ORDONNANCE DE LA COUR (septième chambre)

26 septembre 2024 (*)

« Renvoi préjudiciel – Article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour – Directive 2014/24/UE – Procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services – Pouvoir adjudicateur – Notion d'"organisme de droit public" – Application à un marché public dont la valeur estimée est inférieure aux seuils d'application de la directive »

ayant pour objet une demande de décision préjudicielle au titre de l'article 267 TFUE, introduite par le Sofiyski rayonen sad (tribunal d'arrondissement de Sofia, Bulgarie), par décision du 20 août 2023, parvenue à la Cour le 30 août 2023, dans la procédure

NV

Agentsia za darzhavna finansova inspektsia,

LA COUR (septième chambre), composée de M. F. Biltgen, président de chambre, M^me^ A. Prechal (rapporteure), présidente de la deuxième chambre, faisant fonction de juge de la septième chambre, et M. N. Wahl, juge, avocat général : M. M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

greffier : M. A. Calot Escobar,

vu la procédure écrite,

considérant les observations présentées :

– pour NV, représenté par lui-même,

– pour le gouvernement bulgare, par M^mes^ T. Mitova et T. Tsingileva, en qualité d'agents, – pour la Commission européenne, par MM. G. Wils et I. Zaloguin, en qualité d'agents, vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par ordonnance motivée, conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation de l'article 4 de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE, telle que modifiée par le règlement délégué (UE) 2017/2365 de la Commission, du 18 décembre 2017 (JO 2017, L 337, p. 19) (ci-après la « directive 2014/24 »).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige opposant NV, en sa qualité de directeur général de la société Montagi EAD, à l'Agentsia za darzhavna finansova inspektsia (Agence de l'inspection financière de l'État, Bulgarie) au sujet d'une infraction aux règles régissant les marchés publics, commise par NV, lors de la conclusion d'un contrat de fourniture entre Montagi et Reyr Studio BG EOOD.

Le cadre juridique

3 Le considérant 1 de la directive 2014/24 énonce :

4 L'article 1er de cette directive, intitulé « Objet et champ d'application », prévoit, à son paragraphe 1 :

« La présente directive établit les règles applicables aux procédures de passation de marchés par des pouvoirs adjudicateurs en ce qui concerne les marchés publics, ainsi que les concours, dont la valeur estimée atteint ou dépasse les seuils établis à l'article 4. »

5 L'article 2 de ladite directive, intitulé « Définitions », dispose :

« 1. Aux fins de la présente directive, on entend par :

1. "pouvoirs adjudicateurs", l'État, les autorités régionales ou locales, les organismes de droit public ou les associations formées par une ou plusieurs de ces autorités ou un ou plusieurs de ces organismes de droit public ;

4. "organisme de droit public", tout organisme présentant toutes les caractéristiques suivantes :

   a) il a été créé pour satisfaire spécifiquement des besoins d'intérêt général ayant un caractère autre qu'industriel ou commercial ;

   b) il est doté de la personnalité juridique ; et

   c) soit il est financé majoritairement par l'État, les autorités régionales ou locales ou par d'autres organismes de droit public, soit sa gestion est soumise à un contrôle de ces autorités ou organismes, soit son organe d'administration, de direction ou de surveillance est composé de membres dont plus de la moitié sont désignés par l'État, les autorités régionales ou locales ou d'autres organismes de droit public ;

6 L'article 4 de la même directive, intitulé « Montants des seuils », est libellé comme suit :

a) 5 548 000 [euros] pour les marchés publics de travaux ;

b) 144 000 [euros] pour les marchés publics de fournitures et de services passés par des autorités publiques centrales et pour les concours organisés par celles-ci ; en ce qui concerne les marchés publics de fournitures passés par des pouvoirs adjudicateurs qui opèrent dans le domaine de la défense, ce seuil ne s'applique qu'aux marchés concernant les produits visés à l'annexe III ;

c) 221 000 [euros] pour les marchés publics de fournitures et de services passés par des pouvoirs adjudicateurs sous-centraux et pour les concours organisés par ceux-ci ; ce seuil s'applique également aux marchés publics de fournitures passés par des autorités publiques centrales opérant dans le domaine de la défense, lorsque ces marchés concernent des produits non visés à l'annexe III ;

d) 750 000 [euros] pour les marchés publics de services portant sur des services sociaux et d'autres services spécifiques énumérés à l'annexe XIV. »

Le droit bulgare

7 Le Zakon za obshtesvenite porachki (loi sur les marchés publics) (DV n^{o} 13, du 16 février 2016), dans sa version applicable au litige au principal, prévoit, à son article 5 :

« (1) Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs sont responsables de la prévision adéquate, de la planification, du déroulement, de l'achèvement et de la prise en compte des résultats des marchés publics. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs sont publics et sectoriels.

(2) Constituent des pouvoirs adjudicateurs publics :

14. les représentant des organismes de droit public ;

[...] »

8 L'article 17, paragraphe 1, de cette loi dispose :

« En présence de motifs le justifiant, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs sont tenus d'appliquer les modalités de passation de marchés publics prévues par la loi. »

9 L'article 18, paragraphe 1, de ladite loi dispose :

« Les procédures au sens de la présente loi sont :

12. le concours public ;

13. la négociation directe. »

10 L'article 20, paragraphe 2, de la même loi est libellé comme suit :

« Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs appliquent les procédures prévues à l'article 18, paragraphe 1, points 12 ou 13, lorsque le marché public a une valeur estimée

1. dans le cas de travaux : de 270 000 [leva bulgares (BGN)] à 10 000 000 BGN ;

2. dans le cas de fournitures et de services, y compris les services visés à l'annexe 2 : de 70 000 BGN jusqu'au seuil pertinent du paragraphe 1, en fonction du type de pouvoir adjudicateur et de l'objet du marché. »

11 L'article 256, paragraphe 1, de la loi sur les marchés publics prévoit :

« Lorsqu'un pouvoir adjudicateur qui attribue un marché public conclut un contrat ou effectue des dépenses ou prend un engagement d'effectuer des dépenses et, de la sorte, atteint ou dépasse le seuil de valeur minimale visé à l'article 20, paragraphe 1, ou 2, sans appliquer l'une des procédures prévues à

l'article 18, paragraphe 1, en fonction de la valeur de l'opération lorsqu'il existe des motifs pour l'appliquer, il est passible d'une amende s'élevant à deux pour cent de la valeur du contrat conclu, TVA comprise, et, s'il n'y a pas de contrat écrit, de la valeur de la dépense effectuée ou de l'engagement de dépense, dans la limite de 50 000 BGN. »

12 Les dispositions supplémentaires de la loi sur les marchés publics prévoient, à leur paragraphe 2, point 43, que, au sens de cette loi :

a) elle a été créée pour satisfaire spécifiquement des besoins d'intérêt général ayant un caractère autre qu'industriel ou commercial ;

b) elle est financée à plus de 50 % par des autorités étatiques, territoriales ou locales ou par d'autres organismes de droit public ; ou sa gestion est soumise à un contrôle de ces autorités ou organismes ; ou elle est dotée d'un organe de direction ou de surveillance dont plus de la moitié des membres sont nommés par un pouvoir adjudicateur public au sens de l'article 5, paragraphe 2, points 1 à 14.

Les besoins d'intérêt général sont de nature industrielle ou commerciale lorsque la personne agit dans des conditions normales de marché, poursuit un but lucratif et supporte elle-même les pertes liées à l'exercice de ses activités.

Le litige au principal et la question préjudicielle

13 NV est le directeur général de Montagi, une société dont l'unique actionnaire est la société Darzhavna konsolidatsionna kompania EAD. Cette dernière société est entièrement détenue par l'État bulgare et ses droits sont exercés par le ministre de l'Économie bulgare.

14 L'Agence de l'inspection financière de l'État a contrôlé la légalité de la conclusion et de l'exécution de contrats conclus par Montagi au cours de la période allant du 1er janvier 2017 au 30 avril 2021. Elle a considéré que Montagi était un « organisme de droit public », au sens du paragraphe 2, point 43, des dispositions supplémentaires de la loi sur les marchés publics, et que NV, en tant que directeur général de cette société, était un « pouvoir adjudicateur », au sens de l'article 5, paragraphe 2, point 14, de la loi sur les marchés publics.

15 À la suite de cette inspection, cette agence a imposé à NV une amende administrative de 2 140,69 BGN (environ 1 120 euros) pour avoir attribué le 15 juin 2020, par l'intermédiaire de Montagi, un marché à Reyr Studio BG d'un montant de 89 195,66 BGN hors TVA (environ 44 600 euros) pour la fourniture de pierres concassées, de gravier et de gravats pour la réparation et la restauration du barrage de Zlati Voivoda 3, situé dans la municipalité de Sliven (Bulgarie), en violation de l'article 17, paragraphe 1, de la loi sur les marchés publics, lu en combinaison avec l'article 20, paragraphe 2, point 2, de celle-ci, qui imposent d'attribuer les marchés de fournitures et de services d'un montant de plus de 70 000 BGN (environ 35 000 euros) au moyen d'une procédure de concours public ou d'une procédure de négociation directe.

16 NV a contesté cette amende devant le Sofiyski rayonen sad (tribunal d'arrondissement de Sofia, Bulgarie), qui est la juridiction de renvoi.

17 Cette juridiction estime que, pour résoudre ce litige, il convient de déterminer si Montagi était un « organisme de droit public » au sens de la loi sur les marchés publics à la date des dépenses effectuées dans le cadre du marché en cause avec Reyr Studio BG, auquel cas son représentant NV aurait la qualité de « pouvoir adjudicateur » au sens de cette loi et serait passible de sanctions administratives pour non-respect des exigences de l'article 17, paragraphe 1, de ladite loi, lu conjointement avec l'article 20, paragraphe 2, point 2, de la même loi.

19 Dans ces conditions, le Sofiyski rayonen sad (tribunal d'arrondissement de Sofia) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour la question préjudicielle suivante :

« Une réglementation nationale en vertu de laquelle les dispositions de la directive [2014/24] – en particulier la définition légale de l'"organisme de droit public" figurant à l'article 2, paragraphe 1, point 4, de [cette] directive – s'appliquent également aux marchés publics dont la valeur estimée hors [TVA] est inférieure aux seuils minimaux fixés à l'article 4 de [ladite] directive, est-elle licite ? »

Sur la question préjudicielle

21 Il y a lieu de faire application de cette disposition dans la présente affaire.

22 Par sa question, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si la directive 2014/24 doit être interprétée en ce sens qu'elle s'oppose à une réglementation nationale en vertu de laquelle les règles de cette directive et, en particulier, la définition d'« organisme de droit public », figurant à l'article 2, paragraphe 1, point 4, de ladite directive s'appliquent aux marchés publics dont la valeur estimée est inférieure aux seuils d'application prévus à l'article 4 de la même directive.

23 À cet égard, il y a lieu d'observer que, en vertu de son article 1er, paragraphe 1, la directive 2014/24 établit les règles applicables aux procédures de passation de marchés par des pouvoirs adjudicateurs en ce qui concerne les marchés publics, ainsi que les concours, dont la valeur estimée atteint ou dépasse les seuils établis à l'article 4 de cette directive.

24 L'article 2, paragraphe 1, points 1 et 4, de ladite directive qualifie de « pouvoirs adjudicateurs », notamment, les « organismes de droit public » qui sont définis comme étant tout organisme qui présente certaines caractéristiques cumulatives, à savoir, premièrement, avoir été créé pour satisfaire spécifiquement les besoins d'intérêt général ayant un caractère autre qu'industriel ou commercial, deuxièmement, être doté de la personnalité juridique et, troisièmement, soit être financé majoritairement par l'État, les autorités régionales ou locales ou par d'autres organismes de droit public, soit voir sa gestion soumise à un contrôle de ces autorités ou organismes, soit voir son organe d'administration, de direction ou de surveillance composé de membres dont plus de la moitié sont désignés par l'État, les autorités régionales ou locales ou d'autres organismes de droit public.

25 L'article 4 de la directive 2014/24 énumère les valeurs estimées hors TVA des marchés qui constituent les seuils à partir desquels cette directive s'applique. Pour les marchés autres que ceux relevant du domaine de la défense, ces seuils s'élèvent, premièrement, à 5 548 000 euros pour les marchés publics de travaux, deuxièmement, à 144 000 euros pour les marchés publics de fournitures et de services passés par des autorités publiques centrales et pour les concours organisés par celles-ci, troisièmement, à 221 000 euros pour les marchés publics de fournitures et de services passés par des pouvoirs adjudicateurs sous-centraux et pour les concours organisés par ceux-ci et, quatrièmement, à 750 000 euros pour les marchés publics de services portant sur des services sociaux et d'autres services spécifiques énumérés à l'annexe XIV de ladite directive.

26 Le marché à l'origine du litige au principal est un marché de fourniture de pierres concassées, gravier et gravats dont le montant hors TVA s'élevait à environ 44 600 euros, soit un montant inférieur aux seuils d'application prévus à l'article 4 de la directive 2014/24, de sorte que celle-ci ne s'applique pas à ce litige.

29 Il s'ensuit qu'une réglementation nationale, telle que celle en cause au principal, qui rend applicables des règles de ladite directive à des marchés dont les montants estimés n'atteignent pas les seuils d'application fixés par la même directive, d'une part, résulte de l'exercice de la liberté dont dispose chaque État membre d'adopter des règles en matière de passation de marchés et, d'autre part, contribue à ce que la passation de ces marchés respecte les principes du traité TUE.

30 De surcroît, une telle réglementation nationale ne contrevient pas aux règles relevant du champ d'application de la directive 2014/24 et partage l'objectif principal de cette directive, à savoir l'ouverture des marchés publics à la concurrence la plus large possible au bénéfice non seulement des opérateurs économiques, mais également des pouvoirs adjudicateurs (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 8 mai 2014, Datenlotsen Informationssysteme, C-15/13, EU:C:2014:303, point 22, ainsi que du 27 novembre 2019, Tedeschi et Consorzio Stabile Istant Service, C-402/18, EU:C:2019:1023, point 39).

31 Il s'ensuit que la directive 2014/24 doit être interprétée en ce sens qu'elle ne s'oppose pas à une réglementation nationale en vertu de laquelle les règles de cette directive et, en particulier, la définition d'« organisme de droit public », figurant à l'article 2, paragraphe 1, point 4, de ladite directive, s'appliquent aux marchés publics dont la valeur estimée est inférieure aux seuils d'application prévus à l'article 4 de la même directive.

32 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens. Les frais exposés pour soumettre des observations à la Cour, autres que ceux desdites parties, ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un remboursement.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (septième chambre) dit pour droit :

La directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE, telle que modifiée par le règlement délégué (UE) 2017/2365 de la Commission, du 18 décembre 2017, doit être interprétée en ce sens que :

elle ne s'oppose pas à une réglementation nationale en vertu de laquelle les règles de cette directive et, en particulier, la définition d'« organisme de droit public », figurant à l'article 2, paragraphe 1, point 4, de ladite directive, s'appliquent aux marchés publics dont la valeur estimée est inférieure aux seuils d'application prévus à l'article 4 de la même directive.

having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

Judgment

1 These requests for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114 and corrigendum OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44), Article 6 TEU, Articles 49, 50, 54 and 56 TFEU, Articles 16, 49, 50 and 52 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter'), and Article 4 of Protocol No 7 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed in Strasbourg on 22 November 1984.

2 The requests have been made in two sets of proceedings between, respectively, Luxone Srl, in its own name and as agent of the temporary group of undertakings to be formed with Iren Smart Solutions SpA, in Case C-403/23, and Sofein SpA, formerly Gi One SpA, in Case C-404/23, on the one hand, and the same contracting authority, Consip SpA, on the other, concerning decisions by which Consip SpA (i) excluded the temporary group of undertakings, of which Luxone and Sofein formed part, from a public procurement procedure and (ii) enforced the provisional security provided by the members of the group for their participation in that procedure.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 2004/18

3 Recitals 2 and 32 of Directive 2004/18 stated:

'(2) The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.

(32) In order to encourage the involvement of small and medium-sized [enterprises (SMEs)] in the public contracts procurement market, it is advisable to include provisions on subcontracting.'

4 Article 2 of that directive, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts', provided:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

5 Article 4 of that directive, entitled ‘Economic operators’, provided, in paragraph 2 thereof:

‘Groups of economic operators may submit tenders or put themselves forward as candidates. In order to submit a tender or a request to participate, these groups may not be required by the contracting authorities to assume a specific legal form; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract, to the extent that this change is necessary for the satisfactory performance of the contract.’

6 Article 45 of that directive, entitled ‘Personal situation of the candidate or tenderer’, provided, in paragraph 2 thereof:

‘Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(c) has been convicted by a judgment which has the force of res judicata in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of any offence concerning his professional conduct;

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate;

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section or has not supplied such information.

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.’

7 Article 47 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Economic and financial standing’, provided, in paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof:

‘2. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.

3. Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 4 may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.’

8 Article 48 of that directive, entitled ‘Technical and/or professional ability’, provided:

‘1. The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.

3. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.

4. Under the same conditions a group of economic operators as referred to [in] Article 4 may rely on the abilities of participants in the group or in other entities.’

9 Entitled ‘Information which must be included in public contract notices’, Annex VII A to that directive provided, in points 14 and 21 of the section dealing with ‘Contract notices’, that a contract notice had to state, respectively, ‘where appropriate, [the] deposit and guarantees required’, and the ‘time frame during which the tenderer must maintain its tender (open procedures)’.

10 It follows from Articles 3 to 9 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) that that directive applied to public contracts which relate to one or more activities in the following fields: gas, heat and electricity; water; transport services; postal services; exploration for, or extraction of, oil, gas, coal or other solid fuels.

11 Article 11(2) of Directive 2004/17 was worded in the same terms as Article 4(2) of Directive 2004/18, except that the expression ‘contracting authorities’ was replaced by a reference to ‘contracting entities’.

Italian law

12 Decreto legislativo n. 163 – Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 adopting the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts and transposing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006, Ordinary Supplement No 107) (‘the previous Public Procurement Code’) contained Article 11, entitled ‘Stages of the public procurement process’, which provided, in paragraph 6 thereof:

‘No tenderer may submit more than one tender. The tender shall be binding on the tenderer for the period specified in the notice or invitation to tender or, if no period is specified, for 180 days from the expiry of the deadline for submission of the tender. The contracting entity may ask the tenderers to extend that period.’

13 Article 37 of the previous Public Procurement Code, entitled ‘Temporary groups and ordinary consortia of tenderers’, provided, in paragraphs 8 to 10, 18 and 19 thereof:

‘8. The persons referred to in Article 34(1)(d) and (e) may submit a tender, even if they have not yet been formed. In such cases, the tender must be signed by all the economic operators making up the temporary groups or ordinary consortia of tenderers and those operators shall undertake, if the contract is awarded, to grant a special collective power of attorney to one of the tenderers, identified in the tender as the agent, who will enter into the contract in its name and on its behalf, as well as on behalf of the principals.

9. … Without prejudice to paragraphs 18 and 19, it shall be prohibited to make any change to the composition of temporary groups and ordinary consortia of tenderers compared with the composition submitted in the tender.

10. Failure to comply with the prohibitions laid down in the preceding paragraph shall entail the annulment of the award or the nullity of the contract and the exclusion of groups or ordinary consortia of tenderers at the same time as or subsequent to the award of the same tender.

18. In the event of the bankruptcy of the agent or, in the case of an individual contractor, in the event of death, disqualification, incapacity or bankruptcy, or in the cases provided for by the anti-mafia regulations, the contracting authority may continue the procurement relationship with another economic operator that has been appointed as agent in accordance with the procedure laid down in this Code, provided that it meets the qualification requirements for the provision of the outstanding works or services or supplies; if those requirements are not met, the contracting authority may terminate the contract.

19. In the event of the bankruptcy of one of the principals or, in the case of an individual contractor, in the event of death, prohibition, disqualification or bankruptcy, or in the cases provided for by the anti-mafia regulations, the agent shall, if he or she does not identify another economic operator that fulfils the suitability requirements to take over, be required to perform the contract, directly or through the other principals, provided that the other principals meet the qualification requirements for the provision of the outstanding works or services or supplies.'

14 Article 38 of that code, entitled 'General requirements', contained paragraph 1(f), worded as follows:

'The following persons shall be excluded from participation in procedures for the award of concessions and public works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts and may not be awarded subcontracts or conclude any related contract:

(f) any person who, in the reasoned assessment of the contracting authority, has been guilty of serious negligence or bad faith in the performance of any contract awarded to that person by the contracting authority which published the contract notice or any person who has been found guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authority can demonstrate;'

15 Article 48 of that code, entitled 'Verification of compliance with the requirements', provided, in paragraph 1 thereof:

'Before opening the tenders submitted, the contracting authorities shall ask a number of tenderers not less than 10% of the tenders submitted, rounded up to the next unit, chosen by the public drawing of lots, to provide proof, within 10 days of the date of that request, that they meet the conditions as to economic and financial standing and technical and organisational capacity, which may be required in the contract notice, by submitting the documentation indicated in that notice or in the letter of invitation. The contracting authorities shall verify, during the review, that the tenderers satisfy the qualification requirement for the execution of works by means of the electronic register referred to in Article 7(10) or by means of the website of the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transport in the case of contracts awarded to general contractors; in the case of suppliers and service providers, the verification of compliance with the requirement referred to in Article 42(1)(a) of this Code shall be carried out by means of the national public procurement database referred to in Article 6bis of this Code. If such proof is not provided, or if it does not confirm the statements contained in the request to participate or in the tender, the contracting authorities shall exclude the tenderer from the invitation to tender, enforce the provisional security relating thereto and report that fact to the authority responsible for the measures referred to in Article 6(11). The authority shall also suspend [the right to participate] in tendering procedures for one to twelve months.'

16 Under Article 75 of that code, entitled 'Securities accompanying the tender':

'1. The tender shall be accompanied by a security, equal to two per cent of the basic price specified in the notice or invitation to tender, in the form of a deposit or guarantee, chosen by the tenderer. …

6. The security shall cover the failure to sign the contract owing to the contractor, and shall be automatically released upon signing the contract.

9. The contracting authority, when notifying unsuccessful tenderers of the award of the contract, shall at the same time release the security referred to in paragraph 1 to them without delay and in any event within a period not exceeding 30 days from the date of the award of the contract, even if the security is still valid.'

The disputes in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

17 By a notice published on 21 December 2015, Consip launched an open call for tenders for the award of a contract divided into 12 lots for the provision of lighting services together with related and optional services.

18 A temporary group of undertakings (TGU) to be formed, of which Luxone was the lead undertaking ('the Luxone TGU'), submitted a tender for 4 of those 12 lots. That group also included Consorzio Stabile Energie Locali Scarl ('CSEL'), Iren Servizi e Innovazione SpA (now Iren Smart Solutions), Gestione Integrata Srl and Exitone SpA.

19 By letter of 28 September 2018, Gi One, now Sofein, requested Consip to take note of the fact that it succeeded Exitone and Gestione Integrata 'in all their rights and obligations'.

20 Although Consip reserved the right, when the procedure for the review of irregularities in the tendering procedure was initiated, to verify whether Exitone had continuously complied with the general requirements laid down in Article 38 of the previous Public Procurement Code, it did not initiate any subsequent procedure.

21 The tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings, which was due to be completed by 18 April 2017 at the latest, was extended eight times 'in order to ensure that Consip had the time necessary to complete the procedure'. Each of those extensions required the confirmation of the tenders that had expired in the meantime and the extension of the provisional securities accompanying those tenders.

22 Following the seventh request for confirmation of those tenders on 2 March 2020, the members of the Luxone TGU informed Consip, by letter of 30 March 2020, that Luxone and Iren Smart Solutions wished to confirm their earlier tenders, but that Sofein and CSEL did not. In essence, Sofein and CSEL stated that, having regard to the length of time taken to prepare the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, the tenders submitted in the course of 2016 '[would] no longer [be] viable from a commercial point of view or from the point of view of sound and prudent business management'.

23 By letter of 9 June 2020, Consip requested all the members of the Luxone TGU to confirm the expired tender for the eighth time and to extend the validity of the related provisional security until 30 November 2020.

24 By letter of 18 June 2020, to which Consip did not respond, Luxone and Iren Smart Solutions repeated their tenders and reiterated that Sofein and CSEL did not wish to confirm their tenders.

25 By letter of 30 September 2020, Consip initiated a procedure in order to establish whether the requirement laid down in Article 38(1)(f) of the previous Public Procurement Code had been complied with and to assess whether the withdrawal of Sofein and CSEL was lawful. Consip argued that, since they failed to confirm their tenders, those two companies had unlawfully 'withdrawn' from the Luxone TGU.

26 By decision of 11 November 2020 ('the exclusion decision of 11 November 2020'), Consip excluded the Luxone TGU from the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings.

27 In the first place, Consip claimed that Article 11(6) of the previous Public Procurement Code granted the tenderer alone, that is to say, in the present case, the Luxone TGU as a whole, the right to free itself from the tender after a certain period had elapsed. Consequently, that right cannot be exercised by only some of the members of that group.

28 In the second place, Consip complained, more specifically, that Sofein had withdrawn from that group in order to circumvent Article 38(1) of that code. Under that provision, Sofein should have been excluded from the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings on account of the conduct of the two companies it had succeeded, which could have affected its reliability and for which it was responsible. Consip also accused Sofein of criminal conduct.

29 In the third place, Consip alleged ‘poor professional conduct’ on the part of Luxone, as evidenced by the indictment for obstruction of the public tendering procedures and the judgment delivered on 14 July 2020 by the Tribunale di Messina (District Court, Messina, Italy) against the chairman, until 22 July 2019, of Luxone’s predecessor.

30 In the fourth place, Consip complained that CSEL withdrew from the Luxone TGU essentially in order to conceal the fact that that company did not meet the requirements laid down and that it did not have the necessary resources to perform the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

31 By decision of 12 November 2020, Consip ordered the forfeiture of the provisional securities, totalling EUR 2 950 000, which had been provided for the four lots for which the Luxone TGU had submitted a tender.

32 In response to Consip’s decisions of 11 and 12 November 2020, CSEL claimed, by letter of 20 November 2020, that it had continuously met all the requirements laid down for participation in the procedure at issue in the main proceedings. Moreover, CSEL’s failure to confirm the tender, which could not be classified as a withdrawal from the Luxone TGU, was in the context of an overall reorganisation of the company.

33 By letter of 10 December 2020, Consip confirmed the exclusion decision of 11 November 2020.

34 Luxone, acting on its own behalf and as agent of the Luxone TGU, and Sofein, in two separate actions, unsuccessfully challenged the exclusion decision of 11 November 2020 and the decision of 12 November 2020 before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy). For that reason, they appealed against the judgments of that court before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), which is the referring court.

35 The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) states that it ordered the suspension of the operation of the provisional securities, due in particular to the significant sum at stake.

36 That court considers it appropriate, even before examining the actions in so far as they are directed against the exclusion decision of 11 November 2020, to assess the compatibility with EU law of Article 11(6) of the previous Public Procurement Code which is interpreted by the Italian administrative courts as meaning that the failure to confirm a tender, or only partial confirmation of a tender, at the time when that tender expires and ceases to be binding on the tenderer concerned, is treated in the same way as a withdrawal from the temporary group of undertakings which submitted it.

37 In the case of withdrawal by some of the members of such a group, that court holds that Articles 11(6), 37(8) to (10), (18) and (19), and 38(1)(f) of that code required the contracting authority to exclude the operators belonging to that group in view of the prohibition on changing its composition. The only exceptions to the principle that a temporary group of undertakings is unalterable were set out in Article 37(18) and (19) of that code.

38 The purpose of the rule in Article 11(6) of the previous Public Procurement Code was to ensure that the tender submitted was maintained throughout the foreseeable period of the public procurement procedure and not to limit its effect in time. In the view of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), that provision did not mean that that tender automatically lapsed once the period had elapsed, but only that the tenderer concerned could free itself from the tender, subject to expressly availing itself of that option. Furthermore, the principle that a temporary group of undertakings is subjectively unalterable applied even in cases where that group had not yet been formally established.

39 Moreover, in the present case, the exclusion of the Luxone TGU from the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings is also justified by the conduct of Sofein, which attempted, by withdrawing from that group, to avoid the planned review of its ‘moral reliability’. It is clear from the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) that the withdrawal of one of the members of a group must be dictated by organisational requirements specific to the temporary group of undertakings or to the consortium.

40 The referring court considers that the contested provisions of the previous Public Procurement Code are compatible with Article 4(2) of Directive 2004/18, and with Article 11(2) of Directive 2004/17, which is worded similarly.

41 Luxone and Sofein, however, criticise the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) in that, in practice, it requires the members of a temporary group of undertakings to remain bound by their tender for an indefinite period, even when that binding tender has expired several times. Such an interpretation runs counter to the principle of freedom to conduct a business guaranteed in Article 16 of the Charter, the principles of proportionality and competition, as well as the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services enshrined in Articles 49, 50, 54 and 56 TFEU.

42 The referring court recognises that, particularly in the case of lengthy procedures, a prohibition which prevents a member of such a group from freeing itself from a tender after the expiry of the extended deadline, under penalty of the entire group being excluded, appears disproportionate as a means of ensuring that that tender is genuine, not least where the economic operators which have confirmed that tender are themselves still capable of satisfying all the requirements for participation in the procurement procedure. In accordance with Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with recital 2 thereof, the measures adopted by the Member States must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve that objective.

43 Moreover, Luxone and Sofein submit that the unlawfulness of the decision of 12 November 2020 enforcing the provisional securities stems from that of the exclusion decision of 11 November 2020 and from defects specific to that decision. Those securities can be enforced only in the two situations provided for in Article 48(1) and Article 75(6) of the previous Public Procurement Code respectively, namely where the tenderer being verified did not prove that it met ‘the conditions as to economic and financial standing and technical and organisational capacity’ and where a contract was not signed ‘owing to the contractor’. However, the disputes in the main proceedings do not fall within either of those two situations.

44 Although the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court, Italy) held, in judgment No 198 of 26 July 2022, that the enforcement of a security did not have the nature of a criminal penalty, the referring court considers, like Luxone and Sofein, that, in view of the magnitude of the ‘economic burden’ imposed on those companies, the automatic enforcement of the provisional securities would have the characteristics of such a penalty in relation to those companies.

45 In that regard, Article 49(3) of the Charter states that ‘the severity of penalties must not be disproportionate to the criminal offence’. Similarly, Article 1 of Protocol No 1 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed in Paris on 20 March 1952, and Article 17 of the Charter were interpreted as seeking to ensure respect for proportionality between the conduct engaged in and the penalty imposed, by prohibiting the right to property from being restricted without reason and, therefore, by avoiding an ‘excessive and disproportionate burden’ in relation to the objective pursued. The principle of proportionality is also expressed in general terms in recital 2 of Directive 2004/18.

46 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Do Directive [2004/18], Articles 16 and 52 of the [Charter] and the principles of proportionality, competition, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services laid down in Articles 49, 50, 54 and 56 … TFEU preclude national rules (Articles 11(6), 37(8), (9), (10), (18) and (19), and 38(1)(f) of [the previous Public Procurement Code]) which exclude, in the event of the expiry of the validity period of the tender originally submitted by a [temporary group of undertakings] to be established, the possibility of reducing the original membership of the [temporary group of undertakings] when the validity period of that tender is extended? In particular, are those national provisions compatible with the general principles of EU law of freedom of economic initiative and effectiveness, and with Article 16 of the [Charter]?

(2) Do Directive [2004/18], Articles 16, 49, 50 and 52 of the [Charter], Article 4 of Protocol No 7 to the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), Article 6 TEU, and the principles of proportionality, competition, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services laid down in Articles 49, 50, 54 and 56 TFEU preclude national rules (Articles 38(1)(f), 48 and 75 of [the previous Public Procurement Code]) which provide for the application of the penalty of forfeiture of the provisional security, as an automatic consequence of the exclusion of an economic operator from a procedure for the award of a public service contract, irrespective of whether or not that economic operator has been awarded the contract?'

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

47 As a preliminary point, it should be recalled that, according to the Court's settled case-law, in the procedure provided for in Article 267 TFEU, which provides for cooperation between national courts and the Court, it is for the latter to provide the referring court with an answer which will be of use to it and enable it to decide the case before it. To that end, the Court may find it necessary to take account of provisions of EU law to which the national court has not referred in its questions. The fact that a national court has, formally speaking, worded a question referred for a preliminary ruling with reference to certain provisions of EU law does not prevent the Court from providing the national court with all the points of interpretation which may be of assistance in adjudicating on the case pending before it, whether or not that court has referred to them in its questions. In that regard, it is for the Court to extract from all the information provided by the national court, in particular from the grounds of the decision referring the questions, the points of EU law which require interpretation, having regard to the subject matter of the dispute (see, to that effect, judgments of 12 December 1990, SARPP, C-241/89, EU:C:1990:459, paragraph 8 and of 5 December 2023, Nordic Info, C-128/22, EU:C:2023:951, paragraph 99 and the case-law cited).

48 In the present case, the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings does not relate to one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 9 of Directive 2004/17 to which the directive applies. It must therefore be held that that procedure falls within the scope of Directive 2004/18.

49 In those circumstances, it must be held that, by its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 47(3) and Article 48(4) of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with the general principle of proportionality, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which excludes the possibility for original members of a temporary group of tendering undertakings to withdraw from that group where the period of validity of the tender submitted by that group elapses and the contracting authority seeks to extend the validity of the tenders submitted to it.

50 At the outset, it should be recalled that Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 give an economic operator the right to rely on the economic and financial standing of the participants in the group or of other entities, as well as their technical and/or professional abilities, provided that it proves to the contracting authority that the group will have at its disposal the necessary resources to perform the contract. That directive thus permits the combining of the capacities of more than one economic operator for the purpose of satisfying the minimum capacity requirements set by the contracting authority, provided that the candidate or tenderer relying on the capacities of one or more other entities proves to that authority that it will actually have at its disposal the resources of those entities necessary for the execution of the contract. Such an interpretation is consistent with the objective pursued by the directives in this area of attaining the widest possible opening-up of public contracts to competition to the benefit of not only economic operators, but also contracting authorities. That interpretation also facilitates the involvement of small- and medium-sized undertakings in public contracts, an aim also pursued by Directive 2004/18, as stated in recital 32 thereof (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraphs 29, 33 and 34, and of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraphs 25 to 27).

51 It is also apparent from Article 47(3) and Article 48(4) of that directive that a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 4 of that directive may, under the same conditions, rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.

52 That said, neither Article 47(3) nor Article 48(4) of Directive 2004/18 lay down specific rules concerning alterations to the composition of a group of tendering economic operators, with the result that the regulation of such a situation falls within the competence of the Member States (see, by analogy, judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 35).

53 In the present case, it follows from Article 37(9), (10), (18) and (19) of the previous Public Procurement Code that, except in the event of bankruptcy of the lead undertaking or a member of a temporary group of undertakings, any alteration affecting the original composition of such a group was prohibited, otherwise all the members of that group would be excluded from the public procurement procedure.

54 That prohibition on altering the composition of a temporary grouping of undertakings must, however, be assessed in the light of the general principles of EU law, in particular the principle of equal treatment, the obligation of transparency which flows from that principle and the principle of proportionality (see, to that effect, judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 36).

55 The principle of proportionality, which is recalled in recital 2 of Directive 2004/18, requires that the rules laid down by the Member States or the contracting authorities in implementing the provisions of that directive must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of that directive (see, to that effect, judgments of 16 December 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 48, and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 155).

56 The principle of equal treatment affords tenderers equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which implies that all tenders must be subject to the same conditions. The obligation of transparency, which is its corollary, is intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. That obligation implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, secondly, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted fulfil the criteria applying to the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgments of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 44, and of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 36).

57 The principles of transparency and equal treatment which govern all procedures for the award of public contracts require the substantive and procedural conditions concerning participation in a contract to be clearly defined in advance and made public, in particular the obligations of tenderers, in order that those tenderers may know exactly the procedural requirements and be sure that the same requirements apply to all candidates (see, to that effect, judgments of 9 February 2006, La Cascina and Others, C-226/04 and C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94, paragraph 32, and of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 37).

58 In that regard, point 21 of Annex VII A to Directive 2004/18 provides that the 'time frame during which the tenderer must maintain its tender (open procedures)' forms an integral part of the information which must be included in the contract notices.

59 In the first place, it follows from the judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin (C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraphs 44 and 48) that Article 47(3) and Article 48(4) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that members of a temporary group of undertakings may, without infringing the principle of equal treatment, withdraw from that group, provided that it is established, first, that the remaining members of that group meet the conditions for participation in the public procurement procedure provided for by the contracting entity and, secondly, that the continuation of its participation in that procedure does not mean that other tenderers are placed at a competitive disadvantage.

60 Therefore, by imposing a strict requirement to maintain the legal and substantive identity of a temporary group of undertakings, Article 37 (9), (10), (18) and (19) of the previous Public Procurement Code manifestly infringes the principle of proportionality.

61 That is all the more so since no derogation is provided for where the contracting authority repeatedly requests the postponement of the date of validity of the tenders. Such a postponement requires all the members of a temporary group of undertakings, first, to immobilise certain resources, both in staff and in equipment, with a view to the possible award of the contract at issue and, secondly, to extend the provisional security provided, which may represent a significant burden, especially for an SME.

62 In the second place, it is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that the referring court interpreted Article 11(6) of the previous Public Procurement Code as meaning that the tender did not automatically lapse once the period indicated in the tender had elapsed. Therefore, the tenderer had to expressly avail itself of the right to free itself from the tender. It is also apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that the specification that the withdrawal of a member of a temporary group of undertakings had to be dictated by organisational needs specific to that group results solely from the case-law of the referring court.

63 The Court has held, on several occasions, that a situation in which the conditions for participating in a procedure for the award of a public contract resulting from the judicial interpretation of national law is particularly disadvantageous for tenderers established in other Member States, inasmuch as their level of knowledge of that national law and the interpretation thereof cannot be compared to that of tenderers from the Member State concerned (judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 46, and order of 13 July 2017, Saferoad Grawil and Saferoad Kabex, C-35/17, EU:C:2017:557, paragraph 22).

64 Lastly, in so far as the two companies which refused to renew their tender were also criticised for having sought to circumvent the review of compliance with the selection criteria and, therefore, to avoid exclusion from the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings, it should be added that, although the contracting authority may, at any time, verify the reliability of the members of a temporary group of undertakings and, on that basis, satisfy itself that those members are not covered by one of the grounds for exclusion from a tendering procedure listed in Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, it must ensure, in the context of that assessment, that it complies with the principle of proportionality, as defined in paragraph 55 above.

65 Therefore, when applying optional grounds for exclusion from a public procurement procedure, a contracting authority must pay even greater attention to that principle where the exclusion provided for by the national legislation affects the entire group of economic operators not for a failure attributable to all its members, but for a failure merely on the part of one or more of them, where the lead undertaking of that group does not have any control over the economic operator or operators with which it intended to form such a group (see, by analogy, judgments of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 48, and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 156).

66 The principle of proportionality requires the contracting authority to carry out a specific and individual assessment of the conduct of the entity concerned (see, to that effect, judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 31). On that basis, the contracting authority must have regard to the means available to the tenderer for establishing whether there was a failure on the part of the entity on whose capacities it intended to rely (judgments of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 40, and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 157).

67 In those circumstances, Article 47(3) and Article 48(4) of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with the general principle of proportionality, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which excludes the possibility for original members of a temporary group of tendering undertakings to withdraw from that group where the period of validity of the tender submitted by that group elapses and the contracting authority seeks to extend the validity of the tenders submitted to it, provided that it is established, first, that the remaining members of that group meet the requirements laid down by the contracting authority and, secondly, that their continued participation in the tendering procedure in question does not place other tenderers at a competitive disadvantage.

68 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the principles of proportionality and of equal treatment, and the obligation of transparency, as set out in Article 2 and recital 2 of Directive 2004/18, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which provides for the automatic forfeiture of the provisional security provided by a tenderer following its exclusion from a procedure for the award of a public service contract, even though the service in question has not been awarded to it.

69 In that regard, as is apparent from paragraphs 61 and 62 of the judgment of 28 February 2018, MA.T.I. SUD and Duemme SGR (C-523/16 and C-536/16, EU:C:2018:122), the setting in advance by the contracting authority of the amount of the provisional security to be provided in the contract notice does indeed meet the requirements arising from the principles of equal treatment of tenderers, transparency and legal certainty, in that it objectively makes it possible to avoid any discriminatory or arbitrary treatment of those tenderers by that contracting authority. Nevertheless, the automatic forfeiture of that security thus set in advance, irrespective of the nature of the rectifications which might be made by the errant tenderer and, therefore, in the absence of any specific reasons, does not appear to be compatible with the requirements deriving from the principle of proportionality.

70 Similarly, although the forfeiture of that security is an appropriate means of achieving the legitimate objectives pursued by the Member State concerned, relating to the need, first, to place responsibility on the tenderers in submitting their tenders and, secondly, to offset the financial burden on the contracting authority for checking that tenders are in order, the amount of that security in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings appears manifestly excessive in the light of the conduct of the contract procedure in question (see, to that effect, judgment of 28 February 2018, MA.T.I. SUD and Duemme SGR, C-523/16 and C-536/16, EU:C:2018:122, paragraphs 63 and 64).

71 Therefore, it must be held that the principles of proportionality and of equal treatment, and the obligation of transparency, as set out in Article 2 and recital 2 of Directive 2004/18, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which provides for the automatic forfeiture of the provisional security provided by a tenderer following its exclusion from a procedure for the award of a public service contract, even though the service in question has not been awarded to it.

Costs

72 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 47(3) and Article 48(4) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, read in conjunction with the general principle of proportionality, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which excludes the possibility for original members of a temporary group of tendering undertakings to withdraw from that group where the period of validity of the tender submitted by that group elapses and the contracting authority seeks to extend the validity of the tenders submitted to it, provided that it is established, first, that the remaining members of that group meet the requirements laid down by the contracting authority and, secondly, that their continued participation in the tendering procedure in question does not place other tenderers at a competitive disadvantage.

2. The principles of proportionality and of equal treatment, and the obligation of transparency, as set out in Article 2 and recital 2 of Directive 2004/18, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which provides for the automatic forfeiture of the provisional security provided by a tenderer following its exclusion from a procedure for the award of a public service contract, even though the service in question has not been awarded to it.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

13 June 2024 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Award of public works, public supply and public service contracts – Directive 2014/24/EU – Article 18 – Principles of equal treatment and transparency – Article 46 – Division of a contract into lots – Opportunity for the tenderer which submitted the second most economically advantageous tender to be awarded a lot on the terms of the most economically advantageous tender)

In Case C-737/22,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Østre Landsret (High Court of Eastern Denmark, Denmark), made by decision of 11 November 2022, received at the Court on 1 December 2022, in the proceedings

BibMedia A/S,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber), composed of C. Lycourgos (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, O. Spineanu-Matei, J.-C. Bonichot, S. Rodin and L.S. Rossi, Judges, Advocate General: A. Rantos,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Staten og Kommunernes Indkøbsservice A/S, by J. Bødtcher-Hansen and R. Holdgaard, advokater, – BibMedia A/S, by H. Holtse, advokat,

– the Estonian Government, by M. Kriisa, acting as Agent,

– the Spanish Government, by I. Herranz Elizalde, acting as Agent,

– the Austrian Government, by A. Posch and J. Schmoll, acting as Agents, – the European Commission, by G. Gattinara, C. Vang and G. Wils, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 18 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Staten og Kommunernes Indkøbsservice A/S ('SKI') and BibMedia A/S concerning the award of a public contract relating to the provision of library materials and related preparatory services.

Legal context

3 Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, headed 'Principles of procurement', provides in paragraph 1:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.'

4 Article 27 of that directive, entitled 'Open procedure', provides in paragraph 1:

'In open procedures, any interested economic operator may submit a tender in response to a call for competition.

5 Article 28 of that directive, entitled 'Restricted procedure', states:

'1. In restricted procedures, any economic operator may submit a request to participate in response to a call for competition … by providing the information for qualitative selection that is requested by the contracting authority.

2. Only those economic operators invited to do so by the contracting authority following its assessment of the information provided may submit a tender. …

…'

6 Article 46 of that directive, entitled 'Division of contracts into lots', provides:

'1. Contracting authorities may decide to award a contract in the form of separate lots and may determine the size and subject matter of such lots.

2. Contracting authorities shall indicate, in the contract notice or in the invitation to confirm interest, whether tenders may be submitted for one, for several or for all of the lots.

Contracting authorities may, even where tenders may be submitted for several or all lots, limit the number of lots that may be awarded to one tenderer, provided that the maximum number of lots per tenderer is stated in the contract notice or in the invitation to confirm interest. Contracting authorities shall indicate in the procurement documents the objective and non-discriminatory criteria or rules they intend to apply for determining which lots will be awarded where the application of the award criteria would result in one tenderer being awarded more lots than the maximum number.

3. Member States may provide that, where more than one lot may be awarded to the same tenderer, contracting authorities may award contracts combining several or all lots where they have specified in the contract notice or in the invitation to confirm interest that they reserve the possibility of doing so and indicate the lots or groups of lots that may be combined.

Danish law

7 Paragraph 2 of the Udbudsloven (Law on Public Procurement) provides:

‘1. In public procurement procedures …, a contracting authority shall comply with the principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality.

2. An open procedure may not be designed with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this law or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging one or more specified economic operators.’

8 As set out in Paragraph 49(3) of that law:

‘A contracting authority shall state the following in the contract notice:

(1) whether the tenderer may submit tenders for one, for several or for all of the lots,

(2) whether the tenderer can be awarded one, several or all lots and, as the case may be, the lots or groups of lots that may be combined, and

(3) the objective and non-discriminatory criteria or rules for determining the award of lots, including how the lots will be awarded where the application of the criteria or rules would result in one tenderer being awarded more lots than the maximum number which the tenderer may be awarded.’

9 Paragraph 56 of that law provides:

‘In open procedures, any interested economic operator may submit a tender in response to a contract notice. …’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

10 SKI is a central purchasing body owned by the Danish State and Kommunernes Landsforening (Association of Danish Municipalities). That entity was set up to streamline public procurement through the award and implementation of framework agreements on behalf of the State and municipalities.

11 On 4 February 2020, SKI launched a tendering procedure with a view to concluding a framework agreement relating to the provision of library materials and preparatory services. The award criterion was the lowest price.

12 That contract was divided into eight lots. Lots 1 and 2, comprising the subject matter of the main proceedings, were titled ‘Danish books and sheet music (East)’ and ‘Danish books and sheet music (West)’, and had an estimated value of 253 million Danish kroner (DKK) (approximately EUR 34 million) and DKK 475 million (approximately EUR 63 million), respectively.

13 Paragraph 3.1 of the tender specifications relating to that call for tenders provided:

‘Lots 1 and 2 are interdependent (see paragraph 3.1.1) and, if a tenderer submits a tender for one of those lots, that tender will automatically be deemed to have been submitted for both lots. …

Subject to the above, there are no restrictions on how many or how few of the lots a tenderer may/should submit tenders for.

SKI expects to award a contract to one supplier per lot. The same supplier may be awarded several lots.

The market for library materials is characterised by there being only a few specialised suppliers and potential tenderers. Danish books and sheet music constitute the largest product area in terms of turnover and are commercially important for the potential tenderers. In order to safeguard competition in the market in the future, the contracts relating to Danish books and sheet music are divided geographically into two lots. The affiliated customers are accordingly divided into two categories, namely “East” and “West”, respectively. …’

14 Paragraph 3.1.1 of those tender specifications provided:

‘The contracts relating to Danish books and sheet music are being put out to tender according to an “East/West model”, which means that the intention is to designate one supplier in Eastern Denmark and another supplier in Western Denmark, but that the same proposed prices will apply for all customers regardless of whether the customers are located in Eastern or Western Denmark.

The tenderer who submits the most economically advantageous tender will be awarded the contract to be the supplier of Lot 2 – Danish books and sheet music (West).

The tenderer who submits the second most economically advantageous tender will be awarded the contract to be the supplier of Lot 1 – Danish books and sheet music (East). However, that tenderer must accept that the award of the contract as the supplier in Eastern Denmark shall require the tenderer to supply the products and services covered by the framework agreement to customers in Eastern Denmark at exactly the same prices as those that have been offered and will be applied in Western Denmark by the tenderer with the most economically advantageous tender.

If the tenderer with the second most economically advantageous tender does not agree to be the supplier in Eastern Denmark, the opportunity shall pass to the tenderer with the third most economically advantageous tender, which must likewise accept that the award of the contract as the supplier in Eastern Denmark shall require the tenderer to supply the products and services covered by the framework agreement to customers in Eastern Denmark at exactly the same prices as those which have been offered and will be applied in Western Denmark by the tenderer with the most economically advantageous tender.

If that tenderer likewise does not agree to be the supplier in Eastern Denmark, the opportunity shall pass to the next tenderer on the list, and so on. If the list of tenderers with tenders satisfying the tender conditions is exhausted and no supplier for Eastern Denmark is found from among them, the supplier who is awarded the contract for Western Denmark shall also be awarded the contract for Eastern Denmark. …

15 As at the end of the period for submitting tenders, SKI had received tenders from Audio Visionary Music A/S (‘AVM’) and from BibMedia which each submitted tenders for all of the lots.

16 Taking the view that BibMedia had submitted the most economically advantageous tender, SKI awarded Lot 2 (West) to BibMedia and proposed to award Lot 1 (East) to AVM, on the condition that AVM accept to deliver the supplies and perform the services provided for in that lot at the price offered by BibMedia, of which AVM had been informed.

17 AVM accepted, whereupon SKI sent a communication of the contract award decision on 21 April 2020.

18 On 30 April 2020, AVM lodged a complaint with Klagenævnet for Udbud (Public Procurement Complaints Board, Denmark; ‘the Complaints Board’).

19 On 14 January 2021, the Complaints Board found that SKI had infringed Paragraph 2(1) of the Law on Public Procurement by applying a procedure for the award of Lots 1 and 2, the terms of which meant, in essence, that the tenderer which had submitted the second most economically advantageous tender could modify its tender after the period for submitting tenders had expired in order to be awarded Lot 1 (‘the decision of 14 January 2021’).

20 The Complaints Board justified that decision by stating that that tenderer had had the opportunity to amend an essential term of its tender, namely the price, in a way which is favourable to the contracting authority and gives the tenderer the opportunity to improve its tender in order to be awarded one of the lots of the contract. Such an approach is contrary to the ban on negotiations, which derives from the principles of equal treatment and transparency.

21 On 9 July 2021, SKI brought an action before the Retten i Glostrup (Glostrup District Court, Denmark) against the decision of 14 January 2021.

22 On 7 December 2021, that action was remitted to the Østre Landsret (High Court of Eastern Denmark, Denmark), sitting as the court of first instance, which is the referring court.

23 The referring court considers that, while the Court has previously clarified the scope of the ban on negotiation resulting from Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 as regards reservations contained in a tender, subcontracting and the possibility of taking additional information into account, the Court has not yet clarified whether, in an open procedure for a contract divided into lots in accordance with Article 46 of that directive, the ban on negotiation precludes a tenderer which has not submitted the most economically advantageous tender from being awarded a lot on the condition that it accepts to deliver the supplies and perform the services forming the subject matter of the contract at the same price as that offered by the tenderer which submitted the most economically advantageous tender.

24 In those circumstances, the Østre Landsret (High Court of Eastern Denmark) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Do the principles of transparency and equal treatment in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 and the consequent ban on negotiations preclude a tenderer who has submitted the second most economically advantageous tender in connection with an open procedure for separate lots (see Articles 27 and 46 of that directive) from being given the opportunity, after the deadline for submission of the tender has expired, and in accordance with the predetermined terms in the specifications, to supply the proposed services within a lot under the same terms as a tenderer who has submitted the most economically advantageous tender and who, therefore, is awarded another lot put out to tender at the same time?’

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

25 The Court has repeatedly pointed out that the procedure provided for in Article 267 TFEU is an instrument of cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts, by means of which the Court provides the national courts with the points of interpretation of EU law which they need in order to decide the disputes before them and that the justification for a reference for a preliminary ruling is not that it enables advisory opinions on general or hypothetical questions to be delivered, but rather that it is necessary for the effective resolution of a dispute (judgment of 9 January 2024, G. and Others (Appointment of judges to the ordinary courts in Poland), C-181/21 and C-269/21, EU:C:2024:1, paragraph 62 and the case-law cited). The Court has also held that it is clear from both the wording and the scheme of Article 267 TFEU that a national court or tribunal is not empowered to bring a matter before the Court by way of a request for a preliminary ruling unless a case is pending before it in which it is called upon to give a decision which is capable of taking account of the preliminary ruling (judgment of 26 March 2020, Miasto Łowicz and Prokurator Generalny, C-558/18 and C-563/18, EU:C:2020:234, paragraph 46 and the case-law cited).

26 In the present case, on 13 October 2023, the Court sent the referring court a request for information, asking it to clarify whether, despite the fact, referred to in BibMedia's written observations, that the tendering procedure at issue was not resumed following the decision of 14 January 2021, but was replaced by a new tendering procedure, SKI retains, under Danish law, a legal interest to bring proceedings in the case in the main proceedings.

27 On 27 November 2023, the referring court answered that request for information in the affirmative, referring in particular to Danish case-law on the legal interest to bring proceedings in administrative law.

28 Since that court has explained that, under national law, there continues to be a legal interest in the resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings in which that court is called upon to give a decision which is capable of taking account of the preliminary ruling, the question asked is not hypothetical and must be regarded as admissible.

Consideration of the question referred

29 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that the principles of equal treatment and transparency set out in that provision preclude, in a procedure for the award of a public contract divided into lots, the tenderer which has submitted the second most economically advantageous tender from being awarded, in accordance with the terms set out in the procurement documents, a lot on the condition that that tenderer accepts to deliver the supplies and perform the services relating to that lot at the same price as that offered by the tenderer which submitted the most economically advantageous tender and which has therefore been awarded another, larger lot of that contract.

30 The objective of the principle of equal treatment, set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, is to encourage the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure and lies at the very heart of the EU rules on public procurement procedures. In accordance with that principle, tenderers must be on an equal footing both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the contracting authority (see, to that effect, judgment of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 43 and the case-law cited).

31 The principle of transparency, also enshrined in Article 18(1), is intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. That principle requires that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or tender specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, secondly, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the relevant contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 September 2017, Casertana Costruzioni, C-223/16, EU:C:2017:685, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited).

32 Those principles of equal treatment and of transparency preclude any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure, which means that, as a general rule, a tender cannot be amended after it has been submitted, whether at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderer (judgments of 14 September 2017, Casertana Costruzioni, C-223/16, EU:C:2017:685, paragraph 35, and of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 43).

33 A method of awarding public contracts such as that set out in the tender specifications for the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings, according to which the contract is divided into lots, the largest of which will be awarded to the tenderer which has submitted the most economically advantageous tender, while a lot of lower value will, with the aim of maintaining competition in the economic sector concerned, preferably be awarded to the tenderer which has submitted the second most economically advantageous tender, on the condition that it accepts to perform that lot at the price of the tenderer which submitted the most economically advantageous tender, does not contain any element of negotiation, within the meaning of the case-law cited above.

34 In this respect, it should be noted that such a method for awarding public contracts guarantees, for the award of all lots, that the criterion of the lowest price is fulfilled, without the possibility for the contracting authority to derogate from that criterion or to ask a tenderer to amend its tender, since the contracting authority must base its decision on the prices offered before the expiry of the period for submitting tenders and to observe, throughout that procedure, the order of ranking resulting from those tenders.

35 In such a public procurement procedure, it is the prices offered before the expiry of the period for submitting tenders which directly and definitively determine the ranking of tenderers. In that ranking, the tenderer which offered the lowest price takes first place and that tenderer's price is that at which the entirety of the contract will be concluded.

36 The opportunity, provided by the tender specifications to the tenderer submitting the second most economically advantageous tender, of being awarded one lot of the contract results solely, as is expressly stated in the contract documents, from the fact that it takes second place in the ranking resulting from the prices offered in the tenders.

37 Whether use is made of that opportunity depends on the decision of that tenderer whether or not to accept to perform the lot in question at the price of the tenderer which submitted the most economically advantageous tender. That condition forms part of the detailed terms of the award procedure set out in the tender specifications. Where the tenderer which has submitted the second most economically advantageous tender does not agree to match that price, it falls to the tenderer which is third in the ranking resulting from the prices offered in the tenders to define its position on that point, and so on in the order of ranking of the tenders for as long as none of the tenderers agrees to match the price of the tender submitting the most economically advantageous tender. If all the tenderers ranked from second place to last place refuse to perform that lot at that price, the tenderer which submitted the most economically advantageous tender is to be awarded all of the lots of the contract.

38 None of the decisions which may be taken by the tenderers ranked from second place to last place involves amending the tenders submitted prior to the expiry of the period prescribed for that purpose or negotiation with the contracting authority. No tenderer has the possibility of changing, by amending its tender or by any negotiation, its position in the ranking or the price at which the contract relating to a given lot will be concluded.

39 It is apparent from the above considerations that a contract award procedure such as that at issue in the main proceedings comes, without breaching the principles of equal treatment and transparency, within the scenario referred to in Article 46 of Directive 2014/24, namely that in which a contracting authority decides to award a contract in the form of separate lots, specifying in the procurement documents whether a tender may be submitted for a single lot, for several lots or for all of the lots and indicating which objective and non-discriminatory criteria will be applied to determine the award of lots.

40 In that respect, it is irrelevant that, in the present case, the procurement procedure is open, within the meaning of Article 27 of that directive, since the considerations set out in paragraphs 33 to 38 above may equally apply in restricted procedures, with the meaning of Article 28 of that directive, once the economic operators invited to submit a tender have submitted their respective tenders.

41 In light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that the principles of equal treatment and transparency set out in that provision do not preclude, in a procedure for the award of a public contract divided into lots, the tenderer which has submitted the second most economically advantageous tender from being awarded, in accordance with the terms set out in the procurement documents, a lot on the condition that that tenderer accepts to deliver the supplies and perform the services relating to that lot at the same price as that offered by the tenderer which submitted the most economically advantageous tender and which has therefore been awarded another, larger lot of that contract.

Costs

42 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that the principles of equal treatment and transparency set out in that provision do not preclude, in a procedure for the award of a public contract divided into lots, the tenderer which has submitted the second most economically advantageous tender from being awarded, in accordance with the terms set out in the procurement documents, a lot on the condition that that tenderer accepts to deliver the supplies and perform the services relating to that lot at the same price as that offered by the tenderer which submitted the most economically advantageous tender and which has therefore been awarded another, larger lot of that contract.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

6 June 2024 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Review procedures in respect of the award of public supply and public works contracts – Directive 89/665/EEC – Article 2(1)(c) – Compensation awarded to a tenderer unlawfully excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract – Scope – Loss of opportunity)

In Case C-547/22,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Okresný súd Bratislava II (District Court, Bratislava II, Slovakia), made by decision of 22 July 2022, received at the Court on 17 August 2022, in the proceedings

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara, R. Lindenthal and G. Wils, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 7 December 2023,

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 2(1)(c) and Article 2(6) and (7) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665 and 92/113/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) ('Directive 89/665').

2 The request has been made in proceedings between INGSTEEL spol. s r. o. and the Slovak Republic, acting through the Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority, Slovakia), concerning an action for damages brought by that company following the unlawful exclusion of the association of which it was a member ('the tendering association') from procedure for the award of a public contract initiated by Slovenský futbalový zväz (Slovak Football Association; 'the contracting authority').

Legal context

3 The sixth recital of Directive 89/665 is worded as follows:

'Whereas it is necessary to ensure that adequate procedures exist in all the Member States to permit the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully and compensation of persons harmed by an infringement.'

4 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides:

'1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts [(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2004/18], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming harm in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

5 Article 2 of that directive, entitled 'Requirements for review procedures' states:

'1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

6. Member States may provide that where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.

7. Except where provided for in Articles 2d to 2f, the effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract in accordance with Article 1(5), paragraph 3 of this Article or Articles 2a to 2f, the powers of the body responsible for review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

6 Recital 36 of Directive 2007/66 states:

‘This Directive respects fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised in particular by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. In particular, this Directive seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second subparagraphs of Article 47 of the Charter.’

Slovak law

7 Under Paragraph 3(1)(a) of Zákon č. 514/2003 Z. z. o zodpovednosti za škodu spôsobenú pri výkone verejnej moci (Law No 514/2003 on liability for damage caused in the exercise of public authority) of 28 October 2003 (Zbierka zákonov No 215/2003, p. 3966), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings (‘Law No 514/2003’), the State is liable for damage caused by an unlawful decision adopted by public bodies in the exercise of public authority.

8 According to Paragraph 5(1) of that law, a party to a procedure that suffered damage as a result of an unlawful decision issued in that procedure has a right to compensation.

9 In accordance with Paragraph 6(1) of that law, that right to compensation may be invoked only where such a decision has been annulled or amended, on the ground that it is unlawful, by a competent authority. The court ruling on compensation for such damage is bound by the decision of that authority.

10 Under Paragraph 15(1) of that law, the right to compensation for damage caused by an irregular administrative procedure must be the subject of a preliminary examination on the basis of a written application by the injured party requesting a preliminary examination of his or her right before the competent authority.

11 It is apparent from Paragraph 16(4) of Law No 514/2003, first, that if that authority does not grant that request or if it informs the injured party, in writing, that it will not grant it, that party may bring an action before a court for a ruling on that request and, secondly, that, in the context of its legal action, that party may claim compensation only to the extent of the claim and the title which were the subject of the preliminary examination.

12 Paragraph 17(1) of that law provides that compensation is to be paid for actual loss and loss of profit, unless otherwise specifically provided.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

13 By a notice published on 16 November 2013, the contracting authority launched a call for tenders for the award of a public contract for works for the reconstruction, modernisation and construction of 16 football stadiums. The tendering association took part in that call for tenders.

14 Taking the view that that association had not satisfied the requirements of the contract notice relating, in particular, to its economic and financial standing, the contracting authority decided to exclude it from the contract in question. That exclusion decision was confirmed by a decision of the defendant in the main proceedings of 9 May 2014 and subsequently by a decision of its Board of Governors of 7 July 2014. The Krajský súd v Bratislave (Regional Court, Bratislava, Slovakia) having dismissed the action brought against that decision by judgment of 13 January 2015, that association brought an appeal against that judgment before the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic).

15 After making a request for a preliminary ruling to the Court that gave rise to the judgment of 13 July 2017, INGSTEEL and Metrostav (C-76/16, EU:C:2017:549), the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic) annulled those decisions of 9 May and 7 July 2014. On 3 April 2018, the defendant in the main proceedings adopted a new decision ordering the contracting authority to cancel the exclusion of the tendering association from the procedure for the award of the public contract at issue.

16 Since that procedure had in the meantime been closed by the conclusion of a framework agreement with the only tenderer that had remained in the competition following the exclusion of that association, the applicant in the main proceedings brought an action before the referring court, the Okresný súd Bratislava II (District Court, Bratislava II, Slovakia), seeking damages for the loss allegedly suffered as a result of the unlawful decisions of the defendant in the main proceedings and its Board of Governors.

17 Before that court, the applicant in the main proceedings claims that that damage is the result of the unlawful exclusion of the tendering association from the public contract at issue, the successful tenderer having been awarded the contract only because of that exclusion. It takes the view, in essence, that if that association had not been excluded from the contested award procedure at issue, that association would have obtained that contract, since its tender was more advantageous than that of that successful tenderer and satisfied all the conditions of the contract notice concerned.

18 In order to determine the amount of the damage allegedly suffered, the applicant in the main proceedings commissioned an expert's report to quantify the loss of profit under the contract thus lost. On the basis of that expert's report, it claims a loss of profit under the contract lost in the amount of EUR 819 498.10, excluding value added tax, and damages in the amount of EUR 2 500, corresponding to the costs incurred in preparing that expert report.

19 Before the referring court, the defendant in the main proceedings states that the tendering association was excluded at the end of the first stage of the procedure for the award of the contract concerned and that its reinstatement in that procedure would not have led automatically to the award of that contract to that association, since the contracting authority would have had to assess its tender in greater detail and, in particular, determine whether the price of that tender constituted an abnormally low tender.

20 Furthermore, the defendant in the main proceedings takes the view, relying in that regard on the judgment of 17 March 2005, AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission (T-160/03, EU:T:2005:107), that the claim of the applicant in the main proceedings is purely hypothetical. The expert report submitted by the applicant is based on fictitious data, given, in particular, that the quantity of construction work provided for in the invitation to tender at issue would not necessarily be carried out in reality.

21 In that context, the applicant in the main proceedings points out that a claim which, for objective reasons, is not established with certainty cannot be classified from the outset as hypothetical. Unlike actual damage, the loss of profit does not consist in a reduction in the assets of the injured party, but in a loss of the expected profit, which must be reasonably foreseeable, in the normal course of events, in the absence of the unlawful act in question. As regards the performance of the public contract, the applicant in the main proceedings states that, if the contracting authority issues a call for tenders, it may be assumed that it has an interest in the performance of the contract at issue and that it intends to conclude a contract with the successful tenderer, as indeed is the case here, since the contracting authority concluded a contract with the successful tenderer for all the works provided for in the call for tenders at issue.

22 In the light of the arguments of the parties to the main proceedings, the referring court asks whether Paragraph 17 of Law No 514/2003 is compatible with Directive 89/665. It states that, during the proceedings before it, the applicant in the main proceedings claimed compensation for a missed opportunity by using the concept of 'loss of profit', which was closest to the right to compensation for damage resulting from the loss of opportunity on which it relied. Slovak law does not distinguish between the various categories of damage for which compensation may be awarded, so that the loss of an opportunity falls within the category of loss of profit. The applicant in the main proceedings adds that the Court has long and consistently held that, in the event of the unlawful exclusion of a tenderer from a public procurement procedure, that tenderer has the right to claim compensation for the damage which it has suffered as a result of the loss of an opportunity, which cannot be equated with loss of profit and which does not require such a high degree of probability of obtaining an economic advantage. It is compensation for a lost opportunity to make a profit and not compensation for the profit itself.

23 In those circumstances, the Okresný súd Bratislava II (Bratislava II District Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is the practice of a national court hearing a dispute involving a claim for compensation for damage caused to a tenderer who was unlawfully excluded from a public procurement procedure, pursuant to which compensation for loss of opportunity is denied, compatible with Article 2(1)(c) [of Directive 89/665], read in conjunction with Article 2(6) and (7) of [that directive]?

(2) Is the practice of a national court hearing a dispute involving a claim for compensation for damage caused to a tenderer who was unlawfully excluded from a public procurement procedure, pursuant to which a claim for lost profits caused by the loss of opportunity to participate in a public contract is not part of the claim for compensation, compatible with Article 2(1)(c) [of Directive 89/665], read in conjunction with Article 2(6) and (7) of [that directive]?'

Consideration of the questions referred

Admissibility

24 The defendant in the main proceedings disputes the admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, arguing, in essence, that they are not relevant for the purposes of assessing the action in the main proceedings, since neither the admissibility of that action nor even the locus standi of the applicant in the main proceedings has been established by the referring court. Furthermore, the Court does not have jurisdiction to answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, in so far as, by those questions, the referring court seeks, in reality, a re-examination, by the Court, of the dispute in the main proceedings or directions concerning the procedure to be followed in the event that it decides not to award damages for loss of opportunity.

25 In that regard, it is clear from settled case-law that, in the context of the cooperation between the Court and the national courts provided for in Article 267 TFEU, it is solely for the national court, before which the dispute has been brought and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case, both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where questions submitted concern the interpretation of EU law, the Court is, in principle, bound to give a ruling (judgment of 12 October 2023, INTER Consulting, C-726/21, EU:C:2023:764, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

26 It follows that questions on the interpretation of EU law referred by a national court in the factual and legislative context which that court is responsible for defining, the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court to determine, enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought is unrelated to the actual facts of the main action or its object, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual and legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (judgment of 12 October 2023, INTER Consulting, C-726/21, EU:C:2023:764, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

27 In the present case, the referring court is asking the Court not to apply the provisions of EU law referred to in the questions referred for a preliminary ruling to the dispute in the main proceedings, but rather to interpret them. In addition, that court, which must, according to the case-law, assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision (judgment of 13 January 2022, Regione Puglia, C-110/20, EU:C:2022:5, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited), has set out with sufficient clarity the reasons why it considers that an interpretation of those provisions is necessary in order to resolve that dispute.

28 Furthermore, it should be borne in mind that, according to equally settled case-law, while it may be advantageous, depending on the circumstances, for the facts of a case to be established and for questions of national law to be settled at the time the reference is made to the Court, national courts have the widest discretion in referring matters to the Court if they consider that a case pending before them raises questions involving interpretation of provisions of EU law, or consideration of their validity, necessitating a decision on their part (judgment of 4 June 2015, Kernkraftwerke Lippe-Ems, C-5/14, EU:C:2015:354, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited). Accordingly, the argument of the defendant in the main proceedings that the action brought by the applicant in the main proceedings does not satisfy the conditions for admissibility laid down by Slovak law cannot establish that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling are inadmissible.

29 In those circumstances, the questions referred must be held to be admissible.

Substance

30 By its two questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation or a national practice which excludes the possibility, for a tenderer who has been eliminated from a procedure for the award of a public contract because of an unlawful decision of the contracting authority, of being compensated for the damage suffered as a result of the loss of the opportunity to participate in that procedure with a view to obtaining the contract concerned.

31 It is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that the referring court is asking the Court, more specifically, to clarify whether that provision must be interpreted as meaning that persons harmed by an infringement of EU public procurement law and who are thus entitled to be compensated include not only those who have suffered loss as a result of not having obtained a public contract, namely their loss of profit, but also those who have suffered loss linked to the lost opportunity to participate in the procedure for the award of that contract and to make a profit as a result of such participation.

32 In accordance with the Court’s settled case-law, in interpreting a provision of EU law, it is necessary to consider not only the wording of that provision but also the context in which it occurs and the objectives pursued by the rules of which it is part (judgment of 20 April 2023, DIGI Communications, C-329/21, EU:C:2023:303, paragraph 41 and the case-law cited).

33 As regards, first, the wording of Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665, it should be noted that that provision, which is worded in broad terms, provides that the Member States are to ensure that damages are awarded to persons harmed by an infringement of EU law on the award of public contracts, which, in the absence of any indication to distinguish different categories of damage, may cover any type of damage suffered by those persons, including that arising from the loss of the opportunity to participate in the procedure for the award of a contract.

34 That finding is supported, secondly, by the context of that provision.

35 According to settled case-law, individuals harmed by a breach of EU law attributable to a Member State have a right to compensation where three conditions are met: the rule of EU law infringed must be intended to confer rights on them; the breach of that rule must be sufficiently serious; and there must be a direct causal link between the breach and the damage sustained by those individuals (judgment of 29 July 2019, Hochtief Solutions Magyarországi Fióktelepe, C-620/17, EU:C:2019:630, paragraph 35 and the case-law cited). Furthermore, the Court has repeatedly held that compensation for loss or damage caused to individuals as a result of infringements of EU law must be commensurate with the loss or harm sustained, in that it must, where appropriate, enable the loss or harm actually sustained to be made good in full (judgment of 28 June 2022, Commission v Spain (Breach of EU law by the legislature), C-278/20, EU:C:2022:503, paragraph 164 and the case-law cited). Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 gives concrete expression to those principles, inherent in the EU legal order (see, to that effect, judgment of 9 December 2010, Combinatie Spijker Infrabouw-De Jonge Konstruktie and Others, C-568/08, EU:C:2010:751, paragraph 87).

36 In that regard and in accordance with Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, the review procedures provided for by that directive must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. Moreover, as is apparent from recital 36 of Directive 2007/66, the system of legal remedies established by Directive 89/665 seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial, in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 July 2022, EPIC Financial Consulting, C-274/21 and C-275/21, EU:C:2022:565, paragraph 88 and the case-law cited).

37 No possibility of limiting that access is established by that directive. On the contrary, Member States may provide, under the second subparagraph of Article 2(7) of that directive, that, after the conclusion of a contract subsequent to its award, the powers of the body responsible for those review procedures are to be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement. The action for damages provided for in Article 2(1)(c) of that directive was thus envisaged by the EU legislature as being the legal remedy of last resort, which must remain available to persons harmed by an infringement of EU law where they are de facto deprived of any possibility of benefiting from the effectiveness of one of the other remedies provided for in that provision.

38 That is, in particular, the case of an unlawfully excluded tenderer who, having requested and obtained the annulment of its exclusion from a procedure for the award of a public contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings, is, however, no longer able, on account of the closure of that procedure in the meantime, to benefit from the effects of that annulment.

39 While damage may result from the failure to obtain, as such, a public contract, it must be held that, in a case such as that identified in the preceding paragraph, it is possible for the tenderer who has been unlawfully excluded to suffer separate damage, which corresponds to the lost opportunity to participate in the procedure for the award of a public contract concerned in order to obtain that contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 December 2023, United Parcel Service v Commission, C-297/22 P, EU:C:2023:1027, paragraph 69). In the light of the considerations set out in paragraph 37 above, such damage must be recoverable under Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665.

40 Thirdly, the broad interpretation of Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 is supported by the objective pursued by that directive, of not excluding any type of harm from the scope of that directive.

41 It should, in particular, be borne in mind that, although Directive 89/665 cannot be regarded as providing for complete harmonisation and, therefore, as envisaging all possible remedies in public procurement matters (judgment of 26 March 2020, Hungeod and Others, C-496/18 and C-497/18, EU:C:2020:240, paragraph 73), the fact remains that, as stated in the sixth recital of that directive, the directive stems from the intention of the EU legislature to ensure that, in all Member States, adequate procedures permit not only the annulment of decisions taken unlawfully but also the compensation of persons harmed by an infringement of EU law.

42 That objective would be jeopardised if Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 were to be interpreted as meaning that it makes it possible, as a matter of principle, to exclude the possibility, for the persons referred to in Article 1(3) of that directive, of obtaining damages for harm which they claim to have suffered as a result of an infringement of EU public procurement law.

43 As the Court has held with regard to loss of profit, the total exclusion, in respect of the damage for which compensation may be granted, of the loss of the opportunity to participate in a procedure for the award of a public contract in order to obtain that contract, cannot be accepted in the event of an infringement of EU law since, especially in the case of economic or commercial disputes, such total exclusion of that loss of opportunity would be such as to make it practically impossible to make good the damage suffered (see, by analogy, judgments of 5 March 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame, C-46/93 and C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79, paragraph 87; of 13 July 2006, Manfredi and Others, C-295/04 to C-298/04, EU:C:2006:461, paragraph 96 and the case-law cited; and of 17 April 2007, AGM-COS.MET, C-470/03, EU:C:2007:213, paragraph 95).

44 Therefore, Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that the damages which persons harmed by an infringement of EU public procurement law may claim under that provision may cover the loss or damage suffered as a result of the loss of opportunity.

45 It should, however, be noted that, although Article 2(1)(c) requires that damages may be awarded to persons harmed by an infringement of EU public procurement law, it is, in the absence of EU provisions in that field, for the legal order of each Member State to determine the criteria by reference to which damage resulting from the loss of an opportunity to participate in a procedure for the award of a public contract in order to obtain that contract must be established and assessed, provided that the principles of equivalence and effectiveness are observed (see, to that effect, judgment of 9 December 2010, Combinatie Spijker Infrabouw-De Jonge Konstruktie and Others, C-568/08, EU:C:2010:751, paragraph 90 and the case-law cited).

46 In the present case, it is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that Article 17 of Law No 514/2003 expressly refers, as recoverable damage, only to ‘actual damage’ and ‘loss of profit’. At the hearing, the Slovak Government stated that, according to the settled case-law of the Slovak courts, a ‘loss of profit’ must be made good where it is highly probable, or even close to certain, that, having regard to the existing circumstances of the case, the person concerned would have made a profit. However, referring to the European Commission’s position that the Slovak courts should use all national means to enable a tenderer unlawfully excluded from a public contract to effectively claim damages for a lost opportunity, that government stated at the hearing that there is nothing to prevent a claimant from making use of the remedies available to it to assert its right and from adducing evidence to prove it.

47 In that regard, it therefore suffices to recall that, according to the case-law of the Court, in order to ensure the effectiveness of all provisions of EU law, the principle of primacy requires, inter alia, national courts to interpret, to the fullest extent possible, their national law in conformity with EU law (judgment of 4 March 2020, Bank BGŻ BNP Paribas, C-183/18, EU:C:2020:153, paragraph 60 and the case-law cited) and that that obligation to interpret national law in conformity with EU law requires national courts to change established, and even settled, case-law if it is based on an interpretation of domestic law that is incompatible with the objectives of a directive (see, to that effect, judgment of 3 June 2021, Instituto Madrileño de Investigación y Desarrollo Rural, Agrario y Alimentario, C-726/19, EU:C:2021:439, paragraph 86 and the case-law cited).

48 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the questions raised is that Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation or a national practice which excludes the possibility, as a matter of principle, for a tenderer excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract because of an unlawful decision of the contracting authority, of being compensated for the damage suffered as a result of the loss of the opportunity to participate in that procedure with a view to obtaining the contract concerned.

Costs

49 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 2(1)(c) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation or a national practice which excludes the possibility, as a matter of principle, for a tenderer excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract because of an unlawful decision of the contracting authority, of being compensated for the damage suffered as a result of the loss of the opportunity to participate in that procedure with a view to obtaining the contract concerned.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
COLLINS
delivered on 7 December 2023 (1)

Case C-547/22

INGSTEEL spol. s. r. o.
Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Okresný súd Bratislava II (District Court, Bratislava II, Slovakia))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Review procedures – Directive 89/665/EEC – Non-contractual liability of Member States – Action for damages for breach of EU law by an unsuccessful tenderer – Quantification – Loss of profit – Loss of opportunity)

I. Introduction

1. Does EU law require Member States to admit a claim in damages for loss of opportunity by a tenderer unlawfully excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract where that procedure has concluded and a contract entered into with the successful tenderer? The answer to that question requires the Court of Justice to determine whether the laws of the Member States regulate the award of damages to which Article 2(1)(c) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (2) refers. If so, the Court must examine the consequences of the requirement that those laws must comply with the principle of effectiveness.

II. Legal framework

A. European Union law

2. The preamble of Directive 89/665 contains the following text:

‘Whereas in certain Member States the absence of effective remedies or inadequacy of existing remedies deter Community undertakings from submitting tenders in the Member State in which the contracting authority is established; whereas, therefore, the Member States concerned must remedy this situation;

Whereas it is necessary to ensure that adequate procedures exist in all the Member States to permit the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully and compensation of persons harmed by an infringement.'

3. Under the fourth paragraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665:

'Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24/EU or Directive 2014/23/EU, decisions taken by contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively …'

4. Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 provides:

'Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

5. Under Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665:

'Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.'

B. Slovak law

6. Paragraph 3(1)(a) of Zákon č. 514/2003 Z. z. o zodpovednosti za škodu spôsobenú pri výkone verejnej moci (Law No 514/2003 on liability for damage caused in the exercise of public authority; 'Law No 514/2003') provides that the State is liable for damage caused by public authorities as a result of an unlawful decision.

7. Under Paragraph 5(1) of Law No 514/2003, a party to a procedure which suffered damage as a result of an unlawful decision issued in that procedure has a right to compensation.

8. Paragraph 17(1) of Law No 514/2003 establishes that compensation shall be awarded for actual damage and loss of profits, unless otherwise stipulated by special provisions.

9. Paragraph 442(1) of Zákon č. 40/1964 Zb. Občiansky zakonnik (Law No 40/1964 on the Civil Code; 'the Civil Code') provides that, in actions for damages, compensation shall be awarded for actual damage and loss of profits.

10. Zákon č. 25/2006 Z. z. o verejnom obstarávaní (Law No 25/2006 on public procurement) does not appear to contain any specific provisions that govern actions for damages arising from the award of public contracts.

III. The dispute in the main proceedings, the request for a preliminary ruling and the procedure before the Court

11. In 2013, the Slovak Football Federation published a call for tenders for the award of a contract for the construction, restructuring and modernisation of football stadiums. INGSTEEL spol s.r.o. ('Ingsteel'), an undertaking active in the building sector, participated in that award procedure. The Slovak Football Federation excluded Ingsteel from that procedure on the ground that it failed to satisfy the economic and financial requirements in the call for tenders. Ingsteel brought an action to challenge the legality of that decision, in the course of which the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic) sought a reference for a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice.

12. In its judgment of 13 July 2017 in INGSTEEL and Metrostav (C-76/16, EU:C:2017:549), the Court held that Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (3) must be interpreted as meaning that, where a call for tenders requires the provision of a statement from a bank undertaking to grant credit to a tenderer and the banks approached by that tenderer refuse to provide such a statement, that tenderer may be permitted to prove its economic and financial standing by other appropriate means. In view of the Court's judgment, the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic) concluded that the decision to exclude Ingsteel was unlawful and annulled it. It then referred the case to the Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority, Slovakia) to take appropriate measures.

13. Since the procedure for the award of the public contract had concluded and the contracting authority had entered into a framework agreement with the successful tenderer, Ingsteel brought an action against the Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority) in which it claimed, inter alia, damages for the loss of opportunity to win the tender. It argued that loss of opportunity and loss of profit are two different heads of claim. It appears that, under Slovak law, the standard of proof to show that damage is sufficiently foreseeable is lower with respect to claims for loss of opportunity than with respect to claims for loss of profit.

14. The Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority) is of the view that Ingsteel's claim for damages is hypothetical. There was no guarantee that Ingsteel would have been selected as the successful tenderer or that, had it been selected, the contracting authority would have concluded a contract with it.

15. The Okresný súd Bratislava II (District Court, Bratislava II, Slovakia) wonders whether Directive 89/665 requires it to admit a claim for an award of damages for loss of opportunity by a tenderer where a court has set aside a decision to exclude it from a procedure that led to the award of a public contract and the contracting authority concluded a contract with another tenderer. It decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is the practice of a national court hearing a dispute involving a claim for compensation for damage caused to a tenderer who was unlawfully excluded from a public procurement procedure, pursuant to which compensation for loss of opportunity is denied, compatible with Article 2(1)(c), read in conjunction with Article 2(6) and (7), of [Directive 89/665]?

(2) Is the practice of a national court hearing a dispute involving a claim for compensation for damage caused to a tenderer who was unlawfully excluded from a public procurement procedure, pursuant to which a claim for lost profits caused by the loss of opportunity to participate in a public contract is not part of the claim for compensation, compatible with Article 2(1)(c), read in conjunction with Article 2(6) and (7), of [Directive 89/665]?'

16. The Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority), the Czech, French and Slovak Governments and the European Commission submitted written observations. At the hearing of 20 September 2023, the Czech and Austrian Governments and the Commission presented oral argument and replied to the Court's questions.

IV. Assessment

A. Admissibility

17. The Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority) presents two reasons as to why the Court should declare the request for a preliminary ruling inadmissible. First, since Ingsteel participated in the award procedure jointly with Metrostav a.s., which is not a party to the proceedings before the referring court, it does not have standing to bring a damages claim. Second, since Ingsteel originally claimed damages for loss of profit, not loss of opportunity, it cannot make that claim at this stage of the proceedings before the referring court.

18. The Slovak Government also has doubts as to the admissibility of the questions in so far as the referring court appears to ask the Court of Justice whether Ingsteel's damages claim ought to be allowed. Both the Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority) and the Slovak Government point out that it is for the referring court alone to adjudicate on the merits of Ingsteel's claim.

19. According to settled case-law, in the context of the cooperation for which Article 267 TFEU provides, it is solely for the national court before which a dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case, both the need for a preliminary ruling to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions that it submits to the Court of Justice. Where questions submitted by a national court concern the interpretation of EU law, the Court is thus, in principle, bound to give a ruling. (4) The Court of Justice may refuse to rule on a question referred by a national court for a preliminary ruling only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to enable it to give a useful answer to the questions submitted. (5)

20. The referring court's questions seek an interpretation of Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665. In the light of the facts of the case, the issues the order for reference raises as regards the availability of a damages action for a loss of opportunity to enter into a public contract do not appear to be hypothetical. It is a matter for the referring court to determine whether, as a matter of national law, Ingsteel has standing to bring an action for damages for loss of opportunity and what consequences, if any, may flow from the manner in which it prosecuted its claim. For those reasons, I advise the Court to dismiss the objections taken to the admissibility of the questions referred.

B. Substance

1. The parties' observations

21. The Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority) and the Austrian, Czech, French and Slovak Governments submit that it is for the internal legal order of each Member State to determine the criteria for the assessment of damages that flow from an infringement of EU law in a procedure leading to the award of a public contract. Those parties also accept that such national rules must comply with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. Since Directive 89/665 provides for minimum harmonisation only, it contains no guidance on the criteria national courts are to take into account when they make that determination. It follows that Directive 89/665 does not oblige Member States to provide a remedy in damages for loss of an opportunity to obtain an award of a public contract.

22. The Czech Government suggests that the concept of damage under Directive 89/665 is not an autonomous concept of EU law. The French Government agrees with that suggestion. It submits that its approach is consistent with the case-law on Member State non-contractual liability for a breach of EU law, whereby the laws of each Member State determine the extent of compensation and the rules relating to the assessment of any loss or harm caused by such a breach.

23. The Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority) agrees with Ingsteel that loss of profit and loss of opportunity are distinct concepts, the latter consisting in the loss of an opportunity to obtain a public contract. (6) It submits that, as a matter of Slovak law, an unlawfully excluded tenderer that can show that it had a real and sufficiently high chance of obtaining a public contract may be awarded damages for the loss of that opportunity. In contrast, the Czech Government and the Slovak Government consider that loss of opportunity may be considered as a type of loss of profit. The main difference between the two concepts lies in the standard of proof required to establish the existence of damage and the compensation that may be awarded.

24. The Austrian, Czech and Slovak Governments argue that, although it may provide some guidance, the case-law on the European Union's non-contractual liability in the area of public procurement cannot be transposed to the application of Directive 89/665. While the EU Courts have, in some cases, awarded damages for loss of opportunity to tenderers that the EU institutions unlawfully excluded from award procedures, the EU Courts rejected such claims in most instances, holding that, in order to receive an award of damages, any loss of opportunity must be real and not hypothetical.

25. The Commission observes that although Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 requires Member States to provide for the award of damages to persons harmed by an infringement of the EU public procurement rules, it does not contain any detailed conditions as to how that requirement is to be satisfied. Since Directive 89/665 provides for minimum harmonisation, Member States remain free to afford a higher degree of protection to persons harmed by an infringement of the public procurement rules. It is for each Member State, in accordance with the principle of the procedural autonomy, to lay down detailed rules governing actions for safeguarding rights that individuals derive from EU law, subject to those rules being compliant with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. Since Directive 89/665 seeks to ensure the existence of effective review procedures to guarantee respect for the principles underlying the public procurement rules and, ultimately, the internal market, the principle of effectiveness is central to the resolution of this reference.

26. According to the Commission, because the contracting authority entered into a framework contract with another tenderer, in the proceedings before the referring court it is no longer possible to correct the illegality that afflicted the award procedure. In those circumstances, an award of damages is the only effective remedy available to a tenderer who suffered loss as a consequence of that illegality. National laws that do not afford the possibility to claim damages for a loss of opportunity to obtain a contract caused by that illegality deprive Ingsteel of access to an effective remedy, which is contrary to Directive 89/665.

2. Analysis

27. The parties to the proceedings before the Court agree that the referring court's questions should receive a single answer. Since there is merit in that suggestion, I propose that the Court rephrase the referring court's questions as asking whether it is contrary to Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 for a national court to adopt a practice whereby a tenderer unlawfully excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract governed by that directive is precluded from claiming damages for a loss of opportunity to obtain that contract. Although the referring court asks the Court to read Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 in conjunction with Article 2(6) and (7) thereof, the order for reference does not indicate what impact, if any, the latter provisions have for the resolution of the questions referred. Nor does the order for reference indicate whether the Slovak Republic exercised the option, in Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, whereby a court must set aside an allegedly unlawful decision before an award of damages can be sought. (7) Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665, which provides that national law determines the effects on a contract concluded subsequent to its award of the exercise of the powers Article 2(1) thereof refers to, appears to be of tangential relevance. (8) None of the parties that made written or oral observations before the Court referred to Article 2(6) or (7) of Directive 89/665 or made any argument by reference thereto. I am therefore of the view that the rephrased question loses none of its pertinence by the omission of those provisions.

28. In accordance with the Court's settled case-law, the need for a uniform application of EU law normally requires that, save where a provision of EU law describes a legal concept by reference to the laws of the Member States, that concept is to be given an independent and uniform interpretation. That interpretation is to be arrived at having regard to the text of the provision in question, the context in which it appears and the objective pursued by the legislation of which it forms part. (9)

29. It is important to point out that this approach does not apply in all cases. Here, several Member States submit that the concept of damage under Directive 89/665 is not an autonomous concept of EU law. I agree with that submission for the following reasons.

30. Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 makes it clear that Member States are required to ensure that review procedures include a power to award damages to persons harmed by an infringement. It does not describe what those damages consist of, nor does it offer any guidance as to how they might be assessed. (10) It neither provides for the conditions by reference to which a contracting authority may be liable to pay damages nor indicates how that award may be calculated. (11)

31. The context in which Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 appears includes its preamble, which states that it is for the Member States to rectify any absence or inadequacy in the remedies available in their legal systems. The fourth paragraph of Article 1(1) thereof provides that Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that contracting authorities' decisions are reviewed effectively.

Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 represents that Member States shall ensure the availability of review procedures under detailed rules that those States may establish. Those provisions demonstrate that Directive 89/665 establishes a system of minimum harmonisation whereby the Member States are responsible for the form and nature of the remedies that must be available in the context of a review of the award of public contracts. (12) The parties that submitted observations agree that the case-law supports that conclusion. (13) Directive 89/665 therefore requires the Member States to provide certain remedies, which must be effective, but does not purport to define what those remedies are. (14)

32. As far as the objectives of Directive 89/665 are concerned, Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, read in combination with the preamble thereof, indicates that that directive seeks to ensure the availability of effective procedures for the review of public procurement decisions. Persons affected by infringements of national rules implementing EU public procurement directives must have available effective remedies under national law so as to give tangible effect to the opening up to EU-wide competition of procedures for the award of public contracts.

33. It follows that the award of damages for the purposes of Directive 89/665 is not intended as an independent and uniform concept of EU law, but rather one that the laws of the Member States define. Directive 89/665 emphasises the result that that process is to attain, not the content of the rules to be adopted for that purpose, which will inevitably differ between the Member States. In that context, I observe that the EU legislature has refrained from amending Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665. (15) In addition, the case-law has not sought to set out any detailed criteria to determine the existence of damage and its assessment in the context of breaches of the rules governing the award of public contracts.

34. In the absence of any provisions in EU law for that purpose, it is thus for the legal order of each Member State to determine the criteria by reference to which damage caused by an infringement of EU law in the procedures leading to the award of public contracts is to be assessed. (16) As several of the parties to the present reference for a preliminary ruling have, in my view correctly, pointed out, those matters fall within the scope of the procedural autonomy of the Member States. (17) It is well established that detailed procedural rules governing actions to safeguard EU law rights must be no less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and must not render practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by EU law (principle of effectiveness). (18)

35. Two further considerations support the conclusion that the assessment of damages awards under Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 is to be addressed within the scope of the procedural autonomy of the Member States. First, that autonomy is a practical expression of the principle of subsidiarity in Article 5 TEU, according to which, in areas that do not fall within its exclusive competence, the European Union shall act only if and in so far as the Member States cannot achieve sufficiently the objectives of the proposed action. The second paragraph of Article 19(1) TEU, which states that Member States must provide remedies that ensure effective legal protection in the fields covered by Union law, implicitly acknowledges the relevance of that principle. Second, legal traditions, procedures and remedies can and do vary considerably between Member States. At the present stage of the development of EU law, it is difficult to envisage a homogeneous regime of remedies that would function equally effectively in all Member States in the field of public procurement law. (19) It thus comes as no surprise to me that, as point 33 of the present Opinion observes, the EU legislature has, to date, not sought to design such a system.

36. In its written and oral observations, the Commission referred to the judgments of the EFTA Court in Fosen-Linjen I (20) and in Fosen-Linjen II, (21) which examined the nature of the award of damages under Directive 89/665 in the context of a claim for loss of profit. The EFTA Court held that although the review procedures that Directive 89/665 requires ought to be as uniform as possible for all undertakings in the internal market, they are required to be neither homogeneous nor identical, since Directive 89/665 provides for minimum harmonisation. (22) It observed that an award of damages has a threefold objective: (i) to compensate for losses suffered; (ii) to restore confidence in the effectiveness of the applicable legal framework; and (iii) to deter contracting authorities from acting illegally, thereby improving compliance. (23) Since Directive 89/665 does not lay down conditions for the award of damages, it is for the legal order of each EEA State, in principle, to determine criteria by reference to which harm caused by an infringement of the law on public contracts may be assessed. (24) In that context, the legal order of each EEA State must lay down rules, including those governing causation and the burden of proof. (25) Such national rules must always comply with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. (26) Whilst it is preferable that breaches of public procurement law be corrected prior to entry into a public contract, in some cases an award of damages is the only remedy for such breaches. (27) For those reasons, although Directive 89/665 does not mention any specific heads of damage, the EFTA Court interpreted it as requiring EEA States to allow persons harmed by an infringement of public procurement law in the course of an award procedure to obtain damages for loss of profit. (28) Those judgments indicate that the principle of effectiveness may operate so as to prevent the laws of a Member State from excluding claims under certain heads of damage in limine.

37. Since the Court has held that Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 expresses the principle of liability for loss and damage caused to individuals as a result of breaches of EU law for which a Member State is responsible, which is inherent in the legal order of the European Union, (29) it is also necessary, as the French Government suggests in its written observations, to examine the Court's case-law on the general conditions under which Member States incur non-contractual liability for breaches of EU law.

38. Since the seminal judgment in Francovich, it is well established that individuals harmed by a breach of EU law by a Member State or one of its emanations have a right to reparation provided that they meet three conditions: (i) the rule of EU law infringed is intended to confer rights on those persons; (ii) the breach of that rule is sufficiently serious; and (iii) there is a direct causal link between the breach and the alleged loss or damage. (30) In that judgment, the Court also ruled that, although the right of individuals to obtain reparation is founded directly on EU law, it is by reference to national law rules on liability that a Member State makes reparation for the consequences of any loss and damage caused as a result of its breach. (31) It is for the laws of the Member States to lay down the substantive and procedural conditions for the reparation of loss and damage, subject always to compliance with the principle of effectiveness. (32)

39. In the judgment in Brasserie du pêcheur, the Court further examined the criteria that govern reparation. (33) It concluded that EU law imposes no specific criteria as to the various heads of damage that the referring courts had identified, (34) which are a matter for domestic law subject to compliance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. (35) It added that EU law does not accept the total exclusion of loss of profit as a head of damage, since such an exclusion would be contrary to the principle of effectiveness. (36) In another case involving Member States' non-contractual liability for breaches of EU law, Advocate General Léger suggested that recoverable damage may consist not only in loss of profit but also in loss of opportunity, provided that the latter is a sufficiently certain consequence of the alleged breach. (37) In the field of employment law, the Court has held that a right to claim damages for loss of opportunity may be adequate to nullify the consequences of a breach of EU law and consonant with the principle of effectiveness. (38) Those considerations demonstrate that the scope of the Member States' procedural autonomy is not limitless since the Court may lay down specific obligations to ensure that individuals harmed by an infringement of EU law obtain a minimum standard of protection.

40. The Austrian, Czech and Slovak Governments submit that the EU Courts' case-law on a loss of opportunity as a consequence of illegalities in the award of public contracts by the EU institutions is not automatically applicable to the circumstances in which this reference arose. I agree with that submission. For whatever reason, the rules governing the review of the award of public contracts by the EU institutions and those governing the award of public contracts by contracting authorities differ. (39) Although the General Court has held that a tenderer that has been unlawfully excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract by an EU institution may claim damages for loss of opportunity, (40) that case-law relates to the non-contractual liability of the European Union, not that of its Member States. (41) It should be kept in mind that the role the EU Courts play in those circumstances is similar to the one the Member States' courts play when they apply their respective national procedural rules. It is in that specific context that EU law is called upon to regulate all aspects of the law governing the award of public contracts by EU institutions, including the matter of such non-contractual liability as may arise. The case-law on damages for breaches by the EU institutions of the law governing the award of public contracts tends to show that loss of profit and loss of opportunity are different concepts. Whereas loss of profit is assessed by reference to compensation for the loss of a contract, loss of opportunity consists of compensation for a loss of an opportunity to conclude a contract. (42) The concept of loss of opportunity also appears to be recognised in actions for damages in the context of the EU staff regulations and the European Union's non-contractual liability. (43)

41. From both the terms in which Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 is expressed, and the objectives that directive pursues, viewed in the context of the general principles governing the non-contractual liability of Member States for breaches of EU law, one can conclude that it is for the laws of the Member States to define the heads of damage under which a tenderer unlawfully excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract may claim compensation, provided that those national rules comply with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness.

42. There is no indication from the material before the Court that the present case involves any infringement of the principle of equivalence. The question remains as to whether a judicial interpretation of national legislation that does not envisage the award of damages for loss of opportunity is compliant with the principle of effectiveness, as defined in point 34 of the present Opinion. In that context, neither the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 nor the rights that it confers on individuals may be undermined. (44) The Court has held that national rules that make the award of damages subject to proof of fault or fraud on the part of the contracting authorities infringe Directive 89/665, since such rules impair the full effectiveness of the European Union's policy in the field of public procurement. (45)

43. Where a tenderer obtains a court decision to the effect that it has been unlawfully excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract, and the contracting authority has concluded that contract with another tenderer, to exclude any possibility to claim damages for the loss of an opportunity to obtain that contract appears to infringe the principle of effectiveness. That situation is inconsistent with the aim of Directive 89/665, which is to guarantee effective remedies against contracting authorities' decisions made in breach of EU law, since a person so harmed would be deprived of the supplemental remedy for which Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 provides, namely an award of damages. It is for the laws of the Member States to lay down the conditions under which that claim may be made out, including the burden and standard of proof, causation and the calculation of the amount of any award. (46)

44. Paragraph 442(1) of the Civil Code provides that, in actions for damages, compensation shall be awarded for actual damage and loss of profits. The order for reference appears to suggest that the case-law of the national courts does not envisage the award of damages for loss of opportunity to obtain a public contract. The Slovak Government submitted at the hearing that, under the law of that Member State, loss of opportunity is part of the concept of loss of profit capable of grounding an award of damages, provided that the person harmed can demonstrate that it had a very high chance of being awarded the public contract.

