counterclaim brought by the successful tenderer – Case-law of the Constitutional Court limiting the cases where an appeal in cassation is possible – Article 267 TFEU)

I. Introduction

1. The present request for a preliminary ruling raises important and, in some respects, novel issues concerning the question whether a Member State is obliged to provide a further right of appeal where an appellate court has itself misinterpreted or misapplied EU law. It also raises the question of what (if any) other remedies are available to the injured party in the event that there is no such right of appeal.

2. This request concerns more specifically the interpretation of Articles 4(3) and 19(1) TEU and of Articles 2(1) and (2) and 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter'). It also raises issues concerning the proper interpretation of Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 2(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, (2) as amended, inter alia, by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and the Council of 11 December 2007. (3)

3. This application was made in the context of proceedings between Randstad Italia SpA ('Randstad') and Umana SpA, Azienda USL (Unità Sanitaria Locale) Valle d'Aosta (local health agency of the Valle d'Aosta region, Italy; 'USL'), IN. VA SpA and Synergie Italia agenzia per il lavoro SpA ('Synergie'). These proceedings concern, on the one hand, the exclusion of Randstad from a procedure for the award of a public contract and, on the other hand, the regularity of that procedure.

4. The Court is thus once again called upon to rule, at the request of an Italian court, on the scope of the obligation of the Member States, laid down in Article 1 of Directive 89/665, to ensure effective review of public contracts where, in the context of an action for annulment of the decision awarding a public contract, the successful tenderer brings a counterclaim against the unsuccessful tenderer.

5. However, this request occurs in a specific and sensitive context where, on the one hand, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) seems to have – at least at the time when it was called upon to rule on the dispute in question – some difficulty in applying the case-law of the Court on that issue and where, on the other hand, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation, Italy) has doubts about the extent of its jurisdiction with regard to appeals against judgments of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), as recently specified by the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court, Italy). With the present request for a preliminary ruling, the Court is therefore implicitly called upon to arbitrate a conflict between the three Italian supreme courts.

II. Legal Context

A. EU law

6. Recitals 17, 34 and 36 of Directive 2007/66 provide:

'(17) A review procedure should be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

(34) ... In accordance with the principle of proportionality, as set out in [Article 5 TEU], this Directive does not go beyond what is necessary in order to achieve that objective, while respecting the principle of the procedural autonomy of the Member State.

(36) This Directive respects fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised in particular by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. In particular, this Directive seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second subparagraphs of Article 47 of the Charter.'

7. Article 1 of Directive 89/665, in its current version, entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provide:

'1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65),] unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 37 of that Directive.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] or Directive 2014/23/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1)], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

8. Article 2 of Directive 89/665 is entitled 'Requirements for review procedures'. According to the first two paragraphs of that provision:

'1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

2. The powers specified in paragraph 1 and Articles 2d and 2e may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.'

B. Italian law

9. The eight paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution provides:

'Appeals in cassation against decisions of the Council of State and the Corte dei conti [Court of Auditors] are permitted only for reasons of jurisdiction.'

10. Article 360(1)(1) of the Codice di procedura civile (Code of Civil Procedure) provides:

'Judgments delivered on appeal or at sole instance may be challenged by an appeal in cassation:

(1) for reasons relating to jurisdiction …';

11. Article 362(1)(2) of the same code provides:

'1. An appeal in cassation may be brought … against a decision given by a special court on appeal or at sole instance, for reasons relating to the jurisdiction of that court …

2. The following may be appealed in cassation at any time:

(1) positive or negative conflicts of jurisdiction between special judges, or between them and ordinary judges;

(2) negative conflicts of attribution between the public administration and the ordinary judge.'

12. Article 91 of the Codice del processo amministrativo (Code of Administrative Procedure) provides:

'Judgments [of the administrative courts] may be challenged by way of appeal, revocation, opposition by a third party or an appeal in cassation for reasons of jurisdiction only.'

13. Article 110 of the same code provides:

'An appeal in cassation may be brought against a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato [Council of State] for reasons of jurisdiction only.'

III. The facts of the main proceedings

14. USL launched a tendering procedure with a value of more than EUR 12 000 000 for the purpose of awarding a contract, on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender, to an employment agency for the temporary supply of personnel. The contracting authority stipulated in the tender documents that technical offers must exceed a 'minimum threshold' – set at 48 points – and that competitors awarded points below that threshold would be excluded.

15. Eight competing undertakings participated in the tender process, including Randstad, a temporary association of undertakings formed by Synergie and Umana ('the TAU'), and Gi Group Spa. After evaluating the technical offers, the procurement committee proceeded to make an economic assessment of the tenders of the TAU and Gi Group alone and excluded Randstad for having failed to pass the threshold. The contract was ultimately awarded to the TAU on 6 November 2018.

16. Randstad brought proceedings before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d'Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d'Aosta, Italy) disputing its exclusion for having failed to pass the threshold and challenging the award of the contract to the TAU. With a view to gaining readmission to the tendering procedure, Randstad argued that the points it had been awarded were unreasonable, that the assessment criteria were imprecise, that there had been a failure to justify the marks, that the appointment and composition of the procurement committee were unlawful, and that there had been a failure to divide the call for tenders into lots.

17. USL and the TAU defended that action, raising the objection that Randstad's pleas in law were inadmissible: they maintained that Randstad lacked standing to make the claims since it had, in any event, been excluded from the tendering procedure.

18. In a judgment published 15 March 2019, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d'Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d'Aosta) rejected that objection to admissibility, taking the view that Randstad had legitimately participated in the tendering procedure, inasmuch as it met the requirements, and had been excluded from that procedure following a negative assessment of its tender, and that it therefore had standing to challenge the outcome of the tendering procedure. That court then proceeded to examine all the claims made in the action and dismissed them on their merits.

19. Randstad brought an appeal against that judgment of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d'Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d'Aosta) before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), reiterating the arguments it had made at first instance. Synergie and Umana brought a cross-appeal, taking issue with the Regional Administrative Court's judgment in so far as that court had treated as admissible and had examined the substance of Randstad's claims, which they regarded as having been made by a person that lacked standing, having been excluded from the tendering procedure.

20. In a judgment published 7 August 2019, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) rejected the main ground of appeal by which Randstad disputed the award of insufficient points and upheld the cross-appeals. In particular, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) varied the judgment under appeal in part and held that Randstad lacked locus standi since it had been excluded from the tendering procedure. It followed that the Regional Administrative Court therefore should not have examined the substance of the other claims made in the main action.

21. According to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), once it had been excluded from the tendering procedure Randstad lacked standing, because it had a purely factual interest, like any other operator in the sector that had not participated in the tendering procedure. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) followed its earlier case-law according to which a competitor that has been excluded from a tendering procedure has no standing to challenge the tender documents, unless it obtains a ruling that its exclusion was unlawful.

22. Randstad brought an appeal in cassation against the judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) before the referring court. Synergie, Umana and the contracting authority are defending that appeal.

23. Randstad maintains that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) infringed Article 362(1) of the Italian Code of Civil Procedure and Article 110 of the Italian Code of Administrative Procedure, in that it ruled that a person excluded from a tendering procedure – by means of a decision whose lawfulness has not been definitively established, inasmuch as it is disputed in legal proceedings – has no standing and no interest in bringing a complaint concerning the tendering procedure. That, it contended, entails a breach of the principle of effective judicial protection which is enshrined in Directive 89/665, and a denial of access to such protection which may be challenged by way of an appeal in cassation for reasons of jurisdiction, in accordance with the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution.

24. Randstad relies on the case-law of the Court of Justice according to which even the mere likelihood of securing an advantage by bringing an action, consisting in the outcome thereof, whatever it may be, such as a repetition of the tendering procedure, is capable of establishing an interest in bringing proceedings and the right to judicial protection. The appellant cites for this purpose the judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448); of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199); and of 5 September 2019, Lombardi (C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675).

25. The respondents argue that the appeal is inadmissible. They maintain that the ground of appeal in question concerns an alleged infringement of the law. It is not a 'reason of jurisdiction' and therefore cannot be invoked before the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) in order to challenge a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State).

26. According to the referring court, the appeal in cassation referred to in the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution should, in such a case, be available. The effectiveness of Article 267 TFEU would be undermined if the national court were prevented from immediately applying EU law in accordance with the case-law of the Court of Justice. In a case such as the present, an appeal in cassation would be the final means of preventing a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) which (it is said) is contrary to EU law from becoming res judicata.

27. However, it is apparent from Judgment No 6 of 18 January 2018 of the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court) (4) concerning the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution ('Judgment No 6/2018') that it is not permissible, in the current state of Italian constitutional law as interpreted in that judgment, to equate a breach of EU law with a plea relating to jurisdiction. According to that judgment, '"Exceeding judicial authority", which may be contested by means of appeal to the Supreme Court of Cassation for reasons pertaining to jurisdiction [within the meaning of the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution], as it has always been understood … refers exclusively to two types of scenarios: those characterised by a total lack of jurisdiction, that is, when the Council of State or the Court of Auditors asserts its own jurisdiction over the area reserved to the legislator or the administration (a so-called invasion or encroachment), or when, on the contrary, it denies jurisdiction on the erroneous assumption that the subject matter cannot, absolutely speaking, be the object of its judicial review (so-called abstention), as well as those scenarios [characterised by a relative lack of] jurisdiction, when an administrative or Court of Auditors judge asserts jurisdiction over a subject matter attributed to a different jurisdiction or, on the contrary, denies it on the erroneous assumption that it belongs to other courts'. (5)

28. The referring court concludes that it should declare Randstad's appeal in cassation inadmissible if it were to comply with that judgment of the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court). That being so, it queries whether Judgment No 6/2018, which limits, in administrative matters, the jurisdiction of the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) referred to in the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution to cases in which it is alleged that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has disregarded the 'external limits' of its jurisdiction, would infringe EU law.

29. In that regard, the referring court considers that, where the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) misapplies or misinterprets national provisions of law in a manner incompatible with the provisions of EU law as interpreted by the Court of Justice, it is exercising a jurisdictional power which it does not have. In reality it is exercising a power to create law which is not even conferred on the national legislature. This constitutes a lack of jurisdiction which should be subject to an appeal to the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation). It is irrelevant in this respect whether the judgment of the Court of Justice from which the incompatibility between the application or interpretation by the national court and EU law arose is prior or subsequent to that application or interpretation.

30. The referring court points out that, prior to Judgment No 6/2018, the consistent case-law of its own combined chambers was that, in the event of an appeal against a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), the review of the external limits of 'jurisdiction', within the meaning of the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution, did not extend to the review of the interpretative choices made by the administrative court that might involve simple errors 'in iudicando' (on the merits) or 'in procedendo' (on the procedure), unless there was a fundamental distortion of the applicable rules which could constitute a denial of justice, such as an error in procedendo consisting in the application of a domestic procedural rule which had the effect of denying the party concerned access to the judicial protection granted by directly applicable provisions of EU law.

31. Such an approach would be compatible with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness which, according to the case-law of the Court of Justice, condition the exercise of the procedural autonomy of the Member States. Judgment No 6/2018 and the case-law which has developed in its wake are, on the contrary, incompatible with those principles.

32. Then, it is also important for the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) to know, following that reference for a preliminary ruling, whether or not the approach followed by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) in the contested judgment is compatible with the judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448); of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199); and of 5 September 2019, Lombardi (C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675). This aspect of the dispute raises two separate issues.

33. First, the referring court wonders whether the case-law already established by the Court of Justice concerning the right of review of tenderers excluded from public procurement procedures is transposable to a case such as that at issue in the main proceedings. Second, since the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) refrained, without giving reasons, from asking the Court of Justice whether the lessons to be drawn from the judgments cited in the previous point of this Opinion are transposable to a case such as that at issue in the main proceedings, it is important, in the view of the referring court, that it should itself now be able to refer that question to the Court of Justice.

IV. The request for a preliminary ruling and the procedure before the Court

34. It is in those circumstances that, by decision of 7 July 2020, received at the Court on 30 September 2020, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Do Article 4(3) TEU, Article 19(1) TEU, Article 2(1) and (2) TFEU, and Article 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, preclude an interpretative practice such as that regarding the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution, Article 360(1)(1) and Article 362(1) of the Italian Code of Civil Procedure, and Article 110 of the Italian Code of Administrative Procedure – under which provisions an appeal in cassation against a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) may be brought for "reasons of jurisdiction" – such as that which emerges from Judgment No 6/2018 of the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court) and from subsequent national case-law, in which it has been held, marking a departure from the approach previously taken, that the remedy of an appeal in cassation, on grounds of a "lack of jurisdiction", is not available for the purpose of challenging judgments in which the Council of State has applied interpretative practices developed nationally but in conflict with judgments of the Court of Justice, in sectors governed by EU law (in the present case, public procurement) and with regard to which the Member States have waived their right to exercise sovereign powers in a manner incompatible with EU law, with the effect of consolidating infringements of Community law that might have been rectified using the remedy of an appeal in cassation and of undermining the uniform application of EU law and the effectiveness of the judicial protection afforded to individuals in legal situations of Community significance, contrary to the requirement that EU law be fully and duly applied by every court in a manner necessarily consistent with its correct interpretation by the Court of Justice, regard being had to the limits on the "procedural autonomy" of the Member States in the structuring of their rules of procedure?

(2) Do Article 4(3) TEU, Article 19(1) TEU, and Article 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, preclude the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution, Article 360(1)(1) and Article 362(1) of the Italian Code of Civil Procedure, and Article 110 of the Italian Code of Administrative Procedure from being interpreted and applied, as they have been in national judicial practice, in such a manner that an appeal in cassation before the Combined Chambers [of the Court of Cassation] for "reasons of jurisdiction", on grounds of a "lack of jurisdiction", cannot be brought for the purpose of challenging a judgment in which the Council of State, ruling in a dispute involving issues concerning the application of EU law, refrains, without reason, from making a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling, where the conditions relieving a national court of that obligation, which have been exhaustively listed by the Court of Justice (in its judgment of 6 October 1982, Cilfit and Others, 283/81 [EU:C:1982:335]) and which must be strictly interpreted, are absent, contrary to the principle that national rules and procedural practices, even those arising from legislation or the Constitution, are incompatible with EU law if they prevent a national court (of last instance or otherwise), even temporarily, from making a reference for a preliminary ruling, with the effect of usurping the Court of Justice's exclusive jurisdiction to interpret Community law correctly and in binding fashion, of making any conflicts of interpretation between the law applied by national courts and EU law irremediable (and promoting the consolidation of such conflicts of interpretation), and of undermining the uniform application and effective judicial protection of the rights enjoyed by individuals under EU law?

(3) Do the principles expressed by the Court of Justice in its judgments of 5 September 2019, Lombardi, C-333/18[, EU:C:2019:675]; of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13[, EU:C:2016:199]; and of 4 July 2013, Fastweb, C-100/12[, EU:C:2013:448], in connection with Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 2(1) of [Directive 89/665], as amended by [Directive 2007/66], apply to the case in the main proceedings in which an undertaking has challenged its exclusion from a tendering procedure and the award of the contract to another undertaking and the Council of State has examined the substance only of the ground of appeal whereby the excluded undertaking disputed the points awarded to its technical offer, which were below the "minimum threshold", and has examined as a matter of priority the cross-appeals brought by the contracting authority and the successful tenderer, has upheld them and has declared inadmissible (and refrained from examining the substance of) the other grounds of the main appeal disputing the outcome of the tendering procedure for other reasons (imprecise tender assessment criteria in the tendering specifications, failure to justify the marks awarded, unlawful appointment and composition of the tender committee), in accordance with national judicial practice according to which an undertaking that has been excluded from a tendering procedure has no standing to bring a claim disputing the award of the contract to a competitor undertaking, even by way of the lapse of the tendering procedure, it being necessary to determine the compatibility with EU law of the effect of depriving the undertaking of the right to submit for the court's examination each and every reason for which it disputes the outcome of the tendering procedure, in a situation where that undertaking's exclusion has not been definitively established and where every competitor may argue a similar legitimate interest in the exclusion of its competitors' tenders, which could make it impossible for the contracting authority to choose a regular tender and make it necessary to launch a new tendering procedure in which every tenderer might participate?'

35. In its order for reference, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) requested that the present reference for a preliminary ruling be dealt with under an expedited procedure pursuant to Article 105 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice.

36. In support of its request, the referring court submitted, in essence, that there are valid reasons for seeking to clarify swiftly questions of constitutional importance. The number of appeals against judgments of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) in EU law cases that are pending before the Corte di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) shows that there is grave uncertainty as to the scope of the judicial protection of rights conferred by EU law. This needs to be dispelled, particularly in a key sector such as public procurement, in order, inter alia, to avoid the consolidation of national case-law of courts of last instance that might be followed in numerous other rulings.

37. On 21 October 2020, the President of the Court decided, after hearing the Judge-Rapporteur and the Advocate General, to refuse the referring court's request regarding the expedited procedure. On the same day, the President of the Court also decided to give priority treatment to the present case in accordance with Article 53(3) of the Rules of Procedure.

38. Written observations were submitted by Randstad, Umana, the USL, Synergie, the Italian Government, and the Commission. In addition, Randstad, Umana, the Italian Government, and the Commission presented oral arguments at the hearing on 6 July 2021.

V. Preliminary remarks on the context

39. As mentioned in the introduction to this Opinion, the present case concerns, at the outset, the scope of the obligation of the Member States, laid down in Article 1 of Directive 89/665, to ensure effective review of public contracts in the particular situation where a counterclaim is brought by the successful tenderer. The questions referred are, moreover, part of a wider debate between the three Italian supreme courts. In this context, before examining more specifically the questions asked by the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation), it seems useful to begin the analysis by recalling, not only the case-law of the Court of Justice on the subject, but also the Italian procedural context.

A. Synthesis of the case-law of the Court on Directive 89/665 when a counterclaim is brought by the successful tenderer

40. The question of how to deal under Directive 89/665 with a situation in which a claim is brought against a tenderer seeking its exclusion and a counterclaim is submitted is not new. One can, I think, fairly say that the effect of a series of references for preliminary ruling has been that the issue of standing in public procurement proceedings has been clearly resolved by the Court.

41. First, it follows from the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 that in order for the review of decisions taken by contracting authorities to be regarded as effective, they must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. (6)

42. Accordingly, where, following a public procurement procedure, two tenderers bring actions, each seeking the exclusion of the other, each of those tenderers will have an interest in obtaining a particular contract within the meaning of the provisions referred to in the preceding paragraph. On the one hand, the exclusion of one tenderer may lead to the other being awarded the contract directly in the same procedure. On the other, if all tenderers are excluded and a new public procurement procedure is launched, each of those tenderers may participate in the new procedure and thus obtain the contract indirectly. (7)

43. It follows that the counterclaim brought by the successful tenderer cannot bring about the dismissal of an action for review brought by an unsuccessful tenderer where the validity of the bid submitted by each of the operators is challenged in the course of the same proceedings, given that, in such a situation, each competitor can claim a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bid submitted by the other, which may lead to a finding that the contracting authority is unable to select a lawful bid. (8)

44. Second, the Court has also pointed out that the number of participants in the public procurement procedure concerned as well as the number of participants who have instigated review procedures and the differing legal grounds relied on by those participants are irrelevant to the question of the applicability of the principle according to which the interests pursued in actions by tenderers, in the context of reciprocal 'excluding' actions, are to be regarded as equivalent in principle. (9)

45. That means that this principle also applies when other tenderers have submitted bids in the context of the procurement process and when the reciprocal 'excluding' actions by parties, do not relate to bids ranked lower than those that are the subject of the 'excluding' actions. (10) Indeed, if the action by the unsuccessful tenderer were held to be well founded, the contracting authority could decide to cancel the procurement procedure and open a new one on the ground that the remaining valid bids do not sufficiently meet the contracting authority's expectations. (11)

46. Third, in that regard, the Court stated that under those circumstances, the admissibility of the main action cannot, without depriving Directive 89/665 of its effectiveness, be contingent on a prior finding that all of the bids ranked lower than that of the tenderer are invalid. (12)

47. The importance of this is that each of the parties to the proceedings has a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bids submitted by the other competitors. The reasoning here is that one of the irregularities justifying the exclusion of both the successful tenderer's bid and that of the tenderer challenging the contracting authority's decision may also vitiate the other bids submitted in the tendering procedure, which may result in that authority having to launch a new procedure. (13)

48. It follows from that case-law of the Court that the admissibility of the main action cannot be made subject to the condition that the tenderer must adduce evidence that the contracting authority will have to restart the public procurement procedure. The mere existence of such a possibility must be regarded as being sufficient in that respect. (14)

49. In other words, a tenderer excluded from a public procurement procedure must have the right to seek a review of the decision to exclude him from the procurement procedure as well as to access a review of other decisions of the contracting authority provided that any such review might at least theoretically result in either the awarding of the contract to the claimant or to a new procurement procedure. (15)

50. If I may now anticipate matters covered in the course of the third question, I am therefore of the view that inasmuch as the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) ruled otherwise in the case at hand, this amounted – objectively speaking (16) – to a failure properly to apply the existing jurisprudence of the Court of Justice regarding locus standi in procurement matters. These standing rules – which, of necessity, are broad and liberal – serve the important public policy goal of ensuring that undertakings who maintain that they have been improperly or unfairly excluded from the procurement process may challenge that decision. The procurement rules seek to ensure that public monies are disbursed fairly and that public contracts are awarded on the basis of objectively justifiable criteria. The misapplication of these standing rules is not, therefore, simply a technical failure or error on the part of a national court but is rather one which has the potential to impact – sometimes in a far-reaching way – on the efficiency and even the integrity of the entire procurement process.

51. It is true that the judgment in Lombardi (itself a reference from the Consiglio di Stato) was delivered in September 2019 about a month after the judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) at issue in the present case. Yet in truth the existing case-law of this Court in cases such as Fastweb and PPE had already given very clear guidance on this general question of standing in procurement matters. In any event, even if there was a real doubt within the various chambers of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) concerning the proper application of this earlier case-law – as the judgment in Lombardi duly records (17) – that court as a court of last resort was itself obliged to make a reference pursuant to the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU.

B. Public procurement and review procedures in Italy

52. In a very schematic way, the review procedures in Italy in the field of public procurement fall under the jurisdiction of the administrative courts. There are two levels of jurisdiction: the Tribunali Amministrativi Regionali (Regional Administrative Courts) deal with disputes at first instance and an appeal can then be lodged before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State).

53. In addition to this 'classic' organisation, the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution provides that appeals in cassation against decisions of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) are permitted, but only for reasons of jurisdiction.

54. The Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court) has recently framed the scope of this specific appeal before the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) in Judgment No 6/2018. As previously explained, according to that judgment, 'exceeding judicial authority' refers exclusively to two types of scenarios: those characterised by a total lack of jurisdiction, that is, when the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) asserts its own jurisdiction over the area reserved to the legislature or the administration (a so-called invasion or encroachment), or when, on the contrary, it denies jurisdiction on the erroneous assumption that the subject matter cannot, absolutely speaking, be the object of its judicial review (so-called abstention), as well as those scenarios characterised by a relative lack of jurisdiction, when an administrative judge asserts jurisdiction over a subject matter attributed to a different jurisdiction or, on the contrary, denies it on the erroneous assumption that it belongs to other courts. (18)

55. In the same judgment, the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court) made two further clarifications. On the one hand, the intervention of the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation), in the context of its review of jurisdiction, 'cannot be justified even by the infringement of EU [law]'. (19) On the other hand, it is also 'impermissible to challenge judgments [by this procedural route] where an administrative court … has adopted an interpretation of a procedural or substantive rule in such a way that the full merits of the case are not subject to adjudication'. (20)

VI. Analysis

A. The first question

56. By its first question, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) asks, in substance, whether Article 4(3) TEU, Article 19(1) TEU, Article 2(1) and (2) TFEU, and Article 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, preclude a rule such as the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution, as interpreted in Judgment No 6/2018, according to which an appeal in cassation for reasons of jurisdiction is not available for the purpose of challenging judgments in which the court of second degree has applied interpretative practices developed nationally but in conflict with judgments of the Court of Justice, in sectors governed by EU law.

1. On the provisions relevant to answer the first question

57. According to settled case-law of the Court, in the procedure laid down by Article 267 TFEU providing for cooperation between national courts and the Court, it is for the latter to provide the national court with an answer which will be of use to it and enable it to determine the case before it. To that end, the Court may have to reformulate the questions referred to it. The Court has a duty to interpret all provisions of EU law which national courts require in order to decide the actions pending before them, even if those provisions are not expressly indicated in the questions referred to the Court of Justice by those courts. (21)

58. Consequently, even if, formally, the referring court has limited its first question to the interpretation of Article 4(3) TEU, Article 19(1) TEU, Article 2(1) and (2) TFEU, and Article 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, that does not prevent the Court of Justice from providing the referring court with all the elements of interpretation of EU law that may be of assistance in adjudicating in the case before it, whether or not the referring court has referred to them in the wording of its question. It is, in that regard, for the Court to extract from all the information provided by the national court, in particular from the grounds of the decision referring the questions, the points of EU law which require interpretation in view of the subject matter of the dispute in the main proceedings. (22)

59. In that regard, it appears that the interpretation of Article 2(1) and (2) TFEU and of Article 267 TFEU does not appear, in view of the information contained in the request for a preliminary ruling, to be necessary in order to provide a useful answer to the first question referred, given that those articles relate, respectively, to the rules in relation the exclusive and sharing competence of the Union and to the preliminary ruling mechanism. On the contrary, it must be recalled, as is clear from its recital 36, Directive 2007/66, and therefore Directive 89/665 that it amended and supplemented, seek to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter. (23)

60. Similarly, to the extent that it applies to the Member States, Article 47 of the Charter echoes the second subparagraph of Article 19(1) TEU and gives specific expression to the principle of sincere cooperation laid down in Article 4(3) TEU. (24) Thus, it is clear, according to settled case-law, first, that 'under the principle of sincere cooperation laid down in Article 4(3) TEU, it is for the courts of the Member States to ensure judicial protection of a person's rights under EU law [and, secondly, that] Article 19(1) TEU requires Member States to provide remedies sufficient to ensure effective legal protection, within the meaning in particular of Article 47 of the Charter, in the fields covered by EU law'. (25) Moreover, the Court has already pointed out that the requirement on the part of the Member States laid down in Article 19(1) TEU 'corresponds to the right enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter'. (26)

61. In that context, as it is not disputed that a procedure of review before independent courts exists in Italy and that the debate is not about the establishment of a remedy but about the way that remedy is implemented by the competent courts, Articles 4(3) and 19(1) TEU do not seem to be useful either.

62. Accordingly, as suggested by the Commission, (27) I consider that the first question put by the referring court should be understood as asking whether Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude a rule such as the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution, as interpreted in Judgment No 6/2018, according to which an appeal in cassation for reasons of jurisdiction is not available for the purpose of challenging judgments in which the court of second degree has applied interpretative practices developed nationally but in conflict with judgments of the Court of Justice, in sectors governed by EU law.

2. The framework of the analysis: the procedural autonomy under Article 47 of the Charter

63. The obligation for Member States to organise a review procedure in the field of public procurement is laid down in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665. According to the third subparagraph of that provision, Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24 or Directive 2014/23, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible on the grounds that such decisions have infringed EU law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

64. In that regard, Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 only specifies that Member States have to ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which they may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

65. In other words, Directive 89/665 does not contain any provisions specifically governing the conditions under which those review procedures may be used. That directive prescribes only the minimum conditions to be satisfied by the review procedures established in domestic law to ensure compliance with the requirements of EU law concerning public procurement. (28) In any case, it must be admitted that Directive 89/665 does not contain any specific provisions concerning appeals which can or must be organised.

66. However, in a context where there are no EU rules governing the matter, the Court has consistently held that it is for every Member State to lay down the detailed rules of administrative and judicial procedures for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from EU law. (29) This respect for the procedural autonomy of Member States is expressly mentioned in recital 34 of Directive 2007/66 and is reflected in Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665.

67. Accordingly, as previously stated by the Court, when they set out detailed procedural rules for legal actions intended to ensure the protection of rights conferred by Directive 89/665 on candidates and tenderers harmed by the decisions of contracting authorities, the Member States must ensure compliance with the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter. (30)

68. In other words, in implementing Directive 89/665, the Member States retain, in accordance with their procedural autonomy, the option of adopting rules which may differ from one Member State to another. They must, however, ensure that those rules do not frustrate the requirements arising from that directive, in particular as regards the judicial protection, guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter, which underpins it. (31) That means that the characteristics of a remedy such as that under Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must be determined in a manner consistent with Article 47 of the Charter rather than by reference to the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, these requirements only 'embody[ing] the general obligation on the Member States to ensure judicial protection of an individual's rights under [EU] law', (32) now enshrined in Article 19(1) TEU and Article 47 of the Charter. (33)

69. A limitation on the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter can therefore be justified, in accordance with Article 52(1) of the Charter, only if it is provided for by law, if it respects the essence of that right and, subject to the principle of proportionality, if it is necessary and genuinely meets objectives of general interest recognised by the EU or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others. (34)

3. Application to the principles to present case

70. In the present case, the rule at issue concerns the limitation of the right to appeal in cassation for reasons of jurisdiction. However, it follows from the settled case-law of the Court that Article 47 of the Charter does not requires two levels of jurisdiction. (35) Indeed, under this provision, the principle of effective judicial protection does not afford a right of access to a second level of jurisdiction but only to a court or tribunal. (36)

71. In those circumstances, the fact that the appeal in cassation available to the unsuccessful tenderer is, as a third level of jurisdiction, limited to questions of jurisdiction can certainly not, in itself, be considered to be contrary to EU law even if it prevents a challenge to a judgment in which the court of second instance applied an interpretation of national law which, objectively speaking, is contrary to EU law.

72. Indeed, EU law does not in principle preclude Member States, in accordance with the principle of procedural autonomy, from restricting or imposing conditions on the pleas which may be relied on in proceedings in an appeal in cassation, subject to respect for the guarantees laid down in Article 47 of the Charter. (37) However, if the national procedural rules ensure that the right to an examination of the substance of the tenderer's claim by the court of first instance and, where appropriate, on appeal, is respected, (38) the procedural rule at issue is not likely to undermine the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 or the requirements of Article 47 of the Charter.

73. I would also add, for the sake of completeness, that, in any event, if a procedural rule such as the limitation on the right to appeal in cassation at issue in the main proceedings were to be regarded as a limitation on the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter, it would have to be admitted that it is a measure, on the one hand, provided for 'by law' and, on the other hand, liable to discourage frivolous challenges and ensure that all individuals have their actions dealt with as rapidly as possible, in the interest of the proper administration of justice, in accordance with Article 47, first and second paragraphs, of the Charter. (39) Finally, the rule in question does not go beyond what is necessary to achieve this objective.

74. Article 47 of the Charter naturally requires the establishment of a remedy that is effective both in law and in practice. (40) However, if it appears, on the one hand, that access to a 'tribunal' within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter is guaranteed without difficulties, and that, on the other hand, national law confers on this 'tribunal' the competence to examine the merits of the dispute – as demonstrated by the judgment of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Valle d'Aosta (Regional Administrative Court, Valle d'Aosta) in the present case – neither Directive 89/665 nor Article 47 of the Charter can be interpreted as requiring a further level of appeal in order to remedy a misapplication of these rules by the appeal court.

75. Indeed, as several parties have pointed out, one must ask what would happen if the court of third instance in turn upheld the interpretation of the court of second instance. Would Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, then require the organisation of a fourth level of jurisdiction? That question essentially answers itself. To my mind, the solution to a misapplication of EU law by a court of last instance must be found in other procedural forms, such as an action for failure to fulfil obligations pursuant to Article 258 TFEU (41) or, for example, a Francovich-style action (42) offering the possibility of holding the State liable in order to obtain by this means legal protection of the rights of individuals recognised by EU law. (43)

4. Further remarks on the Francovich case-law and the need for its development

76. In that regard, it must be admitted that, at the hearing, there was much discussion as to what remedies might be open to Randstad in the present circumstances, as it seems fair to say that the actual decision of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) itself – which rejected the appeal on standing grounds – seemed to have few defenders.

77. There was a suggestion at the hearing that Randstad might be able to invoke Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 which provides for the award of damages in respect of infringements of the procurement process. While, strictly speaking, it is unnecessary to decide this point, it would seem to me that this provision relates simply to the jurisdiction of the national courts to award damages on a strict liability basis in respect of breaches of the procurement rules by a contracting authority as distinct from the misapplication of EU public procurement law by a court. It was also observed that potential liability might lie with the Italian State in respect of a claim for Francovich damages arising from a failure of the judicial system of that State properly to apply EU law.

78. In that regard, it may be observed that the precise circumstances as to why the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) came to find against Randstad on this point are not altogether clear. In the event that other actions were subsequently to be taken by Randstad, this would be a matter for the competent national court to determine and to assess the reasons why the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) appears not to have applied the well-established case-law of the Court in relation to standing in procurement matters or, in so far as that court had doubts, for its failure (as a court of last resort) to make the appropriate Article 267 TFEU reference. There may, perhaps, be an explanation for the decision of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) in this matter.

79. I would nevertheless take this opportunity to observe that I think that the Francovich jurisprudence should now be read with fresh eyes in the light of the requirements of Article 47 of the Charter and, if necessary, developed further in this light. It is clear from the judgment of 5 March 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame (C-46/93 and C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79) ('judgment in Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame') that Member States are liable to pay compensation in respect of a sufficiently serious breach of EU law where they have 'manifestly and gravely disregarded the limits of its discretion'. (44)

80. The difficulty, however, with the practical application of this test is that clear failures by Member States (including judicial failures) may too often and perhaps too readily be excused on the ground that such errors were made honestly or were otherwise pardonable in the circumstances or, at all events, that they are not 'manifest and grave'. Considerations of judicial politeness or respect for venerable national judicial institutions should not, however, make one hesitate to describe such errors as 'manifest and grave' in the Brasserie du pêcheur sense of this term where such is warranted. A willingness or propensity to excuse manifest and grave failures by a Member State in its application of EU law by downgrading the seriousness of such failures would itself represent a clear denial of an effective remedy to litigants under Article 47 of the Charter, especially where, viewed objectively, the failure to apply clearly established EU law cannot realistically be justified or otherwise excused. While the scope of Francovich is, perforce, never far from view in the present case, the issue will nevertheless have to await resolution at a later stage since it is not directly raised in the present proceedings.

81. At the same time, any willingness to excuse the failures of Member States is but cold comfort to a litigant if the availability of a 'Francovich action' were itself to be made excessively difficult in practice. This may be summed up by saying that if the failure by an appellate court against whom there is no further right of appeal properly to apply the well-established case-law of the Court of Justice does not itself sound an action in damages by reason of the 'manifest and grave disregard' criteria, then it is necessary that these criteria – which, after all, predate the entry into force of the Charter – should themselves be further refined. If the promise of Article 47 of the Charter is not to be a hollow one, then it seems to me that the failure in this instance by a court of final appeal to apply the settled case-law of the Court should give rise to Francovich-style liability on the part of the Member State in question. The Court of Justice has, in any event, ruled that where a national court has violated EU law 'in manifest breach of the case-law of the Court', this is something which in itself suggests a sufficiently serious breach. (45)

82. All of this calls to mind the case of the Sherlock Holmes story regarding the dog which did not bark. (46) In that vein it is the general absence of the case-law on this topic which is telling. (47) That in itself may be regarded as an indication that these errors and failures are in practice too readily excused and that for many whose EU rights have not been secured, a Francovich remedy remains an illusion rather than a reality. This is yet a further reason why the 'grave and manifest' criteria in the judgment in Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame may require to be reassessed so that EU law is enforced with the appropriate degree of vigour by the judiciary of the Member States, even if allowance should also be made for the particular factors identified by this Court in the judgment of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513) in respect of liability for judicial error, namely, 'the specific nature of the judicial function', together with the requirements of legal certainty. (48) Yet Francovich is, so to speak, a dog which must be allowed to bark for it is that very barking which should serve to warn us that the rights which EU law intended to vouchsafe and protect are being compromised – sometimes silently – by national judicial error.

83. To this one might add that in the special context of a public procurement violation it would be somewhat incongruous that Directive 89/665 should provide for a form of strict liability for error on the part of a contracting authority while at the same time liability for national judicial error in respect of any review of the procurement process were to remain at a dauntingly elevated level.

84. For my part, however, I think that the law has to some degree moved on since the judgment of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513). In the light of the subsequent entry into force of Article 47 of the Charter, I consider that, for the reasons already stated, it is also necessary to examine whether the judicial error at issue was objectively excusable. Absent such an examination, there is a real danger that the application of the criteria laid down in the judgment in Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame would in practice tend to make the recovery of Francovich damages in respect of judicial error excessively difficult such that it would be only in quite special circumstances where these conditions of liability would be likely to be met.

5. Conclusion on the first question

85. In summary, therefore, I am of the view that Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude a rule such as the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution, as interpreted in Judgment No 6/2018, according to which an appeal in cassation on grounds of a 'lack of jurisdiction' is not available for the purpose of challenging judgments in which the court of second instance has applied interpretative practices developed nationally but which are objectively in conflict with judgments of the Court of Justice, in sectors governed by EU law.

86. The solution in respect of the misapplication of EU law by a court of last instance must be found in other procedural forms, such as an action for failure to fulfil obligations pursuant to Article 258 TFEU or, the possibility of holding the State liable in order to obtain legal protection of the rights recognised by EU law.

B. The second question

87. By its second question, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) asks, in substance, whether Article 4(3) TEU, Article 19(1) TEU, and Article 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, preclude the rules relating to appeals in cassation for 'reasons of jurisdiction' from being interpreted and applied in such a manner that an appeal in cassation before the Combined Chambers of the Supreme Court of Cassation cannot be brought for the purpose of challenging a judgment in which the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) refrains, without reason, from making a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling, where the conditions relieving a national court of that obligation, as listed by the Court in its judgment of 6 October 1982, Cilfit and Others (283/81 EU:C:1982:335), are absent.

88. The idea behind that question is that a national court cannot be prevented, even temporarily, from making a reference for a preliminary ruling, as this would have the effect of usurping the Court's exclusive jurisdiction to interpret EU law correctly and in binding fashion, thereby undermining the uniform application and effective judicial protection of the rights enjoyed by individuals under EU law.

89. At the outset it might be observed that the Corte di cassazione (Court of Cassation) raises an additional question in the introductory part of the request for a preliminary ruling relating to the second question, which does not appear in the wording of the question finally asked. In fact, it is clear from paragraph 50 of the reference for a preliminary ruling that the Corte suprema di Cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation), in addition to the question formally posed, also questions the approach whereby it could not itself make a reference for a preliminary ruling directly.

90. Given that this issue is not included in the question finally referred, I will be brief. Moreover, the answer to this question does not seem to me to be in doubt. Indeed, it is settled case-law that Article 267 TFEU gives national courts the widest discretion in referring matters to the Court if they consider that a case pending before them raises questions involving the interpretation of provisions of EU law, or consideration of their validity, which are necessary for the resolution of the case. (49) Consequently, if the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) is validly seised, national rules of procedure cannot affect the powers and obligations conferred on that court under Article 267 TFEU. (50)

91. That being said, and I come now to the second question expressly referred, I do not think that the national rules of procedure such as the rule at issue which limits the appeal in cassation to questions of jurisdiction must necessarily, in order to be compatible with EU law, be interpreted as allowing an appeal in cassation where a court of first instance or a court against whose decisions there is no judicial remedy under national law, does not refer a question to the Court of Justice.

92. Indeed, since it is for the national courts to apply EU law, the first task of interpretation necessarily falls to them. As previously stated by the Court, national courts, in collaboration with the Court of Justice, fulfil a duty entrusted to them both of ensuring that in the interpretation and application of the Treaties the law is observed. (51) It follows from the judicial system established by the Treaties – and in particular Article 4(3) TEU, Article 19(1) TEU and Article 267 TFEU to which the referring court refers – that the Court does not have a monopoly on the interpretation of EU law but rather has exclusive jurisdiction to give the definitive interpretation of that law. (52)

93. The obligation on national courts and tribunals against whose decision there is no judicial remedy to refer a matter to the Court of Justice under the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU is based on cooperation, established with a view to ensuring the proper application and uniform interpretation of EU law in all the Member States, between national courts, in their capacity as courts responsible for the application of EU law, and the Court. (53)

94. What Article 267 TFEU enables is thus the opening of a dialogue between the Court of Justice and the courts and tribunals of the Member States. (54) As already recalled in this Opinion, in accordance with settled case-law, this provision gives national courts the widest discretion in referring matters to the Court if they consider that a case pending before them raises questions involving the interpretation of provisions of EU law, or consideration of their validity, which are necessary for the resolution of the case before them. (55) In addition, it must be borne in mind that, under the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU, when there is no judicial remedy under national law against the decision of a court or tribunal of a Member State, that court or tribunal is, in principle, obliged to bring the matter before the Court of Justice, where a question relating to the interpretation of EU law is raised before it. (56)

95. In this specific context of cooperation established by Article 267 TFEU, what is forbidden is, therefore, for a rule of national law to prevent a national court from exercising that discretion, or from complying with that obligation. (57) In other words, the minimum requirement is that the court designated by the national procedural system to rule on issues related to EU law – such as, in this case, the Tribunali amministrativi regionali (Regional Administrative Courts) and the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) in the field of public procurement – should have the possibility, if not the obligation, to proceed to a preliminary ruling. If it is the case, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. (58) To summarise, as recently explained by Advocate General Bobek, the logic of the case-law of the Court in this area seeks only to ensure that national rules of procedure do not prevent points of EU law from being raised, with a request for a preliminary ruling potentially being made regardless of the stage of proceedings. (59)

96. However, as will be seen in my analysis of the third question asked by the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation), if it is clear that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) should have referred a question to the Court of Justice if it had any a doubt on the scope of application of Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 as previously interpreted by the Court, it must be noted that there was nonetheless no national procedural rule preventing it from initiating this dialogue with the Court of Justice.

97. In my view, the failure to refer a question to the Court for a preliminary ruling is therefore likely to result in substantive illegality (due to the misapplication of EU law which was wrongly interpreted by the national court) and/or procedural illegality (due to the failure to refer a question to the Court for a preliminary ruling when the court in question was obliged to do so), but it should not be regarded as a question of jurisdiction in the sense understood by the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution. As I indicated at the end of my analysis of the first question referred, even if these solutions are not optimal, the answer to a misapplication of EU law by a court of last instance – and I add here including the obligations under Article 267 TFEU – must be found in other procedural forms, such as an action for failure to fulfil obligations or the possibility of holding the State liable for damages in order to obtain legal protection of the rights of individuals.

98. Indeed, in view of the essential role played by the judiciary in the protection of the rights derived by individuals from the rules of EU law, as I have already indicated, the full effectiveness of those rules would be called into question and the protection of those rights would be weakened if individuals were precluded from being able, under certain conditions, to obtain compensation or damages when their rights are prejudiced by an infringement of EU law attributable to a decision of a court or tribunal of a Member State adjudicating at last instance. (60)

99. Consequently, in accordance with the foregoing considerations, I arrive at the conclusion that Article 4(3) TEU, Article 19(1) TEU, and Article 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, do not preclude the rules relating to appeals in cassation for reasons of jurisdiction from being interpreted and applied in such a manner as to prevent an appeal in cassation before the Combined Chambers of the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) from being brought for the purpose of challenging a judgment in which the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) refrains, without reason, from making a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

C. The third question

100. By its third question, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) asks, in substance, whether the interpretation of Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2007/66, which derives from the judgments of the Court of Justice of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199), and of 5 September 2019, Lombardi (C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675), applies to the case in the main proceedings.

101. In that regard, according to settled case-law, the justification for making a request for a preliminary ruling is not for advisory opinions to be delivered on general or hypothetical questions, but rather that it is necessary for the effective resolution of a dispute concerning EU law. (61)

102. However, given that I arrived at the conclusion, in relation to the first question referred, that the limitation of the jurisdiction of the Corte di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) as provided for in the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution, as interpreted in Judgment No 6/2018, is not contrary to Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 47 of the Charter, the referring court should lack jurisdiction to examine, in the main proceedings, the scope of Directive 89/665. I nonetheless propose to consider this question in the event that the Court were to decide differently.

103. As a reminder, in the main proceedings, Randstad has challenged its exclusion from a tendering procedure and the award of the contract to another undertaking. However, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has examined the substance only of the ground of appeal whereby Randstad disputed the points awarded to its technical offer – which were below the ‘minimum threshold’ – and has examined as a matter of priority the cross-appeals brought by the contracting authority and the successful tenderer. It has upheld those cross-appeals while refraining from examining the substance of the other grounds of the main appeal disputing the outcome of the tendering procedure for other reasons than those relating to the points awarded to its technical offer.

104. I have already set out in the preliminary remarks of this Opinion the case-law of the Court on the scope of the obligation to provide a review procedure laid down in Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, in the specific context where a counterclaim is brought by the successful tenderer. At this stage, it can therefore be stated that the criterion which determines the obligation of a court to examine the applicant's appeal is that each of the parties to the proceedings has a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bids submitted by the other competitors. That means that one cannot exclude the possibility that one of the irregularities justifying the exclusion of both the successful tenderer's bid and that of the tenderer challenging the contracting authority's decision may also vitiate the other bids submitted in the tendering procedure, which may result in that authority having to launch a new procedure. (62)

105. The Court has been particularly clear on this point: 'the admissibility of the main action cannot, without depriving Directive 89/665 of its effectiveness, be contingent on a prior finding that all of the bids ranked lower than that of the tenderer are invalid [or] subject to the condition that the tenderer adduces evidence that the contracting authority will have to restart the public procurement procedure. The mere existence of such a possibility must be regarded as being sufficient in that respect'. (63) The tenderer whose bid has been excluded by the contracting authority from a public procurement procedure may be refused access to a review of the decision awarding the public contract only if the decision to exclude that tenderer has been confirmed by a decision that has acquired the force of res judicata before the court hearing the review of the contract award decision has given its decision, so that that tenderer must be regarded to be definitively excluded from the public procurement procedure at issue. (64)

106. In the main proceedings, first, it is not disputed that Randstad had not been yet definitively excluded from the procurement process when it lodged its appeal before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State). Second, it follows from the reference for a preliminary ruling that Randstad put forward, as one of the pleas for its readmission to the tendering procedure, the illegality of the appointment and composition of the procurement committee responsible for carrying out the economic assessment. However, if those irregularities were found to exist, they would justify the exclusion of both the successful tenderer's bid and that of the tenderer challenging the contracting authority's decision and would also vitiate the other bids submitted in the tendering procedure, which could lead the contracting authority to have to launch a new procedure.

107. In those circumstances, it seems certain to me that the principle established and confirmed by the case-law cited by the referring court was applicable in the main proceedings. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) was therefore obliged to recognise Randstad's interest in challenging, both at first instance and on appeal, the regularity of the procedure and therefore of the decision to award the contract or, alternatively, to submit a request to the Court of Justice on that matter in case of doubt.

VII. Conclusion

108. Accordingly, in the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should answer the questions referred by the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation, Italy) as follows:

(1) Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended, inter alia, by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and the Council of 11 December 2007, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude a rule such as the eighth paragraph of Article 111 of the Italian Constitution, as interpreted in Judgment No 6/2018, according to which an appeal in cassation for reasons of jurisdiction is not available for the purpose of challenging judgments in which the court of second degree has applied interpretative practices developed nationally but in conflict with judgments of the Court of Justice, in sectors governed by EU law.

The solution in respect of the misapplication of EU law by a court of last instance must be found in other procedural forms, such as an action for failure to fulfil obligations pursuant to Article 258 TFEU or, the possibility of holding the State liable in order to obtain legal protection of the rights of individuals recognised by EU law.

(2) Article 4(3) TEU, Article 19(1) TEU, and Article 267 TFEU, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, do not preclude the rules relating to appeals in cassation for reasons of jurisdiction from being interpreted and applied in such a manner as to prevent an appeal in cassation before the Combined Chambers of the Corte di cassazione (Court of Cassation) from being brought for the purpose of challenging a judgment in which the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) refrains, without reason, from making a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

In the alternative,

(3) The interpretation of Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2007/66, which derives from the judgments of the Court of Justice of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448); of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199); and of 5 September 2019, Lombardi (C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675), applies to the case of the main proceedings where the decision to exclude the unsuccessful tenderer had not been confirmed by a decision which had acquired the force of res judicata when the court hearing the review of the contract award decision gave its decision and where that tenderer had put forward a plea which could lead the contracting authority to have to launch a new procedure.

In that regard, it should be recalled that the Court interprets Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 as requiring the Member States to adopt the measures necessary to ensure that the decisions taken by the contracting authorities in public contract award procedures may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible, on the ground that they have infringed EU law on public procurement or the national rules transposing that law (see, to that effect, judgments of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 50; of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 39; and of 29 July 2019, Hochtief Solutions Magyarországi Fióktelepe, C-620/17, EU:C:2019:630, paragraph 50).

On the contrary, in that situation, if no reference has been made to the Court of Justice by a court such as the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), then a court such as the Combined Chambers of the Corte di cassazione (Court of Cassation) must itself submit the question to the Court of Justice (see, to that effect, in a context where two courts are likely to be obliged to make a reference to the Court of Justice, judgment of 4 November 1997, Parfums Christian Dior, C-337/95, EU:C:1997:517, paragraph 30).

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Advania Sverige AB (‘Advania’) and the Kammarkollegiet (Swedish Legal, Financial and Administrative Services Agency) (‘the National Legal Services Agency’) and Dustin Sverige AB (‘Dustin’) concerning the decision of that agency to approve the transfer of four framework agreements without a new procurement procedure in accordance with Directive 2014/24.

Legal context

3 Recitals 107 and 110 of Directive 2014/24 state:

‘(107) It is necessary to clarify the conditions under which modifications to a contract during its performance require a new procurement procedure, taking into account the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union. A new procurement procedure is required in case of material changes to the initial contract, in particular to the scope and content of the mutual rights and obligations of the parties, including the distribution of intellectual property rights. Such changes demonstrate the parties’ intention to renegotiate essential terms or conditions of that contract. This is the case in particular if the amended conditions would have had an influence on the outcome of the procedure, had they been part of the initial procedure.

(110) In line with the principles of equal treatment and transparency, the successful tenderer should not, for instance where a contract is terminated because of deficiencies in the performance, be replaced by another economic operator without reopening the contract to competition. However, the successful tenderer performing the contract should be able, in particular where the contract has been awarded to more than one undertaking, to undergo certain structural changes during the performance of the contract, such as purely internal reorganisations, takeovers, mergers and acquisitions or insolvency. Such structural changes should not automatically require new procurement procedures for all public contracts performed by that tenderer.’

4 Article 72 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Modification of contracts during their term’, provides as follows:

‘1. Contracts and framework agreements may be modified without a new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive in any of the following cases:

(d) where a new contractor replaces the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract as a consequence of either:

(i) an unequivocal review clause or option in conformity with point (a);

(ii) universal or partial succession into the position of the initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, including takeover, merger, acquisition or insolvency, of another economic operator that fulfils the criteria for qualitative selection initially established provided that this does not entail other substantial modifications to the contract and is not aimed at circumventing the application of this Directive; or

(iii) in the event that the contracting authority itself assumes the main contractor’s obligations towards its subcontractors where this possibility is provided for under national legislation pursuant to Article 71;

(e) where the modifications, irrespective of their value, are not substantial within the meaning of paragraph 4.

4. A modification of a contract or a framework agreement during its term shall be considered to be substantial within the meaning of point (e) of paragraph 1, where it renders the contract or the framework agreement materially different in character from the one initially concluded. In any event, without prejudice to paragraphs 1 and 2, a modification shall be considered to be substantial where one or more of the following conditions is met:

(a) the modification introduces conditions which, had they been part of the initial procurement procedure, would have allowed for the admission of other candidates than those initially selected or for the acceptance of a tender other than that originally accepted or would have attracted additional participants in the procurement procedure;

(b) the modification changes the economic balance of the contract or the framework agreement in favour of the contractor in a manner which was not provided for in the initial contract or framework agreement;

(c) the modification extends the scope of the contract or framework agreement considerably;

(d) where a new contractor replaces the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract in other cases than those provided for under point (d) of paragraph 1.

Swedish law

5 The first subparagraph of Paragraph 13 of Chapter 17 of Lagen (2016:1145) om offentlig upphandling (Law No 1145 of 2016 on public procurement; 'the Law on public procurement'), provides that a contract or a framework agreement might be modified with one contractor being replaced by another, without a new procurement, if:

'(1) the new contractor fully or partially replaces the initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, including takeover, merger, acquisition or insolvency, and

(2) the circumstance that a new contractor fully or partially replaces the initial contractor did not entail other substantial modifications to the contract or framework agreement.'

6 According to the referring court, it is apparent from the second subparagraph of Paragraph 13 of Chapter 17 of that law that such a replacement of the contractor presupposes that the new service provider is not excluded under a ground for exclusion laid down by that law and that it meets the qualification conditions established in the original contract.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

7 Four framework agreements with a reopening of competition, for the purchase of various computer equipment, were awarded by the National Legal Services Agency under a restricted procedure pursuant to Lagen (2007:1091) om offentlig upphandling (Law No 1091 of 2007 on public procurement), which was repealed in the meantime. In that procedure, 17 candidates qualified for the selection, including Advania, Dustin and Misco AB. While Dustin and Misco were among the nine candidates who were invited to tender, Advania was not invited to tender. At the end of that procedure, Misco was awarded framework agreements in the four areas at issue and Dustin was awarded framework agreements in two areas.

8 By letter of 4 December 2017, Misco requested the National Legal Services Agency to authorise the transfer to Advania of the four framework agreements which it held. On 12 December 2017, Misco was declared insolvent and, on 18 January 2018, its insolvency administrator signed a contract with Advania providing for the transfer of those framework agreements. The National Legal Services Agency authorised that transfer in February 2018.

9 Dustin then brought an appeal before the Förvaltningsrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court, Stockholm, Sweden) seeking that the framework agreements between Advania and the National Legal Services Agency be declared invalid.

10 The Förvaltningsrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court, Stockholm) dismissed the appeal. It considered that the National Legal Services Agency had correctly found that the succession at issue resulted from the restructuring of Misco and that Advania had obtained the framework agreements at issue and had acquired the branches of business enabling them to be performed, under the conditions laid down in Paragraph 13 of Chapter 17 of the Law on public procurement, which transposes Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 into Swedish law.

11 Dustin brought an appeal against the judgment of the Förvaltningsrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court, Stockholm) before the Kammarrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court of Appeal, Stockholm, Sweden), which upheld that appeal and declared the invalidity of the four framework agreements between Advania and the National Legal Services Agency. That court was of the opinion that Advania could not be regarded as having replaced Misco universally or partially, within the meaning of Paragraph 13 of Chapter 17 of the Law on public procurement, since, with the exception of the framework agreements at issue, Misco had transferred virtually no business to Advania. In support of that conclusion, the Kammarrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court of Appeal, Stockholm) noted that only one employee of Misco subsequently joined Advania, that the list of Misco's customers was not fully updated or relevant, that customers of Misco had already changed supplier and that there was no evidence to prove that Advania had taken on some of Misco's subcontractors or that other public framework agreements had been transferred to Advania, even though Misco was party to at least one other public framework agreement.

12 Advania and the National Legal Services Agency each brought an appeal against the judgment of the Kammarrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court of Appeal, Stockholm) before the Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court, Sweden). In their appeals, they do not dispute the appeal court's assessment of the nature and extent of the elements covered by the transfer at issue. However, they contend that such a transfer satisfies the condition in Paragraph 13 of Chapter 17 of the Law on public procurement.

13 Before the referring court, Advania submits that Directive 2014/24 does not require that, in addition to the framework agreements, a business of a certain nature or scope be transferred to the new contractor which replaces that to which the contracting authority initially awarded the contract.

14 The National Legal Services Agency submits in its action before the referring court that the concept of 'universal or partial succession', which is one of the methods of transfer provided for by the relevant provisions of the Law on public procurement and Directive 2014/24, must be interpreted as meaning that the transferee contractor is required only to take the place of the original contractor in the rights and obligations arising from the contract or framework agreement at issue. By requiring, in addition to such substitution, the transfer of business or the transfer of assets, the applicability of those provisions would be severely limited. The fundamental point is that the new contractor may perform the contract or framework agreement at issue in accordance with the conditions and requirements originally laid down.

15 Dustin contends, for its part, before that court that the condition relating to the universal or partial succession of the original contractor following corporate restructuring operations provided for in Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 covers situations in which the branches of business concerned by the contract or framework agreement at issue are transferred to the new contractor. The transfer of the contract or framework agreement in question is merely incidental to the transfer of business. The transfer of contracts or framework agreements which were the subject of calls for tenders without the simultaneous transfer of the branches of business concerned would lead not only to the trade in such contracts or framework agreements but would also enable the transfer of partial rights and obligations arising from those contracts or framework agreements.

16 In those circumstances, the Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court) stayed the proceedings and referred the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Does the circumstance that a new contractor has taken over the initial contractor’s rights and obligations under a framework agreement, after the initial contractor has been declared insolvent and the insolvency estate has transferred the agreement, mean that the new contractor will be deemed to have succeeded into the position of the initial contractor under conditions such as those referred to in Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of [Directive 2014/24]?’

17 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that an economic operator which, following the insolvency of the initial contractor which led to its liquidation, has taken over only the rights and obligations of the initial contractor arising from a framework agreement concluded with a contracting authority must be regarded as having succeeded that initial contractor under the conditions referred to in that provision.

18 As a preliminary point, it should be recalled that, in general, the substitution of a new contractor for one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract must be regarded as constituting a change to one of the essential terms of the public contract in question and, consequently, as a substantial modification to the contract, which must give rise to a new award procedure relating to the contract thus amended, in accordance with the principles of transparency and equal treatment which underlie the obligation of competition between the candidates potentially interested in the various Member States (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 June 2008, pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351, paragraphs 40 and 47). That premiss is codified in Article 72(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24.

19 It follows from the Court’s case-law that the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency resulting therefrom preclude, following the award of a public contract, the contracting authority and the successful tenderer from amending the provisions of that contract in such a way that those provisions differ materially in character from those of the original contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2016, Finn Frogne, C-549/14, EU:C:2016:634, paragraph 28).

20 By way of exception, Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of that directive provides that a new contractor may, without a new procurement procedure in accordance with that directive, replace that to which the contracting authority initially awarded the contract following a universal or partial succession into the position of the original contractor, following corporate restructuring, including takeover, merger, acquisition or insolvency, of another economic operator that fulfils the criteria for qualitative selection initially established, provided that this does not entail other substantial modifications to the contract and is not aimed at circumventing the application of that directive.

21 It is thus apparent from the wording of that article that it makes the application of the exception at issue subject, inter alia, to the condition that the replacement of the former contractor is due to a universal or partial succession which occurs following company restructuring, in particular insolvency.

22 In the present case, the referring court questions whether the condition of universal or partial succession of the original contractor following insolvency is satisfied where the new contractor takes over only the rights and obligations arising from the framework agreement concluded with the contracting authority and does not take over all or part of the business of the original contractor falling within the scope of that framework agreement.

23 In that regard, it should be noted, as regards the wording of Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24, first, that the replacement of the contractor to whom the contracting authority initially awarded the contract is authorised only ‘as a result of a universal or partial succession of the original contractor’. It follows that that succession may involve the taking over, by the new contractor, of all or only part of the assets of the initial contractor and may therefore involve, as the Advocate General noted in point 43 of his Opinion, the transfer only of a public contract or of a framework agreement making up the assets of the initial contractor.

24 Furthermore, it should be noted, as did the Advocate General in point 95 of his Opinion, that requiring a transfer of assets in order to prevent a party from circumventing the award rules is not necessary where the transfer of the public contract or the framework agreement is, in any event, subject to the condition, laid down in Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24, not to constitute a means of excluding application of that directive.

25 Furthermore, while it is true that such an interpretation of the concept of 'partial succession' in Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 is not sufficient in itself to ensure that the new contractor performs the contract or framework agreement in question with an equivalent capability to that of the original contractor, as Dustin contends, the fact remains that that provision provides that such succession is subject to the condition that the new contractor fulfils the qualitative selection criteria initially established.

26 Therefore, it is apparent from the wording of Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 that the concept of 'insolvency', falling within the concept of 'restructuring operations', encompasses structural changes to the original contractor, in particular insolvency which includes insolvency resulting in liquidation.

27 Secondly, as for the scope of the concept of 'insolvency', which is covered by the concept of 'restructuring operations', it is necessary to examine whether that presupposes that the new contractor takes over all or part of the business falling within the scope of the framework agreement at issue.

28 Although the first three situations listed as examples of 'restructuring operations' in Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24, namely takeover, merger and acquisition, may involve the continuation of at least part of the original contractor's business, the fact remains that that provision also lists insolvency as an example of restructuring, which may lead, as the Advocate General noted in point 47 of his Opinion, to the dissolution of the insolvent company. There is no indication in the wording of that provision that the concept of 'insolvency' must be understood not in its usual meaning, but as being limited to situations in which the business of the original contractor which enables the performance of the public contract is pursued, at least in part.

29 Nor is there any such indication in recital 110 of that directive, which mentions insolvency together with purely internal restructurings, takeovers, mergers and acquisitions, as situations involving 'certain structural changes' of the successful tenderer.

30 In that regard, indeed it must be noted that Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24, and thus the concept of 'insolvency', must be interpreted strictly in so far as, as is apparent from paragraphs 20 and 21 of this judgment, that article sets out an exception. As the Advocate General noted in point 62 of his Opinion, however, that interpretation cannot render that exception ineffective. It would do so if the term 'insolvency' were limited solely to situations in which the business of the original contractor falling within the scope of the framework agreement at issue was taken over by the new contractor, at least in part, and if that term were not understood in its usual broader sense.

31 Therefore, it is clear from the wording of Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 that the concept of 'restructuring' encompasses structural changes to the original contractor, in particular insolvency which includes insolvency resulting in liquidation.

32 That literal interpretation of Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 is also consistent with the principal objective pursued by Article 72 of that directive, as set out in recitals 107 and 110 thereof. According to those recitals, Directive 2014/24 seeks to clarify the conditions under which changes to a contract during their performance require a new contract award procedure, while taking into account the relevant case-law of the Court and the principles of transparency and equal treatment.

33 In that regard, it should be noted, in the first place, that that interpretation of Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 is based on the usual meaning of the concepts in that provision, without requiring, unlike the interpretation proposed by Dustin and the Commission, additional criteria not included therein.

34 In the second place, that interpretation takes account of the Court's case-law, in particular the judgment of 19 June 2008, pressetext Nachrichtenagentur (C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351), from which it follows that internal reorganisations of the initial contractor are capable of constituting insubstantial changes in the terms of the public contract concerned which do not require the opening of a new public procurement procedure.

35 In recital 110 of Directive 2014/24, insolvency is listed without reservation as one of the examples of structural changes to the original contractor not being contrary to the principles of transparency and equal treatment on which that case-law is based. As the Advocate General noted in points 84 and 85 of his Opinion, the insolvency of the original contractor, including the bankruptcy which results in its winding-up proceedings, represents an extraordinary circumstance before the occurrence of which the public contract or framework agreement at issue has already been opened to competition in accordance with Directive 2014/24 and, under Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of that directive, can neither lead to any other substantial modifications, in particular those relating to the qualitative selection criteria initially established, or aimed at circumventing the application of that directive.

36 However, the case-law referred to in paragraph 34 of the present judgment does not apply to the insolvency of the original contractor or, generally, to situations in which a substantial modification of the original contractor does not require a reopening to competition. Therefore, that case-law does not preclude the interpretation which follows from paragraph 31 of the present judgment.

37 The interpretation of Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 given in paragraph 31 of this judgment is also supported by the specific objective of the exception provided for in that provision, which is, as the Advocate General observed in points 82 and 83 of his Opinion, to introduce a degree of flexibility in the application of the rules in order to respond pragmatically to all the extraordinary instances, such as the insolvency of the successful tenderer, which prevents it from performing the public contract at issue. As the Advocate General noted in point 83 of his Opinion, the problem created by insolvency, which the EU legislature sought to address, does not arise differently depending on whether the business of the successful tenderer which has become insolvent is continued, at least in part, or is totally stopped.

38 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that an economic operator which, following the insolvency of the initial contractor which led to its liquidation, has taken over only the rights and obligations of the initial contractor arising from a framework agreement concluded with a contracting authority must be regarded as having succeeded in part of that initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, within the meaning of that provision.

Costs

39 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that an economic operator which, following the insolvency of the initial contractor which led to its liquidation, has taken over only the rights and obligations of the initial contractor arising from a framework agreement concluded with a contracting authority must be regarded as having succeeded in part to that initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, within the meaning of that provision.

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 2014/24/EU – Article 72(1)(d)(ii) – Modification of contracts during their term – Insolvency – Transfer of a framework agreement on the insolvency of the initial contractor – New contractor – Definition of substantial modification of the contract – Exception to the requirement for a new procurement procedure – Conditions)

I. Introduction

1. This case, which relates to Directive 2014/24/EU on public procurement, (2) concerns one of the exceptions to the requirement for a procurement procedure, that is to say, where the person awarded the contract becomes insolvent while it is being performed. The exception in question appears in Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of the Public Procurement Directive ('the provision at issue').

2. The Court is asked to rule on the conditions for that exception to apply and, specifically, on whether those conditions require the person replacing the initial contractor to take over not only the contract concerned but also at least part of the initial contractor's business.

3. The question has been referred in proceedings between on the one hand, the Kammarkollegiet (Swedish Legal, Financial and Administrative Services Agency) and Advania Sverige AB ('Advania'), which replaced the initial contractor, and, on the other, Dustin Sverige AB ('Dustin'), a company with an interest in the contracts at issue in the main proceedings. Dustin is challenging the transfer to Advania of framework agreements initially awarded to Misco AB, after Misco AB, the original contractor, was declared insolvent, without a reopening to competition in accordance with the Public Procurement Directive, where the transfer was not accompanied by the transfer of at least part of Misco's business, that is to say, the part required to perform those framework agreements.

4. It is, in principle, unexpected and extraordinary for an initial successful tenderer to become insolvent and to be replaced by a new contractor, since every precaution is normally taken to ensure that tenderers are solvent. This is nevertheless a problem that contracting authorities do sometimes encounter in the life of a company, as the case in the main proceedings demonstrates, and which the legislature resolved to regulate for the first time in the provision at issue. The Court is invited to consider whether that provision allows a new contractor to be appointed, including by an insolvency administrator, without the contract being reopened to competition and with no obligation on the new contractor to take over part of the business of the initial contractor, without thereby infringing the principles governing public procurement which the Public Procurement Directive is intended to uphold.

5. On completion of my analysis, I will propose that the Court should find that the exception laid down by the provision at issue does not require the new contractor, which is awarded the contract in place of the initial contractor, also to acquire part of the initial contractor's business.

II. Legal context

A. The Public Procurement Directive

6. Recitals 107 and 110 of the Public Procurement Directive state:

'(107) It is necessary to clarify the conditions under which modifications to a contract during its performance require a new procurement procedure, taking into account the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union. A new procurement procedure is required in case of material changes to the initial contract, in particular to the scope and content of the mutual rights and obligations of the parties, including the distribution of intellectual property rights. Such changes demonstrate the parties' intention to renegotiate essential terms or conditions of that contract. This is the case in particular if the amended conditions would have had an influence on the outcome of the procedure, had they been part of the initial procedure.

(110) In line with the principles of equal treatment and transparency, the successful tenderer should not, for instance where a contract is terminated because of deficiencies in the performance, be replaced by another economic operator without reopening the contract to competition. However, the successful tenderer performing the contract should be able, in particular where the contract has been awarded to more than one undertaking, to undergo certain structural changes during the performance of the contract, such as purely internal reorganisations, takeovers, mergers and acquisitions or insolvency. Such structural changes should not automatically require new procurement procedures for all public contracts performed by that tenderer.'

7. Article 18 of that directive, entitled 'Principles of procurement', provides in paragraph 1:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. …'

8. Article 57(4)(b) of that directive provides:

'Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(b) where the economic operator is bankrupt or is the subject of insolvency or winding-up proceedings, where its assets are being administered by a liquidator or by the court, where it is in an arrangement with creditors, where its business activities are suspended or it is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations.'

9. Article 72 of the Public Procurement Directive, entitled 'Modification of contracts during their term', provides as follows:

‘1. Contracts and framework agreements may be modified without a new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive in any of the following cases:

(d) where a new contractor replaces the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract as a consequence of either:

(ii) universal or partial succession into the position of the initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, including takeover, merger, acquisition or insolvency, of another economic operator that fulfils the criteria for qualitative selection initially established provided that this does not entail other substantial modifications to the contract and is not aimed at circumventing the application of this Directive; …

(e) where the modifications, irrespective of their value, are not substantial within the meaning of paragraph 4.

4. A modification of a contract or a framework agreement during its term shall be considered to be substantial within the meaning of point (e) of paragraph 1, where it renders the contract or the framework agreement materially different in character from the one initially concluded. In any event, without prejudice to paragraphs 1 and 2, a modification shall be considered to be substantial where one or more of the following conditions is met:

(a) the modification introduces conditions which, had they been part of the initial procurement procedure, would have allowed for the admission of other candidates than those initially selected or for the acceptance of a tender other than that originally accepted or would have attracted additional participants in the procurement procedure;

(b) the modification changes the economic balance of the contract or the framework agreement in favour of the contractor in a manner which was not provided for in the initial contract or framework agreement;

(c) the modification extends the scope of the contract or framework agreement considerably;

(d) where a new contractor replaces the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract in other cases than those provided for under point (d) of paragraph 1.

B. Swedish law

10. Lagen (2016:1145) om offentlig upphandling (Law (2016:1145) on public procurement, ‘the LOU’), (3) provided in Chapter 17, Paragraph 13, that a contract or a framework agreement might be modified with one contractor being replaced by another, without a new procurement, if:

‘(1) the new contractor full or partially replaces the initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, including takeover, merger, acquisition or insolvency, and

(2) the circumstance that a new contractor fully or partially replaces the initial contractor did not entail other substantial modifications to the contract or framework agreement.’

11. The referring court has clarified that it is apparent from the second condition that such a replacement of the contractor presupposes that the new service provider is not excluded on the grounds for exclusion laid down by that law and that it meets the qualification conditions established in the original contract.

III. The dispute in the main proceedings, the question referred and the proceedings before the Court of Justice

12. The Kammarkollegiet had held a tendering procedure for the supply of computer equipment, in particular computers, monitors and tablets, through a restricted procedure, (4) in accordance with the LOU.

13. Seventeen candidates, including Advania, demonstrated that they satisfied the necessary conditions. In accordance with the rules governing the restricted procedure, (5) the Kammarkollegiet had provided that if more than nine candidates qualified to tender, only the highest-placed nine would be invited to submit tenders. Advania was not among those nine.

14. Framework agreements were concluded with six suppliers in various fields. Misco was awarded four framework agreements covering all the fields concerned. Dustin was awarded framework agreements in two of those fields.

15. By letter of 4 December 2017, Misco requested the Kammarkollegiet to approve the transfer of its four framework agreements to Advania. On 12 December 2017, Misco was declared insolvent. On 18 January 2018, the insolvency administrator signed a contract with Advania for the transfer of the four framework agreements. The transfer was approved by the Kammarkollegiet in February 2018.

16. Following that transfer, Dustin applied to the Förvaltningsrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court, Stockholm, Sweden) for a declaration of invalidity of Advania's framework agreements with the Kammarkollegiet.

17. That court dismissed the application. It held that Advania had obtained the framework agreements and acquired the branches of Misco's business used for performance of those framework agreements, as Chapter 17, Paragraph 13, of the LOU requires.

18. Dustin appealed against that judgment before the Kammarrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court of Appeal, Stockholm, Sweden), which upheld that appeal and declared the four framework agreements between Advania and the Kammarkollegiet invalid. The Kammarrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court of Appeal, Stockholm) found that the Kammarkollegiet had approved the transfer of the framework agreements because of Misco's insolvency. In contrast to the first instance court, however, it held that, with the exception of the framework agreements at issue, Misco had transferred virtually no business to Advania and, therefore, Advania could not be regarded as having fully or partially replaced Misco within the meaning of Chapter 17, Paragraph 13, of the LOU. The referring court noted in particular that only one of Misco's employees had subsequently joined Advania, that the Misco customer list transferred to Advania was not fully updated or relevant and that there was no evidence to prove that Advania had taken on any of Misco's subcontractors.

19. Advania and the Kammarkollegiet appealed against that second instance judgment to the Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court, Sweden). In their appeal, they do not dispute the appeal court's assessment of what was included in the transfer from the insolvency estate. However, they contend that such a transfer satisfies the condition in Chapter 17, Paragraph 13 of the LOU and in the Public Procurement Directive that there must be a whole or partial succession.

20. According to Advania and the Kammarkollegiet, neither the LOU nor the Public Procurement Directive requires that business of a certain nature or scope be transferred to the new contractor in addition to the framework agreements.

21. Dustin, for its part, is of the view that the expression 'universal or partial succession into the position of the initial contractor' in conjunction with the concept of 'corporate restructuring' in the provision at issue makes clear that, together with the framework agreement, the new contractor must take over all or part of the original contractor's business used to perform the contracts at issue.

22. In view of those divergent interpretations, the referring court states that it requires clarification on the scope of the provision at issue and in particular on what meaning is to be given to replacement as a consequence of 'universal or partial succession into the position of the initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, including takeover, merger, acquisition or insolvency'.

23. In those circumstances, the Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court) stayed the proceedings and referred the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

> ‘Does the circumstance that a new contractor has taken over the initial contractor’s rights and obligations under a framework agreement, after the initial contractor has been declared insolvent and the insolvency estate has transferred the agreement, mean that the new contractor will be deemed to have succeeded into the position of the initial contractor under conditions such as those referred to in Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of the Public Procurement Directive?’

24. The request for a preliminary ruling, of 15 September 2020, was received by the Court on 24 September 2020.

25. Written observations have been submitted by Advania, the Kammarkollegiet, Dustin, the Austrian Government and the European Commission.

IV. Analysis

26. With a view to assessing the scope of the provision at issue, I note at the outset, as the Court held in pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, (6) that as a rule, a change in the contractual partner is a change to one of the essential terms of the public contract. That premiss is reproduced in Article 72(4)(d) of the Public Procurement Directive.

27. This means that replacement of the initial successful tenderer is in principle a substantial modification of the contract giving rise to a new procurement procedure, (7) in accordance with the principles of transparency and equal treatment that underlie the requirement for competition between potentially interested candidates from the different Member States. (8)

28. By way of an exception, the provision at issue provides that where the initial successful tenderer is insolvent a replacement may be appointed for that person with no new procurement procedure.

29. The question arises of the precise circumstances in which that exception applies and, in particular, whether the person replacing the original contractor must take over at least part of the business of the initial successful tenderer.

30. Two divergent interpretations of the provision at issue have been put before the Court.

31. According to one interpretation, advocated by the Kammarkollegiet, Advania and the Austrian Government, the provision at issue must be interpreted as meaning that where the initial contractor is replaced, following its insolvency, the new contractor does not have to take over part of the initial contractor’s business alongside the transfer of the contract. They consider that if the terms at issue had to be interpreted as requiring some type of business transfer, the application of the provision would be severely limited.

32. The second interpretation, advocated by Dustin and the Commission, presupposes in contrast that the new contractor takes over at least part of the business of the initial contractor. Dustin is of the view that almost free rein would otherwise be given to trade in agreements that have been put out to tender.

33. According to Dustin and the Commission, in order to avoid jeopardising the principles of equal treatment and transparency and, accordingly, the objective of ensuring competition, the substantive identity of the initial successful tenderer must be preserved, that is to say, the assets used to perform the framework agreement, or at least a part of those assets, must be transferred to the person replacing the initial contractor, in order to ensure continued identity between that person and the initial contractor. The Commission recognises that this may be impossible where the business of the initial contractor is completely wound up. In such a situation it would then be necessary, according to the Commission, in order to ensure equal treatment between the initial tenderers, for the contracting authority to look as a matter of priority to those tenderers, perhaps in the order in which they were ranked on conclusion of the original procurement procedure.

34. The stakes are high. The Court is invited to define the margin of manoeuvre available to a contracting authority to replace the initial successful tenderer where it becomes insolvent.

35. To my mind, the wording of the provision at issue is not amenable to an interpretation such as that proposed by Dustin and the Commission. I will attempt below to demonstrate that the provision must be understood in line with the first interpretation, relying on its wording (section A), its internal and external context, that is to say, on the provisions that frame it and the travaux préparatoires (section B), and on the objectives pursued by the legislature (section C).

A. The wording of the provision at issue

36. I note, first of all, that according to the wording of Article 72(1) of the Public Procurement Directive, framework agreements may be modified with no new procurement procedure in five situations listed in subparagraphs (a) to (e) of that article. Article 72(1)(d)(ii), which the Court is asked to interpret, expressly mentions the insolvency of the initial contractor as one of the situations in which a framework agreement may be awarded to a new contractor without holding a new procurement procedure, even though that change constitutes a substantial modification of the contract.

37. Under the provision at issue, application of the exception in question is subject to several conditions, but they do not expressly include the transfer of part of the initial contractor's business.

38. There are three conditions, as follows.

– The new contractor must be an economic operator that fulfils the criteria for qualitative selection. It is common ground that this condition is satisfied where, as in the case in the main proceedings, the new contractor, in this instance Advania, was among the undertakings considered eligible to tender. (9)

– Replacement by the new contractor does not entail other substantial modifications to the contract. This condition likewise does not seem to give rise to any uncertainty in the case in the main proceedings as set out by the referring court.

– Replacement by the new contractor is not aimed at circumventing the application of the Public Procurement Directive. The replacement must not be a stratagem by means of which the contracting authority selects the contractor of its choice without calling for competition between the candidates interested in the contract. I will return to that last condition, which aims to prevent circumvention of the procurement rules laid down by the directive. (10) I would nevertheless clarify at the outset that the referring court has not suggested that the appointment of the new contractor in the case in the main proceedings was aimed at avoiding application of those rules.

39. Dustin and the Commission maintain, however, that the requirement that at least part of the initial contractor's business be transferred flows implicitly from the terms of the provision at issue themselves, according to which the initial contractor is replaced by another economic operator 'as a consequence of ... universal or partial succession into the position of the initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, including takeover, merger, acquisition or insolvency'. (11)

40. I note that the terms used vary slightly from one language version of the provision at issue to another. The English- and French-language versions of the provision use the expression 'universal or partial succession', whereas the Swedish-language version of the provision at issue states that another economic operator 'replaces [the initial service provider] in full or in part'.

41. In the present context, however, I believe those expressions are broadly equivalent.

42. It has become clear – to my mind quite correctly – from the emphasis that all the parties that have submitted observations to the Court have laid on the notion of 'succession', that the new contractor succeeds universally or partially into the position of the initial contractor. The English-language version further highlights that consideration by specifying that the replacement takes place 'as a consequence of' a universal or partial succession. (12)

43. This implies that the new contractor takes over all or part of the assets of the initial contractor. I would emphasise nevertheless that the concept of 'part' is not defined in the provision at issue. The part may be smaller or larger depending on the event giving rise to the succession. (13) On a literal reading of those terms, it can therefore be considered that the new contractor may take over only a public contract or a framework agreement.

44. In contrast, the concept of 'part' does not mean that only part of a contract or framework agreement may be transferred because that would constitute a significant change to the contract or framework agreement and would infringe the requirement that there must be no other 'substantial modifications'. Reducing the scope of a framework agreement is, in my view, clearly capable of modifying the economic balance of the contract in favour of the contractor in a manner which was not provided for in the initial framework agreement and, therefore, of constituting a 'substantial modification' within the meaning of Article 72(4)(b) of the Public Procurement Directive.

45. The new contractor that replaces the initial successful tenderer, by succeeding into its position, must therefore take over the framework agreement or public contract in its entirety. In other words, the new contractor must accept all the rights and obligations under that contract. (14)

46. As specified in the remaining part of the provision at issue, the event giving rise to the succession must be a corporate restructuring, which can take various forms. The legislature lists four of these by way of example and therefore non-exhaustively. I note, as does the Commission, that the first three examples given, that is to say, takeover, merger and acquisition, have something in common. In all three cases, the operations referred to involve continuation of the undertaking concerned, that is to say, the continued existence of its business and the material and human resources necessary for that business.

47. In the case of insolvency, in contrast, mentioned as the fourth example, the undertaking does not necessarily continue to exist. Many situations are possible. The undertaking may indeed continue to be operated in its entirety, but it may also be wound up and its assets sold, if necessary, one by one. In the latter situation, a framework agreement constituting one of the undertaking's assets may be transferred separately to a third party which does not take over any other asset of the undertaking concerned.

48. I therefore see nothing, in the wording of the provision at issue alone, to suggest that, where the initial contractor becomes insolvent, in addition to the transfer of a framework agreement awarded to it, part of the other assets it possessed must be transferred to the new contractor.

49. I therefore do not share the Commission's view that because the first three examples involve the business of the initial successful bidder remaining in place and because, according to the terms of the provision, insolvency is placed on the same footing as those examples, by implication the initial contractor's underlying business must also continue fully or at least partially. According to that institution, the legislature did not envisage a situation in which the initial contractor's business is completely wound up.

50. To my mind, since the wording of the Public Procurement Directive does not expressly limit the scope of the concept of 'insolvency', that term cannot be understood in so restricted a manner as the Commission proposes.

51. That construction is in my view, corroborated by the context of the provision at issue.

B. The context of the provision at issue

52. To my mind the travaux préparatoires demonstrate that insolvency is not an example of restructuring similar to takeover, merger and acquisition and thereby requiring the new contractor to be substantively identical (15) to the initial contractor and, therefore, to preserve the part of its business that the initial contractor had assigned to performance of the public contract at issue. On the contrary, it emerges from the travaux préparatoires that from the outset the legislature envisaged insolvency in a broad sense, as a situation distinct from takeover, merger or acquisition.

53. I note first of all that in its green paper on public procurement (16) the Commission invited stakeholders to give their views specifically on changes affecting the successful tenderer where its status changes as a result of incidents impacting on the capacity to execute the contract, such as bankruptcy. The Commission emphasised that there should be a discussion to ascertain whether EU-level instruments were needed to help contracting authorities address those situations in an appropriate manner. It also asked the stakeholders whether EU law should make provision for the explicit obligation or right of contracting authorities to change supplier or to terminate the contract in certain circumstances and whether it should also lay down specific procedures on how the new supplier should be chosen. (17)

54. The Commission envisaged inter alia replacing the initial contractor, where it becomes insolvent, using a simplified procedure; mandating the second best of the original tender procedure; or reopening competition only between the tenderers having participated in the original procedure, provided that the former procedure did not take place too long ago. (18)

55. In its original proposal for a directive, (19) which took into consideration the observations received on its green paper, the Commission proposed that the exception to the requirement for a public procurement procedure should apply in the case of corporate restructuring or insolvency. (20) The Commission therefore clearly distinguished between the two situations, and in the preamble to its proposal for a directive specified the types of situation envisaged, termed ‘structural changes’, that is to say, internal reorganisations, mergers and acquisitions, and insolvency. (21)

56. The fact that the final wording of the provision at issue does not expressly draw that distinction and that the legislature chose to list examples of possible situations does not in my view mean that it placed insolvency, on the one hand, and takeovers, mergers and acquisitions, on the other, on the same footing in respect of the transfer of business to a new contractor.

57. My assessment is borne out by the meaning of the expression ‘restructuring operations’ which is not confined to situations in which the business of the undertaking concerned remains in place. (22)

58. I therefore consider that the legislature intended to specify the types of situation envisaged in the provision at issue itself rather than only in the preamble to the Public Procurement Directive, as previously proposed, but did not thereby intend to suggest that they all have similar characteristics as regards any taking over of the business of the initial contractor for performance of the public contract.

59. The internal context of the provision at issue within the Public Procurement Directive in my view supports that interpretation.

60. The provision at issue forms part of Article 72 of that directive, entitled ‘Modification of contracts during their term’, which in its various paragraphs carefully describes the exceptions to the obligation to follow the procurement procedure rules and the conditions for them to apply. Paragraphs 1 and 2 list the situations in which contracts and framework agreements may be modified with no new procurement procedure and paragraph 5 further emphasises that a new procurement procedure is required where there are modifications other than those contained in those two paragraphs. Paragraph 4 specifies what constitutes a substantial modification of a contract or framework agreement, emphasising that the appointment of a new contractor constitutes a substantial modification unless the situation is, inter alia, one of those referred to in Article 72(1)(d) and therefore, in particular, in a situation of insolvency as specified in the provision at issue.

61. For each situation envisaged, Article 72 indicates the circumstances in which the exceptions to the requirement for procurement procedures apply. As I have already noted, those circumstances do not mention that at least part of the initial contractor’s business must be transferred to the new contractor where the initial contractor is insolvent.

62. Since it is an exception to the general rule that there must be a public procurement procedure, the concept of ‘insolvency’ in the provision at issue must of course be interpreted strictly. That interpretation may not however render the exception ineffective. It would do so, (23) in my view, if the term ‘insolvency’ was limited to situations in which the undertaking concerned can continue to operate, at least in part, rather than being understood in its usual broader sense. I would emphasise here that the term ‘insolvency’ is widely used and is in my view capable of including all the instances of insolvency referred to in Article 57(4)(b) of the Public Procurement Directive. (24)

63. I also do not believe that application of the insolvency exception is subject to any condition other than the three referred to in the provision at issue and set out in point 38 of this Opinion.

64. Recital 110 of that directive supports that view, stating as it does that, in the event of 'certain structural changes' to the successful tenderer during the performance of the contract, including insolvency, a new procedure is not automatically necessary. The very general expression 'certain structural changes' has the effect that 'corporate restructuring' is understood in a particularly broad sense. The examples given encompass incidents and events likely to affect the very structure of a company and vary from purely internal restructuring to insolvency, by way of company takeovers.

65. My proposed interpretation of the provision at issue, to the effect that the wording and context of that provision do not imply that part of the initial contractor's business must be transferred to the new contractor in order for the exception based on the insolvency of the initial contractor to apply, is further corroborated by the objectives of the Public Procurement Directive.

C. The objectives of the Public Procurement Directive

66. The objectives pursued by the legislature are apparent from the explanatory memorandum of the proposal for a directive.

67. While confirming the objective of ensuring competition between candidates in all the Member States and, to that end, reaffirming the principles of transparency and equal treatment, the legislature sought, first, to have regard to other objectives (25) and, second, to introduce a degree of flexibility and simplification in application of the rules. (26) The proposal for a directive also underscores the intention of reducing formalities and responding pragmatically to the actual problems encountered by contracting authorities and tenderers, in the light of the Court's case-law.

68. As academic commentators have highlighted, (27) whereas the public procurement directives previously focused on the rules applicable to public procurement and, in particular, to calls for competition between candidates before the procurement in the strict sense, the Public Procurement Directive (28) also addresses the performance of public contracts and, therefore, the phase subsequent to procurement, which includes any modification of the contracts during their performance.

69. In that respect, the Public Procurement Directive takes full account of and codifies the Court's case-law. Nevertheless, as I will demonstrate, it went much further. It is helpful to examine that case-law and how it is reflected in the directive in order to gauge the innovations in the directive.

70. The pressetext judgment (29) is decisive here. The case that gave rise to that judgment concerned an amendment to a public contract during its currency and turned specifically on the identity of the successful tenderer. The Court noted that the existing directive did not address the matter, (30) even though it did contain a number of pertinent indications.

71. The Court noted that Directive 92/50 sought to ensure both transparency of procedures and equal treatment of tenderers, in order to pursue the principal objective of opening up to competition in all the Member States. (31) It inferred that amendments to the provisions of a public contract during its currency constitute a new award of a contract when they are materially different in character from the original contract. The Court made clear what should be understood by a 'material amendment', stating that it includes an amendment which introduces conditions which, had they been part of the initial award procedure, would have allowed for the admission of tenderers other than those initially admitted or would have allowed for the acceptance of a tender other than the one initially accepted. (32)

72. The Court accordingly found that, as a rule, 'the substitution of a new contractual partner' for the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract must be regarded as constituting a change to one of the essential terms of the public contract. (33)

73. The pressetext judgment specifies the situations in which certain changes to the successful tenderer nevertheless do not constitute a fundamental amendment.

74. That is so where, as in the case giving rise to that judgment, the successful tenderer's business is transferred to one of its subsidiaries – which is wholly owned by it, which it directs and for which it is jointly and severally liable – and where there is no change in the overall service performed. An arrangement of that nature is merely an ‘internal reorganisation’ of the contracting partner which does not modify in any fundamental manner the terms of the initial contract. (34)

75. That is also so where the successful tenderer is a legal person established as a public company listed on a stock exchange. The Court stated that it in fact follows from the very nature of such a company that the composition of its shareholders is liable to change at any time. As a rule, such a situation therefore does not affect the validity of the award of a public contract to such a company. (35)

76. The Court added that the same finding applies to legal persons established as limited liability registered cooperatives, as in the case that gave rise to the pressetext judgment. Any changes to the composition of the shareholders in such a cooperative will not, as a rule, result in a material amendment to the contract awarded to it. (36)

77. The Public Procurement Directive fully reflects those considerations, in the provision at issue on the one hand and in its preamble, in recitals 107 and 110, on the other. Recital 107 expressly refers to the Court’s case-law and recital 110 mentions purely internal reorganisations as well as takeovers, mergers and acquisitions, which involve a change of shareholders or partners and, therefore, of owners.

78. I would nevertheless note that the Public Procurement Directive does not merely take into account the guidance in the pressetext judgment but addresses other types of situation.

79. Whereas the Court identified the situations in which a change affecting the successful tenderer does not constitute a ‘material amendment’ and, therefore, does not give rise to a new public procurement procedure, in the provision at issue the Public Procurement Directive also specifies the situations where a change relating to the successful tenderer, while it would normally constitute a ‘substantial modification’, nevertheless likewise does not require a reopening of competition.

80. This applies, inter alia, to takeovers, mergers and acquisitions, provided the conditions listed in the provision at issue are satisfied.

81. In particular, for the purposes relevant to the Court in this case, the Public Procurement Directive specifically makes provision for insolvency, which had not yet been put before it.

82. Inclusion of that situation is novel compared with both the EU public procurement legislation and the case-law existing on the date on which the Public Procurement Directive was adopted. It addresses a practical problem encountered in the performance of public contracts.

83. This is the problem of ensuring that where the contracting authority is faced with a successful tenderer which is no longer able to perform the public contract because it is insolvent, a person can be appointed to replace it without a new procurement procedure causing excessive delay or disproportionately increasing the cost of the contract. The provision at issue seeks to address the problem by providing a solution that is in the interests of both the contracting authority and the successful tenderer and its creditors. The problem created by the insolvency is no less considerable where the insolvent undertaking continues to exist in part than where it is wound up entirely. A person must be found to replace it in any event. By not expressly differentiating between those situations, the legislature therefore appears to have sought to respond pragmatically to all those situations while upholding the principles governing public procurement enshrined in Article 18(1) of the Public Procurement Directive, in particular the prohibition on the contracting authority artificially narrowing competition by excluding the application of the directive.

84. Indeed, I note first of all in that respect that, where the initial successful tenderer becomes insolvent, the framework agreement has already been opened to competition (37) and that the tender accepted can no longer be substantially modified. As the provision at issue expressly states, if other substantial modifications are made, apart from a change of contracting partner, one of the three conditions laid down in the provision at issue (38) is not fulfilled and there must be a new procurement procedure.

85. Next, the insolvency of a successful tenderer, although not a rare occurrence, is an extraordinary situation which, in the normal course, is neither foreseen by the contracting authority or the initial successful tenderer nor desirable. Economic and financial standing is one of the three selection criteria for candidates laid down in Article 58 of the Public Procurement Directive. Moreover, an economic operator’s insolvency within the meaning of Article 57(4)(b) of that directive is a ground – which may be facultative or mandatory depending on national law – for exclusion from participating in a procurement procedure.

86. The fact that insolvency is an extraordinary situation as a rule means that the replacement of a successful tenderer by a new contracting partner will not be a manoeuvre by the contracting authority aimed at excluding application of the Public Procurement Directive. The likelihood of such a manoeuvre is even less where an insolvency administrator has been appointed, as in the case in the main proceedings, representing not the interests of the contracting authority but those of the creditors of the successful tenderer, and acting under the supervision of a court.

87. It is in any event for the national court to verify that the persons concerned have not engaged in a manoeuvre of that kind. It is incumbent on the national court to verify, in particular, that the selection criteria, such as that relating to the financial standing of the successful tenderer, have in fact been examined. The date on which the insolvency occurs, especially if it is soon after the date on which the contract is concluded, may be circumstantial evidence that compliance with this qualitative criterion was not properly verified. In respect of a case such as that at issue in the main proceedings, I note that the Court has not been given any specific information on this matter, but that the referring court has not in any way suggested that the parties concerned intended to circumvent the application of the Public Procurement Directive.

88. Last, I note that, where an insolvency administrator has been appointed to administer the assets of the insolvent successful tenderer, it is for that administrator in the first place, not the contracting authority, to select the new contractor. According to Article 1(2) of the Public Procurement Directive, on the scope of application of the directive, procurement is defined as the acquisition by means of a public contract of supplies or services by a contracting authority from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities. If the contracting authority has not chosen an economic operator, therefore, public procurement is not required under the Public Procurement Directive, even if it is necessary for the contracting authority to approve the contracting partner.

89. Since these are contracts involving mutual obligations of the new contractor and the contracting authority, that approval is needed, under the contract law of the Member States, even though it is not laid down in the Public Procurement Directive. The contracting authority may even have been consulted and have participated in some negotiation prior to the appointment of the new contractor, as appears to have occurred in the case in the main proceedings. (39) To my mind, that fact is not sufficient to regard the contracting authority as having ‘chosen’ the contracting partner within the meaning of the Public Procurement Directive. (40)

90. The fact that a new contracting partner can be appointed without a new procurement procedure where the initial contractor becomes insolvent clearly introduces a considerable margin of manoeuvre in relation to public procurement. However, I believe that such leeway both reflects the intention of the legislature and upholds the principles enshrined in Article 18(1) of the Public Procurement Directive, provided the three conditions for the exception to apply, set out in point 38 of this Opinion, are satisfied.

91. The argument put forward by Dustin and the Commission to the effect that the new contractor may only be appointed without a new procurement procedure if it takes over at least the part of the initial contractor’s business used for performance of the contract, besides the fact that it is not expressly laid down by the legislature and, to my mind, goes beyond the meaning of the provision at issue, creates more problems than it solves.

92. I note, first, that an obligation to take over part of the business of the initial contractor would significantly reduce the scope of the insolvency exception, since in many cases the undertaking is completely wound up. It is moreover unclear what proportion of the business activities of the initial contractor would have to be transferred for the exception to apply.

93. Second, such an obligation could make the work of the insolvency administrator particularly difficult. It could even conflict with the powers granted to an insolvency administrator under national insolvency law to negotiate in the interests of creditors. (41)

94. In that respect I share the view of the Austrian Government according to which it may or may not be common to transfer public contracts or framework agreements only, depending on the business sector. When a construction undertaking becomes insolvent, for example, the transfer of certain large construction sites may involve the transfer of material and personnel. In contrast, the same does not necessarily apply to computer services or the supply of computer equipment. I also note, in common with that government, that an undertaking that has become insolvent is sometimes able to continue operating, provided it transfers a public contract. Ruling out that option would not only render it impossible to replace the contractor, but could also jeopardise attainment of the objectives of the insolvency procedure of preserving the existing undertaking to the extent possible in the interests of creditors.

95. Third, requiring a transfer of assets in order to prevent a party from circumventing the competition rules would not only be an onerous solution but is also arguably unnecessary, since the transfer of a public contract is in any event subject to the condition contained in the provision at issue that it must not be a means of circumventing the application of the Public Procurement Directive.

96. Fourth, I will examine the specific issues raised by the Commission's argument that there is no obligation on the insolvency administrator to look to the initial tenderers in the event that the business of the initial successful tenderer completely ceases to exist.

97. According to the Commission the legislature did not intend to provide for the situation in which the initial contractor's business is completely wound up. (42) That institution nevertheless concedes that such a situation may occur (43) and that a public contract may be its only remaining asset.

98. In such circumstances, the Commission is of the view that the provision at issue may be interpreted as meaning that the exception to the requirement to hold a new procurement procedure does apply, provided the public contract is offered to all the initial tenderers that satisfy the selection criteria, on a non-discriminatory and equivalent basis, for example by approaching them in their order of ranking. (44)

99. I emphasise, nevertheless, first, that the provision at issue contains no such requirement, which appears to be contrary to the intention of the legislature. Indeed, as I stated in points 53 and 54 of this Opinion, during the travaux préparatoires the Commission had envisaged that a specific procedure could apply in the event of bankruptcy and provided in particular that the contracting authority would revert to the original tenderers. Ultimately, the Public Procurement Directive did not take up that proposal and did not replace it with any other. I infer from this that the legislature clearly rejected any such obligation to contact the original tenderers.

100. Second, an obligation to offer the public contract or framework agreement to the original tenderers in their order of ranking would imply that it would have to be awarded to the first of them to accept it. However, that approach overlooks the need for the new contractor to be approved by the contracting authority. (45) A former tenderer, even if it is ranked first after the initial successful tenderer, does not have an automatic right to be awarded the contract in those circumstances.

101. Third, if the insolvency administrator is bound to look to the initial tenderers, it might be deprived of the ability to seek the most advantageous person to take over the contract, in the interests of the creditors. To my mind, nothing in the Public Procurement Directive suggests that the EU legislature intended to restrict in that way any powers conferred on insolvency administrators by national law. (46)

102. I therefore cannot concur with the Commission's view.

103. By contrast, as can be seen from the foregoing assessment, I am of the view that, provided the three conditions laid down in the provision at issue and set out in point 38 of this Opinion are satisfied, an interpretation of that provision as meaning that the previously awarded framework agreement or public contract alone may be transferred to a new contractor, with no requirement to carry out a new procurement procedure and without the new contractor being obliged to take over another business of the initial contractor, addresses an actual problem in the life of a company while upholding the principles that govern public procurement enshrined in Article 18(1) of the Public Procurement Directive.

V. Conclusion

104. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court should answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court, Sweden) as follows:

> Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/21/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that the fact that a new contractor has taken over the initial contractor's rights and obligations under a framework agreement after the initial contractor has been declared insolvent and the insolvency estate has transferred the agreement means that the new contractor must be deemed to have succeeded in full or in part into the position of the initial contractor within the meaning of that provision. That transfer is not required to be accompanied by a transfer to the new contractor of part of the initial contractor's business used to perform the framework agreement.

40 Sue Arrowsmith is of the view, however, that if the contracting authority remains able to have an influence in determining the contracting partner for reasons not relating to its technical or financial capability, it does choose the contracting partner and that choice must be subject to a procurement procedure. Regulation (EU) 2015/848 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 20 May 2015 on insolvency proceedings (OJ 2015 L 141 p. 19) recognises, in recital 22, that the Member States have widely differing substantive laws in the field of insolvency. 44 The Commission states that Italian law appears to have adopted a solution of that nature. I would point out that in their commentaries on the Italian legislation transposing Directive 2014/24, Marion Comba and Sara Richetto state that, in Article 110 D Lgs 50/2016, the Member State included an option for the contracting authority to turn to the initial tenderers in their order of ranking (see, Treumer, S. and Comba, M., Modernising Public Procurement – The approach of EU member States, Elgar, 2018, Chapter 7, p. 149).

46 For clarification, this does not mean that merely any financial difficulty affecting the initial successful tenderer can lead to a replacement being appointed with no new tendering procedure in accordance with the Public Procurement Directive. A formal insolvency procedure must also have been commenced, as in the case in the main proceedings.

Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen meddelade den 13 maj 2022 följande dom (mål nr 5807-19).

Bakgrund

1. Ett ramavtal är ett avtal som fastställer villkoren för kontrakt som senare ska ingås mellan en upphandlande myndighet och en eller flera leverantörer. Ett upphandlat ramavtal får som huvudregel inte ändras utan att en ny upphandling genomförs. Ett byte av leverantör får dock under vissa förutsättningar ske om den nya leverantören helt eller delvis inträder i den ursprungliga leverantörens ställe till följd av företagsomstruktureringar, vartill i detta sammanhang räknas bl.a. insolvens.

2. Kammarkollegiet har upphandlat fyra ramavtal avseende inköp av datorer, bildskärmar, surfplattor m.m. genom selektivt förfarande. Sjutton anbudssökande kvalificerade sig och gick vidare till selektering. Om fler än nio anbudssökande kvalificerade sig för att lämna anbud skulle ett urval göras utifrån högst mervärde. Dustin Sverige AB (Dustin) och Misco AB (Misco) hörde till de nio anbudssökande med högst mervärde. Advania Sverige AB (Advania) hörde inte till dessa nio, men till de sjutton som kvalificerat sig. Misco tilldelades avtal inom samtliga fyra ramavtalsområden.

3. Efter det att Misco hade försatts i konkurs överlät konkursförvaltaren ramavtalen till Advania. Överlåtelsen godkändes av Kammarkollegiet.

4. Dustin ansökte hos Förvaltningsrätten i Stockholm om att ramavtalen mellan Kammarkollegiet och Advania skulle ogiltigförklaras. Förvaltningsrätten avslog Dustins ansökan. Kammarrätten i Stockholm biföll Dustins överklagande dit och beslutade att ramavtalen var ogiltiga. Kammarrätten konstaterade att Misco i stort sett inte hade överlåtit någon verksamhet till Advania förutom de aktuella ramavtalen. Enligt kammarrättens mening kunde Advania därför inte anses ha helt eller delvis inträtt i Miscos ställe på det sätt som krävs för att ett leverantörsbyte ska vara tillåtet.

5. Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen har hämtat in förhandsavgörande från EU-domstolen, se punkterna 13–16 nedan.

Yrkanden m.m.

6. Advania Sverige AB yrkar att kammarrättens dom ska upphävas och förvaltningsrättens dom fastställas samt anför följande. Det är i förevarande fall fråga om en omstrukturering av den tidigare leverantören på grund av insolvens med efterföljande konkurs. Advania har accepterat att överta alla Miscos förpliktelser enligt avtalen och Advania har således helt inträtt i Miscos ställe i ramavtalen.

7. Kammarkollegiet yrkar att kammarrättens dom ska upphävas och ramavtalen förklaras giltiga samt anför följande. Uttrycket ”helt eller delvis inträder i den ursprungliga leverantörens ställe” bör tolkas som att den övertagande leverantören träder i den ursprungliga leverantörens ställe i fråga om de rättigheter och skyldigheter som fastställts i det ramavtal eller kontrakt som överlåts. Det centrala är att den nya leverantören kan uppfylla kontraktet enligt de villkor och krav som ursprungligen uppställdes.

8. Dustin Sverige AB anser att överklagandena ska avslås och anför följande. Ett leverantörsbyte enligt de aktuella bestämmelserna förutsätter att den nya leverantören träder i den ursprungliga leverantörens ställe genom att överta tillgångar från denne. Ett sådant ramavtal som nu är i fråga utgör ingen tillgång i redovisningsmässig mening och de aktuella ramavtalen har inte heller upptagits som tillgångar i Miscos balansräkning eller i Miscos konkurs.

Skälen för avgörandet

Frågan i målet

9. Frågan i målet är om en ny leverantör, som sedan den ursprungliga leverantören försatts i konkurs övertar enbart den ursprungliga leverantörens rättigheter och skyldigheter enligt ett upphandlat ramavtal, ska anses ha inträtt i dennes ställe, vilket är en förutsättning för att en ny upphandling av avtalet inte ska behöva göras.

Rättslig reglering m.m.

10. I 17 kap. 13 § första stycket lagen (2016:1145) om offentlig upphandling anges att ett kontrakt eller ett ramavtal får ändras genom att en leverantör byts ut mot en annan leverantör utan en ny upphandling, om
1. den nya leverantören helt eller delvis inträder i den ursprungliga leverantörens ställe till följd av företagsomstruktureringar, inklusive uppköp, sammanslagningar, förvärv eller insolvens, och
2. det förhållandet att en ny leverantör helt eller delvis inträder i den ursprungliga leverantörens ställe inte medför andra väsentliga ändringar av kontraktet eller ramavtalet.

11. I 13 § andra stycket anges att ett byte av leverantör förutsätter att den nya leverantören inte ska uteslutas enligt 13 kap. 1 § eller 2 § första stycket och att den uppfyller de kvalificeringskrav som har ställts i den ursprungliga upphandlingen enligt 14 kap. 1–5 §§.

12. Bestämmelserna motsvaras av artikel 72.1 d) ii) i direktiv 2014/24/EU om offentlig upphandling (upphandlingsdirektivet).

Förhandsavgörande från EU-domstolen

13. Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen har i begäran om förhandsavgörande från EU-domstolen ställt följande fråga.

14. Innebär den omständigheten att en ny leverantör övertagit den ursprungliga leverantörens rättigheter och skyldigheter enligt ett ramavtal, efter det att den ursprungliga leverantören försatts i konkurs och konkursboet överlåtit avtalet, att den nya leverantören ska anses ha inträtt i den ursprungliga leverantörens ställe under sådana förhållanden som avses i artikel 72.1 d) ii) i upphandlingsdirektivet?

15. EU-domstolen besvarade frågan på följande sätt genom dom i mål C-461/20 (EU:C:2022:72).

16. Artikel 72.1 d) ii) i upphandlingsdirektivet ska tolkas så, att en ekonomisk aktör som, till följd av den ursprungliga leverantörens konkurs och upplösning, endast har övertagit leverantörens rättigheter och skyldigheter enligt ett ramavtal med en upphandlande myndighet ska anses delvis ha inträtt i den ursprungliga leverantörens ställe till följd av företagsomstruktureringar, i den mening som avses i den bestämmelsen.

Högsta förvaltningsdomstolens bedömning
17. Genom EU-domstolens dom står det klart att en ny leverantör som övertar enbart den ursprungliga leverantörens rättigheter och skyldigheter enligt ett ramavtal ska anses ha inträtt i den ursprungliga leverantörens ställe i den mening som avses i 17 kap. 13 § första stycket 1 lagen om offentlig upphandling, om övertagandet är föranlett av den ursprungliga leverantörens konkurs. Någon ny upphandling behöver då inte göras, förutsatt att övriga förutsättningar i 13 § är uppfyllda.

18. Överlåtelsen av de nu aktuella ramavtalen föranleddes av att Misco hade försatts i konkurs och innebar att Advania övertog Miscos rättigheter och skyldigheter enligt avtalen. Advania har därmed inträtt i Miscos ställe till följd av företagsomstruktureringar, i det här fallet insolvens. Det har inte framkommit att bytet av leverantör medförde några andra väsentliga ändringar av ramavtalen eller att det fanns grund för att utesluta Advania, som uppfyllde de kvalificeringskrav som hade ställts i den ursprungliga upphandlingen.

19. Dustin hävdar emellertid att avtalen måste ha redovisats som tillgångar i den ursprungliga leverantörens balansräkning för att någon ny upphandling inte ska behöva göras. Något sådant krav går dock inte att utläsa av EU-domstolens dom.

Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen upphäver kammarrättens dom och fastställer förvaltningsrättens avgörande.

Förvaltningsrätten i Stockholm (2018-11-30, Åberg):
Förvaltningsrättens bedömning
[text här utelämnad]
När det slutligen kommer till kärnfrågan i målet, om Advania helt eller delvis inträtt i Miscos ställe och om leverantörsbytet ryms inom 17 kap. 13 § lagen om offentlig upphandling, gör förvaltningsrätten följande bedömning.

När det gäller utformningen av 17 kap. 13 § lagen om offentlig upphandling lämnar Lagrådet bl.a. följande synpunkter i prop. 2015/16:195 s. 1156.

”Ordet företagsomstruktureringar förekommer inte sedan tidigare i svensk lagstiftning. I direktivets bestämmelse, artikel 72.1 d ii), anges i en exemplifiering att uttrycket ”till följd av företagsomstruktureringar” innefattar uppköp, sammanslagningar, förvärv eller insolvens. Trots att direktivets uppräkning är en exemplifiering – och därmed enligt en i remissen tillämpad princip inte ska tas in i den svenska lagtexten – bör den enligt Lagrådets mening anges i paragrafen så att det framgår exempel på situationer där bestämmelsen kan vara tillämplig.”

Utifrån handlingarna i målet kan domstolen konstatera att Kammarkollegiet (Kollegiet) har utgått från att Miscos ansökan beror på insolvens och har utrett den rättsfråga som ansökan gav upphov till. Kollegiet har genom Advanias och Miscos konkursförvaltare fått klarhet i vad Advania köper och därefter kommit fram till att det föreligger identitet mellan Advania och Misco och att Advania därmed kan träda i Miscos ställe som ramavtalsleverantör. Det är Kollegiet som står en risk genom leverantörsbytet och som har ett visst tolkningsföreträde i den uppkomna situationen. Domstolen finner att de omständigheter som Dustin åberopat i målet inte utgör grund för att ifrågasätta att Advania förvärvat Miscos ramavtal och delar av Miscos verksamhet för ett fullgörande av ramavtalet på det sätt som förutsätts i 17 kap. 13 § lagen om offentlig upphandling. Ramavtalet har ändrats genom ett byte av leverantör på ett sätt som ryms inom vad som kan avses med företagsomstrukturering. Kollegiet har påtalat att leverantörsbytet inte har inneburit några ändringar i lydelse och villkor i ramavtalet och det har inte framkommit skäl att ifrågasätta denna uppgift. Det kan därmed konstateras att Advanias inträde i Miscos ställe inte har medfört andra väsentliga ändringar av ramavtalet, vilket är ytterligare en förutsättning för att bytet ska vara tillåtet.

När det gäller frågan om vilka krav som kan ställas på en leverantör i Advanias situation, som vill inträda i annans leverantörs ställe, ger inte 17 kap. 13 § andra stycket lagen om offentlig upphandling stöd för annat än kontroll av om det finns uteslutningsgrund hänförligt till brott eller obetalda skatter och socialförsäkringsavgifter och kontroll av om den nya leverantören uppfyller kvalificeringskrav ställda i den ursprungliga upphandlingen. Det har inte påståtts att någon av uteslutningsgrunderna föreligger avseende Advania som uppfyllde kvalificeringskraven i den ursprungliga ramavtalsupphandlingen. Att det efter kvalificeringen, enligt Kollegiets önskemål att begränsa antalet anbudssökande, genomförts ett urval där Advania inte tillhör de nio anbudssökande med högst mervärde utgör inte hinder mot att Advania deltar i ett leverantörsbyte. Dustin har inte förmått visa att den omständigheten att Advania, som kvalificerad anbudsgivare, efter ett genomfört byte av leverantör, kan lämna avropssvar har inneburit en oacceptabel snedvridning av konkurrensen, olikbehandling och ett kringgående av upphandlingsreglerna. Det kan därmed konstateras att det inte har skett något leverantörsbyte utan stöd i lagen om offentlig upphandling.

Dustin har också, utan att vidare utveckla påståendet, åberopat att Kollegiet godtagit leverantörsbytet utan stöd i 17 kap. 11§ lagen om offentlig upphandling, som avser kompletterande beställningar. Förvaltningsrätten finner att det i målet inte finns omständigheter som talar för att det skett en otillåten upphandling. Det saknas därmed skäl för förvaltningsrätten att ingripa genom ett ogiltigförklarande av ingångna ramavtal och godkännandeavtalet mellan Kollegiet och Advania.

Sammanfattning
Förvaltningsrättens prövning i ett mål som det aktuella görs i förhållande till den upphandlingsrättsliga lagstiftningen. I prövningen ingår inte rent civilrättsliga ställningstaganden.

Förvaltningsrätten har funnit att Advania har inträtt i Miscos ställe i de aktuella ramavtalen på ett sätt som ryms inom vad som är ett tillåtet leverantörsbyte enligt 17 kap. 13 § lagen om offentlig upphandling. Det saknas därmed skäl att förklara ramavtal och godkännandeavtal ogiltiga på grund av att de har slutits i strid med annonseringskravet i 10 kap. 1 § lagen om offentlig upphandling. Dustins ansökan om ogiltigförklaring av avtalen ska därför avslås.

– Förvaltningsrätten avslår ansökan om ogiltigförklaring av ramavtalen Klient 1–4 mellan Statens inköpscentral vid Kammarkollegiet och Advania Sverige AB och godkännandeavtalet mellan Statens inköpscentral vid Kammarkollegiet, Advania Sverige AB och Misco AB, genom konkursförvaltare.

Kammarrätten i Stockholm (2019-10-16, Silfverhjelm, Axelsson och Ringvall):
Frågan i målet är om ändringen av Kammarkollegiets ramavtal Klienter 1–4 är förenlig med 17 kap. 13 § lagen om offentlig upphandling eller om det byte av leverantör som medgetts är en väsentlig ändring som utgjort en otillåten direktupphandling, som innebär att avtalet mellan Kammarkollegiet och Advania ska beslutas vara ogiltigt.

Bestämmelsen genomför artikel 72.1 i Europaparlamentets och rådets direktiv 2014/24/EU av den 26 februari 2014 om offentlig upphandling och om upphävande av direktiv 2004/18/EG.

Av 17 kap. 14 § lagen om offentlig upphandling och artikel 72.1 e och 72.4 i direktiv 2014/24/EU framgår att ett kontrakt eller ramavtal får ändras utan en ny upphandling om ändringen inte är väsentlig. I dessa bestämmelser föreskrivs vidare att byte av leverantör är en väsentlig ändring. I artikel 72.1 d ii, som i lagen om offentlig upphandling motsvaras av 17 kap. 13 §, anges dock att kontrakt och ramavtal får ändras utan nytt upphandlingsförfarande om den entreprenör som den upphandlande myndigheten ursprungligen hade tilldelat kontraktet byts ut mot en ny entreprenör, till följd av antingen att en annan ekonomisk aktör helt eller delvis inträder i den ursprungliga leverantörens ställe till följd av företagsomstruktureringar, inklusive uppköp, sammanslagningar, förvärv eller insolvens, under förutsättning att detta inte medför andra väsentliga ändringar av kontraktet och inte syftar till att kringgå tillämpningen av direktivet.

I skäl 110 i direktivet anges att i överensstämmelse med principerna om likabehandling och öppenhet bör en utvald anbudsgivare inte kunna ersättas med en annan ekonomisk aktör, exempelvis om ett kontrakt avslutas på grund av brister i fullgörandet, utan att kontraktet konkurrensutsätts på nytt. Den utvalda anbudsgivaren som fullgör kontraktet bör dock, särskilt om kontraktet har tilldelats fler än ett företag, kunna genomgå vissa strukturella förändringar under fullgörandet av kontraktet, exempelvis rent interna omorganisationer, uppköp, sammanslagningar och förvärv eller insolvens. Sådana strukturella förändringar bör inte automatiskt kräva nya upphandlingsförfaranden för alla offentliga kontrakt som den anbudsgivaren fullgör.

Skäl 110 skulle eventuellt kunna tolkas så att det som avses är interna förändringar hos leverantören som leder till att denne inte kan sägas vara helt densamma som när avtalet ingicks. Det skulle därför kunna röra sig om rent interna förändringar som omorganisationer, men även kunna vara att ett annat företag köpts. Det får dock inte vara fråga om att ersätta leverantören med en annan ekonomisk aktör. Såsom artikeln i direktivet respektive bestämmelsen i lagen om offentlig upphandling har utformats framstår det dock som om leverantören, under vissa förutsättningar, kan bytas ut utan att ändringen är väsentlig.

Som anges i förvaltningsrättens dom påpekade Lagrådet vid införlivandet av direktivet att begreppet företagsomstrukturering inte tidigare förekommer i svensk lagstiftning. Insolvens anges i direktivet och i den aktuella bestämmelsen i lagen om offentlig upphandling som ett exempel på detta begrepp. Kammarkollegiet har under processen fört fram att anledningen till leverantörsbytet och att Advania trädde i Miscos ställe var Miscos insolvens och att det avtal som låg till grund för Kammarkollegiets beslut om godkännande var avtalet den 18 januari 2018. Kammarrätten anser att utredningen talar för att överlåtelsen skedde genom det avtalet och att det som Dustin har fört fram inte ger anledning till någon annan slutsats. Kammarkollegiets godkännande av överlåtelse av ramavtal gjordes alltså i anledning Miscos insolvens.

Enligt nämnda avtal överlät Misco förutom ramavtalen även rätten till bolagets personal-, kund- och leverantörsdata, artikelstatistik och -historik samt rätten att överta bolagets underleverantörer och Advania förklarade sig berett att erbjuda ett antal ”nyckelanställda” anställning på marknadsmässiga villkor. Av utredningen i målet framgår att en anställd sedan gick över till Advania. Det framgår även att Miscos kundlista enligt Advania inte var helt uppdaterad eller relevant och att Miscos kunder redan hade hunnit byta leverantör. Det finns inget som visar att några av Miscos underleverantörer övertogs av Advania till följd av överlåtelseavtalet. Inte heller finns det något som visar att några andra offentliga ramavtal har överlåtits. Tvärtom har Dustin presenterat uppgifter som visar att Misco var part i åtminstone ett annat offentligt ramavtal och att det inte har överlåtits till Advania.

Den upphandlande myndigheten har ansvaret för att säkerställa att de upphandlingsrättsliga reglerna följs och därmed även för att säkerställa att förutsättningarna för ett byte av leverantör är uppfyllda innan ett sådant godkänns. En utgångspunkt för den upphandlande myndigheten måste vara att det är korrekta uppgifter som lämnas, såvida inte omständigheter i det enskilda fallet ger anledning att ifrågasätta riktigheten. I detta fall har Dustin åberopat omfattande utredning till stöd för att överlåtelsen av Miscos verksamhet inte fullföljdes i enlighet med avtalet. Kammarkollegiet har inte kunnat motbevisa detta. Tvärtom visar utredningen att Misco i stort sett inte överlät någon verksamhet till Advania förutom de aktuella ramavtalen. Advania kan därför enligt kammarrättens mening inte anses ha helt eller delvis inträtt i Miscos ställe på det sätt som avses i 17 kap. 13 § lagen om offentlig upphandling. Det är därför en väsentlig ändring. Kammarkollegiet borde inte ha godkänt leverantörsbytet. Det är därför fråga om en otillåten direktupphandling och det finns grund för att besluta att ramavtalen Klienter 1–4 mellan Kollegiet och Advania är ogiltiga.

Någon prövning enligt 17 kap. 13 § andra stycket lagen om offentlig upphandling om Advania uppfyller de kvalificeringskrav som ställdes i den ursprungliga upphandlingen aktualiseras därmed inte.

– Kammarrätten bifaller överklagandet och beslutar att ramavtalen Klienter 1–4 mellan Kammarkollegiet, Statens inköpscentral, och Advania Sverige AB är ogiltiga.

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, Articles 76 and 77 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), read in conjunction with Article 74 thereof and Annex XIV thereto, and Article 15(2) of Directive 2006/123/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 12 December 2006 on services in the internal market (OJ 2006 L 376, p. 36).

2 The request has been made in proceedings brought by the Asociación Estatal de Entidades de Servicios de Atención a Domicilio (ASADE) (State Association of Domiciliary Care Providers, Spain) concerning the legality of Decreto 181/2017 del Consell, por el que se desarrolla la acción concertada para la prestación de servicios sociales en el ámbito de la Comunitat Valenciana por entidades de iniciativa social (Decree 181/2017 of the Council of the Community of Valencia making regulations governing public-private agreements for the provision of social services by social enterprises within the Community of Valencia) of 17 November 2017 (‘Decree 181/2017’).

Legal framework

Protocol No 26

3 Article 1 of Protocol (No 26) on services of general interest, annexed to the FEU Treaty (‘Protocol No 26’), provides:

‘The shared values of the Union in respect of services of general economic interest within the meaning of Article 14 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union include in particular:

– the essential role and the wide discretion of national, regional and local authorities in providing, commissioning and organising services of general economic interest as closely as possible to the needs of the users;

– the diversity between various services of general economic interest and the differences in the needs and preferences of users that may result from different geographical, social or cultural situations; – a high level of quality, safety and affordability, equal treatment and the promotion of universal access and of user rights.’

Directive 2014/24

4 Recitals 4, 6 and 114 of Directive 2014/24 state:

‘(4) … Situations where all operators fulfilling certain conditions are entitled to perform a given task, without any selectivity, such as customer choice and service voucher systems, should not be understood as being procurement but simple authorisation schemes (for instance licences for medicines or medical services).

(6) It is also appropriate to recall that this Directive should not affect the social security legislation of the Member States. Nor should it deal with the liberalisation of services of general economic interest, reserved to public or private entities, or with the privatisation of public entities providing services.

It should equally be recalled that Member States are free to organise the provision of compulsory social services or of other services such as postal services either as services of general economic interest or as non-economic services of general interest or as a mixture thereof. It is appropriate to clarify that non-economic services of general interest should not fall within the scope of this Directive.

(114) Certain categories of services continue by their very nature to have a limited cross-border dimension, namely such services that are known as services to the person, such as certain social, health and educational services. Those services are provided within a particular context that varies widely amongst Member States, due to different cultural traditions. A specific regime should therefore be established for public contracts for those services, with a higher threshold than that which applies to other services.

Services to the person with values below that threshold will typically not be of interest to providers from other Member States, unless there are concrete indications to the contrary, such as Union financing for cross-border projects.

Contracts for services to the person above that threshold should be subject to Union-wide transparency. Given the importance of the cultural context and the sensitivity of these services, Member States should be given wide discretion to organise the choice of the service providers in the way they consider most appropriate. The rules of this Directive take account of that imperative, imposing only the observance of basic principles of transparency and equal treatment and making sure that contracting authorities are able to apply specific quality criteria for the choice of service providers, such as the criteria set out in the voluntary European Quality Framework for Social Services, published by the Social Protection Committee. When determining the procedures to be used for the award of contracts for services to the person, Member States should take Article 14 TFEU and Protocol No 26 into account. In so doing, Member States should also pursue the objectives of simplification and of alleviating the administrative burden for contracting authorities and economic operators; it should be clarified that so doing might also entail relying on rules applicable to service contracts not subject to the specific regime.

Member States and public authorities remain free to provide those services themselves or to organise social services in a way that does not entail the conclusion of public contracts, for example through the mere financing of such services or by granting licences or authorisations to all economic operators meeting the conditions established beforehand by the contracting authority, without any limits or quotas, provided that such a system ensures sufficient advertising and complies with the principles of transparency and non-discrimination.’

5 Article 1 of that directive provides:

5. This Directive does not affect the way in which the Member States organise their social security systems.

…’

6 Article 2 of that directive provides:

‘1. For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

5. “public contracts” means contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services;

9. “public service contracts” means public contracts having as their object the provision of services other than those referred to in point 6;

10. “economic operator” means any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities, including any temporary association of undertakings, which offers the execution of works and/or a work, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market;

7 In accordance with Article 10 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Specific exclusions for service contracts’:

‘This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts for:

(h) civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, and which are covered by CPV codes 75250000-3, 75251000-0, 75251100-1, 75251110-4, 75251120-7, 75252000-7, 75222000-8, 98113100-9 and 85143000-3 except patient transport ambulance services;

…’

8 Title III of that directive, entitled ‘Particular procurement regimes’, contains, inter alia, Chapter I, relating to ‘social and other specific services’, which includes Articles 74 to 77 of that directive.

9 Article 74 of Directive 2014/24 states:

‘Public contracts for social and other specific services listed in Annex XIV shall be awarded in accordance with this Chapter, where the value of the contracts is equal to or greater than the threshold indicated in point (d) of Article 4.’

10 Article 75 of that directive provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities intending to award a public contract for the services referred to in Article 74 shall make known their intention by any of the following means:

(a) by means of a contract notice, which shall contain the information referred to in Annex V Part H, in accordance with the standard forms referred to in Article 51; or

(b) by means of a prior information notice, which shall be published continuously and contain the information set out in Annex V Part I. The prior information notice shall refer specifically to the types of services that will be the subject of the contracts to be awarded. It shall indicate that the contracts will be awarded without further publication and invite interested economic operators to express their interest in writing.

The first subparagraph shall, however, not apply where a negotiated procedure without prior publication could have been used in conformity with Article 32 for the award of a public service contract.

2. Contracting authorities that have awarded a public contract for the services referred to in Article 74 shall make known the results of the procurement procedure by means of a contract award notice, which shall contain the information referred to in Annex V Part J, in accordance with the standard forms referred to in Article 51. They may, however, group such notices on a quarterly basis. In that case, they shall send the grouped notices within 30 days of the end of each quarter.

3. The Commission shall establish the standard forms referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article by means of implementing acts. Those implementing acts shall be adopted in accordance with the advisory procedure referred to in Article 89(2).

4. The notices referred to in this Article shall be published in accordance with Article 51.'

11 Article 76 of that directive provides:

'1. Member States shall put in place national rules for the award of contracts subject to this Chapter in order to ensure contracting authorities comply with the principles of transparency and equal treatment of economic operators. Member States are free to determine the procedural rules applicable as long as such rules allow contracting authorities to take into account the specificities of the services in question.

2. Member States shall ensure that contracting authorities may take into account the need to ensure quality, continuity, accessibility, affordability, availability and comprehensiveness of the services, the specific needs of different categories of users, including disadvantaged and vulnerable groups, the involvement and empowerment of users and innovation. Member States may also provide that the choice of the service provider shall be made on the basis of the tender presenting the best price-quality ratio, taking into account quality and sustainability criteria for social services.'

12 In accordance with Article 77 of that directive:

'1. Member States may provide that contracting authorities may reserve the right for organisations to participate in procedures for the award of public contracts exclusively for those health, social and cultural services referred to in Article 74, which are covered by CPV codes 75121000-0, 75122000-7, 75123000-4, 79622000-0, 79624000-4, 79625000-1, 80110000-8, 80300000-7, 80420000-4, 80430000-7, 80511000-9, 80520000-5, 80590000-6, from 85000000-9 to 85323000-9, 92500000-6, 92600000-7, 98133000-4, 98133110-8.

2. An organisation referred to in paragraph 1 shall fulfil all of the following conditions:

(a) its objective is the pursuit of a public service mission linked to the delivery of the services referred to in paragraph 1;

(b) profits are reinvested with a view to achieving the organisation's objective. Where profits are distributed or redistributed, this should be based on participatory considerations;

(c) the structures of management or ownership of the organisation performing the contract are based on employee ownership or participatory principles, or require the active participation of employees, users or stakeholders; and

(d) the organisation has not been awarded a contract for the services concerned by the contracting authority concerned pursuant to this Article within the past three years.

3. The maximum duration of the contract shall not be longer than three years.

4. The call for competition shall make reference to this Article.

5. Notwithstanding Article 92, the Commission shall assess the effects of this Article and report to the European Parliament and the Council by 18 April 2019.'

13 Recital 27 of Directive 2006/123 states:

'This Directive should not cover those social services in the areas of housing, childcare and support to families and persons in need which are provided by the State at national, regional or local level by providers mandated by the State or by charities recognised as such by the State with the objective of ensuring support for those who are permanently or temporarily in a particular state of need because of their insufficient family income or total or partial lack of independence and for those who risk being marginalised. These services are essential in order to guarantee the fundamental right to human dignity and integrity and are a manifestation of the principles of social cohesion and solidarity and should not be affected by this Directive.'

14 Article 2 of that directive provides:

'1. This Directive shall apply to services supplied by providers established in a Member State.

2. This Directive shall not apply to the following activities:

(a) non-economic services of general interest;

(f) healthcare services whether or not they are provided via healthcare facilities, and regardless of the ways in which they are organised and financed at national level or whether they are public or private;

(i) activities which are connected with the exercise of official authority as set out in Article 45 of the Treaty;

(j) social services relating to social housing, childcare and support of families and persons permanently or temporarily in need which are provided by the State, by providers mandated by the State or by charities recognised as such by the State;

Spanish law

Organic Law 5/1982

15 Under Article 49(1)(24) of Ley Orgánica 5/1982, de Estatuto de Autonomía de la Comunidad Valenciana (Organic Law 5/1982 on the Statute of Autonomy of the Community of Valencia) of 1 July 1982 (BOE No 164 of 10 July 1982), in the version applicable to the facts in the main proceedings, the Community of Valencia has exclusive competence in respect of social services and public institutions for the protection and assistance of minors, young people, migrants, the elderly, the disabled and other groups or sectors in need of social protection.

16 The powers of the Valencian Community under Organic Law 5/1982 were implemented by Ley 5/1997 de la Generalitat Valenciana por la cual se regula el Sistema de Servicios Sociales en el ambito de la Comunidad Valenciana (Law 5/1997 of the Valencia Regional Government governing the Social Services System within the Territory of the Community of Valencia) of 26 June 1997 (BOE No 192 of 12 August 1997, p. 24405).

17 That law was amended by Ley 13/2016, de medidas fiscales, de gestión administrativa y financiera, y de organización de la Generalitat (Law 13/2016 of the Community of Valencia on measures in respect of tax, administrative and financial management and the organisation of the Government of the Community of Valencia) of 29 December 2016 (BOE No 34 of 9 February 2017, p. 8694), before being repealed by Ley 3/2019 de servicios sociales inclusivos de la Comunitat Valenciana (Law 3/2019 of the Community of Valencia on inclusive social services in the Community of Valencia) of 18 February 2019 (BOE No 61 of 12 March 2019, p. 23249) ('Law 3/2019').

18 Article 44 bis of Law 5/1997, as amended by Law 13/2016 ('Law 5/1997'), entitled 'Methods of providing the services of the public social services system', provides:

‘1. The public administrations forming part of the public social services system shall provide persons with the services provided for by law or by the catalogue of social services using the following methods:

(a) Direct management or the use of own resources, which is the preferred method of supply.

(b) Indirect management in accordance with one of the formats established in the rules on public sector contracts.

(c) Contractual action agreements concluded with private, social initiative entities.

2. The provision of social services by the centres or services of an administration other than the competent administration shall be carried out under any form of collaboration and cooperation between public administrations provided for by law’.

19 Article 53 of that law, entitled ‘Conclusion of agreements with private social initiative entities’, provides:

‘1. Public administrations responsible for social services may entrust private social initiative entities with the provision of the services provided for in the catalogue of social services through the use of contractual action agreements, provided that those entities have the appropriate administrative accreditation and are entered as such in the corresponding register of entities, centres and social services.

2. Under the provisions of the law, the legal regime is established by regulation for each specific area of operation, by laying down the conditions for action by contracted private centres which participate in the social services system under public responsibility, by determining the conditions of access, the conditions of service, selection procedures, the maximum duration and grounds for terminating the agreement, as well as the obligations of the parties.

3. The agreement concluded between the administration and the private entity establishes the rights and obligations of each party in respect of its economic regime, duration, extension and termination and, where appropriate, the number and type of units agreed upon, and other legal conditions.

4. Access to places which are the subject of an agreement with private social initiative entities always takes place through the administration that awarded the contract.

5. Social initiative entities comprise foundations, associations, voluntary organisations and other non-profit entities carrying out social service activities. In particular, cooperative societies classified as non-profit entities in accordance with their specific legislation shall be regarded as social initiative entities.’

20 Article 56 of that law, entitled ‘Agreements’, provides, in paragraphs 1 and 2:

1. The Generalitat [(Valencia Regional Government)] shall contribute financially to developing and enhancing the skills of local entities and to supporting programmes with social content carried out by non-profit entities.

2. Similarly, the Generalitat shall allocate annually in the corresponding budgets the appropriations needed to finance the contractual action agreements concluded with private social initiative entities.’

21 Articles 62 to 66 of that law are contained in Title VI thereof, entitled ‘Contractual action’.

22 Under Article 62 of Law 5/1997, entitled ‘Concept, general regime and principles of contractual action’:

‘1. Contractual action agreements are organisational instruments that are not contractual in nature by means of which the competent administrations may organise the provision of social services to the person, the funding and monitoring of and access to which falls within their competence, in accordance with the procedure and requirements laid down in this law and the applicable sectoral rules.

2. Public administrations shall ensure that their contractual action with third parties for the purpose of providing social services to the person complies with the following principles:

(a) Principle of subsidiarity, under which contractual action concluded with private non-profit organisations is subject to the prior condition of optimal use of own resources.

(b) Principle of solidarity, by encouraging the involvement of entities in the third area of social action in the provision of social services to the person.

(c) Principle of equality, by ensuring that contractual action guarantees that users are given the same attention as that given to users supplied directly by the administration.

(d) Principle of publicity, by providing that calls for applications for contractual actions are to be published in the Diari Oficial de la Generalitat Valenciana [(Official Journal of the Valencia Regional Government)].

(e) Principle of transparency, by publishing on the transparency portal the contractual action agreements in force at any time.

(f) Principle of non-discrimination, by laying down the conditions for access to contractual action ensuring equality between entities which choose to participate.

(g) Principle of budgetary efficiency, by providing that the economic consideration which contracted entities may receive in accordance with the maximum rates or modules in force shall be capped at the variable, fixed and permanent costs of providing the service, without including any commercial profit.'

23 Article 63 of that law, entitled 'Substantive scope and preconditions for contractual action', provides:

'1. In the field of social services, services to the person which may be the subject of a contractual action shall be determined by regulation from among the services provided for in the catalogue of services.

2. The following may be the subject of a contractual action:

(a) The reservation and occupation of places for the purpose of their occupation by users of the public social services system, access to such places being authorised by the competent public administrations in accordance with the criteria established by the present law.

(b) The integral management of supplies, services or centres in accordance with provisions established by regulation.

3. Where the provision of the service involves processes requiring different types of intervention at different centres or services, the competent administration may conclude a single contractual action agreement imposing mandatory coordination and collaboration mechanisms.

4. Access to the contractual action regime is open to private social initiative entities providing social services which have an administrative accreditation and are entered in the corresponding register of entities, centres and social services.

5. The contractual action regime is incompatible with the grant of economic subsidies to finance activities or services covered by the contractual arrangement.'

24 In accordance with Article 64 of that law, entitled 'Procedure for contractual arrangements and preference criteria':

'1. Sectoral rules govern the procedures to ensure that entities meeting the established criteria can adhere to the contractual action regime in accordance with the general principles established in Article 62 of this law.

2. For the adoption of contractual action agreements, the sectoral rules establish the criteria for the selection of entities where such selection proves necessary on account of budgetary limits or the number and characteristics of the services which may be contracted.

3. The selection of entities may be based on the following criteria:

(a) establishment in the place where the service is provided;

…’

25 Article 65 of the same law, entitled ‘Formalisation and effects of the contracted action’, provides:

‘1. Contractual action agreements shall be formalised in administrative agreement documents the content of which is established by the applicable sectoral rules.

2. Contractual agreements require the contracted entity to provide persons with social services under the conditions established by the applicable sectoral rules and by the contractual agreement adopted in accordance with the latter.

3. Apart from the fees provided for, no sums may be collected from users for contracted services.

4. The collection from users of any remuneration for the provision of additional services and the amount thereof shall be authorised in advance by the administration granting the contractual arrangement.’

26 Article 66 of Law 5/1997, entitled ‘Financing of the contractual action’, states:

‘1. Each call for applications shall set the amount of the economic modules corresponding to each service which may be the subject of the contractual action.

2. Maximum tariffs or economic modules compensate the maximum variable, fixed and permanent costs of providing services, guaranteeing economic neutrality for the entity providing the services, without including any commercial profit.

3. The amounts resulting from the contractual action shall be paid after the relevant invoice has been produced by the contracted entity, by deduction using the budget heading intended for the financing of the administration’s current expenditure.’

27 In accordance with Article 67 of that law, entitled ‘Duration of contractual agreements’:

‘The duration of contractual agreements may not exceed four years. Where they are expressly provided for in the contractual agreement, any extensions may increase the total duration of the contractual agreement to 10 years. At the end of that period, the competent administration may conclude a new contractual agreement.’

28 The objective of Decree 181/2017, which was adopted in implementation of Law 5/1997, is, in accordance with Article 1 thereof, to regulate the requirements, the selection procedures, the content and the basic conditions for the establishment, performance and development of contractual agreements, as a method of managing social services using private social initiative entities in order to provide persons with the social services provided for by law and by the catalogue of social services, or by their implementing acts.

29 Article 3(e) of that decree recognises as private social initiative entities ‘foundations, associations, voluntary organisations and other non-profit entities carrying out social service activities’, as well as cooperative societies classified as non-profit entities in accordance with their specific legislation.

30 Despite the repeal of Law 5/1997 by Law 3/2019, Decree 181/2017 remains in force, in accordance with the single repealing provision of the latter law.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

31 ASADE has brought before the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de la Comunidad Valenciana (High Court of Justice of the Community of Valencia, Spain) an action for annulment of Decree 181/2017, in support of which it submits that Article 44 bis(1)(c), Article 53, Article 56(2) and Title VI of Law 5/1997, which are implemented by that decree, are contrary to EU law on the ground that they exclude profit-making entities from the possibility of providing certain social services in the form of personal assistance under a contractual action agreement, while allowing all non-profit-making entities, and not solely voluntary organisations, to provide such services in return for payment without having to go through a transparent competitive process that ensures equal treatment between interested economic operators.

32 The referring court questions whether the use of contractual action agreements, as governed by Law 5/1997, is compatible with Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, Articles 76 and 77 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 15(2) of Directive 2006/123. It points out that an interpretation of those provisions of EU law remains necessary despite the repeal of Law 5/1997 by Law 3/2019, since the latter law did not alter the arrangements for public-private agreements for the provision of social services. Moreover, it states that, in order to assess the lawfulness of that decree, it is necessary to ascertain whether Law 5/1997, which implemented that decree, is compatible with EU law.

33 In those circumstances, the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de la Comunidad Valenciana (High Court of Justice of the Community of Valencia) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 49 TFEU and Articles 76 and 77 of Directive [2014/24] (as read with Article 74 and Annex XIV thereto) be interpreted as precluding national legislation which permits contracting authorities to make use of agreements with private non-profit organisations – not solely voluntary associations – to provide all manner of social services to the person in return for reimbursement of costs without following the procedures [Directive 2014/24] and irrespective of the estimated value, simply by classifying the arrangements in question as non-contractual?

(2) If the reply is in the negative, meaning that such arrangements are possible, must Article 49 TFEU and Articles 76 and 77 of [Directive 2014/24] (as read with Article 74 and Annex XIV thereto) be interpreted as permitting contracting authorities to make use of agreements with private non-profit organisations (not solely voluntary associations) to provide all manner of social services to the person in return for reimbursement of costs without following the procedures in the directive and irrespective of the estimated value, simply by classifying the arrangements in question as non-contractual, where, moreover, the national legislation in question does not expressly include the requirements established in Article 77 of the directive, but refers to subsequent implementation through regulations without expressly stipulating, among the requirements to be satisfied by the implementing regulations, that they must explicitly include the conditions laid down in Article 77 of the directive?

(3) If the reply is, again, in the negative, meaning that such a situation is possible, must Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, Articles 76 and 77 of [Directive 2014/24] (as read with Article 74 and Annex XIV thereto) and Article 15(2) of Directive [2006/123] be interpreted as permitting contracting authorities, when selecting non-profit organisations (not solely voluntary associations) with which to enter into agreements to provide all manner of social services to the person, to include not only the selection criteria set out in Article 2(2)(j) of [Directive 2006/123] but also the criterion that the organisation be established in the place where the service is to be provided?’

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Admissibility

34 As a preliminary point, it must be recalled that, according to settled case-law, questions relating to EU law enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred by a national court for a preliminary ruling only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (judgments of 15 December 1995, Bosman, C-415/93, EU:C:1995:463, paragraphs 59 and 61, and of 25 November 2021, État luxembourgeois (Information on a group of taxpayers), C-437/19, EU:C:2021:953, paragraph 81).

35 The need to provide an interpretation of EU law which will be of use to the national court makes it necessary for that court to define the factual and legal context of the questions it is asking or, at the very least, to explain the factual circumstances on which those questions are based. The order for reference must also set out the precise reasons why the national court is unsure as to the interpretation of EU law and considers it necessary to refer a question to the Court for a preliminary ruling (judgment of 10 March 2022, Commissioners for Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs (Comprehensive sickness insurance cover), C-247/20, EU:C:2022:177, paragraph 75 and the case-law cited).

36 It is in the light of those preliminary observations that the admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling must be assessed.

Repeal of Law 5/1997

37 The defendant in the main proceedings points out that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling are inadmissible on the ground that Law 5/1997, the conformity of which with EU law is challenged indirectly in the action in the main proceedings, was repealed by Law 3/2019.

38 In that regard, it is clear from the request for a preliminary ruling that the referring court is called upon to rule on the lawfulness of Decree 181/2017 on the date of its adoption. On that date, it is established that Law 5/1997, which is implemented by that decree, was still in force. Moreover, it is not disputed that that law, first, denied profit-making entities the possibility of concluding a contractual action agreement and, second, allowed the criterion of local establishment to be used in the context of the conclusion of such an agreement.

39 In those circumstances, the questions referred for a preliminary ruling retain a connection with the subject matter of the dispute in the main proceedings.

40 The Spanish, Italian and Netherlands Governments express doubts as to the applicability of Directive 2014/24 to contractual action agreements provided for by the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings.

41 In that regard, it must be recalled that, where, as in the present case, it is not obvious that the interpretation of an EU provision bears no relation to the facts of the main action or its purpose, the objection alleging the inapplicability of that provision to the case in the main action does not relate to the admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling, but concerns the substance of the questions (judgments of 12 December 2019, Slovenské elektrárne, C-376/18, EU:C:2019:1068, paragraph 29, and of 28 October 2021, Komisia za protivodeystvie na koruptsiyata i za otnemane na nezakonno pridobitoto imushtestvo, C-319/19, EU:C:2021:883, paragraph 25).

42 Under Article 2(2)(j) of Directive 2006/123, that directive does not apply to social services relating to social housing, childcare and support of families and persons permanently or temporarily in need which are provided by the State, by providers mandated by the State or by charities recognised as such by the State.

43 First, as the Advocate General stated in essence in points 145 to 150 of her Opinion, the file before the Court does not make it possible to ensure that the social services in the form of personal assistance concerned by the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings are not among the services excluded from the scope of Directive 2006/123 under Article 2(2)(j) thereof, as interpreted by the Court in paragraphs 42 to 49 of the judgment of 11 July 2013, Femarbel (C-57/12, EU:C:2013:517).

44 Second, the absence of any clarification in that regard in the order for reference also does not enable the Court to determine whether, even if certain social services in the form of personal assistance covered by the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings fall outside the exclusion provided for in Article 2(2)(j) of that directive, they are included within the scope of another of the exclusions provided for in Article 2(2) of that directive, and in particular points (f) and (i) thereof.

45 In those circumstances, since the referring court has not put the Court in a position to satisfy itself that the factual premiss on which the third question referred is based does indeed fall within the scope of Directive 2006/123, that question is inadmissible in so far as it concerns the interpretation of Article 15(2) thereof.

46 Lastly, it must be observed that, although all the elements of the dispute in the main proceedings are confined to a single Member State, the questions referred for a preliminary ruling concern, inter alia, the interpretation of Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

47 In such a context, it is for the referring court to indicate to the Court, in accordance with the requirements of Article 94 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court, in what way the dispute pending before it, despite its purely domestic character, has a connecting factor with the provisions of EU law on the fundamental freedoms that makes the preliminary ruling on interpretation necessary for it to give judgment in that dispute (judgment of 15 November 2016, Ullens de Schooten, C-268/15, EU:C:2016:874, paragraph 55, and order of 6 May 2021, Ministero dell'Istruzione, dell'Università e della Ricerca and Others, C-571/20, not published, EU:C:2021:364, paragraph 23).

48 The referring court fails to explain how, despite the purely internal nature of the dispute pending before it, an interpretation of Articles 49 and 56 TFEU is necessary. More specifically, that court does not expressly state that it is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 50 to 53 of the judgment of 15 November 2016, Ullens de Schooten (C-268/15, EU:C:2016:874).

49 Moreover, although, in accordance with the Court's settled case-law, the award of contracts which, in view of their value fall outside the scope of the directives on public procurement, is nonetheless subject to the fundamental rules and the general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular, the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and the consequent obligation of transparency, provided that those contracts are of certain cross-border interest, the referring court may not merely submit to the Court of Justice evidence showing that such an interest cannot be ruled out but must, on the contrary provide information capable of proving that it exists (see, to that effect, order of 12 November 2020, Novart Engineering, C-170/20, not published, EU:C:2020:908, paragraphs 33 and 35). In the present case, the referring court has failed to provide the Court with such information.

50 Therefore, the questions referred for a preliminary ruling are inadmissible, in so far as they concern the interpretation of Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

51 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling are admissible except in so far as they concern the interpretation of Articles 49 and 56 TFEU and Article 15(2) of Directive 2006/123.

The first and second questions

52 By its first two questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, essentially, whether Articles 76 and 77 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which reserves the right for private non-profit organisations to conclude agreements under which those organisations provide social services in the form of personal assistance in return for reimbursement of the costs which they incur, irrespective of the estimated value of those services, and without that legislation imposing any obligation on those entities to comply with the requirements laid down in Article 77.

The applicability of Directive 2014/24

53 In order to answer those questions, it is necessary, as a preliminary point, to determine whether agreements such as those at issue in the main proceedings are public contracts covered by Directive 2014/24.

54 In that regard, in accordance with Article 1 thereof, Directive 2014/24 establishes rules on the procurement procedures by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4 thereof. Article 2(1)(5) of that directive defines public contracts for the purposes of that directive as contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services.

55 From that perspective, it must be observed, in the first place, that, since the concept of 'public contract' is a concept of EU law, the classification given to contractual action agreements by Spanish law is irrelevant (see, to that effect, judgments of 20 October 2005, Commission v France, C-264/03, EU:C:2005:620, paragraph 36, and of 22 April 2021, Commission v Austria (Lease of a building not yet constructed), C-537/19, EU:C:2021:319, paragraph 43).

56 Thus, the clarification in Article 62(1) of Law 5/1997, that such agreements constitute 'organisational instruments that are not contractual in nature', is not sufficient to exclude them from the scope of Directive 2014/24.

57 Moreover, contrary to the submissions of the Netherlands Government, it is not apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that those contractual action agreements should, in practice, be treated in the same way as unilateral administrative measures which, by the mere will of the contracting authorities, are binding on the private non-profit-making entities which are the contracting parties thereof (see, in that regard, judgments of 19 April 2007, Asemfo, C-295/05, EU:C:2007:227, paragraphs 52 to 55, and of 18 December 2007, Asociación Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia, C-220/06, EU:C:2007:815, paragraphs 51 to 55).

58 In the second place, in order to fall within the scope of Directive 2014/24, the contractual action agreements at issue in the main proceedings must consist of public service contracts within the meaning of Article 2(1)(9) thereof.

59 In that regard, first, the concept of 'services', within the meaning of that provision, must be interpreted in the light of the freedom to provide services enshrined in Article 56 TFEU, the scope of which is limited to economic activities (see, to that effect, judgments of 29 April 2010, Commission v Germany, C-160/08, EU:C:2010:230, paragraphs 73 and 74, and of 23 February 2016, Commission v Hungary, C-179/14, EU:C:2016:108, paragraph 154).

60 More specifically, it must be observed that services normally provided for remuneration constitute economic activities, since the essential characteristic of remuneration resides in the fact that it constitutes financial consideration for the service in question, without however having to be paid for by the recipient of that service (judgment of 23 February 2016, Commission v Hungary, C-179/14, EU:C:2016:108, paragraphs 153 to 155). Furthermore, it follows from Article 62 TFEU, read together with Article 51 of that Treaty, that the freedom to provide services does not extend to activities which in a Member State are connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of official authority.

61 As confirmed in recital 6 of Directive 2014/24, only activities of an economic nature, in accordance with the preceding paragraph, may, therefore, be the subject of a public service contract, within the meaning of Article 2(1)(9) thereof. Moreover, such an interpretation is supported by Article 2(1)(10) of that directive, under which an economic operator, within the meaning of that directive, is characterised by the fact that it offers the execution of works or a work, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market.

62 That said, the fact that the contract is concluded with a non-profit-making entity does not preclude that entity from being able to carry out an economic activity, within the meaning of Directive 2014/24, with the result that that factor is irrelevant as regards the application of the rules of EU law on public contracts (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 June 2014, Centro Hospitalar de Setúbal and SUCH,

C-574/12, EU:C:2014:2004, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited, and of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others, C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56, paragraph 52).

63 Furthermore, services provided for remuneration which, without falling within the exercise of public powers, are carried out in the public interest and without a profit motive and are in competition with those offered by operators pursuing a profit motive, may be regarded as economic activities (see, by analogy, judgment of 6 September 2011, Scattolon, C-108/10, EU:C:2011:542, paragraph 44 and the case-law cited).

64 Second, with regard, more specifically, to the provision of services which, as in the present case, have a social purpose, it is true that Article 1(5) of Directive 2014/24 states that that directive does not affect the way in which the Member States organise their social security systems. Moreover, according to the Court's settled case-law, the activities of bodies managing a social security scheme do not, in principle, constitute economic activities where they are based on the principle of solidarity and those activities are subject to State supervision (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 June 2020, Commission and Slovak Republic v Dôvera zdravotná poist'ovňa, C-262/18 P and C-271/18 P, EU:C:2020:450, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited).

65 That said, that is not necessarily the case with specific social services which are provided by private operators, the cost of which is borne by either the State itself, or by those social security bodies. The Court has also held that the pursuit of a social objective or the taking into account of the principle of solidarity in the context of the provision of services does not, as such, prevent the provision of these services from being regarded as an economic activity (see, to that effect, judgments of 29 November 2007, Commission v Italy, C-119/06, not published, EU:C:2007:729, paragraphs 36 to 41, and of 12 September 2000, Pavlov and Others, C-180/98 to C-184/98, EU:C:2000:428, paragraph 118).

66 In the present case, as the Advocate General noted in points 55 to 61 of her Opinion, it would appear that, at the very least, certain social services in the form of personal assistance, falling within the scope of the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings, are provided in return for remuneration and do not fall within the exercise of official authority, with the result that such activities may be regarded as being of an economic nature and, therefore, as constituting services within the meaning of Directive 2014/24.

67 In the third place, the pecuniary nature of a public contract presupposes that each of the parties undertakes to provide one form of consideration in exchange for another, although that does not mean that the consideration given by the contracting authority consists solely in the reimbursement of the expenditure incurred in providing the agreed service (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 September 2020, Tax-Fin-Lex, C-367/19, EU:C:2020:685, paragraphs 25 and 26 and the case-law cited). Accordingly, a contract cannot fall outside the concept of a 'public service contract' merely because, as appears to be the case here, the remuneration is limited to reimbursement of the expenditure incurred to provide the agreed service (judgment of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others, C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56, paragraph 52).

68 In the fourth place, as confirmed by recital 4 and the final paragraph of recital 114 of Directive 2014/24, procedures, whereby the contracting authority refrains from comparing and classifying admissible tenders or designating one or more economic operators to whom contractual exclusivity is awarded, do not fall within the scope of that directive (see, to that effect, judgments of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma, C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399, paragraphs 37 to 42, and of 1 March 2018, Tirkkonen, C-9/17, EU:C:2018:142, paragraphs 29 to 35).

69 That said, it is apparent from replies of ASADE, the Spanish Government and the defendant in the main proceedings to the questions put by the Court that the award of a contractual action agreement is, in practice, preceded by a selection of the private non-profit organisations which have expressed an interest in providing the social services in the form of personal assistance which are the subject matter of that agreement, which, however, is a matter for the referring court to verify.

70 In the fifth place, it is expressly stated in the first question referred that the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings applies to all contractual action agreements, irrespective of their estimated value. It follows that it is possible that that legislation whose conformity with EU law must be reviewed by the referring court, may concern contractual action agreements the estimated value of which is equal to or greater than the thresholds laid down in Article 4 of Directive 2014/24.

71 In the light of the foregoing, the legislation at issue in the main proceedings appears to govern, at least in part, the award of public contracts subject to Directive 2014/24.

72 Finally, it is important to add, while it is regrettable that the request for a preliminary ruling failed to list the specific categories of social services in the form of personal assistance covered by the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings, that did not prevent the Court, contrary to what the Italian Government appears to argue, from satisfying itself that the interpretation of Directive 2014/24 is related to the subject of the dispute in the main proceedings.

73 First, it is clear from the documents before the Court that at least some of the social services in the form of personal assistance that may be the subject of a contractual action agreement fall within the scope of the services listed in Annex XIV to Directive 2014/24 and, second, the questions referred concern the interpretation, not of the provisions of that directive, which are generally applicable to procedures for the award of public contracts, but solely Articles 74 to 77 thereof, which specifically establish a simplified regime for the award of public contracts for services covered by that annex.

74 Accordingly, those questions must be examined solely in the light of Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24.

The requirements deriving from Directive 2014/24

75 In order to determine whether Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24 preclude legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, it must be observed, in the first place, that the simplified regime for the award of public contracts laid down in those articles is justified, as stated in recital 114 of Directive 2014/24, by the limited cross-border dimension of the services referred to in Annex XIV thereto, and by the fact that those services are provided within a particular context that varies widely amongst Member States due to different cultural traditions.

76 In the second place, Article 77 of Directive 2014/24 provides that, for some of the services referred to in Annex XIV thereto, the Member States may allow contracting authorities to reserve the right for ‘organisations’, such as those defined in paragraph 2 of that article, to participate in procedures for the award of public contracts, the object of which is the provision of such services.

77 Article 77(2) of Directive 2014/24 sets out the strict conditions under which an economic operator may be regarded as an ‘organisation’ within the meaning of that article. Accordingly, it is essential that the aim of that economic operator is the pursuit of a public service mission linked to the delivery of the social or special services referred to in that article, that the profits of that economic operator are reinvested with a view to achieving such an objective and that, where those profits are distributed or redistributed, such an operation is based on participatory considerations. Moreover, the structures of management or ownership of that economic operator must be based on employee ownership or participatory principles or require the active participation of employees, users or stakeholders.

78 Moreover, it follows from Article 77(2)(d) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 that a contracting authority may award a public contract to an ‘organisation’ on the basis of the procedure laid down in that article only for a period not exceeding three years and only provided that that contracting authority has not already awarded that ‘organisation’ a contract for the services referred to in that article during the preceding three years.

79 In the present case, as confirmed by the wording of the first question referred for a preliminary ruling, the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings stipulates that the right to take part in procedures for the award of contractual action agreements is reserved for private non-profit organisations, without requiring those entities to comply with all of the conditions laid down in Article 77 of Directive 2014/24.

80 That said, it cannot be concluded from that factor that such legislation is necessarily incompatible with the simplified regime provided for in Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24.

81 Article 77 of that directive has a very specific scope since it expressly guarantees that Member States may, for some of the services covered by that simplified regime, allow contracting authorities to reserve the right to participate in procedures for the award of public contracts relating to such services, by operation of law, solely for economic operators meeting all the conditions laid down in that article.

82 Thus, having regard to the specific features of the legal regime which it establishes, and in the light of the wording of Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24, Article 77 thereof cannot be regarded as covering, in an exhaustive manner, the cases in which public contracts for the provision of a service referred to in Annex XIV to that directive may be reserved for certain categories of economic operators.

83 In the third place, it must be observed that Article 76 of Directive 2014/24 lays down the rules, derogating from ordinary law, which are applicable to the award of all public contracts relating to social services and other specific services listed in Annex XIV to that directive.

84 Article 76 obliges Member States, first, to put in place procurement rules requiring contracting authorities to comply with the principles of transparency and equal treatment of economic operators and, second, to ensure that those rules allow contracting authorities to take into account the specificities of the services covered by such procurement procedures. In the latter regard, Member States must allow contracting authorities to take into account the need to ensure the quality, continuity, accessibility, affordability, availability and comprehensiveness of those services, the specific needs of different categories of users, the involvement and empowerment of users and innovation.

85 As confirmed by recital 114 of Directive 2014/24, the legal regime established by that directive in Article 76 is characterised by the broad discretion enjoyed by the Member States to organise, in the way they consider most appropriate, the choice of the providers of the services listed in Annex XIV to that directive. It also follows from that recital that the Member States must also take account of Protocol No 26, which provides, inter alia, for the broad discretion of national authorities to commission services of general economic interest as closely as possible to the needs of the users.

86 It is therefore necessary to examine whether the principles of equal treatment and transparency, as referred to in Article 76 of Directive 2014/24, preclude national legislation which reserves the right to participate in procedures for the award of public contracts for the provision of social services in the form of personal assistance, covered by Annex XIV thereto, for private non-profit organisations, even where they do not fulfil the conditions laid down in Article 77 thereof.

87 As regards, first, the principle of equal treatment of economic operators, the fact that profit-making entities are deprived of the possibility of participating in such procedures for the award of public contracts constitutes a difference in treatment between economic operators which is contrary to that principle, unless that difference is justified by objective considerations (see, by analogy, judgments of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 52, and of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others, C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56, paragraph 56).

88 In that regard, it is important to recall that a Member State may, in the exercise of the powers it retains to organise its social security system, consider that a social welfare system necessarily implies, with a view to attaining its objectives, that the admission of private operators to that system as providers of social welfare services is to be made subject to the condition that they are non-profit-making (judgments of 17 June 1997, Sodemare and Others, C-70/95, EU:C:1997:301, paragraph 32, and of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 58).

89 In the present case, it is clear from the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings and from the replies to the questions put by the Court that the contractual action agreements provided for by that legislation must comply, inter alia, with the principles of the good of the community and budgetary efficiency. In particular, first, the social services in the form of personal assistance which may be the subject of such agreements must be offered to everyone, in principle free of charge, and the amount of any additional charge which may be levied on users depends on their financial capacity. Second, the private non-profit organisations concerned by those agreements may obtain reimbursement only for the variable, fixed and permanent costs incurred providing the social services in the form of personal assistance which are the subject of those agreements since obtaining a commercial profit is expressly excluded.

90 Thus, the exclusive recourse to private non-profit organisations in order to ensure the provision of such social services is likely to be grounded both in the principles of universality and solidarity, which are inherent in a social welfare system, and in reasons of economic efficiency and suitability, in so far as it allows those services of general interest to be provided in an economically balanced manner for budgetary purposes, by entities constituted, essentially, for the purpose of public service and whose decisions are not guided, as the Spanish Government observes, by purely commercial considerations (see, by analogy, judgment of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others, C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56, paragraph 57).

91 Where it is motivated by such considerations, the exclusion of private profit-making entities from the procedures for the award of public contracts for the provision of such social services is not contrary to the principle of equality, provided that such exclusion actually contributes to the social purpose and the pursuit of the objectives of the good of the community and budgetary efficiency on which that system is based (see, by analogy, judgments of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 60, and of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others, C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56, paragraph 63).

92 In that regard, first, the Court has had occasion to state, with regard to public contracts to which Directive 2014/24 was not yet applicable, that, in order to meet those requirements, the private entities for which, under the legislation of the Member State concerned, such contracts are reserved may not pursue any objectives other than those mentioned in the previous paragraph nor make any profit, even indirectly, as a result of their services, apart from the reimbursement of the variable, fixed and permanent costs necessary to provide them. Nor may they procure any profit for their members. Moreover, the application of that legislation cannot be extended to cover the wrongful practices of those entities or their members. Thus, those entities must have recourse to a workforce only within the limits necessary for their proper functioning and in compliance with the requirements imposed on them by national legislation, since volunteers may be reimbursed only for expenditure actually incurred for the activity performed, within the limits laid down in advance by the private entities themselves (see, to that effect, judgments of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraphs 61 and 62, and of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others, C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56, paragraphs 64 and 65).

93 Second, it is also clear from the Court's case-law that the principle of equal treatment, which applies in connection with the freedom of establishment enshrined in Articles 49 to 55 TFEU, does not preclude a Member State from reserving the status of providers of social welfare services to non-profit-making private operators, including those which are not strictly voluntary (see, to that effect, judgment of 17 June 1997, Sodemare and Others, C-70/95, EU:C:1997:301, paragraphs 32 to 34).

94 That case-law remains relevant for the purposes of interpreting Article 76 of Directive 2014/24 which now expressly provides for a simplified regime for social public procurement.

95 It follows that the principle of equal treatment of economic operators, as now enshrined in Article 76 of Directive 2014/24, authorises Member States to reserve the right to participate in the procedure for the award of public contracts for the provision of social services in the form of personal assistance for private non-profit organisations, including those which are not strictly voluntary, provided that, first, any profits resulting from the performance of those contracts are reinvested by those entities with a view to achieving the social objective of general interest which they pursue and, second, all of the conditions recalled in paragraphs 90 and 91 of the present judgment are satisfied.

96 It should also be added, however, that Article 76 of Directive 2014/24 precludes such public contracts from being awarded directly, without being put out to competitive tender, to a not-for-profit entity, other than a voluntary entity (see, in the latter respect, judgment of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others, C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56, paragraph 70). To the contrary, that article requires that, before making such an award, the contracting authority must compare and rank the respective tenders of the various non-profit organisations which have expressed an interest, having regard in particular to the price of those tenders, even if that price is constituted, as in the present case, by the total costs which the contracting authority will have to reimburse.

97 Second, as regards the principle of transparency, that principle requires the contracting authority to provide an adequate degree of publicity allowing (i) the opening-up to competition and (ii) the review of the impartiality of the procurement procedure to enable any interested operator to take the decision to tender on the basis of all the relevant information, and to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. The obligation of transparency thus implies that all the conditions and detailed rules governing the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner so that (i) all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and (ii) the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the bids submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgments of 16 February 2012, Costa and Cifone, C-72/10 and C-77/10, EU:C:2012:80, paragraph 73, and of 4 April 2019, Allianz Vorsorgekasse, C-699/17, EU:C:2019:290, paragraphs 61 and 62 and the case-law cited).

98 In the present case, first, it does not appear from the documents before the Court that the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings fails to offer sufficient guarantees to protect private non-profit organisations from the risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority during the procedure for the award of a contractual action agreement.

99 Second, Article 75 of Directive 2014/24 specifies, in respect of procedures for the award of public contracts falling within the scope of the simplified regime established in Articles 74 to 77 thereof, the conditions regarding advertising required by the principle of transparency, as recalled in paragraph 97 of the present judgment.

100 In accordance with Article 75 of that directive, contracting authorities intending to award a public contract for the services referred to in Annex XIV to Directive 2014/24 must, in principle, make known their intention by means of a contract notice or a prior information notice which is to be published, in accordance with Article 51 thereof, by the Publications Office of the European Union or, where appropriate for prior information notices, on their buyer profile.

101 In the present case, as the Advocate General noted in point 116 of her Opinion, it would appear to follow from the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings that the contract notices to which it refers are published only in the Diari Oficial de la Generalitat Valenciana (Official Journal of the Valencia Regional Government). If that were the case, which it is for the referring court to ascertain, such publication would not constitute publicity in accordance with Article 75 of Directive 2014/24.

102 It follows from all of the foregoing considerations that Articles 76 and 77 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which reserves the right for private non-profit organisations to conclude, subject to a competitive bidding process, agreements under which those organisations provide social services in the form of personal assistance in return for reimbursement of the costs which they incur, irrespective of the estimated value of those services, even where those organisations do not satisfy the requirements laid down in Article 77, provided, first, that the legal and contractual framework within which the activity of those organisations is carried out contributes effectively to the social purpose and objectives of solidarity and budgetary efficiency on which that legislation is based and, second, that the principle of transparency, as specified in particular in Article 75 of that directive, is respected.

103 As a preliminary point, it must be observed that, under Article 64(3) of Law 5/1997, the establishment of private non-profit organisations in the place where the service is provided is one of the selection criteria which may be used by the contracting authority when concluding a contractual action agreement. Thus, and subject to verification by the referring court, it would appear that the contracting authority may require, on the basis of such a criterion, that, from the time of submission of their tenders, tenderers are located in the territory of the place concerned by the social services to be provided.

104 By its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 76 and 77 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that they allow, in the award of a public contract for social services referred to in Annex XIV thereto, the establishment of the economic operator in the place where the services are to be provided to be a criterion for the selection of economic operators, prior to the examination of their tenders.

105 In the first place, it must be recalled that, as pointed out in paragraph 84 of the present judgment, Article 76 of that directive requires that criterion of establishment to be compatible with the principle of equal treatment of economic operators.

106 Such a criterion creates a difference in treatment between economic operators depending on whether or not they have an establishment in the place where the social service concerned is provided. Since the situation of those operators is comparable with regard to the award of a public contract for a service referred to in Annex XIV to that directive, such a difference in treatment is compatible with the principle of equal treatment only in so far as it may be justified by a legitimate objective.

107 In the second place, it is apparent from the written observations submitted to the Court that the selection criterion based on the establishment of the economic operator in the place where the services are to be provided is intended, inter alia, to ensure the proximity and accessibility of the social services that are the subject of a contractual action agreement.

108 It is true that that objective constitutes a legitimate objective under EU law and, moreover, is recognised both in Article 1 of Protocol No 26 and in Article 76 of Directive 2014/24, the latter article requiring Member States, as recalled in paragraph 84 of the present judgment, to ensure that contracting authorities may take into account the need to ensure inter alia the accessibility and availability of the services referred to in Annex XIV thereto.

109 That said, a criterion, such as that in the present case, which requires that, from the time of submission of their tenders, tenderers are located in the territory of the place concerned by the social services to be provided, is clearly disproportionate to the attainment of such an objective (see, to that effect, judgment of 27 October 2005, Contse and Others, C-234/03, EU:C:2005:644, paragraph 43). Even if the establishment of the economic operator in the territory of the place where it is called upon to provide the social services concerned is necessary in order to guarantee the proximity and accessibility of those services, such an objective could, in any event, be attained just as effectively by requiring that that economic operator satisfies that condition only at the stage of performance of the public contract in question.

110 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the third question referred for a preliminary ruling must be that Article 76 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which, in the award of a public contract for social services referred to in Annex XIV to that directive, the location of the economic operator in the place where the services are to be provided is a criterion for the selection of economic operators, prior to the examination of their tenders.

Costs

111 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Articles 76 and 77 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which reserves the right for private non-profit organisations to conclude, subject to a competitive bidding process, agreements under which those organisations provide social services in the form of personal assistance in return for reimbursement of the costs which they incur, irrespective of the estimated value of those services, even where those organisations do not satisfy the requirements laid down in Article 77, provided, first, that the legal and contractual framework within which the activity of those organisations is carried out contributes effectively to the social purpose and objectives of solidarity and budgetary efficiency on which that legislation is based and, second, that the principle of transparency, as specified in particular in Article 75 of that directive, is respected.

2. Article 76 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which, in the award of a public contract for social services referred to in Annex XIV thereto, the location of the economic operator in the place where the services are to be provided is a criterion for the selection of economic operators, prior to the examination of their tenders.

IV. Conclusion

1. The Asociación Estatal de Entidades de Servicios de Atención a Domicilio (State Association of Domiciliary Care Providers, ‘ASADE’, Spain) is a trade association for private undertakings. It is seeking before the referring court – the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de la Comunidad Valenciana (High Court of Justice of the Community of Valencia, Spain) – the annulment of Decree 181/2017 (2) adopted by the Comunitat Valenciana (Autonomous Community of Valencia, Spain), in so far as that decree prevents profit-making entities from entering into ‘contractual action agreements’ with public authorities. (3)

2. Under those agreements, public authorities entrust the management of certain social services to social initiative entities. In so doing, they are not required to follow the procedures laid down in EU public procurement legislation. However, because of Decree 181/2017, only private non-profit organisations may enter into those agreements in order to provide social services, which may include assistance to children, adolescents, young people, the elderly, the disabled, migrants, women in vulnerable situations, and members of the LGBTI (4) and Roma communities (‘the services at issue’). (5)

3. It is in that context that the Court is being asked, in essence, to clarify whether EU law, and, in particular, Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, Articles 74, 76 and 77 of Directive 2014/24/EU, (6) and Article 15(2) of Directive 2006/123/EC (7) (‘the Services Directive’), precludes national legislation that excludes profit-making entities from entering into contractual action agreements with public authorities in order to provide social services, whilst allowing non-profit organisations to conclude such agreements.

4. The complexity of the topic and the technical nature of the applicable rules, arising from various EU law instruments, should not conceal the undoubted importance of this question, since the Court is called upon to establish the relationship between economic activity and social matters, as well as that between EU law and national law.

5. In that regard, it is worth quoting Advocate General Tesauro, who more than 20 years ago stressed the fact that the social security sector does not constitute 'an island beyond the reach of [EU] law'. (8) That was true back then and it is all the more so now. While Member States remain autonomous as regards the organisation of their social security systems, that autonomy does not prevent the application of the fundamental freedoms laid down in the Treaties, (9) of which public procurement rules are parts and parcel. (10)

I. Legal framework

A. European Union law

1. Directive 2014/24

6. Directive 2014/24 lays down rules that seek to coordinate national procedures for the award of public contracts above a certain threshold amount so that they may be consistent with the principle of the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, as well as ensuring the implementation of principles, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, proportionality and transparency. That directive is also intended to ensure effective competition in public procurement.

7. Recitals 1 and 6 of Directive 2014/24 state:

'(1) The award of public contracts by or on behalf of Member States' authorities has to comply with the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and in particular the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, provisions should be drawn up coordinating national procurement procedures so as to ensure that those principles are given practical effect and public procurement is opened up to competition.

(6) It is also appropriate to recall that this Directive should not affect the social security legislation of the Member States. Nor should it deal with the liberalisation of services of general economic interest, reserved to public or private entities, or with the privatisation of public entities providing services.

It should equally be recalled that Member States are free to organise the provision of compulsory social services or of other services such as postal services either as services of general economic interest or as non-economic services of general interest or as a mixture thereof. It is appropriate to clarify that non-economic services of general interest should not fall within the scope of this Directive.'

8. Recital 114 of that directive clarifies the reasons for a specific simplified regime regarding certain services to the person, such as certain social health and educational services, and recital 118 thereof explains the regime concerning reserved contracts for services listed in Article 77(1) of the same directive.

9. Under Title I of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Scope, definitions and general principles', Article 1(1), (2), (4) and (5) provides:

'1. This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4.

2. Procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a public contract of … services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the … services are intended for a public purpose.

4. This Directive does not affect the freedom of Member States to define, in conformity with Union law, what they consider to be services of general economic interest, how those services should be organised and financed, in compliance with the State aid rules, and what specific obligations they should be subject to. Equally, this Directive does not affect the decision of public authorities whether, how and to what extent they wish to perform public functions themselves pursuant to Article 14 TFEU and Protocol No 26.

5. This Directive does not affect the way in which the Member States organise their social security systems.'

10. Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 defines 'public contracts' as 'contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services'.

11. Article 2(1)(10) of that directive defines 'economic operator' as 'any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities, including any temporary association of undertakings, which offers the execution of works and/or a work; the supply of products or the provision of services on the market'.

12. Article 4 of the same directive, headed 'Threshold amounts', provides:

'This Directive shall apply to procurements with a value net of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than the following thresholds:

(d) EUR 750 000 for public service contracts for social and other specific services listed in Annex XIV.'

13. Article 20 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Reserved contracts', states:

'1. Member States may reserve the right to participate in public procurement procedures to sheltered workshops and economic operators whose main aim is the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons or may provide for such contracts to be performed in the context of sheltered employment programmes, provided that at least 30% of the employees of those workshops, economic operators or programmes are disabled or disadvantaged workers.

14. Title III of the directive, headed 'Particular Procurement Regimes', includes a Chapter I comprising Articles 74 to 77. Those articles contain provisions regarding the simplified regime, which is applicable to 'social and other specific services'.

15. Article 74 of Directive 2014/24, headed 'Award of contracts for social and other specific services', states:

'Public contracts for social and other specific services listed in Annex XIV shall be awarded in accordance with this Chapter, where the value of the contracts is equal to or greater than the threshold indicated in point (d) of Article 4.'

16. Article 75 of that directive, headed 'Publication of notices', provides for conditions concerning the publication of notices for the award of the public contracts referred to in Article 74.

17. Article 76 of Directive 2014/24, headed ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

‘1. Member States shall put in place national rules for the award of contracts subject to this Chapter in order to ensure contracting authorities comply with the principles of transparency and equal treatment of economic operators. Member States are free to determine the procedural rules applicable as long as such rules allow contracting authorities to take into account the specificities of the services in question.

2. Member States shall ensure that contracting authorities may take into account the need to ensure quality, continuity, accessibility, affordability, availability and comprehensiveness of the services, the specific needs of different categories of users, including disadvantaged and vulnerable groups, the involvement and empowerment of users and innovation. Member States may also provide that the choice of the service provider shall be made on the basis of the tender presenting the best price-quality ratio, taking into account quality and sustainability criteria for social services.’

18. Article 77(1) of Directive 2014/24, headed ‘Reserved contracts for certain services’, states that Member States may provide that contracting authorities may reserve the right for organisations to participate in procedures for the award of public contracts exclusively for those health, social and cultural services referred to in Article 74 falling within the CPV codes listed in that article. (11) Article 77(2) of that directive sets out the conditions which those organisations must satisfy in order to participate in reserved contracts. Pursuant to Article 77(3) of Directive 2014/24, the maximum duration of the contract is not to be longer than three years.

19. Annex XIV to Directive 2014/24 contains a list of services referred to in Article 74.

2. The Services Directive

20. Recital 27 of the Services Directive is worded as follows:

‘This Directive should not cover those social services in the areas of housing, childcare and support to families and persons in need which are provided by the State at national, regional or local level by providers mandated by the State or by charities recognised as such by the State with the objective of ensuring support for those who are permanently or temporarily in a particular state of need because of their insufficient family income or total or partial lack of independence and for those who risk being marginalised. These services are essential in order to guarantee the fundamental right to human dignity and integrity and are a manifestation of the principles of social cohesion and solidarity and should not be affected by this Directive.’

21. Article 2 of that directive provides:

‘1. This Directive shall apply to services supplied by providers established in a Member State.

2. This Directive shall not apply to the following activities:

(j) social services relating to social housing, childcare and support of families and persons permanently or temporarily in need which are provided by the State, by providers mandated by the State or by charities recognised as such by the State;

…’

B. Spanish law

22. By virtue of the powers conferred on it in respect of social services by the Spanish Constitution, the Community of Valencia passed Law 5/1997. Account must be taken of Articles 44*bis*, 53, 56, 62, 63, 64, 66, 67 and 68 of Law 5/1997.

23. Decree 181/2017 implements Law 5/1997 and is the subject of the main proceedings. Although Law 5/1997 was repealed by Law 3/2019, (12) under the latter law, Decree 181/2017 remains in force.

Account must be taken of Articles 3, 6, 11, 13, 15, 17, 19, and 21 to 26 of Decree 181/2017, which implement the rules laid down by Law 5/1997.

II. Facts, procedure and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

24. ASADE brought an action before the referring court seeking both the annulment of Decree 181/2017 and the setting aside of certain provisions of Law 5/1997. (13) In its view, Decree 181/2017 is unlawful as it excludes profit-making entities from providing public services under a public-private contractual action agreement, whilst allowing non-profit organisations – not solely voluntary associations – (14) to provide such services in return for payment without those organisations having to go through a transparent competitive process that ensures equal treatment.

25. ASADE argues that Decree 181/2017 and certain provisions of Law 5/1997 are contrary to, first, the freedom of establishment enshrined in Article 49 TFEU, second, Directive 2014/24, in that those norms do not respect the principle of equal treatment between economic operators, and, third, Article 15(2) of the Services Directive. Moreover, in its view, the restriction on freedom of establishment brought about by the national legislation at issue is not justified on grounds of public interest. ASADE observes that the national legislation at issue is not confined to the areas of health and social security, but covers all types of social services and applies to all non-profit organisations and not solely to voluntary associations. (15) In its submission, this means that the exceptions to the application of EU public procurement rules that were established in the Court's case-law (16) are not applicable to the case at hand.

26. For its part, the defendant, the Consejería de Igualdad y Políticas Inclusivas de la Generalitat Valenciana (Department for Equality and Inclusive Policies of the Valencia Regional Government, Spain), considers that both Law 5/1997 and Decree 181/2017 comply with Directive 2014/24 and the Services Directive.

27. First, the defendant argues that the Court has already allowed exceptions to be made to the principle of free competition in the case of contracts concluded with non-profit organisations in relation to the social security system, given that social and health services display a number of characteristics that require them to be treated differently as regards public procurement rules. (17)

28. Second, the defendant contends that, in accordance with the principle of budgetary efficiency, contractual action agreements offer an alternative to the direct or indirect management of non-economic public services, which are provided by non-profit organisations which receive payment in the form of reimbursement of costs, which does not entail any business profit. It also considers that contractual action agreements do not infringe the Services Directive, since the latter does not apply to non-economic services of general interest or to social services relating to social housing, childcare and support to families and persons permanently or temporarily in need which are provided by the State or by charities recognised as such by the State.

29. Third, the defendant takes the view that the request for a preliminary ruling is baseless, since Law 5/1997 has been repealed by Law 3/2019.

30. The referring court's doubts derive in particular from two judgments of the Court, namely in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and in Piepenbrock. (18) In those two judgments, the Court defined the concept of 'contract for pecuniary interest' as also including contracts for which the agreed remuneration is limited to reimbursement of the costs of providing the agreed service. The referring court therefore asks whether the recourse to contractual action agreements, as governed by Law 5/1997, as amended by Law 13/2016, (19) complies with Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, Articles 76 and 77 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 74 thereof and Annex XIV thereto and Article 15(2) of the Services Directive.

31. In those circumstances, the referring court decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 49 TFEU and Articles 76 and 77 of [Directive 2014/24] (as read with Article 74 [thereof] and Annex [XIV thereto]) be interpreted as precluding national legislation which permits contracting authorities to make use of agreements with private non-profit organisations – not solely voluntary associations – to provide all manner of social services to the person in return for reimbursement of costs without following the procedures in [Directive 2014/24] and irrespective of the estimated value, simply by classifying the arrangements in question as non-contractual?

(2) If the reply is in the negative, meaning that such arrangements are possible, must Article 49 TFEU and Articles 76 and 77 of [Directive 2014/24] (as read with Article 74 [thereof] and Annex [XIV thereto]) be interpreted as permitting contracting authorities to make use of agreements with private non-profit organisations (not solely voluntary associations) to provide all manner of social services to the person in return for reimbursement of costs without following the procedures in the directive and irrespective of the estimated value, simply by classifying the arrangements in question as non-contractual, where, moreover, the national legislation in question does not expressly include the requirements established in Article 77 of the directive, but refers to subsequent implementation through regulations without expressly stipulating, among the requirements to be satisfied by the implementing regulations, that they must explicitly include the conditions laid down in Article 77 of the directive?

(3) If the reply is, again, in the negative, meaning that such a situation is possible, must Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, Articles 76 and 77 of [Directive 2014/24] (as read with Article 74 [thereof] and Annex XIV [thereto]) and Article 15(2) of [the Services Directive] be interpreted as permitting contracting authorities, when selecting non-profit organisations (not solely voluntary associations) with which to enter into agreements to provide all manner of social services to the person, to include not only the selection criteria set out in Article 2(2)(j) of the said directive but also the criterion that the organisation be established in the place where the service is to be provided?’

32. Written observations were submitted by the applicant, the defendant, the Spanish, Italian and Norwegian Governments, as well as the European Commission. Having decided to give judgment without holding a hearing, the Court put a number of questions, to be answered in writing, to the parties and interested persons referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union, to which the applicant, the defendant, the Spanish and Netherlands Governments, as well as the Commission, replied.

III. Analysis

A. Preliminary remarks

33. At the outset, I take the view that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, in so far as they relate to Law 5/1997, are admissible. The referring court has clearly stated that the lawfulness of Decree 181/2017 can be assessed only by examining the compatibility with EU law provisions of its legal basis, that is, Law 5/1997. It was asked to rule on the lawfulness of Decree 181/2017 at the time when it was adopted. The national court states in its order for reference that at that time, Law 5/1997, as amended by Law 13/2016, was still in force. Therefore, the plea of inadmissibility put forward by the defendant should be rejected.

34. Second, I shall deal with the Italian Government’s criticism that the request for a preliminary ruling does not specify the types of social services which may be the subject of contractual action agreements at issue in the national proceedings.

35. According to settled case-law, it is essential that the national court gives, at the very least, some explanation of the reasons for the choice of the EU law provisions which it seeks to have interpreted and some explanation of the link it establishes between those provisions and the national legislation applicable to the proceedings pending before it. (20)

36. I acknowledge that this request for a preliminary ruling does not list the specific social services in question and that it is unfortunate that such information is lacking. However, it is clear from the legal framework laid out in the order for reference and from the wording of the questions referred that, in essence, it may involve 'all manner of social services'. Therefore, in my view, the referring court has sufficiently explained the legislative context of its request for an interpretation of EU law.

37. Third, I take the view that, in so far as the questions referred for a preliminary ruling relate to Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, they must be held admissible. It is true that it is not apparent from the order for reference whether the dispute in the main proceedings has any cross-border dimension.

38. However, it seems to me that the reference at issue is in exactly the same situation as that in 'Libert and Others', (21) to which the Court referred in paragraph 51 of the Ullens de Schooten judgment. (22) In that paragraph, the Court held that a reference for a preliminary ruling may be declared admissible in a purely internal situation where 'the referring court makes a request for a preliminary ruling in proceedings for the annulment of provisions which apply not only to its own nationals but also to those of other Member States'. (23) That appears to be the case in the main proceedings, given that ASADE brought an action seeking annulment of Decree 181/2017, which applies not only to nationals of its own country, but also to those of other Member States.

39. In my opinion, it follows that, to the extent that those questions relate to the abovementioned Treaty provisions, they should be declared admissible.

B. The first and the second questions

40. By its first two questions, which should be examined together as they concern the same issue, the referring court is asking, in essence, whether Article 49 TFEU and Articles 74, 76 and 77 of Directive 2014/24 are to be interpreted as allowing a public authority to conclude, without complying with the procedural requirements imposed by EU law, agreements solely with private non-profit organisations, under which that authority entrusts those entities with certain social services in return for reimbursement of the costs incurred by those organisations in respect of the provision of those services.

41. Answering those questions is like venturing through a labyrinth of different legal problems. To make it easier, I will break it down into four separate issues. As a preliminary point, it is necessary to establish the nature of the social services at issue in the main proceedings in order to determine whether they are to be classified as 'economic activities' under the EU public procurement rules. Next, I shall analyse the conditions of applicability of Directive 2014/24. Then, I shall turn to examining the 'simplified regime' laid out in Articles 74 to 77 of that directive and, lastly, the rules of freedom of establishment enshrined in Article 49 TFEU.

42. However, before examining those questions, I would like to make the following two observations. First, by mentioning Article 49 TFEU in the questions referred, the national court considers that the current case comes within the scope of freedom of establishment rather than that of freedom to provide services.

43. In my opinion, that assumption is correct, since it is settled case-law that the provision of services is to be distinguished from establishment in that the latter involves an activity that is stable and permanent, whilst the former involves an activity of a temporary nature. (24) It seems to me that the provision of the social services at issue in the main proceedings requires such stability and that such activities may thus fall within the scope of freedom of establishment.

44. Second, since the referring court refers to Directive 2014/24, there appears to be an assumption that the contractual action agreements at issue are not concession contracts regulated by Directive 2014/23/EU. (25) A service concession is a contract of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right together with payment. Service concession implies a transfer by the public authority to the concessionaire of an operating risk in exploiting those services. (26) While the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings does not preclude users from having to pay in part for the social services that are the subject of those agreements, (27) it does not appear that such a transfer took place under that legislation. (28)I therefore take the view that the contractual action agreements at issue do not fall within the scope of Directive 2014/23.

45. Thus, on the basis of the questions referred, I shall address the questions by reference to Directive 2014/24 or the provisions on freedom of establishment contained in the FEU Treaty.

1. The nature of the social services at issue

46. At the outset, I would like to point out that the principal objective of the EU rules on public procurement, and notably Directive 2014/24, is the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services. (29) As that directive is designed to implement the provisions of the FEU Treaty relating to those freedoms, (30) the social services at issue in the main proceedings necessarily fall within the material scope of the same fundamental freedoms.

47. It follows that, if the social services that are the subject of the contractual action agreements at issue were to be regarded as non-economic activities within the meaning of those Treaty provisions, those agreements would also be excluded from the scope of Directive 2014/24, since the latter may not extend the scope of the fundamental freedoms that it seeks to implement. (31)

48. Moreover, it is apparent from the wording of Article 1(4) and of recital 6 of Directive 2014/24 that Member States are free to define their ‘services of general economic interest’ and that ‘non-economic services of general interest’ do not fall within the scope of that directive. At the same time, it should be noted that Directive 2014/24 does not specifically define the terms ‘non-economic services’ and ‘services of general economic interest’.

49. I therefore take the view that, for the purposes of applying Directive 2014/24, the concepts of ‘economic activity’ and ‘non-economic services of general interest’ set out therein must be interpreted in the light of the case-law of the Court concerning freedom of establishment and free movement of services as provided for by the FEU Treaty. (32)

50. While the first two questions referred mention only Article 49 TFEU – and not Article 56 TFEU – the concepts of ‘services’ and ‘economic activity’ are largely defined by the latter Treaty provision. There exists no simple criterion for distinguishing between the two freedoms, although the distinction appears to lie in the temporary nature of the activities. (33) On account of the grey area between these two freedoms and as together they form the basis of Directive 2014/24, in the analysis of the first and second questions, reference is made in the present Opinion not only to freedom of establishment, but also to freedom to provide services.

51. In that context, the concepts of ‘economic activity’ and ‘non-economic services of general interest’ each determine whether a particular activity falls within or outside the scope of EU legislation. (34) It should also be pointed out that such a determination is not an exact science. Nevertheless, there is a common starting point for defining those concepts. Indeed, as the concept of ‘economic activity’ defines the scope of the fundamental freedoms laid down in the FEU Treaty, it is not to be interpreted restrictively. (35)

52. As public procurement rules under EU law were initially developed in the context of fundamental freedoms, and while I acknowledge that there is some overlap between those freedoms and other areas of law – namely competition law or State aid – (36) the concepts of ‘services of general interest’ and ‘economic activity’ used in the context of fundamental freedoms tend to vary from the ones developed in competition law. (37) Thus, according to the case-law concerning freedom of establishment, it is the provision of services for remuneration that must be regarded as an economic activity. (38)

53. Moreover, the essential characteristic of remuneration lies in the fact that it constitutes consideration for the service in question, (39) that is to say, ‘the activity must not be provided for nothing’. (40) Therefore, I stress that the decisive factor, which brings an activity within the scope of the FEU Treaty relating to fundamental freedoms, is its economic character, irrespective of who pays for the service – whether it is the user or the Member State. (41) The Court has held, for example, that the fact that the State is involved in financing medical benefits does not mean that a medical activity is not to be classified as a service. (42)

54. Taking into account the broad definition of the concept of 'economic activity' under fundamental freedoms, the Court did not hesitate, for example, in classifying as services, within the meaning of Directive 2004/18/EC, (43) contractual agreements relating to medical transport, even where the contracting authority concluded those agreements with voluntary associations, and those agreements were based on the principle of solidarity. (44) Moreover, the fact that the activity is carried out on a non-profit basis by a private partner such as a social solidarity institution does not prevent it from being classified as an economic activity. (45)

55. In the present case, the Annex to Decree 181/2017 lists the services that can be the subject of the contractual action agreements at issue. (46) As mentioned earlier in this Opinion, the services at issue may include services to children, adolescents, young people, the elderly, the disabled, migrants, women in distress and for persons falling under the 'Equality in diversity' category (LGBTI and Roma). (47)

56. In terms of the content of the services at issue, it must be borne in mind that the activities provided under contractual action agreements include a broad range of different activities, (48) comprising, for example, housing services, day-centres, residential care and receiving persons, supporting persons in difficulty, providing financial support and even programmes which consist in executing judicial measures. To name but a few examples, the services include providing facilities for the reception of minors who are under the care or guardianship of regional authorities; centres for the enforcement of judicial measures regarding minors; support for the emancipation and personal autonomy of young people who were under guardianship and have reached their majority; programmes of judicial measures for minors; places for family meetings; interventions in host families for minors; measures intended for adoption and adoptive families, day centres for minors in vulnerable situations; housing and subsistence services for young people; occupational centres for young people; residential care and day-centres for the elderly; social housing for the elderly; and centres for women exposed to the risk of social exclusion and reception centres for female victims of violence.

57. However, it is for the referring court to verify whether the services at issue are offered in return for remuneration, and thus constitute an 'economic activity' within the meaning of the case-law cited above.

58. In that regard, it seems to me that the beneficiaries of the services which are the subject of the contractual action agreements do not usually pay for the provision of those services, except in exceptional cases in which they may be required to pay a fee previously approved by the contracting authority. (49) Nevertheless, as the economic nature of an activity does not depend on whether the service is paid for by the users or by the contracting authority, (50) and as, under the national legislation at issue, such payment takes place, (51) those services can be regarded as an 'economic activity' under Article 49 TFEU. It also follows that the legal nature and the solidarity mechanism implemented by the entities providing the services at issue are immaterial. (52)

59. I shall therefore proceed on the basis that at least some of the services that are the subject of the contractual action agreements at issue could be regarded as constituting an 'economic activity' if these services were in fact to be offered in return for remuneration, even if that remuneration is not paid directly by the users of the service, but by the public authorities.

60. For the sake of completeness, one should examine whether the services at issue fall within the scope of the concept of 'exercise of official authority' within the meaning of Article 51 TFEU, as that constitutes a derogation from Article 49 TFEU. Although, in the questions referred, the national court has not expressly inquired about the exception provided for in the first paragraph of Article 51 TFEU, it cannot be ruled out that some of these activities may fall within the scope of the concept of 'exercise of official authority' within the meaning of that provision. For example, it appears that the Annex to Decree 181/2017 contains certain activities, such as the enforcement of court judgments by the social initiative entities under contractual action agreements.

61. The concept of 'exercise of official authority' is to be interpreted restrictively, since it is an exception to freedom of establishment. (53) That exception is restricted to activities which in themselves are directly and specifically connected with the exercise of official authority. (54) Moreover, it does not extend to certain activities that are ancillary or preparatory to the exercise of official authority, (55) or to certain activities whose exercise, although involving contacts, even regular and organic, with the administrative or judicial authorities, or indeed cooperation, even compulsory, in their functioning, leaves their discretionary and decision-making powers intact. (56) Neither does it cover certain activities, which do not involve the exercise of decision-making powers, (57) powers of enforcement (58) or powers of coercion. (59)

62. In any case, it is for the referring court, and not for the Court, to ascertain the specific nature of the activities entrusted to such entities by way of contractual action agreements, and to determine whether some of those activities might involve a direct and specific connection with the exercise of official authority. If that is the case, those activities are not of an economic nature.

63. Once it is established, taking the nature of the activities at issue into account, that a specific activity constitutes an 'economic activity' within the meaning of Article 49 TFEU and Directive 2014/24, the next step is to determine whether the lex specialis of public procurement rules – Directive 2014/24 – is applicable to the national legislation at issue.

2. The conditions of applicability of Directive 2014/24

64. The application of Directive 2014/24 is subject to a number of conditions. First, the process established by national legislation must fall within the scope of the concept of 'procurement' for the purposes of Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/24. Second, the contractual action agreements at issue have to fall within the scope of the concept of 'public contract' defined in Article 2(1)(5) of that directive. Third, those agreements have to be equal or to exceed the threshold value laid out in Article 4(d) of that directive. I shall address each of those conditions in turn.

(a) The concept of 'procurement'

65. According to Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/24, that directive applies to 'procurement', which is defined as the acquisition by means of a public contract, inter alia, of services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the services are intended for a public purpose.

66. It follows from that definition that procurement entails, inter alia, a choice of one or more economic operators by one or more contracting authorities. Conversely, the mere fact of financing social services or granting licences or authorisations to all economic operators fulfilling the conditions predefined by the contracting authority, without setting limits or quotas, does not constitute procurement within the meaning of Article 1(2) of that directive. (60)

67. The issue of choice was first addressed in Falk Pharma. (61) In that case concerning Directive 2004/18, the Court ruled that where the contracting authority does not designate an economic operator to whom contractual exclusivity is to be awarded, this means that there is no need to control the action of that contracting authority so that it complies with the detailed rules laid down in that directive. (62) The Court therefore emphasised that the choice of a tender and, thus, of a successful tenderer, is intrinsically linked to the regulation of public contracts by that directive. (63)

68. Following that judgment, the Court held in Tirkkonen (64) that, when the contracting authority has not referred to any award criteria for the purpose of comparing and classifying admissible tenders, there cannot be a public contract within the meaning of that directive. (65) It was held that 'a farm advisory scheme … through which a public entity accepts all the economic operators who meet the suitability requirements set out in the invitation to tender and who pass the examination referred to in that invitation to tender, even if no new operator can be admitted during the limited validity period of that scheme, does not constitute a public contract within the meaning of that directive'. (66)

69. That being said, it seems to me that the criterion of choice as defined in the aforementioned judgments in Falk Pharma and Tirkkonen may lead to a dubious situation where the Member States can exclude certain procedures from the application of Directive 2014/24 by eliminating 'choice' as defined in those judgments. As some critics have pointed out – and I tend to agree with them – the restrictive approach adopted by the Court in those judgments could, inter alia, discourage Member States from applying Directive 2014/24 and jeopardise the effectiveness of rules of EU public procurement law. (67) For example, a contracting authority need only include in the tender a tailor-made clause that can be met only by a number of specific operators and to provide that all the economic operators that comply with that clause will be chosen, in order to undermine the effectiveness of those rules.

70. I should also add that those judgments blur the line between, on the one hand, the criterion of choice within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/24, and, on the other, the selection and award criteria provided for in the same directive. (68) On the face of it, I find it doubtful that a single element is both a criterion of applicability of Directive 2014/24 and a condition that must be met by tenderers under that directive. (69) I therefore advise the Court not to follow that line of case-law. Instead, the Court should give the term 'procurement' a broader definition encompassing procedures which involve awarding contracts to certain service providers, whilst excluding others for a certain period of time.

71. Should the Court decide, however, to follow that line of case-law, it is unclear, in the present case, whether, in a similar vein to the aforementioned judgments, the national legislation at issue provides for a system whereby the contracting authorities grant an 'authorisation' and users of the relevant services choose between the entities providing such services, or whether the choice ultimately lies with the contracting authorities. (70)

72. Decree 181/2017 appears to provide for a call for tenders that must establish a minimum score and the criteria for selecting entities for the adoption of the contractual action agreements; (71) tenders are to be examined by the evaluation committee. (72) The decision concerning successful social entities, (73) who can then conclude binding agreements for the provision of social services, is published in the Diari Oficial de la Generalitat Valenciana. (74) However, it is not clear to me whether there is a limited number of successful entities who are awarded an 'authorisation', in the sense of Falk Pharma, or whether there is a limited number of entities actually chosen by the contracting authorities. Moreover, the criteria for selection laid down in Article 64(2) and (3) of Law 5/1997 would appear to come within the scope of the concept of choice, and thus constitute 'procurement' within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/24. In any case, it is for the national court to determine whether the actual choice has been shifted to users of the services at issue or whether it is made by the contracting authorities themselves. Nevertheless, for the reasons set out in this Opinion, (75) I consider that the applicability of Directive 2014/24 should not be made contingent on the way in which Member States choose successful entities, but rather on the subject matter of contracts.

73. Nonetheless, I must stress once again that it is for the referring court to establish whether the contractual action agreements at issue are subject to choice per se within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/24.

(b) The characteristics of a public contract

74. The existence of a public contract is a substantive condition for the applicability of Directive 2014/24. Under Article 2(1)(5) of that directive, a 'public contract' is a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between an economic operator and one or more contracting authorities and having as its object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services.

75. Based on that definition, apart from the obvious requirement that such a contract be in written format, which clearly is not an issue in the present case, (76) the main characteristics of a public contract are as follows: the existence of a contract for pecuniary interest, concluded between an economic operator and one or more contracting authorities, the object of which is the provision of services.

(1) A contract concluded for pecuniary interest

76. At the outset, it should be borne in mind that the definition of a public contract is a matter of EU law and that, for the purposes of determining the scope of Directive 2014/24, the decisive factor is neither how the contract at issue is classified under national legislation, nor the intentions of the national legislature, nor those of the parties. The classification of the agreements at issue is governed by the rules set out in that directive. (77) It is therefore irrelevant, in my opinion, that Article 62(1) of Law 5/1997 and Article 3(c) of Decree 181/2017 classify the contractual action agreement as 'non-contractual'. (78)

77. As to the meaning of the phrase 'for pecuniary interest', the Court has already held that it designates a contract under which each of the parties undertakes to provide one form of consideration in exchange for another. (79) As the provision of a service may be compensated by different forms of consideration, such as reimbursement of the expenditure incurred in providing the agreed service, (80) the fact remains that the reciprocal nature of a public contract necessarily results in the creation of legally binding obligations on both parties to the contract, the performance of which must be legally enforceable. The synallagmatic nature of the contract is thus an essential element of a public contract. (81)

78. In the present case, first, as regards the reciprocal nature of the public contract, it follows from the definitions set out in Article 3 and Articles 21 to 26 of Decree 181/2017 that the documents that can be adopted by the parties may constitute formal agreements. Moreover, it can be inferred from Article 65(2) of Law 5/1997 that the contractual action agreements give rise to obligations for the entities providing the services in question, which are specifically defined in Titles IV and V of that decree. Article 66(2) of that law and Article 22(1) of Decree 181/2017 establish the rates and the reimbursement mechanisms of those entities. Article 26 of Decree 181/2017 provides for a system of judicial remedies, and Title V thereof includes a list of obligations concerning the execution of the services. Based on those elements, I am inclined to take the view that the contractual action agreements establish a relationship of a synallagmatic nature. (82)

79. Second, as regards the concept of pecuniary interest, Article 22(2) of Decree 181/2017 provides that the contracting authority is to pay, at the most, the variable, fixed and permanent costs of the services at issue, without including any commercial profit for that entity. Although the users of the services at issue do not usually pay for the provision of those services, except in exceptional cases where they may be required to pay a fee previously authorised, (83) the entities in question are reimbursed for the costs of the services. In that regard, the Court has already stated that a contract cannot fall outside the scope of that concept merely because the remuneration remains limited to reimbursement of the expenditure incurred in providing the service. In other words, a mere cost-covering remuneration fulfils the 'pecuniary interest' criterion for the purposes of the public procurement directives. (84) It follows that the role of the national court is simply to ensure that a value is provided, but not to consider the adequacy of the consideration. The lack of profit for the entities providing the services is thus irrelevant for the purposes of establishing the existence of pecuniary interest.

80. It follows that, in the present case, there is a quid pro quo under the contractual action agreements at issue since, on the one hand, the entities provide social services to individuals under the conditions defined by the public authority and, on the other hand, those entities receive remuneration in return in the form of a reimbursement of costs by the public authority. I conclude that the criterion of the existence of a contract for pecuniary interest is fulfilled in the present case.

(2) A contract concluded between an economic operator and one or more contracting authorities

81. It is important to emphasise that the concepts of 'economic operator' and 'contracting authorities' are both very broad under Directive 2014/24 and in the case-law relating to public procurement rules. In my opinion, the latter concept is clearly not an issue in the present case, since the contractual action agreements are concluded by the authorities of the Valencia Region. (85)

82. As regards the concept of 'economic operator', under Article 2(1)(10) of Directive 2014/24, it encompasses any entity, regardless of its nature, offering, inter alia, the provision of services on the market. That definition reflects the case-law whereby, for the purposes of EU public procurement rules, it is irrelevant what the entity is, the emphasis being instead on what it does. (86)

83. In the present case, the national legislation at issue applies to 'social initiative entities', which are defined in Article 3(e) of Decree 181/2017 as foundations, associations, voluntary organisations and other non-profit entities carrying out social service activities. This definition also covers cooperative societies classified as non-profit-making organisations in accordance with the specific legislation thereon. (87) According to settled case-law, the fact that the contracting partner of the contracting authority is a non-profit association, is not an issue. (88)

84. Accordingly, I conclude that the condition relating to a contract between an economic operator and one or more contracting authorities is met.

(3) A contract for the provision of services

85. The condition relating to the 'contract for the provision of services' relates to the ratione materiae of the contract and requires the identification of its purpose.

86. Article 6(2) of Decree 181/2017 defines the services that can be provided under the terms of the contractual action agreements at issue, which are listed in annex to that decree. As mentioned in point 57 above, the referring court must first verify whether those services involve an 'economic activity' and fall accordingly within the scope of the fundamental freedoms and that of Directive 2014/24. (89)

87. The defendant and the Spanish Government have placed considerable emphasis on the fact that Article 1(5) of Directive 2014/24 expressly states that that directive does not affect the way in which the Member States organise their social security systems, and that recital 6 of the same directive states that 'non-economic services of general interest should not fall within the scope' of that directive. However, I take the view that, in the present case, the freedom of the Member States to decide how public funds are to be allocated is not directly called into question. When a public authority decides to conduct a procurement procedure within in the meaning of Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/24, and conclude a public contract within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) thereof, the latter falls within the scope of that directive, and, the public procurement rules laid down in that directive must therefore be applied.

88. If that is the case, Directive 2014/24 contains specific provisions relating to social and other specific services, which are listed in Annex XIV to that directive. That list includes several CPV codes, which come under the simplified regime laid down in Articles 74 to 76 of Directive 2014/24. That annex specifies in a footnote that compulsory social security services, under CPV 75300000-9, 'are not covered by that directive where they are organised as non-economic services of general interest'. (90)

89. From the information before the Court, it is not clear whether the services at issue are on that list or amongst the compulsory social services that the Member States can exclude from the scope of Directive 2014/24. The written questions put to the parties did not resolve this conundrum.

90. I therefore take the view that the referring court has to carry out the necessary checks and compare the list annexed to Decree 181/2017 and the list contained in Annex XIV to Directive 2014/24. (91) If the services listed in the Annex to Decree 181/2017 are covered by the CPV codes contained in Annex XIV to that directive, with the exception of the abovementioned compulsory social security services, those listed services fall under the scope of the 'simplified regime' laid down in Articles 74 to 76 of Directive 2014/24. In the analysis that follows, I shall assume that some of the services at issue are covered by that regime. Since the procedures, parties and the subject matter have been defined, I shall turn to an examination of whether the contractual action agreements at issue exceed the amount of the thresholds set out in Directive 2014/24.

(c) The threshold criteria

91. The threshold for service contracts relating to social services and other specific services listed in Annex XIV to Directive 2014/24 that are subject to the 'simplified regime' laid down in Articles 74 to 76 of the same directive is set out in Article 4(d) of that directive. It states that Directive 2014/24 applies to procurements with a value estimated to be equal to or greater than EUR 750,000. (92)

92. In that regard, it is important to emphasise that, under recital 114 of Directive 2014/24, certain categories of services, inter alia, certain social services, have a limited cross-border dimension and therefore come under a specific regime with a higher threshold than that which applies to other services. (93)

93. Accordingly, the rules laid down in Directive 2014/24 do not apply to procurements with a value below that threshold set by Article 4(d) of that directive. (94) Such procurements must nonetheless comply with the rules on free movement as well as the principles of equal treatment, mutual recognition, non-discrimination and proportionality. (95)

94. In the present case, the national legislation at issue does not appear to provide any information on the economic value of the services which are the subject of the contractual action agreements. Given that the threshold in Article 4(d) of Directive 2014/24 is considerable, it cannot be ruled out that, in some cases, the value exceeds that threshold; whereas, in other cases, it may remain lower than that threshold. Therefore, it is for the referring court to verify whether that condition of Directive 2014/24 is met by the contractual action agreements at issue.

95. If all the aforementioned conditions of Article 1(2), Article 2(1)(5) and Article 4(d) of Directive 2014/24 are satisfied, then the contractual action agreements at issue fall within the scope of that directive. In particular, in response to the questions of the referring court, I take the view that the mere fact that those agreements are based on the principle of solidarity does not mean that the latter are to be excluded from the concept of public contracts within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24. Moreover, the facts that the services at issue are reimbursed for by public authorities, that they do not entail profit for the entities providing them or that they are provided free of charge to users, are immaterial for the purposes of determining whether there is such a public contract. However, as regards the conditions set out in Article 1(2) and Article 4(d) concerning the procurement and the threshold, respectively, it is for the referring court to ascertain whether the procedure and the value of the contracts satisfy the necessary conditions.

96. That being said, I turn now to the crux of the question: can profit-making entities be excluded from concluding public contracts under the specific provisions of Directive 2014/24?

3. Reserved contracts and the simplified regime under Directive 2014/24

97. Assuming that, at the very least, some of the contractual action agreements at issue in the main proceedings fall within the scope of Directive 2014/24, the referring court seeks to determine whether the ‘simplified regime’ to which those agreements are subject allows the Member States to exclude profit-making entities from any possibility of concluding such agreements.

98. First, the specific provisions of Directive 2014/24 do not identify whether public contracts in the field of social services are to be reserved for non-profit-making entities. However, Article 20 and Article 77(1) of Directive 2014/24 expressly allow the Member States to determine the type of organisations that may participate in the procedures for the award of public contracts in relation to certain social services. (96) Public contracts relating to social services included in Article 74 that do not fall within the scope of Article 20 and Article 77(1) of Directive 2014/24 come under the simplified regime of Articles 74 to 76 of that directive which, in my view, must be examined in the second place.

(a) Reserved contracts

99. Since Article 20 and Article 77(1) of Directive 2014/24 constitute a derogation from the general rules set out in that directive, I believe that the scope of those provisions is to be interpreted narrowly. This means, in particular, that those provisions contain an exhaustive list of cases that may be the subject of reserved contracts.

(1) Reserved contracts under Article 20 of Directive 2014/24

100. Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 deals with two alternative situations: (i) the possibility for contracting authorities of reserving contracts for either sheltered workshops or economic operators whose aim is the social and occupational integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons, or (ii) the possibility of providing for those contracts to be performed under sheltered programmes. (97)

101. While it is for the referring court to establish the applicability of that provision to the services at issue, I take the view that, in the present case, the application of that provision cannot be ruled out. Indeed, Section IV of the Annex to Decree 181/2017 includes persons with 'functional diversity' and, in particular, point 2 of that annex deals with their social integration. Therefore, in so far as the contractual action agreements at issue concern services provided to recipients who are those persons, Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 may be applicable.

102. That article allows – but does not compel – contracting authorities to reserve contracts to sheltered workshops and economic operators pursuing social initiatives or to provide for those contracts to be performed under sheltered programmes. The question whether Member States could, under that provision, impose additional limitations narrowing the circle of permitted participants and, thus, reserving procurements, was recently examined by the Court in Conacee. (98)

103. In that case, the Court pointed out that it follows from the wording of Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24 and from the objectives pursued by the latter that it does not contain an exhaustive list of conditions under which a contracting authority may limit the type of economic operator with which it may enter into a reserved contract. Instead, that directive leaves it to Member States to adopt additional criteria defining those conditions, if those additional criteria contribute to ensuring the social and employment policy objectives pursued by Article 20 of Directive 2014/24. Following the Advocate General Tanchev's view that the requirements under that provision are regarded as minimum requirements, (99) the Court ruled that Member States are free to narrow the circle of permitted participants when having recourse to the reserved contracts under Article 20 of Directive 2014/24. (100)

104. It follows from the foregoing that Member States can add criteria, such as the criterion of excluding profit-making entities laid out in the national legislation, in so far as such exclusion 'contributes to ensuring the social and employment policy objectives pursued by that provision'. (101) However, it should be noted that, in the present case, the Court has not been provided with any information regarding the reasons behind such exclusion by the national legislature. One could argue that non-profit-making entities have a more social dimension than profit-making entities and are, therefore, better suited to pursuing such objectives. Conversely, it could be submitted that profit-making entities can provide high-quality services with low costs and, therefore, be able to pursue those objectives. That said, it is entirely for the referring court to assess whether the exclusion at issue contributes to 'ensuring … social and employment policy objectives'.

105. Here, I must stress that there are two limits to the option laid out in Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24.

106. First, Article 20(2) of that directive requires the Member States, when availing themselves of the option provided by Article 20, to make explicit reference to that article in the call for tenders, in the absence of which such contracts cannot be reserved. In the present case, the referring court must ascertain whether that requirement has been met.

107. Secondly, when the Member States make use of the option provided for in Article 20 of Directive 2014/24, they must respect, inter alia, freedom of establishment, as well as the principles deriving from that freedom, such as the principles of equal treatment and proportionality. (102) As to the social services at issue in the main proceedings whose users are persons with functional diversity, it is for the referring court to determine whether the conditions set out in the national legislation are necessary and appropriate for ensuring the integration of those persons, as required by Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24. Moreover, it is worth noting that the Court has already held that when the Member States limit reserved contracts to voluntary associations, the principle of equality is not, in essence, infringed. (103)

(2) Reserved contracts under Article 77 of Directive 2014/24

108. Article 77(1) of Directive 2014/24 applies to certain specific social services. While it seems possible that some of the services referred to in the Annex to Decree 181/2017 fall within the scope of Article 77, it is clear to me that neither the entities nor the contractual action agreements in question satisfy the conditions set out in Article 77(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24.

109. The wording and general scheme of Article 77 of that directive do not provide much guidance on how to interpret it. (104) However, recital 118 of Directive 2014/24 explains the purpose of the procurement procedures that can be reserved for specific entities under Article 77 of that directive. That recital states that, in order to ensure the continuity of public services, that directive should allow that participation in procurement procedures for certain services in the field of social services could be reserved for certain organisations – such as organisations based on employee ownership or active employee participation in their governance, and cooperatives. Member States can therefore narrow the circle of participants to such organisations that participate in delivering these services to end users. It follows from those explanations that procurement procedures under Article 77 of Directive 2014/24 are merely a subset of the procurements which come under the simplified regime, and the conditions set out in that provision are therefore to be interpreted restrictively. (105)

110. First, Article 77(2) of that directive contains a list of four cumulative conditions. The first three concern the governance of the entities providing the services, whereas the fourth deals with the limitation set on successive repeat contracts. In the present case, as regards the national legislation at issue, it is the third and the fourth of those conditions that appear challenging. On the one hand, the national legislation at issue does not appear to be aimed at entities the economic governance of which entails employee ownership or participatory principles. (106) Thus, it is highly unlikely that the entities that are parties to the contractual action agreements at issue satisfy the condition set out in Article 77(2)(c) of Directive 2014/24. On the other hand, when examining the national legislation at issue, I did not come across a 'no-repeat' clause such as the one included in Article 77(2)(d) of Directive 2014/24. On the contrary, the final sentence of Article 23 of Decree 181/2017 seems to allow a renewal of a contract, even after the 10-year extension provided for in that article. Therefore, the national legislation at issue does not seem to fulfil the criteria of Article 77(2) of Directive 2014/24.

111. Neither do the contractual action agreements at issue satisfy the condition set out in Article 77(3) of Directive 2014/24, according to which the maximum duration of the contract must not exceed three years. Under Article 23 of Decree 181/2017, those agreements may be concluded for a maximum period of 4 years and, where appropriate, be extended up to 10 years (with the possibility of concluding another agreement immediately afterwards).

112. In the light of the foregoing, I conclude that Article 77 of Directive 2014/24 is not applicable to the present case.

113. I shall proceed on the basis that, as regards the contractual action agreements that fall within the scope of Directive 2014/24, except for the ones that come under Article 20 thereof, the remainder of those agreements must fulfil the criteria of the simplified regime laid down in Articles 75 and 76 of that directive.

(b) The rules under Articles 75 and 76 of Directive 2014/24

114. The referring court is asking, in essence, whether the public authorities can conclude contractual action agreements solely with private non-profit entities, under which those authorities entrust those entities with certain social services referred to in Article 74 of Directive 2014/24. To answer that question, I must turn to the rules laid down in Articles 75 and 76 of that directive, which deal, inter alia, with the obligation to publish notices and the principle of equality, respectively.

115. First, Article 75 of Directive 2014/24, concerning the publication of notices, requires contracting authorities to announce their intention to award a contract to the Publications Office of the European Union (107) by means of a contract notice or a prior information notice. Article 74 of Directive 2014/24 introduces a special procurement regime dedicated to public contracts for social and other specific services when they are equal to or greater than the threshold mentioned in Article 4(d) thereof. For its part, Article 75 of that directive emphasises the fact that public authorities still have to comply with rules on publication of the tender notices concerning those public procurements. In doing so, that requirement is an expression of the principle of transparency, as laid down in Section 2 and Article 76(1) of that directive.

116. In the present case, according to Article 13(2) of Decree 181/2017, the relevant contract notices are published by the Diari Oficial de la Generalitat Valenciana (Official Journal of the Valencia Regional Government). However, as regards the contract notices, that form of publicity, limited to the Community of Valencia, does not suffice, to my mind, to meet the requirements of Article 75(1) of Directive 2014/24, which specifically refer to the procedure set out in Article 51 when the contracting authorities choose to issue a contract notice. Consequently, the national legislation at issue does not appear to comply with the transparency rules laid down in Article 75(1) of Directive 2014/24.

117. Second, according to Article 76(1) of that directive, even under the simplified regime, Member States must observe, inter alia, the principle of equality of economic operators. It should be recalled that Directive 2014/24 seeks to ensure freedom of establishment, as well as the principles stemming from the fundamental freedoms, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. (108)

118. Accordingly, the referring court will have to examine whether the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings, allowing the de facto exclusion of profit-making entities from the provision of certain social services pursuant to contractual action agreements under Decree 181/2017, (109) is consistent with those principles.

119. It should be recalled that, according to settled case-law, the principle of equality requires that comparable situations must not be treated differently, and that different situations must not be treated in the same way, unless such treatment is objectively justified. (110) The comparability of situations must be assessed in the light of the subject matter and purpose of the EU measure, which makes the distinction in question. (111)

120. Thus, in the present case, the referring court will have to determine whether the ‘social initiative entities’, as defined in Article 3(e) of Decree 181/2017, are in the same situation as profit-making entities as regards the objective pursued by the simplified regime under Articles 74 to 76 of Directive 2014/24. (112)

121. As regards those objectives, recital 114 of that directive explains that the simplified regime concerning, in particular, certain social services is to be established in the light of the cultural context and sensitivity of those services. Therefore, and taking into account the wording of Article 1(5) of Directive 2014/24, the Member States should be given wide discretion to organise the choice of the service providers in the way they consider most appropriate. That recital adds the objectives of simplification and of alleviating the administrative burden for contracting authorities and economic operators.

122. In my opinion, that recital is to be read in conjunction with Article 76(2) of Directive 2014/24, which refers to the quality, continuity, accessibility, affordability, availability and comprehensiveness of the services, as well as the specific needs of different categories of users. It seems, therefore, that it is the specific nature of the social services in question that justifies the existence of the simplified regime. Accordingly, it seems to me that the relevant criterion should be the nature of the social services in question provided by the two categories of entity. (113)

123. In the present case, the defendant and the Spanish Government have not explained why profit-making entities are automatically excluded from the scope of Decree 181/2017. While it could be argued that the ‘social initiative entities’, as defined in Article 3(e) of Decree 181/2017, and profit-making entities have different legal natures and function differently, the two categories of entity may also be called on to perform similar social services, and provide services with the same level of quality at similar costs. It follows that, subject to the findings of the referring court, those two categories of entity may be in a comparable situation as regards the objective of the regime under Articles 74 to 76 of Directive 2014/24.

124. Moreover, according to settled case-law, as regards the principle of proportionality, which is a general principle of EU law, the rules laid down by the Member States in implementing the provisions of Directive 2014/24 must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of that directive. (114) In that connection, it is clear to me that the case-law of the Court cannot be interpreted as allowing certain entities to be excluded from the application of the simplified regime owing solely to the fact that they are profit-making. (115)

125. In particular, I do not see how the automatic exclusion of profit-making entities from the scope of national legislation ensures that the services at issue are provided in an appropriate way, while simplifying and alleviating the administrative burden as mentioned in recital 114 of Directive 2014/24. Moreover, such automatic exclusion does not appear to contribute to the quality, continuity, affordability, availability and comprehensiveness of those services, as required by Article 76(2) of Directive 2014/24. In implementing the simplified regime, it would appear more appropriate to focus on the ability to provide cost-effective, quality social services, rather than on the nature of the entity providing those services. (116)

126. Consequently, it is inconceivable, in my view, that such an exclusion is either justified or proportionate; it is therefore contrary to the principle of equal treatment.

4. Freedom of establishment

127. If the contractual action agreements at issue do not fall within the scope of Directive 2014/24, (117) which is for the referring court to ascertain, that does not mean, however, that those agreements are necessarily excluded from the scope of EU law. It follows from the settled case-law of the Court that the contractual action agreements at issue may nonetheless be subject to the fundamental freedoms and general principles of EU law, in particular the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and the corollary obligation of transparency, provided that those agreements have a certain cross-border dimension. (118) Moreover, subject to that proviso, those fundamental freedoms and principles apply if there is no choice between the interested operators. Indeed, the Court has already held that, unlike Directive 2014/24, freedom of establishment and the principle of equal treatment apply to different licencing systems where there is no choice. (119)

128. In the present case, as mentioned above, since the Court has no information before it on the value of the contractual action agreements in question, I assume that, in some cases, the value of those agreements is above the threshold set in Article 4(d) of Directive 2014/24, while, in other cases, it may remain lower than that threshold, (120) which is for the referring court to verify. (121) In the latter cases, I would point out that the Court has already ruled that because of the ‘modest economic interest at stake’, it could reasonably be maintained that an undertaking located in a Member State other than the one where the contract is awarded would have no interest in the contract at issue, with the effect that the application of rules enshrined in primary EU law is not justified. (122)

129. Therefore, provided that the social services that are the subject of the contractual action agreements at issue consist in an economic activity and have a cross-border dimension, the referring court should examine whether or not the absence of sufficient publication of the invitation to tender and the de facto exclusion of profit-making entities constitutes an obstacle to freedom of establishment under Article 49 TFEU and an infringement of the corollary principles of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency. (123)

130. First, as regards freedom of establishment and the principle of equal treatment, the Court has already held that a requirement that persons wishing to carry out an economic activity adopt a specific legal form is a restriction on their freedom of establishment within the meaning of Article 49 TFEU. Indeed, such a requirement prevents economic operators located in the home Member State and of a different legal form from setting up a secondary establishment in the host Member State. (124)

131. However, since that restriction does not give rise to direct discrimination on grounds of nationality, it may also pursue any objective recognised as legitimate under EU law. In that regard, I believe that the reasoning set out in points 122 to 125 of this Opinion regarding justifications and the proportionality of the national legislation applies mutatis mutandis. In the absence of any justification put forward by the Spanish authorities concerning the exclusion of profit-making entities from the contractual action agreements at issue, the national legislation appears to be contrary to freedom of establishment and the principle of equal treatment. In any event, the automatic exclusion of profit-making entities from the scope of national legislation does not appear to be appropriate, since it is not focused on the nature and quality of the services provided, but rather on the legal form of the entity. That said, it is for the national court to determine whether the national legislation pursues a legitimate objective recognised by EU law and, if so, to assess whether that legislation complies with the principle of proportionality.

132. Second, as to the obligation of transparency under Article 49 TFEU, it is worth pointing out that, unlike the specific requirements stemming from Directive 2014/24, that obligation does not require an invitation to tender to be published in the Official Journal of the European Union. Instead, that obligation is limited to requiring a degree of advertising that is sufficient to ensure, first, the opening-up to competition and, second, the review of the impartiality of the procurement procedure. (125)

133. In the present case, as the Diari Oficial de la Generalitat Valenciana is the Official Journal of the Valencia Regional Government and is thus the ordinary means of publication in the field of public procurement, it seems to me that the national legislation at issue fulfils the aforementioned criteria concerning publicity.

134. If the conditions of application of Directive 2014/24 are satisfied, I therefore take the view that Articles 74 to 76 of that directive must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, which allows a public authority to conclude, without complying with the procedural requirements imposed by EU law, a public contract under which that authority entrusts only non-profit entities with the provision of certain social services in return for reimbursement of the costs incurred by those entities, provided that that legislative measure complies with the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, which is for the referring court to ascertain. Article 75 of Directive 2014/24 has to be interpreted as precluding national legislation which provides that contract notices are to be published only in the regional official journal.

135. As regards the services for which the estimated value is below the threshold laid down in Article 4(d) of Directive 2014/24 and procedures that do not entail a choice within the meaning of Article 1(2) of that directive, the freedom of establishment enshrined in Article 49 TFEU must be interpreted as not precluding such national legislation, provided that that legislative measure pursues a legitimate objective recognised by EU law, and complies with the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, which is for the national court to ascertain.

C. The third question

136. If the first two questions are answered in the negative, by its third question, the referring court is asking, in essence, whether Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, Article 76 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 15(2) of the Services Directive must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, which provides for a selection criterion for the conclusion of the contractual action agreements at issue, according to which the contracting authorities may give weight to the fact that the potential tenderers for the provision of the social services in question are established in the place where such services are to be provided.

137. In order to answer that question, I shall analyse the compatibility of the selection criterion at issue with Directive 2014/24, the Services Directive and then with the fundamental freedoms.

1. The compatibility of the selection criterion at issue with Directive 2014/24

138. As regards the compatibility of the selection criterion at issue with Directive 2014/24, the issue of a geographical criterion has already been examined in Grupo Hospitalario Quirón, (126) which concerned tenders in the field of medical services. (127) In particular, the Court was called upon to assess the compatibility with Directive 2004/18 of a tender requirement according to which a tenderer was to be located in the municipality where the medical services in question were to be provided. The Court stated that such a requirement constituted a ‘territorial constraint on performance’. (128) That requirement did not ensure equal and non-discriminatory access to the contracts at issue by all tenderers, since it rendered those contracts accessible only to those tenderers who were able to provide the services in question in an establishment situated within the municipality designated by the contracting authorities. (129)

139. In the present case, it is apparent from Article 15(1)(a) of Decree 181/2017 that, in order to select the social initiative entities which will be responsible for providing the social services at issue, the contracting authorities may, inter alia, give weight to the fact that those entities are located in the area in which a given service is to be provided. (130) Thus, I believe that the geographical criterion at issue in the present case is similar to that which was at issue in Grupo Hospitalario Quirón. That criterion constitutes a ‘territorial constraint on performance’, (131) since it has the effect of putting at the disadvantage those tenderers who cannot provide the services in question in an establishment situated within a given municipality, despite the fact that they may satisfy the other conditions laid down in the contract documents and technical specifications of the contracts under consideration.

140. I therefore take the view that the selection criterion at issue in the main proceedings gives rise to a difference in treatment between the entities that meet that requirement and those that do not. Unless those two categories of potential tenderers are not in an objectively comparable situation or that difference in treatment is objectively justified, that requirement is contrary to the principle of equal treatment to which the award of public service contracts is subject under Article 76 of Directive 2014/24.

141. As to the question whether those two groups of potential tenderers are in an objectively comparable situation, it seems to me that that is the case, provided that their ability to provide the social services at issue is the same in terms of quality and cost. Therefore, subject to that proviso which is for the referring court to verify, I take the view that such a requirement treats objectively comparable situations differently.

142. As regards justification, there is nothing in either the national legislation at issue or the file provided to the Court that would suggest any justification for the selection criterion at issue. However, it is ultimately for the referring court to ascertain whether that is actually the case.

2. Compatibility of the selection criterion with the Services Directive

143. The Court is being asked whether the selection criterion for the conclusion of the contractual action agreements at issue is compatible with the Services Directive.

144. At the outset, it must be determined whether the social services at issue fall within the scope of that directive.

145. In that regard, Article 2(2)(j) of the Services Directive, read in conjunction with recital 27 thereof, expressly excludes from the scope of that directive ‘social services relating to social housing, childcare and support of families and persons permanently or temporarily in need which are provided by the State, by providers mandated by the State or by charities recognised as such by the State’.

146. Recital 27 explains that the objective of such exclusion is to ensure ‘support for those who are permanently or temporarily in a particular state of need because of their insufficient family income or total or partial lack of independence and for those who risk being marginalised’. That recital adds that those ‘services are essential in order to guarantee the fundamental right to human dignity and integrity and are a manifestation of the principles of social cohesion and solidarity and should not be affected by [the Services Directive]’.

147. I must point out that the Court has given the concept of ‘social services’ in Article 2(2)(j) of the Services Directive a two-fold definition. In its judgment in Femarbel, the Court held that only services which meet two cumulative conditions fall within the scope of the exclusion laid down in that provision. The first relates to the nature of the activities, whilst the second one concerns the status of the service provider. (132)

148. In order to satisfy the first condition, the activities at issue must be ‘essential in order to guarantee the fundamental right to human dignity and integrity’ and ‘a manifestation of the principles of social cohesion and solidarity’. (133) In that case, the Court ruled that the national court had to ascertain whether the activities at issue are of a genuinely social nature, in that they are intended to provide the persons concerned with ‘assistance and care appropriate to their loss of independence’ accompanied by a specific programme of events, or the necessary care ‘which cannot be provided by their close relatives on a continuous basis’.

149. In the present case, as mentioned earlier in this Opinion, the Annex to Decree 181/2017 lists a broad range of social services, which may vary according to their nature and the groups of persons using those services. (134) However, all those services appear to have the common objective of assisting persons in need and providing them with care. Therefore, I take the view that those services appear to satisfy the first condition put forward by the Court in Femarbel. (135)

150. As regards the second condition, the Court held in Femarbel that social services can be carried out by the State itself, a charity recognised as such by the State, or a private service provider mandated by the State. (136) In view of such a broad definition ratione personae given by the Court, the entities providing the services under the contractual action agreements at issue, which are non-profit associations, may fall within the scope of Article 2(2)(j) of the Services Directive, which is for the national court to ascertain.

151. Consequently, I take the view that the Services Directive is not applicable to the social services provided for in Decree 181/2017, since those services are, pursuant to Article 2(2)(j) of that directive, expressly excluded from the scope of that directive.

3. Compatibility of the selection criterion with the fundamental freedoms

152. As regards the compatibility of the selection criterion at issue with the fundamental freedoms, as I have already explained in this Opinion, on the one hand, the contractual action agreements at issue appear to fall within the scope of freedom of establishment enshrined in Article 49 TFEU rather than that of freedom to provide services laid down in Article 56 TFEU. (137) Therefore, notwithstanding the fact that the third question referred by the national court relates to both of those freedoms, I consider that the answer given should be limited to the former. On the other hand, it is worth recalling that it is only if those contractual action agreements have a cross-border dimension that Article 49 TFEU may apply. (138)

153. As regards freedom of establishment, a selection criterion, such as that laid down in Article 15(1)(a) of Decree 181/2017, may hinder or render less attractive the exercise of freedom of establishment. (139) In that regard, I should point out that the Court has ruled that national legislation that precludes entities from being able to pursue an independent economic activity on the premises of their choice constitutes a restriction. (140) In the present case, the fact of establishing themselves in the Community of Valencia may entail financial consequences for and administrative burdens on the entities that have exercised that fundamental freedom. (141) That would be the case, for example, for an entity, established in a Member State other than Spain, which has set up a secondary establishment in that Member State but outside the Community of Valencia. Consequently, I take the view that the requirement at issue constitutes a restriction on freedom of establishment within the meaning of Article 49 TFEU.

154. However, it may still be justified if it pursues objectives recognised as legitimate by EU law and complies with the principle of proportionality. (142)

155. In the present case, I take the view that my findings set out in point 142 of the present Opinion concerning the justifications for the infringement of the principle of equal treatment under Article 76 of Directive 2014/24 apply mutatis mutandis. However, it is for the national court to carry out an assessment as to whether the criterion at issue pursues a legitimate objective recognised by EU law, is suitable to ensure the attainment of that objective and does not go beyond what is necessary to attain it.

156. Lastly, for the sake of completeness and contrary to the submissions of the defendant and the Spanish Government, I should stress that the wording of the second indent of Article 1 of Protocol No 26 to the TFEU has no bearing on the question whether the selection criterion laid down in Article 15(1)(a) of Decree 181/2017 is compatible with freedom of establishment. That is because the values which that protocol seeks to protect are not reflected in the selection criterion at issue. Such a criterion, which is purely geographical, cannot be explained by the need to ensure ‘diversity between various services of general economic interest and the differences in the needs and preferences of users that may result from a different geographical, social or cultural situation’. I consider, therefore, that the second indent of Article 1 of Protocol No 26 to the TFEU cannot be relied upon in order to justify geographical restrictions to the fundamental freedoms.

157. In conclusion, if the existence of any cross-border dimension were to be established in relation to the contractual action agreements at issue, Article 76 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 49 TFEU preclude a selection criterion for the conclusion of the contractual action agreements at issue whereby the contracting authorities may give weight to the fact that the potential tenderers for the provision of the social services in question are established in the place where such services are to be provided, unless that criterion pursues a legitimate objective recognised by EU law, is suitable to ensure the attainment of that objective and does not go beyond what is necessary to attain it, which is for the referring court to ascertain.

IV. Conclusion

158. I propose that the Court reply as follows to the questions referred by the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de la Comunidad Valenciana (High Court of Justice of the Community of Valencia, Spain) for a preliminary ruling:

Articles 74 to 76 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, and Article 49 TFEU must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, which allows a public authority to conclude, without complying with the procedural requirements imposed by EU law, a public contract under which that authority entrusts only non-profit entities with the provision of certain social services in return for reimbursement of the costs incurred by those entities, provided that such legislation complies with the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, which is for the referring court to ascertain.

Article 75(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation that requires that contract notices be published only in the regional official journal.

Article 76 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 49 TFEU preclude a national legislation which provides for a selection criterion for the conclusion of contractual action agreements whereby the contracting authorities may give weight to the fact that the potential tenderers for the provision of the social services in question are established in the place where such services are to be provided, unless that criterion pursues a legitimate objective recognised by EU law, is suitable to ensure the attainment of that objective and does not go beyond what is necessary to attain it, which is for the referring court to ascertain.

26 Directive 2014/23 defines ‘services concession’ in its Article 5(1)(b), in essence, as a contract for pecuniary interest by means of which a contracting authority or entity entrusts the provision and the management of services to an economic operator. According to the case-law of the Court, the difference between a public service contract and a service concession lies, namely, in the risk taken in operating the services in question (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 March 2011, Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, C-274/09, EU:C:2011:130, paragraphs 24, 26, 37 and the case-law cited).

28 See Article 66(2) and Article 65(3) of Law 5/1997. In that regard, ASADE, in its answers to the written questions of the Court, submits that the legislation at issue does provide that public authorities cover all losses regarding the costs of the services at issue. The defendant submits that Article 11(1) of Decree 181/2017 provides for the beneficiaries of the services covered by the contractual action agreements to receive those services for free.

34 According to settled case-law in the field of social security, EU law does not, in principle, detract from the powers of the Member States to organise their social security systems (see, most recently, judgment of 11 June 2020, Commission and Slovak Republic v Dôvera zdravotná poist'ovňa (C-262/18 P and C-271/18 P, EU:C:2020:450, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited)).

38 Judgment of 1 February 2017, Commission v Hungary (C-392/15, EU:C:2017:73, paragraph 100). I should add that, as regards workers, the Court has added that the provision of services for remuneration must be regarded as an economic activity 'provided that the work performed is genuine and effective and not such as to be regarded as purely marginal and ancillary' (judgment of 20 November 2001, Jany and Others, C-268/99, EU:C:2001:616, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited). However, the latter criteria, which relate to a working relationship, do not seem relevant in the present case.

70 In the judgment of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma (C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399), the choice was deferred to the patient, and, in the judgment of 1 March 2018, Tirkkonen (C-9/17, EU:C:2018:142), to the beneficiary of the aid at issue.

79 See, to that effect, judgment of 18 October 2018, IBA Molecular Italy (C-606/17, EU:C:2018:843, paragraph 28).

80 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, according to the settled case-law of the Court, only a contract concluded for pecuniary interest may constitute a public contract falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18 (see judgments of 25 March 2010, Helmut Müller (C-451/08, EU:C:2010:168, paragraph 47), and of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985, paragraph 43). While Directive 2014/24 repealed Directive 2004/18, that condition is laid down in similar terms in both directives. That case-law can therefore be applied to the new directive.

It is worthwhile noting that, in her Opinion in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others (C-159/11, EU:C:2012:303, point 32), Advocate General Trstenjak states that ‘the view can be taken that only a broad understanding of the notion of “pecuniary interest” is consistent with the purpose of the procurement directives, which is to open up the markets to genuine competition’.

87 The fact that Decree 181/2017 excludes profit-making entities from the provision of the social services at issue will be dealt with under Section III.B.3 of the Opinion.

88 See case-law cited in footnote 86.

89 See Section III.B.1 of this Opinion.

90 ASADE submits that the services at issue do not fall within the scope of the services excluded from the directive under recital 6 and Annex XIV (CPV code 75300000-9) and, in its written answer to the questions put by the Court, it seems to indicate that the services at issue fall under the CPV codes ranging from 85000000-9 to 85321000-5. That submission must be examined by the referring court, which has sole jurisdiction to interpret the national legislation at issue.

91 See, by analogy, judgment of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck (C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234, paragraph 37).

92 The provision specifies that it is the value net of value added tax.

93 I must point out, however, that some contracts may have a cross-border dimension even though their value is below the abovementioned threshold, for instance, if the procurement procedure is taking place in areas near the borders of other EU Member States (see, to that effect, judgments of 15 May 2008, SECAP and Santorso (C-147/06 and C-148/06, EU:C:2008:277, paragraph 31), and of 17 November 2015, RegioPost (C-115/14, EU:C:2015:760, paragraph 51)). That extension does not seem to apply in the present case.

94 See, by analogy, order of 7 July 2016, Sá Machado & Filhos (C-214/15, not published, EU:C:2016:548, paragraph 29).

95 See, to that effect, recital 1 of Directive 2014/24.

96 It is settled case-law that the only permitted exceptions to the application of Directive 2014/24 are those which are expressly mentioned therein (see judgment of 18 January 2007, Auroux and Others (C-220/05, EU:C:2007:31, paragraph 59 and the case-law cited).

102 Judgment of 6 October 2021, Conacee (C-598/19, EU:C:2021:810, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

103 As regards Directive 2004/18, the Court held that where public contracts for medical transport could be included among the service contracts covered by Annex II B to that directive and, therefore, were not subject to all of its provisions, those contracts could be reserved for voluntary associations without thereby infringing the principle of equal treatment (judgment of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others (C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 59).

104 Legislative drafting history regarding Article 77 does not provide much guidance as to its interpretation, since that provision was not initially in the Commission's proposed legislation (see Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement (COM(2011) 0896 final) – 2011/0438 (COD)), and it was added at the later stage of the legislative procedure (see Position of the European Parliament adopted at first reading on 15 January 2014 with a view to the adoption Directive 2014/…/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC(EP-PE_TC1-COD(2011)0438)).

105 According to some authors, that provision was introduced in order to take into account the specific needs of the United Kingdom. It is only applicable to a certain subset of the services of the simplified regime (see Turudić, page 867, cited in footnote 67 above and the literature cited by that author). That approach is confirmed by the last two sentences of recital 118 of Directive 2014/24, which implies that certain services covered by the simplified regime can be subject to the regime laid down by Article 77 of that directive.

106 As explained by the Norwegian Government, Article 77 of Directive 2014/24 deals with the possibility of reserving contracts to certain newly established companies by persons previously employed in the public sector. It is not restricted to non-profit organisations, but covers commercial entities as well.

113 The defendant itself places considerable weight on that aspect when it points out that Directive 2014/24 aims to take into account the specific characteristics of services to persons (see point 17 of the defendant's observations).

114 See, to that effect, judgment of 6 October 2021, Conacee (C-598/19, EU:C:2021:810, paragraphs 42 to 44 and the case-law cited). 121 As opposed to the cases where the Court has declared the case inadmissible, as the referring court has submitted no evidence providing the Court with information on the existence of a cross-border dimension (see, inter alia, judgment of 6 October 2016, Tecnoedi Costruzioni (C-318/15, EU:C:2016:747), in the present case, the main proceedings involve an action for annulment, which means that paragraph 51 of the judgment of 15 November 2016, Ullens de Schooten (C-268/15, EU:C:2016:874) applies (see point 38 above). Therefore, such dimension is presumed.

More specifically, the Court held that fundamental freedoms preclude a selection criterion which rewards, by awarding extra points, the proximity of the installation to the place where the services are provided, in so far as that criterion is applied in a discriminatory manner, is not justified by imperative requirements in the general interest, is not suitable for securing the attainment of the objective which it pursues or goes beyond what is necessary to attain it, which is a matter for the national court to determine (judgment of 27 October 2005, Contse and Others (C-234/03, EU:C:2005:644, paragraph 79).

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 30 of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2366 of 18 December 2017 (OJ 2017 L 337, p. 21) (‘Directive 2014/23), and Articles 12 and 18 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2365 of 18 December 2017 (OJ 2017 L 337, p. 19) (‘Directive 2014/24’), read in conjunction with Article 107 TFEU.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Roma Multiservizi SpA and Rekeep SpA, on the one hand, and Roma Capitale (city of Rome, Italy) and the Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato (Italian competition authority, Italy), on the other hand, concerning that city’s decision to exclude from the contract award procedure the consortium proposed by Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep.

Legal context

Directive 2014/23

3 Article 3 of Directive 2014/23 provides as follows:

‘1. Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the concession award procedure, including the estimate of the value, shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators or certain works, supplies or services.

2. Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall aim at ensuring the transparency of the award procedure and of the performance of the contract, while complying with Article 28.’

4 Article 5 of that directive provides:

‘For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

(1) “concessions” means works or services concessions, as defined in points (a) and (b):

(b) “services concession” means a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing by means of which one or more contracting authorities or contracting entities entrust the provision and the management of services other than the execution of works referred to in point (a) to one or more economic operators, the consideration of which consists either solely in the right to exploit the services that are the subject of the contract or in that right together with payment.

The award of a works or services concession shall involve the transfer to the concessionaire of an operating risk in exploiting those works or services encompassing demand or supply risk or both. The concessionaire shall be deemed to assume operating risk where, under normal operating conditions, it is not guaranteed to recoup the investments made or the costs incurred in operating the works or the services which are the subject matter of the concession. The part of the risk transferred to the concessionaire shall involve real exposure to the vagaries of the market, such that any potential estimated loss incurred by the concessionaire shall not be merely nominal or negligible;

5 Article 8(1) of that directive states:

‘This Directive shall apply to concessions the value of which is equal to or greater than EUR 5 548 000.’

6 Article 10(3) of the directive is worded as follows:

‘This Directive shall not apply to concessions for air transport services based on the granting of an operating licence within the meaning of Regulation (EC) No 1008/2008 of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 24 September 2008 on common rules for the operation of air services in the Community (OJ 2008 L 293, p. 3)] or to concessions for public passenger transport services within the meaning of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2007 on public passenger transport services by rail and by road and repealing Council Regulations (EEC) Nos 1191/69 and 1107/70 (OJ 2007 L 315, p. 1)].’

7 Under Article 17 of Directive 2014/23:

‘1. A concession awarded by a contracting authority or a contracting entity as referred to in point (a) of Article 7(1) to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contracting authority or contracting entity exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments; and

(b) more than 80% of the activities of the controlled legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or contracting entity or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority or contracting entity; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

A contracting authority or contracting entity as referred to in point (a) of Article 7(1) shall be deemed to exercise over a legal person a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments within the meaning of point (a) of the first subparagraph of this paragraph, where it exercises a decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of the controlled legal person. That control may also be exercised by another legal person, which is itself controlled in the same way by the contracting authority or contracting entity.

4. A contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities or contracting entities as referred to in point (a) of Article 7(1) shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities or contracting entities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common;

(b) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

(c) the participating contracting authorities or contracting entities perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation.

8 Article 19 of that directive provides:

‘Concessions for social and other specific services listed in Annex IV falling within the scope of this Directive shall be subject only to the obligations arising from Article 31(3) and Articles 32, 46 and 47.’

9 Article 20(1) of that directive provides:

‘Concessions which have as their subject matter both works and services shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions applicable to the type of concession that characterises the main subject matter of the contract in question.

In the case of mixed concessions consisting partly of social and other specific services listed in Annex IV and partly of other services, the main subject matter shall be determined according to which of the estimated values of the respective services is the higher.’

10 Article 30 of Directive 2014/23 states:

‘1. The contracting authority or contracting entity shall have the freedom to organise the procedure leading to the choice of concessionaire subject to compliance with this Directive.

2. The design of the concession award procedure shall respect the principles laid down in Article 3. In particular during the concession award procedure, the contracting authority or contracting entity shall not provide information in a discriminatory manner which may give some candidates or tenderers an advantage over others.

11 Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23 is worded as follows:

‘Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall verify the conditions for participation relating to the professional and technical ability and the financial and economic standing of the candidates or tenderers, on the basis of self-declarations, reference or references to be submitted as proof in accordance with the requirements specified in the concession notice that shall be non-discriminatory and proportionate to the subject matter of the concession. The conditions for participation shall be related and proportionate to the need to ensure the ability of the concessionaire to perform the concession, taking into account the subject matter of the concession and the purpose of ensuring genuine competition.’

12 Under Recital 32 of Directive 2014/24:

‘Public contracts awarded to controlled legal persons should not be subject to the application of the procedures provided for by this Directive if the contracting authority exercises a control over the legal person concerned which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, provided that the controlled legal person carries out more than 80% of its activities in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority, regardless of the beneficiary of the contract performance.

The exemption should not extend to situations where there is direct participation by a private economic operator in the capital of the controlled legal person since, in such circumstances, the award of a public contract without a competitive procedure would provide the private economic operator with a capital participation in the controlled legal person an undue advantage over its competitors. However, in view of the particular characteristics of public bodies with compulsory membership, such as organisations responsible for the management or exercise of certain public services, this should not apply in cases where the participation of specific private economic operators in the capital of the controlled legal person is made compulsory by a national legislative provision in conformity with the Treaties, provided that such participation is non-controlling and non-blocking and does not confer a decisive influence on the decisions of the controlled legal person. It should further be clarified that the decisive element is only the direct private participation in the controlled legal person. Therefore, where there is private capital participation in the controlling contracting authority or in the controlling contracting authorities, this does not preclude the award of public contracts to the controlled legal person, without applying the procedures provided for by this Directive as such participations do not adversely affect competition between private economic operators.

It should also be clarified that contracting authorities such as bodies governed by public law, that may have private capital participation, should be in a position to avail themselves of the exemption for horizontal cooperation. Consequently, where all other conditions in relation to horizontal cooperation are met, the horizontal cooperation exemption should extend to such contracting authorities where the contract is concluded exclusively between contracting authorities.'

13 Article 2(1) of that directive provides:

'For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

(9) "public service contracts" means public contracts having as their object the provision of services other than those referred to in point 6;

…'

14 Article 3 of that directive provides:

'1. Paragraph 2 shall apply to mixed contracts which have as their subject matter different types of procurement all of which are covered by this Directive.

Paragraphs 3 to 5 shall apply to mixed contracts which have as their subject matter procurement covered by this Directive and procurement covered by other legal regimes.

2. Contracts which have as their subject two or more types of procurement (works, services or supplies) shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions applicable to the type of procurement that characterises the main subject of the contract in question.

In the case of mixed contracts consisting partly of services within the meaning of Chapter I of Title III and partly of other services or of mixed contracts consisting partly of services and partly of supplies, the main subject shall be determined in accordance with which of the estimated values of the respective services or supplies is the highest.

3. Where the different parts of a given contract are objectively separable, paragraph 4 shall apply. Where the different parts of a given contract are objectively not separable, paragraph 6 shall apply.

Where part of a given contract is covered by Article 346 TFEU or Directive 2009/81/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 July 2009 on the coordination of procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts by contracting authorities or entities in the fields of defence and security, and amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (OJ 2009 L 216, p. 76)], Article 16 of this Directive shall apply.

4. In the case of contracts which have as their subject matter procurement covered by this Directive as well as procurement not covered by this Directive, contracting authorities may choose to award separate contracts for the separate parts or to award a single contract. Where contracting authorities choose to award separate contracts for separate parts, the decision of which legal regime applies to any one of such separate contracts shall be taken on the basis of the characteristics of the separate part concerned.

Where contracting authorities choose to award a single contract, this Directive shall, unless otherwise provided in Article 16, apply to the ensuing mixed contract, irrespective of the value of the parts that would otherwise fall under a different legal regime and irrespective of which legal regime those parts would otherwise have been subject to.

In the case of mixed contracts containing elements of supply, works and service contracts and of concessions, the mixed contract shall be awarded in accordance with this Directive, provided that the estimated value of the part of the contract which constitutes a contract covered by this Directive, calculated in accordance with Article 5, is equal to or greater than the relevant threshold set out in Article 4.

5. In the case of contracts which have as their subject both procurement covered by this Directive and procurement for the pursuit of an activity which is subject to Directive 2014/25/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243)], the applicable rules shall, notwithstanding paragraph 4 of this Article, be determined pursuant to Articles 5 and 6 of [Directive 2014/25].

6. Where the different parts of a given contract are objectively not separable, the applicable legal regime shall be determined on the basis of the main subject matter of that contract.'

15 Article 4 of that directive states:

'This Directive shall apply to procurements with a value net of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than the following thresholds:

(b) EUR 144 000 for public supply and service contracts awarded by central government authorities and design contests organised by such authorities; where public supply contracts are awarded by contracting authorities operating in the field of defence, that threshold shall apply only to contracts concerning products covered by Annex III;

(c) EUR 221 000 for public supply and service contracts awarded by sub-central contracting authorities and design contests organised by such authorities; that threshold shall also apply to public supply contracts awarded by central government authorities that operate in the field of defence, where those contracts involve products not covered by Annex III;

(d) EUR 750 000 for public service contracts for social and other specific services listed in Annex XIV.'

16 Article 7 of Directive 2014/24 is worded as follows:

'This Directive shall not apply to public contracts and design contests which, under Directive [2014/25], are awarded or organised by contracting authorities exercising one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14 of that Directive and are awarded for the pursuit of those activities …'

17 Under Article 12 of that directive:

'1. A public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contracting authority exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of the controlled legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

A contracting authority shall be deemed to exercise over a legal person a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments within the meaning of point (a) of the first subparagraph where it exercises a decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of the controlled legal person. Such control may also be exercised by another legal person, which is itself controlled in the same way by the contracting authority.

4. A contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common;

(b) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

(c) the participating contracting authorities perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation.

18 Article 18 of that directive provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.

2. Member States shall take appropriate measures to ensure that in the performance of public contracts economic operators comply with applicable obligations in the fields of environmental, social and labour law established by Union law, national law, collective agreements or by the international environmental, social and labour law provisions listed in Annex X.’

19 Article 57 of that directive provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities shall exclude an economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure where they have established, by verifying in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, or are otherwise aware that that economic operator has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment for one of the following reasons:

(a) participation in a criminal organisation, as defined in Article 2 of Council Framework Decision 2008/841/JHA [of 24 October 2008 on combating organised crime (OJ 2008 L 300, p. 42)];

(b) corruption, as defined in Article 3 of the Convention on the fight against corruption involving officials of the European Communities or officials of Member States of the European Union … and Article 2(1) of Council Framework Decision 2003/568/JHA [of 22 July 2003 on combating corruption in the private sector (OJ 2003 L 192, p. 54)] as well as corruption as defined in the national law of the contracting authority or the economic operator;

(c) fraud within the meaning of Article 1 of the Convention on the protection of the European Communities' financial interests …;

(d) terrorist offences or offences linked to terrorist activities, as defined in Articles 1 and 3 of Council Framework Decision 2002/475/JHA [of 13 June 2002 on combating terrorism (OJ 2002 L 164, p. 3)] respectively, or inciting or aiding or abetting or attempting to commit an offence, as referred to in Article 4 of that Framework Decision;

(e) money laundering or terrorist financing, as defined in Article 1 of Directive 2005/60/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 26 October 2005 on the prevention of the use of the financial system for the purpose of money laundering and terrorist financing (OJ 2005 L 309, p. 15)];

(f) child labour and other forms of trafficking in human beings as defined in Article 2 of Directive 2011/36/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 5 April 2011 on preventing and combating trafficking in human beings and protecting its victims, and replacing Council Framework Decision 2002/629/JHA (OJ 2011 L 101, p. 1)].

The obligation to exclude an economic operator shall also apply where the person convicted by final judgment is a member of the administrative, management or supervisory body of that economic operator or has powers of representation, decision or control therein.

2. An economic operator shall be excluded from participation in a procurement procedure where the contracting authority is aware that the economic operator is in breach of its obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions and where this has been established by a judicial or administrative decision having final and binding effect in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which it is established or with those of the Member State of the contracting authority.

Furthermore, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure an economic operator where the contracting authority can demonstrate by any appropriate means that the economic operator is in breach of its obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions.

This paragraph shall no longer apply when the economic operator has fulfilled its obligations by paying or entering into a binding arrangement with a view to paying the taxes or social security contributions due, including, where applicable, any interest accrued or fines.

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(a) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by any appropriate means a violation of applicable obligations referred to in Article 18(2);

(b) where the economic operator is bankrupt or is the subject of insolvency or winding-up proceedings, where its assets are being administered by a liquidator or by the court, where it is in an arrangement with creditors, where its business activities are suspended or it is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(d) where the contracting authority has sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has entered into agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition;

(e) where a conflict of interest within the meaning of Article 24 cannot be effectively remedied by other less intrusive measures;

(f) where a distortion of competition from the prior involvement of the economic operators in the preparation of the procurement procedure, as referred to in Article 41, cannot be remedied by other, less intrusive measures;

(g) where the economic operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract which led to early termination of that prior contract, damages or other comparable sanctions;

(h) where the economic operator has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, has withheld such information or is not able to submit the supporting documents required pursuant to Article 59; or

(i) where the economic operator has undertaken to unduly influence the decision-making process of the contracting authority, to obtain confidential information that may confer upon it undue advantages in the procurement procedure or to negligently provide misleading information that may have a material influence on decisions concerning exclusion, selection or award.

Notwithstanding point (b) of the first subparagraph, Member States may require or may provide for the possibility that the contracting authority does not exclude an economic operator which is in one of the situations referred to in that point, where the contracting authority has established that the economic operator in question will be able to perform the contract, taking into account the applicable national rules and measures on the continuation of business in the case of the situations referred to in point (b).

20 Article 58 of that directive states:

‘1. Selection criteria may relate to:

(a) suitability to pursue the professional activity;

(b) economic and financial standing;

(c) technical and professional ability.

Contracting authorities may only impose criteria referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 on economic operators as requirements for participation. They shall limit any requirements to those that are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. All requirements shall be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

3. With regard to economic and financial standing, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary economic and financial capacity to perform the contract. For that purpose, contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a certain minimum yearly turnover, including a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the contract. In addition, contracting authorities may require that economic operators provide information on their annual accounts showing the ratios, for instance, between assets and liabilities. They may also require an appropriate level of professional risk indemnity insurance.

The minimum yearly turnover that economic operators are required to have shall not exceed two times the estimated contract value, except in duly justified cases such as relating to the special risks attached to the nature of the works, services or supplies. The contracting authority shall indicate the main reasons for such a requirement in the procurement documents or the individual report referred to in Article 84.

The ratio, for instance, between assets and liabilities may be taken into consideration where the contracting authority specifies the methods and criteria for such consideration in the procurement documents. Such methods and criteria shall be transparent, objective and non-discriminatory.

Where a contract is divided into lots this Article shall apply in relation to each individual lot. However, the contracting authority may set the minimum yearly turnover that economic operators are required to have by reference to groups of lots in the event that the successful tenderer is awarded several lots to be executed at the same time.

Where contracts based on a framework agreement are to be awarded following a reopening of competition, the maximum yearly turnover requirement referred to in the second subparagraph of this paragraph shall be calculated on the basis of the expected maximum size of specific contracts that will be performed at the same time, or, where it is not known, on the basis of the estimated value of the framework agreement. In the case of dynamic purchasing systems, the maximum yearly turnover requirement referred to in the second subparagraph shall be calculated on the basis of the expected maximum size of specific contracts to be awarded under that system.

‘Public contracts for social and other specific services listed in Annex XIV shall be awarded in accordance with this Chapter, where the value of the contracts is equal to or greater than the threshold indicated in point (d) of Article 4.’

Directive 2014/25

22 Under Article 6(2) of Directive 2014/25:

‘A contract which is intended to cover several activities shall be subject to the rules applicable to the activity for which it is principally intended.’

23 Article 11 of that directive provides:

‘This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.’

Italian law

24 Article 5(9) of decreto legislativo n. 50 – Attuazione delle direttive 2014/23/UE, 2014/24/UE e 2014/25/UE sull’aggiudicazione dei contratti di concessione, sugli appalti pubblici e sulle procedure d’appalto degli enti erogatori nei settori dell’acqua, dell’energia, dei trasporti e dei servizi postali, nonché per il riordino della disciplina vigente in materia di contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture (Legislative Decree No 50 implementing Directives 2014/23/EU, 2014/24/EU and 2014/25/EU on the award of concession contracts, on public procurement and on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, and reforming the existing provisions in relation to public works, service and supply contracts) of 18 April 2016 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016; ‘Legislative Decree No 50/2016), states:

‘Where the provisions in force authorise the formation of mixed companies for the performance and management of public works or for the organisation and management of a service of general interest, the private partner must be selected by means of a procedure for the award of a public contract.’

25 Article 4 of Legislative Decree No 175 – Testo unico in materia di società a partecipazione pubblica (Legislative Decree No 175 establishing the Consolidated Law on publicly owned companies) of 19 August 2016 (GURI No 210 of 8 September 2016; 'Legislative Decree No 175/2016') provides that the objectives pursued by public authorities when where they create companies in which they have a shareholding are to be subject to a double constraint. First, they must be companies whose purpose is to undertake activities that are strictly necessary to achieve the institutional objectives of the authority concerned. Second, the activities to be undertaken must fall within those expressly indicated in paragraph 2 of that article, namely, inter alia, the generation of a service of general interest, including the establishment and operation of networks and facilities used for those services and the organisation and management of a service of general interest through a partnership contract referred to in Article 180 of Legislative Decree No 50/2016, with a contractor selected in accordance with the detailed rules laid down in Article 17(1) and (2) of Legislative Decree No 175/2016.

26 Article 7(5) of Legislative Decree No 175/2016 requires private partners to be selected in advance by means of a public procurement procedure, in accordance with Article 5(9) of Legislative Decree No 50/2016.

27 Article 17(1) of Legislative Decree No 175/2016 is worded as follows:

'In public-private mixed companies, the percentage participation of the private partner may not be less than 30%, and that partner must be selected via a public procurement procedure in accordance with Article 5(9) of [Legislative Decree No 50/2016]. which covers both the subscription or the acquisition of the participation by the private partner and the award of the contract or concession forming the sole object of the activities of the semi-public company'.

28 According to Article 17(2) of Legislative Decree No 175/2016:

'The private partner must meet the qualification requirements laid down in the legal or regulatory provisions in relation to the purpose for which the company has been created …'.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

29 On 4 September 2018, the city of Rome issued a call for tenders seeking, first, to appoint a partner in order to form a company with mixed public and private capital ('a semi-public company') and, second, to award that company a contract to manage the 'integrated school service', valued at EUR 277 479 616.21. According to the tender documents, the city of Rome was to own 51% of the shares in that company, with the remaining 49% to be acquired by its partner, which was also to bear the entire operational risk.

30 Only one tender was submitted by a consortium which was in the process of being formed, consisting of Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep. It was envisaged that that consortium would be 10% owned by Rekeep, as principal, and 90% by Roma Multiservizi, as the lead company, and that those two companies would hold a stake in the semi-public company to be formed with the city of Rome, in proportion to their participation in that consortium.

31 Roma Multiservizi, established in 1994 by the city of Rome, is 51% owned by AMA SpA, while the remainder of its capital is owned by Rekeep and La Venenta Servizi SpA. AMA is, itself, wholly owned by that city.

32 On 1 March 2019, the consortium in the process of being formed consisting of Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep was excluded from the ongoing procedure on the ground that, taking into account AMA's participation in the capital of Roma Multiservizi, the city of Rome, in practice, would have owned 73.5% of the semi-public company which would have been formed with that consortium, thus exceeding the limit of 51% set out in the call for tenders and bringing the share of risk capital in that company owned by private operators below the 49% threshold.

33 That exclusion decision was challenged by Rekeep and Roma Multiservizi before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy). That court dismissed their actions by two judgments delivered on 18 June 2019.

34 Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep brought an appeal against those two judgments before the referring court.

35 During the appeal proceedings, the city of Rome awarded, following a negotiated procedure, the contract for the ‘integrated school service’ to the Consorzio Nazionale Servizi Soc. coop. (CNS). That award was suspended by the referring court.

36 In its request for a preliminary ruling, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) states, first, that under the applicable national legislation, where semi-public companies have as their object the carrying out of public works or the organisation and management of a service of general interest, by means of a partnership contract with a contractor selected in accordance with the detailed rules laid down in Article 17(1) and (2) of Legislative Decree No 175/2016, the private person’s participation may not be less than 30% and the selection of that private partner must be made through the award of a public contract.

37 The referring court notes, in that regard, that the lawfulness of the maximum participation of the contracting authority in a semi-public company has not been challenged before it and that it is required only to examine whether account should be taken of the indirect participation of the city of Rome in the capital of Roma Multiservizi in order to determine whether that limit was complied with.

38 In the second place, according to that court, the direct award of a service to a semi-public company is not, as such, incompatible with EU law, provided, first, that the call for tenders organised, for the purposes of selecting the private partner of the contracting authority in the successful company, is conducted in compliance with Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, and with the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency and, second, that the criteria for selecting that private partner are related not only to the latter’s capital contribution but also to its technical capacities and the characteristics of its tender, with regard to the specific services to be provided, so that the selection of the contractor may be regarded as resulting indirectly from the selection of the partner of the contracting authority. That partner should, therefore, be a suitable operational partner and not merely a shareholder, the justification for its participation being precisely the lack, within the public authority, of the necessary expertise which the private partner possesses.

39 According to the referring court, it is in order to ensure such suitability that the Italian legislature set the minimum threshold for private participation in semi-public companies at 30%. It states that the cap of 70% on public participation in such companies corresponds to the threshold above which the activity of those companies may distort competition by depriving the relevant market of its attractiveness and by allowing the private partner to limit excessively the financial risk of its participation in those companies.

40 The referring court notes, in the third place, that if the percentage of the participation of the partner of the contracting authority in the capital of the semi-public company were to be calculated taking into account only the legal form of that partner, the exclusion of the consortium proposed by Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep from the award procedure at issue in the main proceedings would not be justified. By contrast, if account had to be taken of the indirect participation of the city of Rome in the capital of Roma Multiservizi, the private partner’s share resulting from the participation in the consortium proposed by Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep in the semi-public company, formally set at 49%, would in reality be 26.5%, which would give rise to a situation of market inefficiency and constitute a breach of the principle of competition in so far as that partner could unduly benefit from the advantages of the public participation and thus ensure a substantial profitable position.

41 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) For the purposes of determining the minimum limit of 30% participation by the private partner in a future semi-public company – the limit deemed appropriate by the Italian legislature in implementation of the principles [of EU law] set in relation to European case-law – is it compatible with [EU] law and the correct interpretation of recitals 14 and 32 and Articles 12 and

18 of Directive [2014/24] and of Article 30 of Directive [2014/23], with reference also to Article 107 TFEU, for consideration to be given solely to the legal form/on-paper composition of that partner or may – or in fact must – the authority launching the tender also consider its own indirect participation in the private partner submitting a bid?

(2) If the answer to the above question is yes, is it consistent and in line with the principles [of EU law], and in particular with the principles of fair competition, proportionality and appropriateness, for the authority launching the tender to be able to exclude from the tender a private partner submitting a bid, where the effective participation of that private partner in the future semi-public company is in fact less than 30%, on account of the direct or indirect public participation identified?'

Admissibility of the questions referred

42 According to settled case-law, questions relating to EU law enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred by a national court for a preliminary ruling only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (judgments of 15 December 1995, Bosman, C-415/93, EU:C:1995:463, paragraphs 59 and 61, and of 25 November 2021, État luxembourgeois (Information on a group of taxpayers), C-437/19, EU:C:2021:953, paragraph 81).

43 The need to provide an interpretation of EU law which will be of use to the referring court requires that court to define the factual and legislative context of the questions it is asking or, at the very least, to explain the factual circumstances on which those questions are based. The order for reference must also set out the precise reasons why the national court is unsure as to the interpretation of EU law and considers it necessary to refer a question to the Court for a preliminary ruling (judgment of 10 March 2022, Commissioners for Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs (Comprehensive sickness insurance), C-247/20, EU:C:2022:177, paragraph 75 and the case-law cited).

44 The referring court does not explain either the reasons why it considers that it is necessary to interpret Article 107 TFEU or the link it establishes between that provision and the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings.

45 On the other hand, contrary to what CNS maintains, the referring court, first, identifies with sufficient precision the provisions of Directives 2014/23 and 2014/24 which it seeks to have interpreted and, second, does not ask the Court to apply EU law to the dispute in the main proceedings.

46 It follows from the foregoing that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling are admissible, except, as regards the first of those questions, in so far as it concerns the interpretation of Article 107 TFEU.

Substance

47 The dispute at issue in the main proceedings concerns the exclusion of the consortium proposed by Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep from the procedure initiated on 4 September 2018, which – before it was abandoned by the city of Rome precisely because of the exclusion of that consortium, which had been the only one to submit a tender – was intended for the conclusion of an agreement the object of which was, first, to form a semi-public company with an economic operator selected by that city and, second, to entrust to that company the provision of a set of services ancillary to main school activities, consisting essentially of general support, handling services, cleaning services, collection and delivery services and assistance services for private school transport. It follows that the objective of such a procedure was to conclude a mixed contract.

48 It is apparent, moreover, from the order for reference that the city of Rome took the view that, if it had formed the semi-public company at issue in the main proceedings with the consortium proposed by Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep, it would in practice have owned 73.5% of that company, whereas the relevant national legislation limits the maximum share that a contracting authority may hold in such a company to 70% and the call-for-tenders documents drawn up by that city set the participation of that city in the capital of that company at 51%.

49 However, the city of Rome reached the conclusion that, in practice, it would have owned 73.5% of the semi-public company to be formed only because it took account of the fact that one of its subsidiaries, namely AMA, which it owned entirely, held 51% of the shares in Roma Multiservizi.

50 Furthermore, it is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling and from the answers to the questions put by the Court that the exclusion of the consortium proposed by Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep from the procedure at issue in the main proceedings was justified, at the very least, both by the impossibility of complying, if that group was selected by the city of Rome, with the maximum participation limit of that city in the semi-public company, laid down by the relevant national legislation, and by the fact that it was impossible to comply with the stricter limit on such participation that was set out in the call-for-tenders documents.

51 In order to provide a useful answer to the referring court, it is therefore sufficient to examine whether, in order to examine whether that limit is complied with, EU law precludes a contracting authority from also taking into account its indirect participation in an economic operator which has expressed an interest in becoming its partner.

52 On the basis of those observations, it must be held that, by its two questions referred for a preliminary ruling, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 2014/24 and Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may not exclude an economic operator from a procedure seeking, first, to form a semi-public company and, second, to award that company a service contract, where that exclusion is justified by the fact that, on account of the indirect participation of that contracting authority in the capital of that economic operator, the maximum participation of that contracting authority in the capital of that company, as determined in the call-for-tenders documents, would, in practice, be exceeded if it selected that economic operator as its partner.

The legal regime applicable to the contract at issue in the main proceedings

53 In the first place, it must be borne in mind, first of all, that the creation of a joint venture by a contracting authority and a private economic operator is not covered as such by the rules of EU law on public contracts or services concessions. That being so, it is necessary to ensure that a capital transaction does not, in reality, conceal the award to a private partner of contracts which might be considered to be ‘public contracts’ or ‘concessions’. Furthermore, the fact that a private entity and a contracting entity cooperate within a mixed-capital entity cannot justify failure to observe those rules when awarding such a contract to that private entity or to that mixed capital entity (see, to that effect, judgment of 22 December 2010, Mehiläinen and Terveystalo Healthcare, C-215/09, EU:C:2010:807, paragraphs 33 and 34).

54 Next, as the Advocate General stated, in essence, in points 57 to 59 of his Opinion, it is apparent from the order for reference and from the answers to the questions put by the Court that the specific features of the mixed contract at issue in the main proceedings required that both components of the mixed contract be concluded with a single partner having, as the documents in the call for tenders required, both the financial capacity necessary to purchase 49% of the capital of the semi-public company to be formed, and the financial and technical capacity necessary to be responsible, in practice, for the provision of all services ancillary to the school activities of the city of Rome. It follows that, subject to verification by the referring court, the two components of the contract at issue in the main proceedings appear to be inseparably linked and form an indivisible whole. (see, to that effect, judgment of 6 May 2010, Club Hotel Loutraki and Others, C-145/08 and C-149/08, EU:C:2010:247, paragraphs 53 and 54).

55 In such a case, the transaction at issue must be examined as a whole for the purposes of its legal classification and must be assessed on the basis of the rules which govern the aspect which constitutes the main object or predominant feature of the contract (judgments of 6 May 2010, Club Hotel Loutraki and Others, C-145/08 and C-149/08, EU:C:2010:247, paragraph 48, and of 22 December 2010, Mehiläinen and Terveystalo Healthcare, C-215/09, EU:C:2010:807, paragraph 36).

56 In that regard, it is apparent from the order for reference and the replies to the questions put by the Court that the essential objective of the procedure at issue in the main proceedings was not to create a semi-public company, but to require the partner of the city of Rome, within that company, to bear the entire operational risk connected with the provision of services ancillary to that city's school activities, that company being conceived solely as the means by which that city considered that the quality of the services would be best ensured.

57 Moreover, there is nothing to indicate that the mere ownership of part of the capital of the same semi-public company could constitute a significant source of income for the partner of the city of Rome.

58 It therefore appears, subject to verification by the referring court, that the component relating to the supply of services ancillary to main school activities constitutes the main object and the predominant feature of the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

59 In those circumstances, the answer to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling must be based on the premiss that the two parts of the contract at issue in the main proceedings constitute an indivisible whole and that its predominant component is that of allocating to the semi-public company the supply of services ancillary to the school activities of the city of Rome. Therefore, the legal rules applicable to the contract at issue in the main proceedings, considered in its entirety, are those which govern that component.

60 In the second place, it must be noted that the referring court did not rule on whether the contract at issue in the main proceedings sought to grant a services concession, capable of falling within the scope of Directive 2014/23, or a public service contract, capable of falling under Directive 2014/24, to the semi-public company. The first question refers without distinction to those two directives, even though their scope is mutually exclusive.

61 In that regard, it should be recalled that a public service contract differs from a services concession because of the nature of the consideration granted to the contractor for the services which it provides. Thus, the consideration provided by the tenderer to which a public contract is awarded consists of a price paid by the contracting authority, whereas the consideration for a concessionaire consists of the right to exploit the service which is the subject of the concession, that right being accompanied, where appropriate, by a price. The award of a concession therefore entails the transfer to the concessionaire of an operating risk (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 September 2009, Eurawasser, C-206/08, EU:C:2009:540, paragraph 51, and of 15 October 2009, Acoset, C-196/08, EU:C:2009:628, paragraph 39).

62 It is for the referring court to determine, in the light of the foregoing, whether the award to the semi-public company, at issue in the main proceedings, of the management of services ancillary to the school activities of the city of Rome, constituted a public service contract or a services concession. In order to provide a useful answer to the referring court, it is necessary, however, in the context of the present judgment, to examine the questions referred for a preliminary ruling having regard to each of those two situations.

63 Second, in so far as, as has been pointed out in paragraph 47 of the present judgment, assistance services for private school transport form part of the services covered by the contract at issue in the main proceedings, it is necessary to examine whether that fact is such as to affect the applicability of Directive 2014/23 or Directive 2014/24 to the procedure for the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

64 In that regard, it should be noted, first, that, in accordance with Article 7 of Directive 2014/24, the scope of that directive does not extend to public contracts in the transport services sector, as defined in Article 11 of Directive 2014/25.

65 That being so, it is not apparent from the documents before the Court that the assistance services for school transport at issue in the main proceedings consist of the operation of a network intended to provide a transport service, in particular, a bus transport service, under the conditions laid down by the competent national authority, such as conditions on the routes to be served, capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service, within the meaning of Article 11.

66 In any event, it follows from Article 3(5) of Directive 2014/24 that, in the case of contract which have as their subject procurement covered by that directive and procurement for the pursuit of an activity which is subject to Directive 2014/25, account must be taken of Articles 5 and 6 of Directive 2014/25. Article 6(2) of Directive 2014/25 provides that a contract intended to cover several activities is to be subject to the rules applicable to the activity for which it is principally intended.

67 It is not apparent from the file submitted to the Court that the assistance services for private school transport, provided for by the contract at issue in the main proceedings, even if they satisfy the conditions laid down in Article 11 of Directive 2014/25, constitute the principal activity for which such a contract was concluded.

68 Second, by virtue of Article 10(3) thereof, Directive 2014/23 does not apply to concessions for public passenger transport services, within the meaning of Regulation No 1370/2007.

69 That said, it is even less apparent from that file that the provision of assistance for private school transport, covered by the contract at issue in the main proceedings, must be regarded as public passenger transport services to which Regulation No 1370/2007 applies.

Directive 2014/24

70 If the component of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, relating to the award of services ancillary to school activities, were to be classified as a ‘public service contract’ within the meaning of Article 2(1)(9) of Directive 2014/24, the following findings would have to be made as a preliminary point.

71 First, it is apparent from the order for reference that the estimated value of such a contract, and therefore of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, as a whole, is well above the thresholds above which, in accordance with Article 4 of Directive 2014/24, public service contracts fall within the scope of that directive.

72 Second, it is necessary to examine, as requested by the referring court, whether the contract at issue in the main proceedings is nevertheless capable of falling outside the scope of that directive, by virtue of Article 12 thereof.

73 In that regard, it should be noted, first, that Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 provides that a contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities is to fall outside the scope of that directive where the conditions laid down in that provision are fulfilled.

74 Without it being necessary to examine whether, in the present case, the semi-public company at issue in the main proceedings could have been regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 2(1)(1) of Directive 2014/24, it is sufficient to note that, in order for it to be covered by Article 12(4) of that directive, a cooperation agreement cannot have the effect of placing a private undertaking in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors (judgment of 28 May 2020, Informatikgesellschaft für Softwckare-Enckare, C-796/18, EU:C:2020:395, paragraph 76). As the Advocate General observed in point 78 of his Opinion, that would necessarily have been the case here, in view of the involvement of private capital in the semi-public company to be formed, with the result that that provision cannot exclude the procedure at issue in the main proceedings from the scope of Directive 2014/24.

75 Second, nor does it appear that the semi-public company at issue in the main proceedings could have satisfied the conditions laid down in Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24 for it to be regarded as an in-house entity of the city of Rome.

76 In that regard, while it is true that, under that provision, an in-house entity may include forms of direct private capital participation it is also necessary that the latter do not have a controlling or blocking capacity, that they are required by national legislative provisions, in accordance with the Treaties, and that they do not exert a decisive influence on that company, since the contracting authority must, on the contrary, retain such influence.

77 As regards the condition that those forms of participation must be imposed by national legislative provisions, it must be held that the formation of the semi-public company, at issue in the main proceedings, and, consequently, the participation of a private partner in that company's capital, does not appear to stem from a legal obligation imposed on the city of Rome, but from that contracting authority's freedom to choose a public-private partnership procedure in order to manage services ancillary to school activities.

78 Third, it should be noted that Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24 lay down a simplified regime for the award of public contracts relating to the social and special services listed in Annex XIV to that directive. It is apparent from the answers given to the questions put by the Court that the contract at issue in the main proceedings appears to have had, in part, the object of awarding the services listed in that annex.

79 Under the second subparagraph of Article 3(2) of Directive 2014/24, the rules applicable to that type of mixed public contract are those governing the award of the main subject of the contract in question, that main subject being, in itself, determined on the basis of the highest of the respective values of the services concerned, as estimated.

80 In the light of the answers given to the questions put by the Court, it appears that the estimated value of the services at issue in the main proceedings, capable of falling within Annex XIV to Directive 2014/24, could be lower than the estimated value of the other services forming the subject matter of the contract at issue in the main proceedings. Therefore, it is necessary to start from the premiss that Articles 74 to 77 of that directive are not applicable in the present case, which is, however, a matter for the referring court to determine.

81 In the light of those observations, it is necessary to determine whether the general rules for the award of public contracts, as laid down in Directive 2014/24, preclude an economic operator from being excluded from the procedure for the award of a mixed contract, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, on the ground that, after having taken into account its indirect participation in that economic operator, the contracting authority considered that its contribution to the semi-public company to be formed, in practice, would go beyond what was provided for in the tender documents if it selected that economic operator as its partner.

82 In the first place, it should be noted that, in the context of a mixed contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings, a public service contract is awarded without that contract having been the subject, as such, of an award procedure in accordance with the requirements of Directive 2014/24.

83 That said, those requirements must be regarded as having been complied with when such a public contract is awarded where the economic operator with which the contracting authority is required to form the semi-public company to which that contract is awarded has been selected in accordance with a procedure which complies with those requirements. It follows that that procedure must make it possible, inter alia, to select the partner of the contracting authority to which the operational activity and the management of the service covered by the public contract is entrusted, in accordance with the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination, free competition and transparency. The criteria for selecting that partner cannot, therefore, be based solely on the capital provided, but must enable candidates to establish, in addition to their ability to become a shareholder, primarily their technical capacity to provide the services which are the subject of the public contract and the economic and other advantages of their tender. (see, by analogy, judgment of 15 October 2009, Acoset, C-196/08, EU:C:2009:628, paragraphs 59 and 60).

84 In the second place, it is apparent from Article 58(1) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 that a contracting authority may use selection criteria which seek, inter alia, to exclude from the award procedure candidates or tenderers which do not offer sufficient guarantees as to their economic and financial capacity to perform the public contract concerned, provided, first, that those criteria are appropriate for ensuring that a candidate or tenderer has such a capacity and, second, that they are related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

85 In that regard, it should be noted, first, that it is in the very nature of a mixed contract, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, that the contracting authority determines the distribution, between itself and its partner, of the capital of the semi-public company to be formed.

86 It follows that, in the context of its application to such a mixed contract, Article 58(1) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 allows a contracting authority to require economic operators which have expressed an interest in becoming its partner and in assuming responsibility for the actual performance of the service contract awarded to the company thus formed, to demonstrate that they have the economic and financial capacity necessary both for the formation of that company and for the performance of that contract.

87 Second, in so far as the use of a semi-public company can be explained, in particular, by the contracting authority's concern to limit both its investment in that company and the ensuing financial uncertainties which follow from it, that contracting authority must still be allowed to take account of the participation which it holds, albeit indirectly, in the capital of economic operators which have expressed an interest in becoming its partner. Even where it is indirect, such participation exposes, in principle, the contracting authority to additional uncertainty to that which it would have incurred if it had not held, directly or indirectly, any share in the capital of its partner.

88 A contracting authority must therefore be able, in respect of the qualitative selection of the economic operator intended to become its partner, to exclude any candidate in which it holds shares, even indirectly, where that shareholding has the effect of in practice infringing the allocation of the capital of the semi-capital company between that contracting authority and its shareholder, as determined by the contract documents, and thereby calling into question the economic and financial capacity of its partner to bear, without the involvement of the contracting authority, the obligations arising from the contracting authority's contract.

89 Such a requirement therefore makes it possible to ensure, as required by Article 58(1) of Directive 2014/24, that economic operators have the economic and financial standing necessary to perform the obligations arising from the mixed contract concerned.

90 Furthermore, subject to verification by the referring court, it does not appear to go beyond what is necessary to guarantee the objective pursued by the contracting authority, which is not to make a financial commitment, even indirectly, in excess of the share in the semi-public company which that contracting authority has demonstrated its intention to purchase in the contract documents. Such a requirement could be regarded as disproportionate only in the event that the applicable national legislation or the relevant contractual provisions exclude the fact that, in the context of the activities of the semi-public company formed by a contracting authority and an economic operator in which that contracting authority owns, directly or indirectly, part of the capital, that contracting authority may be exposed to additional economic risk, even an indirect economic risk, on account of such a participation in the capital of its partner.

91 In the third place, it must be added that the principles of equal treatment, referred to in paragraph 83 of this judgment, also require that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract documents, so that, first, all reasonably well-informed candidates and tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenderers' profile and bids submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice, C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034, paragraph 63, and of 17 June 2021, Simonsen & Weel, C-23/20, EU:C:2021:490, paragraph 61).

92 It is therefore for the referring court to ascertain whether, in the present case, it could be clearly, precisely and unequivocally inferred from the contract documents that the indirect participations of the city of Rome in the capital of economic operators who had applied to become its partner would be taken into account in order to determine whether they had sufficient economic and financial capacity.

93 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that Article 58 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may exclude an economic operator from the procedure seeking, first, to form a semi-public company and, second, to award that company a service contract, where that exclusion is justified by the fact that, on the basis of the indirect participation of that contracting authority in that economic operator, the maximum participation of that contracting authority in that company, as determined in the call-for-tenders documents would be, in practice, exceeded if that contracting authority selected that economic operator as its partner, in so far as that excess participation serves to increase the financial uncertainty borne by that contracting authority.

94 In the event that the component of the contract at issue in the main proceedings relating to the award of services ancillary to school activities should be classified as a ‘services concession’ within the meaning of Article 5(1)(b) of Directive 2014/23, it should be noted, in the first place, that the estimated value of that component, and therefore of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, in its entirety, far exceeds the threshold above which, under Article 8, that directive is applicable.

95 In the second place, for reasons similar to those set out in paragraphs 73 to 77 above, Article 17(1) and (4) of that directive does not appear to be applicable to the procedure at issue in the main proceedings.

96 In the third place, for reasons similar to those set out in paragraphs 78 to 80 above, it is appropriate to start from the premiss, which it is, however, for the referring court to ascertain, according to which, under the second subparagraph of Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/23, the services concession at issue in the main proceedings is not subject to the simplified procurement regime laid down in Article 19 of that directive, since the estimated value of the services at issue in the main proceedings, which may fall within the scope of Annex IV to that directive, does not appear to be greater than the value of the other services covered by the concession.

97 In the fourth place, for reasons similar to those set out in paragraphs 82 to 93 of the present judgment, it must be held that Article 38 of Directive 2014/23 permits a contracting authority to take account of any indirect participation in the capital of economic operators which have expressed an interest in becoming its partner in order to determine whether the formation of the semi-public company with such operators would not, in practice, prevent it from complying with the limit on its participation in that company which it imposed itself. Article 38 also permits it, in principle, to exclude from the procedure for the award of a services concession any economic operator which, because the contracting authority owns, albeit indirectly, part of its capital, cannot be a partner of that contracting authority without in practice breaching the maximum participation in that semi-public company which the contracting authority itself determined.

98 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that Article 38 of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may exclude an economic operator from the procedure seeking, first, to form a semi-public company and, second, to award that company a services concession, where that exclusion is justified by the fact that, on the basis of the indirect participation of that contracting authority in that economic operator, the maximum participation of that contracting authority in that company, as determined in the call-for-tenders documents would be, in practice, exceeded if that contracting authority selected that economic operator as its partner, in so far as that excess participation serves to increase the financial uncertainty borne by that contracting authority.

Costs

99 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 58 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2365 of 18 December 2017 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may exclude an economic operator from the procedure seeking, first, to form a semi-public company and, second, to award that company a service contract, where that exclusion is justified by the fact that, on the basis of the indirect participation of that contracting authority in that economic operator, the maximum participation of that contracting authority in that company, as determined in the call-for-tenders documents would be, in practice, exceeded if that contracting authority selected that economic operator as its partner, in so far as the excess participation serves to increase the financial uncertainty borne by that contracting authority.

2. Article 38 of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2366 of 18 December 2017 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may exclude an economic operator from the procedure seeking, first, to form a semi-public company and, second, to award that company a services concession, where that exclusion is justified by the fact that, on the basis of the indirect participation of that contracting authority in that economic operator, the maximum participation of that contracting authority in that company, as determined in the call-for-tenders documents would be, in practice, exceeded if that contracting authority selected that economic operator as its partner, in so far as that excess participation serves to increase the financial uncertainty borne by that contracting authority.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
delivered on 24 February 2022 (1)

Case C-332/20

Roma Multiservizi SpA, Rekeep SpA
v
Roma Capitale,
Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Concession contracts – Award of the management of an integrated school service to a semi-public company – Appointment of the private partner under a tender procedure – Requirement that the private partner holds a participation of at least 30% in the capital of the semi-public company – Indirect participation by the contracting authority in the capital of the private partner)

I. Introduction

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling provides the Court with the opportunity to clarify its case-law on how EU law views institutionalised public-private partnerships (IPPPs), which are sometimes used by contracting authorities in place of 'traditional' public procurement or concession contracts.

2. Although there are no binding provisions of EU law that expressly govern IPPPs, (2) an IPPP is however defined by the European Commission as a form of cooperation between public and private partners who establish a mixed-capital entity that performs public contracts or concessions (3) and has been the subject of case-law of the Court. The Court has taken the view, inter alia, that EU law does not, as a rule, preclude the use of a procedure in the context of an IPPP by which, first, a private partner is selected and, second, a contract or a concession is awarded to a public-private entity to be formed. (4)

3. The lack of provisions of EU law governing IPPPs appears to lie at the heart of the difficulties raised by this reference for a preliminary ruling, difficulties which are reflected in the structure and the content of this Opinion. From the perspective of EU law, the legal issue raised in the present case is neither clearly defined nor specifically contextualised.

4. Detailed analysis of this reference for a preliminary has led me to conclude that the questions submitted by the referring court concern whether the way in which the contracting authority calculated the private participation in the capital entity to be formed and subsequently excluded a tenderer from the tender procedure, is compatible with Directive 2014/23/EU (5) and/or Directive 2014/24/EU. (6)

II. Legal context

A. European Union law

1. Directive 2014/23

5. Article 3 of Directive 2014/23 provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the concession award procedure, including the estimate of the value, shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators or certain works, supplies or services.

2. Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall aim at ensuring the transparency of the award procedure and of the performance of the contract, while complying with Article 28.’

6. Article 30(1) and (2) of that directive states:

‘1. The contracting authority or contracting entity shall have the freedom to organise the procedure leading to the choice of concessionaire subject to compliance with this Directive.

2. The design of the concession award procedure shall respect the principles laid down in Article 3. In particular during the concession award procedure, the contracting authority or contracting entity shall not provide information in a discriminatory manner which may give some candidates or tenderers an advantage over others.’

7. Article 38(1) of the Directive provides:

‘Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall verify the conditions for participation relating to the professional and technical ability and the financial and economic standing of the candidates or tenderers, on the basis of self-declarations, reference or references to be submitted as proof in accordance with the requirements specified in the concession notice that shall be non-discriminatory and proportionate to the subject matter of the concession. The conditions for participation shall be related and proportionate to the need to ensure the ability of the concessionaire to perform the concession, taking into account the subject matter of the concession and the purpose of ensuring genuine competition.’

2. Directive 2014/24

8. Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

9. Article 58(1) of that directive states:

‘Selection criteria may relate to:

(a) suitability to pursue the professional activity;

(b) economic and financial standing;

(c) technical and professional ability.

Contracting authorities may only impose criteria referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 on economic operators as requirements for participation. They shall limit any requirements to those that are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. All requirements shall be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.'

B. Italian law

10. In Italian law, the rules on mixed companies are governed by decreto legislativo n. 175 – Testo unico in materia di società a partecipazione pubblica (Legislative Decree No 175 – Consolidated text on publicly owned companies) of 19 August 2016, (7) in the version thereof applicable to the disputes in the main proceedings ('Legislative Decree No 175').

11. According to Article 1 of Legislative Decree No 175, the purpose of that decree is to ensure that public participations are managed effectively, to protect and promote competition and the market, and to streamline and reduce public expenditure. The decree provides that public authorities may, for the purpose of managing the relevant activities set out in its Article 4, choose between in-house management, via a company in which it holds 100% of the capital, and forming a semi-public company, and lays down detailed rules governing that second option so that it is compatible with EU law.

12. With regard to that second option, Article 17(1) of Legislative Decree No 175 states:

'In public-private mixed companies, the percentage participation of the private partner may not be less than 30%, and that partner must be selected via a public procurement procedure in accordance with Article 5(9) of Legislative Decree No 50 of 2016 [(8)] which covers both the subscription or the acquisition of the participation by the private partner and the award of the contract or concession forming the sole object of the activities of the mixed company.'

III. Facts of the case in the main proceedings

13. In the course of 2018, the city of Rome launched a call for tenders with a dual purpose: first, to select a private partner with whom it would form a public-private mixed company ('the mixed company to be formed') and, second, to award to that company the integrated school service, representing an estimated EUR 277 479 616.21, for which the city of Rome has responsibility. According to the tender documents, the city of Rome was to hold 51% of the shares in the company with the remaining 49% to be acquired by the private partner, who was required to bear the operational risk in its entirety.

14. A bid was submitted by a consortium of the companies Roma Multiservizi SpA and Rekeep SpA.

15. By Decision No 435 of 1 March 2019 ('the exclusion decision'), that consortium was excluded from the ongoing procedure because 51% of Roma Multiservizi was owned by the company AMA SpA, the capital of which was wholly owned by the city of Rome, and accepting the consortium's bid would mean that the city of Rome would in fact effectively hold a 73.5% participation in the mixed company to be formed, (9) thus exceeding the 51% ceiling set in the tender documents.

16. Rekeep and Roma Multiservizi challenged that decision before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy), which dismissed their actions by two judgments delivered on 18 June 2019.

17. Rekeep and Roma Multiservizi appealed against those two judgments before the referring court.

18. It is apparent from those parties' observations that, whilst their appeals were being examined, the city of Rome awarded the contract to perform the service at issue, on completion of a negotiated procedure, to CNS.

IV. The procedure before the Court and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

19. It is in those circumstances that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), by decision of 13 February 2020, received at the Court on 22 July 2020, decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) For the purposes of determining the minimum limit of 30% participation by the private partner in a future semi-public company – the limit deemed appropriate by the Italian legislature in implementation of the principles [of EU law] set in relation to European case-law – is it compatible with [EU] law and the correct interpretation of recitals 14 and 32 and Articles 12 and 18 of Directive [2014/24] and of Article 30 of Directive [2014/23], with reference also to Article 107 TFEU, for consideration to be given solely to the legal form/on-paper composition of that partner or may – or in fact must – the authority launching the tender also consider its own indirect participation in the private partner submitting a bid?

(2) If the answer to the above question is in the affirmative, is it consistent and in line with the principles of EU law, and in particular with the principles of fair competition, proportionality and appropriateness, for the authority launching the tender to be able to exclude from the tender a private partner submitting a bid, where the effective participation of that private partner in the future semi-public company is in fact less than 30%, on account of the direct or indirect public participation identified?'

20. Written observations were submitted by the parties to the main proceedings, CNS and the Commission. No hearing was held.

V. Analysis

A. The subject matter of the questions referred

21. It is clear from reading the request for a preliminary ruling that, in the light of the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, the referring court is considering two requirements concerning the public participation and the private participation in the mixed company to be formed.