45. Since the referring court alone has jurisdiction to interpret and apply its national legislation, it falls to that court to interpret, as far as possible, the rules governing damages claims in such a way as to ensure compliance with the principle of effectiveness. When applying domestic law, the national court must, as far as is at all possible, interpret it in conformity with EU law. Such an interpretation is subject to compliance with recognised limits, notably the prohibition on a contra legem interpretation of national law. Where a national court cannot arrive at such an interpretation, it must fully apply EU law so as to protect rights that it confers on individuals, if necessary by disapplying any provision in so far as it would lead to a result contrary to EU law, provided that the relevant provision of EU law has direct effect. (47) In that context, the Court has already held that the obligation to interpret domestic law in conformity with EU law may require national courts to change established case-law where it is based on an interpretation that is incompatible with EU law. (48)

V. Conclusion

46. I propose that the Court answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Okresný súd Bratislava II (District Court, Bratislava II, Slovakia) as follows:

Article 2(1)(c) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts is to be interpreted as meaning that it is for the laws of the Member States to determine the conditions under which a national court may adjudicate upon a claim for the award of damages by a tenderer unlawfully excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract governed by that directive. Those conditions include the burden and standard of proof, causation and the calculation of the size of any award. Member State laws for that purpose must comply with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. The principle of effectiveness requires that a national court may not rely upon a practice whereby a tenderer unlawfully excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract is precluded from claiming damages for a loss of an opportunity to obtain that contract.

Academic literature on the non-contractual liability of Member States for breach of EU law appears to take the unanimous view that, while EU law establishes a right to reparation, the precise content of any remedy is a matter for Member State legal systems, subject to compliance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. It has also been observed that, by not seeking to define the concept of damage, the Court has left that matter over to national laws. See Van Gerven, W., 'Of rights, remedies and procedures', Common Market Law Review, Vol. 37, Issue 3, 2000, pp. 511 and 512. See also Christ, H., 'Compensation for damage:

The non-contractual liability of Member States and EU institutions for breaches of EU law', in Colcelli, V. and Arnold, R. (eds), Europeanization Through Private Law Instruments, Universitätsverlag Regensburg, 2016, p. 213; Biondi, A. and Farley, M., The Right to Damages in European Law, Kluwer Law International, 2009, pp. 76 to 83; Gutman, K., 'Liability for breach of EU law by the Union, Member States and individuals: Damages, enforcement and effective judicial protection', in Lazowski, A. and Blockmans, S. (eds), Research Handbook on EU Institutional Law, Edward Elgar Law, 2016, p. 460.

Various authors on the topic of damages in the field of public procurement consider, similarly, that the definition of damage is best left to the laws of the Member States on the basis of the principle of national procedural autonomy, subject to compliance with the principles of effectiveness and equivalence. See Treumer, S., 'Basis and conditions for a damages claim for breach of the EU public procurement rules', in Fairgrieve, D. and Lichère, F., Public Procurement Law: Damages as an Effective Remedy, Hart, 2011, p. 150. See also Caranta, R., 'Damages for breaches of EU public procurement law: Issues of causation and recoverable losses', in Fairgrieve, D. and Lichère, F., Public Procurement Law: Damages as an Effective Remedy, Hart, 2011, pp. 167 to 184; Schebesta, H., Damages in EU Public Procurement Law, Springer International Publishing Switzerland, 2016, pp. 52 to 60.

36 Judgment of 5 March 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame (C-46/93 and C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79, paragraph 87). See also judgment of 17 April 2007, AGM-COS.MET (C-470/03, EU:C:2007:213, paragraph 89). The Court reached the same conclusion with regard to the non-contractual liability of individuals for breaches of EU law (judgment of 13 July 2006, Manfredi and Others, C-295/04 to C-298/04, EU:C:2006:461, paragraphs 95 and 96).

According to certain authors, the Court's case-law on the non-contractual liability of Member States reflects the delicate balance (and tension) between unity and diversity, through the interaction between national procedural autonomy and the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. See Gutman, K., 'Liability for breach of EU law by the Union, Member States and individuals: Damages, enforcement and effective judicial protection', in Lazowski, A. and Blockmans, S. See also Opinion of Advocate General Cruz Villalón in Giordano v Commission (C-611/12 P, EU:C:2014:195), which explains that the concept of loss of opportunity in the law of damages is linked to the emergence of 'risk theory', which makes it possible to quantify the degree of probability of future events. ORDER OF THE COURT (Eighth Chamber)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice – Public Procurement – Directive 2009/81/EC – Article 55(4) – Article 57(2) – Interest in bringing proceedings – Access to the review procedures – Tenderer excluded from a public procurement procedure by a decision of the contracting authority that has become final – National regulation depriving such a tenderer of access to a means of appeal – No interest in bringing proceedings)

In Case C-493/22,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania), made by decision of 28 June 2022, received at the Court on 22 July 2022, in the proceedings

Ministerul Apărării Naţionale,

BlueSpace Technology SRL,

THE COURT (Eighth Chamber),

composed of M. Safjan, President of the Chamber, N. Jääskinen and M. Gavalec (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to rule by reasoned order, pursuant to Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, makes the following

Order

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 55(4), Article 56(3), Article 57(2), Article 60(1)(b) and Article 61 of Directive 2009/81/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 July 2009 on the coordination of procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts by contracting authorities or entities in the fields of defence and security, and amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (OJ 2009 L 216, p. 76).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Armaprocure SRL, on the one hand, and Ministerul Apărării Naţionale (Ministry of National Defence, Romania) and BlueSpace Technology SRL, on the other, concerning the decision of that ministry to reject Armaprocure's offer and to award a public contract for the acquisition of firing ranges to a consortium consisting of BlueSpace Technology and the national company Romarm SA ('the Consortium').

3 Recital 72 of Directive 2009/81 states:

‘Compliance with transparency and competition obligations should be ensured by an efficient review system, based on the system which [Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66 EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) (‘Directive 89/665’), and Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2007/66], provide for contracts covered by [Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), and Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)]. In particular, the possibility of challenging the award procedure before the contract is signed should be provided for, as should the guarantees necessary for the efficiency of the review, such as the standstill period. The possibility of challenging illegal direct awards or contracts concluded in violation of this Directive should also be provided for.’

4 Article 55 of Directive 2009/81, which is entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provides as follows in paragraphs 2 and 4:

‘2. Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities/entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 56 to 62, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed [EU] law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.

4. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.’

5 Article 56 of that directive, entitled ‘Requirements for review procedures’, provides in paragraph 3:

‘When a body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting authority/entity, reviews a contract award decision, Member States shall ensure that the contracting authority/entity cannot conclude the contract before the review body has made a decision on the application either for interim measures or for review. The suspension shall end no earlier than the expiry of the standstill period referred to in Article 57(2) and Article 60(4) and (5).’

6 Article 57 of that directive, entitled ‘Standstill period’, is worded as follows in the second subparagraph of paragraph 2:

‘Tenderers shall be deemed to be concerned if they have not yet been definitively excluded. An exclusion is definitive if it has been notified to the tenderers concerned and either has been considered lawful by an independent review body or can no longer be subject to a review procedure.’

7 Article 60 of Directive 2009/81, entitled ‘Ineffectiveness’, provides, in paragraph 1(b):

‘Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority/entity or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

(b) in the case of an infringement of Article 55(6), Article 56(3) or Article 57(2), where this infringement has deprived the tenderer applying for review of the possibility to pursue pre-contractual remedies where such an infringement is combined with another infringement of Titles I or II, if that infringement has affected the chances of the tenderer applying for a review to obtain the contract'.

8 Under Article 61 of that directive, entitled 'Infringements of this Title and alternative penalties':

'1. In the case of an infringement of Article 55(6), Article 56(3) or Article 57(2) which is not covered by Article 60(1)(b), Member States shall provide for ineffectiveness in accordance with Article 60(1) to (3), or for alternative penalties. Member States may provide that the review body independent of the contracting authority/entity shall decide, after having assessed all relevant aspects, whether the contract should be considered ineffective or whether alternative penalties should be imposed.

9 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides as follows in paragraph 3:

'Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

10 Article 2a of that directive, entitled 'Standstill period', is worded as follows in the second subparagraph of paragraph 2:

'Tenderers shall be deemed to be concerned if they have not yet been definitively excluded. An exclusion is definitive if it has been notified to the tenderers concerned and has either been considered lawful by an independent review body or can no longer be subject to a review procedure.'

Emergency Ordinance No 114/2011

11 Article 137 of the Ordonanța de urgență a Guvernului nr. 114/2011 privind atribuirea anumitor contracte de achiziții publice în domeniile apărării și securității (Government Emergency Ordinance No 114/2011 on the award of certain public contracts in the defence and security sectors), of 21 December 2011 (Monitorul Oficial al României, part I, No 932 of 29 December 2011) (the 'Emergency Ordinance No 114/2011'), provides in paragraphs 1 and 2:

'1. The contracting authority shall inform the economic operators involved in the award procedure of decisions concerning the result of the selection process, the outcome of the public contract award procedure or the conclusion of a framework agreement or, where appropriate, the cancellation of the award procedure and the possible subsequent initiation of a new procedure, in writing and as soon as possible, but no later than three working days after the decision in question has been issued.

2. For the purposes of paragraph 1, any candidate/tenderer whom the contracting authority has not yet informed of decisions directly concerning his candidacy/tender and any candidate/tenderer whose candidacy/tender has not been finally rejected by the contracting authority shall be deemed to be an economic operator involved in the award procedure. A rejection shall be deemed final once it has been communicated to the economic operator concerned and either it has been held to be lawful by the Consiliul Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Complaints[, Romania]) seised of the matter or it has not been and can no longer be the subject of an appeal.'

12 Article 138 of that emergency ordinance provides, in paragraph 2(c):

‘In the communication referred to in Article 137(3), the contracting authority shall inform tenderers/candidates who have been rejected or whose tender has been unsuccessful of the reasons for that decision, and shall communicate the following:

(c) to every tenderer that has submitted an acceptable and compliant, and therefore admissible tender, but has not been successful, the characteristics and the relative advantages of the successful tender(s) in relation to his tender, the name of the tenderer to whom the public contract is to be awarded or, as appropriate, the names of the tenderers with whom a framework contract is to be concluded’.

13 Legea nr. 101/2016 privind remediile și căile de atac în materie de atribuire a contractelor de achiziție publică, a contractelor sectoriale și a contractelor de concesiune de lucrări și concesiune de servicii, precum și pentru organizarea și funcționarea Consiliului Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (Law No 101/2016 on remedies and review procedures relating to the award of public procurement contracts, sector-specific contracts and works and services concession contracts and on the organisation and operation of the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints), of 19 May 2016 (Monitorul Oficial al României, part I, No 393 of 23 May 2016), in the version applicable to the main proceedings (‘Law No 101/2016’), provides in Article 3:

‘1. The expression:

(f) persons who consider that their rights or legitimate interests have been infringed means any economic operators that satisfy the following cumulative conditions:

(i) they have or have had an interest in a procurement procedure; and

(ii) they have suffered, are suffering or risk suffering harm as a result of an act of a contracting authority capable of producing legal effects or a failure to respond to a request relating to a procurement procedure within the period prescribed by law.

3. For the purposes of paragraph 1(f)(i), persons shall be deemed to have or to have had an interest in a procurement procedure if they have not yet been definitively excluded from that procedure. Exclusion shall be definitive if it has been communicated to the candidate/tenderer in question and if it has been found lawful by the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints or by a court or if it can no longer be the subject of a review procedure.’

14 Article 58 of Law No 101/2016 provides:

‘1. Any interested person may apply to the court for a declaration of invalidity of a contract or addendum to a contract concluded in infringement of the conditions laid down in the legislation relating to public procurement, the legislation relating to sector-specific procurement and the legislation relating to works and services concessions, as appropriate, for the valid conclusion of such a contract or addendum or for the parties to be restored to their previous positions.

2. The court shall establish the total/partial invalidity of the contract or its amendment and restore the parties to their previous situation, in accordance with Article 1254(3) of [Legea nr. 287/2009 privind Codul civil (Law No 287/2009 on the Romanian Civil Code)], republished, as amended, in the following cases:

(c) the contract or amendment to that contract was concluded on less favourable terms than those set out in the technical and/or financial proposals which constituted the successful tender;

(d) the qualification and selection criteria and/or evaluation factors laid down in the contract notice on the basis of which the tender was declared successful were not respected, leading to a change in the outcome of the procedure by way of the competitive advantages being annulled or reduced;

(e) the contract was concluded before receipt of the decision of the [National] Council [for the Resolution of Complaints] or the court deciding on the complaint or in disregard of that decision;

6. In the event of infringement of the provisions relating to the statutory waiting period for the conclusion of the contract, the court, after analysing all the relevant aspects, shall declare the total or partial invalidity of the contract or its amendment and restore the parties to their previous situation or, if this is sufficient, order alternative sanctions, such as those provided for in paragraph 3.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

15 On 12 December 2019, the Ministry of National Defence launched a public procurement procedure on the basis of Emergency Ordinance No 114/2011 transposing Directive 2009/81, which comprises two lots:

– Lot 1 – Type 2 firing range, estimated value: 14 405 042 Romanian lei (RON) exclusive of value added tax (VAT) (approximately EUR 2 920 000);

– Lot 2 – Type 3 firing range, estimated value: 29 500 000 RON exclusive of VAT (approximately EUR 5 980 000);

16 The total estimated value of the contract was 43 905 042 RON (approximately EUR 8 900 000); the award was based on the single criterion of ‘lowest price’.

17 By letter of 9 March 2020, the contracting authority informed Armaprocure, first, that its tenders for both lots had been rejected, having been found to be non-compliant for lot 1 and non-compliant and unacceptable for lot 2. Second, the contracting authority informed it of the award of the contract to the Consortium.

18 On 19 March 2020, Armaprocure brought the first action before the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints, challenging the legality of the decision to reject its tender, the decision to admit other tenders, and the decision to award the contract to the Consortium.

19 By decision of 10 April 2020, the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints partially upheld Armaprocure’s claim, in particular by ordering the contracting authority to re-evaluate Armaprocure’s tender for lot 1 as well as the Consortium’s tenders and those of other tenderers, namely Electro Optic Components SRL and Stimpex SA for both lots. The Council, however, rejected Armaprocure’s complaint regarding the decision to reject its tender for lot 2.

20 After the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania), seised by the Ministry of National Defence and by Electro Optic Components and the Consortium, partially amended the decision of the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints by decision of 30 June 2020, the contracting authority proceeded to re-evaluate the tenders. By letter of 10 November 2020, it informed Armaprocure that its tender for lot 1 had been rejected as non-compliant while the Consortium’s tender for that lot had been successful. Armaprocure’s tender for lot 2 was finally rejected.

21 By document registered on 25 November 2020, Armaprocure referred to the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints a second time to challenge the result of the re-evaluation of the tenders.

22 By decision of 24 May 2021, the Council annulled the report on the procedure, drawn up by the contracting authority, only in so far as it concerns the financial evaluation of the tenders submitted by the Consortium and Electro Optic Components (‘the decision of 24 May 2021’).

23 On 14 June 2021, after further evaluation of these tenders, the contracting authority informed Electro Optic Components that its tender had been declared unacceptable. In accordance with the provisions of Article 137(2) and Article 138(2)(c) of Emergency Ordinance No 114/2011, the outcome of the re-evaluation was not communicated to Armaprocure, as the tender submitted by it had been previously rejected and this rejection had been considered lawful by the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints.

24 On 8 June 2021, Armaprocure lodged an administrative appeal against the decision of 24 May 2021. As that action was dismissed as unfounded by the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) by decision of 27 October 2021, Armaprocure brought an appeal on a point of law against that decision, which was dismissed by the Înalta Curte de Casație și Justiție (High Court of Cassation and Justice, Romania) on 25 May 2022.

25 At its request, Armaprocure was informed by the contracting authority, by letter of 11 November 2021, that the tenders of the Consortium and Electro Optic Components had been re-evaluated on 14 June 2021, pursuant to the decision of 24 May 2021.

26 At the end of November 2021, the contract for the supply of the ‘Type 2 firing range’ and ‘Type 3 firing range’ products was signed between the contracting authority and the Consortium. The notice of the award of the contract to the Consortium was published on the online platform ‘public procurement electronic system’ on 31 December 2021.

27 In its third complaint brought on 10 January 2022, Armaprocure asked the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints, inter alia, to annul all of the acts of the contracting authority adopted to implement the decision of 24 May 2021 in so far as concerned lot 1, to restore the parties to their previous position, to annul the procurement procedure and to suspend performance of the contract concerning that lot.

28 By decision of 28 January 2022, the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints dismissed Armaprocure’s complaints, which, therefore, brought the matter before the Tribunalul București (Regional Court, Bucharest, Romania).

29 By judgment of 29 March 2022, that court dismissed Armaprocure’s action, noting that its tender for lot 2 had been rejected by the decision of the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints of 10 April 2020, which had not been challenged before the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest). The Tribunalul București (Regional Court, Bucharest) also pointed out that the decision of 24 May 2021 had rejected the claim submitted by Armaprocure seeking, first, annulment of the procedure and the decision declaring its tender for lot 1 non-compliant, and, second, re-evaluation of its tender by the contracting authority.

30 The Tribunalul București (Regional Court, Bucharest) also noted that the action brought by Armaprocure against the decision of 24 May 2021 had been dismissed by judgment of the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) of 27 October 2021. The Tribunalul București (Regional Court, Bucharest) therefore held that Armaprocure no longer had an interest in raising objections relating to the tender that had won the contract or to the acts of the procurement procedure for lot 1, because the non-conformity of the tender it had submitted had been established once and for all and become definitive.

31 Armaprocure appealed against the judgment of the Tribunalul București (Regional Court, Bucharest) of 29 March 2022 to the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest), which is the referring court. Armaprocure argued, inter alia, that the contracting authority had infringed Directive 2009/81 in that it had signed the contract for the supply of the products referred to in lots 1 and 2 with a tenderer that had submitted an unacceptable and non-compliant tender. Armaprocure also argued that it had brought an action before the Tribunalul București (Regional Court, Bucharest) for a declaration of invalidity of the public procurement contract resulting in that contract, based on Article 58(1) of Law No 101/2016. Consequently, it suffices for it to demonstrate that it is an ‘interested person’, within the meaning of that provision, to be able to challenge that contract, without having to establish that it is an 'injured' person, within the meaning of Article 3(1)(f) of that law. Therefore, it is not necessary for it to have the status of a tenderer or a candidate.

32 The referring court observes that Directive 2009/81 provides for a right to appeal only for the interested tenderer or candidate, where the interest of the tenderer or candidate in the procedure for the award of public procurement contracts arises from the participation of the interested party in such a procedure. However, in the present case, on the date the contract was signed by the successful tenderer, at the end of November 2021, Armaprocure had been definitively excluded from the procurement procedure resulting in that contract. By reasoning by analogy with the judgment of 21 December 2016, Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung und Caverion Österreich (C-355/15, EU:C:2016:988), which related to Directive 89/665, that court asks whether Directive 2009/81 precludes a tenderer that has been excluded from a public procurement procedure by a decision of the contracting authority that has become final from having access to a means of appeal against, or review of the contract concluded with the successful tenderer.

33 In those circumstances the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Are [Article 55(4), Article 56(3), Article 57(2), Article 60(1)(b) and Article 61] of Directive [2009/81] to be interpreted as precluding a tenderer, that has been excluded from a public procurement procedure by a decision of the contracting authority that has become final, from having access to a means of appeal against, or review of the contract concluded with the successful tenderer?'

The request for an expedited procedure

34 The referring court requested the Court of Justice to deal with the present reference for a preliminary ruling under the expedited procedure pursuant to Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice.

35 However, in view of the decision of the Court to rule by reasoned order in accordance with Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure, there is no need to adjudicate on that request (see, to that effect, order of 10 January 2023, Ambisig, C-469/22, EU:C:2023:25, paragraph 19 and the case-law cited).

Consideration of the question referred

36 In accordance with Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure, where the reply to the question [illegible] preliminary ruling may be clearly deduced from existing case-law or where the answer to the question admits of no reasonable doubt, the Court may at any time, on a proposal from the Judge-Rapporteur and after hearing the Advocate General, decide to rule by reasoned order.

37 It is appropriate to apply that provision in the context of the present reference for a preliminary ruling.

38 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 55(4) and Article 57(2) of Directive 2009/81 must be interpreted as precluding a tenderer, that has been excluded from a public procurement procedure by a decision of the contracting authority that has become final, from having access to a means of appeal against, or review of the contract concluded with, the successful tenderer.

39 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that it is apparent from the order for reference that, by its decisions of 10 April 2020 and 24 May 2021, in which it ruled on Armaprocure's first two complaints, the National Council for the Resolution of Complaints rejected the challenge to the decision rejecting Armaprocure's tender for lots 1 and 2, respectively, in view of the fact that, according to the explanations provided by the referring court, those decisions became final before the contract concluded with the successful tenderer was signed. After lodging a third complaint, Armaprocure brought an action before the referring court seeking annulment of the procurement procedure at issue and, accordingly, that it be awarded the contract.

40 At the outset, it should be noted that it follows from recital 72 of Directive 2009/81 that, by adopting this directive, the EU legislature intended to establish an efficient review system, inspired by the system provided for by Directive 89/665.

41 In that respect, it should be noted that, first, under Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, whose wording is repeated in Article 55(4) of Directive 2009/81, the Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In so doing, those provisions do not oblige the Member States to make those review procedures available to any person wishing to obtain a public contract but allows them to require, in addition, that the person concerned has been or risks being harmed by the infringement it alleges (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 June 2003, Hackermüller, C-249/01, EU:C:2003:359, paragraph 18, and order of 17 May 2022, Estaleiros Navais de Peniche, C-787/21, not published, EU:C:2022:414, paragraph 22).

42 Called upon to interpret Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, the Court has held that, in a procedure for the award of a public contract, tenderers whose exclusion is requested have a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the tenders submitted by other tenderers for the purpose of obtaining the contract, irrespective of the number of participants in the procedure for the award of the public contract concerned, the number of participants who have brought actions or the differing legal grounds which they have raised. The exclusion of one tenderer may lead to another tenderer directly being awarded the contract in the same procedure. Furthermore, if both tenderers are excluded and a new public procurement procedure is launched, each of those tenderers may participate in the new procedure and thus obtain the contract indirectly (see, to that effect, judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb, C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448, paragraph 33; of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraphs 24, 27 and 29; of 24 March 2021, NAMA and Others, C-771/19, EU:C:2021:232, paragraph 31; and order of 17 May 2022, Estaleiros Navais de Peniche, C-787/21, not published, EU:C:2022:414, paragraph 23).

43 Second, the case-law principle recalled in the preceding paragraph applies only on condition that the exclusion of the tenderer has not become final, in particular after having been confirmed by a decision which has become definitive (see, to that effect, judgments of 21 December 2016, Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung und Caverion Österreich, C-355/15, EU:C:2016:988, paragraph 36; of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraphs 57 and 58; of 24 March 2021, NAMA and Others, C-771/19, EU:C:2021:232, paragraph 42; and order of 17 May 2022, Estaleiros Navais de Peniche, C-787/21, not published, EU:C:2022:414, paragraph 24).

44 However, under the second subparagraph of Article 57(2) of Directive 2009/81, which is worded in the same way as Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665, the exclusion of a tenderer is final if it has been notified to the tenderer and has been found to be lawful by an independent review body or can no longer subject to a review procedure. It follows that the fact that the exclusion decision is not yet definitive determines, for those tenderers, the standing to bring proceedings against the award decision (judgment of 21 December 2021, Randstad Italia, C-497/20, EU:C:2021:1037, paragraph 74, and order of 17 May 2022, Estaleiros Navais de Peniche, C-787/21, not published, EU:C:2022:414, paragraph 25).

45 The legal interest of an unsuccessful tenderer in a public procurement procedure in bringing proceedings against the decision awarding that contract is thus intrinsically linked to the continuing interest in bringing proceedings against the decision excluding it from that procedure. Therefore, in the absence of an interest in bringing proceedings against the decision excluding its tender, an unsuccessful tenderer cannot claim to continue having an interest in bringing proceedings against the decision awarding the contract. Such an interest in bringing proceedings cannot be inferred from the fact that that tenderer could potentially be awarded the contract in the case if, following the annulment of that decision, the contracting authority were to decide to launch a new award procedure (order of 17 May 2022, Estaleiros Navais de Peniche, C-787/21, not published, EU:C:2022:414, paragraphs 26 and 27).

46 The interest of an unsuccessful tenderer in a procurement procedure in bringing proceedings against the decision awarding that contract is thus clearly lacking where the exclusion of that tenderer is the result of a decision that has become final, either because it is no longer open to challenge before the courts because it has not been challenged within the time limits laid down by the national procedural rules, or because the remedies available at national level have been exhausted.

47 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 55(4) and Article 57(2) of Directive 2009/81 must be interpreted as precluding a tenderer, that has been excluded from a public procurement procedure by a decision of the contracting authority that has become final, from having access to a means of appeal against, or review of, the contract concluded with the successful tenderer.

Costs

48 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 55(4) and Article 57(2) of Directive 2009/81/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 July 2009 on the coordination of procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts by contracting authorities or entities in the fields of defence and security, and amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC, must be interpreted as precluding a tenderer, that has been excluded from a public procurement procedure by a decision of the contracting authority that has become final, from having access to a means of appeal against, or review of, the contract concluded with the successful tenderer.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Tenth Chamber)

23 November 2023 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public contracts – Review procedures relating to the award of public contracts – Directive 2014/25/EU – Article 57(3) – Contracting entity having its head office in a Member State other than that of the head office of a central purchasing body acting in its name and on its behalf – Access to the review procedures – Applicable procedural rules and jurisdiction of review bodies)

In Case C-480/22,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court, Austria), made by decision of 23 June 2022, received at the Court on 18 July 2022, in the proceedings

EVN Business Service GmbH,

Elektra EOOD,

Penon EOOD,

THE COURT (Tenth Chamber), composed of Z. Csehi (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, M. Ilešič and D. Gratsias, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– EVN Business Service GmbH, by W. Schwartz, Rechtsanwalt,

– Elektra EOOD, by O. Radinsky, Rechtsanwalt,

– the Austrian Government, by A. Posch, J. Schmoll and M. Winkler-Unger, acting as Agents, – the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and G. Wils, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns, inter alia, the interpretation of Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243).

2 The request has been made in several actions brought by EVN Business Service GmbH (‘EBS’), a company incorporated under Austrian law with its head office in Austria, and by two companies established in Bulgaria against decisions of the Landesverwaltungsgericht Niederösterreich (Lower Austria Regional Administrative Court, Austria) whereby that court declares that it lacks jurisdiction as a review body in relation to the award of public contracts.

Legal context

Directive 92/13

3 Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1) ('Directive 92/13'), includes Article 1, entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', which provides, in the first and fourth subparagraphs of paragraph 1:

'This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2014/25/EU … unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 18 to 24, 27 to 30, 34 or 55 of that Directive.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/25/EU or Directive 2014/23/EU, decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.'

4 Recitals 78 and 82 of Directive 2014/25 state:

'(78) Centralised purchasing techniques are increasingly used in most Member States. Central purchasing bodies are responsible for making acquisitions, managing dynamic purchasing systems or awarding contracts/framework agreements for other contracting authorities or contracting entities, with or without remuneration. The contracting entities for whom a framework agreement is concluded should be able to use it for individual or repetitive purchases. In view of the large volumes purchased, such techniques may help increase competition and should help to professionalise public purchasing. Provision should therefore be made for a [European] Union definition of central purchasing bodies dedicated to contracting entities and it should be clarified that central purchasing bodies operate in two different manners.

Firstly, they should be able to act as wholesalers by buying, stocking and reselling or, secondly, they should be able to act as intermediaries by awarding contracts, operating dynamic purchasing systems or concluding framework agreements to be used by contracting entities.

Such an intermediary role might in some cases be carried out by conducting the relevant award procedures autonomously, without detailed instructions from the contracting entities concerned; in other cases, by conducting the relevant award procedures under the instructions of the contracting entities concerned, on their behalf and for their account.

Furthermore, rules should be laid down for allocating responsibility for the observance of the obligations pursuant to this Directive, also in the case of remedies, as between the central purchasing body and the contracting entities procuring from or through it. Where the central purchasing body has sole responsibility for the conduct of the procurement procedures, it should also be solely and directly responsible for the legality of the procedures. Where a contracting entity conducts certain parts of the procedure, for instance the reopening of competition under a framework agreement or the award of individual contracts based on a dynamic purchasing system, it should continue to be responsible for the stages it conducts.

(82) Joint awarding of contracts by contracting entities from different Member States currently encounters specific legal difficulties concerning conflicts of national laws. Despite the fact that Directive 2004/17/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1)] implicitly allowed for cross-border joint public procurement, contracting entities are still facing considerable legal and practical difficulties in purchasing from central purchasing bodies in other Member States or jointly awarding contracts. In order to allow contracting entities to derive maximum benefit from the potential of the internal market in terms of economies of scale and risk-benefit sharing, not least for innovative projects involving a greater amount of risk than reasonably bearable by a single contracting entity, those difficulties should be remedied. Therefore new rules on cross-border joint procurement should be established in order to facilitate cooperation between contracting entities and enhancing the benefits of the internal market by creating cross-border business opportunities for suppliers and service providers. Those rules should determine the conditions for cross-border utilisation of central purchasing bodies and designate the applicable public procurement legislation, including the applicable legislation on remedies, in cases of cross-border joint procedures, complementing the conflict of law rules of Regulation (EC) No 593/2008 of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 17 June 2008, on the law applicable to contractual obligations (Rome I) (OJ 2008 L 177, p. 6)]. In addition, contracting entities from different Member States should be able to set up joint legal entities established under national or Union law. Specific rules should be established for such form of joint procurement.

However, contracting entities should not make use of the possibilities for cross-border joint procurement for the purpose of circumventing mandatory public law rules, in conformity with Union law, which are applicable to them in the Member State where they are located. Such rules might include, for example, provisions on transparency and access to documents or specific requirements for the traceability of sensitive supplies.’

5 Entitled ‘Definitions’, Article 2 of Directive 2014/25 provides:

‘For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

(10) “centralised purchasing activities” means activities conducted on a permanent basis, in one of the following forms:

(a) the acquisition of supplies and/or services intended for contracting entities,

(b) the award of contracts or the conclusion of framework agreements for works, supplies or services intended for contracting entities;

(12) “central purchasing body” means a contracting entity within the meaning of Article 4(1) of this Directive or a contracting authority within the meaning of point 1 of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65)] providing centralised purchasing activities and, possibly, ancillary purchasing activities.

Procurement carried out by a central purchasing body in order to perform centralised purchasing activities shall be deemed to be procurement for the pursuit of an activity as described in Articles 8 to 14. Article 18 shall not apply to procurement carried out by a central purchasing body in order to perform centralised purchasing activities;

6 Entitled ‘Contracting entities’, Article 4 of Directive 2014/25 provides:

‘1. For the purpose of this Directive contracting entities are entities, which:

(a) are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14;

(b) when they are not contracting authorities or public undertakings, have as one of their activities any of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14, or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State.

2. “Public undertaking” means any undertaking over which the contracting authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it.

7 Entitled ‘Procurement involving contracting entities from different Member States’, Article 57 of that directive provides, in paragraphs 1 to 3 thereof:

‘1. Without prejudice to Articles 28 to 31, contracting entities from different Member States may act jointly in the award of contracts by using one of the means provided for in this Article.

Contracting entities shall not use the means provided in this Article for the purpose of avoiding the application of mandatory public law provisions in conformity with Union law to which they are subject in their Member State.

2. A Member State shall not prohibit its contracting entities from using centralised purchasing activities offered by central purchasing bodies located in another Member State.

In respect of centralised purchasing activities offered by a central purchasing body located in another Member State than the contracting entity, Member States may, however, choose to specify that their contracting entities may only use the centralised purchasing activities as defined in either point (a) or in point (b) of point (10) of Article 2.

3. The provision of centralised purchasing activities by a central purchasing body located in another Member State shall be conducted in accordance with the national provisions of the Member State where the central purchasing body is located.

The national provisions of the Member State where the central purchasing body is located shall also apply to the following:

(a) the award of a contract under a dynamic purchasing system;

(b) the conduct of a reopening of competition under a framework agreement.’

8 Entitled ‘Joint cross-border procurement by several sectoral contracting entities’, Paragraph 180 of the Bundesvergabegesetz 2018 (Federal Law of 2018 on the award of public contracts) of 20 August 2018 (BGBl. I, 65/2018) (‘the BVergG 2018’) provides, in subparagraph 2:

‘Where a centralised purchasing activity is carried out for a sectoral contracting entity by a central purchasing body as referred to in Article 2(12) of [Directive 2014/25] which has its head office in another Member State of the Union or in another Contracting Party to the EEA Agreement

1. the conduct of the procurement procedure is governed by the rules of the State in which the central purchasing body has its head office.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

9 By a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 22 May 2020, a public contract award procedure for a framework agreement was launched with a view to carrying out electrical installation work as well as related construction and demolition work. The contract was (territorially) divided into 36 lots for which the place of performance was in Bulgaria. The value of the contract exceeded the threshold above which the procedural and advertising rules on the award of public contracts under EU law apply.

10 Elektrorazpredelenie YUG EAD (‘ER Yug’), a public limited company incorporated under Bulgarian law with its head office in Bulgaria, was the contracting entity in the context of that contract award procedure.

11 EBS, a company incorporated under Austrian law whose head office is in Austria, acted in that contract award procedure as the central purchasing body, as the representative of ER Yug.

12 Both ER Yug and EBS are indirectly wholly owned by EVN AG, which in turn is 51% owned by Land Niederösterreich (Province of Lower Austria, Austria).

13 As provided in the call for tenders, EBS was responsible for the conduct and performance of that tender, while the contract relating to the services requested was to be concluded with ER Yug as the sectoral contracting entity. In that call for tenders, the Landesverwaltungsgericht Niederösterreich (Lower Austria Regional Administrative Court) was designated as the body responsible for review procedures. It was also provided that Austrian law was the law applicable ‘to the procurement procedure and all claims arising therefrom’ and that Bulgarian law applied to ‘the performance of the contract’.

14 Elektra EOOD and Penon EOOD, two Bulgarian undertakings, submitted tenders for various lots under the framework contract. By decisions of 28 and 30 July 2020, they were informed that their tenders had not been accepted.

15 Their applications for annulment of those decisions were dismissed, on 23 September 2020, by orders of the Landesverwaltungsgericht Niederösterreich (Lower Austria Regional Administrative Court), which declared that it lacked jurisdiction in that regard.

16 That court held that the question before it was whether a Bulgarian undertaking could conclude with a contracting entity established in Bulgaria a contract to be performed in that Member State and governed by the law of that State. According to that court, to accept that it has jurisdiction in such circumstances would seriously encroach on the sovereignty of the Republic of Bulgaria and would create a conflict with the principle of territoriality recognised by international law. Moreover, the fact that the Province of Lower Austria exercises control over ER Yug in no way prejudges the jurisdiction of that court in relation to the award of contracts with undertakings having their head office abroad.

17 Furthermore, like Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25, Paragraph 180(2) of the BVergG 2018 lays down a rule relating to centralised purchasing activities carried out on behalf of a sectoral contracting entity by a central purchasing body established in a Member State other than that in which that entity is situated. Nonetheless, that rule merely lays down the substantive law which applies to the contract award procedure without specifying the procedural law applicable to a possible review procedure. It is true that recital 82 of Directive 2014/25 refers to the designation of the applicable legislation ‘on remedies’, although that was not reproduced in the actual wording of that directive. In addition, the concept of ‘centralised purchasing activities’ in Article 57 of that directive does not refer to the review procedure.

18 Elektra, Penon and EBS brought appeals on a point of law before the Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court, Austria) against the abovementioned orders. They produced a certified translation of a decision of the highest administrative court of the Republic of Bulgaria confirming the decision of the Bulgarian Public Procurement Agency as to its lack of competence in the case in question relating to the award of public contracts.

19 Those parties submit that, having regard to its objective of providing uniform rules for centralised cross-border purchases, Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25 and, in consequence, Paragraph 180(2) of the BVergG 2018, should be interpreted as meaning that they do not refer solely to the contract award procedure in the strict sense, but also to the review procedure which may possibly follow such an award. Since a central purchasing body should apply Austrian substantive procurement law, the review procedure should be conducted before an Austrian appeal body under Austrian procedural law. Thus, the decisive territorial connecting factor is the head office of the central purchasing body.

20 In those circumstances the Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 57(3) of [Directive 2014/25] be interpreted as meaning that the provision of centralised purchasing activities by a central purchasing body located in another Member State exists where the contracting entity – irrespective of the question as to the attribution of the control exercised over that contracting entity – is located in a Member State other than that of the central purchasing body?

(2) If Question 1 is answered in the affirmative:

Does the conflict-of-law rule of Article 57(3) of [Directive 2014/25], according to which the “provision of centralised purchasing activities” by a central purchasing body located in another Member State is to be conducted in accordance with the national provisions of the Member State where the central purchasing body is located, also cover both the legislation applicable to review procedures and the competence of the review body for the purposes of [Directive 92/13]?

(3) If Question 1 or Question 2 is answered in the negative:

Must [Directive 92/13], and in particular the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) thereof, be interpreted as meaning that the competence of a national review body to review decisions of contracting entities must cover all contracting entities located in the Member State of the review body, or must the competence be determined on the basis of whether the dominant influence over the contracting entity (for the purposes of Article 3(4)(c) and Article 4(2) of [Directive 2014/25]) is exercised by a federal, regional or local authority or by a body governed by public law which is to be attributed to the Member State of the review body?’

21 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25 must be interpreted as meaning that a centralised purchasing activity, in the context of the joint award of contracts by contracting entities in different Member States, is carried out by a central purchasing body ‘located in another Member State’ where the contracting entity, irrespective of the control exercised over it by a body governed by public law of the Member State in which the central purchasing body is established, has its head office in a Member State other than that of the central purchasing body.

22 According to Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25, the provision of centralised purchasing activities by a central purchasing body located in another Member State is to be conducted in accordance with the national provisions of the Member State where the central purchasing body is located. The national provisions of the Member State where the central purchasing body is located are also to apply to the award of a contract under a dynamic purchasing system and to the reopening of competition under a framework agreement.

23 The concept of ‘central purchasing body’ is defined in Article 2(12) of Directive 2014/25 as a contracting entity, within the meaning of Article 4(1) of that directive, or a contracting authority, within the meaning of point 1 of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/24, providing centralised purchasing activities and, possibly, ancillary purchasing activities.

24 It is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that the referring court’s main doubt relates to the manner in which the Member State where the contracting entity has its head office is to be distinguished from the Member State where the central purchasing body has its head office. In other words, it raises the question of the criterion connecting the contracting entity to a Member State for the purposes of the application of Article 57 of Directive 2014/25.

25 The parties to the main proceedings and the other interested parties agree that the criterion of connection must be the place where the contracting entity is located and that it is irrelevant in that context whether, or even how and to what extent, that entity is owned by another entity located in a different Member State. Thus, the rule laid down in Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25 applies where the central purchasing body and the other contracting entity are located in different Member States, such as Austria and Bulgaria in the present case.

26 In that regard, it should be recalled that both the central purchasing body and the entity conducting the contract award procedure are contracting authorities within the meaning of Directive 2014/25, so that the criterion of connection to a Member State cannot be different for one or other of those entities.

27 In addition, Article 57(1) of that directive provides that contracting entities may not use the cross border joint procurement in order to avoid the application of binding provisions of public law in conformity with EU law to which they are subject ‘in their Member State’. Paragraph 2 of that article refers to centralised purchasing activities offered by a central purchasing body ‘located in another Member State than the contracting entity’.

28 Notwithstanding the fact that Directive 2014/25 thus uses, for the purposes of determining whether a contracting entity is connected to a Member State, expressions that are sometimes different, including in its various language versions, the fact remains that those expressions suggest that the criterion of connection adopted by the EU legislature is territorial in nature, which, moreover, corresponds to the general rule, which is apparent, in essence, from the second subparagraph of Article 57(1) of that directive, according to which any contracting entity is to comply with the rules in force in the Member State in which it is established.

29 Therefore, where, in a case such as that in the main proceedings, the central purchasing body and the contracting entity are located in different Member States, it must be held that what is at issue is the award of a cross-border contract carried out through a central purchasing body.

30 In that regard, it is important to note that it is not apparent from that directive and, in particular, from Article 57 thereof, that the fact that a regional authority or a body governed by public law exercising control over the contracting entity belongs to a particular Member State constitutes a relevant criterion connecting such an entity to that Member State. Where the EU legislature intended to use the criterion of the existence of a connection between a contracting entity and another entity, it used it expressly, as in Article 4(2) of that directive.

31 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25 must be interpreted as meaning that a centralised purchasing activity, in the context of the joint award of contracts by contracting entities of different Member States, is carried out by a central purchasing body ‘located in another Member State’ where the contracting entity has its head office in a Member State other than that in which the central purchasing body is established, irrespective, as the case may be, of the location of the head office of a third entity controlling one or other of those entities.

32 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25 must be interpreted as meaning that the conflict-of-law rule laid down in that provision, under which the centralised purchasing activities of a central purchasing body are to be provided in accordance with the national provisions of the Member State where the central purchasing body is located, covers review procedures, within the meaning of Directive 92/13, relating to those activities.

33 As the referring court has pointed out, Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25 does not expressly establish whether the national provisions of the Member State in which the central purchasing body is located also govern the review procedures and the jurisdiction of the review body, within the meaning of Directive 92/13.

34 The ‘centralised purchasing activities’, to which that provision refers, are defined in Article 2(10) of Directive 2014/25 as activities conducted on a permanent basis, in the form of the acquisition of supplies and/or services intended for contracting entities, or in the form of the award of contracts or the conclusion of framework agreements for works, supplies or services intended for such entities.

35 While it is true that, on the basis of a literal interpretation, Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25 appears to refer only to the substantive law on the award of contracts, its wording does not preclude that provision from extending both to the legislation on review procedures and to the jurisdiction of the review body, within the meaning of Directive 92/13.

36 In those circumstances, according to settled case-law, it is necessary, when interpreting a provision of EU law, to consider not only its wording but also its context and the objectives of the legislation of which it forms part (judgment of 29 June 2023, Interfel, C-501/22 to C-504/22, EU:C:2023:531, paragraph 53 and the case-law cited).

37 Furthermore, it is also settled case-law that, where a provision of EU law is open to several interpretations, preference must be given to that interpretation which ensures that the provision retains its effectiveness (judgment of 29 June 2023, Interfel, C-501/22 to C-504/22, EU:C:2023:531, paragraph 54 and the case-law cited).

38 In that regard, it should be recalled that, in accordance with recital 78 of Directive 2014/25, rules should be laid down for allocating responsibility for the observance of the obligations pursuant to that directive, also in the case of remedies, as between the central purchasing body and the contracting entities procuring from or through it.

39 That recital envisages two situations, the first characterised by the fact that the central purchasing body alone assumes responsibility for the conduct of contract award procedures, and the second characterised by the fact that a contracting entity assumes responsibility for certain parts of the procedure, for instance the reopening of competition under a framework agreement or the award of individual contracts based on a dynamic purchasing system. In the first case, the central purchasing body should be solely and directly responsible for the legality of the procedures; in the second case, it should continue to be responsible for the stages it conducts.

40 In addition, recital 82 of Directive 2014/25 states that new rules on cross-border joint procurement should be established and that those rules should determine the conditions for cross-border utilisation of central purchasing bodies and designate the applicable public procurement legislation, including the applicable legislation on remedies, in cases of cross-border joint procedures.

41 It is apparent from those recitals that the EU legislature intended not only to determine the substantive law applicable to cross-border contracts and central purchasing bodies, but also the law relating to the review procedures to which those contracts and those activities may give rise.

42 Consequently, preference must be given to an interpretation of the provisions of Directive 2014/25 governing such contracts and activities which makes it possible to encompass both substantive law and review procedures.

43 Thus, it should be considered that Directive 2014/25 refers to the law of the Member States not only for the provisions of that law which govern the conduct of the cross-border contract award procedures but also for those which govern review procedures, including judicial review procedures, which are likely to follow such a contract award procedure.

44 Such an interpretation is, moreover, consistent with the objective of Directive 2014/25, which is to establish a uniform system for centralised cross-border purchases. In so far as a central purchasing body is called upon to provide its centralised purchasing activities in accordance with the national provisions of the Member State in which it is located, it appears coherent that the review procedure, which may be initiated, is conducted in accordance with the law of that Member State and that the jurisdiction of the review body concerned is determined in accordance with that law.

45 In addition, the principle that it is the provisions of the Member State in which a contracting entity is situated which govern the review procedures concerning the measures taken by those entities underlies the rule laid down in the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 92/13, according to which the Member States are to take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/25 or Directive 2014/23, decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible, on the ground that such decisions have infringed EU law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.

46 As the European Commission has observed, that does not preclude a distinction being drawn, where appropriate, between the law applicable to the contract award procedure and that which may apply to contracts subsequently concluded.

47 It is also for the national courts, hearing a dispute arising from a cross-border contract award procedure, to pay particular attention to the allocation of the responsibilities incumbent on the parties involved in the conduct of that procedure and to the limits of their powers which, where appropriate, result therefrom, while taking into account the rule set out in Article 57(1) of Directive 2014/25, recalled in paragraph 27 of the present judgment.

48 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second question is that Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25, read in the light of recitals 78 and 82 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that the conflict-of-law rule laid down in that provision, under which the provision of centralised purchasing activities of a central purchasing body is to be conducted in accordance with the national provisions of the Member State where that central purchasing body is located, extends to review procedures, within the meaning of Directive 92/13, relating to those activities, in so far as that central purchasing body is responsible for the conduct of the contract award procedure.

The third question

49 In the light of the answers given to the first and second questions, there is no need to answer the third question referred by the referring court if the first or second question was answered in the negative.

Costs

50 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Tenth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC must be interpreted as meaning that a centralised purchasing activity, in the context of the joint award of contracts by contracting entities of different Member States, is carried out by a central purchasing body ‘located in another Member State’ where the contracting entity has its head office in a Member State other than that in which the central purchasing body is established, irrespective, as the case may be, of the location of the head office of a third entity controlling one or other of those entities.

2. Article 57(3) of Directive 2014/25, read in the light of recitals 78 and 82 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that the conflict-of-law rule laid down in that provision, under which the provision of centralised purchasing activities of a central purchasing body is to be conducted in accordance with the national provisions of the Member State where that central purchasing body is located, extends to review procedures, within the meaning of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts, relating to those activities, in so far as that central purchasing body is responsible for the conduct of the contract award procedure.

ORDER OF THE COURT (Eighth Chamber)

10 January 2023 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice – Public procurement of service, supply and works contracts – Directive 2014/24/EU – Conduct of the procedure – Choice of participants and award of contracts – Article 63 – Economic operator relying on the capacities of another entity in order to meet the requirements of the contracting authority – Obligation of that economic operator to submit the qualification documents of a subcontractor after the tender has been awarded – Incompatibility)

In Case C-469/22,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court, Portugal), made by decision of 23 June 2022, received at the Court on 13 July 2022, in the proceedings

Ambisig – Ambiente e Sistemas de Informação Geográfica SA

Fundação do Desporto,

ANO – Sistemas de Informática e Serviços Lda,

Link Consulting – Tecnologias de Informação SA,

THE COURT (Eighth Chamber),

composed of M. Safjan, President of the Chamber, N. Piçarra and M. Gavalec (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to rule by reasoned order, pursuant to Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice,

makes the following

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Ambisig – Ambiente e Sistemas de Informação Geográfica SA (‘Ambisig’) and the Fundação do Desporto, concerning its decision to exclude Ambisig from participating in a public procurement procedure for the award of a service contract and to award the contract concerned to Link Consulting – Tecnologias de Informação SA (‘Link’).

Legal context

3 Recital 84 of Directive 2014/24 states:

‘Many economic operators, and not least [small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs)], find that a major obstacle to their participation in public procurement consists in administrative burdens deriving from the need to produce a substantial number of certificates or other documents related to exclusion and selection criteria. Limiting such requirements, for example through use of a European Single Procurement Document (ESPD) consisting of an updated self-declaration, could result in considerable simplification for the benefit of both contracting authorities and economic operators.

The tenderer to which it has been decided to award the contract should, however, be required to provide the relevant evidence and contracting authorities should not conclude contracts with tenderers unable to do so. Contracting authorities should also be entitled to request all or part of the supporting documents at any moment where they consider this to be necessary in view of the proper conduct of the procedure. This might in particular be the case in two-stage procedures – restricted procedures, competitive procedures with negotiation, competitive dialogues and innovation partnerships – in which the contracting authorities make use of the possibility to limit the number of candidates invited to submit a tender. Requiring submission of the supporting documents at the moment of selection of the candidates to be invited could be justified to avoid that contracting authorities invite candidates which later prove unable to submit the supporting documents at the award stage, depriving otherwise qualified candidates from participation.

It should be set out explicitly that the ESPD should also provide the relevant information in respect of entities on whose capacities an economic operator relies, so that the verification of the information regarding such entities can be carried out together with and on the same conditions as the verification in respect of the main economic operator.’

4 Article 57 of that directive lists the various grounds for exclusion of an economic operator from a public procurement procedure.

5 Article 59 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘European Single Procurement Document’, provides:

‘1. At the time of submission of requests to participate or of tenders, contracting authorities shall accept the [ESPD], consisting of an updated self-declaration as preliminary evidence in replacement of certificates issued by public authorities or third parties confirming that the relevant economic operator fulfils the following conditions:

(a) it is not in one of the situations referred to in Article 57 in which economic operators shall or may be excluded;

(b) it meets the relevant selection criteria that have been set out pursuant to Article 58;

(c) where applicable, it fulfils the objective rules and criteria that have been set out pursuant to Article 65.

Where the economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities pursuant to Article 63, the ESPD shall also contain the information referred to in the first subparagraph of this paragraph in respect of such entities.

The ESPD shall consist of a formal statement by the economic operator that the relevant ground for exclusion does not apply and/or that the relevant selection criterion is fulfilled and shall provide the relevant information as required by the contracting authority. The ESPD shall further identify the public authority or third party responsible for establishing the supporting documents and contain a formal statement to the effect that the economic operator will be able, upon request and without delay, to provide those supporting documents.

4. A contracting authority may ask tenderers and candidates at any moment during the procedure to submit all or part of the supporting documents where this is necessary to ensure the proper conduct of the procedure.

Before awarding the contract, the contracting authority shall, except in respect of contracts based on framework agreements where such contracts are concluded in accordance with Article 33(3) or point (a) of Article 33(4), require the tenderer to which it has decided to award the contract to submit up-to-date supporting documents in accordance with Article 60 and, where appropriate, Article 62. The contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates received pursuant to Articles 60 and 62.

5. Notwithstanding paragraph 4, economic operators shall not be required to submit supporting documents or other documentary evidence where and in so far as the contracting authority has the possibility of obtaining the certificates or the relevant information directly by accessing a national database in any Member State that is available free of charge, such as a national procurement register, a virtual company dossier, an electronic document storage system or a prequalification system.

6 Article 60 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Means of proof', provides, in paragraph 1:

'Contracting authorities may require the certificates, statements and other means of proof referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this Article and Annex XII as evidence for the absence of grounds for exclusion as referred to in Article 57 and for the fulfilment of the selection criteria in accordance with Article 58.

Contracting authorities shall not require means of proof other than those referred to in this Article and in Article 62. In respect of Article 63, economic operators may rely on any appropriate means to prove to the contracting authority that they will have the necessary resources at their disposal.'

7 Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Reliance on the capacities of other entities', is worded as follows:

'1. With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. With regard to criteria relating to the educational and professional qualifications as set out in point (f) of Annex XII Part II, or to the relevant professional experience, economic operators may however only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required. Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

The contracting authority shall, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify whether the entities on whose capacity the economic operator intends to rely fulfil the relevant selection criteria and whether there are grounds for exclusion pursuant to Article 57. The contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces an entity which does not meet a relevant selection criterion, or in respect of which there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by the Member State to require that the economic operator substitutes an entity in respect of which there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.

Where an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities with regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing, the contracting authority may require that the economic operator and those entities be jointly liable for the execution of the contract.

Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 19(2) may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.

2. In the case of works contracts, service contracts and siting or installation operations in the context of a supply contract, contracting authorities may require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself or, where the tender is submitted by a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 19(2), by a participant in that group.’

Portuguese law

8 It is apparent from the order for reference that, under Article 77(2)(a) and (c) of the Código dos Contratos Públicos (Public Procurement Code), read in conjunction with Articles 81, 92 and 93 of that code, when an economic operator relies on the capacities of a third party for the performance of relevant services and unless the contract notice provides otherwise, the qualification documents of that third party and the declaration of commitment it has made must be required only after the relevant public contract has been awarded. Consequently, it is only in the context of a restricted procedure with prior selection that such a requirement is necessary at the time when the application is submitted, pursuant to Article 168(4) of the code.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

9 On the basis of the written observations submitted by Ambisig in support of its appeal, as reproduced in the request for a preliminary ruling, it appears that the Fundação do Desporto organised a public procurement procedure for the award of service contracts. The contract concerned was awarded to Link.

10 Ambisig lodged an administrative-law action in connection with public procurement with the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Leiria (Administrative and Tax Court, Leiria, Portugal) challenging its exclusion from participation in the public procurement procedure and the award of that contract to Link.

11 Ambisig complained, in essence, that the Fundação do Desporto considered that its tender had been submitted by a group of tenderers, even though it intended to use a subcontractor and that, for that purpose, it was not required to include in its tender a declaration of commitment made by that subcontractor. In that connection, according to Ambisig, the application by analogy of Article 168(4) of the Public Procurement Code, which transposes Article 63 of Directive 2014/24 into Portuguese law, to the procedure at issue in the main proceedings is unlawful, since the exclusion of Ambisig from the tender procedure, pursuant to Article 70(2)(a) and (b) of the Public Procurement Code, constitutes an error of law.

12 By judgment of 28 September 2021, the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Leiria (Administrative and Tax Court, Leiria) dismissed Ambisig’s action. That court held that, admittedly, the requirement for commitments by third parties was not expressly provided for in the contract notice and it was a condition of performance of the contract which could be satisfied following the award of the tender. Nevertheless, the reference made by Ambisig to the subcontracting part of the services concerned came within Clause 12 of the tender specifications, which stipulated that subcontracting was subject to prior authorisation by the contracting authority. Ambisig’s failure to submit that type of prior authorisation was grounds for its exclusion from the public procurement procedure. The exclusion also resulted from the application by analogy of Article 168(4) of the Public Procurement Code.

13 That judgment was upheld on appeal by the judgment of the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (Central Administrative Court – Southern Division, Portugal) of 3 February 2022. That court observed that subcontracting was subject to prior authorisation by the contracting authority, pursuant to Clause 12 of the tender specifications, and that the submission by the economic operator concerned of its potential subcontractor’s qualification documents was an indispensable prerequisite for such authorisation to be granted.

14 Ambisig, which considers that judgment incorrect on three grounds, brought an appeal against the judgment before the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court, Portugal). First, the submission of qualification documents of the third party concerned cannot be required, given that such requirement was not apparent from the contract notice or under the Public Procurement Code; Article 168(4) of that code was not applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings. Second, Clause 12 of the tender specifications was not applicable at the pre-contract stage of the public procurement procedure at issue. Third, Article 63 of Directive 2014/24 did not require the tenderer to include the declaration of commitment made by its subcontractors upon submission of its tender.

15 The Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court), which refers to the facts as established in the judgment of 3 February 2022 and the statement of which is regarded as having been reproduced in its entirety, pursuant to Article 663(6) of the Código de Processo Civil (Code of Civil Procedure), takes the view that Ambisig's first two arguments set out in the previous paragraph are well founded.

16 The question that remains to be decided is whether, when, in the context of a public procurement procedure for the award of a service contract, a tenderer presents a third party on whose technical capacities that tenderer intends to rely in order to perform part of the contract, Article 63 of Directive 2014/24 requires the tenderer to submit, together with its tender, the qualification documents of the third party and the declaration made by that third party that it will undertake to perform that part of that contract.

17 In those circumstances, the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Is it consistent with EU law, in particular with Article 63 of Directive [2014/24], for national law to provide that, in public tender procedures where the capacities of other entities are used in order to perform the contract, the subcontractor's qualification documents and the commitment given by the subcontractor must be required only after the tender has been awarded?'

Consideration of the application for an expedited procedure

18 The referring court has requested that the present reference for a preliminary ruling be dealt with under the expedited procedure under Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice.

19 However, in view of the decision of the Court to rule by reasoned order in accordance with Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure, there is no need to adjudicate on that request (order of 17 May 2022, Estaleiros Navais de Peniche, C-787/21, not published, EU:C:2022:414, paragraph 17 and the case-law cited).

Consideration of the question referred

20 Pursuant to Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure, where the answer to a question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling may be clearly deduced from existing case-law or admits of no reasonable doubt, the Court may at any time, on a proposal from the Judge-Rapporteur and after hearing the Advocate General, give its decision by reasoned order.

21 That provision should be applied in the present case.

22 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 84 of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which an economic operator which intends to use the capacities of another entity in order to perform a public contract is required to submit the qualification documents of that entity and the declaration of commitment it has made only after the contract in question has been awarded.

23 In that regard, it must be noted that Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 provides for the right of an economic operator to rely, for a particular contract, on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them, with a view to satisfying both the criteria relating to economic and financial standing set out in Article 58(3) of that directive and the criteria relating to technical and professional ability referred to in Article 58(4) of that directive (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraphs 29 and 33, and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 150).

24 An economic operator wishing to exercise its right may, pursuant to the second subparagraph of Article 60(1) of Directive 2014/24, rely on any appropriate means to prove to the contracting authority that they will have the necessary resources at their disposal. In that connection, the third sentence of Article 63(1) of that directive sets out, by way of example, the possibility for that economic operator to produce a commitment by those entities to that effect. An economic operator may also, in accordance with the second and third subparagraphs of Article 59(1) of that directive, read in conjunction with the third paragraph of recital 84 thereof, send an ESPD to the contracting authority when submitting its request to participate or its tender, stating, inter alia, first, that neither itself nor the entities on whose capacities it intends to rely are in one of the situations referred to in Article 57 of that directive which must or may lead to an economic operator's exclusion and, second, that the selection criteria are fulfilled. In any event, any economic operator wishing to rely on the capacities of other entities must prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary to satisfy the selection criteria set out in Article 58 of Directive 2014/24.

25 It is then, under the second subparagraph of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24, for the contracting authority to ascertain, first, whether, in accordance with Articles 59 to 61 of that directive, the entities on whose capacities the economic operator intends to rely fulfil the relevant selection criteria and, second, whether there are grounds for exclusion, as set out in Article 57 of that directive, in respect of those entities.

26 It must be possible for the contracting authority to carry out those verifications before awarding the contract. In that connection, recital 84 of Directive 2014/24, which clarifies the scope of Article 63 of that directive, states expressly, in its second and third paragraphs, that requiring the supporting documents to be submitted at the time of selection of the candidates to be invited could be justified in order to avoid contracting authorities inviting candidates which later prove unable to submit the supporting documents at the award stage, depriving otherwise qualified candidates from participation.

27 It thus follows from the foregoing considerations that Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 59 and recital 84 of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which an economic operator which intends to use the capacities of another entity in order to perform the contract is required to submit the qualification documents of that entity and the declaration of commitment it has made only after the contract in question has been awarded.

Costs

28 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, read in conjunction with Article 59 and recital 84 of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which an economic operator which intends to use the capacities of another entity in order to perform the contract is required to submit the qualification documents of that entity and the declaration of commitment it has made only after the contract in question has been awarded.

5) It must be concluded according to the pronouncement of the plaintiff S... above.
6) The contract that may be awarded under the null award should be considered null and void, if it has been awarded in the meantime, because it is found that legal rules and general principles of law, not only applicable to public procurement, but also to other existing law, namely those referred to in the previous paragraphs, are being violated, which generates the invalidity of the acts performed and inherently the nullity of the award and the contract, if legality is not restored.

7) Finally, Your Excellency. In accordance with the law, you are required to confirm with the defendant Fundação do Desporto, legal person no. 503596744, alerting it to the automatic legal suspension of the effectiveness of the contested award act and the suspension of the execution of the contract eventually awarded, all under the terms of article 103-A of the CPTA, and the defendant must inform whether the contract has already been awarded and/or, is in execution, because if this occurs, it will have to immediately stop the execution of the same, because the continuity could generate serious damage to the plaintiff S...., as a result of the illegal award act. [...]'.

2 - By decision rendered on 8 March 2021, that TAF of Porto considered itself territorially incompetent to hear the claim and the case was referred to the TAF of Leiria.

3 – A....., S.A., with the documents in the case file, filed a pre-contractual litigation action against the Sports Foundation before the Administrative and Fiscal Court of Leiria (TAF de Leiria), which is under number 6/21.6BELRA, in which it made the following request: "[…] Terms in which the present action should be judged to be fully upheld, as proven, and, consequently:
a) The administrative act that approved the final report of the jury and determined the exclusion of the Plaintiff's proposal and the award of the Counter-Interested Party's proposal (Doc. 1) be annulled;
b) The Respondent Entity is ordered to approve a new procedure programme, without relapsing into the illegalities detected and to carry out all subsequent acts and steps provided for in the legal course of the public tender procedure;
c) A period of 20 days be set for compliance with the determinations contained in the judgment.
To this end, it is requested that Your Excellency order the summons of the Respondent Entity and the Counter-Interested Party to contest, if they wish, within the time limit and under the legal penalty, following the other terms until the end.
It is further requested that those entities be warned in the summons letter of the need to comply with the duties that emanate from the automatic suspensive effect of the present action [...]"

4 – By order of the TAF of Leiria of 25.05.2021, the joinder of case no. 6/21.6BELRA to the case file no. 25/21.2BEPRT was granted.

5 - By judgment of 28 September 2021, the two actions were dismissed and the Respondent Entity was acquitted of the claim.

6 – Dissatisfied with the decision rendered, A..., S.A., and S....., LDA., both appealed against the judgment to the TCA Sul, which, by judgment of 3 February 2022, dismissed the appeals.

7 – Dissatisfied with the judgment, A...., S.A. filed an appeal on a point of law before this Supreme Administrative Court, which, by judgment of 21 April 2022, admitted the review.

8 - A....., S.A., concluded its arguments with the following conclusions:
59. In the present pre-contractual litigation action (Case No. 6/21.6BELRA, attached), the Plaintiff, now the appellant, challenged the act that approved the final report of the jury and determined the exclusion of its proposal and the award of the procedure to the Counter-Interested Party L...., issued in the public tender procedure for "Provision of services for the development of project No. 044029 – FdD + Together for Efficiency", requesting the annulment of that act and the condemnation of the Respondent Entity to approve a Program of the Procedure, without relapsing into the illegalities detectedand to carry out all subsequent acts and diligences provided for in the legal course of the contracting procedure.
60. As an essential basis for its claim, the Plaintiff argued that the contested act is invalid, since the selection board considered that its tender had been submitted in the form of a grouping of competitors, when there is not and never has been a grouping, also considering the analogous application of the provisions of Article 168(4) to be illegal, of the PPC to the procedure in question, incurring in an error of law by rejecting the proposal under the provisions of article 70(2)(a) and b) of the PPC.
61. On the other hand, the Plaintiff also argued that the rules relating to the award criterion and the evaluation model set out in the programme of the procedure that were applied and which resulted in the evaluation and ordering of the tenders contained in the final report of the selection board and the award of the Counter-Interested Party's tender, are also vitiated by illegality, since the sub-factors "IA – Adequacy to Functional Requirements", "IB – Adequacy to Technical Requirements and Solution Architecture", "CI – Adequacy of the Proposed Team" and "ID – Adequacy of Methodologies and Project Plan" are manifestly illegal.
62. The judgment under appeal dismissed any of the claims, holding that, under Article 168(4) of the PPC, the appellant was required to submit with its tender a declaration of commitment by the subcontractor and that the valuation model does not infringe Article 139 of the PPC, nor the principles of transparency and competition, because it is a legitimate criterion within the scope of the technical discretion granted by the program to the jury of the procedure.
63. However, as has been shown here, the national court made a serious error of judgment.
64. First, the referring court applies Article 63 of the Directive directly to the present case, which is contrary to the decision of the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) in the judgments in Van Duyn of 4 December 1974 and Ratti, and April 5, 1979. As is well known, the Directive was fully transposed into the national legal order through the PPC and, in the judgment under appeal, the Court invokes its application against the defendant here. Thus, it is undeniable that the appealed judgment contradicts the case-law of the CJEU, and Article 63 of the Directive cannot be applied to the present procedure (or to any other), by means of direct effect.
65. The referring court also decided to apply Article 168(4) of the PPC analogously to the present case, which is a perfectly clear rule, which the legislator transposed into the Portuguese legal system in the exact terms of the provisions of the Directive (i.e., providing for its application only and only to procedures of restricted competition by prior qualification). In fact, the lower court's understanding that Article 63 of the Directive and, consequently, Article 168(4) of the PPC, apply to allThe type of procedures provided for, constitutes a violation of the principles of separation of powers and legal certainty, provided for, in particular, in Article 2 of the Constitution of the Portuguese Republic and in the Treaty on European Union. Moreover, it prevents the application of the principle of conforming interpretation, according to which national courts must interpret the national law transposing a directive in the light of its wording and purpose, and is subject to the limits of general principles of law.

66. Thus, Articles 63 and 58 of the Directive and Article 168(4) of the PPC apply only to the procedure for a restricted procedure by prior qualification, in which the contracting authority lays down a series of technical capacity requirements on which the access of economic operators to the tender stage depends. In other words, by virtue of the characteristics of the contract to be concluded, the contracting authority understands that the public interest underlying the purchasing need can only be adequately satisfied by economic operators who demonstrate that they have certain requirements, which may be experience, organisation, technical or human resources, etc. (cf. Article 165 of the PPC).
67. And since the law opens up the possibility for the economic operator to use third parties to demonstrate compliance with such requirements, it is natural that access to the tender stage should depend on the submission of a document in which those third parties undertake to perform certain contractual services. None of this is the case in the public tender procedure, in which access to the possibility of submitting tenders is free, and is not dependent on the fulfilment of any technical (or financial) capacity requirements that the contracting authority considers essential for the proper pursuit of the public interest underlying the contract to be concluded.
68. Therefore, the invocation and analogous application of Article 168(4) of the PPC to the present case is absolutely meaningless. In the public tender procedure, as we have shown, there is no obligation to instruct the proposal with documents signed by the third parties to whom the tenderer intends to use through subcontracting.
69. Finally, but also wrongly, the referring court states that "It is a common understanding that the provision of Article 168(4) of the PPC must be applied analogously in any tender procedure". With all due respect to this Court, which is a great deal, but this statement is not true. Neither the courts have decided in this sense, nor is this understanding even mentioned in the doctrine. The excerpt from the work of Prof. PEDRO COSTA GONÇALVES transcribed in the sentence does not make any reference to the analogous application of paragraph 4 of article 168 to another type of tender procedure. In addition, it is an excerpt that is inserted in the part of the work relating to the minimum requirements of technical and financial capacity required of candidates in procedures of restricted competition by prior qualification, by virtue of its exclusive application to this type of procedure.
70. Thus, and contrary to what is apparent from the final report of the selection board, which constitutes the reasoning of ther relationem of the contested act, the grounds provided for in Article 70(2)(a) and (b) of the PPC for the exclusion of the applicant's tender, for violation of Article 168(4) of the PPC, are not met. Precepts that the contested act, the judgment and the judgment under appeal wrongly applied, thus incurring that act in violation of law, which invalidates it and entails its annulment, under the terms of Article 163(1) of the CPA.
71. The judgment under appeal is also erroneous, in that it decided that the evaluation model does not infringe the provisions of Article 139 of the PPC, nor the principles of transparency and competition, as it is a legitimate criterion within the scope of the technical discretion granted by the programme to the selection board, LIFE 72. In this case, the lower court completely refrained from analysing and assessing the descriptions of the evaluation model and the award criterion, opting instead to take refuge in the reasoning used by the selection board in the preliminary report, to conclude that, "although the terms provided for in the sub-factors may intuit a merely formalistic evaluation of the tender as a document in itself", what was evaluated were the true attributes of the proposal and not the formal aspects of them.

73. Both in its Statement of Claim and in its Statement of Appeal, the appellant has fully demonstrated that the defendant blatantly disregarded Articles 74(1), 75(1) and 139(3), all of the PPC, in the construction of the award criterion and the evaluation model, confessing its sin when it states from the outset that "It is intended to evaluate the quality of the competitor's proposal, according to the level of detail and information contemplated [...]".
74. Because the sub-factor IA – Adequacy to Functional Requirements is invalid. As stated in the provision of the procedure program mentioned above, in this sub-factor the fulfillment of the functional requirements or sub-requirements is (supposedly) evaluated, and a value is assigned to each one. However, according to the established model, the attribution of a value is dependent not on the fulfilment of each requirement, but on the detail of the description contained in the tender of each tenderer regarding the way in which it proposes to comply with it. This is what is unequivocally clear from the descriptors in which reference is made to the clear or unclear way in which the proposal demonstrates compliance with the requirements and especially from the "Notes" where it is stated that if the requirement is described in detail, a point is awarded and instead "If the requirement or sub-requirement is not presented in detail and/or the competitor simply says that it complies [...] The value 0" will be assigned.
75. In that sub-factor, the contracting authority establishes a direct link between the detail and clarity of the description contained in the tender and its quality and potential and susceptibility to meet or exceed the functional requirements requested in the tender specifications, but what is truly assessed is the detail and clarity of the description and not the actual compliance with the requirements.
76. Also the sub-factor IB – AdequacyThe Technical Requirements contain several illegal aspects, the first of which is that it is impossible to identify which attribute is truly subject to evaluation in this subfactor. It is not possible to understand whether the corresponding score, 0, 30, 70 or 100 points, is obtained by complying with the mandatory and non-mandatory requirements, the clarity of the presentation of the architecture, or the tools used, whether standard, non-standard, proprietary or not, or whether or not they are discontinued.
77. On the other hand, and with regard to the architecture of the solution, once again, this sub-factor evaluates and values the level of detail of the presentation. Here, too, an association is made between the level of clarity and detail of the presentation and the "adequacy to technical requirements". But what is truly evaluated, in this aspect, is only the level of clarity and detail of the presentation of the architecture and not its quality or suitability.
78. In the sub-factor IC – Suitability of the Proposed Team, the level of detail of the presentation of the Team, or, more precisely, of each of the members corresponding to the various types of functions, namely, Project Manager, Senior Analyst, Senior Architect, and Document Management Consultants, is evaluated. In fact, in the descriptors contained in the evaluation table, we find that the attribution of the score is dependent on the demonstration in a detailed and complete way of the requirements of the subfactor, requirements that are not clear, but which seem to correspond to adequate training (which is also not indicated) and experience in similar projects.
79. Finally, the sub-factor ID – Adequacy of the Methodologies and the proposed Project Plan is also illegal. A first dimension of the illegality of this sub-factor is related to the reference to compliance with the "requirements of the evaluation sub-factor", if in the previous sub-factor they were not clear, in this one it is not even possible to know what they are, thus making it impossible to truly identify what was intended to be evaluated. On the other hand, in this sub-factor, the contracting authority insists on weighing the detail and completeness of the demonstration contained in the proposal, establishing a relationship between these aspects of a purely formal nature and the adequacy of the project plan, the methodologies, the training plan and the documents and deliverables to the project to be executed.

LIFE 80. From the jury's reasoning contained in the preliminary and final reports, it is clear that, objectively, what was valued was the detail, clarity and completeness of the presentation of the proposals presented.
81. Therefore, in addition to the extreme vacuity, it is clear that aspects of a formal nature, relating to the merely documentary content of the tender, are weighed to the detriment of true attributes, that is, aspects of the performance of the contract itself. In view of the above, it is clear that the sub-factors IA, IB, IC, and ID of the factor "Technical and functional quality of the proposed solution" of the award criterion do not assess true attributes of the tenders, i.e. aspects of the performance of the contract submitted to competition.
82. Even if it was its intention to evaluate such components, the truth is that this was not what the defendant included in the evaluation model, establishing descThe sub-factors mentioned above that make the score depend not on the characteristics and technical values of the products and solutions proposed, but on the level of clarity, detail and quality with which the functional and technical requirements, the experience and training of the technical team members, and the methodology and the Project Plan are described.
83. Taking these data into consideration, it must be concluded that, in fact, the valuation model defined for the sub-factors under analysis violates the provisions of Articles 74(1), 75(1) and 139(3), all of the PPC.
84. In view of the above, this venerable Supreme Administrative Court should correct the appealed judgment and order the defendant to approve a new Procedure Programme, without relapsing into the illegalities detected, and to carry out all subsequent acts and steps provided for in the legal course of the contracting procedure.
Terms in which this Court should admit the present Appeal on a Review, grant it, revoke the Judgment under appeal and hear the merits of the appeal filed by the Appellant.
As it is of Law and Justice.

9 – The defendant Fundação do Desporto and L...., S.A. [a counter-interested party in the proceedings and the "successful tenderer" in the context of the public tender in question] counter-claimed, arguing for the inadmissibility of the review and, failing that, for the dismissal of the appeal.

10 – The Honorable Deputy Attorney General at this Court, notified under the terms and for the purposes of Article 146 of the CPTA, issued an opinion in which she concluded that the appeal was partially well founded.

11 – The contradictory was ensured in view of the content of the MP's opinion.

12 - By judgment of this STA of 23 June 2022, a reference for a preliminary ruling was made to the CJEU, suspending the proceedings, and proceedings were heard in that Court under No. C-469/22, a case concluded by the order of 10 January 2023, whose decision was sent to this Supreme Court and subject to an adversarial procedure, and did not merit any pronouncement [cfr. fls. 5768/5780, 5974/5988 and 5991 et seq. of the case file].

It is necessary to assess and decide.

II – GROUNDS

1. In fact

, reference is made to the facts established in the judgment under appeal, which are hereby reproduced in full, pursuant to Article 663(6) of the CPC.

2. By law

2.1. The issues that are raised in the present appeal as errors of judgment of the courts are, essentially, two: i) whether it is legally correct to exclude the Appellant on the basis ofArticle 70(2)(a) of the PPC by "analogous" application of the provisions of Article 168(4) of the PPC; and ii) whether the contested decision is also correct in so far as it reiterates the decision at first instance regarding the finding that the factors and sub-factors relating to the technical assessment criterion did not infringe the provisions of Article 139 of the PPC.

2.2. The legal conformity of the decision to exclude the Applicant

The Applicant was excluded from the tender because the Selection Board considered that, although it had stated that it "did not participate in the procurement procedure jointly with other operators", it indicated in the document relating to the "terms and conditions of the tender" that "the proposal was prepared by you, A....., but in partnership with the company .... - Consulting on a subcontracting basis for the development of all services related to the "Survey, Reengineering and Dematerialization of Processes", and, as such, the proposal would have to qualify as "submission of proposals in a group". Now, a proposal submitted in a grouping must, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 of article 75 of the PPC, be signed by the common representative of the members that make up the grouping or by all the members or representatives of the grouping, which did not occur in this case and led to the exclusion.

The jury also considered that the provisions of paragraphs 3 and 4 of article 168 of the PPC also applied here, by analogy, which also resulted in the obligation of signature of all the members of the grouping or, in the case of mere recourse to third parties to provide part of the object of the contract, regardless of the link established between the tenderer and them, It would always be necessary to submit a declaration by which those third parties unconditionally undertook to perform the said contractual services.

In the judgment of the TAF of Leiria, it was argued that the requirement of commitments from third parties, as it was not expressly provided for in the Procedure Program, and being an element relating to the performance of the contract in the post-award phase, did not constitute grounds for excluding A. and herein the Appellant from the tender. However, this reference made by the Applicant to the subcontracting of part of the services fell within the scope of the provisions of clause 12 of the tender specifications, according to which that type of subcontracting required authorisation from the contracting authority, and it being inferred from this clause that the failure to present prior authorisation from the contracting authority was grounds for exclusion. A solution – that of exclusion from the tender – that was also the result of the analogous application of paragraph 4 of article 168 of the PPC.

The TCA, in the judgment under appeal, reaffirms the thesis of exclusion under Article 70(2)(a). (a) of the PPC, based on the argument of violation of paragraph 4 of article 168 of the PPC. And it adds that the same solution is dictated by Article 318(3)(a). a) of the PPC, since prior authorisation of subcontracting was required (clause 12 of the tender specifications); and for the validity of this authorisation, it was necessary to previously present the qualification documents required of the contractor, also in relation to the potential subcontractor.

2.2.1. The Appellant alleges that the contested decision constitutes an error of judgment, essentially because: i) it requires the presentation of qualification documentation from the third party when this requirement is not included in the tender program and is not removed from the PPC, since Article 168(4) of that Code is not applicable in this procedure, as concluded in the judgment of this STA of 18.11.2021 (proc. 0452/20.2BEALM); (ii) clause 12 of the tender specifications is not applicable at the pre-contractual stage; and (iii) Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU does not require that at the time of submission of the tender the tenderer must attach a declaration of commitment from the subcontractors.

2.2.1.1. The Appellant is right in relation to the first two arguments, since, in fact, as stated in the judgment of this Supreme Administrative Court of 18.11.2021, of Articles 77(2)(a). (a) and c), 81, 92 and 93 of the PPC, as well as Article 2(2) of Ordinance No. 372/2017 seem to be extracted that "except in the case of a different requirement contained in the documents of the procedure or at the request of the Contracting Authority, [the third party's qualification document] *only has to be presented at the time following the award, and not at the time of submission of the tender"*element.
And, in this case, it is also true that Article 12 of the tender specifications does not derive a different solution, in view of the following content of the rule:
Final Provisions
Clause 12
Subcontracting
1. Subcontracting in the course of the performance of the contract requires the authorization of the Contracting Authority.
2. In cases of subcontracting, the supplier remains fully responsible to the Contracting Authority for the exact and timely fulfilment of all contractual obligations, and does not imply the transfer of responsibility to any of the subcontractors
. It follows from the wording of the clause that the obligation to present those documents at an earlier time cannot be withdrawn.

2.2.1.2. In essence, the question will be resolved on the basis of the answer formulated last above, which relates to the problem of whether a tenderer, in the context of a public tender (and not a restricted procedure by prior qualification) presents a third party (auxiliary company) whose technical capabilities it intends to use to provide part of the service, whether or not it is obtainableto present, together with the proposal, the qualification documents of that (future) subcontractor and the declaration of the respective subcontractor that it is bound to the execution of that part of the service.

The question is relevant and doubtful in the light of national law. It is true that, on the one hand, as highlighted in the judgment of this Supreme Administrative Court of 18.11.2021 (proc. 0452/20.2BEALM), the contracting authority should not be able to demand requirements that are not included in the law – read the PPC – or in the tender programme. This means, according to that paragraph, that, if nothing to the contrary is apparent from the tender programme, either the subcontractor's qualification or its declaration of commitment to the performance of the part of the service can only be required after the award, as is apparent from Article 2(2) of Ministerial Order No 372/2017 and Articles 77(2). Als. a) and c), 81, 92 and 93 of the PPC. The requirement at the time of submission of the application thus seems to be reserved, in the light of national law – the rules of the PPC – for cases of restricted competition by prior qualification, as provided for in paragraph 4 of article 168 of the PPC.
However, Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU appears to impose a different rule in that it considers that the economic operator's reliance on the capacities of other entities, irrespective of the type of procedure concerned, requires the economic operator to prove to the contracting authority that it will have the necessary resources to do so, for example, by submitting a declaration of commitment from those auxiliary or subcontracted entities (Article 63(1), paragraph 1 in fine).
And the RAD judgment of the CJEU, of 3.6.2021, issued in case C-210/20, seems to also point in the same direction, which, invoking the principle of proportionality, highlights that the presentation of the elements relating to the subcontractors together with the initial proposal constitutes an outcropping of the principles of equal treatment and transparency, essential to the correct operation of competition in the evaluation of the tenders, and then concludes that, if the subcontractor does not satisfy the conditions required by law to be a party to a public contract, it must be excluded. The CJEU ruling also adds that the tenderer will be able to replace the said third party assistant in the performance of the contract, at the invitation of the contracting authority, provided that this replacement does not alter the content of the proposal submitted, which may be harmed by "subcontracting" at a later time.
In the context of that case-law, it seems to us that an interpretation of the rules of national law – the rules of the PPC – according to which, in public procurement procedures, both the subcontractor's qualification document and its commitment to the performance of the part of the service contained in the tender are only required after the award has been awarded, may contravene either with the rule in Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU, or with the principles ofequal treatment and transparency, as dimensions of the implementation of the principle of competition in the evaluation of tenders, as they were configured by the European legislator of public procurement.
For this reason, before proceeding, if there are doubts about the correct interpretation of the provisions of Articles 77(2)(a). (a) and (c), 81, 92, 93 and 168(4) of the PPC, this STA decided to stay the proceedings and to put the following question to the CJEU:
Is it consistent with Union law, in particular Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU, for the solution of national law whereby, in public procurement procedures where the capacities of other entities are used to perform the service, Do both the subcontractor's qualification documents and the submission of a declaration of commitment by the subcontractor have to be required only after the award has been awarded?

2.2.2. By decision of 10.01.2023 of the Court of Justice of the European Union, Case C-469/22, it was clarified that: "Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, read in conjunction with Article 59 and recital 84 of that Directive, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which an economic operator wishing to rely on the capacities of another entity for the performance of a public contract must transmit the qualification documents of that entity and the undertaking of that entity only after the contract in question has been awarded".

The parties were notified of the decision and did not allege anything.
There is therefore no doubt that the decision adopted by the courts is correct. Indeed, it is apparent from the CJEU's decision set out above that Article 70(2)(a) (a) of the SPC has to be interpreted in accordance with Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU and, in this sense, a tender where the economic operator intends to rely on the capacities of another entity for the performance of a public contract and does not submit, together with the tender, the qualification documents of that entity and the declaration of commitment of that entity, shall be excluded; i.e. it does not provide proof that it "will have the necessary resources to meet the selection criteria set out" and does not allow the contracting authority to verify (in accordance with Articles 59 to 61 of Directive 2014/24/EU) whether those entities to which the economic operator intends to have recourse comply with the relevant selection criteria and whether or not there are grounds for their exclusion (under Article 57 of that Directive). These checks must necessarily be carried out prior to the award of the contract.
In fact, the CJEU's decision clarifies that this requirement is not even a complex bureaucratic procedure, so its enforceability as an element of admissibility of the proposalsis neither disproportionate nor unreasonable in terms of ensuring the principle of competition, since the economic operator may submit a European Single Procurement Document (ESPD), consisting of an updated self-declaration in order to verify compliance with the requirements of Article 57 of Directive 2014/24/EU, without prejudice to the contracting authority, at any time, you may require the supporting documents you consider relevant.

2.3. The Appellant also alleged that the judgment under appeal erred in its judgment in that it did not find the model for evaluating the tenders adopted to be unlawful on the grounds of infringement of the provisions of Article 139 of the PPC and of the principles of transparency and competition.
It should be recalled that the contested decision supported the interpretation conveyed by the decision of first instance by legitimizing the evaluation criteria of the proposals (the sub-factors "IAAdadequacy to the Functional Requirements", "IB - Adequacy to the Technical Requirements and Architecture of the Solution", "CI - Adequacy of the Proposed Team" and "ID-Adequacy of the Methodologies and the Project Plan"), considering that, despite using indeterminate concepts, they concerned the evaluation of formal aspects related to the technical aspects (types of methodologies to be used, training of people, etc.) and not to the attributes of the proposals themselves, so that this allegedly vague nature of the evaluation grid and its sub-factors turned out to be adequate and sufficient (and not arbitrary), when analysed in its concrete application in relation to the elements to be evaluated and not only in a decontextualised way.
However, we also agree with the contested decision in this assessment, since, in fact, taking into account the "analysis grids" and the results of their application, it is clear that, since the assessment of essentially formal and external elements is at stake, the use of the "classifiers" adopted for the formation of the multifactorial judgment regarding the quality-price ratio is "sufficient" and appropriate.

Accordingly, this ground of appeal must also be rejected.

III – DECISION
In view of the above, the judges of the Administrative Litigation Chamber of the Supreme Administrative Court agree to dismiss the appeal.
Costs for the Appellant.

1 Les demandes de décision préjudicielle portent sur l'interprétation de l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), et paragraphe 4, sous a) et b), de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE (JO 2014, L 94, p. 65), telle que modifiée par le règlement délégué (UE) 2017/2365 de la Commission, du 18 décembre 2017 (JO 2017, L 337, p. 19) (ci-après la « directive 2014/24 »).

2 Ces demandes ont été présentées dans le cadre de deux litiges opposant, dans le premier (affaire C-441/22), le Zamestnik–ministar na regionalnoto razvitie i blagoustroystvoto rakovoditel na Upravlyavashtia organ na Operativna programa « Regioni v rastezh » 2014-2020 (vice-ministre du Développement régional et des Travaux publics, en sa qualité de chef de l'autorité de gestion du programme opérationnel « Régions en développement » 2014-2020, Bulgarie) et, dans le second (affaire C-443/22), le Zamestnik-ministar na regionalnoto razvitie i blagoustroystvoto i rakovoditel na Natsionalnia organ po Programa INTERREG V-A Rumania-Bulgaria 2014-2020 (vice-ministre du Développement régional et des Travaux publics, en sa qualité de chef de l'autorité nationale pour le programme INTERREG V-A Roumanie-Bulgarie 2014-2020, Bulgarie) (ci-après, indifféremment dans chacune des deux affaires, le « chef de l'autorité de gestion ») respectivement au Obshtina Razgrad (commune de Razgrad, Bulgarie) et au Obshtina Balchik (commune de Balchik, Bulgarie) au sujet de décisions prises par le chef de l'autorité de gestion par lesquelles celui-ci a appliqué à ces deux communes une correction financière de 25 % sur les coûts éligibles au titre des fonds européens structurels et d'investissement (ci-après les « fonds ESI ») dans le cadre de marchés publics de travaux qu'elles avaient organisés.

3 Les considérants 58, 107 et 109 de la directive 2014/24 énoncent :

propriété intellectuelle. Ces modifications attestent l'intention des parties de renégocier les conditions essentielles du marché. C'est notamment le cas de conditions qui, si elles avaient été incluses dans la procédure initiale, auraient influé sur son issue.

Il devrait toujours être possible d'apporter au marché des modifications entraînant une variation mineure de sa valeur jusqu'à un certain montant, sans devoir recourir à une nouvelle procédure de passation de marché. À cet effet, et afin de garantir la sécurité juridique, la présente directive devrait prévoir des seuils minimaux, en dessous desquels une nouvelle procédure de passation de marché n'est pas nécessaire. Il devrait être possible d'apporter au marché des modifications allant au-delà de ces seuils sans devoir recourir à une nouvelle procédure de passation de marché, pour autant que lesdites modifications respectent les conditions pertinentes énoncées dans la présente directive.

(109) Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent se trouver confrontés à des circonstances extérieures qu'ils ne pouvaient prévoir au moment de l'attribution du marché, notamment lorsque l'exécution de celui-ci s'étend sur une plus longue période. Dans un tel cas, une certaine marge de manœuvre est nécessaire pour pouvoir adapter le marché à ces circonstances sans engager de nouvelle procédure de passation de marché. Les circonstances imprévisibles sont celles que le pouvoir adjudicateur, bien qu'ayant fait preuve d'une diligence raisonnable lors de la préparation du marché initial, n'aurait pu prévoir, compte tenu des moyens à sa disposition, de la nature et des caractéristiques du projet particulier, des bonnes pratiques du secteur et de la nécessité de mettre en adéquation les ressources consacrées à la préparation de l'attribution du marché et la valeur prévisible de celui-ci. Toutefois, cette définition ne saurait s'appliquer en cas de modification altérant la nature de l'ensemble du marché, par exemple lorsque les travaux, fournitures ou services faisant l'objet du marché sont remplacés par une commande différente ou que le type de marché est fondamentalement modifié, puisque l'on peut, dans ce cas, présumer que cette modification serait de nature à influer éventuellement sur l'issue du marché. »

4 L'article 2 de cette directive, intitulé « Définitions », dispose, à son paragraphe 1 :

5. "marchés publics", des contrats à titre onéreux conclus par écrit entre un ou plusieurs opérateurs économiques et un ou plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs et ayant pour objet l'exécution de travaux, la fourniture de produits ou la prestation de services ;

18. "écrit(e)" ou "par écrit", tout ensemble de mots ou de chiffres qui peut être lu, reproduit, puis communiqué, y compris les informations transmises et stockées par un moyen électronique ;

5 L'article 4 de ladite directive, intitulé « Montants des seuils », prévoit, à son point a), qu'elle s'applique aux marchés publics de travaux dont la valeur estimée hors taxe sur la valeur ajoutée (TVA) est égale ou supérieure à 5 548 000 euros.

6 L'article 72 de la même directive, intitulé « Modification de marchés en cours », est libellé comme suit :

« 1. Les marchés et les accords-cadres peuvent être modifiés sans nouvelle procédure de passation de marché conformément à la présente directive dans l'un des cas suivants :

a) lorsque les modifications, quelle que soit leur valeur monétaire, ont été prévues dans les documents de marchés initiaux sous la forme de clauses de réexamen, dont des clauses de révision du prix ou d'options claires, précises et univoques. Ces clauses indiquent le champ d'application et la nature des éventuelles modifications ou options ainsi que les conditions dans lesquelles il peut en être fait usage. Elles ne permettent pas de modifications ou d'options qui changeraient la nature globale du marché ou de l'accord-cadre ;

c) lorsque toutes les conditions suivantes sont remplies :

i) la modification est rendue nécessaire par des circonstances qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur diligent ne pouvait pas prévoir ;

e) lorsque les modifications, quelle qu'en soit la valeur, ne sont pas substantielles au sens du paragraphe 4.

4. Une modification d'un marché ou d'un accord-cadre en cours est considérée comme substantielle au sens du paragraphe 1, point e), lorsqu'elle rend le marché ou l'accord-cadre sensiblement différent par nature de celui conclu au départ. En tout état de cause, sans préjudice des paragraphes 1 et 2, une modification est considérée comme substantielle lorsqu'une au moins des conditions suivantes est remplie :

a) elle introduit des conditions qui, si elles avaient été incluses dans la procédure initiale de passation de marché, auraient permis l'admission d'autres candidats que ceux retenus initialement ou l'acceptation d'une offre autre que celle initialement acceptée ou auraient attiré davantage de participants à la procédure de passation de marché ;

b) elle modifie l'équilibre économique du marché ou de l'accord-cadre en faveur du contractant d'une manière qui n'était pas prévue dans le marché ou l'accord-cadre initial ;

5. Une nouvelle procédure de passation de marché conformément à la présente directive est requise pour des modifications des dispositions d'un marché public ou d'un accord-cadre en cours autres que celles prévues aux paragraphes 1 et 2. »

Le droit bulgare

« Outre que pour les motifs visés aux articles 54 et 55, le pouvoir adjudicateur exclut :

1. un candidat ou un soumissionnaire qui ne satisfait pas aux critères de sélection fixés ou ne remplit pas toute autre condition spécifiée dans l'avis de marché, l'invitation à confirmer l'intérêt ou l'invitation à négocier ou dans la documentation ;

[...] »

8 Aux termes de l'article 116 de la loi sur les marchés publics :

« (1) Les contrats d'attribution de marchés publics et les accords-cadres peuvent être modifiés lorsque :

2. en raison de circonstances imprévisibles, il s'avère nécessaire d'effectuer des fournitures, des services ou des travaux supplémentaires non prévus dans le marché initial si le remplacement du contractant :

a) est impossible pour des raisons économiques ou techniques, y compris des exigences d'interchangeabilité ou d'interopérabilité avec les équipements, services ou installations existants imposés par le contrat initial, et

b) entraînerait d'importantes difficultés d'entretien, d'exploitation et de service ou des coûts redondants pour l'agent contractant ;

3. en raison de circonstances que le pouvoir adjudicateur, dans l'exercice de sa diligence, ne pouvait pas prévoir, il est apparu nécessaire de procéder à une modification qui n'entraîne pas un changement de l'objet du contrat ou de l'accord-cadre ;

7. des modifications non substantielles sont nécessaires.

(5) La modification d'un contrat d'attribution de marché public est considérée comme substantielle au sens du paragraphe 1, point 7, lorsqu'une ou plusieurs des conditions suivantes sont remplies :

1. la modification introduit des conditions qui, si elles avaient fait partie de la procédure d'attribution du marché, auraient incité des soumissionnaires ou des candidats supplémentaires à participer, auraient permis l'admission de soumissionnaires ou de candidats autres que ceux initialement sélectionnés, ou auraient conduit à l'acceptation d'une offre différente de celle initialement retenue ;

2. la modification entraîne des avantages pour l'adjudicataire qui n'étaient pas connus des autres participants à la procédure ; »

10 L'article 20a du zakon za zadalzheniyata i dogovorite (loi relative aux obligations et aux contrats, DV n^{o} 275, du 22 novembre 1950) dispose :

« Les contrats tiennent lieu de loi entre les parties contractantes.

Les contrats ne peuvent être modifiés, résiliés, annulés ou révoqués que d'un commun accord entre les parties ou pour des motifs prévus par la loi. »

12 L'article 2, paragraphe 1, annexe 1, point 23, de l'ordonnance relative à l'identification des irrégularités justifiant l'application de corrections financières et aux pourcentages applicables en vue de déterminer le montant des corrections financières dans le cadre de la [loi relative à la gestion des fonds ESI] (DV n^{o} 27, du 31 mars 2017), prévoit :

« Modifications illicites d'un marché public.

Il y a une modification substantielle des éléments du contrat (tels que le prix, la nature de l'ouvrage, le délai d'exécution, les modalités de paiement, les matériaux utilisés) lorsque la modification rend le contrat exécuté substantiellement différent, dans sa nature, de celui initialement conclu. Dans tous les cas, une modification sera considérée comme substantielle lorsqu'une ou plusieurs des conditions énoncées à l'article 116, paragraphe 5, [de la loi sur les marchés publics] sont remplies.

13 L'article 15, paragraphe 1, de la loi sur l'aménagement du littoral de la mer Noire (DV n° 48, du 15 juin 2007), en vigueur depuis le 1er janvier 2008, dispose :

L'affaire C-441/22

14 Le 3 juillet 2018, afin de mettre en œuvre les activités financées par les fonds ESI, la commune de Razgrad, en sa qualité d'entité publique adjudicatrice, a lancé une procédure ouverte d'attribution d'un marché public ayant pour objet la construction d'une salle de sport dans un lycée professionnel de cette commune. Une seule offre a été soumise, à savoir celle émanant de « SAV – Razgrad » OOD.

15 Par contrat du 13 septembre 2018, la commune de Razgrad a attribué le marché public à cette société. En vertu de l'article 5, paragraphes 1 et 2, de ce contrat, la période d'exécution des travaux de construction était de 235 jours et ne pouvait s'étendre au–delà du 30 novembre 2019.

16 En cours d'exécution du marché, le 29 novembre 2019, les parties sont convenues d'un avenant n° 1 au contrat, remplaçant la date initiale du 30 novembre 2019 prévue pour la fin des travaux par celle du 30 janvier 2020. La justification de cette modification avancée par les parties était la survenance de circonstances imprévues donnant lieu à la nécessité d'adapter le projet d'investissement.

17 Au cours de la période d'exécution, six constats de suspension des travaux ont été dressés, dont cinq en raison de conditions météorologiques défavorables et un en raison de la nécessité de remanier le projet d'investissement.

18 Un constat attestant de la conformité de la construction a été établi le 24 février 2020.

19 Après déduction de la durée de la période d'exécution effective de 525 jours, des périodes de suspension des travaux de construction pour lesquelles un constat avait été dûment établi sans être contesté par l'autorité de gestion, un délai d'exécution de 264 jours a été retenu.

20 Pour ce qui concerne la période de retard allant du 30 janvier au 24 février 2020, aucune justification n'a été avancée et le pouvoir adjudicateur n'a pas calculé de pénalités de retard.

accepté par le pouvoir adjudicateur sans remarques et sans pénalité de retard serait constitutif d'une modification illicite des conditions du marché public en cause.

22 La commune de Razgrad a introduit un recours contre cette décision devant l'Administrativen sad – Razgrad (tribunal administratif de Razgrad, Bulgarie). Ce dernier a considéré qu'une modification du contrat d'attribution d'un marché public ne peut être réalisée que moyennant la conclusion d'un accord écrit, ce qui n'avait pas été le cas en l'occurrence s'agissant de la dernière période de retard. Dès lors, un tel cas de figure ne serait pas constitutif d'une modification des conditions du marché, en violation de l'article 116, paragraphe 1, de la loi sur les marchés publics, mais d'une exécution non conforme du contrat d'attribution du marché public. Quand bien même ce dernier aurait-il contenu une clause prévoyant des pénalités de retard, la question de savoir si le pouvoir adjudicateur a réclamé celles-ci à l'adjudicataire serait sans pertinence. L'Administrativen sad – Razgrad (tribunal administratif de Razgrad) a, partant, jugé que le chef de l'autorité de gestion avait considéré à tort que la situation en cause au principal était constitutive d'une modification illicite des conditions du marché, de telle sorte que sa décision en ce sens devait être annulée.

23 Le Varhoven administrativen sad (Cour administrative suprême, Bulgarie), la juridiction de renvoi, est saisi d'un pourvoi en cassation formé par le chef de l'autorité de gestion contre ce jugement.

26 Dans ces conditions, le Varhoven administrativen sad (Cour administrative suprême) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour les questions préjudicielles suivantes :

« 1) L'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec son paragraphe 4, sous a) et b), [s'oppose-t-il] à une réglementation nationale, ou à une jurisprudence nationale portant sur l'interprétation et l'application de cette réglementation, selon laquelle une violation des règles relatives à la modification substantielle du contrat de marché public ne peut être retenue que dans le cas où les parties ont signé un accord écrit/une annexe dont l'objet est la modification du contrat ?

2) En cas de réponse négative à la première question : l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec [l'article 72,] paragraphe 4, sous a) et b), de celle-ci, [s'oppose-t-il] à une réglementation nationale ou à une jurisprudence nationale portant sur l'interprétation et l'application de cette réglementation, selon laquelle une modification illégale des contrats de marchés publics peut avoir lieu non seulement du fait de la signature d'un accord écrit par les parties, mais aussi du fait de leurs agissements conjoints effectués en violation des dispositions relatives à la modification des marchés, ces agissements se manifestant par une communication et des traces écrites établies au cours de cette communication (comme celles du litige au principal), desquelles on peut déduire une volonté commune de procéder à la modification en question ?

3) Des dispositions nationales ou une jurisprudence nationale relative à l'interprétation et à l'application de ces dispositions, en vertu desquelles, dans une situation telle que celle en cause au principal (où les documents de marché fixaient une durée maximale et une date limite pour l'exécution ; le délai constituait également un paramètre dans la méthode d'évaluation des offres ; l'exécution effective du marché a dépassé la durée maximale et la date limite prévue par les documents de marché, en l'absence de circonstances imprévisibles ; le pouvoir adjudicateur a accepté l'exécution sans remarque et n'a pas réclamé de pénalités de retard), l'exécution du marché en violation des termes des documents de marché et du marché lui-même en ce qui concerne les délais, en l'absence de circonstances imprévisibles et sans opposition du pouvoir adjudicateur, doit être interprétée uniquement comme une forme d'exécution non conforme du marché et non comme une modification substantielle illégale du marché en ce qui concerne les délais d'exécution, sont-elles compatibles avec l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec son paragraphe 4, sous a) et b) ? »

27 Le 2 janvier 2019, la commune de Balchik a lancé une procédure ouverte d'attribution d'un marché public dans le cadre de projets financés par les fonds ESI, ayant pour objet l'aménagement de la promenade côtière de cette commune. Deux offres ont été soumises, dont celle émanant de Infra Expert AD.

28 Le marché ayant été attribué à cette dernière, les parties ont signé un contrat en date du 19 avril 2019, déterminant notamment le délai d'exécution conformément à la proposition technique de l'adjudicataire, à savoir à 45 jours calendaires.

30 La durée effective d'exécution du contrat a, de ce fait, été portée à 250 jours. Le pouvoir adjudicateur n'a pas réclamé de dommages-intérêts pour défaut d'exécution dans les délais.

31 S'appuyant notamment sur des motifs analogues à ceux en cause dans l'affaire C-441/22, le chef de l'autorité de gestion a appliqué, par décision du 26 octobre 2020, une correction financière de 25 % à la commune de Balchik au titre des dépenses éligibles aux fonds ESI, au sens de l'article 1er, paragraphe 2, de la loi relative à la gestion des fonds ESI, en raison de la violation de la loi sur les marchés publics. Selon le chef de l'autorité de gestion, conformément à l'article 107, paragraphe 1, de la loi sur les marchés publics, le délai d'exécution des travaux est fixé dans les documents de marché d'une manière et dans des limites qui, si elles ne sont pas respectées, entraînent l'exclusion du soumissionnaire. Compte tenu de la suspension répétée des travaux, alors qu'il s'agissait de conditions météorologiques défavorables habituelles et d'une interdiction réglementaire raisonnablement prévisible, conformément à l'article 116, paragraphe 1, point 3, de cette loi, le chef de l'autorité de gestion a considéré que le dépassement du délai d'exécution initialement convenu était constitutif, dans les faits, d'une modification substantielle du contrat de marché public, en violation de ladite loi.

34 Outre ce qui a déjà été exposé au point 24 du présent arrêt, la juridiction de renvoi estime que la résolution du litige au principal dans l'affaire C-443/22 nécessite que soit précisée la portée des notions de « diligence raisonnable lors de la préparation du marché initial », de « circonstances imprévisibles » et de « circonstances qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur diligent ne pouvait pas prévoir », au sens de la directive 2014/24.

« 1) L'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec [l'article 72,] paragraphe 4, sous a) et b), de celle-ci, [s'oppose-t-il à] une réglementation nationale, ou une jurisprudence nationale portant sur l'interprétation et l'application de cette réglementation, selon laquelle une violation des règles relatives à la modification substantielle du contrat de marché public ne peut être retenue que dans le cas où les parties ont signé un accord écrit/une annexe dont l'objet est la modification du contrat ?

2) En cas de réponse négative à la première question : l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec [l'article 72,] paragraphe 4, sous a) et b), de celle-ci, s'oppose-t-il à une réglementation nationale ou une jurisprudence nationale portant sur l'interprétation et l'application de cette réglementation, selon laquelle une modification illégale des contrats de marchés publics peut avoir lieu non seulement du fait de la signature d'un accord écrit par les parties, mais aussi du fait de leurs agissements conjoints effectués en violation des dispositions relatives à la modification des marchés, ces agissements se manifestant par une communication et des traces écrites établies au cours de cette communication (comme celles du litige au principal), desquelles on peut déduire une concordance de volonté pour procéder à la modification en question ?

3) La notion de "diligence lors de la préparation du marché" – au sens du considérant [109] de la directive 2014/24 – dans la partie de l'offre relative au délai d'exécution des activités, inclut-elle également l'évaluation des risques de conditions météorologiques habituelles qui pourraient nuire à l'exécution du marché public dans le délai, ainsi qu'une évaluation des interdictions réglementaires d'exécution de travaux au cours d'une certaine période qui est incluse dans la période d'exécution du marché ?

4) La notion de "circonstances imprévisibles", au sens de la directive 2014/24, comprend-elle uniquement des circonstances survenues après que le contrat a été conclu (à l'instar de la loi nationale, notamment le paragraphe 2, point 27, des dispositions complémentaires de la loi sur les marchés publics), qui n'ont pas pu être prévues malgré la diligence requise, qui ne sont pas dues à des actes ou omissions des parties mais rendent l'exécution impossible dans le cadre des conditions convenues ? Ou bien la directive [2014/24] n'exige-t-elle pas que ces circonstances soient survenues après la conclusion du contrat ?

5) Des conditions météorologiques habituelles qui ne constituent pas des "circonstances imprévisibles", au sens du considérant [109] de la directive 2014/24, et l'interdiction réglementaire – publiée avant la passation du marché public – d'exécuter des travaux de construction au cours d'une certaine période, constituent-elles une justification objective de l'exécution du contrat en dehors du délai contractuel ? Dans ce contexte, le soumissionnaire est-il tenu, lors du calcul du délai qu'il proposera, d'inclure (avec diligence et bonne foi) dans sa proposition les risques habituels pertinents pour l'exécution du contrat dans les délais ?

6) L'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec [l'article 72,] paragraphe 4, sous a) et b), de celle-ci, [s'oppose-t-il] à une réglementation ou une jurisprudence nationale portant sur l'interprétation et l'application de cette réglementation, selon laquelle une modification illégale d'un contrat de marché public peut intervenir dans une situation telle que celle en cause au principal, dès lors : que l'exécution du marché dans les limites d'un certain délai est une condition de participation à la passation du marché (le non-respect de ces limites entraînant l'exclusion du soumissionnaire) ; que l'exécution du marché dépasse ce délai en raison de conditions météorologiques habituelles et d'une interdiction réglementaire – déjà connue avant la passation du marché – d'effectuer des travaux relevant de l'objet et de la période d'exécution du contrat, ces motifs de dépassement ne constituant pas des circonstances imprévisibles ; que l'exécution du contrat a été acceptée sans aucune réserve relative au délai ; qu'aucune pénalité contractuelle n'a été réclamée au titre du retard ; et que, en conséquence, une condition substantielle figurant dans les documents de marché, et déterminante pour le milieu concurrentiel, a été modifiée et l'équilibre économique a été faussé en faveur du contractant ? »

Sur les questions préjudicielles

Considérations liminaires

Sur l'applicabilité de la directive 2014/24 aux marchés publics en cause au principal 38 Ainsi qu'il découle des demandes de décision préjudicielle, la valeur estimée de chacun des marchés en cause au principal est inférieure au seuil d'applicabilité de la directive 2014/24, fixé à 5 548 000 euros par son article 4, sous a), en ce qui concerne les marchés publics de travaux, de sorte que ces marchés ne relèvent pas du champ d'application de cette directive.

41 Or, il ne ressort pas du dossier dont dispose la Cour que, depuis le prononcé de cet arrêt, le champ d'application de la loi sur les marchés publics aurait été modifié. Au contraire, il ressort des demandes de décision préjudicielle que ladite loi transpose en droit interne l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec l'article 72, paragraphe 4, sous a) et b), de celle-ci, de telle sorte que les règles énoncées à ces dispositions ont été rendues applicables aux marchés publics en cause au principal, qui échappent normalement au champ d'application de cette directive.

42 Dans ces conditions, la valeur estimée de chacun des marchés en cause au principal ne fait pas obstacle à ce que la Cour réponde aux questions préjudicielles.

Sur la recevabilité des troisième à cinquième questions dans l'affaire C-443/22

43 Dans ses observations écrites, la commune de Balchik soutient que les troisième à cinquième questions dans l'affaire C-443/22 sont dénuées de pertinence pour le litige au principal. Selon cette partie, les faits, tels que constatés par la juridiction de renvoi, sont inexacts, dès lors que l'autorité de gestion a défini de manière erronée le délai du contrat. La durée des travaux serait stipulée dans le contrat, mais elle ne serait pas soumise à une exigence de continuité. Il n'y aurait pas eu d'exigence d'exécution pendant une période ou une saison annuelle spécifique.

44 À cet égard, il convient de rappeler la jurisprudence bien établie selon laquelle les questions relatives à l'interprétation du droit de l'Union posées par le juge national dans le cadre réglementaire et factuel qu'il définit sous sa propre responsabilité, et dont il n'appartient pas à la Cour de vérifier l'exactitude, bénéficient d'une présomption de pertinence. Le rejet par la Cour d'une demande formée par une juridiction nationale n'est possible que s'il apparaît de manière manifeste que l'interprétation sollicitée du droit de l'Union n'a aucun rapport avec la réalité ou l'objet du litige au principal, lorsque le problème est de nature hypothétique ou encore lorsque la Cour ne dispose pas des éléments de fait et de droit nécessaires pour répondre de façon utile aux questions qui lui sont posées (arrêt du 12 janvier 2023, Nemzeti Adatvédelmi és Információszabadság Hatóság, C-132/21, EU:C:2023:2, point 24 et jurisprudence citée).

45 Or, il ressort de la demande de décision préjudicielle dans l'affaire C-443/22 que le litige au principal trouve son origine dans le dépassement du délai d'exécution des travaux fixé tant dans les documents de marché que dans le contrat de marché public en cause au principal et que ce délai constituait un critère déterminant lors de l'évaluation des offres, les soumissionnaires dont les propositions étaient supérieures au délai maximum étant exclus de cette procédure. Il ne saurait, dès lors, être considéré que des questions relatives aux circonstances éventuelles dans lesquelles un tel délai peut être dépassé sans nécessiter une nouvelle procédure de passation de marché puissent être considérées comme n'ayant aucun rapport avec la réalité ou l'objet de ce litige ou comme hypothétiques pour les motifs avancés par la commune de Balchik.

Sur la compétence de la Cour pour répondre à la sixième question dans l'affaire C-443/22

47 La commune de Balchik soutient que la sixième question dans l'affaire C-443/22, telle que formulée par la juridiction de renvoi, revient, en substance, à demander à la Cour non pas une question d'interprétation du droit de l'Union, mais à régler directement le litige au principal.

48 Certes, selon une jurisprudence constante, l'article 267 TFUE habilite la Cour non pas à appliquer les règles de droit de l'Union à une espèce déterminée, mais seulement à se prononcer sur l'interprétation des traités et des actes pris par les institutions de l'Union européenne (arrêt du 13 juillet 2017, Ingsteel et Metrostav, C-76/16, EU:C:2017:549, point 25 et jurisprudence citée).

49 Toutefois, il convient de considérer que, par sa sixième question dans l'affaire C-443/22, lue à la lumière des motifs de la demande de décision préjudicielle dans cette affaire, la juridiction de renvoi vise, tout comme par sa troisième question dans l'affaire C-441/22, non pas à ce que la Cour applique elle–même les dispositions de l'article 72 de la directive 2014/24 aux circonstances de l'affaire au principal, mais à interroger la Cour sur le point de savoir si cet article doit être interprété en ce sens qu'une modification du délai d'exécution des travaux convenu dans le contrat conclu à la suite de l'attribution d'un marché public, qui est intervenue postérieurement à cette attribution pour des raisons qui n'ont pas été prévues dans les documents de marché, peut être considérée comme une forme d'exécution non conforme du marché public concerné à laquelle les règles prévues à cet article ne s'appliquent pas, alors qu'une telle modification relève de la notion de « modification substantielle », au sens du paragraphe 4 dudit article.

Sur la prémisse des questions préjudicielles

51 Il y a lieu de rappeler que l'article 72, paragraphes 1 et 2, de la directive 2014/24 énumère les situations dans lesquelles les marchés et les accords-cadres peuvent être modifiés sans qu'il soit pour autant nécessaire de lancer une nouvelle procédure de passation de marché conformément à cette directive. Selon les dispositions du paragraphe 5 de cet article, le lancement d'une nouvelle procédure est requis lorsqu'interviennent des modifications autres que celles visées aux paragraphes 1 et 2 dudit article.

52 Ainsi, conformément à l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), de la directive 2014/24, une nouvelle procédure n'est pas requise lorsque les modifications apportées ne sont pas « substantielles », au sens de l'article 72, paragraphe 4, de cette directive. Selon le libellé même de cette dernière disposition, sans préjudice des paragraphes 1 et 2 de cet article, une modification d'un marché en cours est considérée comme substantielle, en tout état de cause, lorsqu'une au moins des conditions prévues aux points a) à d) de ce paragraphe 4 est remplie.

53 En l'occurrence, il ressort des demandes de décision préjudicielle que les modifications en cause au principal remplissent tant la condition prévue à l'article 72, paragraphe 4, sous a), de la directive 2014/24 – en ce que, si un délai d'exécution plus long, correspondant au délai initial augmenté du dépassement finalement accusé, avait été déterminé d'emblée par le pouvoir adjudicateur concerné au cours de la phase d'attribution du marché, davantage de participants auraient été attirés par celui-ci – que la condition prévue à l'article 72, paragraphe 4, sous b), de cette directive – en ce que ce dépassement a modifié l'équilibre économique du marché en faveur du contractant d'une manière qui n'était pas prévue dans le marché initial.

54 Par conséquent, aux fins de répondre aux questions posées, il convient à la Cour de se fonder sur la prémisse, qu'il incombe en dernier ressort à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier, selon laquelle à tout le moins l'une des conditions prévues à l'article 72, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 est remplie dans chacune des affaires au principal.

55 Par ses premières et deuxièmes questions dans les affaires C-441/22 et C-443/22, qu'il convient d'examiner ensemble, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), et paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que, aux fins de qualifier une modification d'un contrat de marché public de « substantielle », au sens de cette disposition, les parties au contrat doivent avoir signé un accord écrit ayant pour objet cette modification ou s'il suffit qu'existent d'autres éléments écrits émanant de ces parties et établissant une volonté commune de procéder à ladite modification.

57 La juridiction de renvoi s'interroge ainsi sur le point de savoir si l'absence d'accord écrit portant modification du délai d'exécution des travaux tel que fixé dans le contrat initial de marché public fait obstacle à ce que la prolongation de fait de ce délai résultant de retards dans l'exécution de ces travaux soit considérée comme constituant une modification « substantielle » du marché concerné, au sens de l'article 72, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24.

58 À cet égard, il est vrai que l'article 2, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2014/24 définit, d'une part, à son point 5, un « marché public » comme étant un contrat à titre onéreux conclu par écrit entre un ou plusieurs opérateurs économiques et un ou plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs et, d'autre part, à son point 18, les termes « écrit(e) » ou « par écrit » comme visant tout ensemble de mots ou de chiffres qui peut être lu, reproduit, puis communiqué, y compris les informations transmises et stockées par un moyen électronique. Par ailleurs, le considérant 58 de la directive 2014/24 énonce, en particulier, que, si les aspects essentiels d'une procédure de passation de marché tels que les documents de marché, les demandes de participation, les confirmations d'intérêt et les offres doivent toujours revêtir une forme écrite, il devrait néanmoins rester possible de communiquer oralement avec les opérateurs économiques, pour autant que le contenu de ces communications soit consigné d'une manière suffisante.

59 En revanche, l'article 72 de la directive 2014/24 ne prévoit pas, s'agissant d'une modification d'un contrat de marché en cours d'exécution, qu'une telle modification ne pourrait être qualifiée de

60 Cette interprétation de l'article 72 de la directive 2014/24 est corroborée par les objectifs poursuivis par cette disposition et le contexte dans lequel celle-ci s'inscrit.

61 En particulier, en encadrant les conditions dans lesquelles les marchés publics en cours peuvent être modifiés, l'article 72 de la directive 2014/24 vise à assurer le respect des principes de transparence des procédures et d'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires. En effet, ces principes font obstacle à ce que, après l'attribution d'un marché public, le pouvoir adjudicateur et l'adjudicataire apportent aux dispositions de ce marché des modifications telles que ces dispositions présenteraient des caractéristiques substantiellement différentes de celles du marché initial (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 13 avril 2010, Wall, C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182, point 37 et jurisprudence citée, ainsi que du 3 février 2022, Advania Sverige et Kammarkollegiet, C-461/20, EU:C:2022:72, point 19 ainsi que jurisprudence citée). Le respect de ces principes s'inscrit, à son tour, dans l'objectif plus général des règles de l'Union en matière de marchés publics consistant à assurer la libre circulation des services et l'ouverture à la concurrence non faussée dans tous les États membres (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 19 juin 2008, pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351, points 31 et 32 ainsi que jurisprudence citée ; du 13 avril 2010, Wall, C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182, point 37 et jurisprudence citée, ainsi que du 12 mai 2022, Comune di Lerici, C-719/20, EU:C:2022:372, point 42 et jurisprudence citée).

62 Or, ainsi que l'ont fait valoir, en substance, les gouvernements tchèque et estonien ainsi que la Commission européenne dans leurs observations écrites, afin de garantir l'effet utile des règles prévues à l'article 72 de la directive 2014/24 et, partant, le respect des principes que cette disposition vise à assurer, la qualification d'une modification d'un marché public en tant que « modification substantielle » de celui–ci ne saurait dépendre de l'existence d'un accord écrit signé par les parties au contrat de marché public et ayant pour objet une telle modification. En effet, une interprétation selon laquelle la constatation d'une modification substantielle serait conditionnée par l'existence d'un tel accord écrit faciliterait le contournement des règles relatives à la modification de marchés en cours, prévues à ladite disposition, en permettant aux parties au contrat de marché public de modifier, à leur gré, les conditions d'exécution de ce contrat, alors que ces conditions auraient été énoncées de manière transparente dans les documents de marchés publics et étaient censées s'appliquer de manière égale à tous les soumissionnaires potentiels afin de garantir une concurrence équitable et non faussée sur le marché.

65 Par conséquent, il convient de répondre aux premières et deuxièmes questions dans les affaires C-441/22 et C-443/22 que l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), et paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que, aux fins de qualifier une modification d'un contrat de marché public de « substantielle », au sens de cette disposition, les parties au contrat ne doivent pas avoir signé un accord écrit ayant pour objet cette modification, une volonté commune de procéder à la modification en question pouvant également être déduite, notamment, d'autres éléments écrits émanant de ces parties.

66 Par ses troisième à cinquième questions dans l'affaire C-443/22, qu'il convient d'examiner ensemble, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous c), i), de la directive

2014/24, lu à la lumière du considérant 109 de celle–ci, doit être interprété en ce sens que la diligence dont doit avoir fait preuve le pouvoir adjudicateur pour pouvoir se prévaloir de cette disposition exige notamment que celui-ci ait pris en considération, lors de la préparation du marché public concerné, les risques que font peser sur le respect du délai d'exécution de ce marché les conditions météorologiques habituelles ainsi que des interdictions réglementaires d'exécution de travaux publiées à l'avance et applicables durant une période incluse dans la période d'exécution dudit marché. Cette juridiction demande, en outre, d'une part, si les « circonstances qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur diligent ne pouvait pas prévoir », au sens de ladite disposition, comprennent uniquement celles survenues après l'attribution du marché en question et, d'autre part, si, même dans le cas où de telles conditions météorologiques et interdictions réglementaires devaient être considérées comme prévisibles, elles constitueraient néanmoins une justification objective de l'exécution du contrat au-delà du délai fixé dans les documents qui régissent la procédure d'attribution et dans le contrat initial de marché public.

67 À cet égard, il y a lieu de rappeler que, conformément à l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous c), i), de la directive 2014/24, il est possible de modifier un marché sans nouvelle procédure de passation de marché lorsque « la modification est rendue nécessaire par des circonstances qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur diligent ne pouvait pas prévoir » et que certaines autres conditions prévues à ce paragraphe 1 sont également remplies, lesquelles ne font pas l'objet des questions posées dans les présentes affaires.

71 En outre, lorsqu'il existe des circonstances qui sont prévisibles pour un pouvoir adjudicateur diligent, il peut se prévaloir de la possibilité, conformément à l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous a), de la directive 2014/24, de prévoir expressément dans les documents qui régissent la procédure d'attribution et dans le contrat initial de marché public des clauses de réexamen en vertu desquelles les conditions d'exécution de ce contrat pourront être adaptées, en cas de survenance de telle ou telle circonstance spécifique, ce qui permet d'apporter des modifications qui autrement nécessiteraient une nouvelle procédure de passation de marché au titre de cet article 72. En effet, en prévoyant explicitement la faculté de modifier ces conditions et en fixant les modalités d'application de celle-ci dans lesdits documents, le pouvoir adjudicateur garantit que tous les opérateurs économiques souhaitant participer audit marché en aient connaissance dès le départ et soient ainsi sur un pied d'égalité au moment de formuler leur offre (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 29 avril 2004, Commission/CAS Succhi di Frutta, C-496/99 P, EU:C:2004:236, point 118, et du 7 septembre 2016, Finn Frogne, C-549/14, EU:C:2016:634, points 30, 36 et 37).

public concerné, il n'est pas nécessaire de répondre à la question de savoir si la notion de « circonstances qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur diligent ne pouvait pas prévoir », au sens de l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous c), i), de la directive 2014/24, lu à la lumière du considérant 109 de celle-ci, vise uniquement des circonstances survenues après la conclusion du contrat.

73 Eu égard à l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent, il y a lieu de répondre aux troisième à cinquième questions dans l'affaire C-443/22 que l'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous c), i), de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que la diligence dont doit avoir fait preuve le pouvoir adjudicateur pour pouvoir se prévaloir de cette disposition exige notamment que celui-ci ait pris en considération, lors de la préparation du marché public concerné, les risques de dépassement du délai d'exécution de ce marché induits par des causes de suspension prévisibles, telles que les conditions météorologiques habituelles ainsi que les interdictions réglementaires d'exécution de travaux publiées à l'avance et applicables durant une période incluse dans la période d'exécution dudit marché, de telles conditions météorologiques et interdictions réglementaires ne pouvant justifier, lorsqu'elles n'ont pas été prévues dans les documents qui régissent la procédure d'attribution de marché public, l'exécution des travaux au-delà du délai fixé dans ces documents ainsi que dans le contrat initial de marché public.

Sur la troisième question dans l'affaire C-441/22 et la sixième question dans l'affaire C-443/22

74 Eu égard aux réponses apportées aux première et deuxième questions dans l'affaire C-441/22 et aux première à cinquième questions dans l'affaire C-443/22, il n'y a pas lieu de répondre à la troisième question dans l'affaire C-441/22 et à la sixième question dans l'affaire C-443/22.

Sur les dépens

75 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens. Les frais exposés pour soumettre des observations à la Cour, autres que ceux desdites parties, ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un remboursement.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (dixième chambre) dit pour droit :

1) L'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous e), et paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE, telle que modifiée par le règlement délégué (UE) 2017/2365 de la Commission, du 18 décembre 2017,

doit être interprété en ce sens que :

aux fins de qualifier une modification d'un contrat de marché public de « substantielle », au sens de cette disposition, les parties au contrat ne doivent pas avoir signé un accord écrit ayant pour objet cette modification, une volonté commune de procéder à la modification en question pouvant également être déduite, notamment, d'autres éléments écrits émanant de ces parties.

2) L'article 72, paragraphe 1, sous c), i), de la directive 2014/24, telle que modifiée par le règlement délégué 2017/2365,

doit être interprété en ce sens que :

la diligence dont doit avoir fait preuve le pouvoir adjudicateur pour pouvoir se prévaloir de cette disposition exige notamment que celui-ci ait pris en considération, lors de la préparation du marché public concerné, les risques de dépassement du délai d'exécution de ce marché induits par des causes de suspension prévisibles, telles que les conditions météorologiques habituelles ainsi que les interdictions réglementaires d'exécution de travaux publiées à l'avance et applicables durant une période incluse dans la période d'exécution dudit marché, de telles conditions météorologiques et interdictions réglementaires ne pouvant justifier, lorsqu'elles n'ont pas été prévues dans les documents qui régissent la procédure d'attribution de marché public, l'exécution des travaux au-delà du délai fixé dans ces documents ainsi que dans le contrat initial de marché public.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 2(3) and Article 2a(2) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1) (‘Directive 89/665’), and of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (‘the Charter’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between CROSS Zlín a.s. and the Úřad pro ochranu hospodářské soutěže (Office for the Protection of Competition, Czech Republic) (‘the Office’) concerning the confirmation, by the President of the Office, of the rejection of CROSS Zlín’s action against the decision of the Statutární město Brno (City of Brno, Czech Republic) to exclude that company from a tender procedure for the award of a public contract relating to the expansion of the functions of the traffic control centre (concerning the traffic light system) of that city.

Legal context

3 The fifth recital of Directive 89/665 is worded as follows:

‘… since procedures for the award of public contracts are of such short duration, competent review bodies must, among other things, be authorised to take interim measures aimed at suspending such a procedure or the implementation of any decisions which may be taken by the contracting authority; whereas the short duration of the procedures means that the aforementioned infringements need to be dealt with urgently’.

4 Recitals 3, 4 and 36 of Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665/EEC and 92/13/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) state:

‘(3) Consultations of the interested parties and the case-law of the Court of Justice have revealed a certain number of weaknesses in the review mechanisms in the Member States. As a result of these weaknesses, the mechanisms established by [Directive] 89/665/EEC and [Council Directive] 92/13/EEC [of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14)] do not always make it possible to ensure compliance with Community law, especially at a time when infringements can still be corrected. Consequently, the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination sought by those Directives should be strengthened to ensure that the Community as a whole fully benefit from the positive effects of the modernisation and simplification of the rules on public procurement achieved by Directives 2004/18/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)] and 2004/17/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1)]. …

(4) The weaknesses which were noted include in particular the absence of a period allowing an effective review between the decision to award a contract and the conclusion of the contract in question. This sometimes results in contracting authorities and contracting entities who wish to make irreversible the consequences of the disputed award decision proceeding very quickly to the signature of the contract. In order to remedy this weakness, which is a serious obstacle to effective judicial protection for the tenderers concerned, namely those tenderers who have not yet been definitively excluded, it is necessary to provide for a minimum standstill period during which the conclusion of the contract in question is suspended, irrespective of whether conclusion occurs at the time of signature of the contract or not.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65)] or Directive 2014/23/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1)], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

5. Member States may require that the person concerned first seek review with the contracting authority. In that case, Member States shall ensure that the submission of such an application for review results in immediate suspension of the possibility to conclude the contract.

The suspension referred to in the first subparagraph shall not end before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting authority has sent a reply if fax or electronic means are used, or, if other means of communication are used, before the expiry of either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting authority has sent a reply, or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of a reply.'

6 Article 2 of Directive 89/665, entitled 'Requirements for review procedures', states:

'1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

2. The powers specified in paragraph 1 and Articles 2d and 2e may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

3. When a body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting authority, reviews a contract award decision, Member States shall ensure that the contracting authority cannot conclude the contract before the review body has made a decision on the application either for interim measures or for review. The suspension shall end no earlier than the expiry of the standstill period referred to in Article 2a(2) and Article 2d(4) and (5).

4. Except where provided for in paragraph 3 and Article 1(5), review procedures need not necessarily have an automatic suspensive effect on the contract award procedures to which they relate.

5. Member States may provide that the body responsible for review procedures may take into account the probable consequences of interim measures for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to grant such measures when their negative consequences could exceed their benefits.

A decision not to grant interim measures shall not prejudice any other claim of the person seeking such measures.

6. Member States may provide that where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract in accordance with Article 1(5), paragraph 3 of this Article or Articles 2a to 2f, the powers of the body responsible for review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

9. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article [267 TFEU] and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

7 Under Article 2a of the directive, entitled ‘Standstill period’:

‘1. The Member States shall ensure that the persons referred to in Article 1(3) have sufficient time for effective review of the contract award decisions taken by contracting authorities, by adopting the necessary provisions respecting the minimum conditions set out in paragraph 2 of this Article and in Article 2c.

2. A contract may not be concluded following the decision to award a contract falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] or Directive [2014/23] before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned if fax or electronic means are used or, if other means of communication are used, before the expiry of a period of either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of the contract award decision.

Tenderers shall be deemed to be concerned if they have not yet been definitively excluded. An exclusion is definitive if it has been notified to the tenderers concerned and has either been considered lawful by an independent review body or can no longer be subject to a review procedure.

The communication of the award decision to each tenderer and candidate concerned shall be accompanied by the following:

– a summary of the relevant reasons …, and – a precise statement of the exact standstill period applicable pursuant to the provisions of national law transposing this paragraph.'

8 Article 2d of Directive 89/665, entitled 'Ineffectiveness', provides:

'1. Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

(b) in case of an infringement of Article 1(5), Article 2(3) or Article 2a(2) of this Directive, if this infringement has deprived the tenderer applying for review of the possibility to pursue pre-contractual remedies where such an infringement is combined with an infringement of Directive [2014/24] or Directive [2014/23], if that infringement has affected the chances of the tenderer applying for a review to obtain the contract;

2. The consequences of a contract being considered ineffective shall be provided for by national law.

National law may provide for the retroactive cancellation of all contractual obligations or limit the scope of the cancellation to those obligations which still have to be performed. In the latter case, Member States shall provide for the application of other penalties within the meaning of Article 2e(2).'

Czech law

9 It is apparent from Paragraphs 241 and 242 of Zákon č. 134/2016 Sb., o zadávání veřejných zakázek (Law No 134/2016 on the award of public contracts), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings ('Law No 134/2016'), that an objection against the procedure carried out by the contracting authority may be lodged within 15 days of the date on which the complainant learns of a breach of law by the contracting authority.

10 Under Paragraph 245(1) of that law, the contracting authority is to send a decision on the objection to the complainant within 15 days of service of that objection, stating whether it upholds the objection or rejects it. That decision must include reasoning in which the contracting authority makes a detailed and comprehensible statement concerning all the facts set out in the complainant's objection. If the contracting authority upholds the objection, it is also to state in its decision what remedial measures it will take.

11 According to Paragraph 245(4) of that law, if the contracting authority rejects the objection, it is to inform the complainant, in the decision on the objection, about the possibility of submitting to the Office, within the period laid down in Paragraph 251(2) of that law, an application for the initiation of proceedings to review the actions of the contracting authority and about the obligation to deliver a copy of that application to the contracting authority within the same period.

12 Paragraph 246(1) of Law No 134/2016 provides that the contracting authority may not conclude a contract with a supplier:

'(a) before the expiry of the time limit for lodging an objection against a decision to exclude a tenderer from a tendering procedure, to select a supplier, or against an act of voluntary notification of an intention to conclude a contract;

(b) until delivery to the complainant of a decision on an objection, if an objection has been lodged;

(c) before the expiry of the time limit for submitting an application for the initiation of proceedings to review the actions of the contracting authority, if the latter has rejected the objection that was lodged;

(d) within 60 days of the initiation of proceedings to review the actions of the contracting authority, if the application for initiation of such proceedings was lodged within the time limit. However, the contracting authority may conclude the contract, even within that period, if the Office has dismissed that application or if the administrative proceedings concerning that application have been closed and that decision of dismissal or to close the proceedings has become final in those administrative proceedings.’

13 Under Paragraph 246(2) of that law, the contracting authority may likewise not conclude a contract with a supplier within 60 days of the date of initiation of the proceedings to review the actions of the contracting authority if the Office initiates those proceedings of its own motion. The contracting authority may, however, conclude a contract, even within that period, if the administrative proceedings have been closed and such a decision has become final in those administrative proceedings.

14 In accordance with Paragraph 254(1) of that law, an application to impose a prohibition on the performance of a public contract may be made by an applicant who claims that the contracting authority has concluded the contract, inter alia, without prior publication, despite a prohibition on its conclusion laid down by that law or by an interim measure, or on the basis of a procedure other than the tendering procedure.

15 Paragraph 257(j) of Law No 134/2016 provides that the Office is to close the proceedings by means of an order where the contracting authority has concluded, during the administrative proceedings, an agreement for the performance of the contract which is the subject matter of the review.

16 Paragraph 264(1) of that law provides that the Office, in proceedings based on an application pursuant to Paragraph 254 of that law, is to impose a prohibition in respect of the performance of a contract on a contracting authority if the public contract or framework agreement was concluded in the manner referred to in Paragraph 254(1). A contract in respect of which the Office has imposed a prohibition on performance, without proceeding pursuant to subparagraph 3, is to be void ab initio. In accordance with Paragraph 264(2), an agreement for the performance of a public contract is to become void for infringement of that law only in cases where the Office imposes a prohibition on performance of that contract pursuant to Paragraph 264(1).

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

17 On 27 September 2019, the City of Brno launched a procedure for the award of a public contract for the expansion of the functions of the traffic control centre (concerning the traffic light system) of that city. The estimated value of that public contract was 13 805 000 Czech koruny (CZK), excluding value added tax (VAT) (approximately EUR 560 000).

18 As contracting authority, the City of Brno received two bids, one from CROSS Zlín, the lowest, and one from Siemens Mobility, s.r.o. By a notice of 6 April 2020, that contracting authority excluded CROSS Zlín due to failure to meet the tender conditions. On 7 April 2020, the contract was awarded to Siemens Mobility.

19 Cross Zlín lodged an objection to the notice of exclusion, which the contracting authority dismissed by decision of 4 May 2020. That company subsequently lodged an application with the Office for review of the contracting authority’s actions, seeking annulment of the notice of exclusion and of the decision to award the contract in question to Siemens Mobility.

20 During the administrative proceedings before it, the Office adopted of its own motion, on 3 July 2020, an interim measure prohibiting the contracting authority from concluding the public contract at issue until those administrative proceedings had been closed with final effect.

21 By a decision of 5 August 2020, the Office dismissed CROSS Zlín's application. The latter then lodged an administrative appeal against that decision, which the President of the Office, as second-instance administrative body, dismissed by decision of 9 November 2020. On 18 November 2020, the contracting authority concluded the public contract in question with Siemens Mobility.

22 On 13 January 2021, CROSS Zlín brought an action before the Krajský soud v Brně (Regional Court, Brno, Czech Republic), the referring court, against that decision of the President of the Office. In parallel to that action, CROSS Zlín lodged an application for the action to be recognised as having suspensive effect in relation to conclusion of the contract and for the adoption of an interim measure prohibiting the contracting authority from concluding or performing that public contract.

23 On 11 February 2021, that court dismissed the application on the ground, in essence, that where a public contract has already been entered into, it is not appropriate to prohibit the contracting authority concerned from concluding that contract. As Czech law currently stands, even if such a judicial action were upheld and the contested decision annulled, with referral of the case back to the Office, the latter would close the proceedings on the basis of Paragraph 257(j) of Law No 134/2016, without assessing the case on the merits.

24 That court also declined to prohibit the contracting authority from performing the contract since Czech legislation does not preclude the conclusion of a public contract after the decision of the President of the Office has become final in the framework of the administrative proceedings.

25 In that context, the referring court questions whether Directive 89/665 and the requirement to ensure effective judicial review deriving from Article 47 of the Charter preclude legislation of a Member State which enables a contracting authority to conclude a public contract before expiry of the period prescribed for bringing a judicial action against the decision of the second-instance administrative body or before the court hearing the case can rule on an application seeking the adoption of an interim measure prohibiting the contracting authority in question from concluding that contract until the ruling on that action has become final.

26 It is apparent from the case-law of the Czech courts that if a public contract has been concluded before the court hearing the case has ruled on such an action or application, that court no longer makes a ruling on interim measures, given that, in such a case, it is no longer necessary to regulate the situation of the parties on an interim basis.

27 Accordingly, were the court hearing the case to find that the Office had erred in its assessment of the lawfulness of excluding the tenderer concerned, it would have to annul as unlawful the decision of the President of the Office, referred to in paragraph 21 above, and refer the case back to that administrative authority. In that case, if the public contract at issue was concluded before that court gives its decision, the Office, once the case has been referred back to it, will not carry out a fresh examination of the merits of the application for review of the actions of the contracting authority in accordance with the findings of that court and will close the proceedings on the basis of Paragraph 257(j) of Law No 134/2016.

28 In such a situation, the excluded tenderer would only be able to turn to the civil courts in a claim for compensation for the damage caused by the contracting authority's unlawful conduct; however, according to the referring court, the conditions for obtaining such compensation are difficult to satisfy.

29 That court adds that, under Czech legislation, the Office is a 'review body' within the meaning of Directive 89/665. In that regard, Paragraph 246 of Law No 134/2016 lays down the time limits during which the contracting authority is prohibited from concluding a contract during the proceedings before the Office. However, that latter body cannot be considered to be a court or tribunal.

30 Consequently, if, as is apparent from the judgment of 21 December 2021, Randstad Italia (C-497/20, EU:C:2021:1037, paragraph 73), it should be held that the independent review body, under Article 2(3) or Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665, must be a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 47 of the Charter, the Czech legislation which allows a public contract to be concluded immediately after the decision of the President of the Office infringes that directive and does not ensure an effective judicial review for tenderers excluded from a public procurement procedure.

31 Lastly, were the Court to find that Directive 89/665 has not been transposed properly into the Czech legal order, the referring court considers that it would be required, where a finding is made that the decision of the contracting authority is unlawful, to oblige the Office to disapply the provisions of Czech law giving rise to such an infringement of that directive.

32 In those circumstances the Krajský soud v Brně (Regional Court, Brno) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Is it compatible with [Article] 2(3) and [Article] 2a(2) of Directive [89/665], interpreted in the light of Article 47 of [the Charter], for Czech legislation to permit a contracting authority to conclude a public contract before an action is brought before a court competent to review the legality of a second-instance decision of the [Office] to exclude a tenderer?’

The application to reopen the oral part of the procedure

33 Following the delivery of the Opinion of the Advocate General, CROSS Zlín, by document lodged at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 19 September 2023, requested that the Court order the oral part of the procedure to be reopened, pursuant to Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice.

34 In support of its request, CROSS Zlín argues that there is a risk, having regard to the Advocate General’s Opinion, that the case may be decided on the basis of an argument which has not been debated between the parties or the interested persons referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union. The Czech legal order does not allow an administrative court, either in fact or in law, to annul a contract, even if it was entered into on the basis of an unlawful decision by the contracting authority. The Opinion does not take account of that factor, which CROSS Zlín would aim to explain in a reopening of the oral procedure.

35 In addition, it states that it wishes in particular to address before the Court the reason why the Krajský soud v Brně (Regional Court, Brno) dismissed its application for the adoption of an interim measure intended to prohibit the performance of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings; the jurisdiction of the Czech administrative courts to rule on the validity of contracts concluded in a tender procedure in connection with the decisions given at first instance by the Office; and the actual effects of the annulment of a decision of the Office by an administrative court and their consequences for the agreement contract for the performance of a public contract that has already been concluded. In that regard, it suggests making additions to the answer which the Advocate General proposed to give to the question referred for a preliminary ruling.

36 It should be observed that, under the second paragraph of Article 252 TFEU, it is the duty of the Advocate General, acting with complete impartiality and independence, to make, in open court, reasoned submissions on cases which, in accordance with the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union, require his or her involvement. The Court is not bound either by the Advocate General’s Opinion or by the reasoning on which it is based (judgment of 28 September 2023, LACD, C-133/22, EU:C:2023:710, paragraph 22 and the case-law cited).

37 It should also be borne in mind that neither the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union nor the Rules of Procedure make provision for the interested parties to respond to an Advocate General’s Opinion. As a consequence, the fact that a party to the main proceedings or an interested party disagrees with the Advocate General’s Opinion, irrespective of the questions examined in the Opinion, cannot in itself constitute grounds justifying the reopening of the oral procedure (judgments of 28 May 2020, Interseroh, C-654/18, EU:C:2020:398, paragraph 33, and of 9 November 2023, Všeobecná úverová banka, C-598/21, EU:C:2023:845, paragraph 50).

38 CROSS Zlín cannot therefore validly justify its request to reopen the oral part of the procedure by suggesting additions to the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling proposed by the Advocate General in his Opinion.

39 In addition, it is true that pursuant to Article 83 of its Rules of Procedure, the Court may at any time, after hearing the Advocate General, order the reopening of the oral part of the procedure, in particular if it considers that it lacks sufficient information or where a party has, after the close of that part of the procedure, submitted a new fact which is of such a nature as to be a decisive factor for the decision of the Court, or where the case must be decided on the basis of an argument which has not been debated between the parties or the interested persons referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

40 However, CROSS Zlín and the interested parties who participated in the present proceedings have been able to set out, during both the written and oral stages of the procedure, the matters of law which they considered relevant to enable the Court to interpret Directive 89/665, in order to answer the question referred by the referring court. In that respect, the Court considers that it has all the information necessary to rule on the present request for a preliminary ruling and that none of the factors raised by CROSS Zlín in support of its request to reopen the oral part of the procedure justifies such a reopening on the basis of Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure.

41 In those circumstances, the Court considers, after hearing the Advocate General, that there is no need to order that the oral part of the procedure be reopened.

42 It should be noted as a preliminary point that, according to settled case-law, it is for the Court, in the procedure laid down by Article 267 TFEU providing for cooperation with national courts, to provide the referring court with an answer which will be of use to it and enable it to decide the case before it and, to that end, the Court should, where necessary, reformulate the questions referred to it (judgment of 5 May 2022, Universiteit Antwerpen and Others, C-265/20, EU:C:2022:361, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

43 The wording of the question refers, inter alia, to an interpretation of Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665 in relation to a Member State's legislation that enables the contracting authority to conclude a public procurement contract before the judicial body with jurisdiction is able to review the legality of a decision by the contracting authority to exclude a tenderer from that contract.

44 However, it should be observed that Article 2(3) does not refer to review of a decision to exclude a tenderer from the contract concerned, but review of a decision to award that contract. Accordingly, since it is apparent from the information in the request for a preliminary ruling that CROSS Zlín sought to have the Office annul not only the notice concerning its exclusion, but also the decision to award the public contract at issue in the main proceedings to the other tenderer, Siemens Mobility, it is necessary to examine the present request for a preliminary ruling with respect solely to that award decision.

45 In those circumstances, it must be held that, by its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 2(3) and Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State which prohibits a contracting authority from concluding a public contract only until the date on which the body of first instance, within the meaning of Article 2(3), which, in that Member State, is not judicial in character, rules on the review of the decision to award that contract.

46 It should be observed at the outset that Directive 89/665 contains detailed provisions laying down a coherent system of review procedures in the field of public contracts which must, in accordance with Article 1(3) of that directive, be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

47 In that regard, it should be observed in the first place that, according to Article 2a(1) of Directive 89/665, Member States are to ensure that the persons referred to in Article 1(3) of that directive have sufficient time for effective review of the contract award decisions taken by contracting authorities, by adopting the necessary provisions respecting the minimum conditions set out, inter alia, in Article 2a(2).

48 The latter provision lays down the minimum standstill periods during which it is not permitted to conclude the public contract following the decision to award it. Those periods, depending on the circumstances, are 10 or 15 calendar days, with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision in question was sent to the tenderers concerned or received by them, depending on the method of sending that decision.

49 Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665 thus establishes automatic standstill periods in relation to the conclusion of a public contract in order to ensure the effectiveness of the review of such an award decision which may be sought by the persons referred to in Article 1(3) of that directive.

50 In the second place, when those persons apply for such a review, Article 2(3) of that directive applies.

51 In accordance with settled case-law, when interpreting a provision of EU law, account must be taken not only of its wording but also of its context and the objectives pursued by the rules of which it forms part (judgment of 22 December 2022, Sambre & Biesme and Commune de Farciennes, C-383/21 and C-384/21, EU:C:2022:1022, paragraph 54 and the case-law cited).

52 In that regard, it is apparent, first of all, from the wording of Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665 that when a body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting authority, reviews a contract award decision, the contracting authority may not conclude that contract before that body of first instance has made a decision on the application either for interim measures or for that review.

53 Accordingly, first, that provision lays down that an application for review of the decision to award a public contract has suspensive effect, with regard to the signing of the contract, during the procedure before the first-instance body carrying out that review or, at the very least, until that body has ruled on any application for interim measures. Second, even though that provision requires the body in question to be independent of the contracting authority, it does not contain any indication to show that that body should be judicial in character.

54 As regards, next, the context of Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665, Article 2(9) explicitly foresees a situation where ‘bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character’, from which it follows that the Member States are able to confer on such bodies the power to hear and determine reviews of decisions to award a public contract. In such cases, Article 2(9) states that any allegedly illegal measure taken by such a review body which is not judicial in character or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it must be capable of being the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, which is independent of both the contracting authority and of that non-judicial review body that ruled at first instance.

55 Article 2(9) thus allows Member States to choose between two options in organising review procedures for public contracts. The first option consists in vesting the power to determine reviews in judicial bodies. Under the second option, that power is, initially, granted to bodies that are not judicial in character. In such circumstances, all the decisions taken by those bodies must be amenable to judicial review or to a review which should, in essence, be ‘judicial’ for the purposes of EU law, which makes it possible to ensure that an adequate remedy is available (see, to that effect, judgment of 4 March 1999, HI, C-258/97, EU:C:1999:118, paragraphs 16 and 17).

56 However, it must be observed that Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665, in laying down an obligation to suspend the conclusion of a public contract, does not make any reference to the judicial review, provided for in Article 2(9) of that directive, of the decisions by the bodies responsible for review procedures which are not judicial in character.

57 In those circumstances, both that lack of reference and the choice afforded to Member States by Article 2(9) of Directive 89/665 to grant jurisdiction to determine procedures for the review of decisions awarding a contract to first-instance bodies that are either judicial or non-judicial in character mean that, when a Member State decides to confer that power on a body of first instance which is not judicial in character, the words ‘review body’ in Article 2(3) refer to that non-judicial body of first instance. In such circumstances, the Member States must provide for suspension of the conclusion of the public contract concerned, either automatically until that body has ruled on the review or, at the very least, until it has decided on an application for interim measures seeking such a suspension.

58 By contrast, Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 2(9) thereof, does not require that that suspension should remain in place after the end of the procedure before such a non-judicial review body, for example until a body that is judicial in character has ruled on the action that may be brought against the decision of that non-judicial review body.

59 Lastly, that finding is consistent with the objectives pursued by Directive 89/665. That directive is intended to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, enshrined in the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 128 and the case-law cited).

60 In that regard, it has been held that Article 1(1) and (3) of that directive, which is intended to protect economic operators against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority, is thus designed to reinforce the existence, in all Member States, of effective remedies, which are as rapid as possible, so as to ensure the effective application of the EU rules on public procurement, in particular at a stage when infringements can still be rectified (judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 127 and the case-law cited).

61 That said, it should also be observed that the EU legislature sought, by the provisions of Directive 89/665, to accommodate the interests of the tenderer adversely affected and the interests of the contracting authority and of the successful tenderer (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 September 2014, Fastweb, C-19/13, EU:C:2014:2194, paragraph 63, and order of 23 April 2015, Commission v Vanbreda Risk & Benefits, C-35/15 P(R), EU:C:2015:275, paragraph 34).

62 Accordingly, first, Article 2(5) of that directive provides that the body responsible for review procedures may take into account the probable consequences of interim measures for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to grant such interim measures when their negative consequences could exceed their benefits. The interest in the conclusion of public contracts without excessive delay constitutes such a public interest.

63 Second, the second subparagraph of Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665 states provides that a Member State may provide that, where a contract has been concluded in accordance with Article 2(3), that is to say, that it has been entered into after the end of the standstill on its conclusion, the powers of the body responsible for review procedures are to be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement of EU law on public procurement or of national rules implementing that law.

64 Those factors therefore support an interpretation, which arises from reading Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665 in the light of Article 2(9), to the effect that the suspension of the conclusion of a public contract, provided for in Article 2(3), is to remain in place, at the latest, until the date on which the body of first instance rules on an application for review of the decision to award that contract, whether that body is of a judicial character or not. Member States may provide that after that body has delivered its decision a party that has suffered harm may only claim damages.

65 In the third place, that interpretation cannot be called into question by the judgment of 21 December 2021, Randstad Italia (C-497/20, EU:C:2021:1037). In paragraph 73 of that judgment, the Court interpreted the expression ‘independent review body’, within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665, as referring to an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law, within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter. However, the Court expressly limited that latter interpretation, stating that it applied ‘[for] determining whether the exclusion of a tenderer has become definitive’ for the purposes of that second subparagraph of Article 2a(2).

66 In that regard, the Court stated, in paragraph 74 of that judgment, that the fact that the exclusion decision is not yet definitive determines, for tenderers, their standing to challenge the contract award decision. In paragraph 75 of that judgment, it specified that ‘only the definitive exclusion, within the meaning of [the second subparagraph of] Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665, can have the effect of depriving a tenderer of standing to challenge the [contract] award decision'.

67 It may thus happen that a decision by the 'independent review body' referred to in the second subparagraph of Article 2a(2) leads to a tenderer being deprived of standing to challenge a contract award decision. In that context, observance of the right of such a tenderer to effective judicial protection requires that the body ruling on the lawfulness of the exclusion of that tenderer be an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law, within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter.

68 However, those considerations do not apply with respect to the review body of first instance referred to in Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665. Where a Member State makes use of the possibility afforded to it by that directive in order to put in place such a body that is not judicial in character, the right to effective judicial protection is ensured by the requirement, laid down in Article 2(9), that all the decisions of such a non-judicial review body can be the subject of judicial review.

69 In the fourth and last place, it is important, however, to observe, as the European Commission has done, that where the legislation of a Member State does not provide for the automatic suspension of the conclusion of a public contract until the date on which the review body of first instance, as referred to in Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665, rules on the review, and where that review body is not judicial in character, the rejection by that body of an application for interim measures seeking to prohibit the conclusion of a public contract until the date on which that body rules on that application must be amenable to judicial review with suspensive effect until the court considering the matter has ruled on those interim measures.

70 That requirement derives from a combined reading of Article 2(3) and Article 2(9) of Directive 89/665. Accordingly, in order to ensure the effectiveness of an action against the decision of a non-judicial body of first instance rejecting an application for interim measures seeking to prohibit the conclusion of a public contract until the date on which that body has ruled, first, the tenderer concerned by that rejection decision must be accorded a reasonable standstill period in order to enable it to bring that action and, second, if that action is brought, the conclusion of that contract must remain suspended until the court considering the matter rules on that action.

71 In the present case, it is apparent from the order for reference that Paragraph 246 of Law No 134/2016 provides that a public contract may not be concluded, first, before expiry of the period for lodging a complaint with the contracting authority against the decision awarding the contract, and then before expiry of the period for submitting an application for review of the acts of the contracting authority to the Office, and, second, during the procedure before the Office, which, according to the referring court, is the review body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting authority, within the meaning of Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665, and which is not judicial in character. In particular, subject to verification, which it is for that court to carry out, in accordance with Paragraph 246(1), the automatic prohibition on concluding a public contract remains in place until the date on which that review body of first instance rules on the review of the decision awarding the contract.

72 In that regard, it follows from the information in the order for reference that, in the main proceedings, first, the Office adopted of its own motion, on 3 July 2020, an interim measure prohibiting the contracting authority from concluding the public contract at issue in the main proceedings until the closure with final effect of the administrative proceedings before the Office. Next, the President of the Office, as second-instance administrative body, rejected, by decision of 9 November 2020, the complaint which CROSS Zlín had lodged against the Office's decision rejecting its application for annulment of the decision awarding the public contract at issue and, lastly, on 18 November 2020, the contracting authority concluded that contract with the successful tenderer. It follows that that contract was concluded only after the Office ruled definitively, at two levels of jurisdiction, on the lawfulness of that award decision, which it is, however, for the referring court to verify.

73 It should thus be found, subject to the checks that that court must carry out, that that national legislation and its implementation in the main proceedings appear to ensure the proper application of Article 2(3) and Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of the right to effective judicial protection, as provided for in Article 47 of the Charter.

74 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 2(3) and Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which prohibits a contracting authority from concluding a public contract only until the date on which the body of first instance, within the meaning of the aforementioned Article 2(3), rules on the review of the decision to award that contract, it being irrelevant in that regard whether that review body is judicial in character or not.

Costs

75 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 2(3) and Article 2a(2) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which prohibits a contracting authority from concluding a public contract only until the date on which the body of first instance, within the meaning of the aforementioned Article 2(3), rules on the review of the decision to award that contract, it being irrelevant in that regard whether that review body is judicial in character or not.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

Case C-303/22

CROSS Zlín a.s.
v Úřad pro ochranu hospodářské soutěže, intervener:
Statutární město Brno

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Krajský soud v Brně (Regional Court, Brno, Czech Republic))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Review concerning public supply and public works contracts – Directive 89/665/EEC – Obligation for Member States to provide for review mechanisms – Access to review – Conclusion of the contract prior to judicial review – Effectiveness of the judgment – Interim measure suspending the effects of the contract)

1. A court in the Czech Republic has asked the Court of Justice whether national rules on review in the area of public procurement are compatible with Directive 89/665/EEC (2) and Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (‘the Charter’).

2. The Czech court is unsure, in particular, whether domestic rules permitting public contracts to be concluded before a court has ruled on an action brought by a tenderer challenging his or her exclusion from the procedure and the award of the contract to a competitor comply with Directive 89/665 and Article 47 of the Charter.

I. Legal framework

A. European Union law. Directive 89/665 (3)

3. Article 1 (‘Scope and availability of review procedures’) provides:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65)] unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 37 of that Directive.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] …, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

4. Article 2 ('Requirements for review procedures') states:

'1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

2. The powers specified in paragraph 1 and Articles 2d and 2e may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

3. When a body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting authority, reviews a contract award decision, Member States shall ensure that the contracting authority cannot conclude the contract before the review body has made a decision on the application either for interim measures or for review. The suspension shall end no earlier than the expiry of the standstill period referred to in Article 2a(2) and Article 2d(4) and (5).

4. Except where provided for in paragraph 3 and Article 1(5), review procedures need not necessarily have an automatic suspensive effect on the contract award procedures to which they relate.

5. Member States may provide that the body responsible for review procedures may take into account the probable consequences of interim measures for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to grant such measures when their negative consequences could exceed their benefits.

6. Member States may provide that where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.

7. Except where provided for in Articles 2d to 2f, the effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract in accordance with Article 1(5), paragraph 3 of this Article or Articles 2a to 2f, the powers of the body responsible for review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

9. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 of the Treaty and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

5. Article 2a ('Standstill period') reads:

'1. The Member States shall ensure that the persons referred to in Article 1(3) have sufficient time for effective review of the contract award decisions taken by contracting authorities, by adopting the necessary provisions respecting the minimum conditions set out in paragraph 2 of this Article and in Article 2c.

2. A contract may not be concluded following the decision to award a contract falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] … before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned if fax or electronic means are used or, if other means of communication are used, before the expiry of a period of either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of the contract award decision.

Tenderers shall be deemed to be concerned if they have not yet been definitively excluded. An exclusion is definitive if it has been notified to the tenderers concerned and has either been considered lawful by an independent review body or can no longer be subject to a review procedure.

Candidates shall be deemed to be concerned if the contracting authority has not made available information about the rejection of their application before the notification of the contract award decision to the tenderers concerned.

B. Law of the Czech Republic

1. Zákon č. 134/2016 Sb., o zadávání veřejných zakázek (Law No 134/2016 on the award of public contracts)

6. Under Paragraph 246(1):

'The contracting authority may not conclude a contract with the supplier:

(d) within 60 days of commencement of the procedure to review the acts of the contracting authority, provided that the application for review was not submitted out of time; however, the contracting authority may conclude the contract before expiry of that period where the [Úřad pro ochranu hospodářské soutěže (Office for the Protection of Competition; 'the ÚOHS')] has rejected the application for review or where the administrative proceedings related to the review have been discontinued and the decision thereon has become final.'

7. Paragraph 257(j) provides:

'The ÚOHS shall, by order, discontinue proceedings if

(j) during the administrative proceedings, the contracting authority concluded a contract for performance of the subject matter of the public contract under review

…’.

2. Zákon č. 500/2004 Sb., správní řád (Law No 500/2004 establishing the Code of Administrative Procedure)

8. Paragraph 61 provides:

‘1. In the proceedings, the administrative body may, by decision, on its own initiative or on the application of a party, before the proceedings have closed, adopt an interim measure where necessary in order to regulate on a temporary basis the position of the parties to the proceedings. … An interim measure may require a party or another person to act, to refrain from acting or to countenance an action, and may secure an item capable of serving as evidence or being the subject of enforcement.

3. The administrative body shall, by decision, revoke the interim measure immediately upon the ground which justified its adoption ceasing to exist. Failing that, the interim measure shall expire on the day on which the decision on the merits of the case has become enforceable or has otherwise begun to produce legal effects.

…’.

3. Zákon č. 150/2002 Sb., soudní řád správní (Law No 150/2002 establishing the Code of Procedure before the Administrative Courts)

9. Paragraph 38 provides:

‘1. Where an action has been filed and it is necessary to regulate on a temporary basis the situation of the parties, on account of the risk of serious harm, the court may, by order, adopt an interim measure requiring the parties to act, to refrain from acting or to countenance an action. On the same grounds, the court may also impose such an obligation on a third party, provided there is a legitimate basis for doing so.

10. According to Paragraph 72(1):

‘An administrative action may be filed within two months of service of the decision on the plaintiff by means of the delivery of a certified copy of the decision or by other means provided for by law, unless a special law lays down a different period.’

11. Under Paragraph 78:

‘(1) If the administrative action is well founded, the court shall annul the contested decision on the ground that it is unlawful or is vitiated by procedural defects. The court shall also annul the contested decision on the ground that it is unlawful if it finds that the administrative body has overstepped the limits, as established by law, of its administrative discretion, or has misused that discretion.

(4) If the court annuls the decision, it shall also order that the case be referred back to the defendant for further proceedings.’

II. Facts, proceedings and question referred for a preliminary ruling

12. On 27 September 2019, the Statutární město Brno (City of Brno, Czech Republic) launched a tender procedure for the award of a public contract concerning the expansion of the functions of the traffic control centre – traffic light system. (4)

13. The companies CROSS Zlín a.s. ('CROSS') and Siemens Mobility, s.r.o. participated in the procedure, each submitting a bid.

14. On 6 April 2020, the contracting authority excluded CROSS from the procedure for failing to meet the tender conditions.

15. On 7 April 2020, the contracting authority selected Siemens Mobility as supplier.

16. CROSS challenged the decision of 6 April 2020 before the same contracting authority, which dismissed that challenge on 4 May 2020.

17. CROSS submitted an application for review of the decision of 4 May 2020 before the ÚOHS, seeking the annulment of its exclusion and of the selection of Siemens Mobility as supplier.

18. On 3 July 2020, the ÚOHS – of its own motion – adopted an interim measure prohibiting the contracting authority from concluding the contract before completion of the review procedure.

19. On 5 August 2020, the ÚOHS rejected CROSS's application for review.

20. CROSS brought an administrative appeal against the decision of 5 August 2020 before the President of the ÚOHS.

21. On 9 November 2020, the President of the ÚOHS dismissed the administrative appeal. That decision became final (in administrative terms) (5) on 13 November 2020.

22. On 18 November 2020, the contracting authority concluded the public contract with Siemens Mobility.

23. On 13 January 2021, CROSS brought an administrative action against the decision of the President of the ÚOHS of 9 November 2020 before the Krajský soud v Brně (Regional Court, Brno, Czech Republic).

24. CROSS asked the court to grant suspensive effect to the action and, on a provisional basis, to prohibit the contracting authority from concluding the contract.

25. On 11 February 2021, the Krajský soud v Brně (Regional Court, Brno) dismissed CROSS's applications, holding that:

– as the contract had already been concluded, there were no grounds for prohibiting the contracting authority from concluding it;

– even if the contested decision were annulled, the result would be the referral of the case back to the ÚOHS, which would discontinue the proceedings;

– it would also not be possible to prohibit the contracting authority from performing the contract since there was no legal impediment to its conclusion when it was entered into, the decision of the President of the ÚOHS having become final.

26. On 28 March 2022, the Krajský soud v Brně (Regional Court, Brno) heard the parties to the proceedings on the question of whether a reference for a preliminary ruling should be made, in the light of the concerns as to the compatibility of the national rules with Directive 89/665 and Article 47 of the Charter.

27. In that court's view, those national rules, which allow a public contract to be concluded as soon as the decision of the President of the ÚOHS has become final (in administrative terms), might be at odds with Article 2(3) and Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665, as they do not ensure effective judicial protection for tenderers excluded from the selection procedure.

28. After hearing the parties, the Krajský soud v Brně (Regional Court, Brno) decided to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Is it compatible with [Article 2(3) and Article 2a(2)] of Directive 89/665/EEC, interpreted in the light of Article 47 of the Charter …, for Czech legislation to permit a contracting authority to conclude a public contract before an action is brought before a court competent to review the legality of a second-instance decision of the [ÚOHS] to exclude a tenderer?’

III. Procedure before the Court

29. The request for a preliminary ruling was registered at the Court on 9 May 2022.

30. Written observations were submitted by the ÚOHS, the Czech and Cypriot Governments and the European Commission. All of them, together with CROSS, appeared at the hearing held on 25 May 2023.

IV. Assessment

A. Preliminary remarks

1. Non-judicial character of the ÚOHS

31. According to the order for reference, even though Czech legislation treats the ÚOHS as a ‘review body’ for the purposes of Directive 89/665, it cannot be classified as an independent and impartial tribunal within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter and paragraph 73 of the judgment of 21 December 2021, Randstad Italia. (6)

32. The Court must have regard to the national legal framework as described by the referring court, which is the authoritative interpreter of its domestic law. (7) Accordingly, the referring court’s assessment of the legal nature of the ÚOHS must be taken at face value.

33. The fact of the matter is that, in its written observations before the Court, (8) the ÚOHS does not claim that it is a judicial body, but merely states that it is a ‘body responsible for review procedures’ within the meaning of Article 2 of Directive 89/665.

2. Subject matter of CROSS’s challenge

34. Notwithstanding the concerns expressed by the Commission, (9) CROSS’s challenge was also directed against the award of the contract to Siemens Mobility, as is apparent from the order for reference. (10)

35. That is consistent with the content of the question referred for a preliminary ruling, in which the Court is asked to interpret Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665, that is, the rule governing the suspensive effect of ‘review[ing] a contract award decision’.

B. Interpretation of Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665

36. With regard to the decisions of contracting authorities (in so far as they concern, obviously, contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24), Member States must ensure that the persons concerned have available review mechanisms suitable for determining, quickly and effectively, whether those decisions have infringed EU law on public procurement or national rules transposing EU law into their respective legal systems. That is, ultimately, the purpose of Directive 89/665.

37. Article 1(5) of that directive allows Member States to require a person seeking review of a decision of the contracting authority to do so, in the first place, with that same contracting authority.

38. The procedural autonomy of the Member States thus extends to the – optional – introduction of an initial review (claim) (11) before the contracting authority. That step entails the suspension of the possibility of concluding the contract, as occurred here.

39. Apart from that claim before the contracting authority, Directive 89/665 also provides for genuine review before 'bodies responsible for review procedures'. Article 2 of that directive refers to those bodies, acknowledging that they may be 'judicial in character' or may not, as confirmed by paragraph 9 thereof (which lays down the applicable rules in the case of non-judicial bodies). (12)

40. In particular, Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665 provides for a review of a contract award decision by 'a body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting authority'. As I will explain below, that provision neither requires the body of first instance to be judicial in character nor prevents it from being so.

1. Concept of 'body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting authority'

41. The term used in Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665 is a broad one. (13) It encompasses the following:

– Non-judicial bodies entrusted with the administrative oversight (review) of decisions of the contracting authority. (14)

– Judicial bodies on which the Member State's procedural rules confer jurisdiction at first instance to rule directly on actions against decisions of the contracting authority which have not been challenged before administrative bodies. By definition, those judicial bodies are independent of the contracting authority.

42. The emphasis in the wording of Article 2(3) is on the term 'body of first instance' (and, possibly, on its independence from the contracting authority), but not, I repeat, on the judicial or non-judicial character of that body.

43. Accordingly, a court may, if national legislation so provides (which does not appear to be the case in the Czech Republic), act as a body of first instance under Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665.

2. Suspensive effect of review before a body of first instance

44. Under Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665, Member State law must ensure that the contracting authority does not conclude the contract before the review body of first instance has taken a decision on the application either for interim measures or for review. The suspension is to end no earlier than the expiry of the period established in other provisions of Directive 89/665. (15)

45. Under Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665, the automatic standstill period applies only until the body of first instance (here, the ÚOHS) has taken a decision on the application either for interim measures or for review.

46. Except in the situations envisaged in Article 2(3) (and Article 1(5)), Directive 89/665 does not require review procedures necessarily to have automatic suspensive effect. Article 2(4) of the directive makes that clear.

47. Automatic suspensive effect therefore applies to review procedures which Article 2(3) classifies as reviews before a body of first instance. It is that characteristic (together with independence from the contracting authority) which determines whether the provisional prohibition on concluding the contract comes into play.

48. Directive 89/665 does not, I repeat, necessarily extend automatic suspensive effect to subsequent judicial reviews of the decision of the body of first instance, if it is an administrative body. The general provision of Article 2(4) of Directive 89/665 applies to such judicial reviews.

49. At a later stage in this Opinion, I will consider whether Article 47 of the Charter requires such judicial reviews (subsequent to the decision of the 'body of first instance') to have the same suspensive effect as that governed by Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665.

3. Different review bodies, under Czech law, and the suspensive effect of applications for review brought before them

50. It follows from the information provided to the Court that, in the Czech Republic, concerned parties have the following means of obtaining a review ('review' in the broad sense) of contract award decisions.

– An initial claim before the contracting authority itself. In the present case, CROSS submitted a claim before the Statutární město Brno (City of Brno), which was the contracting authority. Its claim therefore falls within the scope of Article 1(5) of Directive 89/665 and, in accordance with that provision, the contracting authority refrained from concluding the contract while the claim was pending.

– A subsequent review of the award decision before the ÚOHS, acting as a 'body of first instance … independent of the contracting authority'. That review, which is not judicial in nature, falls within the scope of Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665. That is why the ÚOHS provisionally prohibited the contracting authority from concluding the contract.

– A final review, which is judicial in nature, before the administrative courts, like the review sought in the present case. That review will not necessarily and automatically have the suspensive effect referred to in Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665 if use has previously been made of the 'administrative channel' before the ÚOHS.

51. It should be noted that, in principle, there is nothing in Directive 89/665 to prevent the contract being concluded before or during the judicial review, where such judicial review is preceded by the review conducted and decided on by the ÚOHS.

C. Effective judicial remedies. Article 2(9) of Directive 89/665 and Article 47 of the Charter

52. As regards Directive 89/665, the Court has held that '… the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, enshrined in the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter, is relevant, in particular, when the Member States establish, in accordance with that obligation, detailed procedural rules governing the judicial remedies which safeguard the rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities'. (16)

53. Article 1 of Directive 89/665 requires Member States to take the legislative measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of that directive.

54. The requirement of effectiveness naturally extends to actions brought before the courts, which are governed by Article 47 of the Charter. That requirement has consequences for the interim stage of those actions.

55. As I have already pointed out, Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665 confers suspensive effect on reviews before bodies of first instance. Suspension does not, however, automatically extend to subsequent judicial reviews of the decision of the (administrative) body of first instance. They are governed by Article 2(4) of Directive 89/665.

56. However, it is worth bearing in mind the Court's case-law on the interim protection that must be available in proceedings adjudicating on rights deriving from EU law.

– As a general rule, 'a national court seised of a dispute governed by European Union law must be in a position to grant interim relief in order to ensure the full effectiveness of the judgment to be given on the existence of the rights claimed under European Union law'. (17)

– ‘The principle of effective judicial protection of an individual’s rights under Community law must be interpreted as requiring it to be possible in the legal order of a Member State for interim relief to be granted until the competent court has given a ruling on whether national provisions are compatible with Community law, where the grant of such relief is necessary to ensure the full effectiveness of the judgment to be given on the existence of such rights.’ (18)

57. In keeping with the objective of ‘ensur[ing] full respect for the right to an effective remedy …, in accordance with the first and second subparagraphs of Article 47 of the Charter’, (19) the Court partners those guarantees with the protection of the rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities. (20) That is why it has found that interested parties must be afforded ‘a real possibility of bringing proceedings and, in particular, of applying for interim measures’ pending conclusion of the contract. (21)

58. If, as here, the bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character (that is, they do not form part of the system of judicial protection stricto sensu), the case-law cited immediately above requires it to be possible to apply to a court for a ruling on the decisions of those bodies.

59. That is confirmed by Article 2(9) of Directive 89/665 in the field of public procurement: where Member States opt for review bodies with an administrative set-up, it must be possible for the decisions of those bodies to ‘be the subject of judicial review …’.

60. In such cases, Article 2(9) of Directive 89/665 requires judicial review to be available as a means of challenging ‘any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it’.

61. That judicial review must incorporate the possibility for the court to adopt interim measures (or to review interim measures already ordered in earlier proceedings), so that the infringement committed by the review body does not become irreversible as a consequence of it not having corrected the contracting authority’s unlawful conduct. (22) That is the only way to ensure that the judicial protection guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter is effective.

62. It is against that background that the prospect (second subparagraph of Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665) of the judicial response being limited to an award of damages, to which I will refer below, must be understood.

63. Considered in isolation, the second subparagraph of Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665 might suggest (as one of the participants at the hearing argued) that Member States are entitled to provide, without any conditions, that the only response to an unlawful act is limited to an award of damages.

64. It is my view, however, that that proposition is misconceived and that only a combined view of Article 2(7) and (9) of Directive 89/665 respects the right to an effective remedy. Any infringement or allegedly unlawful measure adopted by a non-judicial review body of first instance must be subject to review by a judicial body stricto sensu which has had the opportunity to give an interlocutory ruling, before deciding whether annulment of the contract warrants damages alone.

65. Of course, the fact that that possibility exists does not mean that an interim measure must be adopted in every case: it will be for the court, after assessing the interests at stake, to determine whether there is periculum in mora and whether the party seeking the measure has, at least, a prima facie case. What is at issue, I repeat, is that the court must have full capacity to decide on the interim measure.

66. In my view, there is no reason to exclude from such interim protection cases in which the contract was concluded prior to the judicial review. It is true that, in such a situation, a court would not be able to suspend the conclusion of something which has already been concluded, but it retains the ability to take other types of measures, such as the provisional suspension of the effects of the signed contract.

67. At the hearing, the Czech Government and the ÚOHS argued that, if that possibility were to be accepted, the public interest in expeditious and effective public procurement might be undermined, since judicial proceedings are generally protracted and the delay would be indefensible.

68. I do not think that that objection is insurmountable.

– First, the impact of the delay due to judicial oversight would not extend to the judicial process as a whole, but only to the short period which the court has to adopt or refuse the interim measure. (23) Since the contested decisions are normally enforceable, any delay would be limited to the time needed for the court to give an interlocutory ruling. (24)

– Second, the practical difficulties recorded were based on a comparison between the human resources made available to the ÚOHS and those made available to the Czech administrative courts. In those circumstances, it is for the State with an interest in ensuring that public procurement is flexible to take appropriate procedural measures to avoid delay. That circumstance cannot be relied on to favour an interpretation of the directive which weakens the judicial protection guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter.

69. My proposed solution is feasible under Czech law because, as acknowledged at the hearing, Paragraph 38 of Law No 150/2002 permits the adoption of 'an interim measure requiring the parties to act, to refrain from acting or to countenance an action'. That provision does not, as such, prohibit the suspension of the effects of a contract which has already been concluded.

70. I share the Commission's view (25) that care should be exercised when making use of that possibility and that vexatious or frivolous applications for interim measures should be rejected. In my view, the court must strictly require, in addition to periculum in mora, a body of legal argument which, in itself, suggests that the substantive claim has some likelihood of success (fumus boni juris).

71. The court hearing the application for interim measures will also have to consider carefully whether overriding reasons relating to a general interest (which cannot simply be equated with the economic interests directly linked to the contract) (26) require the effects of the contract to be provisionally maintained after it has been concluded.

72. The considerations set out above do not entail extending the automatic suspension mechanism provided for in Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665 to court proceedings. To my mind, it is not necessary to force the wording of that provision, stretching the effects of automatic suspension beyond what the legislature intended. Quite simply, if the independent review body is not a judicial body, Article 47 of the Charter provides that the court must retain full jurisdiction to rule on the interim measure, in accordance with the rules of its national law.

73. In those circumstances, two scenarios are possible.

– The contract between the contracting authority and the successful tenderer has not been signed. The decision on the interim measure will focus on the provisional suspension of the possibility of concluding the contract.

– If the contract has been signed, the decision on the interim measure may affect the application of the effects of the contract, which the court has the power to suspend.

D. Effectiveness of judgments annulling the contract

74. The considerations set out above answer the referring court's question concerning the interpretation of Article 2(3) of Directive 89/665.

75. That said, in its request for a preliminary ruling, the referring court raises concerns which, although related to interim measures, fall outside the scope of those measures and instead concern the effectiveness of the judgment bringing the proceedings to a close. In that connection, it makes the following observations.

– If the ÚOHS's decision is annulled by a court, the case will be referred back to it for further proceedings. However, if the contract has already been concluded, the ÚOHS will not re-examine the application for review of the contracting authority's acts, but will discontinue the proceedings.

– Accordingly, the situation may arise whereby an excluded tenderer has no chance of being awarded the contract, despite a court having upheld its claims, since the contract will already have been concluded by the time the administrative action has been conducted and decided on.

– In those circumstances, a plaintiff who has secured a court declaration that the tender procedure is null and void is only entitled to claim, in civil proceedings, compensation for the damage caused by the contracting authority's unlawful acts. (27)

76. I will deal with those concerns in the interests of completeness, although I am not persuaded that it is strictly necessary to do so in order to provide a useful answer to the question which the referring court itself summarises at the end of its request for a preliminary ruling.

77. I have previously argued (28) that the rationale for the system of appeals against the decisions of an authority (such as the ÚOHS) subject to judicial review means, as a rule, that where those decisions are annulled by a court having jurisdiction, their nullity must extend also to the effects they have produced, since these are deprived of the legal foundations from which they derived.

78. In other words, the judgment annulling the award of a public contract should, as a rule, prevent the contract from producing its effects. The annulment of the award would be retroactive (ex tunc) to the point in time when the award was made. That is, moreover, the general rule set out in Directive 89/665, following its amendment in 2007, for contracts entailing the most serious infringements of that directive. (29)

79. That general rule is nevertheless subject to exceptions and provision to that effect is made by Directive 89/665 (in particular for public contracts which have already been concluded) due to the problems associated with a declaration that a contract is ineffective. (30) Member States may, for example, where formal requirements have been infringed, 'consider the principle of ineffectiveness to be inappropriate. In those cases Member States should have the flexibility to provide for alternative penalties'. (31)

80. Following its amendment by Directive 2007/66, in the case of contracts which should be declared ineffective in principle on account of their unlawful origin, Directive 89/665 (recitals 21 (32) and 22 (33) of Directive 2007/66 and Articles 2d and 2e of Directive 89/665, as amended) allows for the 'recogni[tion of] some or all of [their] temporal effects', that is to say, the effects of the contract are maintained, without prejudice to the imposition of appropriate penalties and the award of damages.

81. Directive 89/665 therefore envisages the possibility that a judgment upholding an action for annulment may concern a contract which has already been concluded without applying the consequences associated with its nullity in full.

82. In that respect, Directive 89/665 provides for different approaches depending on the circumstances.

– The general rule (Article 2(7)) is that 'except where provided for in Articles 2d to 2f, the effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law'.

– Article 2d(2) confirms that 'the consequences of a contract being considered ineffective shall be provided for by national law'. National law, in turn, 'may provide for the retroactive cancellation of all contractual obligations or limit the scope of the cancellation to those obligations which still have to be performed'. (34)

– Article 2d(3) also allows Member States to provide that 'the review body independent of the contracting authority may not consider a contract ineffective, even though it has been awarded illegally on the grounds mentioned in paragraph 1, if the review body finds, after having examined all relevant aspects, that overriding reasons relating to a general interest require that the effects of the contract should be maintained'.

– Article 2e(1) states that, in certain circumstances, (35) ‘Member States shall provide for ineffectiveness in accordance with Article 2d(1) to (3), or for alternative penalties’.

– Under that provision, ‘Member States may provide that the review body independent of the contracting authority shall decide, after having assessed all relevant aspects, whether the contract should be considered ineffective or whether alternative penalties should be imposed’.

83. It follows from all those provisions that, in accordance with Directive 89/665, national rules may, in certain circumstances, provide that a judgment annulling the award of a public contract either: (a) has retroactive effect, affecting ex tunc all contractual obligations; or (b) does not inevitably have the result of depriving that contract of its effects.

84. Those provisions of Directive 89/665 seek to strike a balance between the usual consequences of an annulment judgment and the protection of other public interests inherent in the provision of the services covered by the contract. In this field, as in others, national law may provide that the judgment declaring the contract null and void be deprived of its ‘natural’ effect, replaced by an obligation to pay compensation or by other alternative measures.

85. The abovementioned provisions of Directive 89/665 (and the national rules transposing them) do not run counter to Article 47 of the Charter, (36) provided that the judicial protection to which all tenderers are entitled enables them, in the event of the subsequent annulment of a contract award not in their favour, to obtain damages for the harm caused to them.

86. The right protected by Article 47 of the Charter does not imply an unequivocal solution to difficulties which may arise in relation to the effects of judgments annulling administrative acts (or contracts). Admittedly, the general rule I have mentioned can be inferred from Article 47, but that rule does not preclude the possibility of making use of the exceptions referred to above. (37)

87. The ineffectiveness of a contract will, however, be maintained if a national court of a Member State (which has made provision to that effect in its legislation) delivers a judgment declaring a contract award null and void, attaching consequences ex tunc to its ruling.

88. In the present case, the foregoing considerations may be particularly relevant if, after conclusion of the contract, the court having jurisdiction to adjudicate on the ÚOHS’s decisions does not adopt any interim measures. In those circumstances, if the judgment bringing an end to the administrative action annuls the ÚOHS’s decision (and the contract which it accepted) and national rules require the case to be referred back to that authority for further proceedings, the ÚOHS will have to assess, in accordance with Article 2d of Directive 89/665, what consequences flow from the declaration that the contract is ineffective.

V. Conclusion

89. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the following answer be given to the Krajský soud v Brně (Regional Court, Brno, Czech Republic):

Article 2(3) and (9) and Article 2a(2) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation under which, once proceedings before an independent (non-judicial) review body have been exhausted, a contracting authority may conclude a public contract prior to an administrative action being brought before a judicial body having jurisdiction to review the legality of the decision to exclude a tenderer or to award that contract, provided that, in the context of that administrative action, the court which is to adjudicate on the case has the power to adopt interim measures consisting, where appropriate, in suspending the effects of the signed contract.

5 I have construed the decision's final nature 'in administrative terms' as referring to the exhaustion of administrative remedies, that is to say, no further claims could be raised before the authorities.

7 In proceedings under Article 267 TFEU, which are based on a clear separation of functions between the national courts and the Court of Justice, the national court alone has jurisdiction to find and assess the facts in the case before it and to interpret and apply national law (judgment of 26 April 2017, Farkas (C-564/15, EU:C:2017:302, paragraph 37)).

8 In paragraph 22 of those observations, it accepts as undisputed 'the fact that [the ÚOHS], which is part of the executive, is not a court or tribunal'. In paragraph 35, it restates that '… it is not a court or tribunal, but a central authority, which is permitted under Directive 89/665'.

12 Decisions of review bodies that are not judicial in character must always state written reasons and may be the subject of 'judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article [267 TFEU]'.

22 One of the objectives of Directive 2007/66 is precisely to combat the situation whereby ‘contracting authorities and contracting entities who wish to make irreversible the consequences of the disputed award decision [proceed] very quickly to the signature of the contract’ (recital 4).

23 In the Czech Republic, an administrative action may be filed within two months of service of the second-instance administrative decision on the plaintiff (Paragraph 72(1) of Law No 150/2002). It may include an application for the adoption of an interim measure prohibiting the contracting authority from concluding the contract while proceedings are ongoing before the court. An application for the adoption of an interim measure may not be made before an administrative action is lodged (Paragraph 38 of Law No 150/2002).

24 According to the order for reference (paragraph 18), the court must adjudicate on an application for interim measures within 30 days of the application being made.

25 Paragraphs 17 and 18 of its written observations.

---

26 I do not think there is any objection to applying, mutatis mutandis, to the interim stage before the courts the provisions of Article 2d of Directive 89/665 on the existence of overriding reasons relating to a general interest and the economic interests at stake, as criteria for adapting declarations that contracts are ineffective.

27 Under zákon č. 99/1963 Sb., občanský soudní řád (Law No 99/1963 establishing the Code of Civil Procedure). According to the referring court, that type of claim is rarely successful.

29 As in the case of contracts resulting from an 'illegal direct award' (recital 13 of Directive 2007/66) or those 'concluded in breach of the standstill period or automatic suspension' (recital 18 of Directive 2007/66). In those situations, 'the objective to be achieved where Member States lay down the rules which ensure that a contract shall be considered ineffective is that the rights and obligations of the parties under the contract should cease to be enforced and performed' (recital 21 of Directive 2007/66).

30 Judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779) paragraph 40: 'Rendering a contract concluded following a public procurement procedure ineffective … constitutes a significant intervention by the administrative or judicial authority in the contractual relations between individuals and State bodies. Such a decision can thus cause considerable upset and financial losses not only to the successful tenderer for the public contract in question, but also to the awarding authority and, consequently, to the public, the end beneficiary of the supply of work or services under the public contract in question. As is apparent from recitals 25 and 27 in the preamble to Directive 2007/66, the EU legislature placed greater importance on the requirement for legal certainty as regards actions for a declaration that a contract is ineffective than as regards actions for damages.'

31 Recital 19 of Directive 2007/66.

---

32 'National law may …, for example, provide for the retroactive cancellation of all contractual obligations (ex tunc) or conversely limit the scope of the cancellation to those obligations which would still have to be performed (ex nunc)'.

33 'Member States may grant the body responsible for review procedures the possibility of not jeopardising the contract or of recognising some or all of its temporal effects, when the exceptional circumstances of the case concerned require certain overriding reasons relating to a general interest to be respected'. Emphasis added.

34 In the latter case, Member States are to provide for the application of other penalties within the meaning of Article 2e(2).

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Grand Chamber)

21 December 2023 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts – Directive 2014/24/EU – Point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) – Award of public contracts in the transport sector – Directive 2014/25/EU – Article 80(1) – Facultative grounds for exclusion – Obligation to transpose – Economic operator entering into agreements aimed at distorting competition – Competence of the contracting authority – Impact of an earlier decision of a competition authority – Principle of proportionality – Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union – Right to an effective remedy – Principle of sound administration – Obligation to state reasons)

In Case C-66/22,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court, Portugal), made by decision of 13 January 2022, received at the Court on 2 February 2022, in the proceedings

Infraestruturas de Portugal SA,

Futrifer Indústrias Ferroviárias SA,

– the European Commission, by G. Braga da Cruz, P. Ondrůšek and G. Wils, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 11 May 2023,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), and of Article 41(2)(b) and (c) of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (‘the Charter’).

2 The request has been made in the course of proceedings between, on the one hand, Toscca – Equipamentos em Madeira Lda (‘Toscca’) and, on the other hand, Infraestruturas de Portugal, SA, and Futrifer Indústrias Ferroviárias, SA (‘Futrifer’), concerning the decision of Infraestruturas de Portugal to award a public contract to Futrifer for the purchase of creosoted pine sleepers and rods.

Legal context

3 Recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 states:

‘Contracting authorities should further be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable, for instance because of violations of environmental or social obligations, including rules on accessibility for disabled persons or other forms of grave professional misconduct, such as violations of competition rules or of intellectual property rights. It should be clarified that grave professional misconduct can render an economic operator’s integrity questionable and thus render the economic operator unsuitable to receive the award of a public contract irrespective of whether the economic operator would otherwise have the technical and economical capacity to perform the contract.

… [Contracting authorities] should also be able to exclude candidates or tenderers whose performance in earlier public contracts has shown major deficiencies with regard to substantive requirements, for instance failure to deliver or perform, significant shortcomings of the product or service delivered, making it unusable for the intended purpose, or misbehaviour that casts serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator. National law should provide for a maximum duration for such exclusions.

In applying facultative grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities should pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality. Minor irregularities should only in exceptional circumstances lead to the exclusion of an economic operator. However repeated cases of minor irregularities can give rise to doubts about the reliability of an economic operator which might justify its exclusion.’

4 The second subparagraph of Article 26(5) of that directive provides:

‘Where the contract is awarded by restricted procedure or competitive procedure with negotiation, Member States may provide, notwithstanding the first subparagraph of this paragraph, that sub-central contracting authorities or specific categories thereof may make the call for competition by means of a prior information notice pursuant to Article 48(2).’

5 Under Article 32(1) of that directive:

‘In the specific cases and circumstances laid down in paragraphs 2 to 5, Member States may provide that contracting authorities may award public contracts by a negotiated procedure without prior publication.’

6 Article 55 of that directive, entitled ‘Informing candidates and tenderers’, provides, in paragraph 2(b) thereof:

‘On request from the candidate or tenderer concerned, the contracting authority shall as quickly as possible, and in any event within 15 days from receipt of a written request, inform:

(b) any unsuccessful tenderer of the reasons for the rejection of its tender …’

7 Article 56 of Directive 2014/24 is worded as follows:

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of criteria laid down in accordance with Articles 67 to 69, provided that the contracting authority has verified in accordance with Articles 59 to 61 that all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(b) the tender comes from a tenderer that is not excluded in accordance with Article 57 and that meets the selection criteria set out by the contracting authority in accordance with Article 58 and, where applicable, the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in Article 65.

Member States may exclude the use of the procedure in the first subparagraph for, or restrict it to, certain types of procurement or specific circumstances.’

8 Article 57 of that directive, entitled ‘Exclusion grounds’, provides:

1. Contracting authorities shall exclude an economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure where they have established, by verifying in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, or are otherwise aware that that economic operator has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment for one of the following reasons [referred to in points (a) to (f) of the present paragraph.]

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(d) where the contracting authority has sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has entered into agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition;

At any time during the procedure, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4.

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

An economic operator which has been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement or concession award procedures shall not be entitled to make use of the possibility provided for under this paragraph during the period of exclusion resulting from that judgment in the Member States where the judgment is effective.

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. They shall, in particular, determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 6 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability. Where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period shall not exceed five years from the date of the conviction by final judgment in the cases referred to in paragraph 1 and three years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4.’

9 Article 1 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2364 of 18 December 2017 (OJ 2017 L 337, p. 17) (‘Directive 2014/25’), provides:

‘1. This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting entities with respect to contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 15.

2. Procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a supply, works or service contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting entities from economic operators chosen by those contracting entities, provided that the works, supplies or services are intended for the pursuit of one of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14 [of this directive].

10 Article 4(1)(a) of Directive 2014/25 provides:

‘For the purpose of this Directive contracting entities are entities, which:

(a) are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14’.

11 Article 11 of that directive is worded as follows:

‘This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.’

12 Article 15(a) of that directive states, in essence, that the latter is to apply to procurements with a value net of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than the threshold of EUR 443 000 for supply and service contracts as well as for design contests.

13 Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25 provides:

‘The objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of economic operators requesting qualification in a qualification system and the objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of candidates and tenderers in open, restricted or negotiated procedures, in competitive dialogues or in innovation partnerships may include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57 of Directive [2014/24] on the terms and conditions set out therein.

Where the contracting entity is a contracting authority, those criteria and rules shall include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(1) and (2) of Directive [2014/24] on the terms and conditions set out in that Article.

If so required by Member States, those criteria and rules shall, in addition, include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(4) of Directive [2014/24] on the terms and conditions set out in that Article. …’

Portuguese law

14 Article 55(1)(c) of the Código dos Contratos Públicos (Public Procurement Code), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings (‘CCP’), is worded as follows:

‘Prohibitions on procurement

(1) The following entities may not be applicants, tenderers, nor form part of a grouping:

(c) natural persons who have received a penalty for grave professional misconduct and who, in the intervening period, have not been rehabilitated, and legal persons the administrative, management or governing bodies of which have received such an administrative penalty and continue to perform their duties;

15 Article 55(1)(f) of that code provides that, in particular, entities that have been subject to the ancillary penalty, imposed by the Portuguese competition authority, of prohibition from participating in public procurement procedures, may not be applicants, tenderers, or form part of any grouping.

16 Article 55 A of that code concerns the lifting of prohibitions, set out in Article 55(1) thereof, by the contracting authority, and states that it is not to apply to the situations referred to in Article 55(1)(f) of that code.

17 Paragraph 70 of the CCP states:

‘Evaluation of tenders

(2) Tenders shall be excluded where their evaluation indicates:

(g) the existence of compelling evidence of acts, agreements, practices or information that may distort the competition rules.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

18 Toscca brought an action before the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Viseu (Administrative and Tax Court, Viseu, Portugal) seeking annulment of the decision of Infraestruturas de Portugal of 25 July 2019, consisting in the award to Futrifer of a public contract for the purchase of creosoted pine sleepers and rods intended for use in the railway infrastructure sector, for a base price of EUR 2 979 200. In that action, Toscca also sought to be awarded that public contract.

19 Further to the dismissal of that action by decision of 21 February 2020, Toscca brought an appeal before the Tribunal Central Administrativo Norte (North Central Administrative Court, Portugal). By judgment of 29 May 2020, that court set aside that decision, upheld the appeal brought by Toscca and ordered Infraestruturas de Portugal to award that public contract to that company.

20 By judgment of 22 April 2021, the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court, Portugal) set aside the judgment referred to in the preceding paragraph on grounds of insufficient reasoning, and referred the case back to the Tribunal Central Administrativo Norte (North Central Administrative Court). On 2 June 2021, the latter delivered a fresh judgment yielding the same outcome as that of the judgment of 29 May 2020. Infraestruturas de Portugal and Futrifer each brought an appeal against that judgment of 2 June 2021 before the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court), which is the referring court.

21 That court observes that, on 12 June 2019, Futrifer was ordered by the Autoridade da Concorrência (Competition Authority, Portugal) to pay a fine in respect of a breach of competition rules in the context of public procurement procedures, organised in 2014 and 2015, and relating to the provision of services for the maintenance of equipment and tracks forming part of the national rail network, which infrastructure was under the management of a public undertaking that had merged with Infraestruturas de Portugal in the interim.

22 The referring court states, in that connection, that the exclusion of a tenderer on grounds of lack of reliability on account of a breach of competition rules unrelated to a public procurement procedure, may be accepted only pursuant to Article 55(1)(f) of the CCP, that is to say, by the effect of an express decision delivered by the Competition Authority, imposing on that tenderer the ancillary penalty of prohibition from participating in public procurement procedures for a certain period of time. According to that court, that solution is, however, contrary to Directive 2014/24 and, in particular, point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) thereof, in that it undermines the independence of the contracting authority in deciding on the reliability of any tenderer.

23 The referring court wishes to ascertain, moreover, whether the decision to award a public contract to a tenderer who has been found to be in breach of competition rules in an earlier public procurement procedure, conducted by the same contracting authority, may be regarded as sufficiently reasoned, particularly in the light of the right to sound administration, provided for in Article 41(2)(c) of the Charter, where that contracting authority has not carried out an independent and reasoned assessment of the reliability of that tenderer.

24 Furthermore, the referring court is uncertain as to whether national legislation under which the contracting authority is not required, in the context of a public procurement procedure, to carry out an independent assessment of the reliability of a tenderer found to be in breach of competition rules is in conformity with EU law in so far as concerns both the examination of the seriousness of that breach as well as the impact thereof on the procedure at issue, and the examination of the appropriateness of the measures taken by the tenderer in question to remedy, in the context of the latter procedure, the consequences of that breach (self-cleaning measures). In the latter connection, the referring court states that, under national law, the assessment of such corrective measures falls exclusively to the Competition Authority.

25 That court considers that, in the light of the case-law of the Court of Justice, in particular the judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca (C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507), a breach by a tenderer of the competition rules which is unrelated to a public procurement procedure must be subject to a duly reasoned assessment by the contracting authority, in the context of the examination of the reliability of such a tenderer.

26 In those circumstances, the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Does the ground for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4)(d) of Directive [2014/24] constitute a matter reserved for decision [“reserva de decisão”] by the contracting authority?

(2) May the national legislature fully replace the decision that should be taken by the contracting authority under Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24/EU with a generic decision (with the effects of a decision) from its national competition authority to impose an ancillary penalty consisting of prohibition from participating in public procurement procedures for a certain period, adopted in the context of the imposition of a fine for breach of competition rules?

(3) Should the contracting authority’s decision concerning the “reliability” of the economic operator in view of its compliance (or non-compliance) with the rules of competition law, beyond the scope of the specific tendering procedure, be interpreted as requiring an assessment based on the relative suitability of that economic operator, which constitutes a concrete expression of the right to good administration under Article 41(2)(c) of the [Charter]?

(4) May the solution adopted in Portuguese law under Article 55(1)(f) of the CCP, whereby the exclusion of an economic operator from a tendering procedure on grounds of breach of competition rules unrelated to that specific procurement procedure is subject to a decision from the competition authority in the context of an application of an ancillary penalty consisting of a prohibition from tendering, a procedure in which it is the competition authority itself that assesses the relevance of the self-cleaning measures taken, be regarded as consistent with EU law, specifically, Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24/EU?

(5) Furthermore, may the solution adopted under Portuguese law in Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP, which limits the possibility of excluding a tender due to significant evidence of acts, agreements, practices or information that are liable to distort competition rules in the specific procurement procedure in which such practices are detected, be regarded as consistent with EU law, and in particular with Article 57(4)(d) of Directive [2014/24/EU]?’

The request for an expedited procedure

27 The referring court requested that the present reference for a preliminary ruling be determined pursuant to an expedited procedure under Article 105 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, on the ground that the main proceedings were themselves urgent. It referred, in that regard, to Article 36(1)(c) of the Código de Processo nos Tribunais Administrativos (Code of Procedure before the Administrative Courts) and Article 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1) (‘Directive 89/665’).

28 Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure provides that, at the request of the referring court or tribunal or, exceptionally, of his or her own motion, the President of the Court may decide, after hearing the Judge-Rapporteur and the Advocate General, that a reference for a preliminary ruling is to be determined pursuant to an expedited procedure where the nature of the case requires that it be dealt with within a short time.

29 It should be recalled, in that connection, that such an expedited procedure is a procedural instrument meant for an exceptional situation of urgency, the existence of which must be established in the light of exceptional circumstances specific to the case in connection with which an application for an expedited procedure is made (order of the President of the Court of 25 February 2021, Sea Watch, C-14/21 and C-15/21, not published, EU:C:2021:149, paragraph 22).

30 In the present case, on 23 March 2022, the President of the Court decided, after hearing the Judge-Rapporteur and the Advocate General, to reject the referring court's request referred to in paragraph 27 above.

31 That court in fact confined itself to stating that the main proceedings were urgent and referring to provisions of national law and EU law whilst failing to indicate the extent to which there may, in the present case, be exceptional urgency, which is nonetheless necessary in order to justify an expedited procedure.

Consideration of the questions referred

Admissibility

32 Futrifer takes the view that the request for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible on the ground that the Court's reply to the questions referred is not necessary in order to resolve the dispute in the main proceedings. It maintains, in that regard, that the Portuguese Republic legitimately chose not to transpose point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 into national law, with the result that those questions are hypothetical.

33 In that regard, it should be noted that, according to settled case-law, in the context of the cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts provided for in Article 267 TFEU, it is solely for the national court before which a dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case, both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court of Justice. Consequently, where the questions submitted concern the interpretation of EU law, the Court is, in principle, bound to give a ruling (see, to that effect, judgments of 16 December 1981, Foglia, 244/80, EU:C:1981:302, paragraph 15, and of 28 April 2022, Caruter, C-642/20, EU:C:2022:308, paragraph 28).

34 The Court may refuse to give a ruling on a question referred by a national court only where it is obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (judgments of 15 December 1995, Bosman, C-415/93, EU:C:1995:463, paragraph 61, and of 28 April 2022, Caruter, C-642/20, EU:C:2022:308, paragraph 29).

35 In the present case, the questions relate, in essence, to the interpretation of the facultative grounds for exclusion laid down in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, which covers the case in which the contracting authority has sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has entered into agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition.

36 In the connection, in the first place, it is apparent from the order for reference that the dispute in the main proceedings relates to the lawfulness of the decision to award a public contract to a tenderer who has been ordered by the national competition authority to pay a fine in respect of a breach of the competition rules in the context of earlier public procurement procedures. By questions 1 to 3 and 5 referred for a preliminary ruling, the referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, the scope of the discretion which point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 confers on the contracting authority where, under Portuguese legislation, the latter authority is bound by the assessment, carried out by the competition authority, of the reliability of the tenderer who has committed such a breach in the context of a public procurement procedure, irrespective of whether or not that assessment led to an ancillary penalty consisting of prohibition from participating in public procurement procedures.

37 Consequently, it cannot be held that those questions bear no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose or that they are hypothetical. As to the fact, alleged by Futrifer, that the Portuguese Republic legitimately chose not to transpose point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 into national law, that relates to substantive aspects and is in no way such as to affect the admissibility of the questions put to the Court. It follows that Questions 1 to 3 and 5 are admissible.

38 In the second place, in the context of the fourth question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 precludes national legislation under which the competition authority alone is competent to assess the relevance of the corrective measures taken by the economic operator who, on account of a breach of competition rules, is subjected to a penalty imposed by that authority, prohibiting that operator from participating in public procurement procedures for a certain period of time.

39 It is not apparent from the information before the Court that Futrifer has relied, at any point in time, on the taking of corrective measures such as those referred to in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24.

40 It follows that the fourth question referred is hypothetical and must, accordingly, be ruled inadmissible.

Substance

Preliminary observations

41 In the first place, it should be recalled that, in accordance with settled case-law, under the procedure laid down by Article 267 TFEU, which provides for cooperation between national courts and the Court of Justice, it is for the latter to provide the national court with an answer which will be of use to it and enable it to determine the case before it. In that regard, the Court may also find it necessary to consider provisions of EU law to which the national court has not referred in its question (see, to that effect, judgment of 22 June 2023, K.B and F.S. (Raising ex officio of an infringement in criminal proceedings), C-660/21, EU:C:2023:498, paragraph 26 and the case-law cited).