22. The first requirement concerns the 30% minimum participation threshold to be satisfied by the private partner in order to hold a capital stake in a mixed capital entity to be formed, in accordance with Article 17(1) of Legislative Decree No 175. That minimum private participation threshold is the logical corollary of a 70% maximum public participation threshold.

23. The second requirement is that set, in the present case, by the contracting authority itself in the call for tenders, namely the 49% participation of the private partner and the 51% participation of the contracting authority.

24. The two questions referred for a preliminary ruling, as formulated by the referring court, refer only to the 30% minimum participation threshold to be satisfied by the private partner in order to hold a capital stake in a mixed company. I must point out, in that context, that the referring court does not ask the Court about the validity of that threshold in the light of EU law. The wording of the questions suggests that, by those questions, the referring court is seeking to ascertain whether EU law precludes, for the purpose of determining such a 30% minimum participation threshold, account from being taken of the contracting authority's indirect participation in the share capital of that private partner.

25. However, the grounds stated for the request for a preliminary ruling are not as unequivocal vis-à-vis the subject matter of the questions referred.

26. First, in line with the wording of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, the referring court states that, in order to decide the case in the main proceedings, ‘it is necessary to establish whether, for the purposes of ensuring the correct thresholds for participation in the mixed company [to be formed] (no more than 70% public participation, no less than 30% private participation), reference should be made only to the legal nature of the private partner or, where that private partner has public participation, whether consideration should also be given to that public participation’.

27. Second, the referring court also states that the lawfulness of the limits on public participation (51%) and on private participation (49%) has not been challenged in the dispute in the main proceedings. Accordingly, it takes the view that ‘[that] dispute concerns the lawfulness of the decision by a contracting authority which, for the purposes of examining compliance with the 51% ceiling of its participation in the new company that was to be formed, considered that account also had to be taken of that authority’s [indirect participation in that company]’.

28. In the light of the ambiguity of the subject matter of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, I am bound to note, in the first place, that the referring court states that the lex specialis of the call for tenders, the provisions of which are ‘effective’ in the case in the main proceedings, specifies the exact public and private participation, respectively 51% and 49%. (10) It therefore appears that, in the dispute in the main proceedings, which concerns the exclusion decision, the referring court is asking primarily about the public and private participation requirements laid down in the tender documents.

29. In the second place, when asked whether the exclusion decision was formally justified by an infringement of Article 17(1) of Legislative Decree No 175 or by the failure to comply with the capital distribution requirement laid down in the tender documents, most of the parties favoured that second scenario.

30. Roma Multiservizi gave a categorical response, stating that the exclusion decision invokes the alleged non-compliance with the distribution of share capital as set out in the tender documents.

31. The city of Rome initially stated that the bid submitted by the consortium concerned by the exclusion decision includes two irregularities relating to the two requirements concerning the public and private participation. However, it subsequently reproduced the grounds for that consortium’s exclusion, from which it is apparent that its exclusion is based on the finding that ‘the share of risk capital in the [mixed company to be formed] attributable to private investment is below 49% and manifestly fails to comply with the conditions set out in the tender documents and in the acts approved by the city council’.

32. In line with the city of Rome’s response, Rekeep stated that the reasoning in the exclusion decision refers only to the failure to comply with the capital shares specified in the tender documents, adding that Legislative Decree No 175 is mentioned in the preliminary considerations of that decision.

33. The Commission’s response appears implicitly to argue along the same lines. In its view, it is clear that the setting of the private participation at 49% – and the exclusion that follows as a result – is based solely on the limit laid down in Article 17 of Legislative Decree No 175. I infer from that fact that, in the Commission’s opinion, the exclusion follows directly from the failure to comply with the 49% private participation requirement laid down in the tender documents.

34. Only CNS is of the view that the exclusion decision is based both on the infringement of Article 17(1) of Legislative Decree No 175 and on non-compliance with the capital distribution requirement set out in the tender documents. However, the passages of that decision reproduced by CNS concern only the public and private participation requirements laid down in the call for tenders.

35. In the light of those clarifications, it should be concluded that, by its first question referred for a preliminary ruling, the referring court is seeking to ascertain whether, for the purpose of determining the private participation percentage in the mixed company to be formed, EU law precludes account from being taken of the contracting authority’s indirect participation in the share capital of a private partner submitting a bid.

36. Therefore, the second question referred for a preliminary ruling should be understood as meaning that the referring court is seeking to ascertain whether EU law precludes a contracting authority from excluding from the call for tenders a private partner submitting a bid whose effective participation in the mixed-capital entity to be formed does not comply with the requirement relating to the minimum private participation threshold set in the tender documents.

37. I must make a few additional comments regarding the questions referred for a preliminary ruling as thus reworded.

38. First of all, the original wording of the first question implies that the referring court is seeking to determine whether EU law precludes a contracting authority from taking into account not any public participation in the capital of the private partner submitting a bid, but rather only 'its own participation' in the capital of that partner ('may – or in fact must – the authority launching the tender consider its own indirect participation in the private partner submitting a bid?'). Several passages of the request for a preliminary ruling support such an interpretation not only of the public and private participation requirements laid down in the call for tenders (11) but also, even more importantly for the case in the main proceedings, of the exclusion decision. (12)

39. Next, by the first question referred for a preliminary ruling, as it is worded, the referring court asks whether account 'may – or in fact must –' be taken of such an indirect participation. However, it is established that, in the case in the main proceedings, the contracting authority did take account of its indirect participation. In order to review the exclusion decision, it is simply necessary to determine whether EU law precludes account from being taken of indirect participation.

40. Furthermore, the referring court states that the second question referred for a preliminary ruling arises if the first question is answered in the affirmative. However, as it was originally worded, the first question contains two alternatives ('[the provisions of EU law] preclude … consideration being given solely to the [direct participation] or [the contracting authority] may – or in fact must – consider [the indirect participation] in the private partner submitting a bid?'). In any case, the view should be taken that the second question is raised if the first question is answered to the effect that EU law does not preclude account from being taken of the contracting authority's indirect participation in the private partner submitting a bid.

41. Finally, in order for useful answers to be provided to the referring court, it is necessary to identify the regime applicable in the case in the main proceedings and the provisions of that regime requiring interpretation in order to settle the dispute before that court. Not all the provisions mentioned by the referring court in its reference for a preliminary ruling appear relevant. For that reason, some of the parties question the admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling.

B. Admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling and the applicable regime

42. In its first question, the referring court mentions several provisions of EU law without explicitly stating exactly why it was prompted to ask about their interpretation. As for the second question, it merely mentions the legal principles, in particular the principles of fair competition, proportionality and appropriateness, without mentioning any provision of EU law.

43. In that regard, the Commission takes the view that the first question referred for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible in so far as it concerns Article 107 TFEU, whereas CNS calls into question the admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling in its entirety. (13) I will examine those pleas of inadmissibility as part of my analysis of the request for a preliminary ruling, the goal of which is to identify the provisions of EU law relevant to the present case.

1. Directives 2014/23 and 2014/24

44. The first question referred for a preliminary ruling, as worded by the referring court, makes reference to both Directive 2014/23 and Directive 2014/24. Those directives lay down, respectively, the rules applicable to the procedures for the award of concession contracts and those applicable to public procurement procedures.

45. In order to identify the directive applicable here, consideration must be given to the subject matter of the call for tenders and the contract that the contracting authority sought to conclude after the launch of that call for tenders.

46. The call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings has a dual purpose, meaning that the contract to be concluded can be regarded as consisting of two aspects: the first relates to the selection of a private partner for the mixed company to be formed, the second concerns the award to that company of the integrated school service.

47. Can the first aspect affect the applicability of Directive 2014/23 or Directive 2014/24 vis-à-vis the two aspects of the contract at issue in the main proceedings? Case-law contains useful guidance in answering that question.

(a) Relevant case-law

48. In the case that gave rise to the judgment in Club Hotel Loutraki and Others, (14) the Court was faced with a similar question. The reference for a preliminary ruling concerned a contract consisting of three agreements: one relating to the sale of 49% of the shares in a public undertaking with a view to its privatisation, one under which the transferee would take over the management of the casino business in return for payment, and one pursuant to which that transferee would undertake to implement a plan to refurbish the casino premises.

49. In order to settle that question, the Court, after confirming that the referring court had been right to classify the contract as a 'mixed contract', (15) examined whether the contract at issue constituted an indivisible whole and whether it fell, as a whole, because of its main object, within the scope of one of the directives at issue. (16) In so doing, the Court referred to case-law under which, 'in the case of a mixed contract, the different aspects of which are … inseparably linked and thus form an indivisible whole, the transaction at issue must be examined as a whole for the purposes of its legal classification and must be assessed on the basis of the rules which govern the aspect which constitutes the main object or predominant feature of the contract'. (17)

50. With regard to that case-law, the Court stated, first, that the contract in question was a mixed contract that constituted an indivisible whole, since that contract had to be concluded with a single partner with both the financial standing necessary to purchase the shares at issue and professional experience in operating a casino. Second, the Court took the view that the transfer of 49% of the shares of a public undertaking constituted the main object of the contract at issue. (18) That finding arose from the fact that the transfer of the shares in fact constituted a privatisation and had effects for an unlimited time, allowing the transferee to obtain, as a shareholder, significantly greater income than the remuneration that was payable to it as the service provider. (19)

51. In the judgment in Mehiläinen and Terveystalo Healthcare, (20) the Court examined, on the basis of the same case-law, (21) an arrangement by which the contracting authority concluded with a private entity separate from it a contract establishing a joint venture, in the form of a limited company, from which that contracting authority committed, when setting up that company, to purchase occupational health and welfare services for its own staff for a transitional period of four years.

52. In the judgment in Healthcare, as in the judgment in Club Hotel Loutraki and Others, the Court found that the arrangement in question constituted a mixed contract. However, the Court took the view that the aspects of that arrangement were not inseparable, since there was no objective need to conclude the mixed contract with a single partner. In particular, in the Court's view, the divisible nature of the aspect related to the services from the remainder of the mixed contract was supported by the fact, first, that the contracting authority had expressed its intentions to launch a call for tenders for the purchase of such services at the end of the transitional period and, second, that a joint venture had indeed been established and had operated without the aspect related to the services. (22)

53. In the judgment in Acoset, the Court, when asked about a direct award of a local public service for the integrated management of water to a semi-public company, did not even raise the question of whether the contract at issue constituted a mixed contract, the different aspects of which were inseparably linked and thus formed an indivisible whole. In determining whether that award fell within the scope of one of the directives at issue, the Court focussed on the local public service for the integrated management of water and on the works connected with the management of that service.

54. However, the judgment in Acoset cannot be interpreted as meaning that, in the case of a contract consisting of several aspects, one of which concerns the formation of a semi-public company, that aspect should be disregarded and consideration given to the other aspects only. Such an interpretation would run counter to the case-law established after that judgment, which is cited in the preceding points of this Opinion.

55. The judgment in Acoset should therefore be understood to mean that the Court implicitly found, in the first place, that the contract in question was a mixed contract, the aspects of which formed an indivisible whole, and, in the second place, that the aspect related to the local public service constituted the main object of that contract.

56. It follows from the foregoing that the contract concluded as part of a procedure launched by a contracting authority for the selection of a private partner for a semi-public company and the award of a contract or a concession to that company is a mixed contract consisting of two aspects. (23) In addition, as far as concerns such a mixed contract, it is necessary, first, to determine whether the different aspects of the contract are indivisibly (inseparably) linked and form an indivisible whole; second, to identify the main object or predominant feature of that contract; and, third, to determine the rules applicable to the contract in the light of that main object or predominant feature. (24)

(b) Application

(1) Mixed contract: indivisible aspects?

57. It is my view that the two aspects of the contract at issue in the main proceedings are indivisible, as in the cases that gave rise to the judgments in Club Hotel Loutraki and Others and Acoset.

58. In order to guarantee the provision of the integrated school service by a semi-public company composed of the contracting authority and a private partner, it is objectively necessary to select a partner with the financial capacity necessary to purchase 49% of the capital of the mixed company to be formed and who satisfies other conditions which enable it, in the form of a semi-public company, to take on the integrated school service and bear the operational risk in its entirety. The two aspects of the contract must therefore concern the same partner, even though, technically, the first aspect concerns the selection of a private partner and the second the award of the integrated school service to a semi-public company in which that partner holds 49% of the shares. (25)

59. Furthermore, unlike the case that gave rise to the judgment in Healthcare, (26) in which the circumstances connected with the aspect related to the services were quite specific, there are no grounds for taking the view that, in the present case, the aspect related to the formation of a semi-public company is divisible from that related to the integrated school service. Without the latter aspect, the mixed company to be formed would objectively be deprived of its economic rationale. In Italian law, pursuant to Article 17(1) of Legislative Decree No 175, the contract or concession constitutes the sole object of the activities of the semi-public company.

60. It is now necessary to determine whether the aspect that constitutes the main object of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is that related to the formation of a semi-public company or that related to the integrated school service.

(2) Main object of the contract

61. I am of the view that the aspect related to the integrated school service is the main object of the mixed contract at issue in the main proceedings.

62. The mixed company to be formed was just one way of ensuring that the integrated school service is provided by an IPPP and was by no means the purpose of the call for tenders. Unlike the case that gave rise to the judgment in Club Hotel Loutraki and Others, the present case is concerned not with a purchase of shares in a pre-existing public undertaking with a view to its privatisation but rather the formation of a mixed company with a view to providing an integrated school service.

63. In addition, in that case, the holding of shares in the pre-existing public undertaking constituted in itself a significant source of income. There is nothing to support the view that that is the case here. It cannot therefore be concluded, on the basis of the judgment in Club Hotel Loutraki and Others, that, in the present case, the formation of the mixed company is the main object of the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

64. Accordingly, the question of which directive applies in the case in the main proceedings must be examined in the light of the aspect related to the integrated school service.

(3) Public service contracts or services concessions?

65. The information contained in the request for a preliminary ruling concerning the aspect related to the integrated school service is incomplete.

66. It is true that the parties' replies to the written questions put by the Court do contain some clarifications as to the range of services that make up the aspect related to the integrated school service. (27) However, it is not possible on the basis of those clarifications to classify irrefutably, in the context of this Opinion, that aspect as falling within the scope of a 'public service contract' or a 'services concession'.

67. In any case, such classification is a matter falling within the jurisdiction of the national court alone. (28) The Court may, where appropriate, provide clarifications intended to guide that national court in carrying out that classification.

68. In that regard, I would point out, in the first place, that public service contracts, within the meaning of Directive 2014/24, involve consideration which is paid directly by the contracting authority to the service provider. (29) By contrast, a services concession, within the meaning of Directive 2014/23, consists in the act of entrusting the provision and the management of services, the consideration of which consists either solely in the right to exploit the services in question or in that right together with payment. (30) In that same vein, the Court has recognised the existence of a services concession, inter alia, in cases in which the service provider's remuneration came from payments made by users of a service. (31) Accordingly, the fact that, as the referring court states, a semi-public company under Italian law in fact carries on activities in return for remuneration and which generate profits (even if those profits are, according to that court, modest) may be an indication that Directive 2014/23 should be applied.

69. In the second place, while the method of remuneration is one of the determining factors for the classification of a services concession, the services concession implies that the service supplier takes the risk of operating the services in question. (32) The distinguishing feature related to the transfer of such a risk was codified in Directive 2014/23. (33) The Italian language version of that directive describes that feature using the term 'rischio operativo' (operating risk). The same term is used in the decision by which the city of Rome launched a call for tenders so as to make clear that the tenderer selected would be required to bear such a risk in its entirety. (34)

70. In the third place, in order to be able to answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, the Court may, on the basis of the information provided to it, proceed on the assumption that a contract falls within the scope of one of the directives at issue. (35) However, in the absence of information on the basis of which the rules applicable in the present case can be determined, such an approach appears inconceivable to me in the present case. More significantly, I, like the Commission, take the view that the application of the rules laid down in one or the other of those directives need not necessarily affect the answers that should be given to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling in the present case. After all, the rules applicable to the aspect related to the integrated school service will be applicable to the aspect related to the selection of a private partner only 'by extension'. Since the questions concern the latter aspect only, my sole focus, in that regard, will be the application of the general principles under those rules, which are common to those two aspects. Therefore, whilst observing the division of jurisdiction between the national courts and the Court of Justice, I will refer in this Opinion to both Directive 2014/23 and Directive 2014/24. (36)

2. The rules governing public contracts awarded between entities within the public sector

71. In the first question referred for a preliminary ruling, the referring court mentions Article 12 and recitals 14 and 32 of Directive 2014/24 and reproduces, in the request for a preliminary ruling, the first subparagraph of Article 12(1) thereof. However, that court provides no explanation as to the reasons that led it to ask about the interpretation of the latter provision.

72. In that regard, in the first place, recital 14 of Directive 2014/24 states merely that the concept of 'economic operators' should be interpreted in a broad manner, thus confirming that a semi-public company can fall within the scope of that concept. The remainder of that recital reproduces, in essence, the definition of the concept contained in Article 2(1)(10) thereof. The latter provision was not invoked by the referring court in its question referred for a preliminary ruling.

73. In the second place, Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24 provides that public contracts awarded to controlled legal persons by contracting authorities should not be subject to the application of the procedures provided for in that directive. That provision governs vertical cooperation between the relevant entities or a traditional in-house award.

74. However, the referring court clearly states that, in Italian law, the formation of a semi-public company, such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings, constitutes an alternative to in-house management. (37)

75. Even more significantly, application of the exclusion provided for in Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24 in the context of the award of services to an IPPP appears to me to be a priori precluded. As is stated in the third paragraph of recital 31 of that directive, care should be taken that any public-public cooperation thus excluded does not result in a distortion of competition in relation to private economic operators in so far as it places a private provider of services in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors. Furthermore, in line with the case-law pre-dating Directive 2014/24, (38) recital 32 of that directive clarifies that the exclusion provided for in Article 12(1) of the Directive 'should not extend to situations where there is direct participation by a private economic operator in the capital of the controlled legal person since, in such circumstances, the award of a public contract without a competitive procedure would provide the private economic operator with a capital participation in the controlled legal person an undue advantage over its competitors'.

76. In the third place, it is even open to consideration whether the mixed contract at issue in the main proceedings is excluded from the scope of Directive 2014/24 under Article 12(4) thereof. That provision concerns contracts concluded exclusively between a number of contracting authorities, where those contracts establish or implement cooperation between those contracting authorities.

77. It may be argued that the city of Rome, as the contracting authority, wanted to establish cooperation with a future semi-public company, which was also to provide the integrated school service and 51% of the shares in which would be held by the city of Rome. That company would therefore constitute a 'body governed by public law' for the purposes of Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24 and, accordingly, could constitute a 'contracting authority' for the purposes of Article 2(1)(1) of that directive.

78. However, even assuming that the conditions for application of the exclusion provided for in Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 are met in such a situation, the Court has held, in the judgment in Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung, (39) that that provision means that cooperation between contracting authorities must not have the effect, in accordance with the principle of equal treatment, of placing a private undertaking in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors. It follows from that fact, as Advocate General Campos Sánchez-Bordona observed in his Opinion in that case, (40) that cooperation between public authorities which places a private operator in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors on the market cannot be covered by Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. In the light of those clarifications, and in view of the involvement of private capital in the mixed company to be formed, it is my view that the cooperation at issue in the present case cannot come under the exclusion laid down in that provision.

79. There is therefore no need to interpret Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 in order to be able to answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling.

3. The procurement regime for social and other specific services

80. Article 74 of Directive 2014/24 provides that public contracts for social and other specific services listed in Annex XIV to that directive are to be awarded in accordance with Chapter I of Title III of the Directive. With the exception of CNS, all the parties stated in their replies to the Court's written questions that, at the very least, one of the services making up the integrated school service falls within or may fall within the scope of that annex.

81. It will be for the referring court to assess whether that is the case. If so, the procurement procedure would simply have to comply with the more flexible rules laid down in Directive 2014/24 for the award of that type of contract. I will therefore merely put forward some additional considerations that may prove useful to that court.

82. First, it is true that Chapter I of Title III of Directive 2014/24 does establish a particular procurement regime for social and other specific services. Such contracts therefore fall outside the rules that make up the standard regime. However, Article 76(1) of that directive provides that Member States are to put in place national rules for the award of contracts subject to that chapter in order to ensure contracting authorities comply with the principles of transparency and equal treatment of economic operators. Those principles are a priori the same principles as those referred to in Article 18 of the Directive. I cannot therefore rule out that the application of Chapter I of Title III of Directive 2014/24 in the case in the main proceedings will not affect the answers that should be given to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling. (41)

83. Second, before concluding that the rules in Chapter I of Title III of Directive 2014/24 apply to the contract at issue in the main proceedings, the estimated values of the services covered by that chapter must also be compared with those of the services covered by the standard regime under that directive, and then, on the basis of those values, the main object of the contract must be established. (42)

84. In the absence of information to support the conclusion that the services covered by Chapter I of Title III of Directive 2014/24 must be regarded as the main object of the contract at issue in the main proceedings and in view of the fact that the referring court makes no reference whatsoever to the provisions of that chapter, I am working on the assumption that the more flexible rules do not apply in the present case.

4. Article 107 TFEU

85. The first question referred for a preliminary ruling mentions Article 107 TFEU. The Commission argues that the request for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible in so far as it concerns the interpretation of that provision of primary law.

86. I agree with the Commission. The request for a preliminary ruling does not identify clearly the measure which, in the case at issue in the main proceedings, constitutes State aid. Nor does the referring court clarify the reasons why the interpretation of that provision is necessary for the resolution of the dispute pending before it.

87. The request for a preliminary ruling may, it is true, be understood to the effect that the referring court is asking the Court to interpret not one of the provisions of primary law but rather Directives 2014/23 and 2014/24 in the light of that law ('with reference … to Article 107 TFEU'). Nevertheless, such a reading of the request for a preliminary ruling would not alter the fact that, in any case, there is no need to answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling in so far as they concern Article 107 TFEU.

88. In those circumstances, the plea of inadmissibility raised by CNS must also be accepted in so far as it concerns the first question referred for a preliminary ruling and both Article 107 TFEU and, for the reasons set out in points 71 to 79 of this Opinion, Article 12 of Directive 2014/24.

C. Substance

89. Besides the provisions of EU law deemed irrelevant to the present case, the first question referred for a preliminary ruling mentions Article 30 of Directive 2014/23 and Article 18 of Directive 2014/24. In order to be able to identify all the relevant provisions of those directives, the requirements related to the public and private participation laid down in the tender documents must first be put in context.

1. The requirements related to the public and private participation in the context of Directives 2014/23 and 2014/24

90. In Article 56 of Directive 2014/24, the EU legislature expressly distinguishes two types of criteria, namely criteria for qualitative selection, which essentially consist of exclusion grounds and selection criteria intended to assess the ability of economic operators to perform the contract awarded (Articles 57 and 58 of that directive), and the contract award criteria, which refer to the tenders themselves. Articles 38 and 41 of Directive 2014/23, which concern, respectively, criteria relating to the selection and qualitative assessment of candidates and award criteria, make a similar distinction.

91. In that connection, it must be stated that the request for a preliminary ruling does not clearly set out the rationale behind the requirements related to the public and private participation laid down in the tender documents. Since those requirements constitute lex specialis as compared with those laid down in Legislative Decree No 175, (43) that rationale may however be inferred from the clarifications related to that legislative decree. The tender documents appear to qualify the percentages and their nature (they are specific requirements rather than maximum and minimum thresholds), without however substantially affecting their objectives.

92. In that regard, I understand the clarifications provided by the referring court to mean that the 70% ceiling of public participation in the mixed company to be formed is intended to guarantee that the private participation in that company is not below 30%.

93. Therefore, on the one hand, from the general perspective of the market and of economic operators, a private partner would not be able to limit excessively (below 30%) the economic risk of its participation in a semi-public company and benefit unduly from the advantages of the public participation, by ensuring that other entities are prevented from enjoying profitable access to the same economic activity on the market segment concerned. Viewed thus, as the referring court points out, the aim of that ceiling is to prevent circumvention of the principle of free competition.

94. On the other hand, from the point of view of the subject matter of the tender procedure and of the contracting authority, that ceiling guarantees that the private partner is an operational partner whose contribution to the performance of the tasks entrusted to the mixed-capital entity to be formed consists in a capital contribution and the provision of the necessary skills to perform those tasks, whilst assuming the operational risk for their performance in its entirety.

95. I must point out that the aspect related to the actual contribution of the private partner appears to be of great importance as far as concerns the case in the main proceedings and the requirements of the public and private participation laid down in the tender documents. In view of the necessarily personalised nature of the conditions and criteria of economic and financial standing and/or technical and professional ability (44) and in line with the judgment in Acoset, (45) that observation is an indication that the requirements of the public and private participation laid down in the tender documents constitute qualitative selection criteria.

96. In addition, it is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that, given the method of calculation that factors in the indirect participation of the contracting authority in the share capital of that partner, the tenderers were excluded from the procedure launched following the call for tenders because they did not comply with those requirements. In that regard, it is settled case-law that the qualitative selection criteria enable the contracting authority to restrict the tendering procedure to economic operators whose ability suggests that they will be able to perform the subject matter of the call for tenders. (46)

97. Thus, requirements concerning the public and private participation, such as those at issue in the case in the main proceedings, do not appear to relate to the tenders (contract award criteria). (47) However, they do appear to constitute qualitative selection criteria by which a contracting authority seeks to ensure that a private partner has the economic and financial standing and/or the technical and professional ability to enable it to maintain the division between the public capital and the private capital of the semi-public company, as determined by the contracting authority, via that partner's participation in the capital of that company and its assumption of the operational risk, in its entirety, for the performance of the service by the company. (48) Requirements related to the public and private participation laid down in the tender documents, such as those at issue in the case in the main proceedings, therefore constitute criteria and conditions within the meaning of Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23 or, as the case may be, within the meaning of Article 58(1) of Directive 2014/24.

2. Reformulation of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

98. In the light of the clarifications provided relating to the subject matter of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, (49) the applicable regime in the case in the main proceedings (50) and the classification of the requirements of the public and private participation applicable in that case, (51) I propose to reformulate the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, clearly stating the provisions of EU law which require interpretation for useful answers to be provided to the referring court.

99. More specifically, I propose to take the view that, by its questions, which I intend to examine jointly, the referring court is seeking to ascertain whether Article 30 and Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23 or, as the case may be, Article 18 and Article 58(1) of Directive 2014/24 are to be interpreted as precluding, for the purpose of determining the percentage participation of a private partner submitting a bid in the semi-public company to be formed, account from being taken of the indirect participation of the contracting authority in the share capital of that private partner submitting a bid, such that that partner is excluded from the call for tenders where, as a result of the account taken of that indirect participation, the private participation percentage sought by the contracting authority in accordance with the tender documents is not met.

3. Assessment

100. As they constitute conditions and criteria concerning economic and financial standing and/or technical and professional ability, the requirements related to the public and private participation laid down in the tender documents must be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the tender procedure. (52) In accordance with Article 30 of Directive 2014/23 and Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, the contracting authority must apply those requirements in accordance with the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination between tenderers as well as those of transparency and proportionality.

101. In the first place, it is necessary to examine whether there is a link between those requirements and the subject matter of the tender procedure.

102. Following the rationale of the requirements laid down in the tender documents (participation set at 51% for the city of Rome and at 49% for the private partner), a tenderer eligible for selection must be an entity unaffiliated with the contracting authority. A greater participation by the contracting authority in the semi-public company via the control of that tenderer (also arising from an indirect participation) would affect the division between the public capital and the private capital of that company, as determined by the contracting authority. In addition, such a situation could limit the role of the private partner and, as a result, the genuine commitment of the economic and financial standing and/or the technical and professional ability of the tenderer below the 49% threshold set by the contracting authority. Those requirements are therefore related to the subject matter of the tender procedure.

103. Furthermore, since, as a rule, EU law does not preclude the use of a single procedure in the context of an IPPP, (53) the interpretation of the requirement related to the existence of a link between the qualitative selection criteria and the subject matter of the tender procedure that must be accepted cannot prevent the use of that form of cooperation by contracting authorities (including the setting by the contracting authority of the division between the public capital and private capital of the semi-public company). Use of an IPPP is the result of the Member States' freedom of choice as to how the services are provided by which contracting authorities will meet their own needs. (54)

104. In the second place, as regards the proportionality of the requirements of the public and private participation, I would observe that, at the very least in the light of my reading of the request for a preliminary ruling, those requirements do not systematically exclude any tenderer whose capital is in public hands. (55) However, given the original wording of the first question referred for a preliminary ruling, those requirements appear to cover all forms of indirect participation by the contracting authority in the share capital of the private partner.

105. That being so, a contracting authority's indirect participation in the capital of a private partner can take different forms. In addition, its impact on the functioning of that private partner depends on the latter's organisational structure. It is therefore not certain that any indirect participation in the capital of the private partner restricts the actual commitment of the economic and financial standing and/or technical and professional ability of the tenderer below the 49% threshold, as set by the contracting authority.

106. Accordingly, taking account of any indirect participation of the contracting authority in the share capital of the private partner is inconsistent with the principle of proportionality, in so far as that approach disregards the fact that such an indirect participation does not necessarily restrict the actual commitment of the economic and financial standing and/or technical and professional ability of that tenderer below the 49% threshold, as set by the contracting authority. If checks are not conducted to establish that that is the case, that private partner submitting a bid cannot be automatically excluded from the call for tenders on account of that indirect participation.

107. It is not clear that the contracting authority actually conducted such checks in the present case. However, first of all, the analysis of the capital structure of the entities concerned contained in the exclusion decision may suggest that it did so. Next, it appears that the reference for a preliminary ruling echoes that decision in so far as the referring court states that if, 'account is taken of that substantive aspect, namely the business relationships of [Roma Multiservizi] and in particular the fact that it is 51% owned by [AMA], which is itself wholly owned by the city of Rome, … the [public and private] participation in the mixed company [to be formed] would in reality be 73.5% and [26.5%]'. Lastly, there is nothing to suggest that decision-making powers or operational risks have been allocated in proportion to the capital stake held. The fact that the contracting authority holds the majority of the capital of a private partner submitting a bid therefore seems capable of limiting the actual commitment of the economic and financial standing and/or technical and professional ability of that private partner below the 49% threshold, as set by the contracting authority.

108. I am therefore of the view that Article 30 and Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23 or, as the case may be, Article 18 and Article 58(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude, for the purposes of determining the percentage participation of a private partner submitting a bid in the mixed public-private company to be formed, account from being taken of any indirect participation of the contracting authority in the share capital of that private partner submitting a bid, such that that partner is automatically excluded from the tender documents, where, as a result of the account taken of that indirect participation, the private participation percentage sought by the contracting authority in accordance with the call for tenders is not met.

109. However, Article 30 and Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23 or, as the case may be, Article 18 and Article 58(1) of Directive 2014/24 do not preclude account from being taken where it is not automatic. In particular, those provisions do not preclude account from being taken of an indirect participation where it is apparent from checks conducted by the contracting authority that that participation involves the majority of the capital of a private partner submitting a bid being held by another entity which, in turn, is wholly owned by the contracting authority, provided that decision-making powers and risks are allocated in proportion to the capital stake held as far as concerns that private partner submitting a bid and that entity.

110. As regards observance of the principle of proportionality, I note, for the sake of completeness, that the Commission appears to question whether the exclusion of the bid submitted by Rekeep and Roma Multiservizi complies with that principle on the ground that the city of Rome should have allowed them to show, where appropriate, that the indirect participation it holds in the capital of Roma Multiservizi did not entail a risk of conflicts of interest. However, the primary goal of the requirements related to the public-private participation laid down in the tender documents is not to eliminate such risks. In addition, a conflict of interests is a ground for exclusion provided for in Directives 2014/23 and 2014/24 and the request for a preliminary ruling makes no reference whatsoever to that ground. Moreover, that request mentions neither Article 35 of Directive 2014/23 nor Article 24 of Directive 2014/24.

111. In the third place, as regards the principles of transparency and equal treatment, I must point out that, in their written observations, Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep allege that no mention was made in the tender documents that account would be taken of the contracting authority's indirect participation in the capital of a tenderer.

112. The request for a preliminary ruling makes no reference to the failure to mention that fact in the tender documents. In that context, I am bound to note that, in its replies to the written questions put by the Court, the city of Rome states that, under Legislative Decree No 175, which appears to lay down rules for the implementation of Directives 2014/23 and 2014/24, a public undertaking is defined as an undertaking over which the contracting authorities can exercise a dominant influence, whether directly or indirectly. According to Rekeep's observations, that decree also provides that, 'where the provisions in force authorise the formation of mixed companies for the performance and management of public works or for the organisation and management of a service of general interest, the private partner must be selected by means of a procedure for the award of a public contract'. On the basis of an interpretation a contrario, it may therefore be stated that, in the context of a semi-public company, a private partner cannot be in a situation where the contracting authority has a direct or indirect dominant influence over it. However, an indirect participation in the capital of a private partner that results in the exercise of a dominant influence cannot be treated in the same way as any indirect participation whatsoever in the capital of that private partner.

113. In any case, the national courts alone have jurisdiction to determine, where appropriate, the merits of those allegations and their relevance at the current stage of the case in the main proceedings.

114. Thus, in so far as the referring court mentions Article 30 of Directive 2014/23 and Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, useful clarifications should be provided to that court as regards a review carried out in the light of the principles set out in those provisions.

115. It is settled case-law that the principles of transparency and equal treatment which govern all public procurement procedures require the substantive and procedural conditions concerning participation in a contract to be clearly defined in advance and made public, in particular the obligations of tenderers, in order that those tenderers may know exactly the procedural requirements and be sure that the same requirements apply to all candidates. (56)

116. For instance, and in relation to the regime under Directive 2014/24, contract notices must, as a rule, include a list and brief description of the selection criteria and the criteria regarding the personal situation of economic operators that may lead to their exclusion. (57)

117. The logical extension of that fact is that the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency must be interpreted as precluding an economic operator from being excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract as a result of that economic operator's non-compliance with an obligation which does not expressly arise from the documents relating to that procedure or from the national law in force, but from an interpretation of that law and those documents and from the incorporation of provisions into those documents by the national authorities or the administrative courts. (58)

118. Since the indirect participation of a contracting authority in the capital of a private partner can take different forms and its impact on the functioning of that private partner depends on the latter's organisational structure, it does not appear to me to be self-evident that any form of indirect participation held by the contracting authority would automatically entail the exclusion of a tenderer from the tender documents by reason of non-compliance with the requirements of the public and private participation. It does not appear to be sufficiently clear that the national legislation or the tender documents should be interpreted to that effect.

119. Without prejudice to the foregoing additional remarks concerning compliance with the principles of transparency and equal treatment, I stand by the position that I set out in point 108 of this Opinion regarding compliance with the principle of proportionality.

VI. Conclusion

120. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court provide the following answer to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy):

Article 30 and Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts or, as the case may be, Article 18 and Article 58(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude, for the purposes of determining the percentage participation of a private partner submitting a bid in the mixed public-private company to be formed, account from being taken of any indirect participation of the contracting authority in the share capital of that private partner submitting a bid, such that that partner is automatically excluded from the call for tenders, where, as a result of the account taken of that indirect participation, the private participation percentage sought by the contracting authority in accordance with the tender documents is not met.

However, Article 30 and Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23 or, as the case may be, Article 18 and Article 58(1) of Directive 2014/24 do not preclude account from being so taken where it is not automatic. In particular, those provisions do not preclude account from being taken of an indirect participation where it is apparent from checks conducted by the contracting authority that that participation involves the majority of the capital of a private partner submitting a bid being held by another entity which, in turn, is wholly owned by the contracting authority, provided that decision-making powers and risks are allocated in proportion to the capital stake held as far as concerns that private partner submitting a bid and that entity.

9 An effective participation of 51% was already clear from the tender documents. According to those documents, the city of Rome was to hold 51% of the shares in the mixed company to be formed. As for the remainder (73.5% – 51% = 22.5%), an effective participation of 22.5% in that company would have to have followed from the fact that Roma Multiservizi's participation in the consortium formed with Rekeep amounted to approximately 90%. Accordingly, since AMA – the capital of which is wholly owned by the city of Rome – holds a 51% stake in the capital of Rome Multiservizi, the city of Rome has an effective participation of 22.5% in the mixed company to be formed (22.5% = 49% x 90% x 51%). In their written observations, Rekeep and the Consorzio Nazionale Servizi Società Cooperativa (CNS) state that it was agreed, first, that Rekeep, as the principal, would hold a 10% stake in that consortium and Roma Multiservizi, as the lead agent, would hold a 90% stake, and, second, that those companies would underwrite the capital of the mixed company to be formed with the city of Rome in proportion to their stake in the consortium.

10 Similarly, according to the information contained in the request for a preliminary ruling, Roma Multiservizi and Rekeep challenged the exclusion decision referring, inter alia, to the infringement, the misapplication and the inadmissible purposive interpretation of what those parties regarded as constituting lex specialis.

---

11 The referring court states inter alia that the contracting authority 'set the participation by the city of Rome at 51% and the participation by the private partner at 49%' and that that contracting authority launched a call for tenders 'setting the participation by the city of Rome at 51%'.

---

12 The referring court states inter alia that 'the city of Rome … ultimately held an effective participation of 73.5% in the public-private company, thus exceeding the 51% limit set in the tender documents' and that 'the city of Rome's participation in the [mixed company to be formed] exceeded the limit set at 51%'.

---

13 According to CNS, the referring court is simply requesting a review of the compatibility of national law in the light of general principles of EU law, without specifically identifying the exact provisions in the light of which such compatibility should be examined. In its view, the fact that EU law does not contain any specific provisions on the forms of public-private partnership further demonstrates that the first question referred for a preliminary ruling is irrelevant.

21 The judgment in Healthcare (paragraph 36).

22 The judgment in Healthcare (paragraphs 43 and 44).

23 Some of the parties appear to question the classification as a 'mixed contract' of a contract, one of the aspects of which relates to the selection of a private partner for a mixed-capital entity to be formed. However, although the Court did not use the concept of a 'mixed contract' in the judgment in Acoset, it did so in its judgments in Club Hotel Loutraki and Others and Healthcare. In addition, even assuming that Directive 2014/24 applies in the present case and that the contract at issue in the main proceedings does not fall within the scope of the concept of a 'mixed contract' within the meaning of Article 3 of that directive because the selection of a private partner for the formation of a mixed company is unrelated to a contract (see footnote 24), that contract may nevertheless come under the broader category of mixed contracts to which the Court appears to have referred in the judgments in Club Hotel Loutraki and Others and Healthcare.

24 Regardless of the solution adopted by the Court in its case-law, assuming that Directive 2014/24 applies in the case in the main proceedings, the same outcome could a priori be reached on the basis of Article 3(6) thereof, under which, 'where the different parts of a given contract are objectively not separable, the applicable legal regime shall be determined on the basis of the main subject matter of that contract'. Under that Directive, contracts are concerned with the execution of works, the supply of goods or the provision of services. The question therefore arises as to whether the selection of a private partner and the formation of a mixed company fall within the definition of a 'contract' within the meaning of that same directive. The view taken in legal literature appears to be that that is the case (see, to that effect, in so far as the author refers to Article 3(4) of Directive 2014/24, Andrecka, M., 'Institutionalised Public-Private Partnership as a Mixed Contract under the Regime of the New Directive 2014/24/EU', European Procurement & Public Private Partnership Law Review, Vol. 9, No 3, 2014, p. 176). Furthermore, in view of the doubts that exist as to the rules applicable in the present case, attention must be drawn to the difference between the wording used in Directive 2014/24, Article 3(6) of which provides that, 'where the different parts of a given contract are objectively not separable, the applicable legal regime shall be determined on the basis of the main subject matter of that [mixed] contract', and that used in Directive 2014/23, Article 20(5) of which provides that, 'where the different parts of a given contract are objectively not separable, the applicable legal regime shall be determined on the basis of the main subject matter of that contract' (emphasis added); the wording of the latter provision appears to me to be more flexible, at least as regards certain language versions of those directives, in particular the French version.

25 See, by way of analogy, paragraph 53 of the judgment in Club Hotel Loutraki and Others, read in the light of paragraph 28 thereof, in accordance with which the mixed contract at issue contained 'one aspect relating to the sale of shares by [the company Ellinika Touristika Akinita AE] to the highest bidding tenderer [and … one] aspect relating to a service contract to be concluded with the highest bidding tenderer, which assumes the obligations of managing the casino business'), whereas, as is apparent from paragraph 25 of that judgment, the company to be formed by the tenderer (and not that tenderer itself) acted as manager and concluded at the very least one agreement. See also, in this regard, the judgment in Acoset (paragraphs 54 and 61).

26 See point 52 of this Opinion.

27 It is apparent from the parties' observations and their replies to the written questions put by the Court that the integrated school service consists in general support, handling services, collection and delivery services and cleaning services in nurseries and schools as well as school transportation. The inclusion of a service concerned with school transportation in that range does not appear to encourage the referring court to consider applying Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243). In any event, first, that directive also lays down, in Articles 4 and 6, rules on mixed procurement and, second, there is nothing to support the view that school transportation constitutes the main object of the contract at issue in the main proceedings or of the aspect of that contract related to the integrated school service.

28 See, to that effect, judgment of 10 November 2011, Norma-A and Dekom (C-348/10, EU:C:2011:721, paragraphs 57 and 59).

29 See Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24. See also, to that effect, the judgment in Acoset (paragraph 39 and the case-law cited).

30 See Article 5(1)(b) of Directive 2014/23.

31 See the judgment in Acoset (paragraph 43 and the case-law cited).

32 See, to that effect, judgment of 10 November 2011, Norma-A and Dekom (C-348/10, EU:C:2011:721, paragraph 44). See also, to that effect, my Opinion in Joined Cases Promoimpresa and Others (C-458/14 and C-67/15, EU:C:2016:122, points 62 and 63), in which I took the view that a services concession is characterised, in particular, by the fact that the authority entrusts the exercise of a service activity, a service the provision of which would as a rule fall to that authority (together with, I would add, the associated risk), to the concessionaire, thus requiring that concessionaire to provide a specific service.

33 See Article 1(1) and recital 18 of Directive 2014/23.

34 It is true that, in the case in the main proceedings, the risk was to have been assumed by the private partner selected in the context of the first aspect of the mixed contract, whereas the integrated school service, which constituted the main object of that contract, was to have been awarded, in the context of the second aspect of that contract, to the mixed company to be formed. In view of that particular circumstance, it could be argued that, in connection with the second aspect taken in isolation, there is no transfer of risk to the tenderer selected. However, in the present case, the tender procedure intended, in any event, to free the contracting authority from the risk associated with the provision of the integrated school service. For that reason, I cannot rule out the classification of that second aspect as a 'concession', despite the particular circumstance. With regard to the issues related to that same circumstance, see also point 58 of this Opinion.

35 See, by way of analogy, the judgment in Acoset (paragraph 42).

36 For the sake of completeness, I note that Directives 2014/23 and 2014/24 are applicable ratione temporis and that the value of the contract, estimated at above EUR 277 million, is greater than the thresholds required under those directives. See Article 8 of Directive 2014/23 and Article 4 of Directive 2014/24.

37 See point 11 of this Opinion.

38 See judgment of 6 April 2006, ANAV (C-410/04, EU:C:2006:237, paragraphs 31 and 32).

41 See also, in this regard, point 70 of this Opinion.

42 Under the second paragraph of Article 3(2) of Directive 2014/24, '[i]n the case of mixed contracts consisting partly of services within the meaning of Chapter I of Title III and partly of other services or of mixed contracts consisting partly of services and partly of supplies, the main subject shall be determined in accordance with which of the estimated values of the respective services or supplies is the highest'.

43 See point 28 of this Opinion.

44 The second sentence of Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23 states that 'the conditions for participation shall be related and proportionate to the need to ensure the ability of the concessionaire to perform the concession, taking into account the subject matter of the concession and the purpose of ensuring genuine competition'. In that same vein, Article 58(1) of Directive 2014/24 states inter alia that contracting authorities are to limit the requirements of participation 'to those that are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. All requirements shall be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.'

45 See paragraph 59 of the judgment in Acoset: '… that situation may be rectified by selecting the private participant in accordance with the requirements set out at paragraphs 46 to 49 above and choosing appropriate criteria for the selection of the private participant, since the tenderers must provide evidence not only of their capacity to become a shareholder but, primarily, of their technical capacity to provide the service and the economic and other advantages which their tender brings'. The Court pointed out, in that judgment, the significance of the qualitative selection criteria related to the capacity to perform a service or a concession (see, to that effect, Brown, A., 'Selection of the Private Participant in a Public-Private Partnership which is entrusted with a Public Services Concession: Acoset (Case C-196/08)', Public Procurement Law Review, Vol. 2, 2010, p. 4), without however disregarding the qualitative selection criteria related to the capacity to become a private partner of the mixed company to be formed.

46 See, to that effect, judgment of 8 July 2021, Sanresa (C-295/20, EU:C:2021:556, paragraph 62).

47 As has been observed in legal literature, in the context of an IPPP, it is important, in spite of the difficulties, to distinguish qualitative selection criteria from contract award criteria. See Andrecka, M., and Kania, M., 'Choosing the Private Partner for a Public Private Partnership: A European Union Law Perspective on Polish Practice', Polish Review of International and European Law, Vol. 2, No 1, 2013, p. 148.

48 For that reason, I take the view that the classification used by the Court in the judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur (C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraphs 21 and 23) as regards national legislation intended to prevent any potential collusion between participants in the same procedure for the award of a public contract and to safeguard the equal treatment of candidates and the transparency of the procedure cannot be applied in the present case as regards the requirements of the public and private participation at issue here as laid down, moreover, in the tender documents.

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 18, 42, 56, 58 and 70 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), and of Articles 2(35), 3 to 7, 9 and 17 of Regulation (EC) No 1013/2006 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 14 June 2006 on shipments of waste (OJ 2006 L 190, p. 1).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between ‘Sanresa’ UAB and the Aplinkos apsaugos departamentas prie Aplinkos ministerijos (Environmental Protection Department under the Ministry of Environment, Lithuania) (‘the contracting authority’) and relates to the decision of that department to exclude Sanresa from a public procurement procedure.

Legal framework

Directive 2014/24

3 Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, which concerns the ‘principles of procurement’, provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.

2. Member States shall take appropriate measures to ensure that in the performance of public contracts economic operators comply with applicable obligations in the fields of environmental, social and labour law established by Union law, national law, collective agreements or by the international environmental, social and labour law provisions listed in Annex X.’

4 Article 42 of that directive makes provision for contracting authorities to formulate ‘technical specifications’ and take them into account in selecting tenders.

5 Article 49 of the directive, which is headed ‘Contract notices’, provides:

‘Contract notices shall be used as a means of calling for competition in respect of all procedures, without prejudice to the second subparagraph of Article 26(5) and Article 32. Contract notices shall contain the information set out in Annex V part C and shall be published in accordance with Article 51.’

6 Article 56 of the directive, which sets out the ‘general principles’ for the choice of participants and the award of contracts, provides in paragraph 1:

‘Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of criteria laid down in accordance with Articles 67 to 69, provided that the contracting authority has verified in accordance with Articles 59 to 61 that all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(b) the tender comes from a tenderer that is not excluded in accordance with Article 57 and that meets the selection criteria set out by the contracting authority in accordance with Article 58 and, where applicable, the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in Article 65.

Contracting authorities may decide not to award a contract to the tenderer submitting the most economically advantageous tender where they have established that the tender does not comply with the applicable obligations referred to in Article 18(2).’

7 Article 58 of that directive, which is headed ‘Selection criteria’, provides:

‘1. Selection criteria may relate to:

(a) suitability to pursue the professional activity;

(b) economic and financial standing;

(c) technical and professional ability.

Contracting authorities may only impose criteria referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 on economic operators as requirements for participation. They shall limit any requirements to those that are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. All requirements shall be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

2. With regard to suitability to pursue the professional activity, contracting authorities may require economic operators to be enrolled in one of the professional or trade registers kept in their Member State of establishment, as described in Annex XI, or to comply with any other request set out in that Annex.

In procurement procedures for services, in so far as economic operators have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in order to be able to perform in their country of origin the service concerned, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.

3. With regard to economic and financial standing, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary economic and financial capacity to perform the contract. For that purpose, contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a certain minimum yearly turnover, including a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the contract. In addition, contracting authorities may require that economic operators provide information on their annual accounts showing the ratios, for instance, between assets and liabilities. They may also require an appropriate level of professional risk indemnity insurance.

The minimum yearly turnover that economic operators are required to have shall not exceed two times the estimated contract value, except in duly justified cases such as relating to the special risks attached to the nature of the works, services or supplies. The contracting authority shall indicate the main reasons for such a requirement in the procurement documents or the individual report referred to in Article 84.

The ratio, for instance, between assets and liabilities may be taken into consideration where the contracting authority specifies the methods and criteria for such consideration in the procurement documents. Such methods and criteria shall be transparent, objective and non-discriminatory.

Where a contract is divided into lots this Article shall apply in relation to each individual lot. However, the contracting authority may set the minimum yearly turnover that economic operators are required to have by reference to groups of lots in the event that the successful tenderer is awarded several lots to be executed at the same time.

Where contracts based on a framework agreement are to be awarded following a reopening of competition, the maximum yearly turnover requirement referred to in the second subparagraph of this paragraph shall be calculated on the basis of the expected maximum size of specific contracts that will be performed at the same time, or, where it is not known, on the basis of the estimated value of the framework agreement. In the case of dynamic purchasing systems, the maximum yearly turnover requirement referred to in the second subparagraph shall be calculated on the basis of the expected maximum size of specific contracts to be awarded under that system.

4. With regard to technical and professional ability, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary human and technical resources and experience to perform the contract to an appropriate quality standard.

Contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a sufficient level of experience demonstrated by suitable references from contracts performed in the past. A contracting authority may assume that an economic operator does not possess the required professional abilities where the contracting authority has established that the economic operator has conflicting interests which may negatively affect the performance of the contract.

8 Annex XII to the directive, which is headed ‘Means of proof of selection criteria’ refers in paragraph (g) of Part II to ‘an indication of the environmental management measures that the economic operator will be able to apply when performing the contract’, as one of the means of providing evidence of the economic operators’ technical abilities, as referred to in Article 58.

9 Under Article 70 of Directive 2014/24, which is headed ‘Conditions for performance of contracts’:

‘Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that they are linked to the subject matter of the contract within the meaning of Article 67(3) and indicated in the call for competition or in the procurement documents. Those conditions may include economic, innovation-related, environmental, social or employment-related considerations.’

10 Annex V to the directive, which is headed ‘Information to be included in notices’ contains a Part C, devoted to ‘Information to be included in contract notices (as referred to in Article 49)’, paragraph 17 of which reads:

‘Where appropriate, particular conditions to which the performance of the contract is subject.’

Regulation No 1013/2006

11 Article 2(35) of Regulation No 1013/2006 defines the ‘illegal shipment’ of waste as follows:

‘For the purposes of this Regulation:

35. “illegal shipment” means any shipment of waste effected:

(a) without notification to all competent authorities concerned pursuant to this Regulation; or

(b) without the consent of the competent authorities concerned pursuant to this Regulation; or

(c) with consent obtained from the competent authorities concerned through falsification, misrepresentation or fraud; or

(d) in a way which is not specified materially in the notification or movement documents; or

…’

12 Articles 3 to 32 of the regulation are contained in Title II, headed ‘Shipments within the [Union] or without transit through third countries’. Article 3 of the regulation, which is headed ‘Overall procedural framework’ provides in paragraph 1:

‘Shipments of the following wastes shall be subject to the procedure of prior written notification and consent as laid down in the provisions of this Title:

(a) if destined for disposal operations:

all wastes;

(b) if destined for recovery operations:

(i) wastes listed in Annex IV, which include, inter alia, wastes listed in Annexes II and VIII to the Basel Convention,

(ii) wastes listed in Annex IVA,

(iii) wastes not classified under one single entry in either Annex III, IIIB, IV or IVA,

(iv) mixtures of wastes not classified under one single entry in either Annex III, IIIB, IV or IVA unless listed in Annex IIIA.'

13 Under Article 4 of that regulation, which is headed 'Notification':

'Where the notifier intends to ship waste as referred to in Article 3(1)(a) or (b), he/she shall submit a prior written notification to and through the competent authority of dispatch and, if submitting a general notification, comply with Article 13.

When a notification is submitted, the following requirements shall be fulfilled:

1. notification and movement documents:

Notification shall be effected by means of the following documents:

(a) the notification document set out in Annex IA; and

(b) the movement document set out in Annex IB.

In submitting a notification, the notifier shall fill in the notification document and, where relevant, the movement document.

When the notifier is not the original producer in accordance with point 15(a)(i) of Article 2, the notifier shall ensure that this producer or one of the persons indicated in point 15(a)(ii) or (iii) of Article 2, where practicable, also signs the notification document set out in Annex IA.

The notification document and the movement document shall be issued to the notifier by the competent authority of dispatch;

2. information and documentation in the notification and movement documents:

The notifier shall supply on, or annex to, the notification document information and documentation as listed in Annex II, Part 1. The notifier shall supply on, or annex to, the movement document information and documentation referred to in Annex II, Part 2, to the extent possible at the time of notification.

A notification shall be considered properly carried out when the competent authority of dispatch is satisfied that the notification document and movement document have been completed in accordance with the first subparagraph;

3. additional information and documentation:

If requested by any of the competent authorities concerned, the notifier shall supply additional information and documentation. A list of additional information and documentation that may be requested is set out in Annex II, Part 3.

A notification shall be considered properly completed when the competent authority of destination is satisfied that the notification document and the movement document have been completed and that the information and documentation as listed in Annex II, Parts 1 and 2, as well as any additional information and documentation requested in accordance with this paragraph and as listed in Annex II, Part 3, have been supplied by the notifier;

4. conclusion of a contract between the notifier and the consignee:

The notifier shall conclude a contract as described in Article 5 with the consignee for the recovery or disposal of the notified waste.

Evidence of this contract or a declaration certifying its existence in accordance with Annex IA shall be supplied to the competent authorities involved at the time of notification. A copy of the contract or such evidence to the satisfaction of the competent authority concerned shall be provided by the notifier or consignee upon request by the competent authority;

5. establishment of a financial guarantee or equivalent insurance:

A financial guarantee or equivalent insurance shall be established as described in Article 6. A declaration to this effect shall be made by the notifier through completion of the appropriate part of the notification document set out in Annex IA.

The financial guarantee or equivalent insurance (or if the competent authority so allows, evidence of that guarantee or insurance or a declaration certifying its existence) shall be supplied as part of the notification document at the time of notification or, if the competent authority so allows, pursuant to national legislation, at such time before the shipment starts;

6. Coverage of the notification:

A notification shall cover the shipment of waste from its initial place of dispatch and including its interim and non-interim recovery or disposal.

If subsequent interim or non-interim operations take place in a country other than the first country of destination, the non-interim operation and its destination shall be indicated in the notification and Article 15(f) shall apply.

Only one waste identification code shall be covered for each notification, except for:

(a) wastes not classified under one single entry in either Annex III, IIIB, IV or IVA. In this case, only one type of waste shall be specified;

(b) mixtures of wastes not classified under one single entry in either Annex III, IIIB, IV or IVA unless listed in Annex IIIA. In this case, the code for each fraction of the waste shall be specified in order of importance.’

14 Article 11 of Regulation No 1013/2006, which is headed ‘Objections to shipments of waste destined for disposal’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘Where a notification is submitted regarding a planned shipment of waste destined for disposal, the competent authorities of destination and dispatch may, within 30 days following the date of transmission of the acknowledgement of the competent authority of destination in accordance with Article 8, raise reasoned objections based on one or more of the following grounds and in accordance with the [TFEU]:

(a) that the planned shipment or disposal would not be in accordance with measures taken to implement the principles of proximity, priority for recovery and self-sufficiency at Community and national levels in accordance with Directive 2006/12/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 April 2006 on waste (OJ 2006 L 114, p. 9)], to prohibit generally or partially or to object systematically to shipments of waste; or

(b) that the planned shipment or disposal would not be in accordance with national legislation relating to environmental protection, public order, public safety or health protection concerning actions taking place in the objecting country; or

15 Article 17 of the regulation, which is headed ‘Changes in the shipment after consent’, provides:

‘1. If any essential change is made to the details and/or conditions of the consented shipment, including changes in the intended quantity, route, routing, date of shipment or carrier, the notifier shall inform the competent authorities concerned and the consignee immediately and, where possible, before the shipment starts.

2. In such cases a new notification shall be submitted, unless all the competent authorities concerned consider that the proposed changes do not require a new notification.

3. Where such changes involve competent authorities other than those concerned in the original notification, a new notification shall be submitted.’

Lithuanian law

16 The Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law of the Republic of Lithuania on public procurement), in the version applicable to the main proceedings (‘the Law on public procurement’) provides, in Article 35, headed ‘Contents of procurement documents’:

‘1. In the procurement documents, the contracting authority shall provide full information as to the terms of the contract and the conduct of the procedure.

2. The procurement documents must:

(1) state the requirements as to the formulation of tenders;

(2) state the grounds for exclusion of suppliers, the capacity conditions and, where relevant, the required standards of quality management and environmental management, such requirements being equally capable of applying to the individual members of a group of suppliers making a joint request to participate or a joint tender;

(3) state that, in the event that the right to pursue the activity in question is dependent on some capacity of the supplier which has not been verified, or not fully verified, the supplier must undertake to the contracting authority that the contract will only be performed by persons holding that right;

(5) contain a list of the documents evidencing that none of the grounds for exclusion are applicable to the suppliers, that they meet the capacity conditions and, where relevant, particular standards of quality management and environmental management, state that the supplier must provide the European single procurement document (ESPD) in accordance with Article 50 of this Law, and state (in the case of an open procedure) that the option provided for by Article 59(4) of this Law, to evaluate a supplier’s tender in the first instance and verify that it meets the capacity conditions at a later date, will be exercised;

(8) state the nature of the goods, services or works to be supplied, their quantity (scope), the nature of the services to be supplied with goods, and the schedule for the supply of goods, provision of services or execution of works;

(13) contain the contractual terms proposed by the contracting authority and/or the draft contract as referred to in Article 87 of this Law, if it is already available. If a framework agreement is to be concluded, the procurement documents must likewise contain the terms of the framework agreement and/or the draft framework agreement, if it is already available;

(19) indicate when, where and how tenders are to be submitted;

4. The contracting authority shall draw up the procurement documents in accordance with the provisions of this Law. The procurement documents must be precise, clear and unambiguous, such that the suppliers are able to submit tenders and the contracting authority is able to procure that which it requires.'

17 Article 40 of the Law, which is headed 'Submission of requests to participate and tenders', provides:

'1. The contracting authority shall set a deadline which allows sufficient time for the submission of requests to participate and tenders, so as to enable suppliers to prepare and submit their requests for participation and their tenders in an appropriate and timely manner. The time allowed may not be less than the shortest period laid down in Articles 60, 62, 65, 69 and 74 of this Law for submission of requests to participate and tenders. In setting the deadline, the contracting authority shall have regard to the complexity of the contract and the time required to formulate requests to participate and tenders.

3. Where tenders can only be made after a visit to the place where the services are to be provided or the works executed, or after a site visit for the purposes of familiarisation with the terms laid down in the procurement documents, the contracting authority shall set a deadline for submission of tenders which allows more time than those provided for in Articles 60, 62, 65, 69 and 74 of this Law, in order for all suppliers concerned to have the opportunity to acquaint themselves with all the information necessary to formulate their tenders.

4. The contracting authority shall extend the deadline for submission of tenders, in order for all suppliers wishing to participate in the procedure to have the opportunity to acquaint themselves with all the information necessary to formulate their tenders, in the following cases:

(1) where, for any reason, further information, though requested by the supplier in a timely manner, is provided less than six days before the deadline for submission of tenders, or less than four days in the case of a simplified procedure. In the case of an open procedure, a restricted procedure, or a competitive procedure with expedited negotiations, as referred to in Article 60(3) and Article 62(7) of this Law, this period is four days, and in the case of a simplified expedited procedure, it is three days;

(2) where significant changes are made to the procurement documents.

5. In extending the deadline for submission of tenders in the cases referred to in paragraph 4 of this article, the contracting authority shall have regard to the significance of the information or the changes to the procurement documents. Where the further information was not requested in a timely manner or is not a decisive factor in the preparation of tenders, it shall be open to the contracting not to extend the deadline.

18 Under Article 47 of the Law, which is headed 'Verification of the capacities of the supplier':

'1. Given that the contracting authority is required to determine whether the supplier is sufficiently skilful and reliable – and possesses the necessary capacities – to comply with the terms of the contract, it may define, in the contract notice or other procurement documents, the capacities required of the candidates or tenderers, and the documents or information to be submitted in order to certify that they possess those capacities. The capacities which the contracting authority requires of the candidates or tenderers may not artificially limit competition. They must be proportionate, must relate to the purposes of the contract, and must be clear and precise. For the purposes of verifying the suppliers' capacities, the contracting authority may choose to have reference to:

(1) their right to pursue the activity in question;

(2) their financial and economic standing;

(3) their technical and professional ability.

2. The contracting authority is entitled to require, in the procurement documents, that the supplier has the right to pursue the activity required for performance of the contract. In relation to a contract for services, the contracting authority may require the suppliers to possess specific authorisations or to be members of particular organisations, if that is an obligatory condition of the right to supply the services concerned in their country of origin.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

19 On 7 October 2018, the contracting authority published an international open call for tenders relating to a contract for hazardous waste management services.

20 The contracting authority stated in paragraph 9 of the call for tenders that, in order to prevent an environmental disaster, it was necessary to take swift action to halt the operation of a high risk facility in which hazardous waste was stored, and to have that waste treated. In paragraph 11 of the same document, the contracting authority stated that the waste was stored in the open, in deteriorating containers which were in direct contact with the ground and lay stacked on top of one another, under compression. Furthermore, the waste contained hazardous chemicals which were accessible to unauthorised persons. According to the contracting authority, it was justified in those circumstances to use the expedited procedure and reduce the time allowed for submission of tenders.

21 Paragraph 23 of the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings defined the capacity requirements which tenderers were required to meet as at the deadline for submission of tenders. The contracting authority stated that only the first-ranked tenderer would be required to produce the documents evidencing its capacity, as referred to in the table set out in that paragraph. Furthermore, in the event that the right to pursue the activity in question was dependent on some capacity of the supplier which had not been verified, or not fully verified, the supplier was required to undertake to the contracting authority that the contract would only be performed by persons holding that right.

22 The call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings also made provision for tenderers to visit the site before submitting their tenders. Nevertheless, as it was impossible to gain access to a large number of containers, or determine how full they were, the actual quantity of hazardous waste was unknown.

23 The contracting authority received four tenders. One of these was made by Sanresa, in its capacity as the lead entity of a temporary association of Lithuanian undertakings. That tender designated two subcontractors, respectively established in Denmark and the Czech Republic.

24 On 22 November 2018, the contracting authority asked Sanresa to provide it, within five working days, with further information clarifying its tender, relating in particular to the division of the various waste management operations between its partners and subcontractors, and to the issue of which of its subcontractors held authorisation for international shipments of waste.

25 On 7 December 2018, the contracting authority informed Sanresa that, under Regulation No 1013/2006, international shipments of waste required prior authorisation from the authorities of the States concerned, and that none of the economic operators designated by Sanresa held such authorisation. Accordingly, the contracting authority gave Sanresa until 17 December 2018 to address those deficiencies, permitting it to supplement its tender or submit a new list of subcontractors.

26 On 26 February 2019, however, the contracting authority decided to terminate the tender procedure, on the basis that the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings was unclear, before reversing that decision on 18 March 2019. The following day, it informed Sanresa in writing that it had 40 days to supply an authorisation for the international shipment of waste or to change subcontractors.

27 The contracting authority rejected Sanresa's tender on 21 May 2019, on the ground (amongst others) that Sanresa did not hold the authorisation required under Regulation No 1013/2006 for the international shipment of waste, and thus had not demonstrated that it had the right to pursue the activity in question.

28 On 30 May 2019, Sanresa lodged a complaint against the rejection of its tender, arguing that it met the supplier capacity requirement as set out in the call for tenders. Sanresa considered that the call for tenders did not require the tender to be accompanied by consent from the national authorities for an international shipment of waste. The complaint was rejected, and Sanresa then brought legal proceedings which were dismissed both at first instance and on appeal. It then appealed on a point of law to the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania).

29 According to that court, the main issue arising relates to the proper classification of the clause of the call for tenders under which the tenderer is required, in the course of the procurement procedure, to produce consent from the competent authorities, in accordance with Regulation No 1013/2006, to the international shipment of the waste, the parties being in dispute as to whether that clause is a condition relating to supplier capacity, or a condition relating to the performance of the contract once concluded.

30 The referring court observes, first of all, that the parties to the main proceedings consider that that clause does not expressly require the consent of the competent authorities to the international shipment of waste to be attached to the tender.

31 It then states that, like Sanresa, it considers that the obligation to produce the consent does not relate to the capacity of the supplier, but to the performance of the contract. Although the technical specifications are required to be sufficiently precise for tenderers to be able to identify the subject matter of the contract, and for the contracting authority to be able to award it, the contracting authority defined the subject matter of the contract – more specifically the composition of the hazardous waste to be removed, and its code – in an imprecise manner. Thus, ex hypothesi, it was impossible to supply all of the information at the time of submission of the tender.

32 Moreover, a situation in which the contracting authority has failed to exhaustively describe the subject matter of the contract may also be incompatible with Regulation No 1013/2006, given that the lawfulness of a shipment of waste depends (amongst other things) on compliance with the original conditions, on the basis of which consent for the shipment was given. In particular, Article 17 thereof requires the notification procedure to be recommenced in the event that the composition and actual quantity of the hazardous waste, considered in its entirety, become apparent in the course of performance of the contract.

33 Furthermore, the referring court states that under that regulation, and particularly Article 11(1)(b) thereof, the competent authorities of the States of dispatch, destination and transit have a broad discretion to raise objections to the shipment of waste for disposal or recovery, for example on the grounds of national legislation or public order. There is thus a non-negligible risk of the successful tenderer finding that it is legally impossible for it to perform the contract. In those circumstances, the referring court doubts that the risk of refusal of consent should be laid on the contracting authority which has chosen a tenderer and entered into a contract with it.

34 Last, the referring court states that when it provided, in paragraph 23.1.2 of the call for tenders, that 'in the event that the right to pursue the activity in question is dependent on some capacity of the supplier which has not been verified, or not fully verified, the supplier must undertake to the contracting authority that the contract will only be performed by persons holding that right' – this wording being identical to that of Article 35(2)(3) of the Law on public procurement – the contracting authority in question was laying down a condition relating to the capacity of tenderers to perform the contract.

35 In that regard, the referring court states that, up until 2017, calls for tender did not state any requirement as to the tenderers' right to pursue the contractual activity, and it was therefore a matter for tenderers to determine, in the light of the definition of the subject matter of the contract and the technical specifications, what certificates, permits and declarations would be necessary to demonstrate that they possessed the specific right required.

36 The referring court indicates that since a judgment of 14 February 2017, reversing the previous position, it considers that contracting authorities are not entitled to reject tenders on the ground that they do not meet requirements which were not made public, even if those requirements arise from mandatory legal standards. Furthermore, where requirements relating to the right to pursue the activity in question, imposed by specific laws, have not been clearly set out in the terms of the contract, and tenderers do not meet those requirements, those tenderers must be given the opportunity to remedy the deficiencies in their tenders, and this extends to designating a new partner or subcontractor for the performance of the contract, even after the deadline for submission of tenders has passed.

37 The referring court adds that, in enacting the Law on public procurement, by which it transposed Directive 2014/24, the Lithuanian legislature was seeking to avoid a situation where the contracting authorities could reject tenders on the basis that the tenderers did not have the necessary capacity, when the capacity conditions had not been clearly set out in the procurement documents. To that end, the referring court observes, Article 35(2)(3) of the Law on public procurement now expressly provides that it is open to contracting authorities not to verify, or not fully to verify, the relevant capacities of the suppliers.

38 The referring court nevertheless questions whether the unlimited power thus conferred on the contracting authorities not to verify that the tenderers have the right to pursue the relevant activity is compatible with the principles of transparency and the protection of legitimate expectations, and with the rational organisation of public procurement procedures.

39 In those circumstances, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Are Article 18(2), point (b) of the first subparagraph and the second subparagraph of Article 56(1), point (a) of the first subparagraph of Article 58(1) and the second subparagraph of Article 58(2) of Directive 2014/24 and Articles 3 to 6 and other provisions of Regulation No 1013/2006 (together or separately but without limitation thereto) to be interpreted as meaning that consent issued to an economic operator, which is necessary to ship waste from one Member State of the European Union to another, is to be classified as a requirement for performance of a service contract and not a requirement concerning the right to pursue an activity?

(2) If the aforementioned consent to ship waste is to be regarded as a supplier selection criterion (suitability to pursue the professional activity), are the principles of transparency and fair competition laid down in the first and second subparagraphs of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, point (a) of the first subparagraph of Article 58(1) and the second subparagraph of Article 58(2) of that directive, the free movement of persons, goods and services enshrined in Article 26(2) TFEU and Articles 7 to 9 of Regulation No 1013/2006 (together or separately but without limitation thereto) to be interpreted and applied in such a way that conditions for the public procurement of waste management services, especially concerning closing dates for the submission of tenders, must create for domestic or foreign suppliers seeking to transport waste across the borders of the Member States of the European Union conditions enabling unrestricted participation in such procurement procedures, and they must inter alia be allowed to produce the aforementioned consent if it has been granted on a later date than the closing date for the submission of tenders?

(3) If the aforementioned consent to ship waste, in accordance with Article 49 of and point 17 of Part C of Annex V to Directive 2014/24 and Article 70 thereof, is to be regarded as a requirement for performance of a public procurement contract, should the principles of public procurement laid down in Article 18 of that directive and the general contract award procedure laid down in Article 56 thereof be interpreted as meaning that in public procurement procedures the tender of a participant who has not produced that consent may not be rejected?

(4) Are Article 18, point (b) of the first subparagraph of Article 56(1), point (a) of the first subparagraph of Article 58(1) and Article 58(2) of Directive 2014/24 to be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which contracting authorities are entitled to define in advance in public procurement documents a tender evaluation procedure under which the suppliers' right to pursue an activity (suitability to pursue the professional activity) will be verified partially or not verified at all even though the possession of that right is a prerequisite for lawful performance of the public procurement contract and contracting authorities may be aware in advance of the need for that right?

(5) Are Article 18 and the first subparagraph of Article 42(1) of Directive 2014/24 and Articles 2(35), 5 and 17 of Regulation No 1013/2006 as well as other provisions of that regulation to be interpreted as meaning that, in the case of procurement of waste management services, contracting authorities may lawfully procure such services only if they clearly and precisely define in the public procurement documents the quantity and composition of the waste and other important conditions for performing the contract (for example, packaging)?'

Consideration of the questions referred

40 By its first question, the referring court is essentially asking whether Article 18(2) and Articles 58 and 70 of Directive 2014/24 are to be interpreted as meaning that, in the context of a public procurement procedure for waste management services, the obligation of an economic operator wishing to ship waste from a Member State to another State to possess, in compliance inter alia with Article 2(35) and Article 3 of Regulation No 1013/2006, the consent of the competent authorities of the States concerned by the shipment, is a condition relating to its suitability to pursue the professional activity or a condition of performance of the contract.

41 First, it is apparent from Article 56(1)(b), and from Articles 57 and 58 of Directive 2014/24, that only qualitative selection criteria can be imposed by contracting authorities as conditions of participation in a public procurement procedure. As is apparent from the second subparagraph of Article 58(1) of that directive, the criteria are those set out in paragraphs 2 to 4 thereof, relating to suitability to pursue the professional activity, economic and financial standing and technical and professional ability.

42 In the present case, it is necessary to determine whether the obligation to obtain the consent of the competent authorities to transfer hazardous waste from a Member State to another State, as required under the contract at issue in the main proceedings, can relate to one of the three categories of qualitative selection criteria set out in Article 58(1)(a) to (c) of that directive, and particularised in paragraphs 2 to 4 thereof.

43 Article 58(2) of Directive 2014/24, which relates to the suitability of an economic operator to pursue the professional activity relevant to a public contract, makes provision in that regard permitting contracting authorities to require economic operators to be enrolled in a professional or trade register in their Member State of establishment. Similarly, in procurement procedures for services, in so far as economic operators have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in order to be able to perform in their country of origin the service concerned, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.

44 However, the obligation to obtain the consent of the competent authorities concerned in order to ship waste from a Member State to another State cannot be equated either with the obligation to be enrolled in a professional or trade register or to the obligation to possess a particular authorisation or to be a member of a particular organisation.

45 It is thus apparent that the obligation to obtain such consent does not relate to suitability to pursue the professional activity as referred to in Article 58(1)(a) of the directive.

46 Equally, that obligation does not relate to the economic and financial standing of an economic operator as referred to in Article 58(1)(b) of the directive.

47 There remains the question of whether the obligation might relate to technical and professional ability as referred to in Article 58(1)(c). Article 58(4) of Directive 2014/24 provides that contracting authorities may impose on economic operators, as a condition of participation in a procurement procedure, a requirement for them to possess the necessary human and technical resources and experience to perform the contract to an appropriate quality standard. They may require, in particular, that economic operators have a sufficient level of experience, demonstrated by suitable references from contracts performed in the past.

48 The assessment of the technical and professional ability of a candidate or a tenderer thus depends, in particular, on a retrospective evaluation of the experience gained by the operators through the performance of previous contracts, as is apparent from the two references to experience in Article 58(4) of the directive.

49 Thus, the obligation to obtain the consent of the competent authorities concerned, in order to transfer waste from a Member State to another State, equally does not relate to the technical and professional ability of a candidate or tenderer as referred to in Article 58(1)(c) of the directive.

50 That assessment is not called into question by the fact that paragraph (g) of Part II of Annex XII to Directive 2014/24 permits economic operators to provide evidence of their technical ability through an indication of the environmental management measures they will be able to apply when performing the contract. The environmental management measures referred to in that provision are measures that an economic operator intends to apply on its own initiative.

51 Second, Article 70 of the directive, which is headed ‘Conditions for performance of contract’, provides that contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that they are linked to the subject matter of the contract within the meaning of Article 67(3) thereof. Those conditions may include economic, innovation-related, environmental, social or employment-related considerations.

52 In that regard, it is apparent that the obligation to obtain the consent of the competent authorities of the States of dispatch, transit and destination prior to the shipment of waste, laid down by Articles 3 to 6 of Regulation No 1013/2006, relates to the performance of the contract. Its purpose is to lay down special conditions addressing environmental considerations, which are to apply on export of the waste to another State. Accordingly, this requirement can only sensibly be raised in relation to an economic operator intending to export waste to another State.

53 Furthermore, by imposing such an obligation, the contracting authority complies with Article 18(2) of Directive 2014/24, which requires Member States to take appropriate measures to ensure that in the performance of public contracts economic operators comply inter alia with applicable obligations in the field of environmental law established by Union law.

54 Last, it does not appear that classifying the obligation as a ‘condition of performance of the contract’ would undermine the performance of the contract at issue in the main proceedings. The fact that an economic operator has already carried out activities practically equivalent to that required by the contract provides reason to believe that it is suitable to perform that contract. Furthermore, as the European Commission pointed out in its written observations, the contracting authority would have been able to protect itself against the risk of non-performance of the contract by imposing selection criteria designed to reduce the risk of consent not being granted, for example by giving weight to previous experience in the shipment of hazardous waste.

55 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 18(2) and Articles 58 and 70 of Directive 2014/24 are to be interpreted as meaning that, in the context of a public procurement procedure for waste management services, the obligation of an economic operator wishing to ship waste from a Member State to another State to have the consent of the competent authorities of the States concerned by the shipment, in accordance inter alia with Article 2(35) and Article 3 of Regulation No 1013/2006, is a condition of performance of the contract.

The second question

56 Having regard to the answer given to the first question, there is no need to answer the second question.

The third question

57 By its third question, the referring court is essentially asking whether Article 70 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 18(1) of that directive, is to be interpreted as meaning that a tenderer's bid may not be rejected solely on the ground that, at the time of submitting the bid, the tenderer has not produced proof that it meets a condition of performance of the contract concerned.

58 Article 70 of Directive 2014/24 provides that the conditions for performance of the contract must be indicated in the call for competition or the procurement documents.

59 In the present case, it is apparent from the order for reference that the contracting authority was not in a position to state the exact quantity of hazardous waste to be treated, and also that it is not in dispute, between the parties to the main proceedings, that none of the procurement documents contained an express requirement for the competent authorities' consent to the international shipment of waste to be attached to the tender.

60 However, while a contracting authority is required, in principle, to state any condition of performance in the call for tenders or the procurement documents, the failure to do so does not make the procurement procedure unlawful where the condition of performance in question clearly arises from EU legislation applicable to the contractual activity, and from the decision of an economic operator not to perform the contract on the territory of the State in which the contracting authority is located.

61 In that regard, under Article 4 of Regulation No 1013/2006, an economic operator intending to ship waste, as referred to in Article 3(1)(a) or (b) thereof, must submit to the competent authority of dispatch, amongst other things, the notification and movement documents, the contract it has concluded with the consignee responsible for the recovery or disposal of the notified waste, and a financial guarantee or equivalent insurance. Those provisions thus presuppose that the tenderer is in possession of detailed information as to the quantity and composition of the waste, the shipment itinerary and the modes of transport to be used in the course of shipment.

62 Furthermore, under Article 58 of Directive 2014/24, in order to participate in a procurement procedure, a tenderer is required to demonstrate that, at the time of submitting the tender, it meets the qualitative selection criteria set out in Article 58(1)(a) to (c) of that directive. In contrast, the tenderer can wait until it is awarded the contract before supplying proof that it fulfils the conditions of performance of the contract. The qualitative selection criteria enable the contracting authority to restrict the tendering procedure to economic operators whose technical and professional ability, grounded in recent experience, suggests that they will be able to perform the contract in question, obtaining the required authorisations or logistical services as necessary. Furthermore, to oblige tenderers to satisfy all the conditions of performance of the contract at the time of submission of their tenders would be to impose an excessive requirement – one which might therefore dissuade economic operators from participating in procurement procedures – and would thus infringe the principles of proportionality and transparency guaranteed by Article 18(1) of the directive.

63 In those circumstances, the answer to the third question is that Article 70 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 18(1) of that directive, is to be interpreted as meaning that a tenderer's bid may not be rejected solely on the ground that, at the time of submitting the tender, the tenderer has not produced proof that it meets a condition of performance of the contract concerned.

The fourth question

64 By its fourth question, the referring court is essentially asking whether Article 18, point (b) of the first subparagraph of Article 56(1), point (a) of the first subparagraph of Article 58(1) and Article 58(2) of Directive 2014/24 are to be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which contracting authorities are entitled to define in the procurement documents a tender evaluation procedure under which the suitability of tenderers to pursue the contractual activity may or may not be verified, when suitability is a prerequisite of lawful performance of the contract, and this ought to be known to the contracting authority before the procurement documents are drawn up.

65 That question is based on the premiss that the obligation of an economic operator wishing to ship waste from a Member State to another State to possess, in compliance inter alia with Article 2(35) and Article 3 of Regulation No 1013/2006, the consent of the competent authorities concerned, constitutes a qualitative selection criterion falling within Article 58 of Directive 2014/24.

66 However, since this obligation is to be classified as a condition for performance of the contract within the meaning of Article 70 of that directive, as is apparent from the answer to the first question, it is not necessary to answer the fourth question.

The fifth question

67 By its fifth question, the referring court is essentially asking whether Article 18 and the first subparagraph of Article 42(1) of Directive 2014/24 are to be interpreted as meaning that, in a public contract for waste management services, the contracting authority may only procure such services lawfully if it specifies the quantity and composition of the waste, as well as the other important terms of performance of the contract, in a clear and precise manner in the procurement documents.

68 Questions relating to the interpretation of EU law which are referred by the national court, under the procedure provided for in Article 267 TFEU, enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may thus refuse to rule on a question referred by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of European Union law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. The Court's function in preliminary rulings is to assist in the administration of justice in the Member States and not to deliver advisory opinions on general or hypothetical questions (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraphs 41 to 43 and the case-law cited).

69 Besides the fact that this question is formulated in abstract and general terms, the order for reference does not contain the minimum of explanatory material that would be necessary to establish a link between the question and the dispute in the main proceedings.

70 In those circumstances, the question is hypothetical and therefore inadmissible.

Costs

71 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 18(2) and Articles 58 and 70 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC are to be interpreted as meaning that, in the context of a public procurement procedure for waste management services, the obligation of an economic operator wishing to ship waste from a Member State to another State to have the consent of the competent authorities of the States concerned by the shipment, in accordance inter alia with Article 2(35) and Article 3 of Regulation (EC) No 1013/2006 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 14 June 2006 on shipments of waste, is a condition of performance of the contract.

2. Article 70 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 18(1) of that directive, is to be interpreted as meaning that a tenderer's tender may not be rejected solely on the ground that, at the time of submitting the tender, the tenderer has not produced proof that it meets a condition of performance of the contract concerned.

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 18(1) and Articles 33 and 49 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65) as well as point 7 and point 10(a) of Part C of Annex V to that directive, and of Article 2d(1)(a) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1) (‘Directive 92/13’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Simonsen & Weel A/S and both the Region Nordjylland (Region of North Jutland, Denmark) and the Region Syddanmark (Region of Southern Denmark) (together, ‘the Regions’) concerning the Regions’ decision to conclude a framework agreement with Nutricia A/S.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Recitals 59 to 62 of Directive 2014/24 state:

‘(59) There is a strong trend emerging across Union public procurement markets towards the aggregation of demand by public purchasers, with a view to obtaining economies of scale, including lower prices and transaction costs, and to improving and professionalising procurement management. This can be achieved by concentrating purchases either by the number of contracting authorities involved or by volume and value over time. However, the aggregation and centralisation of purchases should be carefully monitored in order to avoid excessive concentration of purchasing power and collusion, and to preserve transparency and competition, as well as market access opportunities for SMEs.

(60) The instrument of framework agreements has been widely used and is considered as an efficient procurement technique throughout Europe. It should therefore be maintained largely as it is. However, certain aspects need to be clarified, in particular that framework agreements should not be used by contracting authorities which are not identified in them. For that purpose, the contracting authorities that are parties to a specific framework agreement from the outset should be clearly indicated, either by name or by other means, such as a reference to a given category of contracting authorities within a clearly delimited geographical area, so that the contracting authorities concerned can be easily and unequivocally identified. Likewise, a framework agreement should not be open to entry of new economic operators once it has been concluded. …

Contracting authorities should be given additional flexibility when procuring under framework agreements, which are concluded with more than one economic operator and which set out all the terms.

… Framework agreements should not be used improperly or in such a way as to prevent, restrict or distort competition. Contracting authorities should not be obliged pursuant to this Directive to procure works, supplies or services that are covered by a framework agreement, under that framework agreement.

(62) It should also be clarified that, while contracts based on a framework agreement are to be awarded before the end of the term of the framework agreement itself, the duration of the individual contracts based on a framework agreement does not need to coincide with the duration of that framework agreement, but might, as appropriate, be shorter or longer. …

It should also be clarified that there might be exceptional cases in which the length of the framework agreements themselves should be allowed to be longer than four years. Such cases, which should be duly justified, in particular by the subject of the framework agreement, might for instance arise where economic operators need to dispose of equipment the amortisation period of which is longer than four years and which must be available at any time over the entire duration of the framework agreement.'

4 Article 5 of that directive, which is entitled 'Methods for calculating the estimated value of procurement', provides, in paragraph 5 thereof:

'With regard to framework agreements and dynamic purchasing systems, the value to be taken into consideration shall be the maximum estimated value net of [value added tax (VAT)] of all the contracts envisaged for the total term of the framework agreement or the dynamic purchasing system.'

5 Article 18 of the directive, which sets out the 'principles of procurement', provides, in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1 thereof:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.'

6 Under the heading 'Framework agreements', Article 33 of Directive 2014/24 provides:

'1. Contracting authorities may conclude framework agreements, provided that they apply the procedures provided for in this Directive.

A framework agreement means an agreement between one or more contracting authorities and one or more economic operators, the purpose of which is to establish the terms governing contracts to be awarded during a given period, in particular with regard to price and, where appropriate, the quantity envisaged.

The term of a framework agreement shall not exceed four years, save in exceptional cases duly justified, in particular by the subject of the framework agreement.

2. Contracts based on a framework agreement shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures laid down in this paragraph and in paragraphs 3 and 4.

Contracts based on a framework agreement may under no circumstances entail substantial modifications to the terms laid down in that framework agreement, in particular in the case referred to in paragraph 3.

3. Where a framework agreement is concluded with a single economic operator, contracts based on that agreement shall be awarded within the limits of the terms laid down in the framework agreement.

7 Under Article 49 of that directive, which is entitled 'Contract notices':

‘Contract notices shall be used as a means of calling for competition in respect of all procedures, without prejudice to the second subparagraph of Article 26(5) and Article 32. Contract notices shall contain the information set out in Annex V part C and shall be published in accordance with Article 51.’

8 Article 53 of the directive, which is entitled ‘Electronic availability of procurement documents’, provides, in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Contracting authorities shall by electronic means offer unrestricted and full direct access free of charge to the procurement documents from the date of publication of a notice in accordance with Article 51 or the date on which an invitation to confirm interest was sent. The text of the notice or the invitation to confirm interest shall specify the internet address at which the procurement documents are accessible.’

9 Under the heading ‘Modification of contracts during their term’, Article 72 of Directive 2014/24 provides:

‘1. Contracts and framework agreements may be modified without a new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive in any of the following cases:

(e) where the modifications, irrespective of their value, are not substantial within the meaning of paragraph 4.

Contracting authorities having modified a contract in the cases set out under points (b) and (c) of this paragraph shall publish a notice to that effect in the Official Journal of the European Union. Such notice shall contain the information set out in Annex V part G and shall be published in accordance with Article 51.

4. A modification of a contract or a framework agreement during its term shall be considered to be substantial within the meaning of point (e) of paragraph 1, where it renders the contract or the framework agreement materially different in character from the one initially concluded. In any event, without prejudice to paragraphs 1 and 2, a modification shall be considered to be substantial where one or more of the following conditions is met:

(a) the modification introduces conditions which, had they been part of the initial procurement procedure, would have allowed for the admission of other candidates than those initially selected or for the acceptance of a tender other than that originally accepted or would have attracted additional participants in the procurement procedure;

(b) the modification changes the economic balance of the contract or the framework agreement in favour of the contractor in a manner which was not provided for in the initial contract or framework agreement;

(c) the modification extends the scope of the contract of framework agreement considerably;

(d) where a new contractor replaces the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract in other cases than those provided for under point (d) of paragraph 1.

5. A new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive shall be required for other modifications of the provisions of a public contract or a framework agreement during its term than those provided for under paragraphs 1 and 2.’

10 Article 91 of that directive provides:

‘Directive 2004/18/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)] is repealed with effect from 18 April 2016.

References to the repealed Directive shall be construed as references to this Directive and shall be read in accordance with the correlation table in Annex XV.'

11 Annex V to the directive identifies the 'information to be included in notices'. Part B of that annex sets out the 'information to be included in prior information notices (as referred to in Article 48)'. Title II of that part lists the 'additional information to be supplied where the notice is used as a means of calling for competition (Article 48(2))'.

12 That information includes the information mentioned in point 7 of that title, which reads as follows:

'As far as already known, estimated total magnitude for contract(s); where the contract is divided into lots, this information shall be provided for each lot.'

13 Part C of Annex V lists as 'information to be included in contract notices (as referred to in Article 49)':

'…

2. Email or internet address at which the procurement documents will be available for unrestricted and full direct access, free of charge.

5. CPV codes; where the contract is divided into lots, this information shall be provided for each lot.

7. Description of the procurement: nature and extent of works, nature and quantity or value of supplies, nature and extent of services. Where the contract is divided into lots, this information shall be provided for each lot. Where appropriate, description of any options.

8. Estimated total order of magnitude of contract(s); where the contract is divided into lots, this information shall be provided for each lot.

10. Time-frame for delivery or provision of supplies, works or services and, as far as possible, duration of the contract.

(a) In the case of a framework agreement, indication of the planned duration of the framework agreement, stating, where appropriate, the reasons for any duration exceeding four years; as far as possible, indication of value or order of magnitude and frequency of contracts to be awarded, number and, where appropriate, proposed maximum number of economic operators to participate.

Implementing Regulation (EU) 2015/1986

14 Commission Implementing Regulation (EU) 2015/1986 of 11 November 2015 establishing standard forms for the publication of notices in the field of public procurement and repealing Implementing Regulation (EU) No 842/2011 (OJ 2015 L 296, p. 1) includes, in Annex II thereto, a standard form which sets out the different fields which, depending on the circumstances, a contracting authority or a contracting entity may or must complete.

15 Section II of that form, which is entitled 'Object' of the procurement, distinguishes between the 'scope of the procurement' and its 'description'.

16 The fields relating to the scope of the procurement include field II.1.5, which is entitled ‘Estimated total value’. That field refers to footnote No 2 of the form, which simply states ‘if applicable’. In that field, the contracting authority or contracting entity must indicate the value excluding VAT of the procurement and the currency used in that regard, it being specified that ‘for framework agreements or dynamic purchasing systems – [this means the] estimated total maximum value for the entire duration of the framework agreement or dynamic purchasing system’.

17 The fields relating to the description of the procurement include field II.2.1, which is to be used to state the ‘title’ of the procurement. That field includes a subdivision entitled ‘Lot No’, which likewise refers to footnote No 2 that reads ‘if applicable’.

18 Field II.2.6, which is entitled ‘Estimated value’, states that the contracting authority or contracting entity must indicate the value excluding VAT of the procurement and the currency used in that regard, and explains that ‘for framework agreements or dynamic purchasing systems – [this means the] estimated total maximum value for the entire duration of this lot’.

Directive 89/665/EEC

19 Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2014/23 (‘Directive 89/665’), applies to the facts at issue in the main proceedings because the date of transposition of the latter directive expired on 18 April 2016.

20 The initial version of Directive 89/665 was previously amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31). Recitals 13, 14 and 17 of Directive 2007/66 state:

‘(13) In order to combat the illegal direct award of contracts, which the Court of Justice has called the most serious breach of [EU] law in the field of public procurement on the part of a contracting authority or contracting entity, there should be provision for effective, proportionate and dissuasive sanctions. Therefore a contract resulting from an illegal direct award should in principle be considered ineffective. The ineffectiveness should not be automatic but should be ascertained by or should be the result of a decision of an independent review body.

(14) Ineffectiveness is the most effective way to restore competition and to create new business opportunities for those economic operators which have been deprived illegally of their opportunity to compete. Direct awards within the meaning of this Directive should include all contract awards made without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union within the meaning of Directive 2004/18/EC. This corresponds to a procedure without prior call for competition within the meaning of Directive 2004/17/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1)].

(17) A review procedure should be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.’

21 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, which is entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive [2014/24] unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 37 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, works and services concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] or Directive [2014/23], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.'

22 Under the heading 'Ineffectiveness', Article 2d of Directive 89/665 provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

'Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

(a) if the contracting authority has awarded a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union without this being permissible in accordance with Directive 2014/24/EU or Directive 2014/23/EU;

23 Article 1 of Directive 92/13, which is entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides, in the first and second subparagraphs of paragraph 1 thereof:

'This Directive applies to the contracts referred to in Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243)] unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 18 to 24, 27 to 30, 34 or 55 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include supply, works and service contracts, works and services concessions, framework agreements and dynamic purchasing systems.'

24 The wording of Article 2d(1)(a) of Directive 92/13 is identical to that of Article 2d(1)(a) of Directive 89/665.

Danish law

Law on public procurement

25 The Udbudsloven, lov nr. 1564 (Law No 1564 on public procurement), of 15 December 2015, in the version applicable to the facts of the case in the main proceedings ('the Law on public procurement'), which transposes Directive 2014/24 into Danish law, includes a Title I, entitled 'General provisions', which contains Paragraphs 1 to 38 of that law.

26 Paragraph 2 of the law, which is entitled 'General principles', provides, in subparagraph 1 thereof:

'In relation to the public contracts referred to in Titles II to IV, the contracting authority shall comply with the principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality.'

27 Paragraph 24 of the same law contains inter alia the following definitions:

(24) "public contracts" means contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services;

(30) “framework agreement” means an agreement between one or more contracting authorities and one or more economic operators which establishes the terms governing contracts awarded during a given period, in particular with regard to price and the quantity envisaged.’

28 Title II of the Law on public procurement, which relates to ‘public contracts of a value greater than the threshold’, consists of Paragraphs 39 to 185 of that law.

29 Paragraph 56 of that law provides:

‘In an open procedure, any economic operator may submit a tender in response to a contract notice. The contract notice shall contain the information provided for in Part C of Annex V to Directive [2014/24]. The contracting authority shall use the standard form referred to in Paragraph 128(3) of this Law.’

30 Under Paragraph 128 of the law:

‘1. A contracting authority shall use the contract notices as a means of calling for competition in respect of all procedures, with the exception of the negotiated procedure without prior notice …

2. The contract notices shall contain the information provided for in Part C of Annex V to Directive [2014/24] …

3. The contract notice shall be drawn up on the basis of the standard forms established by the European Commission, transmitted electronically to the Publications Office of the European Union and published in accordance with Annex VIII to Directive [2014/24] …

Law on the Public Procurement Complaints Board

31 The Lov om Klagenævnet for udbud, lovbekendtgørelse nr. 593 (Law on the Public Procurement Complaints Board, Codification Decree No 593) of 2 June 2016, which implements Directive 92/13, provides, in Paragraph 17(1)(1) thereof:

‘A contract falling within the scope of Title II or III of the Law on public procurement or that of Directive [2014/25] shall be considered ineffective if:

(1) in breach of the Law on public procurement or of the EU rules on procurement, the contracting authority has concluded a contract without prior publication of a notice in the Official Journal of the European Union, subject, however, to the provisions of Paragraph 4,

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

32 By a contract notice of 30 April 2019, the Regions initiated an open public procurement procedure within the meaning of Directive 2014/24 with a view to concluding a four-year framework agreement between the Region of North Jutland and a single economic operator for the purchase of probe kits for patients receiving home care and for institutions.

33 The contract notice stated that the Region of Southern Denmark would participate merely ‘by option’ and that the candidates were required to tender for ‘all items in the contract’.

34 Furthermore, that notice did not contain information about the estimated value of the contract under the framework agreement for the Region of North Jutland or of the option for the Region of Southern Denmark, or information about the maximum value of the framework agreements or about the estimated or maximum quantity of the products to be purchased under the framework agreements.

35 As is clear from Annex 3 to the notice, ‘indicated estimates and expected quantities to be consumed merely reflect the contracting authority’s expectations regarding the consumption of the services covered by the contract. The contracting authority does not therefore undertake to buy a specific quantity of service or to make purchases in a particular amount under the framework agreement. In other words, the actual consumption may prove to be higher or lower than the estimates indicate'. Nor was the framework agreement to be regarded as being exclusive, such that the contracting authority could acquire similar products from other suppliers whilst complying with the rules governing public contracts.

36 By decision of 9 August 2019, the Regions found that Nutricia's tender was the most advantageous and declared that that company had been awarded the contract. On 19 August 2019, Simonsen & Weel lodged a complaint with the Klagenævnet for Udbud (Public Procurement Complaints Board, Denmark) seeking the annulment of that decision.

37 Since that court did not grant that complaint suspensive effect, the Region of North Jutland concluded a framework agreement with the successful tenderer. For its part, the Region of Southern Denmark did not exercise the option available to it.

38 In support of its complaint, Simonsen & Weel submits, in the first place, that, by failing to indicate in the contract notice the estimated quantity or estimated value of the supplies under the framework agreement at issue in the main proceedings, the Regions infringed Article 49 of Directive 2014/24, the principles of equal treatment and transparency enshrined in Article 18(1) of that directive and point 7 of Part C of Annex V to the directive.

39 In the second place, the Regions are required to indicate the maximum quantity of the products that can be acquired under the framework agreement or the total maximum value of that framework agreement, failing which they could divide that framework agreement up artificially throughout its duration, contrary to the case-law established in the judgment of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice (C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034).

40 With regard to the failure to indicate the estimated quantity or estimated value, the Regions contend, inter alia, that the obligation to indicate a specific extent or a specific value in the contract notice does not apply in relation to framework agreements. In their view, it follows from the very wording of Article 33(1) of Directive 2014/24 that the estimated quantities envisaged can be stated 'where appropriate', thus meaning that such an indication remains optional for the contracting authority.

41 As for the failure to indicate the maximum quantity of the products that can be acquired under the framework agreement or the total maximum value of that framework agreement, the Regions argue that the solution adopted in the judgment of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice (C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034), is limited to those situations in which a contracting authority is acting on behalf of other contracting authorities who are not directly parties to the framework agreement, which was not the case here. In addition, it follows from that judgment that the principles of transparency and equal treatment are observed where the total quantity of the services is indicated in the framework agreement itself or in another contractual document.

42 Moreover, in the case of calls for tenders relating to a framework agreement, the question of whether it is also carried out on behalf of other contracting authorities is decisive, as also follows from recitals 59 to 62 of Directive 2014/24. The requirement to indicate a maximum volume or a maximum value, which is mentioned in paragraph 61 of the judgment of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice (C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034), cannot be extended to circumstances that are not comparable to that at issue in that case. In the present case, the Regions contend that they put out for tender a non-exclusive, non-synallagmatic framework agreement, and that they were unaware at the time of the call for tenders of the extent of the specific purchasing requirements or the price level for the 'individual contracts'. Accordingly, they were unable to provide a reliable estimate of the value of the framework agreement.

43 The Klagenævnet for Udbud (Public Procurement Complaints Board) therefore asks about the possibility of applying by analogy the solution adopted in the judgment of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice (C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034), to the dispute in the main proceedings, given the particular nature of the circumstances of the case that gave rise to that judgment and the fact that Directive 2014/24 contains, in relation to framework agreements, some – admittedly minor – amendments as compared with the wording of Directive 2004/18, which was applicable to that case. Its doubts relate in particular to whether a maximum limit should specify both the maximum quantities and maximum values of the products that may be purchased under the framework agreement and whether such a maximum should, where appropriate, be determined 'from the start', that is to say in the contract notice – in which case it would therefore be identical to the estimated value – and/or in the tender specifications, or whether it is sufficient for a maximum to be determined for the first time in the framework agreement itself, that is to say on completion of the competitive tendering procedure. Lastly, if that maximum limit was not duly stated by the contracting authority, the referring court asks whether, pursuant to Article 2d of Directive 92/13, the framework agreement concluded on that basis must be treated in the same way as the situation in which a contract notice was not published and, therefore, be regarded as being ineffective.

44 It is in that context that the Klagenævnet for Udbud (Public Procurement Complaints Board) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) (a) Are the principles of equal treatment and transparency laid down in Article 18(1) of [Directive 2014/24] and Article 49 of [that directive], in conjunction with points 7 and 10(a) of Part C of Annex V [thereto], to be interpreted as meaning that the contract notice in a case such as the present must contain information on the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value of the supplies under the framework contract to which the tender relates?

(b) If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, the Court is also asked whether the above provisions are to be interpreted as meaning that the information must be stated in respect of the framework contract (a) as a whole and/or (b) in respect of the original contracting authority which stated its intention to conclude an agreement on the basis of the invitation to tender (in the present case: Region of North Jutland) and/or (c) in respect of the original contracting authority which merely stated that it is participating in an option (in the present case: Region of Southern Denmark).

(2) (a) Are the principles of equal treatment and transparency laid down in Article 18(1) of [Directive 2014/24] and Articles 33 and 49 of [Directive 2014/24], in conjunction with points 7 and 10(a) of Part C of Annex V to Directive 2014/24, to be interpreted as meaning that either the contract notice or the tender specifications must set a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under the framework contract to which the tender relates, such that the framework contract in question will no longer have any effect when that limit is reached?

(b) If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, the Court is also asked whether the above provisions are to be interpreted as meaning that the above maximum limit must be indicated in respect of the framework contract (a) as a whole and/or (b) in respect of the original contracting authority which stated its intention to conclude an agreement on the basis of the invitation to tender (in the present case: Region of North Jutland) and/or (c) in respect of the original contracting authority which merely stated that it is participating in one option (in the present case: Region of Southern Denmark).

(3) If the answer to Question 1 and/or Question 2 is in the affirmative, the Court is further asked – in so far as it is relevant to the content of those answers – to answer the following question:

Is Article 2d(1)(a) of [Directive 92/13], read in conjunction with Articles 33 and 49 of [Directive 2014/24], in conjunction with points 7 and 10(a) of Part C of Annex V to Directive 2014/24, to be interpreted as meaning that the condition that "the contracting entity has awarded a contract without prior publication of a notice in the Official Journal of the European Union" covers a case such as the present where the contracting authority has published a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union concerning the envisaged framework contract, but

(a) where the contract notice does not meet the requirement to indicate the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value of the supplies under the framework contract to which the tender relates since an estimate thereof is set out in the tender specifications, and

(b) where the contracting authority has breached the requirement to set in the contract notice or the tender specifications a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under the framework contract to which the call for tenders relates?'

Consideration of the questions referred

Part (a) of the first question and part (a) of the second question

45 By part (a) of its first question and part (a) of its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 49 of Directive 2014/24 and points 7, 8 and 10(a) of Part C of Annex V to that directive, read in conjunction with Article 33 of the directive and the principles of equal treatment and transparency laid down in Article 18(1) thereof, are to be interpreted as meaning that the contract notice must state the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value as well as a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement and that that agreement will no longer have any effect once that limit is reached.

46 It must be recalled that, pursuant to the second subparagraph of Article 33(1) of Directive 2014/42, a framework agreement is an agreement between one or more contracting authorities and one or more economic operators, the purpose of which is to establish the terms governing contracts to be awarded during a given period, in particular with regard to price and, where appropriate, the quantity envisaged. The first subparagraph of that paragraph provides that contracting authorities may conclude framework agreements, provided that they apply the procedures provided for in the directive.

47 Article 49 of Directive 2014/24 provides that contract notices are to be used as a means of calling for competition in respect of all procedures, without prejudice to the second subparagraph of Article 26(5) and Article 32 of that directive. They are to contain the information set out in Part C of Annex V to the directive and are to be published in accordance with Article 51 of the directive.

48 It follows that Article 49 of Directive 2014/24 and, therefore, Part C of Annex V thereto apply to framework agreements.

49 In that regard, certain provisions of Directive 2014/24, taken in isolation, may suggest that the contracting authority has some discretion as to expediency of indicating, in the contract notice, a maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement.

50 Point 8 of Part C of Annex V to Directive 2014/24 provides that, in terms of the information to be included in contract notices, the contracting authority must state the estimated total order of magnitude of the contract(s), and that information is to be provided for each lot where the contract is divided into lots. The reference merely to an 'order of magnitude' rather than to a specifically defined value suggests that the valuation required of the contracting authority may be approximate.

51 Point 10 of that Part C, which relates to information concerning the timeframe for delivery or provision of supplies, works or services and, as far as possible, the duration of the contract, provides in point (a) thereof, which is specifically devoted to frameworks agreements, that the contracting authority must indicate, as far as possible, the value or the order of magnitude and the frequency of the contracts to be awarded. It therefore follows that, in accordance with that provision, the contracting authority is not required in all circumstances to indicate the value or the order of magnitude and the frequency of the contracts to be awarded.

52 Similarly, the second subparagraph of Article 33(1) of Directive 2014/24 provides that the purpose of a framework agreement is to establish, 'where appropriate', the quantity envisaged. By using the words 'where appropriate', that provision makes clear, specifically in relation to the quantity of the supplies, that that quantity must, in so far as possible, be established in a framework agreement. It is likewise apparent from the standard form contained in Annex II to Implementing Regulation 2015/1986 that the contracting authority is not required to complete field II.1.5, which is entitled 'Estimated total value'; that value can be specified 'if applicable', as is clear from the reference made in that field to footnote No 2 of that form.

53 It follows from the foregoing that a literal interpretation alone of those provisions is not conclusive for the purpose of determining whether a contract notice must indicate the estimated quantity and/or estimated value as well as a maximum quantity and/or maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement.

54 However, in the light of the principles of equal treatment and transparency laid down in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 and of the general scheme of that directive, a failure by the contracting authority to indicate, in the contract notice, a maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement cannot be accepted.

55 Indeed, it follows from other provisions of Directive 2014/24 that the contracting authority must determine the content of the framework agreement that it intends to conclude.

56 First, Article 5 of that directive, which concerns the methods for calculating the estimated value of procurement, provides, in paragraph 5 thereof, that, with regard to framework agreements, the value to be taken into consideration is to be the maximum estimated value net of VAT of all the public contracts envisaged for the total term of the framework agreement.

57 Since the contracting authority is called upon to assess the maximum estimated value net of VAT of all the contracts envisaged for the total term of the framework agreement, it is able to communicate that value to the tenderers.

58 Furthermore, the Court relied inter alia on Article 9(9) of Directive 2004/18, the wording of which is identical to that of Article 5(5) of Directive 2014/24, to find, in paragraph 60 of the judgment of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice (C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034), that, although the contracting authority that is an original party to the framework agreement is subject only to a requirement to use best endeavours with regard to the value and frequency of each of the subsequent contracts to be awarded, it is nevertheless imperative that that authority state vis-à-vis the framework agreement itself the total quantity, and therefore the maximum quantity and/or maximum value, which the subsequent contracts may comprise.

59 Second, pursuant to point 7 of Part C of Annex V to Directive 2014/24, the contracting authority must, in respect of the information to be included in contract notices, describe the procurement and, in that regard, state the quantity or the value of the supplies which will be covered by the framework agreement in its entirety. It cannot comply with that requirement without indicating, at the very least, a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of such supplies.

60 Furthermore, when a contracting authority is required to complete the form contained in Annex II to Implementing Regulation 2015/1986, it is required to indicate, in field II.2.6 of that form, which concerns the estimated value, the total maximum value for the entire duration of each of the lots.

61 Moreover, it is important to note that the fundamental principles of EU law, such as equal treatment and transparency, are applicable to the conclusion of a framework agreement; this follows from the first subparagraph of Article 33(1) of Directive 2014/24. Not only the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination, but also the principle of transparency that stems from them imply that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or tender specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice, C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034, paragraph 63).

62 The principles of transparency and equal treatment of economic operators with an interest in the conclusion of a framework agreement, as established, inter alia, by Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, would be affected if the contracting authority that is an original party to the framework agreement did not set out the maximum quantity which such an agreement covers (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice, C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034, paragraph 64).

63 In that connection, the indication by the contracting authority of the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value as well as of a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement is of considerable importance for a tenderer, since it is on the basis of that estimate that he or she will be able to assess his or her ability to perform the obligations arising from that framework agreement.

64 Furthermore, if the maximum estimated value or quantity which such an agreement covers were not indicated or if that indication were not legally binding, the contracting authority could flout that maximum quantity. As a result, the successful tenderer could be held contractually liable for non-performance of the framework agreement if he or she were to fail to supply the quantities requested by the contracting authority, even though those quantities exceed the maximum quantity in the contract notice. Such a situation would be contrary to the principle of transparency as laid down in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24.

65 In addition, the principle of transparency could be infringed over the long term since, as follows from the third subparagraph of Article 33(1) of that directive, a framework agreement can be concluded for a term of up to four years, or even longer in duly justified exceptional cases, in particular by the subject of the framework agreement. Moreover, as is stated in recital 62 of the directive, while contracts based on a framework agreement are to be awarded before the end of the term of the framework agreement, the duration of the individual contracts based on a framework agreement does not need to coincide with the duration of that framework agreement, but might sometimes be shorter or longer.

66 Lastly, a broad interpretation of the obligation to define the maximum estimated value or quantity covered by the framework agreement could also, first, render redundant the rule laid down in the third subparagraph of Article 33(2) of Directive 2014/24, under which contracts based on a framework agreement may under no circumstances entail substantial modifications to the terms laid down in that framework agreement, and, second, constitute improper use or use intended to prevent, restrict or distort competition, as referred to in recital 61 of the directive.

67 It follows that the requirement that the contracting authority that is an original party to the framework agreement indicate therein the maximum quantity or the maximum value of the services that that agreement will cover is a manifestation of the prohibition on using framework agreements improperly or in such a way as to prevent, restrict or distort competition (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice, C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034, paragraph 69).

68 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the contracting authority that is an original party to the framework agreement can make commitments on its own behalf or on behalf of the potential contracting authorities that are specifically indicated in the agreement only up to a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value and once that limit has been reached the agreement will no longer have any effect (see, by analogy, judgment of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice, C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034, paragraph 61).

69 However, two further clarifications must be made.

70 First, in accordance with the third subparagraph of Article 33(2) and Article 72 of Directive 2014/24, modifications to a framework agreement that are not substantial are allowed, it being understood that, by definition, such a modification is consensual in nature and, accordingly, the agreement of the successful tenderer is required.

71 Second, the indication of the maximum quantity or the maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement can appear in either the contract notice or the tender specifications, since, in the case of a framework agreement, the contracting authorities are required to offer, pursuant to Article 53(1) of Directive 2014/24, by electronic means unrestricted and full direct access free of charge to the procurement documents from the date of publication of a notice in accordance with Article 51 of that directive.

72 Compliance with the principles of transparency and equal treatment laid down in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 can thus be ensured if those conditions are met.

73 However, those principles would not be satisfied if an economic operator wanting to access those tender specifications in order to assess the expediency of tendering were required to express, in advance, any interest whatsoever to the contracting authority.

74 In those circumstances, part (a) of the first question and part (a) of the second question must be answered to the effect that Article 49 of Directive 2014/24 and points 7, 8 and 10(a) of Part C of Annex V to that directive, read in conjunction with Article 33 of the directive and the principles of equal treatment and transparency laid down in Article 18(1) thereof, are to be interpreted as meaning that the contract notice must indicate the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value as well as a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement and that that agreement will no longer have any effect once that limit is reached.

Part (b) of the first question and part (b) of the second question

75 By part (b) of its first question and part (b) of its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 49 of Directive 2014/24 and points 7 and 10(a) of Part C of Annex V to that directive, read in conjunction with Article 33 of the directive and the principles of equal treatment and transparency laid down in Article 18(1) thereof, are to be interpreted as meaning that the estimated quantity or the estimated value of the supplies under a framework agreement as well as the maximum quantity or the maximum value of those supplies must be indicated in the contract notice as a whole.

76 Since, as is clear from the answer given to part (a) of the first question and part (a) of the second question, the contract notice must indicate the estimated quantity and/or estimated value as well as a maximum quantity and/or maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement, the principles of transparency and equal treatment laid down in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 preclude a contracting authority from communicating only partial information about the subject and the extent, in quantitative and/or financial terms, of a framework agreement.

77 That indication could appear as a whole in the contract notice, since such an indication would be sufficient to ensure compliance with the principles of transparency and equal treatment laid down in Article 18(1) of that directive.

78 However, nothing precludes a contracting authority, with a view to refining the information provided to tenderers and to enable them best to assess the expediency of submitting a tender, from laying down additional requirements and dividing the total estimated quantity or value of the supplies under the framework agreement in order to define the requirements of the contracting authority that is an original party which intends to conclude a framework agreement and those of the contracting authority or authorities that is/are an original party which has/have expressed the desire to participate in that framework agreement on an optional basis.

79 Similarly, a contracting authority can present separately, in the contract notice, the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value as well as a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement for each of the contracting authorities, whether they intend to conclude the framework agreement or have an option to do so. That could be the case in particular where, in the light of the terms governing the performance of the subsequent public contracts, the economic operators are invited to tender for all the lots or for all the items referred to in the contract notice, or even where the subsequent contracts are to be performed in remote locations.

80 Part (b) of the first question and part (b) of the second question must therefore be answered to the effect that Article 49 of Directive 2014/24 and points 7 and 10(a) of Part C of Annex V to that directive, read in conjunction with Article 33 of the directive and the principles of equal treatment and transparency laid down in Article 18(1) thereof, are to be interpreted as meaning that the contract notice must indicate the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value and a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement as a whole and that that notice may lay down additional requirements which the contracting authority decides to add thereto.

The third question

81 As a preliminary point, it must be recalled that the fact that the referring court has worded a question referred for a preliminary ruling with reference only to certain provisions of EU law does not preclude the Court from providing to the referring court all the elements of interpretation which may be of assistance in adjudicating on the case pending before it, whether or not that court has referred to them in its questions. In that regard, it is for the Court to extract from all the information provided by the national court, in particular from the grounds of the decision referring the questions, the points of EU law which require interpretation, having regard to the subject matter of the dispute (see, inter alia, judgments of 27 October 2009, ČEZ, C-115/08, EU:C:2009:660, paragraph 81; of 22 March 2012, Nilaş and Others, C-248/11, EU:C:2012:166, paragraph 31; and of 20 December 2017, Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani and Guerrato, C-178/16, EU:C:2017:1000, paragraph 28).

82 In the present case, Directive 92/13, the interpretation of a provision of which is sought by the referring court, concerns the rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors. However, such services are not at issue in the case in the main proceedings, which concerns reviews relating to contract award procedures based on Directive 2014/24 that are governed by Directive 89/665, Article 2d(1)(a) of which is worded in similar terms to the corresponding provision of Directive 92/13.

83 In those circumstances, the view must be taken that, by its third question, the referring court is essentially asking whether Article 2d(1)(a) of Directive 89/665 is to be interpreted as meaning that it is applicable where a contract notice has been published in the Official Journal of the European Union, even though, first, the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value of the supplies under the envisaged framework agreement is stated not in that contract notice but in the tender specifications and, second, neither that contract notice nor those tender specifications mention a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under that framework agreement.

84 Under Article 2d(1) of Directive 89/665, if a contract notice is not published beforehand in the Official Journal of the European Union without this being permissible in accordance with Directive 2014/24, the contract or, as in the present case, the framework agreement concerned is ineffective.

85 Article 2d was inserted into the initial version of Directive 89/665 by Directive 2007/66. The EU legislature explained the amendments made by stating in recital 13 of Directive 2007/66 that, in order to combat the illegal direct award of contracts – which the Court in its judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraphs 36 and 37), called the most serious breach of EU law in the field of public procurement on the part of a contracting authority or contracting entity – there should be provision for effective, proportionate and dissuasive sanctions and, on that basis, a contract resulting from an illegal direct award should in principle be considered ineffective. In recital 14 of that directive, the EU legislature clarified that ineffectiveness is the most effective way to restore competition and to create new business opportunities for those economic operators which have been deprived illegally of their opportunity to compete, and that direct awards within the meaning of that directive should include all contract awards made without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union within the meaning of Directive 2004/18.

86 It thus follows from Article 2d(1)(a) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of recitals 13 and 14 of Directive 2007/66, that, when Directive 2007/66 was adopted, the EU legislature intended to introduce into the applicable law a serious penalty, the application of which should however be confined to the most serious cases of infringements of EU law on public procurement, namely those in which a contract is awarded directly without having been the subject of any prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union.

87 It follows that it would be disproportionate to extend the application of that provision to a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, in which the Regions published a contract notice and made the tender specifications accessible without mentioning, in that notice or those tender specifications, the estimated quantity and/or estimated value and the maximum quantity and/or maximum value of the supplies under that framework agreement.

88 In such a situation, the infringement of Article 49 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with points 7, 8 and 10(a) of Part C of Annex V to that directive, does not reach the degree of seriousness required to entail the application of the penalty provided for in Article 2d(1)(a) of Directive 89/665.

89 The contracting authority's failure to comply with its obligation to indicate the extent of a framework agreement is, in such circumstances, sufficiently noticeable for it to be detected by an economic operator who intended to submit a tender and who ought, as a result, to be regarded as being duly informed.

90 The third question must therefore be answered to the effect that Article 2d(1)(a) of Directive 89/665 is to be interpreted as meaning that it is not applicable where a contract notice has been published in the Official Journal of the European Union, even though, first, the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value of the supplies under the envisaged framework agreement is stated not in that contract notice but in the tender specifications and, second, neither that contract notice nor those tender specifications mention a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under that framework agreement.

Costs

91 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 49 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC and points 7, 8 and 10(a) of Part C of Annex V to that directive, read in conjunction with Article 33 of the directive and the principles of equal treatment and transparency laid down in Article 18(1) thereof, are to be interpreted as meaning that the contract notice must indicate the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value as well as a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement and that that agreement will no longer have any effect once that limit is reached.

2. Article 49 of Directive 2014/24 and points 7 and 10(a) of Part C of Annex V to that directive, read in conjunction with Article 33 of the directive and the principles of equal treatment and transparency laid down in Article 18(1) thereof, are to be interpreted as meaning that the contract notice must indicate the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value and a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under a framework agreement as a whole and that that notice may lay down additional requirements which the contracting authority decides to add thereto.

3. Article 2d(1)(a) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, is to be interpreted as meaning that it is not applicable where a contract notice has been published in the Official Journal of the European Union, even though, first, the estimated quantity and/or the estimated value of the supplies under the envisaged framework agreement is stated not in that contract notice but in the tender specifications and, second, neither that contract notice nor those tender specifications mention a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the supplies under that framework agreement.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44), and the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the Sotsiaalministeerium (Ministry of Social Affairs, Estonia) and Riigi Tugiteenuste Keskus (shared services centre for the State), formerly Innove SA, concerning the financial correction decision by which the latter rejected certain requests for payment submitted by that ministry in connection with a project to purchase and distribute food aid to the most disadvantaged persons.

3 Recital 42 of Directive 2004/18 states:

‘The relevant Community rules on mutual recognition of diplomas, certificates or other evidence of formal qualifications apply when evidence of a particular qualification is required for participation in a procurement procedure or a design contest.’

4 Article 2 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

5 Article 26 of that directive, entitled ‘Conditions for performance of contracts’, provides:

‘Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with Community law and are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications. The conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.’

6 Chapter VII of Title II of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Conduct of the procedure’, includes Section 1, entitled ‘General provisions’. The latter consists solely of Article 44 of that directive, entitled ‘Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts’, which is worded as follows:

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 53 and 55, taking into account Article 24, after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded under Articles 45 and 46 has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52, and, where appropriate, with the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in paragraph 3.

2. The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.

These minimum levels shall be indicated in the contract notice.

7 Section 2 of that chapter, entitled ‘Criteria for qualitative selection’, comprises Articles 45 to 52 of that directive.

8 Pursuant to Article 46 of that directive, entitled ‘Suitability to pursue the professional activity’:

‘Any economic operator wishing to take part in a public contract may be requested to prove its enrolment, as prescribed in his Member State of establishment, on one of the professional or trade registers or to provide a declaration on oath or a certificate as described in Annex IX A for public works contracts, in Annex IX B for public supply contracts and in Annex IX C for public service contracts.

In procedures for the award of public service contracts, in so far as candidates or tenderers have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in order to be able to perform in their country of origin the service concerned, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.'

9 Article 48 of that directive, entitled 'Technical and/or professional ability', provides:

'1. The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.

2. Evidence of the economic operators' technical abilities may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services:

(d) where the products or services to be supplied are complex or, exceptionally, are required for a special purpose, a check carried out by the contracting authorities or on their behalf by a competent official body of the country in which the supplier or service provider is established, subject to that body's agreement, on the production capacities of the supplier or the technical capacity of the service provider and, if necessary, on the means of study and research which are available to it and the quality control measures it will operate;

(j) with regard to the products to be supplied:

(ii) certificates drawn up by official quality control institutes or agencies of recognised competence attesting the conformity of products clearly identified by references to specifications or standards.

10 Article 49 of that directive, entitled 'Quality assurance standards', states:

'Should they require the production of certificates drawn up by independent bodies attesting the compliance of the economic operator with certain quality assurance standards, contracting authorities shall refer to quality assurance systems based on the relevant European standards series certified by bodies conforming to the European standards series concerning certification. They shall recognise equivalent certificates from bodies established in other Member States. They shall also accept other evidence of equivalent quality assurance measures from economic operators.'

11 Pursuant to Article 50 of that directive, which relates to 'environmental management standards':

'Should contracting authorities, in the cases referred to in Article 48(2)(f), require the production of certificates drawn up by independent bodies attesting the compliance of the economic operator with certain environmental management standards, they shall refer to the Community Eco-Management and Audit Scheme (EMAS) or to environmental management standards based on the relevant European or international standards certified by bodies conforming to Community law or the relevant European or international standards concerning certification. They shall recognise equivalent certificates from bodies established in other Member States. They shall also accept other evidence of equivalent environmental management measures from economic operators.'

12 Article 52 of Directive 2004/18, which is entitled 'Official lists of approved economic operators and certification by bodies established under public or private law', provides:

‘1. Member States may introduce either official lists of approved contractors, suppliers or service providers or certification by certification bodies established in public or private law.

Member States shall adapt the conditions for registration on these lists and for the issue of certificates by certification bodies to the provisions of Article 45(1), Article 45(2)(a) to (d) and (g), [Article] 46, Article 47(1), (4) and (5), Article 48(1), (2), (5) and (6), Article 49 and, where appropriate, Article 50.

2. Economic operators registered on the official lists or having a certificate may, for each contract, submit to the contracting authority a certificate of registration issued by the competent authority or the certificate issued by the competent certification body. The certificates shall state the references which enabled them to be registered in the list/to obtain certification and the classification given in that list.

3. Certified registration on official lists by the competent bodies or a certificate issued by the certification body shall not, for the purposes of the contracting authorities of other Member States, constitute a presumption of suitability except as regards [Article] 45(1) and (2)(a) to (d) and (g), Article 46, Article 47(1)(b) and (c), and Article 48(2)(a)(i), (b), (e), (g) and (h) in the case of contractors, (2)(a)(ii), (b), (c), (d) and (j) in the case of suppliers and (2)(ii) and (c) to (i) in the case of service providers.

4. Information which can be deduced from registration on official lists or certification may not be questioned without justification. With regard to the payment of social security contributions and taxes, an additional certificate may be required of any registered economic operator whenever a contract is offered.

The contracting authorities of other Member States shall apply paragraph 3 and the first subparagraph of this paragraph only in favour of economic operators established in the Member State holding the official list.

5. For any registration of economic operators of other Member States in an official list or for their certification by the bodies referred to in paragraph 1, no further proof or statements can be required other than those requested of national economic operators and, in any event, only those provided for under Articles 45 to 49 and, where appropriate, Article 50.

However, economic operators from other Member States may not be obliged to undergo such registration or certification in order to participate in a public contract. The contracting authorities shall recognise equivalent certificates from bodies established in other Member States. They shall also accept other equivalent means of proof.

6. Economic operators may ask at any time to be registered in an official list or for a certificate to be issued. They must be informed within a reasonably short period of time of the decision of the authority drawing up the list or of the competent certification body.

13 Annex VII A to that directive, entitled ‘Information to be included in public contract notices’, states in point 17, under the heading ‘Contract notices’, that the contract notice must state, inter alia in open procedures, the ‘selection criteria regarding the personal situation of economic operators that may lead to their exclusion, and required information proving that they do not fall within the cases justifying exclusion[,] selection criteria and information concerning the economic operators’ personal situation, information and any necessary formalities for assessment of the minimum economic and technical standards required of the economic operator [and] minimum level(s) of standards possibly required’.

Regulation (EC) No 852/2004

14 Recitals 1 and 8 of Regulation (EC) No 852/2004 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the hygiene of foodstuffs (OJ 2004 L 139, p. 1), as amended by Regulation (EC)

No 219/2009 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 March 2009 (OJ 2009 L 87, p. 109) ('Regulation No 852/2004'), state:

'(1) The pursuit of a high level of protection of human life and health is one of the fundamental objectives of food law, as laid down in Regulation (EC) No 178/2002 [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 28 January 2002 laying down the general principles and requirements of food law, establishing the European Food Safety Authority and laying down procedures in matters of food safety (OJ 2002 L 31, p. 1)]. That Regulation also lays down other common principles and definitions for national and Community food law, including the aim of achieving free movement of food within the Community.

(8) An integrated approach is necessary to ensure food safety from the place of primary production up to and including placing on the market or export. Every food business operator along the food chain should ensure that food safety is not compromised.'

15 Article 1 of Regulation No 852/2004, entitled 'Scope', provides in paragraph 1:

'This Regulation lays down general rules for food business operators on the hygiene of foodstuffs, taking particular account of the following principles:

(a) primary responsibility for food safety rests with the food business operator;

(b) it is necessary to ensure food safety throughout the food chain, starting with primary production;

This Regulation shall apply to all stages of production, processing and distribution of food and to exports, and without prejudice to more specific requirements relating to food hygiene.'

16 Article 3 of that regulation, entitled 'General obligation', provides:

'Food business operators shall ensure that all stages of production, processing and distribution of food under their control satisfy the relevant hygiene requirements laid down in this Regulation.'

17 Article 6 of Regulation No 852/2004, entitled 'Official controls, registration and approval', provides:

'1. Food business operators shall cooperate with the competent authorities in accordance with other applicable Community legislation or, if it does not exist, with national law.

2. In particular, every food business operator shall notify the appropriate competent authority, in the manner that the latter requires, of each establishment under its control that carries out any of the stages of production, processing and distribution of food, with a view to the registration of each such establishment.

Food business operators shall also ensure that the competent authority always has up-to-date information on establishments, including by notifying any significant change in activities and any closure of an existing establishment.

3. However, food business operators shall ensure that establishments are approved by the competent authority, following at least one on-site visit, when approval is required:

(a) under the national law of the Member State in which the establishment is located;

(b) under Regulation (EC) No 853/2004 [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 laying down specific hygiene rules for food of animal origin (OJ 2004 L 139, p. 55)],

or

(c) by a decision adopted by the Commission. That measure, designed to amend non-essential elements of this Regulation, shall be adopted in accordance with the regulatory procedure with scrutiny referred to in Article 14(3).

Any Member State requiring the approval of certain establishments located on its territory under national law, as provided for in subparagraph (a), shall inform the Commission and other Member States of the relevant national rules.'

Law on public procurement

18 Under the title 'General principles governing the award of public contracts', Article 3 of the Riigihangete seadus (Law on public procurement), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings (RT I 2016, 20; 'the Law on public procurement'), provides:

'When awarding public contracts, the contracting authority shall comply with the following principles:

(1) the contracting authority shall use the financial means in a manner that is efficient and consistent with the aim pursued and shall attain the objective of the public contract in question at a reasonable price, ensuring, in the event of competition, the best possible price and quality by comparing the various tenders;

(2) the contracting authority shall ensure the transparency of the procedure for the award of the public contract and the possibility of reviewing it;

(3) all persons who have their domicile or registered office in Estonia, another Member State of the European Union, another Member State of the European Economic Area or in a State that has acceded to the [Agreement on Government Procurement (OJ 1996 C 256, p. 2) in Annex 4 to the Agreement establishing the World Trade Organisation (WTO) (OJ 1994 L 336, p. 3)], shall be treated equally and without discrimination by the contracting authority, and the contracting authority shall ensure that all limitations and criteria imposed on persons are proportionate, relevant and well founded in relation to the objective of the public contract;

(4) when awarding public contracts, the contracting authority shall ensure the effective use of existing competition and, in that context, the participation of a legal person governed by public law or a person governed by private law using public resources in the procedure for the award of a public contract must not distort competition through the use of public resources;

(5) the contracting authority shall avoid conflicts of interest that adversely affect competition;

(6) the contracting authority shall, where possible, give priority to environmentally friendly solutions.'

19 Article 39 of the Law on public procurement, entitled 'Verification of the qualifications of the tenderer or candidate', provides in paragraph 1:

'The contracting authority shall examine whether the economic and financial standing and the technical and professional ability of the tenderer or candidate meet the conditions relating to qualification set out in the tender notice. The conditions relating to qualification must be sufficient to establish the tenderer or candidate's suitability to perform the public contract and must also be relevant and proportionate in the light of the nature, quantity and objective of the goods, services or works covered by the public contract.'

20 Article 41 of that law, which deals with the 'technical and professional ability of tenderers or candidates', provides in paragraph 3:

'Where the legislature lays down specific conditions for an activity which must be carried out under a public contract, the contracting authority shall indicate in the tender notice the specific conditions which must be met, in addition to the operating licences and registration certificates required for qualification of the tenderer or candidate. In order to verify compliance with the specific conditions laid down in the statutory provisions, the contracting authority shall stipulate in the tender notice that the tenderer or candidate must furnish proof that it holds an operating licence or registration certificate or that it fulfils any other specific condition, or that the tenderer must prove that it is a member of a competent organisation in accordance with the legislation of its State of establishment, unless the contracting authority is able to obtain that proof, without any further expenditure, by consulting the public data on a database. If the tenderer or candidate does not hold an operating licence or registration certificate, or is not a member of the relevant organisation in accordance with the legislation of its State of establishment, the contracting authority shall exclude it.'

Law on foodstuffs

21 Under the title 'Obligation to hold a licence', Article 8 of the Toiduseadus (Law on foodstuffs), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings (RT I 1999, 30, 415; 'the Law on foodstuffs'), provides:

'1. The economic operator shall hold an operating licence for activities in the food sector in the following establishments:

(1) an establishment for the purposes of Article 6(3)(b) and (c) of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(2) an establishment in which operations relating to primary products of animal origin do not involve any alteration of the form or original characteristics of the products, unless the establishment concerned is one which deals with the primary production of those products and in which the producer carries out associated operations within the meaning of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(3) an establishment in which operations relating to primary products not of animal origin involve the alteration of the form and original characteristics of the products, unless the establishment is one referred to in Annex II, Chapter III of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(4) an establishment in which the processing of foodstuffs takes place, in particular the preparation and wrapping of foodstuffs, with the exception of the wrapping of primary products not of animal origin or where the establishment is one referred to in Annex II, Chapter III of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(5) an establishment which deals with operations relating to foodstuffs of animal origin which are then distributed to another operator and are included in Annex II, Chapter III of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(6) an establishment dealing with the storage of foodstuffs which, in order to ensure food safety, must be kept at a temperature other than ambient temperature;

(7) an establishment dealing with retail trade, in particular in foodstuffs which must be stored at a temperature other than ambient temperature in order to ensure food safety, unless the establishment is one referred to in Annex II, Chapter III of Regulation [No 852/2004];

2. The operating licence shall entitle the economic operator to commence operations and to pursue and carry on an economic activity in the establishment or in the part of the establishment referred to in the operating licence.

3. The competent minister in the field shall establish, by regulation, a detailed list of the areas of operation and categories of foodstuff in respect of which operators must be in possession of an operating licence.'

22 Under Article 10 of the Law on foodstuffs, entitled 'Purpose of the control of the operating licence':

‘An operating licence shall be granted to an economic operator if its establishment or the establishment which it uses for its activity as a food sector operator satisfy the conditions laid down in [Regulation No 852/2004 and Regulation No 853/2004, and] in other relevant provisions on foodstuffs.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

23 The Ministry of Social Affairs organised two open invitations to tender for public contracts for the purchase of food aid for the most disadvantaged persons, one in 2015, the other in 2017, each with the estimated value of EUR 4 million.

24 As regards the first contract, tenderers were initially required to have the approval of the Veterinaar- ja Toiduamet (Veterinary and Food Office, Estonia), since that approval was deemed necessary for the performance of that contract. However, during the procurement procedure, the tender documentation was amended in order to replace that requirement with the obligation to provide confirmation of compliance with the obligations relating to information and authorisation laid down in the Law on foodstuffs and which were necessary for the performance of that contract.

25 As regards the second contract, the contracting authority required from the outset the confirmation referred to in the preceding paragraph.

26 In the context of each of those two public contracts, framework agreements were signed with the three successful tenderers.

27 By a financial correction decision of 30 October 2018, Riigi Tugiteenuste Keskus rejected requests for payment amounting to approximately EUR 463 000. Those requests had been made in connection with the project ‘Purchase and transport of foodstuffs to the place of storage’, which forms part of a food aid programme of the Ministry of Social Affairs for the most disadvantaged persons.

28 In so doing, Riigi Tugiteenuste Keskus followed the position stated by the Rahandusministeerium (Ministry of Finance, Estonia) in the final audit report of 10 September 2018, which concluded that the requirement that tenderers must have an approval issued by an Estonian authority or must comply with the obligations relating to information and authorisation in Estonia was unjustifiably restrictive for tenderers established in a Member State other than the Republic of Estonia.

29 Following the dismissal of the administrative complaint that it had brought before Riigi Tugiteenuste Keskus, the Ministry of Social Affairs brought an action before the Tallinna Halduskohus (Tallinn Administrative Court, Estonia) seeking annulment of the financial correction decision of 30 October 2018.

30 In support of that action, it claimed, first, that in order to comply with Article 41(3) of the Law on public procurement, the contract notice must state, as a condition for the qualification of tenderers, the specific requirements to be met and the registration certificates and operating licences required.

31 In the present case, the performance of the public contracts at issue required the use of an intermediate warehouse in which foodstuffs could be stored or a means of transport situated in Estonia. By satisfying those conditions, the tenderer would become a food business operator and should, in accordance with Article 8 of the Law on foodstuffs and Article 6(3) of Regulation No 852/2004, fulfil the obligations relating to information and authorisation in Estonia. The contracting authority is not in fact able to accept an operating licence issued by the Member State in which the tenderer is established since, in the case of operating licences in the food sector, there is no mutual recognition between the Member States.

32 According to the Ministry of Social Affairs, the setting of qualification conditions linked to specific requirements under the Law on foodstuffs enabled the contracting authority legally to reduce the risks of improper performance of the public contracts in question. The verification of compliance with the obligations imposed by that law, concerning information and authorisation, should therefore have been carried out at the stage of qualification of tenderers, and not during the performance of those contracts. In that regard, it would have sufficed for a tenderer established in a Member State other than the Republic of Estonia to inform the Veterinary and Food Office by letter of the fact that it was going to start an activity, without it being necessary to obtain a reply from that office. At the same time as it informed that office, or subsequently, that tenderer could have initiated, if necessary, a licencing procedure. In view of the time limit set for the submission of tenders in the case of an international call for tenders, which is at least 40 days, and the period required for the licensing procedure laid down in that law, which is 30 days, a tenderer would have had sufficient time to carry out the steps associated with the licencing procedure.

33 In the second place, the first contract had already been assessed and approved twice by the auditors of the Ministry of Finance. Thus, the retroactive change in the interpretation of the public procurement rules during a third audit carried out by the same auditors is not consistent with the principles of sound administration and the protection of legitimate expectations.

34 Riigi Tugiteenuste Keskus, supported by the Ministry of Finance, contended before the Tallinna Halduskohus (Tallinn Administrative Court) that the action of the Ministry of Social Affairs should be dismissed. It argued, inter alia, that Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 only permits for a tenderer to be required to furnish proof that it holds a licence to provide services issued by the Member State in which it is established or proof that it is a member of a specific organisation in that Member State. Furthermore, it is unreasonable and contrary to the principle of equal treatment to require the tenderer to have already carried out various administrative steps in Estonia at the time of submitting the tender, even if such steps are linked to performance of the contract. Lastly, Riigi Tugiteenuste Keskus contends that there has been no infringement of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations.

35 By decision of 22 May 2019, the Tallinna Halduskohus (Tallinn Administrative Court) dismissed the action of the Ministry of Social Affairs on the ground that the requirement that tenderers must have an approval issued by an Estonian authority or must comply with the obligations relating to information and authorisation in Estonia was disproportionate and discriminatory to tenderers established in other Member States. That court also rejected the plea alleging infringement of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations in so far as the Ministry of Social Affairs could not, in the light of previous, non-binding audits carried out by the Ministry of Finance, be legally certain that there would be no future infringements of the rules applicable to public procurement.

36 Following the dismissal of its action, the Ministry of Social Affairs appealed to the Tallinna Ringkonnakohus (Tallinn Court of Appeal, Estonia).

37 According to the Tallinna Ringkonnakohus (Tallinn Court of Appeal), since the conditions for the issue of the confirmation or approval by the competent authority are not fully harmonised under Regulation No 852/2004, an economic operator cannot rely, in order to commence an activity in a Member State other than its State of origin, on an approval issued in the latter, but must rather obtain the approval required in the former State.

38 Furthermore, allowing a tenderer to qualify for a public contract solely on the basis of its undertaking to apply for an operating licence or registration certificate could jeopardise the performance of the contract concerned if that tenderer does not fulfil that obligation or is not in a position to carry on its activity in accordance with the conditions for obtaining that licence or registration certificate.

39 While noting that the requirement for an operating licence or registration certificate in Estonia is disproportionate in relation to tenderers established in another Member State, the referring court observes that the interpretation of Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 is not readily apparent, particularly as the Court has not yet had an opportunity to interpret that provision. Furthermore, the requirements laid down in the interests of food safety are justified as a condition for the performance of the public contracts at issue and, accordingly, the dispute in the main proceedings concerns only the question of when those requirements must be met, either at the time of submitting the tender or at the time of performance of the contract.

40 In those circumstances, the Tallinna Ringkonnakohus (Court of Appeal, Tallinn), stayed the proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Are Articles 2 and 46 of [Directive 2004/18] to be interpreted as precluding national legislation – such as Paragraph 41(3) of [the Law on public procurement] – pursuant to which, if specific requirements for the activities to be carried out under a public contract are laid down by law, the contracting authority must specify in the tender notice which registrations or activity licences are required to qualify the tenderer, must require the tenderer to submit evidence of the activity licence or registration for the purpose of verifying compliance with the special statutory requirements in the tender notice, and must refuse the tenderer as unqualified if the latter does not possess the relevant activity licence or registration?

(2) Read together, are Articles 2 and 46 of [Directive 2004/18] to be interpreted as precluding the contracting authority, in the case of a food aid procurement contract that exceeds the international threshold, from setting a selection criterion for the tenderers according to which all tenderers, irrespective of where they were previously established, must already hold an activity licence or be registered in the country of the food aid operations at the time of submission of the tenders, even if the tenderer has not previously been established in that Member State?

(3) If the preceding questions are answered in the affirmative:

(a) Are Articles 2 and 46 of [Directive 2004/18] to be regarded as provisions that are so unambiguous that the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations cannot be invoked against them?

(b) Are Articles 2 and 46 of [Directive 2004/18] to be interpreted as meaning that a situation in which the contracting authority in a public tender for food aid requires, pursuant to the national law on foodstuffs, that the tenderers already hold an activity licence at the time of submission of the tender may be regarded as constituting a manifest infringement of the rules in force, as negligence or as an irregularity precluding reliance on the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations?’

Consideration of the questions referred

The first and second questions

41 By its first and second questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which the contracting authority must require, in a contract notice and as a qualitative selection criterion, that tenderers furnish proof, at the time of submitting their tender, that they hold the registration certificate or approval required under the legislation applicable to the activity which is the subject of the public contract in question and that it be issued by the competent authority of the Member State in which the contract is to be performed, even where they already hold a similar registration certificate or approval in the Member State in which they are established.

42 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that the second public contract at issue in the main proceedings was awarded in 2017, when Directive 2004/18 was no longer in force, since it had been repealed with effect from 18 April 2016 by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 95, p. 65) and the time limit for transposition of the provisions of Directive 2014/24 also expired on 18 April 2016.

43 However, in the absence of any clarifications from the referring court regarding the date on which the contracting authority chose the type of procedure it intended to follow and definitively decided whether or not there was an obligation to conduct a prior call for competition for the award of the public contract in question, it cannot be determined whether the provisions of Directive 2014/24 are inapplicable on the ground that the period for transposition of that directive expired after that date (see, to that effect, judgments of 27 October 2016, Hörmann Reisen, C-292/15, EU:C:2016:817, paragraphs 31 and 32, and of 28 February 2018, MA.T.I. SUD and Duemme SGR, C-523/16 and C-536/16, EU:C:2018:122, paragraph 36), it being noted that the content of Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18 was reproduced in Directive 2014/24.

44 In addition, it should be noted that the obligation for tenderers to hold the registration certificate or approval required by the legislation applicable to the activity which is the subject of the public contract at issue must be understood as a qualitative selection criterion and not as a condition for the performance of the contract for the purposes of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18.

45 First, that requirement corresponds to the option given to the contracting authority under Article 46 of that directive to ask an economic operator to prove its suitability to pursue the professional activity concerned by a public procurement procedure. That requirement thus sets out a criterion for qualitative selection of tenderers intended to enable contracting authorities to assess the suitability of tenderers to perform the public contract concerned.

46 Secondly, the obligation for an economic operator to register or obtain approval in the Member State in which the public contract in question is to be performed presupposes, of course, that the successful tenderer will be required to have an establishment in that State. Conversely, it does not provide any information as to the manner in which that contract is to be performed. Therefore, the requirement to hold a registration certificate or approval cannot be regarded as a special condition concerning the performance of that contract.

47 It is therefore necessary to determine whether Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 precludes a contracting authority from requiring, as a criterion for qualitative selection of tenderers, that tenderers hold a registration certificate and/or approval in the Member State in which the public contract in question is to be performed, even where a tenderer already has a registration certificate and/or approval in the Member State in which it is established.

48 In the first place, as regards Directive 2004/18, it follows from Article 46, read in conjunction with recital 42 thereof, that the principle of mutual recognition of qualifications prevails at the stage of the selection of tenderers. The first paragraph of Article 46 of that directive thus provides that, where an economic operator wishing to take part in a public procurement procedure is asked to prove that it is enrolled on one of the professional or trade registers or to provide a declaration on oath or a certificate, it may do so in accordance with the conditions laid down in the Member State in which it is established. The second paragraph of that article accordingly provides that in procedures for the award of public service contracts, in so far as candidates or tenderers have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in order to be able to perform the service concerned in their State of origin, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.

49 It follows that a tenderer must be able to prove its suitability to perform a public contract by means of documents, such as a certificate or proof of enrolment on one of the professional or trade registers, issued by the competent authorities of the Member State in which it is established.

50 That interpretation of Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 is borne out by other provisions of that directive. Thus, Article 48(2)(d) and (2)(j)(ii) of that directive refers to a number of situations in which an economic operator may demonstrate its technical and/or professional abilities by sending to the contracting authority of the Member State of performance of a public contract documents issued by the competent authorities of another Member State. The same applies to Article 49 of that directive as regards compliance with quality assurance standards.

51 It also follows from Article 52(3) of Directive 2004/18 that certified registration on official lists by the competent bodies of a Member State or a certificate issued by the certification body of that Member State constitutes a presumption of suitability for the purposes of the contracting authorities of other Member States, in relation inter alia to Article 46 of that directive. It is also apparent from Article 52(4) of that directive that information which may be deduced from registration on official lists or certification may not be questioned without justification. Lastly, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 52(5) of that directive, the contracting authorities of a Member State must recognise equivalent certificates from bodies established in other Member States.

52 It should also be noted that infringement of Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 necessarily entails infringement of the principles of proportionality and equal treatment of tenderers, which are enshrined in Article 2 of that directive, since the requirement that tenderers must have the approval of an Estonian authority or must fulfil obligations relating to information and authorisation in Estonia is discriminatory and does not appear to be justified as regards tenderers established in other Member States.

53 In the present case, there is nothing to suggest that the public contracts at issue in the main proceedings could not be performed from the Member State in which the tenderer is established or another Member State. Thus, it is for the tenderer to decide, on the basis of economic calculations, whether it wishes to take on an establishment in the Member State in which that contract is to be performed.

54 Moreover, the Court has already held that for a Member State to make the provision of services by an undertaking established in another Member State subject to the possession of a business licence in the first State would have the result of depriving of all effectiveness Article 56 TFEU, the purpose of which is precisely to abolish restrictions on the freedom to provide services of persons not established in the Member State in which the service is to be provided (see, by analogy, judgment of 10 February 1982, Transporoute et travaux, 76/81, EU:C:1982:49, paragraph 14).

55 It follows that Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding a contracting authority from requiring, as a qualitative selection criterion, a registration certificate and/or approval in the Member State of performance of public contracts where the tenderer already has similar approval in the Member State in which it is established.