42 In the present case, it is stated in the request for a preliminary ruling that the subject matter of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is the purchase, by a public undertaking – namely, Infraestruturas de Portugal – of creosoted pine sleepers and rods intended for use in the railway infrastructure sector, for a base price of EUR 2 979 200.

43 In that connection, it should be observed that, in accordance with Article 1(2) and Article 11 of Directive 2014/25, procurement within the meaning of that directive is the acquisition by means of a supply, works or service contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting entities from economic operators chosen by those contracting entities, for activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, inter alia. Article 4(1)(a) of that directive states that, for the purpose thereof, contracting entities are entities, which are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14 of that directive.

44 Furthermore, it is clear from Article 1(1) of Directive 2014/25 that the latter establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting entities with respect to contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 15 of that directive.

45 In those circumstances, and in the light of the information set out in the order for reference, it is apparent from the information before the Court that the contract at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 2014/25; this is, however, a matter for the referring court to ascertain.

46 In such a situation, Article 80(1) of that directive would be applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings.

47 In the second place, since the questions referred for a preliminary ruling relate, in particular to whether point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 precludes the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings, it is necessary to determine beforehand whether the Member States are under the obligation to transpose into their national law both the first subparagraph of Article 57(4), in the event that the dispute in the main proceedings should fall within the scope of Directive 2014/24, and the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25, in the event that that dispute should fall within the scope of the latter directive.

48 As regards, first, the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, that provision states that 'contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude any economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure' in any of the situations referred to in points (a) to (i) of that provision.

49 In that connection, it admittedly follows from certain judgments of the Court which interpreted the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 that the Member States can decide whether or not to transpose the facultative grounds for exclusion referred to in that provision. The Court has in fact held that, in accordance with Article 57(4) and (7) of Directive 2014/24, the Member States are free not to apply the facultative grounds for exclusion set out in that directive or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraph 33; of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraphs 34 and 40; and of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 28).

50 However, an analysis of the wording of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, the context into which that provision fits, and the aim that the latter pursues within the framework of that directive, shows that contrary to what is apparent from those judgments, the Member States are under the obligation to transpose that provision into their national law.

51 As regards, first of all, the wording of that first subparagraph of Article 57(4), it is clear that the choice as to the decision whether or not to exclude an economic operator from a public procurement procedure on one of the grounds set out in that provision falls to the contracting authority, unless the Member States decide to transform that option to exclude into an obligation to do so. Accordingly, the Member States must transpose that provision either by allowing or by requiring contracting authorities to apply the exclusion grounds laid down by the latter provision. By contrast, and contrary to the arguments put forward by Futrifer and the Portuguese Government, a Member State cannot omit those grounds from its national legislation transposing Directive 2014/24 and thus deprive contracting authorities of the possibility – which must, at the very least, be conferred on them by virtue of that provision – of applying those grounds.

52 Next, in so far as concerns the context into which the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 fits, it should be noted that recital 101 of that directive states that 'contracting authorities should … be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable'. That recital thus confirms that a Member State must transpose that provision in order not to deprive contracting authorities of the possibility referred to in the preceding paragraph and that recital.

53 This interpretation of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 is also confirmed a contrario by the wording of the provisions of that directive, in respect of the transposition of which the Member States are expressly granted discretion. That is the case, in particular, for Article 26(5) and Article 32(1) of that directive, according to which 'the Member States may provide …', or even the second subparagraph of Article 56(2) of that directive, which employs the terms 'Member States may exclude …'.

54 Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 is not such as to call that interpretation into question. That provision confers, generally, on the Member States the power to determine the conditions for application of Article 57 of that directive, be it by legislative, regulatory or administrative provision. That power concerns the manner in which they may implement that article. The choice thus left to the Member States therefore cannot be extended to the question whether or not the facultative grounds for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4) of that directive are to be transposed. It must further be held that Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 is also applicable to the mandatory ground for exclusion laid down in Article 57(1) of that directive. It cannot reasonably be argued that the power provided for in Article 57(7) may be used by the Member States in order not to transpose such exclusion grounds into their national law.

55 Lastly, as to the objective pursued by Directive 2014/24 in so far as concerns the facultative grounds for exclusion, the Court has acknowledged that that objective is reflected in the emphasis placed on the powers of contracting authorities. Thus the EU legislature intended to confer on the contracting authority, and on it alone, the task of assessing whether a candidate or tenderer must be excluded from a procurement procedure during the stage of selecting the tenderers (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraph 34, and of 3 October 2019, Delta Antrepriză de Construcţii şi Montaj 93, C-267/18, EU:C:2019:826, paragraph 25).

56 The option, or indeed obligation, for the contracting authority to apply the exclusion grounds set out in the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 is specifically intended to enable it to assess the integrity and reliability of each of the economic operators participating in a public procurement procedure.

57 The EU legislature thus intended to ensure that contracting authorities have, in all Member States, the possibility of excluding economic operators who are regarded as unreliable by those authorities.

58 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 contains an obligation, for the Member States, to transpose the facultative grounds for exclusion set out in the provision into their national law. In the context of that obligation to transpose, those States must provide for either the option or the obligation for contracting authorities to apply those grounds.

59 In so far as concerns, second, the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25, this provides that, if Member States so request, the objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of candidates and tenderers, inter alia in open, restricted or negotiated procedures, are to include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 on the terms and conditions set out in that article.

60 It follows from the wording of the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) that it falls to the Member States to decide whether the facultative grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4) are to be applied, by contracting entities, as criteria for excluding tenderers. In the absence of any decision in that regard, it nonetheless follows from the first subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25 that the Member States must, when transposing that directive, at the very least make provision for the possibility for contracting entities to include, amongst the rules and exclusion criteria applicable in public procurement procedures which fall within the scope of that directive, the exclusion grounds set out in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24.

61 Accordingly, as regards the exclusion grounds set out in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, the Member States must, in accordance with their obligation to transpose the first subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25, make provision for the possibility for contracting entities to include those exclusion grounds amongst the objective exclusion criteria in procedures which fall within the scope of the latter directive, without prejudice to any decision on the part of those States, taken pursuant to the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of that directive, and consisting in requiring that those entities include those grounds amongst those criteria.

62 As regards, in the third place, Futrifer's argument that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 cannot be relied upon by an unsuccessful tenderer – such as Toscca, in the present case – it is sufficient to observe, for the purposes of the answer to be given to the present request for a preliminary ruling, that the Court has already ruled that if the right to an effective remedy – as guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter – is not to be disregarded, a decision by which a contracting authority refuses, even implicitly, to exclude an economic operator from a procurement procedure on one of the facultative grounds for exclusion laid down in the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must necessarily be capable of being challenged by any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a specific contract or having been or at risk of being harmed by a breach of that provision (judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 143).

63 On the very same grounds, an identical assessment must be relied upon in the event of a refusal to exclude an economic operator from a public procurement procedure on one of the facultative grounds for exclusion referred to in the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25.

64 It is therefore appropriate to answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling while taking the preceding preliminary observations into consideration.

The fifth question

65 By its fifth question, which it is appropriate to examine in the first place, the referring court asks, in essence, whether point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which limits the possibility of excluding a tender from a tenderer on account of the existence of significant evidence of conduct on the latter's part liable to distort the competition rules in the public procurement procedure in the context of which that type of conduct has arisen.

66 In interpreting provisions of EU law, it is necessary to consider not only their wording but also the context in which they occur and the objectives pursued by the rules of which they are part (judgment of 16 March 2023, Colt Technology Services and Others, C-339/21, EU:C:2023:214, paragraph 39 and the case-law cited).

67 First, it should be observed that, by providing for the scenario in which the contracting authority 'has sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has entered into agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition', the wording of point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 does not limit the application of that ground for exclusion to the public procurement procedure in the context of which that type of behaviour has arisen.

68 As regards, second, the context into which that provision fits, that interpretation is supported by the second subparagraph of Article 57(5) of that directive, which permits the contracting authorities, at any time during the procedure, to exclude or be required by the Member States to exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4 of that Article 57.

69 Third, that interpretation enables the contracting authority, in accordance with the objective pursued by Directive 2014/24 in so far as concerns the facultative grounds for exclusion set out in the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of that directive, as recalled in paragraph 56 of the present judgment, to ascertain the integrity and reliability of each of the economic operators participating in the public procurement procedure at issue (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2022, J. Sch. Omnibusunternehmen and K. Reisen, C-416/21, EU:C:2022:689, paragraph 42), which integrity and reliability are liable to be cast into doubt not only in the event of the participation of such an operator in anticompetitive conduct in the context of that procedure, but also in the event of that operator's participation in such conduct in the past.

70 In the present case, the referring court observes that Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP limits the possibility for the contracting authority to exclude a tender on account of the existence of compelling evidence of acts, agreements, practices or information that may distort the competition rules solely in the public procurement procedure in the context of which those anticompetitive practices have arisen, with the result that such exclusion may only be decided by the contracting authority if the anticompetitive practices in question occurred prior to that procedure.

71 In that connection, it is clear from paragraphs 51, 58, 60 and 61 of the present judgment that, irrespective of whether the public procurement procedure in question falls within the scope of Directives 2014/24 or 2014/25, the Member States must, at the very least, provide for the possibility for contracting authorities to include the exclusion grounds set out in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 amongst the objective exclusion criteria in public procurement procedures, without prejudice to any decision by those Member States to transform that option into an obligation to do so. The Member States therefore cannot, in any event, restrict the scope of those exclusion grounds.

72 It follows from the foregoing that the answer to the fifth question must be that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which limits the possibility of excluding a tender from a tenderer on account of the existence of significant evidence of conduct on the part of that tenderer liable to distort competition rules in the public procurement procedure in the context of which that type of conduct has arisen.

The first and second questions

73 By its first and second questions, which it is appropriate to answer together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which confers the power to decide to exclude economic operators from public procurement procedures, on the grounds of a breach of competition rules, solely on the national competition authority.

74 It should be recalled, in that regard, that in accordance with Article 56(1)(b) of Directive 2014/24, the contracting authority is under the obligation to verify, during the public procurement procedure, whether the tender comes from a tenderer that is not excluded in accordance with Article 57 of that directive; that obligation extends to all economic operators who have submitted a tender (see, to that effect, judgment of 30 January 2020, Tim (C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 46).

75 As is clear from the case-law cited in paragraphs 55 and 56 of the present judgment, the EU legislature intended to entrust the contracting authority, and only the contracting authority, with the task of assessing whether a candidate or tenderer is to be excluded from a public procurement procedure by determining the integrity and reliability of each of the economic operators participating in that procedure.

76 In particular, the facultative ground for exclusion mentioned in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 101 of that directive, is based on an essential element of the relationship between the successful tenderer in question and the contracting authority, namely the reliability of the successful tenderer, on which the contracting authority's trust is founded (judgment of 15 September 2022, J. Sch. Omnibusunternehmen and K. Reisen, C-416/21, EU:C:2022:689, paragraph 41 and the case-law cited).

77 According to the case-law of the Court, where contracting authorities apply facultative grounds for exclusion, they must have particular regard to the principle of proportionality, which requires that they carry out a specific and individual assessment of the conduct of the individual concerned, on the basis of all the relevant factors (see, to that effect, judgments of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 40), and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras (C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraphs 156 and 157).

78 It follows that, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, in which there is a specific procedure regulated by EU law or by national law for pursuing certain breaches of competition rules and in which the national competition authority is entrusted with carrying out investigations in this connection, the contracting authority must, within the context of the assessment of the evidence provided, rely in principle on the outcome of such a procedure (see, to that effect, judgment of 24 October 2018, Vossloh Laeis, C-124/17, EU:C:2018:855, paragraph 25).

79 The decision of such an authority, finding that such a breach has been committed and, on that ground, imposing a financial penalty on a tenderer, may take on particular significance, and all the more so if that penalty is accompanied by a temporary prohibition on participation in public procurement procedures. Where such a decision may lead the contracting authority to exclude that economic operator from the public procurement procedure in question, conversely, the absence of such a decision can neither prevent nor exempt the contracting authority from carrying out such an assessment.

80 That assessment should be carried out having regard to the principle of proportionality and taking into account all the relevant factors in order to determine whether the application of the ground for exclusion referred to in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 is justified.

81 In the case in the main proceedings, the referring court states that Article 55(1)(f) of the CCP entrusts exclusively to the national competition authority the assessment of the consequences which a breach of competition rules can have in the context of future public procurement procedures. Thus, that legislation appears, on the one hand, to require that contracting authorities comply with a decision of that authority which imposes a penalty on an economic operator prohibiting the latter from participating in such procedures for a certain period of time and, on the other hand, to prevent those contracting authorities from excluding from those procedures an economic operator who has not been subjected to such a penalty. It follows that a tenderer may be excluded from a public procurement procedure, following a decision of that authority, without the contracting authority being able either to assess the conduct of that tenderer – and, consequently, the latter's integrity and reliability to perform the contract in question – or to decide independently, having regard to the principle of proportionality, whether the exclusion of that tenderer is justified on the ground referred to in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24.

82 Such legislation, which ties the assessment of the integrity and reliability of tenderers to the findings in a decision of the national competition authority in relation to, in particular, future participation in public procurement procedures, undermines the discretion to be afforded to the contracting authority in the context of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24.

83 The considerations set out in the preceding paragraph also apply in the case where the public procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 2014/25 since, as has been recalled in paragraph 71 of the present judgment, the Member States are required, in accordance with their obligation to transpose the first subparagraph of Article 80(1) of that directive, to provide for the option for those contracting entities to include the exclusion grounds set out in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 amongst the objective exclusion criteria in procedures falling within the scope of Directive 2014/25, without prejudice to any decision on the part of the Member States to transform that option into an obligation to do so. The Member States therefore cannot, in any event, restrict the discretion to be afforded to the contracting authority in that context.

84 It follows from the foregoing that the answer to the first and second questions is that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which confers the power to decide to exclude economic operators from public procurement procedures, on the grounds of a breach of competition rules, solely on the national competition authority.

The third question

85 By its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of Article 41(2)(c) of the Charter, must be interpreted as meaning that the decision of the contracting authority as to the reliability of an economic operator, adopted pursuant to the ground for exclusion laid down in that provision of Directive 2014/24, must be reasoned.

86 It should be observed, at the outset, that Article 41(2)(c) of the Charter relates exclusively to the obligation to state reasons for decisions which is incumbent on the 'institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the Union'. That provision is therefore irrelevant in the context of the dispute in the main proceedings.

87 It should, however, be recalled that the contracting authority must comply with the general principle of EU law relating to sound administration, which carries with it requirements which the Member States must observe when implementing EU law. Among those requirements, the obligation to state reasons for decisions adopted by the national authorities is particularly important, since it puts their addressee in a position to defend its rights and decide in full knowledge of the circumstances whether it is worthwhile to bring an action against those decisions (see, to that effect, judgments of 15 October 1987, Heylens and Others, 222/86, EU:C:1987:442, paragraph 15, and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras (C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 120).

88 It follows that, in the context of public procurement procedures, the contracting authority is under that obligation to state reasons. That obligation relates, inter alia, to decisions by way of which the contracting authority excludes a tenderer by applying, in particular, a facultative ground for exclusion, such as that provided for in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24.

89 As is clear from Article 55(2)(b) of Directive 2014/24, on request from the tenderer concerned, the contracting authority is to inform any unsuccessful tenderer of the reasons for the rejection of its tender, as quickly as possible, and in any event within 15 days from receipt of a written request.

90 It should, furthermore, be noted that the contracting authority must also state reasons for its decision when it finds that a tenderer is in one of the situations covered by Article 57(4) of that directive, but it nonetheless decides not to exclude that tenderer, for example, on the ground that such an exclusion would constitute a disproportionate measure. A decision not to exclude a tenderer, where a facultative ground for exclusion appears to apply, affects the legal situation of all the other economic operators participating in the public procurement procedure in question, who must therefore be able to defend their rights and, where applicable, decide, on the basis of the reasons set out in that decision, to bring an action against it. In that connection, the statement of reasons for the decision not to exclude a tenderer may be included in the final decision to award the contract to the successful tenderer.

91 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the third question is that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of the principle of sound administration, must be interpreted as meaning that the decision of the contracting authority as to the reliability of an economic operator, adopted pursuant to the exclusion ground laid down in that provision, must be reasoned.

Costs

92 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which limits the possibility of excluding a tender from a tenderer on account of the existence of significant evidence of conduct on the part of that tenderer liable to distort competition rules in the public procurement procedure in the context of which that type of conduct has arisen.

2. Point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which confers the power to decide to exclude economic operators from public procurement procedures, on the grounds of a breach of competition rules, solely on the national competition authority.

3. Point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of the general principle of sound administration, must be interpreted as meaning that the decision of the contracting authority as to the reliability of an economic operator, adopted pursuant to the exclusion ground laid down in that provision, must be reasoned.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA
delivered on 11 May 2023 (1)

Case C-66/22

Infraestruturas de Portugal, S. A, Futrifer Indústrias Ferroviárias, S. A
v Toscca – Equipamentos em Madeira Ldª,
intervener:
Mota-Engil Railway Engineering, SA

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court, Portugal))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Directive 2014/24/EU – Public procurement – Optional grounds for exclusion – Article 57(4)(d) – Exclusion of an economic operator from participation in a tendering procedure – Penalty for anticompetitive practices – Automatic exclusion based on a previous decision of a competition authority – Discretion of the contracting authority to assess the existence of the ground for exclusion – Article 57(6) – Suitability and reliability of the tenderer – Statement of reasons – Anticompetitive practices detected in the tendering procedure itself)

1. In this reference for a preliminary ruling, the Court is called upon to interpret Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24/EU, (2) under which a contracting authority may exclude an economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure where that operator has entered into agreements with other operators to distort competition.

2. The request for a preliminary ruling has been made in proceedings concerning the award of a contract to an undertaking which had previously been penalised for having colluded with other undertakings to engage in anticompetitive conduct (price and market-sharing agreements).

I. Legal framework

A. European Union law

1. Directive 2014/24

3. Article 56 (‘General principles’) provides:

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of criteria laid down in accordance with Articles 67 to 69, provided that the contracting authority has verified in accordance with Articles 59 to 61 that all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(b) the tender comes from a tenderer that is not excluded in accordance with Article 57 …’

4. Article 57 (‘Exclusion grounds’) states:

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(d) where the contracting authority has sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has entered into agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition;

At any time during the procedure, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4.

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

An economic operator which has been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement or concession award procedures shall not be entitled to make use of the possibility provided for under this paragraph during the period of exclusion resulting from that judgment in the Member States where the judgment is effective.

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. They shall, in particular, determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 6 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability. Where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period shall not exceed five years from the date of the conviction by final judgment in the cases referred to in paragraph 1 and three years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4.’

2. Directive 2014/25/EU (3)

5. Under Article 80 (‘Use of exclusion grounds and selection criteria provided for under Directive 2014/24/EU’):

‘1. The objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of economic operators requesting qualification in a qualification system and the objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of candidates and tenderers in open, restricted or negotiated procedures, in competitive dialogues or in innovation partnerships may include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57 of Directive 2014/24/EU on the terms and conditions set out therein.

Where the contracting entity is a contracting authority, those criteria and rules shall include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24/EU on the terms and conditions set out in that Article.

If so required by Member States, those criteria and rules shall, in addition, include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU on the terms and conditions set out in that Article.

B. Portuguese law

1. Decreto-lei n.º 18/2008, Código dos Contratos Públicos (4)

6. Article 55 (‘Impediments’) provides:

‘The following may not be candidates, tenderers or members of a group:

(c) natural persons who have received a penalty for grave professional misconduct and who, in the intervening period, have not been rehabilitated, and legal persons whose administrative, management or governing bodies have received such an administrative penalty and continue to perform their duties.

(f) entities which have received the ancillary penalty of prohibition from participating in public procurement procedures, provided for in special legislation, including in penalty systems relating to … competition …, during the period laid down in the decision imposing the penalty’.

7. Article 70 (‘Evaluation of tenders’) provides in paragraph 2:

‘2. Tenders shall be excluded where their evaluation indicates:

(g) the existence of compelling evidence of acts, agreements, practices or information that may distort the competition rules.’

2. Lei n.º 19/2012 da Concorrência (Law on competition) (5)

8. Article 71 (‘Ancillary penalties’) provides in paragraph 1(b) that, if justified by the seriousness of the infringement and the degree of fault of the infringer, the Autoridade de Concorrência (the Competition Authority; ‘AC’) may impose, in addition to a fine, the ancillary penalty of deprivation of the right to participate in certain public procurement procedures, provided that the practice constituting the infringement punishable by a fine occurred during or as a result of the relevant procedure.

II. Facts, dispute and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

9. On 18 January 2019, Infraestruturas de Portugal, S. A ('Infraestruturas') launched a procedure for the award of a contract for the supply of creosoted pine sleepers and rods for a base price of EUR 2 979 200. (6)

10. The undertakings Toscca – Equipamentos em Madeira, Lda. ('Toscca') and Futrifer, Indústrias Ferroviárias, S. A. ('Futrifer') participated in the procedure, each submitting a tender.

11. On 12 June 2019, the AC ordered Futrifer to pay a fine for having infringed the competition rules in procurement procedures (7) in 2014 and 2015. (8)

12. In particular, the AC found that Futrifer and other undertakings in the sector had colluded to fix prices and share the market for rail network maintenance services, in breach of Article 9(1) of Law No 19/2012 and Article 101(1) TFEU.

13. In its decision, the AC considered it unnecessary, in view of the circumstances of the case and the settlement proposal submitted by Futrifer, to impose on it the ancillary penalty of prohibition from tendering, provided for in Article 71(1)(b) of Law No 19/2012. (9)

14. On 27 July 2019, Infraestruturas awarded the contract in question to Futrifer.

15. Toscca challenged that decision before the Tribunal administrativo e fiscal de Viseu (Administrative and Tax Court, Viseu, Portugal; 'the TAF Viseu'). It asked that court to annul the award decision, to exclude the tender submitted by Futrifer and to award the contract to Toscca itself. In support of its action, it relied, in particular, on the AC's decision to impose a penalty on Futrifer.

16. The first-instance court dismissed Toscca's action on the ground that Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP applies only where the evidence of distortion of competition arises in the procedure forming the subject matter of the dispute.

17. Toscca appealed against the judgment of the TAF Viseu before the Tribunal central administrativo norte (North Central Administrative Court, Portugal). By judgment of 29 May 2020, that court found that the first-instance court had misinterpreted Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP and, in consequence, it set aside the judgment under appeal and ordered Infraestruturas to award the contract to Toscca.

18. Infraestruturas and Futrifer brought an appeal against the judgment of 29 May 2020 before the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court, Portugal), which set that judgment aside on the ground of failure to state reasons and ordered the case to be referred back to the North Central Administrative Court.

19. On 2 June 2021, the Tribunal central administrativo norte (North Central Administrative Court) delivered a judgment in which it again overturned the first-instance judgment and ordered Infraestruturas to award the contract to Toscca.

20. Infraestruturas and Futrifer brought an appeal against the judgment of 2 June 2021 before the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court), which has submitted the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Does the ground for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24/EU constitute a matter reserved for decision ["reserva de decisão"] by the contracting authority?

(2) May the national legislature fully replace the decision that should be taken by the contracting authority under Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24/EU with a generic decision (with the effects of a decision) from its national competition authority to impose an ancillary penalty consisting of prohibition from participating in public procurement procedures for a certain period, adopted in the context of the imposition of a fine for infringement of competition rules?

(3) Should the contracting authority's decision concerning the "reliability" of the economic operator in view of its compliance (or non-compliance) with the rules of competition law, beyond the scope of the specific tendering procedure, be interpreted as requiring an assessment based on the relative suitability of that economic operator, which constitutes a concrete expression of the right to good administration under Article 41(2)(c) of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union?

(4) May the solution adopted in Portuguese law under Article 55(1)(f) of the CCP, whereby the exclusion of an economic operator from a tendering procedure on grounds of infringement of competition rules unrelated to that specific procurement procedure is subject to a decision from the competition authority in the context of an application of an ancillary penalty consisting of a prohibition from tendering, a procedure in which it is the competition authority itself that assesses the relevance of the corrective measures taken, be regarded as consistent with EU law, specifically, Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24/EU?

(5) Furthermore, may the solution adopted under Portuguese law in Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP, which limits the possibility of excluding a tender due to significant evidence of acts, agreements, practices or information that are liable to distort competition rules in the specific procurement procedure in which such practices are detected, be regarded as consistent with EU law, and in particular with Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24/EU?'

III. Procedure before the Court

21. The request for a preliminary ruling was received at the Court on 2 February 2022.

22. Written observations were submitted by Futrifer, Toscca, the Czech, Hungarian and Portuguese Governments and the European Commission.

23. All of them, with the exception of the Czech and Hungarian Governments, took part in the hearing held on 7 March 2023.

IV. Assessment

A. Preliminary remarks

1. The applicable directive

24. The referring court seeks an interpretation only of Directive 2014/24 and does not refer to Directive 2014/25. The latter directive governs public contracts awarded by contracting authorities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors.

25. The subject matter of the contract whose award is at issue here is the supply of infrastructure components in the rail sector, that is to say, in a transport sector. In reply to a question put by the Court, the parties which took part in the hearing unanimously considered that that contract fell within the scope of Directive 2014/25, which applies specifically to 'activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway' (Article 11).

26. In any event, it is for the referring court to determine whether, in the light of its wording, the contract at issue is governed by Directive 2014/24 or, as everything seems to indicate, by Directive 2014/25.

27. It is true that, in practical terms, there is no appreciable difference in the effect of those directives as regards the point at issue: even if Directive 2014/25 were applicable, Article 80 thereof refers to 'the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57 of Directive 2014/24/EU on the terms and conditions set out therein'. (10)

28. However, the application of Directive 2014/25 might have some bearing on the (contested) 'discretion' of Member States to incorporate the optional grounds for exclusion into domestic law, as I will explain below. (11)

29. Having clarified that matter, I will refer below to Article 57 of Directive 2014/24.

2. Incorporation of Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24 into Portuguese law

30. The Commission's written observations triggered a debate, which continued at the hearing, concerning Member States' discretion not to transpose the optional grounds for exclusion set out in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24.

31. The Commission's arguments are as follows:

– Article 57(4) and recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 indicate that the legislature's intention was not to give Member States a free choice in whether or not to transpose the nine exclusion grounds contained in that provision. That choice is given to the contracting authorities, unless Member States require them to apply the exclusion grounds. Conversely, Member States cannot circumvent the transposition of one or more of those grounds.

– The optional ground for exclusion relating to the existence of agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition has not been incorporated into Portuguese law.

32. The issues raised by the Commission could be dealt with in this reference for a preliminary ruling if the second of those assertions were correct: without the transposition into domestic law of an optional ground for exclusion, it would be necessary to reconsider whether the case-law of the Court thus far (12) on Member States' discretion to transpose or not to transpose that category of exclusion grounds requires adjustment or even correction.

33. For the reasons I will set out below, my view is that the Commission's second assertion (supported by some of the written observations submitted in the preliminary ruling procedure) is at variance with the facts.

34. Decree-Law No 111-B/2017 amended the CCP in order to transpose Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25. In Article 1, the Portuguese legislature expressly states that the decree-law 'transposes', inter alia, Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25. (13)

35. The exclusion grounds ('impediments') contained in the CCP as amended are listed in Article 55(1)(a) to (l) thereof and they mirror, with some nuances, the corresponding grounds set out in Article 57(1) and (4) of Directive 2014/24.

36. As regards the exclusion ground at issue, Article 55(1)(f) of the CCP provides: 'The following may not be candidates[;] … entities which have received the ancillary penalty of prohibition from participating in public procurement procedures, provided for in special legislation, including in penalty systems relating to … competition …, during the period laid down in the decision imposing the penalty'.

37. The CCP also contains another provision (Article 70(2)(g)) under which tenders must be excluded where their evaluation reveals 'the existence of compelling evidence of acts, agreements, practices or information that may distort the competition rules'. (14)

38. In view of those two provisions, I have difficulty in understanding some of the statements made in the written observations of Futrifer and in those of the Portuguese Government itself (the latter in ambiguous terms which it did not clarify at the hearing) (15) on the non-transposition of Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24 into the CCP.

39. The wording of those two provisions of the CCP demonstrates, in my view, that the Portuguese legislature unequivocally intended to introduce into (or to maintain in) (16) its legal order the content of Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24. Both that provision and the two national provisions mentioned seek to combat, in the field of public procurement, agreements by economic operators designed to distort competition.

40. Quite a different matter is whether, in regulating that exclusion ground in the way it did, the Portuguese legislature strictly complied with Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24 or whether, on the contrary, its approach distorted that provision, departed from its basic principles or improperly reduced its scope.

41. The Court has recalled that '… once a Member State decides to incorporate one of the optional grounds for exclusion provided for in Directive 2014/24, it must respect the essential characteristics thereof, as expressed in that directive. By stipulating that the Member States are to specify "the implementing conditions for this Article" "having regard to Union law", Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 prevents Member States from distorting the grounds for exclusion laid down in that provision or ignoring the objectives or principles underlying each of those grounds'. (17)

42. For the reasons I will set out below, I consider that, when incorporating the content of Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24 into domestic law, the transposition effected by the Portuguese provisions was not entirely consistent with that directive: in particular, Article 55(1)(f) of the CCP improperly curtails the contracting authority's discretion to exclude tenderers involved in collusive practices, by requiring that their conduct must have previously been the subject of an ancillary penalty of prohibition from participating in public procurement procedures imposed by the AC.

43. The fact that this is the case, as I believe it is, does not mean, however, that there was no transposition at all, but rather that the transposition was defective. Furthermore, that defective transposition could possibly be remedied by a more expansive interpretation of Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP, that is to say, in line with Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24 (consistent interpretation). (18)

44. In short, I do not think that the present reference for a preliminary ruling is the appropriate forum to reopen discussions on Member States' discretion not to include the optional grounds for exclusion in domestic law, precisely when the Portuguese legislature chose the opposite approach (even though that approach is not as satisfactory as it should be, from the point of view of EU law).

45. The case-law of the Court thus far concerning Member States' discretion in this field does not, of course, disregard the fact that directives are binding, as to the result to be achieved, upon each Member State (Article 288 TFEU). Starting from that premiss, the different formations of the Court have found that Directive 2014/24, as regards the optional grounds for exclusion, is correctly implemented in the terms set out above. (19)

46. The reopening of discussions referred to earlier would, moreover, be a particularly delicate exercise as regards its outcome:

– It could result in the conversion of the optional grounds for exclusion into mandatory grounds, without any intervention by the Member States as referred to in Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24.

– It could fragment the unitary system underlying the reference to Directive 2014/24 in the provisions on exclusion grounds in Directive 2014/25. Under the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25, the criteria and rules applying to the exclusion of candidates are to include the optional grounds listed in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 if so required by the Member States.

B. First question referred

47. The referring court enquires whether the exclusion ground set out in Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24/EU constitutes a matter 'reserved for decision' by the contracting authority.

48. The Court has already answered that question: 'it is clear from the wording of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 that the EU legislature intended to confer on the contracting authority, and on it alone, the task of assessing whether a candidate or tenderer must be excluded from a procurement procedure during the stage of selecting the tenderers'. (20)

49. That statement of the Court is consistent with Article 56(1)(b) of Directive 2014/24: the contracting authority must verify that 'the tender comes from a tenderer that is not excluded in accordance with Article 57'. It is therefore for the contracting authority to decide, in all cases, whether a tenderer should be excluded from the procurement procedure.

50. The categorical statement reproduced above must, however, be qualified where the competent authority, by a prior final decision, has made a finding of conduct incompatible with access to procurement procedures or has banned the tenderer from participating in such procedures.

51. The backdrop against which the question is submitted (that is, in the presence of anticompetitive conduct attributable to a tenderer) gives rise to three possible scenarios:

– If the operator has previously been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement procedures (last subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24) for having engaged in anticompetitive conduct, (21) the contracting authority must respect that prohibition. The economic operator subject to the prohibition is not entitled to avail itself of the possibility to demonstrate its reliability (corrective measures or self-cleaning) during the period of exclusion resulting from the judgment in the Member State in which the judgment is enforceable. (22)

– Where the prohibition from participating was ordered not by final judgment but by decision of the AC, the contracting authority is not inevitably bound by it: it may check whether that operator has taken the corrective measures referred to above and may nevertheless allow the operator to participate in the contract award procedure.

– The same would apply a fortiori if the AC did not impose a prohibition from participating in the procurement procedure but did impose a penalty on the economic operator for collusive conduct.

52. I will address the second and third situations which I have just described in my analysis of the other questions referred for a preliminary ruling. To reply to the first question in the broad terms in which it is formulated, an answer which sets out the general rule seems to me to be sufficient, subject to the exceptions arising from Directive 2014/24 itself.

C. Second question referred

53. The referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, whether, in the context of Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24, the national legislature may 'fully replace the decision that should be taken by the contracting authority' with a decision of the AC imposing on an operator, as an ancillary penalty, a prohibition from participating in procurement procedures.

54. Law No 19/2012 allows the AC to impose on operators that have engaged in anticompetitive practices, in addition to a fine, the ancillary penalty (23) of prohibition from participating in public procurement procedures for a certain period (Article 71(1)(b)).

55. Nonetheless, as I have already explained, the AC expressly decided that it was not appropriate to impose the ancillary penalty on Futrifer.

1. Inadmissibility

56. Based on that premiss, however interesting, from other angles and in general terms, the issues raised by the referring court may be, the question is hypothetical in relation to the instant case.

57. The question would be meaningful if, in the presence of a decision of the AC imposing a prohibition from tendering, it was necessary to examine – as requested by the referring court – the extent to which that decision would be sufficient to 'replace' the (subsequent) decision of the contracting authority.

58. However, since it is clear that, in the proceedings against Futrifer, the AC purposely did not impose on it the ancillary penalty of prohibition from tendering, I do not see how the present dispute would benefit from a ruling on the consequences of that (non-existent) prohibition.

59. The second question referred for a preliminary ruling is therefore inadmissible. (24)

2. In the alternative, as to the substance

60. If the Court disagrees with me and decides to address the substance of the question referred for a preliminary ruling, my position on the matter is as follows.

61. In my view (leaving aside the cases in which the prohibition from participating was imposed by final judgment), (25) the AC's decision prohibiting an operator from participating in procurement procedures does not bind the contracting authority to the point of 'fully replacing its decision'.

62. The contracting authority may, also in that situation, verify whether the economic operator subject to the penalty has taken the corrective measures referred to in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 and nevertheless allow it to participate in the procurement procedure.

63. I would point out that the economic operator has an unequivocal right to demonstrate its reliability by means of those corrective measures, a right which flows directly from Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24. (26)

64. My proposed course of action (reserving discretion to verify the corrective measures to the contracting authority, notwithstanding the prohibition from tendering imposed by the competition authority) allows a balance to be struck between two approaches:

– On the one hand, the approach that seeks to preserve the powers of the contracting authority, which must have the freedom to evaluate the candidate's reliability without necessarily being bound by the findings of other public bodies. (27)

– On the other, the approach that is respectful of the duties of the public authorities responsible for pursuing, in particular, anticompetitive conduct. (28) The contracting authority must take account of the decisions of those authorities since, ultimately, 'the existence of conduct restrictive of competition may be regarded as proved only after the adoption of such a decision, which legally classifies the facts to that effect'. (29)

65. It is true, however, that as the Court has held in the light of recital 102 of Directive 2014/24, (30) Member States have 'a broad discretion … when designating the authorities responsible for assessing the appropriateness of the compliance measures. In that regard, … Member States may entrust that task of assessment to any authority other than the contracting authority or contracting entity'. (31)

66. In short, when assessing whether to apply Article 57(4)(d), the contracting authority may either:

– exclude, in the absence of a prior decision by another authority, an economic operator in respect of whom there are sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the operator has entered into agreements with other operators aimed at distorting competition; or – where the relevant authority has found that those anticompetitive agreements exist, (32) and whether or not that authority has imposed a prohibition from participating in procurement procedures, assess whether the corrective measures taken by the tenderer or candidate demonstrate its reliability, with the result that the tenderer or candidate should not be excluded from the procurement procedure, pursuant to Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24. A Member State may, however, entrust the assessment of the corrective measures to an authority other than the contracting authority, in which case the latter must comply with that assessment.

D. Third question referred

67. The wording of the third question referred for a preliminary ruling is actually made up of two questions:

– first, whether 'the contracting authority's decision concerning the "reliability" of the economic operator in view of its compliance (or non-compliance) with the rules of competition law' may be taken ‘beyond the scope of the specific tendering procedure’; and – second, whether that assessment of the economic operator’s relative suitability must be ‘sufficiently substantiated’ by an ‘independent appraisal’ by the contracting authority which other competitors may challenge. (33)

68. Again, the starting premiss for this question appears to be that the contracting authority’s decision was preceded by the ancillary measure (prohibition from tendering) ordered by the AC. On that basis, the referring court enquires whether the reasons underlying the ancillary measure are ‘of the same type and nature’ as the ‘reliability assessment’ to be carried out by the contracting authority. (34)

69. Construed in that way, the question comes up against the same problems of inadmissibility (on account of being hypothetical) as those already mentioned in relation to the second question. However, in its arguments, the referring court refers to the possibility of the contracting authority deciding that an economic operator is suitable despite having been penalised for collusive conduct, where the penalty imposed did not include a prohibition from tendering. (35)

70. I will therefore answer both questions in line with the approach taken by the referring court described above.

1. Assessment of reliability or suitability by the contracting authority

71. The answer to this part of the question referred actually follows from my answer to the two previous questions. The contracting authority retains its full discretion to assess the reliability of the tenderer or candidate, following the decision of the competition authority, in the terms set out above.

72. Recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 states that ‘contracting authorities should … be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable, for instance because of … other forms of grave professional misconduct, such as violations of competition rules’. (36) The second paragraph of that recital refers to performance in previous contracts ‘that casts serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator’. (37)

73. It is no surprise that, in the light of that recital, the Court has stated that ‘the option available to any contracting authority to exclude a tenderer from a procurement procedure is particularly intended to enable it to assess the integrity and reliability of each of the tenderers’. (38)

74. The optional grounds for exclusion enable Member States to satisfy public interest objectives and are, in any event, intended to ensure the reliability, (39) diligence, professional honesty and responsibility of the tenderer. (40)

75. Specifically, the Court has held, as regards ‘the objective underlying Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24’, that ‘the option, or even the obligation, for the contracting authority to exclude an economic operator from participating in a contract award procedure is intended in particular to enable it to assess the integrity and reliability of each of the economic operators’. (41)

76. Furthermore, on a proper interpretation of Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24, the verification of the tenderer’s integrity and reliability should cover its past anticompetitive conduct, not only collusive arrangements in the ‘specific’ procurement procedure which the contracting authority is to decide on.

77. That follows in particular from the second subparagraph of Article 57(5) of Directive 2014/24, under which contracting authorities may exclude an economic operator where it transpires ‘that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4’. (42)

78. In addition to the foregoing considerations, it should be noted that the contracting authority may, alternatively, apply Article 57(4)(c) of Directive 2014/24, basing its decision to exclude the tenderer on the fact that the tenderer was guilty of grave professional misconduct.

79. The concept of grave professional misconduct, which is a ground for exclusion under Portuguese law, (43) may also encompass anticompetitive conduct even if such conduct attracts a specific type of exclusion: that is borne out by recital 101 of Directive 2014/24, mentioned above, which (in line with the Court's approach to the preceding directive) (44) considers infringements of the competition rules to be a form of grave professional misconduct. (45)

80. It is true, as was pointed out at the hearing, that that possibility results in a degree of overlap between the two optional grounds for exclusion. However, I think that if it is viewed as being of a complementary nature, it serves to achieve the objectives of Directive 2014/24.

81. Where Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24 applies, the logical course of action would be for the contracting authority to invoke that ground for exclusion. For all other conduct which infringes the competition rules but does not fall within the scope of 'agreements with other economic operators', the contracting authority may have recourse to the more generic wording of point (c).

82. If the aim is to maximise the contracting authority's ability to assess the reliability of tenderers and candidates, I see no reason to limit its discretion by defining which 'infringements of the competition rules' have been committed. Recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 again permits the use of Article 57(4)(c) and (d) thereof in the terms set out above. It thus gives rise to concurrent rules which the interpreting authority will have to address by applying the rule which is best suited to the circumstances of each case.

2. Obligation to state reasons

83. The contracting authority is obliged to 'carry out a specific and individual assessment of the conduct of the entity concerned'. (46) That assessment must be reflected in a statement of reasons for the measure adopted enabling the addressees, and any competitors, to challenge it before the courts. (47)

84. Where (as here) one of the competitors claims that another falls within the scope of a ground for exclusion under Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24, the contracting authority must explain, in particular, why it considers that candidate to be reliable. Where appropriate, the statement of reasons must include the assessment of the corrective measures taken by the tenderer. (48)

85. The requirement to state reasons may be satisfied if the contracting authority endorses, directly or by reference, the arguments taken into account by the sectoral authority (here, the AC) when finding that an operator has colluded with others to distort competition.

E. Fourth question referred

86. The referring court entertains doubts as to whether the 'solution adopted in Portuguese law under Article 55(1)(f) of the CCP' is compatible with Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24.

87. The referring court's interpretation of that provision of the CCP (which the Court must follow, since it originates from the highest administrative court in Portugal) is as follows: where the exclusion of an economic operator is due to the 'infringement of competition rules unrelated to [the] specific procurement procedure', Article 55(1)(f) of the CCP makes that exclusion dependent on the AC's decision 'in the context of an application of an ancillary penalty consisting of a prohibition from tendering'. The referring court adds that, in that procedure, the AC is to assess the suitability of the corrective measures taken.

88. This question is a hypothetical one for the same reasons as those set out in the analysis of the second question referred: (49)

– first, the AC expressly ruled out the ancillary penalty as a response to Futrifer's conduct;

– second, it is not apparent from the documents before the Court that any of the operators concerned relied on the adoption of the corrective measures referred to in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 in order to bypass a (non-existent) prior prohibition from tendering.

89. The referring court's questions therefore overstep the boundaries of the dispute, in the light of the facts at issue, and require, de facto, an advisory opinion from the Court on matters unrelated to those facts.

90. To overcome the objection of inadmissibility, the question could be reformulated so that it is construed as arising where the AC considers the collusive agreement to be proven and punishes it with a fine, but without adding the prohibition from tendering.

91. In any event, either in accordance with that reformulation or in the alternative, the answer I propose is based on my earlier considerations. Thus:

– A national provision (or the interpretation thereof) which requires, as a necessary condition for its application, the prior determination of a competition authority would not be compatible with Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24.

– Member States may entrust the assessment of corrective measures to authorities other than contracting authorities, such as the AC. It is for the referring court to determine whether that is the case under Portuguese law and, if so, to verify 'that the national rules put in place for that purpose satisfy all the requirements laid down in Article [57(6) of Directive 2014/24]'. (50)

F. Fifth question referred

92. The referring court turns its attention to Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP in order to enquire whether its content is consistent with Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24.

93. The referring court interprets that article of the CCP as 'limit[ing] the possibility of excluding a tender due to significant evidence of acts, agreements, practices or information that are liable to distort competition rules in the specific procurement procedure in which such practices are detected'.

94. Article 70 of the CCP applies, at least on a literal reading, at a later stage of the procurement procedure: while Article 55 applies at the initial stage (selection of the operator based on qualitative criteria), Article 70 applies to the following phase (evaluation of the tenders submitted). In order to reach that second stage, the tenderer or candidate must naturally have passed the first stage, that is to say, it must not have been previously excluded from the procedure.

95. The national provision is unobjectionable if its interpretation in all cases leaves intact the contracting authority's discretion to find that, prior to the specific procurement procedure it has to decide on, a tenderer engaged in anticompetitive conduct resulting in its exclusion.

96. In other words, no provision of Directive 2014/24 is infringed if Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP merely allows the contracting authority to exclude a tenderer's bid where it finds that the bid was the outcome of collusive conduct in the context of the procurement procedure itself. (51)

97. The wording of Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24 is sufficiently broad to cover all the possible ways in which the contracting authority may become aware of conduct by a tenderer aimed at distorting competition.

98. In my Opinion in Vossloh Laeis, I argued that Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 confers certain functions having investigative connotations on contracting authorities, (52) a position that the Court endorsed in its judgment in that case. (53)

99. In the exercise of those functions, contracting authorities are empowered to detect the existence of agreements by tenderers entered into in connection with the procurement procedure underway which distort competition. It is possible that, as the Commission points out, the contracting authority may encounter difficulties in proving the anticompetitive conduct. In addition to not being insurmountable in practice, those difficulties do not justify limiting the contracting authority's discretion to assess collusive conduct which it has found to exist.

V. Conclusion

100. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court of Justice declare the second and fourth questions referred for a preliminary ruling to be inadmissible and give the following answer to the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court, Portugal):

Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that:

– the optional ground for exclusion set out in that provision is to be assessed by the contracting authority without being bound by decisions of other authorities, unless an operator has been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement procedures, during the period of exclusion resulting from that judgment in the Member State where the judgment is enforceable;

– the contracting authority must state, directly or by reference, the reasons for allowing a tenderer who has previously been penalised for anticompetitive conduct to participate in the procurement procedure;

– it does not preclude a national provision which permits the contracting authority to exclude a tender due to significant evidence of acts, agreements, practices or information that are liable to distort the competition rules in the specific procurement procedure in which such conduct is detected.

In the alternative, I suggest that the Court of Justice give the following answer to the second and fourth questions referred for a preliminary ruling:

– where a competition authority has imposed on an economic operator an ancillary penalty of prohibition from participating in public procurement procedures for a certain period, the contracting authority retains its discretion not to exclude that operator from the procurement procedure in the circumstances referred to in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24;

– the economic operator is entitled to provide evidence that it has taken sufficient measures to demonstrate its reliability under Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, which the contracting authority (or the authority empowered for that purpose under national law) must assess, including where a competition authority has imposed an ancillary penalty on the economic operator prohibiting it from participating in procurement procedures.

11 Point 46 of this Opinion.

12 The prevailing view expressed in the judgments of 19 June 2019, Meca (C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507; ‘judgment in Meca’), paragraph 33, and of 30 January 2020, Tim (C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 34), was confirmed in the judgment of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others (C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 28), as follows: ‘In accordance with Article 57(4) and (7) of Directive 2014/24, the Member States are free not to apply the facultative grounds for exclusion set out in that directive or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level’.

13 The fact that Decree-Law No 111-B/2017 did not amend some of the CCP’s provisions hitherto in force is irrelevant for the present purposes.

14 Toscca relies on that provision in its written observations to argue that ‘the Portuguese legislature transposed Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24, retaining the wording of Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP (currently in the version resulting from the 2017 reform)’. Emphasis added.

15 Paragraphs 80 to 84 of its written observations. Read alongside the preceding paragraphs, those paragraphs ultimately show that, by means of Article 70 of the CCP in conjunction with Article 55(1)(f) thereof, the Portuguese legislature incorporated the exclusion ground at issue. The Portuguese Government made this very clear in paragraph 71 of its observations: ‘the provisions of Article 55(1)(f) and Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP are fully in line with Directive 2014/24, in particular Article 57(4)(d) thereof’.

16 For the purposes of complying with the obligation to transpose the provisions of a directive into domestic law, it is sufficient if pre-existing national legislation includes the rules that substantively transpose those provisions. The transposition of a directive into domestic law does not necessarily require the binding content of the directive to be enacted in precisely the same words in a provision postdating that directive. See, to that effect, judgment of 10 June 2021, Ultimo Portfolio Investment (Luxembourg) (C-303/20, EU:C:2021:479, paragraphs 33 to 36). In particular, in paragraph 35 the Court stated that in order to determine ‘whether national legislation adequately implements the obligations resulting from a given directive, it is important to take into account not only the legislation specifically adopted for the purposes of transposing that directive, but also all the available and applicable legal rules’.

17 Judgment in Meca, paragraph 33.

18 That appears to have been the view taken by the Tribunal central administrativo norte (North Central Administrative Court) in its judgment of 29 May 2020 upholding Toscca's claim, as is apparent from Infraestruturas' arguments set out in paragraph 7 of the order for reference: according to that court, Article 70(2)(g) of the CCP 'necessarily also encompasses past instances of evidence of anticompetitive conduct by competitors not present or mentioned in the competitor's tender' (emphasis added).

---

23 Law No 19/2012 describes that prohibition as a 'penalty'. It does not therefore give rise to a debate concerning its legal nature, which is at issue in other legal systems.

24 Futrifer argues that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible in its entirety because none of the questions, which it considers to be general and hypothetical, are relevant to the resolution of the dispute. The Commission, more succinctly, criticises the fact that the referring court 'appears to invite the Court of Justice to rule, in a broad and almost abstract manner, on the transposition of Directive 2014/24', but it does not go so far as to challenge the admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling. For my part, I consider Futrifer's criticism to be well placed as regards the second and fourth questions referred.

35 That seems to be the vague gist of paragraph 2.2.6 of the order for reference.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Tenth Chamber)

8 December 2022 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 2014/24/EU – Article 18(1) – Principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality – Decision to withdraw an invitation to tender – Tenders submitted separately by two tenderers belonging to the same economic operator and constituting the two most economically advantageous tenders – Refusal of the successful tenderer to sign the contract – Decision of the contracting authority to refuse the tender of the next tenderer, terminate the procedure and issue a new call for tenders)

In Case C-769/21,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Administratīvā rajona tiesa (District Administrative Court, Latvia), made by decision of 13 December 2021, received at the Court on 13 December 2021, in the proceedings

AAS ‘BTA Baltic Insurance Company’

Iepirkumu uzraudzības birojs,

THE COURT (Tenth Chamber), composed of E. Regan (Rapporteur), President of the Fifth Chamber, acting as President of the Tenth Chamber, I. Jarukaitis and Z. Csehi, Judges, Advocate General: G. Pitruzzella,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– AAS ‘BTA Baltic Insurance Company’, by M. Brizgo, advokāts,

– the Latvian Government, by J. Davidoviča and K. Pommere, acting as Agents, – the European Commission, by P. Ondrůšek, A. Sauka and G. Wils, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between AAS BTA Baltic Insurance Company (‘Baltic’), on the one hand, and, on the other, the Tieslietu ministrija (Ministry of Justice, Latvia) and the Iepirkumu uzraudzības birojs (Procurement Monitoring Bureau, Latvia), concerning a decision to terminate a public procurement procedure for a health insurance services contract.

Legal context

3 Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

4 Article 55 of that directive, entitled ‘Informing candidates and tenderers’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Contracting authorities shall as soon as possible inform each candidate and tenderer of decisions reached concerning the conclusion of a framework agreement, the award of the contract or admittance to a dynamic purchasing system, including the grounds for any decision not to conclude a framework agreement, not to award a contract for which there has been a call for competition, to recommence the procedure or not to implement a dynamic purchasing system.’

Latvian law

5 Article 2 of the Publisko iepirkumu likums (Law on public procurement) of 15 December 2016 (Latvijas Vēstnesis, 2016, No 254) is worded as follows:

‘The purpose of this law is to ensure:

(1) transparency of procurement;

(2) free competition between suppliers, and their equal and fair treatment;

(3) efficient use of the contracting authority’s resources by minimising its risk.’

6 Under Paragraphs 23 and 24 of Ministru kabineta noteikumi Nr.107 ‘Iepirkuma procedūru un metu konkursu norises kārtība’ (Decree No 107 of the Council of Ministers on public procurement procedures and competitions) of 28 February 2017 (Latvijas Vēstnesis, 2017, No 45):

‘23. If the tenderer to which the procurement contract has been awarded declines to conclude the said contract with the contracting authority, the procurement committee shall have the power to decide to award the procurement contract to the tenderer which has submitted the next most economically advantageous tender or to terminate the procurement procedure without selecting any tender. Where a decision has been taken to award the procurement contract to the tenderer which has submitted the next most economically advantageous tender, but the tenderer in question declines to conclude the said contract, the procurement committee shall make a decision to terminate the procurement procedure without selecting any tender.

24. Before taking a decision on whether to award the procurement contract to the tenderer which has submitted the next most economically advantageous tender, the procurement committee shall assess whether that tenderer and the tenderer originally selected which declined to conclude the contract in question with the contracting authority must not be regarded together as a single economic operator. Where necessary, the procurement committee shall have the power to require the next tenderer to provide a declaration and, where necessary, evidence that it and the tenderer originally selected must not be regarded together as a single economic operator. If the next tenderer and the tenderer originally selected must be regarded together as a single economic operator, the procurement committee shall decide to terminate the procurement procedure without selecting any tender.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

7 The Ministry of Justice issued, as contracting authority, a call for tenders for the award of a public contract for health insurance for its employees and those of the Valsts zemes dienests (State Land Service, Latvia), the Datu valsts inspekcija (National Data Protection Agency, Latvia), the Maksātnespējas kontroles dienests (Insolvency Control Service, Latvia) and the Patentu valde (Patent Office, Latvia).

8 A number of tenderers, including Baltic and Compensa Life Vienna Insurance Group SE Latvijas filiāle (‘Compensa’), submitted tenders in order to be awarded that public contract.

9 By decision of 19 November 2020, the procurement committee of the Ministry of Justice found that the tender submitted by Compensa was the most economically advantageous tender. However, that company declined to conclude the procurement contract.

10 By decision of 1 December 2020, that procurement committee stated that Baltic was the next most economically advantageous tenderer eligible to be awarded the contract, while requiring, on the basis of Paragraph 24 of Decree No 107 of 28 February 2017, a declaration and evidence that Baltic and Compensa should not be regarded as constituting one and the same economic operator.

11 In response to that request, Baltic stated that it had to be regarded as forming a single economic operator with Compensa, while declaring that it had prepared its tender independently and without coordination with Compensa.

12 In those circumstances, by decision of 9 December 2020, the procurement committee of the Ministry of Justice, relying on Paragraph 23 of Decree No 107 of 28 February 2017, terminated the public procurement procedure.

13 On 16 December 2020, the Ministry of Justice launched a new procurement procedure.

14 By decision of 21 January 2021, the Procurement Monitoring Bureau, hearing a complaint from Baltic, confirmed the decision of 9 December 2020. It noted that Paragraph 24 of Decree No 107 of 28 February 2017 requires the contracting authority, for the purpose of preventing the possibility of a concerted practice between undertakings in the same group once tenders have been submitted, to terminate the public procurement procedure where it finds that the tenderer originally selected, which has declined to conclude the contract with the contracting authority, and the next tenderer, must be regarded as constituting a single market participant. Moreover, according to the Procurement Monitoring Bureau, the contracting authority, in accordance with Paragraph 23 of that decree, is entitled, in any event, to terminate the public contract if the successful tenderer declines to conclude the said contract with the contracting authority, as no other tenderer has the subjective right to require that it be awarded the tender.

15 Baltic then brought an action before the Administratīvā rajona tiesa (District Administrative Court, Latvia), the referring court, seeking to have that decision annulled.

16 In Baltic’s opinion, the contracting authority was under an obligation to evaluate its explanations concerning the nature of the link between the two companies and the preparation of the tenders and thereby strike a fair balance between all of the principles enshrined in Article 2 of the Law on public procurement.

17 The presumption in Paragraph 24 of Decree No 107 of 28 February 2017 that undertakings in the same group will have coordinated their tenders in order to distort competition is disproportionate and infringes the principles laid down both in Directive 2014/24 and in the judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur (C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317).

18 The fact that the amount of the tender of the tenderer originally selected was higher than that of its tender proves that the tenders were not coordinated, meaning that the withdrawal of the first tender could not confer any advantage on the companies from the group.

19 The Procurement Monitoring Bureau considers, for its part, that the judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur (C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317), refers only to the right of linked undertakings to take part in a public procurement procedure and to submit tenders, which has not been restricted in the present case.

20 That situation must be distinguished from one in which the contracting authority is required to terminate the public procurement procedure where the selected tenderer declines to conclude the public procurement contract in question. In the first case, referred to in the judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur (C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317), the contracting authority, after having rejected the tenders of the linked undertakings, selects another tender and the public procurement leads to the award of a contract, whereas, in the second case, the contracting authority terminates the public procurement procedure without selecting any tender, thereby restoring competition and giving all tenderers the chance to take part in a new procedure.

21 The Ministry of Justice further submits that, in any event, Paragraph 23 of Decree No 107 of 28 February 2017 confers on the contracting authority discretionary power over the continuation of the procurement procedure where the successful tenderer declines to conclude the contract in question.

22 According to the Administratīvā rajona tiesa (District Administrative Court), the outcome of the dispute before it depends on the question whether the mere fact that Baltic and Compensa must be regarded as constituting one and the same economic operator – which is not disputed in the present case – has an effect on the right of the contracting authority to decide to terminate the public procurement procedure.

23 That court considers that a Member State does indeed have a wide discretion to provide for the possibility of adopting a decision to withdraw the invitation to tender. In accordance with the case-law of the Court, as is set out in the judgment of 11 December 2014, Croce Amica One Italia (C-440/13, EU:C:2014:2435, paragraphs 33 to 35), the grounds for withdrawal may be based, inter alia, on reasons which reflect the assessment as to whether it is expedient, from the point of view of the public interest, to carry an award procedure to its conclusion, having regard, among other things, to any change that may arise in the economic context or factual circumstances, or indeed the needs of the contracting authority concerned.

24 In the present case, however, it is apparent from the account of the facts that, notwithstanding the refusal of the successful tenderer to conclude the public contract, the contracting authority intended to continue with the procurement procedure by awarding the public contract to the tenderer which had submitted the next most economically advantageous tender. The contracting authority's needs did not change, as is confirmed by the launch of a new procurement procedure, and the next tender met the contracting authority's needs and requirements. The contracting authority nevertheless terminated, pursuant to Paragraph 24 of Decree No 107 of 28 February 2017, the public procurement procedure, on the ground that the two tenderers concerned had to be regarded as constituting one and the same economic operator.

25 The referring court has doubts as to whether such national legislation is compatible with the principles of EU law applicable to public procurement procedures.

26 It is true that that legislation does not prohibit participation in the same public contract by undertakings linked by a relationship of control or affiliated to one another. It is therefore consistent with the Court's case-law resulting, in particular, from the judgments of 19 May 2009, Assitur (C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraphs 29 and 30), and of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London (C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraphs 34 to 36), according to which EU law precludes national legislation which lays down an absolute prohibition on simultaneous and competing participation in the same tendering procedure by undertakings linked by a relationship of control or affiliated to one another, without allowing them an opportunity to demonstrate the independence of their tenders, such legislation being contrary to the EU interest in ensuring the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders.

27 It follows, however, from that same case-law that undertakings linked by a relationship of control or affiliated to one another have the right to be awarded the contract in which they have participated. Paragraph 24 of Decree No 107 of 28 February 2017, however, prohibits the contracting authority from awarding the public contract to the next tenderer where that tenderer and the tenderer originally selected which has withdrawn its tender together constitute one and the same economic operator. Such legislation is therefore based, in essence, on the irrebuttable presumption that the two tenderers have acted in concert and that the successful tenderer withdrew its tender on that ground.

28 The referring court considers, therefore, that the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings, in spite of the wide discretion enjoyed by the Member States to establish the cases in which a public procurement procedure must be terminated in circumstances where the needs of the contracting authority have not changed and the next tender meets the contracting authority's needs and requirements, is incompatible with the principles laid down in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, in particular with the obligation on Member States to treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and in accordance with the principle of proportionality. The stage of the public procurement procedure at issue is of no importance for the purpose of applying the case-law of the Court cited in paragraph 26 above, that case-law also being applicable to a decision to terminate that procedure. That legislation should therefore allow the tenderer concerned the opportunity to demonstrate the independence of its tender.

29 In those circumstances, the Administratīvā rajona tiesa (District Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Is national legislation which requires the contracting authority to terminate a procurement procedure in a situation where the tenderer originally selected, which declined to enter into the procurement contract with the contracting authority, must be considered to constitute a single market participant with the next tenderer, whose tender meets the contracting authority's needs and requirements, compatible with the principles of procurement defined in Article 18(1) of Directive [2014/24], in particular with the requirement for Member States to treat economic operators equally and without discrimination, and with the principle of proportionality?'

30 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether general principles of EU law, such as, in particular, the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, within the meaning of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which requires the contracting authority to terminate a public procurement procedure where, in the event of withdrawal of the tenderer originally selected for having submitted the most economically advantageous tender, the tenderer which submitted the next most economically advantageous tender constitutes with the tenderer originally selected a single economic operator.

31 In that regard, it should be recalled at the outset that, as is apparent from the case-law of the Court, EU law does not preclude Member States from providing for the possibility, referred to in Article 55(1) of Directive 2014/24, of adopting a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender on grounds which reflect, in particular, the assessment as to whether it is expedient, from the point of view of the public interest, to carry an award procedure to its conclusion, having regard, among other things, to any change that may arise in the economic context or factual circumstances, the needs of the contracting authority concerned or the insufficient degree of competition where, at the conclusion of the award procedure in question, only one tenderer was qualified to perform the contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 December 2014, Croce Amica One Italia, C-440/13, EU:C:2014:2435, paragraph 35).

32 However, such a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender must be adopted in compliance with the rules of EU law, in particular with general principles of EU law such as the principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality, which are also referred to in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 (see, to that effect, judgments of 18 June 2002, HI, C-92/00, EU:C:2002:379, paragraphs 42 and 45 to 47, and of 11 December 2014, Croce Amica One Italia, C-440/13, EU:C:2014:2435, paragraphs 33, 34 and 36).

33 In the present case, it is clear that national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, by requiring the contracting authority to terminate a public procurement procedure in the circumstances referred to in paragraph 30 of the present judgment, seeks to prevent any potential collusion between participants in the same procedure for the award of a public contract and to safeguard the equal treatment of candidates and the transparency of the procedure (see, by analogy, judgment of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 31).

34 In accordance with the principle of proportionality, such legislation must not, however, according to the case-law of the Court, go beyond what is necessary to achieve those objectives (see, to that effect, judgment of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

35 It should be recalled, in this connection, that the EU rules on public procurement were adopted in pursuance of the establishment of a single market, the purpose of which is to ensure freedom of movement and eliminate restrictions on competition (judgment of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

36 In that context, it is the concern of EU law to ensure the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders (judgment of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited).

37 It thus follows, according to settled case-law, that the automatic exclusion of candidates or tenderers that are in a relationship of control or association with other competitors goes beyond that which is necessary to prevent collusive behaviour and, as a result, to ensure the application of the principle of equal treatment and compliance with the obligation of transparency. Such an automatic exclusion, in so far as it constitutes an irrebuttable presumption of mutual interference in the respective tenders, for the same contract, of undertakings linked by a relationship of control or of association and accordingly precludes the possibility for those candidates or tenderers of showing that their tenders are independent, is contrary to the EU interest in ensuring the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders (judgment of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraphs 35 and 36 and the case-law cited).

38 In this regard, the Court has already held that groups of undertakings can have different forms and objectives, which do not necessarily preclude controlled undertakings from enjoying a certain autonomy in the conduct of their commercial policy and their economic activities, inter alia, in the area of their participation in the award of public contracts. Relationships between undertakings in the same group may in fact be governed by specific provisions such as to guarantee both independence and confidentiality in the drawing-up of tenders which may be submitted simultaneously by the undertakings in question in the same tendering procedure (judgment of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited).

39 Observance of the principle of proportionality therefore requires that the contracting authority be required to examine and assess the facts, in order to determine whether the relationship between two entities has actually influenced the respective content of the tenders submitted in the same tendering procedure, a finding of such influence, in any form, being sufficient for those undertakings to be excluded from the procedure (judgment of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 38 and the case-law cited).

40 That case-law, developed in relation to national legislation providing for the automatic exclusion of participation in a public procurement procedure, applies in the same way to legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings requiring the contracting authority, at the latter stage of the tender, to terminate such a procedure.

41 While it is true that such legislation does not automatically exclude tenderers belonging to the same economic entity from participating in the same public procurement procedure, its effects are similar.

42 In that regard, it should be noted that, by providing for the automatic closure of a public procurement procedure where, in the event of withdrawal of the tenderer originally selected for having submitted the most economically advantageous tender, the tenderer ranked in second place, which had submitted the next most economically advantageous tender, constitutes with the tenderer originally selected a single market participant, national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, establishes an irrebuttable presumption that those tenderers acted in concert in the preparation of their tenders or after their submission, on the sole ground that they belong to the same economic entity, without their being able to demonstrate the independence of their tenders.

43 Such national legislation, which concerns a stage of the procedure during which the ranking of the tenders and their content were disclosed, is all the more contrary to the EU's interest in ensuring the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders and to the principle of proportionality.

44 Not only is that legislation liable to deter companies belonging to the same group from submitting competing tenders in a public procurement procedure, since their being ranked in the first two places would automatically have the effect, in the event of withdrawal of the first ranked tenderer, of terminating both that procedure and the subsequent procedures, thereby de facto excluding them from any possibility of competing in the context of such a public contract, but, moreover, the said legislation appears itself likely to increase the risk of distortion of competition, since the disclosure of the ranking of the tenders and their content at the end of the first procedure is liable to facilitate a possible concerted practice between the tenderers in the context of the next procedure.

45 While it is true that the withdrawal of the tenderer originally selected for having submitted the most economically advantageous tender, where the tenderer which has submitted the next most economically advantageous tender constitutes with the tenderer originally selected a single economic operator, might constitute evidence of an anti-competitive concerted practice, such a withdrawal being liable to appear to be motivated by the plan to accept the highest tender submitted by the group as a whole, the fact remains that no irrebuttable presumption to that effect can be established, as otherwise those tenderers will be denied the opportunity to demonstrate the independent nature of their tenders.

46 In those circumstances, the answer to the question referred is that the principle of proportionality, within the meaning of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which requires the contracting authority to terminate a public procurement procedure where, in the event of withdrawal of the tenderer originally selected for having submitted the most economically advantageous tender, the tenderer which submitted the next most economically advantageous tender constitutes with the tenderer originally selected a single economic operator.

Costs

47 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action brought before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Tenth Chamber) hereby rules:

The principle of proportionality, within the meaning of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which requires the contracting authority to terminate a public procurement procedure where, in the event of withdrawal of the tenderer originally selected for having submitted the most economically advantageous tender, the tenderer which submitted the next most economically advantageous tender constitutes with the tenderer originally selected a single economic operator.

ON BEHALF OF THE LATVIA PEOPLE

Riga, February 27, 2023

The Administrative District Court is composed of:
Judge Aiga Putniņa,
Judge Edgars Biezais,
Judge Marina Romanova, with the participation of the authorized representative of the applicant AAS "BTABaltic Insurance Company", sworn attorney Mārtiņš Brizgos, as well as the defendant

On the part of the Republic of Latvia, the invited institution, the representative of the Procurement Monitoring Bureau/person A/ and the representative of the Ministry of Justice/person B/,

The administrative case initiated on the basis of JSC "BTABaltic Insurance Company" was examined in an open session via videoconference application for recognition of the Procurement Monitoring Bureau's decision No. 4-1.2/21-20 of January 21, 2021 as unlawful.

Descriptive part

[1] The Ministry of Justice (hereinafter referred to as the contracting authority) announced an open tender for the purchase of health insurance policies for the Ministry of Justice, State for the needs of civil servants and employees of the Land Service, the State Data Inspectorate, the Insolvency Control Service, the Patent Office" (id.No.TM 2020/37) (hereinafter referred to as procurement).

Several bidders submitted bids for the procurement, including the applicant AAS "BTA Baltic Insurance Company" for the total contract price 381,480 euros, as well as the Latvian branch of one of the group companies Compensa Life Vienna Insurance Group SE for a total contract price of 434,520 euros.

With The procurement commission's decision of November 19, 2020, the most economically advantageous offer of Compensa Life recognized by the Vienna Insurance Group SE Latvian branch , awarding it the right to conclude the contract.
On November 26, 2020 , Compensa Life Vienna Insurance Group SE Latvian branch refused to conclude the procurement contract due to the procurement process the rapid rise in the prices of medical services and medicines and the deterioration of the general economic situation.

On December 1, 2020, the Procurement Commission recognized the applicant as the next eligible bidder for the right to conclude the contract, at the same time, based on the Cabinet of Ministers Regulation No. 107 of 28 February 2017, "Procedures for Procurement Procedures and Design Competitions" (hereinafter – Procurement Procedure Regulations) Paragraph 24, deciding to request the submission of confirmation and evidence that the applicant is not considered a single market participant together with the initially selected bidder in the procurement, Compensa Life Vienna Insurance Group SE Latvian branch.

The applicant's client indicated in its response that both companies are considered to be one market participant, while at the same time confirming that its offer is prepared independently and has not been coordinated with the Latvian branch of Compensa Life Vienna Insurance Group SE.

Taking into account that the applicant and the Latvian branch of Compensa Life Vienna Insurance Group SE are considered to be one market participant, the procurement
On December 9, 2020, the commission returned to the evaluation of the applicant and decided to terminate the procurement procedure based on the Procurement Paragraph 23 of the Rules of Procedure.

[2] Having examined the applicant's complaint, the Procurement Supervision Bureau (hereinafter – the Bureau) by Decision No. 4?1.2/21-20 of 21 January 2021
The decision was left unchanged, with the following considerations.

[2.1] Clause 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations stipulates the obligation of the contracting authority to terminate the procurement procedure if it establishes that initially
The selected tenderer who refused to conclude a procurement contract with the contracting authority and the next tenderer shall be considered as one market participant. This
The aim of the regulation is to prevent the possibility of concerted action between companies of the same group in public procurement after the tenders have been submitted.
In addition, the contracting authority shall, in any case, if the tenderer to whom the procurement contract has been awarded refuses to conclude the procurement contract with the contracting authority, has the right to terminate the procurement in accordance with paragraph 23 of the aforementioned regulations, and no other bidder has the subjective right to demand that it would be declared the winner.

[2.2] The findings expressed by the applicant in the aforementioned judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union of 19 May 2009 in case No. C?538/07 are applicable to the linked the rights of undertakings to participate in the procurement and submit tenders, which have not been restricted in the present case. This situation is to be distinguished from the situation where in which the contracting authority must terminate the procurement procedure if the selected tenderer refuses to conclude the procurement contract. In the first case, the contracting authority, by rejecting the related offers of companies, chooses another offer and the procurement is concluded with the conclusion of a procurement contract. In contrast, in the second case, the contracting authority terminates procurement procedure without selecting any bid, as a result of which the procurement contract is not concluded and competition is effectively restored, giving the opportunity for all bidders to participate in the subsequent procurement procedure.

[3] The applicant appealed the decision of the Office to the court, stating the following.

[3.1] The contracting authority has based its decision to terminate the procurement procedure not on Clause 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations (although the wording of the justification exactly corresponds to the content of the norm), but on Clause 23, thus formally exercising the discretion granted to it and avoiding the obligation to refute the arguments of the applicant, Compensa Life Vienna Insurance Group SE Latvian Branch. that offer is prepared by independently from

[3.2] Clause 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations provides for an irrebuttable presumption that the applicant and the initially selected tenderer have prepared coordinated tenders with the aim of unfairly influencing competition. Such regulation is disproportionate and contradicts the principles contained in Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (hereinafter – Directive 2014/24/EU), as well as the principles expressed in the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union of 19 May 2009 in Case C-538/07, according to which the contracting authority was obliged to assess whether the tender submitted by the applicant in the procurement was not prepared in coordination with the initially selected tenderer.

[3.3] The termination of the procurement violates the principle of fair competition, because when announcing the procurement anew, the bidders were aware of the previously offered price of the bidder, thanks to which they could review their offers and offer a lower price than the bidder. Although formally such a result is financially more advantageous for the contracting authority, it cannot be a reason for violating the principle of fair treatment. In the opinion of the bidder, the authorities were obliged to find a reasonable balance between the simultaneous observance of the principles enshrined in Article 2 of the Public Procurement Law, which should be achieved by assessing the nature of the mutual obligation between the companies in accordance with the explanations of the bidder.

[3.4] The applicant and the initially selected tenderer have not coordinated their tenders, nor is the withdrawal of the initially selected tenderer's tender related to the interests of the group of companies to gain greater benefits. Namely, in the case of "classical" coordination of tenders, the winner would withdraw the tender with the lowest price so that the next tenderer who offered a higher price would be awarded the contract. In contrast, in the specific case, the procurement was based on the principle of the most economically advantageous tender, therefore the initially selected tenderer was awarded the contract not because of the price offered, but because its tender received more points. The initially selected tenderer's tender had the highest price, therefore its withdrawal could not have brought any benefit to the group of companies.

[3.5] Taking into account that Clause 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations contradicts the public procurement principles enshrined in Article 2 of the Public Procurement Law, the court, in accordance with Article 104, Part 3 of the Administrative Procedure Law, could not apply this regulation itself or, if necessary, refer the matter to the Court of Justice of the European Union for a preliminary ruling.

[4] In its written explanation to the court, the Office does not recognize the applicant's application based on the considerations mentioned in the appealed decision. In addition, the Office states the following.

[4.1] There is no reason to claim that the regulation of Clause 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations would not comply with the procurement principles enshrined in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24/EU and Article 2 of the Public Procurement Law, taking into account its aim of preventively preventing concerted action between companies of the same group (one market participant) in public procurement, which could negatively affect competition.

[4.2] Regarding the applicant's indication that the legal provisions should also be applied in the case of issuing a mandatory administrative act, the legal consequences and proportionality of issuing an administrative act must be assessed, the office explains that a departure from the application of a legal provision is permissible only in atypical cases, and in the presence of special demonstrable and convincing arguments.

[5] In its written explanation to the court, the contracting authority did not accept the applicant's application based on the considerations mentioned in the appealed decision.

In addition, the contracting authority indicated that Clause 23 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations provides for the contracting authority to have the discretion to choose whether, in the event that the tenderer refuses to conclude a procurement contract with the contracting authority, to grant the right to conclude a contract to the next tenderer who has offered the most economically advantageous tender, or to terminate the procurement procedure without selecting any tender. In the specific case, the contracting authority, by making a decision to terminate the procurement procedure, has acted within the scope of the discretion specified in Clause 23, therefore it is irrelevant whether and what information the contracting authority has additionally obtained about the tenderer, since the aforementioned decision was not made on the basis of Clause 24.

[6] In the course of the proceedings, the court referred a preliminary question to the Court of Justice of the European Union, asking whether national regulation that provides for an imperative obligation on the contracting authority to terminate the procurement procedure if it is established that the initially selected tenderer, who refused to conclude a procurement contract with the contracting authority, is considered to be one market participant with the subsequent tenderer who has submitted a tender that meets the interests and needs of the contracting authority is consistent with the procurement principles defined in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU, in particular the obligation of the Member States to ensure equal and non-discriminatory treatment of all economic operators and the principle of proportionality.

On 8 December 2022, the Court of Justice of the European Union adopted a ruling in preliminary ruling case No. C?769/21, in which it found that such regulation, insofar as it does not impose an obligation to assess whether the relationship between the two tenderers has influenced the content of the tenders, is contrary to the principle of proportionality contained in the said directive.

[7] In connection with the aforementioned judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union, the Office indicated that the relevant findings were not applicable to the specific case, since the procurement was terminated on the basis of Article 23 of the Procurement Procedure Rules, and not Article 24. In addition, the Office also indicated in this regard that, when adopting the contested decision, the Office could not have been aware and could not arbitrarily assume that the relevant regulation was contrary to Directive 2014/24/EU, since the right to apply to the Court of Justice of the European Union lies only with the court, and not with the institutions. Moreover, the regulation was found to be contrary to a legal principle enshrined in the Directive, and not to any specific norm.

The contracting authority also maintained the argument that the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union does not affect the circumstances of the case, since the procurement was terminated on the basis of paragraph 23 of the regulations. In addition, the Court of Justice of the European Union indicated in paragraph 40 of the judgment that the case law on the issue of automatic exclusion of tenderers applies to cases when the procurement is terminated at a stage after the award of the contract. In contrast, in the specific case, the tenderer was not awarded the contract.

In turn, the applicant indicated that if the contracting authority wanted to exercise the right provided for in Article 23 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations to terminate the procurement, it should have exercised this right immediately, and not started evaluating the tender in accordance with Article 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations. Since the contracting authority did not exercise this right and started evaluating the tender, it should have given the applicant the opportunity to prove the independence of its tender before deciding to terminate the procurement procedure.

[8] At the court hearing, the applicant's representative maintained the application based on the arguments set out in the application and explanations. In addition, it was pointed out that the provisions of Directive 2014/24/EU have a higher legal force than the provisions of the Procurement Procedure Rules. Therefore, upon finding contradictions (which were obvious in this case), the institution should either refrain from applying the relevant provision of the Procurement Procedure Rules, or inform the higher authority about it, which was not done in this particular case.

On the other hand, the representatives of the institutions invited on the defendant side did not recognize the applicant's application, based on the considerations mentioned in the appealed decision and explanations to the court. In addition, they pointed out that in order to terminate the procurement, based on Paragraph 23 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations, the contracting authority does not have to terminate the procurement immediately and it can step back and return to this issue.

[9] The dispute in the case is whether the contracting authority was justified in terminating the procurement.

[10] In accordance with Article 230 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations (hereinafter the provisions are expressed in the wording that was in force at the time of the adoption of the appealed decision), the contracting authority shall decide to terminate an announced procurement procedure or design competition in the cases provided for in these Regulations. In other cases, the contracting authority may terminate an announced procurement procedure or design competition at any time if there is an objective justification for doing so.

Clause 23 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations stipulates that if a tenderer who has been awarded the right to conclude a procurement contract refuses to conclude a procurement contract with the contracting authority, the procurement commission is entitled to decide to award the right to conclude a procurement contract to the next tenderer who has offered the most economically advantageous tender, or to terminate the procurement procedure without selecting any tender. If a decision has been made to award the right to conclude a procurement contract to the next tenderer who has offered the most economically advantageous tender, but he refuses to conclude a procurement contract, the procurement commission shall decide to terminate the procurement procedure without selecting any tender.

In turn, Article 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations stipulates that before making a decision on awarding the right to conclude a procurement contract to the next tenderer who has submitted the most economically advantageous tender, the procurement commission shall assess whether it is not considered to be a single market participant together with the initially selected tenderer who refused to conclude a procurement contract with the contracting authority. If necessary, the procurement commission is entitled to request from the next tenderer a certificate and, if necessary, evidence that it is not considered to be a single market participant together with the initially selected tenderer. If the next tenderer is considered to be a single market participant together with the initially selected tenderer, the procurement commission shall make a decision to terminate the procurement procedure without selecting any tender.

It follows from the aforementioned legal provisions that the contracting authority has wide discretion in terminating the procurement. The case law of administrative courts has recognized that the task of the court in such a case is to verify whether the contracting authority's decision to terminate the procurement procedure is not arbitrary and does not violate the principles of public procurement law enshrined in Article 2 of the Public Procurement Law – transparency of procurement; free competition of suppliers, as well as equal and fair treatment of them; effective use of the contracting authority's funds, minimizing its risk (Paragraph 10 of the Senate judgment of 26 March 2015 in case No. SKA-555/2015 (A420215114)). This means that, to the extent that the contracting authority's considerations are aimed at the efficient use of the contracting authority's funds, minimizing the contracting authority's risk, and at the same time are not aimed at unreasonably restricting competition or otherwise treating suppliers unequally or unfairly, the contracting authority has the right to terminate the procurement in order to mitigate its risks (Decision of the Senate of 14 May 2021 in case No. SKA-1020 (ECLI:LV:AT:2021:0514.A420145221.6.L) (point 5).

[11] In the case under consideration, there is no consensus among the participants in the administrative proceedings on the legal basis on which the procurement was terminated. Accordingly, the court will initially address this issue.

As follows from the case materials, after the initially selected bidder refused to conclude the contract, the contracting authority recognized that the bidder's offer met all the requirements for the selection of bidders set out in the open tender regulations and was the next most economically advantageous offer. Accordingly, it was decided to nominate the bidder as the winner of the procurement, having first ascertained whether the exclusion circumstances referred to in the Public Procurement Law do not apply to the bidder (see the minutes of the procurement commission of 1 December 2020, which are located on pages 164–166 of volume 1 of the case, paragraphs 3.3 and 3.4). Accordingly, among the mandatory exclusion conditions mentioned by the applicant, it was requested, in accordance with Article 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations, to provide confirmation and evidence that the applicant and the initially selected tenderer are not considered to be a single market participant (see the letter on pages 29–31 of volume 1 of the case).

There is no dispute in the case that the applicant and the initially selected tenderer are considered to be a single market participant within the meaning of Section 1(9) of the Competition Law, which the applicant also confirmed in the response submitted by the contracting authority (pages 29–31 of volume 1 of the case). The contracting authority, having assessed the information provided by the applicant and having consulted with the Competition Council on the concept of a single market participant (page 48 of volume 1 of the case), decided to return to the previous evaluation stage and terminate the procurement procedure, based on paragraph 23 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations (see paragraph 2 of the minutes of the procurement commission of 9 December 2020, which can be found on pages 167–168 of volume 1 of the case).

It follows from the above that the commissioned party had a desire to continue the procurement and conclude a procurement contract. The commissioning party abandoned the aforementioned intention upon learning that the applicant and the initially selected tenderer are considered to be one market participant, therefore the aforementioned circumstance is considered to be a justification for terminating the procurement. Clause 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations provides for the actions of the commissioning party in such a case, therefore the court recognizes as justified the applicant's opinion that the procurement, despite the commissioning party's indication, was actually terminated on the basis of Clause 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations, and not Clause 23. This is also specified in the contested decision by the office as a higher authority, analyzing the circumstances for terminating the procurement referred to in Clause 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations.

The case law of the Senate has recognized that a certain interpretation of the reasoning of an administrative act and explanation of less significant errors are permissible. For example, in certain cases, the court may recognize that, taking into account the circumstances analyzed by the institution, a certain norm was actually applied, even if it was not directly mentioned in the decision (Senate judgment of 31 October 2019 in case No. SKA-424/2019 (ECLI:LV:AT:2019:1031.A420125916.5.S) 19 and the case law referred to therein). Therefore, the fact that the institution has not specifically indicated in the administrative act the legal norm on which it is based, or has also indicated an incorrect legal norm, does not mean that the court cannot refer to the legal norms correctly applicable in the specific situation within the framework of the review of the appealed decision. Unless it is clear from the institution's decision as a whole what legal regulation the institution is based on, the fact that the court specifies this legal regulation in the judgment does not mean that the court has changed the grounds of the appealed administrative act (see Višÿere I., Savina S. Prohibition of changing the grounds of the administrative act. Jurista Vÿrds, 15.12.2020., No. 50 (1160), pp. 15–18).

Taking into account the above, the court will further assess the circumstances related to the application of Clause 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations, despite the fact that the contracting authority has formally referred to Clause 23 of these Regulations.

[12] During the proceedings, the court had doubts about the compliance of Article 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations with the principles of public procurement. Accordingly, the court referred the matter to the Court of Justice of the European Union for a preliminary ruling, asking whether national regulation such as that set out in Article 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations, which provides for an imperative obligation on the contracting authority to terminate the procurement procedure if it is established that the initially selected tenderer, who refused to conclude a procurement contract with the contracting authority, is considered to be one market participant with the subsequent tenderer who has submitted a tender that meets the interests and needs of the contracting authority, is consistent with the procurement principles defined in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU, in particular the obligation of the Member States to ensure equal and non-discriminatory treatment of all economic operators and the principle of proportionality.

The Court of Justice of the European Union, in its judgment of 8 December 2022, Case No. C?769/21, in response to the preliminary question submitted by the court in this case, stated that that, in order to comply with the principle of proportionality, the contracting authority must be required to examine and assess the facts in order to determine whether the relationship between the two entities has had a specific influence on the content of the tenders submitted in the same procedure for the award of public contracts, since a finding of such influence, in whatever form, is sufficient to enable those undertakings to be excluded from that procedure (paragraph 39 of the judgment). The case-law of the Court of Justice, which has been developed in relation to national legislation providing for automatic exclusion from participation in a public procurement procedure, is equally applicable to legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which requires the contracting authority to terminate such a procedure at the stage following the award of the contract (paragraph 40 of the judgment).

By providing for the automatic closure of a public procurement procedure where a tenderer initially selected because he had submitted the most economically advantageous tender and who has withdrawn that tender is to be regarded as a single market participant with the tenderer ranked second and who has submitted the next most economically advantageous tender, national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings creates an irrebuttable presumption that those tenderers acted in concert in the preparation of their tenders or after the submission of those tenders, solely because they are to be regarded as a single market participant and they are not in a position to demonstrate the independence of their tenders (paragraph 42 of the judgment).

Such national legislation, which concerns a stage of the procedure in which the ranking and content of the tenders have already been disclosed, is all the more contrary to both the Union's interest in ensuring the participation of the largest possible number of tenderers in the procurement and the principle of proportionality (paragraph 43 of the judgment).
Namely, this legal framework is not only one that potentially deters companies belonging to the same group from submitting competing bids in a single public procurement procedure, since ranking these bids in the first two places would automatically result in the termination of both this and subsequent procedures in the event of the withdrawal of the bid ranked first, thus effectively excluding the possibility of competing in such public procurement, but also one that in itself seems to increase the risk of distortion of competition, since the disclosure of the ranking and content of bids after the end of the first procedure may open up the possibility for candidates to act in a concerted manner in the subsequent procedure (paragraph 44 of the judgment).

Although the fact that a tenderer who was initially selected because he had submitted the most economically advantageous tender and who is considered to be a single market participant with the tenderer who submitted the next most economically advantageous tender, has withdrawn that tender could indeed be evidence of a concerted practice aimed at preventing competition, since such withdrawal could seem to be justified by the desire to ensure that the most expensive tender submitted by that group as a whole is selected, it does not, however, establish an irrebuttable presumption, since those tenderers would otherwise be deprived of the opportunity to demonstrate the independence of their tenders (paragraph 45 of the judgment).

In view of the above circumstances, the Court of Justice of the European Union has answered the question referred that the principle of proportionality within the meaning of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which requires the contracting authority to terminate a public procurement procedure where a tenderer who has been selected because it submitted the most economically advantageous tender and who has withdrawn that tender is considered to be a single market participant with the tenderer who submitted the next most economically advantageous tender.

[13] Thus, it follows from the aforementioned judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union that Article 24 of the Procurement Procedure Rules is contrary to the principle of proportionality contained in Directive 2014/24. This principle is implemented in Article 2 of the Public Procurement Law, and therefore Article 24 of the Procurement Procedure Rules is also contrary to the law.
According to Article 84 of the Administrative Procedure Law, an administrative act is lawful if it complies with legal norms, but unlawful if it does not comply with legal norms. Since the appealed decision is based on a legal norm that does not comply with a legal norm of higher legal force, it must be declared unlawful.

The above is not changed by the arguments of the office that it had no reason to question and not apply the relevant regulation. Namely, in any case, the decision is based on such a legal regulation and such considerations that are incompatible with the principles of public procurement and European Union law. Accordingly, the state as a whole is obliged to acknowledge this fact and take action to prevent the infringement of the rights of a private person.
The question of the institution's ability not to apply the relevant regulation may have legal significance when deciding on compensation for damages, but it is not the subject of this case.

[14] In the opinion of the contracting authority, the aforementioned judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union is not applicable to the specific case, as paragraph 40 of the judgment indicates that the case law on the automatic exclusion of tenderers applies to cases where the procurement is terminated “at a stage after the award of the contract”. In contrast, in the specific case, the tenderer was not awarded the contract.
The Court points out that the contracting authority has taken the above-mentioned words out of context. First, it should be noted that the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union, based on the questions posed by the court and the materials sent, has examined the circumstances of this case and the applicable regulatory framework. Second, it follows from the overall context of the judgment that at no stage of the procurement, and in particular at the stage where the ranking and content of the tenders have already been disclosed, can a person be automatically denied the right to apply for the award of the contract without an assessment of additional circumstances solely because he or she is a single market participant with another tenderer. Third, in the context of the specific court's finding, the words "after the award of the contract" refer to the time after the award of the contract to the initially selected tenderer, and not to the next tenderer, as the contracting authority believes.

[15] The contracting authority has argued that, in accordance with Article 23 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations, it has the right to terminate the procurement in any case if The initially selected bidder refused to conclude the contract.
The Court, as already indicated above, generally agrees that the contracting authority has a wide discretion when deciding to terminate the procurement. At the same time, the decision to terminate the procurement procedure cannot be arbitrary and based on considerations that are contrary to free competition between suppliers, as well as equal and fair treatment of them.

In the present case, the decision to terminate the procurement is based on circumstances that are inconsistent with the principle of proportionality enshrined in both Directive 2014/24 and the Public Procurement Law, and therefore this decision cannot be considered justified and proportionate. In other words, this circumstance can no longer be made unprecedented and hidden behind the justification of another institution.

[16] In summary, the court finds that the applicant's application is satisfactory and the appealed decision is to be declared unlawful. In the rest
The court will not evaluate the arguments of the participants in the administrative proceedings, as they cannot affect the outcome of the case.
At the same time, the court considers it necessary to make a side decision, drawing the attention of the Cabinet of Ministers to the need to amend Article 24 of the Procurement Procedure Regulations.

[17] Since the application is admissible, in accordance with Section 126, Part One of the Administrative Procedure Law, the respondent Republic of Latvia
The applicant is ordered to pay the state fee.
The state fee is refundable in accordance with Cabinet of Ministers Regulation No. 85 of 12 February 2013, "Procedures for the payment, refund and reimburses the state fee and pays and returns the security deposit" in accordance with the procedures set out in the relevant application to the institution (Clause 13 of the Regulations).

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 18(1) and Article 57(4)(g) and (6) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65) and of Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2017 L 94, p. 1).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between ‘HSC Baltic’ UAB, ‘Mitnija’ UAB and ‘Montuotojas’ UAB of the one part, and the Vilniaus miesto savivaldybės administracija (Municipal Authority of the City of Vilnius, Lithuania; ‘the City of Vilnius’) supported by ‘Active Construction Management’ UAB, in liquidation, and ‘Vilniaus vystymo kompanija’ UAB of the other part, concerning the consequences, for HSC Baltic, Mitnija and Montuotojas, of the early termination of a public contract awarded to a group of economic operators of which they formed part.

Legal context

Directive 89/665

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provides:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive [2014/24] …

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that … decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

…’

4 Recitals 101 and 102 to Directive 2014/24 state:

‘(101) Contracting authorities should … be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable, for instance because of violations of environmental or social obligations, … or other forms of grave professional misconduct, such as violations of competition rules or of intellectual property rights. …

[Contracting authorities] should also be able to exclude candidates or tenderers whose performance in earlier public contracts has shown major deficiencies with regard to substantive requirements, for instance failure to deliver or perform, significant shortcomings of the product or service delivered, making it unusable for the intended purpose, or misbehaviour that casts serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator. National law should provide for a maximum duration for such exclusions.

In applying facultative grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities should pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality. …

(102) Allowance should, however, be made for the possibility that economic operators can adopt compliance measures aimed at remedying the consequences of any criminal offences or misconduct and at effectively preventing further occurrences of the misbehaviour. Those measures might consist in particular of personnel and organisational measures such as the severance of all links with persons or organisations involved in the misbehaviour, appropriate staff reorganisation measures, the implementation of reporting and control systems, the creation of an internal audit structure to monitor compliance and the adoption of internal liability and compensation rules. Where such measures offer sufficient guarantees, the economic operator in question should no longer be excluded on those grounds alone. …'

5 Article 18 of that directive, entitled 'Principles of procurement', provides in paragraph 1:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

…'

6 Article 57 of that directive, entitled 'Exclusion grounds', provides:

'…

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(g) where the economic operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract which led to early termination of that prior contract, damages or other comparable sanctions;

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. They shall, in particular, determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 6 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability. Where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period shall not exceed … three years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4.'

7 Article 90(1) of that directive states:

'Member States shall bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with this Directive by 18 April 2016. …'

8 Article 91 of Directive 2014/24 provides as follows:

‘Directive 2004/18/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)] is repealed with effect from 18 April 2016.

Lithuanian law

The Law on public procurement

9 The Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law of the Republic of Lithuania on public procurement), in the version applicable to the case in the main proceedings (‘the Law on public procurement’), provides, in Article 2(36):

‘“Supplier” – economic operator – means a natural or legal person governed by private or public law, another organisation and its members or a group composed of such persons, including a temporary association of economic operators, which offers on the market to supply goods or services.’

10 Article 46 of that law provides:

4. The contracting authority shall exclude a supplier from the procurement procedure where:

(6) the supplier has failed to perform a contract awarded pursuant to the present law … or a concession contract, or has performed it improperly, and that constitutes a material breach of the contract, as defined by the Civil Code … resulting in the early termination of the contract during the preceding three years, or a final judgment delivered during the preceding three years which has granted the claim for compensation made by the contracting authority, the contracting entity or the awarding authority in respect of the damage suffered as a result of significant or persistent deficiencies by the supplier in the performance of a substantive term of the contract, or the adoption by the contracting authority, during the preceding three years, of a decision finding that the supplier’s performance of a substantive term of the contract was vitiated by significant or persistent deficiencies which gave rise, therefore, to the application of a contractual penalty. …

8. Where a supplier does not meet the requirements set out in paragraphs 1, 4 and 6 of the present article, the contracting authority shall not exclude it from the procurement procedure where both of the following conditions are met:

(1) the supplier has provided the contracting authority with information demonstrating that it has adopted the following measures:

(a) it has voluntarily paid or given an undertaking to pay compensation in respect of the damage caused by the offence or infringement referred to in paragraphs 1, 4 or 6 of this Article, as appropriate;

(b) it has cooperated, actively assisted or taken other measures which help to shed light on or clarify the offence or infringement committed by it, as appropriate;

(c) it has taken technical, organisational or staff management measures designed to prevent further offences or infringements;

(2) the contracting authority has evaluated the information submitted by the supplier under paragraph 1 of the present paragraph and has adopted a reasoned decision to the effect that the measures taken by the supplier to demonstrate its reliability are sufficient. …

11 Article 91(1) of that law provides, in the version cited by the referring court:

‘The contracting authority shall publish, at the latest within 10 days, in the central public procurement portal, in accordance with the rules established by the public procurement authority, the information relating to suppliers (in the case of a group of suppliers, relating to all the members of that group) who have not performed the contract or performed the contract improperly, and, where the breach relates to the part of the contract which had been subcontracted to them, information relating to the economic operators whose capacities have been used by the supplier and who had assumed joint and several liability with the supplier for the performance of the contract …’

The Civil Code

12 Article 6.6 of the Lietuvos Respublikos civilinis kodeksas (Civil Code of the Republic of Lithuania) provides:

‘1. Joint and several liability between debtors shall not be presumed, subject to any exception provided for by law. It shall arise only where provided for by law or by agreement between the parties, and where the subject matter of the obligation is indivisible.

3. Joint and several liability between debtors shall be presumed where the obligation relates to the provision of services, a joint activity or compensation for damage caused by the acts of a number of persons.

…’

13 Paragraph 1 of Article 6.15 of that code provides:

‘If it is impossible to perform the obligation on account of the fault of one of the jointly and severally liable debtors, the other jointly and severally liable debtors shall not be released from liability for non-performance of the obligation.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

14 On 7 December 2016, the City of Vilnius published a notice of a procurement procedure valued at EUR 21 793 166.72, excluding value added tax, for works to build a multifunctional wellness centre (‘the contract at issue’).

15 A joint activity agreement concluded on 30 January 2017 between Active Construction Management, HSC Baltic, Mitnija, Montuotojas and ‘Axis Power’ UAB designated Active Construction Management as the lead partner of that group of economic operators, for the purposes of participating in the procurement procedure at issue and executing the works should the contract be awarded to that group. It was also agreed that the respective share of contributions, by value, to the joint activity would be as follows: Active Construction Management 65%, HSC Baltic 15%, Axis Power 10%, Mitnija 5% and Montuotojas 5%.

16 On 5 June 2017, the City of Vilnius awarded the contract at issue to that group. As the deadline for completion of the works was set at 18 months,the contract had to be performed by 5 December 2018 at the latest.

17 As the works were not completed within that period, the deadline was postponed to 28 May 2020. During that additional period, the works did not progress according to the scheduled timetable.

18 By order of 28 October 2019, the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius, Lithuania), following an application by the manager of Active Construction Management, instituted insolvency proceedings relating to that company. On 6 December 2019, the insolvency administrator informed HSC Baltic, Mitnija, Montuotojas and Axis Power, and the City of Vilnius, of those insolvency proceedings and that the lead partner would no longer perform the contract at issue.

19 On 22 January 2020, the City of Vilnius informed HSC Baltic, Mitnija, Montuotojas and Axis Power that it was terminating the contract at issue early, on account of a substantial breach, consisting of having abandoned the building site and having left it unsupervised, having failed to provide a new guarantee, having failed to comply with the schedule for the works and having failed to take out civil liability insurance.

20 Those companies brought an action before the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius) seeking a declaration that the early termination of the contract at issue by the City of Vilnius was unlawful and their entry on the list of unreliable suppliers in the central public procurement portal was unlawful.

21 By judgment of 27 August 2020, that court dismissed the action, finding that the City of Vilnius had correctly referred to problems in performing the works on the part of the lead partner and of the other members of the group. Since those companies were jointly and severally liable for the proper performance of the contract at issue and since that contract had been terminated early, the contracting authority had no discretion which would allow it not to have all the members of the group entered on the list of unreliable suppliers. That entry on such list did not prevent those companies from rehabilitating themselves and from, thus, participating in other public procurement procedures.

22 HSC Baltic, Mitnija, Montuotojas and Axis Power appealed against that judgment to the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania). That court dismissed that appeal by judgment of 21 January 2021, adopting the reasoning of the court at first instance.

23 On 22 January 2021, the Viešųjų pirkimų tarnyba (Public Procurement Office, Lithuania), on the initiative of the City of Vilnius, entered the members of the group on the list of unreliable suppliers.

24 HSC Baltic, Mitnija and Montuotojas brought an appeal on a point of law before the referring court, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania), against the judgment of 21 January 2021 of the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania).

25 On 15 March 2021, HSC Baltic, Mitnija and Montuotojas requested the referring court to order, by way of interim measure, that their names be removed from the list of unreliable suppliers. By decision of 31 March 2021, that court granted that request.

26 On 11 November 2021, that court delivered a judgment in which it ruled in part on the appeal, rejecting the grounds of appeal put forward by HSC Baltic, Mitnija and Montuotojas alleging that the early termination of the contract at issue was unlawful.

27 In order to rule on the entry of those companies on the list of unreliable suppliers, the referring court considers that certain clarifications of the scope of EU law are necessary.

28 In that regard, that court states, as a preliminary point, that the Lithuanian legislature’s transposition of Directive 2014/24 was late, taking effect from 1 July 2017, which post-dates 18 April 2016, the date on which the deadline for transposing that directive expired. It takes the view, however, that that directive could apply to the dispute in the main proceedings.