56 In the second place, the order for reference nevertheless suggests that the obligation for tenderers to hold a registration certificate or approval in Estonia, even where they already have similar approval in the Member State in which they are established, follows from the Law on foodstuffs, which is intended to give effect to the provisions of Regulation No 852/2004 pursuant to the numerous references to that regulation contained therein. In those circumstances, both national and EU legislation on foodstuffs might constitute a special law and, on that basis, be allowed to derogate from the rules governing the award of public contracts.

57 It is therefore necessary to determine whether the interpretation of Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 set out in paragraph 55 above conflicts with Regulation No 852/2004, in which case the Court would be required to reconcile the conflicting requirements arising from that regulation and that directive.

58 In that regard, it is apparent, as stated in recital 1 thereof, that the objective of Regulation No 852/2004 is to achieve a high level of protection of human life and health, but that it also seeks to achieve the free movement of foodstuffs within the European Union.

59 That objective of the free movement of foodstuffs would be affected if food business operators were required to register or obtain an operating licence in each Member State in which they transport or store their foodstuffs.

60 As is apparent from Article 3 of Regulation No 852/2004, read in conjunction with recital 8 thereof, the EU legislature promotes an integrated approach to ensure food safety from the place of primary production up to and including the placing on the market or export and, to that end, it is for each food business operator along the food chain to ensure that food safety is not compromised. Similarly, Article 1(1)(a) of that regulation emphasises that the primary responsibility for food safety rests with the food business operator.

61 That said, in order to ensure food safety throughout the food chain, starting with primary production, as required by Article 1(1)(b) of that regulation, Article 6 thereof provides for official controls, registration and approval of food business establishments.

62 Article 6 of Regulation No 852/2004 does not, however, preclude a disjunction between, on the one hand, the competence to register a food business establishment or to grant approval to such an establishment and, on the other hand, the competence to supervise the activity thus authorised. Thus, in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, a registration certificate or approval obtained in one Member State must enable its holder to distribute foodstuffs in another Member State whose authorities are in that case nevertheless free to monitor that distribution and to ensure compliance with the provisions of that regulation.

63 It follows that the fact that an economic operator holds a registration certificate or approval issued by the Member State in which it is established constitutes, in the context of a public procurement procedure taking place in another Member State, a presumption of its ability to ensure in the latter State the activity of supplying and distributing foodstuffs and, therefore, of performing the contract in question.

64 As the Commission stated in response to a written question from the Court, an operator may therefore rely on a registration certificate or approval issued by the Member State of the food business establishment from which it dispatched its food. This is because the Member States are required to subject all establishments to official controls, to apply procedures to ensure that the controls are carried out efficiently and to ensure cooperation between the competent authorities of the Member States. Therefore, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, a food business operator that has an establishment in a Member State other than the Republic of Estonia which is registered or approved in that State may deliver foodstuffs in Estonia without having to obtain a special additional authorisation.

65 In those circumstances, it should be noted, as observed by the Commission, that the obligation to have a warehouse situated on Estonian territory follows from a specific requirement of the procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings and not from Regulation No 852/2004 itself.

66 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first and second questions is that Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which the contracting authority must require, in a contract notice and as a qualitative selection criterion, that tenderers furnish proof, at the time of submitting the tender, that they hold the registration certificate or approval required under the legislation applicable to the activity which is the subject of the public contract in question and that it be issued by the competent authority of the Member State in which the contract is to be performed, even where they already hold a similar registration certificate or approval in the Member State in which they are established.

67 By its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations must be interpreted as meaning that it may be relied on by a contracting authority which, in the context of a public procurement procedure, has, in order to comply with the national rules on foodstuffs, required tenderers to have, at the time of submitting their tender, a registration certificate or approval issued by the competent authority of the Member State in which the contract is to be performed.

68 It is apparent from the order for reference that, in the dispute in the main proceedings, the Ministry of Social Affairs considers that, if it were to be criticised for having infringed Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18, that infringement of the EU public procurement rules should remain ineffective by virtue of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations since, prior to the adoption of the financial correction decision of 30 October 2018, the auditors of the Ministry of Finance approved, on two occasions, the requirement for all tenderers, including those established in a Member State other than the Republic of Estonia, to submit, at the time of submitting their tender, an operating licence issued by the Veterinary and Food Office.

69 According to the Court’s settled case-law, the right to rely on the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations extends only to a person in a situation in which an administrative authority has caused that person to entertain expectations which are justified by precise unconditional and consistent assurances provided to him or her and originating from authorised, reliable sources (see, to that effect, judgments of 7 August 2018, Ministru kabinets, C-120/17, EU:C:2018:638, paragraph 50 and the case-law cited; of 5 March 2019, Eesti Pagar, C-349/17, EU:C:2019:172, paragraph 97; and of 19 December 2019, GRDF, C-236/18, EU:C:2019:1120, paragraph 46).

70 Nevertheless, the concept that a State is to be viewed as a single entity, which prevails both in public international law and in EU law (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 March 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame, C-46/93 and C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79, paragraph 34), precludes, in principle, a national authority from relying on the principle of EU law of legitimate expectations in the context of a dispute between that authority and another component of that State.

71 Thus, in the context of the dispute in the main proceedings, the fact that the Ministry of Finance has already approved a practice contrary to EU law may not be relied on by the Ministry of Social Affairs in order to allow that practice to continue or, at the very least, neutralise its past effects.

72 The answer to the third question must therefore be that the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations must be interpreted as meaning that it may not be relied on by a contracting authority which, in the context of a public procurement procedure, has, in order to comply with the national rules on foodstuffs, required tenderers to have, at the time of submitting their tender, a registration certificate or approval issued by the competent authority of the Member State in which the contract is to be performed.

Costs

73 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which the contracting authority must require, in a contract notice and as a qualitative selection criterion, that tenderers furnish proof, at the time of submitting the tender, that they hold the registration certificate or approval required under the legislation applicable to the activity which is the subject of the public contract in question and that it be issued by the competent authority of the Member State in which the contract is to be performed, even where they already hold a similar registration certificate or approval in the Member State in which they are established.

2. The principle of the protection of legitimate expectations must be interpreted as meaning that it may not be relied on by a contracting authority which, in the context of a public procurement procedure, has, in order to comply with the national rules on foodstuffs, required tenderers to have, at the time of submitting their tender, a registration certificate or approval issued by the competent authority of the Member State in which the contract is to be performed.

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 28 January 2021(1)

Case C-6/20

Sotsiaalministeerium

v

Innove SA,

intervener:

Rahandusministeerium

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Tallinna Ringkonnakohus (Court of Appeal, Tallinn, Estonia))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Directive 2004/18/EC – Public procurement – Qualitative selection criteria – Article 2 – Equal and non-discriminatory treatment – Article 26 – Conditions for performance of the contract – Article 46 – Authorisation to pursue a professional activity obtained in another Member State – Regulation (EC) No 852/2004 – Hygiene of foodstuffs – Article 6 – Requirement of a licence or registration certificate from the national food safety authority in the country where the establishment carrying out the supply is located – Time when the licence or registration certificate is submitted to the contracting authority)

1. In Estonia, the law provides that, where special conditions are stipulated for the performance of a public contract, a tenderer must provide evidence that it satisfies those conditions by furnishing, at the time of submission of the tender, a licence issued by the authorities of that State or evidence of registration in the appropriate register, failing which the tenderer will be excluded.

2. In 2015 and 2017, the Estonian Ministry of Social Affairs announced procedures for the award of two contracts for the supply of food to disadvantaged persons. Tenderers were required to provide evidence, when they submitted their tenders, that they had obtained an activity licence from the Estonian competent authority or that they were registered in the appropriate national register.

3. Innove SA, the body responsible for the management of aid financed by European funds, (2) and the Ministry of Finance disagreed with the Ministry of Social Affairs regarding the compatibility of those conditions with EU law. Since that disagreement was not settled at the administrative stage, the Ministry of Social Affairs, relying on Regulation (EC) No 852/2004, (3) brought proceedings in the Estonian courts challenging the decision adopted by Innove, which conflicted with its view.

4. Since the dispute (4) which has arisen concerns contractual conditions, the court seized of that dispute has submitted a request for a preliminary ruling to which the Court of Justice must respond. It will be necessary to examine, in particular: (a) whether the obligation to furnish national licences or evidence of registration at the same time as the tender constitutes an obstacle to the equal treatment of and freedom of competition among tenderers bidding for public contracts; and (b) whether Directive 2004/18/EC (5) can be interpreted in a manner that is consistent with the requirements laid down in Regulation No 852/2004.

I. Legal framework

A. EU law

1. Directive 2004/18

5. Pursuant to Article 2 (‘Principles of awarding contracts’):

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

6. Article 26 (‘Conditions for performance of contracts’) reads:

‘Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with Community law and are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications. The conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.’

7. Article 46 (‘Suitability to pursue the professional activity’) stipulates:

‘Any economic operator wishing to take part in a public contract may be requested to prove its enrolment, as prescribed in his Member State of establishment, on one of the professional or trade registers or to provide a declaration on oath or a certificate as described in Annex IX A for public works contracts, in Annex IX B for public supply contracts and in Annex IX C for public service contracts.

In procedures for the award of public service contracts, in so far as candidates or tenderers have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in order to be able to perform in their country of origin the service concerned, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.’

2. Regulation No 852/2004

8. According to Article 2 (‘Definitions’):

‘1. For the purposes of this Regulation:

(c) “establishment” means any unit of a food business;

…’

9. Article 6 (‘Official controls, registration and approval’) is worded as follows:

‘1. Food business operators shall cooperate with the competent authorities in accordance with other applicable Community legislation or, if it does not exist, with national law.

2. In particular, every food business operator shall notify the appropriate competent authority, in the manner that the latter requires, of each establishment under its control that carries out any of the stages of production, processing and distribution of food, with a view to the registration of each such establishment.

Food business operators shall also ensure that the competent authority always has up-to-date information on establishments, including by notifying any significant change in activities and any closure of an existing establishment.

3. However, food business operators shall ensure that establishments are approved by the competent authority, following at least one on-site visit, when approval is required:

(a) under the national law of the Member State in which the establishment is located;

(b) under Regulation (EC) No 853/2004;

or

(c) by a decision adopted by the Commission. That measure, designed to amend non-essential elements of this Regulation, shall be adopted in accordance with the regulatory procedure with scrutiny referred to in Article 14(3).

Any Member State requiring the approval of certain establishments located on its territory under national law, as provided for in subparagraph (a), shall inform the Commission and other Member States of the relevant national rules.’ (6)

B. Estonian law

1. Riigihangete seadus (7)

10. Paragraph 39(1) provides:

‘The contracting authority must examine whether the economic and financial standing and the technical and professional ability of the tenderer or candidate meet the conditions relating to qualification set out in the tender notice. The conditions relating to qualification must be sufficient to establish the tenderer or candidate’s suitability to perform the public contract and must also be relevant and proportionate in the light of the nature, quantity and objective of the goods, services or works covered by the public contract.’

11. Paragraph 41(3) provides:

‘Where the legislature lays down specific conditions for an activity which must be carried out under a public contract, the contracting authority shall indicate in the tender notice the specific conditions which must be met, in addition to the registration certificates and operating licences required for qualification of the tenderer or candidate. In order to verify compliance with the specific conditions laid down in the statutory provisions, the contracting authority shall stipulate in the tender notice that the tenderer or candidate must furnish proof that it holds an operating licence or registration certificate or that it fulfils any other specific condition, or that the tenderer must prove that it is a member of a competent organisation in accordance with the legislation of its State of establishment, unless the contracting authority is able to obtain that proof, without any further expenditure, by consulting the public data on a database. If the tenderer or candidate does not hold an operating licence or registration certificate, or is not a member of the competent organisation in accordance with the legislation of its State of establishment, the contracting authority shall exclude it.'

2. Toiduseadus (8)

12. In accordance with Paragraph 8 ('Obligation to hold a licence'):

'(1) The economic operator must hold an operating licence for activities in the food sector in the following establishments:

(1) an establishment for the purposes of Article 6(3)(b) and (c) of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(2) an establishment in which operations relating to primary products of animal origin do not involve any alteration of the form or original characteristics of the products, unless the establishment concerned is one which deals with the primary production of those products and in which the producer carries out associated operations within the meaning of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(3) an establishment in which operations relating to primary products not of animal origin involve the alteration of the form and original characteristics of the products, unless the establishment is one referred to in Annex II, Chapter III of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(4) an establishment in which the processing of foodstuffs takes place, in particular the preparation and wrapping of foodstuffs, with the exception of the wrapping of primary products not of animal origin or where the establishment is one referred to in Annex II, Chapter III of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(5) an establishment which deals with operations relating to foodstuffs of animal origin which are then distributed to another operator and are included in Annex II, Chapter III of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(6) an establishment dealing with the storage of foodstuffs which, in order to ensure food safety, must be kept at a temperature other than ambient temperature;

(7) an establishment dealing with retail trade, in particular in foodstuffs which must be stored at a temperature other than ambient temperature in order to ensure food safety, unless the establishment is one referred to in Annex II, Chapter III of Regulation [No 852/2004];

(2) The operating licence shall entitle the economic operator to commence operations and to pursue and carry out an economic activity in the establishment or in the part of the establishment referred to in the operating licence.

(3) The competent minister in the field shall establish, by regulation, a detailed list of the areas of operation and categories of foodstuff in respect of which operators must be in possession of an operating licence.'

13. Paragraph 10 reads:

'An operating licence shall be granted to an economic operator if its establishment or the establishment which it uses for its activity as a food sector operator satisfy the conditions laid down in [Regulation No 852/2004 and Regulation No 853/2004, and] in other relevant provisions on foodstuffs.'

II. Facts, national proceedings and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

14. In 2015 and 2017, the Estonian Ministry of Social Affairs announced two open invitations to tender for public contracts (Nos 157505 and 189564) for the supply of 'food aid for the most disadvantaged'. Each of the invitations to tender was for a value of more than EUR 4 million. (9)

15. In accordance with tender notice No 157505, tenderers were required to have the approval of the Veterinaar- ja Toiduamet (Veterinary and Food Office, 'VFO') and to provide the corresponding certificate and approval number.

16. The conditions of contract No 157505 were amended during the tendering procedure, to the effect that it would be sufficient to attach a declaration of compliance with the obligations relating to information and approval laid down in the ToiduS. The same amendment was stipulated for contract No 189564.

17. As a result of both procedures, two framework agreements were concluded with three tenderers. Finally, Sanitex OÜ (Estonian subsidiary of UAB Sanitex, the parent company established in Lithuania) was awarded the contract on the grounds that it submitted the most economically advantageous bid in the mini competition held in the context of the framework agreements.

18. Purchases made under the contracts were of foodstuffs from Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and other European Union Member States.

19. In the performance of its duties, Innove, by a 'financial correction decision' of 30 October 2018, (10) rejected the requests for payment (in the amount of EUR 463 291.55) submitted by the Ministry of Social Affairs as a result of those contracts.

20. The financial correction decision was based on the failure of the Ministry of Social Affairs to fulfil the obligation to comply with the provisions of the RHS. (11)

21. Innove took the view that, in the case of both public contracts, selection criteria had been applied which unduly restricted the circle of tenderers, in particular foreign tenderers. The unreasonable restriction resided, in its view, in the fact that the tenderers were required to have a licence from the Estonian authority or to comply with the registration obligation in Estonia.

22. According to Innove, the possibility that foreign tenderers could have satisfied those requirements by relying on the resources of another person or by submitting a joint tender with an undertaking which satisfied the requirements did not prevent the undue restriction of the circle of tenderers, by discouraging them from participating in the tendering procedure.

23. The Ministry of Social Affairs filed a (optional) complaint against the financial correction decision, which Innove dismissed on 25 January 2019.

24. The Ministry of Social Affairs brought an action against that dismissal decision before the Tallinna Halduskohus (Administrative Court, Tallinn, Estonia), seeking its annulment. It submitted in short that:

– The tender notices were lawful because they did not confer any discretion to determine the stage of the procedure at which the activity licence requirement had to be satisfied.

– The specific requirements complied with the law and were the same as the requirements of registration and approval laid down by Article 6 of Regulation No 852/2004.

– The contested decision wrongly took the view that the contracting authority could not require an activity licence pursuant to Article 46 of Directive 2004/18. Since the activity involved the physical handling of foodstuffs in Estonia, the contractor or the warehouse used by it under contracts or subcontracts must hold an activity licence issued by the VFO. Foodstuff-handling licences are not mutually recognised by the Member States.

– It was not possible for the contracting authority to admit a tenderer who only had an activity licence from the State in which it was established. Moreover, the tenderer had sufficient time to deal with the licensing procedure in Estonia.

25. Innove opposed the action brought by the Ministry of Social Affairs, claiming that:

– Although a literal interpretation of Paragraph 41(3) of the RHS allowed the contracting authority to require the tenderer to produce the activity licence or registration certificate required under Estonian law to demonstrate compliance with the specific requirements, that requirement must be interpreted in the light of the provisions of EU law (in particular, Directive 2004/18) and the case-law.

– The condition stipulating that tenderers had to comply with the specific requirements of Estonian law at the time of submission of a tender is incompatible with the principle of equal treatment laid down in Paragraph 3(3) of the RHS.

– According to the case-law of the Court of Justice, the principle of equal treatment of tenderers precludes the introduction of conditions for participation in a tendering procedure which require tenderers to have knowledge of the practice of the State in which the contracting authority is established. (12)

– There should have been an assessment as to whether, in the light of the condition at issue, the tenderers who had previously provided services in another Member State and the tenderers who had previously carried out activities relating to foodstuffs in Estonia were in the same situation.

26. The Ministry of Finance intervened in the proceedings in support of Innove's position. In its submission, the selection criteria in the tender notice were unduly restrictive. The Ministry of Finance argued, in particular, that:

– Foreign tenderers who do not carry on their activity in Estonia have to comply with the requirements of the State in which they operate and are subject to the supervision of the competent authority of the State in which they are established.

– The requirement to be registered or hold a licence is a requirement of EU law which applies throughout the Union.

– In order for the restriction to be proportionate in relation to foreign tenderers and at the same time to provide the contracting authority with the assurance that it was not dealing with an illegal operator, the contracting authority should have allowed them to submit an equivalent licence or certificate issued by the State in which they were established or by another competent authority. It was possible for a foreign tenderer to have been required to comply with the requirements arising under Estonian law and necessary for the performance of the contract only during performance of that contract.

27. By judgment of 22 May 2019, the Tallinna Halduskohus (Administrative Court, Tallinn) dismissed the action, finding, in summary, that:

1. The requirement at issue creates unequal treatment of foreign tenderers who, where they have not previously operated in Estonia, cannot comply with the registration and licence obligation at the time of submission of a tender.

2. Estonian tenderers who have been able to gain previous experience, by carrying out an activity in Estonia, are in a better position when compared with other economic operators having similar experience in other Member States. (13)

3. The obligation of tenderers to apply for a licence to operate as a food business operator at the same time as preparing the tender is disproportionate.

4. The licence application provided for in the ToiduS requires, inter alia, notification of a specific activity which is subject to approval and an indication of capacities. First, that information is not available at the time of submission of a tender because the tenderer still does not know whether its tender will be accepted and is unaware of the volumes that it must take into account. Second, it is not the aim of that law to require that a licence must be applied for in respect of hypothetical activities, in addition to which it may not be possible to apply for a licence for reasons related to timing.

28. The Ministry of Social Affairs brought an appeal against the judgment at first instance before the Tallinna Ringkonnakohus (Court of Appeal, Tallinn, Estonia), which, in its order for reference, sets out, inter alia, the following considerations:

1. The dispute concerns the determination of whether it was possible to impose, as a condition for participating in the procurement procedure, the requirement that tenderers must already have a licence issued by an Estonian authority in accordance with the ToiduS or must have complied with the registration obligations in Estonia.

2. Such conditions, laid down in Regulation No 852/2004, were introduced with a view to guaranteeing food safety. Since the conditions regarding certification or approval by the competent authority in order to commence the pursuit of an activity in a Member State other than the State of origin are not fully harmonised, an economic operator cannot rely on a licence issued by his State of origin and instead must obtain a new licence or registration certificate issued by the Member State of the place of business.

3. Performance of the contract could be compromised if a tenderer qualifies on the basis of its undertaking to apply for an operating licence or registration and that tenderer fails to fulfil that obligation or is unable to carry out its activity in accordance with the criteria for obtaining a licence or registration. In that case, the contracting authority would have to launch a new tendering procedure.

4. It is essential to determine whether the guarantee of food safety and the needs relating to attainment of the objectives of public contracts justify the imposition of a restriction on foreign tenderers which, before submitting their tenders, have to apply for and obtain the required licence or registration or have to submit a joint tender with a company that already holds an operating licence or is registered in Estonia.

5. Although such a requirement may be disproportionate as regards foreign tenderers, the interpretation of Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 is not so obvious and is, moreover, a provision which the Court of Justice has not yet had occasion to interpret.

29. Against that background, the Tallinna Ringkonnakohus (Court of Appeal, Tallinn) has referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Are Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18/EC … to be interpreted as precluding national legislation – such as Paragraph 41(3) of the [RHS] – pursuant to which, if specific requirements for the activities to be carried out under a public contract are laid down by law, the contracting authority must specify in the tender notice which registrations or activity licences are required to qualify the tenderer, must require the tenderer to submit evidence of the activity licence or registration for the purpose of verifying compliance with the special statutory requirements in the tender notice, and must refuse the tenderer as unqualified if the latter does not possess the relevant activity licence or registration?

(2) Read together, are Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18/EC … to be interpreted as precluding the contracting authority, in the case of a food aid procurement contract that exceeds the international threshold, from setting a selection criterion for the tenderers according to which all tenderers, irrespective of where they were previously established, must already hold an activity licence or be registered in the country of the food aid operations at the time of submission of the tenders, even if the tenderer has not previously been established in that Member State?

(3) If the preceding questions are answered in the affirmative:

(1) Are Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18/EC … to be regarded as provisions that are so unambiguous that the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations cannot be invoked against them?

(2) Are Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18/EC … to be interpreted as meaning that a situation in which the contracting authority in a public tender for food aid requires, pursuant to the national law on foodstuffs, that the tenderers already hold an activity licence at the time of submission of the tender may be regarded as constituting a manifest infringement of the rules in force, as negligence or as an irregularity precluding reliance on the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations?’

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice

30. The order for reference was received at the Registry of the Court on 7 January 2020.

31. Written observations were lodged by the Estonian Government and the European Commission. Those parties, together with the Riigi Tugiteenuste Keskus (Centre for State Aid Services, Estonia), a body which has partly taken over Innove’s functions, gave written responses to the questions addressed to them by the Court of Justice, in place of a hearing.

IV. Assessment

A. Preliminary remarks

32. At the Court's request, I shall confine myself to examining the first two questions referred for a preliminary ruling.

33. The referring court's questions concern, essentially, whether Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18 preclude national provisions in accordance with which the contracting authority has imposed, in respect of two public contracts for the purchase and distribution of food aid to the most disadvantaged, the conditions at issue for the purposes of assessing whether tenderers qualify.

34. By means of those conditions, the contracting authority required tenders to submit, at the same time as their tenders, evidence that they held an activity licence issued in Estonia or that they were registered for that purpose in that country. According to the Estonian Government, those requirements are derived from Paragraph 41(3) of the RHS. (14)

35. The tender specifications for contract No 157505 reflected that provision, stipulating that tenderers should hold a licence in Estonia and that they should attach to their tenders the relevant certificate and licence number. However, that condition was relaxed by acceptance that a simple declaration of compliance with the information and approval obligations could be attached. For the purposes of contract No 189564, fulfilment of the latter condition was sufficient from the outset.

36. It can be inferred from the parties' observations and from the order for reference that, by acting in that way, the contracting authority was seeking to comply with Article 6 of Regulation No 852/2004: it originally requested the approval required under paragraph 3 thereof and later simply required compliance with the less stringent requirements of paragraph 2, which amount to a number of obligations to provide information.

37. As I shall explain in more detail, the premiss for those two paragraphs of Article 6 of Regulation No 852/2004 is that foodstuff operators must have an establishment in the territory of the State in which the competent authority performs its public functions.

38. In that connection, it can be deduced that the contracting authority stipulated that tenderers must have an establishment in Estonia (and must also hold an activity licence or be registered in the applicable registers in that country).

39. Since the order for reference does not explain the terms of the tendering procedure in detail, it would be possible to examine the clauses at issue from a different perspective if, in fact, the tender specifications permitted food supplies to be offered from establishments located outside Estonia. (15)

40. In those circumstances, Regulation (EC) No 178/2002, (16) the primary objective of which is to ensure the free movement of safe and wholesome food in the European Union, could be applicable. The same objective can also be found among those proposed by Regulation No 852/2004, with which it is connected. (17)

41. If the tender specifications did not require tenderers to have an establishment in Estonia, it would have to be assumed that tenders from those economic operators could be based on the supply of food from outside Estonia, a point which it is for the referring court to verify. (18)

42. On the other hand, if the tender specifications required all tenderers to have an establishment in Estonia, from which to carry out the supply of food, (19) it would be necessary to assess whether that requirement was properly justified and, if so, whether it went beyond what was needed in order to achieve the aims pursued. That would also be a task which would fall to the national court.

43. In that second scenario, were the referring court to find that the obligation to have an establishment in Estonia was unjustified or disproportionate, the Ministry of Social Affairs may have breached Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, in that it discriminated against operators with their headquarters in other Member States but without an establishment in Estonia.

44. The considerations I shall set out below are based on the premiss that the contract documents required, tacitly or expressly, that tenderers must have an establishment in Estonia, which will lead to an examination of the application of Article 6(2) and (3) of Regulation No 852/2004, in conjunction with Directive 2004/18.

B. Questions 1 and 2

45. I believe that it is appropriate to answer the two questions together in view of their connection. My reply will be developed in three stages: (a) the qualification of tenderers; (b) the requirement that tenderers must have an establishment for handling foodstuffs in Estonia; and (c) the lawfulness of the requirements at issue if they must be satisfied during performance of the contract and not at the beginning of the procedure.

1. Qualification of tenderers

46. The order for reference stresses that the conditions at issue in the dispute concerned the 'qualification' of tenderers. The Estonian Government confirms this, pointing out that 'they are linked to the figure of the tenderer itself and can be likened to a qualifying condition'. (20)

47. That is clearly reflected in the first question: under the national provisions, the contracting authority must specify in the tender notice the 'registrations or activity licences … required' for qualification of the tenderer. If, when submitting its tender, the tenderer fails to provide evidence that it had either, the contracting authority would categorise it as not qualified (and would, therefore, reject it).

48. The second question is worded similarly: now the query is whether Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18 preclude the contracting authority from requiring, as a condition for qualification of tenderers, that, 'irrespective of their previous place of business', tenderers must hold 'an activity licence or be registered in the State in which the food aid is granted at the time of submission of their tender'.

49. Expressed in that way, it is striking that both questions refer to Article 46 of Directive 2004/18. In accordance with Article 44 of the directive, when verifying the suitability of economic operators participating in procurement procedures, those excluded under Article 46 (and Article 45) must be eliminated.

50. Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 merely governs the 'suitability to pursue the professional activity', which is required of economic operators. That suitability is subjective and is linked to the professional status of an economic operator wishing to participate in a procurement procedure. As a consequence, such an operator may be required to demonstrate its professional suitability by producing the documents referred to in Article 46.

51. Scrutiny of Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 in conjunction with recital 42 thereof (21) reveals that, at the stage when tenderers are selected, the principle of mutual recognition applies for the purpose of confirming professional suitability:

– In accordance with the first paragraph of Article 46, any economic operator wishing to take part in a public contract may be requested to provide evidence of 'its enrolment, as prescribed in his Member State of establishment, on one of the professional or trade registers or to provide a declaration on oath or a certificate.'

– In the same vein, albeit only in relation to public service contracts, the second paragraph states that, 'in so far as candidates or tenderers have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in order to be able to perform in their country of origin the service concerned, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.'

52. It follows from those provisions that a tenderer can prove that it qualifies (is subjectively suitable to perform a public contract) by relying on documents issued by the competent authorities of the Member State in which it is located.

53. Other provisions of Directive 2004/18, included in the same section, 'Criteria for qualitative selection', take the same line:

– Under Article 48(2)(d), an economic operator can provide evidence of its technical or professional ability by sending to the contracting authority of the State of performance of a public contract documents drawn up by the competent authorities of the Member State in which it is established.

– Article 49 applies the same criterion in relation to 'Quality assurance standards'.

– In accordance with Article 52(3), 'certified registration on official lists by the competent bodies or a certificate issued by the certification body shall not, for the purposes of the contracting authorities of other Member States, constitute a presumption of suitability' except as regards, inter alia, Article 46 of the directive. The second subparagraph of Article 52(5) provides that contracting authorities are to recognise 'equivalent certificates from bodies established in other Member States'.

54. Those positive stipulations are reinforced by a number of limitations imposed on contracting authorities:

– Article 52(4) of Directive 2004/18 provides that 'information which can be deduced from registration on official lists or certification [as referred to in Article 52(3)] may not be questioned without justification'.

– As regards 'any registration of economic operators of other Member States in an official list or for their certification by [competent] bodies', Article 52(5) of Directive 2004/18 provides, with particular intensity, that 'no further proof or statements can be required other than those requested of national economic operators', adding that 'economic operators from other Member States may not be obliged to undergo such registration or certification in order to participate in a public contract.'

55. Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 requires, therefore, that when an assessment is made of the professional suitability of a tenderer from another Member State, that tenderer must be placed on an equal footing with a national tenderer which has an equivalent level of suitability.

56. Where a tenderer demonstrates, using one of the methods provided for in Directive 2004/18, that it qualifies as necessary in another Member State, proof of this must suffice for the contracting authority to consider that the hurdle of professional suitability has been cleared.

57. In short, Article 46 of Directive 2004/18 is to be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority cannot impose, as a qualifying criterion (that is, a qualitative selection criterion), the requirement that a registration certificate or licence must be obtained in the Member State of performance of the contract if a tenderer already has similar approval in the Member State where it is established.

58. In so far as the tender specifications at issue in these proceedings (or, as the case may be, the national provisions with which they comply) created, for the purposes of verifying the suitability of tenderers with authorisation in another Member State, the obligation to obtain further, similar authorisation in Estonia, those tender specifications are incompatible with Article 46 of Directive 2004/18.

59. On that basis, it is necessary to ascertain whether the application of Regulation No 852/2004 is liable to affect that interpretation of Article 46 of Directive 2004/18. That could occur if the conditions imposed on tenderers concerned their specific presence, by means of a particular establishment, in the Member State of the contracting authority which stipulated those conditions, rather than their (subjective) qualification as authorised economic operators.

60. The Estonian Government refers to Regulation No 852/2004 (Article 6(3)(a)) in support of its claim that it is entitled to require tenderers to have a 'licence for the storage of foodstuffs'. In particular, the Estonian Government asserts that an economic operator must be the 'holder of an activity licence in the food sector for the establishment where foodstuffs are stored which … must be kept at a temperature other than ambient temperature'. (22)

2. Requirement that tenderers must have an establishment for the handling of foodstuffs in Estonia

61. As I have already pointed out, in the absence of further details in the order for reference, it must be assumed that the contract documents required tenderers to have an establishment in Estonia.

62. Article 6 of Regulation No 852/2004 is based on a territorial link between the establishment in which the food business activity is pursued and the Member State in which it is located.

63. By virtue of that territorial link, as far as that establishment is concerned, the competent authority with control over the stages of production, processing and distribution of food must, of necessity, be that of the Member State where the establishment is located.

64. The corollary of that rule is that the obligation to have an establishment which is authorised or registered in Estonia also applies to food businesses with professional qualifications issued in another Member State. That is the only way of ensuring that the control of activities carried out in an establishment situated in Estonia is performed by the authorities of that country.

65. The requirement that undertakings which have establishments for the production, processing and distribution of food in a Member State must be registered in that Member State or have a licence issued by the authorities of that Member State therefore complies, in principle, with EU law.

66. Difficulties arise when it comes to reconciling that rule with the provisions of EU law governing public procurement. In accordance with those provisions, contracting authorities:

– Must, on the one hand, abolish restrictions on competition and 'treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily' (Article 2 of Directive 2004/18), ensuring that the fundamental freedoms laid down the FEU Treaty are respected.

– May not, on the other hand, disregard the other mandatory EU provisions: in so far as is relevant for the present purposes, those adopted in the field of public health and, more specifically, the hygiene of foodstuffs. Recital 6 of Directive 2004/18 reads: 'Nothing in this Directive should prevent the imposition or enforcement of measures necessary to protect … health [and] human … life …, provided that these measures are in conformity with the Treaty.'

67. I believe that it is possible to overcome the apparent conflict (23) between the general rules on public contracts and the specific rules on food hygiene. Where compliance with the latter rules is compulsory, those rules must take precedence over the general rules on public contracts, as set out in recital 6 of Directive 2004/18. The specific rules must be applied in a way which has the minimum possible impact on the general principles of EU law on public contracts.

68. At this juncture, when addressing how the requirements imposed by the specific rules on food hygiene are applied in the procurement procedure (provided, I repeat, that they are mandatory under Regulation No 852/2004), it may be helpful to identify the time when the tenderer is required to furnish the licence relating to its establishment or a declaration that it is registered as the owner of that establishment.

69. I agree with the referring court's assertion that 'the requirements imposed in this case, in the interests of food safety', are justified as 'conditions for the performance of a public contract' and that 'the dispute concerns only the question of when the tenderer was required to fulfil those conditions – when the tender was submitted or when the contract was being performed'. (24)

3. Time when the tenderer must provide evidence that it has an administrative licence relating to its establishment or that it is registered as the proprietor of that establishment.

70. Having regard solely to the need to ensure that the right contractor is selected, the optimal time for furnishing those documents may be the time when tenders are submitted. Proof that a tenderer has an establishment which is covered by a licence or which is entered in the appropriate register assists the contracting authority to establish at the outset whether a tenderer will be able to comply with its (future) contractual obligations.

71. In CoNISMa, (25) the Court held that the harmonisation of the directives on procurement was also carried out in the interests of contracting authorities. It thus drew attention to the position of the public procuring entity, which is required to uphold the general interest. (26)

72. However, like others before and after it, the judgment also pointed out that 'one of the primary objectives of Community rules on public procurement is to attain the widest possible opening-up to competition … and that it is the concern of Community law to ensure the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders'. (27) That objective is also beneficial to the contracting authority, which will have more criteria at its disposal when it chooses the successful tenderer. (28)

73. The Estonian Government and the Commission have put forward opposing views on that point.

74. In the Estonian Government's submission, if the obligation of registration or approval were classified as a condition relating to performance and not a qualitative selection criterion, the successful tenderer might ultimately not be in a position to perform the contract. That eventuality would increase the contracting authority's workload and the duration of the procedure needed for signature of the contract. (29) Moreover, any economic operator has the right to submit a joint tender with an entity which has already satisfied the prerequisites of approval and registration. (30)

75. The Commission draws attention to proper observance of the principle of equality and non-discrimination as regards the treatment of economic operators. (31) The Commission maintains, contrary to the view of the Estonian Government, that the obligation to obtain approval or registration as a condition for participating in the tendering procedure will be compatible with the principles of non-discrimination and proportionality only if no less restrictive measure exists. The possibility of establishing the obligation of approval or registration as a performance condition is precisely one such less restrictive measure. (32)

76. My view, which essentially coincides with that of the Commission on this point, is that the arguments set out by the first-instance court, (33) and the arguments of the Ministry of Finance (34) and Innove (35) transcribed above, draw attention to the fact that requiring approval or registration at the classification stage creates, for food undertakings not located in Estonia, a disproportionate obstacle which, without the relevant justification, restricts their access to public procurement procedures like that at issue in this case. To the same extent, it unfairly reduces the circle of potential tenderers, in particular, foreign tenderers.

77. A restriction of that nature is possible only if the objective it pursues 'could not be achieved by … restrictions of lesser extent or having less effect on intra-Community trade'. (36)

78. In order to reconcile the requirements of Directive 2004/18 with the need for establishments handling food in Estonia to have approval or be registered, within the meaning of Article 6 of Regulation No 852/2004, the requirements at issue could be framed as 'special conditions relating to the performance of a contract', as referred to in Article 26 of Directive 2004/18.

79. The case-law has paid attention those special conditions in situations where they were imposed as a result of 'social … considerations', thus focusing on some of those covered by the open wording of the last part of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18. (37) There is no reason why they should not be extended to other areas, since the reference to 'social and environmental considerations' is given merely as an example ('in particular').

80. Therefore, there is nothing to preclude the conditions relating to performance of a contract for the supply of foodstuffs from including requirements derived specifically from the application of the EU provisions on food hygiene or those of the Member State concerned.

81. It will be sufficient to stipulate that those requirements must be satisfied at a later time and independently of the assessment of whether a tenderer whose professional authorisation was granted in another Member State satisfies the qualifying criteria.

82. Accordingly, the principle of equal treatment would apply in harmony with the principle of opening up to competition as far as possible, because all tenderers would be given a genuine opportunity to win the contract without undermining the application of the provisions of EU law on food hygiene. Otherwise, an excessive advantage in favour of national food-sector operators would be established.

83. In accordance with that scheme, operators who already have a national licence or are registered as food-handling establishments in Estonia would be able to submit their licence or registration certificate with their tenders; the remaining tenderers would have to undertake to obtain a licence or registration if they were awarded the contract.

84. There is certainly some merit to the Estonian Government's objection (if it was necessary to wait until the of performance stage of the contract, there would be a risk that the procedure would be deemed to have failed if the successful tenderer did not ultimately obtain a licence or registration). However, the aim of ensuring that the procedure does not fail cannot override the essential principles of public procurement, in particular the principles of ensuring that tenderers can access public procurement procedures on an equal basis without being faced with unjustified obstacles.

85. Moreover, there is nothing to suggest that an undertaking which deals professionally with the handling of food in another Member State would have difficulty in obtaining the licence required to enable it to open an establishment in Estonia if it were awarded the contract.

86. The procedures for obtaining such a licence must satisfy the general criteria laid down in Directive 2006/123/EC, (38) including administrative simplification. (39) In fact, the Ministry of Social Affairs argued that a non-Estonian tenderer would be able to obtain a licence or registration in a short period of time, (40) an assertion which could be applied to the performance stage of the contract.

87. The Estonian Government's argument to the effect that it would be possible for any tenderer established in another Member State to rely on the capacities of a third-party undertaking which already has the relevant licence or registration certificate in Estonia cannot be upheld either.

88. Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 'recognise the right of every economic operator to rely, for a particular contract, upon the capacities of other entities'. (41) Precisely because that is a right and not a duty, it makes no sense to impose on a tenderer the obligation to rely on the capacities of another economic operator where that tenderer is capable of performing the contract by itself. (42)

89. In summary, the imposition of the requirements at issue in relation to food-handling establishments, as a condition for the performance of the contract, is a less onerous measure which, first, ensures respect for the principle of equality and greater competition between tenderers and, second, enables the consistent application of the general rules and the mandatory specific rules, thereby preventing any friction when it comes to the effective application of EU law.

V. Conclusion

90. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the following answers be given to the first two questions referred by the Tallinna Ringkonnakohus (Court of Appeal, Tallinn, Estonia):

> ‘Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts are to be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may not require, as a qualifying condition which must be met, failing which a tenderer will be excluded, that tenderers or candidates whose professional suitability has been recognised in their own Member State must furnish with their tenders an activity licence or evidence of registration issued by the authorities of the Member State of the place of the contract.
> However, if the contract notice or tender specifications require with justification that the successful tenderer must have an establishment in the Member State of the contracting authority, Articles 2 and 46 of Directive 2004/18 do not preclude a requirement that tenderers must provide evidence, at the performance stage of the contract and in relation to that establishment, that they have the relevant licence or registration issued by the competent authorities for control of the stages of production, processing and distribution of food in that Member State, in accordance with Article 6 of Regulation (EC) No 852/2004 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the hygiene of foodstuffs.’

2 According to information supplied by the Estonian Government in response to a question from the Court of Justice, Innove was, until 31 March 2020, the national ‘implementation unit’ for programme 14.1.1 ‘Fund for European aid to the most disadvantaged persons – purchase and distribution of food’. Several passages of the order for reference state that the supplies of food covered by the contracts were co-financed using European Union structural funds.

4 The dispute could be described as atypical because it does not appear that any of the economic operators which participated, or could have participated, in the call for tenders objected to the conditions governing that call for tenders or the final outcome of the procurement procedure. The applicant and the defendants are all organs of the Estonian Government which, in its observations to the Court of Justice, expressed its support for the position of the Ministry of Social Affairs and its opposition to the positions of Innove and the Ministry of Finance. The latter, for its part, suggested at first instance that the appropriate procedure for resolving differences between those organs was that laid down in ‘Paragraphs 3 and 4 of the Perioodi 2014-2020 struktuuritoetuse seadus (Law on structural aid for the period 2014-2020) and Paragraph 101 of the Vabariigi Valitsuse seadus (Law on the government of the Republic)’.

6 Points (b) and (c) of paragraph 3 were worded, respectively, in accordance with the Corrigendum to Regulation (EC) No 852/2004 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the hygiene of foodstuffs (OJ 2004 L 226, p. 3) and Regulation (EC) No 219/2009 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 March 2009 (OJ 2009 L 87, p. 109).

9 There are no details regarding when the 2017 procedure was commenced but the referring court does not hint at the possibility of applying Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

11 That obligation flowed from the Perioodi 2014-2020 struktuuritoetuse seadus (Law on structural aid for the period 2014-2020).

12 Innove relied, in that connection, on the judgments of 14 December 2016, Connexxion Taxi Services, C-171/15, EU:C:2016:948, paragraph 42, and of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraphs 45, 46 and 51.

13 The Tallinna Halduskohus (Administrative Court, Tallinn) referred to the Public procurement guidance drawn up by the Commission (https://ec.europa.eu/regional_policy/sources/docgener/guides/public_procurement/2018/guidance_public_procurement_2018_en.pdf). The current version of that guidance includes as an example of a discriminatory selection criterion the obligation to 'already [have] qualifications/professional certificates recognised in the country of the contracting authority at the time of submission of tenders, as this would be difficult for foreign tenderers to comply with in such a short timeframe'.

14 Paragraph 10 of its written observations.

15 In its observations (paragraph 2), the Commission points out that 'the reasons on which the need for an establishment situated in Estonia is based cannot be clearly inferred from the request for a preliminary ruling'.

16 Regulation of the European Parliament and of the Council of 28 January 2002 laying down the general principles and requirements of food law, establishing the European Food Safety Authority and laying down procedures in matters of food safety (OJ 2002 L 31, p. 1).

17 See, in particular, recitals 16, 17 and 20 of Regulation No 852/2004.

18 The Estonian Government's replies to the Court's questions create further confusion on this point. It states (paragraph 10) that 'the contracting authority conceived the provision of services on the basis of a food business model which probably requires an establishment on national territory. The contracting authority accepts that, even though it did not assume this and no tender in that sense was submitted, although unlikely, it is not possible to rule out completely that, in its financial and operational model, a tenderer would envisage providing services in another way, that is, without having an establishment on national territory'. Italics added.

19 According to the order for reference (paragraph 3), the Ministry of Social Affairs claimed before the first-instance court that 'it is not possible to perform the contract without using an intermediate warehouse or a means of transport situated in Estonia. Since the successful tenderer cannot perform the contract without storing foodstuffs, it has the status of food sector undertaking'.

20 Paragraph 12 of its written observations.

21 'The relevant Community rules on mutual recognition of diplomas, certificates or other evidence of formal qualifications apply when evidence of a particular qualification is required for participation in a procurement procedure or a design contest.'

22 Observations of the Estonian Government, paragraph 19. No italics in the original.

23 This is not the first time that the Court has been faced with such a situation. The judgment of 8 June 2017, Medisanus, C-296/15, EU:C:2017:431, paragraph 79, stated that 'the contracting authority is subject to two potentially conflicting requirements … Indeed, the contracting authority must comply with Article 6 of the Law on medicinal products, which lays down the principles of priority supply and national self-sufficiency … At the same time, the contracting authority must, pursuant to Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, afford equal access to public procurement and, accordingly, ensure non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators that have medicinal products derived from plasma.' No italics in the original.

25 Judgment of 23 December 2009, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807.

26 The interests of the contracting authority and the effectiveness of the actions of the administrative authority were taken into account in, inter alia, the judgment of 15 May 2008, SECAP and Santorso, C-147/06 and C-148/06, EU:C:2008:277.

38 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 12 December 2006 on services in the internal market (OJ 2006 L 376, p. 36). It must be borne in mind that, for the purposes of that directive, the definition of ‘service’ is broader than that of ‘public service contracts’ in Directive 2004/18.

39 Under Article 5(1) of Directive 2006/123, Member States must ‘examine the procedures and formalities applicable to access to a service activity and to the exercise thereof. Where procedures and formalities examined … are not sufficiently simple, Member States shall simplify them.’

40 It argued before the Tallinna Halduskohus (Administrative Court, Tallinn) that, in view of the period for the submission of tenders in an international tendering procedure (a minimum of 40 days) and the period required for the licensing procedure set out in the ToiduS (30 days), a tenderer had sufficient time to complete the licensing procedure (point 3, third paragraph, under the heading ‘Facts and procedure’ in the order for reference).

41 Judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 25.

42 That would also create a situation where undertakings established outside Estonia were dependent on those established in that country. Again, the latter would be in a more favourable position than the former.

EU law

3 Recital 51 of Directive 2014/24 states:

‘It should be clarified that the provisions concerning protection of confidential information do not in any way prevent public disclosure of non-confidential parts of concluded contracts, including any subsequent changes.’

4 Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

…’

5 Article 21 of that directive, entitled ‘Confidentiality’, provides:

‘1. Unless otherwise provided in this Directive or in the national law to which the contracting authority is subject, in particular legislation concerning access to information, and without prejudice to the obligations relating to the advertising of awarded contracts and to the information to candidates and tenderers set out in Articles 50 and 55, the contracting authority shall not disclose information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential, including, but not limited to, technical or trade secrets and the confidential aspects of tenders.

2. Contracting authorities may impose on economic operators requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which the contracting authorities make available throughout the procurement procedure.'

6 Article 42 of the directive, entitled 'Technical specifications', provides:

'1. The technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex VII shall be set out in the procurement documents. The technical specifications shall lay down the characteristics required of a works, service or supply.

Those characteristics may also refer to the specific process or method of production or provision of the requested works, supplies or services or to a specific process for another stage of its life cycle even where such factors do not form part of their material substance, provided that they are linked to the subject matter of the contract and proportionate to its value and its objectives.

The technical specifications may also specify whether the transfer of intellectual property rights will be required.

3. Without prejudice to mandatory national technical rules, to the extent that they are compatible with Union law, the technical specifications shall be formulated in one of the following ways:

(a) in terms of performance or functional requirements, including environmental characteristics, provided that the parameters are sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject matter of the contract and to allow contracting authorities to award the contract;

(b) by reference to technical specifications and, in order of preference, to national standards transposing European standards, European Technical Assessments, common technical specifications, international standards, other technical reference systems established by the European standardisation bodies or – when any of those do not exist – national standards, national technical approvals or national technical specifications relating to the design, calculation and execution of the works and use of the supplies; each reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent";

(c) in terms of performance or functional requirements referred to in point (a), with reference to the technical specifications referred to in point (b) as a means of presuming conformity with such performance or functional requirements;

(d) by reference to the technical specifications referred to in point (b) for certain characteristics, and by reference to the performance or functional requirements referred to in point (a) for other characteristics.

7 Annex VII to Directive 2014/24 relates to the 'definition of certain technical specifications'.

8 Article 50 of that directive, entitled 'Contract award notices', provides in paragraph 4:

'Certain information on the contract award or the conclusion of the framework agreement may be withheld from publication where its release would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would harm the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators.'

9 Under Article 55 of that directive, entitled 'Informing candidates and tenderers':

‘1. Contracting authorities shall as soon as possible inform each candidate and tenderer of decisions reached concerning the conclusion of a framework agreement, the award of the contract or admittance to a dynamic purchasing system, including the grounds for any decision not to conclude a framework agreement, not to award a contract for which there has been a call for competition, to recommence the procedure or not to implement a dynamic purchasing system.

2. On request from the candidate or tenderer concerned, the contracting authority shall as quickly as possible, and in any event within 15 days from receipt of a written request, inform:

(a) any unsuccessful candidate of the reasons for the rejection of its request to participate,

(b) any unsuccessful tenderer of the reasons for the rejection of its tender, including, for the cases referred to in Article 42(5) and (6), the reasons for its decision of non-equivalence or its decision that the works, supplies or services do not meet the performance or functional requirements,

(c) any tenderer that has made an admissible tender of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected as well as the name of the successful tenderer or the parties to the framework agreement,

(d) any tenderer that has made an admissible tender of the conduct and progress of negotiations and dialogue with tenderers.

3. Contracting authorities may decide to withhold certain information referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2, regarding the contract award, the conclusion of framework agreements or admittance to a dynamic purchasing system, where the release of such information would impede law enforcement or would otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, whether public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators.’

10 Article 56 of that directive, entitled ‘General principles’, states in paragraph 3:

‘Where information or documentation to be submitted by economic operators is or appears to be incomplete or erroneous or where specific documents are missing, contracting authorities may, unless otherwise provided by the national law implementing this Directive, request the economic operators concerned to submit, supplement, clarify or complete the relevant information or documentation within an appropriate time limit, provided that such requests are made in full compliance with the principles of equal treatment and transparency.’

11 Article 57 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Exclusion grounds’, provides in paragraphs 4 and 6:

‘4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(h) where the economic operator has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, has withheld such information or is not able to submit the supporting documents required pursuant to Article 59; or

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

An economic operator which has been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement or concession award procedures shall not be entitled to make use of the possibility provided for under this paragraph during the period of exclusion resulting from that judgment in the Member States where the judgment is effective.'

12 Under Article 58 of that directive, entitled 'Selection criteria':

'1. Selection criteria may relate to:

(a) suitability to pursue the professional activity;

(b) economic and financial standing;

(c) technical and professional ability.

Contracting authorities may only impose criteria referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 on economic operators as requirements for participation. They shall limit any requirements to those that are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. All requirements shall be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

2. With regard to suitability to pursue the professional activity, contracting authorities may require economic operators to be enrolled in one of the professional or trade registers kept in their Member State of establishment, as described in Annex XI, or to comply with any other request set out in that Annex.

In procurement procedures for services, in so far as economic operators have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in order to be able to perform in their country of origin the service concerned, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.

3. With regard to economic and financial standing, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary economic and financial capacity to perform the contract. For that purpose, contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a certain minimum yearly turnover, including a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the contract. In addition, contracting authorities may require that economic operators provide information on their annual accounts showing the ratios, for instance, between assets and liabilities. They may also require an appropriate level of professional risk indemnity insurance.

4. With regard to technical and professional ability, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary human and technical resources and experience to perform the contract to an appropriate quality standard.

Contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a sufficient level of experience demonstrated by suitable references from contracts performed in the past. A contracting authority may assume that an economic operator does not possess the required professional abilities where the contracting authority has established that the economic operator has conflicting interests which may negatively affect the performance of the contract.

In procurement procedures for supplies requiring siting or installation work, services or works, the professional ability of economic operators to provide the service or to execute the installation or the work may be evaluated with regard to their skills, efficiency, experience and reliability.

13 Article 60 of that directive, entitled ‘Means of proof’, states in paragraphs 3 and 4:

‘3. Proof of the economic operator’s economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be provided by one or more of the references listed in Annex XII Part I.

Where, for any valid reason, the economic operator is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, it may prove its economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.

4. Evidence of the economic operators’ technical abilities may be provided by one or more of the means listed in Annex XII Part II, in accordance with the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services.’

14 Annex XII to that directive, entitled ‘Means of proof of selection criteria’, provides:

‘Part I: Economic and financial standing

Proof of the economic operator’s economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) appropriate statements from banks or, where appropriate, evidence of relevant professional risk indemnity insurance;

(b) the presentation of financial statements or extracts from the financial statements, where publication of financial statements is required under the law of the country in which the economic operator is established;

(c) a statement of the undertaking’s overall turnover and, where appropriate, of turnover in the area covered by the contract for a maximum of the last three financial years available, depending on the date on which the undertaking was set up or the economic operator started trading, as far as the information on these turnovers is available.

Part II: Technical ability

Means providing evidence of the economic operators’ technical abilities, as referred to in Article 58:

(a) the following lists:

(i) a list of the works carried out over at the most the past five years, accompanied by certificates of satisfactory execution and outcome for the most important works; where necessary in order to ensure an adequate level of competition, contracting authorities may indicate that evidence of relevant works carried out more than five years before will be taken into account;

(ii) a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided over at the most the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, whether public or private, involved. Where necessary in order to ensure an adequate level of competition, contracting authorities may indicate that evidence of relevant supplies or services delivered or performed more than three years before will be taken into account;

(b) an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, whether or not belonging directly to the economic operator's undertaking, especially those responsible for quality control and, in the case of public works contracts, those upon whom the contractor can call in order to carry out the work;

(c) a description of the technical facilities and measures used by the economic operator for ensuring quality and the undertaking's study and research facilities;

(d) an indication of the supply chain management and tracking systems that the economic operator will be able to apply when performing the contract;

(e) where the products or services to be supplied are complex or, exceptionally, are required for a special purpose, a check carried out by the contracting authorities or on their behalf by a competent official body of the country in which the supplier or service provider is established, subject to that body's agreement, on the production capacities of the supplier or the technical capacity of the service provider and, where necessary, on the means of study and research which are available to it and the quality control measures it will operate;

(f) the educational and professional qualifications of the service provider or contractor or those of the undertaking's managerial staff, provided that they are not evaluated as an award criterion;

(g) an indication of the environmental management measures that the economic operator will be able to apply when performing the contract;

(h) a statement of the average annual manpower of the service provider or contractor and the number of managerial staff for the last three years;

(i) a statement of the tools, plant or technical equipment available to the service provider or contractor for carrying out the contract;

(j) an indication of the proportion of the contract which the economic operator intends possibly to subcontract;

(k) with regard to the products to be supplied:

(i) samples, descriptions or photographs, the authenticity of which must be certified where the contracting authority so requests;

(ii) certificates drawn up by official quality control institutes or agencies of recognised competence attesting the conformity of products clearly identified by references to technical specifications or standards.'

15 Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Reliance on the capacities of other entities', provides in paragraph 1:

'With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. With regard to criteria relating to the educational and professional qualifications as set out in point (f) of Annex XII Part II, or to the relevant professional experience, economic operators may however only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required. Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

The contracting authority shall, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify whether the entities on whose capacity the economic operator intends to rely fulfil the relevant selection criteria and whether there are grounds for exclusion pursuant to Article 57. The contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces an entity which does not meet a relevant selection criterion, or in respect of which there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by the Member State to require that the economic operator substitutes an entity in respect of which there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.

Where an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities with regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing, the contracting authority may require that the economic operator and those entities be jointly liable for the execution of the contract.

Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 19(2) may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.'

16 Under Article 70 of that directive, entitled 'Conditions for performance of contracts':

'Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that they are linked to the subject matter of the contract within the meaning of Article 67(3) and indicated in the call for competition or in the procurement documents. Those conditions may include economic, innovation-related, environmental, social or employment-related considerations.'

Directive 89/665

17 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides:

'1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive [2014/24] unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 37 of that Directive.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] or Directive [2014/23], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

5. Member States may require that the person concerned first seek review with the contracting authority. In that case, Member States shall ensure that the submission of such an application for review results in immediate suspension of the possibility to conclude the contract.

The suspension referred to in the first subparagraph shall not end before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting authority has sent a reply if fax or electronic means are used, or, if other means of communication are used, before the expiry of either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting authority has sent a reply, or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of a reply.'

18 Article 2 of that directive, headed 'Requirements for review procedures', provides in paragraph 1:

'Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.'

19 Directive 89/665, in its original version, had – prior to the amendments made by Directive 2014/23 – been amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) in order to improve the effectiveness of review procedures in relation to the award of public contracts. Recital 36 of the latter directive stated that that directive respects fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised in particular by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter') and seeks, in particular, to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter.

20 Recitals 4 and 18 of Directive 2016/943 state:

'(4) Innovative businesses are increasingly exposed to dishonest practices aimed at misappropriating trade secrets, such as theft, unauthorised copying, economic espionage or the breach of confidentiality requirements, whether from within or from outside of the Union. Recent developments, such as globalisation, increased outsourcing, longer supply chains, and the increased use of information and communication technology contribute to increasing the risk of those practices. The unlawful acquisition, use or disclosure of a trade secret compromises legitimate trade secret holders' ability to obtain first-mover returns from their innovation-related efforts. Without effective and comparable legal means for protecting trade secrets across the Union, incentives to engage in innovation-related cross-border activity within the internal market are undermined, and trade secrets are unable to fulfil their potential as drivers of economic growth and jobs. Thus, innovation and creativity are discouraged and investment diminishes, thereby affecting the smooth functioning of the internal market and undermining its growth-enhancing potential.

(18) Furthermore, the acquisition, use or disclosure of trade secrets, whenever imposed or permitted by law, should be treated as lawful for the purposes of this Directive. This concerns, in particular, the acquisition and disclosure of trade secrets in the context of the exercise of the rights of workers' representatives to information, consultation and participation in accordance with Union law and national laws and practices, and the collective defence of the interests of workers and employers, including co-determination, as well as the acquisition or disclosure of a trade secret in the context of statutory audits performed in accordance with Union or national law. However, such treatment of the acquisition of a trade secret as lawful should be without prejudice to any obligation of confidentiality as regards the trade secret or any limitation as to its use that Union or national law imposes on the recipient or acquirer of the information. In particular, this Directive should not release public authorities from the confidentiality obligations to which they are subject in respect of information passed on by trade secret holders, irrespective of whether those obligations are laid down in Union or national law. Such confidentiality obligations include, inter alia, the obligations in respect of information forwarded to contracting authorities in the context of procurement procedures, as laid down, for example, in … Directive [2014/24]'.

21 Article 1 of that directive, entitled 'Subject matter and scope', states:

‘1. This Directive lays down rules on the protection against the unlawful acquisition, use and disclosure of trade secrets.

2. This Directive shall not affect:

(b) the application of Union or national rules requiring trade secret holders to disclose, for reasons of public interest, information including trade secrets, to the public or to administrative or judicial authorities for the performance of the duties of those authorities;

(c) the application of Union or national rules requiring or allowing Union institutions and bodies or national public authorities to disclose information submitted by businesses which those institutions, bodies or authorities hold pursuant to, and in compliance with, the obligations and prerogatives set out in Union or national law;

22 Article 3 of that directive, entitled ‘Lawful acquisition, use and disclosure of trade secrets’, provides in paragraph 2:

‘The acquisition, use or disclosure of a trade secret shall be considered lawful to the extent that such acquisition, use or disclosure is required or allowed by Union or national law.’

23 Article 4 of that directive, entitled ‘Unlawful acquisition, use and disclosure of trade secrets’, provides in paragraph 2(a):

‘The acquisition of a trade secret without the consent of the trade secret holder shall be considered unlawful, whenever carried out by:

(a) unauthorised access to, appropriation of, or copying of any documents, objects, materials, substances or electronic files, lawfully under the control of the trade secret holder, containing the trade secret or from which the trade secret can be deduced’.

24 Article 9 of Directive 2016/943, entitled ‘Preservation of confidentiality of trade secrets in the course of legal proceedings’, provides in paragraph 2:

‘Member States shall also ensure that the competent judicial authorities may, on a duly reasoned application by a party, take specific measures necessary to preserve the confidentiality of any trade secret or alleged trade secret used or referred to in the course of legal proceedings relating to the unlawful acquisition, use or disclosure of a trade secret. Member States may also allow competent judicial authorities to take such measures on their own initiative.

The measures referred to in the first subparagraph shall at least include the possibility:

(a) of restricting access to any document containing trade secrets or alleged trade secrets submitted by the parties or third parties, in whole or in part, to a limited number of persons;

(b) of restricting access to hearings, when trade secrets or alleged trade secrets may be disclosed, and the corresponding record or transcript of those hearings to a limited number of persons;

(c) of making available to any person other than those comprised in the limited number of persons referred to in points (a) and (b) a non-confidential version of any judicial decision, in which the passages containing trade secrets have been removed or redacted.

The number of persons referred to in points (a) and (b) of the second subparagraph shall be no greater than necessary in order to ensure compliance with the right of the parties to the legal proceedings to an effective remedy and to a fair trial, and shall include, at least, one natural person from each party and the respective lawyers or other representatives of those parties to the legal proceedings.'

Lithuanian law

Law on public procurement

25 The Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law of the Republic of Lithuania on Public Procurement), in the version applicable to the case in the main proceedings ('the Law on public procurement'), provides, in Article 20, entitled 'Confidentiality':

'1. The contracting authority, the award committee, its members and experts, and any other person shall be prohibited from disclosing to third parties information which suppliers have provided in confidence.

2. The supplier's tender or request to participate may not be classified as confidential in its entirety, but the supplier may indicate that certain information presented in its tender is confidential. Confidential information may include, inter alia, technical or trade secrets and confidential aspects of the tender. Information cannot be classified as confidential:

(1) where this would infringe legal provisions establishing the obligation to disclose or the right to access information, and the regulations implementing those legal provisions;

(2) where this would infringe the obligations laid down in Articles 33 and 58 of this Law in connection with the publication of awarded contracts, the provision of information to candidates and tenderers, including information on the price of goods, services or works mentioned in the tender, with the exception of price components;

(3) where that information has been presented in documents confirming that the supplier is not subject to any grounds for exclusion and fulfils the capacity requirements and the standards for quality management and environmental protection, with the exception of information the disclosure of which would infringe the provisions of the Law of the Republic of Lithuania on the protection of personal data or the supplier's obligations under contracts concluded with third parties;

(4) where that information relates to economic operators and subcontractors on whose capacity the supplier relies, with the exception of information the disclosure of which would infringe the provisions of the Law on the protection of personal data.

3. Where the contracting authority has doubts as to the confidential nature of the information contained in the supplier's tender, it must ask the supplier to demonstrate why the information in question is confidential. …

4. Not later than six months after the date on which the contract was awarded, the tenderers concerned may ask the contracting authority to grant them access to the successful tenderer's tender or request to participate (just as candidates may ask it for access to requests to participate made by other suppliers which have been invited to submit a tender or participate in a dialogue), but no information may be disclosed which candidates or tenderers have classified as confidential, without prejudice to paragraph 2 of this article.

26 Article 45 of that law, entitled 'General principles for the evaluation of a supplier and the request for participation or tender submitted by it', provides in paragraph 3:

'If a candidate or tenderer has submitted incorrect, incomplete or incorrect documents or data concerning compliance with the requirements of the procurement documents or such documents or data are missing, the contracting authority shall, without infringing the principles of equal treatment and transparency, ask the candidate or tenderer to correct, supplement or clarify those documents or data, within a reasonable period fixed by the contracting authority. Only the following may be corrected, supplemented, clarified or submitted: documents or data relating to the non-existence of a ground for exclusion of the supplier, its compliance with the capacity requirements, quality assurance standards and environmental protection criteria, a mandate given by the supplier to sign the request to participate or the tender, a joint venture agreement, a document certifying the validity of the tender and documents bearing no relation to the subject matter of the contract, its technical characteristics, the conditions of performance of the contract or the price of the tender. Other documents in the supplier's tender may be corrected, supplemented or clarified in accordance with Article 55(9) of this Law.'

27 Article 46 of that law, entitled 'Grounds for exclusion of a supplier', provides in paragraph 4:

'The contracting authority shall exclude a supplier from the procurement procedure where:

(4) that supplier, in the course of the procurement procedure, has withheld information or submitted false information concerning compliance with the requirements set out in this Article and Article 47 of this Law and the contracting authority can demonstrate this by any legal means, or the supplier is not able to submit the supporting documents required pursuant to Article 50 of this Law due to the misrepresentation of information. …'

28 Article 52 of the Law on public procurement, entitled 'Withholding information, submission of false information or failure to produce documents', provides:

'1. The contracting authority shall publish, at the latest within 10 days, in the Centrinė viešųjų pirkimų informacinė sistema [(Central Portal of Public Procurement, Lithuania)], in accordance with the rules laid down by the Viešųjų pirkimų tarnyba [(Public Procurement Authority, Lithuania)], the information relating to the supplier who, in the course of the procurement procedure, has withheld information or has provided false information concerning compliance with the requirements set out in Articles 46 and 47 of this Law or who, due to the submission of false information, is unable to produce the supporting documents required under Article 50 of this Law, where:

(1) that supplier was excluded from the procurement procedure;

(2) a judicial decision has been issued.

29 Article 55 of the Law on public procurement, entitled 'Evaluation and comparison of tenders', provides in paragraph 9:

'The contracting authority may, acting in accordance with Article 45(3) of this Law, request tenderers to correct, supplement or clarify their tenders; however, it may not request, propose or allow the modification of essential elements of a tender submitted in an open or restricted procedure or of a final tender submitted in a competitive dialogue, a negotiated procedure with or without publication of a contract notice or an innovation partnership, that is to say, modification of the price or any other modifications which would render a non-compliant tender compliant with the requirements set out in the procurement documents. In the event that, during the evaluation of tenders, the contracting authority discovers errors in the calculation of the price or costs, it must request the tenderer to correct the calculation errors identified in the tender, within the time limit fixed by the contracting authority, without changing the price or costs set out in the tender at the time it was evaluated. When correcting the calculation errors identified in the tender, the tenderer may correct the price or cost components, but may not remove price or cost components or add new components to the price or costs.'

30 Article 58 of that law, entitled 'Communication of the results of procurement procedures', provides in paragraph 3:

'In the cases referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article, the contracting authority may not disclose information the disclosure of which would infringe the rules on the provision of information and protection of data or otherwise be contrary to the general interest, would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of a particular supplier or would adversely affect competition between suppliers.'

Code of Civil Procedure of the Republic of Lithuania

31 Article 10^1 of the Lietuvos Respublikos civilinio proceso kodeksas (Code of Civil Procedure of the Republic of Lithuania), entitled 'Special provisions on the protection of trade secrets', provides:

'1. This Article lays down specific provisions on the protection of trade secrets in cases concerning the unlawful acquisition, use and disclosure of trade secrets and other civil matters.

2. Where there are grounds for considering that a trade secret may be disclosed, the court, at the duly reasoned request of the parties or of its own motion, shall, by reasoned order, name the persons who may:

(1) have access to those parts of the file that contain information which constitutes or may constitute a trade secret, and make and obtain extracts, duplicates and copies (digital copies);

(2) take part in hearings in camera in which information which constitutes or may constitute a trade secret may be disclosed, and have access to the records of those hearings;

(3) obtain a certified copy (digital copy) of a judgment or order containing information which constitutes or may constitute a trade secret.

3. The number of persons referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article may not exceed what is necessary to safeguard the right to judicial protection and the right to a fair trial. Those persons are at least the following:

(1) if the party is a natural person: that person and his or her representative;

(2) if the party is a legal person: at least one natural person who is conducting the case on behalf of that legal person and a representative of that legal person.

4. In applying the restrictions laid down in paragraph 2 of this article, the court shall take into account the need to guarantee the right to judicial protection and the right to a fair trial, the legitimate interests of the parties and of the other persons taking part in the proceedings and the harm that may be caused by applying or not applying those restrictions.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

32 By a notice of a public call for competition published on 27 September 2018, the contracting authority launched an open international procurement procedure for the award of a contract for the provision of services relating to the collection and transport of municipal waste from the municipality of Neringa (Lithuania) to waste treatment facilities in the Region of Klaipėda (Lithuania).

33 The contracting authority set out technical specifications in that notice. It provided, inter alia, that the service provider would be required to use municipal waste collection vehicles which had to comply, at least, with the Euro 5 standard and be equipped with a fixed global positioning system (GPS) transmitter operating continuously, so as to enable the contracting authority to determine the exact position of the vehicle and its specific itinerary.

34 The notice also contained a description of the professional and technical capacities necessary for the performance of the contract and a description of the required financial and economic capacities. In that regard, it stated that each tenderer had to submit a free-form declaration that its average annual turnover generated from the activity of collecting and transporting mixed municipal waste during the three preceding financial years or from the date of its registration, if it had carried on that business for less than three years, was not less than EUR 200 000 excluding value added tax.

35 The contracting authority received three tenders, including those of Ecoservice and the Consortium.

36 On 29 November 2018, the contracting authority notified the tenderers of the evaluation of the tenders and their final ranking. The contract was awarded to the Consortium because of the lower price of its tender, Ecoservice being ranked second.

37 On 4 December 2018, Ecoservice requested the contracting authority, on the basis of Article 20(4) of the Law on public procurement, to grant it access to the information used to establish that classification, in particular the Consortium's tender.

38 On 6 December 2018, Ecoservice was granted access to the non-confidential information in that tender.

39 On 10 December 2018, taking the view that the Consortium did not meet the qualification requirements, Ecoservice lodged a complaint with the contracting authority seeking to challenge the outcome of the procurement procedure. It submitted, first, that none of the members of the Consortium could have performed contracts for the collection and transport of mixed municipal waste with a value of EUR 200 000 over the three preceding years. It stated in that regard that, since Parsekas did not carry out mixed municipal waste management services, the contracting authority should have asked it to clarify the submitted declaration that Parsekas had performed mixed waste management contracts with a value of EUR 235 510.79. Secondly, Ecoservice claimed that the Consortium did not have the required technical capacities.

40 On 17 December 2018, the contracting authority dismissed that complaint, stating briefly, according to the referring court, that the Consortium had complied with the two qualification requirements contested by Ecoservice.

41 On 27 December 2018, Ecoservice brought an action against that decision before the Klaipėdos apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Klaipėda, Lithuania), seeking, inter alia, an order requiring the contracting authority to produce the tender submitted by the Consortium and the correspondence exchanged between the latter and the contracting authority. Ecoservice argued that all the evidence had to be submitted to the court, irrespective of its confidential nature, and submitted that it required access to those documents, some of which were not confidential, in order to clarify its own requests.

42 By decision of 3 January 2019, that court ordered the contracting authority to provide all the requested documents to Ecoservice.

43 In its pleading of 11 January 2019 lodged in response to that order, the contracting authority claimed, first, that, when examining the complaint, it had asked the Consortium to provide it with clarifications concerning the waste management services contracts it had concluded. The Consortium had submitted the requested information while stating that much of the information submitted was confidential and therefore had to be protected against disclosure to third parties. The contracting authority also considered that that information had commercial value for the Consortium and that its disclosure to competitors could harm the Consortium and therefore did not communicate that confidential information to the court so as not to infringe Article 20 of the Law on public procurement. It therefore produced only the non-confidential information in the tender submitted by the Consortium, while indicating that it would submit the confidential information to the court if the latter again requested it.

44 Secondly, the contracting authority contended that the action should be dismissed on the ground that the additional clarifications it had received from the Consortium and the inspection which had been carried out at the latter's premises had confirmed that the tender at issue had been evaluated correctly.

45 By order of 15 January 2019, the Klaipėdos apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Klaipėda) limited the obligation to produce documents to the tender submitted by the Consortium and the documents attached thereto and ordered their production by 25 January 2019.

46 On 25 January 2019, the contracting authority submitted the requested documents to that court, specifying whether or not they contained confidential information. The information which the Consortium claimed to be confidential, without being contradicted by the contracting authority, was addressed exclusively to the court. Moreover, the contracting authority asked the court not to grant Ecoservice access to the confidential information in the Consortium's tender and to classify that information as non-public information in the case file.

47 By order of 30 January 2019, the court of first instance granted the contracting authority's request that the information in the Consortium's tender which had been submitted to it, first, be classified as confidential and, second, not be disclosed.

48 On 14 February 2019, by an order not amenable to appeal, that court dismissed Ecoservice's request of 11 February 2019 for access to all the evidence in the case file.

49 On 21 February 2019, by an order not amenable to appeal, that court dismissed Ecoservice's request of 12 February 2019 for an order requiring Parsekas to produce data relating to waste management contracts it had concluded.

50 By judgment of 15 March 2019, the Klaipėdos apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Klaipėda) dismissed Ecoservice's action on the ground that the Consortium satisfied the qualification requirements.

51 Ruling on an appeal brought by Ecoservice, the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal, Lithuania), by judgment of 30 May 2019, set aside both the judgment of the court of first instance and the decision of the contracting authority establishing the ranking of the tenders. The appeal court also ordered the contracting authority to carry out a fresh evaluation of the tenders.

52 The contracting authority brought an appeal on a point of law before the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania).

53 On 26 July 2019, Ecoservice, before submitting its response to the appeal on a point of law, applied to the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) for access to the confidential documents submitted by the contracting authority at first instance, with the commercially sensitive information redacted.

54 In the first place, the referring court notes that some of the qualification requirements for tenderers set out in the tender notice could be understood as conditions relating to the financial and economic capacity of the economic operator as well as conditions relating to its technical and professional ability, but also as technical specifications or conditions relating to the performance of the public contract.

55 It is necessary to determine the nature of those requirements, since, in accordance with Article 45(3) and Article 55(9) of the Law on public procurement, the obligation or the possibility to correct a declaration of a tenderer differs depending on whether the information in question concerns the classification of that tenderer or the tender it submitted.

56 In the second place, according to the referring court, the question arises as to the appropriate balance between the protection of the confidential information provided by a tenderer and the effectiveness of the rights of defence of other tenderers.

57 In the present case, Ecoservice attempted unsuccessfully to gain access to the Consortium's tender. The contracting authority itself very actively prioritised the Consortium's right to protect its confidential information. That practice, which is common in Lithuania, results in the rights of tenderers being only partly protected. In disputes relating to the award of public contracts, the unsuccessful tenderers have less information than the other parties to those disputes. Furthermore, the effective protection of their rights depends on whether the court decides to classify the information they request as confidential. A decision by which the court does not grant a request for access to such information may diminish an unsuccessful tenderer's chances of having its action against the decision to award the contract upheld.

58 The referring court states, first, that it has held, inter alia, in the field of public procurement, that the right of tenderers, enshrined in Article 20 of the Law on public procurement, to the protection of confidential information which they submitted in a tender concerns only information which must be classified as trade secrets or industrial secrets under Article 1.116(1) of the Lietuvos Respublikos civilinio kodekso (Civil Code of the Republic of Lithuania), which corresponds in essence to the provisions of Directive 2016/943. Secondly, the right of a tenderer to have access to another tenderer's bid should be regarded as forming an integral part of the protection of potentially infringed rights.

59 However the referring court has doubts as to the precise scope of the contracting authorities' obligations to protect the confidentiality of the information sent to them by the tenderers and the relationship between those obligations and the obligation to ensure effective judicial protection for the economic operators which have brought an action. It takes the view that, even though the Court, in its judgment of 14 February 2008, Varec (C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91), stated that public contract award procedures are founded on a relationship of trust between the contracting authorities and participating economic operators, it appears from the third subparagraph of Article 9(2) of Directive 2016/943, which postdates that judgment, that, in any event, the parties to proceedings cannot have different amounts of information at their disposal, since otherwise the right to effective judicial protection and right to a fair trial would be infringed. It states that, since that provision requires the court to guarantee the right of economic operators to access trade secrets of a party to the proceedings, it may also be the case that economic operators should be allowed to exercise that right prior to any litigation, in particular so that they may decide whether to bring an action in full knowledge of the facts.

60 The referring court observes that there is, however, a risk that certain economic operators might abuse that right by seeking such information from the contracting authority not in order to defend their rights, but solely in order to obtain information about their competitors. However, the bringing of proceedings before a court would in any event enable those operators to obtain the information sought.

61 The referring court notes that, with the exception of recital 18 thereof, Directive 2016/943 does not contain any specific provision concerning public procurement procedures. It notes that, even though contracting authorities are not review bodies, the mandatory system of pre-litigation dispute resolution, provided for under domestic law, confers on them a broad power to cooperate with economic operators, whether they are applicants or defendants. The contracting authorities also have – as a result of their objective of guaranteeing the effective protection of those operators' rights – the duty to adopt, to the extent of their competence and the means at their disposal, the measures necessary to ensure that those operators have the ability to defend effectively any interests that may have been damaged. Thus, it may be the case that Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 and the corresponding provisions of Directive 89/665 should be interpreted as meaning that tenderers may access information which constitutes trade secrets of other tenderers not only in the context of judicial proceedings, but also during the prior administrative review stage.

62 In the third place, the referring court intends to raise of its own motion the issue of the assessment of the Consortium's conduct in the light of Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24, that is to say whether the Consortium or, at the very least, some of its members submitted false information to the contracting authority concerning the conformity of their capacities with the requirements set out in the call for tenders.

63 The referring court infers from the case-law of the Court that the information provided by Parsekas could constitute a case of negligence in the submission of information, which has affected the outcome of the procurement procedure. In that regard, it considers that Parsekas should not have indicated the income which it derived from the contracts concluded and performed together with other economic operators which provided the part of the services relating to mixed waste management and the contracts which it performed itself, but in respect of which the management of mixed waste represented only a minimal part of the waste concerned.

64 Furthermore, the referring court, which observes that the Court's case-law on Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 is based on the particular relationship of mutual trust between the contracting authority and the supplier concerned, has doubts as to whether a national court may depart from the contracting authority's assessment that the information communicated to it during the procurement procedure was not false or misleading.

65 Lastly, the referring court is unsure whether, where an economic operator which is a party to a joint venture agreement has provided potentially false information, its partners, with whom it submitted the joint tender, must also be included, pursuant to Article 46(4)(4) and Article 52 of the Law on public procurement, on the 'List of suppliers which have submitted false information', which would prohibit them from participating in calls for tenders published by other contracting authorities for one year.

66 That approach, which could be based on the joint liability and common interests and responsibility of all the partners, nevertheless seems incompatible with the principle of the personal responsibility of those operators, by virtue of which only economic operators which have supplied false information may be penalised.

67 In those circumstances, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Does a tender condition under which suppliers are required to demonstrate a certain level of average annual operating income derived from carrying out activities relating only to specific services (mixed municipal waste management) fall within the scope of Article 58(3) or (4) of Directive 2014/24?

(2) Does the method of assessment of the supplier's capacity, which is set out by the Court of Justice in its judgment of 4 May 2017, Esaprojekt (C-387/14, EU:C:2017:338), depend on the answer to the first question?

(3) Does a tender condition under which suppliers are required to demonstrate that the vehicles necessary for the provision of [refuse management] services comply with the specific technical requirements, including polluting emissions (Euro 5 standard), installation of a GPS transmitter, appropriate capacity and so forth, fall within the scope of Article 58(4) of Directive 2014/24, Article 42 of that directive in conjunction with the provisions of Annex VII, and/or Article 70 of that directive?

(4) Are the [fourth] subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, which lays down the principle of the effectiveness of review procedures, Article 1(3) and (5) thereof, Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 and the provisions of Directive [2016/943], in particular recital 18 and the third subparagraph of Article 9(2) thereof (together or separately, but without limitation thereto), to be interpreted as meaning that, where a binding pre-litigation dispute settlement procedure is laid down in the national legal rules governing public procurement:

(a) the contracting authority has to provide to the supplier who initiated the review procedure all information regarding another supplier's tender (regardless of its confidential nature), if the subject matter of that procedure is specifically the lawfulness of the evaluation of that tender and the supplier who initiated the procedure had explicitly requested the contracting authority, prior thereto, to disclose that information;

(b) irrespective of the answer to the previous question, the contracting authority, when rejecting a complaint submitted by a supplier regarding the lawfulness of the evaluation of a competitor's tender, must in any event give a clear, comprehensive and specific reply, regardless of the risk of disclosing confidential tender information entrusted to it?

(5) Are the [fourth] subparagraph of Article 1(1), Article 1(3) and (5) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665, Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 and Directive 2016/943, in particular recital 18 thereof (together or separately, but without limitation thereto), to be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority's decision not to grant a supplier access to the confidential details of another participant's tender is a decision which may be challenged separately before the courts?

(6) If the answer to the previous question is in the affirmative, is Article 1(5) of Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as meaning that the supplier must file a complaint with the contracting authority in respect of such a decision by it and, if need be, bring an action before the courts?

(7) If the answer to the previous question is in the affirmative, are the [fourth] subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as meaning that the supplier may, depending on the extent of the information available on the content of the other supplier's tender, bring an action before the courts concerning exclusively the refusal to provide information to it, without separately calling the lawfulness of other decisions of the contracting authority into question?

(8) Irrespective of the answers to the previous questions, is the third subparagraph of Article 9(2) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted as meaning that, where the court is requested to order the other party to the dispute to produce evidence and make it available to the applicant, it must grant such a request regardless of the actions on the part of the contracting authority during the procurement or review procedures?

(9) Is the third subparagraph of Article 9(2) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted as meaning that, if the court rejects the request to disclose confidential information of the other party to the dispute, the court should of its own motion assess the relevance of the requested information and its effects on the lawfulness of the public procurement procedure?

(10) May the ground for exclusion of suppliers which is laid down in Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24, regard being had to the judgment of the Court of Justice of 3 October 2019, Delta Antrepriză de Construcții și Montaj 93 (C-267/18, EU:C:2019:826), be applied in such a way that the court, when examining a dispute between a supplier and the contracting authority, may decide of its own motion, irrespective of the assessment of the contracting authority, that the tenderer concerned, acting intentionally or negligently, submitted misleading, factually inaccurate information to the contracting authority and therefore should be excluded from public procurement procedures?

(11) Is Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the principle of proportionality set out in Article 18(1) of that directive, to be interpreted and applied in such a way that, where national law provides for additional penalties (besides exclusion from procurement procedures) in respect of the submission of false information, those penalties may be applied only on the basis of personal responsibility, in particular where factually inaccurate information is submitted only by some of the joint participants in the public procurement procedure (for example, one of several partners)?'

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

68 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 58 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that the obligation on economic operators to demonstrate that they have a certain average annual turnover in the area covered by the public contract at issue constitutes a selection criterion relating to their economic and financial standing, within the meaning of paragraph 3 of that provision, or their technical and professional ability, within the meaning of paragraph 4 of that provision.

69 In that regard, it should be noted that Article 58(1) of that directive sets out the three types of selection criteria which contracting authorities may impose on economic operators as requirements for participation. Those criteria, which relate to the suitability to pursue the professional activity concerned, the economic and financial standing and the technical and professional ability of the operators, are set out in paragraphs 2 to 4 of that article respectively.

70 In addition, it is apparent from Article 58(3) of that directive that, in order to ensure that they possess the necessary economic and financial standing to perform the contract, contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a certain minimum yearly turnover, including a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the contract.

71 It follows that the requirement that economic operators demonstrate that they have a certain average annual turnover in the area covered by the contract corresponds precisely to the definition of a selection criterion based on their economic and financial standing, within the meaning of Article 58(3) of Directive 2014/24 and therefore falls within the scope of that definition. Moreover, it is apparent from Annex XII to that directive, concerning ‘means of proof of selection criteria’, and more specifically from Part I of that annex, to which Article 60(3) of that directive refers, that the non-exhaustive list of means of proof of an economic operator’s economic and financial standing includes ‘turnover in the area covered by the contract’, which supports that interpretation.

72 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 58 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that the obligation on economic operators to demonstrate that they have a certain average annual turnover in the area covered by the public contract at issue constitutes a selection criterion relating to the economic and financial standing of those operators, within the meaning of paragraph 3 of that provision.

73 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 58(3) in conjunction with Article 60(3) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that, where the contracting authority has required that economic operators have a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the public contract in question, an economic operator may, in order to prove its economic and financial standing, rely on the income received by a temporary group of undertakings to which it belonged only where it actually contributed, in the context of a specific public contract, to the performance of an activity of that group analogous to the activity which is the subject matter of the public contract for which that operator seeks to prove its economic and financial standing.

74 In order to prove its economic and financial standing, within the meaning of Article 58(3) of Directive 2014/24, an economic operator may, as a general rule, in accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 60(3) of that directive, submit one or more of the references listed in Part I of Annex XII to that directive to the contracting authority. The second subparagraph of Article 60(3) of that directive even provides that where, for any valid reason, the economic operator is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, it may prove its economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.

75 As is apparent from Article 58(3) of Directive 2014/24, contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a certain minimum yearly turnover, including a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the contract.

76 It thus follows from that provision that, when setting out the requirements to ensure that economic operators have the necessary economic and financial standing to perform the contract, contracting authorities may require that economic operators have a certain overall minimum yearly turnover or a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the public contract in question, or they may combine those two requirements.

77 If the contracting authority has imposed only a requirement of a certain minimum annual turnover, without requiring that that minimum turnover have been achieved in the area covered by the contract, nothing precludes an economic operator from relying on the income received by a temporary group of undertakings to which it belonged, even if it did not actually contribute, in the context of a specific public contract, to the performance of an activity of that group analogous to the activity which is the subject matter of the public contract for which that operator seeks to prove its economic and financial standing.

78 However, where the contracting authority has required that that minimum turnover have been achieved in the area covered by the contract, that requirement has a twofold purpose. It is intended to establish the economic and financial standing of economic operators and helps to demonstrate their technical and professional abilities. In that situation, an operator's economic and financial standing is, like its technical and professional abilities, specific and exclusive to that operator as a natural or legal person.

79 It follows that, in the latter situation, an economic operator may, in order to prove its economic and financial standing, rely, in a public procurement procedure, on the income received by a temporary group of undertakings to which it belonged only if it actually contributed, in the context of a specific public contract, to the performance of an activity of that group analogous to the activity which is the subject matter of the public contract for which that operator seeks to prove its economic and financial standing.

80 Indeed, where an economic operator relies on the economic and financial capacities of a temporary group of undertakings in which it has participated, those capacities must be assessed in relation to the effective participation of that operator and, therefore, to its actual contribution to the performance of an activity required of that group in the context of a specific public contract (see, by analogy, judgment of 4 May 2017, Esaprojekt, C-387/14, EU:C:2017:338, paragraph 62).

81 It is therefore necessary, in the context of Article 58(3) of Directive 2014/24, to limit, in the situation referred to in paragraph 78 of the present judgment, the turnover which may be relied on under that provision to that relating to the actual contribution of the operator in question to the performance of an activity required of that group in the context of a previous public contract.

82 The answer to the second question is therefore that Article 58(3) in conjunction with Article 60(3) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that, where the contracting authority has required that economic operators have achieved a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the public contract in question, an economic operator may, in order to prove its economic and financial standing, rely on income received by a temporary group of undertakings to which it belonged only if it actually contributed, in the context of a specific public contract, to the performance of an activity of that group analogous to the activity which is the subject matter of the public contract for which that operator seeks to prove its economic and financial standing.

The third question

83 By its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 58(4), Article 42 and Article 70 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that those articles can apply simultaneously to a technical requirement set out in a call for tenders.

84 In that regard, it must be held that Directive 2014/24 does not preclude the consideration of technical requirements simultaneously as selection criteria relating to technical and professional ability, as technical specifications and/or as conditions for the performance of the contract, within the meaning of Article 58(4), Article 42 and Article 70 of that directive, respectively.

85 As regards selection criteria relating to the 'technical and professional ability' of economic operators within the meaning of Article 58(4) of Directive 2014/24, it should be noted that the means of proof of those abilities listed in Part II of Annex XII to that directive, includes, in points (g) and (i) of that part, respectively, 'an indication of the environmental management measures that the economic operator will be able to apply when performing the contract' and 'a statement of the tools, plant or technical equipment available to the service provider or contractor for carrying out the contract'.

86 If such means of proof are capable of demonstrating the 'technical and professional ability' of economic operators, then technical requirements such as those concerning polluting emissions from vehicles (Euro 5 standard) and the obligation to equip those vehicles with a GPS transmitter, which are at issue in the present case, appear apt to relate to the 'technical resources' of economic operators and, therefore, to be classified as selection criteria relating to their technical and professional abilities, within the meaning of Article 58(4) of that directive, provided that the tender documentation states that they are imposed specifically as abilities which tenderers must prove they have or will have in time to perform the contract, which it is for the referring court to verify.

87 As regards 'technical specifications', within the meaning of Article 42 of Directive 2014/24, it is apparent from paragraph 3 of that article that such specifications define the 'characteristics required' of the services covered by a contract and are formulated in terms of performance or functional requirements, including environmental characteristics, or by reference to technical standards. Moreover, paragraph 1 of that article refers to Annex VII to that directive, point 1(b) of which states, with regard to public supply or service contracts, that a technical specification is contained 'in a document defining the required characteristics of a product or a service, such as … environmental and climate performance levels …'. Thus, the technical requirements at issue in the main proceedings, which are formulated in terms of performance or functional requirements, and which refer in particular to the Euro 5 standard relating to polluting emissions from vehicles, may also fall within the concept of 'technical specifications'.

88 Lastly, since they lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, they appear to be linked to the subject matter of the contract and they are indicated in the call for competition or in the procurement documents, those requirements, which include innovation-related and environmental considerations, may also fall within the scope of 'conditions for performance of the contract', within the meaning of Article 70 of Directive 2014/24, provided that it is apparent from the tender documentation that they are imposed as conditions with which the successful tenderer must comply when performing the contract, which it is for the referring court to verify.

89 In that regard, it must be noted that compliance with the conditions for the performance of a contract is not to be assessed when a contract is awarded. It follows that, if the requirement at issue in the main proceedings were classified as a performance condition and if the successful tenderer did not satisfy it when the public contract was awarded to it, the non-compliance with that condition would have no effect on the question whether the award of the contract to the Consortium was compatible with the provisions of Directive 2014/24.

90 Thus, a requirement contained in a call for tenders, such as the requirement at issue in the main proceedings, may be classified as a selection criterion relating to technical and professional ability or a technical specification or even as a condition for the performance of the contract. Furthermore, since the referring court raises the question, inter alia, of the compatibility of the requirements at issue in the main proceedings with EU law, it should be added that Articles 42 and 70 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding, as a matter of principle, the imposition, in a call for tenders, of requirements specifying certain technical characteristics of vehicles which must be used for the purpose of providing the services covered by the contract in question, subject to compliance with the fundamental principles of public procurement, as set out in Article 18(1) of that directive.

91 It should be noted that, in the context of the third question, the referring court is also unsure whether the classification of the requirements at issue may have an effect on the possibility of rectifying and correcting submitted tenders.

92 In that regard, it should be pointed out that, under Article 56(3) of Directive 2014/24, where information or documentation to be submitted by economic operators is or appears to be incomplete or erroneous or where specific documents are missing, contracting authorities may, unless otherwise provided by the national law implementing that directive, request the economic operators concerned to submit, supplement, clarify or complete the relevant information or documentation within an appropriate time limit, provided that such requests are made in full compliance with the principles of equal treatment and transparency.

93 As is apparent from settled case-law on the interpretation of the provisions of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), based in particular on the principle of equal treatment and which it is appropriate to apply by analogy in the context of Article 56(3) of Directive 2014/24, a request for clarification sent to an economic operator under that provision cannot however make up for the lack of a document or information the submission of which was required by the contract documents, since the contracting authority is required to observe strictly the criteria which it has itself laid down. In addition, such a request may not lead to the submission by a tenderer of what would appear in reality to be a new tender (see, by analogy, judgments of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 40; of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraphs 36 and 40; and of 28 February 2018, MA.T.I. SUD and Duemme SGR, C-523/16 and C-536/16, EU:C:2018:122, paragraphs 51 and 52).

94 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the scope of the contracting authority's power to allow the successful tenderer subsequently to supplement or clarify its initial tender depends on compliance with the provisions of Article 56(3) of Directive 2014/24, having regard, in particular, to the requirements of the principle of equal treatment, and not, as such, on the classification of the requirements at issue in the main proceedings as selection criteria relating to the 'technical and professional ability' of economic operators, within the meaning of Article 58(4) of that directive, as 'technical specifications', within the meaning of Article 42 thereof or as 'conditions for performance' within the meaning of Article 70 of that directive.

95 The answer to the third question is therefore that Article 58(4), Article 42 and Article 70 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that they can apply simultaneously to a technical requirement set out in a call for tenders.

The fourth to ninth questions

Preliminary observations

96 Since the fourth, fifth, eighth and ninth questions concern the interpretation of provisions of Directive 2016/943, it must be determined whether that directive is applicable, first, to a situation in which a contracting authority receives a request from a tenderer for the disclosure of information deemed confidential contained in a competitor's tender and, where relevant, a complaint against the decision rejecting that request in the context of a mandatory pre-litigation procedure and, secondly, where an action is brought before a court against the decision of the contracting authority dismissing that complaint.

97 Having regard to its purpose, as set out in Article 1(1) thereof, read in conjunction with recital 4 thereof, Directive 2016/943 concerns only the unlawful acquisition, use or disclosure of trade secrets and does not provide for measures to protect the confidentiality of trade secrets in other types of court proceedings, such as proceedings relating to public procurement.

98 Moreover, Article 4(2)(a) of that directive provides that the acquisition of a trade secret without the consent of the trade secret holder is to be considered unlawful whenever it is carried out by unauthorised access to, appropriation of, or copying of any documents, objects, materials, substances or electronic files, lawfully under the control of the trade secret holder, containing the trade secret or from which the trade secret can be deduced.

99 Furthermore, as is apparent from Article 1(2)(c) thereof, that directive does not affect the application of EU or national rules requiring or allowing EU institutions and bodies or national public authorities to disclose information submitted by businesses which those institutions, bodies or authorities hold pursuant to, and in compliance with, the obligations and prerogatives set out in EU or national law. In addition, recital 18 of that directive, in the light of which that provision must be interpreted, states that Directive 2016/943 should not release public authorities from the confidentiality obligations to which they are subject in respect of information passed on by trade secret holders, irrespective of whether those obligations are laid down in EU or national law. Accordingly, it must be concluded that Directive 2016/943 does not release public authorities from the confidentiality obligations which may arise under Directive 2014/24.

100 Lastly, Article 3(2) of Directive 2016/943 provides that the acquisition, use or disclosure of a trade secret is to be considered lawful to the extent that it is required or allowed by EU or national law.

101 In that context, it should be noted that Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 51 thereof, provides that, in principle, the contracting authority is not to disclose information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential and that it may impose on economic operators requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which they make available throughout the procurement procedure.

102 Accordingly, in order to provide a useful answer to the referring court, the Court will interpret the relevant provisions of Directives 2014/24 and 89/665 which specify, inter alia, the special rules applicable to contracting authorities and national courts as regards the protection of the confidentiality of documents submitted to them in the context of public procurement procedures.

The fifth to seventh questions

103 By its fifth to seventh questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1), Article 1(3) and (5) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that a decision of a contracting authority refusing to disclose to an economic operator the information deemed confidential in the application file or in the tender of another economic operator is a measure amenable to review and that, where the Member State in which the public procurement procedure in question is taking place has provided for a mandatory pre-litigation procedure in respect of decisions taken by contracting authorities, judicial proceedings against that decision must be preceded by such a prior administrative review procedure.

104 In that regard, it follows from the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 that the Member States are to take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards inter alia contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of Directive 89/665, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed EU law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law. Under Article 1(3) of that directive, those review procedures must be available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

105 Furthermore, it is clear from the case-law of the Court that the concept of ‘decisions taken by the contracting authorities’ must be interpreted broadly. By using the terms ‘as regards contracts’, the wording of the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 implies that every decision of a contracting authority falling under the EU rules in the field of public procurement and liable to infringe them is subject to the judicial review provided for in Articles 2 to 2f of that directive. That wording thus refers generally to the decisions of a contracting authority without distinguishing between those decisions according to their content or time of adoption and does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature or content of the decisions to which it refers (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others, C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraphs 26 and 27 and the case-law cited).

106 That broad interpretation of the concept of ‘decisions amenable to review’, which led the Court, inter alia, to consider that a decision of a contracting authority allowing an economic operator to participate in a public procurement procedure constitutes a decision within the meaning of the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 (judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others, C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 28, and see, to that effect, as regards Article 1(3) of that directive, order of 14 February 2019, Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco, C-54/18, EU:C:2019:118, paragraph 36), must also apply as regards a decision by which a contracting authority refuses to disclose to an economic operator the information deemed confidential submitted to it by a candidate or a tenderer.

107 Since the referring court asks, in essence, by its seventh question, whether an unsuccessful tenderer may bring legal proceedings relating solely to the refusal to disclose to it information deemed confidential, without also challenging the legality of other decisions of the contracting authority, it is sufficient, first of all, to note that Directive 89/665 does not contain any provision precluding such a tenderer from bringing an action against a contracting authority’s decision refusing to provide it with such information, regardless of the content and scope of that decision.

108 Next, as the Advocate General noted, in essence, in points 77 and 78 of his Opinion, that finding is supported by the objectives of effectiveness and speed referred to in the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of that directive.

109 Lastly, as regards the question whether judicial proceedings against a decision by which the contracting authority refuses to disclose to an economic operator information deemed confidential submitted by a candidate or tenderer must be preceded by a prior administrative review procedure where the Member State in which the public procurement procedure in question takes place has provided for a mandatory pre-litigation procedure, it should be noted that, although Article 1(5) of Directive 89/665 provides that a Member State may require that the person concerned first seek review with the contracting authority before seeking judicial review, that provision does not however specify that review procedure or the detailed rules thereof.

110 Accordingly, where, in accordance with Article 1(5) of that directive, the Member State in which the public procurement procedure in question takes place has provided that any person who wishes to challenge a decision taken by the contracting authority is required to seek administrative review before bringing an action before the courts, that Member State may also provide, while respecting the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, that an action against a decision of the contracting authority refusing to disclose to an economic operator the information deemed confidential in the application file or in the tender of another economic operator must be preceded by an administrative review procedure before the contracting authority.

111 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the answer to the fifth to seventh questions is that the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1), Article 1(3) and (5) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that a decision of a contracting authority refusing to disclose to an economic operator the information deemed confidential in the application file or in the tender of another economic operator is a measure amenable to review and that, where the Member State in which the public procurement procedure in question takes place has provided that any person wishing to challenge decisions taken by the contracting authority is required to seek administrative review before bringing an action before the courts, that Member State may also provide that judicial proceedings against that decision refusing access have to be preceded by such a prior administrative review procedure.

The fourth, eighth and ninth questions

112 By its fourth, eighth and ninth questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) and (5) of Directive 89/665 and Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that both the contracting authority and, as the case may be, the competent national court are required to disclose to an economic operator which has requested it all the information contained in the documents submitted by a competitor, including the confidential information contained therein. That court also wishes to know whether, in the event of a refusal to disclose information on the ground of its confidentiality, the contracting authority must state reasons for its position regarding the confidential nature of that information.

– The scope of the contracting authority's obligation to protect confidential information and the obligation to state reasons

113 Under Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24, unless otherwise provided in that directive or in the national law to which the contracting authority is subject, in particular legislation concerning access to information, and without prejudice to the obligations relating to the advertising of awarded contracts and to the information to candidates and tenderers set out in Articles 50 and 55 of that directive, the contracting authority is not to disclose information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential, including, but not limited to, technical or trade secrets and the confidential aspects of tenders. Article 21(2) of that directive provides that contracting authorities may impose on economic operators requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which the contracting authorities make available throughout the procurement procedure.

114 In addition, it is true that Article 55(2)(c) of Directive 2014/24 expressly authorises any tenderer that has made an admissible tender to request the contracting authority to communicate to it, as quickly as possible, and in any event within 15 days from receipt of a written request, the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected as well as the name of the successful tenderer. Article 50(4) and Article 55(3) of that directive provide, however, that contracting authorities may decide not to disclose certain information concerning the award of the contract, inter alia where its release would be contrary to the public interest, would harm the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators

115 In that regard, it should be recalled that the principal objective of the EU rules on public procurement is the opening-up of public procurement to undistorted competition in all the Member States and that, in order to achieve that objective, it is important that the contracting authorities do not release information relating to public procurement procedures which could be used to distort competition, whether in an ongoing procurement procedure or in subsequent procedures. Furthermore, the obligation to state reasons for a decision rejecting a tender in a public procurement procedure does not mean that that unsuccessful tenderer must be provided with all the information regarding the characteristics of the tender accepted by the contracting authority. Since public procurement procedures are founded on a relationship of trust between the contracting authorities and participating economic operators, those operators must be able to communicate any relevant information to the contracting authorities in the procurement process, without fear that the authorities will communicate to third parties items of information whose disclosure could be damaging to those operators (see, to that effect, judgments of 14 February 2008, Varec, C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91, paragraphs 34 to 36, and of 15 July 2021, Commission v Landesbank Baden-Württemberg and SRB, C-584/20 P and C-621/20 P, EU:C:2021:601, paragraph 112 and the case-law cited).

116 It follows from the provisions of Directive 2014/24, cited in paragraphs 113 and 114 above, and from the case-law referred to in paragraph 115 above, that a contracting authority which has received a request from an economic operator for disclosure of information deemed confidential in the tender of the competitor to which the contract was awarded, must not, in principle, disclose that information.

117 However, as the Advocate General observes, in essence, in points 40 and 41 of his Opinion, the contracting authority cannot be bound by an economic operator's mere claim that the information submitted is confidential. Such an operator must demonstrate the genuinely confidential nature of the information which it claims should not be disclosed, by establishing, for example, that that information contains technical or trade secrets, that it could be used to distort competition or that its disclosure could be damaging to that operator.

118 Consequently, if the contracting authority has doubts as to the confidential nature of the information submitted by that operator, it must, before taking a decision granting the applicant access to that information, give the operator concerned the opportunity to provide additional evidence in order to ensure that its rights of defence are respected. Having regard to the harm which could result from the improper disclosure of certain information to a competitor, the contracting authority must, before disclosing that information to a party to the dispute, give the economic operator concerned an opportunity to plead that the information in question is confidential or a trade secret (see, by analogy, judgment of 14 February 2008, Varec, C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91, paragraph 54).

119 Furthermore, it is for the contracting authority to ensure that the decision which it intends to take on an economic operator's request for access to information contained in the documents submitted by a competitor complies with the public procurement rules set out in Directive 2014/24, in particular those relating to the protection of confidential information referred to in paragraphs 113 and 114 above. The contracting authority is subject to the same obligation where, under Article 1(5) of Directive 89/665, the Member State of that authority has opted to make the right to seek judicial review of decisions taken by the contracting authorities subject to the obligation first to seek administrative review before those authorities.

120 It should also be pointed out that the contracting authority – whether where it refuses to disclose the confidential information of an economic operator to one of its competitors or where it receives an application for administrative review of its refusal to disclose such information in the context of a mandatory pre-litigation procedure – must also comply with the general principle of EU law relating to good administration, which entails requirements that must be met by the Member States when they implement EU law (judgment of 9 November 2017, LS Customs Services, C-46/16, EU:C:2017:839, paragraph 39 and the case-law cited). Among those requirements, the obligation to state reasons for decisions adopted by the national authorities is particularly important, since it puts their addressee in a position to defend its rights and decide in full knowledge of the circumstances whether it is worthwhile to bring an action against those decisions. It is also necessary in order to enable the courts to review the legality of those decisions and it is therefore a requirement for ensuring that the judicial review guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter is effective (see, to that effect, judgments of 15 October 1987, Heylens and Others, 222/86, EU:C:1987:442, paragraph 15; of 9 November 2017, LS Customs Services, C-46/16, EU:C:2017:839, paragraph 40; and of 15 July 2021, Commission v Landesbank Baden-Württemberg and SRB, C-584/20 P and C-621/20 P, EU:C:2021:601, paragraph 103).

121 Furthermore, the principle of the protection of confidential information and of trade secrets must be observed in such a way as to reconcile it with the requirements of effective judicial protection and the rights of defence of the parties to the dispute (judgment of 14 February 2008, Varec, C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91, paragraphs 51 and 52 and the case-law cited).

122 In order to balance the prohibition laid down in Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 on the disclosure of confidential information communicated by economic operators with the general principle of EU law relating to good administration, from which the obligation to state reasons arises, a contracting authority must indicate clearly the reasons it considers that the requested information, or at least some of it, is confidential.

123 In addition, that balancing exercise must take account of the fact that, in the absence of sufficient information enabling it to ascertain whether the decision of the contracting authority to award the contract at issue to another operator is vitiated by errors or unlawfulness, an unsuccessful tenderer will not, in practice, be able to rely on its right, referred to in Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, to an effective review of that decision, whether in the context of a review before the contracting authority, in accordance with Article 1(5) of that directive, or judicial review. Accordingly, if that right is not to be infringed, the contracting authority must not only state the reasons for its decision to treat certain data as confidential but must also communicate in a neutral form – to the extent possible and in so far as such disclosure is capable of preserving the confidentiality of the specific elements of that data which merit protection on that basis – the essential content of that data to such a tenderer which requests it, and in particular the content of the data concerning the decisive aspects of its decision and of the successful tender.

124 The contracting authority's obligation to protect the information deemed confidential of the economic operator to which the public contract has been awarded cannot be given so broad an interpretation that the obligation to provide a statement of reasons is thereby deprived of its essence (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 July 2021, Commission v Landesbank Baden-Württemberg and SRB, C-584/20 P and C-621/20 P, EU:C:2021:601, paragraph 120) and Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, which sets out, in particular, the obligation for the Member States to provide effective review procedures, is rendered ineffective. To that end, the contracting authority may, inter alia and in so far as it is not precluded from doing so by the national law to which it is subject, communicate in summary form certain aspects of an application or tender and their technical characteristics, in such a way that the confidential information cannot be identified.

125 It should also be noted that, pursuant to Article 21(2) of Directive 2014/24, contracting authorities may impose on economic operators requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which the contracting authorities make available throughout the procurement procedure. Thus, assuming that the non-confidential information is adequate for that purpose, a contracting authority may also avail itself of that power in order to ensure that the unsuccessful tenderer's right to an effective review is respected, by requesting the successful tenderer to provide it with a non-confidential version of the documents containing confidential information.

126 Lastly, it should be noted that, in any event, before implementing a decision to disclose information which an economic operator claims to be confidential to one of its competitors, the contracting authority is required to inform the economic operator concerned of its decision in a timely manner, in order to enable that operator to request the contracting authority or the competent national court to adopt interim measures, such as those referred to in Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 89/665, and thus prevent irreparable damage to its interests.

– The scope of the competent national court's obligation to protect confidential information

127 As regards the obligations of the competent national court in the context of proceedings brought against a decision of the contracting authority to reject, in whole or in part, a request for access to information submitted by the successful tenderer, it should also be noted that Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, which is intended to protect economic operators against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority, is thus designed to reinforce the existence, in all Member States, of effective remedies, so as to ensure the effective application of the EU rules on public procurement, in particular at a stage when infringements can still be rectified (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 41 and the case-law cited).

128 Accordingly, it is up to the Member States to adopt detailed procedural rules governing the judicial remedies intended to safeguard the rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities in such a way as to ensure that neither the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 nor the rights conferred on individuals by EU law are undermined. In addition, as is clear from recital 36 thereof, Directive 2007/66, and therefore Directive 89/665 which it amended and supplemented, is intended to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, enshrined in the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter (see, to that effect, judgment 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraphs 42 to 46 and the case-law cited). Consequently, when they lay down the detailed procedural rules governing legal remedies, the Member States must ensure that that right is observed. Thus, despite the absence of rules of EU law on procedures for bringing actions before national courts, and in order to determine the rigour of judicial review of national decisions adopted pursuant to an act of EU law, it is necessary to take into account the purpose of the act and to ensure that its effectiveness is not undermined (judgment of 26 June 2019, Craeynest and Others, C-723/17, EU:C:2019:533, paragraphs 46 and the case-law cited).

129 However, in the context of a review of a decision taken by a contracting authority in relation to a public procurement procedure, the adversarial principle does not mean that the parties are entitled to unlimited and absolute access to all of the information relating to the procurement procedure concerned which has been filed with the body responsible for the review (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 February 2008, Varec, C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91, paragraph 51). On the contrary, as noted, in essence, in paragraph 121 above in relation to the obligations incumbent on contracting authorities in that regard, the obligation to provide the unsuccessful tenderer with sufficient information to safeguard its right to an effective remedy must be weighed against the right of other economic operators to protection of their confidential information and their trade secrets.

130 The competent national court must therefore ascertain, taking full account of both the need to safeguard the public interest in maintaining fair competition in public procurement procedures and the need to protect genuinely confidential information and in particular the trade secrets of participants in the procurement procedure, that the contracting authority rightly considered that the information which it refused to disclose to the applicant was confidential. To that end, the competent national court must carry out a full examination of all the relevant matters of fact and law. Accordingly, it must necessarily be able to have at its disposal the information required in order to decide in full knowledge of the facts, including confidential information and trade secrets (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 February 2008, Varec, C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91, paragraph 53).

131 Assuming that that court also concludes that the information in question is confidential, which precludes its disclosure to the competitors of the operator concerned, it must be borne in mind that, as the Court has already held, although the adversarial principle means, as a rule, that the parties to proceedings have a right to inspect and comment on the evidence and observations submitted to the court, in some cases it may be necessary for certain information to be withheld from the parties in order to preserve the fundamental rights of a third party or to safeguard an important public interest (judgment of 14 February 2008, Varec, C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91, paragraph 47).

132 The fundamental rights capable of being protected in this way include the right to respect for private life and communications, enshrined in Article 7 of the Charter, and the right to the protection of trade secrets, which the Court has acknowledged as a general principle of EU law (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 February 2008, Varec, C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91, paragraphs 48 and 49).

133 Accordingly, in view of the importance of protecting confidential information, highlighted in paragraphs 131 and 132 above, the entity responsible for a review procedure in relation to the award of a public contract must be able to decide, if necessary, that certain information in the file should not be communicated to the parties or their lawyers (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 February 2008, Varec, C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91, paragraph 43).

134 It should also be pointed out that, if the competent national court considers that the contracting authority decided correctly and with sufficient reasons that the requested information could not be disclosed because of its confidential nature, having regard to that contracting authority's obligations in respect of the principle of effective judicial protection, as set out in paragraphs 121 to 123 above, the conduct of that contracting authority in that regard cannot be criticised on the ground that it was excessively protective of the interests of the economic operator whose confidential information was requested.

135 The competent national court must also review the adequacy of the statement of reasons for the decision by which the contracting authority refused to disclose the confidential information or for the decision dismissing the application for administrative review of the prior refusal decision, in order to ensure, in accordance with the case-law referred to in paragraph 120 above, first, that the applicant is able to defend its rights and decide in full knowledge of the circumstances whether it is worthwhile to seek judicial review of that decision and, secondly, that the courts are able to review the legality of that decision. Furthermore, in view of the harm to an economic operator which could result from the improper disclosure of certain information to a competitor, it is for the competent national court to reconcile the applicant's right to an effective remedy, within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter, with that operator's right to the protection of confidential information.

136 Lastly, the competent national court must be able to annul the refusal decision or the decision dismissing the application for administrative review if they are unlawful and, where appropriate, refer the case back to the contracting authority, or itself adopt a new decision if it is permitted to do so under national law. In so far as the referring court asks, in the context of its ninth question, whether a court which has received a request for disclosure of confidential information must itself examine not only its relevance but also its effects on the legality of the procurement procedure, it is sufficient to point out that, in accordance with Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, it is for the Member States to determine the detailed rules governing the review procedures enabling decisions taken by contracting authorities to be challenged.

137 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the fourth, eighth and ninth questions is that:

– The fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) and (5) of Directive 89/665, and Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of the general principle of EU law relating to good administration, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority which is requested by an economic operator to disclose information deemed confidential contained in the tender of a competitor to which the contract has been awarded is not required to communicate that information where its disclosure would infringe the rules of EU law relating to the protection of confidential information, even if that request is made in the context of an action brought by that operator challenging the lawfulness of the contracting authority's assessment of the competitor's tender. Where it refuses to disclose such information or where, while refusing such disclosure, it dismisses the application for administrative review lodged by an economic operator concerning the lawfulness of the assessment of the tender of the competitor concerned, the contracting authority is required to balance the applicant's right to good administration with its competitor's right to protection of its confidential information in order that the refusal or dismissal decision is supported by a statement of reasons and the unsuccessful tenderer's right to an effective remedy is not rendered ineffective;

– the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) and (5) of Directive 89/665 and Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as meaning that the competent national court, hearing an action brought against a decision of a contracting authority refusing to disclose to an economic operator information deemed confidential in the documents submitted by the competitor to which the contract has been awarded or an action brought against the decision of a contracting authority dismissing an application for administrative review lodged against such a refusal decision, is required to weigh the applicant's right to an effective remedy against the competitor's right to protection of its confidential information and trade secrets. To that end, that court, which must necessarily have at its disposal the information required, including confidential information and trade secrets, in order to be able to determine, with full knowledge of the facts, whether that information can be disclosed, must examine all the relevant matters of fact and of law. It must also be able to annul the refusal decision or the decision dismissing the application for administrative review if they are unlawful and, where appropriate, refer the case back to the contracting authority, or itself adopt a new decision if it is permitted to do so under national law.

The tenth question

138 By its tenth question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that a national court, hearing a dispute between an economic operator excluded from the award of a contract and a contracting authority, may, first, depart from the latter's assessment of the lawfulness of the conduct of the economic operator to which the contract was awarded and, accordingly, draw all the necessary inferences in its decision and, secondly, raise of its own motion the issue of an error of assessment made by the contracting authority.

139 Under Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude any economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure in any of the situations referred to in that provision.

140 It should be noted at the outset, since the referring court expressly referred to the judgment of 3 October 2019, Delta Antrepriză de Construcţii şi Montaj 93 (C-267/18, EU:C:2019:826), in the wording of its tenth question, that that judgment relates to the powers of the contracting authority itself to carry out its own assessment under one of the non-compulsory grounds for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, and it is therefore not directly relevant in order to answer that question, which concerns the powers of a court hearing a dispute between an unsuccessful tenderer and a contracting authority.

141 In that regard, it is true that the Court noted, in paragraphs 28 and 34 of the judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca (C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507), that it follows from the wording of that provision that it is the contracting authority alone – and not, therefore, a national court – that has been entrusted with determining whether an economic operator must be excluded from a procurement procedure during the stage of selecting the tenderers.

142 However, that interpretation was made in view of the context of the case which gave rise to that judgment, in which the Court had to rule on a national provision under which the lodging of a legal challenge to a decision adopted by a contracting authority to terminate a public contract early on account of major deficiencies in the performance thereof prevented the contracting authority which issued a further call for tenders from conducting an assessment, at the stage of selecting tenderers, of the reliability of the operator concerned by that early termination (judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraph 42).

143 If the right to an effective remedy – as guaranteed, in relation to public procurement, by the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 and by Article 47 of the Charter – is not to be disregarded, a decision by which a contracting authority refuses, even implicitly, to exclude an economic operator from a procurement procedure on one of the non-compulsory grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must necessarily be capable of being challenged by any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a specific contract or having been or at risk of being harmed by a breach of that provision.

144 It follows that a national court may, in the context of a dispute between a candidate or a tenderer excluded from the award of a contract and a contracting authority, review the latter's assessment as to whether the conditions required for the application of one of the non-compulsory grounds for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 were satisfied with regard to the economic operator to which the contract was awarded and, consequently, depart from that assessment. Accordingly, depending on the case, that court may rule to that effect on the merits or remit the case to the contracting authority or the competent national court for that purpose.

145 That being said, EU law does not require national courts to raise of their own motion an issue concerning the breach of provisions of EU law where the examination of that issue would oblige them to overstep the bounds of the role assigned to them, inter alia by going beyond the ambit of the dispute defined by the parties themselves and relying on facts and circumstances other than those on which the party with an interest in the application of those provisions bases its claim (see, to that effect, judgments of 14 December 1995, van Schijndel and van Veen, C-430/93 and C-431/93, EU:C:1995:441, paragraphs 21 and 22, and of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice, C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034, paragraph 40).

146 The Court has consistently held that, in the absence of EU rules governing the matter, it is for each Member State, in accordance with the principle of the procedural autonomy of the Member States, to lay down the detailed rules of administrative and judicial procedures governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from EU law. Those detailed procedural rules must, however, be no less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions, in accordance with the principle of equivalence (judgment of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 46 and the case-law cited).

147 Accordingly, a national court may raise of its own motion an issue concerning the breach, by an economic operator, of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, only if it is permitted to do so under national law (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 December 1995, van Schijndel and van Veen, C-430/93 and C-431/93, EU:C:1995:441, paragraphs 13 and 14).

148 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the tenth question is that Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that a national court, hearing a dispute between an economic operator excluded from the award of a contract and a contracting authority, may depart from the latter's assessment of the lawfulness of the conduct of the economic operator to which the contract was awarded and, accordingly, draw all the necessary inferences in its decision. However, in accordance with the principle of equivalence, such a court may raise of its own motion the issue of an error of assessment made by the contracting authority only if permitted to do so under national law.

The eleventh question

149 By its eleventh question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the second subparagraph of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 57(4) and (6) of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which, where an economic operator which is a member of a group of economic operators has been found guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification, as regards that group, of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, without the other members of that group having been aware of that misrepresentation, all of the members of that group may be excluded from participation in any public procurement procedure.

150 In that regard, it must be noted that the first subparagraph of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 provides for the right of an economic operator to rely, for a particular contract, on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them, with a view to satisfying both the criteria relating to economic and financial standing set out in Article 58(3) of that directive and the criteria relating to technical and professional capacities referred to in Article 58(4) of that directive (judgment of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

151 An economic operator intending to invoke that right must, pursuant to the second and third subparagraphs of Article 59(1) of Directive 2014/24, send a European Single Procurement Document (ESPD) to the contracting authority when submitting its request to participate or its tender, stating that both itself and the entities on whose capacities it intends to rely are not in one of the situations referred to in Article 57 of that directive, which must or may lead to an economic operator's exclusion, and/or that the selection criterion concerned is fulfilled.

152 It is then for the contracting authority, pursuant to the second subparagraph of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24, to determine, inter alia, whether there are grounds for exclusion, as referred to in Article 57 of that directive, in respect of that economic operator itself or one of those entities. If so, the contracting authority may require, or may be obliged by its Member State to require, that the economic operator concerned replace an entity on whose capacities it intends to rely, but in respect of which there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.

153 It must however be noted that, even before requiring a tenderer to replace an entity on whose capacities it intends to rely, on the ground that it is in one of the situations referred to in Article 57(1) and (4) of Directive 2014/24, Article 63 of that directive presupposes that the contracting authority will give that tenderer and/or that entity the opportunity to submit to it corrective measures which it may have adopted in order to remedy the irregularity found and, consequently, to demonstrate that it may once again be considered a reliable entity (see, to that effect, judgments of 3 October 2019, Delta Antrepriză de Construcţii şi Montaj 93, C-267/18, EU:C:2019:826, paragraph 37, and of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 36).

154 That interpretation of the second subparagraph of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 ensures the effectiveness of the first subparagraph of Article 57(6) of that directive, which guarantees, as a matter of principle, the right of any economic operator in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 of Article 57 to provide evidence that the measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion (see, to that effect, judgment of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 35).

155 That interpretation also helps to ensure that contracting authorities comply with the principle of proportionality, in accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of that directive. It follows from that principle, which is a general principle of EU law, that the rules laid down by the Member States or the contracting authorities in implementing the provisions of that directive must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of that directive (see, to that effect, judgments of 16 December 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 48, and of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 45).

156 In that regard, it must be borne in mind that, when applying non-compulsory grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities must pay particular attention to that principle. That attention must be even greater in the case where the exclusion provided for by national legislation is imposed on the tenderer not for a failure attributable to it, but for a failure on the part of an entity on whose capacities the tenderer intends to rely and over which it has no control (see, to that effect, judgments of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 48, and of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 39).

157 The principle of proportionality requires the contracting authority to carry out a specific and individual assessment of the conduct of the entity concerned. On that basis, the contracting authority must have regard to the means available to the tenderer for establishing whether there was a failure on the part of the entity on whose capacities it intended to rely (judgment of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 40).

158 Consequently, the answer to the eleventh question is that the second subparagraph of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 57(4) and (6) of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which, where an economic operator which is a member of a group of economic operators has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification, as regards that group, of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, without the other members of that group having been aware of that misrepresentation, all of the members of that group may be excluded from participation in any public procurement procedure.

Costs

159 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 58 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that the obligation on economic operators to demonstrate that they have a certain average annual turnover in the area covered by the public contract at issue constitutes a selection criterion relating to the economic and financial standing of those operators, within the meaning of paragraph 3 of that provision.

2. Article 58(3) in conjunction with Article 60(3) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that, where the contracting authority has required that economic operators have achieved a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the public contract in question, an economic operator may, in order to prove its economic and financial standing, rely on income received by a temporary group of undertakings to which it belonged only if it actually contributed, in the context of a specific public contract, to the performance of an activity of that group analogous to the activity which is the subject matter of the public contract for which that operator seeks to prove its economic and financial standing.

3. Article 58(4), Article 42 and Article 70 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that they can apply simultaneously to a technical requirement set out in a call for tenders.

4. The fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1), Article 1(3) and (5) and Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, must be interpreted as meaning that a decision of a contracting authority refusing to disclose to an economic operator the information deemed confidential in the application file or in the tender of another economic operator is a measure amenable to review and that, where the Member State in which the public procurement procedure in question takes place has provided that any person wishing to challenge decisions taken by the contracting authority is required to seek administrative review before bringing an action before the courts, that Member State may also provide that judicial proceedings against that decision refusing access have to be preceded by such a prior administrative review procedure.

5. The fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) and (5) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2014/23, and Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of the general principle of EU law relating to good administration, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority, when requested by an economic operator to disclose information deemed confidential contained in the tender of a competitor to which the contract has been awarded, is not required to communicate that information where its disclosure would infringe the rules of EU law relating to the protection of confidential information, even if that request is made in the context of an action brought by that operator challenging the lawfulness of the contracting authority's assessment of the competitor's tender. Where it refuses to disclose such information or where, while refusing such disclosure, it dismisses the application for administrative review lodged by an economic operator concerning the lawfulness of the assessment of the tender of the competitor concerned, the contracting authority is required to balance the applicant's right to good administration with its competitor's right to protection of its confidential information in order that the refusal or dismissal decision is supported by a statement of reasons and the unsuccessful tenderer's right to an effective remedy is not rendered ineffective.

6. The fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) and (5) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2014/23, and Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, must be interpreted as meaning that the competent national court, hearing an action brought against a decision of a contracting authority refusing to disclose to an economic operator information deemed confidential in the documents submitted by the competitor to which the contract has been awarded or an action brought against the decision of a contracting authority dismissing an application for administrative review lodged against such a decision, is required to weigh the applicant's right to an effective remedy against its competitor's right to protection of its confidential information and trade secrets. To that end, that court, which must necessarily have at its disposal the information required, including confidential information and trade secrets, in order to be able to determine, with full knowledge of the facts, whether that information can be disclosed, must examine all the relevant matters of fact and of law. It must also be able to annul the refusal decision or the decision dismissing the application for administrative review if they are unlawful and, where appropriate, refer the case back to the contracting authority, or itself adopt a new decision if it is permitted to do so under national law.

7. Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that a national court, hearing a dispute between an economic operator excluded from the award of a contract and a contracting authority, may depart from the latter's assessment of the lawfulness of the conduct of the economic operator to which the contract was awarded and, accordingly, draw all the necessary inferences in its decision. However, in accordance with the principle of equivalence, such a court may raise of its own motion the issue of an error of assessment made by the contracting authority only if permitted to do so under national law.

8. Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 57(4) and (6) of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which, where an economic operator which is a member of a group of economic operators has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification, as regards that group, of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, without the other members of that group having been aware of that misrepresentation, all of the members of that group may be excluded from participation in any public procurement procedure.

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 2014/24/EU – Articles 21, 50 and 55 – Confidentiality – Competence of the contracting authority – Directive (EU) 2016/943 – Applicability – Directive 89/665/EEC – Articles 1 and 2 – Effects of the application for review of the declaration of confidentiality – Statement of reasons – Independent application for review to the contracting authority – Judicial review – Scope of the court's powers)

1. Documentation provided to contracting authorities in a public procurement procedure may include trade secrets and other confidential information, the disclosure of which would be detrimental to the holders thereof.

2. Such circumstances bring together two sets of opposing interests:

– On the one hand, those of the tenderer who, in tendering for a public contract, does not waive his or her right to have confidential information protected in such a way as to prevent others from taking unfair advantage of business endeavours of others.

– On the other hand, those of tenderers who, in the exercise of their right to challenge the decisions of the contracting authority, seek access, in order to substantiate their application for review, to certain information which the successful tenderer has submitted and regards as confidential.

3. The conflict between those interests is the basis for this reference for a preliminary ruling, in which the referring court seeks an interpretation of Directives 89/665/EEC, (2) 2014/24/EU (3) and (EU) 2016/943. (4)

I. Legal framework

A. EU law

1. Directive 2014/24

4. Article 18 (‘Principles of procurement’) states:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

5. Article 21 (‘Confidentiality’) provides:

‘1. Unless otherwise provided in this Directive or in the national law to which the contracting authority is subject, in particular legislation concerning access to information, and without prejudice to the obligations relating to the advertising of awarded contracts and to the information to candidates and tenderers set out in Articles 50 and 55, the contracting authority shall not disclose information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential, including, but not limited to, technical or trade secrets and the confidential aspects of tenders.

2. Contracting authorities may impose on economic operators requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which the contracting authorities make available throughout the procurement procedure.’

6. Article 50 (‘Contract award notices’) provides:

‘… Certain information on the contract award or the conclusion of the framework agreement may be withheld from publication where its release would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would harm the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators.’

7. Article 55 (‘Informing candidates and tenderers’) states:

‘3. Contracting authorities may decide to withhold certain information referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2, regarding contract award, the conclusion of framework agreements or admittance to a dynamic purchasing system, where the release of such information would impede law enforcement or would otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, whether public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators.’

2. Directive 89/665

8. According to Article 1 (‘Scope and availability of review procedures’): (5)

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 37 of that Directive.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24/EU or Directive 2014/23/EU, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

4. Member States may require that the person wishing to use a review procedure has notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review, provided that this does not affect the standstill period in accordance with Article 2a(2) or any other time limits for applying for review in accordance with Article 2c.

5. Member States may require that the person concerned first seek review with the contracting authority. In that case, Member States shall ensure that the submission of such an application for review results in immediate suspension of the possibility to conclude the contract.

9. Article 2 (‘Requirements for review procedures’) provides:

‘1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

…’

10. Recital 18 states:

‘… In particular, this Directive should not release public authorities from the confidentiality obligations to which they are subject in respect of information passed on by trade secret holders, irrespective of whether those obligations are laid down in Union or national law. Such confidentiality obligations include, inter alia, the obligations in respect of information forwarded to contracting authorities in the context of procurement procedures, as laid down, for example, in Directive 2014/24/EU …’

11. Article 1 (‘Subject matter and scope’) states:

‘2. This Directive shall not affect:

(b) the application of Union or national rules requiring trade secret holders to disclose, for reasons of public interest, information including trade secrets, to the public or to administrative or judicial authorities for the performance of the duties of those authorities;

(c) the application of Union or national rules requiring or allowing Union institutions and bodies or national public authorities to disclose information submitted by businesses which those institutions, bodies or authorities hold pursuant to, and in compliance with, the obligations and prerogatives set out in Union or national law;

B. Lithuanian law

1. Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law on public procurement of the Republic of Lithuania; ‘the LCP’)

12. Article 20 states:

‘1. The contracting authority, the award committee, its members and experts, and any other person shall be prohibited from disclosing to third parties information which suppliers have provided in confidence.

2. The supplier's tender or request to participate may not be classified as confidential in its entirety, but the supplier may indicate that some information presented in his tender is confidential. Confidential information may include, inter alia, trade (manufacturing) secrets and confidential aspects of the tender. Information cannot be classified as confidential:

(1) if it infringes the legal provisions establishing the obligation to disclose or the right to acquire information, and the regulations implementing those legal provisions;

(2) if it constitutes an infringement of the obligations laid down in Articles 33 and 58 of this Law in connection with the publication of concluded contracts, the provision of information to candidates and tenderers, including information on the price of goods, services or works which is mentioned in the call for tenders, with the exception of the constituent elements of such tenders;

(3) where that information has been presented in documents certifying that the supplier is not subject to any grounds for exclusion and fulfils the capacity requirements and the standards for quality management and environmental protection, with the exception of information the disclosure of which would infringe the provisions of the law of the Republic of Lithuania on the protection of personal data or the supplier's obligations under contracts concluded with third parties;

(4) where that information relates to economic operators and subcontractors on whose capacity the supplier draws, with the exception of information the disclosure of which would infringe the provisions of the law on the protection of personal data.

3. Where the contracting authority has doubts about the confidential nature of the information contained in the supplier's tender, it must ask the supplier to demonstrate why the information in question is confidential. …

4. Not later than six months after the date on which the contract was concluded, the tenderers concerned may ask the contracting authority to grant them access to the successful tenderer's tender or request (just as candidates may ask it for access to requests made by other suppliers who have been invited to submit a tender or participate in a dialogue), but no information may be disclosed which candidates or tenderers have classified as confidential without infringing paragraph 2 of this article.'

13. Article 58 states:

'3. In the cases referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article, the contracting authority may not disclose information the disclosure of which would infringe the rules on the provision of information and protection of data or otherwise be contrary to the general interest, would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of a particular supplier or would adversely affect competition between suppliers.'

2. Lietuvos Respublikos civilinio proceso kodeksas (Code of Civil Procedure of the Republic of Lithuania)

14. Article 10^1 provides:

'2. Where there are grounds for considering that a trade secret may be disclosed, the court, at the duly reasoned request of the parties or of its own motion, shall, by reasoned order, name the persons who may:

(1) have access to those parts of the file that contain information which constitutes or may constitute a trade secret, and make and obtain extracts, duplicates and copies (digital copies);

(2) take part in hearings in camera in which information which constitutes or may constitute a trade secret may be disclosed, and have access to the records of those hearings;

(3) obtain a certified copy (digital copy) of a judgment or order containing information which constitutes or may constitute a trade secret.

4. In applying the restrictions laid down in paragraph 2 of this article, the court shall take into account the need to guarantee the right to judicial protection and the right to a fair trial, the legitimate interests of the parties and of the other persons taking part in the proceedings and the harm that may be caused by applying or not applying those restrictions.'

II. Facts, dispute and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

15. On 27 September 2018, UAB Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras ('the contracting authority') published a calls for tenders for the award of a public contract for the provision of services relating to the collection of municipal waste in the municipality of Neringa (Lithuania) and the transportation of that waste to treatment facilities in the region of Klaipėda (Lithuania). (6)

16. On 29 November 2018, that contract was awarded to the grouping of economic operators made up of UAB Klaipėdos autobusų parkas, UAB Parsekas and UAB Klaipėdos transportas ('the Consortium'). UAB Ecoservice Klaipėda ('Ecoservice') was ranked second.

17. On 4 December 2018, Ecoservice asked for the contracting authority's permission to access the information contained in the Consortium's tender. On 6 December 2018, it was provided with the non-confidential information in that tender.

18. On 10 December 2018, Ecoservice filed an application for review of the final outcome of that procedure with the contracting authority on the ground that the Consortium did not meet the requirements of the call for tenders. (7) The contracting authority dismissed that application on 17 December 2018.

19. On 27 December 2018, Ecoservice brought an action against the contracting authority's decision before the Klaipėdos apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Klaipėda, Lithuania). Along with its application, it submitted a requested for access to all of the information contained in the Consortium's tender, as well as the correspondence exchanged between the latter and the contracting authority.

20. After hearing the contracting authority, which opposed Ecoservice's request, on 15 January 2019, the court of first instance ordered that authority to make available all of the documents requested, with the exception of the correspondence with the Consortium.

21. On 25 January 2019, the contracting authority provided the information, both confidential and non-confidential, contained in the Consortium's tender. It requested that Ecoservice be denied access to the confidential information, which was upheld by the court of first instance.

22. By two subsequent requests, Ecoservice applied to that court for access to: (a) the tender information which had been classified as confidential; and (b) details of the waste management contracts concluded by one of the bodies comprising the Consortium. The court of first instance denied both requests, in each case by unappealable order.

23. By judgment of 15 March 2019, the court of first instance held that the Consortium satisfied the requirements governing the supplier's classification [regarding confidentiality] and dismissed Ecoservice's action.

24. Ecoservice brought an appeal against the judgment of the court of first instance to the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal, Lithuania), which, on 30 May 2019, set aside that judgment, annulled the contracting authority's decision and ordered the tenders be re-evaluated.

25. The contracting authority lodged with the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) an appeal in cassation confined to challenging the appeal court's assessment of the Consortium's technical (in)capacity. (8)

26. On 26 July 2019, Ecoservice, before responding to the appeal in cassation, requested access to the confidential documents submitted by the Consortium to the court of first instance, ‘which contained highly commercially sensitive information which had been concealed’.

27. It was in those circumstances that the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) referred, inter alia, the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

‘(4) Are the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, which lays down the principle of the effectiveness of review procedures, Article 1(3) and (5) thereof, Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 and Directive 2016/943, in particular recital 18 and the third subparagraph of Article 9(2) thereof (together or separately, but without limitation thereto), to be interpreted as meaning that, where a binding pre-litigation dispute settlement procedure is laid down in the national legal rules governing public procurement:

(a) the contracting authority has to provide to the supplier who initiated the review procedure all information regarding another supplier’s tender (regardless of their confidential nature), if the subject matter of that procedure is specifically the lawfulness of the evaluation of that tender and the supplier which initiated the procedure had explicitly requested the contracting authority prior thereto to disclose that information;

(b) irrespective of the answer to the previous question, the contracting authority, when rejecting the claim submitted by a supplier regarding the lawfulness of the evaluation of his competitor’s tender, must in any event give a clear, comprehensive and specific reply, regardless of the risk of disclosing confidential tender information entrusted to it?

(5) Are the third subparagraph of Article 1(1), Article 1(3) and (5) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665, Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 and Directive 2016/943, in particular recital 18 thereof (together or separately, but without limitation thereto), to be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority’s decision not to grant a supplier access to the confidential details of another participant’s tender is a decision which may be challenged separately before the courts?

(6) If the answer to the previous question is in the affirmative, is Article 1(5) of Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as meaning that the supplier must file a claim with the contracting authority in respect of such a decision by it and, if need be, bring an action before the court?

(7) If the answer to the previous question is in the affirmative, are the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as meaning that, depending on the extent of the information available on the content of the other supplier’s tender, the supplier may bring an action before the courts concerning exclusively the refusal to provide information to him, without separately calling the lawfulness of other decisions of the contracting authority into question?

(8) Irrespective of the answers to the previous questions, is the third subparagraph of Article 9(2) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted as meaning that the court, having received the applicant’s request that the other party to the dispute be ordered to produce evidence and that the court make it available to the applicant, must grant such a request regardless of the actions on the part of the contracting authority during the procurement or review procedures?

(9) Is the third subparagraph of Article 9(2) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted as meaning that, after rejecting the applicant’s request for disclosure of confidential information of the other party to the dispute, the court should of its own motion assess the significance of the data whose loss of confidentiality is requested and the data’s effects on the lawfulness of the public procurement procedure?’

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice

28. The request for a preliminary ruling was received at the Court on 18 December 2019.

29. Written observations have been lodged by Klaipėdos autobusų parkas, (9) Ecoservice, the Republic of Austria, the Republic of Lithuania and the European Commission.

30. The parties replied in writing to the questions put to them by the Court, in replacement of the hearing.

IV. Assessment

A. Preliminary observations

31. At the Court's request, I shall confine myself to an analysis of the fourth to ninth questions referred for a preliminary ruling. These can be grouped, by subject matter, into three sets:

– In the fourth question, the referring court expresses uncertainty as to the scope of the contracting authority's obligation to maintain the secrecy of the information that a tenderer designates as confidential when adjudicating on an application for review made by another tenderer wishing to access that information.

– In the fifth to seventh questions, the uncertainty has to do with an action before the courts to challenge a contracting authority's decision refusing to grant an operator access to confidential information provided by another operator.

– Finally, the eighth and ninth questions concern the power of the court to disclose confidential information in its possession and, where appropriate, to examine of its own motion the legality of the award.

32. I shall look in the first place at the interpretation of Directives 2014/24 and 2016/943 with respect to the handling of confidential information. I shall then set out my reply to the questions referred, which will include references to Directive 89/665.

B. Protection of confidential information provided in a public procurement procedure

33. According to the Court, 'the principal objective of the Community rules in that field is the opening-up of public procurement to undistorted competition in all the Member States. … In order to attain that objective, it is important that the contracting authorities do not release information relating to contract award procedures which could be used to distort competition'. (10)

34. Directive 2014/24 brings together several rules relating to the publication of information held by the contracting authority. These include (11) Article 21, which, in principle, (12) prohibits the disclosure of 'information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential, including, but not limited to, technical or trade secrets and the confidential aspects of tenders'.

35. In the light of the arguments put forward by the parties, it is necessary to define what type of confidential information is to be protected by the contracting authority (and the bodies that review its decisions), according to Directive 2014/24. Later, I shall assess the impact of Directive 2016/943 on public procurement procedures.

1. Confidential information under Directive 2014/24

36. A literal and isolated interpretation of Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 would support the inference that confidential information is, quite simply, that which an economic operator designates as such. Protected information would thus in all circumstances mean information which economic operators 'have designated as confidential'.

37. If that interpretative criterion were to be applied, access to any (13) information not authorised [to be released] by the operator that made it available to the contracting authority, whatever its content, would automatically be blocked which is to say that that information could not be disclosed.

38. Such a broad interpretation cannot be accepted. Indeed, Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 mentions as examples of information which may be classified as confidential 'technical or trade secrets and the confidential aspects of tenders'. Thus, it indicates that the classification of information as confidential rests on an objective basis rather than on the subjective will of the person providing the information.

39. That proposition is borne out, from a schematic point of view, by other provisions of Directive 2014/24 (in particular Article 50(4) and Article 55(3)). In accordance with those provisions, disclosure of information is to be refused where this would harm 'the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, public or private'. Once again, it is objective rather than subjective factors that take precedence.

40. I therefore take the view that Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, read in context, does not entrust to the economic operator alone the task of specifying, at its discretion, which information is to be classified as confidential. Any reasoned request to that effect – essential if the economic operator wishes to restrict publication of the data which it is itself providing – is subject to the subsequent decision of the contracting authority (and, where appropriate, to the decision of the body reviewing that authority's decisions).

41. The purpose of that provision leads to the same conclusion. If that provision, in common with the rest of Directive 2014/24, is intended to avoid distortions of competition, (14) it stands to reason that the power to determine which risks to competition would flow from disclosing allegedly confidential information should be conferred on the contracting authority – rather than unilaterally on the operator concerned. Its duty of impartiality and objectivity in dealings with the various tenderers makes the contracting authority ideally suited to making that judgment.

42. Moreover, in that way, the contracting authority can ensure that all economic operators are treated 'equally and without discrimination', in accordance with the guiding principles of public procurement.

2. Application of Directive 2016/943

43. The referring court seeks an interpretation of Article 9 of Directive 2016/943 in conjunction with recital 18 thereof because the test for granting access to certain information is, according to that court, whether it constitutes a trade secret. (15)

44. I should point out, however, that, in accordance with Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, the benefit of protection is not confined to 'trade secrets' but also extends to, inter alia, 'the confidential aspects of tenders'. That provision may therefore cover information that cannot strictly be classified as a trade secret, since those two concepts are not equivalent.

45. In any event, Directive 2016/943, the purpose of which is to protect 'undisclosed know-how and business information (trade secrets) against their unlawful acquisition, use and disclosure', provides for a situation contrary to that in the present case. The latter is concerned with the non-disclosure of certain confidential information that the contracting authority refuses to communicate to the operator requesting it.

46. I therefore concur with the Commission (16) that Article 9 of Directive 2016/943 is not applicable to the present case, since that provision concerns judicial proceedings relating to the unlawful acquisition, use and disclosure of a trade secret. (17)

47. Furthermore, Directive 2014/24 is the lex specialis governing the disclosure of information provided by economic operators in the context of a public call for tenders.

48. Recital 18 of Directive 2016/943 is evidence of that when it refers to the obligations on the public authorities to maintain the confidentiality of 'information forwarded to contracting authorities in the context of procurement procedures, as laid down, for example, in Directive 2014/24 …'.

49. It is therefore Directive 2016/943 itself which subjects the treatment of the rules on the protection of confidential information in this field to the regime laid down in Directive 2014/24. If, in the legitimate exercise of its powers, a contracting authority discloses such information, in a manner permitted by Directive 2014/24, this constitutes one of the cases in which Directive 2016/943 is not applicable, as provided for in Article 1(2) and Article 3(2) thereof.

50. The answers to the questions raised by the referring court in connection with the protection of confidentiality must therefore be based on the interpretation of Directive 2014/24. Since its subject matter is related, Directive 2016/943 may be used as a supporting text, but not a primary text.

C. Fourth question

51. By this question, the referring court wishes to ascertain:

– In the first place (point (a)), whether the contracting authority must supply to a tenderer challenging the evaluation of tenders all of the information contained in the tender submitted by the successful tenderer, in the case where the applicant for review has previously requested that information from the contacting authority itself.

– In the second place (point (b)), whether, if the application for review is dismissed, the contracting authority must 'give a clear, comprehensive and specific reply', even at the risk of disclosing confidential tender information which has been entrusted to it.

52. The referring court explains that national law establishes a 'binding ex ante administrative dispute settlement procedure' in respect of which the contracting authority itself is the adjudicator.

1. Point (a)

53. It falls to the contracting authority, as I have already said, to determine which information supplied by the tenderer, which the latter has designated as being confidential, really are confidential. It is that same power which enables the competent authority, at the stage of the application for review, to examine the actions of the contracting authority.

54. The safeguard for confidential information and trade secrets must be applied in such a way as to reconcile it 'with the requirements of effective legal protection and the rights of defence of the parties to the dispute … in such a way as to ensure that the proceedings as a whole accord with the right to a fair trial'. (18)

55. It is implicit in the need to maintain that balance that a request [for the disclosure of confidential information] made to, or the filing of an application for review with, the contracting authority does not require that authority automatically to supply to the applicant for review all of the information contained in the successful tenderer's tender. (19) Neither does it require that authority systematically to refuse to supply that information. (20) The contracting authority must adopt its decision in the light of the grounds for the request - or, where appropriate, the application for review - and the nature of the information requested.

56. As I have said, the contracting authority exercises its powers whether it is responding to a reasoned request for the disclosure of confidential information or adjudicating on an application for review (within the meaning of Article 1(5) of Directive 89/665) (21) of the decision to permit or refuse such disclosure or the decision to award the contract following the evaluation of tenders.

57. Point (a) of the fourth question raised by the referring court concerns the role played by the contracting authority in 'a review procedure'. It falls to the contracting authority, when adjudicating on such a procedure, to strike a balance between the protection of confidentiality and right to an effective remedy within the meaning of Directive 89/665.

58. Consequently, the contracting authority must evaluate the interests and reasons of the person requesting the disclosure of confidential information (provided by a competitor in the call for tenders) and compare them with the need to safeguard the confidentiality of that information. Where appropriate, it may ask the economic operator concerned to explain why the classification of certain information as confidential should be maintained in full or in part.

59. The contracting authority's response to such an application for review, even if this challenges the 'legality of the evaluation of that tender', must include the reasons for its decision. As I have already explained, that response does not necessarily have to be to provide the applicant for review with 'all' of the information contained in another tenderer's tender. To the contrary, that will depend on whether the contracting authority considers, in whole or in part, that maintaining the confidentiality of the information made available to it is justified.

2. Point (b)

60. The referring court wishes to ascertain whether, when dismissing a claim brought by a tenderer challenging the outcome of an evaluation, the contracting authority must give a 'clear, comprehensive and specific reply, regardless of the risk of disclosing confidential tender information entrusted to it'.