29 That court is unsure whether the automatic entry, on a list of unreliable suppliers, of any economic operator de jure responsible for the breach which resulted in the early termination of a public contract is compatible with the requirement for an individual assessment when applying the grounds for exclusion laid down by Directive 2014/24.

30 It observes that, in the light of the scope of the words ‘decisions taken by the contracting authorities’ in Article 1 of Directive 89/665, the entry of an economic operator on a list of unreliable suppliers could constitute an actionable measure. Lithuanian law does not make it possible to challenge that registration, since it is regarded simply as a legal effect of the early termination of the contract. In the present case, it is true that an action was brought before the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius) challenging both such early termination and the entry on the list. However, since that entry was made after the decision of the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania) became final, the courts of first instance and the appeal courts were not, in the view of the referring court, able to resolve the part of the appeal concerning the entry on that list.

31 In those circumstances, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Are Article 18(1) and Article 57(4)(g) and (6) of Directive 2014/24 and the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 (together or separately, but without limitation to those provisions) to be interpreted as meaning that a decision of a contracting authority to enter the economic operator concerned on the list of unreliable suppliers and thus restrict for a certain period its ability to participate in procurement procedures announced subsequently on the ground that that economic operator has substantially breached a contract concluded with that contracting authority is a measure which may be challenged before a court?

(2) If the answer to the first question is in the affirmative, are the provisions of EU law cited above (together or separately, but without limitation to those provisions) to be interpreted as precluding national rules and the practice for applying them under which (a) the contracting authority, when terminating a public procurement contract on the ground of a substantial breach thereof, does not take any formal (separate) decision concerning the entry of economic operators on the list of unreliable suppliers; (b) an economic operator is not informed in advance about forthcoming entry on the list of unreliable suppliers and is therefore unable to submit relevant explanations and subsequently to contest entry effectively; (c) the contracting authority does not carry out any individual examination of the circumstances of improper performance of a contract, and therefore, if the public procurement contract has been lawfully terminated on the ground of a substantial breach thereof, the economic operator de jure responsible for that breach is automatically entered on the list of unreliable suppliers?

(3) If the answers to the first two questions are in the affirmative, are the provisions of EU law cited above (together or separately, but without limitation to those provisions) to be interpreted as meaning that joint-activity partners (entities forming a joint supplier) which performed the public procurement contract lawfully terminated on the ground of a substantial breach may demonstrate their reliability and thus be excluded from the list of unreliable suppliers, inter alia, on the basis of the amount of the share (value) of the contract performed, the insolvency of the lead partner, actions on the part of that partner and the contracting authority’s contribution to non-performance of the contract?’

32 The second and third questions, which are to be examined before the first question, concern the manner in which economic operators are, following the early termination of a public contract awarded to them, entered on a list of unreliable suppliers in order to exclude them from participating in public procurement procedures.

33 The result of the City of Vilnius’s early termination of the disputed contract was temporarily to prevent the applicants in the main proceedings from participating in other procurement procedures. That early termination, which was notified to them on 22 January 2020, was followed, on 22 January 2021, by their entry on a list of unreliable suppliers. Consequently, the second and third questions must be examined in the light of Directive 2014/24, which was in force on those dates, there being no need to examine whether that directive was applicable during the period between 18 April 2016, the date when the period prescribed for its transposition expired, and 1 July 2017, the date of its transposition in Lithuania.

34 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 18(1) and Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national rules or practice under which, when the contracting authority terminates early a public contract awarded to a group of economic operators on account of significant or persistent deficiencies which have resulted in the non-performance of a substantive requirement in relation to that contract, each member of that group is automatically entered on a list of unreliable suppliers and thereby temporarily prevented, in principle, from participating in new public procurement procedures.

35 In that regard, it must be stated at the outset that Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 makes it possible to exclude from participation in public procurement procedures any economic operator in relation to which significant or persistent deficiencies have been recorded in the performance of a substantive requirement incumbent on it under a prior public contract, in particular where those deficiencies have given rise to the early termination of that contract.

36 As is apparent from recital 101 of that directive, the purpose of that optional ground consists in excluding economic operators whose reliability is seriously compromised on account of wrongful or negligent conduct.

37 Where a Member State lays down, in its national legislation, the conditions for the application of that optional ground for exclusion, it must respect the essential characteristics thereof as expressed in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraph 33).

38 In addition, the application of that optional ground for exclusion must comply with the principle of proportionality, which is a general principle of EU law, which Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 restates as far as concerns public procurement. Compliance with that principle warrants particular attention when applying the optional grounds for exclusion referred to in Article 57 of that directive (see, to that effect, judgment of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraphs 45 and 48 and the case-law cited).

39 In that regard, that exclusion must, first, be temporary. It follows from recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 that any act of national law laying down the conditions for the application of Article 57(4)(g) of that directive must provide for a maximum exclusion duration. Article 57(7) of that directive states that, where it has not been set by final judgment, that period is not to exceed three years.

40 Second, during that exclusion period, the economic operator concerned must, unless it has been excluded from any participation in a procedure for the award of a public contract by a final judgment, be allowed to participate in such a procedure if it provides, in accordance with Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, evidence showing that the measures which it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability. Economic operators are accordingly encouraged to adopt corrective measures (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraph 40).

41 Third, the principle of proportionality requires a specific and individual assessment of the attitude of the operator concerned on the basis of all the relevant factors (judgment of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 40 and the case-law cited).

42 In the present case, it is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that, in the event of early termination of a public contract on account of significant or persistent deficiencies on the part of the successful tenderer in the performance of a substantive requirement, that early termination results, under the applicable national legislation, in each economic operator which was de jure responsible for the proper performance of that contract being entered on a list intended to enable the contracting authorities to ascertain the names of operators which, having failed to perform or having improperly performed a public contract, are therefore considered not to be reliable providers. Entry on that list gives rise to exclusion from all procurement procedure for a period of three years, unless the economic operator concerned shows that it has adopted adequate corrective measures.

43 The referring court states that, in practice, once a judicial decision confirming the lawfulness of the early termination of the contract concerned has been delivered, all economic operators who are de jure responsible for the performance of that contract are automatically entered on that list, without a decision to that effect being formally adopted.

44 As regards whether such a rule or practice observes the essential characteristics of the optional ground for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 and the principle of proportionality set out in Article 18(1) of that directive, it should be noted that those provisions do not preclude the temporary registration, in a portal dedicated to facilitating the management of public procurement procedures, of the names of operators in respect of which a record has been made of significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract.

45 As has been stated in paragraphs 35 and 36 of the present judgment, that optional ground for exclusion seeks to ensure that such operators' access to public procurement procedures is restricted by a prohibition in principle on participation in those procedures. Such a restriction is, in the present case, set out in Article 46 of the Law on public procurement. The entry, provided for in Article 91 of that law, of the operators concerned on an electronic list accessible to contracting authorities and other bodies responsible for public procurement appears, subject to verification by the referring court, to be intended to facilitate the application of that restriction.

46 That being so, in order to observe the essential characteristics of the optional ground for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 and the principle of proportionality, such a system must be structured in such a way that, before the entry on the list of unreliable suppliers of an economic operator, which is a member of a group to which a public contract had been awarded and that contract was terminated early, it is necessary to conduct a specific assessment of all the relevant factors adduced by that operator in order to demonstrate that its entry on that list is not justified in the light of its individual conduct.

47 It cannot therefore be accepted that such an economic operator, in the event of early termination of that contract on account of significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of such contract, is automatically categorised as unreliable and is temporarily excluded, without first conducting a specific and individual assessment of its conduct, in the light of all the relevant factors.

48 It is true that it is permissible for a Member State to provide, in the event of laying down the conditions for application of the optional ground for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24, for a presumption that any economic operator de jure responsible for the proper performance of a public contract is deemed to have contributed, in the performance of that contract, to the significant or persistent deficiencies which resulted in the early termination of that contract having arisen or having continued. However, where that contract has been awarded to a group of economic operators whose individual contributions to those deficiencies and any efforts to remedy them are not necessarily identical, such a presumption must, if it is not to adversely affect the essential characteristics of that optional ground for exclusion and the principle of proportionality referred to in Article 18(1) of that directive, be rebuttable.

49 Irrespective of the joint and several liability of the members of such a group, the application of the optional ground for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 must be based on the wrongful or negligent nature of that individual conduct.

50 Consequently, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, each member of the group which is de jure responsible for the proper performance of a public contract, must, before its name is entered on the list of unreliable suppliers and therefore becomes subject to temporary exclusion from public procurement procedures, have the opportunity to demonstrate that the deficiencies which led to the early termination of that contract were unrelated to its individual conduct. Where it transpires, following a specific and individual assessment of the conduct of the operator concerned in the light of all the relevant factors, that that operator was not the cause of the deficiencies recorded and it could not reasonably be required to do more than it did in order to remedy those deficiencies, Directive 2014/24 precludes that operator from being entered on the list of unreliable suppliers (see, by analogy, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras (C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraphs 157 and 158).

51 That interpretation is not invalidated by the fact that it is possible for the operator concerned to avoid being excluded from participating in public procurement procedures by showing, in accordance with Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, that it adopted corrective measures, such as those listed by way of illustration in recital 102 of that directive. Such an operator cannot be required to show that it has adopted corrective measures even though its individual conduct is unrelated to the deficiencies which resulted in the early termination of the contract.

52 In the light of all the foregoing, the answer to the second question is that Article 18(1) and Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national rules or practice under which, when the contracting authority terminates early a public contract awarded to a group of economic operators on account of significant or persistent deficiencies which have resulted in the non-performance of a substantive requirement in relation to that contract, each member of that group is automatically entered on a list of unreliable suppliers and thereby temporarily prevented, in principle, from participating in new public procurement procedures.

The third question

53 By its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 18(1) and Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that an economic operator which is a member of a group which submitted the successful tender for a public contract may, in the event that contract is terminated early on account of failure to comply with a substantive requirement, rely, for the purpose of demonstrating that its entry on a list of unreliable suppliers is unjustified, both on factors relating to its own situation and factors relating to the situation of third parties, such as the lead partner of that group.

54 As has been pointed out in paragraph 50 of the present judgment, each member of the group which submitted the successful tender must, in the event of significant or persistent deficiencies, have the opportunity, before its name is entered on a list of unreliable suppliers and thereby becomes subject to temporary exclusion from public procurement procedures, to demonstrate that its individual conduct in the performance of that contract was unrelated to those deficiencies.

55 In order to demonstrate that its individual conduct was not the cause of those deficiencies and, furthermore, that it could not reasonably be required to do more than it did in order to remedy those deficiencies, the economic operator concerned must be given an opportunity to put forward any factor which it considers relevant.

56 The words in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 do not clarify the circumstances in which a member of a group of economic operators must be regarded as being involved, or not, in the deficiencies which resulted in the early termination of the contract. Consequently, that provision enables each member of a group which submitted the successful tender to rely on any factor, specific to its situation or that of a third party, which is capable of showing that that ground for exclusion cannot be applied to it.

57 It is for the contracting authority for the contract which was terminated early and, as appropriate, the court before which an action has been brought, to determine, as part of the specific and individual assessment required by reason of the principle of proportionality referred to in Article 18(1) of that directive, the weight to be attributed to each factor relied on.

58 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the third question is that Article 18(1) and Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that an economic operator which is a member of a group which submitted the successful tender for a public contract may, in the event that contract is terminated early for failure to comply with a substantive requirement, rely, for the purpose of demonstrating that its entry on a list of unreliable suppliers is unjustified, on any factor, including any factor concerning third parties, such as the lead partner of that group, which is capable of showing that it was not the cause of the deficiencies which resulted in the early termination of that contract and that it could not reasonably be required to do more than it did in order to remedy those deficiencies.

59 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that a Member State which provides, when laying down conditions for the application of the optional ground for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24, that economic operators to which a public contract has been awarded are, in the event of early termination of that contract for failure to comply with a substantive requirement, entered on a list of unreliable suppliers and accordingly temporarily excluded, in principle, from participating in new public procurement procedures must ensure the right to bring an action against their entry on that list of unreliable suppliers.

60 Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides that Member States must take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed EU law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law. In accordance with Article 1(3) of that directive, those review procedures must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

61 By those provisions, Directive 89/665 is intended, in the field of public procurement falling under EU law, to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing enshrined in the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 128 and the case-law cited).

62 From that point of view, the concept of ‘decisions taken by the contracting authorities’ in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted broadly. Any decision of a contracting authority falling under the EU rules in the field of public procurement and liable to infringe them must be capable of being subject to the judicial review provided for by that directive. That concept therefore refers generally to decisions of a contracting authority without distinguishing between them according to their content or time of adoption and does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature or content of the decisions to which it refers (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 105).

63 The words ‘any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement’ in Article 1(3) of that directive must also be interpreted broadly, so that the rules contained in that directive apply to all persons whose interest in obtaining such a contract is affected by a decision taken by a contracting authority.

64 Where, as in the present case, the members of a group of economic operators are, on account of the early termination of the public contract which had been awarded to them, entered, by or on the initiative of a contracting authority, on a list of unreliable suppliers and thereby temporarily excluded, in principle, from participating in future public procurement procedures, that entry, which affects the interest of each of those operators in obtaining public contracts falling under EU law, constitutes a decision taken by a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665. That decision must, as is apparent from the examination of the second and third questions, observe the essential characteristics of the optional ground for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 and must comply with the principle of proportionality set out in Article 18(1) of that directive. In the event of an alleged infringement of those provisions or any other rule of EU law, the person allegedly harmed must, under Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 have an effective remedy available.

65 The possibility of bringing an action against the early termination of the public contract giving rise to their entry on the list of unreliable suppliers does not constitute, for the members of the group which submitted the successful tender, an effective remedy against the decision to enter them on that list and thereby to exclude them, in principle, from future public procurement procedures. The lawfulness under EU law of that early termination, on the one hand, and of such entry and exclusion, on the other hand, may be dependent, as is apparent from the analysis relating to the second question, on different factors.

66 Consequently, where the contract which was terminated early had been awarded to a group of economic operators, each member of that group must be given an opportunity to bring an action against its entry on the list of unreliable suppliers, from which its exclusion, in principle, from future public procurement procedures arises.

67 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first question is that Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that a Member State which provides, when laying down conditions for the application of the optional ground for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24, that the members of a group of economic operators which submitted a successful tender for a public contract are, in the event of early termination of that contract for failure to comply with a substantive requirement, entered on a list of unreliable suppliers and accordingly temporarily excluded, in principle, from participating in new public procurement procedures, must ensure the right of those operators to bring an effective action against their entry on that list.

Costs

68 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 18(1) and Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as precluding national rules or practice under which, when the contracting authority terminates early a public contract awarded to a group of economic operators on account of significant or persistent deficiencies which have resulted in the non-performance of a substantive requirement in relation to that contract, each member of that group is automatically entered on a list of unreliable suppliers and thereby temporarily prevented, in principle, from participating in new public procurement procedures.

2. Article 18(1) and Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that an economic operator which is a member of a group which submitted the successful tender for a public contract may, in the event that contract is terminated early for failure to comply with a substantive requirement, rely, for the purpose of demonstrating that its entry on a list of unreliable suppliers is unjustified, on any factor, including any factor concerning third parties, such as the lead partner of that group, which is capable of showing that it was not the cause of the deficiencies which resulted in the early termination of that contract and that it could not reasonably be required to do more than it did in order to remedy those deficiencies.

3. Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, must be interpreted as meaning that a Member State which provides, when laying down conditions for the application of the optional ground for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24, that the members of a group of economic operators which submitted a successful tender for a public contract are, in the event of early termination of that contract for failure to comply with a substantive requirement, entered on a list of unreliable suppliers and accordingly temporarily excluded, in principle, from participating in new public procurement procedures, must ensure the right of those operators to bring an effective action against their entry on that list.

10 November 2022 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts – Directive 2014/24/EU – Award of contracts – Article 2(1)(10) – Concept of an 'economic operator' – Inclusion of a general partnership without legal personality – Article 19(2) and Article 63 – Joint undertaking or reliance on the capacities of other entities of persons linked with that undertaking – Article 59(1) – Obligation to submit one or several European Single Procurement Documents (ESPD) – Purpose of the ESPD)

In Case C-631/21,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Gerechtshof 's-Hertogenbosch (Court of Appeal, 's-Hertogenbosch, Netherlands), made by decision of 5 October 2021, received at the Court on 14 October 2021, in the proceedings

Taxi Horn Tours BV

gemeente Weert,

gemeente Nederweert,

Touringcars VOF,

THE COURT (Eighth Chamber),

composed of M. Safjan, President of the Chamber, N. Jääskinen and M. Gavalec (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Taxi Horn Tours BV, by L.C. van den Berg, advocaat, – gemeente Weert and gemeente Nederweert, by N.A.D. Groot, advocaat,

– the Netherlands Government, by M.K. Bulterman and M.H.S. Gijzen, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by P. Ondrůšek and G. Wils, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 2, 19, 59 and 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65) and of Commission

Implementing Regulation (EU) 2016/7 of 5 January 2016 establishing the standard form for the European Single Procurement Document (OJ 2016 L 3, p. 16).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between, on the one hand, Taxi Horn Tours BV and, on the other hand, the gemeente Weert and the gemeente Nederweert (municipality of Weert and municipality of Nederweert, Netherlands) (together, 'the municipalities') and Touringcars VOF concerning the award by the municipalities of a public contract for bus transport to Touringcars VOF.

Legal context

3 Recitals 14, 15 and 21 of Directive 2014/24 are worded as follows:

'(14) It should be clarified that the notion of "economic operators" should be interpreted in a broad manner so as to include any persons and/or entities which offer the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market, irrespective of the legal form under which they have chosen to operate. Thus, firms, branches, subsidiaries, partnerships, cooperative societies, limited companies, universities, public or private, and other forms of entities than natural persons should all fall within the notion of economic operator, whether or not they are "legal persons" in all circumstances.

(15) It should be clarified that groups of economic operators, including where they have come together in the form of a temporary association, may participate in award procedures without it being necessary for them to take on a specific legal form. To the extent this is necessary, for instance where joint and several liability is required, a specific form may be required when such groups are awarded the contract. …

(21) Public contracts that are awarded by contracting authorities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and that fall within the scope of those activities are covered by Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243]). However, contracts awarded by contracting authorities in the context of their operation of maritime, coastal or river transport services fall within the scope of this Directive.'

4 Article 2 of that directive, entitled 'Definitions', provides:

'1. For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

(10) "economic operator" means any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities, including any temporary association of undertakings, which offers the execution of works and/or a work, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market;

…'

5 Article 18 of that directive, entitled 'Principles of procurement', provides, in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.'

6 Article 19 of that directive, entitled ‘Economic operators’, provides in paragraph 2:

‘Groups of economic operators, including temporary associations, may participate in procurement procedures. They shall not be required by contracting authorities to have a specific legal form in order to submit a tender or a request to participate.

Where necessary, contracting authorities may clarify in the procurement documents how groups of economic operators are to meet the requirements as to economic and financial standing or technical and professional ability referred to in Article 58 provided that this is justified by objective reasons and is proportionate. Member States may establish standard terms for how groups of economic operators are to meet those requirements.

7 Article 59 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘European Single Procurement Document’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘At the time of submission of requests to participate or of tenders, contracting authorities shall accept the European Single Procurement Document (ESPD), consisting of an updated self-declaration as preliminary evidence in replacement of certificates issued by public authorities or third parties confirming that the relevant economic operator fulfils the following conditions:

(a) it is not in one of the situations referred to in Article 57 in which economic operators shall or may be excluded;

(b) it meets the relevant selection criteria that have been set out pursuant to Article 58;

(c) where applicable, it fulfils the objective rules and criteria that have been set out pursuant to Article 65.

Where the economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities pursuant to Article 63, the ESPD shall also contain the information referred to in the first subparagraph of this paragraph in respect of such entities.

The ESPD shall consist of a formal statement by the economic operator that the relevant ground for exclusion does not apply and/or that the relevant selection criterion is fulfilled and shall provide the relevant information as required by the contracting authority. The ESPD shall further identify the public authority or third party responsible for establishing the supporting documents and contain a formal statement to the effect that the economic operator will be able, upon request and without delay, to provide those supporting documents.

Where the contracting authority can obtain the supporting documents directly by accessing a database pursuant to paragraph 5, the [ESPD] shall also contain the information required for this purpose, such as the internet address of the database, any identification data and, where applicable, the necessary declaration of consent.

Economic operators may reuse an ESPD which has already been used in a previous procurement procedure, provided that they confirm that the information contained therein continues to be correct.’

8 Article 63 of that directive, entitled ‘Reliance on the capacities of other entities’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. With regard to criteria relating to the educational and professional qualifications as set out in point (f) of Annex XII Part II, or to the relevant professional experience, economic operators may however only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required.

Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

The contracting authority shall, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify whether the entities on whose capacity the economic operator intends to rely fulfil the relevant selection criteria and whether there are grounds for exclusion pursuant to Article 57. The contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces an entity which does not meet a relevant selection criterion, or in respect of which there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by the Member State to require that the economic operator substitutes an entity in respect of which there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.

Where an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities with regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing, the contracting authority may require that the economic operator and those entities be jointly liable for the execution of the contract.

Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 19(2) may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.'

9 Under Article 11 of Directive 2014/25, headed 'Transport services':

'This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.'

Implementing Regulation 2016/7

10 Recital 1 of Implementing Regulation 2016/7 states:

'One of the major objectives of Directives [2014/24] and [2014/25] is [to reduce] the administrative burdens of contracting authorities, contracting entities and economic operators, not least small and medium-sized enterprises. A key element of that effort is the European single procurement document (ESPD). The standard form for the ESPD should consequently be drafted in such a manner that the need to produce a substantial number of certificates or other documents related to exclusion and selection criteria is obviated. With the same objective in mind, the standard form should also provide the relevant information in respect of entities on whose capacities an economic operator relies, so that the verification of that information can be carried out together with the verification in respect of the main economic operator and on the same conditions.'

11 Annex 1 to that regulation, entitled 'Instructions', provides:

'The ESPD is a self-declaration by economic operators providing preliminary evidence replacing the certificates issued by public authorities or third parties. As provided in Article 59 of Directive [2014/24], it is a formal statement by the economic operator that it is not in one of the situations in which economic operators shall or may be excluded; that it meets the relevant selection criteria and that, where applicable, it fulfils the objective rules and criteria that have been set out for the purpose of limiting the number of otherwise qualified candidates to be invited to participate. Its objective is to reduce the administrative burden arising from the requirement to produce a substantial number of certificates or other documents related to exclusion and selection criteria.

Economic operators may be excluded from the procurement procedure or be subject to prosecution under national law in cases of serious misrepresentation in filling in the ESPD or, generally, in supplying the information required for the verification of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, or where such information is withheld or the economic operators are unable to submit the supporting documents.

Economic operators may reuse the information that has been provided in an ESPD which has already been used in a previous procurement procedure as long as the information remains correct and continues to be pertinent. The easiest way to do so is by inserting the information in the new ESPD through use of the appropriate functionalities that are provided to that effect in the abovementioned electronic ESPD-service. Of course, reuse of information through other forms of copy-paste of information, for instance information stored in the economic operator's IT-equipment (PCs, tablets, servers …), will also be possible.

As mentioned earlier, the ESPD consists of a formal statement by the economic operator that the relevant grounds for exclusion do not apply, that the relevant selection criteria are fulfilled and that it will provide the relevant information as required by the contracting authority or contracting entity.

An economic operator participating on its own and which does not rely on the capacities of other entities in order to meet the selection criteria, must fill out one ESPD.

An economic operator participating on its own but relying on the capacities of one or more other entities must ensure that the contracting authority or contracting entity receives its own ESPD together with a separate ESPD setting out the relevant information … for each of the entities it relies on.

Finally, where groups of economic operators, including temporary associations, participate together in the procurement procedure, a separate ESPD setting out the information required under Parts II to V must be given for each of the participating economic operators.

In all cases where more than one person is [a] member of the administrative, management or supervisory body of an economic operator or has powers of representation, decision or control therein, each may have to sign the same ESPD, depending on national rules, including those governing data protection.

Netherlands law

The Law on Public Procurement

12 The Aanbestedingswet (Law on Public Procurement) of 1 November 2012 (Stb. 2012, No 542), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings ('the Law on Public Procurement'), transposes, into Netherlands law, Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) and Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114). Certain entities to which that legislation applies are governed by the Besluit van 11 februari 2013, houdende de regeling van enkele onderwerpen van de Aanbestedingswet 2012 (Aanbestedingsbesluit) (Decree of 11 February 2013 governing certain entities to which the Law of 2012 on Public Procurement applies), which provides in Article 2:

'1. The self-declaration referred to in Article 2.84 of the Law [on Public Procurement] shall include at least the following information:

a. information on the contracting authority or special-sector firm and on the procurement procedure;

b. information on the economic operator;

c. a statement concerning the grounds for exclusion;

d. a statement concerning the suitability requirements and a statement concerning the technical specifications and the performance requirements relating to the environment;

e. a statement as to how the selection criteria have been met;

f. a statement concerning the correctness of the completed self-declaration and signing powers of the signatory;

g. date and signature.

3. One or more model self-declaration forms shall be issued by ministerial order.’

13 It follows from Article 2.52 of that law:

3. Associations of economic operators may submit tenders or put themselves forward as candidates.

4. Associations of economic operators shall not be required by contracting authorities to have a specific legal form in order to submit a tender or a request to participate.’

14 Article 2.84 of the Law on Public Procurement provides as follows:

‘1. A self-declaration is a declaration by an economic operator in which it indicates:

a. whether any grounds for exclusion apply to it;

b. whether it meets the suitability requirements set out in the notice or in the procurement documents;

c. whether it complies or will comply with the technical specifications and implementing conditions relating to the environment and animal welfare or based on social considerations;

d. whether and how it meets the selection criteria.

2. The data and information that may be requested in a declaration and model declaration form(s) shall be laid down by or pursuant to a general administrative order.’

15 Under Article 2.85 of that law:

‘1. The contracting authority shall require the economic operator to provide, in support of its request to participate or its tender, a self-declaration in accordance with the model form that is provided for that purpose, and shall specify in that regard the data and information to be included.

2. The contracting authority shall not require the economic operator to provide, in support of its request to participate or its tender, data and information by any means other than the self-declaration, if they may be requested in that declaration.

3. The contracting authority may only request the economic operator to attach to its self-declaration supporting documents which do not relate to the data and information that may be requested in the self-declaration, except where they are supporting documents referred to in Article 2.93(1)(a), to the extent that they are listed in that provision or in Article 2.93(1)(b).

4. An economic operator as referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article may submit a self-declaration that has already been used, provided that it confirms that the information contained therein is still correct.'

Civil Code

16 According to Article 7A:1655 of the Burgerlijk Wetboek (Civil Code):

'A partnership is an agreement by which two or more persons agree to join something together with the aim of sharing the resulting benefit.'

Commercial Code

17 Article 16 of the Wetboek van Koophandel (Commercial Code) provides:

'A general partnership is a partnership entered into for the purpose of carrying on a commercial activity under a common name.'

18 Under Article 17(1) of that code:

'Unless otherwise precluded from doing so, each partner is authorised to act in the name of the partnership, to spend and receive money and to bind the partnership to third parties and third parties to the partnership.'

19 Under Article 18 of that code:

'In general partnerships, each partner is jointly and severally liable for the obligations of the partnership.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

20 Up to 1 August 2019, Taxi Horn Tours transported primary school pupils for physical education classes ('transport of the PE class') in performance of a public contract awarded to it by the municipalities.

21 Having decided not to extend that contract, the municipalities initiated a European public procurement procedure for the transport of the PE class in the period from 1 January 2020 to the end of the 2027/2028 school year. The award criterion was that of the most economically advantageous tender.

22 The tender instructions drawn up by the municipalities provided, inter alia, that, in order to guarantee the correctness and validity of the tender, an officer authorised to represent and bind the undertaking was required to sign the ESPD, tender and annexes. In addition, groups of transport undertakings submitting tenders were required to designate a contact person. Each member of such a group was to be jointly and severally liable for the performance of the transport contract. Lastly, those instructions specified that the tender was required to be complete and to contain, inter alia, a duly completed and validly signed ESPD.

23 The municipalities, which had received two tenders, one from Touringcars and the other from Taxi Horn Tours, informed the latter that they intended to award the contract to Touringcars.

24 Taxi Horn Tours then applied to the Rechtbank Limburg (District Court, Limburg, Netherlands) for interim measures seeking, first, rejection of the tender submitted by Touringcars and, secondly, the award of the contract to Taxi Horn Tours.

25 After that application had been dismissed by decision of 12 February 2020, the municipalities concluded contracts with Touringcars for the transport of the PE class from 1 March 2020.

26 Taxi Horn Tours brought an appeal against that decision before the Gerechtshof 's-Hertogenbosch (Court of Appeal, 's-Hertogenbosch, Netherlands), which is the referring court. That court notes that the tender proposed by Touringcars was submitted by F, who also submitted an ESPD in the name of that firm. The question therefore arose, in its view, as to whether Touringcars was authorised to supply one single ESPD for that general partnership or whether each partner was required to provide its own ESPD.

27 In that regard, Taxi Horn Tours claims that Touringcars is a permanent association between the undertakings of its two partners and, therefore, a group of undertakings. The conduct and statements of the two partners must therefore, it submits, be assessed in the light of their own ESPD.

28 The municipalities submit, by contrast, that a distinction should be drawn between temporary associations and permanent associations. The concept of a 'group of economic operators', within the meaning of EU public procurement law, refers to a temporary association. A general partnership, however, is a partnership as referred to in recital 14 of Directive 2014/24 and is therefore, in its entirety, a single economic operator and not a group of economic operators. Furthermore, according to the municipalities, the assessment of partners can be made on the basis of Part III(A) of the ESPD relating to the grounds for exclusion, which requires economic operators to mention grounds relating to criminal convictions.

29 The referring court states that Touringcars is a general partnership appearing in the commercial register and formed on 1 January 2011 for an indefinite period. It employs 82 people and its activities are 'the occasional carriage of passengers by road, transport by taxi and the trade in and repair of passenger cars and light commercial vehicles'. The partners of Touringcars are K BV, which employs 39 people, and F Touringcars BV, which, for its part, does not employ any staff. F is the managing director of Touringcars and has a general mandate. Each partner operates its own transport undertaking. K is the managing director of K BV, while F is the authorised representative of K BV and holds the title of commercial director. Lastly, the sole director and shareholder of F Touringcars BV is F Beheer BV, whose sole director and shareholder is F.

30 In a letter dated 27 January 2020, K stated that in January 2011 he had given F a general mandate, as a director authorised to act alone and autonomously, to represent K BV. Since then, it was stated, F has been responsible for the management of that firm in its entirety. At the same time, K BV, together with F Touringcars BV, formed a general partnership under the name 'Touringcars VOF'. Within that partnership, F and K consult one another regularly, but F effectively directs the undertaking.

31 The referring court notes that, having regard to the combined provisions of Article 16 of the Commercial Code and Article 7A:1655 of the Civil Code, a general partnership is an agreement by which two or more persons agree to join something together with the aim of carrying on a commercial activity under a common name and achieving a common benefit.

32 That court also refers to a judgment of 19 April 2019 in which the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court of the Netherlands) held, first, that a general partnership is a contractual legal relationship entered into for the purpose of carrying on a commercial activity under a common name in a long-term association. Although a general partnership does not have legal personality, Netherlands law and case-law grant it, to some extent, an independent position vis-à-vis the individual partners when it acts in legal relations. Thus, a general partnership can institute legal proceedings in its own name or be declared insolvent in its own name. Secondly, the absence of legal personality means that the general partnership does not have individual rights and obligations in its own right. When a partner acts in the name of the general partnership, that partner acts on behalf of all the joint partners of that partnership ('the joint partners') and binds the joint partners. An agreement with a general partnership must therefore be regarded as an agreement with the joint partners in their capacity as partners. Thirdly, since Article 18 of the Commercial Code stipulates that each of the partners is jointly and severally liable for the obligations of the partnership, each partner is liable for the entirety of the obligations of the joint partners. Fourthly, a creditor of the joint partners can enforce his or her claim both against the joint partners and against each partner individually. A creditor of the partnership thus has two concurrent rights of action against each partner: one against the joint partners, which is recoverable from the separated assets of the general partnership, and the other against the partner personally, which may be satisfied by the private assets of that partner.

33 Taxi Horn Tours argues that Touringcars has recourse to resources which are made available to it from the joint partners' own undertakings.

34 The referring court is therefore uncertain whether the assessment of the application for a public procurement procedure for entities which cooperate on a long-term basis in a separate joint undertaking may be limited to the joint undertaking alone or whether it must also be carried out in relation to each person linked with that undertaking. Therefore, in its view, it is necessary to determine whether an economic operator may limit itself to providing one single ESPD in the case where it is made up of the natural and/or legal persons involved.

35 In those circumstances, the Gerechtshof 's-Hertogenbosch (Court of Appeal, 's-Hertogenbosch) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling on the interpretation of Articles 2, 19, 59 and 63 of Directive 2014/24 and of Implementing Regulation 2016/7:

'(1) Where (natural and/or legal) persons operate a joint undertaking (in this case in the form of a general partnership):

– must each person linked with that undertaking submit a separate European Single Procurement Document, or – must each person linked with the joint undertaking and their joint undertaking submit a separate European Single Procurement Document, or – does only the joint undertaking need to submit a European Single Procurement Document?

(2) Does the answer to that question vary depending on whether:

– the joint undertaking is temporary or non-temporary (long-term);

– the persons linked with the joint undertaking are themselves economic operators;

– the persons linked with the joint undertaking operate their own undertakings which are similar to the joint undertaking, or are at least active in the same market;

– the joint undertaking is not a legal person;

– the joint undertaking may in fact have its own (recoverable) assets (separate from the partners' assets);

– the joint undertaking is authorised under national law to represent persons linked with the joint undertaking for the purpose of answering questions relating to the European Single Procurement Document;

– under national law, in the case of a general partnership, the partners are responsible for the obligations arising from the contract and are jointly and severally liable for their proper performance (and not, therefore, the general partnership itself)?

(3) If several of the factors mentioned in the second question are significant, how are they related to each other? Are certain factors more significant than other factors, or are they decisive?

(4) Is it correct that, in the case of a joint undertaking, a separate European Single Procurement Document is in any event required from a person linked with that joint undertaking if the execution of the contract will (also) involve the use of resources that belong to that person's own undertaking (such as staff and business assets)?

(5) Must the joint undertaking meet certain requirements in order to be considered a single economic operator? If so, what are those requirements?'

Consideration of the questions referred

Admissibility

36 As is apparent from recital 21 of Directive 2014/24, public contracts that are awarded by contracting authorities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and that fall within the scope of those activities are covered by Directive 2014/25.

37 Under its Article 11, Directive 2014/25 also applies to, inter alia, ‘activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by … bus …’.

38 In that regard, it should be noted that neither the order for reference nor the written observations submitted to the Court make it possible to determine whether the conditions thus imposed by that provision are met and, therefore, whether that directive is applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings.

39 The request for a preliminary ruling must nevertheless be declared admissible since the answer to the questions referred could be formulated identically on the basis of Directive 2014/24 or on that of Directive 2014/25 (see, to that effect, judgment of 20 September 2018, Rudigier, C-518/17, EU:C:2018:757, paragraph 44). Recitals 17 and 18 and Article 2(6), Article 37(2), Article 79 and Article 80(3) of Directive 2014/25 correspond, in essence, to recitals 14 and 15 and Article 2(1)(10), Article 19(2), Article 56(3), Article 59(1) and Article 63 of Directive 2014/24.

40 In those circumstances, the fact that the referring court did not determine, before making the reference to the Court for a preliminary ruling, which of Directives 2014/24 or 2014/25 was applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings cannot call into question the presumption that questions referred by national courts for a preliminary ruling are relevant, which may be rebutted only in exceptional cases, in particular where it is quite obvious that the interpretation sought of the provisions of EU law referred to in those questions bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or to its purpose (see, to that effect, judgments of 15 December 1995, Bosman, C-415/93, EU:C:1995:463, paragraph 61, and of 28 November 2018, Amt Azienda Trasporti e Mobilità and Others, C-328/17, EU:C:2018:958, paragraph 33).

Substance

41 By its questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 59(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 2(1)(10) and Article 63 of that directive, and with Annex 1 to Implementing Regulation 2016/7, must be interpreted as meaning that a joint undertaking which, although not a legal person, has the form of a firm governed by the national legislation of a Member State, which appears on the commercial register of that Member State, which may have been set up on either a temporary or a permanent basis and whose joint partners are active on the same market as that joint undertaking and are jointly and severally liable for the proper performance of the obligations which it has entered into, must provide the contracting authority with its own ESPD and/or the ESPD of each of the joint partners.

42 It should be noted at the outset that, under the seventeenth to the nineteenth paragraphs of Annex 1 to Implementing Regulation 2016/7:

‘An economic operator participating on its own and which does not rely on the capacities of other entities in order to meet the selection criteria, must fill out one ESPD.

An economic operator participating on its own but relying on the capacities of one or more other entities must ensure that the contracting authority or contracting entity receives its own ESPD together with a separate ESPD setting out the relevant information for each of the entities it relies on.

Finally, where groups of economic operators, including temporary associations, participate together in the procurement procedure, a separate ESPD setting out the information required under Parts II to V must be given for each of the participating economic operators.’

43 In that regard, it follows from Article 2(1)(10) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 14 thereof, that the concept of an ‘economic operator’ must be interpreted broadly so as to include, inter alia, any person or entity offering services on the market, regardless of the legal form in which that person or entity has chosen to operate and whether or not that person or entity is a legal person.

44 It follows that a general partnership, within the meaning of Netherlands law, may be regarded as an ‘economic operator’, as that term is defined in Article 2(1)(10) of that directive.

45 That said, that directive also adopts a broad interpretation of the concept of a ‘group of economic operators’. Under the first subparagraph of Article 19(2) of that directive, groups of economic operators, including temporary associations, may participate in public procurement procedures and are not required by contracting authorities to have a specific legal form in order to submit a tender or a request to participate.

46 It is therefore necessary to determine whether a general partnership, within the meaning of Netherlands law, must be regarded as an economic operator or as a group of economic operators within the meaning of Article 2(1)(10) and Article 19(2) of Directive 2014/24, respectively.

47 In that regard, contrary to the claims made by the municipalities, the Netherlands Government and the European Commission in their written observations, the concept of a ‘group of economic operators’ within the meaning of Article 19(2) of that directive cannot be restricted solely to temporary associations, to the exclusion of permanent associations or associations of undertakings. That provision refers to ‘groups of economic operators, including temporary associations’. It follows clearly from that wording that temporary associations are mentioned only by way of illustration. Therefore, the concept of a ‘group of economic operators’ cannot be interpreted as applying solely to temporary associations. There is therefore no need to distinguish between groups of economic operators according to whether they are temporary or permanent.

48 In addition, it follows from Article 59(1) of Directive 2014/24 that an ESPD pursues three aims. That document is a self-declaration updated as preliminary evidence in replacement of certificates issued by public authorities or third parties confirming (i) that the economic operator concerned is not in one of the situations referred to in Article 57 of that directive in which economic operators must or may be excluded, (ii) that it meets the relevant selection criteria that have been set out pursuant to Article 58 of that directive, and, (iii), where applicable, that it fulfils the objective rules and criteria that have been set out pursuant to Article 65 of that directive.

49 An ESPD is thus intended to give the contracting authority a precise and accurate picture of the situation of each economic operator which requests to participate in a public procurement procedure or which intends to submit a tender. In so doing, the ESPD gives concrete expression to the objective pursued by Articles 57 and 63 of Directive 2014/24, which is to enable the contracting authority to satisfy itself that each of the tenderers has integrity and is reliable and, consequently, that the relationship of trust with the economic operator concerned will not be broken (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraph 29, and of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 35).

50 In that regard, it should be noted that the information which an economic operator is required to indicate in the ESPD does not include the resources of the partners in a joint undertaking. Furthermore, it is not relevant that the partners in a general partnership, within the meaning of Netherlands law, operate in the same business area or on the same market as the general partnership, since that information cannot be brought to the attention of the contracting authority by means of the ESPD of the joint undertaking.

51 Furthermore, the existence of joint and several liability between the general partnership and the joint partners is not sufficient to enable the contracting authority to satisfy itself that the qualitative selection criteria are met. When examining the admissibility of applications, the contracting authority carries out a retrospective assessment into whether a tenderer has qualities that indicate that the contract in question can be performed effectively. In those circumstances, the absence of those qualities cannot be overcome by the prospective legal relationship under which the members of a general partnership are legally required to assume joint and several liability for the obligations of that partnership (order of 30 September 2022, ĒDIENS & KM.LV, C-592/21, not published, EU:C:2022:746, paragraph 33).

52 Therefore, in order to enable the contracting authority to satisfy itself as to its integrity, a joint undertaking such as a general partnership, within the meaning of Netherlands law, is required to mention any ground for exclusion of any joint partner or any person employed by one of its joint partners who is a member of the administrative, management or supervisory body of the joint undertaking or who has powers of representation, decision or control therein.

53 Furthermore, in order to demonstrate its reliability, a joint undertaking, such as a general partnership, within the meaning of Netherlands law, must be regarded as intending to participate, on an individual basis, in a public procurement procedure or to submit a tender only if it shows that it is capable of performing the contract in question using only its own personnel and materials, in other words, the resources which its joint partners transferred to it in accordance with the partnership agreement and which are freely available to it. In such a case, it is sufficient for that firm to supply its own ESPD to the contracting authority.

54 In that regard, it is for the referring court to ascertain to what extent such a firm may, having regard to the particular features of its legal form as a partnership and the links between itself and the joint partners, be covered by that situation.

55 By contrast, if, for the performance of a public contract, such a firm considers that it needs to call on the resources of the joint partners, it must be regarded as relying on the capacities of other entities, within the meaning of Article 63 of Directive 2014/24. In such a case, the firm must submit not only its own ESPD, but also that of each of the joint partners whose capacities it intends to use.

56 It is true, as the municipalities, the Netherlands Government and the Commission have argued, that recital 1 of Implementing Regulation 2016/7 states that ‘one of the major objectives of Directives [2014/24] and [2014/25] is [to reduce] the administrative burdens of contracting authorities, contracting entities and economic operators, not least small and medium-sized enterprises. A key element of that effort is the [ESPD]. …’.

57 That objective of reducing the administrative burden is, however, only one of the objectives of those directives. In that respect, it must in particular be reconciled with the objective of promoting the development of healthy and effective competition between economic operators taking part in a public procurement procedure, which lies at the very heart of the EU rules on public procurement procedures and is protected in particular by the principle of equal treatment of tenderers (see, to that effect, judgments of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraph 25, and of 3 June 2021, Rad Service and Others, C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, paragraph 43).

58 The obligation for a joint undertaking, such as a general partnership, within the meaning of Netherlands law, to submit to the contracting authority an ESPD for itself and an ESPD for each of its joint partners, in the event that, for the performance of a public contract, it considers that it needs to call on the resources of those joint partners, also does not run counter to the principle of proportionality, which is guaranteed by Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, particularly since, as is apparent from both the last subparagraph of Article 59(1) of Directive 2014/24 and Annex 1 to Implementing Regulation 2016/7, economic operators may provide an ESPD which has already been used in a previous procurement procedure, provided that they confirm that the information contained therein continues to be correct and remains relevant.

59 Finally, the obligation for a joint undertaking, such as a general partnership, within the meaning of Netherlands law, to submit an ESPD for itself and an ESPD for each of the joint partners whose capacities it intends to use does indeed constitute an administrative burden, but cannot in any event be treated in the same way as an obligation to alter its legal structure.

60 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the questions referred is that Article 59(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 2(1)(10) and Article 63 of that directive, and with Annex 1 to Implementing Regulation 2016/7, must be interpreted as meaning that a joint undertaking which, although not a legal person, has the form of a firm governed by the national legislation of a Member State, which appears on the commercial register of that Member State, which may have been set up on either a temporary or a permanent basis and all the joint partners of which are active on the same market as that joint undertaking and are jointly and severally liable for the proper performance of the obligations which it has entered into, must provide the contracting authority with only its own ESPD when it intends to participate, on an individual basis, in a public procurement procedure or to submit a tender if it shows that it can perform the contract in question using only its own personnel and materials. If, on the other hand, for the performance of a public contract, that joint undertaking considers that it must seek the own resources of certain partners, it must be regarded as having recourse to the capacities of other entities, within the meaning of Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, and must then submit not only an ESPD for itself, but also an ESPD for each of the partners whose capacities it intends to use.

Costs

61 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 59(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, read in conjunction with Article 2(1)(10) and Article 63 of that directive, and with Annex 1 to Commission Implementing Regulation (EU) 2016/7 of 5 January 2016 establishing the standard form for the European Single Procurement Document, must be interpreted as meaning that a joint undertaking which, although not a legal person, has the form of a firm governed by the national legislation of a Member State, which appears on the commercial register of that Member State, which may have been set up on either a temporary or a permanent basis and all the joint partners of which are active on the same market as that joint undertaking and are jointly and severally liable for the proper performance of the obligations which it has entered into, must provide the contracting authority with only its own European Single Procurement Document (ESPD) when it intends to participate, on an individual basis, in a public procurement procedure or to submit a tender if it shows that it can perform the contract in question using only its own personnel and materials. If, on the other hand, for the performance of a public contract, that joint undertaking considers that it must seek the own resources of certain partners, it must be regarded as having recourse to the capacities of other entities, within the meaning of Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, and must then submit not only an ESPD for itself, but also an ESPD for each of the partners whose capacities it intends to use.

THE COURT (First Chamber), composed of A. Arabadjiev, President of the Chamber, L. Bay Larsen (Rapporteur), Vice-President of the Court, P.G. Xuereb, T. von Danwitz and A. Kumin, Judges, Advocate General: N. Emiliou,

Registrar: C. Di Bella, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 1 December 2022, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 2 March 2023,

Judgment

1 By its application, the European Commission asks the Court to declare that, by adding to Polish legislation exemptions not provided for in Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), concerning contracts for the production of certain documents, printed matter and stamps and markings, the Republic of Poland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 346(1)(a) TFEU.

Legal context

2 Article 1 of Directive 2014/24 provides:

‘1. This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4.

2. Procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a public contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the works, supplies or services are intended for a public purpose.

3. The application of this Directive is subject to Article 346 TFEU.

3 Under points 6 and 9 of Article 2(1) of that directive:

‘For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

(6) “public works contracts” means public contracts having as their object one of the following:

(a) the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex II;

(b) the execution, or both the design and execution, of a work;

(c) the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority exercising a decisive influence on the type or design of the work;

(9) “public service contracts” means public contracts having as their object the provision of services other than those referred to in point 6’.

4 Article 4 of the directive determines the thresholds from which the directive applies.

5 Article 12 of the directive, entitled ‘Public contracts between entities within the public sector’ provides in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘A public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contracting authority exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of the controlled legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

6 Article 15 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Defence and security’, provides, in paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof:

‘2. This Directive shall not apply to public contracts and design contests not otherwise exempted under paragraph 1, to the extent that the protection of the essential security interests of a Member State cannot be guaranteed by less intrusive measures, for instance by imposing requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which the contracting authority makes available in a contract award procedure as provided for in this Directive.

Furthermore, and in conformity with point (a) of Article 346(1) TFEU, this Directive shall not apply to public contracts and design contests not otherwise exempted under paragraph 1 of this Article to the extent that the application of this Directive would oblige a Member State to supply information the disclosure of which it considers contrary to the essential interests of its security.

3. Where the procurement and performance of the public contract or design contest are declared to be secret or must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in a Member State, this Directive shall not apply provided that the Member State has determined that the essential interests concerned cannot be guaranteed by less intrusive measures, such as those referred to in the first subparagraph of paragraph 2.’

7 Article 28(1) and (2) of that directive, entitled ‘Restricted procedure’, is worded as follows:

‘1. In restricted procedures, any economic operator may submit a request to participate in response to a call for competition …

2. Only those economic operators invited to do so by the contracting authority following its assessment of the information provided may submit a tender. Contracting authorities may limit the number of suitable candidates to be invited to participate in the procedure in accordance with Article 65.

8 Article 29 of the directive, entitled ‘Competitive procedure with negotiation’, provides, in paragraph 6 thereof:

‘Competitive procedures with negotiation may take place in successive stages in order to reduce the number of tenders to be negotiated by applying the award criteria specified in the contract notice, in the invitation to confirm interest or in another procurement document. …’

9 Article 30(4) of that directive provides:

‘Competitive dialogues may take place in successive stages in order to reduce the number of solutions to be discussed during the dialogue stage by applying the award criteria laid down in the contract notice or in the descriptive document. In the contract notice or the descriptive document, the contracting authority shall indicate whether it will use that option.’

10 Article 42 of Directive 2014/24 makes provision for contracting authorities to formulate technical specifications and take them into account in selecting tenders. Paragraph 1 of that article provides:

‘The technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex VII shall be set out in the procurement documents. The technical specifications shall lay down the characteristics required of a works, service or supply.

Those characteristics may also refer to the specific process or method of production or provision of the requested works, supplies or services or to a specific process for another stage of its life cycle even where such factors do not form part of their material substance, provided that they are linked to the subject matter of the contract and proportionate to its value and its objectives.

The technical specifications may also specify whether the transfer of intellectual property rights will be required.

11 Under Article 58 of that directive, entitled ‘Selection criteria’:

‘1. Selection criteria may relate to:

(a) suitability to pursue the professional activity;

(b) economic and financial standing;

(c) technical and professional ability.

Contracting authorities may only impose criteria referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 on economic operators as requirements for participation. They shall limit any requirements to those that are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. All requirements shall be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

2. With regard to suitability to pursue the professional activity, contracting authorities may require economic operators to be enrolled in one of the professional or trade registers kept in their Member State of establishment, as described in Annex XI, or to comply with any other request set out in that Annex.

3. With regard to economic and financial standing, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary economic and financial capacity to perform the contract. For that purpose, contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a certain minimum yearly turnover, including a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the contract. In addition, contracting authorities may require that economic operators provide information on their annual accounts showing the ratios, for instance, between assets and liabilities. They may also require an appropriate level of professional risk indemnity insurance.

4. With regard to technical and professional ability, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary human and technical resources and experience to perform the contract to an appropriate quality standard.

Contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a sufficient level of experience demonstrated by suitable references from contracts performed in the past. A contracting authority may assume that an economic operator does not possess the required professional abilities where the contracting authority has established that the economic operator has conflicting interests which may negatively affect the performance of the contract.

In procurement procedures for … services …, the professional ability of economic operators to provide the service … may be evaluated with regard to their skills, efficiency, experience and reliability.

12 Entitled ‘Reliance on the capacities of other entities’, Article 63 of that directive provides in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. …

Where an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities with regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing, the contracting authority may require that the economic operator and those entities be jointly liable for the execution of the contract.

…’

13 Article 71 of that directive lays down detailed rules concerning subcontracting.

Polish law

14 Article 4(5c) of the ustawa Prawo zamówień publicznych (Law on public procurement) of 29 January 2004 (Dz. U., No 19, item 177), as amended by the ustawa o dokumentach publicznych (Law on public documents) of 22 November 2018 (Dz. U. of 2019, item 53) (‘the Law on public procurement’), provides:

‘This Law shall not apply to:

(5c) contracts for the production of:

(a) blank public documents referred to in Article 5(2) of the [Law on public documents], as well as their personalisation or individualisation;

(l) inspectors of the Road Transport Inspectorate,

(m) members of the military police.'

Pre-litigation procedure

16 By a letter of formal notice of 25 January 2019, the Commission expressed doubts to the Republic of Poland, inter alia, as to the compatibility with Directive 2014/24 of the Law on public procurement, transposing that directive into the Polish legal order.

17 In particular, the Commission took the view that that Member State had failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive, since that law excluded from public procurement procedures the document production services, referred to in Article 4(5c) of that law, ('the services at issue'), for excise stamps, legal markings, control stickers, ballot papers, holographic signs on certificates of voting rights and microprocessor systems with software for the management of public documents, computer systems and databases necessary for the use of public documents, containing an electronic chip, in accordance with their purpose, even though such an exclusion was not provided for in that directive.

18 In its reply of 25 March 2019, the Republic of Poland disputed the Commission's complaint.

19 On 5 November 2019, that Member State informed the Commission of the adoption of a new law intended to replace the Law on public procurement from 1 January 2021.

20 The Commission, taking the view that that new law still did not remedy the failure to fulfil obligations under Directive 2014/24, by letter of 28 November 2019, sent a reasoned opinion to the Republic of Poland and called on that Member State to take the necessary measures to comply with that opinion within a period of two months from receipt thereof.

21 In its reply of 28 January 2020, the Republic of Poland challenged, in particular, the Commission's complaint alleging the addition in the Polish legal order of exemptions not provided for in that directive in so far as concerns the services at issue.

22 Since it was not satisfied with the responses provided by the Republic of Poland, the Commission decided, on 9 June 2021, to bring the present action before the Court.

The action

Arguments of the parties

23 The Commission maintains that, when transposing Directive 2014/24 into the Polish legal order, the Republic of Poland infringed that directive by exempting the services at issue in the procurement procedure provided for by that directive. In that regard, that institution observes that such exemptions are neither provided for in Articles 7 to 12 of that directive, nor can be justified on the basis of Article 15 thereof.

24 The Commission recalls that, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, it is the Member State which intends to rely on the derogations provided for in Article 15 which has the burden of proving that the exceptional circumstances justifying those derogations do actually exist.

25 By referring to the judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office) (C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194), the Commission states that it is for the Member States to define their essential security interests and the security measures necessary for the protection of public security in the context of the printing of identity documents and other official documents, and that the measures adopted by the Member States in connection with the legitimate requirements of national interest are not excluded in their entirety from the application of EU law solely because they are taken, inter alia, in the interests of public security or national defence. In particular, it is for the Republic of Poland to establish that the need to protect the interests on which it relies could not be satisfied in the context of a call for tenders. Moreover, economic or industrial interests do not constitute, in principle, such essential security interests.

26 In that regard, the Commission takes the view that the justifications put forward by the Republic of Poland concerning the services at issue, with a view to derogating from the application of the procurement procedures laid down by Directive 2014/24 are insufficient.

27 That institution maintains that the fact that the State is the sole shareholder of the undertaking which has been entrusted with the supply of the services at issue cannot constitute a guarantee either against the possible bankruptcy of that undertaking or of the reliability of the implementation of the contracts at issue. In that regard, the Commission, first, doubts that any bankruptcy of Polska Wytwórnia Papierów Wartościowych S.A. ('PWPW') is impossible, having regard to applicable State aid rules and, second, raises the possibility for PWPW of having recourse to subcontracting.

28 As regards the existence of a possible threat to the security of the Republic of Poland in the event that the successful tenderer is a private operator, on the ground that that operator may be acquired by new shareholders, the Commission submits that the contracting authority may put appropriate guarantees in place, including the termination of the public procurement contract in question.

29 Furthermore, concerning the possibility of leaks of classified or sensitive information, it is argued that the Republic of Poland has failed to demonstrate the link between PWPW's status as a public undertaking and the guarantees intended to avoid such a leak. A State shareholding of 100% in that company does not constitute a guarantee against such leaks, having regard to the possibility of having recourse to subcontractors.

30 Although the Commission does not deny that the need to ensure the security of the information involved in the award of the contract for the services at issue is in the general interest, that interest nevertheless does not systematically correspond to an essential security interest of a Member State.

31 That institution observes that the contracting authority may impose particularly exacting requirements concerning the suitability and reliability of tenderers and change the conditions governing calls for tenders and contracts for the provision of services.

32 In particular, the contracting authority may set out technical specifications, such as those referred to in Article 42 of Directive 2014/24, and/or the setting of selection criteria, such as those referred to in Article 58 of that directive, thus ensuring that the successful tenderer is able to deliver a quality product, in compliance with the conditions and techniques imposed.

33 As to the technical specifications referred to in Article 42 of Directive 2014/24, the contracting authority could, inter alia, impose requirements and specific procedures ensuring the safety of premises, transport and that relating to the handling of material and physical access to those premises, keeping proper records, the protection of personal data or the submission, by the economic operator selected, of ongoing reports. The contracting authority could, moreover, require that operator to permit it to carry out the checks that it considered necessary.

34 According to the Commission, guarantees could be provided through contractual arrangements, such as a bank guarantee or a guarantee for the compensation of possible harm caused in the event of damage, with the assurance that any information leak would be regarded as serious professional misconduct. In addition, consideration could be given to imposing an obligation on the successful tenderer to draw up a detailed report in the event of irregularities, or to including provisions in the contract relating to the protection of intellectual property and the assumption of responsibility for the services at issue by another entity in the event that the successful tenderer is unable to fulfil its obligations.

35 Furthermore, as regards the irreversibility of any harm resulting from the undermining of the essential interests of the Republic of Poland through the leaking of sensitive information, the Commission submits that such irreversibility does not preclude the contractual terms concerning damages having both a compensatory and a deterrent effect.

36 In that connection, the Commission adds that such obligations and requirements may be imposed on the successful tenderer whether its headquarters are in the territory of the Republic of Poland or that of another Member State.

37 When defining the selection criteria, referred to in Article 58 of Directive 2014/24, the Commission points out that a contracting authority may impose certain requirements intended to show relevant experience concerning the production of highly secure documents, the existence of the necessary infrastructure and equipment, the presence of suitably qualified and experienced staff, who also have a clean criminal record, a financial situation allowing the contract in question to be performed securely, or even professional indemnity insurance cover.

38 Furthermore, the Commission submits that the confidentiality of information concerning the services at issue could be ensured by imposing a confidentiality requirement. In that regard, the contracting authority could impose a requirement of national security clearance in respect of access to classified information. Moreover, the contracting authority would still be in a position to amend or terminate the public procurement contract concerned when circumstances arose which the contracting authority could not have foreseen.

39 The Republic of Poland, relying on the requirement of protection of its essential security interests, disputes the claim that it has failed to fulfil its obligations with regard to the services at issue.

40 According to that Member State, it is not possible to make those services subject to the public procurement procedures laid down by Directive 2014/24 without undermining those interests. The exemptions that are the subject of the present action are measures proportionate, appropriate and necessary to achieving the objective of guaranteeing the protection of those interests at a level which the Republic of Poland considers to be appropriate.

41 Concerning, in the first place, the exemption from public procurement procedures of the production of public documents referred to in Article 4(5c), from the Law on public procurement, first, the Republic of Poland, in the pre-litigation procedure, relied on the need to safeguard the security of those documents, which are regarded as essential to the security of that Member State, by preventing the falsification of such documents. However, only the printing of those documents by PWPW would allow that Member State to guard against such risks of falsification.

42 The Republic of Poland emphasises that the security of those documents is closely linked to the fundamental interests of the State, namely both domestic interests including the security, health and freedom of citizens and respect for public order, and cross-border interests including the protection of the life, health and freedoms of citizens, and prevention of terrorism, human trafficking and organised crime.

43 As regards, in particular, the documents referred to in paragraph 32 of Article 5(2) of the Law on public documents, namely, in particular, the service cards of police officers, border guards, State security agents, officers of the Internal Security Agency, officers of the Intelligence Agency, officers of the Military Counterintelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, officers of the Military Intelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, and members of the military police, that Member State maintains that the exclusion of those documents from the scope of the procurement procedures is justified by the protection of those fundamental interests.

44 In that connection, the Republic of Poland takes the view that adequate protection of those documents, in particular against the risks of falsification or counterfeiting, is of particular importance for its internal security. In order to ensure the highest level of protection against those risks, the documents in question must be produced by an economic operator that is wholly controlled by that Member State, such as PWPW.

45 Furthermore, as to identity cards and personal military documents, the Republic of Poland takes the view that the exclusion thereof from the scope of procurement procedures laid down by Directive 2014/24 is justified by the requirement, stemming from that Member State’s Constitution, of protection of national security of the State in the area of defence, which also guarantees the independence and integrity of its territory and ensures the security of its citizens.

46 The Republic of Poland maintains, in that regard, that supervision over the production of those documents is part of the wider context of the security and credibility of that Member State concerning defence, having regard to the geopolitical situation of that State, its membership of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO), but also the current international context.

47 Moreover, concerning the microprocessor systems with software for the management of public documents, computer systems and databases necessary for the use of those public documents, containing an electronic chip, in accordance with their purpose, referred to in Article 4(5c)(f) of the Law on public procurement, the Republic of Poland submits that, since it is not possible to ensure the security of public documents without guaranteeing an adequate level of security of the electronic components of those documents and the systems and databases used for the purposes of the processing of those documents, similar protection measures must be applied to those components, systems and databases.

48 As regards, in the second place, the excise stamps referred to in Article 4(5c)(b) of the Law on public procurement, the Republic of Poland maintains, in essence, that those stamps are of strategic importance for its national security. In that regard, the fundamental interests on which that Member State relies are the protection of the life and health of citizens, the security of financial transactions, effective prevention of organised and economic crime, financial security and the making available of an appropriate level of tax revenue.

49 The fact of entrusting the production of those stamps to an economic operator such as PWPW, which has lengthy experience in the design, safe manufacture, storage and supply of such stamps on the territory of that Member State, is an essential measure in order to guarantee the safety of citizens in that area, since no other Polish undertaking is in a position to fulfil orders for excise stamps.

50 The security of production of those stamps is intended to guarantee the monitoring of the collection of taxes and levies and the marketing and registration of means of transport. Entrusting the production of those stamps to an undertaking other than PWPW could have the consequence of reducing the level of security that the Republic of Poland wishes to maintain in that area.

51 In so far as concerns, in the third place, legal markings and control stickers for vehicles, referred to in Article 4(5c)(c) of the Law on public procurement, that Member State notes the importance of documents concerning the entry into service of a vehicle for the security of a State. Inasmuch as the production of those documents requires access to secret information and involves the use of a central personalisation technology with the aid of an electronic system, it is necessary to ensure the protection of the classified information and personal data concerned, which is one of the essential elements of the security of the Republic of Poland.

52 In particular, that Member State observes that the transport of dangerous goods, which might be used in order to commit terrorist attacks, inter alia, requires that the details of the driver and the control sticker of the vehicle concerned are only available to carefully selected entities, such as undertakings wholly owned by the State.

53 As regards, in the fourth place, ballot papers and holographic signs on certificates of voting rights, referred to in Article 4(5c)(d) and (e) of the Law on public procurement, the Republic of Poland relies on public confidence in the proper conduct and security of elections and referendums in that Member State. In particular, the proper conduct of elections is of fundamental importance, both from the point of view of the confidence of citizens in the organs of the State and from that of national security, and requires that a sufficient number of ballot papers be printed in good time.

54 The Republic of Poland maintains that the fact of entrusting the supply of services at issue to an entity such as PWPW over which it has complete control, guarantees its influence on the level of security of the public documents that it classifies as ‘sensitive’, by allowing continuous monitoring of that entity’s situation and a rapid response to any threats.

55 That Member State underscores the fact that it is has complete control over PWPW and it manages both the functioning of the bodies of PWPW and the production process for public documents, which guarantees the protection of the fundamental interest of the security of that Member State.

56 In particular, the State Treasury’s ownership of 100% of PWPW’s shares enables the Republic of Poland to prevent that company being taken over by an entity other than one controlled by the State Treasury. It thus guarantees continuity of production of public documents and avoids the risk of bankruptcy of the economic operator responsible for that production.

57 The risk of bankruptcy of a company such as PWPW is purely theoretical and the Commission, furthermore, has not put forward reasons why, in the event that PWPW was in financial difficulty, it would not be possible to grant State aid to that company.

58 As to the risk of insolvency of that operator, the solution proposed by the Commission does not allow a sudden deterioration in the financial situation of that company to be avoided, whereas, on the contrary, such a hypothesis is precluded in a system such as that put in place by the Republic of Poland.

59 Furthermore, the consequences linked to the absence of essential documents for the functioning of the State, which would stem from a sudden interruption in their production by the chosen economic operator, would be irreparable.

60 Moreover, according to the Republic of Poland, confining the production of those documents to an entity such as PWPW, without going through a procurement procedure provided for by Directive 2014/24, ensures the authenticity of those documents and, therefore, the security of that Member State, by limiting, furthermore, the group of entities that has access to classified information.

61 As to the possibility for the contracting authority to have recourse to subcontractors, the Republic of Poland takes the view that a situation in which a contract is performed by an undertaking which is wholly owned by the State, even using subcontractors, is not comparable with a situation in which that contract itself is performed by an entity selected in accordance with the procurement procedures laid down by Directive 2014/24. Furthermore, if a subcontractor does not honour the contract, PWPW has the possibility of taking the place of that subcontractor in so far as concerns the entire chain of document production.

62 The Republic of Poland submits that the Commission is wrong to base its argument on the judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office) (C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194), which is not relevant for the purposes of the examination of the present action for failure to fulfil obligations. In that connection, that Member State contends that the application of the directives on public procurement relied on in the case which gave rise to that judgment ensured a similar level of security to that which would have been attained without the use of the procurement procedures laid down by those directives. However, the same cannot be said for the present case.

63 The Republic of Poland insists that it is not required to align the level of protection of its own essential security interests with the level of protection afforded by another Member State, in particular the Republic of Austria. In that connection, the Republic of Poland submits that, although the measures which, according to the Commission, may be taken so as to ensure the protection of its essential interests whilst submitting the services at issue to public procurement procedures provided for by Directive 2014/24 are sufficient for most contracts, those measures do not allow the level of protection of the essential security issues that it selected to be attained in respect of contracts concerning the services at issue.

64 As regards the protection of the security of information concerning the public documents in question, the opening up of the production services for those documents to competition increases the number of entities which may have access to information concerning the security of the Republic of Poland, which would increase the risk of that sensitive information being leaked. Such an attack to the essential security interests of that Member State would be, in the same way as a disruption of the supply of those documents, irreversible and a threat to the continuity of functioning of that Member State, since the information thus disclosed may be used by third States, organised crime groups or terrorist organisations.

65 As to the measure envisaged by the Commission, consisting of imposing a duty of secrecy by requiring national security clearance in order to access classified information, the Republic of Poland submits that such an obligation only guarantees the security of that sensitive information to a certain extent. The same applies to measures concerning the definition of technical specifications imposing requirements and specific procedures guaranteeing security.

66 Although the Commission argues that threats to the security of the Member State concerned could exist even when the services at issue were entrusted to a public undertaking such as PWPW, it has nevertheless failed to prove that the level of those threats would be as high as where the performance of the contract concerned was entrusted to an entity selected pursuant to that directive.

67 Even if the measures referred to in paragraph 65 of the present judgment allow only a limited number of candidates which have, moreover, demonstrated that they meet high standards concerning the reliability of information protection procedures to have access to that information, the system chosen by the Republic of Poland allows reduction in the number of entities having access to such information.

Findings of the Court

68 The present action concerns whether the Polish legislation providing for a direct award of the contracts relating to the services at issue to PWPW is in conformity with Directive 2014/24.

69 It should be noted at the outset that, as is apparent from the file submitted to the Court, first, the public contracts covered by that legislation are public service contracts, within the meaning of Article 2(1)(9) of that directive and, second, it is not disputed that the estimated value of those contracts exceeds the application thresholds for that directive. Accordingly, in accordance with Article 1(1) of that directive, that legislation must, in principle, provide that the award of those contracts is to be carried out in compliance with the rules laid down by that directive.

70 The only permitted exemptions to the application of Directive 2014/24 are those which are exhaustively and expressly mentioned therein (see, by analogy, judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal, C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 43 and the case-law cited).

71 According to settled case-law relating to the burden of proof in proceedings for failure to fulfil an obligation under Article 258 TFEU, it is for the Commission to determine whether the obligation has not been fulfilled. It is the Commission that must provide the Court with the information necessary for it to determine whether the infringement is made out, and the Commission may not rely on any presumption for that purpose (judgment of 2 September 2021, Commission v Sweden (Waste water treatment plants), C-22/20, EU:C:2021:669, paragraph 143 and the case-law cited).

72 In the present proceedings, the Republic of Poland relies on Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 346(1)(a) TFEU, with a view to justifying the compatibility with EU law of the Polish legislation providing for a direct award of the service contracts in question to PWPW.

73 In that connection, it should be noted that it is apparent from Article 15(2) of Directive 2014/24 that that directive does not apply to public contracts to the extent that the protection of the essential security interests of a Member State cannot be guaranteed by less intrusive measures, for instance by imposing requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which the contracting authority makes available in a contract award procedure as provided for by that directive.

74 Furthermore, that provision states that, in accordance with Article 346(1)(a) TFEU, Directive 2014/24 does not apply to public contracts to the extent that the application of that directive would oblige a Member State to supply information the disclosure of which it considers contrary to the essential interests of its security.

75 Under Article 15(3) of that directive, where the procurement and performance of the public contract are declared to be secret or must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in a Member State, that directive is not to apply provided that the Member State has determined that the essential interests concerned cannot be guaranteed by less intrusive measures.

76 As regards the derogation contained in Article 15 of Directive 2014/24, it is for the Member States to define their essential security interests and, in the present case, for the Polish authorities to define the security measures necessary for the protection of the national security of the Republic of Poland in the context of the printing of documents such as those at issue in the present case (see, by analogy, judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office), C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194, paragraph 75 and the case-law cited).

77 The wording of Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of Article 346 TFEU, does not impose an obligation on the Member States as to the level of protection sought for their essential security interests.

78 As the Advocate General notes, in essence, in paragraph 48 of his Opinion, the term ‘security’, referred to in those provisions, includes, inter alia, the safeguarding of national security.

79 It should be recalled that, according to settled case-law, the objective of protecting national security corresponds to the primary interest in protecting the essential functions of the State and the fundamental interests of society through the prevention and punishment of activities capable of seriously destabilising the fundamental constitutional, political, economic or social structures of a country and, in particular, of directly threatening society, the population or the State itself, such as terrorist activities (judgment of 5 April 2022, Commissioner of An Garda Síochána and Others, C-140/20, EU:C:2022:258, paragraph 61 and the case-law cited).

80 However, measures adopted by the Member States in connection with the legitimate requirements of national interest are not excluded in their entirety from the application of EU law solely because they are taken in the interests of national security (see, by analogy, judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office), C 187/16, EU:C:2018:194, paragraph 76 and the case-law cited).

81 Moreover, it should also be recalled that derogations such as those relied on in the present action must be strictly interpreted (see, by analogy, judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office), C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194, paragraph 77 and the case-law cited).

82 Consequently, even though Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 afford the Member States discretion in deciding the measures considered to be necessary for the protection of their essential security interests, those provisions cannot, however, be construed as conferring on Member States the power to derogate from the provisions of the FEU Treaty simply by invoking those interests. Accordingly, a Member State which wishes to avail itself of the derogations provided for in those provisions must establish that the protection of such interests could not have been attained within a competitive tendering procedure as provided for by that directive (see, by analogy, judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office), C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194, paragraphs 78 and 79 and the case-law cited).

83 In the present case, although the Republic of Poland has admittedly identified the essential security interests which it considers must be protected and the guarantees inherent in the protection of those interests, it is however necessary to verify whether that Member State has shown that the objectives it pursues could not have been attained within a competitive tendering procedure as provided for by Directive 2014/24.

84 In that regard, the Republic of Poland's argument that the Commission cannot validly rely on the judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office) (C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194), inasmuch as, unlike the situation at issue in the present case, the national printing office in question in the case which gave rise to that judgment was an undertaking governed by private law, must be rejected from the outset. The legal status of the company responsible, at the national level, for printing official documents, does not relieve the Member State concerned, subject to the applicability of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24, from the obligation to demonstrate that its objectives could not have been attained within a competitive tendering procedure. The Republic of Poland has failed to demonstrate that the public contracts covered by the Polish legislation at issue were subject to an in-house award, falling within the specific cases for exemption from the public procurement rules, referred to in Article 12.

85 As regards, in the first place, the Republic of Poland's argument that the direct award to PWPW of the service contracts at issue meets the objective of ensuring continuity in the supply of official documents, by avoiding the risk of bankruptcy of that undertaking, it should be noted that, whilst most of those documents are closely linked to public order and the institutional operation of a Member State, which require that guaranteed provision be ensured, the Republic of Poland has, however, failed to show that that objective could not be ensured in the context of a call for tenders and that such guaranteed provision would be jeopardised if those services were entrusted to other undertakings, including, as the case may be, undertakings established in other Member States.

86 In particular, that Member State has failed to show that the risk of disruption in the production of the public documents in question resulting from the potential bankruptcy of the economic operator responsible for that production was significantly greater where a public procurement procedure provided for by Directive 2014/24 was used.

87 In order to mitigate such risks, the Polish legislation at issue could have provided for the imposition of other measures, such as, inter alia, an obligation, vis-à-vis the contracting authority, to conclude, where other considerations do not preclude this, contracts with several suppliers.

88 Moreover, that contract could have provided for guarantee requirements as to financial stability of the candidates. Article 58(3) of Directive 2014/24 provides that contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary economic and financial capacity to perform the contract. That provision states that, for that purpose, contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a certain minimum yearly turnover, including a certain minimum turnover in the area covered by the contract. In addition, contracting authorities may require that economic operators provide information on their annual accounts and have, where relevant, an appropriate level of professional risk indemnity insurance.

89 The Republic of Poland has failed to demonstrate that the imposition of such requirements is incapable of mitigating the alleged risks regarding the supply of the documents concerned, due, inter alia, to a sudden deterioration in the financial situation of the undertaking responsible for their production. As the Commission observes, although there is a lesser risk that an undertaking such as PWPW be declared bankrupt, that risk cannot be completely ruled out.

90 As regards the need for production in sufficient numbers and in good time of the ballot papers and holographic signs on certificates of voting rights, referred to in Article 4(5c)(d) and (e) of the Law on public procurement, so as to ensure the efficient conduct and security of elections, the Republic of Poland has failed to demonstrate that undertakings other than PWPW necessarily perform worse than that undertaking and that they cannot print those ballot papers and produce those signs in sufficient quantity and in good time. It follows that it has not been established that it is necessary to disapply the provisions on public procurement laid down by Directive 2014/24 in order to attain the objective put forward by that Member State.

91 In so far as concerns, in the second place, the need to ensure, as regards the majority of the services at issue, the protection of the security of the documents concerned and, more specifically, the information that they contain, the Court has previously held that the requirement to impose an obligation of confidentiality does not in itself prevent the use of a competitive tendering procedure for the award of a contract (judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office), C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194, paragraph 89).

92 Furthermore, the Court has also held that the confidential nature of data can be protected by a duty of secrecy, without it being necessary to contravene public procurement procedures. There is nothing to prevent the contracting authority from imposing particularly high requirements for the suitability and reliability of contractors, formulating tender specifications and service contracts accordingly and requiring the necessary proof from potential candidates (judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office), C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194, paragraphs 90 and 91).

93 In order to ensure the security of the majority of the documents concerned, the contracting authority could, in the context of the procurement procedures laid down by Directive 2014/24, have set out, inter alia, technical specifications, as referred to in Article 42 of that directive, and/or set selection criteria, as referred to in Article 58 of the directive.

94 More particularly, as regards those technical specifications, within the meaning of Article 42 of Directive 2014/24, it is apparent from paragraph 1 thereof that such specifications define the requisite characteristics of the services concerned, and that those characteristics may also refer to the specific process or method for supplying the services sought, provided that these are linked to the subject matter of the contract and proportionate to its value and its objectives.

95 As to selection criteria, referred to in Article 58 of that directive, the Court has held that the contracting authority is afforded broad discretion by the EU legislature when determining selection criteria. Thus, in accordance with paragraph 1 of that article, it has some flexibility in setting those requirements for participation in a procurement procedure which it considers to be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract and appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities required to perform that contract. More specifically, according to paragraph 4 of that article, the contracting authority is free to determine which requirements for participation it considers appropriate, from its point of view, to ensure inter alia the performance of that contract to a quality standard which it considers appropriate (see, to that effect, judgment of 26 January 2023, Construct, C-403/21, EU:C:2023:47, paragraph 60 and the case-law cited).

96 In particular, that paragraph 4 allows the contracting authority to impose conditions which guarantee that economic operators have the human and technical resources and the experience necessary to perform the contract concerned by ensuring an appropriate quality standard, which can be assessed in view of their know-how, efficiency, experience and reliability. Economic operators who are regarded as not having the requisite professional capacities may therefore be excluded, including in situations involving conflicts of interests which may have an adverse effect on the performance of that contract.

97 Furthermore, as the Commission maintains, as regards the majority of the services at issue, the contracting authority could grant access to the confidential information concerned only to a limited number of candidates, by having recourse to the restricted procedure referred to in Article 28 of Directive 2014/24 or, where appropriate, to the procedures referred to in Articles 29 and 30 thereof. The contracting authority may, in fact, exercise the option of reducing the number of tenders to be negotiated as provided for in Article 29(6) or of solutions to be discussed as provided for in Article 30(4) of that directive.

98 In those circumstances, first, in so far as concerns the argument put forward by the Republic of Poland that the production of legal markings and control stickers for vehicles, referred to in Article 4(5c)(c) of the Law on public procurement, together with the documents relating to the entry into service of a vehicle, requires access to secret or confidential information and involves the protection of classified information and personal data, it has been recalled, in paragraph 92 of the present judgment, that the confidentiality of data can, in principle, be ensured by means of a duty of secrecy, without it being necessary to contravene the public procurement procedures laid down by Directive 2014/24.

99 In order to prevent leaks of sensitive information, it is permissible for the Polish authorities to insert into the conditions governing calls for tenders clauses obliging the successful tenderer to maintain general confidentiality, and to stipulate that a candidate undertaking which is not in a position to provide sufficient guarantees as regards compliance with that obligation will be excluded from the award procedure. It is also permissible for the Polish authorities to provide for the application of penalties against the successful tenderer, in particular contractual penalties, if there is a failure to comply with such an obligation during the performance of the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office), C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194, paragraph 93).

100 Moreover, while, admittedly, a Member State can take measures with a view to ensuring, in particular, that a driver’s data and the control sticker for a vehicle in the context of the transport of dangerous goods may be accessed only by strictly selected entities, the confidential nature of those data may also be guaranteed by an obligation of confidentiality incumbent on undertakings participating in an award procedure governed by Directive 2014/24.

101 Accordingly, since the Republic of Poland has failed to put forward any elements capable of demonstrating that recourse to a public procurement procedure thus conceived would not make it possible to make access to secret data secure in a manner comparable to the direct award of the contracts concerned to PWPW, it is not established that protection of the security thereof precludes a competitive bidding process for awarding those contracts.

102 As regard, second, excise stamps provided for in Article 4(5c)(b) of the Law on public procurement, although the Republic of Poland can take the measures necessary to ensure, in particular, the safety and security of its citizens, that Member State has, however, failed to demonstrate that only the award of the production of those stamps to an undertaking such as PWPW is such as to ensure the attainment of that objective and that it is appropriate to disapply the provisions on public procurement laid down by Directive 2014/24.

103 It is in fact not clear that that objective could not be attained if such production were entrusted to economic operators other than PWPW, which have sufficient experience in the design, fully secure production, storage and supply of such stamps on the territory of that Member State. Furthermore, there is nothing to suggest that it would be impossible contractually to impose the necessary confidentiality and security measures on those operators.

104 Third, when the Republic of Poland relies – with regard, in particular, to the production of the public documents referred to in Article 5(1) of the Law on public documents and microprocessor systems with software for the management of public documents, computer systems and databases necessary for the use of public documents, containing electronic chips, in accordance with their purpose, referred to in Article 4(5c)(f) of the Law on public procurement – on the imperative of preventing the falsification or forgery thereof, it should be observed that, as regards the majority of those documents and systems, the guarantees that the contracting authority may require appear to be sufficient to mitigate the risks relied on by that Member State in respect of its essential security interests.

105 Strict compliance, by the economic operator selected, of the award criteria and the continuous monitoring thereof over the course of the performance of the contract awarded are, in principle, such as to prevent potential leaks and internal abuses, which could give rise to such falsification or forgery.

106 It follows that the disapplication of the public procurement procedures laid down by Directive 2014/24 to the contracts relating to the production of the majority of the public documents referred to in Article 4(5c) of the Law on public procurement, but also to the contracts, also referred to in that provision, relating to the production of excise stamps, legal markings, control stickers, ballot papers, holographic signs on certificates of voting rights and microprocessor systems with software for the management of public documents, computer systems and databases necessary for the use of public documents, appears disproportionate in the light of the objectives on which the Republic of Poland relies.

107 By contrast, as regards certain public documents, referred to in points 16 to 19 and 32 of Article 5(2) of the Law on public documents – namely the personal documents of members of the military and their identity cards, the service cards of police officers, border guards, State security agents, officers of the Internal Security Agency, officers of the Intelligence Agency, officers of the Military Counterintelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, officers of the Military Intelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, and members of the military police – it must be held that those documents present a direct and close link to the objective of protecting national security, with the result that these may justify additional confidentiality requirements.

108 In that connection, it is clear that the documents set out in the preceding paragraph, in so far as they concern agents and officers whose duties appear to be directly and closely linked to tasks which contribute to safeguarding the national security of a Member State, can render indispensable a limitation on the disclosure of the characteristics of such documents and the information that they contain – including, in particular, the identity of those agents and officers – with the result that such documents must be regarded as having a particularly high level of sensitivity which requires greater protection against, inter alia, leaks and falsification.

109 As the Republic of Poland essentially maintains, without being effectively contradicted by the Commission, any leak of such information could have irreparable consequences for the national security of a Member State, given that such information is liable to be used by third States or, in particular, by criminal gangs or terrorist organisations.

110 Accordingly, although it could admittedly have been envisaged that provision be made for guarantees such as the application of penalties, including contractual penalties, to an economic operator entrusted with the task of producing the documents referred to in paragraph 107 of the present judgment, in the event of a leak of such sensitive information, such guarantees cannot be regarded as sufficiently effective as to ensure the security of that information.

111 As the Advocate General observes in point 95 of his Opinion, the application of disciplinary penalties to the persons responsible for such an information leak or to those who allowed them to do so, or even the inclusion in those contracts of terms providing for financial compensation which would necessarily be paid after the harm has occurred, are not appropriate solutions with a view to safeguarding such information.

112 As to the Commission's argument that an undertaking such as PWPW may use subcontractors and that it would therefore not be justified to award the services at issue exclusively to that undertaking, it should be noted, first, that the Commission has failed to establish that Polish legislation explicitly authorises the subcontracting of the production of the documents referred to in paragraph 107 of the present judgment.

113 Next, it is not disputed that such recourse to subcontracting would constitute, at most, an option open to PWPW and could therefore be envisaged only under the supervision of, and to the extent and under the conditions defined by, that undertaking. Furthermore, the Republic of Poland stated at the hearing, without being contradicted by the Commission, that PWPW relies on subcontractors only in respect of a limited number of services, of which the production of the documents set out in paragraph 107 of the present judgment does not form part.

114 Lastly, in the situation where that production would be performed by an entity selected in accordance with the rules laid down by Directive 2014/24, it should be noted that that entity could itself resort to using subcontractors, as is apparent from Article 63(1) and Article 71 of that directive, without an entity selected by the Member State concerned being able to oversee the activities of those subcontractors or define the terms and conditions of their involvement. It follows that it cannot be considered that eventual recourse by PWPW to subcontracting would mean that the level of security required for that production would not be higher than that which would result from the application of the public procurement procedures laid down by that directive.

115 In those circumstances, it must be held that the Republic of Poland can rely on Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 when it claims that the nature of the documents set out in paragraph 107 of the present judgment is incompatible with the obligation to follow those procedures.

116 Since the Commission has failed to adduce evidence for its claims with regard to those documents, its action must consequently be dismissed in so far as it concerns provisions of Polish legislation providing for the direct award of contracts relating to the production of those documents to PWPW, without following the public procurement procedures laid down by Directive 2014/24.

117 In the light of all of the foregoing considerations, it must be found that, by adding to Polish legislation exemptions not provided for in Directive 2014/24 in so far as concerns the contracts relating to the production, on the one hand, of the public documents referred to in Article 4(5c) of the Law on public procurement, with the exception of the personal documents of members of the military and their identity cards, the service cards of police officers, border guards, State security agents, officers of the Internal Security Agency, officers of the Intelligence Agency, officers of the Military Counterintelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, officers of the Military Intelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, and members of the military police and, on the other hand, of excise stamps, legal markings, control stickers, ballot papers, holographic signs on certificates of voting rights and microprocessor systems with software for the management of public documents, computer systems and databases necessary for the use of public documents, also referred to in Article 4(5c), the Republic of Poland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 346(1)(a) TFEU.

118 The action must be dismissed as to the remainder.

Costs

119 Under Article 138(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings.

120 Under Article 138(3) of those rules, where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads, the parties are to bear their own costs. However, if it appears justified in the circumstances of the case, the Court may order that one party, in addition to bearing its own costs, pay a proportion of the costs of the other party.

121 In the present case, the Commission and the Republic of Poland applied, respectively, for the other party to be ordered to pay the costs.

122 Since the Commission's action has been upheld, except in so far as it concerned the exclusion of the public procurement procedures laid down by Directive 2014/24 in respect of the contracts relating to the production of certain public documents, referred to in point 32 of Article 5(2) of the Law on public documents, to which Article 4(5c) of the Law on public procurement refers, namely the personal documents of members of the military and their identity cards, the service cards of police officers, border guards, State security agents, officers of the Internal Security Agency, officers of the Intelligence Agency, officers of the Military Counterintelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, officers of the Military Intelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, and members of the military police, it is appropriate, pursuant to Article 138(3) of the Rules of Procedure, to decide that, in addition to bearing its own costs, the Republic of Poland shall pay two thirds of the costs incurred by the Commission.

123 The Commission must bear one third of its own costs.

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by adding to Polish legislation exemptions not provided for in Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, in so far as concerns the contracts relating to the production, on the one hand, of the public documents referred to in Article 4(5c) of the ustawa Prawo zamówień publicznych (Law on public procurement) of 29 January 2004, as amended by the ustawa o dokumentach publicznych (Law on public documents) of 22 November 2018, with the exception of the personal documents of members of the military and their identity cards, the service cards of police officers, border guards, State security agents, officers of the Internal Security Agency, officers of the Intelligence Agency, officers of the Military Counterintelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, officers of the Military Intelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, and members of the military police and, on the other hand, of excise stamps, legal markings, control stickers, ballot papers, holographic signs on certificates of voting rights and microprocessor systems with software for the management of public documents, computer systems and databases necessary for the use of public documents, also referred to in Article 4(5c), the Republic of Poland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 346(1)(a) TFEU.

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders the Republic of Poland to bear its own costs and pay two thirds of the costs incurred by the European Commission;

4. Orders the Commission to bear one third of its own costs.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
EMILIOU delivered on 2 March 2023(1)

Case C-601/21

European Commission
v
Republic of Poland

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Public procurement – Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24/EU – Derogations – Production of identity documents and other official documents – Protection of the essential security interests of the Member States – Less intrusive measures)

I. Introduction

1. For public authorities, in the European Union and elsewhere, the need to protect the integrity of and the public trust in public documents (such as passports, ballot papers, or service cards of members of the police, military and intelligence services) raises significant security concerns. Especially in today's world, where people are able to travel easily and quickly, and data even more so, those authorities are engaged in a never-ending competition against criminals to develop material and techniques which render the falsification of and tampering with public documents as difficult as possible.

2. Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (2) and Article 346(1) TFEU allow Member States to, in essence, exclude certain public contracts from the procedures provided for in that directive when the protection of their essential security interests could be undermined, provided no less restrictive measures exist.

3. What public interests can be regarded as being 'essential security interests' for that purpose? What is the margin of manoeuvre of the Member States in that regard? Is a Member State entitled to choose the level of protection that it deems most appropriate in relation to those interests? How far does a Member State's duty go to consider and, if need be, adopt measures that may be less restrictive?

4. These are, in a nutshell, the main legal issues that arise in the present proceedings, in respect of which I will attempt to bring some clarity with this Opinion.

II. Legal background

A. European Union law

5. Under the terms of Article 346(1) TFEU:

‘The provisions of the Treaties shall not preclude the application of the following rules:

(a) no Member State shall be obliged to supply information the disclosure of which it considers contrary to the essential interests of its security;

6. Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, concerning the subject matter and scope of the directive, as amended and currently in force, provides:

‘1. This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts …, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4.

3. The application of this Directive is subject to Article 346 TFEU.’

7. Article 2(1)(9) of Directive 2014/24 defines ‘public service contracts’ as ‘public contracts having as their object the provision of services other than those referred to in point 6’. (3)

8. Article 15(2) and (3) of the same directive, concerning ‘defence and security’, states:

‘2. This Directive shall not apply to public contracts … not otherwise exempted under paragraph 1, to the extent that the protection of the essential security interests of a Member State cannot be guaranteed by less intrusive measures, for instance by imposing requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which the contracting authority makes available in a contract award procedure as provided for in this Directive.

Furthermore, and in conformity with point (a) of Article 346(1) TFEU, this Directive shall not apply to public contracts … not otherwise exempted under paragraph 1 of this Article to the extent that the application of this Directive would oblige a Member State to supply information the disclosure of which it considers contrary to the essential interests of its security.

3. Where the procurement and performance of the public contract … are declared to be secret or must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in a Member State, this Directive shall not apply provided that the Member State has determined that the essential interests concerned cannot be guaranteed by less intrusive measures, such as those referred to in the first subparagraph of paragraph 2.’

B. Polish law

9. Article 11(4) of the ustawa z dnia 11 września 2019 r. – Prawo zamówień publicznych (Law of 11 September 2019 on Public Procurement; ‘the Pzp of 2019’) provides:

‘The provisions of this law shall not apply to contracts for the production of:

1) blank public documents referred to in Article 5(2) of the Law on Public Documents of 22 November 2018 …, as well as their personalisation or individualisation;

2) excise stamps;

3) legal markings and control stickers referred to in the Law of 20 June 1997 establishing the highway code …;

4) ballot papers and Braille ballot papers referred to in Article 40(1) and Article 40a(1) respectively of the law of 5 January 2011 establishing the Electoral Code … and Article 20 of the law of 14 March 2003 on the National Referendum …;

5) holographic signs on certificates of voting rights referred to in Article 32(1) of the law of 5 January 2011 on the Electoral Code;

6) microprocessor systems with software for the management of public documents, computer systems and databases necessary for the use of public documents referred to in Article 5(2) of the law of 22 November 2018 on public documents, containing an electronic chip, in accordance with their purpose'.

10. The following list of public documents is contained in Article 5(2) of the Law on Public Documents of 22 November 2018: 1) identity cards; 2) passports; 3) seaman's books, referred to in Article 10(1) of the Law on Maritime Labour of 5 August 2015; 4) documents issued pursuant to Article 44(1) and Article 83(1) of the Law on Civil Status Records of 28 November 2014; 5) documents issued to foreigners pursuant to Article 37 and Article 226 of the Law on Foreigners of 12 December 2013; 6) documents issued to members of diplomatic missions and consular posts of foreign states or any person assimilated to them by virtue of laws, conventions or customary international law, as well as documents issued to their family members forming part of their household pursuant to Article 61 of the Law on Foreigners of 12 December 2013; 7) the document issued to EU citizens pursuant to Article 48(1) of the Law of 14 July 2006 on entry to, stay in and exit from the territory of the Republic of Poland of nationals of EU Member States and their family members; 8) documents issued to family members of EU citizens pursuant to Article 30(1) and Article 48(2) of that law of 14 July 2006; 9) documents issued to aliens pursuant to Article 55(1) and Article 89i(1) of the Law of 13 June 2003 on granting aliens protection in the territory of the Republic of Poland; 10) enforceable titles issued by courts or judicial officers; 11) copies of final judgments establishing the acquisition, existence or extinction of a right or relating to civil status; 12) copies of judgments or certificates, issued by a court, empowering the representation of a person, the performance of a legal act or the administration of specific property; 13) copies of orders of courts and court officers concerning the affixing of the enforcement formula to an enforcement order other than those listed in Article 777(1)(1) and (1^1) of the Law of 17 November 1964 establishing the Code of Civil Procedure, if their subject matter is an enforcement order not issued by the court; 14) copies of and extracts from documents relating to the notarial acts referred to in Article 79(1–1b) and (4) of the Law of 14 February 1991 on the notarial profession, the authorisations referred to in Article 79(2) thereof and the protests referred to in Article 79(5) thereof; 15) the aircrew member's certificate; 16) personal military documents issued to persons entered in the military register pursuant to Article 54(1) of the Law of 21 November 1967 on the general obligation to defend the Republic of Poland; 17) personal military documents issued pursuant to Article 48(1) of the Law of 11 September 2003 on professional military service; 18) identity cards issued pursuant to Article 137c(1) of that law of 11 September 2003; 19) identity cards issued pursuant to Article 54a(1) of that law of 21 November 1967; 20) an annotation in a passport referred to in Article 19(1) of the Law of 13 July 2006 on Passports; 21) the visa sticker; 22) the 'Polish card' ('Karta Polaka'); 23) the card certifying disability or degree of disability; 24) the authorisation to work as a doctor; 25) the permit to practice dentistry; 26) the driving licence; 27) the professional registration certificate and vehicle registration certificate, except for vehicle registration certificates referred to in Article 73(3) of the Law of 20 June 1997 on the Traffic Code; 28) the vehicle booklet ('karta pojazdu'); 29) the temporary certificate referred to in Article 71(1) of the Law of 20 June 1997 on the Traffic Code; 30) the tachograph card referred to in Article 2(4) of the Law of 5 July 2018 on Tachographs; 31) the ADR certificate referred to in Article 2(10) of the Law of 19 August 2011 on Transport of Dangerous Goods; 31a) the registration document referred to in Article 4(1) of the Law of 12 April 2018 on the registration of yachts and other vessels up to 24 metres in length; and 32) service cards of: a) police officers, b) border guards, c) State security agents, d) officers of the Internal Security Agency, e) officers of the Intelligence Agency, f) officers of the Central Anti-Corruption Bureau, g) officers of the Military Counterintelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, h) officers of the Military Iintelligence Service and professional soldiers appointed to a post in that service, i) officers and staff of the prison administration, j) tax and customs officials, k) persons employed in organisational units of the national tax administration, l) inspectors of the Road Transport Inspectorate, m) members of the military police.

III. Background to the case and the pre-litigation procedure

11. According to Article 90 of Directive 2014/24, Member States were required to transpose that directive by 18 April 2016.

12. On 14 July 2016, the European Commission received from the Polish authorities notification of the national measures transposing that directive. Taking the view that the Republic of Poland had failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive, the Commission sent it a letter of formal notice on 25 January 2019.

13. By letter of 25 March 2019, the Polish authorities responded to the letter of formal notice by informing the Commission of their intention to review certain aspects of the transposition measures in order to ensure compliance with, inter alia, Directive 2014/24. The Polish authorities, however, rejected some of the Commission's objections.

14. On 5 November 2019, the Polish authorities informed the Commission of the adoption of a new law, the Pzp of 2019, aimed at replacing, as of 1 January 2021, the national legislation previously in force.

15. On 28 November 2019, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to the Republic of Poland, pointing out shortcomings in the transposition of Directive 2014/24. In that reasoned opinion, the Commission accepted that, with the new legislation, the Polish authorities had indeed remedied some of the problems previously identified. However, the Commission maintained the other objections raised in its letter of formal notice, which the Polish authorities had contested.

16. In their reply of 28 January 2020, the Polish authorities again disagreed with the Commission's complaints, arguing that the national legislation at issue complied with the provisions of Directive 2014/24.

17. In those circumstances, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

IV. Procedure before the Court and forms of order sought

18. By its application, submitted on 28 September 2021, the Commission claims that the Court should:

– declare that, by adding exemptions relating to the production of certain documents, printed matter and stamps and markings, which are not provided for in Directive 2014/24, the Republic of Poland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 346(1)(a) TFEU; and – order the Republic of Poland to pay the costs.

19. In its defence, submitted on 17 December 2021, the Republic of Poland contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the action; and

– order the Commission to pay the costs.

20. The Commission lodged a reply on 9 February 2022, the Republic of Poland lodged a rejoinder on 21 March 2022, and both presented oral argument at the hearing on 1 December 2022.

V. Analysis

A. Arguments of the parties

21. In its application, the Commission points out that the Republic of Poland has, when transposing Directive 2014/24 into national law, excluded from the scope of that directive the contracts for the production of a large and diverse series of documents and other objects ('the documents at issue').

Indeed, those contracts have been entrusted directly to Polska Wytwórnia Papierów Wartościowych ('PWPW') – a public undertaking established in Poland and wholly owned by the State Treasury – without any public tenders being organised to that end.

22. The Commission recalls that Directive 2014/24 expressly provides for cases in which its provisions do not apply. The Commission points out that the list of derogations is, according to the case-law of the Court, exhaustive, and that such derogations should be interpreted strictly.

23. In the Commission's view, the Polish Government cannot validly rely on Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 to justify the exclusion of the contracts for the production of the documents at issue from the public procurement rules. In that regard, the Commission refers to the Court's findings in the judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office), (4) which are – in its view – applicable mutatis mutandis to the present case. In that judgment, the Court stated, inter alia, that Member States' measures cannot be exempted, as a whole, from the application of public procurement rules solely because they were taken in the interest of public security or national defence. It is for the Member State relying on those derogations to establish that the need to protect such interests could not have been achieved through a competitive tendering procedure.

24. The Commission is of the view that some of the interests invoked by the Polish Government are not related to that Member State's security, let alone its essential security interests. In addition, even with regard to those interests that can possibly fall within that concept, the Commission contends that the Polish Government failed to show that the objective of protecting such interests cannot be equally protected by means of alternative, less restrictive measures.

25. In particular, the Commission argues that the Polish Government did not explain why PWPW would be the only company with the experience and technical certificates required to produce the documents at issue with the highest safety standards. In that context, the Commission notes that several companies active in the European Union (including some established in Poland) offer similar guarantees in terms of technical capacity, financial stability and security. In fact, PWPW competes against those companies in tenders for the production of documents equivalent to those concerned in the present proceedings for other EU Member States (or, for that matter, for countries outside the European Union).

26. The Commission submits that nothing prevents the contracting authority from imposing particularly high requirements for tenderers (in terms of technical and financial capabilities, moral standing, etc.) and from asking them to provide the necessary evidence in support of their tender. In particular, Articles 42 and 58 of Directive 2014/24 give national authorities, in the Commission's view, ample room for manoeuvre in that respect. For example, an economic operator could be required to agree to appropriate checks by the authorities and to provide guarantees as to the security and punctuality of supply and to solvency. The contract could also include clauses on compensation and financial and disciplinary liability in case of breach.

27. The Commission expresses doubts as to whether the Polish Government's argument concerning the de facto impossibility for PWPW to go bankrupt is correct, since the EU provisions on State aid control may be applicable to financial aid provided to that company by the Treasury.