61. The answer to that question may be inferred from the answer given to point (a) of the same question.

62. When substantiating a decision dismissing an application for review submitted to it, the contracting authority must respect the rights of both the applicant for review and the other party (the successful tenderer, whose information the applicant for review is seeking to have disclosed). It must set out the reasons for its course of action, thus facilitating any subsequent review of its acts.

63. While the contracting authority's decision does have to be 'clear and specific', it does not necessarily and automatically have to contain all the confidential data supplied in the tender. That would be the case only if, after balancing the interests involved (22) as it must, the contracting authority decides that some interests take precedence over others.

D. Fifth, sixth and seventh questions

64. Of these three questions, which must be addressed together, the fifth refers to whether the contracting authority's decision not to grant access to confidential information may be 'challenged separately'. The sixth and seventh questions seem to start from that very assumption.

65. In actual fact, it is not clear from the order for reference (23) that Ecoservice did launch such a separate (or independent) challenge when the contracting authority decided to send it only the non-confidential information contained in the Consortium's tender. (24)

66. It follows from the account of the facts set out in that order that the action taken by Ecoservice was to ask both the contracting authority and, subsequently, the court of first instance (in the latter case, at the same time as bringing its action) to order the full disclosure of the information provided by the Consortium. Therefore, it is doubtful whether that request may be classified as an independent application for review within the meaning indicated above.

67. However, that fact does not necessarily render inadmissible the fifth, sixth and seventh questions, which benefit from the presumption of relevance which the Court confers on requests for a preliminary ruling.

68. Those questions could be held to be admissible if the referring court takes the view that Ecoservice had, or could or should have, challenged the decision not to provide it with the information requested separately before the contracting authority and the court of first instance.

69. That being the basis of those questions:

- The fifth question asks whether the contracting authority's decision not to disclose confidential information may be challenged separately before the courts.
- The sixth, on the assumption that the foregoing remedy is available, asks whether the operator 'must file a claim with the contracting authority' in order to challenge the latter's decision to turn down its request for access to confidential information.
- Finally, the seventh asks, if the answers to the previous questions are in the affirmative, whether the operator may 'bring an action before the courts concerning exclusively the refusal to provide [the] information' requested.

70. The answer to those questions must be based on the general provision in the last subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665. The review to which it refers extends to all decisions by the contracting authority which apply EU law in that field. (25)

71. Decisions by the contracting authority which are open to review in this way include, of course, those that award a contract by selecting one of the tenders, but also others of a different kind (for example, those adopting or dismissing provisional measures) which have a bearing on the legal position of the parties concerned. (26)

72. One of the decisions in which the contracting authority applies EU law (in particular, Article 21 of Directive 2014/24), and thus renders it open to potential review, is the decision whether to designate certain information as confidential and not allow its disclosure, or to authorise its full or partial disclosure.

73. Directive 89/665 has not 'formally laid down the time from which the possibility of review, as provided for in Article 1(1), must be open'. (27) The Court's position is that it must be ensured that decisions by contracting authorities can be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as quickly as possible.

74. The EU legislature has entrusted to the Member States the task of laying down the 'detailed rules' of the procedures for reviewing decisions by contracting authorities (Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665). (28)

75. The Member States also have the option, within the margins made available by Article 2 of Directive 89/665, to entrust those reviews either to the courts in the strict sense of that term or to other bodies. (29) It follows from the order for reference, however, that, in Lithuania, reviews of decisions adopted by a contracting authority, including its decision in the pre-litigation dispute settlement procedure, are conducted by the courts.

76. It is therefore open to Member States, in principle, to legislate on applications for review of decisions adopted by a contracting authority by providing that they are to be made either jointly or separately (with/from the main challenge). Directive 89/665 neither prescribes nor excludes either of those mechanisms.

77. If Member States, availing themselves of their procedural autonomy, choose to prescribe a joint challenge, they must do so without contravening the purposes of Directive 89/665 in relation to the required effectiveness and speed. They must, in addition, take into consideration:

– That the Directive 'does not authorise Member States to make the exercise of the right to apply for review conditional on the fact that the public procurement procedure in question has formally reached a particular stage'. (30)

– That, depending on its characteristics, national legislation which 'requires, in all cases, a tenderer to wait for a decision awarding the contract in question before it may apply for a review of a decision allowing another tenderer to participate in that …procurement procedure infringes the provisions of Directive 89/665'. (31)

78. The objectives of speed and effectiveness are more easily attained through the 'separate challenge' mechanisms to which the referring court refers. A review of this kind not only satisfies the requirement of speed but is also able to do so at the same time as meeting the need for effectiveness, inasmuch as it allows the (principal) challenge to the substantive decision (that is to say, the award) to be brought once the party in question has the information necessary to enable it to mount an effective defence of its rights. (32)

79. One might raise the objection that independent reviews entail a risk of delay to the conclusion of the contractor selection process. In the view of the Court, that objection is countered by the '… justification of reasonable time limits for applying for review of decisions which may be challenged and not the barring of an independent review'. (33)

80. In principle, therefore, since an independent challenge is consistent with Directive 89/665, there is no reason why national law should not allow it.

81. If, on the other hand, national law were to require that an application for review of the decision on confidentiality should be made jointly with the application for review of the decision awarding the contract, the court would have to assess whether that requirement preserves the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 to the same extent from the point of view of the speed and efficacy of such a challenge mechanism.

82. The procedural autonomy of the Member States also extends to the – optional – introduction of a pre-litigation application for review to the contracting authority. Article 1(5) of Directive 89/665 does not preclude national legislation from 'requir[ing] the person concerned to apply for review in the first place to the contracting authority'.

83. Article 2 of Directive 89/665 sets out the requirements governing the review procedures provided for in Article 1, whether such a procedure entails an application for review made initially to the contracting authority, or an application made subsequently to a review body (in this case, of a judicial nature).

84. In the light of those considerations, I take the view that Directive 89/665 does not prevent:

– A party from bringing a separate challenge, before the courts, against the contracting authority's decision not to disclose the confidential information provided in a participant's tender in the tendering procedure.

– National legislation from requiring the person concerned to apply in the first place to the contracting authority for review of the latter's decision turning down its request for access to confidential information.

– The person concerned from bringing an action before the courts exclusively in connection with the refusal to provide it with the information requested.

E. Eighth and ninth questions

85. These questions concern the interpretation of the third subparagraph of Article 9(2) of Directive 2016/943. It is my view, however, as I said earlier, that Directive 2016/943 is not directly applicable in the present case.

86. Nevertheless, Directive 89/665 provides a basis for giving a useful answer to the referring court.

87. Both questions concern the process to be followed by the court called upon to settle the dispute in terms of: (a) having regard to the contracting authority's prior actions (eighth question); and (b) assessing of its own motion the data the disclosure of which is sought (ninth question). (34)

88. It is for to the contracting authority to decide whether it is appropriate to disclose the confidential information provided by a tenderer in its tender. That decision (or the later decision by which the contracting authority itself confirms the earlier one in the course of adjudicating on an application for review under national law) is open to review in the manner laid down in Article 2 of Directive 89/665.

89. If, as in the present case, that review is to be made by a court, the latter must be able to conduct a full examination of the contracting authority's decisions. It may therefore annul them, in full or in part, if it considers that they are unlawful.

90. Where one of the contracting authority's decisions which it must subject to judicial review is the refusal to disclose certain information accompanying a tender, the reviewing court may declare that refusal to be either justified or unfounded.

91. Before formulating its judgment, whatever that may be, that court must 'have regard to the actions by the contracting authority during the procurement or review procedures', to use the form of words contained in the order for reference.

92. Of course, that does not mean that the reviewing court is bound by the contracting authority's actions the lawfulness of which forms the subject of its examination. To deny the court the power to correct and, where appropriate, to annul the contracting authority's decisions would be to confer on purely administrative acts adopted by that authority a force equivalent to the force of res judicata, in breach of the right to judicial protection and of the system of guarantees provided for in Directive 89/665.

93. The refusal to provide the information requested on the ground that it cannot be disclosed does not, however, prevent the reviewing court from analysing 'the importance of the data the disclosure of which is requested’.

94. That analysis will allow it to access to the full file, including confidential information. The Court has already held in that regard that ‘the body responsible for the review must necessarily be able to have at its disposal the information required in order to decide in full knowledge of the facts, including confidential information and business secrets’. (35)

95. Whether that assessment can be conducted by the reviewing body of its own motion or only at the request of one of the parties is, once again, something which will depend on the powers which the domestic legislation confers on each of the bodies competent in the context of judicial review procedures.

F. Conclusion

96. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the answers to the fourth to ninth questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) should be as follows:

(1) Articles 21, 50 and 55 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC do not necessarily require the contracting authority to provide to a participant in a procurement procedure who is challenging before that authority the latter’s evaluation of tenders all of the information contained in the tender submitted by the selected tenderer.

When adjudicating on an application for review of the decision evaluating tenders, the contracting authority must substantiate its response by expressing the reasons for its decision, so that this may be effectively challenged before a review body. The duty to state reasons does not in itself entail a requirement to disclose the confidential information that has been entrusted to that authority, in the case where it considers such disclosure to be inappropriate.

(2) Articles 1 and 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts are to be interpreted as meaning that they do not prohibit:

– A party from bringing a separate challenge, before the courts, against the contracting authority’s decision not to disclose the confidential information provided in a participant’s tender in the tendering procedure.

– National legislation from requiring the person concerned to apply in the first place to the contracting authority for review of the latter’s decision turning down its request for access to confidential information.

– The person concerned from bringing an action before the courts exclusively in connection with the refusal to provide it with the information requested.

(3) Articles 1 and 2 of Directive 89/665 are to be interpreted as meaning that the body competent to review the decisions of the contracting authority:

– Must be empowered to annul the decisions that the contracting authority has adopted in respect of the disclosure of the confidential information made available to it, and, where appropriate, to order that that information be provided to the applicant for review.

– May, if national law authorises it, evaluate of its own motion the lawfulness of the acts adopted by the contracting authority, having regard to the confidential information made available to it.

8 The order for reference (paragraphs 36 and 37) states that, since the appeal in cassation was lodged not by Ecoservice but by the contracting authority, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) was in principle bound only to determine whether the successful tenderer had adequate technical capacity, this being the only question raised by the appellant. The court nonetheless decided of its own motion to go beyond the limits of the appeal in cassation and to rule on other aspects of the dispute.

Such an opportunity could even encourage economic operators to bring an appeal solely for the purpose of gaining access to their competitors’ business secrets’.

20 The order for reference states that, in Lithuania, the customary ‘public procurement practice, which the court of cassation consistently attempts to limit’, is to refuse to grant access to those requesting information supplied by tenderers.

21 Article 1(5) of Directive 89/665 authorises the domestic law of a Member State to provide for such a review, which is in fact a re-examination procedure conducted by the contracting authority itself. According to the order for reference, this is an administrative process in Lithuania.

22 The balance between protecting the confidentiality of information and judicial protection is also referred to in Article 9 of Directive 2016/943.

23 In paragraphs 64 to 76 of that order, the referring court explains its reasons for raising the fourth to ninth questions. The fact remains that those reasons do not always correspond exactly with the wording of the corresponding questions.

24 Klaipėdos autobusų parkas makes this point in its written observations, paragraphs 81 and 82.

25 Judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others (C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 26): ‘the wording of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 assumes, by using the words “as regards [contract award] procedures”, that every decision of a contracting authority falling under EU rules in the field of public procurement and liable to infringe them is subject to the judicial review provided for in Article 2(1) (a) and (b) of that directive’.

26 Ibidem, paragraph 27. The Court therefore supports a ‘broad construction of the concept of a “decision” taken by a contracting authority [which] is confirmed by the fact that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature or content of the decisions it refers to’.

27 Ibidem, paragraph 31.

28 Ibidem, paragraph 32: ‘In the absence of EU rules laying down the time from which a possibility of review must be open, it is for national law to lay down the detailed rules of judicial procedures governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from EU law’, subject to the limitations inherent in the principles of effectiveness and equivalence.

---

29 Article 2(9) provides for the possibility for bodies responsible for review procedures not to be judicial in character and for ‘independent bodies’ to be set up which are comprised of members having a status similar in some regards to that of judges.

---

30 Judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others (C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 31).

---

31 Ibidem, paragraph 34.

---

32 Ecoservice requested access to the information necessary to prepare its application for review of the contract award decision on 4 December 2018.

---

33 Judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others (C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 35).

---

34 The referring court recognises that, as a ‘court of cassation[, it] it is required to rule only on the issues raised by the defendant in its appeal in cassation, in particular whether tenderer B complies with the technical capacity requirement’. However, it ‘is contemplating going, of its own motion, beyond the limits of the appeal in cassation and ruling on other aspects of the dispute between the parties, … not only on the basis of protecting the public interest but also in the light of the specific situation that has arisen in the present case, in which the applicant was essentially denied all of the information to which it had requested access at the pre-litigation stage and in the proceedings’ (paragraphs 36 and 37 of the order for reference).

Panel of Judges

n u s t a t i on :

I. The essence of the dispute

1. In cassation proceedings, it is decided on the substantive rules governing the pre-litigation procedure for the settlement of public procurement disputes, the classification of the terms and conditions of the procurement, the recognition of the relevant information in the offer of suppliers as false, the protection, interpretation and application of confidential information provided by suppliers to contracting authorities during procurement and review procedures.
2. The applicant, UAB Ecoservice Klaipėda (hereinafter also referred to as the applicant), brought an action seeking: (1) annulment of the defendants UAB Klaipėda Region Waste Management Centreo (hereinafter also referred to as the defendant, the contracting authority) the decision to approve the series of tenders, of which the applicant was informed on 29 November 2018 by means of the C-Entrical Procurement Information System; 2) to oblige the defendant to re-perform the evaluation of the offer of the group of supplierss, compiled from UAB "Klaipėdos autobusų parkas", UAB "Parsekas" and UAB "Klaipėdos transportas", and to form a new order of proposals; (3) order the costs of the proceedings to bepaid.
3. The applicant pointed out that the defendant carried out the public procurement by means of an open tendering procedure entitled "Purchase of services for the collection and removal of municipal waste of Neringa Municipality to the treatment facilities of the Klaipėda Region Landfill" (Purchase No. 402058) (hereinafter referred to as the "Tender"). 3 suppliers participated in the tender and submitted tenders – the applicant, EKONOVUS UAB and a group of economic entities operating on the basis of joint activities, consisting of UAB Klaipėdos autobusų parkas, UAB Parsekas and UAB Klaipėdos transportas (hereinafter also referred to as the SupplierGroup).. After the Contracting Authority had established the order of the tenders on 29 November 2018, the Supplier Group was awarded the Contract. On 10 December 2018, the Company filed a claim against the decision of 29 November 2018 against the decision of the Supplier Group, challenging the supplier group's compliance with the provisions of point 2 "Technical and professional capacity" of Annex 4 to the Tender Conditions and 4 punkto "Financial and economic capacity" requirements. Byletter dated December 17, 2018, A dismissed the plaintiff's claim.
4. According to the applicant, neither the Group of Suppliers in general nor its members individually satisfies the qualification requirement of point 4 of Annex 4 to the TenderIng Conditions, entitled 'Financial and economic capacity', according to which the supplier's average annual operating income in the course of activities related to the collection and transport of mixed municipal waste has, in the last 3 financial years, be at least EUR 200,000 excluding VAT. 21 November 2018 In the Supplier's Declaration of Compliance with Qualification Requirements No. The information specified in D-p18/22 is declaratory. None of the members of the Supplier Group shall carry out the collection and transport of mixed municipal waste or related activities. The compliance of the qualifications of the group of suppliers with therequirements of f inansical and economic capacity cannot be based on the agreements concluded by UAB Parsekas with the State Enterprise Klaipėda State Seaport Authority for the removal of waste from incoming ships, since the services of collection and transportation of mixed municipal (household) waste in accordance with the specified services of collection and transportation of mixed municipal (household) waste according to the specified services of collection and transportation of mixed municipal (household) waste in accordance with the specified the contracts were provided by the applicant as a partner in the joint venture, and the full remuneration under them was paid to UAB Parsekas (as a responsible partnerei) only for the purpose of distributing (transferring) it to other partners.
5. The applicant has pointed out that the Group of Suppliers also fails to meet the requirement of a qualification of t-echnical and professional capacity laid down in point 2 of Schedule 4 to the Tender Specifications, according to which the supplier must own or lease (or otherwise lawfully use) the quantity of technical means necessary for the performance of the procurement contract which meets the requirements of the technical specification: at least one a garbage truck complying with the EURO 5 standard; at least one container washer; at least one carfor the collection of household bulky, electrical and electronic equipment, hazardous waste and other waste by detour; at least one of the specified cars must be able to serve underground containers; all specified cars must be capable of servicing underground containers; all specified cars must be equipped with geo-positioning system (GPS) transmitters. According to the applicant, the Supplier Group did not offer (did not provide) a garbage truck complying with the EURO 5 standard, nor a vehicle capable of servicing underground containers. In the defence, the vehicles mercedes benz 2024, Mercedes Benz 310 and DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane referred to by the Supplier Groups were not named when the Supplier Group submitted its offer to the p mite organization.

II. Substance of the procedural decisions of the courts of first instance and of appeal

6. Klaipėda Regional Court 15 March 2019 dismissed the action by decision and apportioned the costs of the proceedings.
7. The Court of First Instance, in deciding on the conformity of the group of suppliers with the requirements of point 4 of Annex 4 to the Tender Specifications, entitled 'Financial and economic capacity', and point 6 of the revision of the tendering specifications concerning the average annual operating income, found that In order to confirm his compliance with this condition,the tenderer in K onkurs had to submit to the contracting authority a free-form supplier's declaration.
8. According to the Declaration of Compliance with the Supplier's Qualification Requirements No. D-p-18/22 of 21 November 2018, submitted by UAB Parsekas, a member of the Supplier's Group, UAB Parsekas, average annual operating income of UAB Parsekas in the course of activities related to the collection and transportation of mixed municipal waste in the last 3 the financial year amounted to EUR 233,510.79 excluding VAT. According to the certificate of operating income No P-2018/11/22 of 22 November 2018 submitted by UAB Parsekas in the case of the contracting authority, UAB Parsekas received a total of EUR 719,757.87 (excluding VAT) in revenue in the last 3 financial years. To substantiate the reality of the data of this certificate, UAB Parsekas also submitted waste collection contracts to the contracting authority.
9. The Court of First Instance held that the Supplier Group also satisfied the requirements of point 2 of Annex 4 to the Tender Specifications and entitled 'Technical and professional capacity'. , Mercedes Benz 310, Nissan Primastar, DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane and Mercedes Benz 1838 match data technical requirements, vehicle registration certificates, uab "Klaipėdos transportas" obligations agreement of 22 November 2018 with a third (non-case) party on the acquisition of the vehicle "DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Kranas".
10. By a decision of 30 May 2019, a panel of judges of the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal of Lithuania annulled the decision of the Klaipėda Regional Court of 15 March 2019 and issued a new decision granting the applicant's application and deciding to annul the defendant's decision confirming the order of the tenders, of which the applicant was informed on 29 November 2018, and returning the parties to the situation prior to the infringement, reallocated the costs of the proceedings.
11. In the view of the Bench, there is no objective basis for concluding that the Supplier Group did not meet the requirement of point 4, entitled 'Financial and economic capacity', of Annex 4 to the Tender Specifications.
12. The applicant has not put forward any arguments that could confirm that the justification of financial and economic capacity in the manner required by the Terms and Conditions of the Tender (free-form supplier's declaration) is illegal, and according to the declaration of compliance with the supplier's qualification requirements submitted by the Director of UAB Parsekas, a member of the Supplier's Group, dated 21 November 2018, No D-p-18/22, the average annual operating income of UAB Parsekas in the course of carrying out activities related to activities related to the collection and transportation of mixed municipal waste in the last 3 financial years amounted to EUR 233,510.79 excluding VAT.
13. The bench of judges pointed out that the respondent, in accordance with the provisions of the Law on Public Procurement of the Republic of Lithuania (hereinafter referred to as the "LPP"), during the qualification assessment of the Supplier Group, requested to providemore information confirming the compliance of the Supplier Group with the requirement of clause 4 of Annex 4 to the Tender Conditions than was requested.In the terms of the competition. The Court of First Instance considered not only the free-form supplier's declaration, but also all the other evidence adduced by both the defendant and the applicant herself in support of the income in the case.
14. The Bench observed that the failure to produce a document substantiating the qualification does not negate the existence of qualification as a certain legal fact (objective category) or circumstances if they arose no later than the final date of submission of tenders.
15. With regard to the plaintiff's argument that the Supplier Group was not entitled to rely on the income of UAB Parsekas in the course of the execution of the joint venture agreement, the bench of the judges pointed out that there was no requirement in the tender terms and conditions to prove that the supplier who received the proceeds from the removal of mixed municipal waste would have actually shipped the waste himself, nor was it required to deduct it for each of the joint venture partners the share of revenues under the executed joint venture agreement. In accordance with the agreement No. 41-2017-116 of 13 April 2017 (the total cost of services is EUR 359,504.13 excluding VAT) and the agreement No. 41-2018-92 of 26 March 2018 (total cost of services – EUR 1,559,504.13 excluding VAT), concluded with the State Enterprise Klaipėda State Seaport Authority, the object of which is the collection and removal of mixed municipal waste, UAB Parsekas was the responsible partner of the joint activity, whicha was directly settled. In addition, the Joint Activity Agreement No P17-0315/1 of 15 March 2017, concluded by the joint venture partners UAB Parsekas (responsible partner), UAB BNS Capital and UAB Ecoservice Klaipėda, submitted in the case , confirms that part of the obligations of UAB Parsekas, entering the total value of the offer, it was 35%. the total amount of the project as a whole.

16. The bench of the judges pointed out that the Supplier Group, in its letter dated 21st November, 2018 entitled 'Data on compliance withthe technical requirements', which was submitted with the proposal, referred only to a specialised car/tanker with equipment Mercedes Benz 1838 and a freight vehicle " Nissan Primaster, which did not meet all the requirements set out in point 2 of Annex 4 to the Tender Conditions (notadapted for servicing underground containers, moreover, the mercedes benz 1838 vehicle, as a garbage truck manufactured in 1993, does not meet the EURO Standard 5, which came into force in 2008).

17. The panel of judges found that the vehicles Mercedes Benz 2024, Mercedes Benz 310 and DAF FAN 75 CF 250 EURO 5 HIAB 21 was not referred to in either the letter of 21 November 2018 or the letter No SR-127 of 13 December 2018 entitled 'On the provision of documents and information', which was submitted to the contracting authority after the contracting authority requested clarification of the tender after receiving the applicant's claim. In the light of the above, the bench concluded that, in assessing the conformity of the Supplier Group with the qualification requirements set out in point 2 of Schedule 4 to the Tender Conditions, these three vehicles referred to by the defendant could not be relied upon, since it is not clear when they were offered to the contracting authority.

18. There is no evidence in the file to support the right (real possibility) of the Supplier Group to use the DAF FAN 75 CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21 garbage carrier, but the mere public announcement on the internet networkaboutthe sale of such a technical device cannot confirm this, and the non-public file is recognised as a commitment agreement dated 22 November 2018, which was concluded after the date of the submission of the tender, it is not even possible to establish that UAB Klaipėdos transportas has agreed specifically on the purchase of the DAF FAN 75 CF 75 CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21 garbage truck.

19. The Bench pointed out that the defendant herself relies on the requirement to comply with the EURO 5 standard on the vehicle 'DAF FAN 75 CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21', which, as stated, cannot be regarded as there is no evidence that it was submitted together with the offer of the Supplier Group. It is also unclear on what basis the Supplier Group intends to use this vehicle. In addition, the testimonial states that it is the vehicle in question, and not the Mercedes Benz or Nissan Primaster, that also has the hydraulic lift needed to service the undergroundams containerams.

20. Having found that there was no evidence in the case to show that the Mercedes Benz 1838 garbage truck proposed by the Supplier Group complied with the EURO 5 standard or that any of the vehicles proposed by the Supplier Group could serve underground containers (equipped with a hydraulic lift), the bench of the judges held that the bid of the Supplier Group should have been rejected as not complying with the Euro 5 standard or that any of the vehicles proposed by the Supplier Group could serve underground containers (equipped with a hydraulic lift), the bench of the judges held that the bid of the Supplier Group should have been rejected as not complying with the euro 5 standard Qualification requirements set out in the terms and conditions of the competition (paragraph 10.3.9 ofthe Competition Conditions).

21. The Bench of The Court observed that the unlawful acts of the contracting authority alleged and complained of in the application (the cause of action) must coincide with the ground e of the contracting authority's decision appealed against in the supplier's claim (code of civil procedure of the Republic of Lithuania (hereinafter referred to as the "and CCP) 423 Article ^{3}(2)). Theclaimant's claim was limited to the compliance of the Mercedes Benz 1838 vehicle offered by the Supplier Group with the requirements of the Tender Conditions (Mercedes Benz 1838 is not suitablefor mixed municipal waste collectti and carry, especially 5 cu. m. m capacityfor underground containers, and is not a container washer), the applicant cannot rely either in the application or in the appeal on the argument that all the vehicles offered by the suppliers must comply with standard EURO 5.

III. Legal arguments in the cassation and in the response

22. By an appeal in cassation, the defendant seeks the annulment of the decision of the Chamber of Judges of the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal of Lithuania of 30 May 2019 and the maintenance of the decision of the Klaipėda Regional Court of 15 March 2019. The appeal in cassation is based on the following arguments:

22.1. The appellate court violated the rules for the examination and evaluation of evidence by not examining, in principle, all the data on the compliance of the qualifications of the Supplier Group (the offer of the Supplier Group and the documents submitted with it), and did not give a reasoned statement in the decision on their assessment. As a result, the court came to the unfounded conclusion that the Supplier Group did not rely on three vehicles in the s proposal to justify the qualification: Mercedes 2024, Mercedes Benz 310 and DAF FAN CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21/Crane. The court did not appreciate that the Supplier Group offered vehicles in the tender: Mercedes Benz 2024, Mercedes Benz/310, DAF FAN CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21/Crane, Mercedes Benz 1838", Nissan Primastar, and justified their compliance with the documents submitted with the proposal of 23 November 2018.

22.1.1. Annexes Nos. 9 and 10 submitted with the proposal (The Commitment Agreement of UAB Klaipėdos transportas and "Data on compliance with technical requirements" of UAB Klaipėdos transportas) confirmed that the group of suppliers intended to use the garbage truckto "DAF FAN CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21/Kranas". Although at the time of submission of the tender, this garbage truck had not yet been delivered and registered in Lithuania, the Group of Suppliers would havedisposed of it in accordance with the agreement (In paragraph 4(2) of the Tender Conditions, the qualification of the in support of the claim, it was not required to own a garbage truck operated in Lithuania).

22.1.2. Annex No. 21 submitted with the proposal (JSC "Klaipėdos autobusų parkas" "Data on compliance with technical requirements") confirmed the compliance of mercedes benz 310 and mercedes benz 2024 vehicles with its technical and qualification requirements.

22.1.3. Annex No. 20 submitted with the proposal (UAB "Parsekas" "Data on compliance with the technical requirements") confirmed the compliance of the proposed vehicles Mercedes Benz 1838 and Nissan Primastar with the qualification requirements and their suitability of the containerfor the removal of bulky cargo.

22.2. The court of appeal infringed Article 45(3) of the LSA, which allows the supplier to clarify and clarify his inaccurate or incomplete data on the justification of qualifications, deviated from the case-law of the Court of Cassation, which states that the failure to provide a document substantiating the qualification does not negate the qualification as a certain legal fact; the contracting authority must ask the candidate or tenderer to supplement or clarify the inaccurate or clarifying the inaccurate or explanations submitted incomplete data on his qualifications (order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 16 October 2015 in civil case No. 3K-3-554-690/2015). If the court had considered that the Supplier Group had referred to the "DAF FAN CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21/Crane" garbage truck in its tender, the court would have been obliged to rely on LSA 45, even if it considered that there was insufficient data on that vehicle in the Tender, to rely on LSA 45 paragraph 3 and in accordance with the settled case-law of the Court of Cassation to propose to the Supplier's Group to clarify the unclear data. Those infringements affected the unlawful conclusion of the decision that the Supplier Group could not base its capacity on the 'DAF FAN CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21/Crane' garbage truck at all. Moreover, if the court had properly examined the details of the supplier group's bid, such a revision would not havebeen necessary even, since the offer contains all the information about the garbage truckto the "DAF FAN CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21/Crane".

22.3. The appellate court required evidence in the form prescribed by the court in support of its unreasonable qualification and considered the evidence by selecting two documents (in the letter of 21 November 2018 and in letter No SR-127 of 13 December 2018 "On the provision of data and information"), and thereby limited the supplier group's right to base its qualifications on other documents. Such a conclusion is contrary to the principles of the evaluation of the tender and the qualification verification laid down in Article 47 of the LSA, as laid down in Article 45 of the LSA, which do not impose any restrictions or requirements on which the supplier can prove his qualifications. Qualification is an objective category that can be proved by any evidence supporting the qualification (order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 27 June 2011 in civil case No. 3K-3-293/2011). The court also violatedthe principle of content before form , deviating from the interpretations of the Court of Cassation, which states that the substantive assessment of the actions of suppliers and the decisions of the contracting authority, taking into account the principles and objectives of public procurement, takes precedence over the formal one (order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 8 June 2012 in civil case No 3K-3-280/2012).

23. Inits response to the appeal on a point of law (cassation), the applicant requests that the appeal be dismissed and that the decision of the Chamber of Judges of the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal of Lithuania of 30 May 2019 be left unchanged and that the costs of the proceedings be awarded. The response includes the following arguments:

23.1. The appellate court made an objective assessment of all the evidence in the case, reached its conclusions on the supplier group's compliance with therequirement of t-echnical and professional capacity from the totality of the evidence, without prejudice to Articles 176(1), 185(1) and 185(2) of the CCP, as well as the principles for the evaluation and qualification verification of tenders established by the LSA (LSA 45, 47 articles). The defendant, in its appeal on a point of law (cassation), declares that the vehicles referred to by the Supplier Group meet the criteria for technical and professional capacity. Contrary to the defendant's contentions, there is no evidence in the file to support the right (real possibility) of the Supplier Group to use the DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane garbage truck or that such a ground will arise in the future, even though the Tender Conditions require the submission of documents proving such a ground. The details of the supplier group's offer did not confirm the compliance of the mercedes benz 310 and Mercedes Benz 2024 vehicles with the qualification requirement for technical and professional capacity, they were not specified in the letter of 21 November 2018 and the letter of 13 December 2018, which was following a request by the contracting authority for clarification of the tender. The mercedes benz 1838 and Nissan Primastar vehicles referred to in the offer of the supplier group do not meet all the criteria for the qualification requirement for technical and professional capacity, since they do not serve underground containers, and one of them is not a garbage truckis, which complies with the EURO 5 standard.

23.2. The supplier group should not have been and could not be given the opportunity to re-correct unclear and/or inaccurate data due to compliance with therequirement of t-echnical and professional capacity. The technical means necessary for the performance of the tendering contract and the particulars and documents required to be provided in connection with them are to be regarded as part of the supplier group's tender in the strict sense. Thus, itis not Article 45(3) of the LSA, which is applicable to the proposal in the broadest sense, but Article 55(9) of the LSA, which, in the light of the case-law of the Court of Cassation, which is to be interpreted and applied narrowly in the light of the case-law of the Court of Cassation, which means that the adjustment of the details of the offer covers only exceptional situations in which the defects in the tender are editorial in nature, objectively identifiable and usually remediable. In this case, the shortcomings of the supplier group's proposal in the strict sense are of such a nature that the tender cannot be explained (clarified) without changing its details, and therefore such a change in the substance of the proposal would not be in accordance with the regulation of Article 55(9) of the LSA. Accordingly, the appellate court was not under any obligation to provide an opportunity for the p-mite organization to request clarification (clarification) of the details of the Supplier Group's proposal.

23.3. The offer of the supplier group does not comply with the requirement specified in paragraph 12 of Annex 1 "Technical Specification" of the Tender Conditions, which states that the service providerprovides services using municipal waste collection vehicles that meet the requirements of at least euro 5 standard. Vehicles offered by the supplier group Mercedes Benz 2024, Mercedes Benz 310 and Mercedes Benz 1838, taking into account their dates of manufacture, are objectively not able to meet the EURO 5 standard, which appeared in 2008. The appellate court did not unreasonably evaluate these arguments of the plaintiff on the ground that the plaintiff had not stated this type of circumstance in the december 10, 2018 claim. However, theapplicant did not become aware of these facts until the time of the hearing, so that the applicant could not objectively state them at the time of the application for the claim (Article 3(3) CCP 423).

23.4. The bid of the supplier group does not comply with the requirement of finsancial and economic capacity set out in point 4 of Annex 4 to the Tender Conditions. This conclusion is supported by the following circumstances: (1) contract No. 41-2018-92 of 26 March 2018 and the income received by UAB Parsekas on the basis thereof should not have been assessed, since neither the Supplier Group, nor the contracting authority, nor the court of first instance relied on this contract; 2) bthere is no evidence provided that would allow us to reliably determine whether the services under the 6 contracts submitted by the Supplier Group were provided only by UAB Parsekas, whether they were provided together with other partners, how much, when and what services under the contracts were provided by UAB Parsekas, how much and for the provision of specific services UAB Parsekas received income; 3) according to part of the contracts, UAB Parsekas did not provide precisely the services of collection and transportation of mixed municipal waste and did not receive income from this particular activity, shared these revenues with other joint venture partners, for example, the income (EUR 359,504.13) received from the agreement concluded with the SE on 13 April 2017, concluded with the SE, could not be includedKlaipėda State Seaport Authority. The services under that contract were not only provided by UAB Parsekas, it operated together with the joint venture partners, and the services of collection and transportation of mixed municipal (household) waste under that contract were provided by the applicant. The share of uab "Parsekas" liabilities is 35% of the total amount of the project, therefore, this company could receive no more than EUR 125,826.46 under the agreement of 13 April 2017, which means that the average annual operating income of UAB Parsekas (excluding VAT) in the last 3 years is less than EUR 200,000 excluding VAT.

IV. Substance of the referral to the Court of Justice of the European Union and of the preliminary ruling given by that court , written pleadings by the parties to the proceedings

24. Chamber of Judges of the Civil Division of the Supreme Court of Lithuania 2019 m. by order of 17 December 2014, referred a reference to the Court of Justice of the European Union ('the Court of Justice') for a preliminary ruling in respect of Article 18(1), Articles 21, 42, 57(4)(h), 58 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC ('Directive 2014/24') article 3 and (4), Article 70, Article 1(1)(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures for the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 ('Directive 89/665') os, (3) and (5), Directive (EU) 2016/943 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 8 June 2016 on the protection of undisclosed know-how and business information (trade secrets) against their unlawful acquisition, use and disclosure ('Directive 2016/943') 18th recital ('Directive 2016/943') part ofthe interpretation of article 9(2)(3) on the following issues:

24.1. Does the procurement clause requiring suppliers to prove an appropriate amount of average annual operating income for the purpose of carrying out activities solely for specific services (management of mixed municipal waste) fall within the scope of Article 58(3) or (4) of Directive 2014/24?

24.2. Does the answer to the first question determine the procedure for assessing the supplier's capacity as laid down in the judgment of the Court of Justice of 4 May 2017 in Case C-387/14 Esaprojekt?

24.3. Whether the procurement clause requiring suppliers to demonstrate the conformity of vehicles required for the provision of [garbage management] services with specific technical requirements, including pollution emissions (EURO 5), installation of a GPS transmitter, appropriate capacity, etc., falls within the scope of Article 58(4) of Directive 2014/24: (a) Article 58(4); (b) Article 42 in conjunction with annex VII; (c) the scope of Article 70?

24.4. Is article 1(1)(3) of Directive 89/665, which lays down the principle of effectiveness of the review procedures, article 1(3) and (5) of that directive, Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 and the provisions of Directive 2016/943, in particular recital 18 and Article 9(2)(3)the paragraph (jointly or separately, but not limited to them), must be interpreted as meaning that, where the national legal regulation on public procurement provides for a mandatory pre-litigation procedure for the settlement of disputes:

(a) the contracting authority must provide the supplier who initiated the review procedure with all the particulars (irrespective of the nature of the confidentiality) of another supplier's tender, provided that the object of the procedure is precisely the lawfulness of the evaluation of another supplier's tender and the supplier who initiated the procedure has previously expressly requested it to provide them;

(b) irrespective of the answer to the question asked above, does the contracting authority, when rejecting a claim made by a supplier concerning the legality of the evaluation of his competitor's tender, in any event give a clear, complete and specific answer, irrespective of the risk of disclosing the confidential information of the tender entrusted to it?

24.5. Must the wording of Article 1(1)(3) of Directive 89/665, Article 1(3) and (5), Article 2(1)(b) of that Article, Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 and the provisions of Directive 2016/943, and in particular recital 18 in the preamble (jointly or separately but not limited to them) be interpreted as meaning that the decision of the contracting authority not to acquaint the supplier with the confidential data of another tenderer's tender is a separate appeal to the court solution?

24.6. If the answer to the preceding question is in the affirmative, is Article 1(5) of Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as meaning that the supplier is obliged to submit a claim against such a decision of the contracting authority and, if necessary, to bring an action before the courts?

24.7. If the answer to the preceding question is in the affirmative, is Article 1(1)(3) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as meaning that the supplier, depending on the extent of the information at his disposal concerning the content of another supplier's tender, may bring an action before the court solely on the ground of refusal to provide him with information, without separately questioning the legality of the other decisions of the contracting authority?

24.8. Irrespective of the answers to the questions asked above, is Article 9(2)(3) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted as meaning that the court, upon receipt of a request from the applicant to recover evidence from the other party to the dispute and make it available to the applicant, must comply with such a request, irrespective of the conduct of the contracting authority during the procurement or review procedures?

24.9. Must the wording of Article 9(2)(3) of Directive 2016/943 be interpreted as meaning that a court which has not satisfied the applicant's request for the disclosure of confidential information of the other party to the dispute should, of its own motion, assess the significance and consequences of the data requested to be declassified for the lawfulness of the procurement procedure?

24.10. Is it the basis for the exclusion of suppliers laid down in Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24 in the light of the judgment of the Court of Justice of 3 October 2019 in Delta Antrepriz? de Construc? ii ?i Montaj 93, can be applied in such a way that the court, in a dispute between a supplier and a contracting authority, may, irrespective of the latter's assessment, of its own motion, decide that the supplier in question, acting intentionally or negligently, provided it with misleading information which is not in accordance with reality and, as a result, should have been excluded from the procurement procedures?

24.11. Whether the provisions of Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24, which are applied in conjunction with the principle of proportionality laid down in Article 18(1) of that directive, must be interpreted and applied in such a way that, where national law imposes sanctions additionally (in addition to exclusion from procurement procedures) for the provision of false information, those provisions may be applied only on the basis of personal liability, in particular where information which is not in accordance with reality only parts of the members of the joint procurement participant (e.g. one of several partners)?

25. The Court of Justice in 2021. in its judgment of 7 September in Case C-927/19 Klaipeda Region Waste Management Centre ('the preliminary ruling'), it gave the following interpretations.

26. Article 58 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that the burden on economic operators to prove a certain average annual turnover in the course of their activities in the field relating to the public contract in question is a selection criterion as to the economic and financial capacity of those economic operators within the meaning of paragraph 3 of that article.

27. The combined provisions of Articles 58(3) and 60(3) of Directive 2014/24, which apply in conjunction, must be interpreted as meaning that, where the contracting authority requires economic operators to have a specified minimum turnover in the area relating to the public contract in question, the economic operator may rely on a temporary the income received by the group of undertakings to which it belongs only if it has actually contributed, under the public contract in question, to the activities of that group, analogous to that to which the public contract relates, for which that economic operator seeks to prove its economic and financial capacity.

28. Articles 58(4), 42 and 70 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that they may be applied together to a technical requirement laid down in a tendering procedure.

29. Dektyvos 89/665 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1), Article 1(3) and (5) and Article 2(1)(b) must be interpreted as follows, that the decision of the contracting authority to refuse to make available to an economic operator information which is treated as confidential and contained in the documents or in the tender of another economic operator constitutes a contestable act and that, in the event that the Member State in whose territory the procurement procedure in question takes place hasruled that any person seeking to challenge a decision taken by the contracting authority must bring an administrative action before bringing an action before a court. that Member State may also provide that such aprior administrative appeal must be lodged before an action is brought before a court or tribunal against this decision refusing access to the information.

30. The fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) and (5) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2014/23, as well as Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of the general principle of good administration of EU law, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority to which an economic operator applies for information which is treated as confidential in the presence of a competitor with whom the award of the contract has been decided, in a tender, it is not obliged to provide it if its transmission would infringe the provisions of Union law on the protection of confidential information, even if the request of the economic operator is made in the context of a complaint by the same economic operator concerning the lawfulness of the assessment of a competitor's tender by the contracting authority. Where a contracting authority refuses to communicate such information or refuses to do so and rejects an administrative complaint lodged by an economic operator concerning the lawfulness of the assessment of the competitor's tender concerned, it must compare the applicant's right to good administration and the competitor's right to the protection of his confidential information in such a way that its decision to refuse to provide information or to reject the administrative complaint is reasoned and that the right to an effective remedy, which is used by the unsuccessful tenderer would not lose its effectiveness.

31. The fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) and (5) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2014/23, as well as Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, must be interpreted as meaning that the competent national court hearing an action against a decision of a contracting authority to refuse to provide information which is treated as confidential to an economic operator, contained in the documents transmitted by the competitor with whom the contract has been awarded, or in an action against a decision of the contracting authority rejecting an administrative appeal against such a decision refusing to provide information, must compare the applicant's right to an effective remedy with the competitor's right to the protection of his confidential information and trade secrets. To this end, this court, which must necessarily have at its disposal the necessary information, including confidential information and trade secrets, in order to be able to decide, knowing all the circumstances, whether this information can be provided, must examine all relevant factual and legal circumstances. It must also be able to overturn a decision refusing to provide information or a decision rejecting an administrative appeal if they are unlawful and, if necessary, refer the case back to the contracting authority or take a new decision itself, where permitted by national law.

32. Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that a national court hearing a dispute between an economic operator with whom it has been decided not to award a contract and the contracting authority may deviate from the assessment made by the contracting authority as to the legality of the conduct of the economic operator with whom the contract has been awarded and, consequently, to determine in its decision all the necessary consequences arising therefrom. However, in accordance with the principle of equivalence, such a court may examine of its own motion a plea alleging an error of assessment on the part of the contracting authority only if this is permitted by national law.

33. The second subparagraph of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of Article 57(4) and (6) of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding provisions of national law which preclude provisions of national law according to which, where an economic operator who is a member of a group of economic operators has seriously distorted the facts by providing the information necessary to verify that there are no grounds for exclusion of a group or its compliance with the selection criteria, and its partners are not aware of these distorted facts, the measure of exclusion from any procurement procedure may apply to all members of that group.

34. Chambers of Judges of the Civil Division of the Supreme Court of Lithuania in 2021 By order of 13 October, the proceedings in this civil case were resumed and it was proposed that the parties to the proceedings should submit written legal arguments against the rejudicial decision of the Court of Justice P.

35. The applicant has submitted written submissions on the preliminary ruling to the Supreme Court of Lithuania, stating:

35.1. The court's interpretations confirm the applicant's position that, in accordance with point 4 of Annex 4 to the TenderIng Conditions, the financial and economic capacity of the supplier required to be proved when the supplier participates in the Tender as a member of a group of suppliers must be proved by the submission by such a supplier of specific contracts proving specifically for him as an individual tenderer (and not jointly with others or other entities), the scope of the work carried out inthe field of specificized waste management services (individual actual contribution). In the present case, the documents submitted by the Supplier Group did not substantiate the financial and economic capacity, since the Supplier Group fulfilled this requirement by means of contracts that provided mixed waste management services by other suppliers and by contracts under which not only mixed municipal waste but also other waste was managed. Accordingly, the interpretations of the judgment of the Court of Justice of 4 May 2017 in Case C-387/14 Esaprojekt are also relevant to the case .

35.2. The requirements set out in the tender documentation, according to whichthese suppliers had to prove their conformity by submitting vehicles with the relevant technical characteristics, are to be qualified both as qualification and as requirements of the technical specification, as well as the conditions for the performance of the contract. In the light of the Court's interpretations, such a coincidence does not render the tendering specifications unlawful. According to the interpretations of the Court of Justice, regardless of the classification of the tendering conditions, the standard for adjusting the data is the same, but the principles of equal treatment and transparency must be taken into account. Thus, in the present case, the dispute between the parties concerning the right of the group of Tiehares to re-adjust the data for compliance with the technical requirements is no longer relevant. Once it has been established that the data provided by the T iegroup of loggers on which compliance with the qualification requirements is based, melagingi, the Supplier Group should be entered in the list of suppliers who have provided information in M elaging.

35.3. In the light of the court's interpretations that a contracting authority, when refusing to provide certain particulars, must provide information on the particulars of the tender in such a way that the other party suspected of an infringement can defend his interests and that data which cannot be treated as confidential must in all cases be provided, the applicant's right to information and the right to a remedy have been infringedos, since all the applicant's requests for information on the supplier group's bid were rejected without giving reasons.

35.4. According to the interpretations of the Court of Justice, the defendant's decision to refuse to provide the applicant with the details of the offer of the Supplier Group is appealed against. There is no requirement in national law to make a claim to the contracting authority for refusing to provide data on another supplier's tender, so that the applicant's right of access to the confidential data of another tenderer's tender can also be exercised after the legal proceedings have begun.

35.5. According to the interpretations of the Court of Justice, a national court which finds that the supplier has provided the contracting authority with untrue information regarding compliance with the qualification requirements may independently declare such information to be false and order the contracting authority to include such a supplier in the Ma list of suppliers who have provided elaging information. In this case, the Supplier Group provided false information about the available capacity.

36. A third party, UAB Parsekas, submitted written explanations to the Supreme Court of Lithuania on the preliminary ruling, stating:

36.1. According to the interpretations of the Court of Justice, the third party UAB "Parsekas", which also carried out the collection of mixed municipal waste, acquired the right to rely on the income received by the group of companies operating on the basis of the joint activity agreement in accordance with the public procurement services for the collection and recovery of waste from ships arriving at Klaipeda State Seaport and pollutants from the port area on 13 April 2017 purchase and sale agreement No. 41-2017-116 and base the economic and financial capacity of the Supplier Group.

36.2. In the light of the interpretations of the Court of Justice, the measure of adverse effect, i.e. inclusion in the list of suppliers who have submitted false information, is applied on the basis of the personal liability of the economic operator only to the supplier who provided the false information. information provided by a third party to JSC "Parsekas" cannot be classified as false, since there are no objective and subjective elements.

37. A third party, UAB Klaipėdos autobusų parkas, submitted written explanations on the preliminary ruling to the Supreme Court of Lithuania . The third party submits that, in the light of the Court's interpretations as to the personal liability of an economic operator for providing false information, a third party cannot be subject to any negative consequences if it were even accepted that the Group of Suppliers had provided false information (although the third party does not agree with this). The third party could not be included in the list of suppliers who provided false information, since he did not know and could not have known about the correctness of the content of the information provided by the other partner, the third party, as the managing partner, was responsible for submitting the offer, for communicating with the defendant, but not for the veracity of the information provided by each partner.

V. Arguments and explanations of the Court of Cassation

The limits of the case before the Court of Cassation

38. The boundaries of the proceedings before the Court of Cassation are defined by Article 353 of the CCP. The first paragraph ofthe said article provides that the Court of Cassation shall, within the limits of the appeal in cassation, review the contested decisions and/or orders from the point of view of the application of the law. The Court of Cassation is bound by the circumstances established by the courts of first and appellate instance. Such a definition of the limits of the proceedings before the Court of Cassation (and thus the purpose of the cassation proceedings) means that the Court of Cassation decides exclusively on questions of law and, moreover, only on issues that are directly raised in the appeal on a point of law (see, for example, paragraph 36 of the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 17 December 2019 in civil case No e3K-3-384-916/2019 and the case-law of the Court of Cassation cited therein). Cassation traffichas the right to go beyond the scope of an appeal in cassation when the public interest so requires and the rights and legitimate interests of a person, society or the state would be violated within the limits of the complaint (article 353(2) CCP).

39. It has been pointed out in the case-law of the Court of Cassation that thelegal framework for public procurement is linked to the protection of the public interest and that the provisions of the LSA are to be interpreted and applied in such a way as to protect the public interest. Therole and duty of traffic in safeguarding the public interest is relevantnot only for the protection of the public interest goods, ensuring the achievement of the objectives of the legal regulation of the LSA, but also for the promotion of fair competition between suppliers (see, e.g. the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 9 June 2015 in civil case No e3K-3-362-415/2015 and the case-law of the Court of Cassation cited therein). Thus, the public interest in public procurement disputes enables the courtto be an active arbitratorin order to achieve a fair hearing of the case.

40. On the other hand, the Court of Assay held that the active role of the courts is to be regarded as their discretion, but not as absolute and limited by the obviousness of a potentially unlawful act (decision) by the contracting authorities (see, for example, the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 30 March 2016 in civil case No e3K-3-175-415/2016 83). Consequently, if the possible illegality of the contracting authority's actions is not obvious, it is not to be established without an additional (separate) assessment of certain facts, and the proceedings do not contain at least any objective doubts as to this, the court's position ex officio (in accordance with the duties) not to go beyond the boundaries of the dispute is not to be classified as a violation of his active role in disputes of this kind (order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 18 June 2018 in civil case No e3K-3-234-469/2018, paragraph 52).

41. In the present case,the dispute arose as to the conformity of the SuccessfulTenderer's s (group of T iekers) with the requirements of financial and technical capacity (the disagreement over confidential information arose only in the course of legal proceedings). The courts of first and appellate instance ruled that the Supplier Group met the requirement of financial strength, but their positions diverged due to the assessment of the technical capacity requirement. It is precisely because of the aspect of assessing the compliance of the Tiegroup of hares with the technical capacity requirement that the cassation proceedings were initiated on the defendant's initiative.

42. Inview, inter alia, of the questions raised by the Court of Cassation in its order of 17 December 2019 before the Court of Justice, the written submissions of the parties to the proceedings before the courts in the preliminary ruling proceedings and the subsequent adoption of that procedural decision, moreover, to the subjectmatter of the dispute in cassation proceedings formed in the above-mentioned order (see, by analogy, paragraph 57 of the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 17 December 2019 in civil case No e3K-3-494-469/2019 and the case-law of the Court of Cassation referred to therein) and the fact that the applicant was not provided with all the information requested by her, the importance of the public interest in the present case in a public procurement case, the aspect of the court's activism in cases of this kind must be decided to speak ex officio not only on the issues raised in the appeal on a point of law. Accordingly, the case concerns the legality of the contested decision of the contracting authority, which established the ranking of the tenders and declared the winner a group of suppliers,and in the following respects:

42.1. the significance of compliance with the pre-litigation procedure in public procurement disputes in the present case;

42.2. compliance of the supplier group with the requirement of financial and economic capacity set out in point 4 of Annex 4 to the Tender Conditions;

42.3. In terms of the falsity of the assessment of the information specified in the proposal of the supplier group;

42.4. compliance of the supplier group with the requirement of technical and professional capacity set out in point 2 of Annex 4 to the Tender Conditions;

42.5. The balance between the protection of confidential data in the supplier group's bid and the applicant's rights of defence.

The pre-litigation procedure in public procurement cases

43. The pre-litigation stage I of public procurement disputes is a mandatory part of the review procedure (Article 10(1)(3) of the LSA, Article 423(2) of the CCP). The essence of this stage of the defence of rights is to allow the supplier and the contracting authority, before the award of the public contract, to resolve disagreements by avoiding legal proceedings, that is to say, for the contracting authority to set aside its wrong decisions or for the complaining supplier to set out in more detail the reasons and reasons for those decisions.

44. Such a mandatory pre-litigation dispute resolution procedure is established not only in order to ensure the expeditiousness of public procurement procedures, to enable the supplier and the contracting authority to find out the validity of mutual claims without initiating legal proceedings, but also to determine the boundaries of the dispute that has arisen (see, for example, the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 7 November 2018 in civil case No e3K-3-406-378/2018 Para. 38).

45. Thus, the scope(s) of the legal arguments based on the specific facts and the positions of the parties in the present case are largely determined by the content of the documents of the parties concerned at the pre-litigation stage of the dispute— the content of the claim and the response to the claim. It should be noted that thislimitation was first established in jurisprudence and only in relation to suppliers. The Court of Cassation held that the issues raised in the supplier's claim are relevant to the scope of the dispute between the supplier and the contracting authority. The precise determination of the content of the claim is also important because the possible infringements of the contracting authority brought before the plaintiff's court should coincide with those raised in the claim, i.e. the plaintiff could base his claim in court only on those infringements which were alleged in the claim and either not examined or examined by the contracting authority, but found to be unfounded (Order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 13 November 2009 in civil case No. 3K-3-506/2009). Subsequently, the restriction in question also arose in legal regulation, and its application was extended to the contracting authorities in accordance with the caselaw of the Court of Cassation.

46. Article 3(2) of the CCP 423 provides that claimswhich were not raised in an application by a supplier or an economic operator in an out-of-court preliminary settlement procedure may not be raised in a claim, unless these claims could not have been raised by the plaintiff at the time of filing the application;the basis for the claim must be the same as the facts set out in the supplier's or economic operator's application for the out-of-court preliminary settlement of disputes on which the application was based, unless these circumstances could not be stated by the claimant at the time of filing the application (paragraph 3 of the same article);it is forbidden to go to the cause of action or the subject matter of the claim, unless the need for such a change arose later or the court considers that this will not delay the proceedings (paragraph 4 of the same article).

47. Theprovisions of the N ors CCP contain separately the provisions on the requirements for the claim and the above-mentioned restrictions on the procedural conduct of the plaintiff, which per se (in itself) does not mean that the defendants - contracting authorities - have been granted more rights in the proceedings (order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 9 October 2018 in civil case No e3K-3-354-378/2018, paragraph 35). Such a rule of interpretation of the law means, in essence, that if the plaintiff (supplier) is limited in the proceedings in relation to the content of the claim, then the defendant (the contracting authority) cannot also rely in the defence or rejoinder on new facts or legal arguments that were not raised by the supplier in the response to the claim.

48. It is apparent from the facts established in the casethat the applicant based its claim on two aspects on the basis of the non-confidential information provided to it by the contracting authority in the tender of the successful tenderer:

    1) The group of suppliers does not meet the requirement of financial and economic capacity, because: a) a formal declaration, without submitting any primary documents (contracts), does not confirm the income of EUR 200,000 executed and received by UAB Parsekas in the last three years in the provision of mixed municipal waste collection and removal services; (b) this enterprise does not carry out such activities at all; (c) although it participates in the joint venture asthe main partner in the provision of such services, in fact such activities did not take place on its own (as an example, the applicant referred to an agreement with the State Enterprise Klaipėda Seaport Authority, according to which it was the applicant who claimed to actually provideusi mixed utilities collection and transportation services);

    2) The group of suppliers does not meet the requirements of technical capacity, since the mercedes benz 1838 garbage truck presented in the table of the declaration of conformity of UAB Parsekas does not meet the mandatory technical parameters (euro 5 standard, cannot service underground containers, does not have container washing equipment).

49. In rejecting the applicant's claim, the Contracting Authority has stated declaratively that the Group of Suppliers meets the requirements of the Tender Conditions. Relied on the fact that the Supplier Group submitted a dozen concluded contracts proving that the revenue from the collection and transportation of mixed municipal waste is at least EUR 200,000 , and the technical information provided confirms the approval of the Mercedes Benz garbage truck 1838" complies with the requirements set forth in the Competition.

50. According to the facts of the case, the applicant, having become aware of the successful tenderer, formulated a general request to the contracting authority for access to the successful tenderer's tender and its documents. There is no dispute in the case that, at the pre-litigation stage of the dispute, neither information on the technical data of the mercedes benz 2024, Mercedes Benz 310 and DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane" offered by the Supplier Groupenis, nor thefact that such a vehiclees The supplier's group of suppliers indicated in its proposal was not disclosed to the plaintiff i.

51. It should be noted that insupport of its decision determining the ranking and the winner of the tenders, the p-mite organisation, in support of its decision determining the ranking and the winner of the tenders, in respect of the mercedes benz 2024, Mercedes Benz 310 and DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane proposed by the Supplier Group relied only on the court of first instance in its defence. In other words, the contracting authority revealed new circumstances that were not known (disclosed) at the pre-litigation stage of the dispute. Accordingly, the caselaw of the Court of Cassation on the definition of the boundaries of a public procurement dispute, as discussed above, presupposes that the contracting authority is restricted from proving the legality of its decision with new ones, that is to say, arguments not specified in the response to the claim.

52. Although the reliance of the contracting authority on new arguments not mentioned in the reply to the claim is, in principle, not possible, in such a case, the winner of the s konkursos (in this case, the Supplier Group) whose rights and interests will be affectedbythe court's decision should have an interest in proving the conformity of its tender with the requirements ofthe tender, be active and base its position on concrete arguments and evidence. Such a right of the successful tenderer shall not be limited to the extent to which the contracting authority responds to the claim. In the present case, the Supplier Group essentially defended its interests passively, transferring (transferring) the defence of its rights to the contracting authority, which, as stated above, the right to submit new arguments compared to the reply to the claim in the course of the trial is limited.

53. Thus, the aforesaid arguments of the contracting authority in respect of the vehicles, made only in the course of the proceedings before the court of first instance, as coming out of the bounds of the facts at the pre-trial stage of the dispute, should not have been considered and evaluated by the trial courts. In this regard, although partly inaccurate, the appellate court's arguments that the defendant's three vehicles (garbage trucks) referred to in the course of the trial are not taken into account and are not decided on the merits in the context of the assessment of the technical capacity of the Supplier Group are accepted as legally correct.

The interpretation and application of the financial and economic capacity laid down in point 4 of Annex 4 to the tendering specifications

54. As stated above, although the appeal in cassation did not raise the question of the conformity of the Supplier Group with the aforesaid requirement, in the event of any ambiguity on the part of the bench as to the proper classification and application of the tendering clause referred to and, accordingly, the legality of the defendant's conduct in assessing the conformity of the Supplier Group with that condition, the Court of Cassation, by way of appeal to the Court of Justice, ex officio raised issues related to these aspects. In this context, it should also be noted that the classification of the Tender Clause in question relates to the ex officio issue raised by the Court of Cassation in the assessment of false information, which is the subject of more detailed reference in this order.

55. Point 4 of Annex 4 to the tendering specifications requires that the supplier's average annual operating income for activities related to the collection and transport of mixed municipal waste during the last 3 financial years or during that period from the date of registration of the supplier (if the supplier has been in business for less than 3 financial years) is not less than 200 000 Eur excluding VAT. In order to justify thetitiktto thisam rtion, the supplier had to submit a free-form supplier's declaration to the contracting authority.

56. The court of cassation's appeal to the Court of Justice noted national jurisprudence according to which a means of proof of abstract content does not presuppose a restriction on the applicant to call into question the assessment of the conformity of the successful tenderer or his tender. Thus, the mere fact that the Supplier Group submitted the required declaration of conformity of capacity with the tender and, subsequently, the list of executed contracts, contrary to the findings of the courts, does not per se mean that its capacity meets the requirements of the Tender. In the present case, it is common ground that the applicant raised its doubts as to the conformity of the Supplier Group with the Tender Clause in question

(the applicant was not made aware of the specific evidence of the conformity of the qualifications of the Successful Tenderer) in the light of the possibility (presumption) that the Successful Tenderer would rely, inter alia (inter alia) on the applicant's co-operation with one of the Suppliers' Group a contract previously executed by members.

57. Indeed, the parties to the dispute themselves did not agree on the application of the requirement laid down in point 4 of Annex 4 to the TenderIng Conditions, not on its specific classification, but on the application, essentially generally taking the view that the condition of the turnover of an appropriate amount in the last year relates to economic (financial) capacity. The Contracting Authority, the Supplier Group and the courts have interpreted the qualification requirement of suppliers in question as meaning that, under the terms of the Tender, the economic operator proving the conformity of qualifications was not required to receive income only in his own name and/or for his own benefit (i.e. not as the main partner) and only for the management of mixed municipal waste in the case of the performance of a complex contract (various wastes); took the exact opposite position, taking the view that suppliers, under that requirement, were required to actually carry out the waste management services themselves, in particular for the collection and disposal of mixed municipal waste.

58. The question raised by the Court of Cassation in its appeal to the Court of Justice as to the classification of that condition was framed, in particular for the purpose of determining the legality of the conformity assessment of the capacity of the Supplier Group. It should be noted that, although the Court classified the requirement set out in point 4 of Annex 4 to the Tendering Conditions as a condition of economic and financial capacity, it has nevertheless, in the light of its specific content, made new interpretations as to its application. The meaning of the provisions of Directive 2014/24 is relevant for the interpretation and application of the terms and conditions of the Competition. In view of the above, the court's arguments that the Tender Terms and Conditions do not impose any restrictions on the proof of turnover on suppliers are not legally valid and, therefore, these are not applicable to them.

59. The Court has pointed out that, if the contracting authority has imposed only a requirement relating to the relevant minimum annual turnover and has not required that that fixed minimum turnover be achieved in the area to which the contract relates, there is nothing to prevent an economic operator from relying on the income received by the temporary group of undertakings to which it belonged, even if, under a given public contract, it did not actually contribute to the activities of that group, analogous to the activities to which the public contract relates, in respect of which that economic operator seeks to substantiate its economic and financial capacity (paragraph 77 of the preliminary ruling). Such an interpretation by the Court of Justice, which reflects the position of the Group of Suppliers, the Contracting Authority and the courts in the proceedings, essentially embodies the classic meaning of the content of the financial and economic capacity: it is sufficient for the supplier to prove the fact of the revenues generated under the contracts previously concluded and performed — ne dependent on their nature and the composition of the contractors.

60. However, the Court further clarified in its preliminary ruling that, although the turnover requirement concerns economic and financial capacity, where the tendering specifications require that a minimum turnover be achieved in the area to which the contract relates, that requirement pursues a twofold objective, namely, to determine the economic and financial capacity of economic operators and to help demonstrate their technical and professional capacity (paragraphs 72 and 78 of the preliminary ruling).

61. Thus, in the context of the court's interpretations referred to above, the selection criterion laid down in point 4 of Annex 4 to the TenderIng Conditions concerning the annual turnover in the course of activities relating to the collection and transport of mixed municipal waste is concerns the economic and financial capacity of economic operators, which is also aimed at demonstrating the technical and professional capacity of economic operators. In such a case, according to the court's interpretations, the economic and financial situation of an economic operator, as well as its technical and professional capacity, is a specificundertaking and relates only to that economic operator as a natural or legal person (see (see paragraph 78 of the preliminary ruling). This means that the tendering clause in question, although it qualifies as a condition of economic capacity, is applicable, inter alia, in the light of aspects specific to the requirements of professional capacity.

62. Referring by analogy to the judgment in Esaprojekt, the Court stated in its preliminary ruling that, where a contracting authority requires economic operators to have a specified minimum turnover in the area relating to the public contract in question, in order to prove their an economic and financial capacity may be relied on by an economic operator on the income received by the temporary group of undertakings to which it belongs only if it has actually contributed, under the relevant public contract, to the performance of the activities of that group, analogous to that to which the public contract relates, in respect of which that economic operator seeks to prove its economic and financial capacity (paragraph 82 of the preliminary ruling).

63. In the present case, it must be pointed out that the requirement(e) in point 4 of Annex 4 to the TenderIng Specifications concerning annual operating income excludes precisely the activities relating to the collection and transport of mixed municipal waste, that is to say, activities which would have been carried outby a supplier who has won the Tender and awarded the public contract. In the light of the interpretations given by the Courtof Justice, under point 4 of Annex 4 to the Tendering Specifications, an economic operator may rely on the revenues of the joint venture group to which it belongs only if, under the specific public contract*, it* de facto (in fact) contributed to the activities of that group, analogous to that to which the public contract relates (paragraph 79 of the preliminary ruling).

64. According to the facts of the case, the Supplier Group, in support of the requirement of clause 4 of Annex 4to the Tender Conditions, submitted a free-form declaration of UAB Parsekas.Operating income in carrying out activities related to the collection and transportation of mixed municipal waste in the last 3 financial yearsamounts to EUR 235,510.79 excluding VAT.

65. The applicant has consistently (in the claim, in the pleadings) taken the position that UAB Parsekas, a member of the Supplier Group, did not carry out the activities of collection and transportation of mixed municipal waste, from which the average income per year would exceed EUR 200 000 excluding VAT. Tclaimed that UAB Parsekas does not carry out activities of this kind, citing as an example the reliance of UAB Parsekas on the agreement with the State Enterprise Klaipėda State Seaport Authority for the removal of waste from incoming ships. The applicant argued that, on the basis of the joint venture agreement, by participating in the execution of that agreement, UAB Parsekas itself had in fact mixed municipal waste collection and transport services does not provide, on the contrary, it is the applicant, as a joint venture partner, that has provided such services.

66. It should be noted that the specific contracts and the certificate of income received were submitted by UAB Parsekas to the defendant after the submission of the plaintiff's claim, together with the letter dated 13 December 2019, when the contracting authority asked for clarification of the data on the annualoperating income. Consequently, it was on the basis of those specifically referred to contracts, taking into account their content, inter alia, the contractual obligations of UAB Parsekas to its customers, that theconformity of the Supplier Group with the economic (financial) capacity had to be decided. It should be borne in mind that, according to the case-law of the Court of Cassation, if in the revised data, in their totality, the supplier has not corrected all the deficiencies or made new errors in order to ensure the concentration of the procurement procedures, the balance of interests of the participants in those relations and not to prejudice the bonus pater familias the principle (the standard of a careful and prudent person), the seller and the buyer are not subject to the right enshrined in the law to revisit the information of the economic operator's capacity, respectively, and the obligation to require it to do so (see (see paragraph 157 of the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 11 November 2020 in civil case No e3K-3-272-378/2020 and the case-law of the Court of Cassation cited therein).

67. Both the courts of first instance and the appellate courts held that the Supplier Group had justified its compliance withthe requirement of clause 4 of Schedule 4 to the Tender Conditions. The court of appeal, agreeing with the assessment of the court of first instance, pointed out that UAB Parsekas submitted not only a free-form declaration, which would have been sufficient in accordance with the terms of the Competition, but also specific contracts, a certificate of the specified income received. It also emphasized that UAB Parsekas could rely on the agreements concluded with the State Enterprise Klaipėda State Seaport Authority on the basis of the joint activity agreement, since the terms and conditions of the Competition did not contain a requirement that the income received by the supplier be for the waste actually shipped by him, nor was there a requirement to deduct the share of each joint activity partner's income under the executed joint activity agreement.

68. The Bench observes that such a classification and interpretation by the courts of the requirement of point 4 of Annex 4 to the Tendering Conditions is not consistent with the interpretations given by the Court in its preliminary ruling, as discussed above, inter alia, that the condition of a procurement of this kind has a dual purpose: identify the economic and financial capacity of economic operators and help demonstrate their technical and professional capacity. Thus, contrary to whatthe courts have ruled, in view of the wording of the requirement 4 priedo 4 punk of the Terms and Conditions of the Competition, the income of Amos UAB Parsekas, received specifically for the services actually provided by it in connection with the collection and transport of mixed municipal waste.

69. JSC "Parsekas" did not prove in the process that it was de facto engaged in the activity of collecting and transporting municipal waste itself. In essence, it did not dispute that, according to the agreement of 13 April 2017 with the State Enterprise Klaipėda State Seaport Authority, it itself did not actually provide the services of collection and transportation of mixed municipal waste for the total amount of revenue it claims. On the contrary, in the written submissions submitted to the appellants, he claimedthat he had contributed to the activities carried out by the partners acting under the joint venture agreement, including the collection of mixed municipal waste, and took the position that the mere fact of the contribution (regardless of the scope of the services specifically provided) Enough. However, in the light of the interpretations set out above in the preliminary ruling, contributing to an activity constitutes an act actually carried out in connection with the provision of the services in question, with the result that the mere presence of a group of suppliers which provided, inter alia, such services is not sufficient.

70. Even if, as stated by the courts, UAB Parsekas (as the main partners) when executing the contract with the State Enterprise Klaipėda State Seaport Authority, the part of the obligations included in the general value of the contract amounts to 35%. the total amount of the project (EUR 359,504.13 x 35% = EUR 125,826.46), the amount of revenue generated by it under this contract is not sufficient to substantiatethe requirement of the Tender Clause regarding at least EUR 200,00 of annual operating income in the course of activities related to the collection and transportation of mixed municipal waste (486 080,82 Eur (85 729,96 Eur + 136 230,46 Eur + 93 506,16 Eur + 34 984,28 Eur + 9803,50 Eur + 125 826,46 Eur) / 3 = 162 026,94 Eur). Thesame position was taken by the applicant in its response to the appeal on a point of law. In the light of the foregoing, it must be concluded that the Supplier Group did not meet the requirement of economic and financial capacity and that agroup of suppliers unlawfully assessed its compliance with that condition.

The recognition of the information in the proposal of the Tiekei group as false

71. SSA (2017) Law No XIII-327 of 2 May, in its version in force since 18 May. 1 January), Article 46(4)(4) provides that the contracting authority shall exclude a supplier from the procurement procedure if the supplier, during the procurement procedures, has withheld information or provided false information regarding compliance with the requirements laid down in that article and in Article 47 of that Law, and the contracting authority can prove this by any lawful means, or the supplier cannot prove this by any lawful means, or the supplier cannot, because of the false information provided, to provide the supporting documents required under Section 50 of this Act. It should be noted that, in contrast to the previous (before 1 July 2017) regulation of public procurement, Article 46(4)(4) of the LSA lays down a mandatory ground for the exclusion of suppliers due to false information provided to the contracting authority.

72. In the present case, theBench, since it had doubts as to the possible falsity of the information submitted by the Supplier Group (a member of the group) on the basis of a conformity with the tender clause on annual operating income, by appealing to the Court of Justice for ex officio, raised questions in that regard. In its order of 17 December 2019, the Bench of Judges raised doubts as to whether, in principle, in accordance with the circumstances of the Judgment of the Court of Justice in Esaprojekt, UAB Parsekas provided information on the income received from contracts that were either concluded and executed jointly with other economic operators who, in particular, performed the required proportion of mixed waste management services, or were concluded and carried out without partners, but even in this case, in addition to mixed waste, other waste was managed (in both cases, mixed waste occupied a smaller share of total waste management), in principle, it could not correspond to the careless presentation of data, i.e. i.e. the situation of false information.

73. In its judgment in Esaprojekt, cited above , the Court of Justice treated as gross negligence on the part of the supplier his conduct which led to the classification of the information submitted as false when the supplier, in order to meet the general professional requirement, had fulfilled at least two contracts for the installation of software in the administrative and medical parts of the hospital together, submitted, inter alia, a contract by which, together with another company in the consortium, de jure (legally) obligations were made to install the software for these parts jointly, but the de facto partners fulfilled the relevant parts of the contract independently.

74. Theinterpretations of the case-law of the Court of Cassation that, according to the LSA, information can be declared false only if the verification of its conformity with the truth does not require an additionalethical interpretation (order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 24 February 2016 in civil case No e3K-3-112-969/2016, paragraph 53), are to be taken into account.The current case-law of the Court of Cassation states that the criterion of additional legal interpretation asthe basis for classifying data as (un)false information is not absolute and has limits of application and cannot be abused (see paragraph 118 of the above order of the Court of Cassation in civil case No e3K-3-272-378/2020).

75. The case-law of the Court of Cassation interpreting the finding of the information provided by the supplier as false has, inter alia, pointed out that the information must be regarded as false after establishing the cumulative existence of elements of the objective (non-compliance with the truth (reality) is of a factual rather than a legal nature) and subjective (the provider of the information perceives or must perceive that it does not correspond to reality) (see. Order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 28 February 2017 in civil case No. e3K-3-106-690/2017 item 39). However, such an interpretation of the law does not mean that the factual details of the tender cannot be assessed additionally; since the specific factual content of the tender can be determined both in the initial evaluation of the tenders, in the assessment of the explanations of the tender submitted after the request of the contracting authority, or in the examination of the claim submitted by the supplier or in the settlement of the dispute in court (see Order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 4 January 2018 in civil case No e3K-3-16-378/2018, paragraphs 53, 54).

76. It has also been pointed out by the Court of Cassation in that regard that the classification of information as false does not in itself mean only distorting or concealing data, but also referring to situations in which the supplier does not actually meet the terms of the tender, but creatively presents the information in such a way that it is technically correct and gives the impression that the conditions are met; in other words, these are situations in which the means of proof itself is correct, however, it is not suitable, if the supplier understands (or should have understood), to prove the conformity of his capacity with the requirement made (see paragraph 130 of the order of the Court of Cassation in civil case No e3K-3-272-378/2020, referred to above, and the case-law of the Court of Cassation cited therein).

77. Pagal the interpretations given by the Court of Justice in the preliminary ruling, the court itself may find that the information submitted is false (see Paragraphs 144, 148 of the preliminary ruling), and the Court of Cassation, in its enquiry before the Court, took a preliminary view of that assessment as to the conformity of the information contained in the supplier group's tender and its revision with point 4 of Annex 4 to the Tender Specifications. However, in the light of the Court's interpretations concerning the assessment of economic and financial capacity, where the turnover requirement is made in a specific area, in the present case the information of PARSEKAS UAB cannot be classified as false within the meaning of Article 46(4)(4) of the LSA.

78. In this context, it should be noted that the Court of Cassation itself had questions as to the legal classification and application of the tendering clause in question (whether it is a question of economic financial or technical capacity and whether the answer to that question determines the procedure for assessing the capacity of the supplier of information), and that those doubts must therefore be regarded as falling withinthe scope of thes to a situation of legal interpretation and does not give rise to a decision on the recognition of information as false. In addition, it should be noted that the interpretations given by the Court in its preliminary ruling on the purpose(s) of the contested contest of a dual nature as to the purpose(s) of the tendering clause are to be regarded as new.

79. In the view of the Bench, the tems of the first and appellate instances, having misclassified and interpreted the requirement of clause 4 of Schedule 4 to the TenderIng Conditions, wrongly found the legality of the defendant's conduct by admitting that PARSEKAS UAB had substantiated its declaration of as annual income from activities related to the collection and transport of mixed municipal waste. The totality of the circumstances of the case established by the courts forms the basis for finding that the Supplier Group (UAB Parsekas) did not meet the requirement of clause 4 of Annex 4 to the Tender Conditions, but does not presuppose the conclusion that the information provided by the Supplier Group (UAB Parsekas) should have been consideredama as false.

80. In the light of the foregoing, in the present case, there are no grounds for deciding not only on the conduct of UAB Parsekas within the meaning of Article 46(4)(4) of the LSA, but also on the possibility of that economic operator being cleansed (rehabilitated) (see Paragraphs 50, 51 of the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 17 November 2021 in civil case No. e3K-3-278-969/2021), but also on whether this entity, and at the same time its partners, are to be included in the list of participants who submitted false information.

81. In this context, it is only the court's interpretations that, pagal, the principle of proportionality, requires the contracting authority to make a specific and individual assessment of the conduct of the entity concerned;to this end, the contracting authority must take into account the means at the tenderer's disposal to verify whether the entity whose capacity it intended to rely on has committed an infringement;prohibits provisions of national law according to which, where an economic operator who is a member of a group of economic operators has seriously distorted the facts by providing the information necessary to verify that there are no grounds for exclusion of a group or its compliance with the selection criteria, and its partners are not aware of those distorted facts, the measure of exclusion from any public procurement procedure may apply to all the members of that group (preliminary ruling judgment, paragraphs 157, 158).

Interpretation and application of the requirement of technical and professional capacity laid down in point 2 of Annex 4 to the TenderIng Specifications

82. Point 2 of Annex 4 to the tender specifications sets outthe requirement of technical and professional capacity forthe supplier to own or rent vehicles that meet specific technical requirements: at least 1 garbage truck, compliant with standard EURO 5; 1 container washer; 1 car in the householdfor the collection of bulky, electrical and electronic equipment, hazardous waste and other wasteby detour; all vehicles must be equipped with GPS transmitters; at least one of these vehicles must be able to serve underground containers. In order to substantiate this requirement, the supplier was obliged to provide a list of vehicles,to indicate the technical data and data, the state registration certificates and the card of the results of valid roadworthiness tests, documents proving the legitimate grounds for using the vehicle.

83. In its application to the Court for a preliminary ruling, the Bench expressed doubts as to the classification of the tendering condition referred to above, all the more so since the conditions in question relating to the EURO 5 standard and the GPS transmitter were also laid down as a requirement of a technical specificationi. Onthe basis of the fact that the existing national procurement regulation provides suppliers with a different right to adjust qualifications and tender data (Articles 45(3) and 55(9) of the LSA), in the light of the Court of Justice's previous case-law on the distinction between the qualification conditions of suppliers and the requirements for the assessment of a tender, the Court of Cassation raised the question of whether this condition should be regarded as a qualification requirement or requirement relating to the subject-matter of the contract, the performance of the contract, etc.

84. The Court of Justice stated in its preliminary ruling that Directive 2014/24 does not exclude the possibility that technical requirements may also be understood as selection criteria relating to technical and professional capacity, as technical specifications and/or as conditions for the performance of a contract within the meaning of Articles 58(4), 42 and 70 of that directive respectivelyius (paragraph 84 of the preliminary ruling). Thus, K's requirement for vehicles complying with specific technical data can be regarded as a selection criterion relating to technical and professional capacity or to a technical specification or even a condition for the performance of a contract (paragraph 90 of the preliminary ruling).

85. With regard to the latter aspect (i.e. the technical requirements as a condition for the performance of the contract), attention should be drawn to the caselaw of the Court of Justice and the Court of Cassation, according to which contracting authorities may raise in public procurement documents requirements which are relevant during the performance of the contract but cannot verify their conformity in the context of public procurement procedures (see Paragraphs 51, 52 of the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 21 October 2021 in civil case No e3K-3-405-469/2021 and the case-law of the Court of Justice cited therein). The bench finds that the technical requirements for garbage trucks, in view of their universal nature (once the contract has been performed, GPS transmitters and vehicle pollution indicators will be able to be relevant even with the reintroduction of these devices), as well as the interpretation of the content and purpose of the requirements in question in the preliminary ruling in the Decision, to be classified as conditions of technical capacity and technical specification which may have been raised and verified in the course of the procurement procedures.

86. With regard to the requirement of Annex 4(2) to the Tender Specifications in question, theCourt of First Instance held that the Supplier Group had failed to substantiate this requirementof technical capacityand that the vehicles Nissan Primaster and Mercedes Benz 1838 does not meet all the criteria set out in the condition, but the fact that the vehicles referred to by the defendants are Mercedes Benz 2024, Mercedes Benz 310 and DAF FAN 75 CF 250 EURO 5 HIAB 21 were referred to in the motion in the case, unproven.

87. The defendant submits in its appeal on a point of law that the appellate court, without considering the totality of the tender data submitted by the Supplier Group, wrongly held that the Supplier Group did not rely on the Mercedes 2024, Mercedes Benz 310 and DAF FAN CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21/Crane vehicles. According to the defendant, although all the necessary documents were submitted with the proposal, if the court considered that insufficient data had been submitted with the proposal for the garbage truck "DAF FAN CF 250 EURO5/HIAB 21/Crane", the court was obliged to rely on Article 45(3) of the LSA and the case-law of the Court of Cassation and to suggest to the Supplier Group to clarify the qualification data. The panel of judges finds the arguments in this appeal to be unfounded.

88. As has already been pointed out, at the pre-litigation stage of the dispute, the boundaries of the dispute are determined by the content of the claim and the response to it. Since the response to the claim does not contain any information about the vehicles offered by the Supplier Group mercedes benz 2024, Mercedes Benz 310 and DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane (including the contract of obligations for the purchase of the latter vehicle) it was not presented, and accordingly, the fact of the conformity of these vehicles with the requirements of the Tender Conditions could not be relied upon by the defendant to substantiate the legality of its actions in its pleadings submitted to the courts, and the trial courts had no reason to assess them either.

89. There is no dispute in the case that, in assessing the conformity of the qualification (and the technical aspects of the offer) by the Supplier Group only on the basis of the vehicles Nissan Primaster and Mercedes Benz 1838, which do not meet the requirements of point 2 of Annex 4 to the Tender Specifications. Consequently, that circumstance alone would be a ground for holding that the appellate court's finding that the Group of Suppliers did not meet the qualification requirements set out in point 2 of Annex 4 to the Tender Specifications, entitled 'Technical and professional capacity', is well founded.

90. The arguments put forward by the defendant in the appeal on the ground that the decision of the appellate court infringed the regulation of the LSA are not legally valid (Article 45(3)). Firstly, the defendant herself did not assess during the procurement procedures that the data on all the vehicles were vague and inaccurate, and it did not contact the Supplier Group on its own initiative. Secondly, in response to the applicant's claim, the defendant asked the Supplier's Group to clarify the information about the declaration of compliance with the technical requirements issued by UAB Parsekas (Annex 8 to the Tender Conditions), but did not apply separately for a document of a similar nature and the commitment agreement of UAB Klaipėdos transportas; as indicated above, the possibility of adjusting the data in the proposal is applicable only once. Thirdly, the appeal in cassation states that these data were at all times in the offer of the Supplier Group (a position which it took in both the first instance and the appeal proceedings). Fourthly, the contracting authority has, in principle, the right to question the legality of its decision in the proceedings (order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 11 December 2013 in civil case No 3K-3-656/2013), but in the present case the defendant asks the Court of Cassation to maintain in force the decision of the court of first instance declaring its actions to be lawful. Thus, the defendant in the proceedings emphasises precisely the basis of the scope (content) of the original offer of the Supplier Group, which, as stated above, is limited to relying on. Fifthly, the appeal in cassation states (the correctness of these arguments is not decided separately)that in certain cases the court itself must fulfil the obligations arising from Article 45(3) of the LSA in favour of the contracting authority, but neither the contracting authority nor the Supplier Group has expressly refuted the arguments of the court of appeal in relation to the garbage truck "DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane" as a means of proof of technical capacity is not suitable for use.

91. In that regard, it should be noted that the defendant, in arguing that the Supplier Group had offered a vehicle in conformity with the EURO 5 standard, submitted to the Court of First Instance a contract of commitments dated 22 November 201 concerning the DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane, in respect of the garbage truck 'DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane'. acquisition (this contract was recognized by the court of first instance as non-public case file), as well as an advertisement from the Internet networklapio. The defendant states in its appeal on a point of law that, pursuant to the contract of obligations of 22 November 201, the Supplier Group hasacquired and will dispose of the DAF FAN CF 250EU/HIAB 21/CRANE garbage truck during the performance of the contract, only that vehicle has not yet been delivered and registered in Lithuania at the time of submission of the tender. Apelicia court considered that there was no clear basis for the possible acquisition of the DAF FAN 75 CF 250 CF 250 EURO 5 HIAB 21 garbage carrier, on which, according to the defendant, the claim concerning the euro 5 standard was based, since the contract of obligations of 22 November 201 and the public announcement on the Internet networklap. did not prove the agreement purchase specific garbage trucksto.

92. Article 49(1) of the LSA provides that the supplier may rely on the capacities of other economic operators to meet the requirements of the financial and economic capacity set out in the procurement documents in accordance with the provisions of Article 47(3) of the LSA or the requirements of technical and professional capacity in accordance with the provisions of Article 47(6) of the LSA, irrespective of the legal nature of the relationship with those economic operators.

93. In accordance with the settled case-law of the Court of Justice, any economic operator is entitled to rely on the capacities of other entities when participating in a given procurement, irrespective of the legal nature of its links with such entities, if the candidate or tenderer proves to the contracting authority that it will indeed have access to the resources of those economic operators necessary for the performance of the contract; although the participant is free to enter into relations with the entities whose capabilities he relies on and to choose the legal nature of such a relationship, he must provide evidence that he will indeed have access to the resources of that entity which are not owned by him and are necessary for the performance of a particular contract (see Court of Justice 2016 7 April sjudgment in Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, paragraphs 33 and 37 and the case-law of the Court of Justice cited therein).

94. The Court of Cassation has also stated that, in acase, it is for the supplier to prove to the contracting authorities that the capacities of third parties (regardless of their actions on behalf of the contracting authorities) will be effectively available to him throughout the performance of the public contract (see Order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 22 June 2017 in civil case No. e3K-3-279-690/2017 paras. 48-53).

95. In the present case, neither under the terms of the Tendering Procedure nor, in general, from the point of view of the legal framework for public procurement, the content of the contract for commitments of 22 November 201 does not meet the criterion of reality, that is to say, it does not substantiate the supplier group's legitimate basis for the use of the DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane. Such a conclusion is due to the fact that the seller indicated in the contract does not own the vehicle (the defendant's own extract from this contract in the cassation complaint states that the vehicle will only belong to the seller in the future), it is not clear who owns it, the contract does not specify the price, and these provisions are the essential conditions of the contract for the sale of the item (Civil Code of the Republic of Lithuania 6.305(1), 6.413(2)), nor is there any data (e.g. engine numbero)) to identify a specific vehicle. In view of the above, I agree with the appellate court's assessment that the contract of obligations does not prove the real availability of the Supplier Group in particular to the 'DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane' garbage truck.

96. Kai supplier wishes to rely on the capacities of other economic operators, he must prove to the contracting authority in the tender(s) that, in the performance of the contract, the resources of the economic operators whose capacities he relies on will be available to him (Article 49(3) of the LPA). The presented assessment of the content of the contract of obligations presupposes not only the conclusion that the Supplier Group flawedly relied on technical capacity, but also the fact that the third party does not own it himself. In the light of the foregoing, it must be held that the Supplier Group has not properly identified a third party whose resources it could rely on to prove compliance with the technical capacity requirement. The Court of Cassation held that if it is not possible to determine in any way from the totality of the tenderer's tender his intention to rely on the capacity of other persons, the possibility of submitting such evidence at a later stage is not recognized (order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 30 November 2017 in civil case No e3K-3-354-690/2017, paragraph 41).

97. The provisions of the legal framework governing public procurement referred to above and the case-law of the Court of Cassation(a) and the interpretations given in the preliminary ruling presuppose that, contrary to the defendant's argument in the appeal on a point of law, there would be no legal basis for enabling the Supplier Group to clarify the data relating to the garbage truck ' DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane". If it is accepted that the data provided by the Supplier Group concerning the vehicle "DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Crane" are inadequate, it must be concluded that the Tiekeel group did not offer a vehicle complying with the EURO 5 standard. Accordingly, the appellate court's finding that the group of T ie haresdoes not meet the requirement of technical and professional capacity laid down in point 2 of Schedule 4 to the Tender Conditions must be held to be well founded.

The contracting authority's refusal to make the applicant aware of the relevant parts of the supplier group's tender and the assessment of that refusal in the course of the legal proceedings

98. During the tendering procedures, the applicant submitted a request to the contracting authority for inspection of the successful tenderer's tender, the defendant made part of the bid of the Supplier Group available to it and did not make the other part available to it as confidential. In its claim to the contracting authority, the applicant did not specifically question such actions on its part, but instead applied to the Court of First Instance for the recovery of the relevant particulars of the successful tenderer's tender. The court of appeal did not decide on this issue separately, and in the cassation proceedings, the applicant, before submitting its response to the appeal on a point of law, submitted to the court a request to make available to the court of first instance the confidential data of the offer of the Supplier Group, which was recognized as confidential by the Court of First Instance, by separately masking commercially sensitive information.

99. In the proceedings before the Court of First Instance, the question of the non-disclosure of part of the offer of the Supplier Group to the plaintiff was considered several times: the application made by the plaintiff in the application for recovery of the relevant data from the defendant was granted by a court resolution; the defendant did not agree with such an obligation to provide information, requested that it be amended; subsequently, three unchallenged orders partially did not satisfy the individual requests of the plaintiff to recover the relevant data from the defendant. the relevant particulars of the Successful Tenderer's tender, treated as a trade secret and non-public file. In view of the above, in the present case, the following waste management contracts have been recognised as non-public data: waste management contracts of UAB Parsekas; JSC "Klaipėdos transportas" concluded a contract of obligations regarding the purchase of a garbage truck; The suppliers' group's proposal contains declarations of the technical characteristics of some of the vehicles.

100. The Bench observes that although the part of the dispute between the parties in question, in view of the examination of other aspects of their disagreement relating to the legality of the assessment of the capacity of the Supplier Group, is not decisive for the procedural outcome of the case, the scope of the cassation proceedings reviewed above (paragraph 42 of this order) is of decisive importance for the procedural outcome of the case, but because of the scope of the cassation proceedings reviewed above (paragraph 42 above), grounds for speaking separately on the (non-)disclosure of tenders for certain rights and obligations of suppliers and contracting authorities (and courts). It should be recalled from the caselaw of the Court of Cassation according to which, where a question of European Union law in question is raised in a binding act of the Court of Justice, the caselaw of the Court of Cassation develops without applying the rules for reversing the rules on the reversal of previous jurisprudence (see (see paragraph 51 of the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 27 June 2018 in civil case No e3K-3-317-469/2018 and the case-law of the Court of Cassation cited therein).

101. In that context, it must be noted, first of all, that, according to the Court's interpretations concerning the rules applicable to the publication of a tender of one supplier to another supplier, the provisions of Directive 2016/943 are not relevant (paragraphs 96 to 102 of the preliminary ruling). In the light of the foregoing, it must be concluded that, in disputes between suppliers and contracting authorities concerning the (non)disclosure of a tender from one tenderer to another, the provisions implementing the provisions of Directive 2016/943, such as Article 1 of the CCP 10, are not applicable. On the other hand, the mere fact that the provisions of the directive referred to above reproduce the national regulation previously in force concerning the definition of a trade secret (Article 1.116 CC) does not mean that this (and the caselaw interpreting them) renders those (and the caselaw interpreting them) irrelevant.

102. It has been clarified by the Court of Cassation that the subject matter of the procedure for reviewing the decisions (or actions) of the contracting authority is any decisions of the contracting authority which infringe the provisions of the legal framework governing public procurement, without imposing any restrictions on the nature and content of those decisions, irrespective of the possibility of the supplier being awarded damages and the moment the decisions are taken. Any decision taken by a contracting authority in respect of a public contract which falls within the ratione materiae of the regulation of public procurement (substantive basis) and which may have legal effects, whether or not that act is adopted in the framework of a formal contract award procedure, constitutes a decision to which the review procedure is to be applied (see Order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 23 May 2018 in civil case No. e3K-3-211-248/2018, paragraphs 57, 58 and the case-law of the Court of Justice cited therein).

103. In view of the above, the Court of Cassation held that the supplier's subjective right of access to his competitor's tender is separately enshrined in law and is therefore autonomous and protected; although the right of suppliers to have access to the tenders of other suppliers does indeed have the characteristics of a procedural element, the nature of the claim made in order to defend the exercise of that right is therefore not to be regarded as purely procedural and not separately (independently) protected (see e.g. the order of the Court of Cassation in Civil Case No. e3K-3-211-248/2018 paras 67, 70). It should be noted that, in principle, identical interpretations are given in paragraphs 103 to 111 of the preliminary ruling.

104. Thus, according to the case-law of the Court of Cassation and the Court of Justice, a decision of a contracting authority not to make a tenderer,in whole or in part, the tender of another supplier public , but is an independent, separately contested decision, which alone may lead to the initiation of a review procedure, that is to say, a claim lodged and, where appropriate, an action brought before a court, without further questioning the other decisions of the contracting authority, such as the conclusion of other decisions of the contracting authority, such as the ranking of the winners of the public procurement tender, the legality of the legality. It is the applicant himself who chooses, in a particular case, a specific remedy for his rights, that is to say, merely to challenge the decision of the contracting authority not to acquaint himself with another supplier's tender or to call that decision into question with other decisions taken in the course of the procurement procedure.

105. It should be noted that the LSA (including Directive 89/665) does not specify the contested decisions of the contracting authority, so that the decision of the contracting authority in question not to disclose the information requested (not necessarily related to the proposal of another supplier) ex lege (by law) is one of the possible subject of the review procedures. In view of the fact that the position put forward by the applicant in its written submissions to the Court of Cassation that the LSA does not impose an obligation on suppliers to submit a claim against the contracting authority's decision not to make public another tenderer's tender is recognised as legally unfounded.

106. Attention should be drawn to the fact that, as the Court noted in its preliminary ruling, the subjectmatter of the review procedure is not only the decision of the contracting authority not to disclose the relevant particulars of the tender, but also to make those particulars public, since such a decision necessarily affects the rights and obligations of a particular economic operator, inter alia,, a relationship based on trust between him and the contracting authority, a competitive advantage (paragraph 126 of the preliminary ruling). In view of the above, it must be concluded that the principle of effective protection of rights applies not only to the applicant for information, but also to its holder.

107. In this context, it should be noted that the decision taken by the contracting authority to make public the relevant particulars of the tender which, at the direction of the economic operator which submitted them, are confidential, that is to say, in the light of the differences between the assessments made by that supplier and the contracting authority as regards the protection of specific data, must not coincide with the de facto temporal disclosure. According to the Court of Justice, the holder of the information to be disclosed must in any event be given the opportunity to seek interim measures from the contracting authority or the court in order to avoid irreparable harm. A similar position is taken in the case-law of the Court of Cassation, which has noted that in certain cases, although it is not de jure obliged to apply the period of deferral, the contracting authority, while ensuring the effectiveness of the defence of rights, must give time to appeal against its relevant decision to the supplier seeking to prevent the implementation of that decision (see, by analogy, the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 6 April 2010 in civil proceedings No. 3K-3-150/2010).

108. Section 101(1)(1) of the LSA provides, inter alia, in general terms, that a supplier who considers that the contracting authority has not complied with the requirements of this Act and thereby has infringed or will prejudice his legitimate interests may apply to the court for annulment or amendment of decisions of the contracting authority which do not comply with the requirements of that Law. (not)to make the offer of the supplier concerned illegal, but also to modify its content, i.e., to narrow or expand the scope (nature) of the information to be (not) disclosed to the plaintiff (see paragraphs 110, 120, 121 above).

109. The regulation of public procurement in question presupposes, inter alia, the aforesaid restrictions on the parties to the procurement dispute to rely on new grounds or to raise new requirements in the proceedings (paragraphs 45, 47 of this order). In view of the above, a supplier who fails to submit to the contracting authority a claim for that refusal to make it aware of another tenderer's tender shall, in principle, be limited, subsequently in the proceedings, to question and/or indirectly (by means of a claim) such a decision of the contracting authority, either directly (by means of a claim) or indirectly (by asking the court to recover evidence) and/or to rely on new facts which have come to light in the proceedings, if he has not properly implemented his interests in the course of the procurement procedures.

110. On the other hand, it should be noted that the relevant facts of the case may be made public on the own initiative of the court hearing the dispute between the parties. The established rules on the publicity of the hearing and the application of the publicity of the case-file underline the exclusivity of the non-application of the principle of public hearing and require that the publicity of the case be limited only to the extent and to the extent necessary to protect the rights and legitimate interests of the parties. when making a written order declaring a certain part of the material in the case to be non-public, the court must individualise the information to be protected (specific evidence) and argue the need to protect it; the higher court, in a case in which the lower court had appointed a closed hearing and/or declared all or part of the case file to be non-public, is not bound by this decision and may choose a different scope and method of publicity of the hearing and/or the publicity of the case file. The court, recognizing certain material as non-public or appointing a closed hearing, decides on a question of a procedural nature; i.e.a traffic speech on a procedural issue does not have the force of res judicata (final court decision) (see, for example, paragraphs 64, 67, 70 of the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 14 February 2017 in civil case No. 3K-3-72-421/2017).

111. Where the court ex officio modifies the procedural decision of the lower court on the content (scope) of the non-public file and declares the relevant case file to be public, in view of the legal regulation on public procurement discussed above, the plaintiff, who at the pre-litigation stage of the dispute did not properly question the decision of the contracting authority not to disclose the relevant data, has the right to to rely on data made public on the court's initiative to the extent that this does not lead to a statutory restriction on the assertion of new claims in legal proceedings and to reliance on new grounds.

112. It should be noted that the applicant, as stated above, although it did not specifically question in the claim the decision of the contracting authority not to make public the bid of the Supplier Group, it has always consistently argued that it does not meet the requirements of financial and technical capacity and that the information recognised as confidential relates precisely to those qualification conditions. In view of the fact that the applicant was not provided with the relevant information (paragraph 51 of this order), the bench of the Judges will not decide specifically in the present case whether, in view of the fact that it has not properly exercised its defence of rights at the pre-litigation stage of the dispute, the applicant could lawfully have used the classified information if, at any stage of the proceedings, those data were exmitted by the court officio would be recognized as public file in the case.

113. With regard to the latter aspect, it should be noted, first of all, that, according to the consistently established caselaw of the Court of Cassation, the supplier's right to protect the non-public information separately contained in the tender covers only those data which qualify as a commercial/industrial secret in Article 1.116(1) of the CC in the sense of the part; The mere fact that, in other cases (as a general rule), certain information relating to the supplier and his activities is not freely available to other economic operators does not mean that it is protected in public procurement procedures if it does not correspond to the concept of a trade secret; thus, it is the recognition of data as a trade secret that is the most important criterion for deciding the question of providing information to the supplier about another supplier, his proposal (see, for example, paragraphs 59, 60 of the order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 13 January 2021 in civil case No e3K-3-184-248/2021 and the case-law of the Court of Cassation cited therein). It should be noted that the Court's interpretations do not call into question this nature(s) of the (non)disclosure.

114. In the preliminary ruling, the purpose of public procurement is to ensure undistorted competition, and it is therefore necessary that the contracting authority does not disclose information which could harm the fair competition between economic operatorsin the context of a dispute or in other tenders; moreover, in the event of a relationship of trust between suppliers and the contracting authorities in the context of a public procurement procedure, suppliers who have submitted tenders must be to ensure that the contracting authority does not disclose to other tenderers information which would cause them harm (paragraphs 115, 117 of the preliminary ruling). In order to ascertain whether the information requested for disclosure has such characteristics, the contracting authority must cooperate with the economic operator submitting the tender in order to provide a detailed explanation of the relevant circumstances on the basis of which a legitimate decision may be taken.

115. To this end, it must contact the supplier concerned, ask him to explain the specific reasons and reasons why certain information has been marked as protected, and, upon receipt of these explanations, evaluate them. As has been clarified in the case-law of the Court of Cassation, such cooperation between the contracting authority and the tenderer who submitted the tender is possible even in cases where the economic operator does not indicate in advance that any part of his tender is confidential (see Order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 18 October 2013 in civil case No 3K-3-495/2013). The contracting authority must in any event take a decision on the (non-)disclosure of the relevant part of the tender, regardless of the passivity of the tenderer who submitted the tender, non-cooperation.

116. Itis to be noted that neither the respondent at the pre-trial stage of the dispute nor the trial court in the proceedings, in the opinion of the bench of the judges, has clearly substantiated its decisions not to disclose the relevant details of the offer of the Supplier Group on the above grounds (paragraphs 41, 49, 66, 88, 91 of this order). Although, in its defence, the defendant stated that the information requested could cause damage to the economic entities constituting the Supplier Group, undermine competitive advantages and restrict opportunities to compete, it did not comment further on this, especially since the applicant and the entities constituting the Supplier Group, in particular UAB Klaipėdos autobusų parkas and UAB Klaipėdos transportas, are engaged in atypical activities. The Court of First Instance did not give any reasons at all to its decisions to declare that part of the proposals submitted by the third party were not public.

117. In the light of the foregoing, it must be held that, in the present case, the data recognised by the courts as confidential information are to be regarded as public file in the case. First, as regards the declarations of the technical characteristics of the vehicles, it should be noted, on the one hand, that the models of garbage trucks were common to all the parties to the dispute in the proceedings and, therefore, the declaration of their characteristics in accordance with the Tender Documents cannot undermine or cause damage to the competitiveness of the members of the Group of Suppliers. Secondly, the obligation agreement concluded between UAB Klaipėdos transportas and UAB Verslo alėja is also not to be recognised as falling within the scope of the trade secret of the contractors, since this one-page agreement (without the details of the parties and the attached photograph of the vehicle) does not contain, in principle, any provisions presupposing the competitive advantage of these economic entities; moreover, as indicated above (paragraph 95 of this order), in it, in addition to the declaratory provisions that the seller himself will purchase for an undetermined price the vehicle "DAF FAN CF 250 EUR05/HIAB 21/Kranas" and sell it to UAB Klaipėdos transportas, as well as the terms of transfer of this vehicle, etc. the conditions, according to the panel of judges, do not contain any commercially sensitive information, the disclosure of which could cause harm to contractors. Although the vehicle lease agreement between UAB Parsekas and UAB Salarijus is of a wider scope, it also did not identify any commercially sensitive data, especially since, as indicated above, information was made public at the pre-trial stage of the dispute that the vehicle Nissan Primastar would be used.

118. Thirdly, the five sanitary toll contracts submitted by PARSEKAS UAB, concluded with different customers, according to the Court of Cassation, also do not contain any relevant data that could cause damage, undermine the competitive advantage. , that they were prepared specifically by UAB Parsekas, they contain general provisions on the contractual obligations of the service provider and the customer (for example, how long it takes to issue an invoice, the amount of interest on late payment is applied) that are characteristic of contracts of this kind; moreover, although annexes 2 to the contracts refer to the rates, these annexes have not been submitted to the court; Annexes No 1 to these contracts are not completed and define the application for the waste that can be collected, which should be completed in the case of a specific order.

119. It should be noted that, even if the contracting authority and the court had rightly recognised the abovementioned documents as confidential information (non-public file), in any event their actions did not guarantee the applicant's rights to effective protection of rights. the decision contains interpretations according to which both contracting authorities and courts must ensure an appropriate balance between the interests of the two suppliers, namely the applicant for the information and the holder. This obligation on their part means not only that cooperation must be carried out with the tenderer who submittedthe tender , asking him to provide detailed and clear explanations justifying the confidentiality of the information, in the light of those explanations and in a reasoned decision on them, but also in the fact that he must be sufficiently motivated to provide information to the economic operator requesting it.

120. In the light of the court's interpretations (paragraphs 120 to 126, 135 and 136 of the preliminary ruling), it must be concluded that, contrary to what has occurred in the present case, even where it is reasonably concluded that certain data are of a confidential nature and must therefore be protected, that does not mean that no information can be provided to the person requesting the information. Contracting authorities, as indicated above, must give reasons for their decisions in this field, in accordance with the principle of sound administration, and the scope of such an obligation is directly correlated with the nature(s) and extent of the information to be protected.

121. In any event, the document in corpore itself (in its entirety), such as the contract, cannot be disclosed to another economic operator, since the protection of the information cannot negate the duty of reasoning and presuppose a fictitiousness of the defence of the plaintiff's rights. In view of this, the arguments for not acquainting the supplier with the proposal of another tenderer cannot be limited to an indication of the confidentiality of information. The contracting authority (and the courts), when reconciling the right of one supplier to the confidentiality of information and its protection with the imperative of effective defence of the rights of another supplier, must, depending on the specific balance between those interests, provide the supplier requesting the information with at least a minimum amount of information so that it can decide on its basis the need to initiate a review procedure.

122. As stated by the Court, the contracting authority is obliged to notify its decision to treat certain data as confidential as neutrally as possible and in such a way that such notification preserves the confidentiality of the specific elements of those particulars (and therefore not all of them) whose protection is justified in that regard, their essential content; to this end, the contracting authority may provide a summary of certain aspects of the tender and their technical characteristics in order to prevent the content of confidential information from being identified; it may also provide the proposing entity to request a non-confidential version of documents containing confidential information.

123. Thecourt of cassation's interpretations that the relevant data can, in principle, be systematized and presented in such a way that, although their disclosure will make it possible to understand what equipment, materials, etc. are part of the subject-matter of the public contract, it will not reveal the specific technological solutions proposed by the supplier (answers as to how, in what way a particular device works, what components it is composed of, etc.), his knowledge-how (know-how, technological innovations), drawings, etc.; rin the presence and general knowledge of several technological solutions for a particular object in the inca, the choice of the economic operator participating in the public procurement procedure, which one of the possible technical solutions to use, does not per se (in itself) constitute a trade secret (see paragraph 47 of the above order of the Court of Cassation in civil case No e3K-3-16-378/2018).

124. In addition, the Court of Cassation has also clarified in this regard that, where a conflict arises in a case between the clarity of the procedural decision and the completeness of the statement of reasons and the desire to protect the trade secret of a party to the proceedings, the court must, as far as possible, ensure the achievement of both of those objectives; a decision of limited content, anonymised by a procedural decision and a detailed reasoned decision, including the use of confidential information, could only be seen by a higher court if it continued to deal with the same dispute or by another court re-examining the case (paragraph 75 of the order of the Court of Cassation in civil case No e3K-3-16-378/2018 referred to above).

125. The Court of Cassation clarifies that if the court hearing a dispute between the parties concerning the non-disclosure of confidential information and finds that the decision of the contracting authority not to disclose the requested information was duly reasoned and well founded, it is under an obligation to decide ex officio on the content and significance of the classified data for the legality of the results of the tendering procedure, in accordance with paragraphs 39 and 40 of this order. clarifications on the active role of the court.

The outcome of the proceedings and the costs

126. On the basis of the totality of the above arguments, the bench finds that the courts of first and appellate instance, in considering the facts concerning certain vehicles proposed by the Supplier Group and which were not relied upon in the claim and in the reply to it, have infringed the legal regulation defining the limits of the pre-litigation stage and the case-law of the Court of Cassation interpreting it, misclassifyingand interpretedthe requirement of clause 4 of Annex 4 to the Tender Conditions and came to the unfounded conclusion that UAB Parsekas had justified its declared annual income from activities related to the collection and transportation of mixed municipal waste, and therefore the Supplier Group complied with this requirement of the Tender Conditions. Inthe meantime, the appellate court, while relying on other considerations, has, in principle, come to the reasonable conclusion that the Supplier Group has not demonstrated compliance with the requirement laid down in point 2 of Annex 4 to the Tender Specifications concerning the possession of vehicles meeting the specific technical requirements, therefore, the Bid of the Supplier Group could not be declared successful in the Tender. Since the infringements found by the court of appeal do not affect the outcome of the final procedural decision of the court, the appeal in cassation must be dismissed and the decision of the court of appeal should be left unchanged (Article 346 CCP, Article 359(1)(1) CCP).

127. Finding that the trial courts, in deciding on the confidentiality of the offer of the Supplier Group submitted by the respondent to the case as non-public material, violated the legal regulation provision discussed above governingthe determination of the content (scope) of the non-public case fileAnd deviated from the relevant interpretations of the Court of Cassation and the Court of Justice, the order of the Klaipėda Regional Court of 30 January 2019, which recognized as confidential information and non-public case file, the data of the offer of the supplier group submitted by the defendant as confidential information and non-public case file are to be considered as public case file.

128. As to the other arguments of the cassation and the response to it as legally irrelevant to the resolution of the dispute between the parties, the bench of the judges does not comment.

129. The party in whose favour the decision is made is ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings against the second party (Article 93(1), (2) and Article 98(1) of the CCP). The costs incurred by a party for the assistance of a lawyer or an assistant lawyer, taking into account the complexity of the particular case and the costs of the work and time of the lawyer or assistant lawyer, are awarded no more than those set out in the recommendations on the amount of remuneration approved by the Minister of Justice together with the Chairman of the Lithuanian Bar Council (Article 98(2) of the CCP).

130. Article 93(6) of the CCP provides that the costs of litigation arising from a court's referral to the Constitutional Court or the competent judicial authority of the European Union, as well as from an appeal to the administrative court on the legality of a regulatory act, are to be allocated to the participants in the proceedings in accordance with the rules set out in that article.

131. It has been clarified in the case-law of the Court of Cassation that, in determining the amount of the costs for the preparation of written explanations to the Court of Justice, the guidelines on the maximum amount of fees awarded in civil cases for assistance provided by a lawyer or an assistant lawyer, approved by Order No 1R-85 of the Minister of Justice of the Republic of Lithuania of 2 April 2004 and The Lithuanian The Resolution of the Bar Council of 26 March 2004 "On the approval of the maximum amount of fees awarded in civil cases for assistance provided by a lawyer or an assistant lawyer", (hereinafter referred to as the "Recommendations") sets out in paragraph 8.2 the coefficient for the preparation of a claim, counterclaim, defence or counterclaim (order of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 24 April 2019 in civil case No e3K-3-150-611/2019, paragraph 22).

132. If the defendant's appeal in cassation is not upheld, the costs incurred by the defendant before the Court of Cassation are not reimbursed.

133. The third party, UAB Klaipėdos autobusų parkas, requests that the applicant be ordered to pay eur 6942.01 in respect of the costs of the proceedings to the lawyer's legal aid for the preparation of procedural documents for the Court of Cassation and the Court of Justice. In view of the fact that thethird party participated in the case of UAB Klaipėdos autobusų parkas in support of the defendant's position in principle, if the appeal in cassation is not satisfied, it is not awarded the reimbursement of the costs of the proceedings.

134. The applicant requests that the applicant be ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings to the lawyer's legal aid of EUR 15 512.20 for the preparation of the pleadings before the Court of Cassation and the Court of Justice. Submitted VAT invoices, reports on services rendered and payment orders to justify the expenditure:

134.1. He incurred EUR 3484.80 for the preparation of the response to the cassation appeal and EUR 363 for the preparation of the application for access to the documents (VAT invoice No 2019-07-022 of 31 July 2019, VAT invoice No 2019-08-027 of 31 August 2019, VAT invoice No 2019-08-027 of 31 July 2019 and 1 August 2019–31 days of legal services provided, statements from the bank account regarding payments made on 9 and 20 September 2019). The reimbursement of the costs claimed for the preparation of the response to the cassation appeal exceeds the maximum amount of the lawyer's assistance costs to be reimbursed in accordance with point 8.14 of the Guidelines– EUR 2146.59 (1.7 x EUR 1262.70 (EUR 2019) m. Q1)). The reimbursement of the costs claimed for the preparation of the application for access to documents does not exceed the maximum amount of the lawyer's assistance costs to be reimbursed in accordance with paragraph 8.16 of the Guidelines – EUR 505.08 (0.4 x EUR 1262.70 (2019 years 1 quarter)).

134.2. For the preparation of the application for the award of costs and for the award of costs, he incurred costs of EUR 108.90 (VAT invoice No. 2019-11-032 of 29 November 2019, statement of legal services provided on 1-30 November 2019, extract from the bank account regarding the payment made on 14 April 2020). The reimbursement of the costs claimed for the preparation of the application and the award of costs does not exceed the maximum amount of the lawyer's assistance costs to be reimbursed in accordance with paragraph 8.16 of the Guidelines– EUR 543.44 (0.4 x EUR 1358.60 (Q4 2019)).

134.3. The preparation of the written observations submitted to the Court of Justice on the application for a preliminary ruling of the Court of Cassation entailed costs of EUR 3775.20 (VAT invoice No 2020-04-022 of 30 April 2020, report on legal services rendered between 1 and 30 April 2020, extract from a bank account for payment made on 5 June 2020). The reimbursement of the costs claimed for the preparation of written explanations to the Court of Justice exceeds the maximum amount of the lawyer's assistance costs to be reimbursed in accordance with point 8.2 of the Guidelines , which is EUR 3396.50 (2.5 x EUR 1358.60 (Q4 2019)).

134.4. The preparation of the additional written explanations and answers submitted to the Court of Justice incurred costs of EUR 2662 (VAT invoice No 2021-01-042 of 29 January 2021, report on legal services provided on 1-31 January 2021, extract from the bank account regarding the payment made on 25 February 2021). The reimbursement of the costs claimed for the preparation of the written explanations and answers submitted to the Court of Justice shall not exceed the maximum amount of the lawyer's fees to be reimbursed in accordance with point 8.2 of the Guidelines , which is EUR 3637 (2.5 x EUR 1454.80 (Q3 2020)).

134.5. For the preparation of the notification of the progress of the proceedings before the Court of Justice (15 minutes), he incurred costs of EUR 36.30 (VAT invoice No 2021-04-076 of 30 April 2021, report on legal services provided on 1-30 April 2021, extract from the bank account regarding the payment made on 28 May 2021). Subject to paragraphs 8.20 and 9 of the Recommendations, reimbursement of costs for the provision of the specified legal services of a lawyer is not awarded.

134.6. For the analysis of the preliminary decision of the Court of Justice, the identification of further actions and the informing of the customer (1 hour 30 minutes), he incurred expenses of EUR 290.40 (VAT invoice No. 2021-09-039 of 30 September 2021, report on legal services provided on 1-30 September 2021, extract from the bank account regarding the payment made on 12 October 2021). The reimbursement of the costs claimed for the specified legal services does not exceed the maximum amount of the lawyer's assistance costs to be reimbursed in accordance with paragraph 8.20 of the Recommendations – EUR 313.28 (2 hours x 0.1 x EUR 1566.40 (Q2 2021)).

134.7. For the preparation of written explanations to the Court of Cassation incurred expenses of EUR 1161.60 and EUR 3630 (VAT invoice No. 2021-10-014 of 29 October 2021, report on legal services provided on 1-30 October 2021, statement from the bank account regarding the payment made on 12 October 2021, VAT invoice No. 2021-11-015 of 30 November 2021, Report on legal services provided on 1-30 November 2021, statement from the bank account regarding the payment made on 30 November 2021). The reimbursement of the costs claimed for the preparation of written explanations exceeds the maximum amount of attorney's fees to be reimbursed in accordance with paragraph 8.16 of the Guidelines – EUR 626.56 (0.4 x EUR 1566.40 (Q2 2021)).

135. In view of the fact that the reimbursement of the costs claimed by the applicant exceeds the maximum amounts of the fees to be reimbursedand the fees for the assistance of a lawyer laid down in the Guidelines, the maximum amount of the lawyer's assistance costs incurred by the applicant before the Court of Cassation and the Court of Justice is 9593.95 Eur (2146,59 Eur + 363 Eur + 108,90 Eur + 3396,50 Eur + 2662 Eur + 290,40 Eur + 626,56 Eur) (Article 98(1) CCP).

136. The caselaw of the Court of Cassation is to be recalled, according to which, where a applicant defends its interests against two procedural rivals (normally against the contracting authority and the successful tenderer), once the arguments of the latter parties have been found to be unfounded, it is correct to order them to pay the applicant's costs in equal shares (Article 93(4) CCP) (see, for example, the order of the Court of Cassation referred to above (e.g. the order of the Court of Cassation referred to above(e))s in civil case No. e3K-3-272-378/2020, paragraph 201).

137. In the present case, uab Klaipėdos autobusų parkas, UAB Parsekas and UAB Klaipėdos transportas (a group of suppliers recognized as the winner of the Competition) are participating on the side of the defendant as third parties who do not make independent claims. However, UAB Klaipėdos transportas did not submit procedural documents in all instances of the courts, UAB Klaipėdos autobusų parkas submitted a response to the applicant's appeal to the Court of Appeal and submitted written explanations to the Court of Cassation regarding the Preliminary Ruling of the Court of Justice , UAB Parsekas also submitted only written explanations to the Court of Cassation.

138. In the light of the foregoing, the bench of judges decides that, in such circumstances, it is right to order the defendant to pay the costs of the proceedings in cassation proceedings, i.e. the partyto the proceedings o, against whomthe applicant defended her arguments (Article 93(1) and (4) of the CCP).

139. According to the certificate of the Supreme Court of Lithuania of 10 December 2021 on the costs related to the service of procedural documents, the Court of Cassation incurred such costs of EUR 13, therefore, the defendant is ordered to pay the State compensation for these costs (Article 79 CCP, Article 88(1)(3), Article 96).

a chamber of judges of the Civil Division of the Supreme Court of Lithuania in accordance with Article 359(1)(1), Article 362(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure of the Republic of Lithuania, n u t a r i a :

Orders the State to order the defendant UAB Klaipėda Region Waste Management Centreo (j. a. k. 163743744) EUR 13 (thirteen) in respect of costs. The amount awarded to the State is payable to the collection account of the budget revenues of the State Tax Inspectorate (j. a. k. 188659752), contribution code – 5660.

THE COURT (Ninth Chamber), composed of D. Šváby (Rapporteur), acting as President of the Chamber, S. Rodin and K. Jürimäe, Judges, Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to give a decision by reasoned order, in accordance with Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, makes the following

Order

1 The request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 30 of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1), read in conjunction with recital 68 of that directive.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Autostrada Torino Ivrea Valle d'Aosta – Ativa SpA ('Ativa'), on one hand, and, on the other, the Presidenza del Consiglio dei Ministri (Presidency of the Council of Ministers, Italy), the Ministero delle Infrastrutture e dei Trasporti (Ministry of Infrastructure and Transport, Italy) ('the MIT'), the Ministero dell'Economia e delle Finanze (Ministry of Economy and Finance, Italy) and the Autorità di regolazione dei trasporti (Transport Administration Authority, Italy), relating to the MIT's rejection of two project financing proposals submitted by Ativa.

Legal framework

3 Recitals 5, 8, and 68 of Directive 2014/23 state as follows:

'(5) This Directive recognises and reaffirms the right of Member States and public authorities to decide the means of administration they judge to be most appropriate for performing works and providing services. In particular, this Directive should not in any way affect the freedom of Member States and public authorities to perform works or provide services directly to the public or to outsource such provision by delegating it to third parties. Member States or public authorities should remain free to define and specify the characteristics of the services to be provided, including any conditions regarding the quality or price of the services, in accordance with Union law, in order to pursue their public policy objectives.

(8) For concessions equal to or above a certain value, it is appropriate to provide for a minimum coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts based on the principles of the TFEU so as to guarantee the opening-up of concessions to competition and adequate legal certainty. Those coordinating provisions should not go beyond what is necessary in order to achieve the aforementioned objectives and to ensure a certain degree of flexibility. Member States should be allowed to complete and develop further those provisions if they find it appropriate, in particular to better ensure compliance with the principles set out above.

(68) Concessions are usually long-term, complex arrangements where the concessionaire assumes responsibilities and risks traditionally borne by the contracting authorities and contracting entities and normally falling within their remit. For that reason, subject to compliance with this Directive and with the principles of transparency and equal treatment, contracting authorities and contracting entities should be allowed considerable flexibility to define and organise the procedure leading to the choice of concessionaire. However, in order to ensure equal treatment and transparency throughout the awarding process, it is appropriate to provide for basic guarantees as to the awarding process, including information on the nature and scope of the concession, limitation of the number of candidates, the dissemination of information to candidates and tenderers and the availability of appropriate records. It is also necessary to provide that the initial terms of the concession notice should not be deviated from, in order to prevent unfair treatment of any potential candidates.'

4 Article 1 of that directive, entitled 'Subject matter and scope', provides, in paragraph 1:

'This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities and contracting entities by means of a concession, whose value is estimated to be not less than the threshold laid down in Article 8.'

5 Article 2 of that directive, entitled 'Principle of free administration by public authorities', provides, in paragraph 1:

'This Directive recognises the principle of free administration by national, regional and local authorities in conformity with national and Union law. Those authorities are free to decide how best to manage the execution of works or the provision of services, to ensure in particular a high level of quality, safety and affordability, equal treatment and the promotion of universal access and of user rights in public services.

…’

6 According to Article 3 of that directive, which is entitled ‘Principle of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency’:

‘1. Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the concession award procedure, including the estimate of the value, shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators or certain works, supplies or services.

2. Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall aim at ensuring the transparency of the award procedure and of the performance of the contract, while complying with Article 28.’

7 Article 8 of that directive, entitled ‘Threshold and methods for calculating the estimated value of concessions’, provides, in paragraph 1:

‘This Directive shall apply to concessions the value of which is equal to or greater than EUR 5 186 000.’

8 Title II of Directive 2014/23, which sets out the general principles and procedural guarantees for the award of concessions, contains Articles 30 to 41.

9 Under the title ‘General principles’, Article 30 of that directive provides, in paragraphs 1 and 2:

‘1. The contracting authority or contracting entity shall have the freedom to organise the procedure leading to the choice of concessionaire subject to compliance with this Directive.

2. The design of the concession award procedure shall respect the principles laid down in Article 3. In particular during the concession award procedure, the contracting authority or contracting entity shall not provide information in a discriminatory manner which may give some candidates or tenderers an advantage over others.’

10 Article 37 of that directive, entitled ‘Procedural guarantees’, states, in paragraph 6:

‘The contracting authority or contracting entity may hold negotiations with candidates and tenderers. The subject matter of the concession, the award criteria and the minimum requirements shall not be changed during the course of the negotiations.’

Italian law

Law No 11 of 28 January 2016

11 Under Article 1(1)(lll) of legge n. 11 – Deleghe al Governo per l’attuazione delle direttive 2014/23/UE, 2014/24/UE e 2014/25/UE del Parlamento europeo e del Consiglio, del 26 febbraio 2014, sull’aggiudicazione dei contratti di concessione, sugli appalti pubblici e sulle procedure d’appalto degli enti erogatori nei settori dell’acqua, dell’energia, dei trasporti e dei servizi postali, nonché per il riordino della disciplina vigente in materia di contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture (Law No 11, delegating to the Government the transposition of directives 2014/23/EU, 2014/24/EU and 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts, on public procurement and procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, and recasting the provisions applicable to public works contracts, public services contracts and public supply contracts) of 28 January 2016 (GURI No 23 of 29 January 2016), the delegated legislature was required to lay down the rules governing ‘the commencement of tendering procedures for the award of new motorway concessions no later than 24 months before expiry of the existing concessions, with a review of the system for motorway concessions, concerning in particular the introduction of a prohibition on extension clauses and provisions, in accordance with the new general regime for concession contracts'.

12 According to Article 1(1)(mmm) of that law, the delegated legislature was to establish 'specific transitional provisions for awarding motorway concessions which have expired or are due to expire on the date on which the decree transposing the directives enters into force, in order to ensure full compliance with the principle of competitive tendering and, for concessions where the contracting authority or contracting entity exercises over the concessionaire a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, with the principles enshrined in Article 17 of [Directive 2014/23]'.

The new Public Procurement Code

13 It is apparent from Article 180 of decreto legislativo n. 50 – Codice dei contratti pubblici (Legislative Decree No 50 laying down a public procurement code) of 18 April 2016 (GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016) ('the new Public Procurement Code') that public-private partnership contracts include, inter alia, project financing.

14 According to Article 183 of that code, entitled 'Project financing':

'1. In relation to public works or works in the public interest, including works concerning structures intended for leisure boating, included in the programming instruments officially adopted by the contracting authority under the legislation in force, including port plans, which can be fully or partly financed by private capital, contracting authorities may, instead of awarding contracts by means of a concession under Part III, award a concession by means of a tender procedure on the basis of the feasibility project, by publishing a contract notice calling for the submission of tenders envisaging the use of resources provided in full or in part by the persons submitting proposals. In any event, for infrastructure relating to track work, the corresponding proposals must be included in the programming instruments adopted by the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transport.

2. The contract notice shall be published in accordance with the procedures laid down in Article 72 or Article 36(9), depending on the value of the works, and the tender procedure shall be based on the feasibility project prepared by the contracting authority. The feasibility project on which the tender procedure is based shall be prepared by personnel of the contracting authority who personally meet the requirements necessary for preparation of that project, belonging to the various professions involved in the multidisciplinary approach that informs the feasibility project. Where there are insufficient adequately skilled personnel, the contracting authorities may engage third parties, chosen in accordance with the procedures laid down by this code, to draft the feasibility project. The costs incurred in outsourcing activities to third parties may be included in the economic scope of the work.

15. Economic operators may submit proposals to the contracting authorities to perform, on the basis of a concession, public works or works in the public interest, including works concerning structures intended for leisure boating, that are not included in the programming instruments officially adopted by the contracting authority under the legislation in force. The proposal shall contain a feasibility project, a draft agreement, the economic and financial plan certified by one of the entities referred to in the first sentence of Article 183(9) and the service and management specifications. In the case of structures for leisure boating, the feasibility project must describe the qualitative and functional characteristics of the work and the scope of the requirements to be satisfied and the specific services to be provided, must contain a study including a description of the project and the data necessary to determine and assess the principal effects that the project may have on the environment, and must be supplemented in accordance with any specific requests by the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transport, adopted by means of decrees of that ministry. The economic and financial plan shall include the amount of expenditure incurred in preparing the proposal, including royalties in respect of intellectual works under Article 2578 of the Civil Code. The proposal shall be accompanied by declarations on honour relating to compliance with the conditions referred to in Article 183(17), the surety referred to in Article 93 and the undertaking to provide surety for the amount indicated in the third sentence of

Article 183(9) in the event of a call for competition. The contracting authority shall assess the feasibility of the proposal within a strict time limit of three months. The contracting authority may for that purpose invite the person submitting the proposal to make any changes to the feasibility project necessary for it to be approved. If the person submitting the proposal does not include the requested modifications, the proposal may not be evaluated as feasible. The feasibility project, modified if applicable, shall be included in the programming instruments adopted by the contracting authority under the legislation in force and shall be approved in accordance with the procedures applicable to the approval of projects. The person submitting the proposal must include any further modifications requested at the project approval stage, and the project shall otherwise be deemed not to have been approved. The approved feasibility project shall serve as the basis for the tender procedure, in which the person submitting the proposal shall be invited to participate. In the contract notice, the contracting authority may ask participants, including the person making the proposal, to submit alternative scenarios for the project. The contract notice shall indicate that the promoter may exercise its pre-emptive right. The participants, including the promoter, must satisfy the requirements laid down in Article 183(8) and shall submit a bid containing a draft agreement, the economic and financial plan certified by one of the entities referred to in the first sentence of Article 183(9), the service and management specifications and any alternative scenario for the feasibility project. Article 183(4), (5), (6), (7) and (13) shall apply. If the promoter is not awarded the contract, it may, within 15 days from notification of the award, exercise its pre-emptive right and be awarded the contract if it undertakes to comply with the contractual obligations on the same terms as those proposed by the successful bidder. If the promoter is not awarded the contract and does not exercise its pre-emptive right it will be entitled to be reimbursed, by the successful bidder, the amount of the expenditure incurred in preparing the proposal up to the limits referred to in Article 183(9). If the promoter exercises its pre-emptive right, the initial successful bidder will be entitled to be reimbursed, by the promoter, the amount of the expenditure incurred in preparing its bid up to the limits referred to in Article 183(9).

16. The proposals referred to in the first sentence of Article 183(15) may relate to all procurement on a public-private partnership basis instead of to concessions.

15 Article 216(1) and (23) of the new Public Procurement Code provides:

‘1. Without prejudice to the provisions of this article or other provisions of this code, this code shall apply to procedures and contracts for which notices launching the procedure for the selection of a contractor are published after the date on which it enters into force, and, in the case of contracts where no notice is published, to procedures and contracts in relation to which invitations to tender have not yet been sent on the date on which this code enters into force.

23. Preliminary projects relating to the execution of public works or public interest works in relation to concession proposals under Article 153 or Article 175 of [decreto legislativo n. 163 – Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 – Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006)] for which a declaration of public interest has already been made but which have not yet been approved on the date of entry into force of this code shall be subject to an assessment of economic and financial feasibility and to approval by the administrative authorities in accordance with the provisions of this code. If the preliminary project is not approved the procedures launched shall be revoked, as shall the classification of any promoters, which will be entitled to be reimbursed their incurred and proven costs in creating the project on which the tender procedure was based, if those costs were mandatory in order to carry out an environmental impact and zoning study.’

The amending decree

16 Decreto legislativo n. 56 – Disposizioni integrative e correttive al decreto legislativo 18 aprile 2016, n. 50 (Legislative Decree No 56 supplementing and amending Legislative Decree No 50 of 18 April 2016) of 19 April 2017 (GURI No 103 of 5 May 2017) (‘the amending decree’), inter alia, inserted Article 178(8*bis*) in the new Public Procurement Code, which is worded as follows:

‘Administrative authorities may not renew motorway concessions that have expired or are due to expire using the procedures described in Article 183.’

The main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

17 Ativa, a company that operates motorways on a concession basis, operated an approximately 220 km section of the A5 motorway in Piedmont (Italy) under several concessions, the most recent of which expired in 2016.

18 On 25 September 2015, under Article 153(19) of decreto legislativo n. 163 – Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 – Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006) (‘the previous Public Procurement Code’), Ativa submitted a project financing proposal to the MIT for the concession for the operation of the A5 motorway, the A4/A5 motorway interchange, the Turin (Italy) motorway and orbital road network and the execution of works to protect the Ivrea (Italy) canal system, to reduce seismic risk and to upgrade infrastructure (‘the first proposal’).

19 By decision of 29 July 2016 (‘the first refusal decision’), the MIT rejected that proposal stating, first, that the project financing procedure was not applicable to motorway operation concessions and, secondly, that the proposal did not comply either with the requirements of the previous Public Procurement Code or with Article 178 and Article 183(15) of the new Public Procurement Code.

20 Ativa brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (Regional Administrative Court, Piedmont, Italy), requesting the court, first, to annul the first refusal decision and, secondly, to require the MIT to give a decision on the public interest or feasibility of the first proposal.

21 In support of that action, Ativa argued that the MIT had breached the three-month time limit under Article 153(19) of the previous Public Procurement Code within which contracting authorities must assess the proposals submitted. It argued that its first proposal, which had been submitted in September 2015, should, first, have been assessed before the end of 2015 instead of in June 2016 when it was actually assessed, and, secondly, have been based on the previous Public Procurement Code rather than the new Public Procurement Code.

22 On 20 September 2016, Ativa submitted a second project financing proposal to the MIT for the projects referred to in paragraph 18 of the present order, now based on Article 183(15) of the new Public Procurement Code. By decision of 22 May 2017, on grounds comparable to those of the first refusal decision, the MIT rejected the second proposal (‘the second refusal decision’). The MIT relied in particular on Article 178(8*bis*) of the new Public Procurement Code, inserted by the amending decree, which entered into force on 20 May 2017. According to that provision, administrative authorities could not use the project financing procedure to renew motorway concessions that had expired or were due to expire.

23 Ativa brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (Regional Administrative Court, Piedmont), seeking, inter alia, annulment of the second refusal decision.

24 By two judgments of 31 August 2018, that court dismissed Ativa’s actions.

25 By its first judgment, the court found that the MIT’s breach of the three-month time limit under Article 153(19) of the previous Public Procurement Code did not of itself alone mean that the first refusal decision was unlawful. That court also dismissed the plea alleging infringement of that provision on the grounds that it required the project financing proposal to consist of a preliminary plan on the basis of which the concessionaire would be selected. The Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (Regional Administrative Court, Piedmont) accordingly held that a proposal like that of Ativa, which contains a final plan, is inadmissible because the final plan is only required at a later stage in the procedure.

26 That court also held that the argument that the MIT could not base its decision on Article 183 of the new Public Procurement Code was irrelevant. Although that article had been adopted after the first proposal had been submitted, it was in force at the time the first refusal decision was adopted.

27 By its second judgment, that court dismissed the action against the second refusal decision on grounds similar to those set out in paragraphs 25 and 26 of the present order. In addition, according to that court, the second proposal did not comply with Article 183(15) of the new Public Procurement Code.

28 Ativa appealed against both those judgments to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy). Ativa submits that Article 178(8*bis*) of the new Public Procurement Code, which prohibits the administrative authorities from renewing motorway concessions that have expired or are due to expire using the procedure under Article 183 thereof, was introduced after it had submitted both the proposals at issue in the main proceedings and that both its proposals should therefore be governed by the provisions of the previous Public Procurement Code. Further, since the MIT had not made any reference to the provisions of the amending decree, Ativa had not been given an opportunity to adduce the reasons why the newly introduced rules do not, in its view, apply to the dispute in the main proceedings, thereby infringing its right to participate in the procedure.

29 The MIT is of the view, in contrast, that Article 178(8*bis*) of the new Public Procurement Code is applicable ratione temporis in the case in the main proceedings because that article concerns concessions ‘that have expired or are due to expire’. It argues that Article 178(8*bis*) also contributes to a greater opening up to competition and to avoiding further consolidation of the position of previous operators, who hold concessions that are due to expire and which were awarded without tender procedures. Moreover, it follows from the principle tempus regit actum that, subject to specific transitional provisions, each phase or act in a procedure is governed by the rules laid down by the national provisions in force on the date when that phase takes place or on the date of adoption of the act concluding the discrete phase of the procedure of which it forms part. The dispute in the main proceedings in fact concerns a preparatory phase of the tender procedure that took place after the new Public Procurement Code entered into force.

30 Further, the preliminary phase does not involve selecting the best bid on the basis of pre-established technical and financial criteria but, rather, assessing the preliminary feasibility of a project proposal and approving a project on which the tender procedure will be based. The person submitting the proposal is only classified as a ‘promoter’ and invited to submit a bid if the project is approved and the tender procedure is commenced.

31 Once the project has been approved, the concession is awarded only following the tender procedure, on the basis of the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender. That phase is separate from the previous one and must be conducted in accordance with the rules on competitive tendering, subject to the promoter’s pre-emptive right under Article 183(15) of the new Public Procurement Code.

32 The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), like the MIT, takes the view that according to the general principle of legality the administrative authority must comply with the law in force at the time it states its intention to hold the procedure leading to selection of the concessionaire. Accordingly, if a concession proposal submitted on the basis of the provisions of the previous law has not yet been approved at the time the new law enters into force, the administrative authority has no option, subject to applying transitional rules laid down by the legislation that has come into force during the procedure, but to approve that project and hold the tender procedure on the basis of the new rules.

33 In relation to motorway concessions, the amending decree inserted paragraph 8*bis* into Article 178 of the new Public Procurement Code, prohibiting use of the project financing procedure laid down in Article 183 thereof for the renewal of motorway concessions that had expired or were due to expire.

34 Against that background, the referring court believes, first, that the second refusal decision is lawful. Article 178(8*bis*) of the new Public Procurement Code entered into force during the preliminary phase of the procedure and is therefore applicable to the decision that definitively concluded the procedure by rejecting the proposal of the outgoing concessionaire.

35 Secondly, since the first refusal decision was adopted before the amending decree entered into force, the prohibition on using project financing for a motorway concession does not apply. However, although the MIT was not entitled to rely on Article 178(8*bis*) of the new Public Procurement Code to reject the first proposal, the breach of that provision is of no effect. That provision in fact also precludes projects submitted by private operators and which have already been assessed as feasible from being included in the programming of the contracting authority, with the effect that Ativa has no interest in obtaining annulment of the first refusal decision.

36 The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) nevertheless believes it is necessary to examine Ativa's plea alleging that, by purely and simply prohibiting the contracting authorities from using project financing to award a concession, Article 178(8*bis*) of the new Public Procurement Code infringes the principle of 'procedural freedom' according to which the contracting authority has considerable flexibility to define and organise the procedure leading to the choice of concessionaire, which the national legislature is required to uphold by virtue of recital 68, Article 30 and Article 37(6) of Directive 2014/23.

37 That is the context in which the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) stayed the proceedings and referred the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'With regard to the award of concessions, does [EU] law, in particular the principles laid down in Directive [2014/23], specifically freedom of choice as regards award procedures in accordance with the principles of transparency and [equal] treatment, as referred to in recital 68 and Article 30 of the directive, preclude the application of the provisions laid down in Article 178(8-bis) of the [new Public Procurement Code], which unconditionally prohibit the award by administrative authorities of motorway concessions in respect of concessions that have expired or are due to expire, using the procedures laid down in Article 183 [of that code], which governs project financing?'

The question referred

38 Under Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court, where the reply to a question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling may be clearly deduced from existing case-law or where the answer to such a question admits of no reasonable doubt, the Court may at any time, on a proposal from the Judge Rapporteur and after hearing the Advocate General, decide to rule by reasoned order.

39 It is appropriate to apply that article in the present case.

40 As a preliminary point, it must be observed that this request for a preliminary ruling is not intended to determine whether the project financing procedure under Article 183 of the new Public Procurement Code is compatible with Directive 2014/23, but rather to determine whether a Member State can require its contracting authorities to use a concession for the operation of motorways and, thereby, prevent them from opting for the project financing procedure.

41 By its question, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) is asking, in essence, whether the first subparagraph of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with Article 30 and recitals 5 and 68 of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding a national provision whereby contracting authorities are prohibited from using the project financing procedure laid down in Article 183 of the new Public Procurement Code when renewing motorway concessions that have expired or are due to expire.

42 Having regard to both the wording of Directive 2014/23 and the recent case-law of the Court on public procurement, that question must be answered in the negative.

43 First, as is clear from Article 1 of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with recital 8, the sole objective of the directive is to establish rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities and contracting entities by means of a concession, where the value of those contracts is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 8 thereof.

44 Directive 2014/23 is therefore intended to apply only where a contracting authority or contracting entity has launched a procurement procedure to award a concession.

45 Secondly, the first subparagraph of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/23 recognises the principle of free administration by national, regional and local authorities in conformity with national and Union law. Those ‘authorities’, in their capacity as authorities with legislative powers rather than as contracting authorities or contracting entities, are in that way free to decide how best to manage the execution of works or the provision of services, in order to ensure in particular a high level of quality, safety and affordability, equal treatment and the promotion of universal access and of user rights in public services.

46 Thirdly, it can be seen from the second subparagraph of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with recital 5 thereof, that those authorities can choose to perform their public interest tasks using their own resources, cooperating with other authorities or by delegating those tasks to economic operators.

47 It is therefore apparent that Directive 2014/23 cannot deprive the Member States of their freedom to favour one management method to the detriment of others. That freedom involves a choice which is made at an earlier stage than the procurement procedure and cannot, therefore, fall within the scope of application of that directive (see by analogy, judgment of 3 October 2019, Irgita, C-285/18, EU:C:2019:829, paragraph 44, and orders of 6 February 2020, Pia Opera Croce Verde Padova, C-11/19, EU:C:2020:88, paragraph 41, and of 6 February 2020, Rieco, C-89/19 to C-91/19, EU:C:2020:87, paragraph 33).

48 Fourthly, that interpretation cannot be called into question by the statement, in Article 30(1) and recital 68 of that directive, to the effect that the contracting authority or contracting entity is to have the freedom to organise the procedure leading to the choice of concessionaire subject to compliance with that directive.

49 Where national, regional or local authorities have chosen to favour one management method in particular, the contracting authorities or contracting entities in fact have only conditional freedom which can only be used, therefore, in the context of the policy choices made previously by those authorities.

50 Fifthly, the freedom available to national, regional or local authorities, under the first subparagraph of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/23, to decide how best to manage the execution of works or the provision of services, cannot however be unlimited. It must, rather, be exercised with due regard to the fundamental rules of the FEU Treaty, in particular the free movement of goods, the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services as well as the principles deriving from them, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency (see by analogy, judgment of 3 October 2019, Irgita, C-285/18, EU:C:2019:829, paragraph 48 and the case-law cited, and orders of 6 February 2020, Pia Opera Croce Verde Padova, C-11/19, EU:C:2020:88, paragraph 45, and of 6 February 2020, Rieco, C-89/19 to C-91/19, EU:C:2020:87, paragraph 37).

51 Although it is incumbent on the referring court, in the case in the main proceedings, to ensure that the prohibition on contracting authorities and contracting entities using the project financing procedure, as set out in Article 178(8*bis*) of the new Public Procurement Code, has not gone beyond the limits referred to in the preceding paragraph of the present order, it is apparent both from the decision to refer and the written observations submitted to the Court by the Italian Government and the European Commission that the article in question sought to ensure that motorway concessions are opened up to the widest possible competition. Since the motorway concessions sector has only recently been opened up to competition, the Italian legislature opted for a system of public tender procedures prohibiting the alternative system in the form of awarding concessions by means of project financing. Article 178(8*bis*) of the new Public Procurement Code sought in that way to avoid enshrining any advantage, even a de facto one, for the outgoing concessionaires.

52 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred is that the first subparagraph of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with Article 30 and recitals 5 and 68 thereof, must be interpreted as not precluding a national provision whereby contracting authorities are prohibited from using the project financing procedure laid down in Article 183 of the new Public Procurement Code to renew motorway concessions that have expired or are due to expire.

Costs

53 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

The first subparagraph of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts, read in conjunction with Article 30 and recitals 5 and 68 thereof, must be interpreted as not precluding a national provision whereby contracting authorities are prohibited from renewing motorway concessions that have expired or are due to expire using the project financing procedure laid down in Article 183 of decreto legislativo n. 50 – Codice dei contratti pubblici (Legislative Decree No 50 laying down a public procurement code) of 18 April 2016.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(3), Article 2(1)(a) and (b), and Article 2a(2) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1), (‘Directive 92/13’), interpreted in the light of the case-law of the Court relating to those provisions.

2 The request has been made in the context of a suspension procedure brought by a business association and its constituent companies (‘NAMA’) against the Archi Exetasis Prodikastikon Prosfigon (Public Procurement Review Authority (AEPP), Greece) and Attiko Metro AE concerning the lawfulness of a decision taken by the latter, as contracting authority, in connection with the review of technical bids submitted in the context of a public procurement procedure in the field of transport.

Legal context

EU law

3 The second recital of Directive 92/13 states that ‘the existing arrangements at both national and Community levels for ensuring [the effective application of the rules governing public procurement] are not always adequate’.

4 Article 1 of Directive 92/13, which is entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provides as follows in paragraphs 1 and 3:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243)], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 18 to 24, 27 to 30, 34 or 55 of that directive.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/25/EU or Directive 2014/23/EU, decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

5 Article 2 of that directive, entitled 'Requirements for review procedures', states:

'1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers:

either

(a) to take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedure, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further injury to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting entity;

and

(b) to set aside or ensure the setting-aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the notice of contract, the periodic indicative notice, the notice on the existence of a system of qualification, the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure in question;

or

(c) to take, at the earliest opportunity, if possible by way of interlocutory procedures and if necessary by a final procedure on the substance, measures other than those provided for in points (a) and (b) with the aim of correcting any identified infringement and preventing injury to the interests concerned; in particular, making an order for the payment of a particular sum, in cases where the infringement has not been corrected or prevented.

Member States may take this choice either for all contracting entities or for categories of entities defined on the basis of objective criteria, in any event preserving the effectiveness of the measures laid down in order to prevent injury being caused to the interests concerned;

(d) and, in both the above cases, to award damages to persons injured by the infringement.

Where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision has been taken unlawfully, Member States may, where their system of internal law so requires and provides bodies having the necessary powers for that purpose, provide that the contested decision must first be set aside or declared illegal.

2. The powers specified in paragraph 1 and Articles 2d and 2e may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

3. When a body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting entity, reviews a contract award decision, Member States shall ensure that the contracting entity cannot conclude the contract before the review body has made a decision on the application either for interim measures or for review. The suspension shall end no earlier than the expiry of the standstill period referred to in Article 2a(2) and Article 2d(4) and (5).

9. Whereas bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article [267 TFEU] and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

6 Article 2a of that directive, entitled ‘Standstill period’, provides:

‘1. The Member States shall ensure that the persons referred to in Article 1(3) have sufficient time for effective review of the contract award decisions taken by contracting entities, by adopting the necessary provisions respecting the minimum conditions set out in paragraph 2 of this Article and in Article 2c.

2. A contract may not be concluded following the decision to award a contract falling within the scope of Directive 2014/25/EU or Directive 2014/23/EU before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned if fax or electronic means are used or, if other means of communication are used, before the expiry of a period of either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of the contract award decision.

Tenderers shall be deemed to be concerned if they have not yet been definitively excluded. An exclusion is definitive if it has been notified to the tenderers concerned and has either been considered lawful by an independent review body or can no longer be subject to a review procedure.

Candidates shall be deemed to be concerned if the contracting entity has not made available information about the rejection of their application before the notification of the contract award decision to the tenderers concerned.

Greek law

7 Law 4412/2016 on public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (FEK A’ 147/8.8.2016), as amended (‘Law 4412/2016’) reorganised the system of judicial protection in the field of public procurement in the pre-contractual stage, in particular by creating an independent central administrative authority, namely the AEPP, tasked with the administrative review of the measures adopted by the contracting authorities and contracting bodies, and by introducing the possibility of requesting the suspension and setting-aside of decisions adopted by that authority.

8 Article 346(1) and (2) of Law 4412/2016 states:

‘1. Every interested party who has or has had an interest in obtaining a contract referred to in Article 1(2)(a) or (b), and who has been harmed or risks being harmed by an enforceable measure or by the omission of the contracting authority, contrary to national legislation or to that of the European Union, may bring proceedings before the [AEPP] under the special conditions set out in Article 360 and request interim protection measures under Article 366, the setting-aside of an unlawful measure or the omission of the contracting authority under Article 367 or the setting-aside of an unlawfully concluded contract under Article 368.

2. Any interested party who has been harmed or risks being harmed by a decision of the AEPP relating to an application for review coming within the scope of Article 360 may bring an action seeking the suspension and annulment of that decision before the competent courts, in accordance with Article 372. The right to bring those actions shall be available to the contracting authority if the application for review is accepted by the AEPP.’

9 Article 347 of Law 4412/2016 provides:

‘1. The [AEPP] shall be established, the mission of which shall be to resolve disputes arising from the stage of the procedure prior to the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, where an application for review is brought before it, in accordance with the provisions of section II of the present title. …

2. The AEPP shall have functional independence and administrative and financial autonomy, and shall not be subject to control or supervision by government bodies or other administrative authorities. It shall be subject exclusively to control by Parliament, in accordance with its rules.'

10 Article 360 of Law 4412/2016 provides:

'1. Every interested party who has or has had an interest in obtaining a specific contract covered by the present law who is harmed, has been harmed or risks being harmed by an enforceable measure or by an omission of the contracting authority, contrary to national legislation or to that of the European Union, shall be required, prior to bringing actions under Title 3, to submit an application for administrative review to the AEPP against that measure or that omission of the contracting authority.

2. The act of bringing an application for administrative review shall be a prerequisite for the introduction of actions under Title 3 against enforceable measures or omissions of contracting authorities.

3. Enforceable measures or omissions of contracting authorities in the public procurement procedure cannot be the subject of applications for administrative review other than that referred to in paragraph (1).'

11 Under Article 372 of Law 4412/2016, any person who can establish a legitimate interest may request a suspension and annulment of the decision of the AEPP before the Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (Council of State) in cases concerning a public procurement contract which comes within the scope of Directive 2014/25.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 By a contract notice published on 24 January 2018, Attico Metro launched an open procurement procedure for technical consultancy services for the project for the extension of the Metro in Athens (Greece), to the value of approximately EUR 21.5 million. The award criterion was the most financially advantageous bid based on an optimum quality/price ratio. According to the contract notice, the first stage of the procedure was to consist in the review of supporting documents and of candidates' technical bids, while the second was to consist in the opening of bids and general assessment.

13 Four economic operators each submitted a bid. In the first stage of the procedure, the assessment committee of the contracting body, on the one hand, proposed the rejection of the bid of one of those candidates at the supporting document review stage, and the rejection of those of two other candidates, including NAMA, at the technical bid review stage. It also proposed admitting the business association SALFO and its three constituent companies ('SALFO') to the second stage of the procedure. Prior to the issue of a definitive decision in that regard, the contracting body requested details on the experience of the team proposed by NAMA.

14 By a decision of the contracting body's board of directors of 6 March 2019, the committee's aforementioned proposals were approved. In particular, NAMA's bid was excluded from the remainder of the procedure on the ground that the experience of certain members of its team with regard to construction works did not meet the requirements of the contract notice. On 26 March 2019, NAMA brought an application for review before the AEPP against that decision, by which it contested both the rejection of its technical bid and the acceptance of SALFO's bid.

15 By decision of 21 May 2019, the AEPP upheld NAMA's application only in so far as it contested the grounds of the contracting body's decision concerning the proof of experience of one of the members of the proposed team. It dismissed that application as to the remainder.

16 Following the partial dismissal of its administrative application, NAMA brought an action before the Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (Epitropi Anastolon) (Council of State (Suspension Chamber), Greece), the referring court in the present case, by which it requested that that court order, on the one hand, the suspension of the AEPP's decision of 21 May 2019 and the suspension of the decision of 6 March 2019 of the board of directors of the contracting body Attico Metro and, on the other hand, every relevant measure designed to ensure the interim protection of its interests in the context of pursuing the procurement procedure at issue. The Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (Epitropi Anastolon) (Council of State (Suspension Chamber)) held to be inadmissible or unfounded the pleas put forward by NAMA alleging, on the one hand, that its exclusion from that procedure was unlawful on the ground that the contracting body had wrongly evaluated the experience of some of its experts and, on the other hand, that the principle of equality in the review of technical bids of tenderers had been infringed on the ground that the contracting body had assessed them differently.

17 The referring court observes that it has consistently held that a tenderer which has been excluded from the tendering procedure cannot show an interest in bringing proceedings in order to contest the legality of the participation of another tenderer in that procedure, except on grounds relating to an infringement of the principle of equality in the assessment of bids. That court is, however, uncertain to what extent the approach resulting in particular from the judgment of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama (C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358), also applies in the case of a request for suspension brought by a tenderer which was not disqualified at the final stage of the award of the public contract, but at an earlier stage of the procurement procedure for that contract, such as the stage of review of supporting documents for participation or of assessment and review of technical bids. That question, the referring court notes, has not yet been resolved by the Court of Justice and has given rise to differences of interpretation within the Suspension Chamber of the Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (Council of State), which ultimately caused the case in the main proceedings to be brought before a full panel of five judges.

18 The referring court explains that that Suspension Chamber takes the view that a tenderer excluded from a procurement procedure for the award of public contracts must be regarded as being definitively excluded in the case where that tenderer did not contest the decision to exclude it or where that decision has become definitive. By contrast, that tenderer cannot be regarded as having been definitively excluded in the case where its application for review was dismissed by a decision of the AEPP, but where the period for bringing an action for annulment or a request for suspension under Law 4412/2016 has not yet expired. Likewise, a tenderer whose request for suspension brought against the AEPP's dismissal of its application for review is dismissed is not to be definitively excluded, provided that that tenderer has the right to bring an action for annulment of that rejection decision, or provided that the decision to dismiss the action for annulment which that tenderer has brought has not become definitive. Furthermore, the referring court specifies that the recognition of an excluded tenderer's interest in bringing proceedings against the decision to accept the bid of one of its competitors and to award that competitor the contract is dependent on whether the action leads to the definitive annulment of the procurement procedure in question, that is to say, whether it makes the procedure impossible to relaunch. It is immaterial in that context at which stage of the procurement procedure the tenderer at issue was excluded, since the interest in bringing proceedings exists at all stages of that procedure. Therefore, NAMA has in principle an interest in bringing proceedings in order to put forward the other complaints which it brought against SALFO, in addition to those relating to the infringement of the principle of equality of assessment.

19 Finally, the referring court states that it rejected the request for suspension in the main proceedings, in so far as NAMA contested the legality of its exclusion from the procurement procedure and the acceptance of SALFO's bid by submitting that the contested decisions infringed the principle of equality of assessment. By contrast, the referring court is uncertain as to whether NAMA can put forward, in support of its request for suspension, arguments directed against the decision to accept SALFO's bid on the basis of the failure to comply with the conditions set out in the contract notice, the provisions of Law 4412/2016, and the principles of equal treatment of tenderers and of transparency.

20 In those circumstances, the Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (Epitropi Anastolon) (Council of State (Suspension Chamber)) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) (a) Do Articles 1(3), 2(1)(a) and (b) and 2a(2) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC, interpreted in the light of the judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199), of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama (C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358), and of 5 September 2019, Lombardi (C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675), conflict with national judicial practice whereby if, by decision of the contracting body, one competitor is excluded from, and another interested party (competitor) is admitted to, a stage of the procurement procedure prior to the final contract award stage (for example, the stage for the examination of technical bids) and the court with jurisdiction dismisses the part of its application for suspension contesting its exclusion, the excluded competitor retains a legal interest in contesting the admission of the other competitor, by the same application for suspension, only if the other competitor was admitted in breach of the same criterion?

(b) If the answer to Question 1(a) is in the affirmative, do the above provisions mean that the tenderer excluded as described above may, by its application for suspension, raise any complaint against the participation of its competitor in the procurement procedure; in other words, may it also complain of other, separate, shortcomings in the competitor's bid which have no bearing on the shortcomings for which its bid was excluded, in order to obtain suspension of the competition and of the award of the contract to its competitor in a decision to be adopted at a later stage of the procedure, so that if the main remedy (application for annulment) is subsequently upheld, its competitor will be excluded, the contract award will be cancelled and the only remaining possibility will be to launch a new contract award procedure in which the excluded applicant will participate?

(2) In the light also of the judgment of 21 December 2016, Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung und Caverion Österreich (C-355/15, EU:C:2016:988), is the answer to the previous question affected by the fact that provisional (or even final) judicial protection depends on an application for review having previously been dismissed by an independent national review board?

(3) Is the answer to the first question affected by (a) the finding that, if the excluded tenderer's complaints against its competitor's participation in the competition are upheld, it will not be possible to issue a new notice of competition or (b) the fact that the reason the applicant was excluded will make it impossible for it to participate if a new competition is announced?'

21 By decision of the President of the Court of 19 October 2019, the request made by the Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (Epitropi Anastolon) (Council of State (Suspension Chamber)) that the present case be dealt with under the expedited procedure was rejected.

Consideration of the questions referred

Admissibility of the questions referred

22 The Commission is of the opinion that the second and third questions bear no relation to the subject matter of the dispute in the main proceedings and must, therefore, be considered inadmissible. NAMA, in essence, makes an identical claim of inadmissibility with regard to the third question.

23 According to settled case-law, although questions on the interpretation of EU law referred by a national court in the factual and legislative context which that court is responsible for defining, and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court of Justice to determine, enjoy a presumption of relevance, the fact nonetheless remains that the procedure provided for in Article 267 TFEU is an instrument of cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts, by means of which the Court provides the national courts with the points of interpretation of EU law which they require in order to resolve the disputes before them. The justification for a preliminary ruling is not that it enables advisory opinions on general or hypothetical questions to be delivered but rather that it is necessary for the effective resolution of a dispute. As is apparent from the actual wording of Article 267 TFEU, the question referred for a preliminary ruling must be 'necessary' to enable the referring court to 'give judgment' in the case before it. Furthermore, under Article 94(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court, the referring court must set out precisely the reasons for its uncertainty as to the interpretation of EU law (judgment of 14 May 2020, Országos Idegenrendészeti Főigazgatóság Dél-alföldi Regionális Igazgatóság, C-924/19 PPU and C-925/19 PPU, EU:C:2020:367, paragraphs 167 and 168).

24 In the present case, contrary to what the Commission argues, it is apparent from the order for reference that, by its second question, the referring court seeks to determine whether the fact that the exclusion of NAMA's bid by the contracting entity was partially validated by the AEPP, following a mandatory application for administrative review, is a factor which must be taken into account in order to determine whether that tenderer may also contest, before the referring court, the decision of the contracting body to admit the bid of that tenderer's competitor. That question is therefore admissible.

25 By contrast, the order for reference does not set out the reasons why the answer to the third question would be necessary in order to resolve the case in the main proceedings, and the referring court has not established in what way the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings corresponds to one of the two cases envisaged by the third question.

26 It follows from the foregoing that the third question submitted by the referring court for a preliminary ruling must be declared inadmissible.

Substance

27 By the first and second questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(3), Article 2(1)(a) and (b) and Article 2a(2) of Directive 92/13, interpreted in the light of the case-law of the Court, must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude a national practice under which a tenderer who has been excluded from a procurement procedure for the award of a public contract at a stage of the procurement procedure prior to the final contract award stage and whose request for a suspension of the decision to exclude it from that procedure has been refused, may not, in the absence of any interest in bringing proceedings, advance, in its request for suspension of the decision to admit the bid of another tenderer, introduced simultaneously, pleas with no connection to the shortcomings for which its own bid was excluded, with the exception of a plea that the decision to admit that bid infringes the principle of equality in the assessment of bids. Furthermore, that court is uncertain whether an unsuccessful tenderer's interest in bringing proceedings is affected by the fact that the application for administrative review of the decision to exclude it, which it was required to bring, under national law, before an independent national body, was dismissed.

28 Under Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13, Member States must ensure that review procedures are available, in accordance with detailed rules which they themselves may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

29 Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of that directive sets out the requirements which national measures taken to ensure the review procedures referred to in Article 1 thereof must respect, which include the fact that those review procedures must allow Member States, on the one hand, to take interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further injury to the interests concerned and, on the other hand, to set aside or ensure the setting-aside of decisions which have been taken unlawfully.

30 Article 2a of that directive establishes rules on the standstill periods which the persons referred to in Article 1(3) of that directive must have in order to seek an effective review of decisions to award contracts taken by the contracting bodies. Article 2a(2) thus provides that, following the decision to award a contract, that contract may not be concluded before the expiry of a period calculated on the basis of the means by which the decision to award the contract was communicated to the tenderers and to the candidates concerned, and it specifies, inter alia, the conditions under which a tenderer or a candidate is considered to be concerned. As regards tenderers, the second subparagraph of that provision indicates that they are deemed to be concerned if they have not yet been definitively excluded and that an exclusion is definitive if it has been communicated to the tenderers concerned and has either been deemed lawful by an independent review body or can no longer be subject to a review procedure.

31 Tasked with interpreting the provisions of Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), the Court has ruled that, in the context of a procurement procedure for the award of public contracts, tenderers whose exclusion is requested have an equivalent legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bids submitted by the other tenderers with a view to obtaining the contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 4 July 2013, Fastweb, C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448, paragraph 33). In paragraph 27 of the judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199), the Court held that, on the one hand, the exclusion of one tenderer may lead to another tenderer directly being awarded the contract in the same procedure and, on the other hand, if both tenderers are excluded and a new public procurement procedure is launched, each of those tenderers may participate in the new procedure and thus obtain the contract indirectly. Furthermore, in paragraph 29 of the same judgment, the Court specified that the number of participants in the public procurement procedure concerned as well as the number of participants who have instigated review procedures and the differing legal grounds relied on by those participants are irrelevant to the question of the applicability of the principle of the case-law established by the judgment of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448).

32 The case-law principle set out in the preceding paragraph, which was developed at a time when Directive 89/665 was in force, can be transposed to the system of judicial protection established by Directive 92/13 (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraphs 50 to 53).

33 It is, however, necessary to consider whether that case-law principle can also be applied where the legality of a decision admitting the bid of a tenderer is contested at a stage of the procurement procedure prior to the final contract award stage by a tenderer whose bid has been excluded.

34 In that regard, it should be noted that Directive 92/13 does not specify the stage at which an action against such a decision of a contracting body may be brought by a tenderer.

35 Furthermore, as follows from the second recital of Directive 92/13, that directive is intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms, both at national and EU levels, to ensure the effective application of the directives relating to public procurement. To that end, the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of that directive requires Member States ‘to ensure that … decisions taken by the contracting bodies may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible’ (see, by analogy, judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina de Mediterráneo and Others, C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 30).

36 The objective of effective and rapid judicial protection, in particular by interim measures, pursued by that directive does not therefore authorise the Member States to make the exercise of the right to apply for review conditional on the fact that the public procurement procedure in question has formally reached a particular stage (see, by analogy, judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau, C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 38, and judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others, C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 31).

37 More specifically, a national law which requires, in any event, a tenderer to wait for a decision awarding the contract in question before it may apply for a review of a decision allowing another tenderer to participate in that procurement procedure would infringe the provisions of Directive 92/13 (see, by analogy, judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others, C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 34).

38 It follows, first, that an unsuccessful tenderer may bring an action against the decision of the contracting body which admits the bid of one of its competitors, regardless of the stage of the procurement procedure for the award of a public contract at which that decision was taken and, secondly, that, in the context of such an action, the case-law principle recalled in paragraph 31 above may be applied.

39 As regards the pleas which an unsuccessful tenderer may advance in the context of such an action, it should be noted that Directive 92/13 does not set out any requirement other than that established in Article 1(1) thereof, namely that that tenderer may rely on pleas based on the infringement of EU law concerning public procurement or of national laws transposing that directive.

40 Moreover, in paragraph 29 of the judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199), the Court noted that the fact that differing pleas have been advanced by the tenderers who were excluded from the procurement procedure at issue is not relevant for the application of the case-law principle recalled in paragraph 31 above.

41 It follows that the unsuccessful tenderer is entitled to advance any plea against the decision allowing another tenderer to participate, including those which do not have any connection with the shortcomings for which its own bid was excluded.

42 That being so, the case-law principle recalled in paragraph 31 above applies only on condition that the exclusion of the tenderer was not confirmed by a decision which has become definitive (see, to that effect, judgments of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraphs 57 and 58, and of 5 September 2019, Lombardi, C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675, paragraphs 31 and 32).

43 It is thus for the referring court to determine whether, in the present case, NAMA's exclusion must be regarded as final and conclusive on the ground that it has been confirmed by a decision which has become definitive. As was recalled in paragraph 18 above, it is, however, not apparent from the order for reference that that is the case.

44 Subject to that reservation, the fact that the national law requires an unsuccessful tenderer to apply for review before being able to bring an action before the referring court is immaterial to the interpretation set out in paragraphs 38 and 41 above. Article 2(9) of Directive 92/13 expressly authorises the Member States to confer on non-judicial authorities the power to rule, at first instance, on actions provided for by that directive, in so far as any allegedly illegal measure taken by that authority or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of a judicial action or of an action before another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU which is independent of the contracting body and of the non-judicial authority which ruled at first instance.

45 Such an interpretation is not invalidated by the judgment of 21 December 2016, Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung und Caverion Österreich (C-355/15, EU:C:2016:988), mentioned by the referring court in that context. Although it is true that it follows from paragraphs 13 to 16, 31 and 36 of that judgment that the tenderer whose bid had been excluded by the contracting authority from a procurement procedure for the award of public contracts could be refused access to a review of the decision awarding the public contract, in the case giving rise to that judgment, which did not concern an application before a national review authority, the decision to exclude that tenderer had been confirmed by a decision which had become definitive before the court hearing the review of the contract award decision delivered its decision, with the result that that tenderer had to be regarded as having been definitively excluded from the public procurement procedure at issue (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 September 2019, Lombardi, C-333/18, EU:C:2019:675, paragraph 31).

46 In the light of all of the foregoing, the answer to the questions referred is that Article 1(1) and (3), Article 2(1)(a) and (b) and Article 2a(2) of Directive 92/13 must be interpreted as meaning that a tenderer who has been excluded from a procurement procedure for the award of a public contract at a stage prior to the final contract award stage and whose request for suspension of the decision to exclude it from that procedure has been refused, may advance, in its request for suspension of the decision to admit the bid of another tenderer, introduced simultaneously, any plea based on the infringement of EU law concerning public procurement or of national rules transposing that law, including pleas which have no connection with the shortcomings for which its own bid was excluded. That option is not affected by the fact that the application for an administrative review before an independent national authority, which must, under national law, first be brought by the tenderer against the decision to exclude it, has been rejected, provided that that rejection has not become definitive.

Costs

47 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Tenth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(1) and (3), Article 2(1)(a) and (b) and Article 2a(2) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, must be interpreted as meaning that a tenderer who has been excluded from a procurement procedure for the award of a public contract at a stage prior to the final contract award stage and whose request for suspension of the decision to exclude it from the procedure has been refused, may advance, in its request for suspension of the decision to admit the bid of another tenderer, introduced simultaneously, any plea based on the infringement of EU law concerning public procurement or of national rules transposing that law, including pleas which have no connection with the shortcomings for which its own bid was excluded. That option is not affected by the fact that the application for an administrative review before an independent national authority, which must, under national law, first be brought by the tenderer against the decision to exclude it, has been rejected, provided that that rejection has not become definitive.

Le cadre juridique

Le droit de l'Union

3 Le considérant 33 de la directive 2014/24 énonce :

« Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs devraient pouvoir choisir de fournir conjointement leurs services publics par la voie de la coopération, sans être contraints de recourir à une forme juridique particulière. Cette coopération pourrait porter sur tous les types d'activités liées à l'exécution de services et à l'exercice de responsabilités confiées aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants ou assumées par eux, telles que des missions obligatoires ou volontaires relevant d'autorités locales ou régionales ou des services confiés à des organismes particuliers par le droit public. Les services fournis par les différents pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants ne doivent pas nécessairement être identiques ; ils pourraient également être complémentaires.

Les marchés concernant la fourniture conjointe de services publics ne devraient pas être soumis à l'application des règles établies dans la présente directive, à condition qu'ils soient conclus exclusivement entre pouvoirs adjudicateurs, que la mise en œuvre de cette coopération n'obéisse qu'à des considérations d'intérêt public et qu'aucun prestataire privé de services ne soit placé dans une situation privilégiée par rapport à ses concurrents.

Pour que ces conditions soient remplies, il convient que la coopération soit fondée sur le concept de coopération. Cette coopération n'exige pas que tous les pouvoirs participants se chargent de l'exécution des principales obligations contractuelles, tant que l'engagement a été pris de coopérer à l'exécution du service public en question. En outre, la mise en œuvre de la coopération, y compris tout transfert financier entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants, ne devrait obéir qu'à des considérations d'intérêt public. »

4 L'article 2, paragraphe 1, point 5, de cette directive définit les « marchés publics » comme « des contrats à titre onéreux conclus par écrit entre un ou plusieurs opérateurs économiques et un ou plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs et ayant pour objet l'exécution de travaux, la fourniture de produits ou la prestation de services ».

5 Intitulé « Marchés publics passés entre entités appartenant au secteur public », l'article 12 de ladite directive, prévoit, à son paragraphe 4 :

« Un marché conclu exclusivement entre deux pouvoirs adjudicateurs ou plus ne relève pas du champ d'application de la présente directive, lorsque toutes les conditions suivantes sont réunies :

a) le marché établit ou met en œuvre une coopération entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants dans le but de garantir que les services publics dont ils doivent assurer la prestation sont réalisés en vue d'atteindre les objectifs qu'ils ont en commun ;

b) la mise en œuvre de cette coopération n'obéit qu'à des considérations d'intérêt public ; et

c) les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants réalisent sur le marché concurrentiel moins de 20 % des activités concernées par la coopération ».

Le droit italien

6 Intitulé « Principes communs en matière d'exclusion pour les concessions, les marchés publics et les accords entre organismes publics et pouvoirs adjudicateurs dans le cadre du secteur public », l'article 5 du decreto legislativo n. 50 – Codice dei contratti pubblici (décret législatif n° 50, portant code des contrats publics), du 18 avril 2016 (supplément ordinaire à la GURI n° 91, du 19 avril 2016, ci-après le « code des contrats publics »), prévoit, à son paragraphe 6 :

« Un accord conclu exclusivement entre deux pouvoirs adjudicateurs ou plus ne relève pas du champ d'application du présent code, lorsque toutes les conditions suivantes sont réunies :

a) le marché établit ou met en œuvre une coopération entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs ou les organismes publics adjudicateurs participants dans le but de garantir que les services publics dont ils doivent assurer la prestation sont réalisés en vue d'atteindre les objectifs qu'ils ont en commun ;

b) la mise en œuvre de cette coopération n'obéit qu'à des considérations d'intérêt public ; et

c) les pouvoirs adjudicateurs ou les organismes publics adjudicateurs participants réalisent sur le marché concurrentiel moins de 20 % des activités concernées par la coopération. »

7 Depuis le 1er janvier 1999, la taxe sur les véhicules automobiles est perçue par les régions, sur le fondement de l'article 17 de la legge n. 449 – Misure per la stabilizzazione della finanza pubblica (loi n° 449, portant mesures de stabilisation des finances publiques), du 27 décembre 1997 (GURI n° 302, du 30 décembre 1997), lequel dispose :

8 L'article 1er, paragraphe 121, de la legge della Regione Campania n. 16 « Interventi di rilancio e sviluppo dell'economia regionale nonché di carattere ordinamentale e organizzativo » (loi de la Région de Campanie n° 16, relative aux interventions de relance et de développement de l'économie régionale et à caractère normatif et organisationnel), du 7 août 2014 (Bollettino ufficiale della Regione Campania n° 57, du 7 août 2014, ci-après la « loi régionale n° 16/2014 »), dispose :

9 L'article 2 du decreto ministeriale n. 418 – Regolamento recante norme per il trasferimento alle regioni a statuto ordinario delle funzioni in materia di riscossione, accertamento, recupero, rimborsi e contenzioso relative alle tasse automobilistiche non erariali (décret ministériel n° 418, portant fixation des règles de transfert aux régions statutaires ordinaires des fonctions relatives à la perception, à l'évaluation, au recouvrement, aux remboursements et aux litiges relatifs aux taxes sur les véhicules à moteur), du 25 novembre 1998 (GURI n° 285, du 5 décembre 1998), prévoit que les régions exercent lesdites fonctions directement, fût-ce en ayant recours au système de l'« avvalimento », c'est-à-dire en recourant aux structures et au personnel d'autres organismes publics, mais sans leur transférer la charge de la mission de service public, ou par l'intermédiaire de concessionnaires choisis par celles-ci suivant les modalités et les procédures d'appels d'offres publics prévues par la législation de l'Union et par la législation nationale en matière de marchés publics et de services.

Le litige au principal et la question préjudicielle

10 Ge.Fi.L. est une société qui opère dans le secteur des services de support à la gestion des taxes sur les véhicules automobiles. Elle a remporté l'appel d'offres que la Région de Vénétie (Italie) avait lancé relativement à ces services et a également participé à l'appel d'offres organisé par la Région des Marches (Italie) en vue de l'attribution des mêmes services.

11 Ge.Fi.L. a saisi le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (tribunal administratif régional de Campanie, Italie) d'un recours en annulation dirigé, notamment, contre la décision de l'exécutif régional de Campanie, du 28 décembre 2017, approuvant un « modèle de convention entre la Région de Campanie et l'[ACI] en matière de taxes régionales sur les véhicules automobiles, conformément à l'article 15 de la [legge n. 241 – Nuove norme in materia di procedimento amministrativo e di diritto di accesso ai documenti amministrativi (loi n° 241, portant sur les nouvelles règles de procédure administrative et le droit d'accès aux documents administratifs), du 7 août 1990 (GURI n° 192, du 18 août 1990)], pour la période allant du 1er janvier 2018 au 31 décembre 2020 ». Cette convention, qui est renouvelable pour trois années supplémentaires, prévoit le versement d'une contrepartie forfaitaire, pour ces trois années, de 10 485 000 euros, majorée de paiements à la prestation, d'une indexation fondée sur les indices établis par l'Istituto Nazionale di Statistica (Istat) (Institut national de statistique, Italie) et, le cas échéant, de la taxe sur la valeur ajoutée (TVA). Selon Ge.Fi.L., les conditions posées à l'article 5, paragraphe 6, du code des contrats publics et à l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24, pour recourir directement à un partenariat entre pouvoirs adjudicateurs, n'étaient pas réunies, de sorte qu'il aurait été nécessaire de publier un appel d'offres en vue de l'attribution d'un marché public avec mise en concurrence.

12 Cette juridiction a rejeté le recours de Ge.Fi.L. au motif que l'ACI constituait un établissement public non économique ayant pour mission de gérer le registre public des automobiles, ainsi que les services en matière de taxes sur les véhicules automobiles que les régions et les provinces autonomes italiennes lui confient. En vertu de l'article 17, paragraphe 10, de la loi n° 449, du 27 décembre 1997, les régions, qui sont compétentes en matière de constatation et de perception des taxes locales sur les véhicules automobiles, pourraient, conformément à l'article 2 du décret ministériel n° 418, du 25 novembre 1998, exercer ces activités soit directement, au besoin en s'appuyant sur les structures et le personnel d'autres organismes publics sans leur transférer la charge de la mission de service public en recourant à la procédure d'« avvalimento », soit par l'intermédiaire de concessionnaires choisis à l'issue de procédures d'appel d'offres. Par ailleurs, avant le transfert aux régions des fonctions administratives en ce domaine, qui est intervenu le 1er janvier 1999, la République italienne elle-même se serait appuyée sur l'ACI pour les services de recouvrement et de constat des taxes sur les véhicules automobiles.

13 Le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (tribunal administratif régional de Campanie) a relevé que, conformément à l'article 2 du décret ministériel n° 418, du 25 novembre 1998, l'article 1er, paragraphe 121, de la loi régionale n° 16/2014 habilite l'exécutif régional à négocier avec l'ACI, en sa qualité d'établissement public non économique préposé aux services d'intérêt général, une convention ad hoc, d'une durée de trois ans, pour la gestion de la taxe sur les véhicules automobiles. Une telle coopération trouverait ainsi son fondement dans une disposition législative expresse. Le législateur régional aurait estimé que l'intérêt général justifiait de s'appuyer sur un autre organisme public, en l'occurrence l'ACI, pour gérer le service en cause au principal. Cette appréciation serait insusceptible de faire l'objet d'un contrôle juridictionnel de légalité. Enfin, l'activité de gestion de la taxe sur les véhicules automobiles ne saurait notamment conduire ni cette région ni l'ACI à exercer la moindre activité concurrentielle susceptible de donner lieu à des distorsions de concurrence sur le marché.

14 Cette juridiction a, dès lors, conclu que la décision de la Région de Campanie de confier directement à l'ACI la gestion du service en cause au principal constituerait un accord entre pouvoirs adjudicateurs conforme à l'article 5, paragraphe 6, du code des contrats publics et à l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24.

15 Ge.Fi.L., qui a interjeté appel du jugement du Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (tribunal administratif régional de Campanie) devant le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État, Italie), soutient que l'ensemble des conditions auxquelles ces dispositions soumettent la conclusion d'un partenariat entre pouvoirs adjudicateurs ne sont pas réunies en l'occurrence. En effet, dans d'autres régions italiennes, le service en cause au principal lui aurait été attribué par la voie d'un appel d'offres. En outre, l'ACI bénéficierait non pas uniquement d'un remboursement de certaines dépenses encourues, mais, au contraire, d'une rémunération substantielle.

16 Le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État) considère que la convention en cause au principal a été attribuée en méconnaissance des conditions requises pour conclure un partenariat entre pouvoirs adjudicateurs. Certes, l'ACI serait un établissement public non économique, sans but lucratif et chargé de services d'intérêt général consistant à représenter, à protéger et à promouvoir dans ses multiples aspects les intérêts du secteur automobile italien, dans les domaines du sport, du tourisme, de la sécurité, des consommateurs, de l'assistance et de l'information. Néanmoins, la mission de service public dont l'ACI serait chargé se limiterait à la gestion du registre public des automobiles et n'inclurait donc pas la gestion de la taxe sur les véhicules automobiles, de sorte que la convention en cause au principal ne porterait pas sur une mission commune aux parties contractantes. L'exigence d'un intérêt général commun aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs contractants ferait donc défaut.

17 Il s'ensuit que, selon la juridiction de renvoi, l'ACI devrait être assimilé à un simple opérateur économique, dès lors qu'il opère en dehors de la mission de service public qui lui incombe. Cette juridiction relève qu'il bénéficie de paiements largement supérieurs aux niveaux de prix pratiqués sur le marché. En outre, ceux-ci seraient prévus et fixés dans le contrat a priori et dus à l'ACI en toute hypothèse, ce qui exclurait expressément tout contrôle des coûts ou des dépenses encourues. À cet égard, la juridiction de renvoi relève que 4 366 682 véhicules sont en circulation dans la Région de Campanie et que le coût annuel du service faisant l'objet de la convention en cause au principal est de 3 495 000 euros pour la seule contrepartie forfaitaire, cette somme étant majorée, le cas échéant, de la TVA ainsi que de nombreux paiements à la prestation s'élevant à plusieurs centaines de milliers d'euros par an. En revanche, le coût annuel du service effectué par Ge.Fi.L. pour la Région de Vénétie, dans laquelle 3 939 166 véhicules seraient en circulation, serait de 2 148 019,29 euros, marge bénéficiaire comprise.

18 Eu égard aux considérations qui précèdent, le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour la question préjudicielle suivante :

« Le droit [de l'Union], et, en particulier, les principes de libre circulation des services et d'ouverture maximale à la concurrence dans le cadre des marchés publics de services, s'oppose-t-il à une disposition régionale comme l'article 1er, paragraphe 121, de la loi [régionale n° 16/2014], qui permet l'attribution directe, sans appel d'offres, des services relatifs à la gestion de la taxe sur les véhicules automobiles par la Région de Campanie à l'ACI ? »

Sur la question préjudicielle

19 Par sa question, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il s'oppose à une disposition nationale qui permet l'attribution directe, sans appel d'offres, du marché des services relatifs à la gestion de la taxe sur les véhicules automobiles à un établissement public non économique ayant pour mission de gérer le registre public des automobiles.

20 À titre liminaire, il convient de rappeler que l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24, qui expose les conditions dans lesquelles les relations de collaboration entre pouvoirs adjudicateurs ne relèvent pas du champ d'application de cette directive, ne s'applique qu'à des contrats qui ont la qualité de « marchés publics » et qui, partant, ont un caractère onéreux.

21 En effet, tant l'intitulé de l'article 12 de cette directive qui vise les « [m]archés publics passés entre entités appartenant au secteur public » que l'appartenance de cette disposition à la section 3, intitulée « Exclusions », du chapitre I de cette directive suffisent à établir qu'un marché conclu entre pouvoirs adjudicateurs constitue un « marché public », au sens de l'article 2, paragraphe 1, point 5, de ladite directive (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 28 mai 2020, Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung, C-796/18, EU:C:2020:395, points 31 et 32).

22 Or, pour être qualifié de « marché public », au sens de l'article 2, paragraphe 1, point 5, de la directive 2014/24, un contrat doit avoir été conclu à titre onéreux et, partant, impliquer que le pouvoir adjudicateur qui conclut un marché public reçoive en vertu de ce contrat, moyennant une contrepartie, une prestation devant comporter un intérêt économique direct pour ce pouvoir adjudicateur. En outre, ce contrat doit présenter un caractère synallagmatique, ce trait constituant une caractéristique essentielle d'un marché public (voir, par analogie, arrêt du 21 décembre 2016, Remondis, C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985, point 43).

23 Il s'ensuit, d'une part, que l'exclusion des règles de passation des marchés publics présuppose que le contrat concerné soit un marché public, au sens de l'article 2, paragraphe 1, point 5, de la directive 2014/24, et, d'autre part, qu'un marché public remplissant les conditions posées à l'article 12, paragraphe 4, sous a) à c), de cette directive, conserve sa nature juridique de « marché public », et ce même si de telles règles ne lui sont pas applicables (arrêt du 28 mai 2020, Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung, C-796/18, EU:C:2020:395, points 31, 32 et 34).

24 À cet égard, il ressort de l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 que, pour être exclu des règles de passation des marchés publics, un marché public conclu exclusivement entre deux pouvoirs adjudicateurs ou plus doit établir ou mettre en œuvre une coopération entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants dans le but de garantir que les services publics dont ils doivent assurer la prestation sont réalisés en vue d'atteindre les objectifs qu'ils ont en commun. En outre, la mise en œuvre de cette coopération ne doit obéir qu'à des considérations d'intérêt public. Par ailleurs, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants doivent réaliser sur le marché concurrentiel moins de 20 % des activités concernées par la coopération.

25 En premier lieu, il convient de relever, ainsi que cela ressort de son libellé, que l'article 12, paragraphe 4, sous a) et b), de ladite directive place la notion de « coopération » au cœur même du dispositif d'exclusion prévu à cette disposition. La précision, en apparence tautologique, énoncée au considérant 33, troisième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24, selon laquelle la coopération doit être « fondée sur le concept de coopération », renvoie, en réalité, à l'exigence d'effectivité de la coopération ainsi établie ou mise en œuvre (arrêt du 4 juin 2020, Remondis, C-429/19, EU:C:2020:436, point 28).

26 Il s'ensuit, d'une part, que la conclusion d'un accord de coopération entre entités appartenant au secteur public doit apparaître comme l'aboutissement d'une démarche de coopération entre les parties à celui-ci. L'élaboration d'une coopération entre entités appartenant au secteur public présente, en effet, une dimension intrinsèquement collaborative (arrêt du 4 juin 2020, Remondis, C-429/19, EU:C:2020:436, point 28).

27 D'autre part, la participation conjointe de toutes les parties à l'accord de coopération est indispensable pour garantir que les services publics dont ils doivent assurer la prestation sont réalisés. Cette condition ne saurait être réputée satisfaite lorsque l'unique contribution de certains cocontractants se limite à un simple remboursement des frais encourus par l'une des parties contractantes (arrêt du 4 juin 2020, Remondis, C-429/19, EU:C:2020:436, point 29). En effet, si un tel remboursement des frais suffisait à lui seul à caractériser une « coopération », au sens de l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24, aucune différenciation ne pourrait être établie entre une telle « coopération » et un « marché public » non couvert par l'exclusion prévue à cette disposition.

28 Ainsi, il ne saurait être déduit de la circonstance que la Cour se soit référée, dans l'arrêt du 9 juin 2009, Commission/Allemagne (C-480/06, EU:C:2009:357, point 43), à des mouvements financiers correspondant au remboursement de la part des charges incombant à chacun des pouvoirs adjudicateurs participant au partenariat que seul ce type de frais peut être admis.

29 En l'occurrence, la décision de renvoi ne semble toutefois pas pouvoir permettre de caractériser l'existence d'une véritable coopération entre la Région de Campanie et l'ACI, la convention en cause au principal ayant, selon la juridiction de renvoi, uniquement pour objet l'acquisition d'une prestation moyennant le versement d'une rémunération. La convention en cause au principal ne semble pas non plus constituer l'aboutissement d'une démarche de coopération entre ces deux pouvoirs adjudicateurs.

30 En deuxième lieu, ainsi que cela a été relevé au point 16 de la présente ordonnance, la juridiction de renvoi considère que la convention en cause au principal n'a pas été conclue en vue d'atteindre des objectifs communs à la Région de Campanie et à l'ACI.

31 Néanmoins, dans la mesure où l'ACI allègue, dans ses observations écrites, qu'il a pour mission de gérer le registre public des automobiles, lequel sert à déterminer les redevables de cette taxe, et que, partant, il serait titulaire de missions publiques relatives à ladite taxe, il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi d'apprécier si la mission ainsi confiée à l'ACI n'est pas susceptible d'être appréhendée comme une activité accessoire à la perception de la taxe sur les véhicules automobiles.

32 En effet, il découle de l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec le considérant 33, premier alinéa, de cette directive, qu'une coopération entre personnes publiques peut porter sur tous les types d'activités liées à l'exécution de services et à l'exercice de responsabilités confiées aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants ou assumées par eux. Or, l'expression « tous les types d'activités », figurant audit considérant 33, premier alinéa, est susceptible de couvrir une activité accessoire à un service public, pour autant que cette activité accessoire contribue à la réalisation effective de la mission de service public qui fait l'objet de la coopération entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants (arrêt du 28 mai 2020, Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung, C-796/18, EU:C:2020:395, point 60).

33 En troisième lieu, ainsi que cela a été relevé au point 17 de la présente ordonnance, il ressort de la décision de renvoi que les paiements prévus par la convention en cause au principal excèdent manifestement le simple remboursement des dépenses encourues puisque ce contrat prévoirait le paiement d'une contrepartie largement supérieure aux niveaux de prix pratiqués sur le marché.

34 Il apparaît donc que la contrepartie financière prévue par le contrat en cause en principal n'obéit pas uniquement à des considérations d'intérêt public, contrairement à ce que requièrent tant l'article 12, paragraphe 4, sous b), de la directive 2014/24 que le considérant 33, troisième alinéa, de cette directive.

35 Il s'ensuit que, dans la mesure où les conditions d'application de l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 sont cumulatives, la convention en cause au principal ne saurait, en tout état de cause, remplir les conditions prévues à cette disposition.

36 Eu égard aux considérations qui précèdent, il convient de répondre à la question posée que l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il s'oppose à une disposition nationale qui permet l'attribution directe, sans appel d'offres, du marché des services relatifs à la gestion de la taxe sur les véhicules automobiles à un établissement public non économique ayant pour mission de gérer le registre public des automobiles.

Sur les dépens

37 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens. Les frais exposés pour soumettre des observations à la Cour, autres que ceux desdites parties, ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un remboursement.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (neuvième chambre) dit pour droit :

L'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE, doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il s'oppose à une disposition nationale qui permet l'attribution directe, sans appel d'offres, du marché des services relatifs à la gestion de la taxe sur les véhicules automobiles à un établissement public non économique ayant pour mission de gérer le registre public des automobiles.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 20 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the Confederación Nacional de Centros Especiales de Empleo (Conacee) (National Confederation of Special Employment Centres, Spain) and the Diputación Foral de Gipuzkoa (Provincial Council of Gipuzkoa, Spain) concerning a decision of the Governing body of that provincial council of 15 May 2018 approving instructions issued to that institution's contracting authorities for certain reserved contracts.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 2004/18/EC

3 Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) was repealed with effect from 18 April 2016. The first paragraph of Article 19 of that directive provided:

'Member States may reserve the right to participate in public contract award procedures to sheltered workshops or provide for such contracts to be performed in the context of sheltered employment programmes where most of the employees concerned are handicapped persons who, by reason of the nature or the seriousness of their disabilities, cannot carry on occupations under normal conditions.'

4 Recitals 1 and 36 of Directive 2014/24 state:

'(1) The award of public contracts by or on behalf of Member States' authorities has to comply with the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and in particular the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, provisions should be drawn up coordinating national procurement procedures so as to ensure that those principles are given practical effect and public procurement is opened up to competition.

(36) Employment and occupation contribute to integration in society and are key elements in guaranteeing equal opportunities for all. In this context, sheltered workshops can play a significant role. The same is true for other social businesses whose main aim is to support the social and professional integration or reintegration of disabled and disadvantaged persons, such as the unemployed, members of disadvantaged minorities or otherwise socially marginalised groups. However, such workshops or businesses might not be able to obtain contracts under normal conditions of competition. Consequently, it is appropriate to provide that Member States should be able to reserve the right to participate in award procedures for public contracts or for certain lots thereof to such workshops or businesses or reserve performance of contracts to the context of sheltered employment programmes.'

5 Under Article 2(1), points (5) and (10), of that directive:

'For the purposes of this Directive:

(5) “public contracts” means contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services;

(10) “economic operator” means any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities, including any temporary association of undertakings, which offers the execution of works and/or a work, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market.’

6 Article 18(1) of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

7 Article 20 of that directive states, under the heading ‘Reserved contracts’:

‘1. Member States may reserve the right to participate in public procurement procedures to sheltered workshops and economic operators whose main aim is the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons or may provide for such contracts to be performed in the context of sheltered employment programmes, provided that at least 30% of the employees of those workshops, economic operators or programmes are disabled or disadvantaged workers.

2. The call for competition shall make reference to this Article.’

Spanish law

8 Ley 9/2017 de Contratos del Sector Público, por la que se transponen al ordenamiento jurídico español las Directivas del Parlamento Europeo y del Consejo 2014/23/UE y 2014/24/UE, de 26 de febrero de 2014 (Law 9/2017 on Public Sector Procurement, which transposes Directives 2014/23/EU and 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 into Spanish law), of 8 November 2017 (BOE No 272, of 9 November 2017, p. 107714) (‘Law on public sector contracts’) transposes Directive 2014/24 into Spanish law. The Fourth Additional Provision of that law, entitled ‘Reserved contracts’, provides:

‘1. By decision of the Council of Ministers or of the competent body within the sphere of the autonomous communities and local authorities, minimum percentages shall be set for reservation of the right to participate in procurement procedures for the award of certain contracts or certain lots of those contracts to social initiative special employment centres and to work integration social enterprises, governed, respectively, by Real Decreto Legislativo 1/2013 por el que se aprueba el Texto Refundido de la Ley General de derechos de las personas con discapacidad y de su inclusión social [(Royal Legislative Decree 1/2013 approving the consolidated text of the General Law on the rights of persons with disabilities and their social inclusion) of 29 November 2013 (“Royal Legislative Decree 1/2013”)] and by Ley 44/2007 para la regulación del régimen de las empresas de inserción [(Law 44/2007 on work integration social enterprises)] of 13 December 2007, which satisfy the eligibility criteria laid down in that legislation to qualify as such, or establish a minimum percentage for reservation of the performance of those contracts in the context of sheltered employment programmes, provided that the proportion of disabled or socially excluded staff of special employment centres, work integration social enterprises and programmes is that stipulated in the legislation in question and, in any event, at least 30%.

The decision of the Council of Ministers or of the competent body within the sphere of the autonomous communities and local authorities shall set out the minimum requirements for ensuring compliance with the provisions of the previous paragraph.

2. The call for competition shall make reference to this Article.

…’

9 The Fourteenth Final Provision of the Law on public sector contracts, which defines the concept of ‘social initiative special employment centres’ to which the Fourth Additional Provision of that Law restricts the reservation of public contracts, states:

‘… Social initiative special employment centres are those which satisfy the criteria laid down in paragraphs 1 and 2 of [Article 43 of the consolidated text of the General Law on the rights of persons with disabilities and their social inclusion], and are promoted and in which more than 50 per cent of the shares are held, directly or indirectly, by one or more public or private undertakings which are not-for-profit or whose social nature is referred to in their articles of association, whether these are associations, foundations, bodies governed by public law, social initiative cooperatives or other social economy entities, and also those owned by commercial companies referred to above, whether directly or indirectly (through the concept of dominant company governed by Article 42 of the Commercial Code), and provided in all cases that it is stipulated in their articles of association or a shareholders’ resolution that their profits must be reinvested in full in the creation of employment opportunities for persons with disabilities and the continuous improvement of their competitiveness and their social economy activity, while having, in any event, the right to opt to reinvest profits in the special employment centre itself or in other social initiative special employment centres.’

10 Article 43 of the consolidated text of the General Law on the rights of persons with disabilities and their social inclusion, which defines special employment centres, provides in paragraphs 1, 2 and 4:

‘1. The principal objective of special employment centres is to carry on activities for the production of goods or services, by participating regularly in market operations, in order to provide paid employment to disabled persons; they are also a means of including as many of those persons as possible in regular employment. …

2. Special employment centres shall be staffed by as many disabled workers as the nature of the production process allows and, in any case, at least 70% of the employees shall be disabled.

4. [This paragraph reproduces the definition of “social initiative special employment centres” as set out in the Fourteenth Final Provision of the Law on public sector contracts]’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

11 Conacee is a non-profit-making association governed by Spanish law whose members are federations and associations of special employment centres.

12 On 23 July 2018, Conacee brought an administrative action before the Tribunal Superior de Justicia del País Vasco (High Court of Justice of the Basque Country, Spain) seeking annulment of the decision of the Diputación Foral de Gipuzkoa of 15 May 2018, which approved the instructions issued to that institution’s contracting authorities and reserved the right to participate in procedures for the award of contracts or certain lots of those contracts to social initiative special employment centres or to work integration social enterprises, and the performance of a number of such contracts in the context of sheltered employment programmes.

13 The contracts included in those instructions are those that are referred to as being reserved in the Fourth Additional Provision and the Fourteenth Final Provision of the Law on public contracts, which transpose Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 into Spanish law.

14 Those provisions reserve access to the contracts referred to in Article 20 to social initiative special employment centres and work integration social enterprises, thereby excluding from the scope of those provisions and, consequently, from the reservation of those contracts, the business initiative special employment centres which Conacee represents at the national level.

15 The referring court states that, by determining the scope ratione personae of reserved contracts, those provisions impose requirements in addition to those laid down in Article 20 of Directive 2014/24. That provision, by limiting its scope to only 'social initiative special employment centres', has the effect of excluding from the reservation undertakings and economic operators which otherwise satisfy the conditions laid down in Article 20 in that at least 30% of their employees are disabled or disadvantaged persons and their main aim is to further the social and professional integration of those persons.

16 In those circumstances, the Tribunal Superior de Justicia del País Vasco (High Court of Justice of the Basque Country) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Must Article 20 of Directive [2014/24] be interpreted as meaning that the scope ratione personae of the reservation laid down therein cannot be defined in terms which exclude from its scope undertakings or economic operators which satisfy the condition that at least 30% of their employees must be persons with disabilities and which meet the aim or objective of the social and professional integration of those persons, by setting additional criteria related to the constitution, character and aims of those bodies, to their activities and investments, or to other matters?'

Consideration of the question referred

17 By its question the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding a Member State from imposing requirements in addition to those laid down in that provision, thereby excluding from reserved public procurement procedures certain economic operators which satisfy the criteria laid down in that provision.

18 Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24 gives Member States the option of reserving the right to participate in public procurement procedures to certain entities and makes that provision subject to fulfilment of the two cumulative conditions listed in that provision, namely, (i) that the participants in the procurement procedure are sheltered workshops or economic operators whose main aim is the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons, and (ii) that at least 30% of the employees of those workshops and economic operators are disabled or disadvantaged persons.

19 In order to reply to the question referred, it is necessary to determine whether those two conditions are listed exhaustively in Article 20(1), in such a way that that provision precludes Member States from imposing additional criteria and thereby excluding from the reserved public procurement procedures referred to in that provision economic operators which, despite satisfying the conditions laid down in that provision, do not satisfy the additional criteria laid down by national law.

20 According to settled case-law, when interpreting a provision of EU law it is necessary to consider not only its wording but also the objectives of the legislation of which it forms part and the origin of that legislation (judgment of 15 November 2018, Verbraucherzentrale Baden-Württemberg, C-330/17, EU:C:2018:916, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited).

21 In the first place, as regards the wording of Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24, it should be noted, first, that that provision confers on Member States the option of reserving to sheltered workshops and certain economic operators the right to participate in public procurement procedures and sets out the conditions to which that option is subject. As the Advocate General has stated, in essence, in points 41 and 42 of his Opinion, that provision is worded in terms which in no way indicate that all entities which meet those conditions must benefit from that right.

22 Secondly, the second condition laid down in that provision, namely that disabled or disadvantaged persons must make up at least 30% of the employees of the entities referred to in that provision, constitutes merely a minimum requirement.

23 Third, it is important to point out that the reference to ‘economic operators’ indicates, in the light of the definition of those terms in Article 2(10) of that directive and as the Advocate General stated, in essence, in point 42 of his Opinion, that those conditions are broad and unspecific as to which entities may benefit from the public procurement procedures referred to in Article 20(1), provided that the main aim of those operators is the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons.

24 Thus it follows from the wording of Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24 that, when they decide to reserve to certain participants the right to participate in public procurement procedures, pursuant to that provision, Member States enjoy a degree of latitude in implementing the conditions laid down in that provision.

25 In the second place, as regards the objective pursued by Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24, it is clear from recital 36 of the directive that, in order for employment and occupation to contribute to integration in society and to guarantee equal opportunities for all, the option provided for in that provision must be exercised for the benefit of sheltered workshops and economic operators whose main aim is to support the social and professional integration or reintegration of disabled or disadvantaged persons, such as the unemployed, members of disadvantaged minorities or otherwise socially marginalised groups who might not be able to obtain contracts under normal conditions of competition.

26 It follows that the EU legislature wished to promote, by means of employment and occupation, the integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons in society, by allowing Member States to reserve the right to participate in award procedures for public contracts, or for certain lots of those contracts, to protected workshops and economic operators which, in view of their social objective, operate in the market with a competitive disadvantage.

27 Thus, Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24 pursues a social policy objective, relating to employment. However, as EU law currently stands, the Member States have a wide margin of discretion in defining the measures likely to achieve a given social and employment policy objective (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 September 2018, Bedi, C-312/17, EU:C:2018:734, paragraph 59 and the case-law cited).

28 Consequently, an examination of the objective pursued by Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24 supports the interpretation arising from the wording of that provision, in the sense that, in the light of that discretion, the Member States enjoy a certain latitude in the implementation of that provision. It follows that Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24 does not contain an exhaustive list of conditions, but leaves it to Member States to adopt additional criteria which the entities referred to in that provision must satisfy in order to be allowed to participate in reserved public procurement procedures pursuant to that provision, provided that those additional criteria contribute to ensuring the social and employment policy objectives pursued by that provision.

29 In the third place, that interpretation is also borne out by the origin of Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24. Article 19(1) of Directive 2004/18, which was applicable to reserved contracts before it was repealed by Directive 2014/24, imposed considerably stricter requirements on the right to participate in public contract award procedures which could be reserved by Member States, as regards both the entities allowed to participate in those procedures, which were limited to sheltered workshops, and the persons employed by those entities, which had to be staffed predominantly by handicapped persons who, by reason of the nature or the seriousness of their disabilities, were unable to pursue an occupation under normal conditions.

30 It should be noted that it is not apparent from Directive 2014/24 or the origin of that directive that the EU legislature, when it broadened the scope ratione personae for public procurement procedures reserved by Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24, intended to create a situation in which the economic operators referred to in that provision, which employ a lower percentage of disabled or disadvantaged persons, would replace economic operators meeting the stricter requirements under Article 19(1) of Directive 2004/18. Moreover, such an outcome would be contrary to the objective pursued by Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24, which, as is apparent from paragraph 26 above, is to integrate disabled and disadvantaged persons in society by means of occupation and employment.

31 However, as the Advocate General observed, in essence, in point 51 of his Opinion, that is precisely what would happen if Member States were required to allow the participation of all economic operators fulfilling the conditions laid down in Article 20(1) in public procurement procedures for reserved contracts. There is a risk that, in such a situation, economic operators meeting the stricter requirements laid down in Article 19(1) of Directive 2004/18 would be obliged to dismiss some of the less productive disabled or disadvantaged workers, in order to be able to participate in those public contract award procedures on an equal footing with economic operators with only 30% disabled or disadvantaged workers.

32 Consequently, Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that the conditions which it sets out are not exhaustive and that Member States may, where appropriate, stipulate additional criteria which the entities referred to in that provision must satisfy in order to be allowed to participate in reserved public procurement procedures.

33 However, it is important to note that Member States, in making use of this option, must respect the fundamental rules of the TFEU, in particular those relating to the free movement of goods, the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as the principles deriving from them, such as the principles of equal treatment and proportionality (see, to that effect, judgment of 3 October 2019, Irgita, C-285/18, EU:C:2019:829, paragraph 48 and the case-law cited), which are, moreover, reflected in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24.

34 Accordingly, the referring court will have to examine whether the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings, according to which, in the context of reserved procurement procedures under Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24, special employment centres must, first, be promoted and have more than 50% of their shares held, directly or indirectly, by not-for-profit entities and, second, reinvest their profits in full in their own establishment or in another centre of the same kind, is consistent with those principles.

35 In order to provide that court with the information necessary to carry out such an examination, the following should be noted.

36 In the first place, it should be noted that the principle of equal treatment, which is one of the fundamental principles of EU law, requires that comparable situations must not be treated differently and that different situations must not be treated in the same way unless such treatment is objectively justified (see, to that effect, judgment of 17 December 2020, Centraal Israëlitisch Consistorie van België and Others, C-336/19, EU:C:2020:1031, paragraph 85 and the case-law cited).

37 In particular, in the field of EU public procurement law, the principle of equal treatment, which constitutes the basis of the EU rules on procedures for the award of public contracts, means, in particular, that tenderers must be in a position of equality when they formulate their tenders, the aim of which is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 July 2019, Telecom Italia, C-697/17, EU:C:2019:599, paragraphs 32 and 33 and the case-law cited).

38 Thus, in the present case, the referring court will have to determine, inter alia, whether social initiative special employment centres are in the same situation as business initiative special employment centres as regards the objective pursued by Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24.

39 In making that determination, that court must take into account, in particular, first, the fact that it is apparent from the national legislation that the purpose of a special employment centre, whether a social or business initiative, is to provide paid employment for disabled persons and is regarded as a means of including as many of those people as possible in regular employment, and, second, that at least 70% of the employees of special employment centres are disabled.

40 It follows that, subject to the findings of the referring court, business initiative special employment centres, like social initiative special employment centres, appear to be in a situation in which they would not be able to participate in award procedures for public contracts under normal conditions of competition.

41 However, that court will also have to determine whether, as the Spanish Government stated, in essence, in its written observations, social initiative special employment centres, on account of their particular characteristics, are in a position to implement more effectively the social integration objective pursued by Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24, which could objectively justify a difference in treatment with respect to business initiative special employment centres. In that regard, the Spanish Government states that social initiative special employment centres maximise social and non-economic value, given, first, that they have no profit-making aim and that they reinvest all their profits in their social objectives, second, that they tend to be governed by democratic and participatory principles and, third, that they thus achieve greater social impact by providing better quality employment and better social and professional integration and reintegration for disabled and disadvantaged persons.

42 In the second place, it follows from settled case-law that, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, which is a general principle of EU law, the rules laid down by the Member States or contracting authorities in implementing the provisions of Directive 2014/24, such as the rules intended to lay down the implementing conditions of Article 20(1) of that directive, must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of that directive (see, to that effect, judgment of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 45 and the case-law cited).

43 In that regard, it should be noted that both the condition that centres be promoted and more than 50% of its shares be held, directly or indirectly, by non-profit entities, and the condition relating to the obligation to reinvest all profits in social initiative special employment centres, referred to in paragraph 34 above, appear to be suitable for ensuring that the main purpose of such special employment centres is the integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons, as required by Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24.

44 [As rectified by order of 6 December 2021] As to whether those requirements go beyond what is necessary to achieve that objective, it is for the referring court to determine whether both the fact that a for-profit entity has a majority shareholding, directly or indirectly, in a special employment centre, and the reinvestment of only part of the profits in those centres, are such as to ensure that those centres are able to achieve that objective as effectively as by application of the conditions mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

45 In the third place, it should be added, as the Spanish Government and the European Commission have observed, that it does not appear from the analysis of the Spanish legislation submitted by the Spanish Government in response to the Court's written questions that economic operators established in accordance with the law of other Member States are excluded from the right to take part in reserved public procurement procedures, provided for by that Spanish legislation, as long as those operators fulfil the conditions expressly laid down in that legislation for social initiative special employment centres. However, it is for the referring court to carry out the necessary checks in that regard.

46 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding a Member State from imposing additional criteria beyond those laid down by that provision, thereby excluding from reserved public procurement procedures certain economic operators which satisfy the criteria laid down in that provision, provided that that Member State complies with the principles of equal treatment and proportionality.

Costs

47 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as not precluding a Member State from imposing additional criteria beyond those laid down by that provision, thereby excluding from reserved public procurement procedures certain economic operators which satisfy the criteria laid down in that provision, provided that that Member State complies with the principles of equal treatment and proportionality.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

TANCHEV

delivered on 29 April 2021(1)

Case C-598/19

Confederación Nacional de Centros Especiales de Empleo (CONACEE)

v

Diputación Foral de Guipúzcoa,

Federación Empresarial Española de Asociaciones de Centros Especiales de Empleo (Feacem)

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunal Superior de Justicia del País Vasco (High Court of Justice of the Basque Country, Spain))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 2014/24/EU – Articles 18 and 20 – National legislation reserving the right to participate in certain public procurement procedures to Social initiative special employment centres – Additional conditions not provided for by the directive)

1. This request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunal Superior de Justicia del País Vasco (High Court of Justice of the Basque Country, Spain) ('the referring court') asks the Court to interpret, for the first time, Article 20 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement. (2)

2. The question referred asks the Court to clarify, in essence, whether the Member States, when making use of the option under Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 to reserve the right to participate in public procurement procedures to certain operators, must permit all economic operators that meet the criteria under that provision to participate in the procurement procedures, or whether the Member States, when making use of that option, may further restrict the circle of economic operators that may participate and place bids for the contracts in question.

3. I have concluded that the Member States may indeed define the circle of economic operators permitted to participate by imposing criteria that are narrower than the requirements imposed by Article 20 of Directive 2014/24, which, in my analysis, are minimum requirements. However, if a Member State chooses to do so, it must still comply with the provisions of the directive, including Article 18, 'Principles of procurement', as well as with generally applicable requirements of EU public procurement law.

I. Legal framework

A. EU law

4. Recital 1 to Directive 2014/24 states:

'The award of public contracts by or on behalf of Member States' authorities has to comply with the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and in particular the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, provisions should be drawn up coordinating national procurement procedures so as to ensure that those principles are given practical effect and public procurement is opened up to competition.'

5. Recital 2 to Directive 2014/24 reads:

'Public procurement plays a key role in the Europe 2020 strategy, set out in the Commission Communication of 3 March 2010 entitled 'Europe 2020, a strategy for smart, sustainable and inclusive growth' ('Europe 2020 strategy for smart, sustainable and inclusive growth'), as one of the market-based instruments to be used to achieve smart, sustainable and inclusive growth while ensuring the most efficient use of public funds. For that purpose, the public procurement rules adopted pursuant to [Directive 2004/17 (3)] and [Directive 2004/18 (4)] should be revised and modernised in order to increase the efficiency of public spending, facilitating in particular the participation of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in public procurement, and to enable procurers to make better use of public procurement in support of common societal goals …'

6. Recital 36 to Directive 2014/24 is worded as follows:

'Employment and occupation contribute to integration in society and are key elements in guaranteeing equal opportunities for all. In this context, sheltered workshops can play a significant role. The same is true for other social businesses whose main aim is to support the social and professional integration or reintegration of disabled and disadvantaged persons, such as the unemployed, members of disadvantaged minorities or otherwise socially marginalised groups. However, such workshops or businesses might not be able to obtain contracts under normal conditions of competition. Consequently, it is appropriate to provide that Member States should be able to reserve the right to participate in award procedures for public contracts or for certain lots thereof to such workshops or businesses or reserve performance of contracts to the context of sheltered employment programmes.'

7. Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 defines, for purposes of the directive, 'public contracts' as 'contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services'.

8. Article 2(1)(10) of Directive 2014/24 defines 'economic operator' as 'any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities, including any temporary association of undertakings, which offers the execution of works and/or a work, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market'.

9. Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Principles of procurement', provides:

'1. Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.

…'

10. Article 20 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Reserved contracts', states:

'1. Member States may reserve the right to participate in public procurement procedures to sheltered workshops and economic operators whose main aim is the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons or may provide for such contracts to be performed in the context of sheltered employment programmes, provided that at least 30 % of the employees of those workshops, economic operators or programmes are disabled or disadvantaged workers.

…’

B. Spanish law

11. Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 was transposed into Spanish law by the Fourth Additional Provision of Ley 9/2017 de contratos del sector público (Law 9/2017 on public sector contracts) (‘Law 9/2017’) of 8 November 2017, which provides:

> ‘1. By decision of the Council of Ministers or of the competent body within the sphere of the autonomous communities and local authorities, minimum percentages shall be set for reservation of the right to participate in procurement procedures for the award of certain contracts or certain lots of those contracts to social initiative special employment centres and to work integration social enterprises, …, which satisfy the eligibility criteria laid down in [the relevant] legislation, or a minimum percentage shall be set for reservation of the performance of those contracts in the context of sheltered employment programmes, provided that the proportion of disabled or socially excluded staff of special employment centres, work integration social enterprises and programmes is that stipulated in the legislation in question and, in any event, at least 30%.
> The decision of the Council of Ministers or of the competent body within the sphere of the autonomous communities and local authorities shall set out the minimum requirements for ensuring compliance with the provisions of the previous paragraph.
> 2. The contract notice shall make reference to this provision.

12. The Fourteenth Final Provision of Law 9/2017 states:

> 4. Social initiative special employment centres are those which satisfy the criteria laid down in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the present Article, and are promoted and in which more than 50 per cent of the shares are held, directly or indirectly, by one or more public or private undertakings which are not-for-profit or whose social nature is referred to in their articles of association, whether these are associations, foundations, bodies governed by public law, social initiative cooperatives or other social economy entities, and also those owned by commercial companies referred to above, whether directly or indirectly … and provided in all cases that it is stipulated in their articles of association or a shareholders’ resolution that their profits must be reinvested in full in the creation of employment opportunities for persons with disabilities and the continuous improvement of their competitiveness and their social economy activity, while having, in any event, the right to opt to reinvest profits in the special employment centre itself or in other social initiative special employment centres.’

II. Facts, main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

13. The dispute in the main proceedings arises from a decision of 15 May 2018 (‘the decision of 15 May 2018’), whereby the Consejo de Gobierno de la Diputación Foral de Guipúzcoa (Governing body of the Guipúzcoa Provincial Authority, Spain) approved instructions issued to that institution’s contracting authorities. Those instructions concern the reservation of the right to participate in procurement procedures, as provided for by the Spanish legislation implementing Directive 2014/24.

14. The action in the main proceedings was brought by the Confederación Nacional de Centros Especiales de Empleo (National Confederation of Special Employment Centres) (‘CONACEE’), which is an association representing Special Employment Centres in Spain. Its members include, among other categories, ‘entrepreneurial’ Special Employment Centres.

15. As is apparent from the file before the Court, prior Spanish law permitted Special Employment Centres in Spain to participate in public procurement procedures for 'reserved contracts' regardless of whether they were not-for-profit or entrepreneurial in nature. (5) That situation changed with the introduction of Law 9/2017.

16. Law 9/2017 introduced a new category of so-called 'Social Initiative Special Employment Centres' and reserved participation in Article 20 reserved contract procurement procedures (6) to those centres.

17. In addition to the requirements that Special Employment Centres had to meet to qualify as such under prior law, Social Initiative Special Employment Centres must be organised as not-for-profit entities or satisfy certain ownership requirements, and must also reinvest their profits, either in their own operations or in similar Social Initiative Special Employment Centre operations.

18. According to CONACEE, these additional requirements exclude a large portion of Spanish Special Employment Centres from participating in Spanish reserved procurement procedures, even though they satisfy the requirements laid down in Article 20 of Directive 2014/24.

19. Against that background, CONACEE brought an action against the decision of 15 May 2018 before the Tribunal Superior de Justicia del País Vasco (High Court of Justice of the Basque Country) challenging the decision of 15 May 2018 and claiming, in essence, that the new Spanish regime is contrary to EU law.

20. The referring court has doubts as to whether the new regime is compatible with EU law and specifically with Article 20 of Directive 2014/24.

21. In those circumstances, the Tribunal Superior de Justicia del País Vasco (High Court of Justice of the Basque Country) stayed the proceedings and referred the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

> 'Must Article 20 of Directive 2014/24/EU on public procurement be interpreted as meaning that the scope ratione personae of the reservation laid down therein cannot be defined in terms which exclude from its scope undertakings or economic operators which satisfy the condition that at least 30% of their employees must be persons with disabilities and which meet the aim or objective of the social and professional integration of those persons, by setting additional criteria related to the constitution, character and aims of those bodies, to their activities and investments, or to other matters?'

22. Written observations were submitted by CONACEE, the Guipúzcoa Provincial Authority, the Kingdom of Spain and the Commission.

23. A hearing was requested, but none was held. The Court put two questions to the interested parties referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union for a written response. CONACEE, the Diputación Foral de Guipúzcoa, the Kingdom of Spain and the Commission submitted written responses.

III. Analysis

24. By its question, the referring court seeks, in essence, to clarify whether the provisions of that directive or other applicable rules of EU law governing public procurement prevent the Member States from imposing additional limits or requirements on the undertakings or economic operators that may participate in Article 20 reserved procurement procedures, other than the limitations that follow from that article. The referring court is especially, but not exclusively, concerned with 'additional criteria related to the constitution, character and aims of those bodies [and] to their activities and investments'.

25. I have reached the conclusion that the better view is that Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 sets out minimum requirements that the Member States must ensure are met by the permitted participants, (7) if the Member States choose to avail themselves of the option to reserve contracts pursuant to that article, and that that provision does not in and of itself prevent the Member States from placing further requirements or restrictions on the permitted participants, either on a general level or for specific public procurement procedures or for individual lots thereof. However, when making use of the option to reserve contracts as provided by Article 20, the Member States are still required to comply with the rules of Directive 2014/24 and the general rules of EU law applicable to public procurement; here, in particular Article 18 of the directive and the principles of equal treatment and proportionality.

A. Preliminary remarks

26. According to Article 4 of Directive 2014/24, that directive applies to procurements with an estimated value equal to or greater than certain thresholds set out in that article. (8) Procurements that do not meet the thresholds are not subject to the provisions of that directive, however they must still comply with the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, and in particular with the rules on free movement as well as the principles deriving from those rules, including the principles of equal treatment, mutual recognition, non-discrimination and proportionality. (9)

27. The present case concerns only public procurement falling within the scope of application of Directive 2014/24. I should add that the facts of the case in the main proceedings appear to involve exclusively Spanish actors and that the facts in respect of which the referring court must give a decision do not appear to involve any cross-border element.

28. Pursuant to Article 20 of Directive 2014/24, the Member States may reserve the 'right to participate in public procurement procedures' to sheltered workshops and economic operators with certain specific 'main aim[s]' or may provide that the contracts in question are to be 'performed in the context of sheltered employment programmes'. This option is subject to the proviso that 'at least 30%' of the employees of those workshops, economic operators or programmes are 'disabled or disadvantaged workers'.

29. Spain has availed itself of this option, and has enacted legislation concerning its Special Employment Centres that imposes additional restrictions on the economic operators wishing to participate in the Spanish Article 20 reserved procurement procedures that CONACEE is contesting in the main proceedings. That legislation stipulates, in essence, that the entities or persons concerned must be not-for-profit and that they must undertake to reinvest any profits made, either in the Special Employment Centre itself or in another similar Special Employment Centre.

30. Spain has also set an employment percentage requirement regarding disadvantaged persons in Special Employment Centres that is significantly higher (70%) than the minimum required by Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 (30%). This limit does not appear to be contested in the main case, possibly because CONACEE's members actually meet that criterion.

31. Other Member States have likewise enacted legislation in which the limitations in respect of the permitted participants in their Article 20 reserved public procurement procedures are stricter than the limitations that follow from the text of Directive 2014/24. (10)

B. The Member States' discretion

32. Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 lays down a number of criteria for the 'permitted participants' that must be satisfied, if a given Member State chooses to avail itself of the option to use Article 20 reserved contracts (11) in its procurement procedures. Article 20(1) requires that either (i) the permitted participants in those reserved public procurement procedures must belong to one of two different categories of participants, namely either 'sheltered workshops' or 'economic operators whose main aim is the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons', or (ii) '[the] contracts [must] be performed in the context of sheltered employment programmes'. The case before the Court concerns only the category 'economic operators whose main aim is the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons' and the possible imposition of additional requirements for participation on that group of economic operators apart from the requirements that are explicitly laid down in the directive.

33. Article 20(1) of Directive 2014/24 further imposes a requirement that at least 30% of the employees of the permitted participants must be disabled or disadvantaged workers.

34. Finally, Article 20(2) of Directive 2014/24 requires the Member States, when availing themselves of the option provided by Article 20, to make explicit reference to that article in the call for competition. That requirement is not at issue in the present case.

35. CONACEE argues, in essence, that the wording of Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 exhaustively describes the requirements that economic operators must meet in order to qualify for participation in public procurement procedures reserved under that provision, and that economic operators that satisfy those criteria therefore cannot be excluded from participation due to additional requirements such as the non-profit requirement and the reinvestment-of-profit requirement imposed by the Spanish legislation in question.

36. The Commission argues, in essence, that the Member States enjoy a broad discretion when defining in their national legislation what is to be understood by the expression ‘economic operators whose main aim is the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons’. (12)

37. I cannot share the Commission’s analysis. It is settled case-law that it follows from the need for a uniform application of EU law and from the principle of equality that the terms of a provision of EU law which makes no express reference to the law of the Member States for the purpose of determining its meaning and scope must normally be given an independent and uniform interpretation throughout the European Union. That interpretation must take into account, not only its terms, but also its context and the objective pursued by the relevant legislation. (13)

38. Therefore, I do not consider that the Member States enjoy a broad discretion to define the meaning of the terms of Article 20 of Directive 2014/24. In my view, those terms must be given a uniform interpretation. Thus, any discretion that the Member States may enjoy when implementing Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 does not stem from a discretion for them each to apply their own meaning to the terms of the directive.

39. Rather, the requirements under Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 can be understood either as minimum requirements that the Member State must impose on the permitted participants in order for the Member State’s use of Article 20 reserved procurement procedures to be lawful, or, as CONACEE argues, as an exhaustive definition of the criteria determining which economic operators are to be accepted by the Member States as permitted participants, if the Member States choose to make use of Article 20 reserved procurement procedures.

40. As I shall explain, in my view, the requirements under Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 are best understood as minimum requirements, which leave the Member States free to impose additional limitations, narrowing the circle of permitted participants in their Article 20 reserved procurement procedures, subject to the limitations imposed by other provisions of Directive 2014/24 and other applicable provisions of EU procurement law. It is therefore not Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 that may limit the Member States’ ability to impose additional requirements on the permitted participants, but Article 18 of that directive and the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, as well as the prohibition on artificially narrowing competition.

41. First, nothing in the text of Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 requires that all economic operators satisfying the requirements of that article be admitted to any given public procurement procedure held by a Member State for Article 20 reserved contracts.

42. On the contrary, Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 provides the Member States with an option – of which they may choose to avail themselves or not – and sets out the conditions that the Member States must comply with if they choose to take up the option under that article. Those conditions specify in broad and unspecific terms the kinds of undertakings or economic operators to which the Member States may reserve procurement procedures, and set out a minimum percentage in relation to the disabled or disadvantaged workers employed at those undertakings or economic operators.

43. Second, as described in recital 36 to Directive 2014/24 and recital 28 to Directive 2004/18, the rationale for the inclusion of Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 and its predecessor provision, Article 19 of Directive 2004/18, in these two directives must be understood in the context of ‘guaranteeing equal opportunities for all’, employment and occupation being ‘key elements’ of that objective. Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 (and its predecessor provision, Article 19 of Directive 2004/18) thus allow the Member States to pursue social and employment policy aims through instruments of public procurement.

44. It should be recalled in that regard that the Member States enjoy broad discretion in their choice, not only to pursue a particular aim in the field of social and employment policy, (14) but also in the definition of measures capable of achieving it. (15) Taking the rationale for Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 into account, it is my view that the definition of the permitted participants is a matter first and foremost of social and employment policy where the Member States enjoy a broad discretion.

45. I should also point out that whereas Article 20, as an exception to the general regime for public procurement procedures under Directive 2014/24, should be given a strict interpretation, this principle of interpretation, in my view, would logically apply to the size of the carve-out from ordinary procurement procedures in terms of the part of the market covered (not at issue in the present case and not subject, in any event, to any explicit limitations in Directive 2014/24 to which a strict or narrow interpretation of the carve-out could apply) and to the depth of the carve-out in terms of the scope of the rules from which the carved-out procurement procedures are exempted. It should not apply in such a way as to require the widest possible circle of permitted participants for any given Article 20 reserved procurement procedure. Once a portion of the public procurement market has been segregated from the normal market and set aside for economic operators which are presumed to be uncompetitive due to the significant societal benefits they provide, I see no real benefit to the principles of market economy, competition or equal treatment from an insistence that the circle of permitted participants (presumed to be uncompetitive) be defined as broadly as possible. From a market economy perspective, it is – in my view – the size of the carve-out that matters, whereas the delineation of the circle of beneficiaries should be seen as an issue – and an instrument – of social and employment policy that is subject to the Member States' broad discretion.

46. Therefore, in my opinion, a literal and teleological interpretation of Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 supports the conclusion that the Member States are not required by that article to accept the participation of any given economic operator satisfying the criteria set out in that article in their Article 20 reserved procurement procedures. However, any additional restrictions must satisfy the requirements of Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 and any other applicable provisions or principles of EU public procurement law.

47. This conclusion is also supported by the origins of Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 and its predecessor provision, Article 19 of Directive 2004/18, which introduced the concept of 'reserved contracts' into the public procurement directives. (16)

48. Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 and its predecessor provision permits or permitted the Member States to reserve the right to participate in award procedures for public contracts or certain lots thereof, because the workshops or social businesses concerned may not be able to obtain contracts under normal conditions of competition, the underlying premiss being that the employment of the ultimate intended beneficiaries of the Article 20 reserved procurement procedures, namely disabled or disadvantaged persons, whose social and professional integration must be the main aim of the economic operators that the Member State in question accepts as permitted participants, is or may be economically disadvantageous to the economic operators in question to the extent where they cannot be expected to be able to compete on ordinary market terms. Therefore, the Member States may, subject to certain safeguards and limitations, create what amounts to a protected space for public procurement contracts where such operators compete only with other operators in comparable circumstances.

49. It is apparent, when considering Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 in isolation, that a true or even only approximate level playing field between those actors can be achieved only by adding detail to the rough outline provided by that provision of the directive. Accepting the notion that those economic operators may not be able to compete on normal market terms because of their significant societal contributions, it must equally be acknowledged that the terms 'disabled or disadvantaged' cover very diverse groups of people and that within each subset of those groups, individuals will vary greatly in their abilities and potential productivity. Thus, an economic operator seeking to aid the integration of, merely as an example, someone suffering long-term unemployment faces very different challenges compared to an economic operator seeking to aid the integration of a person who is permanently handicapped by, again merely as an example, blindness. Keeping this and the aim mentioned in recital 36 of Directive 2014/24 of 'guaranteeing equal opportunities for all' in mind, I consider that the purpose of Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 is best served by allowing the Member States to impose more detailed requirements for participation in their Article 20 reserved procurement procedures.

50. This becomes even clearer if Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 is analysed in the context of its predecessor provision, Article 19 of Directive 2004/18. Article 19 of Directive 2004/18 imposed considerably stricter requirements concerning the employees of the permitted participants in reserved procurement procedures, requiring that most of the employees were ‘handicapped persons who, by reason of the nature or the seriousness of their disabilities [could not] carry on occupations under normal conditions’, thus setting the bar significantly higher both with respect to the minimum percentage of disadvantaged employees and with respect to the severity and nature of their disadvantage.

51. When the scope of application, ratione personae, for Article 20 reserved contracts was broadened in Directive 2014/24, the intention of the EU legislature clearly was not to create a ‘race to the bottom’ where social businesses employing a lower percentage of less affected persons – as per the new, relaxed requirements – would out-compete social businesses meeting the tougher requirements in place under previous legislation for Article 20 reserved procurement procedures. However, taking into account the premiss of recital 36 of Directive 2014/24 and recital 28 of Directive 2004/18, which describes the rationale for reserving contracts, namely that the operators in question may be unable to compete under normal market conditions, the result to be expected, if any economic operator employing only 30% of less affected persons were to be permitted to compete on an equal footing with operators meeting the earlier, much stricter requirements, would be exactly that: the economic operators satisfying the earlier, stricter requirements would be forced to dismiss their least productive and presumably most needy employees down to the 30% mark, or face the prospect of losing the reserved procurement procedures intended for their benefit to economic operators shouldering only much lighter social responsibilities.

52. It should be emphasised that this analysis does not permit the Member States to exclude economic operators at will from their Article 20 procurement procedures, and does not prejudice whether the exclusion of ‘entrepreneurial’ Special Employment Centres en bloc from the Spanish Article 20 procurement procedures is lawful. Rather, this issue should be determined mainly according to the standards and principles set out in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24.

C. Limits on the Member States’ discretion

1. Applicability of Article 18 of Directive 2014/24

53. The Member States are not free to impose requirements at their leisure on permitted participants in their Article 20 reserved procurement procedures. On the contrary, the Article 20 reserved procurement procedures remain subject to the provisions of Directive 2014/24, including Article 18, and any additional requirements imposed must therefore comply with Article 18 and the principles therein.

54. This conclusion is supported by the text of Article 20 of Directive 2014/24, which does not include any indication that the reserved contracts should be exempt from the remaining provisions of the directive, and by the placement of that article in Chapter II, ‘General rules’, of Title I, and not in Section 3, ‘Exclusions’, of Chapter I of Title I, which would be the natural place for a provision setting out an exemption from the application of the directive.

55. It is, further, clear from the legislative history of the predecessor provision to Article 20 of Directive 2014/24, namely Article 19 of Directive 2004/18, that the reserved procurement procedures were not intended to be exempt from the application of the other provisions of that directive.

56. Article 19 of Directive 2004/18, which together with Article 28 of Directive 2004/17 introduced the concept of ‘reserved contracts’ into EU procurement law, was not included in the Commission’s original draft for that directive. It has its origin in Amendment 9 of the Opinion of the European Parliament’s Committee on Industry, External Trade, Research and Energy of 29 June 2001 on the proposed directive, which would, as originally drafted, have excluded ‘public supply, service or works contracts’ awarded to ‘sheltered employment schemes’ from the application of Directive 2004/18 altogether. (17)

57. That proposed amendment was the subject of several changes, and various justifications were offered for the different proposed versions of the provision before it found its final form, in particular as Article 19 of Directive 2004/18. The Commission’s comment on the version of the proposed provision in the ‘Amended proposal’ submitted on 6 May 2002 (18) clarifies that the ‘reservation does not imply exemption from the application of all other provisions of the Directive applicable to public contracts’. This is also reflected in the text of Directive 2004/18 as adopted, which does not exempt the contracts in question from the application of Directive 2004/18 (as did the original proposed amendment), but merely provides that participation in the public procurement procedures for those contracts may be reserved for those workshops. The various stages in the legislative process leading to the final version of Article 19 of Directive 2004/18 further shows a clear legislative intent that the 'reserved contracts' should remain subject to Union-wide competition in accordance with the remaining provisions of Directive 2004/18 and the 'relevant rules of the Treaty'. (19)

58. The various justifications provided for the introduction of this new provision at different stages of the legislative process, and recital 28 to the final directive, make clear that the raison d'être for Article 18 of Directive 2004/18 was that the workshops and employment programmes in question might not be able to 'obtain contracts on normal conditions of competition'. Those workshops and employment programmes, the recital considers, 'contribute efficiently towards the integration or reintegration of people with disabilities in the labour market'. The recital also states in that context that 'employment and occupation are key elements in guaranteeing equal opportunities for all'.

59. The legislative history of Article 19 of Directive 2004/18 and recital 28 to that directive thus makes it clear that the purpose of the provision was to allow the Member States to use reserved contract procurement procedures to provide certain permitted participants with contracts they would not have been able to achieve under normal market conditions, and that the justification for this preferential treatment was the efficient contribution towards integration or reintegration of the ultimate intended beneficiaries of the scheme, namely, as regards Article 19 of Directive 2004/18, 'handicapped persons who, by reason of the nature or the seriousness of their disabilities, cannot carry on occupations under normal conditions'. This objective was part of a higher-level goal of 'guaranteeing equal opportunities for all'. The use of reserved contracts was to take place under observance of all the other provisions of Directive 2004/18, cross-border competition for the reserved contracts being specifically contemplated. (20)

60. Directive 2014/24 introduced several changes to the regime for 'reserved contracts'. (21) Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 thus restates and expands the option initially granted to the Member States by Article 19 of Directive 2004/18 to reserve to certain operators the right to participate in public contract award procedures. Compared with Article 19 of Directive 2004/18, Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 substantially widens the circle of operators that can be accepted as permitted participants in public procurement procedures for reserved contracts. Nothing in those changes, however, indicates any intention on the part of the EU legislature to exempt the Article 20 reserved procurement procedures from the application of the remainder of Directive 2014/24 or any intention to lower the amount of social responsibility borne by the individual permitted participants. Rather, the application of the provision, ratione personae, is simply expanded by allowing more operators to qualify as permitted participants, presumably with a view to expanding the use of this social and employment policy tool with the aim of benefitting a larger, more broadly defined and more numerous group of ultimate beneficiaries (employed disabled or disadvantaged persons).

61. The legislative history of Directive 2014/24 itself provides relatively little guidance as to the interpretation of Article 20. The European Economic and Social Committee, in its Opinion on the 'Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement' (COM(2011) 896 final), suggested certain changes that were not adopted, including a requirement that 'the sheltered workshops and economic operators whose main aim is the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged workers "should be promoted and controlled primarily by non-profit entities"' which, in its view, would further justify such preferential access to government support. (22)

2. General remarks on Article 18 of Directive 2014/24

62. Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Principles of procurement', provides, in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1, that the contracting authorities must treat economic operators equally and without discrimination, and that they must act in a 'proportionate manner'. This is, in essence, a reiteration of the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, which would be applicable even without the abovementioned provision. (23) The second subparagraph of Article 18(1) provides that 'the design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of … artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators'. Though the facts of the main proceedings appear to exclusively concern Spanish actors, it should be borne in mind that Directive 2014/24 extends the principles of equal treatment of tenderers, proportionality and non-distorted competition to internal situations. (24)

63. In the case in the main proceedings, Spain has enacted legislation that appears to exclude en bloc a large part of a particular sector, namely the entrepreneurial Special Employment Centres, from that Member State's Article 20 reserved procurement procedures. That legislation further reserves those contracts exclusively to another subset of Special Employment Centres, namely the 'Social Initiative Special Employment Centres', and sets aside what appears to be a significant body of public procurement contracts for Article 20 reserved procurement procedures.

64. This raises fairly obvious issues in terms of conformity with the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, and the prohibition on artificially narrowed competition.

3. Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 and the principle of equal treatment

65. Under settled case-law, the principle of equal treatment is one of the fundamental principles of EU law, (25) which the Member States must observe when they act within the scope of EU law. That principle, which is one of the fundamental rights whose observance the Court ensures, (26) requires that similar or comparable situations must not be treated differently unless the difference in treatment is objectively justified. (27) As a general principle of EU law, the principle of equal treatment must be observed by Member States when they implement EU rules. Consequently, Member States must, as far as possible, apply those rules in accordance with the requirements flowing from the protection of fundamental rights in the EU legal order. (28)

66. In the field of EU public procurement law, the principle of equal treatment has found a particular expression in the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, which requires that they be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders. (29) As pointed out by Advocate General Bot in his Opinion in Wall, (30) the aim of the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between applicant undertakings. Observance of that principle must make it possible to ensure an objective comparison of the tenders and is required at every stage of the procedure. In other words, the rules of the game must be known to all potential tenderers and must apply to them all in the same way.

67. An exclusion of one group of potential tenderers from a Member State's Article 20 reserved procurement procedures to the benefit of another group of tenderers, such as the Spanish exclusion of the entrepreneurial Special Employment Centres to the benefit of the Social Initiative Special Employment Centres, is therefore only permissible if those two groups of potential tenderers are not in similar or comparable situations or if the difference in treatment is objectively justified.

68. It is for the referring court, which alone has jurisdiction to rule on the facts of the main proceedings, to verify whether the 'entrepreneurial' Special Employment Centres and the Social Initiative Special Employment Centres are in similar or comparable situations and/or whether the difference in treatment is objectively justified. The 'entrepreneurial' Special Employment Centres appear to have previously fulfilled, and to be currently fulfilling, the same societal functions as those required of the Social Initiative Special Employment Centres. Therefore, prima facie, it does not seem unreasonable to consider that those two groups of Special Employment Centres are in a similar or comparable situation as far as their ability to fulfil the function of aiding the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons is concerned. At the same time, there are differences in the organisation of the 'entrepreneurial' Special Employment Centres and the Social Initiative Special Employment Centres, notably concerning the not-for-profit nature of the latter and the reinvestment of profits requirement, that could arguably support the conclusion that the two groups of entities are not in similar or comparable situations or that any difference in treatment is objectively justified. Ultimately, this is a determination that involves an interpretation of the applicable Spanish law, which it is for the referring court to carry out.

4. Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 and the principle of proportionality

69. As the Court has stated in its case-law, the purpose of national legislation relating to public procurement procedures is, in general, to safeguard the equal treatment of tenderers. Therefore, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, such legislation must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve that intended objective. (31)

70. When Member States enact national legislation implementing Article 20 of Directive 2014/24 and setting aside ‘reserved contracts’ in public procurement procedures for the benefit of providers of sheltered employment, the purpose of that legislation is at least two-fold: the equal treatment of tenderers mentioned in the previous paragraph and the social and employment policy of making reserved contracts available to providers of sheltered employment.

71. As is the case with regard to the principle of equal treatment, it is for the referring court, which alone has jurisdiction to rule on the facts of the main proceedings, to verify whether the imposition of the additional requirements are indeed appropriate means of achieving the legitimate objectives pursued by the Member State in relation to maximising the social objectives of integration or reintegration of disabled or disadvantaged persons, and if so, whether those requirements go beyond what is necessary to achieve those objectives.

72. In my view, requirements that the participants in an Article 20 reserved procurement procedure must be organised as, or owned by, a not-for-profit entity and that they must reinvest profits earned from Article 20 reserved contracts may well be considered appropriate means of furthering the legitimate objective of social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons. Neither of those requirements are unrelated to the proviso under Article 20(1) that the ‘main aim’ of the admitted economic operators (other than ‘sheltered workshops’) must be ‘the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons’. A for-profit entity generally has as one of its ‘aims’ the generation of profits for its owners. It is not an inherently unreasonable view to hold that this detracts from the focus on the social aim. Thus, the requirement concerning not-for-profit status or ultimate ownership of the permitted participant by a not-for-profit entity does appear to serve a legitimate purpose. The requirement that profits are reinvested in the same or similar social enterprises whose aim is the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons even more clearly serves that purpose, and given the inherent transfer of public funds that is foreseeable in Article 20 reserved procurement procedures (the very rationale of the provision being that the permitted participants may not be able to compete on normal price/quality terms implies that the contracting authorities are likely to overpay on purchases made under Article 20 reserved procurement procedures), the reinvestment of related profits for the ultimate benefit of the relevant social goals appears particularly appropriate.

73. The 70% employment requirement set out in the Spanish legislation obviously also contributes to achieving the ultimate goal of the Article 20 reserved procurement procedures, namely the ‘social and professional integration or reintegration of disabled or disadvantaged persons’. (32)

74. Therefore, in my view, these requirements appear to be suitable to achieve the desired end. However, the requirement that the Special Employment Centres must take the particular legal form of a not-for-profit entity or satisfy the ownership requirements in question would, in my view, appear to go further than what is necessary in order to achieve those objectives. It is difficult to see how the exclusion of a large subset of economic operators that have previously been serving, are currently serving, and intend to serve in the future exactly those social aims and that population segment, merely because of the legal form in which those economic operators are constituted or because of the legal form of their ultimate owners, would not go beyond what is necessary to ensure the attainment of the legitimate objective of social and professional integration or reintegration of disabled or disadvantaged persons. This applies a fortiori if the reinvestment of profits requirement is upheld.

75. Subject to verification by the referring court, it is therefore my opinion that requirements as to the legal form or ownership of the economic operators, which are accepted as permitted participants in a Member State’s Article 20 reserved procurement procedures, such as the Spanish requirements at issue in the main case, are inconsistent with the principle of proportionality.

5. Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 and the prohibition on artificially narrowing competition

76. As provided by the second subparagraph of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, the design of a procurement shall not be made with the intention of artificially narrowing competition. Competition is to be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.

77. It is clear that the Social Initiative Special Employment Centres are favoured by the Spanish legislation at issue and that the entrepreneurial Special Employment Centres are disadvantaged. It also appears obvious that this is intentional. However, the second subparagraph of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 does not prohibit any and all intentional favouring or disadvantaging. The prohibition applies only where the intention is to 'unduly' favour or disadvantage certain economic operators.

78. The Court has not yet clarified the meaning of 'unduly' (or 'artificial') in the context of Article 18 of Directive 2014/24. Some guidance for the interpretation of those concepts may, however, be gleaned from the principles of equal treatment and proportionality. Although the concepts of equal treatment and 'non-artificially narrowed competition' are obviously distinct, a 'favouring' or 'disadvantaging' of some economic operator(s) over other(s) implies a difference in treatment. It is difficult to think of a 'favouring' or 'disadvantaging' that is 'unduly' and at the same time 'objectively justified' or vice versa, and so it would appear that there must be some overlap of those two distinct concepts. Likewise, as regards the relationship between artificially narrowed competition and proportionality, it is hard to think of a favouring or disadvantaging of some economic operator(s) over other(s) that 'duly' goes further than necessary to attain the legitimate objectives sought. Artificially narrowed competition would thus also seem to have a certain overlap with infringement of proportionality.

79. It may seem tempting to define 'artificial narrowing of competition' solely by reference to the two principles mentioned in the previous point. However, the inclusion of the prohibition on artificially narrowing competition in the second subparagraph of Article 18(1) would be superfluous if it only covered behaviour already prohibited by the principles of equal treatment and proportionality. Therefore, in my view, the prohibition on artificially narrowing competition should be given a broader scope than that.

80. As already discussed in the context of the proportionality analysis in point 74, above, the narrowing of competition that follows from the exclusion of the entrepreneurial Special Employment Centres from the Spanish Article 20 reserved procurement procedures does not appear to be proportionate to a legitimate purpose in so far as the requirement that the economic operators in question take the form of not-for-profit entities or are ultimately owned or partially owned by not-for-profit entities is concerned. Regardless of the exact scope of the prohibition on artificially narrowing competition, this requirement would, in my view, appear to infringe it. It is, however, ultimately for the referring court to decide whether, in the case before it, there is an intention to unduly favour and/or disadvantage.

81. As far as the reinvestment of profits requirement is concerned, this could, in my view, conceivably be regarded as artificially narrowing competition, even if my analysis that this requirement may meet the standards of equal treatment and proportionality is accepted. If the requirement is imposed not only to serve the legitimate purpose of furthering the social and professional integration of disabled or disadvantaged persons, but also at the same time is intentionally designed so as to benefit one group of potential tenderers over another for reasons unrelated to the legitimate purpose pursued, (33) in my view, this should be regarded as unduly favouring and disadvantaging the respective groups and as artificially narrowing competition. It is for the referring court to determine whether this may be the case.

IV. Conclusion

82. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the Court of Justice should reply to the referring court in the following terms:

> Article 20 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement does not preclude national legislation under which the right to participate in public procurement procedures for contracts reserved pursuant to that article is made subject to conditions which are in addition to those specified in that article.
>
> However, such additional conditions must comply with all applicable requirements of EU law, including Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 and the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, and those conditions must not artificially narrow competition.
> In that respect, a condition that only economic operators that are not-for-profit entities, or owned or partially owned by not-for-profit entities, may participate in procurement procedures for reserved contracts would appear, prima facie, to go beyond what is necessary in order to obtain the legitimate objective of furthering the social and professional integration of disabled and disadvantaged persons.

An intentional exclusion of a large segment of economic operators for reasons unrelated to the legitimate objective of furthering the social and professional integration of disabled and disadvantaged persons would appear, prima facie, to artificially narrow competition.

The view is implicitly preserved in the Commission's comment on Amendment 36 in the Amended proposal for a European Parliament and Council Directive concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public supply contracts, public service contracts and public works contracts (COM(2002) 236 final – 2000/0115(COD), OJ 2002 C 203E, p. 210): 'Th[e] amendment can be accepted if modified in order further to clarify that reservation does not imply exemption from the application of all other provisions of the Directive applicable to public contracts'.

That regime is distinct and separate from the provisions at issue in the present case, but it is possible that the Spanish legislator may have looked to Article 77(2)(b) as a model for the 'reinvestment of profits' requirement of the Spanish rules.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 38(9) and (10) of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Vert Marine SAS ('Vert Marine') and the Premier ministre (Prime Minister) and the Ministre de l'Économie et des Finances (Minister for the Economy and Finance, France) concerning an application submitted by Vert Marine for the repeal of certain provisions of décret n^{o} 2016-86, du 1er février 2016, relatif aux contrats de concession (Decree No 2016-86 of 1 February 2016 concerning concession contracts; 'the decree') (JORF, 2 February 2016, text No 20).

Legal context

European Union law

3 Recital 71 of Directive 2014/23 states:

'Allowance should, however, be made for the possibility that economic operators can adopt compliance measures aimed at remedying the consequences of any criminal offences or misconduct and at effectively preventing further occurrences of the misbehaviour. Those measures might consist in particular of personnel and organisational measures such as the severance of all links with persons or organisations involved in the misbehaviour, appropriate staff reorganisation measures, the implementation of reporting and control systems, the creation of an internal audit structure to monitor compliance and the adoption of internal liability and compensation rules. Where such measures offer sufficient guarantees, the economic operator in question should no longer be excluded on those grounds alone. Economic operators should have the possibility to request that compliance measures taken with a view to possible admission to the concession award procedure be examined. However, it should be left to Member States to determine the exact procedural and substantive conditions applicable in such cases. They should, in particular, be free to decide whether to allow the individual contracting authorities or contracting entities to carry out the relevant assessments or to entrust other authorities on a central or decentralised level with that task.'

4 Article 38(4), (9) and (10) of that directive provides:

'4. Contracting authorities and contracting entities as referred to in point (a) of Article 7(1) shall exclude an economic operator from participation in a concession award procedure where they have established that that economic operator has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment for one of the following reasons:

(a) participation in a criminal organisation, as defined in Article 2 of Council Framework Decision 2008/841/JHA [of 24 October 2008 on combating organised crime (OJ 2008 L 300, p. 42)];

(b) corruption, as defined in Article 3 of the Convention on the fight against corruption involving officials of the European Communities or officials of Member States of the European Union [(OJ 1997 C 195, p. 1)] and Article 2(1) of Council Framework Decision 2003/568/JHA [of 22 July 2003 on combating corruption in the private sector (OJ 2003 L 192, p. 54)], as well as corruption as defined in the national law of the contracting authority or entity or the economic operator;

(c) fraud within the meaning of Article 1 of the Convention relating to the protection of the European Communities' financial interests [(OJ 1995 C 316, p. 48)];

(d) terrorist offences or offences linked to terrorist activities, as defined in Articles 1 and 3 of Council Framework Decision 2002/475/JHA [of 13 June 2002 on combating terrorism (OJ 2002 L 164, p. 3)] respectively, or inciting, aiding or abetting or attempting to commit an offence, as referred to in Article 4 of that Framework Decision;

(e) money laundering or terrorist financing, as defined in Article 1 of Directive 2005/60/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 26 October 2005 on the prevention of the use of the financial system for the purpose of money laundering and terrorist financing (OJ 2005 L 309, p. 15)];

(f) child labour and other forms of trafficking in human beings as defined in Article 2 of Directive 2011/36/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 5 April 2011 on preventing and combating trafficking in human beings and protecting its victims, and replacing Council Framework Decision 2002/629/JHA (OJ 2011 L 101, p. 1)].

9. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 4 and 7 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of the relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered to be sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct. The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator concerned shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

An economic operator which has been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement or concession award procedures shall not be entitled to make use of the possibility provided for under this paragraph during the period of exclusion resulting from that judgment in the Member States where the judgment is effective.

10. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard for Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this article. They shall in particular, determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 9 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability. Where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period shall not exceed 5 years from the date of the conviction by final judgment in the cases referred to in paragraph 4 and 3 years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 7.’

5 Article 51 of the directive reads as follows:

‘1. Member States shall bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with this directive by 18 April 2016. They shall forthwith communicate to the Commission the text thereof.

When Member States adopt those measures, they shall contain a reference to this directive or be accompanied by such a reference on the occasion of their official publication. Member States shall determine how such reference is to be made.

2. Member States shall communicate to the Commission the text of the main measures of national law which they adopt in the field covered by this directive.’

‘The following shall be excluded from the procedure for the award of concession contracts:

code pénal (Criminal Code), or for concealing such offences, and for equivalent offences provided for in the legislation of another Member State of the European Union […]

Exclusion from the procedure for procurement by concession contracts pursuant to point 1° shall apply for a period of 5 years from the date of delivery of the sentence;

…’

7 Article 19 of décret n^{o} 2016-86 (Decree No 2016-86) was worded as follows:

‘I. – In support of the application, the candidate shall produce a sworn statement stating:

1° That it is not subject to any of the exclusions from participation in the procedure for the award of concession contracts laid down in Articles 39, 40 and 42 of the abovementioned order of 29 January 2016;

2° That the information and documents relating to its abilities and aptitudes, required pursuant to Article 45 of the abovementioned order of 29 January and in accordance with the conditions laid down in Articles 20 and 21, are correct.

II. – The candidate shall produce all the documents proving that it is not subject to any of the exclusions from participation in the procedure for the award of concession contracts laid down in Articles 39, 40 and 42 of the abovementioned order of 29 January 2016.

8 Article 23 of that decree provided as follows:

‘I. – Before considering the applications, an awarding authority which finds that documents or information, the production of which was required under Articles 19, 20 and 21, [are missing] may request the candidates concerned to complete their application file within an appropriate time limit. It shall then inform the other applicants of the implementation of this provision.

II. – … Inadmissible applications shall also be eliminated. An application submitted by a candidate which is unable to take part in the procurement procedure pursuant to Articles 39, 40, 42 and 44 of Order [No 2016-65] referred to above, or which does not have the abilities or aptitudes required pursuant to article 45 of that order, shall be inadmissible.’

9 All the abovementioned provisions of Order No 2016-65 and of Decree 2016-86 were repealed on 1 April 2019 and reproduced, in essence, in Article L. 3123-1 and Articles R. 3123-1 to R. 3123-21 of the code de la commande publique (Public Procurement Code) respectively.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10 Vert Marine, a company specialising in the delegated management of sports and leisure facilities, with the core part of its business stemming from the use of concession contracts with public authorities, brought an action before the Conseil d’État (Council of State, France) challenging the implied rejection, by the Premier Ministre (Prime Minister), of its application for the repeal of Articles 19 and 23 of Decree No 2016-86.

11 In that regard, it submits in particular that those provisions are incompatible with Article 38 of Directive 2014/23, in that they do not grant, to an economic operator which is automatically excluded from participation in concession contract award procedures as a result of a definitive conviction for one of the serious offences referred to in Article 39(1) of Order No 2016-65, the possibility of providing evidence that it has taken compliance measures enabling it to demonstrate its restored reliability despite the existence of its conviction. It is apparent from the file submitted to the Court that the infringements referred to in Article 39(1) of Order No 2016-65 correspond, in essence, to the offences referred to in Article 38(4) of Directive 2014/23.

12 In that context, the referring court asks whether Article 38(9) and (10) of Directive 2014/23 precludes national legislation which deprives an economic operator of the possibility of providing such evidence, where that economic operator has been automatically excluded from participation in concession contract award procedures following a definitive conviction for offences of specific gravity that the national legislature intended to suppress, with the aim of promoting accountability in public procurement, in order to ensure that candidates are exemplary.

13 In addition, that court asks whether, if the examination of the appropriateness of the compliance measures taken by the economic operator may be entrusted to the judicial authorities, a number of judicial mechanisms provided for in national law, namely release, judicial rehabilitation and the removal of any mention of the conviction from Bulletin No 2 of the criminal record, may be regarded as satisfying the system of compliance measures established in Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23.

14 In those circumstances, the Conseil d'État (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Must [Directive 2014/23] be interpreted as precluding the legislation of a Member State, with an objective of promoting accountability in public procurement, from not giving an economic operator which has been convicted by final judgment of an offence of specific gravity, and which, on that ground, is the subject of a measure prohibiting it from participating in a procedure for procurement by a concession contract for a period of 5 years, the opportunity of providing evidence to the effect that the measures which it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of that ground for exclusion?

2. If [Directive 2014/23] allows the Member States to entrust authorities other than the contracting authority concerned with the responsibility of assessing the compliance mechanism for operators, does that power enable that authority to entrust the courts with that mechanism? If so, can mechanisms such as the provisions of French law on release, judicial rehabilitation and the removal of any mention of the conviction from Bulletin No 2 of the criminal record be treated in the same way as compliance mechanisms in accordance with the directive?'

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

15 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 38(9) and (10) of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which does not allow an economic operator which has been definitively convicted of one of the offences referred to in Article 38(4) of that directive and which, on that ground, is automatically prohibited from participating in concession contract award procedures to provide evidence that it has taken compliance measures capable of demonstrating its restored reliability.

16 In that regard, it must be recalled that, under the first subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23, any economic operator which is in one of the situations referred to, inter alia, in paragraph 4 of that article may provide evidence to demonstrate that the measures it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of the ground for exclusion relied on and that, if that evidence is deemed sufficient, the economic operator concerned is not to be excluded from the procedure. That provision thus introduces a 'self-cleaning' mechanism (see, by analogy, as regards Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), which equates to Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23, judgment of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 49 and the case-law cited).

17 It is apparent from the wording of the first subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 that, by providing that any economic operator may provide evidence of compliance measures taken, that provision confers on economic operators a right which the Member States must guarantee when transposing that directive, in accordance with the conditions laid down by the directive.

18 The third subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 provides, however, that an economic operator which has been excluded by a final judgment from participating in procurement or concession award procedures is not to be entitled to make use, during the total period of exclusion resulting from that judgment, in the Member States where the judgment is effective, of the possibility of providing evidence of compliance measures taken. It is therefore only in that case that an economic operator cannot benefit from the right conferred by the first subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23.

19 In that regard, an exclusion by a final judgment, within the meaning of the third subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23, cannot be equated with an exclusion which, under national legislation such as Article 39(1) of Order No 2016-65, is automatically provided for in respect of any economic operator convicted by a final judgment for one of the offences referred to in Article 38(4) of Directive 2014/23.

20 It is clear from the wording of the third subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 that the exclusion must be the direct result of a final judgment relating to a specific economic operator and not merely from the fact, in particular, that a conviction has been issued by final judgment for one of the reasons listed in Article 38(4) of Directive 2014/23.

21 It is apparent, therefore, from the wording of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 that, with the exception of the situation envisaged in the third subparagraph of that provision, an economic operator may provide evidence of the compliance measures adopted in order to demonstrate its reliability despite the fact that it is subject to one of the grounds for exclusion referred to in Article 38(4) and (7) of Directive 2014/23, such as a conviction issued by final judgment for one of the reasons listed in Article 38(4)(a) to (f) of Directive 2014/23.

22 That interpretation is supported by the objective pursued in Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23. By providing that an economic operator must be able to provide evidence of compliance measures taken, that provision seeks to underline the importance attaching to the reliability of economic operators (see, by analogy, judgment of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 49 and the case-law cited) and, accordingly, as the Greek Government stated in its written observations, to ensure an objective assessment of economic operators and to ensure effective competition. That objective would be jeopardised if the Member States were free to restrict, beyond the situation envisaged in the third subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23, the right of economic operators to provide evidence of the compliance measures taken.

23 In addition, that interpretation is not called into question by the fact that the Member States must, by virtue of Article 38(10) of Directive 2014/23, specify the implementing conditions of that article and, in that regard, have some discretion (see, by analogy, judgment of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited).

24 The expression ‘implementing conditions’ presupposes that the very existence of the right conferred by the first subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 and the possibility of exercising that right are guaranteed by the Member States, failing which, as the Commission stated in its written observations, the Member States would be able, when determining those implementing conditions, to deprive that right of its substance. Such an interpretation is, moreover, confirmed in recital 71 of Directive 2014/23, from which it is apparent that the Member States have the power only to determine the procedural and substantive conditions applicable to the exercise of that right.

25 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which does not allow an economic operator which has been definitively convicted of one of the offences referred to in Article 38(4) of that directive and which, on that ground, is automatically prohibited from participating in concession contract award procedures to provide evidence that it has taken compliance measures capable of demonstrating its restored reliability.

26 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 38(9) and (10) of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude the assessment of the appropriateness of the compliance measures taken by the economic operator from being entrusted to the judicial authorities and, if so, whether Article 38(9) of that directive must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which allows the judicial authorities to release a person from an automatic prohibition, following a conviction, from participating in concession contract award procedures, to lift such a prohibition or to remove any mention of the conviction from the criminal record.

27 With regard to the first part of the second question, it must be noted that the wording of the three subparagraphs comprising Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 does not indicate which authority is responsible for assessing the appropriateness of the compliance measures claimed by the economic operator. In those circumstances, it is for the Member States, when determining the implementing conditions of that provision under Article 38(10) of that directive, to specify, in their national legislation, the identity of the authority empowered to carry out that assessment, so that the economic operator may effectively exercise the right conferred on it in the first subparagraph of Article 38(9) of the directive.

28 That interpretation is borne out by recital 71 of Directive 2014/23, which states that, when determining the procedural and substantive conditions for the application of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23, Member States must be free to allow the individual contracting authorities or contracting entities to carry out the assessments of the appropriateness of the compliance measures claimed by the economic operator or to entrust other authorities on a central or decentralised level with that task.

29 It is apparent from that recital that the EU legislature wished to leave a broad discretion to the Member States when designating the authorities responsible for assessing the appropriateness of the compliance measures. In that regard, it follows from the terms ‘other authorities on a central or decentralised level’ that the Member States may entrust that task of assessment to any authority other than the contracting authority or contracting entity.

30 That is all the more the case where, as the French and Greek Governments and the Commission submit in their written observations, the judicial authorities are, by their nature, able to carry out an objective and independent assessment of the appropriateness of the compliance measures and to examine, for that purpose, the evidence referred to in the first sentence of the second subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 in accordance with the requirements laid down in the second and third sentences of that provision.

31 That being so, it is necessary, as the Commission has stated in its written observations, where a Member State intends to entrust such an assessment to the judicial authorities, for the national system established for that purpose to comply with all the requirements laid down in Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 and for the applicable procedure to be compatible with the time limits laid down by the concession contract award procedure. Otherwise and, in particular, if the judicial authority were not empowered to carry out a detailed assessment of the evidence required under the second subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 or would not be in a position to make a definitive decision before the end of the award procedure, the right established in the first subparagraph of that provision in favour of the economic operator would be deprived of its substance.

32 As regards the second part of the second question, it must be borne in mind that, in accordance with the settled case-law of the Court, it is not for the Court, in proceedings brought under Article 267 TFEU, to rule on the compatibility of national rules with EU law. However, the Court does have jurisdiction to provide the national court with all the guidance as to the interpretation of EU law necessary to enable that court to determine whether those national rules are compatible with EU law (judgment of 25 October 2018, Sciotto, C-331/17, EU:C:2018:859, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

33 In that regard, it is for the referring court to determine whether judicial procedures, such as the procedures for release, judicial rehabilitation or removal of any mention of the conviction from Bulletin No 2 of the criminal record, effectively satisfy the conditions laid down and the objective pursued by the system of compliance measures established in Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23.

34 In particular, it is for the referring court to determine whether such procedures allow, on the one hand, the economic operators concerned to provide the competent judicial authorities with evidence of the compliance measures referred to in the first sentence of the second subparagraph of Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 and, on the other, those judicial authorities to assess the appropriateness of those measures in the manner laid down in the second sentence of that provision and to order, where they consider that the reliability of the operator is restored by the effect of the measures in question, release, rehabilitation or the removal of any mention of the conviction from Bulletin No 2 of the criminal record.

35 In that context, it must be pointed out that, in the event that release, rehabilitation, or the removal of any mention of the conviction in Bulletin No 2 of the criminal record could be ordered without the competent judicial authority being required to assess the appropriateness of the compliance measures taken and the economic operators concerned could thus participate in concession contract award procedures without adducing evidence of those measures, which Vert Marine and the Commission argue in their written observations, such judicial procedures could not be regarded as satisfying the objective pursued and the conditions laid down by the system of compliance measures regime established in Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23, since, first, they give no guarantee to the contracting authority that the reliability of the economic operator concerned has been restored and, second, they allow potentially unreliable operators to participate in concession contract award procedures.

36 Furthermore, the referring court must satisfy itself that the judicial procedures provided for by national law are capable of ensuring, in a timely manner, that an economic operator wishing to take part in a concession contract award procedure has the opportunity to provide evidence of the compliance measures taken. The right provided for in Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 would be deprived of its substance if the economic operator could not make effective use of those procedures before the end of the award procedure.

37 Both Vert Marine and the Commission submit, in their written observations, that judicial rehabilitation, apart from the fact that it does not satisfy the condition referred to in paragraph 34 of this judgment, can be sought only after a certain period, varying from two to 5 years, which does not enable the economic operators concerned to benefit from rehabilitation before the expiry of that period. It is for the referring court to verify that point, just as it is required to ascertain that the time limits laid down by the procedures for release and removal of any mention of the conviction in Bulletin No 2 of the criminal record are compatible with those relating to concession contract award procedures.

38 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second question is that Article 38(9) and (10) of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as not precluding the assessment of the appropriateness of the compliance measures taken by an economic operator from being entrusted to the judicial authorities, provided that the national rules put in place for that purpose satisfy all the requirements laid down in Article 38(9) of that directive and that the relevant procedure is compatible with the time limits laid down by the concession contract award procedure. Moreover, Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which allows the judicial authorities to release a person from an automatic prohibition on participating in concession contract award procedures following a criminal conviction, to lift such a prohibition or to remove any mention of the conviction in the criminal record, provided that such judicial procedures effectively satisfy the conditions laid down and the objective pursued by that system and, in particular, make it possible, when an economic operator wishes to take part in a concession contract award procedure, to lift, in a timely manner, the prohibition affecting it, on the sole basis of the compliance measures claimed by that operator and assessed by the competent judicial authority in accordance with the requirements laid down in that provision, which it is for the referring court to ascertain.

Costs

39 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which does not allow an economic operator which has been definitively convicted of one of the offences referred to in Article 38(4) of that directive and which, on that ground, is automatically prohibited from participating in concession contract award procedures to provide evidence that it has taken compliance measures capable of demonstrating its restored reliability.

2. Article 38(9) and (10) of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as not precluding the assessment of the appropriateness of the compliance measures taken by an economic operator from being entrusted to the judicial authorities, provided that the national rules put in place for that purpose satisfy all the requirements laid down in Article 38(9) of that directive and that the relevant procedure is compatible with the time limits laid down by the concession contract award procedure. Moreover, Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which allows the judicial authorities to release a person from an automatic prohibition on participating in concession contract award procedures following a criminal conviction, to lift such a prohibition or to remove any mention of the conviction in the criminal record, provided that such judicial procedures effectively satisfy the conditions laid down and the objective pursued by that system and, in particular, make it possible, when an economic operator wishes to take part in a concession contract award procedure, to lift, in a timely manner, the prohibition affecting it, on the sole basis of the compliance measures claimed by that operator and assessed by the competent judicial authority in accordance with the requirements laid down in that provision, which it is for the referring court to ascertain.

REPUBLIQUE FRANCAISE

AU NOM DU PEUPLE FRANCAIS

Vu la procédure suivante :

Par une décision du 14 juin 2019, le Conseil d'Etat, statuant au contentieux sur la requête de la société Vert Marine tendant à l'annulation pour excès de pouvoir de la décision implicite de rejet née du silence gardé par le Premier ministre sur sa demande tendant à l'abrogation des articles 19 et

1° La directive 2014/23/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil du 26 février 2014 sur l'attribution de contrats de concession doit-elle être interprétée comme s'opposant à ce que la législation d'un Etat membre, dans un objectif de moralisation de la commande publique, puisse ne pas donner à un opérateur économique condamné par un jugement définitif pour une infraction d'une particulière gravité et faisant l'objet pour ce motif d'une mesure d'interdiction de participer à une procédure de passation d'un contrat de concession pendant une durée de cinq ans, la possibilité de fournir des preuves afin d'attester que les mesures qu'il a prises suffisent à démontrer sa fiabilité au pouvoir adjudicateur malgré l'existence de ce motif d'exclusion '

2° Si la directive 2014/23/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil du 26 février 2014 permet aux Etats membres de confier à d'autres pouvoirs que le pouvoir adjudicateur concerné le soin d'apprécier le dispositif de mise en conformité des opérateurs, une telle faculté permet-elle de confier ce dispositif à des autorités juridictionnelles ' Dans l'affirmative, des mécanismes tels que les dispositifs de droit français de relèvement, de réhabilitation judiciaire et d'exclusion de la mention de la condamnation au bulletin n° 2 du casier judiciaire peuvent-ils être assimilés à des dispositifs de mise en conformité au sens de la directive '

Par un arrêt C-472/19 du 11 juin 2020, la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne s'est prononcée sur ces questions.

Considérant ce qui suit :

1. L'article 38 de la directive 2014/23/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil du 26 février 2014 sur l'attribution de contrats de concession prévoit des motifs d'exclusion, obligatoires ou facultatifs, des opérateurs économiques des procédures d'attribution des contrats de concession. Son paragraphe 4 précise les infractions pour lesquelles la condamnation d'un opérateur économique entraîne exclusion obligatoire de la participation à une procédure d'attribution de concession. Toutefois, aux termes du paragraphe 9 du même article : " Tout opérateur économique qui se trouve dans l'une des situations visées aux paragraphes 4 et 7 peut fournir des preuves afin d'attester que les mesures qu'il a prises suffisent à démontrer sa fiabilité malgré l'existence du motif d'exclusion invoqué. Si ces preuves sont jugées suffisantes, l'opérateur économique concerné n'est pas exclu de la procédure. / À cette fin, l'opérateur économique prouve qu'il a versé ou entrepris de verser une indemnité en réparation de tout préjudice causé par l'infraction pénale ou la faute, clarifié totalement les faits et circonstances en collaborant activement avec les autorités chargées de l'enquête et pris des mesures concrètes de nature technique et organisationnelle et en matière de personnel propres à prévenir une nouvelle infraction pénale ou une nouvelle faute. Les mesures prises par les opérateurs économiques sont évaluées en tenant compte de la gravité de l'infraction pénale ou de la faute ainsi que de ses circonstances particulières. Lorsque les mesures sont jugées insuffisantes, la motivation de la décision en question est transmise à l'opérateur économique concerné. / Un opérateur économique qui a été exclu par un jugement définitif de la participation à des procédures de passation de marché ou d'attribution de concession n'est pas autorisé à faire usage de la possibilité prévue au présent paragraphe pendant la période d'exclusion fixée par ledit jugement dans les États membres où le jugement produit ses effets ".

2. L'ordonnance du 29 janvier 2016 relative aux contrats de concession a transposé la directive 2014/23/UE sur l'attribution de contrats de concession. Aux termes de son article 39, aujourd'hui repris à l'article L. 3123-1 du code de la commande publique, qui figure dans une sous-section intitulée " Interdictions de soumissionner obligatoires et générales " : " Sont exclues de la procédure de passation des contrats de concession : / 1° Les personnes qui ont fait l'objet d'une condamnation définitive pour l'une des infractions prévues aux articles 222-34 à 222-40, 313-1, du code pénal, aux articles 1741 à 1743, 1746 ou 1747 du code général des impôts, et pour les contrats de concession qui ne sont pas des contrats de concession de défense ou de sécurité aux articles 225-4-1 et 225-4-7 du code pénal, ou pour recel de telles infractions, ainsi que pour les infractions équivalentes prévues par la législation d'un autre Etat membre de l'Union européenne. / La condamnation définitive pour l'une de ces infractions ou pour recel d'une de ces infractions d'un membre de l'organe de gestion, d'administration, de direction ou de surveillance ou d'une personne physique qui détient un pouvoir de représentation, de décision ou de contrôle d'une personne morale entraîne l'exclusion de la procédure de passation des contrats de concession de cette personne morale, tant que cette personne physique exerce ces fonctions. / L'exclusion de la procédure de passation des contrats de concession au titre du présent 1° s'applique pour une durée de cinq ans à compter du prononcé de la condamnation (...) ".

3. Dans l'arrêt du 11 juin 2020 par lequel elle s'est prononcée sur les questions dont le Conseil d'Etat, statuant au contentieux, l'avait saisie à titre préjudiciel après avoir écarté les autres moyens de la requête, la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne a dit pour droit que l'article 38, paragraphe 9, de la directive 2014/23/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil du 26 février 2014 sur l'attribution de contrats de concession, doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il s'oppose à une réglementation nationale qui n'accorde pas à un opérateur économique condamné de manière définitive pour l'une des infractions visées à l'article 38, paragraphe 4, de cette directive et faisant l'objet, pour cette raison, d'une interdiction de plein droit de participer aux procédures de passation de contrats de concession la possibilité d'apporter la preuve qu'il a pris des mesures correctrices susceptibles de démontrer le rétablissement de sa fiabilité.

4. La Cour de justice de l'Union européenne a également dit pour droit que l'article 38, paragraphes 9 et 10, de de la directive 2014/23 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il ne s'oppose pas à ce que l'examen du caractère approprié des mesures correctrices prises par un opérateur économique soit confié aux autorités judiciaires, à condition que le régime national mis en place à cet effet respecte l'ensemble des exigences posées à l'article 38, paragraphe 9, de cette directive et que la procédure applicable soit compatible avec les délais imposés par la procédure de passation des contrats de concession. Par ailleurs, l'article 38, paragraphe 9, de la directive 2014/23 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il ne s'oppose pas à une réglementation nationale qui permet aux autorités judiciaires de relever une personne d'une interdiction de plein droit de participer aux procédures de passation de contrats de concession à la suite d'une condamnation pénale, d'effacer une telle interdiction ou d'exclure toute mention de la condamnation dans le casier judiciaire, à condition que de telles procédures judiciaires répondent effectivement aux conditions posées et à l'objectif poursuivi par ce régime et, en particulier, permettent, dès lors qu'un opérateur économique souhaite participer à opérateur et évaluées par l'autorité judiciaire compétente conformément aux exigences prévues à cette disposition, ce qu'il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier.

5. Il résulte de l'interprétation ainsi donnée par la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne que, pour ne pas méconnaître les objectifs de la directive du 26 février 2014, le droit français doit prévoir la possibilité pour un opérateur économique, lorsqu'il est condamné par un jugement définitif prononcé par une juridiction judiciaire pour une des infractions pénales énumérées à l'article 39 de l'ordonnance du 29 janvier 2016, repris à l'article L. 3123-1 du code de la commande publique, et que, pour cette raison, il se trouve en principe exclu des procédures d'attribution des contrats de concession pour une durée de cinq ans, d'apporter la preuve qu'il a pris des mesures correctrices susceptibles de démontrer le rétablissement de sa fiabilité. Toutefois, la faculté de faire preuve de sa fiabilité ne saurait être ouverte lorsque l'opérateur a été expressément exclu par un jugement définitif de la participation à des procédures de passation de marché ou d'attribution de concession, pendant la période fixée par ce jugement.

6. Or, d'une part, aucune disposition de l'ordonnance relative aux contrats de concession n'a cet objet ou cet effet. D'autre part, contrairement à ce que soutient le ministre de l'économie et des finances, les différents dispositifs existants par ailleurs en droit pénal français, tels le relèvement - qui permet à la juridiction judiciaire de relever en tout ou partie une personne d'une interdiction, déchéance ou incapacité quelconque résultant d'une condamnation pénale - , la réhabilitation - qui permet d'effacer toutes les incapacités et déchéances résultant d'une condamnation - et l'exclusion de la mention de la condamnation au bulletin n° 2 du casier judiciaire, prévus respectivement par l'article 132-21 du code pénal, par l'article 133-12 du code pénal et par l'article 775-1 du code de procédure pénale, ne peuvent être regardés, eu égard à leurs conditions d'octroi, notamment de délai, et à leurs effets, comme des dispositifs de mise en conformité au sens de la directive du 26 février 2014 telle qu'interprétée par la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne dans les conditions mentionnées au point 4.

7. Il suit de là que les dispositions de l'article 39 de l'ordonnance du 29 janvier 2016, aujourd'hui reprises à l'article L. 3123-1 du code de la commande publique, sont incompatibles avec les objectifs de l'article 38 de la directive 2014/23 du 26 février 2014 en tant qu'elles ne prévoient pas de dispositif de mise en conformité permettant à un opérateur économique candidat à l'attribution d'un contrat de concession d'échapper aux interdictions de soumissionner prévues en cas de condamnation pour certaines infractions.

8. Il en résulte que la société Vert Marine est fondée à demander l'annulation de la décision

This site uses cookies and gives you control over what you want to activate commande publique, qui, fixant la liste des documents permettant de justifier qu'un candidat ne fait l'objet d'aucune exclusion de soumissionner, doivent être regardés comme ayant été pris pour l'application de ces dispositions législatives et en tant que ces dispositions ne prévoient pas le dipositif énoncé au point 7.

9. Toutefois une telle annulation ne saurait avoir pour effet de maintenir dans l'ordre juridique français des règles incompatibles avec les objectifs de la directive du 26 février 2014. Il y a lieu, dans ces conditions, pour le Conseil d'Etat de préciser la portée de sa décision d'annulation par des motifs qui en constituent le soutien nécessaire.

10. La présente décision a nécessairement pour conséquence que, dans l'attente de l'édiction des dispositions législatives et réglementaires nécessaires au plein respect des exigences découlant du droit de l'Union européenne, l'exclusion de la procédure de passation des contrats de concession prévue à l'article L. 3123-1 du code de la commande publique n'est pas applicable à la personne qui, après avoir été mise à même de présenter ses observations, établit dans un délai raisonnable et par tout moyen auprès de l'autorité concédante, qu'elle a pris les mesures nécessaires pour corriger les manquements correspondant aux infractions mentionnées au même article pour lesquelles elle a été définitivement condamnée et, le cas échéant, que sa participation à la procédure de passation du contrat de concession n'est pas susceptible de porter atteinte à l'égalité de traitement.

11. Il y a lieu, dans les circonstances de l'espèce, de mettre à la charge de l'Etat la somme de 3 000 euros à verser à la société Vert Marine au titre de l'article L. 761-1 du code de justice administrative.

D E C I D E :

Article 1er : La décision implicite par laquelle le Premier ministre a rejeté la demande tendant à l'abrogation des articles 19 et 23 du décret n° 2016-86 du 1er février 2016 relatif aux contrats de concession, en tant que ces dispositions, reprises aux articles R. 3123-16 à R. 3123-21 du code de la commande publique, ne prévoient pas de dispositif de mise en conformité permettant à un opérateur économique candidat à l'attribution d'un contrat de concession d'échapper aux interdictions de soumissionner prévues en cas de condamnation pour certaines infractions, est annulée.

Article 2 : L'annulation prononcée à l'article 1er comporte pour les autorités concédantes les obligations énoncées par les motifs de la présente décision.

Article 3 : L'Etat versera à la société Vert Marine la somme de 3 000 euros au titre de l'article L.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Remondis GmbH and Abfallzweckverband Rhein-Mosel-Eifel (Rhine-Moselle-Eifel special-purpose association for waste, Germany) ('the association') concerning the award of a contract for the treatment of waste in the mechanical biological treatment plant of Landkreis Neuwied (Neuwied District, Germany).

Legal context

3 Recitals 31 and 33 of Directive 2014/24 state:

'(31) There is considerable legal uncertainty as to how far contracts concluded between entities in the public sector should be covered by public procurement rules. The relevant case-law of [the Court] is interpreted differently between Member States and even between contracting authorities. It is therefore necessary to clarify in which cases contracts concluded within the public sector are not subject to the application of public procurement rules.

Such clarification should be guided by the principles set out in the relevant case-law of [the Court]. The sole fact that both parties to an agreement are themselves public authorities does not as such rule out the application of procurement rules. However, the application of public procurement rules should not interfere with the freedom of public authorities to perform the public service tasks conferred on them by using their own resources, which includes the possibility of cooperation with other public authorities.

It should be ensured that any exempted public-public cooperation does not result in a distortion of competition in relation to private economic operators in so far as it places a private provider of services in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

(33) Contracting authorities should be able to choose to provide jointly their public services by way of cooperation without being obliged to use any particular legal form. Such cooperation might cover all types of activities related to the performance of services and responsibilities assigned to or assumed by the participating authorities, such as mandatory or voluntary tasks of local or regional authorities or services conferred upon specific bodies by public law. The services provided by the various participating authorities need not necessarily be identical; they might also be complementary.

Contracts for the joint provision of public services should not be subject to the application of the rules set out in this Directive provided that they are concluded exclusively between contracting authorities, that the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest and that no private service provider is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

In order to fulfil those conditions, the cooperation should be based on a cooperative concept. Such cooperation does not require all participating authorities to assume the performance of main contractual obligations, as long as there are commitments to contribute towards the cooperative performance of the public service in question. In addition, the implementation of the cooperation, including any financial transfers between the participating contracting authorities, should be governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest.'

4 Article 2(1) of that directive provides as follows:

'For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

1. "contracting authorities" means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law or associations formed by one or more such authorities or one or more such bodies governed by public law;

4. “bodies governed by public law” means bodies that have all of the following characteristics:

(a) they are established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) they have legal personality; and

(c) they are financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law; or are subject to management supervision by those authorities or bodies; or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

5 Article 12 of that directive, entitled ‘Public contracts between entities within the public sector’, provides in paragraph 4:

‘A contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common;

(b) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

(c) the participating contracting authorities perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

6 The districts of Mayen-Coblenz (Germany) and Cochem-Zell (Germany) and the town of Coblenz (Germany) entrusted the performance of their tasks of disposing of the waste produced in their respective territories to the association which they control together.

7 However, solely the association, which is itself a contracting authority, has the ability to place residual waste into landfills, that is to say, waste which comes mainly from households and which contains no recyclable material, or almost no such material. Mixed municipal household waste must undergo complex pre-treatment in a complex mechanical biological treatment plant in order to obtain residual waste. That pre-processing makes it possible to extract recyclable materials and waste with a high calorific content, to remove harmful substances to the extent possible and to reduce significantly the biological activity of organic waste. The remainder, which is then placed into landfill, represents on average slightly less than 50% of the original volume.

8 Since it does not have a treatment plant of that type, the association entrusts 80% of its municipal waste disposal operations to private undertakings. The treatment of the remaining 20%, around 10 000 megagrams (Mg) per annum, is undertaken by the district of Neuwied (‘the District’) under an agreement concluded between the association and the District on 27 September 2018. That agreement was approved by the competent authority on 18 October 2018 and published in local and regional official journals.

9 That agreement provides as follows:

‘Article 1

Initial position

1. The [District] is a public waste management body [Paragraph 17(1) of the Kreislaufwirtschaftsgesetz (Law on the circular economy; “the KrWG”)], read in conjunction with Paragraph 3(1) of the [Landeskreislaufwirtschaftsgesetz (Law on the circular economy of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate; “the LKrWG”)]. In that capacity, it must accept and properly dispose of waste from private households, as provided for in Paragraph 2(2) of the [Gewerbeabfallverordnung (Regulation on business waste; “the GewAbfV”)], or from other sources produced within its territory and supplied to it.

The [association], as a body governed by public law, is responsible, inter alia, for the treatment and disposal of residual waste from private households or other sources, in particular residual waste and business waste similar to household waste, produced within the territory of the member local authorities of the association, namely the town of Coblenz and the districts of Mayen-Koblenz and Cochem-Zell, and supplied to it.

Paragraph 3(2) of the LKrWG requires public waste management bodies to cooperate with each other in order to fulfil their tasks. The District and the association agree, in accordance with Paragraph 108(6) of the [Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law prohibiting restraints of competition; “the GWB”)], to cooperate in relation to the treatment of residual waste and the disposal of mixed municipal waste on the basis of this agreement, as provided for in Paragraphs 12 and 13 of the [Landesgesetz über die kommunale Zusammenarbeit (Law on cooperation between municipalities of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate; “the KomZG”)].

2. The District shall operate the Linkenbach waste treatment plant in the territory of the municipality of Linkenbach [Germany] …, which includes a mechanical biological treatment plant (MBT) …

3. On the basis of the provisions set out above and having regard to the proximity principle, the District and the association agree, in accordance with Paragraph 12(1) of the KomZG, that the association can use the Linkenbach MBT plant for part of the waste … supplied to it.

Article 2

Subject matter

1. The association undertakes to treat part of the waste from households and other sources (mixed municipal waste, code 20 03 01) under the [Abfallverzeichnisverordnung (Decree relating to the list of waste; “the AVV”)] which has been supplied to it … at the Linkenbach MBT plant.

2. The District undertakes to accept that waste in accordance with Article 3 of this agreement and to treat it in accordance with the requirements of Paragraph 6(4) of the [Deponieverordnung (Regulation on landfill sites; “the DepV”)]. The association shall remain responsible for the disposal of residual waste.

3. In accordance with the cooperation required, the association declares that it is willing to receive, up to a maximum of 3 000 Mg per year, part of the mineral waste to be treated under the disposal obligation to which the District is subject as a public authority. The quantities which the association is required to receive depend on its capacity and the details thereof have been agreed between the parties concerned, having regard to their respective interests.

Delivery conditions

1. The association undertakes not to deliver to the Linkenbach MBT facility more than 50 Mg of the waste referred to in Article 2 per working day (Monday to Friday). The parties agree that the annual amount to be delivered by the association is 10 000 Mg; for the year 2018 the prorata amount is approximately 4 000 Mg. The District may refuse waste which does not meet the definition contained in Article 2(1), in consultation with the association.

The tonnage referred to in the second sentence [of paragraph 1] is a provisional quantity, in relation to which the quantity actually treated may be 15% higher or lower, without any effect on the fee (Article 5(1)).

Article 4

Operation of the Linkenbach MBT facility

1. The District shall comply with the provisions of authorisation decisions in force when operating the treatment and disposal plant at the Linkenbach MBT plant.

3. Treatment at the Linkenbach MBT plant produces waste which shall be placed into landfill representing 46% of inputs, which the association shall accept in accordance with the second sentence of Article 2(2).

Article 5

Fee

1. In respect of the treatment of residual waste, the association shall pay the District a fee, which shall vary according to the quantity of waste treated, by way of reimbursement of costs, not taking into account a profit margin in relation to operating costs. The details are set out in a separate fee scale.

2. If the minimum waste quantity of 8 500 Mg/year agreed in Article 3(1) is not reached, the association shall be obliged to pay compensation based on tonnage in respect of the difference between the actual quantity delivered and 8 500 Mg/year. The amount of such compensation shall then be determined by mutual agreement between the parties, having particular regard to the sincere cooperation clause set out in Article 10 of this agreement. In determining that compensation, account shall be taken in particular of the costs which the District did not have to incur and the quantities treated on behalf of third parties. The District shall in no way be obliged to seek waste to be treated in order to compensate for the shortfall in the quantity of waste. If it is impossible for the District to use the available capacity and if it cannot reduce the costs incurred by the plant, the fee agreed in Article 5(1) shall be due as compensation for the shortfall in the quantity of waste. If the maximum quantity of waste is exceeded (11 500 Mg/year), the parties shall, in accordance with the general principle described above, agree to adjust the fee in respect of the amount exceeding 11 500 Mg.

Article 6

Duration of this agreement

1. This agreement, once approved by the [competent authority], shall enter into force on the day of its publication, probably on 1 October 2018.

2. It is concluded for a period of 10 years. It may be extended twice, by mutual agreement, at least one year before the stipulated expiry date, on each occasion for a period of two years. Otherwise, it shall terminate automatically without any requirement to give notice of termination.

Article 8

Mutual assistance network

If the residual waste cannot be treated at the Linkenbach MBT plant because of: (i) a temporary disruption of operations, (ii) refurbishment of the facility or (iii) other events for which the District is responsible; the District has put in place a mutual assistance network with the operators of other plants.

In those circumstances, it is entitled to transport the association's residual waste to plants in the mutual assistance network and to have it treated there or it shall have it disposed of according to other methods. Any additional cost shall be borne by the District.

The District shall consult the association specifically and on a case-by-case basis regarding the disposal — possibly departing from the provisions in the first and second sentences of Article 2(2) of this agreement — of residual waste in those plants. The parties shall also be free to agree to suspend reciprocal obligations under Article 7 also in circumstances covered by the first sentence of Article 8.

Interim storage

Should a situation covered by Article 8(1) occur, the association shall, in accordance with the reciprocal nature of this agreement, as a priority over using the mutual assistance network, store, to the extent possible and at its own expense, the waste to be delivered by it, on a temporary basis on land belonging to it. Once the impediment is no longer present, the parties shall catch up with the performance of their obligations, taking due account of their respective capacities. The temporary storage obligation is subject to the caveat that authorisation under the rules on protection from emissions is granted for the association's site.

Article 10

Duty of sincere cooperation

The Parties undertake to cooperate in complete confidence and in good faith for the purpose of achieving the objectives pursued by this agreement and to keep each other informed at all times of any developments or changes which may affect the implementation of this agreement.

10 After unsuccessfully lodging an objection against that agreement which, in its view, constituted an unlawful direct award of a public contract, Remondis, a private company active in the waste treatment sector, brought an action on 3 December 2018 before the Vergabekammer Rheinland-Pfalz (Public Procurement Board of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate, Germany).

11 By decision of 6 March 2019, the Vergabekammer Rheinland-Pfalz (Public Procurement Board of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate) declared the action inadmissible on the ground that the agreement at issue in the main proceedings constituted a form of cooperation between two contracting authorities, which fell within the scope of Paragraph 108(6) of the GWB and Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24, and, as such, could not be the subject of an action.

12 That court pointed out in particular that the association had undertaken to deliver annually a quantity, fixed at 10 000 Mg, of residual waste to the District, so that the District could process the waste at the Linkenbach MBT plant. Through that mechanical and biological treatment, the District manages to have part of the waste recovered and the volume of the waste considerably reduced. The association, for its part, undertook through the agreement at issue in the main proceedings to take back the remaining material to be placed into landfill, which represents around 46% of inputs, and to take responsibility for its disposal. The reasoning of that court was that the two parties therefore entered into reciprocal obligations, establishing that there was a form of cooperation, as provided for in Paragraph 108(6) of the GWB and Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. Furthermore, in Article 9 of that agreement, the parties agreed that, in circumstances covered by Article 8 of that agreement, the association was to store, to the extent possible, the waste at its own cost on a site belonging to it, rather than using a mutual assistance network. The association thus, in that court's reasoning, entered into an obligation to store the waste on a temporary basis in the event of non-performance attributable to the District, which contributes to the conclusion that there was cooperation, within the meaning of those provisions.

13 Remondis brought an action against the decision of the Vergabekammer Rheinland-Pfalz (Public Procurement Board of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate) before the referring court, the Oberlandesgericht Koblenz (Higher Regional Court, Coblenz, Germany). In support of that action, it submits that there is no cooperation based on a cooperative concept and that the situation at issue in the main proceedings is one entailing a public contract which must be put out to tender.

14 The referring court notes, as a preliminary point, that the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, around EUR 1 million per year, exceeds the threshold beyond which it is possible to bring an action, which is EUR 221 000. Furthermore, the agreement at issue in the main proceedings has all the characteristics of a public contract. However, if the conditions set out in Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 and Paragraph 108(6) of the GWB were satisfied, such a public contract would be subject neither to EU law nor to national public procurement law.

15 The wording of Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 does not, however, make it possible to determine whether the agreement at issue in the main proceedings 'establishes … a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common' and, accordingly, whether it falls within the scope of EU public procurement law. Furthermore, that provision has been the subject of differing interpretations by the German courts.

16 In that regard, the referring court considers that the acceptance by the association of mineral waste, fixed at 3 000 Mg per annum by Article 2 of the agreement at issue in the main proceedings, was purely theoretical and was intended solely to conceal the lack of cooperation. The same is true of Article 9 of that agreement, having regard to the words 'to the extent possible', which appear in that provision, and to the fact that, until then, the association had not attempted to obtain the necessary authorisation for temporary storage. Therefore, the content of that agreement is limited, in essence, to the obligation on the part of the District, as service provider, to pre-treat, in return for consideration, the residual waste delivered by the association in order to ensure that it is possible for that waste to be placed into landfill, which is the task of the association.

17 Thus, even though the parties to the agreement at issue in the main proceedings both have a general interest in disposing of waste, they nevertheless pursue different interests of their own within that context. The association has to accomplish a task which has been assigned to it by German law. Since it did not have a mechanical biological treatment plant, it sought assistance from the District, which would, in return, increase the profitability of its plant.

18 According to the referring court, it cannot be inferred from the above that the conditions laid down in Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 are not satisfied since, according to recital 33 of that directive, the contracting authorities have the right 'to provide jointly their public services by way of cooperation without being obliged to use any particular legal form', on condition, however, that 'cooperation … be based on a cooperative concept'. It is not, however, required that all participating authorities assume the performance of main contractual obligations, as long as there are commitments to contribute towards the cooperative performance of the public service concerned.

19 Those considerations leave room for interpretation and do not make it possible to establish whether two contracting authorities, both of which are responsible for waste management, cooperate, as provided for in Article 12(4)(a) of that directive, on the basis of the sole fact that they share the performance of a specific task for the disposal of waste which is incumbent only upon one of them, or whether the association 'cooperates in the joint performance' of that waste disposal task by paying the District a fee so that the District can perform part of the task incumbent on it.

20 In that regard, the referring court states that the concept of 'cooperation' requires that each party's contribution goes beyond merely implementing an obligation by which it is already bound or a purely financial 'contribution'. Cooperation therefore presupposes that each party makes a contribution which, in the absence of a cooperation agreement, would have to be made not by itself, but by one of the other parties.

21 In those circumstances, the Oberlandesgericht Koblenz (Higher Regional Court, Coblenz) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Is Article 12(4)(a) of [Directive 2014/24] to be interpreted as meaning that cooperation does indeed exist if a contracting authority responsible for waste disposal within its territory performs a disposal task — which is incumbent on it under national law and for the performance of which several operations are required — not entirely by itself, but rather commissions another contracting authority that is independent of it and is likewise responsible for waste disposal within its territory to carry out one of the necessary operations in return for consideration?’

Consideration of the question referred

22 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that cooperation between contracting authorities cannot be said to exist where a contracting authority which is responsible for a task in the public interest within its territory does not itself perform the entirety of that task — which is incumbent on it alone under national law and for the performance of which a number of operations are required — but rather commissions another contracting authority that is independent of it and is likewise responsible for that public interest task within its own territory to carry out one of the operations required in return for consideration.

23 It should be noted at the outset that the concept of ‘cooperation’ in Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 is not defined by that directive.

24 In accordance with settled case-law, it follows from the need for a uniform application of EU law and from the principle of equality that the terms of a provision of EU law which makes no express reference to the law of the Member States for the purpose of determining its meaning and scope must normally be given an independent and uniform interpretation throughout the European Union; that interpretation must take into account, not only its terms, but also its context and the objective pursued by the relevant legislation (see, to that effect, judgments of 17 November 1983, Merck, 292/82, EU:C:1983:335, paragraph 12; of 18 January 1984, Ekro, 327/82, EU:C:1984:11, paragraph 11; of 19 September 2000, Linster, C-287/98, EU:C:2000:468, paragraph 43; and of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck, C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234, paragraph 28).

25 It is apparent from Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 that a contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities falls outside the scope of that directive where it establishes or implements cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that the public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common.

26 The very wording of that provision thus places the concept of ‘cooperation’ at the very heart of the exclusion laid down in that provision.

27 It is of little importance, in that regard, that the final text of Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 no longer refers, in contrast to Article 11(4) of the Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement of 20 December 2011 (COM (2011)896 final), to the requirement of ‘genuine cooperation between the participating contracting authorities’.

28 Indeed, unless the view is to be taken that the intention of the EU legislature was to establish a mechanism based on cooperation which was not genuine or was to undermine the effectiveness of horizontal cooperation between contracting authorities, the requirement of ‘genuine cooperation’ is apparent from the clear statement in the third paragraph of recital 33 of Directive 2014/24 that cooperation must be ‘based on a cooperative concept’. Such wording, which is ostensibly a tautology, must be interpreted as referring to the requirement that the cooperation thus established or implemented be effective.

29 It follows that the joint participation of all the parties to the cooperation agreement is essential to ensure that the public services they have to perform are provided and that that condition cannot be deemed to be satisfied where the sole contribution of certain contracting parties goes no further than a simple reimbursement of costs, such as those referred to in Article 5 of the agreement at issue in the main proceedings.

30 Moreover, if such reimbursement of costs were in itself sufficient to constitute ‘cooperation’ within the meaning of Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24, no distinction could be drawn between such a form of ‘cooperation’ and a ‘public contract’ which is not covered by the exclusion laid down in that provision.

31 That interpretation of the concept of ‘cooperation’, within the meaning of Article 12(4) of that directive, is, indeed, supported by the second paragraph of recital 31 of the directive, which states that the sole fact that both parties to an agreement are themselves public authorities does not as such rule out the application of public procurement rules.