28. For its part, the Republic of Poland emphasises that it has an extensive system of security of official documents, and that PWPW is an entity entirely controlled and managed by the State. It adds that, under national law, shares or rights attached to shares owned by the Treasury – such as those of PWPW – cannot, in principle, be sold. Exceptionally, a possible sale of those shares could be subject to the condition of approval by the Council of Ministers, but could only be done in favour of other public companies that cannot be sold to private shareholders.

29. According to the Republic of Poland, such a configuration allows the exercise of full control over both the functioning of PWPW's bodies and the process of producing official documents. In those circumstances, entrusting the task of producing such documents to such an entity, without going through a public procurement procedure, would limit the circle of entities that have access to information considered to be classified. Such a solution would also ensure continuity of production while eliminating the risks associated with the bankruptcy of the producer or the poor execution of a possible public contract.

30. As regards the Commission's arguments concerning bankruptcy of a company such as PWPW, the Polish Government points out that, although bankruptcy of companies owned by the Treasury is obviously possible, that risk is almost nil given their strategic importance. The Republic of Poland contends that the Commission has not put forward any reason why, in the event of PWPW's financial difficulties, it would not be possible to grant State aid to that company.

31. In the Polish Government's view, the factual and legal situation in the present case is not similar to that examined by the Court in the abovementioned judgment in Commission v Austria. In that regard, it points out that the legal status of the Austrian company responsible for printing official documents was significantly different from that of PWPW, in that it was a private limited company whose shares were listed on the stock exchange and held by private individuals. Furthermore, it considers that the Austrian Government's control over the company was much more limited than in the case here in the Republic of Poland. On that basis, the Polish Government argues that, under Austrian law, the level of protection of the State's essential interests chosen by the authorities was lower than that chosen in Poland, and that it cannot be required to reduce that level of protection to that chosen by other States.

32. The Republic of Poland further submits that the contractual guarantees proposed by the Commission do not make it possible to prevent a threat to its security interests, arising from a possible acquisition of the economic operator in question or from influence on its management bodies by the secret services of a third country or by an organised criminal group. With regard to the risk of insolvency of the producer of the documents, the solution proposed by the Commission – which aims to establish an eligibility criterion in the form of a certificate of financial standing enabling the contract to be performed safely and without hindrance – would not make it possible to avoid a sudden deterioration in the financial situation of the economic operator concerned.

33. The exclusions provided for in national law are thus – in the view of the Polish Government – a proportionate, adequate and necessary measure to achieve the objective of guaranteeing Poland's essential security interests at the level that is considered adequate. In order to demonstrate the proportionality of the use of the derogations, it would not be necessary – according to the Polish Government – to prove that, in the event the directive in question would be applied, the likelihood of a threat to the essential security interests of the Member State concerned would be particularly high. Indeed, even the slightest likelihood of significant harm to the security interests of the State would – in the opinion of that government – constitute grounds for making use of those derogations.

34. More generally, the Polish Government submits, the Commission has not demonstrated that the level of State security that can be achieved by entrusting the production of documents to an entity selected pursuant to Directive 2014/24 would be as high as when that task is entrusted to a company owned by the Treasury.

B. Assessment

35. At the outset, it must be pointed out that – as the Commission claims without it being disputed by the Polish Government – Directive 2014/24 is, in principle, applicable to public contracts for the production of the documents at issue. Indeed, it is common ground that the public contracts in question (i) do not concern the services, sectors and situations for which Articles 7 to 12 of Directive 2014/24 provide exclusions, and (ii) have a value that is no less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4 of that directive. In addition, Article 15(1) of Directive 2014/24 makes it clear that, in principle, that directive applies to the awarding of public contracts 'organised in the fields of defence and security'.

36. However, the Polish Government argues that such contracts could be awarded without making use of the procedures set out in Directive 2014/24 since some of the derogations set out in Article 15(2) and (3) thereof are applicable to the present case.

37. In the following sections, I shall first lay down the relevant analytical framework (1) and then assess the parties' arguments against that framework (2). My conclusion will be that the national legislation at issue, as it currently stands, cannot be considered to fall entirely within the scope of the derogations discussed in this Opinion and, consequently, infringes the provisions of Directive 2014/24 (3).

1. The relevant analytical framework

(a) Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 346(1)(a) TFEU

38. Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 provides for four situations in which that directive 'shall not apply'. Those derogations to the application of the directive – which all concern procurement procedures relating to the field of 'defence and security', as the title of that provision makes clear – (5) are the following.

39. First, pursuant to the first subparagraph of Article 15(2) of Directive 2014/24, that directive does not apply to public contracts 'to the extent that the protection of the essential security interests of a Member State cannot be guaranteed by less intrusive measures'. Second, under the second subparagraph of Article 15(2), the directive does not apply to the extent that its application 'would oblige a Member State to supply information the disclosure of which it considers contrary to the essential interests of its security'. Third, Article 15(3) provides for two additional situations, stating that the directive does not apply when the public contract is (i) 'declared to be secret' or (ii) 'must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in a Member State'. Also under this paragraph, that is valid only in so far as 'the Member State has determined that the essential interests concerned cannot be guaranteed by less intrusive measures'.

40. That being said, I should also point out that Article 346(1)(a) TFEU does not appear to add, as regards the situation at issue in the present proceedings, any further (or self-standing) derogation. Indeed, the second subparagraph of Article 15(2) of Directive 2014/24 includes an express reference to Article 346(1)(a) TFEU (6) and the two provisions are worded very similarly. Therefore, the former provision constitutes, in my view, an application of the principle laid down in the latter, within the area governed by Directive 2014/24. Accordingly, once the arguments of the parties are assessed in the light of the provisions of the directive, there is, in my view, no need to carry out a separate and independent assessment under Article 346(1)(a) TFEU. (7) In that respect I note, in passing, that the parties' arguments appear consistent with such an approach.

41. The Polish Government relies on three derogations provided for in Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24; that is, all of them except the one concerned with secret contracts ('the derogations at issue'). However, neither in its written nor its oral submissions does that government develop arguments which are specific to one or the other of those derogations; nor are the Commission's arguments any more specific in that regard, which leads me to believe that both parties agree – at least in principle – that the framework of analysis for the three derogations at issue is largely analogous.

42. I am of the same view. Despite some textual differences between the different paragraphs or subparagraphs of Article 15 of Directive 2014/24 (8) and some terminology which may appear puzzling, (9) they share the same key elements and thus require from the Court a relatively similar assessment.

(b) Scope of the derogations at issue

43. In essence, the derogations at issue allow any Member State to exclude procurement of certain services from the procedures laid down in Directive 2014/24 when the following conditions are satisfied: (i) the public interests protected relate to that Member State's 'security interests', (ii) those interests may be considered 'essential', (iii) the application of the directive in question could, in the view of that Member State, prejudice the protection of those interests, and (iv) the protection of those interests cannot be guaranteed by less intrusive measures.

44. I shall now attempt to clarify the meaning of those conditions.

(1) The concept of 'essential security interests'

45. As far as conditions (i) and (ii) are concerned, it is for each Member State to define the specific public interests that constitute its 'essential security interests'. (10) At the same time, however, the Member States' discretion in that regard cannot be unfettered, as otherwise the terms essential and security would be deprived of all practical effect.

46. I can accept that defining 'security' in a precise and exhaustive manner is an impossible task. What is actually covered by that concept depends, I believe, on a multitude of factors which may vary between different Member States and also over time. The same holds true with respect to the specification that the security-related interests protected by the Member States must be 'essential'. That adjective requires an assessment that is inevitably subjective, at least to some extent: much depends on historical, political and geopolitical considerations which may vary from one State to the other. (11)

47. Nevertheless, unless the conditions set out in Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 are reduced to a mere formality, the Court must be able to verify whether, when relying on the derogations at issue, a Member State has exceeded its margin of discretion, (12) since the exclusion from public tendering is meant to protect interests which either do not relate or are only loosely related to security. (13)

48. In that regard, I think that the term 'security' – appearing in both Article 15 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 346 TFEU – corresponds to the terms 'public security' (14) and 'national security' (15) which can be found in several EU law provisions, and largely overlaps with (but is arguably broader than) the term 'internal security' (16) appearing in a number of other EU law provisions.

49. As the Court stated with regard to the term 'national security', it consists in 'the primary interest in protecting the essential functions of the State and the fundamental interests of society and encompasses the prevention and punishment of activities capable of seriously destabilising the fundamental constitutional, political, economic or social structures of a country and, in particular, of directly threatening society, the population or the State itself'. (17) In other words, that term refers to matters relating to the safety of a Member State's institutions or people from threats of a certain significance stemming from circumstances which may be internal (organised crime, riots, etc.) or external (intelligence or counter-intelligence, cyberwarfare, etc.) to the State. Such threats may be specific to that State (such as paramilitary or armed nationalist groups) or of a global nature (such as a lethal pandemic), man-made (nuclear accidents, environmental disasters, acts of terrorism, etc.) or occurring naturally (earthquakes, tsunamis, floods, etc.).

50. In turn, the term 'essential' necessarily implies some selectivity with regard to the public functions and interests that (even if security related) can be covered by the derogations at issue. In my view, that term should be read as limiting those derogations to core components of Member States' security policy, to the exclusion of issues that are only indirectly or loosely concerned with public security. (18)

51. To be clear, I have no doubt that a variety of situations – connected to, for example, public health, environmental protection, privacy, public finance, etc. – could, when of a systemic or large-scale nature, be possibly regarded as also raising issues of public security. Nevertheless, I would be very hesitant to endorse an interpretation of Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 which would result in widening the ambit of the derogations set out therein beyond any interest that, when affected, has an immediate and manifest impact on the safety of a Member State's institutions or people.

52. This approach appears consistent with the interpretative principle according to which exceptions to EU rules of general application – such as those at issue in the present action – must be interpreted strictly. (19)

(2) Prejudice

53. As regards condition (iii) referred to in point 43 above, three observations, based on the very wording of Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, are in order.

54. First, the text of the provision – which emphasises the Member State's margin of appreciation ('considers', 'has determined') – makes it clear that a Member State need not provide positive and irrefutable evidence that the application of Directive 2014/24 with regard to certain public contracts would actually prejudice the protection of its essential security interests. It is sufficient that a Member State explain, on the basis of specific and credible elements, (20) why it has reasonable grounds to take the view (21) that the application of public procurement rules in respect of certain public contracts could undermine (22) its essential security interests.

55. Second, it also follows from the above that the threat to the security interests invoked by a Member State need not be actual or certain: potential risks can, to my mind, suffice. (23) However, those risks cannot be purely speculative or hypothetical, but must be genuine.

56. Third, the text of Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 ('the protection … cannot be guaranteed', 'disclosure … contrary to', 'interests concerned cannot be guaranteed') also suggests that the (actual or potential) security threats must have a minimum level of gravity. I find it hard to consider the terms of that provision as covering events or situations which, because of their limited scale, magnitude and impact, do not pose any sufficiently serious threat to the proper functioning of a Member State's institutions and the general well-being of its people. (24)

57. These are elements that, in my view, can be subject to judicial review. As the Court has consistently held, measures adopted by the Member States in connection with the legitimate requirements of national interest are not excluded in their entirety from the application of EU law solely because they are taken, inter alia, in the interests of public security. (25) In particular, neither Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 nor Article 346(1)(a) TFEU can be read in such a way as to confer on Member States the power to depart from the provisions of the directive based on no more than reliance on those interests. (26)

58. Given the significant leeway accorded to the Member States in that respect, (27) however, the Court's standard of review should, in my view, be one of reasonableness or plausibility. (28)

(3) Proportionality of the measure

59. Finally, condition (iv) mentioned in point 43 above consists in the unavailability of 'less intrusive measures'. This means that, in conformity with the principle of proportionality, in order to validly invoke the derogations set out in Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, a Member State must show that the exclusion of tendering procedures for the public contracts in question is a measure that is suitable and necessary to protect its essential security interests.

60. In this context, a specific point may need clarifying: the Polish Government argues that, under the provisions at issue, Member States are free to set the degree of protection of their security interests at the level they deem most appropriate. As a consequence, the national measures adopted to ensure that level of protection cannot be considered disproportionate, unless any alternative measures available also ensure that level of protection. It would follow from this that a Member State cannot be forced to accept a lower level of protection of that chosen, on the ground that the alternative measures would be less restrictive to intra-Union trade.

61. Asked at the hearing whether it shared that view, the Commission answered in the negative. However, it seems to me that it struggled to explain the reasons for its position and, in any event, it failed to point to any provision of EU law which would give the European Union a power to review the Member States' choices in that regard.

62. In that respect, I tend to agree with the position expressed by the Polish Government. Unless a matter is of such nature and dimension that it affects the European Union's security, and thus falls within the common foreign and security policy, (29) the European Union has no specific competence with regard to Member States' national/public security. In fact, the relevant Treaty provisions are essentially meant to establish limits to the European Union's action – either in general (30) or when acting in some specific field (such as the internal market (31) and the area of freedom, security and justice (32)) – when that may affect the Member States' security interests. As the Court has consistently emphasised, it follows from Article 4(2) TEU that 'national security remains the sole responsibility of each Member State'. (33)

(c) Burden of proof

63. It is well established that, in the context of an action under Article 258 TFEU, it is incumbent upon the Commission to prove the alleged failure. That institution must provide the Court with the information necessary for it to determine whether the infringement is established, and may not rely on any presumption for that purpose. (34)

64. Once the Commission has adduced sufficient evidence to prove the relevant facts, it is then for the defendant Member State to challenge in substance and in detail the information produced and the inferences drawn. (35) In particular, when a Member State relies on a derogation provided for in EU law – such as in the present proceedings – it is for that Member State to prove that the relevant conditions are satisfied. (36) The burden upon the defendant Member State includes a requirement to analyse the appropriateness and proportionality of the measure adopted by it and to offer specific evidence substantiating its arguments. (37)

65. However, the evidentiary burden placed on that Member State cannot – the Court added – be so extensive as to require it to prove, positively, that no other conceivable measure could enable the public objective to be attained under the same conditions. (38) That means, in my view, that, before adopting derogations from EU law, Member States are required to examine carefully the possibility of using measures that are less restrictive,(39) but cannot be expected to identify each and every alternative measure that could hypothetically be envisaged and explain why they all should be discarded. To that, I would add that a Member State cannot be required to adopt alternative measures, when those measures are of uncertain feasibility or effectiveness or would result in an intolerable (organisational or financial) burden on the Member State in question.

66. It is against this analytical framework that I shall now examine the merits of the parties' arguments.

2. Analysis of the parties' arguments

67. In order to establish whether the Republic of Poland failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 2014/24 in the present case, it is, in the first place, necessary to verify whether the interests which the national legislation at issue sought to protect may be considered 'essential security interests' within the meaning of Article 15(2) and (3) of that directive. In the second place, it must be ascertained whether the Member State in question had reasonable grounds to consider that the application of public procurement rules to the public contracts in question could give rise to threats to public security that are real and sufficiently serious. Thirdly, the proportionality of the national legislation at issue should be examined.

68. At this stage, however, some preliminary remarks are in order.

69. I must state, from the outset, that the legal assessment in the present case is, at times, made quite complicated by the fact that both parties mostly developed their arguments in a rather general fashion, whereas the national legislation at issue excludes from public procurement – as the Commission rightly points out – the contracts for the production of a rather large and diverse series of documents and other objects.

70. I do not think that those documents and objects can, for the purposes of these proceedings, be treated as belonging to a homogeneous group. They do not contain similar information and do not fulfil the same function. At least to some extent, they are also produced from different materials and on the basis of different techniques. The reasons for which those documents have been excluded from public tenders vary, and it is undeniable that their sensitivity as well as their capacity to affect the Republic of Poland's security interests differ – significantly even.

71. It is thus hardly surprising that, often, the arguments put forward by one of the parties have a certain force, but only with regard to some of the documents at issue. This mismatch between the legal arguments of the parties and the underlying factual situation has, in my view, a significant impact on the legal assessment that the present case requires the Court to carry out and, more in particular, on the manner in which this dispute can be disposed of. I shall come back to this point at the end of this Opinion.

(b) The protection of essential security interests

72. The Polish Government argues that the production of the documents at issue is an activity that is capable of affecting its essential security interests within the meaning of Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24. In essence, the Polish Government's main argument is twofold. First, it refers to the need to ensure the continuity of supply of the documents which are necessary for the correct and ongoing functioning of the public administration. Second, it emphasises that producing the documents in question requires the use of confidential (or secret) information which should not be leaked to unauthorised persons, and of specific technologies and know-how which should not be obtained by such persons. In that regard, the Polish Government refers to the security threats posed by phenomena such as cyberwarfare, terrorism, organised crime, human trafficking and smuggling of migrants.

73. I am of the view that it falls within a Member State's margin of discretion to consider that ensuring the continuity of supply of the documents required by its administrative machinery to function properly constitutes one of its essentials security interests. I also have no difficulty in agreeing with the Polish Government that the fight against cyberwarfare, terrorism, organised crime, human trafficking and smuggling of migrants not only falls squarely within the concept of 'national/public security', but can also be regarded as constituting a core – and therefore an 'essential' – component of its security policy.

74. That said, I must observe that – both in the written submissions and at the hearing – the issue was raised as to whether the exclusion of certain specific documents from the public procurement rules was genuinely linked to the fight against the threats mentioned above. It seems to me that the Polish Government was somewhat vague in its answers on the point and, ultimately, referred to other objectives that the exclusions in question would pursue. It referred, in particular, to the following public interests: (i) to protect consumers and public health with regard to permits to work as a doctor or a dentist, (ii) to protect the public offer with regard to excise stamps, (iii) to guarantee the security of vehicles with regard to the documents concerned with the status thereof, and (iv) to ensure public confidence in the result of the elections with regard to ballot papers and holographic signs on certificates of voting rights.

75. Whereas I agree that ensuring public confidence in the fairness of elections may be regarded as one of the essential security interests of a Member State, I do not find the arguments put forward by the Polish Government in respect of the other interests mentioned in the previous point of this Opinion to be convincing. As mentioned, there may well be circumstances in which threats to public health could be regarded as affecting essential security interests. I would also not exclude that, in very exceptional circumstances, threats to the public finances may be of such a magnitude and seriousness that they could be regarded as having an impact on a Member State's essential security interests. (40) However, it is not easy to envisage the circumstances under which issues of consumer protection or road safety would fit into the concept of 'essential security interests'.

76. Nevertheless, and regardless of the above, I fail to see – nor has the Polish Government referred to – any specific threat or risk to public health, consumer protection, road safety and public finances that, in the present case, could reach the minimum threshold of gravity required to be plausibly considered an 'essential security interest'. For instance, the mere facts – alleged by that government – that the existence of false medical certificates would mean that some individuals would be treated by persons without the proper medical qualifications, and that the existence of false excise stamps would result in losses of receipts for the Polish Treasury are, to my mind, manifestly insufficient to justify the application of the derogations laid down in Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24.

77. Among the documents at issue, there are, moreover, some in respect of which the Polish Government did not explain the logical connection with the protection of its security interests. Nor do I see for those documents any such obvious connection. Just to mention a few: legal markings and control stickers referred to in the highway code, seaman's books, documents connected with the civil status records, enforceable titles, judgments or orders issued by courts or judicial officers, aircrew members' certificates, cards certifying disability, driving licences, vehicle booklets, tachograph cards, and service cards of certain public officials such as tax and customs officials or road transport inspectors.

78. In the light of the above, I take the view that the Republic of Poland may, in the present case, validly invoke the derogations at issue in so far as the exclusions from the rules on public procurement are aimed at: (i) protecting that Member State from the threats posed by cyberwarfare, terrorism, organised crime, human trafficking and smuggling of migrants, (ii) ensuring public confidence in the results of elections, and (iii) ensuring supply of documents that are necessary for the proper functioning of the public administration. Conversely, I am of the view that other alleged risks to the security of the Republic of Poland – such as those to public health, consumer protection, road safety and public finances – are not such as to justify the application of the derogations at issue.

(c) Prejudice to the security interests

79. As regards the likelihood and seriousness of the prejudice to the security interests at stake, I am of the view that the Polish Government can reasonably consider that the activity of production of the documents at issue could, if entrusted to a company that does not comply with high security standards, create threats to its essential security interests which are both real and significant.

80. In some circumstances, the damage which might ensue from leaks could be – as the Polish Government argues and as the Commission acknowledges – of an almost irreversible nature. The damage could indeed be lasting and difficult to repair: the falsified documents could continue to circulate for some time and new ones could be easily produced. It cannot be ruled out that, in extreme circumstances, certain changes to the procedures and techniques used to issue some of the documents at issue may be required to avoid more threats in the future.

81. However, I have doubts that a possible disruption in the production of each and every document among those in the list in question could be regarded as posing a sufficiently serious threat to the proper functioning of the Polish public administration. The need to ensure the continuity of supply can, in my view, be validly invoked only with regard to those documents that are strictly indispensable and irreplaceable to the administration machinery with regard to essential State functions, so that even a relatively small delay in the delivery of those documents could not be tolerated. The vast majority of the documents at issue do not seem to me to fulfil those criteria.

(d) The principle of proportionality

82. Third, it is necessary to determine whether the decision of the Polish Government to exclude the public contracts in question from the application of the rules of public tender is consistent with the principle of proportionality. However, in the light of the very wording of the provisions at issue, (41)in order to respect the Member States' competence in the field of national/public security, it seems to me that only a two-step proportionality test is warranted. (42) This means that the Court is merely required to verify whether the national legislation at issue is suitable to achieve the stated objective and does not go beyond what is strictly necessary to do so.

(1) Suitability of the measure

83. First, as regards the suitability of the exclusion to achieve its stated objective, the assessment can be relatively simple: it is for me rather obvious that the centralisation of the production of the documents at issue in a single entity, fully owned and directly controlled by the State, which operates in the Polish territory, is capable of reducing the risks that (i) unauthorised personnel might have access to sensitive material and confidential (or secret) information and thus falsify the documents in question or replicate the technology and know-how required to do so, (43) and (ii) the company might run into financial difficulties which could threaten the continuity of supply of the documents at issue.

84. Indeed, the public authorities can intervene in – and, possibly, have the final word – all the key choices (operational, commercial, technical, human resources, etc.) made by the entity in question. The powers of control (for example on the premises of the company or over the entity's staff) can also be exercised, if appropriate, by using the powers conferred on police forces. The fact that the contractor is wholly owned by the Treasury (and that national law provides for certain limitations with regard to the sale of its shares) is also an assurance that the ownership of the contractor may not 'fall in the wrong hands', which could potentially occur for companies whose shares are publicly traded in stock markets. In addition, public control should allow the competent authorities to detect more easily and rapidly situations of financial difficulty of the company, and thus be able to adopt appropriate measures of redress in a timely fashion.

85. Therefore, the national legislation at issue appears capable of giving a meaningful contribution to the protection of the security interests invoked by the Republic of Poland.

(2) Necessity of the measure

86. The second aspect – that of necessity of the measure – raises, in my view, more complex issues.

87. The crucial question is whether the Polish Government has shown that the application of the derogations at issue was necessary in order to protect its essential security interests. To that end, that government was required to establish that the protection of such interests could not have been attained within a competitive tendering procedure as provided for by Directive 2014/24. (44)

88. In this context, it must be borne in mind that, according to what the Polish Government alleged in this procedure, the level of protection of the interests at stake chosen by that government is particularly high. This is an element that, as mentioned in points 60 to 62 above, must be taken into account when assessing the existence of less restrictive measures.

89. The Commission suggests, essentially, that a combination of stringent technical specifications (under Article 42 of Directive 2014/24) (45) and selection criteria (under Article 58 of Directive 2014/24) (46) would be as effective in protecting the interests invoked by the Polish Government as the exclusion from public tendering. The Commission also points to the provisions which enable the contracting authorities to modify the public contracts (Article 72 of Directive 2014/24) (47) and to terminate them (Article 73 of Directive 2014/24) (48) in specific circumstances.

90. I am of the view that, to a certain extent, the Commission has a valid argument. Indeed, as regards ensuring the continuity of supply, there is no ground to believe that private companies would, by definition, offer lower guarantees. As confirmed at the hearing by the Polish Government, PWPW is a 'public limited company', that is, a limited liability company that – at least formally – is not unlike many other privately owned companies. As such, that company may encounter financial difficulties and, if its financial situation gravely deteriorates, could even go bankrupt.

91. I obviously understand that the Polish Government would do its utmost to keep that company financially viable and, where necessary, save it from bankruptcy proceedings. However, as the Commission rightly points out, there may be some limits to that government's ability to do so. Inter alia, the EU State aid control rules could be applicable. It should not be overlooked, in this context, that PWPW is active in a range of activities (graphic design, production and personalisation of a variety of documents, offer of IT solutions, etc.) and geographic markets (both within and outside the European Union), where it competes against other companies.

92. In my view, a number of measures could easily be envisaged to minimise the risks to the continuity of supply alleged by the Polish Government. For example, nothing precludes that government from requiring tenderers/contractors to, inter alia, (i) meet strict financial criteria for participating in the tender, (ii) periodically transmit detailed financial statements and reports in order to allow the administration to monitor the 'health' of the company, and (iii) engage in the transferral of production in the event of bankruptcy (or the supervening inability to duly perform the contract).

93. Therefore, I take the view that the national legislation at issue, in so far as it aims at securing the continuity of supply of the documents at issue, goes beyond what is necessary to ensure the protection of the essential security interests invoked by the Polish Government. The same level of protection of those interests could be achieved even if the production of the documents in question were to be entrusted to one or more companies via a competitive tender procedure.

94. Conversely, it seems to me that the measures suggested by the Commission are not as effective as the exclusion from public tendering with regard to the need to avoid leaks of information or technology. In other words, those alternative measures would not, in my view, reach the same degree of protection chosen by the Polish Government.

95. To begin with, it is clear to me that the mere introduction in the contract of rules regarding disciplinary or financial liability and compensation in case of leaks or other breaches of the security rules are not of comparable effectiveness: the very rationale of excluding certain contracts from public tenders is to minimise the risk that the damage may occur. An ex post facto financial compensation by the contractor, or imposition of disciplinary penalties upon the persons concerned, appears of very little use to the Republic of Poland and, consequently, is no valid substitute for more robust ex ante measures that could avert the breaches. I am obviously aware that compensation and liability clauses are also intended to dissuade would-be infringers. However, when it comes to deterring persons that may be connected to, for example, terrorist groups, foreign secret services or powerful criminal organisations from attempting to access highly sensitive information, the preventive effects of such clauses appear rather limited.

96. The Commission suggested that, in order to ensure the capacity of the Polish Government to make use, if necessary, of the public powers of police forces for controls on the company in question and its staff, the contractor could be required to carry out its operations in Poland. In that context, the Commission refers to the fact that other companies established in the country already have the required security certificates to carry out activities such as those carried out by PWPW.

97. Some of the Commission's arguments have a certain force. The contractor could indeed be requested to produce the most sensitive documents in Poland in order to permit a more effective monitoring and, if need be, enforcement by the public authorities.

98. However, the Polish Government may – legitimately, in my view – consider it important to be able to influence or supervise some key decisions made by the company which could have a direct or indirect impact on the security of the activities carried out by that company (hiring of staff, just to give one example). It is hardly disputable that the degree of intervention that the public administration could exercise when dealing with a publicly owned company is greater than that which it could exercise vis-à-vis a privately owned company, irrespective of the clauses and safeguards that could be included in the contract. As repeatedly stated, it is in principle for the Republic of Poland to choose the appropriate level of protection of the interests at stake.

99. The same considerations may apply, mutatis mutandis, to the production of ballot papers and holographic signs on certificates of voting rights.

100. Therefore, I am of the view that the Republic of Poland can rely on Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 in so far as the exclusions from public tendering concern documents the falsification of which may have an adverse impact on that State's fight against cyberwarfare, terrorism, trafficking in human beings, smuggling of migrants and organised crime, as well as those that may have an impact on the correctness and fairness of the elections (or the public perception thereof).

3. Conclusions: disposing of the present case

101. The above analysis leads me to the following conclusions.

102. First, some of the interests invoked by the Polish Government in the present procedure can be regarded as being 'essential security interests' within the meaning of Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24. I am referring to the needs to (i) fight against cyberwarfare, terrorism, trafficking in human beings, smuggling of migrants and organised crime, (ii) ensure the continuity of supply of the documents that are necessary for the proper functioning of the public administration, and (iii) ensure public confidence in the fair result of elections. By contrast, in the present case I do not find any element which would justify treating interests relating to public health, consumer protection, road safety and the protection of public finances as 'essential security interests' for the purposes of Directive 2014/24.

103. Second, I take the view that the Republic of Poland has reasonable grounds to consider that the threats which it intends to prevent or minimise with the national legislation at issue are real and sufficiently serious. However, I see no such threat where the documents the continuity of supply of which the Republic of Poland intends to ensure are not irreplaceable or indispensable for the proper functioning of the State administration.

104. Third, the national legislation at issue – by centralising the production of the documents at issue in a single entity, fully owned and directly controlled by the State – only partly complies with the principle of proportionality. More specifically, it may be regarded as being necessary to achieve the appropriate level of protection chosen by the Polish Government solely with regard to the documents the falsification of which may actually impair the Republic of Poland's fight against cyberwarfare, terrorism, trafficking in human beings, smuggling of migrants or organised crime, or undermine the public confidence in the result of elections. By contrast, there exist alternative, less intrusive measures to avert the risks, invoked by that government, to the continuity of supply of the documents at issue.

105. All of the above means that – in my view – both the Commission and the Republic of Poland have been partly successful and partly unsuccessful in the present procedure. If that is so, the crucial question becomes, obviously, to what extent this action should be upheld, and to what extent it should be rejected.

106. To address this question, I must now come back to the issue I touched upon in my preliminary remarks: both the Commission and the Polish Government mostly developed their arguments in a rather general fashion, whereas the national legislation at issue excludes from public procurement the production of a rather large and diverse series of documents and other objects.(49)

107. Asked at the hearing whether they considered having duly taken into account the specific features of each document, both parties claimed that they were not required to do so. The Polish Government reiterated the view that all the documents at issue are of crucial importance for the protection of its security interests and, consequently, can be excluded from public procurement. For its part, the Commission stated that, so far, the Polish Government had refused to engage in any meaningful discussion on the point and, at any rate, it should have been for that government to explain to the Court the specificities of each document.

108. I cannot conceal having felt some frustration when receiving those answers. Indeed, because of that approach by the parties, and despite a careful assessment of the Commission's pleas and the Republic of Poland's objections, as well as a review of the evidence submitted by both parties, I am unable to precisely 'draw a line' between the documents that can be legitimately excluded from the public procurement rules, and those that cannot.

109. Usually, in the context of a direct action, a party's failure to substantiate its claims does not give rise to any major procedural problem: the principles on the allocation of the burden of proof (50) may guide the Court to rule on the various issues in dispute. In the present case, however, I find it particularly hard to identify, in respect of some aspects of the dispute, the party on which the burden of proving (or disproving) a certain fact rested. In this sort of procedural ping-pong in which the burden shifts each time a party has made a prima facie case, it may at times be difficult to decide who scored the point – metaphorically speaking.

110. Moreover, I would feel a certain uneasiness in suggesting to the Court to adjudicate on the present dispute on the basis of an automatic (and thus, dare I say, blind) application of the rules on the burden of proof. True, it is for each a party to carefully choose the approach it wishes to adopt as its litigation strategy, given that choices made in that regard are often consequential. When a court or tribunal gives a final ruling on a matter and there is no possibility to appeal that decision, the matter becomes res judicata and, as such, cannot be subject to further litigation.

111. Thus, once a judicial procedure is over, procedural reality replaces any other 'alternative' reality.

112. However, whereas that may normally be considered a simple fact of life, I would be hesitant to endorse an extreme application of this approach – which could, in extremis, lead the judges to abandon common sense and adopt unreasonable decisions – in the context of infringement proceedings.

113. As the Court has consistently stated, in the context of such proceedings it is its role to verify the alleged infringements, even where the defendant does not contest them. (51) That may be explained, in my view, because of the potentially far-reaching consequences that may flow, for a Member State, from an adverse judgment given under Articles 258 or 259 TFEU: that Member State will be required to amend the challenged national measure. That is also true regardless of whether, with a better defence, it could have shown that that measure was actually in compliance with EU law. (52) A failure to amend the challenged national measure could expose that Member State to financial penalties (53) and to actions for liability. (54)

114. Thus, my view is that, where it is not entirely clear who was required to prove what, because both parties appear to be responsible for the incompleteness of the case file, it may be a sensible approach on the part of the Court to avoid ruling on those issues that are not strictly indispensable for adjudicating the dispute. This seems to me particularly important in a case such as the present one, where upholding one argument of the applicant or of the defendant could have immediate repercussions on the protection of certain essential security interests of a Member State.

115. Against this backdrop, I believe that the Court has, fundamentally, two options.

116. On the one hand, the Court could – as it has done in some early cases in which it considered that the information provided by both parties did not enable it to make a sufficiently accurate appraisal of the issues at stake – deliver an interim judgment. In such judgments, the Court ordered the parties to re-examine certain issues arising from the dispute in the light of the guidance contained in those judgments, and to report to it by a certain date, after which the Court would deliver a final judgment. (55)

117. On the other hand, the Court could simply declare that, by excluding the production of certain documents, printed matter and stamps and markings from the rules on public procurement provided for in Directive 2014/24, the Republic of Poland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 15(2) and (3) of that directive, read in conjunction with Article 346(1)(a) TFEU. Indeed, my analysis has shown that, undoubtedly, the national legislation at issue excludes from the rules on public procurement a (probably large) number of documents with regard to which the derogations set out in Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 are not applicable.

118. For reasons of judicial economy, I would favour the second option. In that regard, I would emphasise that, in the light of the form of order sought by the Commission, (56) the Court would neither rule ultra petita nor infra petita. At the same time, the judgment of the Court would give sufficient guidance to the Polish Government as to how the national legislation in question should be amended to achieve compliance with EU law. Indeed, it must be borne in mind that, according to settled case-law, the operative part of the judgment, which describes the failure to fulfil obligations established by the Court in an action under Article 258 TFEU, must be construed in the light of the grounds of the judgment. (57)

119. Furthermore, any disagreement in the future between the Commission and the Republic of Poland as to whether the latter succeeded in achieving full compliance with the judgment of the Court could be resolved, if necessary, (i) in the context of an infringement procedure under Article 260(2) TFEU and, should it persist even after that, (ii) in the context of an action for annulment brought, under Article 263 TFEU, by the Republic of Poland against any decision of the Commission determining the necessity and amount of the penalties due by that Member State. (58)

120. For all those reasons, I take the view that the Court should rule that the national legislation at issue, as it currently stands, does not satisfy the conditions laid down in Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24 and, therefore, infringes the provisions of that directive.

VI. Costs

121. In conformity with Article 138(3) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads, the parties are to bear their own costs unless, if it appears justified in the circumstances of the case, the Court orders that one party, in addition to bearing its own costs, pay a proportion of the costs of the other party.

122. In this case, both the Commission and the Republic of Poland applied for costs against the other party and have succeeded on some claims and failed on others. Accordingly, I find it correct that each of the parties should be ordered to bear its own costs.

VII. Conclusion

123. In the light of the foregoing, I suggest that the Court of Justice:

– declare that, by excluding the production of certain documents, printed matter and stamps and markings from the rules on public procurement provided for in Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, the Republic of Poland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 15(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 346(1)(a) TFEU; and – order the European Commission and the Republic of Poland to each bear their own costs.

8 Such as, in particular, the fact that the second subparagraph of Article 15(2) of Directive 2014/24, unlike the first subparagraph of Article 15(2) and Article 15(3) thereof, does not expressly require the absence of ‘less intrusive measures’. However, the lack of such a requirement is, in my view, immaterial, since it follows in any event from the principle of proportionality.

9 The second subparagraph of Article 15(2) of Directive 2014/24 starts with the term ‘furthermore’, which would suggest that it supplements what was provided in the first subparagraph thereof. However, it seems to me that the (more broadly formulated) situation provided for in the first subparagraph encompasses also the (more narrowly defined) situation provided for in the second subparagraph.

11 Just to give an example, the risks posed by a possible energy crisis may perhaps be regarded as ‘essential security interests’ by a State that is a significant importer of energy (or of the materials used to generate energy), whereas they may not be so for a State that is energy self-sufficient. See, for example, judgment of 10 July 1984, Campus Oil and Others (72/83, EU:C:1984:256, paragraphs 34 and 35). That is all the more so in the current geopolitical context.

40 The case-law on this point is very restrictive: interests of an economic nature do not, in principle, constitute essential security interests. See, to that effect, judgment of 16 September 1999, Commission v Spain (C-414/97, EU:C:1999:417, paragraph 22).

41 See points 8 and 59 above.

---

42 The full proportionality test would require the Court to check whether the national measure strikes a fair balance between the interests at stake: the interest pursued by the State with the measure in question and the interest of the persons adversely affected by it. See, to that effect, judgment of 6 October 2020, Commission v Hungary (Higher education) (C-66/18, EU:C:2020:792, paragraphs 178 and 179 and the case-law cited).

---

45 In particular, Article 42(1) of Directive 2014/24 reads: 'The technical specifications … shall be set out in the procurement documents. The technical specification shall lay down the characteristics required of a works, service or supply'.

---

46 Article 58 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Selection criteria', provides, in its first paragraph, that the selection criteria may relate to: (a) suitability to pursue the professional activity; (b) economic and financial standing; and (c) technical and professional ability. The third paragraph of that provision provides that 'with regard to economic and financial standing, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary economic and financial capacity to perform the contract'. In turn, the fourth paragraph of that provision states that 'with regard to technical and professional ability, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary human and technical resources and experience to perform the contract to an appropriate quality standard. Contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a sufficient level of experience demonstrated by suitable references from contracts performed in the past'.

47 According to point (c) of Article 72(1) of Directive 2014/24, contracts and framework agreements may be modified without a new procurement procedure when, inter alia, a number of cumulative conditions are fulfilled. One of those conditions (point (i)) is that 'the need for modification has been brought about by circumstances which a diligent contracting authority could not foresee'.

---

48 Article 73 of Directive 2014/24 concerns the circumstances in which the contracting authorities have the possibility to terminate a public contract during its term.

vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée, conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation de l'article 63 de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE (JO 2014, L 94, p. 65).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige opposant « ĒDIENS & KM.LV » PS à la Ieslodzījuma vietu pārvalde (administration pénitentiaire, Lettonie) (ci-après le « pouvoir adjudicateur ») et au Iepirkumu uzraudzības birojs (Office de surveillance des marchés publics, Lettonie) (ci-après l'« Office ») au sujet de l'exclusion de ĒDIENS & KM.LV par le pouvoir adjudicateur d'une procédure de passation de marchés relative aux services de restauration des détenus.

La directive 2014/24

3 L'article 18 de la directive 2014/24, intitulé « Principes de la passation de marchés », prévoit, à son paragraphe 1, premier alinéa :

« Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité et sans discrimination et agissent d'une manière transparente et proportionnée. »

4 L'article 19 de cette directive, intitulé « Opérateurs économiques », dispose, à son paragraphe 2 :

Si nécessaire, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent préciser, dans les documents de marché, la manière dont les groupements d'opérateurs économiques doivent remplir les conditions relatives à la capacité économique et financière ou aux capacités techniques et professionnelles visées à l'article 58, pour autant que cela soit justifié par des motifs objectifs et que ce soit proportionné. Les États membres peuvent établir des clauses standard précisant la manière dont les groupements d'opérateurs économiques doivent remplir ces conditions.

Les conditions d'exécution d'un marché par de tels groupements d'opérateurs économiques, qui sont différentes de celles imposées aux participants individuels, sont également justifiées par des motifs objectifs et sont proportionnées. »

5 L'article 58 de ladite directive, intitulé « Critères de sélection », prévoit :

« 1. Les critères de sélection peuvent avoir trait :

a) à l'aptitude à exercer l'activité professionnelle ;

b) à la capacité économique et financière ;

c) aux capacités techniques et professionnelles.

Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs ne peuvent imposer comme conditions de participation aux opérateurs économiques que les critères visés aux paragraphes 2, 3 et 4. Ils limitent ces conditions à celles qui sont propres à garantir qu'un candidat ou un soumissionnaire dispose de la capacité juridique et financière ainsi que des compétences techniques et professionnelles nécessaires pour exécuter le marché à attribuer. Toutes les conditions sont liées et proportionnées à l'objet du marché.

Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent exiger notamment que les opérateurs économiques disposent d'un niveau d'expérience suffisant, démontré par des références adéquates provenant de marchés exécutés antérieurement. Un pouvoir adjudicateur peut considérer qu'un opérateur économique ne possède pas les capacités professionnelles requises lorsqu'il a établi que l'opérateur économique se trouve dans une situation de conflit d'intérêts qui pourrait avoir une incidence négative sur l'exécution du marché.

6 Aux termes de l'article 59 de la directive 2014/24, qui s'intitule « Document unique de marché européen » :

« 1. Lors de la présentation de demandes de participation ou d'offres, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs acceptent le document unique de marché européen (DUME) consistant en une déclaration sur l'honneur actualisée à titre de preuve a priori en lieu et place des certificats délivrés par des autorités publiques ou des tiers pour confirmer que l'opérateur économique concerné remplit l'une des conditions suivantes :

[...]

b) il répond aux critères de sélection applicables qui ont été établis conformément à l'article 58 ;

Lorsque l'opérateur économique a recours aux capacités d'autres entités en vertu de l'article 63, le DUME comporte également les informations visées au premier alinéa, du présent paragraphe en ce qui concerne ces entités.

Le DUME consiste en une déclaration officielle par laquelle l'opérateur économique affirme que le motif d'exclusion concerné ne s'applique pas et/ou que le critère de sélection concerné est rempli et il fournit les informations pertinentes requises par le pouvoir adjudicateur. Le DUME désigne en outre l'autorité publique ou le tiers compétent pour établir les documents justificatifs et contient une déclaration officielle indiquant que l'opérateur économique sera en mesure, sur demande et sans tarder, de fournir lesdits documents justificatifs.

7 L'article 63 de cette directive, intitulé « Recours aux capacités d'autres entités », dispose, à son paragraphe 1 :

« Un opérateur économique peut, le cas échéant et pour un marché déterminé, avoir recours aux capacités d'autres entités, quelle que soit la nature juridique des liens qui l'unissent à ces entités, en ce qui concerne les critères relatifs à la capacité économique et financière énoncés à l'article 58, paragraphe 3, et les critères relatifs aux capacités techniques et professionnelles, visés à l'article 58, paragraphe 4. En ce qui concerne les critères relatifs aux titres d'études et professionnels visés à l'annexe XII, partie II, point f), ou à l'expérience professionnelle pertinente, les opérateurs économiques ne peuvent toutefois avoir recours aux capacités d'autres entités que lorsque ces dernières exécuteront les travaux ou fourniront les services pour lesquels ces capacités sont requises. Si un opérateur économique souhaite recourir aux capacités d'autres entités, il apporte au pouvoir adjudicateur la preuve qu'il disposera des moyens nécessaires, par exemple, en produisant l'engagement de ces entités à cet effet.

Le pouvoir adjudicateur vérifie, conformément aux articles 59, 60 et 61, si les entités aux capacités desquelles l'opérateur économique entend avoir recours remplissent les critères de sélection applicables et s'il existe des motifs d'exclusion en vertu de l'article 57. Le pouvoir adjudicateur exige que l'opérateur économique remplace une entité qui ne remplit pas un critère de sélection applicable ou à l'encontre de laquelle il existe des motifs d'exclusion obligatoires. Le pouvoir adjudicateur peut exiger ou peut être obligé par l'État membre à exiger que l'opérateur économique remplace une entité à l'encontre de laquelle il existe des motifs d'exclusion non obligatoires.

Lorsqu'un opérateur économique a recours aux capacités d'autres entités en ce qui concerne des critères ayant trait à la capacité économique et financière, le pouvoir adjudicateur peut exiger que l'opérateur économique et les autres entités en question soient solidairement responsables de l'exécution du marché.

Dans les mêmes conditions, un groupement d'opérateurs économiques visé à l'article 19, paragraphe 2, peut avoir recours aux capacités de participants du groupement ou d'autres entités. »

Le droit letton

8 L'article 46 de la Publisko iepirkumu likums (loi sur les marchés publics) (Latvijas Vēstnesis, 2016, n° 254), dans sa version applicable au litige au principal, prévoit, à son paragraphe 1, que le pouvoir adjudicateur peut imposer des exigences relatives aux capacités techniques et professionnelles du fournisseur qui sont nécessaires à l'exécution du marché. De telles exigences peuvent concerner le personnel chargé de l'exécution du marché, l'expérience et les ressources techniques du fournisseur. Aux termes du paragraphe 4 de cet article, un fournisseur peut se prévaloir des capacités techniques et professionnelles de tiers si cela s'avère nécessaire à l'exécution du marché en cause, quelle que soit la nature juridique de leurs relations réciproques. Dans ce cas, il apporte la preuve au pouvoir adjudicateur qu'il disposera des ressources nécessaires pour l'exécution du marché, en produisant des confirmations ou des accords desdits tiers. Un fournisseur ne peut se prévaloir des capacités de tiers pour justifier d'une expérience professionnelle ou de la disponibilité d'un personnel répondant aux exigences du pouvoir adjudicateur que si ces tiers effectuent les travaux ou fournissent les services pour l'exécution desquels les capacités en cause sont nécessaires.

Le litige au principal et la question préjudicielle

9 Le 16 novembre 2018, le pouvoir adjudicateur a publié un appel d'offres ouvert, intitulé « Prestation de services de restauration pour les détenus ».

10 Par décision du 18 janvier 2021, le pouvoir adjudicateur a exclu ĒDIENS & KM.LV de la procédure de passation de ce marché, au motif que, en violation des prescriptions du règlement de l'appel d'offres, elle n'avait pas apporté la preuve de l'exécution, au cours des trois années précédentes, d'au moins un contrat de services de restauration correspondant à l'objet du marché ou à un lot déterminé et portant sur un nombre de portions au moins égal au nombre annuel estimé de portions pour le lot pour lequel elle candidatait (ci-après la « condition d'expérience en cause au principal »).

11 Le marché en cause au principal a été attribué à une société à responsabilité limitée « Aleks UN V », qui avait présenté l'offre économiquement la plus avantageuse pour tous les lots du marché.

12 ĒDIENS & KM.LV a saisi l'Office qui, par décision du 25 février 2021, a confirmé la décision du pouvoir adjudicateur du 18 janvier 2021 et a autorisé ce dernier à passer le marché avec Aleks UN V. L'Office a relevé que, en tant que société en nom collectif, ĒDIENS & KM.LV ne disposait pas du niveau d'expérience requis, raison pour laquelle elle s'est fondée sur l'expérience de ses deux associées, la SIA « Ēdiens.lv » et la PI « Bruneros », pour satisfaire la condition d'expérience en cause au principal. Dans la mesure où la préparation effective des portions devait être effectuée uniquement par Ēdiens.lv tandis que Bruneros devait s'occuper uniquement des questions administratives, l'expérience de cette dernière dans la préparation des portions n'a pas été prise en compte par le pouvoir adjudicateur.

13 ĒDIENS & KM.LV a formé un recours contre la décision de l'Office du 25 février 2021 devant l'administratīvā rajona tiesa, Rīgas tiesu nams (tribunal administratif de district, section de Riga, Lettonie), qui est la juridiction de renvoi. Au soutien de son recours, elle fait valoir qu'elle avait constitué une association de fournisseurs dans le cadre de laquelle ses deux partenaires s'étaient contractuellement engagés à mettre à sa disposition l'intégralité de leurs ressources afin, d'une part, de satisfaire aux exigences du règlement de l'appel d'offres et, d'autre part, en cas d'obtention du marché, de permettre sa pleine exécution. En outre, les associés d'une société en nom collectif étant solidairement responsables à l'égard des tiers, et notamment du pouvoir adjudicateur, la répartition des tâches interne à une telle société au cours de l'exécution du marché n'aurait aucune incidence sur le plan juridique. Par ailleurs, si le pouvoir adjudicateur voulait que la condition d'expérience en cause au principal soit remplie par chacun des deux membres de l'association temporaire d'entreprises formée par ĒDIENS & KM.LV ou uniquement par celui qui serait appelé, en cas d'attribution du marché, à fournir directement le service de restauration proprement dit, il aurait dû mentionner cette condition dans le règlement de l'appel d'offres. Une telle condition aurait, en tout état de cause, été illégale car elle aurait indûment restreint la concurrence.

14 Le pouvoir adjudicateur et l'Office soulignent que, lors de l'audience qui s'est tenue devant la juridiction de renvoi, ĒDIENS & KM.LV aurait elle-même indiqué que Ēdiens.lv serait en charge des questions opérationnelles tandis que Bruneros s'occuperait des questions administratives.

15 La juridiction de renvoi relève que la possibilité, pour un prestataire de services, de se prévaloir de l'expérience d'un tiers est intrinsèquement liée à la condition que ce tiers exécute lui-même les activités pour lesquelles l'expérience correspondante est requise. Partant, dans une situation où un groupement d'opérateurs économiques s'est référé, dans son offre, à l'expérience antérieure d'un seul de ses membres dans le cadre de la fourniture de prestations déterminées, le pouvoir adjudicateur devrait pouvoir exiger des preuves convaincantes que cet opérateur économique sera effectivement chargé de la prestation de services en cause.

16 Cette juridiction n'exclut toutefois pas que l'existence d'une responsabilité solidaire entre les membres d'une société en nom collectif à l'égard notamment du pouvoir adjudicateur ait une incidence sur l'appréciation du respect de la condition d'expérience en cause au principal. Ladite juridiction se demande également si le pouvoir adjudicateur doit se borner à vérifier si cette condition est satisfaite par le seul membre du groupement qui fournira effectivement le service qui fait l'objet du marché, même si le règlement de l'appel d'offres ne prévoit pas expressément que les membres d'un groupement d'opérateurs économiques doivent satisfaire individuellement à ladite exigence.

17 C'est dans ce contexte que l'administratīvā rajona tiesa, Rīgas tiesu nams (tribunal administratif de district, section de Riga) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour la question préjudicielle suivante :

« L'article 63, paragraphe 1, dernier alinéa, de la directive [2014/24] doit-il être interprété en ce sens que, en toute hypothèse (même si le règlement de l'appel d'offres ne le mentionne pas expressément), lorsqu'un soumissionnaire est une association de personnes, il ne peut se prévaloir, dans son offre, que des capacités (expérience acquise) du membre qui, dans l'exécution du marché, exercera effectivement les activités pour lesquelles l'expérience pertinente est requise ? »

Sur la question préjudicielle

18 En vertu de l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour, lorsque la réponse à une question posée à titre préjudiciel peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence ou lorsque la réponse à une telle question ne laisse place à aucun doute raisonnable, la Cour peut, à tout moment, sur proposition du juge rapporteur, l'avocat général entendu, décider de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

19 Il y a lieu de faire application de cette disposition dans le cadre de la présente affaire.

20 Par sa question, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 63, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que, lorsqu'il est établi que, en cas d'attribution d'un marché public de services à un groupement d'opérateurs économiques, l'exécution des activités pour lesquelles il est requis une expérience sera confiée à un seul membre du groupement, le groupement soumissionnaire peut uniquement se prévaloir, afin de démontrer qu'il satisfait à une condition tenant à l'expérience imposée par le pouvoir adjudicateur conformément à l'article 58, paragraphe 4, de cette directive, de l'expérience dudit membre de ce groupement, et ce même si les documents de marché ne prévoient pas expressément que les membres d'un groupement d'opérateurs économiques doivent satisfaire individuellement à cette condition.

22 En outre, le premier alinéa du paragraphe 1 de l'article 63 de la directive 2014/24, qui, conformément au quatrième alinéa de ce paragraphe, est applicable à un groupement d'opérateurs économiques visé à l'article 19, paragraphe 2, de cette directive, prévoit le droit pour un opérateur économique d'avoir recours, pour un marché déterminé, aux capacités d'autres entités, quelle que soit la nature juridique des liens qui l'unissent à ces entités, en vue de satisfaire notamment aux critères relatifs aux capacités techniques et professionnelles, visés à l'article 58, paragraphe 4, de ladite directive (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 10 octobre 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 et Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, points 29 et 33 ; du 3 juin 2021, Rad Service e.a., C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, point 30, ainsi que du 7 septembre 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, point 150). En ce qui concerne le critère relatif à l'expérience professionnelle pertinente, l'article 63, paragraphe 1, premier alinéa, de la même directive dispose que les opérateurs économiques ne peuvent toutefois avoir recours aux capacités d'autres entités que lorsque ces dernières fourniront les services pour lesquels ces capacités sont requises. Si un opérateur économique souhaite recourir aux capacités d'autres entités, il apporte au pouvoir adjudicateur la preuve qu'il disposera des moyens nécessaires, par exemple, en produisant l'engagement de ces entités à cet effet.

26 Il résulte ainsi clairement de la combinaison des articles 59 et 63 de cette directive qu'il incombe à un groupement d'opérateurs économiques de démontrer qu'il satisfait aux critères de sélection qualitative énoncés à l'article 58 de cette directive, tels qu'une condition tenant à l'expérience.

27 L'article 63 de ladite directive confère toutefois une grande latitude à un opérateur économique pour s'entourer d'autres entités qui lui permettront de disposer des capacités qui lui font défaut. Par conséquent, cette disposition ne saurait être interprétée comme imposant, par principe, à un opérateur économique de solliciter le concours d'une entité remplissant, à elle seule, un critère de sélection qualitative, telle que la condition d'expérience en cause au principal. En effet, il ne saurait être exclu qu'un tel critère de sélection puisse être rempli en cumulant les capacités de plusieurs membres d'un groupement d'opérateurs économiques.

28 Par conséquent, il serait disproportionné, en l'absence notamment d'un motif objectif, d'exiger qu'un critère de sélection qualitative doive être satisfait uniquement par un seul membre d'un tel groupement. En effet, le principe de proportionnalité, qui est garanti à l'article 18, paragraphe 1, premier alinéa, de la directive 2014/24, impose que les règles établies par les États membres ou les pouvoirs adjudicateurs dans le cadre de la mise en œuvre des dispositions de cette directive n'aillent pas au–delà de ce qui est nécessaire pour atteindre les objectifs visés par ladite directive (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 16 décembre 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, point 48, et du 7 septembre 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, point 155).

29 Cela étant, dans l'hypothèse où le chef de file d'un groupement d'opérateurs économiques déclare expressément que la fourniture des services faisant l'objet de la procédure de passation de marché public en cause sera assurée par un seul membre de ce groupement ou lorsqu'une telle conclusion peut être tirée du DUME, dès lors que celui-ci fait apparaître que seul un membre dudit groupement dispose d'une expérience dans l'activité de services en cause, le pouvoir adjudicateur est fondé à considérer que ce même groupement peut uniquement se prévaloir de l'expérience du membre de ce groupement auquel sera confiée, en cas d'attribution du marché, l'exécution des activités pour lesquelles l'expérience est requise.

30 En tout état de cause, il convient de constater que l'article 19, paragraphe 2, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24 ne saurait être pertinent dans le cadre du litige au principal. En effet, en vertu de cette disposition, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent, s'ils l'estiment nécessaire, préciser, dans les documents de marché, la manière dont les groupements d'opérateurs économiques doivent remplir les conditions relatives notamment aux capacités techniques et professionnelles visées à l'article 58 de cette directive, pour autant que cela soit justifié par des motifs objectifs et que ce soit proportionné. Partant, l'application de l'article 19, paragraphe 2, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24 présuppose que le pouvoir adjudicateur ait apporté lesdites précisions dans les documents de marché.

31 Or, en l'occurrence, il ressort du libellé de la question préjudicielle que le règlement de l'appel d'offres ne prévoyait pas expressément que la condition d'expérience en cause au principal devait être satisfaite par le membre du groupement d'opérateurs économiques qui, en cas d'attribution du marché à ce groupement, serait effectivement chargé de l'exécution des activités pour lesquelles l'expérience pertinente est requise.

33 En effet, au stade de l'examen de la recevabilité des candidatures, le pouvoir adjudicateur procède à une appréciation rétrospective destinée à évaluer si un soumissionnaire dispose des qualités laissant augurer une exécution effective du marché en cause. Dans ces conditions, l'absence de ces qualités ne saurait être compensée par le lien juridique, d'ordre prospectif, en vertu duquel les membres d'une société en nom collectif sont légalement tenus de répondre solidairement entre eux des obligations d'une telle société.

34 Eu égard à l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent, il convient de répondre à la question posée que l'article 63, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec l'article 59 de celle–ci, doit être interprété en ce sens que, lorsqu'il est établi que, en cas d'attribution d'un marché public de services à un groupement d'opérateurs économiques, l'exécution des activités pour lesquelles il est requis une expérience sera confiée à un seul membre du groupement, le groupement soumissionnaire peut uniquement se prévaloir, afin de démontrer qu'il satisfait à une condition tenant à l'expérience imposée par le pouvoir adjudicateur conformément à l'article 58, paragraphe 4, de cette directive, de l'expérience dudit membre de ce groupement, et ce même si les documents de marché ne prévoient pas expressément que les membres d'un groupement d'opérateurs économiques doivent satisfaire individuellement à cette condition.

35 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (huitième chambre) dit pour droit :

L'article 63, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE, lu en combinaison avec l'article 59 de celle–ci,

doit être interprété en ce sens que

lorsqu'il est établi que, en cas d'attribution d'un marché public de services à un groupement d'opérateurs économiques, l'exécution des activités pour lesquelles il est requis une expérience sera confiée à un seul membre du groupement, le groupement soumissionnaire peut uniquement se prévaloir, afin de démontrer qu'il satisfait à une condition tenant à l'expérience imposée par le pouvoir adjudicateur conformément à l'article 58, paragraphe 4, de cette directive, de l'expérience dudit membre de ce groupement, et ce même si les documents de marché ne prévoient pas expressément que les membres d'un groupement d'opérateurs économiques doivent satisfaire individuellement à cette condition.

ADMINISTRATIVE DISTRICT COURT
RIGA COURT HOUSE

JUDGMENT

On behalf of the people of Latvia

Riga, December 2, 2022

The Administrative District Court is composed of: Judge
Agnese Patmalniece, Judge Marina
Romanova, Judge Sandija Audzere, with the participation of the representative of the applicant general partnership "ÿDIENS & KM.LV" /person C/, on the side of the respondent - the Republic of Latvia - invited institutions -

To the representative of the Procurement Monitoring Bureau /person D/ and to the representatives of the Prison Administration /person E/ and /person F/,

In an oral proceeding online, using the Microsoft Teams application, the administrative case was examined, which was initiated on the basis of the application of the general partnership "ÿDIENS & KM.LV" regarding the recognition of the decision of the Procurement Supervision Bureau's application review commission of February 25, 2021 No. 4-1.2/21-37 as unlawful.

Descriptive part

[1] On November 16, 2018, the Prison Administration (hereinafter referred to as the contracting authority) announced an open tender for the "Provision of Catering Services" for prisoners" (id. No. IeVP 2018/52) (hereinafter – competition).

At the meeting of the procurement commission of the contracting authority on January 18, 2021 (minutes No. 2018/52/11; hereinafter also – the initial decision), a decision was made to award the contract for parts 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 of the subject of the tender to the limited liability company "ALEKS UN V", whose offer was recognized as the most economically advantageous. At the same time, the applicant was recognized as not complying with the requirements of subsection 4.1.1 of the tender regulations and was excluded from further participation in the tender.

Disagreeing with the decision of the contracting authority's procurement commission, the applicant submitted an application to the Procurement Supervision Bureau (hereinafter referred to as the Bureau) on January 25, 2021 regarding the tender organized by the contracting authority.

[2] Having examined the applicant's application, the Office, by decision No. 4?1.2/21-37 of 25 February 2021 (hereinafter – the appealed decision), left the initial decision unchanged. The decision is based on the arguments set out below.

[2.1] The experience requirements included in Subsection 4.1.1 of the Tender Regulations are set for the tenderer. Since in this particular case the tender has been submitted by the tenderer as a general partnership, which is considered a tenderer within the meaning of the Public Procurement Law, the general partnership must fulfil the aforementioned experience requirements either independently or also based on the capabilities of third parties in accordance with Section 46, Part Four of the Public Procurement Law.

[2.2] Since the requirement included in Subsection 4.1.1 of the competition regulations requires the applicant to demonstrate their experience in preparing food portions in a certain amount, while it can be concluded from the information submitted in the offer and the case materials that the applicant as a general partnership does not have the relevant experience in the required amount and, accordingly, the applicant relies on the experience of its two members, SIA "ÿdiens.lv" and SI "Bruneros", in fulfilling the aforementioned qualification requirement, the initial decision reasonably assessed whether the involvement of the applicant's members in the performance is sufficient to transfer the necessary experience to the applicant.

[2.3] According to the information provided by the applicant, if the applicant is awarded the right to conclude a contract in the tender, the actual preparation of food portions will be carried out only by SIA "ÿdiens.lv", while the involvement of SI "Bruneros" provides only for the resolution of administrative issues. Thus, since SI "Bruneros" will not be practically involved in the preparation of food portions, SI "Bruneros"'s experience in preparing food portions, taking into account the findings expressed in the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union of 7 April 2016 in case C-324/14 and the fact that the experience required in subparagraph 4.1.1 of the tender regulations, taking into account the nature and purpose of the contract, cannot be transferred otherwise than by directly and practically engaging in the performance of the contract in the provision of the relevant service (preparation of food portions), shall not be taken into account when assessing the applicant's compliance with the requirement specified in subparagraph 4.1.1 of the tender regulations.

[2.4] The fact that a general partnership has been established for the purpose of participating in the tender is not decisive, since the establishment of a general partnership cannot be based solely on the formal fulfillment of the qualification requirements set out in the procurement procedure documents. The members of the general partnership shall be bound to the performance of the contract, taking into account the agreement between them, which in the specific case cannot be ascertained from the applicant's offer.

[2.5] Joint and several liability means that the members are jointly and severally liable for the performance of the contract, not that both members will be involved in the performance of specific works, including their work. in the execution of which the customer has set certain experience requirements for participation in the tender.

[2.6] The certificate of experience submitted by the applicant in the tender, which together indicates the experience gained by the general partnership and the members of the general partnership in 30 catering service contracts, without specifically indicating who has fulfilled each of these contracts and acquired the relevant experience (number of portions), as well as without indicating the acquired experience (number of portions) for calendar years, as required by Subsection 4.1.1 of the tender regulations, does not allow for the unambiguous identification of the individual experience gained by the applicant and each of its members.

[2.7] Since the request of the contracting authority's procurement commission to explain the information on experience indicated in the applicant's offer, the applicant has not provided a response in substance, indicating that it does not understand which records should be drawn up more precisely, and this request has been formulated sufficiently clearly and understandably,

The action of the contracting authority's procurement commission, upon receiving the applicant's refusal to provide the requested information, to evaluate the applicant's offer based on the information at its disposal in accordance with the provisions of Article 41, Part Seven of the Public Procurement Law, is considered correct.

[3] The applicant appealed the decision of the office to the court, stating the following arguments in the application.

[3.1] The applicant has established a supplier association, for which a contract has been concluded, which stipulates that both members of the applicant fully transfer their resources to meet the requirements of the tender regulations, and as a result of obtaining the right to conclude a procurement contract, will transfer all their resources to the qualitative performance of the procurement contract, as well as be jointly and severally liable to the contracting authority. At the same time, the applicant has submitted the certification and references required by the tender regulations, which prove that the applicant fully meets the requirements of the tender regulations regarding the necessary experience.

[3.2] If the contracting authority wanted to set any special requirements for the members of the supplier association (in this case, a general partnership), for example, that the experience specified in Subsection 4.1.1 of the tender regulations is required for both members or specifically for the member who will directly provide the seating service, the contracting authority was obliged to include this requirement in the tender regulations. At the same time, if the contracting authority had included such a requirement in the tender regulations, it would unreasonably restrict competition and would be contrary to the regulations of the Public Procurement Law.

[3.3] The Office incorrectly refers to the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union in Case No. C?324/14, because the members of the applicant are members of a general partnership, not, for example, subcontractors. The above excludes any doubts about the participation and liability of the general partnership members in the performance of the procurement contract.

[3.4] The details of a general partnership entered in the Register of Enterprises indicate the person who is entitled to represent the general partnership. Therefore, there can be no doubt about the participation or representation of the general partnership in the tender framework.

[3.5] The objectivity of the adoption of the appealed decision and the examination of the case is questionable, considering that an official participated in its adoption.
(Chairperson of the Office Procurement Review Commission), which has previously made unfavorable decisions regarding the applicant.

[4] In its explanation to the court, the office does not recognize the applicant's application, based on the arguments mentioned in the appealed decision and additionally indicating that all decisions of the office made in connection with the competition are objective and legal, and none of the members of the application review commission is related to any of the participants in the case or has been interested in any specific outcome of the case.

[5] In its explanation to the court, the contracting authority does not recognize the applicant's application, agreeing with the arguments mentioned in the appealed decision and additionally stating the following.

[5.1] Contrary to what the applicant indicated, the contracting authority's procurement commission did not assess that the applicant's member SI "Bruneros""s experience met the minimum experience required in the tender.

[5.2] The contracting authority is obliged to ensure that prisoners receive regular food in the amount specified in the regulatory enactments. The provision of food is one of the most important areas of ensuring the daily needs of prisoners and any deviations can clearly be assessed as a significant violation of the human rights of prisoners. Accordingly, the contracting authority cannot formally assess the competition requirement for experience.

[5.3] There are several publications available in the public domain indicating that the applicant or its members have not been able to cope with the obligations assumed in the procurement contract, in some of the cases examined this is directly related to the lack of resources and possible formal confirmation of experience to the contracting authorities, as well as to possible dishonest conduct. At the same time, it can be concluded that the applicant's confirmation of experience has also indicated contracts in which the contracting authority has unilaterally withdrawn from the contract because the applicant's member has not fulfilled its obligations towards the contracting authority.

[6] The applicant's supplements to the application repeat the arguments indicated in the application, additionally indicating various violations committed during the procurement procedure (excessively long evaluation of submitted bids, delay in decision-making deadlines, sending unfounded requests to the applicant, failure to initiate an administrative violation case and the office's impartiality in decision-making).

[7]By decision of the Administrative District Court of 20 September 2021, it was decided to refer a question to the Court of Justice of the European Union for a preliminary ruling.
Simultaneously with the aforementioned decision, the proceedings in the case were suspended.

[8] On 3 October 2022, the Administrative District Court received the order of the Court of Justice of the European Union of 30 September 2022 in case C-592/21.

[9] The contracting authority points out in its additional explanations that the Court of Justice of the European Union, in its order of 30 September 2022 in case C-592/21, has provided an interpretation that is consistent with the reasoning set out in the contracting authority's initial decision.

[10] At the court hearing, the applicant's representative maintained the application based on the arguments set out in the application.
The defendant's representatives did not recognize the application based on the arguments provided in the explanations.

Theme part

[11] The dispute in the case is whether the applicant's bid was rightly declared to be non-compliant with the requirements set out in Sub-paragraph 4.1.1 of the tender regulations.

[12] Subsection 4.1.1 of the tender regulations provided that the tenderer must submit a certificate that the tenderer has fulfilled at least one (food preparation) service contract corresponding to the subject of the procurement (or the relevant part) within the last 3 years. A contract corresponding to the subject of the procurement will be considered a contract (or several contracts) within the framework of which the amount of food preparation work has been fulfilled within one year, which is not less than the estimated annual amount (of the relevant part) specified in the technical specifications of the regulations. The tenderer in 2015 or 2016, or 2017, or 2018 until the moment of submitting the offer, has prepared the number of food portions within one calendar year, which is not less than the estimated number of portions per year in the relevant part of the procurement. In the event that a tenderer submits a tender for several or all parts of the procurement, the tenderer's experience will be evaluated (compared) by adding together the number of portions mentioned in the relevant parts with the experience indicated by the tenderer.

Therefore, the aforementioned provision of the regulations essentially included a requirement for the bidder's previous experience in preparing such a volume (number) of food portions within one calendar year as the bidder will have to prepare for persons in prisons during the same period of time during the provisional execution of the procurement contract.

Such a requirement included in the regulations is a requirement that relates to the technical and professional capabilities to fulfill the obligations set out in the contract.

[13] The contracting authority has the right to set requirements regarding the technical and professional qualifications of the applicant necessary for the performance of the procurement contract.

capabilities is provided for in Article 46, Part 1 of the Public Procurement Law. Among other things, the aforementioned legal norm directly stipulates that such requirements may also apply to the supplier's experience. It is the tenderer's experience that is one of the main factors that allows the contracting authority to assess the quality of the expected services, therefore, in general, the contracting authority has the discretion to set experience requirements that correspond to the subject matter of the expected procurement contract, the volume of the services to be procured, their complexity and other significant aspects (cf. see the Senate's decision of 21 May 2018 in case No. SKA-1222/2018 (ECLI:LV:AT:2018:0521.A420171118.5.L) Paragraph 17, Judgment of 27 August 2020 in Case No. SKA-297/2020 (ECLI:LV:AT:2020:0827.A420336717.9.S) (see paragraph 9).

The requirement that the tenderer has previous experience in the performance of a specific procurement contract is aimed at ensuring that the offer meets the customer's expectations and that it receives performance that is appropriate to the subject of the procurement and of the highest possible quality, thus achieving one of the main objectives of public procurement regulation - the effective use of the customer's funds, minimizing the risk of poor-quality performance. It goes without saying that a tenderer who already has successful previous experience in providing services or supplying goods similar or identical to the subject of the procurement contract will be much more likely than a tenderer who does not have such experience to be able to perform the specific procurement contract in a high-quality and timely manner. Therefore, when assessing whether a particular applicant meets the experience requirements set by the contracting authority, it is important whether the applicant actually possesses the relevant experience, as a formal approach to this issue will not ensure the achievement of the goal for which the specific experience requirement is included in the regulations in the first place (Decision of the Senate of 30 April 2021 in case No. 983/2021 (ECLI:LV:AT:2021:0430.A420136121.8.L) (paragraph 8).

[14] The court finds that the applicant submitted a certificate of experience in the tender, indicating that in 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018 (up to the time of submission of the offer), within one calendar year, it has prepared a number of food portions that is not less than the number of portions expected in all five parts of the procurement per year. The certificate also contains a record of the number of portions prepared in the concluded contracts – 5,434,080 portions (summing up the experience of the general partnership and the members of the general partnership), and an indication that the contracts are valid for a period longer than a year. Additionally, the court finds that, when evaluating the applicant's offer, the contracting authority's procurement commission has identified the individual experience of the members of the general partnership (SIA "ÿdiens.lv" has prepared 1,450,240 portions, which is less than the required 2,359,725 portions), which is not in dispute in the case.

[15] The Court concludes that the applicant is a general partnership. A general partnership, according to the first part of Article 77 of the Commercial Law, is a partnership whose purpose is to carry out commercial activities using a common name, and in which two or more persons (members) have joined together on the basis of a partnership agreement, without limiting their liability towards the creditors of the general partnership. Since a general partnership does not have the status of a legal entity, the applicant within the meaning of the Public Procurement Law is considered to be the association of members (legal entities) of the general partnership – in this case, SIA "ÿdiens.lv" and SI "Bruneros" (a group of economic operators within the meaning of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (hereinafter – Directive 2014/24/EU)).

In accordance with the last sentence of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU, a group of economic operators may rely on the capabilities of the group members under the same conditions as those applicable to the reliance of tenderers on the capabilities and resources of other persons. The aforementioned regulation is included in the fourth paragraph of Article 46 of the Public Procurement Law, which allows the supplier to rely on the technical and professional capabilities of other persons in the performance of the procurement contract, regardless of the legal nature of the mutual relationship. In such a case, the supplier shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have the necessary resources at its disposal by submitting a certificate from these persons or an agreement on the transfer of the necessary resources to the supplier. With regard to professional experience or the availability of personnel meeting the requirements of the contracting authority, the aforementioned legal provision also specifies that the supplier may rely on such capabilities of other persons only if these persons provide services for the performance of which the relevant capabilities are necessary.

Thus, in the procurement legal framework, the possibility of a service provider to rely on the experience of other persons is inextricably linked to the condition that the entity that has actually acquired the required experience will perform the activities for which the relevant experience is required in the performance of the contract, even despite the fact that such a requirement is not included in the tender regulations. The mere fact that the tender has been submitted by an association of persons cannot be a sufficient reason to believe that it is not essential for it, unlike other tenderers, to prove that the entity that has acquired experience in the course of the performance of the procurement contract will be the one who will provide the relevant services. Therefore, it is reasonable to require that in a situation where the association has referred in the tender to the previous experience of its member in the provision of certain services, convincing evidence be submitted to the contracting authority that the relevant member will actually participate in the provision of the specific services. Otherwise, it would be necessary to conclude that it is sufficient for an association of persons to only formally refer to the previous experience of a member of the association in a procurement, even though only those members of the association will actually participate in a specific part of the performance of the procurement contract, whose ability to perform the procurement contract qualitatively and on time will be verified by the contracting authority. This would be contrary to the basic principles of public procurement regulation and the meaning of setting experience requirements (Decision of the Senate of 30 April 2021 in case No. 983/2021 (ECLI:LV:AT:2021:0430.A420136121.8.L) 10). The Court of Justice of the European Union also confirms this, stating that it follows from the second and third sentences of the first subparagraph of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 that, in the context of a public service contract, an economic operator, in order to rely on the capacities of other entities, must provide evidence, first, that those entities will provide the services for the performance of which those capacities are necessary and, second, that it will have at its disposal the necessary resources, if it is awarded the contract, for the actual performance of the contract in question (order of the Court of Justice of the European Union of 30 September 2022 in Case C-592/21 (ECLI:EU:C:2022:746) (paragraphs 23, 30).

Therefore, the applicant may refer to the experience of SI "Bruneros" in providing a food service of the appropriate volume (in preparing the number of food portions) in accordance with subparagraph 4.1.1 of the tender regulations, if this experience will be effectively used in the performance of the procurement contract. Namely, if SI "Bruneros" will actually be involved in providing the relevant contract performance work, transferring its relevant experience to the performance of the contract in a practically useful way.

[16] Annex 1 "Division of Responsibilities of the Parties" to the partnership agreement concluded between SIA "ÿdiens.lv" and SI "Bruneros" (page 120 of the case) stipulates that the division of work is as follows: SIA "ÿdiens.lv" will carry out employee selection, employee training, on-site work organization, service provision organization, and filing of administrative documents (volume as a percentage of the contract price – 60%), while the description of work of SI "Bruneros" includes supervision and control, financial participation, development and preparation of necessary documents, including technological maps, menus, self-control forms, etc. (volume as a percentage of the contract price – 40%). As indicated by the applicant in the additional explanations provided on October 7, 2020 (page 38 of the case), the preparation of food portions will be carried out by SIA "ÿdiens.lv", while SI "Bruneros" will ensure the involvement of its specialists in order to monitor and instruct the activities of SIA "ÿdiens.lv" based on its experience.

In the court's assessment, the information indicated in the aforementioned explanations regarding the involvement of specialists from SI "Bruneros" in the supervision and instruction of the activities of SIA "ÿdiens.lv" in connection with the fact that in fact only SIA "ÿdiens.lv" will prepare the food portions does not give the customer the necessary confidence or security that SI "Bruneros"'s experience in preparing food portions will be specifically and effectively used in the performance of the competitive contract.

The applicant has indicated that the merchants included in the applicant had agreed only on a preliminary process for executing the tender agreement, which could be changed if necessary, but the aforementioned statement is not confirmed by either the decision of the applicant's members or the clarifying letters to the client.
The aforementioned documents do not mention anything about the fact that SI "Bruneros" could, if necessary, be involved in performing work other than administrative work. In this regard, it should also be noted that the applicant itself should know best and be able to explain how the procurement contract award procedure is carried out.

in the event of a breach of contract, it must be able to explain how the applicant will ensure, if necessary, that SI "Bruneros" will actually prepare meals in prisons in Latvia. However, the applicant had not explained this to either the contracting authority or the office (Senate decision of 30 April 2021 in case No. 983/2021 (ECLI:LV:AT:2021:0430.A420136121.8.L) (paragraph 11).

In circumstances where, according to the applicant's offer, the actual involvement of SI "Bruneros" in the preparation of the food portions referred to in subparagraph 4.1.1. of the tender regulations is not envisaged, the applicant's reference to SI "Bruneros'"s experience (number of food portions) in the relevant field, in the opinion of the court, is to be assessed as solely declarative and inconsistent with the purpose of the specific requirement of the regulations to provide the customer with a guarantee that the work will be performed by a contractor with appropriate experience.

[17] The applicant emphasizes that in this particular case, the decisive factor is that both merchants who are part of the applicant, as members of a general partnership, are jointly and severally liable with third parties – including the customer.

The Court does not consider that the joint and several liability of the two undertakings forming part of the applicant in relations with third parties (which is essentially a characteristic of a general partnership arising solely from the Commercial Law (see the first paragraph of Article 77, the first paragraph of Article 94 of the Commercial Law)) automatically means that the previously acquired experience of both undertakings will actually be used in the performance of the specific procurement contract. The Court of Justice of the European Union has also indicated that the fact that under Latvian law the members of a general partnership are jointly and severally liable in relation to third parties, including the contracting authority, cannot affect the assessment of the criterion relating to the relevant professional experience of these members at the stage of the selection of tenderers in a public procurement procedure. Namely, at the stage of assessing the admissibility of candidatures, the contracting authority carries out a retrospective assessment in order to assess whether the tenderer has the characteristics that allow one to expect effective performance of the relevant contract. In such circumstances, the absence of those characteristics cannot be compensated for by a prospective legal link under which the members of a general partnership are legally obliged to be jointly and severally liable for the obligations of such a partnership (Order of the Court of Justice of the European Union of 30 September 2022 in Case C-592/21 (ECLI:EU:C:2022:746) 32, 33. points).

[18] Since it follows from the case materials (and which is not in dispute in the case) that the applicant as a general partnership does not have its own independent experience, while the individual experience of SIA "ÿdiens.lv" is not sufficient to fulfill the requirement of Sub-clause 4.1.1. of the tender regulations and the relevant experience of SI "Bruneros" in accordance with the information provided in the tender has not been effectively transferred to the applicant for use in the performance of the contract in a manner useful to the applicant, the court concludes that the applicant's tender does not comply with the experience requirement set out in Sub-clause 4.1.1. of the tender regulations.

Additionally, the court points out that it is not possible to clearly identify the experience gained for calendar years from the certificate, considering that The certificate indicates the terms of the contracts (several years), but the number of portions is listed for 1 (unidentifiable) year.

[19] The applicant has also pointed out a number of irregularities committed during the procurement procedure (excessively long evaluation of submitted bids, delaying decision-making deadlines (including office actions without establishing violations in the customer's actions), sending unjustified requests to the applicant).

Initially, the court points out that, in accordance with the established case law of the Senate, decisions taken and actions taken in the course of an administrative violation case are not subject to the control of administrative courts (cf. see paragraph 5 of the Senate's decision of 24 March 2017 in case No. SKA-938/2017 (670002917), paragraph 7 of the decision of 23 July 2013 in case No. SKA-752/2013 (670008313). The administrative court does not have the authority to impose an obligation on the institution to initiate administrative violation proceedings. Accordingly, the institution's actions in not initiating administrative violation proceedings are not subject to the control of the administrative court. Consequently, it is not possible to verify within the framework of the case under consideration whether the office was justified in not initiating administrative violation proceedings in connection with the applicant's application.

With regard to the procedural violations indicated by the applicant, the court, having reviewed the contracting authority's tender procedure report (https:// www.eis.gov.lv/ EKEIS/ Supplier/ Procurement/ 14633), the following conditions have been established.

[20] The deadline for submitting tenders in the competition was 19 December 2018. The evaluation of tenders began on 21 February 2019 (meeting minutes No. 2018/52/3), when it was decided to request additional information from tenderers (including the applicant) due to the need to verify the exclusion conditions referred to in Article 42 of the Public Procurement Law (the deadline for submitting information is 8 March 2019 at 11:00). Since the information provided by tenderers was received on 7 and 8 March 2019, the evaluation of tenders resumed on 20 March 2019 (meeting minutes No. 2018/52/4).

At the aforementioned meeting, a decision was made to repeatedly request additional information from the bidders to verify that the bidders had no tax debts as of December 19, 2018 (the deadline for submitting information is April 5, 2019 at 11:00). The information was received on March 29, 2019 and April 3, 2019, respectively. In view of the above, the evaluation of the bids resumed on May 10, 2019 (meeting minutes No. 2018/52/5), when it was decided to request additional information regarding the qualification documentation submitted by the bidders (the deadline for submitting information is May 21, 2019 at 11:00; information from one of the bidders was received on June 11, 2019). The evaluation of the offers was resumed at the meeting of the contracting authority's procurement commission on November 29, 2019 (minutes No. 2018/52/6), when a decision was made to award the contract award rights in all five parts of the procurement to the limited liability company "ALEKS UN V". By the decision of the bureau No. 4-1.2/20-6 of January 9, 2020, the decision of the contracting authority on the results of the tender in all five parts of the procurement subject was canceled and the contracting authority was instructed to eliminate the violations identified by the bureau within twenty working days from the date of notification of the decision (the decision was notified on January 14, 2020; Section 71, Part Seven of the Public Procurement Law) by re-evaluating the offers submitted in all five parts of the tender. The contracting authority carried out a repeated evaluation of the tenders on 13 February 2020 (meeting minutes No. 2018/52/7), re-awarding the contract awarding rights in all five parts of the procurement to the limited liability company "ALEKS UN V". By the decision of the bureau No. 4-1.2/20-46/2 of 14 April 2020, the contracting authority's decision on the results of the tender in all five parts of the procurement subject was cancelled and the contracting authority was instructed to eliminate the violations identified by the bureau within thirty working days from the date of notification of the decision (the decision was notified on 16 April 2020) by re-evaluating the tenders submitted in all five parts of the procurement subject. At the meeting of the contracting authority's procurement commission on May 8, 2020 (minutes No. 2018/52/8), it was decided to request additional information from the applicant (an explanation of how and to what extent both members of the general partnership will actually be involved in the execution of each specific contract and the information specified in Subsection 1.9.4 of the tender regulations). The applicant provided the requested information on 14 May 2020, while the evaluation of the bids resumed on 18 September 2020 (meeting minutes No. 2018/52/9), when it was decided to repeatedly request additional information from the applicant (an explanation of the proportion of the applicant's members who will prepare actual portions of food; indicate experience for one calendar year and present the information in such a way that the procurement commission of the contracting authority can identify the individual experience of the applicant and its members; a certificate of compliance of the applicant's member's management with the standards; a list of vehicles involved in the performance of the service, adding information on the facts about vehicle emission standards; confirmation of the involvement of a food technologist in the performance of the contract) (the deadline for submitting information is 2 October 2020 at 11:00). The applicant provided additional information on October 7, 2020 (on October 2, 2020, the applicant requested an extension of the deadline for providing information), additionally submitting a submission regarding the unlawful activities of the contracting authority's procurement commission with a request to initiate a service inspection and indicating that the applicant will, among other things, contact the Administrative Sanctions Department of the Bureau to assess the possible administrative violations of the contracting authority's procurement commission. At the meeting of the contracting authority's procurement commission on October 28, 2020 (minutes No. 2018/52/10), it was decided to inform the head of the contracting authority about the aforementioned submission. The contracting authority's procurement commission resumed the evaluation of the bids on January 18, 2021, having adopted the initial decision.

[21] Having assessed the information provided in the contracting authority's tender procedure report, the court does not see any objective reasons why the contracting authority, after receiving additional information on 21 May and 11 June 2019 and 14 May 2020, resumed the evaluation of tenders only on 29 November 2019 (more than 5 months after receiving the information) and 18 September 2020 (almost 4 months after receiving the information), respectively.
The court also finds that, in making the decision on determining the winner of the competition on February 13, 2020, the contracting authority did not comply with the deadline for making the decision specified in the Bureau's decision No. 4?1.2/20-6 of January 9, 2020 (the last date for making the decision was February 11, 2020). Taking the above into account, the court recognizes that the contracting authority has committed violations of procedural law in the case under consideration. At the same time, the court does not find any unjustified delay in the rest of the procurement procedure, taking into account that the evaluation of the tenders has been prolonged because the contracting authority has repeatedly requested information from the tenderers in order to obtain an objective picture of the tenderers' compliance with the requirements included in the regulations, and between the receipt of the additional information provided by the applicant on 7 October 2020 and the resumption of the evaluation of the tenders on 18 January 2021, the tender evaluation procedure was actually suspended due to the application submitted by the applicant regarding the need to initiate an internal inspection, which, among other things, questions the competence of the contracting authority's procurement commission in making decisions in the tender.

A violation of procedural law must be assessed in terms of its impact on the final decision. In relation to a private person, a procedural violation becomes legally significant only if it affected or could have affected the content of the decision. If it could have, it is considered significant (Paragraph 7 of the Senate judgment of 11 August 2006 in case No. SKA-386/2006).

In the case under consideration, the applicant has not substantiated the significance of the established violations in the assessment of whether the applicant's bid has been reasonably recognized as non-compliant with the requirements of the tender regulations by the appealed decision. The court also does not establish that the adoption of the appealed decision (as a final resolution of the initial decision) within a shorter period would change its content, namely, the legal consequences of the appealed decision (the applicant's non-compliance with Subsection 4.1.1 of the tender regulations) would be the same even if it were adopted within a procedurally objective period. Consequently, the delay in evaluating the bids and the delay in the procedural period in adopting the decision on determining the winner of the tender (decision of the contracting authority's procurement commission of 13 February 2020 (minutes of the meeting No. 2018/52/7)) are not considered to be significant procedural violations.

With regard to the applicant's indication that the contracting authority has unreasonably sent various types of requests to the applicant, the court, taking into account the information established in this judgment and provided in the tender procedure report, concludes that the information requested by the contracting authority was objectively necessary for the legal assessment of the applicant's offer. Accordingly, the court does not establish a procedural violation in the actions of the contracting authority by repeatedly requesting additional information from the applicant regarding its submitted offer, as permitted by Part 41 of the Public Procurement Law.

[22] In addition, the court notes that, taking into account the considerations set out in this judgment, namely why the appealed decision is lawful and justified, the court has no doubt that the decision was made based on objective criteria. Accordingly, the applicant's considerations regarding the impartiality of the office official in making the appealed decision are also unfounded.

[23] Summarizing the above, the court finds that the appealed decision is lawful.

Operative part

Based on the second part of Article 72 of the Public Procurement Law and the sixth part of Article 251 of the Administrative Procedure Law, the Administrative District Court decided to reject the application of the general partnership "ÿDIENS & KM.LV" for the position of the Procurement Monitoring Bureau's application review commission for 2021 The recognition of the February 25 decision No. 4-1.2/21-37 as illegal.

The judgment may be appealed to the Senate Administrative Cases Department within one month from the date of the judgment by submitting a cassation complaint to the Riga Courthouse of the Administrative District Court.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 3(1), Article 5(1)(b), Article 8(1) and (2) and Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2019/1827 of 30 October 2019 (OJ 2019 L 279, p. 23) (‘Directive 2014/23’), of Article 2(1), points 5 and 9, the third subparagraph of Article 3(4), Article 4(b) and (c), Article 18(1) and Article 58(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2019/1828 of 30 October 2019 (OJ 2019 L 279, p. 25) (‘Directive 2014/24’), of Regulation (EC) No 2195/2002 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 November 2002 on the Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV) (OJ 2002 L 340, p. 1), of Annex I to Regulation (EC) No 1893/2006 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 20 December 2006 establishing the statistical classification of economic activities NACE Revision 2 and amending Council Regulation (EEC) No 3037/90 as well as certain EC Regulations on specific statistical domains (OJ 2006 L 393, p. 1), as well as of Annex XXI to Commission Implementing Regulation (EU) 2015/1986 of 11 November 2015 establishing standard forms for the publication of notices in the field of public procurement and repealing Implementing Regulation (EU) No 842/2011 (OJ 2015 L 296, p. 1 and corrigendum OJ 2017 L 172, p. 36).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between SHARENGO najem in zakup vozil d.o.o. (‘Sharengo’) and Mestna občina Ljubljana (Urban municipality of Ljubljana, Slovenia) (‘Municipality of Ljubljana’) concerning the publication by the latter of a call for tenders intended to select a concessionaire with a view to implementing a project for the establishment and management of a public system for the rental and sharing of electric vehicles in the territory of that municipality.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 2014/23

3 Recitals 1, 4, 8, 18, 20 and 52 of Directive 2014/23 state:

‘(1) The absence of clear rules at Union level governing the award of concession contracts gives rise to legal uncertainty and to obstacles to the free provision of services and causes distortions in the functioning of the internal market. As a result, economic operators, in particular small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), are being deprived of their rights within the internal market and miss out on important business opportunities, while public authorities may not find the best use of public money so that Union citizens benefit from quality services at best prices. An adequate, balanced and flexible legal framework for the award of concessions would ensure effective and non-discriminatory access to the market to all Union economic operators and legal certainty, favouring public investments in infrastructures and strategic services to the citizen. Such a legal framework would also afford greater legal certainty to economic operators and could be a basis for and means of further opening up international public procurement markets and boosting world trade. Particular importance should be given to improving the access opportunities of SMEs throughout the Union concession markets.

(4) The award of public works concessions is presently subject to the basic rules of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)]; while the award of services concessions with a cross-border interest is subject to the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and in particular the principles of free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, as well as to the principles deriving therefrom such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. There is a risk of legal uncertainty related to divergent interpretations of the principles of the Treaty by national legislators and of wide disparities among the legislations of various Member States. Such risk has been confirmed by the extensive case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union which has, nevertheless, only partially addressed certain aspects of the award of concession contracts.

(8) For concessions equal to or above a certain value, it is appropriate to provide for a minimum coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts based on the principles of the TFEU so as to guarantee the opening-up of concessions to competition and adequate legal certainty. Those coordinating provisions should not go beyond what is necessary in order to achieve the aforementioned objectives and to ensure a certain degree of flexibility. Member States should be allowed to complete and develop further those provisions if they find it appropriate, in particular to better ensure compliance with the principles set out above.

(18) Difficulties related to the interpretation of the concepts of concession and public contract have generated continued legal uncertainty among stakeholders and have given rise to numerous judgments of the Court of Justice of the European Union. Therefore, the definition of concession should be clarified, in particular by referring to the concept of operating risk. The main feature of a concession, the right to exploit the works or services, always implies the transfer to the concessionaire of an operating risk of economic nature involving the possibility that it will not recoup the investments made and the costs incurred in operating the works or services awarded under normal operating conditions even if a part of the risk remains with the contracting authority or contracting entity. The application of specific rules governing the award of concessions would not be justified if the contracting authority or contracting entity relieved the economic operator of any potential loss, by guaranteeing a minimal revenue, equal or higher to the investments made and the costs that the economic operator has to incur in relation with the performance of the contract. At the same time it should be made clear that certain arrangements which are exclusively remunerated by a contracting authority or a contracting entity should qualify as concessions where the recoupment of the investments and costs incurred by the operator for executing the work or providing the service depends on the actual demand for or the supply of the service or asset.

(20) An operating risk should stem from factors which are outside the control of the parties. Risks such as those linked to bad management, contractual defaults by the economic operator or to instances of force majeure are not decisive for the purpose of classification as a concession, since those risks are inherent in every contract, whether it be a public procurement contract or a concession. An operating risk should be understood as the risk of exposure to the vagaries of the market, which may consist of either a demand risk or a supply risk, or both a demand and supply risk. Demand risk is to be understood as the risk on actual demand for the works or services which are the object of the contract. Supply risk is to be understood as the risk on the provision of the works or services which are the object of the contract, in particular the risk that the provision of the services will not match demand. For the purpose of assessment of the operating risk the net present value of all the investment, costs and revenues of the concessionaire should be taken into account in a consistent and uniform manner.

(52) The duration of a concession should be limited in order to avoid market foreclosure and restriction of competition. In addition, concessions of a very long duration are likely to result in the foreclosure of the market, and may thereby hinder the free movement of services and the freedom of establishment. However, such a duration may be justified if it is indispensable to enable the concessionaire to recoup investments planned to perform the concession, as well as to obtain a return on the invested capital. Consequently, for concessions with a duration greater than five years the duration should be limited to the period in which the concessionaire could reasonably be expected to recoup the investment made for operating the works and services together with a return on invested capital under normal operating conditions, taking into account specific contractual objectives undertaken by the concessionaire in order to deliver requirements relating to, for example, quality or price for users. The estimation should be valid at the moment of the award of the concession. It should be possible to include initial and further investments deemed necessary for the operating of the concession in particular expenditure on infrastructure, copyrights, patents, equipment, logistics, hiring, training of personnel and initial expenses. The maximum duration of the concession should be indicated in the concession documents unless duration is used as an award criterion of the contract. Contracting authorities and contracting entities should always be able to award a concession for a period shorter than the time necessary to recoup the investments, provided that the related compensation does not eliminate the operating risk.'

4 Entitled 'Subject matter and scope', Article 1 of that directive provides:

'1. This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities and contracting entities by means of a concession, whose value is estimated to be not less than the threshold laid down in Article 8.

2. This Directive applies to the award of works or services concessions, to economic operators by:

(a) Contracting authorities; …

5 Under Article 3 of that directive, entitled 'Principle of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency':

'1. Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the concession award procedure, including the estimate of the value, shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators or certain works, supplies or services.

6 Headed 'Definitions', Article 5 of Directive 2014/23 provides:

'For the purposes of this Directive the following definitions apply:

(1) "concessions" means works or services concessions, as defined in points (a) and (b):

(b) "services concession" means a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing by means of which one or more contracting authorities or contracting entities entrust the provision and the management of services other than the execution of works referred to in point (a) to one or more economic operators, the consideration of which consists either solely in the right to exploit the services that are the subject of the contract or in that right together with payment.

The award of a works or services concession shall involve the transfer to the concessionaire of an operating risk in exploiting those works or services encompassing demand or supply risk or both. The concessionaire shall be deemed to assume operating risk where, under normal operating conditions, it is not guaranteed to recoup the investments made or the costs incurred in operating the works or the services which are the subject matter of the concession. The part of the risk transferred to the concessionaire shall involve real exposure to the vagaries of the market, such that any potential estimated loss incurred by the concessionaire shall not be merely nominal or negligible;

7 Entitled ‘Threshold and methods for calculating the estimated value of concessions’, Article 8 of that directive states:

‘1. This Directive shall apply to concessions the value of which is equal to or greater than EUR 5 350 000.

2. The value of a concession shall be the total turnover of the concessionaire generated over the duration of the contract, net of [value-added tax (VAT)], as estimated by the contracting authority or the contracting entity, in consideration for the works and services being the object of the concession, as well as for the supplies incidental to such works and services.

3. The estimated value of the concession shall be calculated using an objective method specified in the concession documents. When calculating the estimated value of the concession, contracting authorities and contracting entities shall, where applicable, take into account in particular:

(a) the value of any form of option and any extension of the duration of the concession;

(b) revenue from the payment of fees and fines by the users of the works or services other than those collected on behalf of the contracting authority or contracting entity;

(c) payments or any financial advantage in any form whatsoever made by the contracting authority or contracting entity or any other public authority to the concessionaire, including compensation for compliance with a public service obligation and public investment subsidies;

…’

8 According to Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Duration of the concession’:

‘1. The duration of concessions shall be limited. The contracting authority or contracting entity shall estimate the duration on the basis of the works or services requested.

2. For concessions lasting more than five years, the maximum duration of the concession shall not exceed the time that a concessionaire could reasonably be expected to take to recoup the investments made in operating the works or services together with a return on invested capital taking into account the investments required to achieve the specific contractual objectives.

The investments taken into account for the purposes of the calculation shall include both initial investments and investments during the life of the concession.’

9 Entitled ‘Mixed contracts’, Article 20 of that directive provides:

2. Where the different parts of a given contract are objectively separable, paragraphs 3 and 4 shall apply. Where the different parts of a given contract are objectively not separable, paragraph 5 shall apply.

In the case of contracts intended to cover several activities, one of them being subject either to Annex II of this Directive or to Directive 2014/25/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243)], the applicable provisions shall be established in accordance with Article 22 of this Directive and Article 6 of Directive [2014/25], respectively.

4. In the case of mixed contracts containing elements of concessions as well as elements of public contracts covered by Directive [2014/24] or contracts covered by Directive [2014/25], the mixed contract shall be awarded in accordance with Directive [2014/24] or Directive [2014/25], respectively.

…’

10 Entitled ‘Economic operators’, Article 26 of Directive 2014/23 provides, in paragraph 2 thereof:

‘Groups of economic operators, including temporary associations, may participate in concession award procedures. They shall not be required by contracting authorities or contracting entities to have a specific legal form in order to submit a tender or a request to participate.

Where necessary, contracting authorities or contracting entities may clarify in the concession documents how groups of economic operators shall meet the requirements as to economic and financial standing or technical and professional ability referred to in Article 38 provided that this is justified by objective reasons and is proportionate. Member States may establish standard terms for how groups of economic operators are to meet those requirements. Any conditions for the performance of a concession by such groups of economic operators, which are different from those imposed on individual participants, shall also be justified by objective reasons and shall be proportionate.’

11 Entitled ‘Nomenclatures’, Article 27 of that directive provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Any references to nomenclatures in the context of the award of concessions shall be made using the “Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV)” as adopted by Regulation [No 2195/2002].’

12 Entitled ‘Concession notices’, Article 31 of that directive states, in paragraph 2 thereof:

‘Concession notices shall contain the information referred to in Annex V and, where appropriate, any other information deemed useful by the contracting authority or entity, in accordance with the format of standard forms.’

13 Entitled ‘Information to be included in concession notices referred to in Article 31’, Annex V to the same directive provides:

4. Description of the concession: nature and extent of works, nature and extent of services, order of magnitude or indicative value and, where possible, duration of the contract. Where the concession is divided into lots, this information shall be provided for each lot. Where appropriate, description of any options.

5. CPV codes. Where the concession is divided into lots, this information shall be provided for each lot.

7. Conditions for participation, including:

(b) where appropriate, indication whether the provision of the service is reserved by law, regulation or administrative provision to a particular profession; reference to the relevant law, regulation or administrative provision;

(c) a list and brief description of selection criteria where applicable; minimum level(s) of standards possibly required; indication of required information (self-declarations, documentation).

14 Entitled ‘Procedural guarantees’, Article 37 of Directive 2014/23 provides:

2. The contracting authority or contracting entity shall provide:

(a) in the concession notice, a description of the concession and of the conditions of participation;

(b) in the concession notice, in the invitation to submit a tender or in other concession documents, a description of the award criteria and, where applicable, the minimum requirements to be met.