32 Furthermore, the conclusion of a cooperation agreement between parties in the public sector must be discernible as the culmination of a process of cooperation between the parties to the agreement (see, to that effect, judgment of 9 June 2009, Commission v Germany, C-480/06, EU:C:2009:357, paragraph 38). The development of cooperation between entities belonging to the public sector has an inherently collaborative dimension, which is not present in a public procurement procedure falling within the scope of the rules laid down by Directive 2014/24.

33 Accordingly, drawing up a cooperation agreement presupposes that the public sector entities which intend to conclude such an agreement establish jointly their needs and the solutions to be adopted. By contrast, that stage of assessing and establishing needs is, as a general rule, unilateral in the case of the award of a normal public contract. In the latter case, the contracting authority does no more than launch a call for tenders setting out the specifications which it has itself drawn up.

34 It follows that the existence of cooperation between entities belonging to the public sector is based on a strategy which is common to the partners to that cooperation and requires the contracting authorities to combine their efforts to provide public services.

35 In the present case, it is apparent from the order for reference that the agreement concluded between the association and the District does not disclose any form of cooperation between the contracting parties. Indeed, the referring court observed, in essence, that only Article 2(3) of the agreement at issue in the main proceedings is likely to foster cooperation between the contracting parties. However, after the contracting parties submitted that that clause constituted a statement of intention, the association expressly recognised, in the proceedings before the Vergabekammer Rheinland-Pfalz (Public Procurement Board of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate), that that clause was nugatory.

36 Furthermore, it does not appear from the documents before the Court that the conclusion of the agreement at issue in the main proceedings is the culmination of a process of cooperation between the association and the District, which it is nevertheless for the referring court to establish.

37 Finally, neither the fact that, under Article 2(2) and Article 4(3) of the agreement at issue in the main proceedings, the association must accept the residual waste for the purpose of placing it into landfill, such waste accounting for 46% of inputs, nor the fact that, under Article 5(1) of that agreement, the District’s remuneration takes the form solely of a reimbursement of costs without any account being taken of a profit margin for operating costs, is sufficient to establish that a genuine form of cooperation exists between the association and the District.

38 Therefore, the sole purpose of the agreement at issue in the main proceedings appears to be that of acquiring a service in return for payment of a fee. In those circumstances, and subject to verification by the referring court, the public contract at issue in the main proceedings is not covered by the exclusion laid down in Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24.

39 In the light of all the foregoing, the answer to the question referred is that Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that cooperation between contracting authorities cannot be said to exist where a contracting authority which is responsible for a task in the public interest within its territory does not itself perform the entirety of that task — which is incumbent on it alone under national law and for the performance of which a number of operations are required — but rather commissions another contracting authority that is independent of it and is likewise responsible for that public interest task within its own territory to carry out one of the operations required in return for consideration.

Costs

40 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that cooperation between contracting authorities cannot be said to exist where a contracting authority which is responsible for a task in the public interest within its territory does not itself perform the entirety of that task — which is incumbent on it alone under national law and for the performance of which a number of operations are required — but rather commissions another contracting authority that is independent of it and is likewise responsible for that public interest task within its own territory to carry out one of the operations required in return for consideration.

Legal context

EU law

Directive 2014/24

3 Recital 102 of Directive 2014/24 states:

‘Allowance should … be made for the possibility that economic operators can adopt compliance measures aimed at remedying the consequences of any criminal offences or misconduct and at effectively preventing further occurrences of the misbehaviour. Those measures might consist in particular of personnel and organisational measures such as the severance of all links with persons or organisations involved in the misbehaviour, appropriate staff reorganisation measures, the implementation of reporting and control systems, the creation of an internal audit structure to monitor compliance and the adoption of internal liability and compensation rules. Where such measures offer sufficient guarantees, the economic operator in question should no longer be excluded on those grounds alone. Economic operators should have the possibility to request that compliance measures taken with a view to possible admission to the procurement procedure be examined. However, it should be left to Member States to determine the exact procedural and substantive conditions applicable in such cases. They should, in particular, be free to decide whether to allow the individual contracting authorities to carry out the relevant assessments or to entrust other authorities on a central or decentralised level with that task.’

4 Article 18 of that directive, headed ‘Principles of procurement’, provides in paragraph 1 thereof:

…’

5 Article 57 of that directive, entitled ‘Exclusion grounds’, provides in paragraphs 4 to 7 thereof:

‘ 4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(g) where the economic operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract which led to early termination of that prior contract, damages or other comparable sanctions;

(h) where the economic operator has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, has withheld such information or is not able to submit the supporting documents required pursuant to Article 59; …

At any time during the procedure, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4.

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

An economic operator which has been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement or concession award procedures shall not be entitled to make use of the possibility provided for under this paragraph during the period of exclusion resulting from that judgment in the Member States where the judgment is effective.

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. They shall, in particular, determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 6 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability. Where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period shall not exceed five years from the date of the conviction by final judgment in the cases referred to in paragraph 1 and three years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4.’

6 Article 59 of that directive, entitled ‘European Single Procurement Document’, provides in paragraphs 1 and 2:

‘ 1. At the time of submission of requests to participate or of tenders, contracting authorities shall accept the European Single Procurement Document (ESPD), consisting of an updated self-declaration as preliminary evidence in replacement of certificates issued by public authorities or third parties confirming that the relevant economic operator fulfils the following conditions:

(a) it is not in one of the situations referred to in Article 57 in which economic operators shall or may be excluded;

The ESPD shall consist of a formal statement by the economic operator that the relevant ground for exclusion does not apply and/or that the relevant selection criterion is fulfilled and shall provide the relevant information as required by the contracting authority. The ESPD shall further identify the public authority or third party responsible for establishing the supporting documents and contain a formal statement to the effect that the economic operator will be able, upon request and without delay, to provide those supporting documents.

2. The ESPD shall be drawn up on the basis of a standard form. The Commission shall establish that standard form, by means of implementing acts. …'

7 Article 69 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Abnormally low tenders', provides in paragraph 1:

'Contracting authorities shall require economic operators to explain the price or costs proposed in the tender where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, supplies or services.'

8 Article 90(1) of Directive 2014/24 provides that Member States are to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with that directive by 18 April 2016 at the latest, while the first paragraph of Article 91 of that directive provides that Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) is repealed with effect from 18 April 2016.

Implementing Regulation (EU) 2016/7

9 Annex 2, Part III, C, to Commission Implementing Regulation (EU) 2016/7 of 5 January 2016 establishing the standard form for the European Single Procurement Document (OJ 2016 L 3, p. 16) contains, inter alia, the following two headings:

Is the economic operator guilty of grave professional misconduct … ? If yes, please provide details:	[] Yes [] No [……]
	If yes, has the economic operator taken self-cleaning measures? [] Yes [] No If it has, please describe the measures taken: [……]
Has the economic operator experienced that a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract was terminated early, or that damages or other comparable sanctions were imposed in connection with that prior contract? If yes, please provide details:	[] Yes [] No [……]

	If yes, has the economic operator taken self-cleaning measures? [] Yes [] No If it has, please describe the measures taken: [……]

Belgian law

10 Article 61(2)(4) of the koninklijk besluit van 15 juli 2011 plaatsing overheidsopdrachten klassieke sectoren (Royal Decree of 15 July 2011 on the award of public contracts in traditional sectors) (Belgisch Staatsblad of 9 August 2011, p. 44862), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings, provides:

‘In accordance with Article 20 of the Law [of 15 June 2006 on public procurement and certain works, supply and service contracts (Wet van 15 juni 2006 overheidsopdrachten en bepaalde opdrachten voor werken, leveringen en diensten, Belgisch Staatsblad of 15 February 2007, p. 7355)], a candidate or tenderer may be excluded from the procedure at any time:

4) if it has been guilty of grave professional misconduct;

…’

11 Article 70 of the wet van 17 juni 2016 inzake overheidsopdrachten (Law of 17 June 2016 on public procurement) (Belgisch Staatsblad of 14 July 2016, p. 44219), which entered into force on 30 June 2017 (‘the Law of 17 June 2016’), provides:

‘Any candidate or tenderer who is in one of the situations referred to in Articles 67 or 69 may provide evidence to show that the measures it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If the contracting authority considers that evidence to be sufficient, the candidate or tenderer concerned shall not be excluded from the award procedure.

To that end, the candidate or tenderer shall prove on its own initiative that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, has clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 By contract notice published on 11 May 2016 in the Bulletin der Aanbestedingen (Public Procurement Bulletin) and on 13 May 2016 in the Official Journal of the European Union, the afdeling Wegen en Verkeer Oost-Vlaanderen (Department of Roads and Traffic of East Flanders, Belgium) of the Agentschap Wegen en Verkeer van het Vlaamse gewest (Agency for Roads and Traffic of the Flemish Region, Belgium) launched a public call for tenders for a works contract concerning the remodelling of the Nieuwe Steenweg (N60) junction and the access and exit spurs to and from the E17 in De Pinte. The contract notice referred in particular to the grounds for exclusion under Article 61(1) and (2) of the Royal Decree of 15 July 2011 on the award of public contracts in traditional sectors, in the version applicable to the main proceedings, which included ‘grave professional misconduct’.

13 Following the submission of six tenders, including that of the applicants in the main proceedings, the Flemish Region, by decision of 13 October 2016, excluded the applicants from access to the procedure and awarded the contract to the undertaking which had submitted the economically most advantageous tender in order.

14 The Flemish Region justified the exclusion of the applicants in the main proceedings on the ground that, in the context of the performance of earlier contracts awarded by the same contracting authority as in the main proceedings, they had committed acts of 'grave professional misconduct' which had, for the most part, been the subject of penalties and which concerned aspects that were important for the performance of the contract for which they were now tendering. In that context, the Flemish Region took the view that the serious and repeated contractual breaches by the applicants in the main proceedings raised doubts and uncertainties as to their ability to ensure the proper performance of the new contract.

15 The applicants in the main proceedings brought an action before the referring court seeking the annulment of the decision of 13 October 2016. They submit in that regard that, before being excluded on the grounds of alleged grave professional misconduct, they should have had been afforded the opportunity to defend themselves in that regard and to demonstrate that they had remedied the consequences of that misconduct by taking appropriate corrective measures, as provided for in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, which is directly effective.

16 The contracting authority disputes the assertion that Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 can be regarded as being directly effective. The contracting authority also submits that, although it did not enter into force until 30 June 2017, that is to say, after the adoption of the decision of 13 October 2016, the Law of 17 June 2016 provides specifically, in Article 70 thereof, that the economic operator concerned must declare the corrective measures taken on its own initiative. Since Directive 2014/24 does not contain any provision prescribing the time of manner in which evidence of corrective measures should be provided, the contracting authority seeks to rely, in such circumstances, on Article 70 of the Law of 17 June 2016.

17 In order to be able to assess the merits of the action brought before it, the referring court asks whether Article 57(4), (6) and (7) of Directive 2014/24 precludes an economic operator from being excluded from a procurement procedure for grave professional misconduct without first having been invited by the contracting authority or the tender specifications to provide evidence that it remains reliable despite that misconduct.

18 The court notes that, in so far as the classification of the grave professional misconduct alleged against the tenderer concerned is a matter for the discretion of the contracting authority, that classification may prove unforeseeable for the tenderer. Furthermore, according to the referring court, tenderers would not be inclined to engage in a form of self-accusation by providing a list of failures that could possibly be classified by the contracting authority as 'grave misconduct'. Ensuring an adversarial procedure could therefore favour competition in the procurement procedure. On the other hand, the referring court submits that leaving it to the tenderer to provide evidence of the corrective measures taken would allow greater transparency, particularly since that operator knows, because of the maximum duration of exclusion, the period of time during which it must, on its own initiative, report the corrective measures.

19 If the answer to the first question is in the affirmative, the referring court also wishes to know whether the abovementioned provisions of Directive 2014/24 have direct effect. In particular, the referring court is uncertain whether certain elements of those provisions constitute, in relation to self-cleaning, minimum guarantees which allow them to be classified as 'sufficiently precise and unconditional' to confer direct effect on them.

20 In those circumstances, the Raad van State (Council of State, Belgium) decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'1) Should the provisions of Article 57(4)(c) and (g), in conjunction with paragraphs 6 and 7 of that article, of Directive 2014/24 … be interpreted as precluding an application whereby the economic operator is required to provide evidence on its own initiative of the measures that the economic operator has taken to demonstrate its reliability?

2) If so, do the provisions of Article 57(4)(c) and (g), in conjunction with paragraphs 6 and 7 of that article, of [Directive 2014/24] therefore have direct effect?'

The questions referred

Preliminary observations

21 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that, given that the provisions of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, the interpretation of which is sought, do not correspond to any provision in the EU legislation applicable to public procurement until the date of adoption and entry into force of that directive, the questions referred for a preliminary ruling can be relevant only if that directive is applicable to the situation at issue in the main proceedings. The referring court is of the view that this is the case because the publication of the contract notice on 11 and 13 May 2016 took place after 18 April 2016, the date on which, in accordance with Articles 90 and 91 thereof, Directive 2014/24, first, should have been transposed by the Member States and, second, repealed Directive 2004/18.

22 Nevertheless, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that that contract notice was preceded by a prior information notice, which was published on 17 October 2015, the date on which Directive 2004/18 was still applicable.

23 In that regard, it is apparent from settled case-law that the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether a prior call for competition needs to be issued for the award of a public contract. Conversely, the provisions of a directive are not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that date (judgment of 27 November 2019, Tedeschi and Consorzio Stabile Istant Service, C-402/18, EU:C:2019:1023, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

24 In the present case, in view of the fact that the prior information notice was published before the deadline for transposing Directive 2014/24, whereas the contract notice was published after that date, it is for the referring court to ascertain on which date the contracting authority chose the type of procedure which it intended to follow and decided definitively whether or not there was an obligation to issue a prior call for competition for the award of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings.

25 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding a practice of a Member State whereby the economic operator concerned is required, at the time of submission of their requests to participate or of their tenders in a public procurement procedure, to provide voluntarily evidence of the corrective measures taken to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence, in respect of that operator, of an optional ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4) of that directive, where such an obligation does not arise either from the applicable national rules or from the tender specifications.

26 In that regard, it should be recalled, in the first place, that, under Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, any tenderer which is concerned, in particular, by one of the optional grounds for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4) of that directive may provide evidence to show that the measures which it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability, it being specified that, if that evidence is deemed sufficient, the economic operator concerned may not be excluded from the procurement procedure for that reason. That provision thus introduces a 'self-cleaning' mechanism by conferring on tenderers a right which the Member States must guarantee when transposing that directive, in compliance with the conditions laid down by the directive (see, by analogy, as regards Article 38(9) of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1), which is equivalent to Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, judgment of 11 June 2020, Vert Marine, C-472/19, EU:C:2020:468, paragraphs 16 and 17).

27 It should be noted that neither the wording of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 nor recital 102 of that directive specifies how or at what stage of the procurement procedure the evidence of corrective measures can be provided.

28 In those circumstances, it should be noted that, having regard solely to the wording of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, the possibility for tenderers to provide evidence of the corrective measures taken may just as well be exercised on their own initiative or on the initiative of the contracting authority, as well as at the time of submission of requests to participate or of tenders or at a later stage of the procedure.

29 That interpretation is supported by the objective pursued in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24. By providing that an economic operator must be able to provide evidence of the corrective measures taken, that provision seeks to underline the importance attaching to the reliability of economic operators and to ensure an objective assessment of economic operators and to ensure effective competition (see, by analogy, judgment of 11 June 2020, Vert Marine, C-472/19, EU:C:2020:468, paragraph 22). That objective can be achieved where evidence of corrective measures is provided at any stage of the procedure preceding the adoption of the award decision, the key point being that the economic operator must have the opportunity to put forward and to have examined the measures which, in its view, enable a ground for exclusion concerning it to be remedied.

30 That interpretation is also supported by the context of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24. In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, in accordance with Article 57(7) of that directive, the implementing conditions for that article and, furthermore, Article 57(6) of that directive must be specified by the Member States having regard to EU law. Within the framework of the discretion the latter enjoy when determining the procedural terms and conditions of Article 57(6) of that directive (see, by analogy, judgment of 11 June 2020, Vert Marine, C-472/19, EU:C:2020:468, paragraph 23), the Member States may provide that evidence of corrective measures must be provided voluntarily by the economic operator concerned at the time of submission of their requests to participate or of their tenders, just as they may also provide that such evidence may be adduced after that economic operator has been formally invited to do so by the contracting authority at a later stage of the procedure.

31 That discretion of the Member States is, however, without prejudice to the provisions of Directive 2014/24 which provide that operators may voluntarily provide evidence of corrective measures at the time of submission of their requests to participate in the public procurement procedure or of their tenders. As the Advocate General observed, in essence, in point 49 of his Opinion, Article 59(1)(a) of Directive 2014/24 provides that the contracting authorities must accept, when submitting such requests or such tenders, the ESPD, by means of which the economic operator declares on its honour that it is concerned by a ground for exclusion and has taken self-cleaning measures, subject to subsequent verification.

32 That said, the provisions in Article 59 of Directive 2014/24, relating to the ESPD, do not preclude Member States from deciding, in the context of the discretion referred to in paragraph 30 of the present judgment, to leave to the contracting authority the initiative to request evidence of corrective measures after the request to participate or the tender has been submitted, even if the request to participate or the tender is accompanied by an ESPD.

33 It is apparent from the textual, teleological and contextual interpretation of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, as set out in paragraphs 27 to 30 of the present judgment, that that provision does not preclude the economic operator concerned from providing evidence of corrective measures on its own initiative or at the express request of the contracting authority, or from that evidence being provided at the time of submission of requests to participate or of tenders, or at a later stage of the procurement procedure.

34 In the second place, it should be noted that, as is apparent from Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24, the Member States are required, when determining the implementing conditions for Article 57, to comply with EU law. In particular, they must observe not only the principles for the award of contracts set out in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, which include, inter alia, the principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality, but also the principle of respect for the rights of the defence which, as a fundamental principle of EU law, of which the right to be heard in any procedure is an integral part, is applicable where the authorities are minded to adopt a measure which will adversely affect an individual, such as an exclusion decision adopted in the context of a public procurement procedure (judgment of 20 December 2017, Prequ' Italia, C-276/16, EU:C:2017:1010, paragraphs 45 and 46 and the case-law cited).

35 In those circumstances, it should be recalled at the outset, first, that, in accordance with the principle of transparency, all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way (judgment of 14 December 2016, Connexxion Taxi Services, C-171/15, EU:C:2016:948, paragraph 40 and the case-law cited). Second, the principle of equal treatment requires tenderers interested in a public contract to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, to be made aware of the exact constraints of the procedure and to be in fact assured that all tenderers are subject to the same conditions (judgment of 14 December 2016, Connexxion Taxi Services, C-171/15, EU:C:2016:948, paragraph 39 and the case-law cited).

36 It follows that, where a Member State provides that evidence of corrective measures can be provided only voluntarily by the economic operator at the time of submission of requests to participate or of tenders, without that operator having the opportunity to provide such evidence at a later stage of the procedure, the principles of transparency and equal treatment require, as the Advocate General observed, in essence, in points 66 and 67 of his Opinion, that economic operators be openly informed in advance, in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner, of the existence of such an obligation, whether that information results directly from the tender specifications or from a reference in those documents to the relevant national rules.

37 Next, the right to be heard means that, as the Advocate General observed, in essence, in points 90 and 91 of his Opinion, those economic operators must be in a position to make known their views effectively in that request or in that tender, to identify, by themselves, the grounds for exclusion which may be relied on against them by the contracting authority in the light of the information contained in the tender specifications and the national rules on that subject.

38 Lastly, in so far as it does not constitute an unreasonable obstacle to the exercise of the system of corrective measures, the obligation on tenderers to voluntarily provide evidence of corrective measures in their request to participate or in their tender is, since it is exercised under the conditions set out in paragraphs 36 and 37 of the present judgment, consistent with the principle of proportionality, under which the rules laid down by the Member States or contracting authorities in the context of the implementation of the provisions of Directive 2014/24, such as the rules intended to specify the implementing conditions for Article 57 of that directive, must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of that directive (see, to that effect, judgment of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 45 and the case-law cited).

39 In the present case, it should be noted, as the referring court points out, that, although the Kingdom of Belgium transposed into its national law, by means of Article 70 of the Law of 17 June 2016, Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, specifying that evidence of corrective measures must be provided on the initiative of the economic operator, that law had not entered into force on the date of publication of the contract notice or even on the date of submission of the applicants' tender in the main proceedings. Furthermore, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that, although they referred to the grounds for exclusion laid down by the national legislation in force at the time, the tender specifications did not expressly state that such evidence had to be provided voluntarily by the economic operator concerned.

40 In those circumstances, and without prejudice to the obligation on the applicants in the main proceedings, in accordance with the requirements of transparency and fairness, to inform the contracting authority of the grave professional misconduct that they had committed in the context of the performance of earlier contracts awarded by the same contracting authority, those applicants could reasonably expect, solely on the basis of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, that they would subsequently be invited by the contracting authority to provide evidence of the corrective measures taken to remedy any optional ground for exclusion which that authority may have identified.

41 It is also apparent from paragraphs 34 to 37 of the judgment of 3 October 2019, Delta Antrepriză de Construcţii şi Montaj 93 (C-267/18, EU:C:2019:826), which relates to national legislation which did not specify whether evidence of corrective measures had to be provided voluntarily by the economic operator or at what stage of the procedure it should be provided, that, although it is for economic operators to inform the contracting authority, upon submission of their request to participate or their tender, of the termination of a previous contract on grounds of serious deficiency, the contracting authority, where it concludes that there is a ground for exclusion arising from such termination or from the withholding of information relating to such termination, must nevertheless give the operators concerned the possibility of providing evidence of the corrective measures taken.

42 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question referred is that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding a practice whereby an economic operator is required, at the time of submission of their requests to participate or of their tenders, to provide voluntarily evidence of the corrective measures taken to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence, in respect of that operator, of an optional ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4) of that directive, where such an obligation does not arise either from the applicable national rules or from the tender specifications. By contrast, Article 57(6) of that directive does not preclude such an obligation where it is laid down in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the applicable national rules and is brought to the attention of the economic operator concerned by means of the tender specifications.

43 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as having direct effect.

44 In that regard, it is settled case-law that, whenever the provisions of a directive appear, so far as their subject matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, they may be relied on before the national courts by individuals against the Member State concerned where that state has failed to transpose the directive into national law within the time limit or has transposed it incorrectly (judgment of 13 February 2019, Human Operator, C-434/17, EU:C:2019:112, paragraph 38).

45 In the present case, it should be noted that, as is apparent, in essence, from the order for reference, the Law of 17 June 2016 intended to transpose Directive 2014/24 into Belgian law did not enter into force until 30 June 2017, that is to say, after the expiry of the period for transposition of that directive, namely 18 April 2016. Therefore, the question of the direct effect of Article 57(6) of that directive is relevant.

46 The Court has stated that a provision of EU law is, first, unconditional where it sets forth an obligation which is not qualified by any condition, or subject, in its implementation or effects, to the taking of any measure either by the institutions of the European Union or by the Member States and, second, sufficiently precise to be relied on by an individual and applied by a court where it sets out an obligation in unequivocal terms (judgment of 1 July 2010, Gassmayr, C-194/08, EU:C:2010:386, paragraph 45 and the case-law cited).

47 Furthermore, the Court has held that even though a directive leaves the Member States a degree of latitude when they adopt rules in order to implement it, a provision of that directive may be regarded as unconditional and precise where it imposes on Member States in unequivocal terms a precise obligation as to the result to be achieved, which is not coupled with any condition regarding application of the rule laid down by it (see, to that effect, judgments of 5 October 2004, Pfeiffer and Others, C-397/01 à C-403/01, EU:C:2004:584, paragraphs 104 and105, and of 14 October 2010, Fuß, C-243/09, EU:C:2010:609, paragraphs 57 and 58).

48 In the present case, it must be held that, by providing that any tenderer may provide evidence to show that the measures it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a ground for exclusion concerning that tenderer, Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 confers on tenderers a right which, first, is formulated in unequivocal terms and, second, places on the Member States an obligation as to the result to be achieved which, although its material and procedural conditions of application must be adopted by the Member States pursuant to Article 57(7) of that directive, is not dependent on transposition into national law in order to be invoked by the economic operator concerned and applied to its benefit.

49 Irrespective of the specific rules for the application of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, that provision provides in a sufficiently precise and unconditional manner, within the meaning of the case-law cited in paragraph 46 of the present judgment, that the economic operator concerned cannot be excluded from the procurement procedure if it is able to establish, to the satisfaction of the contracting authority, that the corrective measures taken restore its reliability despite the existence of a ground for exclusion concerning that operator. Consequently, Article 57(6) of that directive provides, for the benefit of that economic operator, a minimum level of protection irrespective of the margin of discretion left to Member States in determining the procedural conditions of that provision (see, to that effect, judgments of 14 July 1994, Faccini Dori, C-91/92, EU:C:1994:292, paragraph 17, and of 5 October 2004, Pfeiffer and Others, C-397/01 to C-403/01, EU:C:2004:584, paragraph 105). That is all the more true given that, as the Advocate General observed, in essence, in point 102 of his Opinion, Article 57(6) of that directive lays down the fundamental elements of the system of corrective measures and the right conferred on the economic operator by indicating the minimum elements to be proved and the assessment criteria to be met.

50 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second question referred is that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as having direct effect.

Costs

51 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2015/2170 of 24 November 2015, must be interpreted as precluding a practice whereby an economic operator is required, at the time of submission of their requests to participate or of their tenders, to provide voluntarily evidence of the corrective measures taken to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence, in respect of that operator, of an optional ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4) of that directive, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2015/2170, where such an obligation does not arise either from the applicable national rules or from the tender specifications. By contrast, Article 57(6) of that directive, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2015/2170, does not preclude such an obligation where it is laid down in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the applicable national rules and is brought to the attention of the economic operator concerned by means of the tender specifications.

2. Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2015/2170, must be interpreted as having direct effect.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 17 September 2020 (1)

Case C-387/19

RTS infra BVBA,

Aannemingsbedrijf Norré-Behaegel

v

Vlaams Gewest

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Raad van State (Council of State, Belgium))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement of works, supplies and services – Conduct of the procedure – Grounds for exclusion – Evidence of reform measures – Detailed rules)

1. Article 57 of Directive 2014/24/EU (2) governs the grounds for excluding economic operators from participating in public procurement procedures.

2. Those operators may nonetheless provide evidence to show that the measures they have taken are sufficient to demonstrate that they are reliable, despite having been caught by one of those grounds for exclusion. The self-cleaning permitted by Article 57(6) is one of the new features of Directive 2014/24 as compared with Directive 2004/18/EC, (3) which preceded it.

3. The Court has already examined Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 on a number of occasions, including in relation to paragraph 6 thereof. (4) It has not, however, ruled on whether the contracting authority may make it a condition of qualifying for self-cleaning that the economic operator act on its own initiative, as is the case here.

I. Applicable law

A. EU law

1. Directive 2014/24

4. Recitals 101 and 102 state:

‘(101) Contracting authorities should further be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable, for instance because of violations of environmental or social obligations, including rules on accessibility for disabled persons or other forms of grave professional misconduct, such as violations of competition rules or of intellectual property rights. …

Bearing in mind that the contracting authority will be responsible for the consequences of its possible erroneous decision, contracting authorities … should be able to exclude candidates or tenderers whose performance in earlier public contracts has shown major deficiencies with regard to substantive requirements, for instance failure to deliver or perform, significant shortcomings of the product or service delivered, making it unusable for the intended purpose, or misbehaviour that casts serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator. National law should provide for a maximum duration for such exclusions.

In applying facultative grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities should pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality. …

(102) Allowance should, however, be made for the possibility that economic operators can adopt compliance measures aimed at remedying the consequences of any criminal offences or misconduct and at effectively preventing further occurrences of the misbehaviour. … Where such measures offer sufficient guarantees, the economic operator in question should no longer be excluded on those grounds alone. Economic operators should have the possibility to request that compliance measures taken with a view to possible admission to the procurement procedure be examined. However, it should be left to Member States to determine the exact procedural and substantive conditions applicable in such cases. They should, in particular, be free to decide whether to allow the individual contracting authorities to carry out the relevant assessments or to entrust other authorities on a central or decentralised level with that task.'

5. According to Article 18(1) ('Principles of procurement'):

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

…'

6. Article 56(1) ('General principles') provides:

'Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of criteria laid down in accordance with Articles 67 to 69, provided that the contracting authority has verified in accordance with Articles 59 to 61 that all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(b) the tender comes from a tenderer that is not excluded in accordance with Article 57 …'.

7. Article 57 ('Exclusion grounds') states:

'…

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(g) where the economic operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract which led to early termination of that prior contract, damages or other comparable sanctions;

(h) where the economic operator has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, has withheld such information or is not able to submit the supporting documents required pursuant to Article 59; or

(i) where the economic operator has undertaken to unduly influence the decision-making process of the contracting authority, to obtain confidential information that may confer upon it undue advantages in the procurement procedure or to negligently provide misleading information that may have a material influence on decisions concerning exclusion, selection or award.

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. …

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. …'

8. Article 59 ('European Single Procurement Document') stipulates:

'1. At the time of submission of requests to participate or of tenders, contracting authorities shall accept the European Single Procurement Document (ESPD), consisting of an updated self-declaration as preliminary evidence in replacement of certificates issued by public authorities or third parties confirming that the relevant economic operator fulfils the following conditions:

(a) it is not in one of the situations referred to in Article 57 in which economic operators shall or may be excluded;

4. A contracting authority may ask tenderers and candidates at any moment during the procedure to submit all or part of the supporting documents where this is necessary to ensure the proper conduct of the procedure.

…'

2. Implementing Regulation (EU) 2016/7 (5)

9. In accordance with Article 1:

'From the moment the national measures implementing Directive 2014/24/EU enter into force, and at the latest from 18 April 2016, the standard form set out in Annex 2 to this Regulation shall be used for the purposes of drawing up the European single procurement document referred to in Article 59 of Directive 2014/24/EU. Instructions for its use are set out in Annex 1 to this Regulation.'

B. Belgian law

10. Article 61(2), point 4, of the koninklijk besluit van 15 juli 2011 plaatsing overheidsopdrachten klassieke sectoren states: (6)

'In accordance with Article 20 of the Law, a candidate or tenderer who … has been guilty of grave professional misconduct may be excluded from the procedure at any time.'

11. Article 70 of the wet van 17 juni 2016 inzake overheidsopdrachten provides: (7)

> ‘Any candidate or tenderer who is in one of the situations referred to in Articles 67 or 69 may provide evidence to show that the measures it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If the contracting authority considers that evidence to be sufficient, the candidate or tenderer concerned shall not be excluded from the award procedure.
> To that end, the candidate or tenderer shall prove [on its own initiative] that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, has clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

II. Facts and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12. In May 2016, the Flemish Administration (8) published a notice of a public call for tenders for works contract X40/N60/54, concerning the remodelling of the Nieuwe Steenweg (N60) junction and the access and exit spurs to and from the E17 in De Pinte. (9)

13. The notice made formal reference to the application of the grounds for exclusion under Article 61(1) and (2) of the Royal Decree of 15 July 2011, including the previous commission of an act of grave professional misconduct. (10)

14. The contracting authority, by decision of 13 October 2016, chose to exclude one of the tenderers (a joint venture made up of Norré Behaegel and RTS infra BVBA; ‘RTS-Norré’) from the procedure because its members had previously committed acts of grave professional misconduct. (11)

15. The contract was awarded to another tenderer, which had submitted the economically most advantageous tender.

16. The undertakings comprising RTS-Norré challenged the decision of 13 October 2016 before the Raad van State (Council of State, Belgium). They claimed that, before being excluded, they should have been allowed to demonstrate that they had taken corrective measures evidencing their reliability, in accordance with Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24. In their view, that provision is directly applicable.

17. They also argued that the defendant administration had acted negligently and had infringed a number of principles: the right to a fair hearing (audi et alteram partem), transparency, fair competition and equality (since they themselves had been treated unequally by comparison with their ‘European colleagues’).

18. The contracting authority rebutted the assertion that Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 can be regarded as being directly effective; in particular, it rejected the notion that paragraph 6 is unconditional, clear and precise. As regards the remedial measures, it submitted that it is for the Member States to define the conditions governing the implementation of that provision.

19. In the alternative, it went on to say that the contested decision does not infringe the regime for the adoption by economic operators, on their own initiative, of the self-cleaning measures provided for in Directive 2014/24. (12)

20. The referring court is uncertain about how to interpret Article 57(4)(c) and (g), in conjunction with paragraphs 6 and 7 of that article, of Directive 2014/24. In particular, it wishes to ascertain whether those provisions:

– Allow a tenderer to be excluded without being given the opportunity to present evidence of reliability, in the case where, according to the contracting authority, that tenderer has committed an act of grave professional misconduct and has not indicated on its own initiative the corrective measures it has taken;

– Are directly effective, in the event that they preclude a requirement that the tenderer provide evidence on its own initiative.

21. It was in those circumstances that the Raad van State (Council of State) referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

> ‘Should the provisions of Article 57(4)(c) and (g), in conjunction with paragraphs 6 and 7 of that article, of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC be interpreted as precluding an application whereby the economic operator is required to provide evidence on its own initiative of the measures that the economic operator has taken to demonstrate its reliability?
> If so, do the provisions of Article 57(c) and (g), in conjunction with paragraphs 6 and 7 of that article, of [Directive 2014/24] therefore have direct effect?’

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice

22. The reference for a preliminary ruling was received at the Court on 17 May 2019.

23. Written observations have been lodged by RTS-Norré, the Governments of Austria, Belgium, Hungary and Estonia, and the Commission.

IV. Assessment

A. Preliminary clarifications

24. In order to answer the two questions referred for a preliminary ruling, it is necessary first and foremost to clarify which directive is applicable in this case.

25. It follows from the documents before the Court that the applicable legislation is not Directive 2014/24 (on which the reference is based) but the directive previously in force (Directive 2004/18), to which the contract notices referred.

26. That call for tenders for that contract was conducted in two stages:

– The ‘Prior Information Notice’ was published on 17 October 2015 (13) and cited Directive 2004/18 as the legal basis for the procedure.

– The ‘Contract Notice’ was published on 13 May 2016 (14) and this too states that Directive 2004/18 is applicable, while at the same time drawing the attention of parties to the grounds for exclusion set out in the Royal Decree of 15 July 2011, which transposed Directive 2004/18.

27. The time limit for transposing Directive 2014/24 expired, in accordance with Article 90 thereof, on 18 April 2016, on which date Directive 2004/18 was repealed.

28. According to the Court’s settled case-law, ‘the applicable directive in the field of public procurement is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority [chooses which type of procedure it intends to pursue]. Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time’. (15)

29. As the [date of publication of the] contract notice in this case was ‘necessarily after the time when the contracting authority selected the type of procedure which it intended to pursue and determine[d] conclusively whether or not there was an obligation to conduct a prior call for competition for the award of the public contract in question’, (16) which it did prior to 18 April 2016, Directive 2004/18 was applicable ratione temporis.

30. It is therefore clear both from the Court’s case-law and, specifically, from the prior information notice and the contract notice that the public procurement procedure was subject in this case to the provisions of Directive 2004/18. The corollary of the foregoing is that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling are concerned with the interpretation of provisions of EU law (Directive 2014/24) which are not relevant to the resolution of the dispute. (17)

31. The considerations I shall set out below are therefore presented in the alternative, in the event only that the Raad van State (Council of State) takes the view, for reasons inherent in its domestic law, that it must nonetheless apply Directive 2014/24.

B. First question

1. Criteria for textual and contextual interpretation

(a) Wording of Article 57(6) and (7) of Directive 2014/24

32. Directive 2004/18 did not make it possible for an economic operator caught by a ground for exclusion to demonstrate that it had adopted self-cleaning measures. Article 51 thereof nonetheless allowed the contracting authority to invite undertakings to submit documents on their personal situation. (18)

33. Directive 2014/24, on the other hand, does devote a provision (Article 57(6)) to such measures, (19) but this contains only certain information concerning, for example, the purpose of the measures (20) or the need to give reasons for a negative evaluation of them. (21) Otherwise, reference is made to the implementing conditions to be specified by the Member States.

34. Article 57(7) thus provides that, 'by law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article'.

35. The freedom enjoyed by the Member States in this field manifests itself on two levels:

– At the general level, inasmuch as they have some discretion in 'determining the implementing conditions of the optional grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24'. (22)

– At the specific level, in relation to the required timing and form for submitting evidence of reform. As regards such evidence, recital 102 of Directive 2014/24 states that 'it should be left to Member States to determine the exact procedural and substantive conditions applicable in such cases'.

36. There is, therefore, nothing to stop a Member State from requiring the economic operator concerned to take the initiative in this regard. Recital 102 of the directive specifically refers to requests by economic operators that the measures they have adopted be examined. (23)

37. As I have already stated elsewhere, (24) the intention behind Article 57(6) is that the contracting authority 'should evaluate the evidence presented by the operator claiming to have reformed itself'. The task of the contracting authority 'in the evaluation of that evidence is … passive, while the task that falls to the economic operator is active …'.

38. In short, the wording of Article 57(6) and (7) of Directive 2014/24 does not preclude a Member State from providing that an economic operator which wishes to participate in a public procurement procedure, despite having been caught by grounds for exclusion, must, in order to demonstrate its reliability, provide, motu proprio, evidence of the measures which it has taken.

(b) Context of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24

39. A schematic or contextual interpretation of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 leads to the same result.

40. First, in accordance with Article 56(3) of that directive, contracting authorities may request economic operators to submit, supplement, clarify or complete the relevant information or documentation (be it on the tender or on the candidate) within an appropriate time limit.

41. The provision so worded does not lay down a duty, that is to say a positive obligation, to request the information referred to in paragraph 1(b) of that article. In fact, that article itself allows the national transposing legislation to provide otherwise.

42. Secondly, Article 59 of Directive 2014/24 requires the economic operator itself to certify, by means of the European Single Procurement Document (ESPD), that it is not in one of the exclusion situations.

43. The ESPD is thus a formal declaration by the economic operator in which the latter must state that it is not covered by the relevant ground for exclusion or, if it is, that it has corrected its conduct in order to recover its lost credibility.

44. The ESPD, the rules governing which are set out in Implementing Regulation 2016/7:

– Puts the economic operator signing it in a position whereby it must itself identify whether it is caught by any grounds for exclusion, be these the compulsory ones or any others provided for in national legislation or specified in the contract notice or the tender specifications;

– Compels the operator, in that event, to state which self-cleaning measures it has taken by completing the sections provided for that purpose in the 'standard form'. (25)

45. Use of the ESPD does not exempt the tenderer from having to provide subsequent evidence, this being one of the undertakings it has to give. Article 59(1) of Directive 2014/24 states that the ESPD 'shall … contain a formal statement to the effect that the economic operator will be able, upon request and without delay, to provide those supporting documents'.

46. Article 59(4) of Directive 2014/24 therefore authorises the contracting authority to ask tenderers and candidates at any moment during the procedure to submit all or part of the supporting documents (mentioned or referred to in the ESPD) where this is necessary to ensure the proper conduct of the procedure.

47. In accordance with the same provision, that right becomes an obligation in the case of a tenderer to which the contracting authority has decided to award the contract: the contracting authority must then require it to submit up-to-date supporting documents (in accordance with Article 60 and, where appropriate, Article 62).

48. The inference I draw from all of the foregoing is that, if analysed schematically and in context, the provisions of Directive 2014/24 and Implementing Regulation 2016/7 indicate a clear preference as regards the proper timing and form for a declaration by the economic operator that it has taken reform measures, which is to say that, whether it does so by using the ESPD or by some other means, it must always make that declaration when submitting its tender.

49. It follows from that rule that a requirement by a national legislature or a national contracting authority that economic operators must claim to have taken self-cleaning measures (and, in that event, provide (26) the corresponding supporting documents) at the outset, is consistent with Directive 2014/24.

(c) Article 69, in particular

50. RTS-Norré proposes that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 be interpreted by analogy with the rules governing abnormally low tenders (Article 69). The referring court also refers to that interpretative criterion in its order. (27)

51. I cannot endorse that proposal, since Article 69 of Directive 2014/24 deals with tenders which, in other provisions of the directive, are classified as 'irregular' (28) but may be admissible. That provision is concerned not with the economic operator's reliability but with the material viability of its tender.

52. Analogies are not to be used where, as is the case here, in my opinion, the applicable provision contains enough information on its own to enable it to be interpreted without the need for recourse to another (supposedly) analogous provision. This is particularly true where the latter provision serves a different purpose: Article 69 of Directive 2014/24 is intended to protect candidates from arbitrary decisions by the contracting authority in a context very different from that of Article 57(6).

2. Objective of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24

53. The rule allowing economic operators to declare and demonstrate their reliability despite the existence of grounds for exclusion appears at first sight to be favourable primarily to them. It is logical, then, that it should fall to the person with an interest in participating in the procurement procedure to declare and prove that self-cleaning measures have been taken.

54. There is, in addition, another side to that rule which applies to the contracting authority. In accordance with Article 56(1)(b) of Directive 2014/24, the contracting authority must award the contract after verifying that the tender was submitted by a suitable tenderer (that is to say, not one excluded under Article 57).

55. It is for the contracting authority to verify whether there are any grounds for exclusion (29) and, if there are, whether the unreliable economic operator has nonetheless claimed to be worthy of trust on account of the measures it has taken. (30)

56. In performing that task, the contracting authority must rely in the first place on the data provided to it by tenderers. Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24 refers to the scenario in which the operator has withdrawn the information required to verify the absence of grounds for exclusion or is not able to submit the supporting documents required pursuant to Article 59. Both of those circumstances are sufficient to warrant the operator's rejection from the procurement procedure. (31)

57. It might be excessive to require those participating in a procurement procedure to include in their tender, motu proprio, documentary evidence, in the form of the relevant certificates, of compliance with all of the conditions listed in Article 59(1) of Directive 2014/24. This would also be unnecessary from the point of view of ensuring that the procedure is conducted properly, and inconsistent with the introduction of the ESPD into EU public procurement legislation.

58. By contrast, it does not seem to me to be excessive to require that the tenderer's tender be accompanied by a declaration and a description of the self-cleaning measures it has taken if it wishes to rely on those measures. That requirement is in the nature of a procedural burden. (32)

59. The contracting authority needs, as I have said, to be acquainted with those measures in order to be able to assess them and satisfy itself as to the reliability of a technically unreliable successful tenderer. This does not mean, however, that, in the absence of any such declaration from the tenderer, the contracting authority must ascertain of its own motion whether or not the tenderer has taken those measures.

60. The Court states in the judgment in Vossloh that:

- the economic operator 'must provide the contracting authority with evidence demonstrating that [the reform measures] are sufficient for the purpose of its admission to the procurement procedure';
- and that, if it 'wishe[es] to establish its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion[, it] must collaborate effectively with the authorities to which those respective duties have been entrusted, regardless of whether this is the contracting authority or the investigating authority'. (33)

61. The same judgment nonetheless qualifies the duty to cooperate, which is limited 'to the measures which are strictly necessary for the effective pursuit of the objective of the examination of the reliability of the economic operator, mentioned in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24'. (34)

62. I shall deal with the requirement of proportionality directly, after looking at the requirements that flow from the principles of transparency and equality.

3. Limits on the rule requiring economic operators to provide evidence on their own initiative

63. Article 57(7) stipulates that the laws, regulations and administrative provisions which the Member States introduce under it must comply with EU law. Part of that duty is to observe the principles of EU law governing public procurement. The call for proportionality is also made expressly in paragraph 6 of that article, in the context of the evaluation of self-cleaning measures.

(a) Transparency and equality

64. The principle of transparency, which is expressed in the obligation to set out clearly the conditions governing the suitability of tenderers, is so closely linked to the principle that they be treated equally that, in the view of the Court, one is the corollary of the other. (35)

65. All tenderers must therefore be in a position whereby they are equally acquainted with the conditions of the call for tenders. Hence the need for the grounds for exclusion, in particular the optional ones, to be set out clearly, since the uniform regime and mode of implementation applicable to them are defined not by EU law but by the rules of each Member State. (36)

66. Where a ground for exclusion is specified in the contract notice, the principles of transparency and equality do not preclude a national provision from requiring an economic operator wishing to counter that ground to include in its tender (that is to say, on its own initiative) evidence of the self-cleaning measures it has taken.

67. This will enable all candidates to identify, under the same conditions, whether, because they are caught by the ground for exclusion specified, they must from the outset declare that they have recovered their credibility to the contracting authority that is to select one of them.

68. According to the Court, tenderers cannot be required to disclose on their own initiative circumstances internal to them where 'neither applicable national legislation nor the call for tenders or the tender specifications' provide for such an obligation. In those circumstances, that obligation would not constitute a clearly defined condition and the principles of transparency and equal treatment would be infringed. (37)

69. By converse inference, the duty to disclose the aforementioned circumstances will be lawful if it is provided for 'in [the] applicable national legislation[, …] the call for tenders or the tender specifications'.

70. That case-law does not therefore preclude a model for the relationship between the contracting authority and the economic operator whereby the latter is generally made to bear the burden of declaring and, in that event, providing evidence of the reform measures it has taken, if it wishes to rely on those measures in order to overcome the ground for exclusion set out in the contract notice.

71. A 'reasonably informed [tenderer] exercising ordinary care' (38) might, hypothetically, be unaware of substantive requirements applicable to the tender which have not been published. By contrast, once the tenderer has been alerted to the specific grounds for exclusion in the contract notice, the fact that that operator has to declare (and, in that event, prove) that, despite being caught by one of those grounds, it has remedied its lack of credibility, does not infringe the principles of transparency and disclosure.

72. That same operator cannot be unaware of the fact that, even if the contract notice does not make explicit reference to cleaning measures, Directive 2014/24 enables it to avail itself of them.

73. All of the foregoing has been particularly true since the introduction of the ESPD, which, as I have said, includes specific sections for declaring (and describing) reform measures. I would reiterate that use of the ESPD is practically compulsory in almost all of the procedures covered by Directive 2014/24. (39)

(b) Proportionality

74. According to recital 1 of Directive 2014/24, procedures for the award of public contracts are governed by the principle of proportionality. Recital 101 reiterates this with reference to optional grounds for exclusion in particular.

75. Article 57(6) includes an express reference to proportionality in the evaluation of any reform measures which economic operators claim to have taken.

76. It is logical, therefore, that the Court should have held that '… the rules intended to lay down the implementing conditions of Article 57 of that directive … must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of that directive …'. (40)

77. The principle of proportionality has a material role to play, therefore, where the contracting authority has to evaluate the adequacy of self-cleaning measures and its own grounds for exclusion, while ensuring, in connection with the latter, that minor one-off irregularities do not have an exclusionary effect, except in exceptional circumstances. (41)

78. Could the contracting authority be asked to apply that same principle to the requirement that a tenderer declare in its tender that, despite having been caught by an optional ground for exclusion, it has subsequently rectified its behaviour and thereby recovered its credibility?

79. In normal circumstances, the contracting authority will have to confine itself to verifying whether the tenderer has complied with that requirement. A decision whereby it rejects the application of an economic operator which, in breach of its duty, has omitted to mention in its tender that it is caught by a ground for exclusion cannot be described as disproportionate. This will be the case, for example where the tenderer fails to disclose the fact that it has previously committed an act of grave professional misconduct.

80. In such a situation, the trigger for exclusion will be not so much the failure to declare as the very existence of the ground for exclusion (grave professional misconduct, for example) the rectification of which, in the form of a suitable self-cleaning measure, has not been disclosed by the economic operator.

81. There will, conversely, be situations in which there is greater scope for flexibility, in accordance with the criteria which the Court laid down in the judgment in Pizzo in connection with tenderers established in other Member States, 'inasmuch as their level of knowledge of national law and the interpretation thereof and of the practice of the national authorities cannot be compared to that of national tenderers'. (42)

82. In those situations, 'the principles of equal treatment and of proportionality must be interpreted as not precluding an economic operator from being allowed to regularise its position and comply with that obligation within a period of time set by the contracting authority'. (43)

83. In the judgment of 14 December 2016, Conexxion Taxi Services, the Court returned to that idea that an economic operator established in another Member State is less familiar with the terms and conditions of application of the relevant national legislation because it is foreign. (44)

84. In my view, that criterion would also apply where the ground for exclusion counting against the economic operator is not readily apparent from the documents relating to the procedure. It would be consistent with the principles of equality and proportionality, in those circumstances, for the economic operator to be given the opportunity to make good its initial failure to refer to that ground (and to the subsequent self-cleaning measures it has taken).

(c) Right of defence

85. In the order for reference, the Raad van State (Council of State) suggests that the fact that tenderers have to list, motu proprio, the acts of grave misconduct they have committed and the reform measures they have taken since might be described as 'self-accusation'. (45)

86. There is nothing to compel an economic operator to participate in a public procurement procedure. If it does, however, it must comply with the rules of that procedure. Under Directive 2014/24, the relationship between tenderers and the contracting authority must be informed by good faith, meaning that the former, precisely because of the reliability required of them, cannot conceal information concerning the grounds for exclusion by which they are caught.

87. The tenderer must thus provide the information required to verify the existence or non-existence of grounds for exclusion, and is not permitted to withhold (the term used in Article 57(4)(h)) of Directive 2014/24) or misrepresent that information.

88. Requiring someone voluntarily participating in a public procurement procedure, on pain of exclusion, to disclose the pre-existing acts of grave misconduct they have committed (and any subsequent self-cleaning measures they may have taken) is not the same as disregarding the right not to plead guilty or incriminate oneself that applies in other areas of the legal system.

89. What is more, the Court has already held that the contracting authority is authorised to ask a tenderer to provide documentary evidence of a reform measure, even if providing it may bring unfavourable consequences to bear on the tenderer. (46)

90. The fact that, because the concept of 'grave professional misconduct which renders its integrity questionable' is so broad, an economic operator may be unable to determine with certainty whether one of its behaviours in the past is capable of being deemed to be such, is a different matter. In this regard, the referring court is right to note that, given the degree of discretion enjoyed by the contracting authority in assessing such conduct (recital 101 of Directive 2014/24), it will not always be easy to identify whether that ground for exclusion is satisfied.

91. In such a situation, where the tenderer concerned is unable to foresee whether its behaviour will be classified as an act of grave misconduct, the tenderer cannot be expected to mention that behaviour in its tender or in the ESPD. In those circumstances, it will be for the contracting authority, which is ultimately responsible for 'demonstrat[ing] by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct', to give the tenderer the opportunity to declare whatever it considers to be appropriate in relation to that misconduct.

92. I have stated that, in accordance with the principle of transparency, grounds for exclusion must be set out in such a way as to enable the economic operator to identify whether it is caught by them and, if so, to claim to have remedied them.

93. In that connection, I would recall that the exclusion authorised by Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 may be based both on deficiencies in the performance of previous contracts (point (g)) and on the commission of acts of grave professional misconduct (point (c)). Those two grounds were materially present in this case, according to the assessment of the contracting authority, and the first question referred for a preliminary ruling makes specific reference to both of them. (47)

94. Thus, the contract notice that gave rise to the present dispute, which was issued under Directive 2004/18, included as a ground for exclusion the commission of acts of grave professional misconduct, also provided for in the Royal Decree of 15 July 2011. It was interpreted in this way by the contracting authority, which relied on that ground in order to exclude the applicant undertakings from the procurement procedure.

95. In short, it is my view that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 does not preclude a position whereby, in the case where the ground for exclusion is clearly set out in the contract notice, the economic operator must, on its own initiative, declare (and, in that event, provide evidence of) the self-cleaning measures it has taken.

C. Second question referred

96. In the event that the answer to the first question is in the affirmative, the referring court wishes to ascertain whether Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 could be relied on directly by an economic operator as against a contracting authority. (48)

97. If my proposed answer to the previous question were accepted, there would be no need to answer this one. The submissions that follow are therefore by way of a further alternative (I have already explained why Directive 2014/24 is not applicable in this case). (49)

98. In my view, Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 could, if it were applicable, be regarded as being directly effective for the purposes of the claim on which the Raad van State (Council of State) must adjudicate. (50)

99. That article confers on tenderers a right (to rely on self-cleaning measures before the contracting authority) which they may assert before the national courts and which the latter are bound to protect.

100. The differences of opinion between those who have intervened in the preliminary ruling proceedings are confined to whether that provision is unconditional and sufficiently precise, as required by case-law. (51)

101. As regards unconditionality, the right established in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 does not depend on the Member States and is not contingent, from the point of view of its substance, upon whatever they may prescribe.

102. As regards precision, that provision itself provides indications of what, as a minimum, must be proved and, therefore, evaluated. (52) It also indicates the criteria (gravity and particular circumstances) against which that evaluation must be carried out (53) and the consequences that follow from a positive and a negative evaluation. (54) In addition, it makes clear when there will be no right to present remedial measures. (55) In short, it lays down the basic elements of the scheme and content of that right.

103. It is true that other elements, whether substantive or procedural, remain in the hands of the Member States, in accordance with the general rule laid down in Article 57 of Directive 2014/24. This is the case, for example, with the maximum period of exclusion and the timing and form of demonstrating reform.

104. As regards how and when the tenderer must declare and, in that event, provide evidence of the reform measures it has taken, this is left to the discretion of the Member States. Neither is the choice between ex officio assessment and assessment on the initiative of the operator concerned an essential condition of the right which Article 57(6) of Directive 2104/24 confers on tenderers.

105. The absence of any national provision (in the form of laws, regulations or administrative measures) on the detailed rules of form and timing cannot, however, operate to the detriment of tenderers to such an extent as to eliminate their right to seek the benefit of self-cleaning measures before a national court.

V. Conclusion

106. In the light of all the foregoing, I suggest that the Court of Justice reply to the Raad van State (Council of State, Belgium) as follows:

> Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC is not applicable, ratione temporis, to the facts of the dispute in the main proceedings as they are set out in the request for a preliminary ruling.
> In the alternative:
> – Article 57(4)(c) and (g), in conjunction with paragraphs 6 and 7 of that article, of Directive 2014/24 do not preclude an economic operator from having to declare and, in that event, prove, on its own initiative, that the self-cleaning measures it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability, despite the existence of a ground for exclusion by which it has been caught.
> – Economic operators which are in one of the situations referred to in Article 57(1) and (4) of Directive 2014/24 may rely directly, before a national court, on the right conferred on them by paragraph 6 of that article.

18 One author had suggested that this type of measure might be covered by the general interest exception provided for in Article 45 of Directive 2004/18. See Risvig Hamer, C., 'Article 57', in Steinicke, M., and Vesterdorf, P.L., EU Public Procurement Law, C. H. Beck, Nomos, Hart, 2018, p. 643. The fact that that directive did not provide for such measures did not mean that they were proscribed or were incapable of affecting the reliability of the economic operator, in accordance with principles such as the principle of proportionality.

24 Opinion in Vossloh Laeis (C-124/17, EU:C:2018:316, points 48 and 49).

25 Annex II (Standard form for the ESPD) to Implementing Regulation 2016/7 lists the various grounds for exclusion in response to which the economic operator must provide answers. If any of the grounds apply to the operator, it must indicate in the relevant boxes whether it 'has … taken measures to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of this ground for exclusion (self-cleaning)' or 'has taken self-cleaning measures'. The form then says, 'if it has, please describe the measures taken'.

26 An operator using the ESPD discharges that obligation (subject to subsequent checks) if it indicates in it the measures it has taken by completing the fields specifically provided for that purpose in the form.

28 Article 26(4), in fine, and the second subparagraph of Article 35(5).

29 It is irrelevant for the purposes of this case whether the contracting authority verifies this point itself or via other authorities at a central or decentralised level (recital 102 of Directive 2014/24).

30 It is also for the contracting authorities to assess the risks to which they might be exposed if they were to award a contract to an operator of questionable reliability (judgment in Vossloh, paragraphs 24 and 26). In this connection, recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 reminds them that they will be responsible for the consequences of any erroneous decisions.

31 According to point (i) of that same paragraph, a further optional ground for excluding economic operators is 'negligently provid[ing] misleading information that may have a material influence on decisions concerning exclusion, selection or award'.

32 A procedural burden means that, pursuant to the principle of preclusion, anyone who fails to comply with the rule in question (in this case, that economic operators must claim to have taken measures) loses the opportunity to do so later.

36 Those same principles prohibit the contracting authority from rejecting a tender which meets the requirements of the contract notice on grounds not provided for in that notice or in the applicable national law (judgment of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions (C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228, paragraphs 26 and 28)).

47 The order for reference lists in meticulous detail (section 3.6) the many deficiencies in the performance of similar works for which both RTS infra and, principally, Norré-Behaegel, to which the previous contracts in question had been awarded, were held responsible. The contracting authority described those deficiencies as ‘serious and repeated breaches’.

48 Although the second question contains references to other paragraphs and points, it is concerned only with whether Article 57(6) is directly effective (see to that effect section 22 of the order for reference).

49 Points 24 to 31 of this Opinion.

50 Whether or not the conditions for a provision to be directly effective are met is not a matter that can be disposed of outside the specific context in which that question is raised. Deriving a positive mandate from a directive demands greater textual rigour than relying on it by way of defence for the purposes of obtaining the annulment of an individual decision or a review as to the compatibility of a national provision. The national court requires more extensive guidance in the first case than in the others. III. Facts

3.1. The Roads and Traffic Agency, East Flanders Department, of the Flemish Region issues a government contract for the acceptance of work on the redevelopment of the intersection of Nieuwe Steenweg (N60) and the E17 on- and off-ramp in De Pinte.

3.2. The contract will be awarded by open tender. announcement in the Bulletin of Tenders will take place on 11 May 2016 and in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union on 15 May 2016.

3.3. The announcement explicitly points out that the grounds for exclusion of Article 61, §§ 1 and 2, of the Royal Decree of 15 July 2011 'placement of government contracts in classical sectors' will apply.

Furthermore, the minimum requirement for technical competence is a recognition in class 8, category C, is stated.

3.4. Six bids are submitted, including that of the requesting parties.

3.5. On October 13, 2016, the defendant decides to to exclude requesting parties from participating in the assignment and to to award the contract to Stadsbader NV, as the lowest regular bidder.

This is the contested award decision.

3.6. The motivation in the award report, which is in the award decision is upheld, reads:

> "Pursuant to Article 61, § 2, 4° of the Royal Decree of 15 July 2011 on public contracts for the acceptance of works, supplies and services and concessions for public works, the contracting authority has the possibility to exclude a tenderer when he commits a serious error in the exercise of his profession.

In the context of the award of the current public contract, the contracting authority excludes THV Norré Behaegel - RTS on the basis of the aforementioned provision. In light of the facts, which are described in detail below, the contracting authority, if it wishes to conduct a sound management, cannot commit itself to THV Norré - RTS for the current contract. These facts have seriously damaged the contracting authority's confidence in THV Norré - RTS.

Norré-Behaegel's review:
The company Norré-Behaegel is excluded on the grounds of serious errors committed during the execution of the order 'Erpe-Mere N9 Gentsesteenweg / N46 Oudenaardsesteenweg/ N442 Leedsesteenweg (Vijf Huizen)' with specification no. 1M3D8H/13/12. During this order, the company RTS acted as subcontractor.
In the execution of the public contract 'Erpe-Mere N9 Gentsesteenweg / N46 Oudenaardsesteenweg / N442 Leedsesteenweg (Vijf Huizen)', the contracting authority (Roads and Traffic Agency) has drawn up 24 reports of default and 32 reports of determination, in application of Article 20 of the General Contracting Conditions attached as an appendix to the Royal Decree of 26 September 1996.

Five reports of default concern safety and health on the site and deal with a total of 12 violations thereof (including failure to comply with comments from the safety coordinator). Either no defence was lodged against these reports, or a defence was lodged that could not be accepted. All these reports were confirmed with a penalty.

The safety and health of the employees and personnel of the contracting authority are a major concern for the contracting authority in the current contract, with works on the motorway and on structures. In addition, during the evaluation of the current tender, the safety coordinator determined that the amount provided by THV Norré - RTS for safety and health is 'on the low side' (lowest of all tenderers). The repeated infringements during the execution of the public contract 'Erpe-Mere N9 Gentsesteenweg / N46 Oudenaardsesteenweg / N442 Leedsesteenweg (Vijf Huizen)' and the low amount provided for safety and health measures in the current tender, therefore lead the government to have particular doubts in this regard about the executor of the contract.

Seven reports of default concern the road signage of the road works (including the closure of roads without a permit). Either no defence was lodged against these reports, or a defence was lodged that could not be accepted. All these reports were confirmed with a penalty.

In the current contract, all works must be carried out on motorways and primary roads. These are roads with a high traffic load on which flow, good traffic management and, again, safety is of paramount importance. The repeated infringements in the execution of the public contract 'Erpe-Mere N9 Gentsesteenweg / N46 Oudenaardsesteenweg / N442 Leedsesteenweg (Vijf Huizen)' lead to the contracting authority having little confidence in the executor in this respect.

The 32 reports of determination relate to various technical aspects of the road construction. The shortcomings include all possible parts of the road, ranging from earthworks, foundations and water drainage to the construction of the finishing layers in concrete and asphalt. Penalties and [sanctions] were applied for the infringements. All these aspects also occur to a very significant extent in the current contract, which is why the contracting authority has doubts about the professional competence of the Norré-Behaegel company for the execution of such comprehensive works.

RTS assessment:

The firm RTS is excluded on the grounds of serious errors committed during the execution of the assignment TV3V file '4083: N35 Gaversesteenweg — Driesstraat — N494 Oudenaardsesteenweg — Rijbroekstraat — Ten Rodelaan' with specification no. 1M3D8H/13/54.

In the execution by the company RTS of the government contract 'TV3V-dossier '4083: N35 Gaversesteenweg — Driesstraat — N494 Oudenaardsesteenweg — Rijbroekstraat — Ten Rodelaan', the contracting authority (Roads and Traffic Agency), in application of Article 20 of the General Contracting Conditions attached as an appendix to the Royal Decree of 26 September 1996, drew up nine reports of determination and one report of notice of default.

The nine reports of determination mainly concern a defective technical execution of both sewerage, foundations and finishing layers in concrete and asphalt. The report of default was written for a poor execution of the sewerage, which caused a flooding with damage to the road surface, water pipe and adjacent house.

One report of determination concerns the soil management report. In this report, the company RTS claims that no soil surpluses were removed, while this was not in accordance with reality. The regulations regarding earthmoving are very strict, with joint and several liability of both the staff of the contracting authority and the contractor. In the current contract, there are considerable earthworks, which require careful monitoring of the earthmoving. Submitting an incorrect soil management report leads to little confidence in the executor in this regard.

Conclusion:

The above-mentioned assignments all relate to works from the 'TV3V' programme for the reconstruction of dangerous intersections and road sections in Flanders, which also includes the current tender.

The serious and repeated contractual shortcomings found in the above-mentioned assignments, and attributable to both to the firm Norré-Behaegel and to the firm RTS, lead to well-founded doubts and uncertainty regarding the regular execution of the current contract if it were to be awarded to the THV Norré — RTS. The THV consisting of both firms is therefore excluded due to a serious error in the exercise of its professional duties and is excluded from the further award procedure."

Machine Translated by Google

IV. Examination of the sole remedy

Position of the parties

Position of the parties before the preliminary questions to the Court of Justice

4. For the explanation of the positions of the parties of before the judgment of the Court of Justice on the sole plea, in the first place referred to judgment no. 244.404 of 7 May 2019.

The applicants essentially argue that Article 57, Members 4 to 7 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of public contracts and to repeal of Directive 2004/18/EC (hereinafter: Directive 2014/24/EU) direct has effect and is applicable to the case at hand. They believe that this provisions give them the opportunity to opt-out before being excluded on the grounds of alleged serious professional misconduct, to present a defence in which they can demonstrate that they have remedied the problems. According to them, this article provides after all, in an adversarial procedure.

The defendant essentially argues that the aforementioned Article 57 has no direct effect, either in whole or in part. Furthermore, does she consider that in line with this Article 57 and Article 70 of the Act of 17 June 2016 'on public procurement' (hereinafter: Public Procurement Act 2016) the the applicant must submit the cleaning measures he/she wishes to take on his/her own initiative has taken to prevent professional errors. She also argues that on a contracting authority wishing to take an exclusion decision, in principle no hearing obligation.

Position of the parties following the judgment of the Court of Justice of 14 January 2021, Case C-387/19, and after the supplementary auditor's report

5. In judgment no. 244.404 of 7 May 2019, the Council of State decided to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

> "1. Must the provisions of Article 57(4)(c) and (g) in conjunction with paragraphs 6 and 7 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC be interpreted as precluding the application whereby the economic operator is required to provide evidence, on its own initiative, of the measures it has taken to demonstrate its reliability?
> 2. If so, do the provisions of Article 57(4)(c) and (g) in conjunction with paragraphs 6 and 7 of Directive 2014/24/EU, interpreted in this way, have direct effect?

6. By judgment of 14 January 2021, Case C-387/19 (hereinafter: the judgment), the Court of Justice answers these questions as follows:

> "1) Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2015/2170 of 24 November 2015, must be interpreted as precluding a practice whereby an economic operator, when submitting its request to participate or its tender, must spontaneously provide evidence of the corrective measures it has taken in order to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of an optional ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4) of that directive, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2015/2170, where no such obligation arises from the applicable national legislation or the procurement documents. However, Article 57(6) of that directive, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2015/2170, does not preclude such an obligation where it is clearly, precisely and unambiguously stated in the applicable national legislation and is brought to the attention of the entrepreneur concerned via the tender documents.

2) Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2015/2170, must be interpreted as having direct effect."

7. After notification of the supplementary auditor's report, the defending party stated the following in its final statement.

7.1. Firstly, she points out the problem of the applicability of Directive 2014/24/EU and on what was stated in the judgment of the Court of

The Justice Department has considered this as follows:

"Preliminary observations

21 It should be noted as a preliminary point that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, the interpretation of which is sought, has no equivalent in the provisions of EU public procurement legislation in force before the adoption and entry into force of that directive, so that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling can be relevant only if that directive is applicable to the situation at issue in the main proceedings. The referring court considers that this is the case because the notice was published on 11 and 13 May 2016 and therefore after 18 April 2016, the date on which Directive 2014/24 had to be transposed by the Member States in accordance with Article 90 thereof and which repealed Directive 2004/18 in accordance with Article 91 thereof.

22 However, it is apparent from the file before the Court that the announcement was preceded by a prior information notice published on 17 October 2015, when Directive 2004/18 was still applicable.

23 In that regard, it is clear from settled case-law that the applicable directive is, in principle, that in force on the date on which the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and definitively determines whether a prior call for competition is required for the award of a public contract. However, the provisions of a directive the transposition period of which expired after that date are not applicable (judgment of 27 November 2019, Tedeschi and Consorzio Stabile Istant Service, Cÿ402/18, EU:C:2019:1023, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

24 In the present case, the prior information notice was published before the deadline for transposition of Directive 2014/24, and the notice after that date. It is therefore for the referring court to verify the date chosen by the contracting authority > what type of procedure he was going to follow and finally determined whether there was an obligation to issue a prior call for competition for the award of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings."

The defending party requests the Council of State "to rule on the basis to consider that Directive 2004/18 applies to [its] documents 2 and 3 is, which was explicitly submitted for verification by the Court of Justice to [the Council of State]".

7.2. Furthermore, it disputes that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU has direct effect in the internal legal order. After all, she argues, this provision is not unconditional or sufficiently clear in nature for the conditions for direct effect would be met. This is evident from the Defendant inter alia from Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24/EU that the allows Member States to determine not only the procedural but also the substantive aspects conditions for the application of the exclusion and self-employment scheme cleaning to be determined in the light of national needs and characteristics. "From an unconditional or sufficiently clear and precise provision is thus "no question".

Furthermore, the defending party fails to see that the mere given that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU provides for a minimum guarantee would imply, would justify its direct effect. Such after all, a guarantee does not automatically mean that they are unconditional and is sufficiently clear and accurate.

The defendant also emphasises that it has no legislative had the power to transpose the directive provision into the domestic legal order.

7.3. Finally, the defendant argues that in the auditor's report ignores "the core of this annulment procedure", namely the fact that the applicants are already too well knew that, given the factual antecedents regarding defects in orders that belong to the same programme (“TV3V”), the defendant has a well-founded claim doubts and uncertainty regarding the regular performance of the disputed assignment may be.

Machine Translated by Google

According to the defendant, there was therefore a “reasonable predictability of the decision” to exclude the applicants.

The role of the requesting parties should therefore be discounted in the assessment. For example, the requesting parties had spontaneously can bring forward corrective measures. Furthermore, the the applicants have failed to provide evidence that they “pursuant to the requirements of loyalty and transparency” still provide proof of action taken within a reasonable period of time could have presented corrective measures. It is sufficient with other words not to take corrective measures until after a possible request to do so to carry out.

Finally, the defending party points out a number of reasons why “a Member State would require tenderers to provide evidence of their own accord providing self-cleaning measures”.

8. The applicants argue that Directive 2014/24/EU is indeed applicable to the order in question.

As regards the dispute concerning the direct effect of this
As regards the directive, the applicants refer to the judgment of the Court of Justice. “The Court [according to the applicants] is very clear in its judgment on the scope of the rights that the legal subjects of the Directive can exercise
The defendant's argument that the arrangement regarding 'self cleaning' could not be applied on his own initiative is therefore not correct”.

Machine Translated by Google

Finally, the applicants note that they do had taken proper measures to avoid the previous problems but that they should be given the opportunity to use the knowledge they had already acquired at that time to communicate the measures taken to the defending party in a timely manner".

Judgement

9. The Court of Justice notes in its judgment that in this case the prior announcement of the contract has taken place before the deadline for the transposition of Directive 2014/24/EU, while the announcement is dated after that date, and that it is therefore for the referring court to verify on which date the contracting authority has chosen which type procedure he was going to follow and finally decided whether the award was of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings an obligation existed to make a prior call for competition.

It cannot be inferred from the pre-announcement itself which type of procedure chosen by the contracting authority. A mere reference to that prior information to the Directive repealed by Directive 2014/24/EU 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 'on the coordination of procedures for the placement of public contracts for works, supplies and services', does not include decision on the type of procedure.

Moreover, as the applicants also note, pointed out in the advance announcement that no cutlery is yet available.

Only in the announcement, i.e. after the deadline for conversion of the Directive, information is provided under 'Section IV: Procedure' on what type of procedure the contracting authority will follow.

The defendant does not provide any other information that would

Machine Translated by Google

a relevant decision, with a date earlier than that of the announcement, would to turn out.

In those circumstances, the Council finds that the contested order falls under Directive 2014/24/EU.

10. The Court of Justice decided on the first preliminary question concerns that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU should be amended as follows: explained that it opposes a practice whereby an entrepreneur at the submission of his request for participation or his registration spontaneously provides proof must provide details of the corrective measures he has taken to demonstrate that he is reliable despite the existence of an optional ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4) of this Directive, where the applicable national regulation or the tender documents do not provide such an obligation arises. Furthermore, the Court of Justice rules that Article 57, paragraph 6, of this Directive, however, does not preclude such a obligation when it is stated clearly, precisely and unambiguously in the applicable national regulation and to the attention of the tendering documents involved entrepreneur is brought.

Neither the cutlery nor the applicable regulations at that time national regulations refer to an obligation that applied to the requesting parties to spontaneously submit their tender to provide evidence of the corrective measures they have taken to to demonstrate that they are reliable despite the existence of a applicable optional exclusion ground, or a possibility to do so to adduce evidence at a later stage in the proceedings. The principles of transparency and equal treatment nevertheless require – as the Court stated in its judgment notes under point 36 – that if the tenderer must provide the evidence spontaneously provide upon registration, without the possibility of submitting this proof at a later date stage of the procedure, he should indicate this in advance on a clear, is informed of such a situation in an accurate and unambiguous manner obligation.

Machine Translated by Google

With the Court of Justice – point 39 of the judgment – it must be established that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU, although national law was transposed by Article 70 of the Public Procurement Act 2016, which requires evidence of corrective action to be provided delivered at the initiative of the entrepreneur, but that this law is not yet in force had entered into force when the announcement was made, nor when the applicants submitted their tender. The specifications therefore did not yet include referred to the aforementioned Article 70.

As noted in the judgment of the Court of Justice – point 39 – the specifications also refer to the grounds for exclusion that applied under the then national scheme, but it is not explicitly stated anywhere that the entrepreneur concerned intended proof must be provided spontaneously.

The Court must therefore agree with point 40 of the judgment established that, without prejudice to the obligation of the requesting parties under the requirements of transparency and loyalty, in order to to inform the contracting authority of the serious professional misconduct they had committed committed in the performance of previous contracts by the same contracting authority awarded contracts, if only on the basis of the given circumstances Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU could reasonably have expected that the contracting authority would later ask them to provide evidence of the corrective measures they had taken to resolve the only optional to remedy the grounds for exclusion that this service could invoke.

Now it does not appear that the requesting parties have the opportunity received to enforce and investigate the measures that, according to they can remedy the exclusion ground in question, the objective of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU, as stated by the Court of Justice in its judgment explained in point 29, not to have been reached.

Machine Translated by Google

Furthermore, the Court of Justice emphasises – paragraph 37 of the judgment – that, even where a Member State imposes an obligation to provide evidence spontaneously, the right to be heard implies that entrepreneurs can state their position their request or registration must be made known in a useful and efficient manner To this end, they must themselves, on the basis of the information in the tender documents and the relevant national regulations may determine which grounds for exclusion that the contracting authority may invoke against them.

In the interim judgment no. 244.404 of 7 May 2019 in the

In the present case, the Council of State notes that although a company itself is aware of the actions she has taken in the past, certainly when they have given rise to a report of notice of default or even determination and even more so when they give rise given to a sanction, its qualification as a “serious error” by the contracting authority is not always foreseeable for the tenderer concerned.

The Court of Justice refers – paragraph 41 of the judgment – expressly referring to its judgment of 3 October 2019, Case C-267/18, in Delta Construction and Assembly Company 93. It notes that from points 34 to with 37 of this last judgment – which concerned a national scheme which did not determine whether the entrepreneur took the corrective measures spontaneously or not had to be proven and at what stage of the procedure this had to be done, as is also the case here – it appears that entrepreneurs have the contracting authority although already when submitting their request for participation or their registration must be informed of any termination of a previous order due to serious shortcoming, but that the contracting authority service, if he sees a ground for exclusion in that termination or in the withholding information about this, the entrepreneurs involved must be given the opportunity to provide evidence of the corrective actions they have taken.

Although in the present case it appears that there was

of a large number of reports of default and proceedings report of findings, which also appear to have given rise to sanctions, the applicants could not establish with certainty whether their previous conduct by the defendant would be considered as a serious mistake that could call their integrity into question.

In addition, this decision to exclude apparently also the first was where these actions by the defendant party were considered “serious misconduct” were qualified.

The argument of the defending party in its final memorandum that the applicants failed to make spontaneous corrective measures cannot therefore be supported.

Moreover, even if it were assumed in this case that the qualification as a “serious error” was sufficiently foreseeable for the requesting parties, this does not in any case alter the fact – as stated in the aforementioned judgment of the Court of Justice of 14 January 2021 noted that it is for it was not foreseeable to them that they would provide evidence of the corrective measures could only deliver spontaneously upon submission of the quotation, without the possibility to provide this evidence at a later stage of the proceedings. The the defendant has therefore not given the applicants the opportunity to to propose corrective measures. The defendant's argument party in its final memorandum that the applicants in any event have no providing evidence of corrective actions taken can also not convincing either.

In those circumstances, it is clear that the defendant the practice followed by the party is contrary to Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU, the principle of equality and transparency and the right to be heard.

11. With regard to the second preliminary question, the Court of Justice notes on – point 48 of the judgment – that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU, by to determine that every entrepreneur may prove that the measures he has taken taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite a applicable ground for exclusion, grants entrepreneurs a right that in has been formulated in unambiguous terms and the Member States have a imposes an obligation to achieve results which, although the material and procedural conditions of application thereof in accordance with Article 57(7) of this Directive must be determined by the Member States and does not need to be included in national law converted so that it can be invoked and used by the entrepreneur concerned to be applied for his benefit.

The protection provided for in Article 57(6) of this Directive thus offers and which is independent of the margin of appreciation allowed to the Member States left to the determination of the procedural conditions of this provision – point 49 of the judgment – the Court of Justice, contrary to what the the defending party argues in its final statement that direct effect granted. That the defendant, according to the internal division of powers between the federal government, the communities and the regions, not even was competent to transpose the provisions of the directive into national law, is not carte blanche not to comply with the directive provision that has direct effect to come.

It thus appears that the applicants are before the Council of State against the defendant directly on a violation of Article 57, paragraph 6, of Directive 2014/24/EU.

12. The decision is therefore that the only remedy is well-founded in the to the extent that an infringement of Article 57(6) of Directive is alleged 2014/24/EU, the principle of equality and transparency and the right to be heard.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2365 of 18 December 2017 (OJ 2017 L 337, p. 19)('Directive 2014/24').

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Tax-Fin-Lex d.o.o., a company established in Slovenia, and Ministrstvo za notranje zadeve (Ministry of the Interior, Slovenia) (‘the Ministry’) concerning the Ministry’s rejection of the tender submitted by that company in a procurement procedure for the award of a public contract.

Legal context

EU law

3 Recital 2 of Directive 2014/24 states:

‘Public procurement [is] … one of the market-based instruments to be used to achieve smart, sustainable and inclusive growth while ensuring the most efficient use of public funds. For that purpose, the public procurement rules … should be revised and amended in order to increase the efficiency of public spending …’

4 Under Title I of Directive 2014/24, headed ‘Scope, definitions and general principles’, Article 1(1) and (2) of the directive provides:

‘1. This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4.

2. Procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a public contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the works, supplies or services are intended for a public purpose.’

5 As set out in Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24:

‘1. For the purposes of this Directive:

(5) “public contracts” means contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services.’

6 Article 4 of the directive, headed ‘Threshold amounts’, provides:

‘This Directive shall apply to procurements with a value net of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than the following thresholds:

(b) EUR 144 000 for public supply and service contracts awarded by central government authorities and design contests organised by such authorities; …

…’

7 Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, headed ‘Principles of procurement’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

8 Title II of Directive 2014/24, relating to the rules on public contracts, contains Chapter III on the conduct of the procedure, Section 3 of which is headed ‘Choice of participants and award of contracts’. Article 69 of the directive, on ‘abnormally low tenders’, which is contained in Section 3, provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities shall require economic operators to explain the price or costs proposed in the tender where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, supplies or services.

2. The explanations referred to in paragraph 1 may in particular relate to:

(a) the economics of the manufacturing process, of the services provided or of the construction method;

(b) the technical solutions chosen or any exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the supply of the products or services or for the execution of the work;

(c) the originality of the work, supplies or services proposed by the tenderer;

(f) the possibility of the tenderer obtaining State aid.

3. The contracting authority shall assess the information provided by consulting the tenderer. It may only reject the tender where the evidence supplied does not satisfactorily account for the low level of price or costs proposed, taking into account the elements referred to in paragraph 2.

…’

Slovenian law

9 Article 2 of the Zakon o javnem naročanju (Law on public procurement) of 30 May 2015 (Uradni list RS, No 91/2015), in the version applicable at the material time in the main proceedings (‘the ZJN’), provides in paragraph 1:

‘Terms used in this law shall have the following meaning:

1. “public contract” means a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as its object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services;

…’

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10 On 7 June 2018, the Ministry published a contract notice, divided into two lots, for the award of a public contract concerning access to a legal information system for a period of 24 months. The estimated value of the contract, as determined by the Ministry, amounted to EUR 39 959.01.

11 The Ministry received only two tenders for the first lot in the time period prescribed, including that of the applicant in the main proceedings, Tax-Fin-Lex, which proposed a price of EUR 0.00.

12 By decision of 11 January 2019, Tax-Fin-Lex was informed, first, that its tender had been rejected on the ground that the final price of its tender was EUR 0.00, which, in the Ministry’s view, was contrary to the rules on public procurement and, second, that the public contract for the first lot had been awarded to the second tenderer.

13 On 17 January 2019, Tax-Fin-Lex lodged a request that the Ministry review its decision to reject the tender. On 5 February 2019, the Ministry rejected that request and, on 11 February 2019, referred the matter to the referring court, which initiated the review procedure.

14 The referring court states, as a preliminary observation, that although Directive 2014/24 does not directly govern the situation in the main proceedings, the Slovenian legislature decided, when transposing the provisions of that directive into national law, that the expression ‘public contract’ is to apply to contracts whose value is greater than the threshold laid down in the directive as well as to contracts whose value is below that threshold. The Court therefore has jurisdiction to answer the questions referred.

15 On the merits, the referring court states that the Ministry’s decision to reject the tender submitted by Tax-Fin-Lex was based on a single ground relating to the amount of the tender that was proposed. In that regard, it is uncertain, first, whether a contract may be classified as a ‘contract for pecuniary interest’, within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24, where the contracting authority is not obliged to provide any consideration to the other party to the contract but where the latter, by reason of the contract, obtains access to a new market or to new users and therefore to references, which may constitute a future economic benefit for it. The referring court also wishes to know whether the sole fact that receiving the public contract is itself of economic value to the economic operator, even if it is not possible to express that value in monetary terms at the time the contract is awarded or concluded, may be sufficient for the contract to be characterised as a contract for pecuniary interest within the meaning of that provision.

16 Second, assuming that, in that situation, there is no ‘contract for pecuniary interest’ within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24, the referring court is uncertain as to whether that provision may constitute an autonomous legal basis for rejecting a tender in which the price is fixed at EUR 0.00.

17 It states that, if such a tender were accepted, the contract concluded could not be considered as a contract for the performance of a public contract. Consequently, the contracting authority would have initiated a public procurement procedure the end result of which would be not the award of a public contract but rather, for example, a gift.

18 Nevertheless, the referring court points out that Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 defines the concept of ‘public contract’ in order to specify the cases in which the directive applies, without governing the procedure for the award of a public contract. It states that the contracting authority, when it initiated that procedure in the main proceedings, appreciated that it was going to be required to provide consideration for receiving the services that were the subject matter of the contract. The contracting authority’s preliminary assessment could not be affected by the conduct of the tenderers or the content of their tenders. After initiating the public procurement procedure and receiving the tenders, the contracting authority is obliged to consider those tenders and to examine them solely in the light of the requirements defined in advance. In addition, contracting authorities organise public procurement procedures not with the aim of concluding a contract for pecuniary interest, but in order to obtain goods or services. In the present case, even if it had accepted the tender at a price of EUR 0.00, the contracting authority would still have received the services in respect of which the public contract was put out to tender.

19 In the light of all of those considerations, the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Commission for the supervision of public procurement procedures, Slovenia) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Is there a “contract for pecuniary interest” as part of a public contract within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24, where the contracting authority is not required to provide any consideration but, by performing the public contract, the economic operator obtains access to a new market and references?

(2) Is it possible or necessary to interpret Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 in such a way that it constitutes a basis for rejecting a bid with a price of EUR 0.00?’

Consideration of the questions referred

20 As a preliminary observation, it should be noted that the amount of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is below the threshold of EUR 144 000 set out in Article 4(b) of Directive 2014/24, with the result that the contract falls outside the scope of the directive. However, as the referring court states, when transposing the provisions of the directive into national law, the Slovenian legislature reproduced in Article 2(1) of the ZJN the definition of the term 'public contract' as it appears in Article 2(1)(5) of the directive, and that definition therefore applies to all public contracts governed by the ZJN, irrespective of their amount.

21 According to settled case-law, an interpretation by the Court of provisions of EU law in situations not falling within the scope of those provisions is warranted where such provisions have been made directly and unconditionally applicable to such situations by national law, in order to ensure that those situations and situations falling within the scope of those provisions are treated in the same way (see, to that effect, judgments of 18 October 1990, Dzodzi, C-297/88 and C-197/89, EU:C:1990:360, paragraphs 36, 37 and 41, and of 24 October 2019, Belgische Staat, C-469/18 and C-470/18, EU:C:2019:895, paragraph 23).

22 The Court must therefore answer the questions referred.

23 By its questions, which it is appropriate to consider together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as constituting a legal basis for rejecting a tenderer's bid in a public procurement procedure on the sole ground that, since the price proposed in the tender is EUR 0.00, the contracting authority would provide no financial consideration, while by performing the contract the tenderer would merely obtain access to a new market and to references that it could rely on in subsequent calls for tenders.

24 In that regard, it should be recalled that Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 defines 'public contracts' as 'contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services'.

25 According to the Court's case-law, it is clear from the usual legal meaning of 'for pecuniary interest' that those terms designate a contract under which each of the parties undertakes to provide one form of consideration in exchange for another (see, to that effect, judgment of 18 October 2018, IBA Molecular Italy, C-606/17, EU:C:2018:843, paragraph 28). The synallagmatic nature of the contract is thus an essential element of a public contract (see, to that effect, judgments of 21 December 2016, Remondis, C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985, paragraph 43; of 28 May 2020, Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung, C-796/18, EU:C:2020:395, paragraph 40; and of 18 June 2020, Porin kaupunki, C-328/19, EU:C:2020:483, paragraph 47).

26 As the Advocate General observed in point 47 of his Opinion, even if that consideration need not necessarily consist of the payment of a sum of money, so that the supply of the service is compensated for by other forms of consideration, such as reimbursement of the expenditure incurred in providing the agreed service (see, inter alia, judgments of 19 December 2012, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 29; of 13 June 2013, Piepenbrock, C-386/11, EU:C:2013:385, paragraph 31; and of 18 October 2018, IBA Molecular Italy, C-606/17, EU:C:2018:843, paragraph 29), the fact remains that the reciprocal nature of a public contract necessarily results in the creation of legally binding obligations on both parties to the contract, the performance of which must be legally enforceable (see, to that effect, judgment of 25 March 2010, Helmut Müller, C-451/08, EU:C:2010:168, paragraphs 60 to 62).

27 It follows that a contract under which a contracting authority is not legally obliged to provide any consideration in return for that which the other party to the contract has undertaken to provide does not fall within the concept of 'contract for pecuniary interest' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24.

28 The fact, referred to by the referring court and inherent in all public procurement procedures, that the award of the contract could be of economic value to the tenderer in that it would open up access to a new market or enable the tenderer to receive references, is too uncertain and is therefore insufficient to characterise the contract as a ‘contract for pecuniary interest’, as the Advocate General stated, in essence, in points 63 to 66 of his Opinion.

29 However, it should be noted that Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 defines the concept of ‘public contracts’ merely for the purposes of specifying when the directive applies. As is clear from Article 1(1) of the directive, it does not apply to ‘public contracts’, within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) ,whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4.

30 It follows that Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 cannot constitute a legal basis capable of justifying the rejection of a tender which proposes a price of EUR 0.00. Accordingly, that provision does not permit the automatic rejection of a tender submitted in a public procurement procedure, such as a tender at a price of EUR 0.00, in which an economic operator offers to supply a contracting authority with the works, supplies or services which that authority wishes to purchase, without seeking consideration.

31 Accordingly, since a tender at a price of EUR 0.00 could be classified as an abnormally low tender within the meaning of Article 69 of Directive 2014/24, where a contracting authority is presented with such a tender, it must follow the procedure provided for in that provision and ask the tenderer to explain the amount of the tender. It follows from the underlying logic of Article 69 of Directive 2014/24 that a tender cannot be automatically rejected on the sole ground that the price proposed is EUR 0.00.

32 Thus it is clear from paragraph 1 of Article 69 that where a tender appears to be abnormally low, contracting authorities are to require the tenderer to provide an explanation for the price or costs proposed in the tender, which could relate, inter alia, to the elements set out in paragraph 2 of that article. The explanation provided is thus to be used in the assessment as to whether the tender is reliable and enables the contracting authority to establish that, although the tenderer proposes a price of EUR 0.00, the tender at issue will not impair the proper performance of the contract.

33 In accordance with paragraph 3 of the same article, the contracting authority must assess the information provided by consulting the tenderer and it may reject such a tender only where the evidence supplied does not satisfactorily account for the low level of price or costs proposed.

34 The assessment of that information must also be carried out in compliance with the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination between tenderers, and the principles of transparency and proportionality, which are binding on the contracting authority under Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24.

35 Therefore, the argument made by a tenderer which has submitted a tender at a price of EUR 0.00 that the price proposed in its tender is explained by the fact that it anticipates obtaining access to a new market or references if the tender is accepted must be assessed in the context of the possible application of Article 69 of Directive 2014/24.

36 In the light of all of the above considerations, the answer to the questions referred is that Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not constituting a legal basis for rejecting a tenderer’s bid in a public procurement procedure on the sole ground that the price proposed in the tender is EUR 0.00.

Costs

37 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, as amended by Commission

Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2365 of 18 December 2017, must be interpreted as not constituting a legal basis for rejecting a tenderer’s bid in a public procurement procedure on the sole ground that the price proposed in the tender is EUR 0.00.

Case C-367/19

Tax-Fin-Lex d.o.o.

in the presence of

LEXPERA d.o.o.

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal, Slovenia))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public service contracts – Directive 2014/24/EU – Article 2(1)(5) – Characterisation as a 'public contract' – Notion of 'contract for pecuniary interest' – Bid submitted by a tenderer in the amount of EUR 0.00 – Assessment of the onerous nature of the transaction – Absence of pecuniary consideration to be supplied by the contracting authority – Rejection of the tender – Legal basis – Article 69 – Abnormally low tender)

I. Introduction

1. Is zero (an) abnormally low (number)?

2. Leaving to one side the spirited discussion to which the nature of the number zero has given rise in the field of mathematics, (2) such a question put to a layman from a legal perspective would in all likelihood cause him to regard the lawyers with the look of astonishment which lawyers are accustomed to receiving when they try to explain what they do. The layman will even observe, perhaps – not without sarcasm – that only a lawyer is capable of devoting page after page to discussing (literally) nothing.

3. The fact nonetheless remains that, in relation to public contracts as in mathematics, zero seems to be an unusual number, difficult to place in existing evaluation grids. Does a tenderer offering goods or services at the nominal price of EUR 0.00 submit an abnormally low tender? Or rather does that tenderer automatically exclude himself from the scope of the law relating to public procurement by placing the magic number '0' in his tender rather than another nominal figure far below the real cost of the contract (such as, for example, EUR 1.5 or EUR 101), the reasoning being that, unlike all other natural numbers, '0' cannot appear in a public contract?

4. In a nutshell, that is the problem that arises in the present case. In the course of the procedure for the award of a public service contract initiated by the Ministrstvo za notranje zadeve (Ministry of the Interior, Slovenia), the undertaking Tax-Fin-Lex d.o.o. submitted a tender for the amount of EUR 0.00 to supply one of the relevant services. The Ministry of the Interior rejected that tender on the ground that it did not make it possible to conclude a ‘contract for pecuniary interest’ within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24/EU (3) and therefore did not fall within the rules on public procurement. Conversely, Tax-Fin-Lex d.o.o. maintains that the transaction whereby it undertakes to supply the service for the sum of EUR 0.00 would be performed ‘for pecuniary interest’ within the meaning of that provision. In its submission, performing the contract would enable it to benefit from an economic advantage, owing to the references on which it would be able to rely afterwards for the purpose of the award of new public contracts.

II. Legal framework

5. Directive 2014/24 lays down rules that permit the coordination of national procedures for the award of public contracts above a certain amount so that they may be consistent with the principle of free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, as well as the ensuing principles, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, proportionality and transparency. That directive is also intended to ensure effective competition in public procurement.

6. In particular, recitals 4 and 103 of Directive 2014/24 state:

> ‘(4) The increasingly diverse forms of public action have made it necessary to define more clearly the notion of procurement itself; that clarification should not however broaden the scope of this Directive compared to that of Directive 2004/18/EC. [(4)] The Union rules on public procurement are not intended to cover all forms of disbursement of public funds, but only those aimed at the acquisition of works, supplies or services for consideration by means of a public contract. It should be clarified that such acquisitions of works, supplies or services should be subject to this Directive whether they are implemented through purchase, leasing or other contractual form.
> The notion of acquisition should be understood broadly in the sense of obtaining the benefits of the works, supplies or services in question …
> (103) Tenders that appear abnormally low in relation to the works, supplies or services might be based on technically, economically or legally unsound assumptions or practices. Where the tenderer cannot provide a sufficient explanation, the contracting authority should be entitled to reject the tender. Rejection should be mandatory in cases where the contracting authority has established that the abnormally low price or costs proposed results from non-compliance with mandatory Union law or national law compatible with it in the fields of social, labour or environmental law or international labour law provisions.’

7. In the context of Title I of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Scope, definitions and general principles’, Article 1(1) and (2) provides:

> ‘1. This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4.
> 2. Procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a public contract of … services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the … services are intended for a public purpose.’

8. Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 defines ‘public contracts’ as ‘contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services’.

9. Article 18 of that directive sets out the ‘principles of procurement’. It states the following:

> ‘1. Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.

2. Member States shall take appropriate measures to ensure that in the performance of public contracts economic operators comply with applicable obligations in the fields of environmental, social and labour law established by Union law, national law, collective agreements or by the international environmental, social and labour law provisions listed in Annex X.'

10. Article 69 of Directive 2014/24 is dedicated to 'abnormally low tenders'. It is found in Title II, Chapter III, Section 3 of that directive, which is entitled 'Choice of participants and award of contracts'. Article 69 provides:

'1. Contracting authorities shall require economic operators to explain the price or costs proposed in the tender where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, supplies or services.

2. The explanations referred to in paragraph 1 may in particular relate to:

(a) the economics of the manufacturing process, of the services provided or of the construction method;

(b) the technical solutions chosen or any exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the supply of the products or services or for the execution of the work;

(c) the originality of the work, supplies or services proposed by the tenderer;

(d) compliance with obligations referred to in Article 18(2);

(e) compliance with obligations referred to in Article 71;

(f) the possibility of the tenderer obtaining State aid.

3. The contracting authority shall assess the information provided by consulting the tenderer. It may only reject the tender where the evidence supplied does not satisfactorily account for the low level of price or costs proposed, taking into account the elements referred to in paragraph 2.

Contracting authorities shall reject the tender, where they have established that the tender is abnormally low because it does not comply with applicable obligations referred to in Article 18(2).

III. The main proceedings, the questions for a preliminary ruling and the procedure before the Court

11. On 7 June 2018, the Ministry of the Interior (the contracting authority) initiated a procedure for the award of a public service contract for access to a legal information system for a period of 24 months. That contract consists of two lots. The Ministry of the Interior estimated the value of the contract at EUR 39 959.01.

12. As regards the first lot, relating to access to a legal information system, only two economic operators, established in Ljubljana (Slovenia) and specialising in the field of legal information, submitted tenders within the prescribed time limits: Tax-Fin-Lex d.o.o. ('the applicant') and LEXPERA d.o.o. ('the intervener').

13. The applicant proposed to provide the service for a sum of EUR 0.00.

14. By a decision of 11 January 2019, the Ministry of the Interior awarded the contract consisting of the first lot to the intervener and rejected the applicant's tender on the ground that it was contrary to the rules on public procurement.

15. The applicant lodged a request for a review of that decision. In the course of the procedure preceding the review, the Ministry of the Interior rejected that request on 5 February 2019. On 11 February 2019, the Ministry of the Interior referred the matter to the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal, Slovenia), the referring court in the present case, seeking a ruling on the legality of that decision.

16. The applicant maintains that a tender such as that at issue is admissible. It claims that, in the context of public procurement, the tenderer is entitled to determine freely the price proposed and, consequently, to offer a service free of charge. That does not mean, however, that the applicant would be deprived of consideration for performing the public contract in question. Indeed, as in its submission, it maintains that the conclusion of the contract would obtain an advantage for the applicant consisting in access to a new market and to new users.

17. The Ministry of the Interior contends, on the other hand, that the notion of 'public contract' referred to in Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 cannot cover a contract whereby the economic operator proposed to provide the service to the contracting authority free of charge. It maintains that the advantage which the economic operator derives from winning the contract, namely potential access to a new market and references, does not constitute consideration for the performance of a public contract. In its submission, such an advantage represents added value for all economic operators which cannot however be expressed as a monetary value and cannot therefore be invoiced to the contracting authority. Consequently, the Ministry of the Interior contends that a transaction in which the service is provided free of change cannot lead to the conclusion of a contract for pecuniary consideration.

18. In its request for a preliminary ruling, the referring court states that the Ministry of the Interior examined that tender in the light of the provisions relating to abnormally low tenders. Nonetheless, it rejected that tender not on the ground that it was abnormally low or contrary to the principles governing public procurement, but on the sole ground that it was for a sum of EUR 0.00.

19. The referring court expresses its doubts as to the interpretation of the notion of 'contract for pecuniary interest' referred to in Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24. It observes, first of all, that one of the essential elements of 'public contracts' in that provision is the pecuniary nature of the contract concluded between the contracting authority and the economic operator. It specifies, in that regard, that the notion of 'public contracts' is relevant not only before the conclusion of a contract, since the contracting authority is required to comply with the rules defined in the context of Directive 2014/24, but also after its conclusion, for the purpose of assessing whether the contract was in fact concluded in accordance with those rules.

20. The referring court then wonders whether and, if so, to what extent a contract whereby the economic operator undertakes to supply to the contracting authority, free of charge, the service referred to in the tender notice without any advantage other than gaining access to a new market and obtaining references may be characterised as a 'contract for pecuniary interest' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24. The referring court acknowledges that securing a public contract and obtaining references may in themselves represent an advantage for that operator. That advantage would not be capable of being quantified, from an economic point of view, at the time when the contract was awarded; nonetheless, it would be capable of constituting a future economic advantage linked with the performance of the contract.

21. However, the referring court also acknowledges that, in a situation in which the contracting authority does not pay the economic operator for the supply of the service, it is possible that the contract concluded is not a public contract, since it would be a contract concluded free of charge, taking, for example, the form of a gift. Last, the referring court wonders, in those circumstances, whether Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 may constitute the legal basis of a decision rejecting the tender submitted by the economic operator.

22. In those circumstances, the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal, Slovenia) decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is there a "contract for pecuniary interest" as part of a public contract within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24, where the contracting authority is not required to provide any consideration but, by performing the public contract, the economic operator obtains access to a new market and references?

(2) Is it possible or necessary to interpret Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 in such a way that it constitutes a basis for rejecting a bid with a price of EUR 0.00?'

23. The applicant, the Ministry of the Interior, the Austrian Government and the European Commission have lodged written observations.

IV. Analysis

24. The present Opinion is structured as follows. I shall begin by dealing with the admissibility of the present reference for a preliminary ruling (A). Next, I shall examine the scope of the notion of 'contract for pecuniary interest' in Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 and, in particular, the related notion of 'consideration' (B). Last, I shall address the question whether a tender for the amount of EUR 0.00 may always be characterised as an 'abnormally low tender' in order to be examined and, where appropriate, rejected under the provisions set out in Article 69 of that directive (C).

A. Admissibility

25. The admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling does not, in my view, raise any problem.

26. As regards, in the first place, the competence of the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal, Slovenia) to submit a request for a preliminary ruling, I recall that the Court held, in the judgment of 8 June 2017, Medisanus, (5) that that tribunal met the criteria for being regarded as a 'national court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU. (6)

27. As regards, in the second place, the amount of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, it is true that that contract is below the threshold of EUR 144 000 laid down in Article 4(b) of Directive 2014/24, applicable for public service contracts awarded by central government authorities.

28. However, the referring court notes that, when transposing the provisions of that directive into national law, the Slovenian legislature decided that the notion of 'public contract' in Article 2(1)(1) of the Zakon o javnem naročanju (Law on public procurement) (7) of 30 May 2015 applied directly and unconditionally to contracts whose value is below the threshold defined in Article 4 of Directive 2014/24, which in principle are excluded from its scope.

29. In accordance with the Court's settled case-law, known as the Dzodzi line of decisions, the interpretation of the provisions of an act of the Union in situations which do not fall within its scope is warranted in order to ensure that situations falling under national law and those governed by EU law are treated in the same way where those provisions have been made directly and unconditionally applicable to such situations by national law. (8)

30. In the present case, the information supplied by the referring court, which is not disputed by any of the parties which have lodged observations, confirms that the national legislature decided to extend the scope of the EU rules on public procurement to public contracts of low value specifically in order to ensure that situations falling under national law and those governed by EU law are subject to the same rules. Thus, the logic underlying the Dzodzi judgment appears to be fully applicable in the present case.

31. In those circumstances, the Court may answer the questions for a preliminary ruling referred to it.

B. A contract 'for pecuniary interest'?

32. The referring court requests the Court, in essence, to define the material scope of Directive 2014/24. The Court is called upon to determine whether and, if so, to what extent a transaction by which a tenderer undertakes to supply the service for an amount of EUR 0.00 is capable of giving rise to the conclusion of a contract 'for pecuniary interest' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of that directive and of thus being characterised as a 'public service contract'. In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, according to the Court's settled case-law, 'only a contract concluded for pecuniary interest may constitute a public contract falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18'. (9)

33. In order to answer the first question referred, it is necessary to determine whether the notion of ‘contract for pecuniary interest’ is capable of covering a transaction whereby a tenderer submits a tender of EUR 0.00, following a literal, systematic and teleological interpretation. It is also necessary to examine whether, in that regard, the Court’s case-law enables any light to be cast on the discussion by specifying the essential characteristics of such a contract.

1. ‘Contract for pecuniary interest’ for the purposes of the provisions of Directive 2014/24

34. The literal content of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 is not sufficient to provide a clear interpretation of the notion of ‘contract for pecuniary interest’. The wording of that provision already shows, rather, that there are multiple possible readings and meanings of ‘for pecuniary interest’.

35. On the one hand, certain language versions refer to the condition of onerousness. (10) The underlying reasoning is simply that something must be given in exchange. On the other hand, other language versions seem to be more restrictive: the ‘something’ that must be given in exchange by the contracting authority seems to assume a specifically pecuniary nature, (11) that is to say, it takes the form of money. Yet other language versions seem to occupy the middle ground. (12)

36. However, too much significance should perhaps not be attached here to the letter of Directive 2014/24, since certain language versions of that directive even use different terms to translate the notion of ‘contract for pecuniary interest’ depending on whether it appears in recitals 4 and 70 or indeed in Article 2(1)(5) of that directive.

37. Nor, unfortunately, are the intra-systemic arguments (with respect to Directive 2014/24) particularly helpful. In Article 1(2) of that directive, the EU legislature provided that ‘procurement … is the acquisition by means of a public contract of … services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the … services are intended for a public purpose’. (13)

38. That provision must be read in the light of recital 4 of Directive 2014/24, where the EU legislature stated that ‘the Union rules on public procurement are not intended to cover all forms of disbursement of public funds, but only those aimed at the acquisition of … services for consideration by means of a public contract’. (14) The legislature went on to state, moreover, that ‘such acquisitions of … services should be subject to [Directive 2014/24] whether they are implemented through purchase, leasing or other contractual forms’. It is essential to point out here that the notion of ‘acquisition’ should, according to the EU legislature, ‘be understood broadly in the sense of obtaining the benefit of the … services in question’.

39. While the principle objective of the law relating to public procurement should be to regulate the acquisition of goods or services by the public authorities, the scheme and purpose of Directive 2014/24 do not really make it possible to determine the characteristics of the condition of onerousness to which Article 2(1)(5) of that directive makes reference. The notion of ‘acquisition’ is sufficiently broad to be agnostic about the details of that acquisition: what matters is that the goods or services are ultimately obtained by the contracting authorities. However, the goods and services may be lawfully acquired in various ways.

40. Thus, a simple literal and systemic reading is not sufficient to enable us to comprehend the meaning of ‘contract for pecuniary interest’ and in particular the crucial notion of ‘consideration’ concealed behind the very concept of contract: what precisely is the nature of the consideration that must be supplied by the contracting authority in order for the public contract to be considered valid?

2. The interpretation in the case-law of the notion of ‘contract for pecuniary interest’

41. The Court has held that, in accordance with the usual legal meaning of the concept of ‘contract for pecuniary interest’ used in the definition of public contracts, those words designate a contract by which each of the parties undertakes to provide a service in exchange for another. (15) The existence of ‘consideration’ or ‘compensation’ to be supplied by the contracting authority, and therefore of a synallagmatic relationship (involving reciprocal obligations), constitute, for the Court, decisive elements for the purpose of assessing the existence of a contract for pecuniary interest. (16)

42. That case-law is consistent with the line taken by the Court in other areas of law, in particular in relation to transactions subject to value added tax (VAT). Thus, in the judgment of 18 January 2017, SAWP, (17) the Court observed that a supply of services is made for consideration, within the meaning of Directive 2006/112/EC, (18) only if there is a legal relationship between the provider of the service and the recipient pursuant to which there is a reciprocal performance, the remuneration received by the provider of the service constituting the value actually given in return for the service supplied to the recipient. (19) The Court held that 'that is the case if there is a direct link between the service supplied and the consideration received, the sums paid constituting actual consideration for an identifiable service supplied in the context of such a legal relationship'. (20)

43. Nonetheless, it must be recognised that there are two coexisting lines of case-law as regards the nature of the consideration required in order to satisfy the condition of onerousness. Those two lines reflect, to a certain degree, the divergences in the wording of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24. (21)

44. The first line favours a strict interpretation of the 'onerous' criterion of the contract, requiring payment of remuneration or a price in money by the contracting authority.

45. Thus, in the judgment of 13 July 2017, Malpensa Logistica Europa, (22) the Court rejected the characterisation as a 'service contract' within the meaning of Article 1(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 and the application of the rules relating thereto of a contract whereby the managing body of Milan Malpensa Airport (Italy) had not acquired the service provided by the supplier in return for remuneration. (23) In that judgment, the Court expressly referred to the approach defended by the Commission, according to which the onerous nature of the contractual relationship arising under a contract for services clearly meant that the contract must entail remuneration paid directly by the contracting authority in order to 'acquire' a service directly from a supplier.

46. The second line of case-law tends, conversely, to defend a broader interpretation of the condition of onerousness in the form of consideration, whether 'contrepartie' (24) or 'contre-prestation'. (25) This represents the majority view, also shared by the Commission in its Green Paper of 30 April 2004 on public-private partnerships and Community law on public contracts and concessions. (26)

47. According to that line of case-law, the notion of onerousness does not necessarily entail payment of a sum of money by the contracting authority. The Court thus considers that contracts in which the service is paid for by providing other forms of compensation, such as reimbursement of the fees incurred in providing the agreed service or exemption from charges, may be concluded for pecuniary interest and be characterised as 'public contracts'. That is also the case, even where the consideration paid is not sufficient to offset the costs borne by the tenderer. (27)

48. In that regard, two judgments are particularly illustrative.

49. Thus, in the judgment of 12 July 2001, Ordine degli Architetti and Others, (28) the Court held that the assessment of the elements making up the definition of 'public works contracts' within the meaning of Directive 93/37/EEC (29) must be carried out in such a way as to ensure that that measure was given full effect and, in particular, to promote genuine competition by means of the publication of contract notices. (30) It thus recognised the onerous nature of the contract and the characterisation as 'public works contract' in a situation in which the economic operator, the holder of a building permit, carries out the works in return for being relieved of the infrastructure contribution imposed on him by the national legislation. In that instance, the Court held that the requirement that the contract be of a pecuniary nature must be held to be satisfied since, in carrying out the works in question, the economic operator settled a debt of the same value which arose towards the municipality. (31)

50. In the judgment of 18 October 2018, IBA Molecular Italy, (32) the Court also held that 'a contract providing for the exchange of services is covered by the concept of public contract, even if the remuneration provided for is limited to the partial reimbursement of costs incurred in order to supply the services agreed'. (33) In that judgment, the Court made clear that a contract whereby an economic operator undertakes to manufacture a product and supply it to various authorities in exchange for specific-purpose funding granted for the achievement of that objective fell within the definition of 'contract for pecuniary interest' within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18, 'even though the costs of production and distribution of that product are not fully covered by that grant or by the transport costs which may be charged to those authorities'. (34)

51. It should be noted that the same approach was defended by Advocate General Campos Sánchez-Bordona in his Opinion in Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung. (35) That case raises the question, in particular, whether the making available of software agreed in writing between two contracting authorities has a pecuniary interest within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 where the entity receiving the software does not have to pay a price or reimbursement costs for the software, but is required, in principle, to make available to the other the future adaptations and developments of that software.

52. In his Opinion, the Advocate General considered that the condition of onerousness was satisfied. First, he observed that the consideration, namely the subsequent adaptations and development of the software, had an economic value. Second, he considered that that consideration was an enforceable undertaking, since it was essential to the supply of the public service for which those entities were responsible. (36)

3. The extensive notion of 'consideration' and its limits

53. What I understand to be the dominant view in the case-law (and one which I fully support) may be summarised as follows.

54. First, the nature of the consideration, inherent in the condition of onerousness, which is supplied by the contracting authority may take forms other than a price paid in money. There is thus not necessarily a need for a transfer of a sum of money. Other types of payment, including those of a non-monetary nature, are possible.

55. Second, the consideration must have a certain economic value, without being required to correspond precisely to the value of the goods or services supplied. Thus, the contracting authority and the tenderer may agree on the option of making payment in different forms, provided that such forms of payment have a clear economic value.

56. Third, the nature and the content of the consideration which the contracting authority must pay must be apparent from the contract as a direct and enforceable legal obligation arising under the contract. It is in that context that I understand the reference made by the Court, and also that made by Advocate General Mengozzi, to the synallagmatic nature of the public contract which is reflected in the creation of legally binding obligations for both parties to the contract. (37)

57. Thus, in order to determine whether the contract includes consideration (and, accordingly, whether the condition of onerousness laid down in Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 is satisfied), I am of the view that the focal point of the analysis is not the precise sum of money stated in the contract. The question is, rather, whether, on the basis of that contract, the two contracting parties are locked inside a relationship of reciprocal legal obligations which each party may enforce against the other and in the context of which the contracting authority provides at least clear and precise consideration of an economic nature.

58. Such an approach deliberately shifts the terms of the discussion from the precise nature of the requisite 'consideration' to the broader question of the definition of the precise content of the reciprocal obligations borne by each of the parties. Although it is possible that the notion of 'consideration' varies considerably from one country to another in Europe, (38) the broad consensus seems to be that the formation of the contract requires that the parties agree in a sufficiently precise manner on the terms of the contract, which assumes that the mutual rights and obligations of each of the parties are clear so that the contract can be performed. (39) From a certain aspect, that discussion goes back to Roman law in its original form and to the fundamental distinction, still in force in civil-law legal systems, between synallagmatic legal relationships (for example contracts) and unilateral legal relationships (for example donations and gifts).

59. A contract for pecuniary interest is therefore, above all, a synallagmatic contract which means that the parties undertake to provide to each other services which are precise and reciprocal. The nature of those services must be determined at the time when the contract is formed. The services must be enforceable on the basis of that contract. On the other hand, the consideration that can be required is more flexible. It need not necessarily consist in compensation of a monetary nature. What matters is that that consideration is clear, precise and enforceable on the basis of the contract which the parties have entered into.

4. Application to the present case

60. It should be noted, as a preliminary point, that, in the present case, unlike the cases referred to in the case-law cited earlier in this Opinion, there is no contract concluded between the contracting authority and the tenderer, since the case was brought before the national court at the stage at which the bid submitted by the tenderer was rejected. At that stage of the procedure, there is thus no contractual provision that might show the existence of consideration to be supplied by the contracting authority, in any form whatsoever.

61. The question for the Court is therefore whether, in a situation in which the tenderer's bid entails the absence of any direct remuneration for the service by the contracting authority, the advantage on which the tenderer may rely as a consequence of actually being awarded the contract may constitute 'consideration' capable of permitting the conclusion of a contract for pecuniary interest within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24.

62. In the light of the factual circumstances of the present case, as presented by the referring court, I am unable to see what such consideration might indeed consist of, even on the very broad definition of that notion as set out in the preceding section. There are three potential advantages which might be considered in the context of the present case: first, developing relevant experience; next, obtaining references for future contracts; and, last, establishing a reputation for future calls for tenders that might be launched by the same contracting authority for other lots.

63. First, obtaining relevant experience is certainly important for new entrants or small and medium-sized enterprises wishing to grow. However, it clearly does not constitute consideration which the contracting authority supplies in exchange for the services received. It is simply a legal fact that follows from the award of the contract.

64. Second, it is also undeniable that obtaining references may constitute an advantage. Those references may play a strategic role in the future award of public contracts. However, it must be stated that the giving of references is not sufficient to establish the synallagmatic nature of the contract envisaged. It does not constitute an obligation placed on the contracting authority, and cannot therefore constitute consideration enforceable against that authority. That advantage is a condition, the satisfaction of which is aleatory and uncertain, since the references on which the undertaking may rely in the future depend in reality on factual circumstances linked with the proper performance of the contract. There is thus no guarantee as to the references on which the tenderer may rely. There is merely speculation about the contract.

65. Third, the order for reference states that in the present case the contract consisted of two lots. (40) The call for tenders at issue here related only to the first lot. No further information was provided as to any connection between the first and the second lots. However, it is difficult to imagine that such a situation plays a role in the definition of the consideration in the sense of the legal obligation which the contracting authority would have to the tenderer with respect to the two lots. It is certainly not desirable either to accept or to promote a policy, whether explicit or implicit, whereby an undertaking would submit a tender significantly below the costs, including for the sum of EUR 0.00, in the context of one lot while hoping to recover those costs subsequently when a second lot in the contract was awarded.

66. In sum, none of the three scenarios corresponding to the potential 'advantages' likely to be put forward as the consideration received by a tenderer proposing to supply certain services free of charge falls within the notion of 'contract for pecuniary interest' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24. None of those hypotheses involve consideration enforcement of which could be legally demanded of the contracting authority in the context of the contract. The common denominator of those advantages is that they are all a bet on the future.

67. In conclusion, it might be added that the latter factual element makes it possible to clearly distinguish the present case from the even more flexible approach to consideration and 'onerousness' taken, for example, by Advocate General Campos Sánchez-Bordona in his Opinion in Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung. (41) Especially in a rather dynamic sector such as software development, it is possible to conceive of a number of somewhat atypical forms of consideration. Thus, the first software may be supplied free of charge, unlike future developments of that software; the contracting authority may make payment in kind by supplying its own data in exchange, so that the programmer can use those data in subsequent applications; the contracting authority may promise to provide feedback at regular intervals, thus enabling the developer to improve his product and increase its sales, etc. All of those situations might lead to the conclusion of contracts for pecuniary interest, since those obligations clearly emerge from the agreement entered into with the contracting authority and define a legally enforceable consideration, even though it is not always easy to put a price on each specific form of consideration.

68. In the present case, on the other hand, no distinct consideration incumbent on the contracting authority results from a clear and enforceable obligation arising from the contract whose conclusion is envisaged. The first 'advantage' is simply an automatic legal fact. The second is purely speculative and uncertain. As for the third, if it should even be envisaged, it would be highly problematic. Therefore, in the absence of consideration to be supplied by the contracting authority, the future contract cannot be characterised as a 'contract for pecuniary interest' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24.

C. Is a tender in the amount of EUR 0.00 an abnormally low tender?

69. The second question requires a determination of the legal basis on which a tender, such as that at issue, of an amount of EUR 0.00, may be rejected.

70. Although the referring court focuses its question on the provisions set out in Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24, I nonetheless recall that, according to the information which the referring court supplies, the Ministry of the Interior examined the tender at issue by reference to the provisions dedicated to 'abnormally low tenders' in Article 69 of that directive. However, the Ministry of the Interior rejected the applicant's tender not because it was abnormally low or because it did not satisfy the requirements and obligations set out in the contract notice, but because the tender was for an amount of EUR 0.00.

71. Thus, the second question submitted by the referring court is of a procedural nature: if a contracting authority receives a tender proposing EUR 0.00 in the box marked 'price', (i) must the contracting authority automatically reject the tender directly on the basis of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 since no tender of that type can ever lead to the conclusion of a valid public contract; or (ii) must such a tender also be examined in accordance with the procedure relating to abnormally low tenders provided for in Article 69 of Directive 2014/24?

72. In view of the answer which I propose be given to the referring court's first question (the consideration that can be demanded in the context of a public contract does not necessarily entail a direct transfer of money, but may be consideration in kind provided that it has a certain economic value), the logical answer to the second question is that suggested by (ii): a tender offering a nominal prince of EUR 0.00 must also be treated as an abnormally low tender.

73. In the first place, the procedure laid down in Article 69 of Directive 2014/24 concerns the stages of the tender and negotiation. In that article, the EU legislature requires that the contracting authority give the tenderer the opportunity to explain the amount of its tender and to show that the tender is genuine. Next, the contracting authority is required to take account not only of the explanations given, in particular those relating to the economics of the service, the technical solutions chosen or any exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the supply of the service agreed, (42) but also all the relevant matters concerning the service in question and the obligations associated with its supply. (43)

74. Thus, unless the nature of the contract or the tender itself indicates unambiguously that there can be no other conceivable consideration and that there is thus no point in allowing the tenderer to provide explanations about his tender, it cannot be ruled out that the future contract may ultimately be a contract 'for pecuniary interest' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24.

75. All of this is reminiscent of the paradox of Schrödinger's cat. As long as the box is not opened and its contents examined, it cannot be ruled out that the cat inside the box is alive. Likewise, as long as the contracting authority does not give the tenderer, on the basis of Article 69 of Directive 2014/24, the opportunity to explain the logic and the structure of the costs underpinning its tender, it cannot be ruled out that the tender in question may lead to the conclusion of a public contract, without prejudice, ultimately, to the tender being rejected by the contracting authority. However, the tender cannot be rejected purely because a nominal tender of EUR 0.00 does not satisfy the condition of onerousness set out in Article 2(1)(5) of that directive.

76. In the second place, it must be stated that Directive 2014/24 does not define the concept of 'abnormally low tender' or specify the numerical amount which that concept covers. (44) The words used by the EU legislature are general and the Court also employs the notion of the 'low price proposed in [the] tender'. (45)

77. It is apparent from the Court's case-law, however, that the Court is opposed to the establishment of a mathematical criterion for exclusion. It tends to favour effective competition in accordance with the rules on public procurement. In the judgment of 22 June 1989, Costanzo, (46) the Court held that a mathematical criterion for exclusion deprived tenderers who had submitted exceptionally low tenders of the opportunity of demonstrating that those tenders were genuine and was thus contrary to the objective of Directive 71/305/EEC, (47) namely to promote the development of effective competition in the field of public procurement.

78. In the light of those factors, it thus seems that there is nothing to preclude the notion of 'abnormally low tender' from including a tender in the amount of EUR 0.00. Admittedly, an amount of 'EUR 0.00' resembles a sort of psychological barrier. Nonetheless, in economic terms there is no reason why it should be distinguished from a tender of EUR 10 or EUR 100, provided that those tenders are all below the costs of the contract.

79. In the third and last place, there can be no doubt that a number of additional arguments might be made in favour of a refusal to examine tenders of EUR 0.00. To allow such tenders might run counter to the objective of transparency in connection with public funds and the fight against corruption: the actual costs and subsequent payments would simply be shifted and concealed in other parallel transactions. Likewise, although such a step would at first sight appear beneficial for public budgets, a public contract concluded for a nominal price of EUR 0.00 could ultimately prove more expensive and difficult to enforce for the contracting authority and thus lead to increased costs rather than simply paying the appropriate price at the outset. In addition, a practice of predatory pricing sponsored by the contracting authorities could give rise to concerns from the perspective of competition law.

80. In any event, regardless of the legitimacy of those concerns, the same arguments might be used in the opposite sense, that is to say, in favour of examining such tenders. (48) Above all, however, all of those arguments could be used directly against any examination of abnormally low tenders. The same considerations as those outlined in the preceding point of this Opinion would apply without distinction to every abnormally low tender: that would be the case, for example, for a contract evaluated at EUR 150 000, of a tender of EUR 1 000, of EUR 101 or of a symbolic EUR 1. Even though all of those tenders would be far below the real costs, the contracting authority could not automatically reject them, but would have to examine them in accordance with the procedure specifically laid down for that purpose in Article 69 of Directive 2014/24.

81. If such a legislative choice was made by the EU legislature in the context of the law relating to public procurement after it had weighed up all the advantages and disadvantages inherent in abnormally low tenders, I find no logical argument that would allow tenders of EUR 0.00 to be excluded from such an arrangement. Such tenders should therefore be treated in the same way. Thus, if the Court should accept my proposal with regard to the first question (a 'contract for pecuniary interest' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 does not necessarily require payment of a sum of money, but may entail consideration in kind to be supplied by the contracting authority), then the amount of the nominal sum stated on the tender for the contract is not decisive.

82. Consequently, I consider that it is indeed through the prism of the conditions set out in Article 69 of Directive 2014/24 that the contracting authority must examine a tender of an amount of EUR 0.00 in order, where appropriate, to reject that tender on the ground, in particular, that it cannot lead to the conclusion of a contract for pecuniary interest within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of that directive, owing to the fact that no consideration of an economic nature would be supplied by the contracting authority in the context of a tendering procedure.

V. Conclusion

83. I propose that the Court should answer the questions submitted for a preliminary ruling by the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal, Slovenia) as follows:

(1) The notion of 'contract for pecuniary interest' referred to in Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2365 of 18 December 2017, must be interpreted as not permitting a transaction whereby the tenderer proposes to the contracting authority to supply the service for an amount of EUR 0.00 cannot be characterised as a 'public service contract' in so far as the parties to the contract do not agree on consideration of economic value to be supplied by the contracting authority.

(2) A tender at a price of EUR 0.00 must be examined in accordance with the provisions set out in Article 69 of Directive 2014/24, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2017/2365, on abnormally low tenders, where appropriate after having obtained additional information from the tenderer on the precise nature of the consideration of economic value to be supplied by the contracting authority. Such a tender must be rejected where it cannot lead, in the specific context of a call for tenders, to the conclusion of a 'contract for pecuniary interest' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of that directive.

48 For example, as regards competition, it might be argued that those rules are in reality favourable for competition: it is likely that small and medium-sized enterprises and start-ups have lower fixed costs and may include zero margins for a specific contract. In such circumstances, bids of EUR 0 may be competitive by allowing those small undertakings to enter the market.

Legal background

EU law

Directive 2004/18

3 Article 1 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Definitions’, provides:

‘1. For the purposes of this Directive, the definitions set out in paragraphs 2 to 15 shall apply.

2. (a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(d) “Public service contracts” are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.

…’

Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007

4 Article 2 of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2007 on public passenger transport services by rail and by road and repealing Council Regulations (EEC) Nos 1191/69 and 1107/70 (OJ 2007 L 315, p. 1), entitled ‘Definitions’, provides:

‘For the purposes of this Regulation:

(b) “competent authority” means any public authority or group of public authorities of a Member State or Member States which has the power to intervene in public passenger transport in a given geographical area or any body vested with such authority;

(c) “competent local authority” means any competent authority whose geographical area of competence is not national;

(j) “internal operator” means a legally distinct entity over which a competent local authority or, in the case of a group of authorities, at least one competent local authority, exercises control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments;

…’

5 Article 5 of that regulation, entitled ‘Award of public service contracts’, provides:

‘1. Public service contracts shall be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down in this Regulation. However, service contracts or public service contracts as defined in Directives 2004/17/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004

L 134, p. 1)] or [2004/18] for public passenger transport services by bus or tram shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures provided for under those Directives where such contracts do not take the form of service concessions contracts as defined in those Directives. Where contracts are to be awarded in accordance with Directives [2004/17] or [2004/18], the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 6 of this Article shall not apply.

2. Unless prohibited by national law, any competent local authority, whether or not it is an individual authority or a group of authorities providing integrated public passenger transport services, may decide to provide public passenger transport services itself or to award public service contracts directly to a legally distinct entity over which the competent local authority, or in the case of a group of authorities at least one competent local authority, exercises control similar to that exercised over its own departments. Where a competent local authority takes such a decision, the following shall apply:

(b) the condition for applying this paragraph is that the internal operator and any entity over which this operator exerts even a minimal influence perform their public passenger transport activity within the territory of the competent local authority, notwithstanding any outgoing lines or other ancillary elements of that activity which enter the territory of neighbouring competent local authorities, and do not take part in competitive tenders concerning the provision of public passenger transport services organised outside the territory of the competent local authority;

Finnish law

Law on public procurement

6 Article 10 of the Laki julkisista hankinnoista (348/2007) (Law on public procurement (348/2007)) of 30 March 2007, which transposes Directive 2004/18, provides that the Law does not apply to contracts which the contracting entity awards to an entity that is formally distinct from it but independent in its decision-making, where it exercises over that entity, alone or with other contracting entities, a control similar to that exercised over its own departments and where that distinct entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the contracting entities which control it.

Law on municipalities of 1995

7 Under Article 76(1) of the Kuntalaki (365/1995) (Law on municipalities (365/1995)) of 17 March 1995 (‘Law on municipalities of 1995’), municipalities may, pursuant to an agreement, carry out their tasks jointly. Article 76(2) of that law allows municipalities to agree that one municipality is to be entrusted with a task on behalf of one or more other municipalities.

8 Under Article 77(1) of that law, where, pursuant to an agreement, a municipality is charged with a task on behalf of one or more municipalities, it may be agreed that the other municipalities concerned appoint some of the members of the institution of the first municipality that is responsible for that task.

Law on municipalities of 2015

9 The Law on municipalities of 1995 was repealed by the Kuntalaki (410/2015) (Law on municipalities (410/2015)) of 10 April 2015 (‘Law on municipalities of 2015’), which entered into force on 1 May 2015.

10 Under Article 8 of that law, a municipality may itself carry out the tasks entrusted to it by law or agree to entrust responsibility for carrying them out to another municipality or a group of municipalities. The municipality or group of municipalities responsible for arranging for performance of those tasks must, inter alia, ensure equal access to the services concerned, determine the need for, quality and quantity of the services, specify how those services are to be provided, oversee their provision and the exercise of the power vested in the authority concerned. Furthermore, a municipality remains responsible for financing its tasks, even where the responsibility for performing them has been transferred to another municipality or a group of municipalities.

11 Under Article 49 of the Law on municipalities of 2015, municipalities and groups of municipalities may, pursuant to an agreement, carry out their tasks jointly. Such cooperation may take the form, among others, of a joint institution. Article 50(2) of that law provides, inter alia, that the Law on public procurement does not apply to cooperation between municipalities where the cooperation relates to an award by a municipality or group of municipalities to a linked entity, within the meaning of Article 10 of that law, or where the Law on public procurement does not apply to the cooperation for some other reason.

12 Article 50(1) of the Law on municipalities of 2015 provides that, where a municipality agrees to transfer responsibility for arranging a task for which that municipality is responsible to another municipality or a group of municipalities, the Law on public procurement does not apply to that transfer.

13 Under Article 51(1) of the Law on municipalities of 2015, a municipality, called the ‘responsible municipality’, may perform a task on behalf of one or more municipalities in such a manner that the municipalities have a joint institution responsible for performing that task. The municipalities may agree that the other municipalities are to appoint some of the members of the joint institution.

14 Article 52(1) of that law provides that the agreement establishing a joint institution, referred to in paragraph 11 of the present judgment, must specify that institution’s tasks and, where appropriate, provide for the transfer of organisational responsibility referred to in Article 8 of that law, the composition of that institution and the right of the other municipalities to appoint members, the principles on which costs are to be calculated and allocated, and the duration and termination of the agreement.

Law on public transport

15 Under Article 12(3) of the Joukkoliikennelaki (869/2009) (Law on public transport (869/2009)) of 13 November 2009, as amended by the Laki joukkoliikennelain muuttamisesta (1219/2011) (Law on the amendment of the Law on public transport (1219/2011)) of 9 December 2011 (‘Law on public transport’), the regional municipal authority may authorise the operation of scheduled services only in the territory over which it has authority.

16 Under Article 4 of the Law on public transport, the competent authorities for road transport for the purposes of Regulation No 1370/2007 are required to determine the level of service applicable to public transport in the area over which they have authority. That provision requires those authorities to cooperate, to the extent necessary, between themselves and with municipalities and groups of provinces when determining the level of service.

17 Under Article 5(2) of that law, the competent authorities for transport operated in accordance with Regulation No 1370/2007 are responsible for specifying services. However, responsibility for planning routes and timetables may lie with the transport operators or the authorities, or else may be shared between them.

18 Under Article 6 of the Law on public transport, the competent authorities are required to plan public transport services, above all, as regional or territorial systems, in order to achieve a functional public transport network. When planning public transport, those authorities are to cooperate with each other and with the municipalities.

19 Under Article 14(4) of that law, those authorities are to adopt decisions on the organisation of public transport services in the area over which they have authority or a part thereof in accordance with Regulation No 1370/2007.

Law on services and support for persons with disabilities

20 Article 3 of the Laki vammaisuuden perusteella järjestettävistä palveluista ja tukitoimista (380/1987) (Law on services and support for persons with disabilities (380/1987)) of 3 April 1987 confers responsibility on the municipalities to arrange transport services for persons with disabilities.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

21 By a cooperation agreement which entered into force on 1 July 2012 (‘public transport cooperation agreement’), the City of Pori, the Towns of Harjavalta, Kokemäki and Ulvila and the Municipality of Nakkila (Finland) decided to entrust certain transport-related tasks to the City of Pori, as the competent local authority. Those tasks are managed by the municipalities which are parties to that agreement in accordance with the arrangements laid down in Articles 76 and 77 of the Law on municipalities of 1995, and the City of Pori has set up a joint institution to that end.

22 The public transport committee for the Pori Region (‘public transport committee’), made up of five members appointed by the City of Pori and a member appointed by each of the other municipalities which are parties to the public transport cooperation agreement, acts as the competent authority for local transport in the City of Pori and exclusively for transport operated in the area formed by the parties to that agreement. The operation of the public transport committee is governed by regulations approved by the City of Pori municipal assembly and management rules approved by that committee.

23 Transport-related costs are allocated in compliance with Regulation No 1370/2007 and divided among the municipalities which are parties to that agreement in accordance with specific arrangements determined by the public transport committee. When the budget and the financial plan are drawn up, the municipalities which are parties to the public transport cooperation agreement must be given the opportunity to put forward proposals concerning the objectives and financing of the cooperation.

24 The regulations of the public transport committee provide that, as a joint competent regional authority for transport for the area consisting of the territories of the parties to that agreement, it acts under the authority of the municipal assembly and municipal executive council of the City of Pori. The committee is responsible for the tasks which Regulation No 1370/2007 and the Law on public transport confer on the competent authority in the field of public transport, in the entire area covered by the cooperation agreement. On that basis, it specifies, inter alia, detailed arrangements for the organisation and award of public transport, as referred to in that regulation, which is operated solely in the area over which it has authority. It also approves contracts to be concluded and sets fares and charges.

25 At the same time, the City of Pori, the Town of Ulvila and the Municipality of Merikarvia (Finland) agreed, by a cooperation agreement on the organisation and provision of social and healthcare services concluded on 18 December 2012 (‘healthcare services cooperation agreement’), pursuant to Articles 76 and 77 of the Laki kunta- ja palvelurakenneuudistuksesta (169/2007) (Law on the restructuring of municipalities and services (169/2007)) of 9 February 2007, to transfer responsibility for organising social and healthcare services for their entire territory to the City of Pori.

26 That agreement is based on the ‘responsible municipality’ model provided for under the Law on municipalities of 1995 and the Law on municipalities of 2015. In that model, a task entrusted to various municipalities is performed by one among them, called the ‘responsible municipality’, on their behalf under an agreement which those municipalities have entered into.

27 The healthcare services cooperation agreement designates the City of Pori as the ‘responsible city [or municipality]’ or the ‘host city’, while the Town of Ulvila and the Municipality of Merikarvia are called the ‘contracting municipalities’.

28 That agreement provides that the system of social and healthcare services is to form a coherent whole, developed jointly by the responsible municipality and the contracting authorities under that agreement. The responsible municipality is to assess and determine the needs of residents for healthcare and social services, decide on the scope and level of quality of those services offered to residents, ensure that the residents have access to the necessary services and also decide how those services are to be delivered. It is also responsible for the availability, accessibility and quality of social and healthcare services and for overseeing and monitoring them.

29 In practice, responsibility for organising social and healthcare services in the area covered by the cooperation lies with the Committee for the Guarantee of Fundamental Social Rights of the City of Pori, which is a joint committee consisting of 18 members, 3 of whom are appointed by the Town of Ulvila, 2 by the Municipality of Merikarvia and the 13 others by the City of Pori. In addition, the healthcare services cooperation agreement provides that the municipal assembly of the City of Pori is to approve the Committee's regulations and determine its field of activity and tasks. That committee is fully responsible for social and healthcare services, the system of services and the necessary budget. The Committee approves contracts to be concluded within its field of activity and sets charges for the services and other benefits concerned in line with general criteria specified by the municipal assembly of the City of Pori. In addition, each year, the City of Pori's Committee for the Guarantee of Fundamental Social Rights draws up a service plan that specifically determines the content of services, the draft plan having previously been submitted to the contracting municipalities under the healthcare services cooperation agreement for their opinion. Finally, that agreement provides that the financial management of healthcare and social services is to be based on a jointly established budget, financial plan and plan for those services, and also on the monitoring of expenditure and use of those services. Costs are allocated according to use of social and healthcare services, so that each municipality pays for the actual cost of the services used by its own population and the residents for whom it is responsible.

30 By decision of 4 May 2015, the Committee for the Guarantee of Fundamental Social Rights of the City of Pori decided that, in the entire area covered by the healthcare services cooperation agreement, persons with disabilities would be transported to their work and day activity facilities by low-floor buses operated by the City of Porin as its own service through Porin Linjat, a limited company which the City owned entirely. Consequently, the City of Pori did not organise a call for competitive tenders for the contract to transport persons with disabilities but awarded it directly to Porin Linjat under the rules governing in-house contracts, known in Finnish law as 'awards to linked entities'.

31 However, the City of Pori states it had previously entered into two other contracts with Porin Linjat under the public transport cooperation agreement: first, the contract concluded on 5 September 2013 for transport services from 1 January 2013 to 31 May 2016, which governed the management of public transport in the City of Pori and the award of services to operators and applied to transport routes linking the City of Pori, the Municipality of Nakkiki and the Towns of Harjavalta and Kokemäki and, second, the contract concluded on 11 June 2014, which covered transport between the City of Pori and the Town of Ulvila from 1 July 2014 to 31 May 2016.

32 Lyttylän Liikenne Oy challenged the decision of the Committee for the Guarantee of Fundamental Social Rights of the City of Pori of 4 May 2015 before the Markkinaoikeus (Market Court, Finland), which annulled it on the grounds, first, that Porin Linjat could not be classified as a 'linked entity' or 'internal operator' of the City of Pori within the meaning of Article 10 of Law (348/2007) and, second, that the Law did not specify any other reasons to exclude the contract from the obligation to call for competitive tendering. That court considers that, unlike the City of Pori, which has five representatives on the public transport committee, the other municipalities which are parties to the healthcare services cooperation agreement have only one representative on that committee and so are not able to exercise control over Porin Linjat. As a result, the profit made by that company from operating public transport in those municipalities cannot be taken into account when assessing whether that company performs the essential part of its activities for the benefit of the contracting authority which controls it, in this case the City of Pori. Although the transport is partly operated pursuant to instruments adopted by the City of Pori, Porin Linjat's turnover from operating that city's transport is not enough to establish a relationship between the City of Pori and a linked entity since Porin Linjat does not perform the essential part of its activities for the benefit of its sole shareholder.

33 The City of Pori, supported by Porin Linjat, appealed to the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court, Finland), claiming that Porin Linjat is an entity linked to it. Porin Linjat is a company owned and controlled by the City of Pori and, since 2009, has not taken part, as a tenderer, in calls for tenders for transport services. In addition, it does not compete on the market. Under the public transport cooperation agreement, the Towns of Harjavalta, Kokemäki and Ulvila and the Municipality of Nakkila entrusted the City of Pori with responsibility for managing, as the responsible municipality, the operation of the public transport services of the municipalities participating in the cooperation. Consequently, the turnover generated by Porin Linjat's operation of that transport in the territory of those municipalities must be attributed to the City of Pori. More than 90% of Porin Linjat's turnover is thus generated by operating the transport of the City of Pori.

34 The referring court is uncertain whether the healthcare services cooperation agreement may, by its nature, be excluded from the scope of Directive 2004/18 because it gives tangible form to a transfer of powers or cooperation between public-sector entities, or for another reason.

35 In that regard, the referring court points out that cooperation between the municipalities in the Pori Region is based, as regards the provision of both social and healthcare services and transport services, on the 'responsible municipality' model. That court is unsure whether the contracts awarded by the responsible municipality are exempt from the obligation to call for competitive tendering where that municipality or its linked entity procure services on behalf of the municipalities in the area covered by the cooperation which are intended for the inhabitants of those municipalities. The referring court considers that the 'responsible municipality' model may be understood as a transfer of powers, as interpreted in the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985). However, that judgment did not expressly address the question of whether the obligation to call for competitive tendering laid down in EU public procurement legislation must apply to decisions taken after a transfer of powers.

36 The referring court states that the 'responsible municipality' model could also possibly be classified as 'cooperation between public-sector entities'. In that case, however, it must be clarified whether the responsible municipality may, when organising services for the other contracting entities involved in the cooperation, use an entity linked to it without a call for competitive tendering.

37 The question also arises as to, first, whether, in calculating the share of Porin Linjat's turnover derived from operating the public transport of the City of Pori, account should be taken of the turnover generated by the regional transport services which the City of Pori, as the competent authority, organises on behalf of the Towns of Harjavalta, Kokemäki and Ulvila and the Municipality of Nakkila under the public transport cooperation agreement and, second, whether the share of Porin Linjat's turnover generated by operating the public transport of the City of Pori is such that it may be classified as an entity over which that city has control.

38 In so far as, first, the City of Pori awards contracts for regional transport services, on its own behalf but also on behalf of the other municipalities which are parties to the public transport cooperation agreement, and, second, those municipalities bear part of the costs of the services awarded, the question arises as to whether the City of Pori can be regarded as a contracting authority for all regional transport and whether, therefore, all of those contracts must be taken into account in calculating Porin Linjat's turnover from operating that city's public transport.

39 Against that background, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Must Article 1(2)(a) of Directive [2004/18] be interpreted as meaning that the model of the "responsible municipality" in accordance with the cooperation agreement between municipalities in question [in the main proceedings] meets the conditions for a transfer of responsibilities which is not covered by the scope of the Directive (judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis,C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985) or a horizontal cooperation which is not covered by an obligation to issue a call for tenders (judgment of 13 June 2013, Piepenbrock, C-386/11, EU:C:2013:385 and the case-law cited), or does this constitute another case altogether?

(2) If the model of the "responsible municipality" in accordance with the cooperation agreement meets the conditions for a transfer of responsibilities: in the event that contracts are awarded after responsibilities have been transferred, is the public entity to which the responsibilities have been transferred the contracting authority and is this public entity entitled, on the basis of the responsibilities transferred to it by the other municipalities, to award contracts for services to one of its related entities without a call for tenders in circumstances where the award of these contracts for services would – without the principle of the "responsible municipality" – have been the responsibility of the municipalities which transferred the responsibility?

(3) If, on the other hand, the model of the "responsible municipality" in accordance with the cooperation agreement fulfils the conditions of a horizontal cooperation: can the municipalities taking part in the cooperation award contracts for services without issuing calls for tenders to a municipality taking part in the cooperation, which awarded these service contracts to one of its related entities without a call for competitive tenders?

(4) As part of the assessment whether a company carries out the essential part of its activities for the municipality by which it is controlled, does the calculation of the turnover related to the municipality take into account the turnover of a company owned by the municipality which operates transport services within the meaning of [Regulation No 1370/2007] to the extent that the company derives this turnover from transport services organised by the municipality as the competent authority within the meaning of that regulation?'

Consideration of the questions referred

Preliminary observations

40 First, although, unlike the healthcare services cooperation agreement, the legal nature of the public transport cooperation agreement is not expressly indicated by the referring court, it is apparent from the order for reference that, under the latter agreement, the Towns of Harjavalta, Kokemäki and Ulvila and the Municipality of Nakkila transferred to the City of Pori, as the responsible municipality, responsibility for managing the operation of the public transport of the municipalities participating in the cooperation.

41 It therefore appears to follow from the order for reference that, like the healthcare services cooperation agreement, the public transport cooperation agreement is based on the 'responsible municipality' model.

42 The Court will therefore examine the questions referred by the national court based on that premiss.

43 Second, it appears that the public transport cooperation agreement and healthcare services cooperation agreement were not concluded by the same parties. The public transport cooperation agreement involves the City of Pori, the Towns of Harjavalta, Kokemäki and Ulvila and the Municipality of Nakkila. The healthcare services cooperation agreement was concluded by the City of Pori, the Town of Ulvila and the Municipality of Merikarvia.

44 Third, it should be noted that, in its capacity as the 'responsible municipality', the City of Pori must provide the services covered by those two agreements. For that purpose, it relies on a linked entity, that is to say an internal operator, which it owns wholly and controls, namely Porin Linjat.

The first question

45 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that an agreement under which the municipalities which are parties to that agreement entrust to one among them responsibility for organising services for their benefit is excluded from the scope of Directive 2004/18 on the ground that it constitutes a transfer of powers, for the purposes of Article 4(2) TEU as interpreted in the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985), or cooperation between contracting authorities subject to an obligation to call for competitive tendering as referred to in the judgment of 13 June 2013, Piepenbrock (C-386/11, EU:C:2013:385).

46 As the Court noted in the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985, paragraphs 40 and 41), the division of competences within a Member State benefits from the protection conferred by Article 4(2) TEU, according to which the Union must respect national identities, inherent in their fundamental structures, political and constitutional, including local and regional self-government. Moreover, as that division of competences is not fixed, the protection conferred by that provision also concerns internal reorganisations of powers within a Member State. Such reorganisations, which, in particular, may take the form of voluntary transfers of competences between public authorities, have the consequence that a previously competent authority relinquishes the obligation or power to perform a given public task, whereas another authority is henceforth entrusted with that obligation or power.

47 Paragraphs 42 to 44 of the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985), also make clear that such a transfer of powers does not fulfil all the conditions required to come within the definition of ‘public contract’. Only a contract concluded for pecuniary interest may constitute a public contract coming within the scope of Directive 2004/18. The pecuniary nature of the contract means that the contracting authority concluding a public contract receives a service which must be of direct economic benefit to that contracting authority. The synallagmatic nature of the contract is thus an essential element of a public contract. The very fact that a public authority is released from a competence with which it was previously entrusted by that self-same fact eliminates any economic interest in the accomplishment of the tasks associated with that competence.

48 That said, in order to be regarded as an internal organisation measure covered by Article 4(2) TEU, a transfer of powers between public authorities requires that the public authority on which competence has been conferred has the power to organise the performance of the tasks coming within that competence and to draw up the regulatory framework relating to those tasks and, lastly, that it has the financial autonomy allowing it to ensure the financing of those tasks. The authority initially competent cannot, therefore, retain primary responsibility over those tasks nor retain financial control over them or give prior approval for decisions envisaged by the entity on which it has conferred powers. A transfer of competence hence implies that the newly competent public authority acts autonomously and under its own responsibility in the performance of its tasks (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis, C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985, paragraphs 49 and 51).

49 However, the autonomy of action of the public authority to which a competence is conferred does not mean that the newly competent entity must be shielded from any influence whatsoever by another public entity. An entity that transfers competence may retain a certain degree of influence over the tasks associated with the public service thus transferred. That influence, which may be brought to bear through a body, such as the general meeting, made up of representatives of the previously competent local and regional authorities, does, however, in principle, preclude any involvement in the actual performance of the tasks coming within the transferred competence (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis, C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985, paragraph 52).

50 In this case, first, the order for reference makes plain that the healthcare services cooperation agreement transfers responsibility for organising the social and healthcare services of the municipalities which are parties to that agreement from those municipalities to the City of Pori. That voluntary transfer of powers is based on Law (169/2007).