4. The contracting authority or contracting entity shall communicate the description of the envisaged organisation of the procedure and an indicative completion deadline to all participants. Any modification shall be communicated to all participants and, to the extent that they concern elements disclosed in the concession notice, advertised to all economic operators.

15 Entitled ‘Selection and qualitative assessment of candidates’, Article 38 of that directive provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall verify the conditions for participation relating to the professional and technical ability and the financial and economic standing of the candidates or tenderers, on the basis of self-declarations, reference or references to be submitted as proof in accordance with the requirements specified in the concession notice that shall be non-discriminatory and proportionate to the subject matter of the concession. The conditions for participation shall be related and proportionate to the need to ensure the ability of the concessionaire to perform the concession, taking into account the subject matter of the concession and the purpose of ensuring genuine competition.

2. With a view to meeting the conditions for participation laid down in paragraph 1, an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular concession, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of its links with them. Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority or the contracting entity that it will have at its disposal, throughout the period of the concession, the necessary resources, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect. With regard to financial standing, the contracting authority or the contracting entity may require that the economic operator and those entities are jointly liable for the execution of the contract.

3. Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 26 may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.

16 Entitled ‘Subject matter and scope’, Article 1 of Directive 2014/24 provides:

‘1. This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4.

2. Procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a public contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the works, supplies or services are intended for a public purpose.

17 Entitled ‘Definitions’, Article 2 of that directive provides:

‘1. For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

(5) “public contracts” means contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services;

(8) “public supply contracts” means public contracts having as their object the purchase, lease, rental or hire-purchase, with or without an option to buy, of products. A public supply contract may include, as an incidental matter, siting and installation operations;

(9) “public service contracts” means public contracts having as their object the provision of services other than those referred to in point 6;

18 Under the heading ‘Mixed procurement’, Article 3 of Directive 2014/24 states:

4. In the case of contracts which have as their subject matter procurement covered by this Directive as well as procurement not covered by this Directive, contracting authorities may choose to award separate contracts for the separate parts or to award a single contract. Where contracting authorities choose to award separate contracts for separate parts, the decision as to which legal regime applies to any one of such separate contracts shall be taken on the basis of the characteristics of the separate part concerned.

Where contracting authorities choose to award a single contract, this Directive shall, unless otherwise provided in Article 16, apply to the ensuing mixed contract, irrespective of the value of the parts that would otherwise fall under a different legal regime and irrespective of which legal regime those parts would otherwise have been subject to.

In the case of mixed contracts containing elements of supply, works and service contracts and of concessions, the mixed contract shall be awarded in accordance with this Directive, provided that the estimated value of the part of the contract which constitutes a contract covered by this Directive, calculated in accordance with Article 5, is equal to or greater than the relevant threshold set out in Article 4.

19 Under the heading ‘Threshold amounts’, Article 4 of that directive provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘This Directive shall apply to procurements with a value net of [VAT] estimated to be equal to or greater than the following thresholds:

(b) EUR 139 000 for public supply and service contracts awarded by central government authorities and design contests organised by such authorities; where public supply contracts are awarded by contracting authorities operating in the field of defence, that threshold shall apply only to contracts concerning products covered by Annex III;

(c) EUR 214 000 for public supply and service contracts awarded by sub-central contracting authorities and design contests organised by such authorities …

20 Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 sets out the ‘principles of procurement’.

21 Entitled ‘Nomenclatures’, Article 23 of that directive provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Any references to nomenclatures in the context of public procurement shall be made using the Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV) as adopted by Regulation [No 2195/2002].’

22 Under the heading ‘Form and manner of publication of notices’, Article 51 of Directive 2014/24 provides, in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Notices referred to in Articles 48, 49 and 50 shall include the information set out in Annex V in the format of standard forms, including standard forms for corrigenda.’

23 Entitled ‘Information to be included in notices’, Annex V to that directive includes Part C relating to ‘information to be included in contract notices (as referred to in Article 49)’, which states:

7. Description of the procurement: nature and extent of works, nature and quantity or value of supplies, nature and extent of services. Where the contract is divided into lots, this information shall be provided for each lot. Where appropriate, description of any options.

…’

24 Under the heading ‘Selection criteria’, Article 58 of that directive provides, in paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof:

‘1. Selection criteria may relate to:

(a) suitability to pursue the professional activity;

(b) economic and financial standing;

(c) technical and professional ability.

Contracting authorities may only impose criteria referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 on economic operators as requirements for participation. They shall limit any requirements to those that are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. All requirements shall be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

2. With regard to suitability to pursue the professional activity, contracting authorities may require economic operators to be enrolled in one of the professional or trade registers kept in their Member State of establishment, as described in Annex XI, or to comply with any other request set out in that Annex.

In procurement procedures for services, in so far as economic operators have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in order to be able to perform in their country of origin the service concerned, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.’

25 Under the heading ‘Registers’, Annex XI to that directive provides:

‘The relevant professional and trade registers and corresponding declarations and certificates for each Member State are:

– in Slovenia, the “sodni register” and the “obrtni register”;

– …’

Implementing Regulation 2015/1986

26 Article 4 of Implementing Regulation 2015/1986 provides:

‘Contracting authorities and contracting entities shall use, for the publication in the Official Journal of the European Union of the notices referred to in Articles 31, 32 and 43 of Directive [2014/23], the standard forms set out in Annexes XI, XVII, XX, XXI and XXII to this Regulation.’

27 The standard form set out in points II.1.1 to II.1.4, II.2.1, II.2.2 and II.2.4 of Annex II to that implementing regulation requires the contracting authority to specify, in the contract notice, the title of the contract, the main CPV code, the type of contract, a succinct description, the additional CPV code(s) and the description of the services, respectively.

28 Annex XXI to that implementing regulation contains a standard form relating to ‘concession notice[s]’ within the meaning of Directive 2014/23, point III.1.1 of which reads as follows:

‘Suitability to pursue the professional activity, including requirements relating to enrolment on professional or trade registers[:]

List and brief description of conditions, indication of information and documentation required[.]’

Regulation No 2195/2002

29 Recitals 1 and 3 of Regulation No 2195/2002 state:

‘(1) The use of different classifications is detrimental to the openness and transparency of public procurement in Europe. Its impact on the quality of notices and the time needed to publish them is a de facto restriction on the access of economic operators to public contracts.

(3) There is a need to standardise, by means of a single classification system for public procurement, the references used by the contracting authorities and entities to describe the subject of contracts.’

30 Article 1 of Regulation No 2195/2002 lays down, in paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof:

‘1. A single classification system applicable to public procurement, known as the “Common Procurement Vocabulary” or “CPV” is hereby established.

2. The text of the CPV is set out in Annex I.’

Regulation No 1893/2006

31 Under the heading ‘Subject matter and scope’, Article 1 of Regulation No 1893/2006 provides:

‘1. This Regulation establishes a common statistical classification of economic activities in the [European Union], hereinafter referred to as “NACE Rev. 2”. This classification ensures that [EU] classifications are relevant to the economic reality and enhances the comparability of national, [EU] and international classifications and, hence, of national, [EU] and international statistics.

2. This Regulation shall apply only to the use of the classification for statistical purposes.’

Slovenian law

32 The Zakon o nekaterih koncesijskih pogodbah (Law on certain concession contracts) (Uradni list RS, No 9/2019), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings, governs certain works and services concession contracts with an estimated value net of VAT equal to or greater than that provided for in Article 8(1) of Directive 2014/23.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

33 In 2020, the Municipality of Ljubljana decided to initiate a procedure for the award of a concession for the establishment and management, in its territory, of a rental and sharing service for electric vehicles. The total value of the project was estimated at EUR 14 989 000 net of VAT, the financial contribution of the private partner being assessed at EUR 14 570 000 net of VAT and that of the municipality being assessed at EUR 36 000 net of VAT.

34 The financial contribution of the private partner was to be broken down as follows: existing fleet of electric vehicles: EUR 5 000 000; existing technology: EUR 1 500 000; staff and development: EUR 1 400 000; acquisition of new electric vehicles during the concession: EUR 6 250 000; construction of parking spaces: EUR 180 000; creation of charging stations: EUR 240 000.

35 The documents relating to the project at issue use the main CPV code 60100000. In addition, under the heading ‘Contributions of the grantor and the concessionaire’, it is provided that ‘the proceeds of the taxes for the parking spaces and charging stations as well as the parking taxes are to be considered as the contribution of the grantor for the implementation of the project’.

36 Furthermore, in its ‘Instructions for submitting a tender’, in order to describe the ‘subject matter of the concession relationship’, the Municipality of Ljubljana indicated that the implementation of the project for the establishment and management of a public system for the hiring and sharing of electric vehicles covered:

‘(a) the realisation of the investments necessary for the establishment of a public system of rental and sharing of electric vehicles in the territory of [the Municipality of Ljubljana] and which includes:

– the setting up of a fund of at least 200 electric vehicles for the establishment of a public system for the hiring and sharing of electric vehicles …,

– the design of a public network of spaces for the use of vehicles and charging centres for electric vehicles …,

– the creation of a modern and user-friendly IT solution for the user to provide the service of renting and sharing electric vehicles,

(b) the provision of the electric vehicle rental and sharing service …, including the creation of a centralised electric vehicle rental and sharing system which allows for the monitoring and supervision of the conduct of the project and in particular:

– the obligation to guarantee and manage a fleet of vehicles in perfect working order, which includes in particular regular services and repairs, especially in the event of traffic accidents, registration, insurance and other operating expenses for the normal use of vehicles. … The concessionaire also assumes the obligation to modernise the fleet of vehicles on a regular basis at the pace specified in the contract,

– the obligation to ensure and manage a network of spaces to borrow vehicles and charging points to charge electric vehicles, the obligation to maintain them on a regular basis and the obligation to guarantee charging points in working order on the ground under the conditions and according to the regime to be defined in the contract, – the guarantee of an adequate system of support for users.

Main obligations of the concessionaire:

– the concessionaire assumes, during the period covered by the contract, all the technical, technological and financial risks arising from the implementation of the investment and other measures and in respect of the provision of the electric vehicle rental and sharing service, including the risk as to the profitability of the investments made. The concessionaire also assumes the risk as to the accessibility and availability of the system created, as well as the risk linked to demand;

– …’

37 It also follows from those instructions that the project at issue in the main proceedings is intended to protect the environment and to enhance sustainable development, in particular by adopting concepts of sustainable mobility. Finally, under the heading of ‘grounds for exclusion’, the said instructions include the obligation for an applicant to be registered to pursue, in the national standard classification of activities, activity 77.110 (Renting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles) (‘activity 77.110’), it being specified that, in the case of a tender submitted in partnership, the condition must be met by each of the partners.

38 On 17, 18 and 19 February 2021, Sharengo raised various questions related to the call for tenders through the public procurement portal and indicated that some of the requirements of the Municipality of Ljubljana were not in line with the Slovenian legislation on public-private partnerships and public procurement.

39 As early as 19 February 2021, and thus even before the expiry of the period available to that municipality to respond to those questions, Sharengo filed a request for review before that municipality. In particular, it argued that, since the subject matter of the contract includes the execution of investments not directly related to the rental and sharing of electric vehicles, the requirement that all partners be registered for activity 77.110 was disproportionate and discriminatory. In Sharengo’s view, such a requirement restricts competition and prevents cooperation with partners established abroad. Sharengo therefore sought annulment of the various conditions, criteria and requirements and, in the alternative, annulment of the entire tendering procedure.

40 By decision of 2 March 2021, the Municipality of Ljubljana rejected that application for review on the ground that it was premature.

41 Sharengo’s questions nevertheless led the Municipality of Ljubljana to specify that the requirement to be registered for activity 77.110 must be met by the candidate and that, in the case of a tender submitted in partnership, it must be met by each of the partners because the conclusion of the partnership contract establishes joint and several liability between them. By contrast, the other economic operators involved in the candidate’s declaration do not need to satisfy the condition. In addition, if the economic operators are not enrolled on the trade or professional register of the Republic of Slovenia, the grantor should take into account the classification which, according to its description, corresponds to the subject matter of the contract.

42 Having rejected Sharengo’s application for review, the Municipality of Ljubljana was required to forward it for examination to the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (National Commission for the review of procedures for the award of public contracts, Slovenia), which it did on 8 March 2021.

43 At the latter’s invitation, the Municipality of Ljubljana stated, in a letter of 7 April 2021, first, that the Law on certain concession agreements did not apply because the threshold for its application had not been reached, the estimated value of the concession being EUR 3 108 103 net of VAT. Furthermore, according to the municipality, it does not pay consideration directly for the operation of the concession. It confines itself, on the one hand, to waiving the rights to parking on the parking spaces to be used for the service at issue in the main proceedings, the amount of which is EUR 3 430 328 net of VAT and, on the other hand, to covering the costs of the regular maintenance of those spaces, up to an estimated value of EUR 84 375 net of VAT. Finally, according to the municipality, it has revenue in respect of the annual taxes for the parking spaces up to an estimated value of EUR 345 000 net of VAT, and taxes for the charging stations amounting to an estimated value of EUR 62 000 net of VAT. Secondly, according to the Municipality of Ljubljana, its objective is to create a rental and sharing service for electric vehicles and not to acquire goods. Thirdly, that municipality took the view that, having regard to the proposed risk allocation, the CPV code chosen, which concerns the rental of goods, might be misleading. According to the municipality, an electric vehicle sharing system goes beyond the mere rental of an electric vehicle and includes a complete service for the operation of the sharing system which is, in content and conceptually, broader than the mere rental of a vehicle.

44 As a preliminary point, the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (National Commission for the review of procedures for the award of public contracts) notes that, in the judgments of 8 June 2017, Medisanus (C-296/15, EU:C:2017:431, paragraphs 34 to 38), and of 10 September 2020, Tax-Fin-Lex (C-367/19, EU:C:2020:685), the Court of Justice recognised it as a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU. It adds that, where, as in the main proceedings, the application for review relates to the tender specifications, which cover, in addition to the tender specifications themselves, the documentation relating to the award of the contract or concession, it acts as a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State against whose decisions there is no judicial remedy under national law’ within the meaning of the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU.

45 In the present case, the jurisdiction of the referring court to resolve the dispute in the main proceedings depends on whether the future contractual relationship between the municipality and the economic operator may be classified as a ‘services concession’, within the meaning of Article 5(1)(b) of Directive 2014/23, or as a ‘public contract’, within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24.

46 From that point of view, the referring court considers that it is faced with three difficulties in interpreting EU law.

47 In the first place, the referring court raises the question of the detailed rules for determining the estimated value of a services concession. It notes, in that regard, that the Municipality of Ljubljana took the view that the private partner’s financial contribution amounts to EUR 14 570 000 net of VAT, whereas its own contribution amounts to EUR 36 000 net of VAT. According to the referring court, that estimate is, however, incorrect since, as is apparent from paragraph 43 of this judgment, the Municipality of Ljubljana accepted that its contribution will amount to EUR 3 108 103 net of VAT. The investment of that municipality therefore exceeds the thresholds laid down in Article 4(b) and (c) of Directive 2014/24, but not the threshold of EUR 5 350 000 set by Article 8(1) of Directive 2014/23.

48 The referring court submits that, that being so, since the estimated value of the private partner’s financial contribution is EUR 14 570 000 net of VAT, it is logical that the revenues of that partner, which seeks to make a profit with the implementation of the project, should amount to at least EUR 14 977 000 net of VAT, in order to cover all investments and the payment of the annual taxes for the parking spaces and the annual taxes for the charging stations. As the case may be, even if it were necessary to exclude from that calculation the investment of EUR 5 000 000 net of VAT in the existing fleet of electric vehicles, the contribution of the private partner would remain above the threshold of EUR 5 350 000 net of VAT.

49 In the second place, the referring court asks (i) whether the project at issue in the main proceedings is intended to provide the Municipality of Ljubljana with supplies or to entrust to its contractor the provision and management of services and (ii) whether the CPV code selected by the contracting authority in the contract or concession documentation may have an influence on the classification as a contract.

50 Since the future contractual relationship between the municipality and the economic operator appears to involve both elements of a public supply contract within the meaning of Article 2(1)(8) of Directive 2014/24 and elements of a services concession within the meaning of Article 5(1)(b) of Directive 2014/23, the referring court asks whether that future contractual relationship should not be classified as a ‘mixed contract’ within the meaning of the third subparagraph of Article 3(4) of Directive 2014/24.

51 In the third place, that court raises the question whether the Municipality of Ljubljana may require each of the partners to meet the condition of registration of activity 77.110 without infringing Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23 or Article 58(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the principles of proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination. The consequence of that requirement is, in particular, that a trader cannot commence its activity until it has enrolled with the Agencija Republike Slovenije za javnopravne evidence in storitve (Agency of the Republic of Slovenia responsible for the management of public registers and associated services) on the trade register of the Republic of Slovenia.

52 The referring court notes, in that regard, that, while Article 58(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24 allows the contracting authority to require economic operators to be enrolled in one of the professional and trade registers which are kept in the Member State of establishment, the concept of 'professional activity' does not appear in Directive 2014/23. That silence in Article 38(1) of that directive could just as easily be interpreted as a prohibition for the contracting authority to set a condition concerning professional activity as a tacit authorisation to include such a condition. Moreover, the latter interpretation appears to be supported by point 7(c) of Annex V to that directive and by point III.1.1 of Annex XXI to Implementing Regulation 2015/1986.

53 The referring court also observes that the Municipality of Ljubljana did not require that the condition of participation linked to 'professional activity' be satisfied by economic operators which are in a relationship of subordination, such as subcontractors, but only by economic operators which are in a relationship of coordination with other economic operators, in the same way as the members of a group of economic operators on the ground that they are bound by joint and several liability. However, according to the referring court, such a requirement is dissuasive for economic operators which are not registered to pursue activity 77.110 or the equivalent activities falling within NACE Rev. 2 nomenclature in Class 77.11, as provided for in Regulation No 1893/2006, but which wish to be associated with one or more other economic operators entitled to carry out that activity.

54 It is against that background that the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (National Commission for the review of procedures for the award of public contracts) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling, it being specified that the second to seventh questions are based on the premiss that Directive 2014/23 is applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings and that the eighth, tenth and eleventh questions are put only in the alternative, in the event that the Court should conclude that Directive 2014/24 is applicable:

'(1) Is Regulation [No 2195/2002] to be interpreted as meaning that the hire of passenger cars without a driver falls not within Group 601 of the Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV), but instead within Group 341 of the CPV, with the addition of code PA01-7 Hire, from the Supplementary Vocabulary, completing the description, which is unaffected by code PB04-7 Without driver from the Supplementary Vocabulary, the combination of the codes from Group 341 of the CPV with the code PA01-7 Hire from the Supplementary Vocabulary meaning that the hire of passenger cars without a driver should be considered a supply contract, not a service contract and, consequently, where the bulk of the investment from the economic operator in the execution of a project – one to create a public system for the hire and sharing of electric vehicles – consists in the supply of electric vehicles, and where that investment is even greater than the contracting authority's investment in the project, the "services" element referred to in Article 5(1)(b) of Directive [2014/23] is not fulfilled and, therefore, the contract for the execution of such a project is not a "services concession" within the meaning of Article 5(1)(b) of Directive [2014/23]?

(2) Is the concept of "the provision and management of services" in Article 5(1)(b) of Directive [2014/23] to be interpreted as meaning that:

(a) the concept of "the provision of services" in Article 5(1)(b) of Directive [2014/23] has the same meaning as the concept of "the provision of services" in Article 2(1)(9) of Directive [2014/24], such that the concept of "the provision of services" in Article 5(1)(b) of Directive [2014/23] means that, in the case of the creation of a public system for the hire and sharing of electric vehicles, the economic operator provides services ancillary to the hire and sharing of electric vehicles, and carries on activities which go beyond the hire and sharing of electric vehicles,

(b) the concept of "the management of services" in Article 5(1)(b) of Directive [2014/23] means that the economic operator exercises the "right to exploit the services", as mentioned further on in Article 5(1)(b) of Directive [2014/23], in order to generate revenue, and therefore the concept of "the management of services" in Article 5(1)(b) of Directive [2014/23] means that, in the case of the creation of a public system for the hire and sharing of electric vehicles, an economic operator, by reason of the provision of services falling within the scope of the hire and sharing of electric vehicles and activities going beyond the hire and sharing of electronic vehicles, has the right to charge users for the provision of the services and is not required to pay parking fees to the municipality or to bear the costs of regular maintenance of parking spaces, such that it is legitimate for it to generate revenue on that basis?

(3) Is the concept of the "total turnover of the concessionaire generated over the duration of the contract, net of VAT, as estimated by the contracting authority or the contracting entity, in consideration for the … services being the object of the concession", in the first subparagraph of Article 8(2) of Directive [2014/23], to be interpreted as meaning that the "total turnover of the concessionaire" also includes payments made to the concessionaire by users and that, consequently, such payments also constitute "consideration for the … services being the object of the concession"?

(4) Is Article 8(1) of Directive [2014/23] to be interpreted as meaning that Directive [2014/23] applies where the value of the investments or the value of the investments and costs borne by the economic operator in connection with a services concession, or borne by the economic operator and by the contracting authority in connection with a services concession (manifestly) exceeds EUR 5 350 000, excluding VAT?

(5) Is Article 38(1) of Directive [2014/23] to be interpreted as permitting a contracting authority to impose a condition of participation relating to professional activity, and to require economic operators to provide evidence of the fulfilment of that condition, including in accordance with [Implementing Regulation 2015/1986], which sets out, in Annex XXI, the concession notice (standard form 24), which contains a Section III.1.1. Suitability to pursue the professional activity, including requirements relating to enrolment on professional or trade registers?

(6) If [the fifth question] is answered in the affirmative, is Article 38(1) of Directive [2014/23], in the light of the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination mentioned in Article 3(1) of [that directive], to be interpreted as meaning that, in setting the condition of participation relating to professional activity, a contracting authority may use the national item NACE 77.110 for the description of the activity of Renting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles, which has the same meaning as in Regulation [No 1893/2006] in Annex I, NACE [Rev.] 2, Class 77.11 Renting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles?

(7) If [the fifth question] is answered in the affirmative, is Article 38(1) of Directive [2014/23], in particular in so far as it refers to the requirement of proportionality and in the light of the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination mentioned in Article 3(1) of [that directive], to be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may require that the condition of registration for the pursuit of the activity of renting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles is fulfilled by each of the partners?

(8) Is Article 2(1)(8) of Directive [2014/24] to be interpreted as meaning that it is a "public supply contract" when (in relation to the economic operator's investment) an essential part of the future contractual relationship between the municipality and the economic operator relates to the hire and sharing of electronic vehicles intended for users of a public electronic vehicle hire and sharing system, where the municipality does not invest directly in the implementation of the project for the creation of a public system for the hire and sharing of electronic vehicles by paying money to the economic operator, but instead invests indirectly, through the waiving of parking fees for a period of 20 years and through the provision of regular maintenance of parking spaces, and where the value of that investment exceeds, in aggregate, the value indicated in Article 4(b) or (c) of Directive [2014/24], and where the investment from the municipality is, however, (substantially) less than both the economic operator's investment as a whole in the project for the creation of a public system for the hire and sharing of electric vehicles, and the economic operator's investment in the part of the project which relates to electronic vehicles, notwithstanding that users will pay the economic operator for the use of the electronic vehicles and that the economic operator's success in generating revenue will depend on user demand, which will be indicative of the financial success of the public system for the hire and sharing of electronic vehicles, for which reason the economic operator bears the operating risk in the implementation of the project, which is a characteristic of a "services concession", within the meaning of Article 5(1)(b) of Directive [2014/23], rather than of a "public contract" within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive [2014/24]?

(9) Is the third subparagraph of Article 3(4) of Directive [2014/24] to be interpreted as constituting the legal basis for the application of the regime established by Directive [2014/24] for the purposes of the award of a future contract between the municipality and the economic operator for the project to create a public system for the hire and sharing of electric vehicles, inasmuch as that contract must be considered a mixed contract, containing elements of a public supply and service contract and of a services concession, given that the municipality's investment in the implementation of the project exceeds the threshold set in Article 4(c) of Directive [2014/24]?

(10) Are Article 58(1) and Article 58(2) of Directive [2014/24], in the light of the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination mentioned in Article 18(1) of Directive [2014/24], to be interpreted as meaning that, in setting a condition of participation relating to professional activity, a contracting authority may use the national item NACE 77.110 for the description of the activity of Renting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles, which has the same meaning as in Regulation 1893/2006, in Annex I, NACE Rev. 2, Class 77.11 Renting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles?

(11) Are Article 58(1) of Directive [2014/24], in particular in so far as it refers to the requirement of proportionality, and Article 58(2) of Directive [2014/24], in the light of the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination mentioned in Article 18(1) of Directive [2014/24], to be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may require the condition of registration for the pursuit of the activity of [r]enting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles to be fulfilled by each of the partners?'

Consideration of the questions referred

The first, second, eighth and ninth questions

55 By its first, second, eighth and ninth questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 5(1)(b) of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as meaning that an operation whereby a contracting authority intends to entrust the establishment and operation of a service consisting of the hire and sharing of electric vehicles to an economic operator whose financial contribution is mostly allocated for the purchase of those vehicles, and in which the revenue of that economic operator will derive essentially from the fees paid by the users of that service constitutes a 'services concession'.

56 By those questions, the referring court seeks clarification as to the distinction between the concepts of concession and public contract, since their respective scopes are likely to overlap. Moreover, that is one of the objectives pursued by Directive 2014/23, recital 18 of which states that it seeks to clarify the definition of concession.

57 In that regard, both the concept of 'public contract' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 and that of 'concession' within the meaning of Article 5(1)(b) of Directive 2014/23 are autonomous concepts of EU law and must, on that basis, be interpreted uniformly throughout the territory of the European Union. It follows that the legal classification given to a contract by the law of a Member State is irrelevant for the purpose of determining whether that contract falls within the scope of one or other of those directives and that the question of whether a contract is to be classified as a concession or a public contract must be assessed exclusively in the light of EU law (see, to that effect, judgments of 18 January 2007, Auroux and Others, C-220/05, EU:C:2007:31, paragraph 40; of 18 July 2007, Commission v Italy, C-382/05, EU:C:2007:445, paragraph 31; and of 10 November 2011, Norma-A and Dekom, C-348/10, EU:C:2011:721, paragraph 40).

58 Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 defines 'public contracts' as 'contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services'. In addition, Article 1(2) of that directive provides that 'procurement … is the acquisition by means of a public contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the works, supplies or services are intended for a public purpose'.

59 The concept of a 'services concession' is defined in Article 5(1)(b) of Directive 2014/23 as 'a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing by means of which one or more contracting authorities or contracting entities entrust the provision and the management of services other than the execution of works referred to in point (a) to one or more economic operators, the consideration of which consists either solely in the right to exploit the services that are the subject of the contract or in that right together with payment'. Consequently, and as stated in the second paragraph of that point, 'the award of a works or services concession shall involve the transfer to the concessionaire of an operating risk in exploiting those works or services encompassing demand or supply risk or both. The concessionaire shall be deemed to assume operating risk where, under normal operating conditions, it is not guaranteed to recoup the investments made or the costs incurred in operating the works or the services which are the subject matter of the concession. The part of the risk transferred to the concessionaire shall involve real exposure to the vagaries of the market, such that any potential estimated loss incurred by the concessionaire shall not be merely nominal or negligible'.

60 It follows from a comparison of those definitions that a services concession is distinguished from a public contract by the grant to the concessionaire of the right, possibly together with a price, to operate the services which are the subject matter of the concession, the concessionaire enjoying, in the framework of the contract which has been concluded, a certain economic freedom to determine the conditions for the operation of the services which are granted to it and assuming, at the same time, the risk associated with operating those services (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 July 2016, Promoimpresa and Others, C-458/14 and C-67/15, EU:C:2016:558, paragraph 46).

61 Therefore, as stipulated in Article 1(1) of Directive 2014/23, provided that the estimated value of a concession is not less than the threshold laid down in Article 8 of that directive, the mere transfer to the concessionaire of the risk linked to the operation of services is sufficient to constitute a services concession within the meaning of Article 5(1)(b) of that directive. In that regard, it is irrelevant that the financial contribution of the economic operator is not the same as that of the contracting authority.

62 In the present case, as is apparent from the order for reference, the Municipality of Ljubljana does not seek to protect the concessionaire against any risk of losses. It is true that that municipality stated (i) that it would not receive the sum corresponding to the parking fees for the parking spaces to be used for the hire and sharing service for electric vehicles and (ii) that it would bear the costs of regular maintenance of the parking spaces made available to the economic operator.

63 That said, it is apparent from the order for reference that the contribution of the contracting authority referred to in the preceding paragraph cannot eliminate the operating risk for the economic operator. It follows that the operator will be able to recoup the investments made and the costs incurred in operating the service at issue in the main proceedings only if it derives significant revenue from the payment of charges by the users of the service.

64 Moreover, the fact that the financial contribution of the economic operator is predominantly allocated to the purchase of electric vehicles cannot lead to the project of a public system for the hire and sharing of electric vehicles envisaged by the Municipality of Ljubljana being regarded as a 'mixed contract' within the meaning of Article 20 of Directive 2014/23.

65 It is true that Article 20(4) of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with Article 20(2) of that directive, provides that, in the case of mixed contracts containing elements of concessions and other elements, which are separable, falling within the scope of public contracts covered by Directive 2014/24, the mixed contract must be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Directive 2014/24. However, for Article 20(4) of Directive 2014/23 to apply, it is still necessary to establish the existence of a public contract within the meaning of Directive 2014/24.

66 As has been observed in paragraph 58 of the present judgment, it follows from Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/24 that a procurement procedure is intended to lead to 'the acquisition[,] by means of a public contract[,] of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting authorities'. Article 2(1)(8) of that directive defines 'public supply contracts' as 'public contracts having as their object the purchase, lease, rental or hire-purchase, with or without an option to buy, of products'.

67 It follows that a contracting authority which organises a public supply contract intends itself to benefit from the products which it has purchased, leased or rented.

68 However, that is not so in the present case. As is apparent from the order for reference, in the dispute in the main proceedings, the Municipality of Ljubljana does not wish to acquire electric vehicles for its benefit. On the contrary, that municipality intends to entrust an economic operator with the operation of a service enabling third parties to hire vehicles, without seeking to take over it itself or to hire vehicles for its own use. More broadly, as stated in the instructions referred to in paragraph 36 above, the objective of that system is to contribute to reducing the environmental damage caused by motor traffic and to promote the sustainable development of the Municipality of Ljubljana, in particular by adopting the concept of sustainable mobility. Furthermore, in so far as the electric vehicles appear to be inseparable from the services concession itself, it follows from Article 8(2) of Directive 2014/23 that those vehicles must be regarded as supplies linked to the services under concession.

69 In those circumstances, and subject to the checks to be carried out by the referring court, it does not appear possible to characterise the existence of a public supply contract, within the meaning of Article 2(1)(8) of Directive 2014/24.

70 Finally, it should be noted that the classification of a contract as a concession, within the meaning of Article 5(1) of Directive 2014/23, or as a public contract, within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24, cannot result from the contracting authority's choice of the CPV codes mentioned in the contract or concession documentation, in particular in Annex V to those two directives. The obligation to use CPV codes under Regulation No 2195/2002 is merely a consequence of the applicability of Directive 2014/23 or of Directive 2014/24, as is apparent from Article 27 of the former directive and Article 23 of the latter directive, respectively.

71 Consequently, it is only after establishing that a concession award procedure falls within the scope of Directive 2014/23 or that a procurement procedure falls within the scope of Directive 2014/24 that a contracting authority is required to identify the relevant CPV code or codes.

72 That being so, although they are intended to make it easier for economic operators to take cognisance of contract notices in their sector of activity, CPV codes represent only one of the elements of the description of the subject matter of the contract, especially since the classification provided by Regulation No 2195/2002 may prove incomplete or outdated, having regard in particular to technological progress.

73 Thus, as a matter of principle, the reference to an incorrect CPV code is of no consequence. The position would be different, however, if such an error were evidence of the contracting authority's intention to undermine the interests of one or more economic operators and, therefore, to distort competition. Such a situation would fall within the scope of the second subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Directive 2014/23.

74 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first, second, eighth and ninth questions is that Article 5(1)(b) of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as meaning that an operation whereby a contracting authority intends to entrust the establishment and operation of a service consisting of the hire and sharing of electric vehicles to an economic operator whose financial contribution is mostly allocated for the purchase of those vehicles, and in which the revenue of that economic operator will derive essentially from the fees paid by the users of that service constitutes a ‘services concession’, since such characteristics are such as to establish that the risk linked to the operation of the services under concession has been transferred to that economic operator.

The third and fourth questions

75 By its third and fourth questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 8 of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as meaning that, in order to determine whether the threshold for applicability of that directive is reached, the contracting authority must estimate the ‘total turnover of the concessionaire generated over the duration of the contract, net of VAT’, taking into account the fees which users will pay to the concessionaire, together with contributions and costs borne by the concessionaire and/or the contracting authority.

76 Under Article 8(1) and (2) thereof, that directive applies to concessions the value of which is equal to or greater than EUR 5 350 000, it being specified that the value of a concession is to be the total turnover of the concessionaire generated over the duration of the contract, net of VAT, as estimated by the contracting authority or the contracting entity, in consideration for the works and services being the object of the concession, as well as for the supplies incidental to such works and services.

77 Since turnover corresponds to the amount resulting from the sale of products and the provision of services, the ‘total turnover of the concessionaire generated over the duration of the contract, net of VAT’, within the meaning of Article 8(2) of Directive 2014/23, necessarily includes the fees paid to the concessionaire by users in consideration for the use of the services which were granted to it. Article 8(3)(b) of that directive also clearly provides that, ‘when calculating the estimated value of the concession, contracting authorities and contracting entities shall, where applicable, take into account in particular … revenue from the payment of fees and fines by the users of the works or services other than those collected on behalf of the contracting authority or contracting entity’.

78 Furthermore, it is apparent from Article 8(3)(c) of Directive 2014/23 that that calculation must also take into consideration ‘payments or any financial advantage in any form whatsoever made by the contracting authority … to the concessionaire’. Such payments or financial advantages reduce the investment required of the concessionaire.

79 Nevertheless, the ‘total turnover of the concessionaire generated over the duration of the contract, net of VAT’, is necessarily, as such, prospective and, by definition, uncertain.

80 Thus, the contracting authority may also take the view that the threshold laid down for the application of Directive 2014/23 is reached where the investments and costs to be borne by the concessionaire, alone or with the contracting authority, throughout the period of application of the concession contract manifestly exceed that threshold of applicability. The taking into account of those investments and of those costs indeed contributes to attributing an objective character to the estimate of the value of a concession which the contracting authority must make, as required by Article 8(3) of Directive 2014/23.

81 That interpretation is supported by Article 18(2) of Directive 2014/23. Under that provision, for concessions which, as in the case in the main proceedings, were provided for a period ‘lasting more than five years, the maximum duration of the concession shall not exceed the time that a concessionaire could reasonably be expected to take to recoup the investments made in operating the works or services together with a return on invested capital taking into account the investments required to achieve the specific contractual objectives. The investments taken into account for the purposes of the calculation shall include both initial investments and investments during the life of the concession’.

82 In addition, according to the last sentence of recital 52 of that directive, which clarifies the scope of the latter provision, contracting authorities ‘should always be able to award a concession for a period shorter than the time necessary to recoup the investments, provided [that compensation is provided for and] that the related compensation does not eliminate the operating risk’.

83 It follows that the concessionaire's contribution, namely the investment it has made, and the costs which it will have to bear throughout the period of application of the concession contract may be taken into consideration in order to calculate the estimated value of the concession.

84 It follows from the foregoing considerations that Article 8 of Directive 2014/23 must be interpreted as meaning that, in order to determine whether the threshold for applicability of that directive is reached, the contracting authority must estimate the 'total turnover of the concessionaire generated over the duration of the contract, net of VAT', taking into account the fees which users will pay to the concessionaire, together with contributions and costs borne by the contracting authority. However, the contracting authority may also take the view that the threshold laid down for the application of Directive 2014/23 is reached where the investments and costs to be borne by the concessionaire, alone or with the contracting authority, throughout the period of application of the concession contract manifestly exceed that threshold of applicability.

The fifth question

85 By its fifth question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with point 7(b) of Annex V to and recital 4 of that directive, and with Article 4 and point III.1.1 of Annex XXI to Implementing Regulation 2015/1986, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may require, as criteria for the selection and qualitative assessment of candidates, that economic operators be enrolled on a trade register or on a professional register.

86 It should be noted that, unlike Article 58(1) of Directive 2014/24, Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23 does not expressly provide that the contracting authority may impose, as a criterion for participation in a procedure for the award of a concession, selection criteria relating to suitability to pursue a professional activity.

87 The silence observed on that point by Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23 cannot, however, preclude the contracting authority from imposing, as a criterion for participation in a procedure for the award of a concession, selection criteria relating to suitability to pursue a professional activity.

88 First, the objective of flexibility and adaptability underlying that directive, which is recalled in recitals 1 and 8 thereof, makes it possible to adopt a broad interpretation of the concept of 'professional … ability', as referred to in Article 38(1) of that directive, and to consider that it includes the suitability to pursue a professional activity.

89 Secondly, Annex V to the same directive, which is entitled 'Information to be included in concession notices referred to in Article 31', provides, in point 7(b) thereof, that the contracting authority must, where appropriate, indicate, as a condition of participation, 'whether the provision of the service is reserved by law, regulation or administrative provision to a particular profession'. It must be inferred from that provision that, where the provision of a service is reserved to a particular profession, the contracting authority is entitled to require that the economic operator be enrolled on a trade register or on a professional register.

90 Thirdly, point III.1 of Annex XXI to Implementing Regulation 2015/1986 provides that, in respect of 'Legal, economic, financial and technical information', the contracting authority may impose a condition of participation based on the 'suitability to pursue the professional activity, including requirements relating to enrolment on professional or trade registers'.

91 Nevertheless, in accordance with the principle of mutual recognition, which is referred to in recital 4 of Directive 2014/23, an economic operator must be able to prove its suitability to carry out a concession by means of documents, such as proof of enrolment on one of the professional or trade registers, issued by the competent authorities of the Member State in which it is established. That principle therefore precludes a contracting authority from requiring, as a qualitative selection criterion, that an economic operator be enrolled on the trade or professional register in the Member State in which the concession is performed where that economic operator has already been enrolled on a similar register in the Member State in which it is established (see, by analogy, judgment of 20 May 2021, Riigi Tugiteenuste Keskus, C-6/20, EU:C:2021:402, paragraphs 49 and 55).

92 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the fifth question is that Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with point 7(b) of Annex V to and recital 4 of that directive, and with Article 4 and point III.1.1 of Annex XXI to Implementing Regulation 2015/1986, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may require, as criteria for the selection and qualitative assessment of candidates, that economic operators be enrolled on a trade register or on a professional register, provided that an economic operator can rely on being enrolled on a similar register in the Member State in which it is established.

The sixth question

93 By its sixth question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with Article 27 of that directive and Article 1 of Regulation No 2195/2002, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority, which requires economic operators to be enrolled on the trade register or the professional register of a Member State of the European Union, may refer not to the Common Procurement Vocabulary made up of CPV codes, but to the NACE Rev. 2 nomenclature, as established by Regulation No 1893/2006.

94 It should be noted that Article 27 of Directive 2014/23 provides that 'any references to nomenclatures in the context of the award of concessions shall be made using the "Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV)" as adopted by Regulation [No 2195/2002]'.

95 In addition, under Article 1 of Regulation No 2195/2002, 'a single classification system applicable to public procurement, known as the "Common Procurement Vocabulary" or "CPV" is hereby established'. In that regard, recitals 1 and 3 of that regulation state that 'the use of different classifications is detrimental to the openness and transparency of public procurement in Europe', so that 'there is a need to standardise, by means of a single classification system for public procurement, the references used by the contracting authorities and entities to describe the subject of contracts'.

96 It follows from the combination of the provisions referred to in paragraphs 94 and 95 above that the contracting authority is required to refer exclusively to the Common Procurement Vocabulary. Furthermore, it is apparent from Article 1(2) of Regulation No 1893/2006 that that regulation is to apply only to the use of the NACE Rev. 2 nomenclature for statistical purposes.

97 Consequently, the answer to the sixth question is that Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with Article 27 of that directive and Article 1 of Regulation No 2195/2002, must be interpreted as precluding a contracting authority, which requires economic operators to be enrolled on the trade register or the professional register of a Member State of the European Union, from referring not to the Common Procurement Vocabulary made up of CPV codes, but to the NACE Rev. 2 nomenclature, as established by Regulation No 1893/2006.

The seventh question

98 By its seventh question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 38(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with Article 26(2) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may, without infringing the principle of proportionality guaranteed by the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of that directive, require each of the members of a temporary business association to be enrolled, in a Member State, on the trade register or the professional register with a view to the pursuit of the activity of renting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles.

99 The first sentence of Article 38(2) of Directive 2014/23 provides for the right of an economic operator to rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which bind it to those entities, with a view to satisfying the conditions for participation relating both to professional and technical ability and to economic and financial standing set out in paragraph 1 of that provision (see, by analogy, in the field of public procurement, judgments of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraphs 29 and 33, and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 150). In addition, under the second sentence of that second paragraph, 'where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority or the contracting entity that it will have at its disposal, throughout the period of the concession, the necessary resources, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect'.

100 It is thus apparent that Article 38 of that directive gives an economic operator great latitude to associate itself with other entities which will, in particular, enable it to have at its disposal the abilities which it lacks. On that basis, that provision cannot be interpreted as requiring an economic operator to seek assistance only from entities each of which is capable of pursuing the same professional activity. By definition, an economic operator having recourse to the abilities of other entities seeks either to increase the abilities which it already has but, possibly, in insufficient quantity or quality, or to acquire abilities or skills which it lacks.

101 It would thus be disproportionate, particularly in the latter case, to require that all the members of a temporary business association be capable of pursuing the professional activity under concession. The principle of proportionality, which is guaranteed in particular in the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Directive 2014/23 and which is a general principle of EU law, requires that the rules laid down by the Member States or the contracting authorities in implementing the provisions of that directive not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of that directive (see, by analogy, in the field of public procurement, judgments of 16 December 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 48, and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 155).

102 From that point of view, the second subparagraph of Article 26(2) of Directive 2014/23 provides, inter alia, that, 'where necessary, contracting authorities or contracting entities may clarify in the concession documents how groups of economic operators shall meet the requirements as to economic and financial standing or technical and professional ability referred to in Article 38 provided that this is justified by objective reasons and is proportionate'.

103 However, in the present case, the request for a preliminary ruling contains no evidence to suggest that, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 26(2) of Directive 2014/23, it would be necessary and justified on objective and proportionate grounds to require each of the members of a temporary business association to be enrolled, in a Member State, on the trade register or the professional register with a view to the pursuit of the activity of renting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles.

104 In those circumstances, the answer to the seventh question is that Article 38(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/23, read in conjunction with Article 26(2) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may not, without infringing the principle of proportionality guaranteed by the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of that directive, require each of the members of a temporary business association to be enrolled, in a Member State, on the trade register or the professional register with a view to the pursuit of the activity of renting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles.

The tenth and eleventh questions

105 In view of the answer given to the first, second, eighth and ninth questions, there is no need to examine the tenth and eleventh questions.

Costs

106 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 5(1)(b) of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2019/1827 of 30 October 2019, must be interpreted as meaning that an operation whereby a contracting authority intends to entrust the establishment and operation of a service consisting of the hire and sharing of electric vehicles to an economic operator whose financial contribution is mostly allocated for the purchase of those vehicles, and in which the revenue of that economic operator will derive essentially from the fees paid by the users of that service constitutes a 'services concession', since such characteristics are such as to establish that the risk linked to the operation of the services under concession has been transferred to that economic operator.

2. Article 8 of Directive 2014/23, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2019/1827, must be interpreted as meaning that in order to determine whether the threshold for applicability of that directive is reached, the contracting authority must estimate the 'total turnover of the concessionaire generated over the duration of the contract, net of [value-added tax (VAT)]', taking into account the fees which users will pay to the concessionaire, together with contributions and costs borne by the contracting authority. However, the contracting authority may also take the view that the threshold laid down for the application of Directive 2014/23, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2019/1827, is reached where the investments and costs to be borne by the concessionaire, alone or with the contracting authority, throughout the period of application of the concession contract manifestly exceed that threshold of applicability.

3. Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2019/1827, read in conjunction with point 7(b) of Annex V to and recital 4 of that directive, and with Article 4 and point III.1.1 of Annex XXI to Commission Implementing Regulation (EU) 2015/1986 of 11 November 2015 establishing standard forms for the publication of notices in the field of public procurement and repealing Implementing Regulation (EU) No 842/2011, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may require, as criteria for the selection and qualitative assessment of candidates, that economic operators be enrolled on a trade register or on a professional register, provided that an economic operator can rely on being enrolled on a similar register in the Member State in which it is established.

4. Article 38(1) of Directive 2014/23, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2019/1827, read in conjunction with Article 27 of that directive and Article 1 of Regulation (EC) No 2195/2002 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 November 2002 on the Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV), must be interpreted as precluding a contracting authority, which requires economic operators to be enrolled on the trade register or the professional register of a Member State of the European Union, from referring not to the Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV) made up of CPV codes, but to the NACE Rev. 2 nomenclature, as established by Regulation (EC) No 1893/2006 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 20 December 2006 establishing the statistical classification of economic activities NACE Revision 2 and amending Council Regulation (EEC) No 3037/90 as well as certain EC Regulations on specific statistical domains.

5. Article 38(1) to (2) of Directive 2014/23, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2019/1827, read in conjunction with Article 26(2) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may not, without infringing the principle of proportionality guaranteed by the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of that directive, require each of the members of a temporary business association to be enrolled, in a Member State, on the trade register or the professional register with a view to the pursuit of the activity of renting and leasing of cars and light motor vehicles.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

15 September 2022 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement procedures – Directive 2014/24/EU – Point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) – Optional grounds for exclusion – Agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition – Directive 2014/25/EU – Article 36(1) – Principles of proportionality and equal treatment of tenderers – Article 80(1) – Use of exclusion grounds and selection criteria provided for under Directive 2014/24/EU – Tenderers which constitute an economic unit and have submitted separate tenders that were neither autonomous nor independent – Need for sufficiently plausible indications to establish an infringement of Article 101 TFEU)

In Case C-416/21,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Bayerisches Oberstes Landesgericht (Bavarian Highest Regional Court, Germany), made by decision of 24 June 2021, received at the Court on 7 July 2021, in the proceedings

Landkreis Aichach-Friedberg,

– the European Commission, by P. Ondrůšek and G. Wils, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 18(1) and Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2365 of 18 December 2017 (OJ 2017 L 337, p. 19) (‘Directive 2014/24’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the Landkreis Aichach-Friedberg (District of Aichach-Friedberg, Germany), on the one hand, and J. Sch. Omnibusunternehmen (‘J’) and K. Reisen GmbH, on the other, concerning the award by that district of a public contract for public transport bus services.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 93/37/EEC

3 The first paragraph of Article 24 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) contained a list of the optional grounds for exclusion of any contractor from participation in a procurement procedure.

Directive 2014/24

4 The first paragraph of recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 reads as follows:

‘Contracting authorities should further be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable, for instance because of violations of environmental or social obligations, including rules on accessibility for disabled persons or other forms of grave professional misconduct, such as violations of competition rules or of intellectual property rights. …’

5 Point 10 of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/24 provides that, for the purposes of that directive, ‘economic operator’ means any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities, including any temporary association of undertakings, which offers the execution of works and/or a work, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market.

6 According to Article 4(c) of Directive 2014/24, that directive applies to procurements with a value net of value added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than EUR 221 000, inter alia, for public supply and service contracts awarded by sub-central contracting authorities and design contests organised by such authorities.

7 Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.'

8 Article 57 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Exclusion grounds', provides:

'…

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(d) where the contracting authority has sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has entered into agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition;

(e) where a conflict of interest within the meaning of Article 24 cannot be effectively remedied by other less intrusive measures;

(f) where a distortion of competition from the prior involvement of the economic operators in the preparation of the procurement procedure, as referred to in Article 41, cannot be remedied by other, less intrusive measures;

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. …'

Directive 2014/25/EU

9 Article 11 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2364 of 18 December 2017 (OJ 2017 L 337, p. 17) ('Directive 2014/25'), provides:

'This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.'

10 Article 15(a) of Directive 2014/25 provides:

'Save where they are ruled out by the exclusions in Articles 18 to 23 or pursuant to Article 34, concerning the pursuit of the activity in question, this Directive shall apply to procurements with a value net of [VAT] estimated to be equal to or greater than the following thresholds:

(a) EUR 443 000 for supply and service contracts as well as for design contests’.

11 Article 36(1) of that directive is worded as follows:

‘Contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

12 Under the heading ‘Use of exclusion grounds and selection criteria provided for under Directive [2014/24]’, Article 80 of Directive 2014/25 states, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘The objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of economic operators requesting qualification in a qualification system and the objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of candidates and tenderers in open, restricted or negotiated procedures, in competitive dialogues or in innovation partnerships may include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57 of Directive [2014/24] on the terms and conditions set out therein.

If so required by Member States, those criteria and rules shall, in addition, include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(4) of Directive [2014/24] on the terms and conditions set out in that Article.’

German law

13 Paragraph 1 of the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law against restrictions on competition) of 26 June 2013 (BGBl. 2013 I, p. 1750), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings (‘the GWB’), provides:

‘All agreements between undertakings, decisions by associations of undertakings and concerted practices between undertakings which have as their object or effect the prevention, restriction or distortion of competition are prohibited.’

14 Paragraph 124(1) of the GWB, which transposes Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 into German law, provides, in point 4 thereof:

‘Contracting authorities may, acting with due regard for the principle of proportionality, exclude an undertaking from participation in a public procurement procedure at any time during that procedure where:

4. the contracting authority has sufficient indications to support the conclusion that the undertaking has concluded with other undertakings agreements or arrangements having the object or effect of impeding, restricting or distorting competition;

…’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

15 On 19 December 2019, the District of Aichach-Friedberg published a contract notice for the award, by open procedure, of a public contract for public transport bus services, the estimated value of which exceeds the threshold laid down in Article 4(c) of Directive 2014/24.

16 J is a trader operating under his company name and K. Reisen is a bus transport company with limited liability of which J is the managing director and sole shareholder.

17 On 27 February 2020, both J and K. Reisen submitted tenders relating to the contract notice through the same person, namely J. Insolvency proceedings were opened in respect of the assets of J on 1 November 2019 and, by decision of 1 December 2019, the insolvency administrator released from the insolvency proceedings the self-employed activity of J. In his tender, J declared that insolvency proceedings had neither been applied for nor opened in respect of his undertaking.

18 On 2 April 2020, J and K. Reisen were informed, first, that their tenders had been excluded for breach of competition rules in so far as they had been prepared by the same person, and, second, that the contract in question would be awarded to E. Gmbh & Co. KG.

19 After unsuccessfully lodging a complaint, J and K. Reisen brought an action before the Vergabekammer Südbayern (Public Procurement Board, Southern Bavaria, Germany). By decision of 12 January 2021, the latter upheld that action and ordered the District of Aichach-Friedberg to reinstate the tenders submitted by those tenderers in the procedure for the award of the contract in question. In particular, according to that board, having regard to the judgment of 17 May 2018, Specializuotas transportas (C-531/16, EU:C:2018:324), the conduct of J and K. Reisen does not fall within Article 101 TFEU since they constitute an economic unit.

20 The District of Aichach-Friedberg brought an appeal against that decision before the Bayerisches Oberstes Landesgericht (Bavarian Highest Regional Court, Germany). According to that district, allowing two tenderers that constitute an economic unit to participate in the procurement procedure is not compatible with the interests of the other tenderers and infringes the principle of equal treatment as well as competition rules, in particular in so far as those tenderers are in a position to concert their respective tenders.

21 J and K. Reisen consider that, in the light of the judgment of 17 May 2018, Specializuotas transportas (C-531/16, EU:C:2018:324), the exclusion of a tenderer on the ground of infringement of the competition rules is possible only if the situation concerned falls within Article 101 TFEU. Furthermore, they submit that the exhaustive nature of the grounds for exclusion provided for in Directive 2014/24 precludes recourse to the principle of equal treatment of tenderers.

22 In that regard, the referring court states that J and K. Reisen constitute an economic unit within the meaning of the case-law of the Court on Article 101 TFEU. That court asks whether point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be understood as requiring, for the application of the optional ground for exclusion provided for therein, that the contracting authority have sufficiently plausible indications of an infringement of Article 101 TFEU. It considers that that question should be answered in the affirmative, since an exclusion under that provision of Directive 2014/24 presupposes an infringement of a rule of competition law. In its view, such an infringement cannot be envisaged where the undertakings concerned constitute an economic unit and may therefore rely on ‘group privilege’.

23 Furthermore, the referring court asks whether the listing of optional grounds for exclusion in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 precludes reliance on the principle of equal treatment in order to justify the failure to take into account tenders submitted by two tenderers constituting an economic unit.

24 Specifically, it should be stated whether the case-law stemming from the judgment of 16 December 2008, Michaniki (C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 44 et seq.) is capable of being applied to Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24. In that regard, the referring court considers that, irrespective of the differences between the list of the optional grounds for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 and those that are set out in earlier directives relating to public procurement, the principle of equal treatment continues to preclude taking into account tenders that are neither autonomous nor independent submitted by related undertakings.

25 Lastly, it is necessary to determine whether the Court’s case-law on tenders which are neither autonomous nor independent submitted by related tenderers (judgment of 17 May 2018, Specializuotas transportas, C-531/16, EU:C:2018:324), is applicable to the tenders submitted by tenderers that constitute an economic unit. The referring court considers that, in the light of that judgment, the principle of equal treatment precludes, a fortiori, a contract from being awarded to tenderers that constitute an economic unit and are unable to submit autonomous or independent tenders.

26 In those circumstances, the Bayerisches Oberstes Landesgericht (Bavarian Highest Regional Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Is [point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4)] of [Directive 2014/24] to be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority must have sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has infringed Article 101 TFEU?

[If the answer is in the affirmative:]

(2) Is Article 57(4) of [Directive 2014/24] to be interpreted as exhaustively regulating the optional grounds for exclusion in the sense that the principle of equal treatment (Article 18(1) of that directive) cannot preclude the award of a contract where tenders are submitted that are neither independent nor autonomous?

(3) Is Article 18(1) of [Directive 2014/24] to be interpreted as precluding the award of a contract to undertakings which constitute an economic unit and have each submitted a tender?’

Consideration of the questions referred

Preliminary observations

27 By its questions, the referring court seeks an interpretation of Article 18(1) and point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract for public transport bus services.

28 It must be recalled in that regard that, in accordance with settled case-law, in the context of the cooperation procedure between the national courts and the Court of Justice established in Article 267 TFEU, it is for the Court to provide the national court with an answer which will be of use to it and enable it to decide the case before it. With that in mind, it is for the Court, where appropriate, to reformulate the questions submitted to it. In addition, the Court may be prompted to consider rules of EU law to which the national court has not referred in the wording of its questions (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 May 2020, T-Systems Magyarország, C-263/19, EU:C:2020:373, paragraph 45 and the case-law cited).

29 In the present case, the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by bus is expressly referred to in Article 11 of Directive 2014/25 among the fields to which that directive applies. Accordingly, in so far as, by the public contract at issue in the main proceedings, the contracting entity seeks such provision or operation of networks, and that contract exceeds the threshold referred to in Article 15(a) of that directive – which it is for the referring court to ascertain – it must be considered that, in view of its subject matter, that contract falls within the scope of that directive.

30 In that regard, taking into account the provisions cited by the referring court in its request for a preliminary ruling, it should be noted, first, that the Court must interpret Article 36(1) of Directive 2014/25, according to which contracting entities are to treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and are to act in a transparent and proportionate manner, and which corresponds, in essence, to the provisions of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24.

31 Second, as regards the optional grounds for exclusion, Directive 2014/25 does not contain any rules of its own but refers in that regard to Directive 2014/24.

32 In particular, the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25 provides that, if Member States so request, the objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of candidates and tenderers, inter alia in open, restricted or negotiated procedures, are to include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 ‘on the terms and conditions set out in that Article’.

33 It should be noted that the words ‘on the terms and conditions set out in that Article’ refer to the terms and conditions mentioned in that Article 57(4) (see, by analogy, judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 33).

34 Consequently, should the investigations carried out by the referring court show that Directive 2014/25 applies to the procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings, in order to provide an answer to the questions referred that will be of use the Court must interpret Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 and, in particular, point (d) of the first subparagraph of that provision, to which the request for a preliminary ruling specifically refers, since the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25 allows Member States to make Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 applicable in such procedures.

35 In those circumstances, it must be considered that, by its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25, must be interpreted as meaning that the optional ground for exclusion provided for in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) covers only cases where there are sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that economic operators have infringed Article 101 TFEU.

36 It is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that the referring court’s questions as to the scope of the optional ground for exclusion provided for in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 are based on the fact that point 4 of Paragraph 124(1) of the GWB, which transposes point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) into German law, reproduces the wording of the prohibition of agreements restricting competition in Paragraph 1 of the GWB, which, in essence, reproduces Article 101 TFEU in German law. The referring court recalls that it is apparent from the case-law of the Court (judgment of 17 May 2018, Specializuotas transportas, C-531/16, EU:C:2018:324, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited), that that article does not apply where the agreements it prohibits are carried out by undertakings which, as in the present case, constitute an economic unit.

37 First of all, it must be recalled that, in accordance with point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude any economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure where the contracting authority has sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has entered into agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition.

38 That provision covers, in general terms, ‘agreements [entered into] with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition’. Its wording does not mention Article 101 TFEU and, in particular, unlike the latter, does not include the requirement that those agreements be concluded ‘between undertakings’, within the meaning of that provision, and ‘may affect trade between Member States’.

39 It follows that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 covers cases in which economic operators enter into any anticompetitive agreement and cannot be limited solely to the agreements between undertakings referred to in Article 101 TFEU.

40 Next, the objective underlying point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 confirms that interpretation.

41 The Court has held that the option, or even the obligation, for the contracting authority to exclude an economic operator from participating in a procurement procedure is intended in particular to enable it to assess the integrity and reliability of each of the economic operators. In particular, the optional ground for exclusion mentioned in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 101 of that directive, is based on an essential element of the relationship between the successful tenderer in question and the contracting authority, namely the reliability of the successful tenderer, on which the contracting authority's trust is founded (see, to that effect, judgment of 30 January 2020, Tim, C-395/18, EU:C:2020:58, paragraph 41).

42 Accordingly, point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 is intended to enable contracting authorities to assess and take into account the integrity and reliability of each of the economic operators, so that they may exclude from procurement procedures unreliable tenderers with whom they cannot maintain a relationship of trust in order to complete the supply of the services concerned when performing the contract in question.

43 Such an objective appears to be different from that referred to in Article 101 TFEU. The latter is intended to punish anticompetitive behaviour on the part of undertakings and to deter them from engaging in such conduct (judgment of 6 October 2021, Sumal, C-882/19, EU:C:2021:800, paragraph 37).

44 The objective of point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 therefore leads to a broad interpretation of that provision to the effect that, inter alia, agreements between economic operators which do not affect trade between Member States are to be taken into account by the contracting authorities in connection with the optional ground for exclusion provided for therein.

45 Lastly, as regards the context of that provision, it should be noted that, in connection with the optional ground for exclusion provided for in point (c) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, the concept of 'professional misconduct', which covers all wrongful conduct which has an impact on the credibility, integrity or professional reliability of the economic operator in question, must be interpreted broadly (see, to that effect, order of 4 June 2019, Consorzio Nazionale Servizi, C-425/18, EU:C:2019:476, paragraphs 29 and 30).

46 In those circumstances, since, as is apparent from recital 101 of Directive 2014/24, the infringement of the competition rules may, in the light of the objective of Article 57(4) of that directive set out in paragraph 39 above, be regarded as a type of grave professional misconduct, it would be inconsistent to give the concept of 'agreements', provided for in point (d) of the first subparagraph of that provision, a narrow interpretation that would be limited solely to the agreements between undertakings referred to in Article 101 TFEU.

47 That is all the more so since the concept of 'economic operator', defined in point 10 of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/24, does not refer to the concept of 'undertaking' within the meaning of Article 101 TFEU.

48 Consequently, it must be concluded that, although the existence of an agreement within the meaning of Article 101 TFEU must be regarded as falling within the optional ground for exclusion set out in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, the fact remains that the latter provision has a broader scope, which also covers economic operators which have entered into anticompetitive agreements that do not fall within Article 101 TFEU. Therefore, the mere fact that such an agreement between two economic operators does not fall within that article does not prevent it from being covered by that optional ground of exclusion.

49 However, in order to give an answer that will be of use to the referring court, the Court emphasises that that provision of Directive 2014/24 covers the case where there is sufficient evidence to enable the contracting authority to consider that two or more economic operators have entered into an agreement aimed at distorting competition, which necessarily presupposes that there is a common intention on the part of at least two different economic operators.

50 In the present case, it should be noted, as the European Commission states, that in a case such as that at issue in the main proceedings, it cannot be considered that two economic operators who, in substance, pass through the same natural person to take their decisions, may enter into 'agreements' between them, in so far as there do not appear to be two separate intentions that are capable of converging. It is, however, for the referring court to determine whether, having regard to the link between J and K. Reisen, it is possible for them to enter into such agreements aimed at distorting competition. If that is not the case, the optional ground for exclusion provided for in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 cannot apply to their situation.

51 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25, must be interpreted as meaning that the optional ground for exclusion provided for in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) covers cases where there are sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that economic operators have entered into an agreement prohibited by Article 101 TFEU, but is not limited solely to the agreements provided for in that article.

The second and third questions

52 By its second and third questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25, must be interpreted as meaning that Article 57(4) exhaustively regulates the optional grounds for exclusion, which prevents the principle of equal treatment, provided for in Article 36(1) of Directive 2014/25, from precluding the award of the contract in question to economic operators which constitute a separate economic unit and whose tenders, although submitted separately, are neither autonomous nor independent.

53 In the analogous context of Directive 93/37, the Court held that the first paragraph of Article 24 of that directive, which, like Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, contained a list of the optional grounds for exclusion, must be read as listing exhaustively the grounds capable of justifying the exclusion of a contractor from participation in a procurement procedure for reasons based on objective factors that relate to its professional qualities. That provision therefore precludes Member States or contracting authorities from adding to the list contained in that provision other grounds for exclusion based on criteria relating to professional qualities (judgment of 16 December 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 43).

54 Likewise, Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 lists exhaustively the optional grounds for exclusion capable of justifying the exclusion of an economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure for reasons based on objective factors relating to its professional qualities, to a conflict of interest or to a distortion of competition that would arise from its involvement in the preparation of that procedure.

55 In that regard, the fact, raised by the referring court, that that provision now includes a greater number of optional grounds for exclusion than the earlier EU directives on the award of public contracts has no bearing on whether the list provided for in that provision is exhaustive.

56 In the light of the nature of the grounds for exclusion set out in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, it must be held that the EU legislature adopted the same approach with regard to the various grounds for exclusion set out in the successive EU directives on the award of public contracts, which is, as the Court held in paragraph 42 of the judgment of 16 December 2008, Michaniki (C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731), to adopt only grounds for exclusion based on the objective finding of facts or conduct specific to the contractor concerned, such as to discredit its professional reputation or call into question its economic or financial ability to complete the works covered by the public contract for which it is tendering, or, as regards contracts covered by Directive 2014/24, to create a situation which, in connection with the procurement procedure in question, qualifies as a conflict of interest or a distortion of competition, which are covered, respectively, in points (e) and (f) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of that directive.

57 However, the fact that the optional grounds for exclusion set out in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, to which the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25 refers, are listed exhaustively does not prevent the principle of equal treatment, provided for in Article 36(1) of that directive, from precluding the award of the contract in question to economic operators which constitute an economic unit and whose tenders, although submitted separately, are neither autonomous nor independent.

58 Such an exhaustive list does not preclude the option for Member States to maintain or adopt substantive rules designed, in particular, to ensure, as regards public contracts, observance of the principle of equal treatment and of the principle of transparency entailed by the latter, principles which are binding on contracting entities in any procedure for the award of a public contract and which constitute the basis of the EU directives on procedures for the award of public contracts, provided that the principle of proportionality is observed (see, by analogy, judgments of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 21, and of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 30).

59 In particular, in the case of related tenderers, the principle of equal treatment provided for in Article 36(1) of Directive 2014/25 would be infringed if those tenderers were allowed submit coordinated or concerted tenders, that is to say, tenders that are neither autonomous nor independent, which would be likely to give them unjustified advantages in relation to the other tenderers (see, by analogy, judgment of 17 May 2018, Specializuotas transportas, C-531/16, EU:C:2018:324, paragraph 29).

60 In that context, observance of the principle of proportionality requires the contracting authority to examine and assess the facts, in order to determine whether the relationship between two entities has actually influenced the respective content of the tenders submitted in the same tendering procedure, a finding of such influence, in any form, being sufficient for those undertakings to be excluded from the procedure (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 32, and of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 38).

61 The finding that the links between tenderers had a bearing on the content of the tenders they submitted during the same procedure suffices for those tenders not to be taken into consideration by the contracting authority, as tenders by related undertakings must be submitted completely autonomously and independently (see, to that effect, judgment of 17 May 2018, Specializuotas transportas, C-531/16, EU:C:2018:324, paragraph 38).

62 Those considerations apply a fortiori to the situation of tenderers which are not merely related but which constitute an economic unit.

63 Accordingly, should the referring court reach the conclusion, following the necessary checks and assessments, that the tenders at issue in the main proceedings were not submitted autonomously and independently, Article 36(1) of Directive 2014/25 precludes the award of the contract at issue to tenderers that have submitted such tenders.

64 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second and third questions is that Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25, must be interpreted as meaning that Article 57(4) exhaustively regulates the optional grounds for exclusion capable of justifying the exclusion of an economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure for reasons based on objective factors relating to its professional qualities, to a conflict of interest or to a distortion of competition that would arise from its involvement in that procedure. However, Article 57(4) does not prevent the principle of equal treatment, provided for in Article 36(1) of Directive 2014/25, from precluding the award of the contract in question to economic operators which constitute an economic unit and whose tenders, although submitted separately, are neither autonomous nor independent.

Costs

65 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action brought before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2365 of 18 December 2017, read in conjunction with the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014

on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2364 of 18 December 2017, must be interpreted as meaning that the optional ground for exclusion provided for in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 57(4) covers cases where there are sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that economic operators have entered into an agreement prohibited by Article 101 TFEU, but is not limited solely to the agreements provided for in that article.

2. Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2017/2365, read in conjunction with the third subparagraph of Article 80(1) of Directive 2014/25, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2017/2364, must be interpreted as meaning that Article 57(4) exhaustively regulates the optional grounds for exclusion capable of justifying the exclusion of an economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure for reasons based on objective factors relating to its professional qualities, to a conflict of interest or to a distortion of competition that would arise from its involvement in that procedure. However, Article 57(4) does not prevent the principle of equal treatment, provided for in Article 36(1) of Directive 2014/25, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2017/2364, from precluding the award of the contract in question to economic operators which constitute an economic unit and whose tenders, although submitted separately, are neither autonomous nor independent.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Third Chamber)

26 January 2023 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Article 267 TFEU – Definition of 'court or tribunal of a Member State' – Criteria – Independence and compulsory nature of the jurisdiction of the national body concerned – Stability of the members of that body – Directive 2014/24/EU – Public procurement procedures – Article 58 – Selection criteria – Possibility of including, amongst those criteria, obligations under special laws applicable to the activities connected with the contract in question and not set out as a criterion for selection in the procurement documents – Article 63(1) – Tenderer relying on the capacities of another entity in order to meet the requirements of the contracting authority – Not possible to require recourse to subcontracting)

In Case C-403/21,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes, Romania), made by decision of 22 June 2021, received at the Court on 29 June 2021, in the proceedings

SC NV Construct SRL

v

Județul Timiș

intervening party:

SC Proiect – Construct Regiunea Transilvania SRL,

THE COURT (Third Chamber), composed of K. Jürimäe, President of the Chamber, M. Safjan, N. Piçarra, N. Jääskinen and M. Gavalec (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– the Czech Government, by M. Smolek and J. Vláčil, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by P. Ondrůšek, E.A. Stamate and G. Wils, acting as Agents,

having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 58 and 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), and the principles of proportionality, liability and transparency.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between SC NV Construct SRL and Judeţul Timiş (District of Timiș, Romania) concerning the public procurement of a feasibility study for the construction of a road.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 89/665/EEC

3 Headed ‘Requirements for review procedures’, Article 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31; ‘Directive 89/665’), provides in paragraph 9:

‘Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article [267 TFEU] and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

The members of such an independent body shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office, and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.’

4 Entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 provides in paragraph 1:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

5 Article 42 of that directive relates to ‘technical specifications’.

6 Entitled ‘Selection criteria’, Article 58 of that directive states:

‘1. Selection criteria may relate to:

(a) suitability to pursue the professional activity;

(b) economic and financial standing;

(c) technical and professional ability.

Contracting authorities may only impose criteria referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 on economic operators as requirements for participation. They shall limit any requirements to those that are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. All requirements shall be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

2. With regard to suitability to pursue the professional activity, contracting authorities may require economic operators to be enrolled in one of the professional or trade registers kept in their Member State of establishment, as described in Annex XI, or to comply with any other request set out in that Annex.

In procurement procedures for services, in so far as economic operators have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in order to be able to perform in their country of origin the service concerned, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.

4. With regard to technical and professional ability, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary human and technical resources and experience to perform the contract to an appropriate quality standard.

Contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a sufficient level of experience demonstrated by suitable references from contracts performed in the past. …

5. Contracting authorities shall indicate the required conditions of participation which may be expressed as minimum levels of ability, together with the appropriate means of proof, in the contract notice or in the invitation to confirm interest.'

7 Entitled 'Reliance on the capacities of other entities', Article 63 of that directive provides in paragraph 1:

'With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. With regard to criteria relating to the educational and professional qualifications as set out in point (f) of Annex XII Part II, or to the relevant professional experience, economic operators may however only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required. Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

The contracting authority shall, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify whether the entities on whose capacity the economic operator intends to rely fulfil the relevant selection criteria and whether there are grounds for exclusion pursuant to Article 57. The contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces an entity which does not meet a relevant selection criterion, or in respect of which there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by the Member State to require that the economic operator substitutes an entity in respect of which there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.

Where an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities with regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing, the contracting authority may require that the economic operator and those entities be jointly liable for the execution of the contract.

Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 19(2) may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.'

8 Entitled 'Contract award criteria', Article 67 of Directive 2014/24 provides in paragraph 3:

‘Award criteria shall be considered to be linked to the subject matter of the public contract where they relate to the works, supplies or services to be provided under that contract in any respect and at any stage of their life cycle, including factors involved in:

(a) the specific process of production, provision or trading of those works, supplies or services; or

(b) a specific process for another stage of their life cycle, even where such factors do not form part of their material substance.’

9 Entitled ‘Conditions for performance of contracts’, Article 70 of that directive states:

‘Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that they are linked to the subject matter of the contract within the meaning of Article 67(3) and indicated in the call for competition or in the procurement documents. Those conditions may include economic, innovation-related, environmental, social or employment-related considerations.’

10 The Legea nr. 101/2016 privind remediile și căile de atac în materie de atribuire a contractelor de achiziție publică, a contractelor sectoriale și a contractelor de concesiune de lucrări și concesiune de servicii, precum și pentru organizarea și funcționarea Consiliului Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (Law No 101/2016 on remedies and appeals relating to the award of public contracts, sectoral contracts and work concession and service concession contracts, as well as the organisation and functioning of the National Council for the Resolution of Disputes), of 19 May 2016 (Monitorul Oficial al României, Part I, No 393 of 23 May 2016), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings (‘Law No 101/2016’), provides in Article 2(1):

‘Any person who considers that one of his or her rights or legitimate interests has been breached by an act of an contracting authority or by a failure to rule on a claim within the period prescribed by law may seek the annulment of that act, an injunction that the contracting authority issue an act or take remedial measures, or the recognition of the right or legitimate interest claimed, by means of administrative and judicial or court action.’

11 Under Article 4(1) of that law:

‘For the resolution of the dispute, the person making the claim may pursue it:

(a) through administration and judicial proceedings, before the National Council for the Resolution of Disputes; or

(b) though legal proceedings, before a court.’

12 Article 15(1) of that law provides:

‘Proceedings for the resolution of disputes shall comply with the principles of legality, expedition, adversarial proceedings, guarantees of the rights of the defence, impartiality and independence of the administrative and judicial activity.’

13 Under Article 28(1) of that law:

‘The decision of the Council shall be binding on the parties to the case.’

14 Article 37 of Law No 101/2016 provides:

‘1. The National Council for the Resolution of Disputes … is an independent tribunal with administrative and judicial functions.

3. In the context of its functions, the Council shall be subject only to the law, and hearings of the full formation of the Council are legally constituted when the majority of its members are present.

4. As regards its decisions, the Council is independent and is not subordinate to any authority or public institution.’

15 Article 44(4) of that law provides:

‘In the exercise of its jurisdiction, the Council shall comply with the principles of independence and stability of its members.’

16 Article 45 of that law provides:

‘1. Members of the Council shall be selected on the basis of a competition, and are appointed by decision of the Prime Minister under the conditions provided for by law.

2. Members of the Council are selected on the basis of their professional suitability and good character. The candidates must have [undertaken] university studies, 10 years’ professional experience in a legal, economic or technical field and at least 3 years in the field of public procurement.

4. The President of the Council shall submit to the Prime Minister the proposals for appointment of Members of the Council, for candidates who have been declared to be admitted to the competition.’

17 Article 47(1) to (3) of that law provides:

‘1. It is prohibited for Members of the Council:

(a) to undertake commercial activities, directly or through intermediaries;

(b) to be associates or members of the management, administration or controlling bodies of private companies, companies governed by the Legea societăților nr. 31/1990 [Law No 31/1990 on companies], republished, as amended and supplemented, including of banks or other credit institutions, insurance or financial companies, national companies, or autonomous corporations;

(c) to be members of an economic interest grouping;

(d) to be members of a political party and carry out political activities or participate in such activities;

(e) to exercise any public or private function/activity, with the exception of higher education teaching or literary/artistic creation;

(f) to exercise any other professional or council activity.

2. Members of the Council shall be required to make declarations of their assets and interests …

3. Members of the Council are not permitted to participate in the resolution of a dispute if they are in one of the situations provided for below, on pain of the invalidity of the decision delivered:

(a) where those members, their spouse, their ascendants or their descendants have an interest in the outcome of the dispute, or where they are spouses, parents or associates to the fourth degree inclusive of one of the parties;

(b) where there has been a criminal procedure between them and one of the parties within the five years preceding the resolution of the case;

(c) where they have made public statements on the issue on which they are ruling;

(d) where they have received from one of the parties material goods or promises of material goods or other advantages.'

18 Article 48a of Law No 101/2016 provides:

'1. Findings of misconduct committed by the members of the Council shall fall within the remit of the Disciplinary Committee that shall be created within the Council.

2. The Disciplinary Committee shall be composed of three members, of which one shall be nominated by the President of the Council, one shall be elected by the members of the Council by simple majority, and one is a representative of the National Agency of Public Officials.

3. On a proposal of the Disciplinary Committee, disciplinary sanctions shall be applied by the President of the Council, except for the sanction of removal from public office, which is applied by the person who has legal competence to make appointments to that office.'

The Rules of Procedure of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes, Romania)

19 Article 39(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) sets out the disciplinary sanctions that may be imposed where an official is guilty of misconduct, under, in particular, the Ordonanța de urgență a Guvernului nr. 57/2019 privind Codul administrativ (Emergency government order No 57/2019 on the Administrative code) of 3 July 2019 (Monitorul Oficial al României, Part I, No 555 of 5 July 2019; 'the Administrative code').

The Administrative code

20 Article 492 of the Administrative code, entitled 'Administrative disciplinary liability', provides:

'1. Culpable breach, by public officials, of the duties of a public office which they hold and of the rules of civil and professional conduct laid down by law shall constitute misconduct and give rise to their administrative disciplinary liability.

2. The following constitute misconduct:

(a) systematic lateness in carrying out tasks;

(b) repeated negligence in carrying out tasks;

(c) unjustified absence from work;

(d) non-compliance with working hours;

(e) interventions or insistence on dealing with claims outside the legal framework;

(f) failure to observe professional secrecy or confidentiality of work of that nature;

(g) statements that harm the reputation of the authority or public institution in which the public official carries out his or her duties;

(h) conduct of political activities during working hours;

(i) unjustified refusal to carry out professional tasks;

(j) unjustified refusal to be subject to work-related medical checks or examinations following the recommendations of a occupational health doctor, in accordance with provisions of law;

(k) breach of provisions relating to duties and prohibitions laid down by law for public officials other than those relating to conflicts of interest and incompatibilities;

(l) breach of provisions relating to incompatibilities where the public official fails to act to terminate them within a period of fifteen calendar days beginning from the date on which the incompatibility arose;

(m) breach of the provisions on conflicts of interest;

(n) other matters regarded as misconduct in the normative acts concerning public office and public officials or applicable to them.

3. The disciplinary sanctions shall be:

(f) Removal from public office.

4. Misconduct referred to in paragraph 2 is punishable by the following disciplinary sanctions:

(a) one of the disciplinary sanctions referred to in paragraph 3(a) or (b) for misconduct referred to in paragraph 2(a), (b) and (d);

(b) one of the disciplinary sanctions referred to in paragraph 3(b) to (f) for misconduct referred to in paragraph 2(c);

(c) one of the disciplinary sanctions referred to in paragraph 3(c) to (f) for misconduct referred to in paragraph 2(e) to (h);

(d) one of the disciplinary sanctions referred to in paragraph 3, for misconduct referred to in paragraph 2(i) to (k) and (m);

(e) the disciplinary sanction referred to in paragraph 3(f) in the conditions laid down in Article 520, for misconduct referred to in paragraph 2(l);

(f) one of the disciplinary sanctions referred to in paragraph 3, for misconduct referred to in paragraph 2(n).

6. In determining the individual disciplinary sanction in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 4, account is to be taken of the causes and seriousness of the misconduct, the circumstances under which it was committed, the degree of culpability and the consequences of the misconduct, the general conduct of the official during his or her service and whether there are, among his or her antecedents, other disciplinary sanctions which are not spent under the conditions laid down by this code.

…’

21 Article 568(2) of that code provides:

‘Administrative disciplinary liability is established in compliance with the principle of adversarial proceedings and the rights of the defence and subject to review by the administrative tribunals under the conditions laid down by law.’

The Law on public procurement

22 Article 3 of the Legea nr. 98/2016 privind achiziţiile publice (Law No 98/2016 on public procurement), of 19 May 2016 (Monitorul Oficial al României, Part I, No 390 of 23 May 2016; ‘the Law on public procurement’), provides in points (w) and (yy):

‘(w) supplier – entity which makes products available to the contractor, including services, where necessary, for the installation or placement thereof, or which provides services to the contractor, which does not have the status of a subcontractor.

(yy) subcontractor – any economic operator that is not party to a public contract and which carries out and/or provides certain parts or elements of works or the construction or performance of activities that are part of the subject of the public contract by being responsible, vis-a-vis the contractor, for the organisation or performance of all the necessary steps to that end.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

23 On 6 April 2021, in the context of an open call for tenders organised with a view to awarding a contract for the purpose of ‘drafting technico-economic documents – feasibility study and technical design – relating to the investment: Construction of the departmental road connecting the international airport ‘Traian Vuia’ of Timișoara to the A1 motorway’, the District of Timiș, in its capacity as the contracting authority, ranked NV Construct in fourth position.

24 On 16 April 2021, NV Construct seised the Consiliul Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes), which is the referring body, seeking the disqualification of the three tenderers ranked above it, and a new assessment of their tenders.

25 NV Construct submits, in essence, that those three tenderers did not comply with the requirements which were not set out in the procurement documents but which are imposed on the basis of special laws governing various activities that must or are liable to be carried out during the performance of a contract. The contracting authority accordingly should have verified that those tenderers or their subcontractors were authorised by the Autoritatea Feroviară Română (Romanian railway authority, Romania). In addition, since the successful tenderer intended to rely on the capacities of third parties in order to perform the contract, it necessarily should have, in order to comply with Article 3(1)(yy) of the Law on public procurement, relied on subcontractors to the exclusion of any other form of cooperation. Finally, it should have been required to have designated a subcontractor for the activity of ‘Services for the drafting of documents for the purpose of the notice and approval of the [setting aside] of expropriated land and the change of category of use’ even if it is not certain that it would have to have recourse to those services, since the procurement documents specify that that activity is to be carried out ‘only if necessary’.

26 The contracting authority and the successful tenderer, for their part, submit that the procurement documents do not contain any indication relating to the need to refer in the offer exclusively to operators authorised by the Romanian railway authority and the Asociația Națională a Evaluatorilor Autorizați din România (Romanian national association of authorised assessors). In addition, according to the contracting authority, at the time at which tenders are submitted, it is impossible to know whether it will be necessary to rely on services for the drawing up of documents for the purpose of setting aside expropriated land and drafting a pedology study. That is why the successful tenderer stated in its tender that it would undertake, itself and ‘only if necessary’, to draw up that documentation. Furthermore, the fact that it did not refer at the outset to its intention to subcontract those services does not raise any difficulty, since it could seek new subcontractors after the contract is signed. Moreover, experts from the national association of authorised assessors would have been designated and would have produced declarations of availability.

27 As a preliminary matter, the referring body observes that the value of the contract to be awarded is estimated to be 1 970 967 Romanian lei (RON) (approximately EUR 421 553), such that it exceeds the threshold for Directive 2014/24 to apply.

28 That body states that the Romanian courts are divided on the issue of whether a contracting authority may exclude an economic operator whose offer does not comply with an obligation under the rules applicable to a profession, without even allowing it the possibility of rectifying the tender and despite that obligation not having been expressly referred to in the procurement documents in question.

29 The present case therefore provides the opportunity to clarify whether, first, special rules relating to each activity concerned by a contract, whatever the importance of those activities to the contract, must be deemed to supplement the procurement documents and, second, whether the tenderers must necessarily designate in their tender, on pain of it being rejected, the subcontractors on which they will entrust those activities which are not of significant importance to that contract.

30 The Consiliul Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) observes that it follows inter alia from the judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404), that an economic operator cannot be excluded from the procedure on the ground that it has not complied with requirements that were not set out in the procurement documents.

31 In the case in the main proceedings, rules relating to construction, modernisation, maintenance and repair of the railway infrastructure, which did not appear in the procurement documents, are binding on the tenderer only at the stage of the performance of the contract in question. In addition, the number of economic operators authorised for certain activities under that contract is limited. Therefore, the obligation to designate them as subcontractors would drastically reduce the competition, whilst increasing the administrative burden on participants in the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings, which could be contrary to the principle of proportionality. The referring body wonders, therefore, whether it is necessary systematically to require tenderers to designate their potential subcontractors at the time when the tender is submitted, irrespective of the importance of the activities that would be entrusted to them under that contract, the time at which those subcontractors would act in the performance of that same contract, or yet the probability that they would be requested to act.

32 Furthermore, according to that body, those procurement documents are not supplemented by certain criteria which are binding as a result of special laws that are not relevant in the matter of public procurement. The fact of automatically supplementing procurement documents with such criteria would infringe the principle of proportionality and call into question the discretion that a contracting authority has under the second subparagraph of Article 58(1) of Directive 2014/24 as to the setting of selection criteria.

33 Likewise, in the context of their possible appeals, adversely affected economic operators may only contest the procurement documents that they consider to be too restrictive, without being able to claim that they are too permissive and should include additional criteria that may restrict the access of other operators to the procedure in question.

34 Moreover, the economic operators which are ranked lower cannot call into question an assessment of the tenders carried out in accordance with the requirements as set out in the procurement documents. On the contrary, they must establish that that assessment did not comply with those documents, such that the principle of transparency was breached.

35 Finally, to require subcontracting as the only form of carrying out an activity of a contract would infringe the freedom of contract, the right of economic operators to decide how to organise themselves and Article 63 of Directive 2014/24. To the extent that it follows from Article 63 of that directive that the production of an undertaking suffices to demonstrate compliance with the selection criteria, a mere statement of availability should a fortiori suffice where, as regards activities of minor importance to the contract, the satisfaction of those criteria has not been required.

36 In those circumstances, the Consiliul Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 58 of Directive [2014/24], the principle of proportionality and the principle of liability be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority has the right to lay down the criteria relating to technical capacity, that is to say, to determine whether or not it is necessary to include in the procurement documents criteria relating to technical and professional capacity and the capacity to carry out the technical and professional activity arising from the provisions of special laws, in respect of activities that do not have significant importance in the contract?

(2) Do the principles of transparency and proportionality preclude the automatic supplementation of the procurement documents with qualification criteria arising from special laws applicable to activities relating to the contract to be awarded which were not set out in the procurement documents and which the contracting authority decided not to impose on the economic operators?

(3) (a) Do Article 63 of the directive and the principle of proportionality preclude the exclusion from the [tendering] procedure of a tenderer who has not named an operator as a subcontractor for the purpose of demonstrating compliance with certain criteria relating to technical and professional capacity and the capacity to carry out the technical and professional activity arising from the provisions of special laws not set out in the procurement documents in the case where the tenderer in question has chosen a different contractual form of involving specialists in the contract, that is to say [a] contract for the supply/provision of services, or has submitted [a] declaration of willingness on their part?

(b) Does the right to determine its organisation and contractual relations within the group lie with the economic operator and is it possible also to involve certain providers/suppliers in the contract in the case where the provider is not one of the entities on whose capacity the tenderer intends to rely in order to demonstrate compliance with the relevant criteria?'

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

37 As a preliminary matter, it must be ascertained whether the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) may be regarded as a 'court or tribunal of a Member State', within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU.

38 Although the referring body considers that it was recognised as having that status by the Court of Justice in the order of 17 October 2018, Beny Alex (C-353/18, not published, EU:C:2018:829), it must be observed that, in that order, the Court merely rejected the reference for a preliminary ruling made to it by that body as being manifestly inadmissible, within the meaning of Article 53(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, without deciding that that body was a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU.

39 According to the Court's settled case-law, in order to determine whether a body making a reference is a 'court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU, which is a question governed by EU law alone, the Court takes account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent (see, to that effect, judgments of 30 June 1966, Vaassen-Göbbels, 61/65, EU:C:1966:39, p. 395, and of 21 January 2020, Banco de Santander, C-274/14, EU:C:2020:17, paragraph 51).

40 In the light of the information that the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) provided to the Court on 6 July 2022, in response to a request that the latter had sent to it on 16 May 2022, there is no doubt that that body satisfies the criteria relating to its being established by law, its permanence, the inter partes nature of its procedure and the application, by that body, of rules of law. However, there is a question as to whether that body meets the criterion, first, of the compulsory nature of its jurisdiction and, second, of independence.

41 As regards, in the first place, the compulsory nature of the referring body's jurisdiction, it is true that Article 4(1) of Law No 101/2016, read in conjunction with Article 2(1) of that law, that any person who considers that one of his or her rights or legitimate interests has been breached by an act or an omission of a contracting authority may choose either to bring administration and judicial proceedings before the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes), or to bring legal proceedings before a court with a section that deals with administrative disputes. It is clear from the case file available to the Court that the Romanian legislature thus chose, in order to transpose Article 2(9) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2007/66, to attribute competence to hear this type of dispute concurrently to the referring body, on the one hand, and courts with a section for administrative disputes, on the other hand.

42 That being so, it must be observed that the decisions of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes), whose jurisdiction does not depend on the parties' agreement, are binding on the parties (see, by analogy, judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme, C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraph 23).

43 In those circumstances, the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) satisfies the criterion of the compulsory nature of its jurisdiction.

44 In the second place, as regards the criterion of independence, the external aspect of the principle of independence of national courts requires that the body concerned exercise its functions wholly autonomously, without being subject to any hierarchical constraint or subordinated to any other body and without taking orders or instructions from any source whatsoever. In that regard, it is critical that the irremovability of the members of the body concerned is guaranteed, such that dismissals of members of that body should be determined by specific rules, by means of express legislative provisions offering safeguards that go beyond those provided for by the general rules of administrative law and employment law which apply in the event of an unlawful dismissal (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 January 2020, Banco de Santander, C-274/14, EU:C:2020:17, paragraphs 56 to 60).

45 As regards the internal aspect of the principle of independence of national courts, that principle is linked to 'impartiality' and seeks to ensure a level playing field for the parties to the proceedings and their respective interests with regard to the subject matter of those proceedings. Thus, the concept of 'independence' requires above all that the body in question act as a third party in relation to the authority which adopted the contested decision (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 January 2020, Banco de Santander, C-274/14, EU:C:2020:17, paragraphs 61 and 62).

46 Those guarantees of independence and impartiality require rules, particularly as regards the composition of the body and the appointment, length of service and grounds for abstention, rejection and dismissal of its members, in order to dismiss any reasonable doubt in the minds of individuals as to the imperviousness of that body to external factors and its neutrality with respect to the interests before it (judgment of 21 January 2020, Banco de Santander, C-274/14, EU:C:2020:17, paragraph 63).

47 In the present case, as is clear from the information available to the Court, Law No 101/2016 emphasises, in several places, the external aspect of the independence of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes). Thus, paragraphs 1, 3 and 4 of Article 37 of that law provide, respectively, that the Council 'is an independent tribunal with administrative and judicial functions', and that it is 'subject only to the law' and that it 'is independent and is not subordinate to any authority or public institution'. It is also clear from Article 15(1) of that law that the procedure for the resolution of disputes complies, inter alia, with the principle of independence of administrative and judicial activity. In the same vein, Article 44(4) of the same law provides that the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes), 'in the exercise of its jurisdiction, … shall comply with the principles of independence and stability of its members'.

48 As regards the appointment of the members of that body, it is clear from Article 45 of Law No 101/2016 that those members are selected by competition, on the basis of their professional suitability and their good character, from candidates with a university education and professional experience of 10 years' duration in the fields covered by that article, and experience of at least 3 years in the field of public procurement. They are appointed by decision of the Prime Minister, upon a proposal by the President of that body, from candidates who have been declared to be admitted to the competition.

49 In addition, it is clear from Article 48a of Law No 101/2016 that misconduct committed by the members of the referring body can only be found by a Disciplinary Committee established within that body. On a proposal by the Disciplinary Committee, disciplinary sanctions are to be applied by the President of that body, except for the sanction of removal from public office, which is applied only by the person who has legal competence to make appointments to that body, namely the Romanian Prime Minister.

50 Furthermore, Article 39(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) lays down a proportionate scale of sanctions, in accordance with Article 492(6) of the Administrative code.

51 Finally, the fact that Article 39 refers to the Administrative code in order to identify the cases in which a member of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) incurs a sanction of removal from public office is such as to guarantee legal certainty.

52 Thus, that sanction may be pronounced, inter alia, against a member of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) who is unable to justify his or her absence from work or who has failed to comply with the rules relating to professional secrecy or conflicts of interest. Such situations, referred to in Article 492(2) of the Administrative code, read in conjunction with paragraph (4) of that article, correspond to the exceptional cases reflecting legitimate and compelling grounds that warrant the adoption of such a measure, subject to the principle of proportionality and to the appropriate procedures being followed (see, by analogy, judgment of 21 January 2020, Banco de Santander, C-274/14, EU:C:2020:17, paragraphs 59, 60 and 67). Therefore, members of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) benefit throughout their mandate from a guarantee of stability which may only be derogated from for reasons expressly set out in law. (see, by analogy, judgment of 21 January 2020, Banco de Santander, C-274/14, EU:C:2020:17, paragraph 70).

53 It should however be pointed out that the principle of stability that the members of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) benefit from under Article 44(4) of Law No 101/2016 must be interpreted consistently with the criterion of independence, as defined in paragraph 44 of this judgment, with which every national body must comply in order to have the status of a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, in order to comply with the principle of irremovability.

54 It should also be observed that, in the response referred to in paragraph 40 of this judgment, that the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) stated that its members are the subject of incompatibilities and prohibitions analogous to those imposed on the judiciary, and that those members are removed only in the event of serious misconduct. In addition, in the event that that sanction is pronounced against one of those members, the latter has a right of appeal before the administrative courts, pursuant to Article 568(2) of the Administrative code.

55 The referring body has furthermore indicated that, in practice, no member of the council had been removed since its creation in 2006.

56 As to the internal aspect of the principle of independence of a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State’, within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, that appears to be guaranteed by Article 47 of Law No 101/2016, which seeks to avoid situations liable to give rise to conflicts of interest. Thus, the members of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) must not carry out commercial activities, be members of an economic operator’s decision-making body, be involved in political activities, or exercise a public or private activity, with the exception of teaching duties within higher education. Those incompatibilities are moreover the same as those to which the judiciary is subject under Romanian law. In addition, the members of the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) are subject to rules concerning the grounds for recusal, laid down in Article 47(3) of that law, pursuant to which they are not authorised to participate in the resolution of a dispute, on pain of the decision given being invalid, where they are in one of the situations listed in that provision.

57 Moreover, it is clear from Article 15(1) of that law that the procedure for the resolution of disputes before the referring body complies, inter alia, with the principles of adversarial proceedings, of the guarantee of rights of the defence and of impartiality.

58 Having regard to all the foregoing considerations, it must be held that the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Disputes) may be classified as a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU and that, consequently, the present request for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

Consideration of the questions referred

59 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 58 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the principles of proportionality and of transparency, guaranteed in the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority has the option of imposing as selection criteria obligations under special laws applicable to the activities that may be required to be carried out in the context of performing the public contract and are not of significant importance.

60 As it is best placed to assess its own needs, the contracting authority is granted a broad discretion by the EU legislature when determining selection criteria, as can be seen inter alia from the recurring use of the term ‘may’ in Article 58 of Directive 2014/24. Thus, in accordance with paragraph 1 of that article, it has some flexibility in setting those requirements for participation in a procurement procedure which it considers to be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract and appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities required to perform the contract to be awarded. More specifically, according to paragraph 4 of that article, the contracting authority is free to determine which requirements for participation it considers appropriate, from its point of view, to ensure inter alia the performance of the contract to a quality standard which it considers appropriate (judgment of 31 March 2022, Smetna palata na Republika Bulgaria, C-195/21, EU:C:2022:239, paragraph 50).

61 In the exercise of that broad discretion, the contracting authority may decide to include, amongst the selection criteria referred to in the contract notice or tender specifications, obligations under special laws applicable to the activities that may be required to be carried out in the context of performing the public contract and which are not of significant importance.

62 Conversely, the contracting authority may equally, in the exercise of that broad discretion, consider that it is not necessary to include those obligations amongst the selection criteria. That choice may inter alia be explained by the fact that those obligations do not have significant importance or by the contingent nature of the activities to be carried out to which the obligations at issue apply. The contracting authority may equally prefer to refer to those same obligations as part of the conditions for performance of contracts in order to require compliance with them from a single tenderer only (see, by analogy, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraphs 88 and 89).

63 Directive 2014/24 does not preclude the consideration of technical requirements simultaneously as selection criteria relating to technical and professional ability, as technical specifications and/or as conditions for the performance of the contract, within the meaning of Article 58(4), Article 42 and Article 70 of that directive, respectively (judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 84). Conversely, a contracting authority may decide to opt for only one of those classifications.

64 In that regard, a contracting authority may, pursuant to Article 70 of Directive 2014/24, lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract provided that they are linked to the subject matter of the contract, within the meaning of Article 67(3) of that directive, and indicated in the call for competition or in the procurement documents.

65 Furthermore, to oblige tenderers to satisfy all the conditions of performance of the contract at the time of submission of their tenders would be to impose an excessive requirement – one which might dissuade economic operators from participating in procurement procedures – and would thus infringe the principles of proportionality and transparency guaranteed by Article 18(1) of that directive (judgment of 8 July 2021, Sanresa, C-295/20, EU:C:2021:556, paragraph 62).

66 Therefore, the answer to the first question is that Article 58 of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the principles of proportionality and of transparency, guaranteed in the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority has the option of imposing as selection criteria obligations under special laws applicable to the activities that may be required to be carried out in the context of performing the public contract and are not of significant importance.

The second question

67 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the principles of proportionality and of transparency guaranteed by the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding procurement documents from being automatically supplemented with qualification criteria arising under special laws applicable to activities relating to the contract to be awarded which were not set out in the procurement documents and which the contracting authority decided not to impose on the economic operators concerned.

68 As is clear from the answer to the first question, obligations under special laws applicable to activities connected with the public contract to be awarded cannot automatically be added as selection criteria to the criteria expressly referred to in the procurement documents, otherwise the broad discretion that the contracting authority has in determining the selection criteria that it wishes to impose on economic operators as conditions for participating in a procurement procedure would be rendered devoid of any substance.

69 Accordingly, the answer to the second question is that the principles of proportionality and of transparency guaranteed by the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding procurement documents from being automatically supplemented with qualification criteria arising under special laws applicable to activities relating to the contract to be awarded which were not set out in the procurement documents and which the contracting authority decided not to impose on the economic operators concerned.

The third question, point (a)

70 By point (a) of its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding a tenderer from being excluded from a procurement procedure on the ground that it has not designated the subcontractor to which it intends to entrust the performance of obligations under special laws applicable to the activities related to the contract in question and not provided for in the procurement documents, where that tenderer has stated in its offer that it would perform those obligations by relying on the capacities of another entity without however having a subcontract agreement with that entity.

71 As is clear from paragraph 62 of this judgment, if the obligations under special laws applicable to activities related to the contract in question and not provided for, as selection criteria, in the procurement documents were classified as a condition for performance of the contract, and if the successful tenderer did not satisfy it when the public contract was awarded to it, the non-compliance with that condition would have no effect on the question of whether the award of the contract was compatible with the provisions of Directive 2014/24 (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 89).

72 In a situation where the obligations under special laws applicable to activities related to the contract in question and which were not provided for in the procurement documents in fact constitute selection criteria within the meaning of Article 58 of Directive 2014/24, it suffices to recall that Article 63(1) of that directive confers the right for any economic operator to rely, for a particular contract, on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them, with a view to satisfying the various categories of selection criteria set out in Article 58(1) of that directive and specified in paragraphs (2) and (4) of that article (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraphs 29 and 33, and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 150).

73 Furthermore, it is clear from the last sentence of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 that, where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it suffices for it to prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

74 Consequently, it is clear that subcontracting constitutes only one of the means by which an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities and it cannot, therefore, be required of it by the contracting authority.

75 Having regard to the forgoing considerations, the answer to point (a) of the third question is that Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding the exclusion of a tenderer from a procurement procedure on the ground that it has not designated the subcontractor to which it intends to entrust the performance of obligations under special laws applicable to the activities related to the contract in question and not provided for in the procurement documents, where that tenderer has stated in its offer that it would perform those obligations by relying on the capacities of another entity without however having a subcontract agreement with that entity.