51 Second, the management of the area covered by the cooperation thus established is organised in accordance with the rules laid down in Articles 76 and 77 of the Law on municipalities of 1995. It follows that the healthcare services cooperation agreement thus confers on the responsible municipality responsibility for assessing and determining the needs of the residents of the municipalities concerned for social and healthcare services, deciding the scope and quality of those services offered to those residents and ensuring that they have access to the necessary services. The responsible municipality is also to determine how those services are to be delivered and decide on their availability, accessibility and quality and their oversight and monitoring.

52 Third, responsibility for organising social and healthcare services in the area covered by the cooperation is entrusted, in practice, to a joint institution, in this case the Committee for the Guarantee of Fundamental Social Rights of the City of Pori, the composition and tasks of which are described in paragraph 29 of this judgment.

53 Fourth, the healthcare services cooperation agreement provides that the municipal assembly of the City of Pori is to approve the Committee’s regulations and determine its field of activity and tasks.

54 Fifth, that cooperation agreement provides that the financial management of healthcare and social services is to be based on a budget, financial plan and plan for those services drawn up jointly by the municipalities which are parties to that agreement, and also on the monitoring of expenditure and use of those services.

55 Sixth, the costs of social and healthcare services are allocated according to the use thereof, so that each municipality pays for the actual cost of the services used by its own population and the residents for whom it is responsible.

56 Thus, subject to the verifications which it will be for the referring court to carry out, the conditions for a transfer of powers, for the purposes of Article 4(2) TEU, appear to be met, with the result that the healthcare services cooperation agreement does not appear to constitute a ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18. Accordingly, that cooperation agreement should be excluded from the scope of Directive 2004/18.

57 In those circumstances, it does not appear necessary to examine whether the healthcare services cooperation agreement may also constitute cooperation between contracting authorities which is excluded from the obligation to call for competitive tendering in accordance with the judgments of 9 June 2009, Commission v Germany (C-480/06, EU:C:2009:357), and of 13 June 2013, Piepenbrock (C-386/11, EU:C:2013:385).

58 The answer to the first question is therefore that Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that an agreement under which the municipalities which are parties to that agreement entrust to one among them responsibility for organising services for the benefit of those municipalities is excluded from the scope of Directive 2004/18 on the ground that it constitutes a transfer of powers, for the purposes of Article 4(2) TEU as interpreted in the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985).

The second and fourth questions

59 By its second and fourth questions, which the Court will consider together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a cooperation agreement under which the parties to that agreement transfer to one among them responsibility for organising services for their benefit allows that municipality, in awards made after that transfer, to be regarded as a contracting authority and authorises it to entrust to an in-house entity, without a prior call for competitive tendering, services meeting not only its own needs but also those of the other municipalities which are parties to that agreement whereas, without that transfer of powers, those municipalities would have had to fulfil their own needs themselves.

60 The answer to the first question makes clear that, subject to verification by the referring court, an arrangement such as the ‘responsible municipality’ model involves a transfer of powers for the purposes of Article 4(2) TEU as interpreted in the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985).

61 By its very nature, such a transfer of powers implies that the other municipalities which are parties to the cooperation agreement relinquish those powers to the responsible municipality. As noted in paragraph 26 of this judgment, in the ‘responsible municipality’ model, such a municipality assumes, on behalf of the other municipalities, a task which each municipality hitherto performed itself.

62 Thus, as a result of that transfer, the responsible municipality is, as it were, assigned the rights and duties of its contractual partners as regards the delivery of services which are the subject matter of a cooperation agreement based on the ‘responsible municipality’ model.

63 It follows that, in this case, it is for the beneficiary of the transfer of powers, in other words the responsible municipality, to meet the needs of the other municipalities which are parties to the healthcare services cooperation agreement and therefore to provide the social and healthcare services at issue in the main proceedings throughout the territory covered by that agreement, although each municipality remains liable for the actual cost of the services used by its own population and the residents for which it is responsible.

64 Consequently, if a transfer of powers, for the purposes of Article 4(2) TEU as interpreted in the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985), is not to be deprived of its practical effect, the authority to which the task has been transferred must necessarily be regarded, as regards the award of a service, as the contracting authority for that task, in respect of all the territory of the municipalities which are parties to the agreement that transfers powers.

65 It is necessary, however, to ascertain whether that contracting authority may use an in-house entity to meet not only its own needs but also those of the municipalities which have transferred a power to it.

66 In an in-house award, the contracting authority is deemed to use its own resources. Even if the contractor is legally distinct from the contracting authority, it is almost part of the contracting authority's internal departments, where two conditions are satisfied: first, the contracting authority must exercise over the contractor a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments; secondly, the entity must carry out the essential part of its activities for the benefit of the contracting authority or authorities which control it (see, to that effect, judgments of 18 November 1999, Teckal, C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 50, and of 11 May 2006, Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei, C-340/04, EU:C:2006:308, paragraph 33).

67 Under the Court's settled case-law, the first condition, relating to control by the public authority is deemed to be satisfied where the contracting authority holds, alone or together with other public authorities, all of the share capital in a successful tenderer. That circumstance tends to indicate, generally, that the contracting authority exercises over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments (judgments of 19 April 2007, Asemfo, C-295/05, EU:C:2007:227, paragraph 57, and of 13 November 2008, Coditel Brabant, C-324/07, EU:C:2008:621, paragraph 30).

68 Although use of an in-house award has so far been accepted by the Court only in cases where a contracting authority held all or part of the shares in a contractor, it cannot be inferred from this that, in an arrangement such as the 'responsible municipality' model in Finnish law, it is impossible for a contracting authority, in this case the responsible municipality, to opt for an in-house award in order to meet the needs of the contracting authorities with which it has entered into an agreement based on that model for the sole reason that the other municipalities which are parties to that agreement do not hold any shares in the in-house entity. The criterion of holding part of the shares cannot constitute the only means of achieving that objective, since control similar to that exercised by a contracting authority over its own departments may take a form other than a shareholding.

69 In that regard, it should be noted, first, that it follows from the answer to the first question and from paragraphs 40 to 42 of this judgment that, in this case, the City of Pori was transferred powers by the other municipalities not only under the public transport cooperation agreement but also the healthcare services cooperation agreement. Furthermore, paragraphs 60 to 64 of this judgment make clear that, as a result of those transfers of powers, the City of Pori, as the 'responsible municipality', assumed, on behalf of the contracting municipalities, the tasks which they entrusted to it. Moreover, it is common ground that the contractor Porin Linjat is an entity linked to the City of Pori, which controls it. It follows that the City of Pori must necessarily be regarded, as concerns the award of services, as the contracting authority for those tasks.

70 Second, assuming that, following a transfer of powers for the purposes of Article 4(2) TEU as interpreted in the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15 EU:C:2016:985), the requirement of control over the in-house entity exercised jointly by the contracting authority benefiting from the transfer of powers and the other contracting authorities which have relinquished the power concerned, it suffices to observe that the 'responsible municipality' model enables contracting municipalities that are parties to an agreement based on that model – despite the fact that they do not hold shares in the in-house entity – to exercise, like the responsible municipality, decisive influence on both the contractor's strategic objectives and important decisions and, therefore, effective, structural and functional control over that entity (see, by analogy, judgments of 13 October 2005, Parking Brixen, C-458/03, EU:C:2005:605, paragraph 65; of 11 May 2006, Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei, C-340/04, EU:C:2006:308, paragraph 36; of 29 November 2012, Econord, C-182/11 and C-183/11, EU:C:2012:758, paragraph 27; and of 8 May 2014, Datenlotsen Informationssysteme, C-15/13, EU:C:2014:303, paragraph 26).

71 As regards the second condition referred to in paragraph 66 of this judgment, namely that the contractor must carry out the essential part of its activities for the benefit of the contracting authority or authorities which control it, it must be observed that, where an undertaking is controlled by several authorities, that condition may be satisfied if that undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities with those authorities taken as a whole and not merely with one of those authorities in particular (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 May 2006, Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei, C-340/04, EU:C:2006:308, paragraphs 70 and 71). That requirement is designed to ensure that Directive 2004/18 remains applicable in the event that an undertaking controlled by one or more authorities is active in the market, and therefore liable to be in competition with other undertakings. An undertaking is not necessarily deprived of freedom of action merely because the decisions concerning it are controlled by the controlling municipal authority or authorities, if it can still carry out a large part of its economic activities with other operators (judgment of 8 December 2016, Undis Servizi, C-553/15, EU:C:2016:935, paragraphs 32 and 33 and the case-law cited).

72 It is therefore necessary to consider whether services awarded to an in-house entity pursuant to two cooperation agreements which each, first, transfer powers to the same responsible municipality, second, relate to different services, third, do not involve the same parties and, fourth, are intended to cover both the needs of the contracting authority itself and those of the other contracting authorities which are parties to those agreements, may be treated as activities carried out for the benefit of the contracting authority.

73 Subject to verification by the national court, the information available to the Court, referred to in paragraphs 10, 24 to 26, 29 to 31 and 33 of this judgment, indicates that the implementation of each of the two cooperation agreements at issue in the main proceedings appears to entail a number of safeguards such as to prevent the in-house entity from becoming market-oriented and gaining a degree of independence that would render tenuous the control exercised by the City of Porin and its contractual partners (see, by analogy, judgment of 13 November 2008, Coditel Brabant, C-324/07, EU:C:2008:621, paragraph 36).

74 Since those cooperation agreements contain sufficient safeguards to protect against any harm to competition, it is immaterial that the personal and material scope of those agreements does not coincide.

75 As a result, in order to determine whether the in-house entity carries out the essential part of its activities for the benefit of the contracting authority or authorities controlling it, account must be taken of all the activities which it carries out under the two cooperation agreements at issue in the main proceedings.

76 Thus, in the circumstances of the main proceedings, in calculating the share of Porin Linjat’s turnover derived from operating the services at issue in the main proceedings, the turnover realised by that company at that city’s behest under the healthcare services cooperation agreement and the public transport cooperation agreement with a view to meeting that city’s own needs, must be added to the turnover realised by that company at the behest of the municipalities that are parties to those agreements.

77 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second and fourth questions is that Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a cooperation agreement under which the municipalities which are parties to that agreement transfer to one among them responsibility for organising services for the benefit of those municipalities allows that municipality, in awards made subsequent to that transfer, to be regarded as a contracting authority and empowers it to entrust to an in-house entity, without a prior call for competitive tendering, services fulfilling not only its own needs but also those of the other municipalities that are parties to that agreement whereas, without that transfer of powers, those municipalities would have had to fulfil their own needs themselves.

The third question

78 In the light of the answer given to the first question, there is no need to answer the third question.

Costs

79 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that an agreement under which the municipalities which are parties to that agreement entrust to one among them responsibility for organising services for the benefit of those municipalities is excluded from the scope of Directive 2004/18 on the ground that it constitutes a transfer of powers for the purposes of Article 4(2) TEU as interpreted in the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985).

2. Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a cooperation agreement under which the municipalities which are parties to that agreement transfer to one among them responsibility for organising services for the benefit of those municipalities allows that municipality, in awards made subsequent to that transfer, to be regarded as a contracting authority and empowers it to entrust to an in-house entity, without a prior call for competitive tendering, services fulfilling not only its own needs but also those of other municipalities that are parties to that agreement whereas, without that transfer of powers, those municipalities would have had to fulfil their own needs themselves.

Offentlig upphandling - Samarbetsavtal mellan kommuner - Modell med ansvarskommun - Överföring av befogenheter - Upphandlingar efter överföringen av befogenheter - Enhet anknuten till den upphandlande enheten (in house-enhet) - Unionens domstols förhandsavgörande

ECLI: ECLI:FI:KHO:2020:146

Frågan gällde om B stad offentligt borde ha konkurrensutsatt den färdtjänst för personer med funktionsnedsättning som staden köpt av A Ab, som ägdes av staden, när färdtjänsten köpts förutom för B stads, även för C stads och D kommuns behov och organiseringen av färdtjänsterna grundade sig på ett samarbetsavtal mellan dem om organisering och producering av social- och hälsovårdstjänster, enligt vilket ansvaret för organiseringen av tjänsterna hade överförts på B stad som ansvarig kommun. Huvuddelen av A Ab:s omsättning hade influtit från kollektivtrafik som hade organiserats enligt ett samarbetsavtal mellan städerna B, C, E och F samt G kommun.

Marknadsdomstolen hade ansett att det inte hade funnits en grund enligt upphandlingslagen för att avstå från en konkurrensutsättning av upphandlingen. Enligt marknadsdomstolens beslut kunde A Ab inte anses vara en till B stad anknuten enhet (in house-enhet) eftersom A Ab inte bedrev huvuddelen av sin verksamhet tillsammans med B stad som var dess enda aktieägare.

Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen ansåg efter att unionens domstol avgett sitt förhandsavgörande att det på kommunallagens modell om ansvarskommuner baserade samarbetsavtalet mellan B och C stad samt D kommun om organisering och producering av social- och hälsovårdstjänster och samarbetsavtalet om kollektivtrafik mellan städerna B, C, E och F samt G kommun, innebar en överföring av befogenhet enligt artikel 4.2 FEUF, vilken faller utanför tillämpningsområdet för lagen om offentlig upphandling.

Ansvarskommunen B skulle i de upphandlingar som skett efter överföringen av befogenheterna anses som upphandlande enhet både avseende färdtjänsterna för personer med funktionsnedsättning och kollektivtrafiktjänsterna även till den del tjänster hade köpts för de andra kommunernas, som var parter i samarbetsavtalen, behov.

Även om det antas att en överföring av befogenheter skulle anses leda till ett krav på att in house-enheten ska kontrolleras gemensamt av den upphandlande myndighet till vilken befogenhetsöverföringen har skett och av de andra upphandlande myndigheter som har avstått från nämnda befogenhet så räcker det enligt unionens domstol att konstatera att modellen med ”ansvariga kommuner” ger de kommuner som är parter i ett avtal som är baserat på denna modell trots det att de inte äger någon andel i den aktuella in house -enheten möjlighet att, på samma sätt som den ansvariga kommunen, utöva ett bestämmande inflytande i fråga om både de strategiska målen för den enhet som tilldelats kontraktet och enhetens viktiga beslut, och således utöva en effektiv, strukturell och funktionell kontroll över denna enhet.

Vidare hade genomförandet av samarbetsavtalen varit förenat med tillräckliga säkerhetsmekanismer som förhindrade A Ab att bli marknadsinriktad och få ett för stort handlingsutrymme. I bedömningen av vilken del av A Ab:s omsättning som härrör från den aktuella verksamheten beräknas den omsättning som A Ab genererar till följd av de uppgifter det utför åt B stad med stöd av samarbetsavtalet om social- och hälsovårdstjänster och samarbetsavtalet om kollektivtrafik för att tillgodose B stads egna behov, samt den omsättning som A Ab genererar till följd av de uppgifter som det utför åt övriga kommuner som är parter i nämnda avtal. Upphandlingen uppfyllde kraven på upphandling hos enheter anknutna till den upphandlande enheten enligt 10 § i lagen om offentlig upphandling.

B stad hade således kunnat köpa färdtjänst för personer med funktionsnedsättning av A Ab utan konkurrensutsättning också till den del köpet av tjänsterna utan en överföring av befogenheterna hade hört till C stads och D kommuns egna uppgifter.

Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen upphävde marknadsdomstolen beslut till den del besvär hade anförts över det.

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns, in essence, the interpretation of Article 1(2) and Article 72 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), Article 2e(2) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) ('Directive 89/665'), Article 2e(2) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2007/66 ('Directive 92/13'), and Articles 41 and 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter').

2 The request has been made in proceedings between T-Systems Magyarország Zrt. ('T-Systems') and BKK Budapesti Közlekedési Központ Zrt. ('BKK'), on the one hand, and the Közbeszerzési Hatóság Közbeszerzési Döntőbizottság (Arbitration Panel of the Public Procurement Authority, Hungary, 'the Arbitration Panel) concerning fines imposed on the former on account of the modification, during its performance, of the contract between them without use being made of new public procurement procedures.

Legal context

EU law

Directive 89/665

3 Article 2e of Directive 89/665, which is entitled 'Infringement of this Directive and alternative penalties', provides:

'1. In the case of an infringement of Article 1(5), Article 2(3) or Article 2a(2) which is not covered by Article 2d(1)(b), Member States shall provide for ineffectiveness in accordance with Article 2d(1) to (3), or for alternative penalties. Member States may provide that the review body independent of the contracting authority shall decide, after having assessed all relevant aspects, whether the contract should be considered ineffective or whether alternative penalties should be imposed.

2. Alternative penalties must be effective, proportionate and dissuasive. Alternative penalties shall be:

– the imposition of fines on the contracting authority; or – the shortening of the duration of the contract.

Member States may confer on the review body broad discretion to take into account all the relevant factors, including the seriousness of the infringement, the behaviour of the contracting authority and, in the cases referred to in Article 2d(2), the extent to which the contract remains in force.

The award of damages does not constitute an appropriate penalty for the purposes of this paragraph.'

Directive 92/13

4 The provisions of Article 2e of Directive 92/13, which is entitled 'Infringements of this Directive and alternative penalties', are worded identically to the provisions of Article 2e of Directive 89/665.

Directive 2007/66

5 Recitals 19 to 21 of Directive 2007/66 state:

‘(19) In the case of other infringements of formal requirements, Member States might consider the principle of ineffectiveness to be inappropriate. In those cases Member States should have the flexibility to provide for alternative penalties. Alternative penalties should be limited to the imposition of fines to be paid to a body independent of the contracting authority or entity or to a shortening of the duration of the contract. It is for Member States to determine the details of alternative penalties and the rules of their application.

(20) This Directive should not exclude the application of stricter sanctions in accordance with national law.

(21) The objective to be achieved where Member States lay down the rules which ensure that a contract shall be considered ineffective is that the rights and obligations of the parties under the contract should cease to be enforced and performed. The consequences resulting from a contract being considered ineffective should be determined by national law. National law may therefore, for example, provide for the retroactive cancellation of all contractual obligations (ex tunc) or conversely limit the scope of the cancellation to those obligations which would still have to be performed (ex nunc). This should not lead to the absence of forceful penalties if the obligations deriving from a contract have already been fulfilled either entirely or almost entirely. In such cases Member States should provide for alternative penalties as well, taking into account the extent to which a contract remains in force in accordance with national law. Similarly, the consequences concerning the possible recovery of any sums which may have been paid, as well as all other forms of possible restitution, including restitution in value where restitution in kind is not possible, are to be determined by national law.’

6 Recitals 10, 29, 107, 109 and 111 of Directive 2014/24 read as follows:

‘(10) The notion of ‘contracting authorities’ and in particular that of ‘bodies governed by public law’ have been examined repeatedly in the case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union. To clarify that the scope of this Directive ratione personae should remain unaltered, it is appropriate to maintain the definitions on which the Court based itself and to incorporate a certain number of clarifications given by that case-law as a key to the understanding of the definitions themselves, without the intention of altering the understanding of the concepts as elaborated by the case-law. …

(29) It is appropriate to recall that this Directive applies only to contracting authorities of Member States. …

(107) It is necessary to clarify the conditions under which modifications to a contract during its performance require a new procurement procedure, taking into account the relevant case-law of the [Court]. A new procurement procedure is required in case of material changes to the initial contract, in particular to the scope and content of the mutual rights and obligations of the parties, including the distribution of intellectual property rights. Such changes demonstrate the parties’ intention to renegotiate essential terms or conditions of that contract. This is the case in particular if the amended conditions would have had an influence on the outcome of the procedure, had they been part of the initial procedure.

Modifications to the contract resulting in a minor change of the contract value up to a certain value should always be possible without the need to carry out a new procurement procedure. To this effect and in order to ensure legal certainty, this Directive should provide for de minimis thresholds, below which a new procurement procedure is not necessary. Modifications to the contract above those thresholds should be possible without the need to carry out a new procurement procedure to the extent they comply with the relevant conditions laid down in this Directive.

(109) Contracting authorities can be faced with external circumstances that they could not foresee when they awarded the contract, in particular when the performance of the contract covers a long period. In this case, a certain degree of flexibility is needed to adapt the contract to those circumstances without a new procurement procedure. …

(111) Contracting authorities should, in the individual contracts themselves, have the possibility to provide for modifications to a contract by way of review or option clauses, but such clauses should not give them unlimited discretion. This Directive should therefore set out to what extent modifications may be provided for in the initial contract. …'

7 Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/24 provides:

'Procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a public contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the works, supplies or services are intended for a public purpose.'

8 Title II of Directive 2014/24, which is entitled 'Rules on public contracts', includes, inter alia, Chapter IV on 'contract performance', which contains Articles 70 to 73 of that directive. Article 72, which is itself entitled 'Modification of contracts during their term', provides:

'1. Contracts and framework agreements may be modified without a new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive in any of the following cases:

(a) where the modifications, irrespective of their monetary value, have been provided for in the initial procurement documents in clear, precise and unequivocal review clauses, which may include price revision clauses, or options. Such clauses shall state the scope and nature of possible modifications or options as well as the conditions under which they may be used. They shall not provide for modifications or options that would alter the overall nature of the contract or the framework agreement;

(b) for additional works, services or supplies by the original contractor that have become necessary and that were not included in the initial procurement where a change of contractor:

(i) cannot be made for economic or technical reasons such as requirements of interchangeability or interoperability with existing equipment, services or installations procured under the initial procurement; and

(ii) would cause significant inconvenience or substantial duplication of costs for the contracting authority.

However, any increase in price shall not exceed 50% of the value of the original contract. Where several successive modifications are made, that limitation shall apply to the value of each modification. Such consecutive modifications shall not be aimed at circumventing this Directive;

(c) where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(i) the need for modification has been brought about by circumstances which a diligent contracting authority could not foresee;

(ii) the modification does not alter the overall nature of the contract;

(iii) any increase in price is not higher than 50% of the value of the original contract or framework agreement. Where several successive modifications are made, that limitation shall apply to the value of each modification. Such consecutive modifications shall not be aimed at circumventing this Directive;

(e) where the modifications, irrespective of their value, are not substantial within the meaning of paragraph 4.

Contracting authorities having modified a contract in the cases set out under points (b) and (c) of this paragraph shall publish a notice to that effect in the Official Journal of the European Union. Such notice shall contain the information set out in Annex V part G and shall be published in accordance with Article 51.

2. Furthermore, and without any need to verify whether the conditions set out under points (a) to (d) of paragraph 4 are met, contracts may equally be modified without a new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive being necessary where the value of the modification is below both of the following values:

(i) the thresholds set out in Article 4; and

(ii) 10% of the initial contract value for service and supply contracts and below 15% of the initial contract value for works contracts.

However, the modification may not alter the overall nature of the contract or framework agreement. Where several successive modifications are made, the value shall be assessed on the basis of the net cumulative value of the successive modifications.

5. A new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive shall be required for other modifications of the provisions of a public contract or a framework agreement during its term than those provided for under paragraphs 1 and 2.'

Directive 2014/25/EU

9 Under recitals 12, 113, 115 and 117 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243):

'(12) The notion of 'contracting authorities' and in particular that of 'bodies governed by public law' have been examined repeatedly in the case-law of the [Court]. 10 Article 1(2) of that directive reads as follows:

'Procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a supply, works or service contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting entities from economic operators chosen by those contracting entities, provided that the works, supplies or services are intended for the pursuit of one of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14.'

11 Title II of Directive 2014/25, which is entitled 'Rules applicable to contracts', includes, inter alia, Chapter IV on 'contract enforcement', which contains Articles 87 to 90 of that directive. Article 89, which is itself entitled 'Modification of contracts during their term', provides:

'1. Contracts and framework agreements may be modified without a new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive in any of the following cases:

(a) where the modifications, irrespective of their monetary value, have been provided for in the initial procurement documents in clear, precise and unequivocal review clauses, which may include price revision clauses, or options. Such clauses shall state the scope and nature of possible modifications or options as well as the conditions under which they may be used. (ii) would cause significant inconvenience or substantial duplication of costs for the contracting entity;

(i) the need for modification has been brought about by circumstances which a diligent contracting entity could not foresee;

(ii) the modification does not alter the overall nature of the contract;

(e) where the modifications, irrespective of their value, are not substantial within the meaning of paragraph 4.

Contracting entities having modified a contract in the cases set out under points (b) and (c) of this paragraph shall publish a notice to that effect in the Official Journal of the European Union. Such notice shall contain the information set out in Annex XVI and shall be published in accordance with Article 71.

2. Furthermore, and without any need to verify whether the conditions set out under points (a) to (d) of paragraph 4 are met, contracts may equally be modified without a new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive being necessary where the value of the modification is below both of the following values:

(i) the thresholds set out in Article 15; and

(ii) 10% of the initial contract value for service and supply contracts and below 15% of the initial contract value for works contracts.

However, the modification may not alter the overall nature of the contract or framework agreement. Where several successive modifications are made, the value shall be assessed on the basis of the net cumulative value of the successive modifications.

3. For the purpose of the calculation of the price referred to in paragraph 2, the updated price shall be the reference value when the contract includes an indexation clause.

4. A modification of a contract or a framework agreement during its term shall be considered to be substantial within the meaning of point (e) of paragraph 1, where it renders the contract or the framework agreement materially different in character from the one initially concluded. In any event, without prejudice to paragraphs 1 and 2, a modification shall be considered to be substantial where one or more of the following conditions is met:

(a) the modification introduces conditions which, had they been part of the initial procurement procedure, would have allowed for the admission of other candidates than those initially selected or for the acceptance of a tender other than that originally accepted or would have attracted additional participants in the procurement procedure;

(b) the modification changes the economic balance of the contract or the framework agreement in favour of the contractor in a manner which was not provided for in the initial contract or framework agreement;

(c) the modification extends the scope of the contract or framework agreement considerably;

(d) where a new contractor replaces the one to which the contracting entity had initially awarded the contract in other cases than those provided for under point (d) of paragraph 1.

5. A new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive shall be required for other modifications of the provisions of a works, supply or service contract or a framework agreement during its term than those provided for under paragraphs 1 and 2.’

Hungarian law

12 Article 2(1) of the közbeszerzésekről szóló 2015. évi CXLIII. törvény (Law No CXLIII on public procurement, ‘the Public Procurement Law’) provides:

‘The contracting authority must ensure the fairness and the transparency of competition in procurement procedures and the public nature of those procedures, with which economic operators must comply.’

13 Article 141 of that law, which determines the different cases in which the parties to a public contract may modify that contract, provides in paragraph 8 thereof:

‘Save in the cases covered by the provisions of this article, a contract may be modified only further to the organisation of a new procurement procedure. If a contract is modified such that a public procurement procedure is unlawfully precluded, the modification shall be void pursuant to Article 137(1)(a).'

14 Article 153(1) of the Law states:

'The Közbeszerzési Hatóság Elnöke [(Director of the Public Procurement Authority, Hungary)] shall take the initiative to initiate the procedure ex officio before the [Arbitration Panel]

(c) where it is plausible, in the light of the outcome of the checks conducted by the Public Procurement Authority pursuant to Article 187(2)(j), or even without initiating administrative checks, that the contract has been modified or performed in breach of this Law, in particular where an infringement as referred to in Article 142(2) has been committed;

…'

15 Under Article 165 of the same law:

'…

(2) In its ruling, the [Arbitration Panel]

(d) shall find that an infringement has been committed and apply the legal consequences provided for in paragraph 3;

(e) in the cases referred to in paragraph 6, shall find that an infringement exists and impose a fine;

(3) If, in its ruling, it finds that an infringement exists, the [Arbitration Panel]

(d) may impose a fine on the entity or person in breach as well as on a person or an entity which has a legal relationship with the entity or person responsible for the infringement and which is also responsible for the infringement.

(6) The [Arbitration Panel] shall find an infringement exists and impose a fine where

(a) the procurement procedure is unlawfully precluded by virtue of the infringement;

(e) the Director of the Public Procurement Authority initiated the procedure [under Article 153] ex officio and the Arbitration Panel has found that an infringement had been committed.

…'

16 Article 176 of the Public Procurement Law provides:

'(1) If, in its ruling on the merits of the case, the [Arbitration Panel] finds that an infringement exists as referred to in Article 137(1), it shall initiate judicial proceedings for a declaration that the contract is invalid and that the legal consequences of that illegality apply.

(4) If, following the proceedings referred to in paragraph 1, the court finds that a contract is invalid for the reasons defined in Article 137(1), it shall give due effect to the legal consequences of that illegality in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Code and of this Law.

(5) If the court declares, pursuant to Article 137(3), that the contract concluded further to the procurement procedure is valid, it shall be required to impose a fine the amount of which, taking into account all the circumstances of the case in question, shall be a maximum of 15% of the contract value. If, where it gives due effect to the legal consequences of the illegality, the court orders the reimbursement of the equivalent value of the service received without consideration, it shall be required to impose a fine the amount of which, taking into account all the circumstances of the case in question, shall be a maximum of 10% of the contract value.

(6) The proceedings referred to in paragraph 1 shall fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of the administrative and labour court which, in the case of one and the same infringement of the rules on procurement, shall apply the procedure for administrative proceedings provided for in Article 170. …'

17 Article 240(1) of the Polgári Törvénykönyvről szóló 1959. évi IV. törvény (Law No IV of 1959 on the Civil Code) reads as follows:

'Unless otherwise provided for by law, the parties may by common agreement modify the content of the contract or the legal nature of the commitments which they have entered into.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

18 BKK, a company established by the municipal authorities of Budapest Capital (Hungary), carries out public service tasks in the field of public transport in that city.

19 Following a restricted tendering procedure for the manufacture, transport, installation and operation of ticket vending machines, on 4 September 2013 BKK, as the contracting authority, concluded with T-Systems a contract with a total value of 5 561 690 409 Hungarian forints (HUF) (approximately EUR 18 500 000).

20 The parties modified that contract on several occasions. In particular, by a modification of 13 July 2017, BKK ordered T-Systems to supplement the central control system of the ticket vending machines with a software module enabling tickets to be purchased online.

21 It was subsequently stipulated that the amount of the additional consideration corresponding to the various contractual modifications could not exceed the amount of HUF 2 530 195 870 (approximately EUR 8 200 000).

22 On 29 September 2017, the Director of the Public Procurement Authority initiated, pursuant to Article 153(1)(c) of the Public Procurement Law, a procedure ex officio against the contracting parties for breach, inter alia, of Article 141(2) and (4)(b) and (c) of that law and referred the matter to the Arbitration Panel.

23 The Arbitration Panel found that each of the modifications to the contract should have been subject to a new public procurement procedure. It observed that the two contracting parties must comply with the requirements laid down in public procurement law as regards modifications of contracts, which means that, if they have applied those provisions unlawfully, they must each be regarded as having committed an infringement.

24 The Arbitration Panel therefore found that, by virtue of the contractual modifications, the contracting parties had infringed inter alia the provisions of Article 141(8) of the Public Procurement Law. Taking into account in particular the provisions of Article 165(3)(d) of that law, it imposed a fine of HUF 80 000 000 (approximately EUR 258 941) on BKK and a fine of HUF 70 000 000 (approximately EUR 226 573) on T-Systems.

25 The latter brought proceedings before the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court, Hungary) for a finding that there was no infringement on its part and, accordingly, for the reversal of the decision which imposed a fine on it.

26 T-Systems takes the view that the requirement to organise a public procurement procedure is incumbent on the contracting authority and that a successful tenderer cannot be held responsible for a decision taken by that authority as regards its needs in terms of public procurement. Thus, in the present case, by making it bear the consequences of the decisions adopted by BKK, the Arbitration Panel infringed the principles of legal certainty and the rule of law.

27 In T-Systems' opinion, the contracting authority is the sole addressee of the rule of law contained in Article 141(8) of the Public Procurement Law and, on that basis, the contracting authority alone is capable of committing the infringement punishable by that provision.

28 T-Systems is of the view that the requirements of foreseeability and due diligence are incumbent on the contracting authority and that the breach of those requirements is attributable to the contracting authority alone where it takes the initiative to alter a contract.

29 BKK has also contested the decision imposing a fine on it before the referring court, seeking, primarily, a review of that decision, a finding that an infringement does not stem from the modifications to the contract at issue in the main proceedings and the cancellation of that fine.

30 The Arbitration Panel asks the referring court to find that the modifications made to the contract at issue in the main proceedings were invalid, to order, if it deems it necessary, the restoration of the situation existing prior to that contract and to reject the forms of order sought by BKK and T-Systems. It states that, with regard to the latter company, it found there to be an infringement solely because of a breach of the rules of law of which it was the addressee, namely the provisions of Article 141 of the Law on Public Procurement. It observes that the provisions of the Civil Code state that the two parties must act jointly in order for a contract to be modified, which justifies examining the breach of the rules on contract modifications in respect of the two parties.

31 For his part, the Director of the Public Procurement Authority considers that the lawful performance of the public procurement procedure is a matter primarily but not exclusively for the contracting authority. He points out that it is not unusual for the successful tenderer for a public contract to take the initiative to modify a contract. He also refers to the fundamental principle of civil law that the modification of the contract presupposes the common agreement of the parties concerned.

32 The referring court notes that it is for the contracting authority to organise a public procurement procedure.

33 It takes the view that, in order to maintain competition that is as broad as possible, even after the contract has been signed, strict penalties are attached to offending conduct resulting from the legal relationships between the parties. It clarifies that those relationships fall within the field of civil law as a result of the conclusion of the contract.

34 The referring court is of the view that it follows from the provisions of Article 141 of the Public Procurement Law that, although a contract may be modified only by common agreement of the parties, the contracting authority is the only party that can be caught by an infringement of the rules on public procurement because it falls within the scope ratione personae of the legislation.

35 It states that the provisions of the national legislation on review procedures do not specify which persons involved in a procurement procedure may be penalised. In addition, in order to determine which individual should be regarded as having infringed a rule, it would be necessary to determine which person is the addressee of the provision that has been infringed. In its view, the penalty laid down, which is punitive in nature and must be imposed on the perpetrator of the offence alone, concerns the person required to conduct a procurement procedure, namely the contracting authority.

36 The referring court refers to several judgments of Hungarian courts from which it is clear that the contracting authority or the economic operator was exempted from payment of the fine imposed, inter alia because the latter was not responsible for the organisation of the procurement procedure.

37 The referring court states that the fact that the successful tenderer for a contract is an addressee of the provisions of the Public Procurement Law on modifications to contracts cannot mean that that tenderer may be held to bear the same responsibility to that borne by the contracting authority from the perspective of public procurement law.

38 It takes the view that, although the responsibility of the contracting parties may be called into question from the point of view of that law, they must be afforded the opportunity to furnish probative evidence capable of clarifying their involvement in the modification of the contract at issue and in the commission of any offence.

39 In those circumstances, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) stayed the proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Do Articles 41(1) and 47 of the [Charter], as well as recitals 10, 29, 107, 109 and 111 and Articles 1(2) and 72 of Directive [2014/24] preclude a national rule or a practice in relation to the interpretation and application of that rule which, taking into account the contractual legal relationship between the contracting parties, stipulates that an infringement for an unlawful failure to hold a public tender, allegedly violating the rules concerning the modification of contracts, and a failure to comply with the provisions governing the modification of contracts, is committed not only by the contracting entity, but also by the successful tenderer which concluded the contract with it, on the basis that the unlawful modification of the contracts requires joint action by the parties?

(2) In the event that the first question is answered in the negative, taking into account the provisions of Articles 41(1) and 47 of the [Charter] and recitals 10, 29, 107, 109 and 111 and Articles 1(2) and 72 of Directive [2014/24], do recitals 19, 20 and 21 of Directive [2007/66] and Article 2e(2) of [Directive 89/665] and Article 2e(2) of [Directive 92/13], which articles are identical in terms of content, preclude a national rule or a practice in relation to the interpretation and application of that rule which allows a penalty (fine) – other than a reduction of the duration of the contract – for unlawful failure to hold a public tendering procedure and for failure to comply with the rules on the modification of contracts to be imposed also on the successful tenderer which concluded the contract with the contracting entity?

(3) If the first two questions are answered in the negative, the referring court asks the [Court] to also provide it with guidance as to whether, in order to determine the amount of the penalty (fine), it is sufficient that there is a contractual legal relationship between the parties, without it being necessary to examine the action and the contribution of the parties which led to the modification of the contract?’

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Preliminary observations

40 According to the referring court, the resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings turns on whether the Charter and Directives 89/665, 92/13, 2007/66 and 2014/24 preclude national legislation which, in the context of a review procedure initiated ex officio by a supervisory authority, allows an offence to be attributed to, and a fine imposed on, not only the contracting authority but also the successful tenderer for a public contract where, when that contract is modified during its performance, the public procurement rules have been unlawfully disapplied.

41 In the first place, it must be observed that the provisions of the Charter are not relevant for the provision of guidance to the referring court in the context of the dispute in the main proceedings.

42 First, it is clear from the wording of Article 41 of the Charter that that article is addressed not to the Member States but solely to the institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the European Union (judgment of 26 March 2020, HUNGEOD and Others, C-496/18 and C-497/18, EU:C:2020:240, paragraph 63 and the case-law cited).

43 Second, with regard to Article 47 of the Charter, which is likewise invoked by the referring court, it must be recalled that, when defining the detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect the rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, the Member States must not compromise the effectiveness of the rights conferred on individuals by EU law, in particular, the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter (judgment of 26 March 2020, HUNGEOD and Others, C-496/18 and C-497/18, EU:C:2020:240, paragraph 64 and the case-law cited).

44 However, it is not apparent from any documents available to the Court that the procedure which resulted in the imposition of a fine, where a public contract was unlawfully modified during its performance, not only on the contracting authority but also on the successful tenderer for the contract would have the effect of compromising the effectiveness of the right to an effective remedy or to a fair hearing.

45 In the second place, it must be recalled that, in accordance with settled case-law, in the context of the cooperation procedure between the national courts and the Court established in Article 267 TFEU, it is for the Court to provide the national court with an answer which will be of use to it and enable it to decide the case before it. With that in mind, it is for the Court, where appropriate, to reformulate the questions submitted to it. In addition, the Court may be prompted to consider rules of EU law to which the national court has not referred in the wording of its questions (judgment of 12 December 1990, SARPP, C-241/89, EU:C:1990:459, paragraph 8, and of 8 June 2017, Medisanus, C-296/15, EU:C:2017:431, paragraph 55).

46 In the present case, since the contract at issue in the main proceedings related to the manufacture, transport, installation and operation of ticket vending machines, it is Directive 2014/25 that may be applicable and not Directive 2014/24; this is, however, a matter for the referring court to determine.

47 Accordingly, in order to provide an answer which will be of use to that court, account must be taken of recitals 12, 113, 115 and 117 as well as Articles 1(2) and 89 of Directive 2014/25, which corresponds, in that directive, to the recitals and provisions of Directive 2014/24 invoked in the request for a preliminary ruling.

48 In those circumstances, the view must be taken that, by its first and second questions, the referring court asks whether Article 2e(2) of Directive 89/665, Article 2e(2) of Directive 92/13, recitals 19 to 21 of Directive 2007/66, and recitals 12, 113, 115 and 117, Article 1(2) and Article 89 of Directive 2014/25 preclude national legislation which, in the context of a review procedure initiated ex officio by a supervisory authority, allows an offence to be attributed to, and a fine imposed on, not only the contracting authority but also the successful tenderer for a public contract where, when that contract is modified during its performance, the rules on public procurement have been unlawfully disapplied, and, by its third question, whether, if the first and second questions are answered in the negative, the amount of the fine penalising the unlawful modification of the public contract concluded between the contracting authority and the successful tenderer for the contract must be determined taking into account merely the existence of the contractual relationship between those two parties or whether consideration must be given to the specific conduct of each of those parties.

The first and second questions

49 By its first and second questions, the referring court asks whether Article 2e(2) of Directive 89/665, Article 2e(2) of Directive 92/13, recitals 19 to 21 of Directive 2007/66, and recitals 12, 113, 115 and 117, Article 1(2) and Article 89 of Directive 2014/25 are to be interpreted as precluding national legislation which, in the context of a review procedure initiated ex officio by a supervisory authority, allows an offence to be attributed to, and a fine imposed on, not only the contracting authority but also the successful tenderer for the contract where, when that contract is modified during its performance, the rules on public procurement have been unlawfully disapplied.

50 In the first place, it must be observed that Directives 89/665 and 92/13 do indeed provide merely that the Member States are to ensure that the review procedures are available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement (judgment of 26 March 2020, HUNGEOD and Others, C-496/18 and C-497/18, EU:C:2020:240, paragraph 71).

51 The provisions of those directives are intended to protect tenderers against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority and thus designed to reinforce the existence, in all Member States, of effective remedies, so as to ensure the effective application of the EU rules on the award of public contracts, in particular where infringements can still be rectified (judgment of 26 March 2020, HUNGEOD and Others, C-496/18 and C-497/18, EU:C:2020:240, paragraph 72).

52 It is with that in mind that Article 2e of Directive 89/665 and Article 2e of Directive 92/13, which are worded identically, require that Member States provide, in the case of infringement of certain provisions of those directives, either for the ineffectiveness of the contract or for alternative penalties that may consist in the imposition of fines on the contracting authority.

53 However, although Directives 89/665 and 92/13 require that remedies are available to undertakings having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who have been or risk being harmed by an alleged infringement, they cannot be regarded as bringing out complete harmonisation and, therefore, as providing for all possible remedies in matters of public procurement (judgment of 26 March 2020, HUNGEOD and Others, C-496/18 and C-497/18, EU:C:2020:240, paragraph 73).

54 It follows that Article 2e of Directive 89/665 and Article 2e of Directive 92/13 relate only to actions brought by undertakings having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who have been or risk being harmed by an alleged infringement.

55 In those circumstances, those articles cannot preclude an appeal procedure from being initiated ex officio by a supervisory authority or an infringement relating to the modification of a public contract during its performance in breach of the rules on public procurement from being attributed not only to the contracting authority but also to the successful tenderer for the contract and, therefore, a penalty in the form of a fine from being imposed on both the contracting authority and that tenderer.

56 Moreover, recitals 19 to 21 of Directive 2007/66, which inserted Article 2e into Directives 89/665 and 92/13, in no way invalidate such an interpretation.

57 In the second place, it cannot be inferred either from Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/25, which defines both the scope ratione materiae and the scope ratione personae of that directive, or from recital 12 of that directive, which, in support of that provision, clarifies inter alia the concept of a ‘contracting authority’, that the successful tenderers for public contracts are not covered by the rules of law laid down by the Directive.

58 First, under Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/25, procurement is the acquisition by means of a supply, works or service contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting entities from economic operators who, after having put themselves forward as a candidate or submitted a tender, have been chosen by those entities. It follows that the term ‘economic operators’ used in that provision necessarily includes the successful tenderers for public contracts.

59 Second, Article 89 of Directive 2014/25, which is entitled ‘Modification of contracts during their term’, and which is part of Chapter IV on contract performance in Title II of that directive, confirms that the Directive applies to the successful tenderers for contracts.

60 Paragraphs 1 and 2 of that article list the different situations in which a contract may be modified during its performance by the contracting parties, namely the contracting authority and the successful tenderer, without recourse being had to a new procurement procedure, regardless of whether or not that modification gives rise to the publication of a notice in the Official Journal of the European Union.

61 Article 89(5) of that directive requires that a new procurement procedure is organised for modifications of the provisions of a public contract other than those provided for in paragraphs 1 and 2 of that article.

It follows that a new procurement procedure must be organised for modifications that are materially different in character from the original contract and are, therefore, such as to demonstrate the intention of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of that contract (see, by analogy, judgments of 19 June 2008, pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351, paragraph 34, and of 29 April 2010, Commission v Germany, C-160/08, EU:C:2010:230, paragraph 99).

62 However, Article 89(5) of the Directive does not specify the appropriate conclusions which the national authorities should draw from the fact that a public contract has been modified materially during its performance without recourse being had to a new procurement procedure.

63 In addition, it should be observed that recitals 113, 115 and 117 of Directive 2014/25, which are mentioned by the referring court, provide no clarification in that regard. Furthermore, recital 113 states that material changes to a public contract during its performance demonstrate the contracting parties' intention to renegotiate essential terms or conditions of that contract.

64 It follows from the foregoing that, since neither Article 1(2) nor Article 89 of Directive 2014/25 brings about complete harmonisation, neither of those two provisions can preclude, in the context of a review procedure initiated ex officio by a supervisory authority, an infringement consisting in the modification of a public contract during its performance in breach of the rules on public procurement from being attributed not only to the contracting authority but also to the successful tenderer for that contract and, therefore, a penalty in the form of a fine from being imposed on the latter.

65 The fact remains that, where provision is made for it in national legislation, a review procedure initiated ex officio by a supervisory authority which culminates in an infringement being attributed to the successful tender for a public contract on account of the unlawful modification of that contract during its performance and, therefore, in a fine being imposed on that tenderer must be consistent with EU law in so far as such a contract itself falls within the scope ratione materiae of the directives on public procurement, either ab initio or following its unlawful modification.

66 Therefore, such an ex officio review procedure must comply with EU law, including the general principles of that law.

67 Having regard to the foregoing, the first and second questions must be answered to the effect that Article 2e(2) of Directive 89/665, Article 2e(2) of Directive 92/13, recitals 19 to 21 of Directive 2007/66, and recitals 12, 113, 115 and 117, Article 1(2) and Article 89 of Directive 2014/25 are to be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which, in the context of a review procedure initiated ex officio by a supervisory authority, allows an infringement to be attributed to, and a fine imposed on, not only the contracting authority but also the successful tenderer for the contract where, when a public contract is modified during its performance, the rules on public procurement have been unlawfully disapplied. However, where the national legislation provides for a review procedure, that procedure must comply with EU law, including the general principles of that law, in so far as the public contract concerned itself falls within the scope ratione materiae of the directives on public procurement, either ab initio or following its unlawful modification.

The third question

68 By its third question, the referring court asks whether, if the first and second questions are answered in the negative, the amount of the fine penalising the unlawful modification of a public contract concluded between the contracting authority and the successful tenderer for the contract must be determined taking into merely the existence of a contractual relationship between those parties, pursuant to which they should act jointly in order to modify the public contract between them, or whether consideration must be given to the specific conduct of each of those parties.

69 As is clear from paragraph 65 of this judgment, where such provision is made in national legislation, a review procedure initiated ex officio by a supervisory authority which culminates in an infringement being attributed to the successful tender for a public contract on account of the unlawful modification of that contract during its performance and, therefore, in a fine being imposed on that tenderer must be consistent with EU law in so far as the contract at issue itself falls within the scope ratione materiae of the directives on public procurement, either ab initio or following its unlawful modification.

70 In the light of the scope of the third question, it is therefore necessary to determine the requirements arising from the principle of proportionality which must be met where, in the context of an ex officio review procedure, the amount of the fine imposed on the successful tenderer for the public contract must be determined.

71 It must be recalled that, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, which constitutes a general principle of EU law, the rules laid down by the Member States or contracting authorities in the application of the directives on public procurement must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the intended objectives of those directives (see, to that effect, judgments of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 32, and of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 45).

72 In the present case, although it is for the referring court to assess whether the amount of the fine imposed on T-Systems is proportionate to the objectives of the Public Procurement Law, the supervisory authority or the referring court cannot determine such an amount simply taking into consideration the mere fact that, under the contractual relationship between them, the parties must act jointly in order to modify the public contract between them. That amount must be determined having regard to the conduct or the actions of the parties to the public contract concerned over the period during which they contemplated modifying that contract.

73 With regard more specifically to the successful tenderer, account may be taken inter alia of the fact that it took the initiative to propose the modification of the contract or whether it suggested, or even demanded, that the contracting authority refrain from organising a public procurement procedure to meet the needs necessitating the modification of that contract.

74 However, the amount of the fine imposed on the successful tenderer cannot be dependent on the fact that use was not made of a public procurement procedure to modify the contract, since the decision to adopt such a procedure falls within the prerogatives of the contracting authority alone.

75 Accordingly, the third question must be answered to the effect that the amount of the fine penalising the unlawful modification of a public contract concluded between a contracting authority and a successful tenderer must be determined taking into consideration the specific conduct of each of those parties.

Costs

76 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action brought before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 2e(2) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contract, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, Article 2e(2) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2007/66, recitals 19 to 21 of Directive 2007/66, and recitals 12, 113, 115 and 117, Article 1(2) and Article 89 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC are to be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which, in the context of a review procedure initiated ex officio by a supervisory authority, allows an infringement to be attributed to, and a fine imposed on, not only the contracting authority but also the successful tenderer for the contract where, when a public contract is modified during its performance, the rules on public procurement have been unlawfully disapplied. However, where the national legislation provides for a review procedure, that procedure must comply with EU law, including the general principles of that law, in so far as the public contract concerned itself falls within the scope ratione materiae of the directives on public procurement, either ab initio or following its unlawful modification.

2. The amount of the fine penalising the unlawful modification of a public contract concluded between a contracting authority and a successful tenderer must be determined taking into consideration the specific conduct of each of those parties.

Disposing part

The Curia does not affect the provision of the judgment of the first instance court not affected by the appeal, changes the part affected by the appeal and rejects the claim of the first-tier plaintiff with regard to the legal basis for establishing a violation under the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, omits the provision regarding the reduction of the amount of the fine and orders the first-tier court to rehear the case and issue a new decision with regard to the examination of the amount of the fine imposed on the first-tier plaintiff for the violation under the fourth element of the ex officio initiative.

The Curia disregards the provision of the first instance court's judgment regarding the partial claim fee of HUF 1,000,000 out of the HUF 2,500,000 imposed on the first-tier plaintiff, and the partial claim fee of HUF 500,000 imposed on the state due to the personal exemption from the duty of the first-tier defendant.

The fee for the cross-appeal is 8,000 (eight thousand) forints, which is borne by the first-rank plaintiff.

The parties shall bear the legal costs incurred in the second instance proceedings.

There is no further legal remedy against the interim judgment.

In the meantime

The facts and background of the case

[1] The 2nd-rank plaintiff, as the contracting authority, initiated a negotiated public procurement procedure, starting with the publication of a notice with a call for participation on 29 January 2013, for the production, installation and operation of ticket vending machines (TVM), the winning bidder of which was the 1st-rank plaintiff. The total value of the contract concluded with the 1st-rank plaintiff, as the winning bidder, on 4 September 2013 was HUF 5,561,690,409. The Main Project Contract concluded was annexed to a business contract, an Operating Contract, a technical specification and the winning bidder's offer.

Machine Translated by Google

[2] At the time of the conclusion of the Main Project Contract, the procedure for the procurement of the Project1 System (hereinafter referred to as the AFC Project) (Project1) was in progress before the Second-tier Plaintiff. The Second-tier Plaintiff had not yet concluded a separate contract for the implementation and operation of the AFC Project when the Main Project Contract entered into force, but within the framework of the public procurement of the subject matter related to the Main Project Contract
It was stated in Section III.5.2.3 of the Contract that "the contractor will participate in the performance of the AFC project contract by developing and modifying the TVM central control system, which development and modification are necessary for the TVM system to cooperate with the AFC system."

[3] The parties amended the concluded contract several times: on July 29, 2014 (contract amendment no. 1), on September 10, 2015 (contract amendment no. 2), on December 22, 2016 (Cost Compensation Agreement), on July 13, 2017 (contract amendment no. 3), and on September 15, 2017 (contract amendment no. 4).

[4] With Contract Amendment No. 3, the Main Project Contract was amended in such a way that the Second-tier Plaintiff ordered the First-tier Plaintiff to supplement the TVM central control system with a software module enabling web sales. According to Section III.7.4 of Contract Amendment No. 3, the deadline for launching (putting into operation) the service access to the Web Sales Software is: 10 July 2017, while the second paragraph of the same section refers back to the previously specified deadline of 13 July 2017. Annex 1 to Contract Amendment No. 3 contains the public procurement law justification for the amendment, according to which the procurement of additional goods (Web Sales Software) and services (Web Sales Software operation) from the original contracting party became necessary. The purchase of additional goods and related services is justified by the combined effect of two reasons: on the one hand, the number of abuses experienced during the use of the TVM system can be reduced by introducing a more efficient ticket verification mechanism, the service for providing verification devices is technically closely related and forms a unit with the provision and operation of the Web sales software; on the other hand, Hungary has been awarded the right to organize the 2017 FINA Swimming, Artistic Swimming, Open Water and Water Polo World Championships, during which the 2nd-tier claimant, as the transport organizer of the name1, is obliged to ensure that predominantly foreign persons (athletes, companions and tourists) can use public transport services during the FINA World Championships in such a way that they can purchase the prize products as widely as possible, through all of the internationally customary and established sales channels. The TVM system did not previously have a Web sales interface and option, this function is necessary to be introduced in order to ensure the smooth sale of prize products during the FINA World Championships. They also referred to an additional operational task, since the Web sales software is a software module of the existing TVM central control system, and Web sales is a new sales channel of the TVM system, and its operation is one of the operational tasks. They recorded that at the time of entry into force of Contract Amendment No. 3, only the First-tier Plaintiff had the necessary technical conditions (the source code of the TVM central system), which is the software of the TVM central system control system, and the Web necessary for the integration of the sales software. According to the Business Agreement, the 2nd-order plaintiff will not use the source codes during the Operation Period, nor will it transfer them to third parties, therefore, from a technical and legal point of view, only the 1st-order plaintiff is in a position to carry out the integration of the TVM central system software and the Web sales software during the Operation Period of the TVM system.

It was established that a change in the identity of the contracting party would result in a significant disadvantage for the second-tier plaintiff or a multiplication of costs. The increase in the consideration does not exceed 50% of the value of the original contract. According to the notice of contract amendment No. 3, the consideration increased by HUF 659,400,000.

[5] Based on the findings of the audit ordered and conducted pursuant to Government Decree 308/2015. (X. 27.) on the audit of the performance and modification of contracts concluded as a result of the public procurement procedure by the Public Procurement Authority, the defendant intervener initiated legal remedy proceedings ex officio against the contracting parties on 29 September 2017 pursuant to Section 153. (1) c) of the Public Procurement Act, alleging a violation of the fundamental provisions set out in the first sentence of Section 128. (2), Section 30. (4) and Section 2. (3) of the Public Procurement Act, as well as the provisions of Section 153. (1) c) of the Public Procurement Act. For violation of Section 4(1), Section 141(2), and Section (4)(b) and (c).
The supplemented ex officio initiative consisted of six elements. According to the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, contract amendment No. 3 violates the rules of the Civil Code on contract amendment, there was no legal possibility of contract amendment, and Section 141(4) (b) of the Civil Code was violated, since there is no close technical interdependence between the TVM central control system and the web sales channel that would make the use of the source code and technology of the TVM central control system, the copyrights of which are not owned by the second-tier plaintiff, indispensable. The technical documentation indicated in the initiative also supports the fact that the web sales channel was not planned to be developed as an integrated part of the TVM central control system. The European Union financing of the procurement made it necessary for the second-tier plaintiff to acquire the copyright, so the first-tier plaintiff does not have the exclusive right to performance.

[6] The first-rank defendant concluded the legal remedy proceedings initiated on 2 October 2017 on the merits with decision No. D.561/17/2017 of 15 December 2017, in which it established that the second-rank plaintiff violated the provisions of Section 30 (4) of the 2011 Civil Procedure Code (second element of ex officio initiative), and that the second-rank plaintiff and the first-rank plaintiff violated the provisions of Section 141 (8) of the 2011 Civil Procedure Code (fourth, fifth and sixth elements of ex officio initiative).
As a legal consequence, it imposed a fine of 80 million forints on the second-tier plaintiff and 70 million forints on the first-tier plaintiff. It found that there was no violation of the first and third elements of the ex officio initiative.

[7] The first-tier defendant stated in the justification of the decision that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code shall apply to the legal remedy procedure, and in a substantive sense, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 2011 shall apply to the first and second elements of the ex officio initiative, and the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code shall apply to the remaining elements. In the context of the examination of the procedural objections, it stated, among other things, that the

The ex officio initiator's motion for a decision is not binding on him, in the event that the infringement indicated in the initiative may necessarily be committed by more than one person, he is entitled to proceed and make a decision against all perpetrators of the infringement. He pointed out that the statutory addressee of the provisions on contract amendment contained in Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code is the "parties", therefore he conducted the investigation against both parties - actively participating in the contract amendment. As a reason for this, he explained that with regard to those acts where the joint conduct of the parties is necessary for their creation, a violation by only one party is conceptually excluded, since the contract amendments would not have been created solely by the conduct of the first-order plaintiff or solely by the conduct of the second-order plaintiff.

[8] The first-tier defendant examined all elements of the ex officio initiative in substance and set out its findings regarding the fourth element of the ex officio initiative in paragraphs 53-61 of its decision. In doing so, it pointed out that the European Union rules allow for the amendment of a public procurement contract in a more flexible manner than the previous regulations. It compared the provisions of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (hereinafter: the Directive) and the provisions of the Public Procurement Act on contract amendment.
It stated that the scope of contract modification cases of the Public Procurement Act can be basically classified into three groups: the “de minimis” modification, the three categories of cases defined in Section 142(4) of the Public Procurement Act, and the group of non-substantial modifications defined in paragraph (6). It pointed out that Article 72(1) of the Directive provides that the contract may be modified in accordance with the Directive without a new procurement procedure in any of the cases specified therein, while Article 72(5) provides that a modification during the term of the contract requires a new procurement procedure in the event of a modification other than that specified in paragraphs (1) and (2). Based on the joint interpretation of the relevant provisions of the Directive, it highlighted that in any of the cases specified in the Directive, if any of them exist, the contracting parties are free to modify the public procurement contract without conducting a new procurement procedure. For the contract modification to be lawful, it is sufficient if any of the cases specified in the Directive are met. It was noted that the subject of the 3rd contract amendment was the creation and operation of the premium product sales channel, which was a new procurement requirement of the 2nd-order plaintiff compared to the subject of the Main Project Contract. The new web sales channel and the TVM sales channel under the Main Project Contract both enable the sale of the 2nd-order plaintiff's premium products. However, it does not follow from the necessary connection of the sales channels with the 2nd-order plaintiff's background systems that it is possible to develop the individual sales channels exclusively by integrating them into each other's systems. It emphasized that the rules of the Public Procurement Act must be interpreted in light of the basic principles and the objectives of the Public Procurement Act, and that the fundamental objective of the Public Procurement Act is to create conditions for fair competition, and that the procurement requirement cannot be established within the framework of the contractual relationship in such a way as to artificially and unjustifiably exclude the possibility of competition. It pointed out that the 2nd-order plaintiff's The first-tier plaintiff himself stated that he had implemented a new procurement requirement by developing and operating the web sales system. In the justification for the decision, he emphasized that the contracting parties themselves did not dispute that the web sales system could have been developed independently of the TVM system. It was the contracting authority's decision that it would be developed as a module of the TVM system, but the first-tier defendant, based on the statements and documents at its disposal, did not consider it justified that the web sales channel could have been developed exclusively in the TVM central system, and thus the second-tier plaintiff made a contracting authority's decision by which he himself excluded competition. He stated that Section 141 (4) of the Civil Code

Based on the comparison of the conditions under paragraph b) of the Act and the facts, it could be established that it does not establish the legality of the contract amendment, since the web sales system could not be obtained exclusively from the original contracting party, and although the advantages referred to by the parties exist, they are not proportionate to the advantages of procurement ensuring competition and do not in themselves provide grounds for the applicability of the statutory conditions. It pointed out that the legal basis under paragraph c) of Section 98 (2) of the Act does not establish the applicability of the contract amendment either, if the condition excluding competition results from the intentional decision of the contracting authority. In paragraph 58 of the decision, it was further noted that the reasons referred to by the parties in contract amendment no. 3 (the ticket verification mechanism, the FINA World Championships, the copyright obligation) do not establish the applicability of the Act. The conditions required for a lawful contract amendment under Section 141 of the Act, the advantages referred to by the parties (creating integration between TVM and web sales, use of TVM hardware park, implementation costs, etc.) do exist, but they are not proportionate to the advantages provided by the procedure ensuring competition and do not in themselves justify the applicability of the statutory conditions. The other arguments referred to in the appeal proceedings did not justify the fact that the web sales channel had to be acquired from the first-tier plaintiff in any case. It found that the amendment condition indicated by the parties does not establish the legality of the contract amendment, and the parties did not refer to the fulfilment of any other amendment condition, which it assessed as the fact that the parties themselves did not claim the existence of any other further amendment conditions. Based on the above, it found that the public procurement procedure was unlawfully omitted, and thus, with contract amendment no. 3, the contracting parties violated the provisions of the Civil Code. Section 141(8).

[9] Regarding the first-tier plaintiff's claim that he has no insight into the contracting authority's public procurement obligations and the relevant data, and therefore is not liable, he emphasized that the addressee of the norm regarding the amendment of the contract is the parties concluding the contract, so they can only commit a violation of its provisions jointly.

[10] The first-tier defendant established the infringement in relation to the second, fourth, fifth and sixth elements of the ex officio initiative on the basis of Section 165(2)(d) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and imposed a fine on the basis of Section 165(3)(d) of the Code of Civil Procedure, taking into account Section 165(6)(e) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The amount of the fine under Section 165(3)(d) of the Code of Civil Procedure was determined taking into account the provisions of Section 165(4) of the Code of Civil Procedure, while the amount of the fine under Section 165(6)(7) of the Code of Civil Procedure was determined taking into account the provisions of Section 165(11) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It stated that, in view of the infringement established under the fourth, fifth and sixth elements of the ex officio initiative, it had to impose a fine as an additional legal consequence. When determining the amount of this fine, it acted on the basis of the provisions of Section 165 (7) and (11) of the Civil Procedure Code, and noted the circumstances assessed when determining the amount of the fine, such as the estimated value of the public procurement, the value of the Main Project Contract without amendments (5,561,690,409 HUF), the value of the part affected by the established infringement (3,589,454,369 HUF), and the total value of the Cost Compensation Agreement, the 3rd and 4th contract amendments (3,314,633,969 HUF), and that an infringement had been established against the 2nd-rank plaintiff several times in the past two years, while no such infringement had been established against the 1st-rank plaintiff previously. He described the violation as extremely serious. He highlighted that the main subject of contract amendment No. 3

When determining the contracting authority, the conditions of the procurement requirement were designed so that it could be obtained exclusively from the first-tier plaintiff, and this was assessed in the context of the gravity of the infringement. It included in its assessment the fact that the contracting parties themselves stated in the Cost Compensation Agreement that both contracting parties were responsible for the situation created by the clogged “uncloggable TVMs”. It assessed the infringement against the first-tier plaintiff that it was not repairable. It included in its assessment the fact that the clogged cases were first classified as vandalism, and later a new contractual provision was created for them, despite the fact that they were a case specified as a technical requirement in the technical specifications of the second-tier plaintiff. It also took into account that the contract was partly financed from a grant, so a penalty for repayment may be associated with the infringement. It specifically addressed the penalty related to the second request element. It stated that the different fines were justified by the fact of the further infringement against the second-tier claimant, while it assessed the contribution and responsibility of the first-tier and second-tier claimants as being the same with regard to the infringements established on the basis of the fourth, fifth and sixth elements of the claim.

The applicants' claims, the defendants' counterclaims and the defendant's statement in intervention

[11] The first-rank plaintiff brought his action for the review of the part of the first-rank defendant’s decision covering the fourth, fifth and sixth elements of the ex officio initiative. In his action, he requested, on the basis of Section 339(2)(q) of Act III of 1952 on the Code of Civil Procedure (hereinafter: Pp.) and Section 172(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the amendment of the decision and the declaration of the absence of a violation of law in his case, and, in the alternative, the Pp. Pursuant to Section 339 (1), the provisions of the decision relating to him are repealed, thirdly, the decision is amended in this respect and the fine is waived, fourthly, the decision is repealed and the first-tier defendant is ordered to initiate new proceedings, stating that there is no legal possibility to impose a fine on the first-tier plaintiff, and finally, the amount of the fine imposed on him is reduced by amending the decision. He also requested payment of his costs incurred in the lawsuit.

[12] The first-tier plaintiff stated in his claim as a fact which element of the ex officio initiative he was named as liable or possibly liable, and further stated that the ex officio initiative of the defendant intervener did not request a finding of violation of Section 141. (8) of the Civil Procedure Code against the contracting parties. In view of these, he raised procedural objections (lack of extension of the investigation, lack of proper notification, exceeding the administrative deadline), in connection with which, in addition to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, he also referred to the violation of the Fundamental Law and to the Constitutional Court's decision 5/2017. (III. 10.) AB, as well as to a decision of the Curia. In terms of the elements of the application concerning him, he explained that, contrary to his previous practice, the first-tier defendant treats the liability of the contracting authority and the tenderer in relation to the violation of public procurement rules as practically the same, which seriously violates the principles of legal certainty and the rule of law, because thus the winning tenderer is obliged to bear the public procurement legal consequences of the contracting authority's decisions without being the addressee of the legal norms binding for the conduct of the public procurement procedure. According to his position, the satisfaction of the procurement requirement in accordance with public procurement legislation is solely the obligation and responsibility of the purchasing contracting authority, and the contracting authority is in a position to decide on the conduct of the public procurement pr

In view of the above. The addressee of the unlawful contract modification (which means the unlawful omission of the public procurement) under Section 141 (8) of the Public Procurement Act is the contracting authority, so the contracting authority is able to commit this. He referred to Section 4 of the Public Procurement Act, the public procurement procedure is obliged to be conducted by the organisations specified as the contracting authority. In his claim, he explained separately for each element of the application, on what grounds the decision is unfounded in his opinion.

[13] The first-tier plaintiff referred to the case law regarding the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, according to which the fact that another economic operator could have performed does not in itself mean that it would have met the contracting authority's requirements in every respect. He pointed out that there may be cases where, despite this, the contracting authority may lawfully decide to amend the contract, avoiding the conduct of a new public procurement procedure. He emphatically disputed that he was the addressee of the contract amendment rules of the Public Procurement Act, and in particular not the addressee of Section 141(8) of the Public Procurement Act.

He submitted that if a violation of law pursuant to Section 141(8) of the Civil Procedure Code could nevertheless be established against him, then the first-rank defendant should have demonstrated how he committed the violation alleged against him and what his unlawful conduct was. According to his position, even if the first-rank defendant could have demonstrated this, it is certain that it cannot be of the same gravity as the liability of the second-rank plaintiff, and this will affect the sanction.

[14] The additional arguments in the first-tier plaintiff's claim covered the Cost Compensation Agreement (the fifth element of the ex officio initiative) and Contract Amendment No. 4 (the sixth element of the ex officio initiative).

[15] Regarding the fine, the first-ranking plaintiff emphasized that it was conceptually impossible to establish the violations contained in the decision against him, and therefore the fine imposed on him was unlawful from the outset. He also specifically highlighted the unreasonableness of the assessment by the fact that the first-ranking defendant assessed the proportion of the contribution and liability of the first-ranking plaintiff and the second-ranking plaintiff equally. He also considered it concerning that the first-ranking defendant had imposed unreasonable requirements on him by expecting a comprehensive legality examination from the bidders during the contract amendment.

[16] In its action, the second-ranking plaintiff primarily requested the amendment of the first-ranking defendant's decision and the determination of the absence of a violation of law with regard to the fourth, fifth and sixth elements of the ex officio initiative, the waiver of the fine, while in the case of the decision related to the second element, the waiver of the imposition of a fine was requested. Secondarily, it requested the annulment of the decision - with the exception of the second element - on the grounds that the reduction of the amount of the fine was justified due to the absence of a violation, and it also requested that the first-ranking defendant be ordered to conduct new proceedings. Thirdly, it requested the amendment of the decision in such a way that the court refrains from imposing a fine on it. Fourthly, it requested the amendment of the decision and the waiver of the amount of the fine. It also requested the determination of its legal costs. In its action, it alleged that the Civil Code was violated. He named Section 2, Section 4 (1), Section 141 (4) points b) and c) and (8), Section 158 (1) and Section 164 (3) and (5). The initiative is the fourth

In the subject of the element of the Act, it pointed out that the Act only intends to sanction conduct that unjustifiably excludes competition, and that it only has to substantiate the legal title of the contract amendment, but is not obliged to justify why the content of the procurement request was developed in the manner set out in the amendment. In view of the legal basis under Section 141 (4) b) of the Act, it continues to consider the legal title to be well-founded.

[17] In his partially clarified claim, the third-tier plaintiff requested a declaration of invalidity of the unlawful contract amendments based on the arguments he had put forward.

[18] The first-rank defendant requested the dismissal of the claims in its counterclaim. In connection with the first-rank plaintiff's claim, it emphasized that the infringement was established against it solely for the violation of a legal norm to which it was the addressee, namely the addressees of the provisions on contract amendment set out in Section 141 of the Civil Code are the parties concluding the contract. It submitted that contracts concluded on the basis of a public procurement procedure are subject to civil law regulations, with the exceptions set out in the Civil Code, and based on Section 240 (1) of Act IV of 1959 on the Civil Code (hereinafter: the Civil Code) and Section 141 (1) of the Civil Code, the addressees of the civil and public procurement regulations are clearly the parties, i.e. in this case the first-rank and second-rank plaintiffs. The conditions for the amendment were not met, so the contract amendment was unlawful, these legal acts can only be violated jointly, the 2nd-tier plaintiff could not amend the contract on its own, as this requires the mutual agreement of the parties. In connection with the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, it referred to the provisions of paragraphs 56 and 58 of its decision, stating that the 2nd-tier plaintiff wanted to implement the web sales channel within the framework of the AFC Project before concluding the TVM contract, so the circumstance in itself that the procurement requirement for the procurement of the web sales channel arose earlier than the conclusion of the contract for the implementation of the TVM sales channel excludes the statutory condition for the admissibility of the amendment case that the procurement is required from the original contracting party. It explained its arguments regarding the fifth and sixth elements of initiative in connection with the claim of the 1st-tier plaintiff, and also disputed the 1st-tier plaintiff's submissions regarding the contractual value. Against the argument of the claim regarding the fine, it consistently emphasized that the infringement was committed jointly by the contracting parties, and that the consequences of the contractual amendments reached by mutual agreement are borne jointly and equally by the parties. According to its position, the first-rank plaintiff was unable to identify a group of data that was relevant and that it did not present in this context. The first-rank defendant referred to the fact that in paragraph 73 of its decision it took into account that no infringement had been established against the first-rank plaintiff in the past two years, and furthermore, it set out the aspects taken into account in the imposition of the fine in the decision.

[19] In connection with the claim of the plaintiff of the second rank, the first-rank defendant emphasized that in paragraph 73 of the decision he gave detailed reasons for why he decided to impose the fine and what aspects he took into particular account when determining the amount of the fine. In connection with the contract amendment no. 3, he pointed out that the plaintiff of the second rank claims against the documents that he considered it unlawful due to the lack of the condition under Section 141(4)(b) of the Civil Code. He emphasized that the decision clearly states that an infringement was found because one of the

There was no modification condition either. In this regard, it referred to points 53 and 59 of its decision, examining the modification conditions separately, including the condition under paragraph (4) b), the absence of which it provided detailed justification for in point 58 of the decision.
In addition, he repeated the arguments highlighted in connection with the claim of the first-tier plaintiff. He denied that it could be read from his decision that he had acknowledged the existence of an economic reason. He then also presented his objections to the second-tier plaintiff's further claims - such as the Cost Compensation Agreement and Contract Amendment No. 4.

[20] The respondent intervener agreed with the content of the first respondent's counter-application.
He referred to the fact that the contracting authority is the primary, but not the only, obliged party to ensure the proper conduct of the public procurement procedure. He pointed out that the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union clearly supports his position by stating that national legislation that allows both the establishment of an infringement and the imposition of a fine against the successful tenderer in addition to the contracting authority is not contrary to EU law. In relation to contract amendment No. 3, he highlighted that the possibility of changing the original contractual partner was not ruled out a priori due to the objective technical and legal nature and specificities of the procurement claim of the second-tier claimant, but due to the specific method chosen by the second-tier claimant to satisfy the procurement claim. In connection with the claim for a reduction of the amount of the fine, referring to Section 121(1)(e) of the Pp., he failed to specify the amount of the reduction in terms of amount.

He then presented his arguments regarding the claim of the second-tier plaintiff.

[21] In the joint action for the declaration of invalidity of the contract amendments resulting from the unlawful amendment, the second and third defendants requested in their counterclaim that the claim of the third plaintiff be dismissed and that costs be awarded. In their claims, they maintained their arguments regarding the legality of the third and fourth contract amendments and the Cost Compensation Agreement concluded between them, as a result of which, in their opinion, the claim of the third plaintiff for the declaration of invalidity of the contract amendments is unfounded.

Judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union C-263/19

[22] The Budapest Metropolitan Court submitted a request for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU on the question of the determination of the liability of the tenderer for an unlawful modification of the contract. In its judgment No. C-263/19 of 14 May 2020 (hereinafter: the CJEU judgment), the Court of Justice of the European Union (hereinafter: the CJEU judgment) ruled that Article 2e of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, (2) of Directive 2007/66, recitals (19) to (21) of Directive 2007/66, and the provisions on water, energy, transport and postal services

Recitals (12), (113), (115) and (117), Article 1(2) and Article 89 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by contracting entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC [correctly: coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC] must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which, in the context of a review procedure initiated by the supervisory authority of its own motion, allows not only the contracting entity but also the successful tenderer of a public contract to be held liable for the infringement and to be fined in the event that, when a public contract is being modified in the course of performance, the application of the rules on the award of public contracts has been unlawfully disregarded. However, where national legislation provides for such a possibility, the review procedure must respect Union law, including its fundamental principles, since the public contract concerned itself falls within the material scope of the public procurement directives, both in its original form and after its unlawful modification. The amount of the fine sanctioning the unlawful modification of a public contract concluded between the contracting authority and the successful tenderer must be determined taking into account the conduct of each of the parties.

[23] The CJEU judgment also stated that the relevant articles of the directive cannot prevent a supervisory authority from initiating a review procedure of its own motion, nor from the infringement resulting from the modification of a public contract in progress in breach of the rules on the award of public contracts being attributable not only to the contracting authority but also to the successful tenderer and, consequently, from the imposition of a penalty in the form of a fine against both the contracting authority and the successful tenderer. However, where national legislation provides for a review procedure initiated by the supervisory authority of its own motion, which results in the liability of the successful tenderer for an infringement consisting in an unlawful amendment of a public contract in progress and, consequently, in the imposition of a fine on that tenderer, that procedure must be compatible with EU law, since such a contract itself, both in its original form and after its unlawful amendment, falls within the scope of the public procurement directives. Although, in the present case, it is for the referring court to assess whether the amount of the fine imposed on the first-tier applicant is proportionate to the objectives of the Law on public procurement, the supervisory authority or the referring court cannot, in determining such an amount, confine itself to taking into account solely the fact that, by virtue of the contractual relationship between the contracting parties, their joint conduct is necessary in order to effect the amendment of their public contract. That amount must be determined in the context of the conduct or activities of the parties to the public contract concerned during the period during which the parties planned to amend that contract.

Judgment of the court of first instance

Machine Translated by Google

[24] In the appealed judgment, the court of first instance found the claim of the first-tier plaintiff to be partly well-founded, partially changed the decision of the first-tier defendant D.561/17/2017 and, with regard to the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, omitted the provision establishing the infringement of the provisions of Section 141 (8) of the Civil Procedure Code against the first-tier plaintiff, at the same time reduced the amount of the fine imposed on the first-tier plaintiff to HUF 40,000,000 (forty million), exceeding which it dismissed the claim of the first-tier plaintiff, and dismissed the claim of the second-tier plaintiff in its entirety, further established the nullity of Contract Amendment No. 3, the Cost Compensation Agreement and Contract Amendment No. 4, and ordered the payment of the legal costs and the claim fee. It did not assess the procedural references as well-founded, therefore it examined the claims on their merits. Referring to the judgment of the CJEU, it pointed out that the rules for contract amendments falling within the scope of the CJEU are specified in Section 141 of the CJEU, which provision is addressed to the contracting parties. Referring to the provisions of the CJEU judgment, it stated that the public procurement law liability of the contracting parties cannot be derived solely from the existence of a civil law legal relationship between the parties and the conditions of the contract amendment defined by civil law (mutual agreement), but at the same time, the amount of the fine sanctioning the unlawful amendment of the public procurement contract must be determined taking into account the conduct of the individual parties, the tenderer may be the recipient of the fine sanction, but its liability cannot be treated as the same without examining the contribution. The first instance court examined the decision of the first-tier defendant along this principle, taking into account the previous judicial practice regarding the legality of contract amendments.

[25] As explained in the reasoning of the judgment, the court of first instance agreed with the examination method set out in the decision of the first-tier defendant regarding the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, and also with the fact that contract amendment No. 3 was aimed at the establishment and operation of a fee product sales channel constituting a new procurement requirement, but in its opinion, no exclusive aspects were indicated in connection with the product to be procured that could have justified the exclusion of competition by establishing the procurement requirement. In the lawsuit, the parties did not refute the rulings that the establishment of individual sales channels is possible independently; the web sales channel can be established independently of the TVM system; the establishment of a data connection with the AFC system can also be implemented in an independent development. The reasons cited in connection with contract amendment No. 3 did not support the existence of the statutory conditions for the contract amendment. The court of first instance agreed with the II. The plaintiff of the first class, arguing that the formation of his procurement requirement is his own, unquestionable decision, but if, during the procurement, he acts in violation of the rules of the applicable Public Procurement Act, he must bear the responsibility for it. There is no doubt that the conditions under Section 141 (4) b) of the Public Procurement Act do not define exclusive rights, but at the same time they assume the necessity of purchasing from the original contracting party, under additional conditions.
The first-tier defendant basically claimed the absence of this necessity when he argued with the previous existence of the demand for the sales channel and its connection to the AFC system. An additional (conjunctive) condition assigned to this condition, specified in sub-paragraphs ba) and bb) of paragraph (4) of Section 141 of the Civil Code, is connected, so the second-tier plaintiff wrongly argued that the economic advantage presented by him creates the legal possibility of amending the contract. He noted that in this regard the first-tier defendant had established the infringement on a well-founded basis, and that there was no legal possibility of amending the contract even by referring to sub-paragraphs ba) and bb) of paragraph (4) of Section 141 of the Civil Code. The amendment of the contract, as a bilateral legal transaction, is a characteristic of the obligation, and does not in itself establish liability under public procurement law, but at the same time the court of first instance

In its judgment, the first-tier defendant did not present any circumstances in its decision that would have led to a contract amendment and that would have indicated the establishment of the first-tier plaintiff's liability under public procurement law, so it found the first-tier plaintiff's claim well-founded in this respect.

[26] The first-instance court shared the position of the first-tier defendant in the Cost Compensation Agreement and Contract Amendment No. 4, according to which both contracting parties were liable for the unlawful amendment.

[27] In the area of the fine sanction, it was recorded that the first-tier defendant considered the imposition of a fine mandatory for the fourth, fifth and sixth elements of the ex officio initiative, as set out in point 73 of the decision, while considering it as an option in the case of the second element. It emphasised that, according to Section 165(11) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the first-tier defendant had to assess all aspects relevant to the case when determining the necessity of applying the fine (if the law allows this) and the amount of the fine and to account for them in its decision. The Code of Civil Procedure provides an exemplary list in this regard, therefore the specific characteristics of the case determine the range of aspects that can actually be taken into account. In connection with the imposition of the fine, it examined the legality of the first-tier defendant’s decision on the basis of Section 339/B of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the case of the second-tier defendant, the second-tier defendant had to assess all aspects relevant to the case when determining the necessity of applying the fine (if the law allows this) and the amount of the fine. assessed the fine imposed on the plaintiff as lawful.

[28] The court of first instance pointed out in the reasoning of the judgment that the first-tier defendant assessed the parties' contribution and liability in respect of the infringement established in respect of the fourth, fifth and sixth elements of the ex officio initiative as being the same in all amendments, while in the case of contract amendment no. 3 it took into account the contracting authority's conduct, as a result of which the product could only be purchased from the winning bidder. It assessed the estimated value, the contractual values, and the blatant seriousness of the infringement equally for both parties, but the two parties' history in terms of the infringement was different, which was not weighted, and the first-tier defendant did not give reasons for the reason for not making the distinction. Regarding the issue of liability - referring to the judgment of the CJEU - it stated that it cannot be derived from a mere agreement of will in terms of obligations. A sanction may be related to public procurement law liability, which can be clarified by examining the circumstances that necessitated the modification in the case of a contract modification and may lead to the violation of one of the cases allowing modification regulated in Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code. With regard to the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, the infringement established against the first-degree plaintiff and the applied sanction were both assessed as unlawful.

[29] The court of first instance found the claim of the second-tier plaintiff to be unfounded both in terms of the finding of the infringements and the imposition of the fine, and explained the reasons for this in its judgment.

Machine Translated by Google

[30] The court of first instance found the claim of the third-tier plaintiff well-founded, explaining that the 3rd and 4th contract amendments and the Cost Compensation Agreement were unlawfully concluded pursuant to Section 141(8) of the Civil Code, and thus their necessary legal consequence is nullity pursuant to Section 137(1)(a) of the Civil Code, the determination of which was ordered based on the secondary claim of the third-tier plaintiff.

The appeal, the cross-appeal, the counter-appeal and the respondent's intervener's observations

[31] The first-tier defendant filed an appeal against the first-tier judgment's amending provision regarding the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, primarily requesting the first-tier judgment to be changed based on Section 253(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, since - in his opinion - the first-tier court unlawfully interpreted Section 141(1) and (8) of the Code of Civil Procedure, thereby erroneously ordering the change of the decision, and the dismissal of the claim regarding the fourth element of the initiative is also a lawful decision. He also requested the first-tier judgment to be set aside based on Section 253(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, since the first-tier court overestimated the fine imposed on the first-tier plaintiff in violation of Section 165(11) of the Code of Civil Procedure. He also requested reimbursement of his legal costs incurred in the second-instance proceedings, the amount of which he calculated at 70,000 forints, and then at 124,000 forints when making his observations on the cross-appeal.

[32] As grounds for the appeal, it was explained that, according to Section 141(1) and (8) of the Civil Code, the liability of the contracting parties for an unlawful contract amendment can be established, but on the contrary - from the findings in points [79], [62] and [70] of the first-instance judgment - the first-instance court concluded that the finding of a breach of law and the applied sanction against the first-instance plaintiff in respect of contract amendment No. 3 were unlawful. The first-instance court established that contract amendment No. 3 was unlawful, but exempted the first-instance plaintiff from liability for an unlawful contract amendment as a breach of law under Section 141(1) and (8) of the Civil Code, which contradicts the provisions of the Civil Code. The references to Section 141(1) and (8), the case law, the CJEU judgment, and the first instance judgment contradict what was stated in point 73 of the decision of the first-tier defendant in the context of the consideration of the fine.

[33] The first-tier defendant submitted that, contrary to the interpretation of Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code, the first-tier judgment reached the opposite conclusion, since the legislation establishes mandatory conduct for the “parties”, and in the case of contract amendment No. 3, which is considered to be infringing, the first-tier judgment found that only one of the contracting parties, the second-tier plaintiff, committed an infringement. According to the first-tier defendant’s interpretation, it does not follow from the CJEU judgment that in the event of an unlawful contract amendment, the winning bidder may be exempted from liability for the unlawful contract amendment; the CJEU judgment requires individualization, consideration, and, where appropriate, the determination of the infringement and the renunciation of the imposition of a fine. He challenged the provisions of paragraphs [62] and [79] of the first-tier judgment - according to which the

The public procurement law liability of contracting parties cannot be derived solely from the existence of a civil legal relationship between the parties and the conditions of the contract amendment defined by civil law (mutual agreement), and it is considered to be expressly contrary to Section 141(1) and (8) of the Civil Procedure Code and to what is stated in the judgment of the CJEU. In the context of judicial practice, it referred to the judgment of the Curia Kfv.II.37.434/2017/12. and the judgment of the Metropolitan Court 104.K.706.819/2020/5., which support that judicial practice accepts the objective legal liability of the other party to the contract for the contract amendment based on Section 141(1) and (8) of the Civil Procedure Code and the judgment of the CJEU. In his oral statement at the appeal hearing, he stated that by objective liability he means that the parties conclude a contract as a result of the public procurement procedure, by which they enter into a process regulated by public law, and if the infringement is established, then a sanction should also be applied in parallel with the establishment of liability for the infringement.

[34] In its appeal, the first-tier defendant maintained the provisions of paragraph 73 of its decision regarding the assessment of the amount of the fine. In its view, paragraph [70] of the first-tier judgment erroneously highlights that, according to the decision, the second-tier plaintiff created the conditions that served as the basis for the infringement. In contrast, in paragraphs 56 and 58 of its decision, it examined the conditions under Section 141(4)(b) of the Civil Code, not in the context of the first-tier plaintiff's liability for the infringement, but by describing in a descriptive manner how the second-tier plaintiff created conditions under which the unlawful contract amendment could have taken place. In its view, by signing the contract, both parties committed the infringement, and the fact that the second-tier plaintiff formulated the new procurement claim does not exempt the first-tier plaintiff from this. The first-tier plaintiff signed contract amendment No. 3 in the knowledge of the new procurement requirement and the new technical content, as he expressly undertook to implement it. In light of this, he should have recognized that the contract amendment conflicts with Section 141(4)(b) of the Public Procurement Act, as it concerns a new order requirement not included in the original contract. In addition, it can also be expected that the economic operator participating in the public procurement will incur a public procurement obligation for the service for consideration based on the value of the contract amendment (which in this case is 659,400,000 HUF net).

He emphasized that in point 73 of his decision, he explained in detail, based on the legal provisions in force on December 15, 2017 and the judicial practice known at that time, the conditions under which he imposed the fine on the first-tier plaintiff, and he also specifically referred to contract amendment no. 3. In his opinion, the first-instance judgment was based on the facts of the decision.

[35] With regard to the amount of the fine imposed by the court of first instance, he emphasised that the criteria for assessing the amount of the fine cannot be established from the judgment of first instance, and furthermore, Section 172(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure referred to in paragraph [80] of the judgment cannot be applied in the present case, as it serves as the basis for a fine that liberates in the event of a deviation from the nullity pursuant to Section 137(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure in view of the overriding public interest. In his view, if the court of first instance takes over the defendant's jurisdiction by reassessing the fine, then it must assess all the conditions of the law and all the circumstances of the case, and account must be taken of the scope of the assessment, but the lawful scope of the decision cannot be established from the reasoning of the judgment.

[36] In its cross-appeal, the first-tier plaintiff requested a review of the judgment provisions relating to all three contract amendments classified as unlawful. Its primary request was to change the first-tier judgment based on Section 253(2) of the Civil Procedure Code in such a way that the reasoning made it clear that its liability could not be established in relation to contract amendment number 3 either because Section 141(8) of the Civil Procedure Code does not contain an obligation that can be interpreted in relation to the tenderer, and if it did, then a new public procurement procedure did not have to be conducted based on Section 141(4)(b) of the Civil Procedure Code, and in the operative part, to omit the finding of a violation of law in relation to the first-tier plaintiff in relation to all further contract amendments, including Contract Amendment Number 4 and the Cost Compensation Agreement, and to omit the imposition of a fine in relation to these as well. In the alternative, the Civil Procedure Code requested that Pursuant to Section 253(2), the first-instance judgment was changed, the fine imposed on the first-rank plaintiff in respect of Contract Amendment No. 4 and the Cost Compensation Agreement was reduced. The first-rank defendant was also ordered to reimburse the incurred legal costs.

[37] The first-tier plaintiff emphasized in the context of amending and supplementing the reasoning of the first-instance judgment that, according to his unchanged position, Section 141(8) of the Public Procurement Act does not contain an obligation that can be interpreted as applicable to the tenderer, and if it could be concluded that Section 141(8) of the Public Procurement Act also constitutes an obligation applicable to the tenderer, based on Section 141(4)(b) of the Public Procurement Act - due to the fulfillment of the prerequisites stated therein - a new public procurement procedure did not have to be conducted in the case of contract amendment No. 3, therefore, as explained in the statement of claim - the public procurement could be lawfully omitted. He further made references beyond contract amendment No. 3, including those explained in the context of the amount of the fine.

[38] The second-tier plaintiff did not appeal against the first-tier judgment, and given that neither the first-tier defendant's appeal nor the first-tier plaintiff's cross-appeal affect his procedural position, he did not make any substantive observations.

[39] In its observations on the cross-appeal, the first-tier defendant stressed that the cross-appeal could not extend to the part of the first-tier judgment that exceeded the fourth element. The first-tier plaintiff disputed the arguments put forward by the first-tier plaintiff in the cross-appeal regarding the amendment of the reasoning of the judgment in connection with contract amendment no. 3 (section 2.2 of the cross-appeal) and requested that the reasons set out in sections 57-59 of the administrative decision be taken into account. As regards the cross-appeal’s reasoning regarding the imposition of the fine (section 2.5), it pointed out that it supported its secondary appeal.

[40] In its written statement, the defendant intervener requested that the cross-appeal of the first-tier plaintiff be dismissed and that the first-tier plaintiff be ordered to pay the costs incurred by the defendant intervener in the appeal proceedings. In relation to the procedural arguments of the first-tier plaintiff regarding the scope of the cross-appeal, it agreed with those presented in the first-tier defendant's observations. In addition, it pointed out that the first-tier plaintiff had wrongly, out of its systematic and logical context, interprets Section 141(8) of the Public Procurement Act, and on the other hand, ignores the fact that the public procurement procedure was not omitted pursuant to Section 4(1) of the Public Procurement Act, but rather the contract was amended by unlawfully omitting the public procurement procedure (a special case), to which Section 141(8) of the Public Procurement Act applies. According to his position, the first-tier plaintiff misinterprets this as a simple rule of omission, since it also imposes a clear expectation on the winning bidder (it is necessary to submit a bid for the purpose of amending the public procurement contract, and in the absence of a new public procurement procedure for this purpose and the possibility of lawfully amending the contract, it must refrain from amending the contract). He disputed the position of the first-tier plaintiff summarized in point 26 of the cross-appeal, and in his view, the second-tier plaintiff Violation of Section 141(8) of the Civil Code may also be committed by the successful tenderer, who is the clear addressee of this legal provision. The position of the first-order plaintiff expressed in relation to Section 141(4) c) of the Civil Code was also contested on the merits, emphasizing that the conditions specified therein are conjunctive, so the absence of even one of them results in the contract amendment being unlawful.

[41] In his oral counter-appeal at the appeal hearing, the first-instance plaintiff requested the dismissal of the appeal. According to his position, the first-instance court correctly perceived that in an administrative lawsuit, the legality of the administrative decision must be decided within the framework of the administrative decision. During the 3rd contract amendment, the web development requirement set the course that the second-instance plaintiff wanted to conclude a contract with the person with whom the original contract also existed. Under such circumstances, the first-instance plaintiff cannot be held liable, nor can he be fined. In view of the partial dismissal of the cross-appeal, his request to change the reasoning of the first-instance court’s judgment remained, for which the fee was 8,000 forints, and therefore he requested the refund of 1,250,000 forints of the fee previously imposed of 1,258,000 forints.

The Curia's procedure

[42] By its order No. 11 dated 17 November 2021, the Curia partially rejected the cross-appeal filed by the first-tier plaintiff - covering the part of the first-instance judgment not affected by the appeal - on the basis of the reasons stated in the order, since it follows from the provision contained in Section 244 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure that a cross-appeal extending beyond the scope of the appeal is excluded. In view of this, the appeal proceedings in relation to the cross-appeal could further extend to the examination of the merits of the part of the cross-appeal that was not rejected.

The Curia's decision and legal reasons

[43] The appeal of the first-tier defendant is well-founded, and the cross-appeal of the first-tier plaintiff is unfounded, as follows.

[44] The Curia overturned the judgment of the first instance court based on Section 253(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, within the limits of the appeal of the first-tier defendant, the cross-appeal of the first-tier plaintiff not exceeding the scope of the appeal, and the counter-appeal, thus the second instance proceedings exclusively covered the examination of the references made in the first instance judgment provision regarding the fourth element of the ex officio initiative - including the fine related thereto. In doing so, it established that the first instance court examined the relevant material of the administrative proceedings, the statements and submissions of the parties in the proceedings, initiated preliminary ruling proceedings, took into account the provisions of the CJEU judgment when making the first instance judgment, developed its interpretation, and drew the conclusion that the claim of the first-tier plaintiff is well-founded to a lesser extent. This conclusion of the first instance court was based on the fact that the Civil Procedure Code The Court did not assess the unlawful contract amendment pursuant to Section 141(8) - which means the unlawful omission of public procurement - as an objective form of liability, but in relation to contract amendment No. 3 it took into account that - in its opinion - the first-tier defendant did not indicate any circumstances giving rise to the contract amendment that would have indicated the establishment of the first-tier plaintiff's liability under public procurement law. Referring to the contents of the appeal, the cross-appeal and the counter-appeal, the Curia highlights the following.

[45] The first-rank defendant correctly referred to the necessity of establishing the infringement due to the strict liability structure, based on the provisions of Section 141(1) and (8) of the Civil Code, and thus to the fact that the infringement must be established for the account of both parties involved in the contract amendment. In this context, the Curia first examined the first-rank defendant’s argument regarding the existence of strict liability.

[46] The first-tier defendant pointed out factually that, as stated in the Curia's judgment Kfv.II.37.434/2017/12., "Liability for public procurement law violations is objective."
(Judgment No. Kfv.II.37.434/2017/12, paragraph [44]). At the same time, the Curia notes that the facts of the referenced judgment No. Kfv.II.37.434/2017/12 and the present litigation are not completely identical, since in the referenced case there was no public procurement procedure and no amendment of the contract concluded as a result of the public procurement procedure, and a violation of public procurement law was not established against the bidder (in the absence of a public procurement procedure, there was no bidder). According to the facts forming the basis of the referenced Curia judgment, the unlawful omission of the public procurement procedure constituted a violation, since the procurements were considered to be computable, and given the computable nature, a public procurement procedure should have been conducted. The reasoning of the cited Curia judgment stated, among other things, that “The first-tier defendant did not have to examine or assess why the first-tier plaintiff (note: in the cited case, the buyer who entered into a contract by unlawfully omitting the public procurement procedure to satisfy the procurement requirement) was not aware of the rules of the public procurement procedure and why he did not comply with them”, just as it can be read from the reasoning of the judgment that it did not have to examine whether there was any intent on the part of the infringer. The public procurement procedure should have been conducted, therefore its omission could be assessed as an infringement against the first-tier plaintiff in the cited case. The reasoning of the Curia judgment No. Kfv.II.37.434/2017/12 also states (point [45], penultimate sentence) that “The obligation to conduct the public procurement procedure and the related liability lie exclusively with the first-tier plaintiff.” (Note: the sole responsibility in this case, the court did not record it in the context of the sales partner contracting with the first-tier plaintiff, but stated it in relation to the authority providing support for the first-tier plaintiff's application and concluding a contract with him in this regard.)

[47] The Curia assessed that the difference between the factual circumstances, and thus the difference in the violations that occurred, is not relevant from the point of view of examining the liability structure as a legal issue, since there is an identity in that in both cases a public procurement violation occurred, in which the legislator does not make the application of the legal consequence dependent on discretion, but rather imposes a mandatory fine. In addition to the similarity of these basic characteristics, the difference in the further factual elements does not affect the definition of the liability structure, and thus the answer to the legal issue of what liability structure the Civil Code regulates in the case of unlawful contract modification as a violation. Before further examining the liability structure, the Curia points out that the argument of the first-tier defendant in relation to the CJEU judgment is correct insofar as the CJEU judgment makes individualisation and consideration mandatory not when establishing the infringement, but when imposing the fine. However, the first-tier defendant incorrectly concludes that the CJEU judgment would support the existence of the objective liability structure, since the CJEU judgment did not examine the liability structure itself, but rather provided that it is not contrary to the relevant EU standards if national legislation also establishes the liability of the tenderer for the infringement.

[48] In connection with the liability structure, the Curia points out that objective liability is typically an administrative liability, which differs from both the liability structures typical of criminal law (based on guilt/culpability) and civil law (typically based on blameworthiness). Objective liability was defined by the Constitutional Court in its 60/2009. (V. 28.)
In its decision, the Constitutional Court examined in detail the liability for road traffic violations, to which it also referred in its later decisions [e.g. Decision 16/2018. (X. 8.) AB]. As is evident from the decisions of the Constitutional Court, the characteristic of objective liability, which is widespread in the field of administrative legal liability, is that it attaches the legal consequence to the infringing conduct itself, regardless of the culpability or blameworthiness of the infringer, and thus the application of the sanction is more effective, since it encourages law-abiding conduct through the inevitability of liability. In the case of objective liability, therefore, the violation of administrative legislation in itself entails a legal consequence with regard to the illegality, regardless of the blameworthiness or possible guilt of the person(s) who committed the illegal conduct. These subjective elements do not need to be examined in order to establish a violation of law, since the legislator attributes such importance to the community interest protected by law that it must be protected regardless of the guilt or blameworthiness of the violator. In the case of objective liability, therefore, the fact of unlawful conduct establishes the establishment of a violation of law, for which the law prescribes the application of the mandatory legal consequence to be imposed.

[49] The Curia also notes with regard to the liability structure that the Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code (Budapest, 2016 Edited by: Attila Dezsÿ) in connection with the statutory provisions relating to the decisions of the first-tier defendant, such as Section 165 of the Civil Procedure Code, points out on the one hand that in the case of the most serious violations, the imposition of a fine cannot be omitted, and in certain cases - such as Section 165 (6) of the Civil Procedure Code - in addition to the finding of the violation, the I.

The defendant of the order is obliged to impose the fine. The Commentary states in relation to the most serious violations punishable by a mandatory fine that “the legal consequences of public procurement cases are otherwise objective, i.e. they do not depend on intent, negligence, imputability or the establishment of any other subjective form of liability. Instead of establishing the level of liability, public procurement law punishes all violations on the basis of objective liability…”.

[50] In the present case, Section 141(1) and (8) of the Civil Procedure Code define the unlawful conduct (contract modification by unlawful omission of public procurement) which is a violation and is to be borne by the perpetrators of the unlawful conduct, and Section 165(6)(e) of the Civil Procedure Code makes the application of the legal consequence of a fine mandatory in the event of a violation. The application of the legal consequence of a fine is mandatory against the perpetrator of the unlawful conduct, but the amount of the fine is determined by taking into account all the circumstances of the case, and thus by weighing it, based on the provision of Section 165(11) of the Civil Procedure Code. The judgment of the CJEU does not contain any provision that would break this objective liability; the determination of the infringement and the application of the legal consequence related to it continue to be carried out on an objective basis, taking into account the fact of the unlawful conduct. The CJEU ruling sets out the requirements necessary to ensure respect for EU principles with regard to the circumstances to be assessed in the context of the amount of the fine, which influences the amount of the fine, but does not affect the determination of liability for the infringement and the mandatory application of the fine.

[51] The Curia then examined who could be the perpetrator of the unlawful conduct under Section 141(8) of the Civil Code, and therefore who could be held liable for the infringement. The first-tier defendant and the defendant intervener correctly pointed out during the appeal proceedings that the infringement was an unlawful amendment to the contract, and therefore the perpetrators could be the contracting parties amending the contract, i.e. in the present case, the first-tier and second-tier plaintiffs. This was sufficiently supported by the fact that Section 141(1) of the Civil Code orders the provisions of the subtitle “Amendment to the Contract” to be applied to the contracting parties, and thus the infringement under Section 141(8) of the Civil Code must also be established for the contracting parties. The conclusion drawn in the judgment of the court of first instance that no circumstances giving rise to a contract amendment were presented in the decision of the first-tier defendant that would have indicated the establishment of public procurement law liability cannot result in the omission of the establishment of a violation in the case of contract amendment no. 3, since in the case of strict liability, the establishment of a violation is based on the implementation of unlawful conduct - in this case, the unlawful amendment of the contract by omitting public procurement - and furthermore, it does not follow from either the provisions of the Civil Code or the judgment of the CJEU that a liability structure different from strict liability would apply.

[52] The Curia emphasises that the provisions of Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act must be interpreted in the light of the judgment of the CJEU. Based on Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act, as explained above, not only the contracting authority but also the contracting parties may be held liable for an unlawful amendment to a public procurement contract. In this regard, the Curia refers to the statements made by another Curia panel in judgment No. Kfv.IV.37.130/2021/4. [25], according to which “The judgment of the European Court of Justice in case C-263/19 c doubt that the successful tenderer of the public procurement contract is also liable for the unlawful disregard of the rules set out in Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act when amending the public procurement contract and may also be subject to a sanction in the legal remedy proceedings initiated by the supervisory authority. Since this decision supported the successful tenderer's subjection to the scope of the Public Procurement Act in relation to the amendment of the contract, the court of first instance acted lawfully when it undertook a substantive examination of the plaintiff's claim and rejected it by referring to the EU decision as a legal basis." The present Chamber of the Curia agrees with the above interpretation of Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act following the EU Court's judgment and does not intend to deviate from it. The CJEU ruling does not affect the liability structure, the CJEU ruling only states that it is not contrary to the relevant EU standards if internal regulations make the modification of the contract that does not comply with the public procurement rules the responsibility of not only the contracting authority, but also the successful tenderer. Unlawful modification of the contract, as a violation, can therefore exist not only on the part of the contracting authority, but also on the part of the tenderer. However, the manner in which this is done is determined by the rules of national law.

[53] Pursuant to the provisions of Section 141(1) and (8) of the Public Procurement Act, the contracting parties may implement an unlawful modification of a public procurement contract as a violation of law. The contracting parties must conduct the public procurement in compliance with the provisions of the Public Procurement Act, which naturally includes the fact that they must act in accordance with the provisions of Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act when modifying the contract. This obligation also results in the contracting parties being able to modify the contract concluded between them on the basis of the public procurement procedure if the statutory conditions are met. If the conditions for modifying the contract according to the Public Procurement Act are not met, the contract may be modified only by reopening the competition. The legality of the modification of the contract is to be proven by the person who modified the contract. If the person who modified the contract cannot prove the legality of the modification of the contract, the burden of proof falls on the person who modified the contract. The breach of law is established by the Public Procurement Act. does not require either blame or guilt, thus, with the implementation of the unlawful conduct, a violation of law exists on the part of the contracting parties, the legal consequence of which is the imposition of a fine pursuant to Section 165(6)(e) of the Civil Code. The first-rank defendant therefore had sufficient grounds to challenge the first-rank judgment's finding of no violation of law with regard to contract amendment No. 3, and consequently the change of its decision to include the fine. The violation is incumbent on the first-rank plaintiff with regard to contract amendment No. 3, and thus the mandatory imposition of a fine also exists in this regard. This partial well-foundedness of the first-rank defendant's appeal was not refuted by the first-rank plaintiff's counter-appeal, since it did not substantiate the existence of the statutory conditions for the contract amendment.

[54] The first-tier defendant also correctly argued in its appeal that in paragraphs 56 and 58 of its decision it did not examine the extent of liability for the infringement, but rather assessed whether one of the circumstances listed there establishes the legality of the contract amendment, taking into account the conditions set out in paragraph (4) of Section 141(b) of the Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, paragraph [70] of the reasoning of the first-tier judgment contains an erroneous conclusion that one of these circumstances precludes the finding of infringement by the first-tier plaintiff. The proportion of liability for the infringement and the degree of contribution do not influence the determination of the infringement, but the amount of the fine.

[55] In connection with the appeal arguments regarding the determination of the fine, the Curia points out that the first-instance defendant had sufficiently well-foundedly complained about the lack of criteria for assessing the amount of the fine imposed by the first-instance judgment, and also that, given the existing facts, Section 172(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure does not authorize the change of the amount of the fine, but given that the legal basis for imposing the fine exists, these references did not result in the change of the first-instance judgment. The first-instance court, taking a different position regarding the legal basis, omitted to establish a violation by the first-instance defendant, as a result of which it did not rule on this part of the first-instance plaintiff's claim relating to the imposition and amount of the fine. Paragraph [79] of the first-instance judgment expressly states that one of the reasons for changing the fine was the change in the seriousness of the infringement, and it is also clear from this paragraph that the first-instance court assessed the legality of the imposition of the fine, including the determination of the first-instance defendant's involvement in the infringement, solely with regard to the Cost Compensation Agreement and Contract Amendment No. 4, but the legality of the fine imposed on the first-instance plaintiff for Contract Amendment No. 3, which is the subject of the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, as a violation, was not examined, so the first-instance plaintiff's claim in this part remained unexamined.

[56] The Curia emphasizes that it cannot decide for the first time in the second instance proceedings on the unexamined element of the first-instance plaintiff's claim, and it cannot assess the reasonableness of the assessment and the amount of the fine imposed by the first-instance defendant for the first time within the framework of the first-instance plaintiff's claim, as this would deprive the first-instance plaintiff of the right to legal remedy, and also for the reason that the appeal proceedings are not aimed at adjudicating the claim, but at examining the legality of the first-instance judgment.

[57] The Curia then examined the references made by the first-tier plaintiff in the part of the cross-appeal that was not dismissed. This part of the cross-appeal aimed to change the reasoning of the first-instance judgment, however, the arguments put forward in this regard do not substantiate the cross-appeal. The liability of the contracting authority for the infringement can be established according to the CJEU judgment and according to the case law expressed in the decision of another chamber of the Curia. An unlawful contract amendment, as an infringement, is incumbent on both the contracting authority and the contracting party pursuant to the provisions of Section 141(1) and (8) of the Public Procurement Act. It is a fact that public procurement also enters the civil law stage with the conclusion of the contract, but at the same time the mandatory rules for the amendment of the public procurement contract are contained in the Public Procurement Act, and the provisions of the Public Procurement Act must also apply during the amendment of the public procurement contract. objectives, for the achievement of which there are obligations not only for the contracting authority but also for the tenderer. The Curia emphasises that, pursuant to the provision in Section 2(3) of the Public Procurement Act, “The contracting authority and economic operators are obliged to act in accordance with the requirements of good faith and fairness in the public procurement procedure. Abuse of rights is prohibited.” This obligation also includes, with regard to a contract concluded on the basis of a public procurement procedure, that the contracting parties may amend the contract if the conditions set out in the Public Procurement Act are met. The mandatory requirement set out in Section 141(8) of the Public Procurement Act (according to which a public procurement contract may only be amended as a result of a new public procurement procedure, except in the cases set out in Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act) also applies to the tenderer, and thus contains an expectation and obligation towards it, just as the public procurement regulation contains expectations towards tenderers, including the winning tenderer.

also by the fact that, within the framework of statutory objectives and principles, the purity, transparency and publicity of the competition must be respected not only by the contracting authority, but also by the economic operator, and thus the winning bidder, which requirement must also be met during contract amendments.

[58] In connection with the first-tier plaintiff's cross-appeal based on Section 141(4)(b) of the Civil Code, the Curia points out that the first-tier defendant conducted the necessary investigation with regard to Section 141(4)(b) of the Civil Code and gave a detailed account in the justification of its decision of why the circumstances listed there do not establish the legality of the contract amendment. The first-tier defendant's justification of the first-tier defendant's decision related to Section 141(4)(b) of the Civil Code, and in this respect the legality of the administrative decision, was examined in detail in its judgment (paragraphs [64]-[67] of the first-tier judgment). In doing so, it did not assess the arguments put forward by the contracting parties in support of the legality of the contract amendment, in agreement with the first-tier defendant, as being in breach of the provisions of Section 141(4)(b) of the Civil Code. According to Section 141(4)(b)(ba) or (bb), the legal possibility of contract modification would have been created, and the first-instance court did not assess the prerequisites stated there as existing either. The first-instance plaintiff did not explain in his cross-appeal why he considered this reasoning of the first-instance judgment to be unlawful, he merely repeated the points made in his claim, which the first-instance court had already examined and correctly determined in the course of doing so that no case of legal contract modification existed. Thus, the first-instance plaintiff, without presenting any new facts or circumstances, baselessly referred in his cross-appeal that a new public procurement procedure did not have to be conducted based on Section 141(4)(b) of the Public Procurement Act.

[59] In view of the above, the Curia changed the first-instance judgment in the part affected by the appeal based on Section 253(2) of the Curia, and dismissed the claim of the first-instance plaintiff in the matter of the legal ground regarding the infringement under the fourth element of the ex officio initiative. The legal ground for applying the legal consequence of a fine therefore also exists in the case of this infringement, however, the first-instance court did not take a position on the legality of imposing a fine in this case - due to its different legal position regarding the legal ground -, therefore, the Curia ordered the first-instance court to rehear the case and issue a new decision in this case based on Section 252(3) of the Curia.

[60] In the new proceedings, the court of first instance must decide, within the limits of the claim of the first-tier plaintiff and the counterclaim of the first-tier defendant, on the claim for a fine imposed on the first-tier plaintiff for the violation established due to contract amendment No. 3 pursuant to the fourth element of the ex officio initiative.

The principle content of the decision

Machine Translated by Google

[61] An unlawful modification of a contract concluded as a result of a public procurement procedure that contravenes the rules of the Public Procurement Act is a public procurement infringement, for which the legislator does not require imputability or fault; the infringement exists by the implementation of the unlawful conduct on the part of the contracting parties. The expectations formulated in the CJEU judgment, ensuring respect for EU principles, such as the assessment of the conduct of the contracting parties, do not affect the ascertainability of the infringement, but the amount of the fine.

Closing part

[62] The Curia adjudicated the appeal and the part of the cross-appeal to be examined on the merits at a hearing, based on Section 340(6) of the Code of Civil Procedure, taking into account the statement of the first-tier plaintiff.

[63] The Curia considered that the appeal of the first-tier defendant was well-founded, however, the appeal proceedings ended with the first-instance court ordering the trial court to rehear the case and issue a new decision in the scope specified in this interim judgment. It assessed all this as meaning that there was no significant difference between the ratio of winning and losing cases in the appeal proceedings, thus, based on the provisions of Section 81(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, it ruled that each party shall bear its own costs incurred in the appeal proceedings.

[64] In view of the new procedure ordered, the Curia, in view of the action for judicial review of the administrative decision of the first-tier plaintiff, set aside the first-tier judgment provision regarding the partial fee of HUF 1,000,000 imposed on the first-tier plaintiff and HUF 500,000 imposed on the state, since the first-tier court must provide for this application fee in its new decision. In the present appeal proceedings, the fee for the application of the cross-appeal subject to substantive assessment is HUF 8,000, which is borne by the first-tier plaintiff, pursuant to Section 48 of Act XCIII of 1990 on Fees (hereinafter: the Itv.). The part of the cross-appeal of the first-tier plaintiff that has not been examined on the merits is exempt from fees pursuant to the provision contained in Section 57(1)(a) of the Itv. The first-ranking plaintiff did not have to be ordered to pay the appeal fee he had paid, as he had previously paid the additional appeal fee of HUF 1,258,000. In addition to the additional appeal fee of HUF 8,000, the first-ranking plaintiff is entitled to a refund of the HUF 1,250,000 (one million two hundred and fifty thousand) fee unnecessarily paid to the Curia's procedural fee account. The first-ranking plaintiff requested this refund at the hearing, and therefore the Curia will take separate action on this matter.

[65] The possibility of appeal against the interim judgment of the Curia is excluded by Sections 233(1) and 233/A of the Code of Civil Procedure, and review is excluded by Section 271(1)(e) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

consolidated action for the declaration of invalidity

í t is let:

The Metropolitan Court partially changes the decision No. D.561/17/2017 of the first-tier defendant and, with regard to the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, omits the provision establishing the infringement of Section 141 (8) of Act CXLIII of 2015 on Public Procurement (hereinafter: the Public Procurement Act) against the first-tier plaintiff and reduces the amount of the fine imposed on the first-tier plaintiff to HUF 40,000,000 (forty million), rejecting the claim of the first-tier plaintiff in excess of this amount and rejecting the claim of the second-tier plaintiff.

The Budapest Metropolitan Court finds that the contract amendment No. 3 between the first and second-ranking plaintiffs dated July 13, 2017; the Cost Compensation Agreement concluded on December 22, 2016 and the contract amendment No. 4 concluded on September 15, 2017 are null and void. It obliges the first-ranking plaintiff, as the third-ranking defendant, to pay the first-ranking defendant, as the third-ranking plaintiff, HUF 500,000 (five hundred thousand) within 15 days, and the defendant intervener HUF 300,000 (three hundred thousand) as partial litigation costs.

It obliges the 2nd-rank plaintiff, as the 2nd-rank defendant, to pay the 1st-rank defendant, as the 3rd-rank plaintiff, 1,000,000 (one million) forints (one million) in legal costs, and the 500,000 (five hundred thousand) forints (five hundred thousand) in legal costs to the 1st-rank defendant, as the 3rd-rank plaintiff, within 15 days.

It obliges the first-rank plaintiff, as a third-rank defendant, to pay the Hungarian State – upon a separate request from the tax authority – 2,500,000 (two million five hundred thousand) forints partial fee.

It obliges the second-ranking plaintiff, as the second-ranking defendant, to pay the Hungarian State – upon a separate request from the tax authority – a fee of 4,500,000 (four million five hundred thousand) forints. The remaining fee of 500,000 (five hundred thousand) forints shall be borne by the state.

An appeal against the judgment may be filed within 15 days of its publication, which must be submitted electronically to the Metropolitan Court, addressed to the Curia, through a legal representative.

Fact

[1] The contracting authority, the plaintiff of the second order (hereinafter referred to as the contracting authority), initiated the negotiated procedure for the production, delivery, installation and full operation of ticket vending machines (TVM) with a call for participation sent on 29 January 2013, which began with the publication of the notice and ended with the acceptance of the bid of the plaintiff of the first order, as the winning bidder (hereinafter referred to as the winning bidder), and ended with the contract concluded on 4 September 2013. The Main Contract concluded by the contracting parties

Machine Translated by Google

The project contract was annexed to a business contract, an operating contract, a technical specification, and the winning bidder's offer. The total value of the contract was HUF 5,561,690,409. During the public procurement procedure, the issue of the unblockability of the bank card and money slot openings of the TVM devices as a technical requirement had already arisen, since it was expected that no device would get in the way of the money that would hinder its acceptance or return, thus preventing unauthorized persons from accessing it.

When these openings were designed, they were expected to open only when performing their function.

[2] Section III.2.2 of the Operation Contract provided for the repair of TVM devices. According to subsection 1, in the event of a failure of the TVM devices – including any part of them, not only the main components, but specifically all components – during the operation period, the contractor shall be solely responsible, liable and at its own expense. A failure shall be deemed to be any malfunction or phenomenon in the operation of any given component, equipment or sub-assembly, as a result of which the given component, equipment or sub-assembly operates differently from the functional and/or performance parameters of the manufacturer and/or from the operational requirements applicable to it under the Main Project Contract.

A failure of the TVM device as a whole also occurs if a given TVM device fails to meet the operational requirements set out in the technical specifications or the applicable service level requirements, regardless of whether any of its components can be considered defective or not. According to Section III.4.1., the liability and risk of damage related to the tangible assets of the TVM system owned by the contracting authority and operated by the successful tenderer under the operating contract (e.g. the TVM devices themselves, any of their components, the parts necessary for fault repair) during the operating period shall be borne entirely and exclusively by the successful tenderer. This liability and risk of damage shall also extend to the entire TVM central control system and all software forming part of it, for which the contracting authority has acquired the right to use pursuant to Part 9 of the contract and which is operated by the successful tenderer during the operating period. According to Section III.4.2. According to point 1, this liability and risk of damage does not only cover those damages that are attributable to the successful tenderer, but also specifically to those that are caused by unforeseen and unavoidable external causes, force majeure, intentional or negligent conduct of the contracting authority's clients or third parties, a criminal offense, or other unavoidable external causes. The parties further detailed the obligations that the successful tenderer undertakes to fulfill in order to reduce the risk of damage.

[3] At the time of the conclusion of the Main Project Contract, the contracting authority was in the process of procuring the Electronic Ticket and Fare Sales System of the Budapest Public Transport, the AFC Project (Automated Fare Collection). The contracting authority had not concluded a separate contract for the introduction and operation of the AFC Project when the Main Project Contract came into force, and the successful bidder for the AFC Project was not known, but certain phases of its implementation were expected to require the TVM system to be compatible with the AFC system. For this reason, in order to develop and modify the TVM system, the agreement between the contracting parties also included provisions on how the successful bidder should implement its cooperation with the AFC system.

[4] On September 13, 2015, a joint protocol interpreting the contract was concluded between the contracting parties, with the aim of remedying the problems of interpretation and clarity of the Main Project Contract. Its subject was the determination of the availability level of the operation services starting from November 2014. Under point 2.3., the availability level calculations related to the consideration of the error notes recording customer complaints were clarified, defining the individual customer complaints from the perspective of which regulation they fall under according to the Operation Contract. In point 2.4., the data on the outage times included in the technical description in a table were interpreted. Under point 2.5., the legal consequences of a delay in the 15-calendar-day repair deadline due to equipment failure were recorded.

[5] The Main Project Contract was amended several times. Amendment No. 3 was dated 13 July 2017, in which the contracting authority ordered the successful bidder to supplement the TVM central control system with a software module enabling web sales. On 15 September 2017, the parties defined the contractual concepts of “blocking”, “banknote withdrawal” and “customer error” in Amendment No. 4; the duration of the correction of functional losses resulting from the above behaviors and its detailed rules. It was stipulated that the amount of additional compensation under the contract amendment may not exceed 2,530,195,870 HUF, 50% of the original contract value. According to the notice of the amendment, the compensation increased by the latter amount.

[6] The Cost Compensation Agreement was concluded between the contracting parties on 22 December 2016, the subject of which was the cost compensation regulation arising from the additional requirements of the contracting authority during the operation of the TVM on the side of the winning bidder. The additional costs arose, on the one hand, from the shorter deadline for repairing malfunctions resulting from cases of clogging of the TVM devices, and, on the other hand, from the on-site servicing of banknote withdrawal cases. The subject of the agreement dated 22 December 2016 was the regulation of the cost compensation to be paid to the bidder by the contracting authority for the additional costs incurred during the operation of the TVM in the amount fixed in the agreement and according to the legal basis. According to point 2.2 of the agreement, the parties stipulated that the agreement supersedes all previous statements regarding the matter falling within the regulatory scope of the agreement. The payment amount was HUF 125,038,099 net as a one-time reimbursement of additional operating costs incurred between September 1, 2015 and December 31, 2016. Additional operating costs were detailed in Section 3.3 of the agreement, setting out the definition of the phenomenon of blockage, which can be resolved by on-site visits or troubleshooting, and setting out the contractual terms and conditions for repairing blockages, which, compared to the previous cases, fall under the category of vandalism, and the repair period was thus changed from 15 days to 5 days, and the contracting authority requested their completion within a shorter deadline.

[7] According to the statement of the contracting parties, contract amendment no. 3 was terminated on June 4, 2019, no performance or payment was made, and a gross amount of HUF 162,679,973 was paid for the performance related to contract amendment no. 4 until April 2021.

[8] On 29 September 2017, the defendant intervener initiated legal redress proceedings against the contracting parties on the basis of Section 153(1)(c) of Act CXLIII of 2015 on Public Procurement (hereinafter: the Public Procurement Act) for, on the one hand, a violation of the fundamental provisions set out in the first sentence of Section 128(2), Section 30(4) and Section 2(3) of the Public Procurement Act, on the other hand, a violation of Section 4(1); Section 141(2) and Section 4(4)(b) and (c) of the Public Procurement Act. The first-rank defendant initiated the legal remedy proceedings on October 2, 2017 (order number 2), and at the same time called on the contracting authority to attach the documents within five days, which the contracting authority complied with on October 18, 2017. The first-rank defendant extended the administrative deadline by ten days on one occasion (order number 14).

[9] In its decision No. D.561/17/2017 dated 15 December 2017, the first-tier defendant, acting on the ex officio initiative of the defendant intervener, determined that the contracting authority had violated the provisions of Section 30(4) of the old Civil Code (element 2 of the claim).
It further found that the contracting authority and the successful tenderer had violated the provisions of Section 141(8) of the Public Procurement Act (elements 4, 5 and 6). It therefore imposed a fine of HUF 80 million on the contracting authority and HUF 70 million on the successful tenderer. It found that there was no violation of elements 1 and 3 of the initiative.

[10] In paragraphs 6-19 of the decision of the first-tier defendant, the relevant elements of the basic contracts and the harmful amendments were recorded in paragraphs 25-30. In paragraph 42, the findings were made regarding the applicable legislation.

[11] In paragraphs 53-61 of the decision, it dealt with element 4 of the initiative, where it examined the infringements related to contract amendment No. 3. It analysed the relevant parts of the rules set out in Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (hereinafter: the Directive) in connection with the provisions of the Public Procurement Act, highlighting that for the contract amendment to be lawful, it is sufficient if any of the cases set out in the Directive are met. It took into account the reasons for the contract amendment specified by the contracting authority (reducing the number of abuses experienced in the TVM system by introducing a new web-based sales channel; transport challenges associated with the organisation of the FINA World Championships; compatibility with the TVM system; procurement from a third party would result in a significant disadvantage or multiplication of costs). He stated that the contract amendment was the creation and operation of a fee product sales channel, which constitutes a new procurement requirement of the contracting authority compared to the subject matter of the Main Project Contract. The new web sales channel and the TVM sales channel as per the subject matter of the Main Project Contract both enable the sale of the contracting authority's fee products. Another such sales channel is the contracting authority's ticket and season ticket office. In terms of their purpose and function, these are identical, they are necessarily connected to the background systems of the contracting authority, however, it does not follow from this that the individual sales channels can be developed exclusively by integrating them into each other's systems. The contracting authority has implemented a new procurement requirement by developing and operating the web sales system. There is basically no necessary additional technical connection between the TVM and the web sales system, as there would be between any other sales channels. The first-tier defendant considered this to be an essential element of the facts because the contracting parties did not dispute that the web sales system could be developed independently of the TVM system. It was the contracting authority's decision that the TVM would be developed as a module of the central system, the most basic justification for which was that integration into the AFC system could be implemented most easily in this way. It is a question of fact that if the web sales channel is developed as a module of the TVM system, the connection between the TVM and the AFC system is implemented. However, the documents available in the legal remedy proceedings did not substantiate the claim that the web sales channel could only have been developed integrated into the central system of TVM. The establishment of the data connection of the TVM and the AFC system is feasible even if the web sales channel is implemented as an independent development. The first-tier defendant examined the conditions under Section 141(4)(b) of the Public Procurement Act. It established that the web sales system could not be purchased exclusively from the original contracting party. The contracting authority's procurement requirement for this system was completely independent of the previous one, on the one hand, and the Main Project Contract, on the other. With regard to the examination of legality, it cannot be taken into account that the contracting authority created a factual situation with its conduct excluding competition that resulted exclusively in the use of the winning bidder. The contract amendment by omitting the public procurement procedure is subject only to the provisions of the Public Procurement Act. 141. § can be applied legally, so the examination of the legal basis according to Section 98. (2) c) of the Kbt. did not attach importance. The reasons according to the contract amendment do not establish the statutory conditions either, the ticket control mechanism is not relevant because it is only an additional benefit, since the main object is the development and operation of the web sales channel, and the statutory provisions do not contain a purpose. Thus, it had to be ignored that it could potentially reduce the number of abuses. The reference to the FINA World Championships is also irrelevant for the same reason. The copyright obligation did not affect the procurement requirement for the web sales channel, but the integration into the TVM central system. Although the advantages referred to by the contracting parties exist, they are not proportionate to the advantages of the competitive procurement of the web sales system in a separate procedure.

[12] In connection with the Cost Compensation Agreement challenged under element 5, the First-tier Defendant dealt with the issue in paragraphs 62-65 of its decision, referring in the preamble to the judicial practice developed in connection with the relationship between the violation of fundamental rights and substantive law, by conducting its examination on the substantive legal provisions it indicated. It referred to certain points of the Operating Agreement and the minutes signed by the contracting parties on September 13, 2015, drawing the conclusion from all of this that the Cost Compensation Agreement should be considered an amendment to the Main Project Agreement, since the parties made provisions different from the provisions of the Main Project Agreement in the scope of the service according to its subject matter. Although, prior to the time of the later agreement, the successful tenderer, on the instructions of the contracting authority, carried out performance that differed from the Main Project Contract, the legal framework and the amount of compensation were settled by the parties in the Cost Compensation Agreement. It was not disputed that the "de minimis" modification condition did not exist, and with regard to legality, Section 141 (4) c) of the Public Procurement Act referred to the provisions of point 1. Regarding unforeseeability, the high number of cases of blockage was indicated. However, the first-rank defendant considered that the contracting authority had foreseen the possibility of blockage, taking into account the technical description annexed to the public procurement documentation. The winning bidder could only offer a TVM with this function, the fifth paragraph of page 57 of the professional offer, which was declared a business secret, clearly provides for the issue of compliance with the requirements of the technical description. The parties concluded the Main Project Contract on the basis of these conditions, the winning bidder assumed a warranty for the TVM devices in the business contract, and a repair obligation was stipulated in the event of a defect preventing proper operation. The first-rank defendant did not find the interpretation of the protocol regarding the elimination of damage outside the scope of the warranty to be well-founded. No. 1 of the Cost Compensation Agreement Annex itself states in detail that the TVM devices do not meet the requirement for impermeability specified in the technical requirements, but the contracting authority took over the devices in the framework of the handover. Accordingly, a 50% sharing ratio was applied. The first-tier defendant assessed only the public procurement law aspect of the relevant facts, drawing the conclusion that the contracting authority had already taken into account the situation of impermeability. It was unlawful for the parties not to treat the contract amendment - as a result of which the contracting authority decided to spend HUF 125,038,099 - as an amendment.

[13] As the 6th element, the first-tier defendant examined the 4th amendment to the contract in paragraphs 66-70 of the decision. According to this amendment, the parties defined the concepts of “blocking”; “banknote withdrawal”; “customer error”. The Operating Agreement was supplemented with a new section, according to which the correction of these errors must be carried out accordingly. They referred to the provisions of Section 141 (4) c) of the Civil Code. In paragraph 5 of the amendment, it was stated that a maximum of HUF 2,530,195,870 could be paid on the title specified in the amendment. The first-tier defendant found the conduct of the contracting parties to be unlawful for the same reasons as those stated when examining the cost compensation agreement, and also for the reason that the contract amendment does not contain a quantitative clause, thus ordering its terms to be applied even if only one TVM is affected by the blockage. The criterion set out in Section 141(4)(cc) of the Civil Code was also not met due to the amount of the additional compensation specified in the amendment, because the amount of the compensation to be paid under the Cost Compensation Agreement should also have been taken into account. It is not relevant whether this was due to an administrative error, nor is it relevant that the forecasted payment is not expected to reach this amount.

[14] The first-tier defendant ruled on the obligation to pay the fine, taking into account Section 165. (4); (3) point d); (6)-(7); (11) of the Civil Code. It assessed the estimated value of the public procurement, and at the same time also noted that the final value of the Main Project Contract without amendments was 5,561,690,409 HUF, while the value of the part affected by the established infringement was 3,589,454,369 HUF. The Cost Compensation Agreement and the 3rd and 4th contract amendments were concluded unlawfully, the total value of which agreements was 3,314,633,969 HUF. It assessed that the contracting authority had been found to have committed an infringement several times in the past two years, but it also noted that no such infringement had been previously found against the winning bidder. He described the violation as extremely serious. He highlighted that when the contracting authorities determined the main subject of contract amendment No. 3, the procurement requirement was was developed with a set of conditions so that it could be obtained exclusively from the winning bidder. With regard to the contract amendments dealing with clogging cases, it assessed that the parties themselves stipulated in the cost compensation agreement that both parties were responsible for the situation created by the clogged “unclogging TVMs”. It assessed that the violation could not be repaired to the detriment of the winning bidder. The parties first qualified the contractual concept of clogging cases and the provisions relating to it as damage in the protocol evaluating the provisions of the contract, and then in the framework of contract amendment no. 4, clogging cases were not interpreted as damage, but a new contractual provision was created for them, although it is clear that this is a category of cases prescribed as a technical requirement specified in the technical specifications of the contracting authority. It also took into account that the contract was partly financed from a grant, so the violation may be subject to a sanction for the repayment of the grant in the proceedings of another body. It specifically mentioned that it considered the imposition of a fine for element 2 of the ex officio initiative to be justified, given that the posting of the notice on the modification of the contract is a guarantee-type obligation of the contracting authority, the failure to which constitutes a serious infringement, but it assessed that the information notice was published subsequently, although also that it was almost two years after the statutory deadline. At the same time, it assessed the contracting authority's benefit in the context of cooperation that it acknowledged the infringement for element 2. The different amount of the fine was justified by the fact of an additional infringement established against the contracting authority, while it assessed the legal acts assessed as infringing on the basis of elements 4, 5 and 6 as being identical in terms of the contribution and liability of the contracting authority and the successful tenderer.

Claims and counterclaims

[15] The first-rank plaintiff (successful bidder) filed its action for the review of the first-rank defendant's decision, in relation to the 4th, 5th and 6th requests of the ex officio initiative, requesting, on the basis of Section 339(2)(q) of Act III of 1952 on the Code of Civil Procedure (hereinafter: the Code of Civil Procedure) and Section 172(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the amendment of the decision and the determination of the absence of a violation of law with respect to the first-rank plaintiff, and, in the alternative, the application of Section 339(2)(q) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Pursuant to Section 339 (1), the provisions of the decision relating to him are repealed, thirdly, the decision is amended in this respect and the fine is waived, fourthly, the decision is repealed and the first-tier defendant is ordered to initiate new proceedings, stating that there is no legal possibility to impose a fine on the first-tier plaintiff, while fifthly, the decision is amended to the effect that a reduction in the amount of the fine is justified in the case of the first-tier plaintiff. He also requested payment of his costs incurred in the lawsuit.

[16] In its application, it summarised the relevant facts, explaining in the preamble that, contrary to its previous practice, which it also referred to in the specific decision numbers, the defendant treats the liability of the contracting authority and the tenderer in relation to the violation of public procurement rules as practically the same. It ignores that the public procurement requirement and the obligation to conduct the public procurement procedure arise with the contracting authority.
The contracting authority is in a position to decide on the conduct of the public procurement procedure in the light of its procurement requirement or, where appropriate, to declare it unnecessary. In its decision, the defendant also holds the successful tenderer liable for decisions taken by the contracting authority in relation to its procurement requirement, for which the plaintiff has no right to appeal.

Machine Translated by Google

has no influence on it and cannot have any. In his opinion, this seriously violates the principles of legal certainty and the rule of law, because in this way the winning bidder is obliged to bear the public procurement legal consequences of the contracting authority's decisions without being the addressee of the legal norms binding for the conduct of the public procurement procedure. The satisfaction of the procurement requirement in accordance with public procurement legislation is the sole obligation and responsibility of the purchasing contracting authority.

[17] As a procedural objection, he referred to Section 141(8) of the Civil Procedure Code in connection with all the violations charged against him, stating that the ex officio extension of the proceedings was not made because the ex officio initiator did not request the establishment of the violation on this legal basis, while in connection with the 5th and 6th request elements, the initiator did not request the establishment of any violation against the first-tier plaintiff either in his ex officio initiative or in his observations. He referred to the provisions of Section 158(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, based on which it is obvious that the first-tier defendant must make a decision on the extension of the proceedings, the procedural instrument of which is the order. Because the first-tier defendant did not expand its proceedings, and therefore the first-tier plaintiff could not have been informed of them, he was deprived of his right to defend himself, and therefore the decision is seriously unlawful.

The first-tier defendant exceeded the administrative deadline, which a priori precludes the imposition of a fine. He referred to Section 164(3) of the Civil Procedure Code, stating that the first-rank defendant initiated the legal remedy proceedings on 2 October 2017. The administrative deadline was extended by ten days on one occasion, as a result of which the administrative deadline expired on 11 December 2017, while the first-rank defendant issued its decision on 15 December.

The right to a fair trial, as enshrined in Article XXIV. (1) of the Fundamental Law, has been violated.
Citing certain provisions of the Constitutional Court's decision 5/2017. (III.10.) AB, as well as its decision IV/1201/2017. in a case subject to the same factual and legal assessment, and the decision of the Curia in case Kfv.I.35.760/2016., the Constitutional Court emphasized that the courts are obliged to assess in favor of the client the exceeding of the administrative deadline by the administrative authority. The consequences of exceeding the deadline should have been deducted, and the fine was imposed in an unlawful manner for this reason as well.

[18] He disputed the violation of Section 141(8) of the Public Procurement Act primarily on the grounds that the addressee of this legal norm may only be the contracting authority, not the contracting party. This legal provision provides for the obligation to conduct public procurement, the failure to do so may constitute an unlawful omission of the public procurement. However, only the contracting authority can commit this violation. He referred to Section 4(1) of the Public Procurement Act and pointed out that the first-order defendant practice is consistent in finding the violation against the contracting authority only in the case of unlawful omission of the public procurement and imposing a fine accordingly. Following the ruling of the Court of Justice of the European Union on this matter, there is no obstacle in principle to the infringement resulting from the unlawful modification of the contract being attributed not only to the contracting authority but also to the successful tenderer, but only if national legislation provides for such a possibility in compliance with EU law. However, the Civil Code does not currently contain such a provision. Thus, in the absence of national legislation, the infringement cannot be attributed to it. Based on the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union, it also objected that the first-tier defendant incorrectly referred to the relevant directive in its decision and did not refer to the provisions of Government Decree 307/2015.(X.27.) on specific public procurement rules for public procurement by public service providers.

Machine Translated by Google

In connection with the 4th element of the request, it maintained its observations submitted in the public procurement procedure against the findings of the decision. It referred to case-by-case decisions, stating that there may be cases where the contracting authority may lawfully refrain from conducting the public procurement and may decide to amend the contract in order to satisfy its procurement requirement. It referred to the similarity of Section 141(4)(b) of the Public Procurement Act and the rules of the negotiated procedure without a notice due to technical characteristics, artistic aspects or the protection of exclusive rights. The assessment of what technological solution would have been the most appropriate for the contracting authority's procurement requirement requires complex expertise that the first-tier defendant did not necessarily possess when the decision was made, and therefore did not make it the subject of a substantive examination during its proceedings. The fact that another economic operator could have formally developed a similar web sales interface does not necessarily mean that another solution would have met the specific and extremely complex procurement needs of the specific contracting authority. The first-tier defendant completely failed to conduct the necessary procedure, which may require an expert examination. In its decision, it discussed the contracting authority's liability in several places and raised a single argument against the winning bidder, namely that the winning bidder is also the addressee of the norms of the Public Procurement Act on contract amendments. However, it did not even attempt to demonstrate how exactly it implemented the infringement found against it. In connection with elements 5 and 6 of the claim, it did not take into account or assess the actual extent of the blockages experienced in practice, which far exceeded realistic expectations, and it considered further assessment of the situation unnecessary compared to the conditions at the time of the tender. The requirements of foreseeability/non-foreseeability and due diligence are circumstances to be examined in relation to the contracting authority, and consequently, their violation can only be attributed to the contracting authority, and not to the successful tenderer contracting with it. The first-tier defendant's argument is also based on what the contracting authority should have foreseen in a given situation. In this regard, it referred to certain findings of Decision No. D.171/2017. However, the fact that the contracting authority ordered unclogable devices and accepted them as meeting this condition shows that it acted with due diligence with regard to the blockages, i.e. it assumed that the devices were unclogable in accordance with the contractual clause.

In comparison, the argument of the first-tier defendant that he considers the amount of clogging that exceeded any conceivable amount experienced in reality to be foreseeable is untenable.

[19] The first-tier defendant erroneously referred to Section 2(2) of the Public Procurement Act in connection with the Cost Compensation Agreement, because the requirement of publicity is regulated by Section (1). Although this is not listed as a violation in the operative part, the contracting authority is entitled to post the notice on contract amendments, therefore it is obliged to ensure publicity. Against the arguments of the decision related to Section 141(4)(c) sub-point cc) of the Public Procurement Act, it referred to the amount in forints set out in the Main Project Contract and appearing in several places in the decision as the amount to be taken into account in relation to the 50% limit. The total amount payable under the Cost Compensation Agreement and Contract Amendment No. 4 is 2,655,233,969 forints, which does not exceed 50% of the original value of the Main Project Contract, therefore no violation of law can be established in relation to the winning bidder based on this legal provision either.

[20] In addition to his primary argument regarding the imposition of the fine, which was that the application of this sanction to him was unlawful, he argued that the assessment of the first-tier defendant was unreasonable and contains blatant logical contradictions, because it ignored important circumstances when it considered the involvement and responsibility to be the same for the contracting parties. Thus, it ignored the fact that the necessity of the contract amendments was initiated by the contracting authority, i.e. the formulation of the procurement request in each case. There was no intent, bad faith, or any collusion on the part of the winning bidder. Its activity was responsive in each case, and as a company operating in a competitive market environment, it tried to show as much flexibility as possible in order to implement the requests formulated by its client. In point 53 of the decision, the first-rank defendant itself stated that the comparison of the amendment condition and the facts is the responsibility of the contracting authority, and the first-rank defendant or even the ex officio initiator cannot take this on. This necessarily leads to the conclusion that the winning bidder cannot either. The statement in point 61 of the decision that both parties involved in the contract amendment are to be held liable for the fact that the conclusion of the Cost Compensation Agreement was not treated as an amendment and, as a result, the guarantee procedure rules specified in the public procurement regulations, such as the publication of the notice, were omitted, is also unfounded. The latter is the contracting authority's obligation, therefore the failure to do so cannot be attributed to the successful tenderer in the same way as the contracting authority. Point 73 of the decision states that the contracting authority has been fined several times in the past two years, while no such fine has been imposed on the successful tenderer, but the amount of the fine does not reflect this difference either.

[21] In its action, the second-ranking plaintiff (contractor) requested the review of the first-ranking defendant's decision, primarily by changing it and by establishing the absence of a violation with regard to the 4th, 5th and 6th request elements of the ex officio initiative, and by omitting the fine, while in the case of the decision related to the 2nd request element, the omitting of the imposition of a fine.
In the second place, it requested the annulment of the decision, with the exception of the 2nd request element, on the grounds that the reduction of the amount of the fine was justified due to the absence of a violation, and it also requested that the first-rank defendant be ordered to conduct new proceedings. In the third place, it requested that the decision be changed in such a way that the court refrains from imposing a fine on the second-rank plaintiff. In the fourth place, it requested that the decision be changed in such a way that the amount of the fine is reduced in favor of the contracting authority. It also requested that its legal costs be determined. It referred to the violation of Section 2; Section 4(1); Section 141(4)(b) and (c), (8); Section 158(1) and Section 164(3) and (5) of the Civil Code.

[22] He maintained what was presented during the appeal proceedings, stating that in relation to the 2nd request element of the ex officio initiative, he did not dispute during the appeal proceedings that the information notice was published on 1 August 2017, nor did he dispute the infringement of the indicated legislation. He claimed, however, that he had fulfilled his legal obligation, albeit belatedly, and that Amendment No. 2 of the Main Project Contract was available on the contracting authority's website. He referred to the defendant's practice according to which, in addition to the establishment of such a violation, no other legal consequence - in particular the imposition of a fine - was justified on the part of the proceeding authority. With the additional fulfillment of the obligation, the recognition of the violation, and the cooperative conduct shown during the appeal proceedings, no other sanction was justified against him beyond the establishment of the violation. Thus, in this respect, his application aimed at omitting the fine, or at least reducing it.

[23] In relation to the 4th element of initiative, in his opinion, the first-tier defendant did not properly assess the documents, evidence and statements submitted by him, although he himself states in the decision that the regulation on the modification of public procurement contracts creates a more flexible environment compared to the previous rules. The Public Procurement Act only intends to sanction conduct that unjustifiably excludes competition. The legal basis for contract modification under Section 141(4)(b) of the Public Procurement Act does not require the contracting authority to justify why and how it specified its procurement requirement, even if – in a given case – the lower level of competition would result from the fact that it specified its procurement requirement in a restrictive manner. It is only necessary to substantiate the legal title of the contract modification and is not obliged to justify why it developed the content of the procurement requirement as it did in the modification. The existence of an exclusive right based on copyright, and thus of technical exclusivity, is not a condition for the legal basis under Section 141(4)(b) of the Civil Code, in view of which the legal title is still considered well-founded. This legal provision defines two conjunctive, but in some elements alternative conditions, which results in the fact that if even one of the alternative conditions exists, the legality of the contract amendment is adequately supported. Neither the ex officio initiator nor the first-rank defendant disputed the existence of the economic reason under Section 141(4)(b), sub-point ba) of the Civil Code and its verification by the contracting authority, so in their opinion it was also recognized by the first-rank defendant.

At the same time, it unjustifiably underestimated the economic reasons and significant cost-reducing factors taken into account by the second-tier plaintiff. It also underestimated the elements it defined as additional advantages, which can be achieved by introducing the web sales module, given that the cited legal title does not distinguish between the methods of avoiding the disadvantage. It is not disputed that the value of contract amendment No. 3 did not exceed 50% of the original contract value.

[24] Regarding the 5th initiative element, the contracting authority maintained that the Cost Compensation Agreement did not qualify as a contract amendment, but merely served to fulfill the documentation obligation set out in Section 142(1) of the Civil Code. Its essence was to handle claims arising from the legal dispute between the parties. It was not clear which contractual provision should apply to the so-called blockage-related failures. According to the contracting authority, such failures should have been repaired under the warranty, while according to the successful tenderer, it should have been repaired under the rules on vandalism. According to the contracting authority, there was no additional service requirement for the repair within a shorter deadline, while according to the successful tenderer, there was. The consensus is recorded in the agreement, in which the contracting authority acknowledged that its legal position that a defect repair within a shorter period than that specified in the contract does not qualify as additional services was incorrect and accordingly acknowledged the successful bidder's claim for the consideration for the additional services. The agreement did not have the subject matter of amending any contractual provision, either for the future or for the past, this finding by the defendant is incorrect. If it were nevertheless to be considered an amendment to the contract, the legal basis under Section 141 (4) c) of the Civil Code would not be applicable in this case, because neither when signing the Main Project Contract nor when amending it No. 2 could the contracting authority foresee the extent to which the clogging of the TVM machines would occur, the amount of loss of income or additional costs that the reduction of the repair deadline might generate, thus the condition of unforeseeability exists.

[25] Regarding the 6th initiative element, the contracting authority referred, without prejudice to the previous ones, to the fact that in the 4th amendment to the contract it was stated that the 50% payment limit set out in Section 141(4)(c)(cc) of the Public Procurement Act was to be interpreted independently of the additional payments under Amendment 4, and independently of the additional payments under Amendment 2 and Amendment 3, as the referred amendments became necessary due to unrelated circumstances. The total contract value following Amendment 4 cannot be determined precisely, so in its VIII.2.3. point, a value increased by the maximum value of the 50% payment limit set out in Section 141(4)(c)(cc) of the Public Procurement Act was set out, by which amount the actual contract value may be lower and is expected to be lower, but not higher. The basis for the actual settlement is the number of relevant event tickets recorded by the contracting authority. After the closing of the settlement period, the event tickets were subject to an itemized check based on the rules specified in the contract, at the end of which the associated payment value is determined individually for each event ticket. The parameters to be checked include, among others, the length of the repair time, the time of the repair, the location of the repaired machines relative to each other, or, for example, the filtering of administrative anomalies related to the event ticket. In addition to the above, according to the contract, if a negative payment is due for a given ticket vending machine based on the associated event tickets, it is to be corrected to zero forints. Thus, the actual payment to the winning bidder can only be made according to the itemized settlement following the month in question, based on the performance signed by the contracting authority. Given the specifics of the notice template, the contracting authority had no other option, when filling in the price increase section, than to set the theoretical maximum amount. For administrative reasons, an incorrect amount was indicated in Amendment No. 4 and in the information notice about it, since the consideration for the Cost Compensation Agreement was not deducted. The correct maximum amount is therefore HUF 2,405,157,771. As a result of Amendment No. 4, a total of HUF 138 million may be paid from the Main Project Contract during the remaining period, so the consideration for the Main Project Contract may realistically increase by this amount as a result of Amendment No. 4.