The third question, point (b)

76 By point (b) of its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the principle of proportionality set out in the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that an economic operator has the right to organise itself and its contractual relations within a group and whether it may also rely on suppliers or service providers in a contract if the supplier concerned was not among the entities whose capacities the tenderer intends to rely on in order to demonstrate its compliance with the relevant criteria.

77 In that regard, it is true that, as the settled case-law of the Court of Justice states, questions on the interpretation of EU law referred by a national court in the factual and legal context which that court is responsible for defining, and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court to determine, enjoy a presumption of relevance (see, to that effect, judgments of 7 September 1999, Beck and Bergdorf, C-355/97, EU:C:1999:391, paragraph 22, and of 26 March 2020, Miasto Łowicz and Prokurator Generalny, C-558/18 and C-563/18, EU:C:2020:234, paragraph 43).

78 However, it has also been consistently held that the procedure provided for in Article 267 TFEU is an instrument of cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts, by means of which the Court provides the national courts with the points of interpretation of EU law which they need in order to decide the disputes before them, such that the justification for a reference for a preliminary ruling is not that it enables advisory opinions on general or hypothetical questions to be delivered but rather that it is necessary for the effective resolution of a dispute (see, to that effect, judgments of 16 December 1981, Foglia, 244/80, EU:C:1981:302, paragraph 18, and of 26 March 2020, Miasto Łowicz and Prokurator Generalny, C-558/18 and C-563/18, EU:C:2020:234, paragraph 44).

79 From that point of view and since the request for a preliminary ruling is the basis for the proceedings before the Court, it is essential that, in that request, the national court should, in particular, set out the factual and legal background to the dispute in the main proceedings, most particularly in certain areas characterised by complex factual and legal situations, such as that of public procurement (see, to that effect, judgment of 26 January 1993, Telemarsicabruzzo and Others, C-320/90 to C-322/90, EU:C:1993:26, paragraphs 6 and 7, and order of 25 April 2018, Secretaria Regional de Saúde dos Açores, C-102/17, EU:C:2018:294, paragraphs 28 and 29).

80 In the present case, it must be observed that the order for reference does not contain a description of the factual and legal context of the dispute in the main proceedings that is sufficient to enable the Court to provide a useful answer to point (b) of the third question.

81 Consequently point (b) of the third question must be declared to be inadmissible.

Costs

82 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 58 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, read in conjunction with the principles of proportionality and of transparency guaranteed by the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of that directive

   must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority has the option of imposing as selection criteria obligations under special laws applicable to the activities that may be required to be carried out in the context of performing the public contract and are not of significant importance

2. The principles of proportionality and of transparency guaranteed by the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding procurement documents from being automatically supplemented with qualification criteria arising under special laws applicable to activities relating to the contract to be awarded which were not set out in the procurement documents and which the contracting authority decided not to impose on the economic operators concerned.

3. Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24

   must be interpreted as precluding the exclusion of a tenderer from a procurement procedure on the ground that it has not designated the subcontractor to which it intends to entrust the performance of obligations under special laws applicable to the activities related to the contract in question and not provided for in the procurement documents, where that tenderer has stated in its offer that it would perform those obligations by relying on the capacities of another entity without however having a subcontract agreement with that entity.

Arrêt

1 Les demandes de décision préjudicielle portent sur l'interprétation de l'article 12, paragraphes 3 et 4, de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE (JO 2014, L 94, p. 65).

2 Ces demandes ont été présentées dans le cadre de litiges opposant, d'une part, Sambre & Biesme SCRL, société de logement de service public (SLSP) (ci-après la « SLSP Sambre & Biesme ») (affaire C-383/21) et, d'autre part, la commune de Farciennes (Belgique) (affaire C-384/21) à la Société wallone du logement (SWL) au sujet de l'annulation par cette dernière des décisions du conseil d'administration de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme par lesquelles celui-ci a, d'une part, approuvé la convention-cadre de marchés conjoints passée avec la commune de Farciennes et, d'autre part, prévu de ne pas mettre en concurrence un marché de services d'inventaire relatif à l'amiante en raison d'une relation in house unissant la SLSP Sambre & Biesme à l'Intercommunale pour la gestion et la réalisation d'études techniques et économiques (Igretec).

Le cadre juridique

Le droit de l'Union

3 La directive 2014/24 énonce, à ses considérants 5, 31 et 33 :

« (5) Il convient de rappeler que rien dans la présente directive ne fait obligation aux États membres de confier à des tiers ou d'externaliser la fourniture de services qu'ils souhaitent fournir eux-mêmes ou organiser autrement que par la passation d'un marché public au sens de la présente directive. La prestation de services fondés sur la législation, la réglementation ou des contrats d'emploi ne devrait pas être concernée. Dans certains États membres, cela pourrait par exemple être le cas pour certains services administratifs et publics, tels que les services exécutifs et législatifs, ou la fourniture de certains services à la population, tels que des services en matière d'affaires étrangères ou de justice ou des services de sécurité sociale obligatoire.

(31) Il existe une importante insécurité juridique quant à la question de savoir dans quelle mesure les règles sur la passation des marchés publics devraient s'appliquer aux marchés conclus entre entités appartenant au secteur public. La jurisprudence applicable de la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne fait l'objet d'interprétations divergentes entre États membres et même entre pouvoirs adjudicateurs. Il est dès lors nécessaire de préciser dans quels cas les marchés conclus au sein du secteur public ne sont pas soumis à l'application des règles relatives à la passation des marchés publics.

Ces précisions devraient s'appuyer sur les principes énoncés dans la jurisprudence pertinente de la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne. La seule circonstance que les deux parties à un accord sont elles-mêmes des pouvoirs publics n'exclut pas en soi l'application des règles relatives à la passation des marchés publics. L'application de ces règles ne devrait toutefois pas interférer avec la liberté des pouvoirs publics d'exercer les missions de service public qui leur sont confiées en utilisant leurs propres ressources, ce qui inclut la possibilité de coopérer avec d'autres pouvoirs publics.

Il convient de veiller à ce qu'aucune coopération public-public ainsi exclue n'entraîne de distorsion de concurrence à l'égard des opérateurs économiques privés dans la mesure où cela place un prestataire de services privé dans une situation privilégiée par rapport à ses concurrents.

(33) Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs devraient pouvoir choisir de fournir conjointement leurs services publics par la voie de la coopération, sans être contraints de recourir à une forme juridique particulière. Cette coopération pourrait porter sur tous les types d'activités liées à l'exécution de services et à l'exercice de responsabilités confiées aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants ou assumées par eux, telles que des missions obligatoires ou volontaires relevant d'autorités locales ou régionales ou des services confiés à des organismes particuliers par le droit public. Les services fournis par les différents pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants ne doivent pas nécessairement être identiques ; ils pourraient également être complémentaires.

Les marchés concernant la fourniture conjointe de services publics ne devraient pas être soumis à l'application des règles établies dans la présente directive, à condition qu'ils soient conclus exclusivement entre pouvoirs adjudicateurs, que la mise en œuvre de cette coopération n'obéisse qu'à des considérations d'intérêt public et qu'aucun prestataire privé de services ne soit placé dans une situation privilégiée par rapport à ses concurrents.

Pour que ces conditions soient remplies, il convient que la coopération soit fondée sur le concept de coopération. Cette coopération n'exige pas que tous les pouvoirs participants se chargent de l'exécution des principales obligations contractuelles, tant que l'engagement a été pris de coopérer à l'exécution du service public en question. En outre, la mise en œuvre de la coopération, y compris tout transfert financier entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants, ne devrait obéir qu'à des considérations d'intérêt public. »

4 Sous le titre I de cette directive, intitulé « Champ d'application, définition, et principes généraux », figure un chapitre I, intitulé « Champ d'application et définitions », dont la section 3, elle-même intitulée « Exclusions », comprend les articles 7 à 12.

5 L'article 12 de ladite directive, intitulé « Marchés publics passés entre entités appartenant au secteur public », dispose :

« 1. Un marché public attribué par un pouvoir adjudicateur à une personne morale régie par le droit privé ou le droit public ne relève pas du champ d'application de la présente directive lorsque toutes les conditions suivantes sont réunies :

a) le pouvoir adjudicateur exerce sur la personne morale concernée un contrôle analogue à celui qu'il exerce sur ses propres services ;

b) plus de 80 % des activités de cette personne morale contrôlée sont exercées dans le cadre de l'exécution des tâches qui lui sont confiées par le pouvoir adjudicateur qui la contrôle ou par d'autres personnes morales qu'il contrôle ; et

c) la personne morale contrôlée ne comporte pas de participation directe de capitaux privés, à l'exception des formes de participation de capitaux privés sans capacité de contrôle ou de blocage requises par les dispositions législatives nationales, conformément aux traités, qui ne permettent pas d'exercer une influence décisive sur la personne morale contrôlée.

Un pouvoir adjudicateur est réputé exercer sur une personne morale un contrôle analogue à celui qu'il exerce sur ses propres services, au sens du premier alinéa, point a), s'il exerce une influence décisive à la fois sur les objectifs stratégiques et sur les décisions importantes de la personne morale contrôlée. Ce contrôle peut également être exercé par une autre personne morale, qui est elle-même contrôlée de la même manière par le pouvoir adjudicateur.

2. Le paragraphe 1 s'applique également lorsqu'une personne morale contrôlée qui est un pouvoir adjudicateur attribue un marché au pouvoir adjudicateur qui la contrôle, ou à une autre personne morale contrôlée par le même pouvoir adjudicateur, à condition que la personne morale à laquelle est attribué le marché public ne comporte pas de participation directe de capitaux privés, à l'exception des formes de participation de capitaux privés sans capacité de contrôle ou de blocage requises par les dispositions législatives nationales, conformément aux traités, qui ne permettent pas d'exercer une influence décisive sur la personne morale contrôlée.

3. Un pouvoir adjudicateur qui n'exerce pas de contrôle sur une personne morale régie par le droit privé ou le droit public au sens du paragraphe 1 peut néanmoins attribuer un marché public à cette personne morale sans appliquer la présente directive, lorsque toutes les conditions suivantes sont réunies :

a) le pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale concernée, analogue à celui qu'ils exercent sur leurs propres services ;

b) plus de 80 % des activités de cette personne morale sont exercées dans le cadre de l'exécution des tâches qui lui sont confiées par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs qui la contrôlent ou par d'autres personnes morales contrôlées par les mêmes pouvoirs adjudicateurs ; et

c) la personne morale contrôlée ne comporte pas de participation directe de capitaux privés à l'exception des formes de participation de capitaux privés sans capacité de contrôle ou de blocage requises par les dispositions législatives nationales, conformément aux traités, qui ne permettent pas d'exercer une influence décisive sur la personne morale contrôlée.

Aux fins du premier alinéa, point a), les pouvoirs adjudicateurs exercent un contrôle conjoint sur une personne morale lorsque toutes les conditions suivantes sont réunies :

i) les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée sont composés de représentants de tous les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants, une même personne pouvant représenter plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants ou l'ensemble d'entre eux ;

ii) ces pouvoirs adjudicateurs sont en mesure d'exercer conjointement une influence décisive sur les objectifs stratégiques et les décisions importantes de la personne morale contrôlée ; et

iii) la personne morale contrôlée ne poursuit pas d'intérêts contraires à ceux des pouvoirs adjudicateurs qui la contrôlent ;

4. Un marché conclu exclusivement entre deux pouvoirs adjudicateurs ou plus ne relève pas du champ d'application de la présente directive, lorsque toutes les conditions suivantes sont réunies :

a) le marché établit ou met en œuvre une coopération entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants dans le but de garantir que les services publics dont ils doivent assurer la prestation sont réalisés en vue d'atteindre les objectifs qu'ils ont en commun ;

b) la mise en œuvre de cette coopération n'obéit qu'à des considérations d'intérêt public ; et

c) les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants réalisent sur le marché concurrentiel moins de 20 % des activités concernées par la coopération ;

[...] »

6 L'article 90 de la même directive, intitulé « Transposition et dispositions transitoires », prévoit, à son paragraphe 1 :

« Les États membres mettent en vigueur les dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives nécessaires pour se conformer à la présente directive au plus tard le 18 avril 2016. Ils communiquent immédiatement à la Commission le texte de ces dispositions. »

Le droit belge

7 La directive 2014/24 a été transposée dans le droit belge par la loi relative aux marchés publics, du 17 juin 2016 (Moniteur belge du 14 juillet 2016, p. 44219), laquelle est entrée en vigueur le 30 juin 2017, après la date d'expiration du délai de transposition de cette directive prévu à l'article 90 de celle-ci.

Les litiges au principal et les questions préjudicielles

8 La SLSP Sambre & Biesme est une société coopérative à responsabilité limitée dont les actionnaires principaux sont les communes de Farciennes et d'Aiseau-Presles (Belgique). En tant que société de logement de service public, elle a pour autorité de tutelle la SWL, laquelle agit pour le compte du gouvernement wallon.

9 Au cours de l'année 2015, la SLSP Sambre & Biesme et la commune de Farciennes ont décidé d'unir leurs moyens pour créer un écoquartier à Farciennes regroupant environ 150 logements. À cette fin, les parties ont souhaité faire appel aux services de l'Igretec pour suivre la mise en œuvre de leur projet.

10 L'Igretec est une société coopérative à responsabilité limitée qui exerce des missions de service public et qui est, à ce titre, une personne morale de droit public. Son activité se déploie dans plusieurs domaines. Ainsi qu'il est décrit dans ses statuts, son objet social comprend, notamment, des activités de bureau d'études et de gestion.

11 Les règles relatives à l'organisation et au fonctionnement de l'Igretec dépendent du code de la démocratie locale et de la décentralisation ainsi que de ses statuts. À ce titre, pour ce qui est de sa composition, elle comprend exclusivement des personnes morales de droit public. À l'époque des faits au principal, l'Igretec comptait parmi ses associés plus de 70 communes, dont la commune de Farciennes, et plus de 50 autres pouvoirs publics. En particulier, au sein du capital social de l'Igretec, réparti en parts de cinq catégories, le nombre de parts de catégorie A attribuées aux communes s'élevaient à 5 054 351 et celui des parts de catégorie C attribuées aux « autres affiliés de droit public » étaient au nombre de 17 126.

12 S'agissant du fonctionnement de l'Igretec, les communes disposent toujours de la majorité des voix ainsi que de la présidence des différents organes de gestion et les décisions des organes de l'Igretec ne sont acquises que si elles recueillent, outre la majorité des voix des administrateurs présents ou représentés, la majorité des voix des administrateurs issus des communes associées.

13 Le 29 octobre 2015, la SLSP Sambre & Biesme a décidé d'acheter une part sociale de catégorie C dans l'Igretec afin de pouvoir bénéficier de ses services en tant qu'associée.

14 Le 23 mars 2016, la commune de Farciennes a conclu avec l'Igretec un contrat d'assistance à maître d'ouvrage et d'assistance juridique ainsi qu'un contrat de faisabilité en architecture, stabilité, technique spéciale, voirie, environnement et urbanisme. Dans le cadre de ces missions, l'Igretec a proposé trois variantes d'aménagements qui intégraient le projet de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme et a suggéré de conclure une convention de marché conjoint entre la SLSP Sambre & Biesme et la commune de Farciennes.

15 Le 19 janvier 2017, le conseil d'administration de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme a marqué son accord, d'une part, sur le projet de convention-cadre de marchés conjoints avec la commune de Farciennes et, d'autre part, sur le cahier spécial des charges concernant la désignation d'un bureau d'expert pour réaliser l'inventaire et le programme de gestion dans la problématique de l'amiante. Ce cahier des charges établi par l'Igretec était décrit comme étant la première étape de mise en œuvre du projet d'écoquartier à Farciennes.

16 Le 26 janvier 2017, le conseil communal de la commune de Farciennes a décidé d'approuver cette convention-cadre avec la SLSP Sambre & Biesme.

17 Ladite convention-cadre stipule à son article 1er, intitulé « Objet », que, notamment, la commune de Farciennes et la SLSP Sambre & Biesme déterminent, par la même convention-cadre, leurs droits et leurs obligations respectifs dans la conception et la réalisation des travaux de création de l'écoquartier de Farciennes et qu'elles décident de passer des marchés publics conjoints de services, de travaux et de promotion de travaux.

18 À cet égard, elles désignent la commune de Farciennes pour agir en qualité de pouvoir adjudicateur en leur nom collectif et de prendre seule toute décision relative à la passation et à l'attribution des marchés, étant entendu que, avant toute décision prise en exécution de la convention-cadre et conformément à l'article 2 de celle-ci, les parties se concertent au sein d'un comité de pilotage composé de représentants de chacune d'entre elles.

19 L'article 5 de ladite convention-cadre, intitulé « Choix de l'assistance à la maîtrise d'ouvrage pour la mise en œuvre de marchés de services, de travaux et de promotion de travaux et pour la réalisation du dossier de revitalisation urbaine », dispose que « les parties conviennent que la commune de Farciennes conclut avec [l'Igretec] [...] une convention d'assistance à maîtrise d'ouvrage, de prestations juridiques et d'environnement, et ce dans le cadre de la relation in house qui unit chacune des parties à ladite intercommunale ».

20 Le 9 février 2017, le conseil d'administration de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme a décidé, d'une part, d'approuver la conclusion de la convention-cadre de marchés conjoints avec la commune de Farciennes et, d'autre part, de ne pas mettre en concurrence le marché public de services d'inventaire relatif à l'amiante dont il avait précédemment approuvé le cahier spécial des charges en raison de la relation in house existant entre la SLSP Sambre & Biesme et l'Igretec.

21 Par décision du 25 février 2017, la SWL a, en tant qu'autorité de tutelle, annulé ces deux décisions du conseil d'administration de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme, au motif que les conditions de l'exception in house n'étaient pas remplies entre la SLSP Sambre & Biesme et l'Igretec.

22 La SLSP Sambre & Biesme (affaire C-383/21) et la commune de Farciennes (affaire C-384/21) ont chacune introduit, respectivement les 28 avril et 2 mai 2017, un recours en annulation contre cette décision de la SWL devant le Conseil d'État (Belgique). Elles soutiennent que les conditions relatives à une telle exception, prévues à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, de la directive 2014/24, étaient remplies dans les circonstances visées de telle sorte qu'il était loisible d'opérer une attribution directe des marchés publics en cause. En outre, la commune de Farciennes (affaire C-384/21) prétend qu'une attribution sans mise en concurrence est également justifiée sur le fondement de l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de cette directive, dès lors qu'existerait une situation de coopération entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs, au sens de cette dernière disposition.

23 Étant donné que la loi de transposition de ladite directive n'était pas encore entrée en vigueur au moment des faits en cause au principal alors que le délai prévu à l'article 90 de la directive 2014/24 aux fins d'une telle transposition était déjà expiré, la juridiction de renvoi se demande, tout d'abord, si, à la lumière de l'arrêt du 3 octobre 2019, Irgita (C-285/18, EU:C:2019:829), c'est sur le fondement de l'article 12, paragraphes 3 et 4, de cette directive qu'il y a lieu de trancher les litiges pendants devant elle, alors que les parties aux litiges au principal s'opposent, notamment, sur la question de savoir si celles-ci ont seulement pour objet de prévoir une faculté pour les États membres d'exclure du champ d'application de ladite directive l'attribution de certains marchés publics passés entre des entités appartenant au secteur public.

24 Ensuite, pour ce qui est des conditions devant être remplies pour qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerçant, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale concernée puisse procéder à une attribution in house, elle s'interroge sur la manière dont ce pouvoir adjudicateur doit participer aux organes de l'entité contrôlée et contribuer effectivement à son contrôle, en particulier en vertu de l'exigence visée à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la même directive. À cet égard, la juridiction de renvoi indique que les associés de catégorie C, dont fait partie la SLSP Sambre & Biesme, se trouvaient en situation très minoritaire, laquelle ne leur permettait pas de contribuer effectivement au contrôle de l'Igretec.

26 Cependant, la juridiction de renvoi indique que les requérantes dans les litiges au principal font valoir que siégeait au conseil d'administration de l'Igretec un conseiller communal de la commune de Farciennes qui était, en même temps, administrateur de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme, la commune de Farciennes étant actionnaire à la fois de l'Igretec et de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme.

27 La juridiction de renvoi précise, toutefois, qu'il n'est pas démontré qu'une telle circonstance était prévue et garantie en droit. Par ailleurs, cette personne siégeait au conseil d'administration de l'Igretec en sa qualité de conseiller communal à Farciennes, sans qu'il soit possible de considérer qu'elle était, à ce titre, également réputée représenter les intérêts de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme.

28 Cela étant, eu égard à l'appréciation in concreto alléguée par les requérantes au principal devant la juridiction de renvoi afin de déterminer si un pouvoir adjudicateur exerce sur l'entité attributaire un contrôle analogue à celui qu'il exerce sur ses propres services, la juridiction de renvoi se demande si une situation telle que celle exposée aux points 26 et 27 du présent arrêt permet de conclure, comme le soutiennent les requérantes au principal, que la SLSP Sambre & Biesme participait aux organes décisionnels de l'Igretec et exerçait donc sur cette intercommunale un tel contrôle, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, par l'intermédiaire de la commune de Farciennes.

29 La juridiction de renvoi précise, d'une part, que, si les requérantes au principal font valoir que la commune de Farciennes est actionnaire tant de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme que de l'Igretec et exerce sur ces deux entités un contrôle analogue à celui qu'elle exerce sur ses propres services, elles n'entendent pas faire valoir la possibilité d'une attribution directe d'un marché public entre deux entités contrôlées par le même pouvoir adjudicateur. D'autre part, la juridiction de renvoi émet des doutes sur le fait que, en toute hypothèse, les conditions encadrant l'exclusion de telles attributions du champ d'application des règles du droit de l'Union en matière de marché public soient satisfaites, la commune de Farciennes exerçant son contrôle conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs.

30 Enfin, la juridiction de renvoi s'interroge également sur la possibilité d'attribuer le marché public sans procédure d'appel d'offres, en vertu de l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24, dès lors que la commune de Farciennes se prévaut, à titre subsidiaire, de l'existence d'une situation de coopération entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs, au sens de cette disposition.

31 À cet égard, la juridiction de renvoi nourrit des doutes sur le fait que la notion de « coopération », visée à ladite disposition, puisse couvrir des circonstances telles que celles au principal au seul motif que les missions d'assistance à maîtrise d'ouvrage, de prestations juridiques et d'environnement confiées à l'Igretec s'inscrivent dans le cadre de la coopération entre la SLSP Sambre & Biesme et la commune de Farciennes en vue de la réalisation d'un projet commun de création d'un écoquartier à Farciennes, qu'une relation in house unit, en tout état de cause, cette commune et l'Igretec, et que ladite commune et la SLSP Sambre & Biesme sont membres de l'Igretec dans le secteur d'activités de son objet social qui est précisément concerné par les missions qu'elles souhaitent lui confier.

32 Dans ces conditions, le Conseil d'État a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour les questions préjudicielles suivantes :

Dans l'affaire C-383/21 :

« 1) L'article [12, paragraphe 3,] de la directive [2014/24] doit-il être interprété en ce sens qu'il produit un effet direct ?

2) En cas de réponse affirmative à cette première question, l'article [12, paragraphe 3,] de la directive [2014/24] doit-il être interprété en ce sens que la condition pour un pouvoir adjudicateur, en l'occurrence une société de logement de service public, d'être représenté au sein des organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, en l'occurrence une société coopérative intercommunale, est remplie au seul motif qu'une personne siégeant au sein du conseil d'administration de cette société coopérative intercommunale en sa qualité de conseiller communal d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur participant, en l'occurrence une commune, se trouve, en raison de circonstances exclusivement factuelles et sans garantie juridique de représentation, être également administrateur au sein de la société de logement de service public tandis que la commune est actionnaire (non exclusif) tant de l'entité contrôlée (société coopérative intercommunale) que de la société de logement de service public ?

3) En cas de réponse négative à la première question posée, faut-il considérer qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur, en l'occurrence une société de logement de service public, "participe" aux organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, en l'occurrence une société coopérative intercommunale, au seul motif qu'une personne siégeant au sein du conseil d'administration de cette société coopérative intercommunale en sa qualité de conseiller communal d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur participant, en l'occurrence une commune, se trouve, en raison de circonstances exclusivement factuelles et sans garantie juridique de représentation, être également administrateur au sein de la société de logement de service public tandis que la commune est actionnaire (non exclusif) tant de l'entité contrôlée (société coopérative intercommunale) que de la société de logement de service public ? »

Dans l'affaire C-384/21 :

« 1) L'article [12, paragraphe 3,] de la directive [2014/24] doit-il être interprété en ce sens qu'il produit un effet direct ?

2) En cas de réponse affirmative à cette première question, l'article [12, paragraphe 3,] de la directive [2014/24] doit-il être interprété en ce sens que la condition pour un pouvoir adjudicateur, en l'occurrence une société de logement de service public, d'être représenté au sein des organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, en l'occurrence une société coopérative intercommunale, est remplie au seul motif qu'une personne siégeant au sein du conseil d'administration de cette société coopérative intercommunale en sa qualité de conseiller communal d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur participant, en l'occurrence une commune, se trouve, en raison de circonstances exclusivement factuelles et sans garantie juridique de représentation, être également administrateur au sein de la société de logement de service public tandis que la commune est actionnaire (non exclusif) tant de l'entité contrôlée (société coopérative intercommunale) que de la société de logement de service public ?

3) En cas de réponse négative à la première question posée, faut-il considérer qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur, en l'occurrence une société de logement de service public, "participe" aux organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, en l'occurrence une société coopérative intercommunale, au seul motif qu'une personne siégeant au sein du conseil d'administration de cette société coopérative intercommunale en sa qualité de conseiller communal d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur participant, en l'occurrence une commune, se trouve, en raison de circonstances exclusivement factuelles et sans garantie juridique de représentation, être également administrateur au sein de la société de logement de service public tandis que la commune est actionnaire (non exclusif) tant de l'entité contrôlée (société coopérative intercommunale) que de la société de logement de service public ?

4) L'article [12, paragraphe 4,] de la directive [2014/24] doit-il être interprété en ce sens qu'il produit un effet direct ?

5) En cas de réponse affirmative à [la quatrième] question, l'article [12, paragraphe 4,] de la directive [2014/24] doit-il être interprété en ce sens qu'il permettrait de confier, sans mise en concurrence préalable, des missions d'assistance à maîtrise d'ouvrage, de prestations juridiques et d'environnement à un pouvoir adjudicateur, en l'occurrence une société coopérative intercommunale, dès lors que ces missions s'inscrivent dans le cadre d'une coopération entre deux autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, en l'occurrence une commune et une société de logement de service public, qu'il n'est pas contesté que la commune exerce un contrôle "in house conjoint" sur la société coopérative intercommunale et que la commune et la société de logement de service public sont membres de la société coopérative intercommunale dans le secteur d'activités "bureau d'études et de gestion et centrale d'achat" de son objet social qui est précisément concerné par les missions qu'elles souhaitent lui confier, lesquelles missions correspondent à des activités effectuées sur le marché par des bureaux d'études et de gestion spécialisés en conception, réalisation et mise en œuvre de projets ? »

33 Par décision du président de la Cour du 27 août 2021, les affaires C-383/21 et C-384/21 ont été jointes aux fins des phases écrite et orale de la procédure ainsi que de l'arrêt.

Sur les questions préjudicielles

Sur la première question dans l'affaire C-383/21 ainsi que sur les première et quatrième questions dans l'affaire C-384/21

34 Par sa première question dans l'affaire C-383/21 ainsi que par ses première et quatrième questions dans l'affaire C-384/21, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 12, paragraphes 3 et 4, de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il produit des effets directs dans le cadre de litiges opposant des personnes morales de droit public au sujet de l'attribution directe de marchés publics, alors que l'État membre concerné s'est abstenu de transposer cette directive dans l'ordre juridique national dans les délais impartis.

36 En vertu de l'article 288, troisième alinéa, TFUE, le caractère contraignant d'une directive sur lequel est fondée la possibilité d'invoquer celle-ci n'existe qu'à l'égard de « tout État membre destinataire ». Il s'ensuit, selon une jurisprudence constante, qu'une directive ne peut par elle-même créer d'obligations dans le chef d'un particulier et ne peut donc être invoquée en tant que telle à l'encontre d'une telle personne devant une juridiction nationale (arrêt du 12 décembre 2013, Portgás, C-425/12, EU:C:2013:829, point 22 et jurisprudence citée).

37 Toutefois, il convient de rappeler que, lorsque les justiciables sont en mesure de se prévaloir d'une directive à l'encontre non pas d'un particulier, mais d'un État membre, ils peuvent le faire quelle que soit la qualité en laquelle agit ce dernier. Il convient, en effet, d'éviter que l'État membre puisse tirer avantage de sa méconnaissance du droit de l'Union (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 7 juillet 2016, Ambisig, C-46/15, EU:C:2016:530, point 21 et jurisprudence citée).

38 Ainsi, les dispositions inconditionnelles et suffisamment précises d'une directive peuvent être invoquées par les justiciables non seulement à l'encontre d'un État membre et de l'ensemble des organes de son administration, mais également à l'encontre d'organismes ou d'entités, fussent-ils de droit privé, qui soit sont soumis à l'autorité ou au contrôle d'une autorité publique, soit se sont vu confier par un État membre l'accomplissement d'une mission d'intérêt public et détiennent à cet effet des pouvoirs exorbitants par rapport à ceux qui résultent des règles applicables dans les relations entre particuliers (arrêt du 30 avril 2020, Blue Air – Airline Management Solutions, C-584/18, EU:C:2020:324, point 72 et jurisprudence citée).

39 Par conséquent, dès lors que l'obligation pour un État membre de prendre toutes les mesures nécessaires pour atteindre le résultat prescrit par une directive est une obligation contraignante, imposée par l'article 288, troisième alinéa, TFUE ainsi que par cette directive elle-même, et dont le respect incombe à toutes les entités visées au point précédent, les litiges opposant ces entités sont des litiges impliquant des parties tenues de faire application de la directive concernée et auxquelles, par voie de conséquence, les dispositions inconditionnelles et suffisamment précises de cette directive sont opposables. Il en découle que ces dispositions de ladite directive sont susceptibles d'être invoquées dans le cadre de tels litiges, qu'il s'agisse, pour lesdites entités, de faire respecter les obligations qu'elles imposent ou de faire valoir les droits qu'elles leur octroient (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 12 décembre 2013, Portgás, C-425/12, EU:C:2013:829, points 34, 35 et 38).

40 En l'occurrence, ainsi qu'il ressort des demandes de décision préjudicielle, les parties aux litiges au principal sont des personnes morales de droit public tenues au respect de la directive 2014/24. Il s'ensuit que, dans le cadre de ces litiges, alors que cette directive n'a pas été transposée dans l'ordre juridique national dans les délais impartis, des pouvoirs adjudicateurs, tels que la SLSP Sambre & Biesme et la commune de Farciennes, sont en mesure de se prévaloir des dispositions de ladite directive, pour autant que ces dernières soient inconditionnelles et suffisamment précises.

41 À ces égards, la Cour a précisé qu'une disposition du droit de l'Union est, d'une part, inconditionnelle lorsqu'elle énonce une obligation qui n'est assortie d'aucune condition ni subordonnée, dans son exécution ou dans ses effets, à l'intervention d'aucun acte soit des institutions de l'Union européenne, soit des États membres et, d'autre part, suffisamment précise pour être invoquée par un justiciable et appliquée par le juge lorsqu'elle énonce une obligation dans des termes non équivoques (arrêt du 14 janvier 2021, RTS infra et Aannemingsbedrijf Norré-Behaegel, C-387/19, EU:C:2021:13, point 46 ainsi que jurisprudence citée). Or, tel est le cas de l'article 12, paragraphes 3 et 4, de la directive 2014/24.

42 En effet, s'agissant, en premier lieu, du caractère inconditionnel de ces dispositions, il y a lieu d'observer, à titre liminaire, que, ainsi qu'il a été exposé au point 23 du présent arrêt, la juridiction de renvoi s'interroge, à la lumière de l'arrêt du 3 octobre 2019, Irgita (C-285/18, EU:C:2019:829), sur la portée desdites dispositions, alors que les parties au principal s'opposent, notamment, sur la question de savoir si ces mêmes dispositions ont seulement pour objet de prévoir une faculté pour les États membres d'exclure l'attribution de certains marchés publics passés entre des entités appartenant au secteur public du champ d'application de cette directive. En effet, le cas échéant, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs ne pourraient pas se prévaloir de telles exclusions lorsque, faute de transposition de ladite directive, l'exercice d'une telle faculté par l'État membre concerné fait défaut.

43 À cet égard, il convient de relever que l'article 12 de la directive 2014/24, conformément à l'intitulé de la section dans laquelle il s'insère, prévoit, en substance, que les marchés publics passés entre des entités appartenant au secteur public remplissant les critères qui y sont visés sont exclus du champ d'application de cette directive, critères qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur doit donc respecter lorsqu'il souhaite procéder à l'attribution directe d'un tel marché public. En particulier, les paragraphes 3 et 4 dudit article 12 ont trait, d'une part, aux marchés publics attribués par un pouvoir adjudicateur à une personne morale sur laquelle celui-ci exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle analogue à celui qu'il exerce sur ses propres services et, d'autre part, aux marchés publics conclus exclusivement entre des pouvoirs adjudicateurs afin d'établir ou de mettre en œuvre une coopération entre eux dans le but de garantir que les services publics dont ils doivent assurer la prestation sont réalisés en vue d'atteindre les objectifs qu'ils ont en commun.

44 Ainsi, la directive 2014/24 a, à son article 12, codifié et précisé la jurisprudence développée par la Cour en matière d'attribution directe, ce qui met en évidence que le législateur de l'Union a entendu que ce régime d'attribution directe soit rattaché à cette directive (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 8 mai 2019, Rhenus Veniro, C-253/18, EU:C:2019:386, point 27 et jurisprudence citée).

45 Ce faisant, comme la Cour l'a constaté, l'article 12 de ladite directive n'a pas, par conséquent, privé les États membres de la liberté de privilégier un mode de prestation de services, d'exécution de travaux ou d'approvisionnement en fournitures au détriment des autres. En effet, une telle liberté implique un choix qui s'effectue à un stade antérieur à celui de la passation d'un marché et qui, dès lors, ne relève pas du champ d'application de la directive 2014/24 (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 3 octobre 2019, Irgita, C-285/18, EU:C:2019:829, point 44 ; ordonnances du 6 février 2020, Pia Opera Croce Verde Padova, C-11/19, EU:C:2020:88, points 41 et 47, ainsi que du 6 février 2020, Rieco, C-89/19 à C-91/19, EU:C:2020:87, points 33, 39 et 40).

46 En outre, le considérant 5 et le considérant 31, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24 reflètent la volonté du législateur de l'Union de reconnaître la liberté des États membres quant au choix du mode de prestation de services par lequel les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent pourvoir à leurs besoins (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 3 octobre 2019, Irgita, C-285/18, EU:C:2019:829, point 45 ; ordonnances du 6 février 2020, Pia Opera Croce Verde Padova, C-11/19, EU:C:2020:88, points 42 et 47, ainsi que du 6 février 2020, Rieco, C-89/19 à C-91/19, EU:C:2020:87, points 34, 39 et 40).

47 En effet, d'une part, le considérant 5 de cette directive énonce que rien dans celle-ci ne fait obligation aux États membres de confier à des tiers ou d'externaliser la fourniture de services qu'ils souhaitent fournir eux-mêmes ou organiser autrement que par la passation d'un marché public, au sens de ladite directive. D'autre part, son considérant 31, deuxième alinéa, indique que, si la seule circonstance que les deux parties à un accord sont elles-mêmes des pouvoirs publics n'exclut pas en soi l'application des règles relatives à la passation des marchés publics, l'application de ces règles ne devrait pas interférer avec la liberté des pouvoirs publics d'exercer les missions de service public qui leur sont confiées en utilisant leurs propres ressources, ce qui inclut la possibilité de coopérer avec d'autres pouvoirs publics.

48 Ainsi, la Cour en a déduit que, de même que la directive 2014/24 n'oblige pas les États membres à exiger des pouvoirs adjudicateurs de recourir à une procédure de passation de marché public, elle ne saurait les contraindre à recourir aux opérations visées à l'article 12 de cette directive lorsque les conditions prévues à cet article sont remplies (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 3 octobre 2019, Irgita, C-285/18, EU:C:2019:829, point 46 ; ordonnances du 6 février 2020, Pia Opera Croce Verde Padova, C-11/19, EU:C:2020:88, points 43 et 47, ainsi que du 6 février 2020, Rieco, C-89/19 à C-91/19, EU:C:2020:87, points 35, 39 et 40).

49 Il résulte de ce qui précède que, certes, les États membres demeurent libres de fixer, dans la législation nationale, des conditions pour le recours, par les entités appartenant au secteur public, à des marchés publics tels que ceux visés à l'article 12, paragraphes 3 et 4, de la directive 2014/24. Cependant, il n'en demeure pas moins que, lorsque, en vertu du droit national, il est loisible aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs de se prévaloir de l'une des exclusions au champ d'application de cette directive prévues à ces dispositions, les marchés publics réunissant les conditions qui y sont mentionnées peuvent faire l'objet d'une attribution directe, sans que cela soit subordonné à l'exercice, par l'État membre concerné, d'une faculté à cet effet. Par conséquent, en ce que les dispositions dudit article énoncent, à l'égard de ces pouvoirs adjudicateurs, des exigences pour l'exclusion de l'application des règles énoncées par ladite directive qui ne sont subordonnées, dans leur exécution ou dans leur effet, à l'intervention d'aucun acte, elles présentent un caractère inconditionnel, au sens de la jurisprudence rappelée au point 41 du présent arrêt.

50 Pour ce qui est, en second lieu, du caractère suffisamment précis desdites dispositions, il suffit de relever que, ainsi qu'il a été rappelé au point 44 du présent arrêt, l'article 12 de la directive 2014/24 codifie et précise la jurisprudence développée par la Cour en matière d'attribution directe en énonçant en des termes non équivoques, notamment, à ses paragraphes 3 et 4, les exigences auxquelles la mise en œuvre de ce régime d'attribution directe par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs doit répondre, afin, ainsi qu'il ressort du considérant 31 de cette directive, de remédier aux interprétations divergentes dont cette jurisprudence faisait l'objet.

51 Il y a donc lieu de conclure que l'article 12, paragraphes 3 et 4, de ladite directive présente le caractère inconditionnel et suffisamment précis qui est requis afin de produire des effets directs dans le cadre de litiges qui, tels que ceux au principal, opposent des personnes morales de droit public.

52 Eu égard aux considérations qui précèdent, il y a lieu de répondre à la première question dans l'affaire C-383/21 ainsi qu'aux première et quatrième questions dans l'affaire C-384/21 que l'article 12, paragraphes 3 et 4, de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il produit des effets directs dans le cadre de litiges opposant des personnes morales de droit public au sujet de l'attribution directe de marchés publics, alors que l'État membre concerné s'est abstenu de transposer cette directive dans l'ordre juridique national dans les délais impartis.

53 Par sa deuxième question dans les affaires C-383/21 et C-384/21, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que, afin d'établir qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale adjudicataire analogue à celui qu'ils exercent sur leurs propres services, l'exigence visée à cette disposition, tenant à ce qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur soit représenté dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, est satisfaite au seul motif que siège au conseil d'administration de cette personne morale le représentant d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur qui fait également partie du conseil d'administration du premier pouvoir adjudicateur.

54 Conformément à une jurisprudence constante, lors de l'interprétation d'une disposition du droit de l'Union, il y a lieu de tenir compte non seulement des termes de celle-ci, mais également de son contexte et des objectifs poursuivis par la réglementation dont elle fait partie. La genèse d'une disposition du droit de l'Union peut également révéler des éléments pertinents pour son interprétation (arrêt du 9 juin 2022, IMPERIAL TOBACCO BULGARIA, C-55/21, EU:C:2022:459, point 44 et jurisprudence citée).

55 En premier lieu, s'agissant du libellé de l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la directive 2014/24, il convient d'observer que cette disposition vise l'un des critères devant être satisfait afin d'établir, en vertu de l'article 12, paragraphe 3, premier alinéa, sous a), de cette directive, qu'un

pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale concernée, analogue à celui qu'ils exercent sur leurs propres services.

56 En l'occurrence, l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de ladite directive énonce que les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée doivent être composés de représentants de tous les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants, une même personne pouvant représenter plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants ou l'ensemble d'entre eux.

57 Il résulte ainsi des termes de cette disposition que celle-ci requiert qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerçant un contrôle conjoint sur une personne morale dispose d'un membre agissant en qualité de représentant de ce pouvoir adjudicateur dans les organes décisionnels de cette personne morale, ce membre pouvant, le cas échéant, représenter également d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs.

58 Cette interprétation est corroborée, en deuxième lieu, par le contexte dans lequel s'insère ladite disposition.

59 En effet, premièrement, il convient d'observer que l'article 12, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2014/24, relatif à l'hypothèse où un pouvoir adjudicateur unique exercerait sur la personne morale à laquelle un marché public est attribué un contrôle analogue à celui exercé sur ses propres services, prévoit, à son second alinéa, que ce contrôle peut également être exercé par une autre personne morale, qui est elle-même contrôlée de la même manière par le pouvoir adjudicateur.

60 Par ailleurs, le paragraphe 2 de cet article 12 dispose, notamment, que le paragraphe 1 de celui-ci est également susceptible de s'appliquer lorsqu'une personne morale contrôlée, qui est elle-même un pouvoir adjudicateur, attribue un marché au pouvoir adjudicateur qui la contrôle, ou à une autre personne morale contrôlée par le même pouvoir adjudicateur.

61 En revanche, pour ce qui est de l'article 12, paragraphe 3, de cette directive, cette disposition prévoit qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur qui n'exerce pas de contrôle sur une personne morale, au sens du paragraphe 1 de cet article 12, peut, néanmoins, attribuer un marché public à cette personne morale sans appliquer ladite directive lorsque ce pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale concernée. Toutefois, il importe de souligner que, à la différence des paragraphes 1 et 2 dudit article, ladite disposition ne prévoit pas que les conditions relatives au contrôle du pouvoir adjudicateur sur la personne morale adjudicataire puissent être satisfaites de manière indirecte.

62 En particulier, l'exigence de représentation visée à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la directive 2014/24 requiert que la participation d'un pouvoir adjudicateur au sein des organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs s'effectue par l'intermédiaire d'un représentant de ce pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même. Cette exigence ne peut donc pas être satisfaite par l'intermédiaire d'un membre de ces organes y siégeant seulement en qualité de représentant d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur.

63 Deuxièmement, l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous ii), de cette directive prévoit, au titre des conditions devant être réunies pour que soit établi que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs exercent un contrôle conjoint sur une personne morale, au sens de l'article 12, paragraphe 3, premier alinéa, sous a), de ladite directive, que ces pouvoirs adjudicateurs doivent être en mesure d'exercer conjointement une influence décisive sur les objectifs stratégiques poursuivis par la personne morale contrôlée et sur les décisions importantes que celle-ci est susceptible de prendre.

64 Eu égard à la portée de la condition énoncée à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous ii), de la directive 2014/24, laquelle a trait à la détermination du contenu de ces objectifs et de ces décisions, il convient donc de comprendre le critère figurant à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de cette directive comme visant à poser une exigence distincte portant sur les conditions formelles de la participation de ces pouvoirs adjudicateurs dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale concernée.

65 Ces constatations sont confirmées par la genèse de l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, de ladite directive.

66 Ainsi qu'il ressort du considérant 31 de la même directive, tout en relevant l'existence d'une importante insécurité juridique quant à la question de savoir dans quelle mesure les règles sur la passation des marchés publics devraient s'appliquer aux marchés conclus entre des entités appartenant au secteur public et, partant, la nécessité d'apporter des précisions à cet égard, le législateur de l'Union a considéré que ces précisions devraient s'appuyer sur les principes énoncés dans la jurisprudence pertinente de la Cour et, partant, n'a pas entendu remettre en cause cette jurisprudence (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 28 mai 2020, Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung, C-796/18, EU:C:2020:395, point 66).

67 À cet égard, il ressort de ladite jurisprudence que la question de savoir si un pouvoir adjudicateur exerce sur la personne morale concernée un contrôle analogue à celui qu'il exerce sur ses propres services s'apprécie au regard de l'ensemble des dispositions législatives et des circonstances pertinentes. Dès lors, les éléments dont il y a lieu de tenir compte ne recouvrent pas seulement des circonstances factuelles, mais incluent également la législation applicable ainsi que, notamment, les mécanismes de contrôle prévus par les statuts de cette personne morale (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 10 septembre 2009, Sea, C-573/07, EU:C:2009:532, points 65 et 66 ainsi que jurisprudence citée).

68 Au titre des précisions apportées à la jurisprudence de la Cour s'agissant des conditions dans lesquelles les marchés conclus entre des entités appartenant au secteur public ne relèvent pas des règles sur la passation des marchés publics, le législateur de l'Union a entendu renforcer l'exigence tenant à cette condition de représentation.

69 En effet, il y a lieu d'observer que, antérieurement à l'adoption de la directive 2014/24, le fait que les organes décisionnels de la personne morale concernée soient composés de représentants des pouvoirs adjudicateurs exerçant sur celle-ci un contrôle conjoint était un des éléments dont il était tenu compte afin d'établir, dans le chef du pouvoir adjudicateur concerné, la possibilité d'une influence déterminante tant sur les objectifs stratégiques que sur les décisions importantes de cette personne (voir, notamment, arrêts du 13 novembre 2008, Coditel Brabant, C-324/07, EU:C:2008:621, points 28, 29, 33 et 34 ainsi que jurisprudence citée, et du 10 septembre 2009, Sea, C-573/07, EU:C:2009:532, points 65, 66 et 86 ainsi que jurisprudence citée).

70 Or, en les visant à des dispositions distinctes, à savoir à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i) et ii), de cette directive, le législateur de l'Union a entendu faire des conditions de représentation des pouvoirs adjudicateurs exerçant un contrôle conjoint sur la personne morale adjudicataire une exigence autonome par rapport à celle tenant à la possibilité d'exercer une telle influence décisive.

71 En troisième lieu, l'interprétation selon laquelle cette disposition exige que la participation d'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerçant un tel contrôle conjoint au sein des organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée s'effectue par l'intermédiaire d'un membre agissant en qualité de représentant de ce pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même, ce membre pouvant, le cas échéant, représenter également d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, est confortée par l'objectif poursuivi par les dispositions de l'article 12, paragraphe 3, de ladite directive.

73 Or, il ne saurait être considéré qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur utilise ses propres ressources et agit par lui-même lorsqu'il n'est pas en mesure d'intervenir dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale à qui le marché public est attribué par la voie d'un représentant qui agit au nom de ce pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même ainsi que, le cas échéant, au nom d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, et que, par conséquent, l'expression de ses intérêts au sein de ces organes décisionnels est subordonnée au fait que lesdits intérêts soient communs avec ceux que les autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs y font valoir par l'intermédiaire de leurs propres représentants au sein de ces organes.

74 En l'occurrence, sous réserve de vérification par la juridiction de renvoi, il ressort des éléments fournis à la Cour que l'exigence visée à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de ladite directive, tenant à ce que la participation d'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerçant un contrôle conjoint sur une personne morale au sein des organes décisionnels de celle-ci s'effectue par l'intermédiaire d'un membre agissant en qualité de représentant de ce pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même, ce membre pouvant, le cas échéant, représenter également d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, n'apparaît pas être satisfaite dans les circonstances en cause au principal. En effet, d'une part, les associés de catégorie C, dont fait partie la SLSP Sambre & Biesme, ne disposaient, notamment, d'aucun représentant au sein du conseil d'administration de l'Igretec et, d'autre part, bien que siégeant également au conseil d'administration de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme, ce n'est qu'en qualité de représentant de la commune de Farciennes, associée de catégorie A, que le conseiller communal siégeait au conseil d'administration de l'Igretec.

75 Eu égard aux considérations qui précèdent, il y a lieu de répondre à la deuxième question dans les affaires C-383/21 et C-384/21 que l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que, afin d'établir qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale adjudicataire analogue à celui qu'ils exercent sur leurs propres services, l'exigence visée à cette disposition, tenant à ce qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur soit représenté dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, n'est pas satisfaite au seul motif que siège au conseil d'administration de cette personne morale le représentant d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur qui fait également partie du conseil d'administration du premier pouvoir adjudicateur.

Sur la troisième question dans les affaires C-383/21 et C-384/21

76 Compte tenu de la réponse apportée à la première question dans les affaires C-383/21 et C-384/21, il n'y a pas lieu de répondre à la troisième question dans ces affaires.

Sur la cinquième question dans l'affaire C-384/21

77 Par sa cinquième question dans l'affaire C-384/21, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'est exclu du champ d'application de cette directive un marché public par lequel sont confiées à un pouvoir adjudicateur des missions de service public qui s'inscrivent dans le cadre d'une relation de coopération entre d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs.

78 À titre liminaire, il convient d'observer que les paragraphes 1 à 4 de l'article 12 de ladite directive vise des cas distincts d'exclusion des règles de passation des marchés publics, chacun de ces cas étant soumis à des conditions qui lui sont propres.

79 Aux termes du paragraphe 4, sous a), de cet article 12, un marché public conclu exclusivement entre deux pouvoirs adjudicateurs ou plus ne relève pas du champ d'application de la directive 2014/24 lorsque ce marché établit ou met en œuvre une coopération entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants dans le but de garantir que les services publics dont ils doivent assurer la prestation sont réalisés en vue d'atteindre les objectifs qu'ils ont en commun. Par ailleurs, aux termes des points b) et c) de ce paragraphe, il est requis que la mise en œuvre de cette coopération n'obéisse qu'à des considérations d'intérêt public et que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants réalisent sur le marché concurrentiel moins de 20 % des activités concernées par la coopération.

80 Il en découle que des circonstances telles que le fait qu'il existe une relation in house entre certains des pouvoirs adjudicateurs ou que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs attribuant le marché public concerné soient des associés du pouvoir adjudicateur auquel est confié, au moyen du marché public concerné, la réalisation de certaines missions ne sauraient, en elles-mêmes, être prises en compte afin d'apprécier si l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 couvre une situation dans laquelle l'exercice de ses missions par un pouvoir adjudicateur s'inscrit dans le cadre d'une relation de coopération entre d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs.

81 En revanche, il y a lieu de relever que le libellé de cette disposition confère à la notion de « coopération » un rôle déterminant dans le dispositif d'exclusion qu'elle prévoit. À cet égard, l'exigence d'une coopération effective ressort également de la précision, énoncée au considérant 33, troisième alinéa, de cette directive, selon laquelle la coopération doit être « fondée sur le concept de coopération ». Une telle formulation, en apparence tautologique, doit être interprétée comme renvoyant à l'exigence d'effectivité de la coopération ainsi établie ou mise en œuvre (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 4 juin 2020, Remondis, C-429/19, EU:C:2020:436, points 26 et 28).

82 Dès lors, le marché public concerné doit apparaître comme l'aboutissement d'une démarche de coopération entre les pouvoirs adjudicateurs parties à celui-ci. L'élaboration d'une coopération entre des entités appartenant au secteur public présente, en effet, une dimension intrinsèquement collaborative, qui fait défaut dans une procédure de passation d'un marché public relevant des règles prévues par ladite directive (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 4 juin 2020, Remondis, C-429/19, EU:C:2020:436, point 32).

83 Comme l'a souligné M. l'avocat général, au point 60 de ses conclusions, une telle dimension collaborative exige que, pour relever de l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24, la coopération en cause doit aboutir à la réalisation d'objectifs communs à l'ensemble des pouvoirs adjudicateurs.

84 Or, un tel objectif commun à l'ensemble des pouvoirs adjudicateurs fait défaut, lorsque, par l'accomplissement de ses missions, au titre du marché public concerné, un des pouvoirs adjudicateurs ne cherche pas à atteindre des objectifs qu'il partagerait avec les autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, mais se limite à contribuer à la réalisation d'objectifs que seuls ces autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs ont en commun.

85 Dans de telles circonstances, le marché public concerné a uniquement pour objet l'acquisition d'une prestation moyennant le versement d'une rémunération, de sorte qu'il ne serait pas visé par l'exclusion prévue à l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de cette directive (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 4 juin 2020, Remondis, C-429/19, EU:C:2020:436, points 36 à 38).

86 Sous réserve de vérification par la juridiction de renvoi, il ressort des éléments fournis à la Cour que, dans les circonstances en cause au principal, la participation de l'Igretec à un marché public visant à la mise en œuvre du projet d'écoquartier à Farciennes ne saurait relever de cette exclusion. En effet, ainsi que M. l'avocat général l'a observé, aux points 69 et 71 de ses conclusions, même si l'exercice de ses missions par l'Igretec s'inscrit dans le cadre de la coopération entre la SLSP Sambre & Biesme et la commune de Farciennes en vue de les assister dans la réalisation de leur projet commun de création d'un écoquartier à Farciennes, il n'en demeure pas moins qu'une telle réalisation ne constitue pas en elle-même un objectif poursuivi par l'Igretec.

87 Eu égard aux considérations qui précèdent, il y a lieu de répondre à la cinquième question dans l'affaire C-384/21 que l'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que n'est pas exclu du champ d'application de cette directive un marché public par lequel sont confiées à un pouvoir adjudicateur des missions de service public qui s'inscrivent dans le cadre d'une relation de coopération entre d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, lorsque, par l'accomplissement de telles missions, le pouvoir adjudicateur à qui ces missions ont été confiées ne cherche pas à atteindre des objectifs qu'il partagerait avec les autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, mais se limite à contribuer à la réalisation d'objectifs que seuls ces autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs ont en commun.

Sur les dépens

88 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens. Les frais exposés pour soumettre des observations à la Cour, autres que ceux desdites parties, ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un remboursement.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (cinquième chambre) dit pour droit :

1) L'article 12, paragraphes 3 et 4, de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive

2004/18/CE,

doit être interprété en ce sens que :

il produit des effets directs dans le cadre de litiges opposant des personnes morales de droit public au sujet de l'attribution directe de marchés publics, alors que l'État membre concerné s'est abstenu de transposer cette directive dans l'ordre juridique national dans les délais impartis.

2) L'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la directive 2014/24

doit être interprété en ce sens que :

afin d'établir qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale adjudicataire analogue à celui qu'ils exercent sur leurs propres services, l'exigence visée à cette disposition, tenant à ce qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur soit représenté dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, n'est pas satisfaite au seul motif que siège au conseil d'administration de cette personne morale le représentant d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur qui fait également partie du conseil d'administration du premier pouvoir adjudicateur.

3) L'article 12, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24

doit être interprété en ce sens que :

n'est pas exclu du champ d'application de cette directive un marché public par lequel sont confiées à un pouvoir adjudicateur des missions de service public qui s'inscrivent dans le cadre d'une relation de coopération entre d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, lorsque, par l'accomplissement de telles missions, le pouvoir adjudicateur à qui ces missions ont été confiées ne cherche pas à atteindre des objectifs qu'il partagerait avec les autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, mais se limite à contribuer à la réalisation d'objectifs que seuls ces autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs ont en commun.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA
delivered on 9 June 2022 (1)

Joined Cases C-383/21 and C-384/21

Société de logement de service public (SLSP) 'Sambre & Biesme', SCRL (C-383/21)
Commune de Farciennes (C-384/21)
v
Société wallonne du logement

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Conseil d'État (Council of State, acting as supreme administrative court, Belgium))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Directive 2014/24/EU – Public procurement – Services, works and project development – In-house award – In-house entity jointly controlled by several contracting authorities – Applicability of the directive)

1. In Belgium, a public housing developer and a municipality decided to conclude a framework procurement agreement. Under that agreement, a contract for technical assistance in connection with the building of housing and a contract for asbestos surveying services were to be granted not by competitive tendering but by direct award to a third party, which was also a public entity.

2. The authority commissioned by the Walloon Government to supervise the performance of public housing undertakings cancelled the aforementioned agreement on the ground that the conditions for a direct contract award were not met in that case.

3. The two signatories to that agreement each challenged its cancellation on the ground that, in their view, the direct award was compatible with Directive 2014/24. (2) The dispute has now reached the highest administrative court in Belgium, which has in each case made a reference to the Court for a preliminary ruling.

I. Legal framework. Directive 2014/24

4. According to recital 31:

'There is considerable legal uncertainty as to how far contracts concluded between entities in the public sector should be covered by public procurement rules. The relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union is interpreted differently between Member States and even between contracting authorities. It is therefore necessary to clarify in which cases contracts concluded within the public sector are not subject to the application of public procurement rules.

Such clarification should be guided by the principles set out in the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union. The sole fact that both parties to an agreement are themselves public authorities does not as such rule out the application of procurement rules. However, the application of public procurement rules should not interfere with the freedom of public authorities to perform the public service tasks conferred on them by using their own resources, which includes the possibility of cooperation with other public authorities.

5. Recital 33 states:

'Contracting authorities should be able to choose to provide jointly their public services by way of cooperation without being obliged to use any particular legal form. Such cooperation might cover all types of activities related to the performance of services and responsibilities assigned to or assumed by the participating authorities, such as mandatory or voluntary tasks of local or regional authorities or services conferred upon specific bodies by public law. The services provided by the various participating authorities need not necessarily be identical; they might also be complementary.

Contracts for the joint provision of public services should not be subject to the application of the rules set out in this Directive provided that they are concluded exclusively between contracting authorities, that the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest and that no private service provider is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

In order to fulfil those conditions, the cooperation should be based on a cooperative concept. Such cooperation does not require all participating authorities to assume the performance of main contractual obligations, as long as there are commitments to contribute towards the cooperative performance of the public service in question. In addition, the implementation of the cooperation, including any financial transfers between the participating contracting authorities, should be governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest.'

6. Article 12 ('Public contracts between entities within the public sector') provides:

'1. A public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contracting authority exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of the controlled legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

3. A contracting authority, which does not exercise over a legal person governed by private or public law control within the meaning of paragraph 1, may nevertheless award a public contract to that legal person without applying this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled.

(a) the contracting authority exercises jointly with other contracting authorities a control over that legal person which is similar to that which they exercise over their own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of that legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authorities or by other legal persons controlled by the same contracting authorities;

For the purposes of point (a) of the first subparagraph, contracting authorities exercise joint control over a legal person where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(i) the decision-making bodies of the controlled legal person are composed of representatives of all participating contracting authorities. Individual representatives may represent several or all of the participating contracting authorities;

(ii) those contracting authorities are able to jointly exert decisive influence over the strategic objectives and significant decisions of the controlled legal person; and

(iii) the controlled legal person does not pursue any interests which are contrary to those of the controlling contracting authorities.

4. A contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common;

(b) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

(c) the participating contracting authorities perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation.

II. Facts, proceedings and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

7. The company Société de logement de service public Sambre & Biesme (3) is a public entity in the legal form of a limited-liability cooperative society. Its main shareholders are the municipalities of Farciennes and Aiseau-Presles. It forms part of the network of public housing development companies in the Walloon Region (Belgium).

8. In 2015, SLSP Sambre & Biesme and the municipality of Farciennes decided to create an ‘ecodistrict’ comprising some 150 public and private housing units in Farciennes. Given the scale of the project, the parties sought the assistance of the Intercommunale pour la gestion et la réalisation d’études techniques et économiques, (4) an entity also in the legal form of a limited-liability cooperative society.

9. IGRETEC is comprised exclusively of legal persons governed by public law. In 2016, its members included more than 70 municipalities (including Farciennes) and more than 50 other ‘public authorities’. The municipalities held 5 054 351 voting shares, with the remaining public authorities holding 17 126 such shares.

10. Under IGRETEC’s articles of association, most of the votes and chairmanship of the various management bodies are reserved for the municipalities. The decisions of these bodies are adopted by majority of the votes cast by the municipal members.

11. At the material time, a councillor from the Municipality of Farciennes, who was also a director of SLSP Sambre & Biesme, was a member of IGRETEC’s board of directors.

12. On 29 October 2015, SLSP Sambre & Biesme decided to buy a single share in IGRETEC, for EUR 6.20, in order to benefit from its services. It thus became a member of the inter-municipal company, although its shareholding was purely symbolic. (5)

13. In January 2017, the Municipality of Farciennes and SLSP Sambre & Biesme drew up a draft framework agreement in order to establish their respective rights and obligations in the design and construction of the ecodistrict in Farciennes. The agreement contained the following clauses:

— Under Article 1, the parties decided to undertake jointly the public procurement of services, works and project development and designated the Municipality of Farciennes as contracting authority with the task of acting on their joint behalf and taking on its own initiative any decision relating to the award of contracts.

— According to Article 5, (6) 'the parties agree that the Municipality of Farciennes will conclude with IGRETEC … an agreement on project management assistance, legal advice and environmental services, within the framework of the in-house relationship which each of the parties has with that inter-municipal cooperative'.

— With a view to coordinating decision-making in connection with the implementation of the framework agreement, the annex thereto provided for a steering committee. (7)

— IGRETEC, although not a signatory to the framework agreement, would not only be represented on the steering committee but would also act as its secretariat.

14. On 9 February 2017, the board of directors of SLSP Sambre & Biesme decided: (a) 'to approve the conclusion of a framework agreement on the conclusion of contracts in conjunction with the Municipality of Farciennes'; and (b) 'not to issue a public call for tenders for asbestos surveying services', the specifications for which it had previously approved, 'in view of the in-house relationship between [SLSP Sambre & Biesme] and IGRETEC'. Those specifications are described as the first stage in the implementation of the ecodistrict project in Farciennes.

15. On 10 February 2017, the SWL representative assigned to SLSP Sambre & Biesme challenged the aforementioned decisions ('the contested decisions') before SWL itself. SWL acts on behalf of the Walloon Government as the oversight authority responsible for supervising public housing development companies.

16. On 25 February 2017, SWL annulled the contested decisions on the ground that the contracts for technical assistance (Article 5 of the framework agreement) and the contract for asbestos surveying had been awarded to IGRETEC without a public procurement procedure.

17. In the view of SWL:

— It is reasonable to question whether SLSP Sambre & Biesme exerts a decisive influence over IGRETEC, in so far as it holds only one share in the equity capital of that cooperative, under whose articles of association the municipalities hold a predominant position.

— The designation of the Municipality of Farciennes as the lead contracting authority for the project (Article 1 of the framework agreement) is not sufficient to justify the direct award of the contracts to IGRETEC on behalf of the various parties to that agreement, even though the Municipality of Farciennes qualifies for the in-house exception in its own right in its dealings with IGRETEC. In the context of a joint contract, the various partners come together to configure the requirement, but they each have a duty to follow the customary contracting procedures.

18. As the SWL agreements are actionable before the administrative courts, SLSP Sambre & Biesme and the Municipality of Farciennes, proceeding separately, challenged the annulment of the contested decisions.

19. The Conseil d'État (Council of State, acting as supreme administrative court, Belgium), to which it falls to rule on those actions, has made two references to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

20. By the first reference (Case C-383/21), it raises the following questions:

‘(1) Must Article 12(3) of Directive 2014/24 … be interpreted as having direct effect?

(2) If the answer to the first question is in the affirmative, must Article 12(3) of Directive 2014/24 be interpreted as meaning that the requirement for a contracting authority, in this case a public service housing company, to be represented on the decision-making bodies of the controlled legal person, in this case an inter-municipal cooperative society, is satisfied solely on the basis that a person who sits on the board of directors of that inter-municipal cooperative society in his or her capacity as a municipal councillor of another participating contracting authority, in this case a municipality, is, due to purely factual circumstances and without any legal guarantee of representation, also a director of the public service housing company, while the municipality is a (non-exclusive) shareholder in both the controlled entity (inter-municipal cooperative society) and the public service housing company?

(3) If the answer to the first question is negative, must it be considered that a contracting authority, in this case a public service housing company, “participates” in the decision-making bodies of the controlled legal person, in this case an inter-municipal cooperative society, solely on the basis that a person who sits on the board of directors of that inter-municipal cooperative society in his or her capacity as a municipal councillor of another participating contracting authority, in this case a municipality, is, due to purely factual circumstances and without any legal guarantee of representation, also a director of the public service housing company, while the municipality is a (non-exclusive) shareholder in both the controlled entity (inter-municipal cooperative society) and the public service housing company?’

21. In the second reference for a preliminary ruling (Case C-384/21), the referring court raises the following questions in addition to those set out above:

‘(4) Must Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 … be interpreted as having direct effect?

(5) If the answer to that question is in the affirmative, must Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 be interpreted as meaning that it allows tasks of project management assistance and legal and environmental services to be entrusted, without a prior call for competition, to a contracting authority, in this case an inter-municipal cooperative society, where those tasks form part of a cooperation between two other contracting authorities, in this case a municipality and a public service housing company, where it is not disputed that the municipality exercises “joint in-house” control over the inter-municipal cooperative society and where the municipality and the public service housing company are members of the inter-municipal cooperative society in the “consultancy and management and central purchasing” sector of its object, which is specifically concerned with the tasks they wish to entrust to it, which tasks correspond to activities carried out on the market by consultancy and management firms specialising in the design, execution and implementation of projects?’

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice

22. The requests for a preliminary ruling were registered at the Court on 24 June 2021. They were joined for the purposes of the written and oral stages of the procedure and the judgment.

23. Written observations have been lodged by SLSP Sambre & Biesme, the Municipality of Farciennes, the Belgian Government and the Commission. All of those parties attended the hearing held on 30 March 2022.

IV. Analysis

A. Preliminary point

24. In accordance with the Court's direction, this Opinion will deal with the first question in each case and with the fourth and fifth questions in the second case.

B. First question referred in Case C-383/21 and first and fourth questions referred in Case C-384/21

25. The referring court explains that the Belgian law incorporating Directive 2014/24 into domestic law was not yet in force at the time of the facts forming the subject of the dispute, even though the time limit for transposition had already expired. (8)

26. The applicants in the two cases each maintain that that Article 12(3) and (4) of Directive 2014/24 has direct effect, since it contains unconditional and sufficiently precise provisions which establish rights for individuals which the latter may enforce against the State and all of the bodies comprising its administration. (9)

27. The Belgian Government and the Commission (10) take the opposite view. They argue that Article 12(3) and (4) of Directive 2014/24 does not fulfil the conditions for producing direct effect, inasmuch as, in essence:

— The contracting authorities and public-law bodies covered by the public procurement directives are not 'individuals' benefiting from rights capable of being enforced against the State.

— Those provisions do not impose on the State an obligation to take or to refrain from taking action for the benefit of economic operators.

28. The outcome which I shall advocate below (that Article 12(3) and (4) of Directive 2014/24 is applicable to this dispute) would be arrived at in practice whether via the route of accepting that the benefit of any direct effect produced by those paragraphs extends to the public entities concerned, and is capable of being relied on by them against the State, or by simply arguing that, since that directive was not transposed within the time limit, those entities were bound by the aforementioned provisions. In my view, the latter proposition is correct.

1. Direct effect, unconditional nature and possibility for the public authorities to rely on Article 12(3) and (4) of Directive 2014/24

29. To my mind, the premiss underlying the aforementioned questions referred is not entirely sound. If it were, the answer would have to be along the lines of that which SWL advocated in the dispute in the main proceedings and which the Belgian Government and the Commission are putting forward in these proceedings.

30. In support of that answer, I would recall that the primary purpose of the 'direct effect' doctrine developed by the Court in connection with directives is to protect individuals. It allows them to exercise the rights which directives confer on them and which they could not otherwise assert in the absence of the necessary implementing measures at national level.

31. The Court's settled case-law on the direct effect of directives, in particular those not transposed in time or not correctly transposed, establishes who can rely on such direct effect and under what conditions.

32. In the recent judgment of 8 March 2022, the Court held:

— 'Whenever the provisions of a directive appear, so far as their subject matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, they may be relied upon before the national courts by individuals against the State where the latter has failed to implement the directive in domestic law by the end of the period prescribed or where it has failed to implement the directive correctly …' (11)

— '… a provision of EU law is, first, unconditional where it sets forth an obligation which is not qualified by any condition, or subject, in its implementation or effects, to the taking of any measure either by the institutions of the European Union or by the Member States and, second, sufficiently precise to be relied on by an individual and applied by a court where it sets out an obligation in unequivocal terms …' (12)

— '… even though a directive leaves the Member States a degree of latitude when they adopt rules in order to implement it, a provision of that directive may be regarded as unconditional and precise where it imposes on Member States in unequivocal terms a precise obligation as to the result to be achieved, which is not coupled with any condition regarding application of the rule laid down by it …' (13)

33. On that basis, I take the view that public entities such as the Municipality of Farciennes and SLSP Sambre & Biesme, which are simply an emanation of the State in a broad sense, cannot rely as against the latter on the (hypothetical) direct effect of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24.

34. For one thing, even if that article were regarded as containing a 'sufficiently precise' form of words in paragraphs 3 and 4 thereof, it could not readily be said to be of an 'unconditional nature' or to impose an unequivocal obligation on Member States. On the contrary, it authorises those States, should they deem it appropriate to do so, to exclude contracts concluded between public-sector entities from the scope of Directive 2014/24.

35. The Court explains that Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24, 'which … does no more than state the conditions which a contracting authority must observe when it wishes to conclude an in-house transaction, … empower[s] the Member States to exclude such a transaction from the scope of Directive 2014/24'. (14)

36. In the same vein, the Court states that Directive 2014/24 'does not require the Member States to have recourse to a public procurement procedure' and 'it cannot compel them to have recourse to an in-house transaction where the conditions laid down in Article 12(1) are satisfied'. (15) The same is true of paragraphs 3 and 4 of that article.

37. That statement is consistent with the freedom of the Member States 'as to the choice of means of providing services whereby the contracting authorities meet their own needs'. (16)

38. For another thing, as I have already said, municipal entities and bodies governed by public law (even if they take the form of commercial companies) cannot rely as against the State on the alleged 'direct effect' of Article 12(3) and (4) of Directive 2014/24. In their relations with the State bodies that control their decisions, municipal entities are not 'individuals' who are able to invoke that effect.

39. For those reasons, and notwithstanding that I consider an answer to the question of the direct effect of Article 12(3) and (4) of Directive 2014/24 to be unnecessary in this dispute, my view, should the Court decide to address this question, which was extensively debated at the hearing, is the same as that expressed at that hearing by the Belgian Government and the Commission.

40. Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 lays down the minimum conditions attached to a power the exercise of which, as I have said, the Member States may completely exclude. If they do not opt for exclusion, the only imaginable scenario in which Article 12 would have direct effect (on which only an economic operator considering itself to have been harmed would be eligible to rely) would be one in which a contracting authority sought to evade the public procurement rules and to have recourse to an in-house transaction or to horizontal cooperation in the absence of the minimum conditions laid down by the aforementioned article.

2. Application of Article 12(3) and (4) of Directive 2014/24 to public authorities

41. The foregoing does not mean, however, that Article 12(3) and (4) of Directive 2014/24 is not applicable in this case.

42. The requirement for public authorities to comply with Article 12(3) and (4) before the directive has been transposed derives not from any direct effect which those paragraphs might have, but from 'the obligation imposed on all State authorities to comply with the provisions of directives (third paragraph of Article 288 TFEU) as well as to adhere to the duty of sincere cooperation and to ensure complete fulfilment of the obligations arising out of the Treaties or resulting from the acts of the institutions (Article 4(3) TEU)'. (17)

43. The correct answer to the first question referred in each of the two references for a preliminary ruling should therefore, preferably, focus on the link that exists between public authorities and Directive 2014/24 (what might be called its binding effect, as the Commission described it at the hearing) in the case where that directive has not yet been transposed notwithstanding that the time limit for its transposition has expired.

44. The Court has confirmed that requirement of compliance. (18)

45. So far as concerns the contracting authorities involved in these two disputes, the public nature of which is not in issue, this means that they were bound by Directive 2014/24 as from the date on which that directive should have been transposed. (19)

46. In the absence of transposition and irrespective of whether or not Article 12(3) and (4) of Directive 2014/24 had direct effect such as to enable individuals to rely on those provisions as against the public authorities or the entities answerable to them, the latter, in so far as they were acting as contracting authorities, were obliged to comply with the conditions laid down in that article.

47. If, with a view to obtaining the services necessary to implement their respective projects, the Municipality of Farciennes and SLSP Sambre & Biesme preferred not to have recourse to the market and wished to avoid the customary public procurement procedures, they were, at the material time, subject to the conditions laid down in Article 12 of Directive 2014/24.

48. Once the directive has been transposed, cooperation between public entities, whether vertical (in-house) or horizontal, will not be subject to the public procurement procedures if the Member State, exercising its freedom to do so, has decided to avail itself of the options for exclusion from the scope of Directive 2014/24 that are afforded to it by Article 12 as interpreted by the Court. (20)

49. Accordingly, where a Member State has chosen to permit the mechanisms for inter-administrative cooperation that are excluded from the formalised procedures laid down in Directive 2014/24, its contracting authorities must comply with the conditions laid down in Article 12(3) and (4) thereof, whether or not they intend to have recourse to the market in order to obtain particular services or supplies.

C. Fifth question referred in Case C-384/21

1. Subject matter

50. The fifth question in Case C-384/21 concerns the exclusion from the scope of Directive 2014/24 that is provided for in Article 12(4) thereof.

51. Unlike the exclusion envisaged in Article 12(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/24, whereby a contracting authority (or a number of contracting authorities) must exercise control over a tenderer which has been awarded a public contract, the exclusion provided for in paragraph 4 is based on cooperation among contracting authorities between which no such relationship of control exists.

52. The question referred arises from the arguments which the Municipality of Farciennes put forward in the alternative, in the event that it is concluded that, in the light of the relationship between SLSP Sambre & Biesme and IGRETEC, the conditions laid down in Article 12(3) of the directive are not met. (21)

53. The Municipality of Farciennes submits that, in the absence of the joint control provided for in that paragraph, horizontal cooperation between contracting authorities is still possible under Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. The cooperation between itself, SLSP Sambre & Biesme and IGRETEC is of this nature.

54. I infer from reading its observations that the Municipality of Farciennes advocates two ways of understanding the relationship between the public entities in question:

— According to the first, which the municipality appears to prefer, that relationship is characterised by a horizontal cooperation which, according to the Municipality of Farciennes and SLSP Sambre & Biesme, is intended to support implementation of the ecodistrict creation plan and, according to IGRETEC, to assist the latter's work for the benefit of its members, which is to contribute towards their projects. The agreement between the parties is therefore geared towards the attainment of common objectives. (22)

— According to the second, the in-house relationship between the municipality and IGRETEC is defined by the fact that, where the municipality entrusts the performance of certain services to IGRETEC, the latter uses the former's own departments, a fact which must be taken into account in the context of its cooperation with SLSP Sambre & Biesme. (23)

55. In both configurations, the relationship is covered by Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. Consequently, a public call for tenders is unnecessary.

2. Cooperation under Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24

56. According to Article 12(4), a public contract does not fall within the scope of Directive 2014/24 if the three conditions laid down in points (a), (b) and (c) of that paragraph are cumulatively met. (24)

57. The national court's doubts revolve around the concept of 'cooperation' within the meaning of that article, which must be interpreted independently. (25)

58. I explained on a different occasion (26) that the provision in question incorporates the Court's case-law prior to codification but expands upon that case-law by clarifying it and making it more flexible, bringing the conditions it lays down into line to some extent with those applicable to the other scenarios in which certain contracts concluded by public-sector entities may be excluded from Directive 2014/24. (27)

59. This explains the following characteristics of horizontal cooperation that is not subject to the formalised public procurement procedures under Directive 2014/24:

— There is no requirement, as was the case under the previous case-law, (28) for the cooperation to support the joint performance of a public-service task common to all of the participating contracting authorities. (29)

— Cooperation may relate to (or take the form of) activities to support public services, provided that they contribute towards the actual delivery of those services. (30)

— The services provided by the contracting authorities do not necessarily have to be identical. Subject to compliance with the condition that they are driven by objectives pursued in common, which must also be in the public interest, such services may be complementary. (31)

— So long as there are commitments to contribute towards the cooperative performance of the public service, it is not necessary for each of the parties to participate equally in the cooperation, which may be based on a division of tasks or on a particular specialisation. (32)

60. It is essential, on the other hand, that the collaboration between the parties should be intended to achieve objectives common to all of them. This is a key element of horizontal cooperation that differentiates the latter from the direct award of contracts to entities controlled by the contracting authority.

61. This was the view taken by the Court in the judgment in Remondis II when referring to the 'inherently collaborative dimension' of the cooperation provided for in Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. That dimension can be seen in particular in the fact that, when drawing up the cooperation agreement, the parties define common needs and identify solutions to them. (33)

62. What is more, horizontal cooperation is based on a cooperative concept, meaning that it takes the form of reciprocal commitments on the part of those participating in it. Those commitments go beyond the performance of a particular service, on the one hand, and the remuneration for that service, on the other, as the judgment in Remondis II makes clear. (34)

63. The expression 'cooperative concept' explicitly contained in recital 33 of Directive 2014/24 is equivalent to the proposals for the requirement of a 'genuine cooperation' 'involving mutual rights and obligations of the parties'. (35) It is not possible for one of the contracting authorities to be 'a mere "buyer"' (36) of the work, service or supply in question.

64. The genuine nature of the cooperation is fundamental in any agreement that seeks to benefit from Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. That feature will make it possible to distinguish this form of horizontal cooperation from vertical (in-house) cooperation, as well as from contracts subject to public procurement procedures, whereby one party performs a task in accordance with specifications laid down by the other, which, in turn, simply pays for the performance of that task. (37)

3. In the case in the main proceedings

(a) First scenario

65. The Municipality of Farciennes presents an initial scenario in support of its argument as to the existence of a relationship of horizontal cooperation between itself, SLSP Sambre & Biesmes and IGRETEC.

66. In summary, I would recall that:

— SLSP Sambre & Biesme and the Municipality of Farciennes took the initiative to undertake jointly their respective housing redevelopment and urban renewal projects in a given district.

— To that end, they concluded a framework procurement agreement to which IGRETEC was not a signatory.

— IGRETEC's involvement came about as a result of the commissioning of the services necessary to implement the ecodistrict project. That commission followed the decision of the contracting authorities to join forces in order to carry out that project.

67. In my opinion, the trilateral relationship as described above is not covered by Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. I concur in my assessment with the referring court, which takes the view that 'the mere fact that [IGRETEC] performs, in the context of the agreement concluded between the Municipality of Farciennes and SLSP Sambre & Biesme, tasks aimed at implementing a joint project for the creation of the ecodistrict in Farciennes does not mean that IGRETEC itself cooperates on that project, or that it pursues an objective in common with the signatories to that agreement'. (38)

68. There are several reasons why I endorse that assessment by the referring court, with which the Commission concurs, in the light of the description of the facts provided by that court. I should emphasise that it is for that court alone to establish the factual framework for the dispute, and, in doing so, to evaluate the actions of the parties to the dispute and the purpose pursued by each of them in taking those actions.

69. First, as the referring court notes in the terms I have just reproduced, there is no commonality of objectives that would warrant the existence between the three entities of cooperation within the meaning of Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. (39)

70. Following its analysis of IGRETEC's articles of association and its involvement in the projects at issue, the Conseil d'État (Council of State, Belgium) notes that the tasks performed by IGRETEC in this case fall under 'sector I' of its corporate purpose, that is to say activities carried out on the market by consultancy and management firms specialising in the implementation of projects, not 'sector II', which is concerned with the region's development from an economic, social and tourism point of view, and, in particular, the construction, financing and use of certain properties. (40)

71. Second, the collaborative dimension evidenced at the initial stage by the definition of needs and solutions common to the parties looking to cooperate is also lacking. At that stage, IGRETEC's professional intervention may serve to enable the Municipality of Farciennes and SLSP Sambre & Biesme to identify and understand the needs of the ecodistrict project which they both wish to create. IGRETEC's needs, on the other hand, are different.

72. Third, the strategy for how best to share and pool the parties' resources seems to me to be confined to the Municipality of Farciennes and SLSP Sambre & Biesme, even though they are working on the basis of options proposed by IGRETEC. (41) The latter does not actually provide any public service jointly with the municipality and SLSP Sambre et Biesme.

73. Finally, IGRETEC's incorporation into the relationship between the two contracting authorities (42) by way of the agreement on assistance with project management and legal and environmental services does not meet the requirements of genuine cooperation. By that agreement, the Municipality of Farciennes and SLSP Sambre & Biesme do not make, in relation to IGRETEC, any commitments that they would not make in a public call for tenders: they require services which IGRETEC offers and the sole obligation into which they enter in return is to pay for those services.

(b) Second scenario

74. The second scenario envisages a combination of horizontal and vertical cooperation whereby IGRETEC, controlled by one of the two participants in the horizontal cooperation (the Municipality of Farciennes), provides a service for the other participant (SLSP Sambre & Biesme) too and is paid by both.

75. The Municipality of Farciennes takes the view that, when it commissions IGRETEC to provide assistance with project management and legal and environmental services, the latter uses the municipality's own resources. That fact should also be taken into account in the context of the cooperation between itself and SLSP Sambre & Biesme.

76. I cannot accept that argument, which the Municipality of Farciennes itself puts forward in the alternative (in the course of a submission which is itself ancillary to the main proposition) and on which, perhaps for that reason, it does not elaborate further.

77. If I understand it correctly, the position of the Municipality of Farciennes is that the two entities party to the vertical cooperation relationship (IGRETEC and the municipality itself) are, by virtue of that relationship, a single entity for the purposes of horizontal cooperation with a third party. (43) There is therefore no need for both entities to sign the framework agreement with SLSP Sambre & Biesme.

78. I do not concur with that argument. In the context of vertical (in-house) cooperation, the contracting authority and the delivery body over which it exercises a control similar to that which it holds over its own departments are formally distinct entities both before and after they conclude a public contract.

79. Thus, the existence of an in-house relationship between the Municipality of Farciennes and IGRETEC is not sufficient to support the view that the requirements attached to the presence of horizontal cooperation with SLSP Sambre & Biesme are met.

V. Conclusion

80. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court's answer to the Conseil d'État (Council of State, acting as supreme administrative court, Belgium) should be as follows:

(1) A contracting authority which wishes to award a public contract falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC without being subject to the award procedures laid down in that directive must fulfil the conditions set out in Article 12 thereof as from the deadline for transposing that directive into national law, if it has not been so transposed by that date.

(2) Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that:

– It precludes the existence of cooperation between contracting authorities where the relationship which exists between them, and in the context of which they undertake to provide their respective services, does not pursue objectives common to all of them.

– It does not cover a relationship between independent contracting authorities under which one obtains from the other a service in return exclusively for payment in money.

19 Following (correct) transposition, the public procurement rules and the exceptions to them are as laid down in national legislation. At the hearing, it was reported that the Belgian legislature largely reproduced the content of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 in the Law of 17 June 2016. It could, however, not have done so. Transposition not entailing recourse to the power of exclusion provided for in Article 12 is therefore (in theory) conceivable.

20 It is a cliché to require that that interpretation should be strict, on the ground that the situations referred to in Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 are 'exceptions' to, or 'derogations' from, that directive. Without wishing to embark here upon a discussion of how that interpretation is to be applied, I should reiterate that that article defines the scope of the Directive. It is not, strictly speaking, an exception to it (see my Opinion in Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung, C-796/18, EU:C:2020:47, points 37 and 38).

21 It is clear from the wording of the question that, in the view of the referring court, the Municipality of Farciennes exercises over IGRETEC a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, but the same is not true of the relationship between SLSP Sambre & Biesme and IGRETEC.

24 In addition to those conditions, inter-administrative cooperation must in any event comply with the basic rules of the TFEU, in particular those relating to the free movement of goods, the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, and the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. On the prohibition of cooperation between contracting authorities which has the effect of favouring one private undertaking over its competitors, see the judgment of 28 May 2020, Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung (C-796/18, EU:C:2020:395, paragraph 63 et seq. and paragraph 3 of the operative part).

27 Prior to Directive 2014/24, the Court had refused to recognise horizontal cooperation in the direct award of contracts relating to the provision of support services to a public department, such as the production of architectural or engineering designs and office cleaning: see, in the case of the former, the judgment of 19 December 2012, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others (C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817); and, in the case of the latter, the judgment of 13 June 2013, Piepenbrock (C-386/11, EU:C:2013:385). Nonetheless, it was possible to argue that the reason for that refusal lay not in the ancillary nature of the service but in the fact that the inter partes agreement was not directed towards the joint performance of shared public-service tasks: I refer to paragraph 34 of the judgment in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others and to paragraph 39 of the judgment in Piepenbrock. Be that as it may, that restriction disappeared in the directive in force.

28 In addition to those cited in the previous footnote, see the judgments of 9 June 2009, Commission v Germany (C-480/06, EU:C:2009:357, paragraph 37), and of 8 May 2014, Datenlotsen Informationssysteme (C-15/13, EU:C:2014:303, paragraph 35). A provision to the same effect was included by the Commission in its Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement (COM/2011/0896 final), Article 11(4)(a).

---

29 Judgment of 28 May 2020, Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung (C-796/18, EU:C:2020:395, paragraphs 57 and 58 and operative part).

---

30 Ibidem, paragraphs 59 and 60 and the operative part. In my Opinion in that case (C-796/18, EU:C:2020:47, points 84 and 85), I submitted that supporting activities must be 'immediately and inseparably linked to the public service', being 'of such fundamental importance that the service itself could not be performed as a public service without them'. Although the form of words used by the Court is different, it is in my view no looser for that.

---

31 Examples of complementary services include waste collection and treatment activities, as referred to in the judgment of 9 June 2009, Commission v Germany (C-480/06, EU:C:2009:357); or teaching and research activities pursued by public universities, as mentioned by Advocate General in his Opinion in Datenlotsen Informationssysteme (C-15/13, EU:C:2014:23, point 59). In practice, the flexibility granted by Directive 2014/24 may prove to be redundant because the difference in the substance of the services provided by each contracting authority does not enable them to define objectives that are common to all those services. In such circumstances, an essential element of cooperation would be lacking. It is also conceivable that that difference might prevent the services from being performed in a cooperative manner, because one contracting authority has no interest in the services offered by the other, or because the complementarity is unilateral rather than reciprocal. Accordingly, if the relationship between the parties is confined to the fact that the contracting authority interested in the other contracting authority's services buys those services from the latter authority for a price, there is no cooperation within the meaning of Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. Neither, probably, could there be said to be an interaction governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest, as point (b) of that same paragraph requires: charging a fee for providing a service is not an objective in the public interest. The reference to complementary services (more specifically, public service 'tasks') appears in recital 14(aa) of the Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement, annexed to the Note by the General Secretariat, Council Document 14971/12 of 19 October 2012. The exclusion of cooperation from the directive was expressly made subject to the condition that the complementary services could be delivered 'in a cooperative manner'. Given that it was redundant, the disappearance of that requirement from the final text is irrelevant.

32 Third paragraph of recital 33 of Directive 2014/24. This idea had already appeared in the Commission staff working document on the application of the EU public procurement rules to relations between contracting authorities (cooperation within the public sector), SEC(2011) 1169 final of 4 October 2011, point 3.3.2

33 The judgment in Remondis II, paragraphs 32 and 33.

34 Ibidem, paragraph 27.

35 Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement of 20 December 2011 [COM(2011) 896 final], Article 11(4)(a).

36 This expression appears in the Note by the Secretariat-General, Council Document 9315/12 of 27 April 2012, p. 38. In the judgment in Remondis II, the idea is referred to in paragraph 29.

37 Horizontal cooperation does not preclude financial transfers between the participants but it does, as I have said, make it impossible for the contribution of one of the participants to be confined to a mere payment.

38 Order for reference in Case C-384/21, p. 56.

39 Order for reference in Case C-384/21, p. 56. The observations of the parties do not reveal any purpose common to all of them, if one exists, and that purpose is not obvious to an outside observer. In my opinion, these cases illustrate the difficulties I mentioned in footnote 31. An example of cooperation in connection with (and through) the provision of complementary services having the same aim can be found in the contract analysed in the judgment of 9 June 2009, Commission v Germany (C-480/06, EU:C:2009:357): see paragraph 37 thereof. The common objective was the rationalisation of waste treatment at the nearest possible facility.

40 Order for reference in Case C-384/21, pp. 56 and 57. It should nonetheless be noted that a precondition for exclusion from the scope of Directive 2014/24, pursuant to Article 12 thereof, is that the contracting authority should have a choice between procuring the service through (vertical or horizontal) inter-administrative cooperation or by going to the market. In general, services obtained through cooperation between public entities can (also) be obtained on the market.

41 Its proposals focused on matters such as the number of housing units, the demolition or refurbishment of existing units, the use of private capital investment, the type of public contract and so on.

42 In actual fact, as the Commission indicates (paragraph 33 of its written observations), IGRETEC does not have the appearance of a contracting authority. There is no indication of what service IGRETEC might ‘acquire’ and would have to put out to tender in the absence of the cooperation relationship.

43 Paragraph 146 in fine of the observations of the Municipality of Farciennes: ‘By definition, the in-house relationship means that [IGRETEC] can be regarded as being equivalent to the Municipality of Farciennes’. Although, at the hearing, the representative for the municipality referred to a ‘functional and organic link’ between the two entities, she maintained the line of argument based on the in-house relationship between them.

VI^e CHAMBRE

n^o 259.019 du 4 mars 2024

A. 222.093/VI-21.017

En cause : la société coopérative à responsabilité limitée Société de logement de service public (SLSP) « Sambre & Biesme SCRL »,

ayant élu domicile chez
M^es Jean LAURENT et Charline SERVAIS, avocats, avenue Louise 250
1050 Bruxelles,

contre :

la Société wallonne du logement (SWL),

ayant élu domicile chez
M^e Marie VASTMANS, avocat,
avenue Tedesco 7
1160 Bruxelles.

I. Objet de la requête

Par une requête introduite le 28 avril 2017, la partie requérante demande l'annulation de :

« la décision du 25 février 2017 par laquelle la Société wallonne du logement a décidé d'annuler :
- la décision du conseil d'administration de la société de logement de service public "SAMBRE & BIESME" du 9 février 2017 approuvant la convention-cadre de marchés conjoints passée avec la commune de Farciennes ;
- la décision du conseil d'administration de la société de logement de service public "SAMBRE & BIESME" du 9 février 2017 refusant la mise en concurrence d'un marché de services d'inventaire amiante au motif d'une relation "in house" l'unissant à l'intercommunale ».

II. Procédure

Un arrêt n° 250.896 du 15 juin 2021 a sursis à statuer, posé trois questions préjudicielles à la Cour de Justice de l'Union européenne et, sur le vu des réponses qui seraient données à ces questions, chargé le membre de l'auditorat, désigné par l'Auditeur général, de déposer un rapport complémentaire.

Cet arrêt a été notifié aux parties.

Par un arrêt du 22 décembre 2022, la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne a répondu aux questions posées (affaires jointes C-383/21 et C-384/21).

M^me^ Geneviève Martou, premier auditeur chef de section au Conseil d'État, a rédigé un rapport sur la base de l'article 13 du règlement général de procédure.

Le rapport a été notifié aux parties.

Les parties ont déposé des derniers mémoires.

Par une ordonnance du 17 janvier 2024, l'affaire a été fixée à l'audience du 21 février 2024.

M^me^ Florence Piret, conseillère d'État, présidente f.f., a exposé son rapport.

M^e^ Charline Servais, avocate, comparaissant pour la partie requérante, et M^e^ Marie Vastmans, avocate, comparaissant pour la partie adverse, ont été entendues en leurs observations.

M^me^ Geneviève Martou, premier auditeur chef de section, a été entendue en son avis conforme.

Il est fait application des dispositions relatives à l'emploi des langues, inscrites au titre VI, chapitre II, des lois sur le Conseil d'État, coordonnées le 12 janvier 1973.

III. Exposé des faits utiles

Les faits utiles à l'examen du recours ont été exposés dans l'arrêt n° 250.896 du 15 juin 2021. Il y a lieu de s'y référer.

IV. Premier moyen

IV.1. Thèse de la partie requérante

Il est renvoyé à l'arrêt n° 250.896 du 15 juin 2021 pour l'exposé de la thèse défendue par la requérante dans sa requête, son mémoire en réplique et le dernier mémoire qu'elle a déposé avant la réouverture des débats.

Dans le dernier mémoire qu'elle a déposé après la réouverture des débats, la requérante fait valoir que l'article 12, § 3, alinéa 2, sous i), de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil du 26 février 2014 sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE n'impose pas que chaque pouvoir organisateur dispose d'un administrateur au sein du conseil d'administration, ni que la représentation de plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs par une même personne devrait être juridiquement garantie, mais qu'il suffit que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs soient représentés au sein des organes décisionnels de l'intercommunale, une même personne pouvant représenter plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants ou l'ensemble d'entre eux. Elle estime qu'en l'espèce, la condition de représentation de la SLSP au sein du conseil d'administration de l'intercommunale IGRETEC est, dans les faits, rencontrée, ce qu'elle détaille.

IV.2. Appréciation du Conseil d'État

Dans l'arrêt intermédiaire n° 250.896 du 15 juin 2021, le Conseil d'État a jugé que :

- le premier grief du premier moyen tiré du prétendu revirement d'attitude de la partie adverse manquait en fait ;

- le troisième grief du premier moyen tiré du caractère licite de l'article 6 de la convention-cadre de marché conjoint conclue avec la commune de Farciennes n'était pas fondé.

Le deuxième grief du premier moyen tiré de la prétendue relation in house entre la requérante et l'intercommunale IGRETEC a donné lieu à trois questions préjudicielles qui ont été posées à la Cour de Justice de l'Union européenne. Avant de poser ces questions, l'arrêt n° 250.896 procède toutefois à une série de constats et émet un certain nombre de considérations. Le Conseil d'État relève notamment les éléments suivants :

« En l'espèce, il ressort des pièces du dossier que la SLSP "Sambre & Biesme" a, le 29 octobre 2015, acquis, pour un montant de 6,20 euros, une part sociale dans l'intercommunale IGRETEC, pour bénéficier directement des services de cette dernière, et donc dans la perspective de ne pas devoir s'ouvrir, pour la fourniture de ces services, à la concurrence. Cette part sociale fait de la SLSP un associé de "catégorie C1". Suivant les pièces communiquées au Conseil d'État, cette unique part sociale représentait, au 31 décembre 2015, 0,0000049 % des 20.366.778 parts sociales de l'intercommunale et 0,0000197 % des 5.071.477 parts donnant droit au vote en assemblée générale. Il ressort également de ces pièces qu'au même moment, les associés de "catégorie C" représentaient ensemble 0,084 % des parts sociales de l'intercommunale et 0,34 % des parts sociales donnant droit au vote en assemblée générale. Les associés de "catégorie C" – et en particulier la SLSP "Sambre & Biesme" – se trouvaient, dès lors, dans la situation d'associés très minoritaires au sein d'IGRETEC.

Quoi que la requérante puisse en dire, cette position très minoritaire ne permettait pas aux associés de catégorie C de contribuer effectivement au contrôle d'IGRETEC. Conformément aux statuts de l'intercommunale, chaque associé dispose, en assemblée générale, d'autant de voix qu'il a de parts sociales, en sorte que, comme le souligne l'acte attaqué, "une détention infime du capital social d'IGRETEC m[ène] […] à une faible influence". De plus, comme le reconnaissent toutes les parties et le souligne l'acte attaqué, les statuts, dans leur version applicable au moment des faits litigieux, donnaient, à tout point de vue et dans tous les organes décisionnels, la prépondérance aux communes (associées de catégories A), dans le respect des dispositions du Code de la démocratie locale et de la décentralisation, sans prévoir aucun mécanisme pour assurer la protection des intérêts des associés minoritaires comme l'autorise pourtant le Code. La requérante ne peut être suivie lorsqu'elle affirme, dans son dernier mémoire, que les associés de catégories C étaient représentés au conseil d'administration d'IGRETEC. Compte tenu du nombre limité d'administrateurs, la position très minoritaire des associés de catégorie C ne leur permet pas de facto de disposer d'un administrateur pour les représenter au sein de cet organe tandis que, dans leur version applicable au moment des faits litigieux, les statuts d'IGRETEC ne garantissaient nullement la présence d'un administrateur désigné par les associés de catégorie C pour les représenter. C'est donc tout à fait valablement que l'acte attaqué mentionne que « [l]es associés de la catégorie C — dont fait partie SAMBRE & BIESME — ne sont pas assurés d'être représentés par leurs propres membres au conseil d'administration ». Au terme des débats, il a d'ailleurs été confirmé qu'au moment des faits litigieux, les associés de catégorie C ne disposaient effectivement d'aucun représentant au sein du conseil d'administration ou de la "commission permanente du bureau d'études et de gestion". Il se déduit des éléments qui précèdent qu'à l'époque des faits litigieux, les associés de catégorie C – dont fait partie la SLSP "Sambre & Biesme" – ne participaient, dans aucune mesure et d'aucune manière, à l'exercice d'un contrôle conjoint sur l'intercommunale IGRETEC ».

Le Conseil d'État a toutefois été amené à interroger la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne à la suite d'un élément de fait porté à sa connaissance dans le cours des débats. L'arrêt n° 250.896 indique, à ce propos, ce qui suit :

« Cependant, la requérante a, dans le cours des débats, fait valoir, pièces à l'appui, qu'au moment des faits, siégeait au conseil d'administration de l'intercommunale IGRETEC un conseiller communal de la commune de Farciennes qui était, en même temps, administrateur de la SLSP "Sambre & Biesme". La requérante n'a cependant pas pu démontrer que cette configuration était prévue et garantie en droit. Par ailleurs, il ressort des pièces soumises au Conseil d'État que cette personne siégeait au conseil d'administration d'IGRETEC en sa qualité de "conseiller communal à Farciennes". Rien ne permet de considérer qu'elle était, à ce titre, également réputée représenter les intérêts de la SLSP "Sambre & Biesme", nonobstant la circonstance que, dans les faits, elle était également administrateur de cette société.

La requérante soutient cependant que cet état de fait suffit à démontrer la "participation" de la SLSP "Sambre & Biesme" aux organes décisionnels d'IGRETEC et à considérer qu'elle exerce sur cette intercommunale un "contrôle analogue conjoint" via la commune de Farciennes qui est actionnaire à la fois d'IGRETEC et de la SLSP et dispose d'un administrateur dans chacune de ces entités. Elle rappelle, à cet égard, que la vérification d'un tel contrôle doit s'apprécier in concreto en tenant compte des circonstances de l'espèce et qu'il suffit que ce contrôle ait lieu, quelle que soit la manière dont il est en réalité exercé.

Il y a lieu d'interroger la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne à ce sujet. Il convient toutefois de préciser que si la requérante fait valoir que la commune de Farciennes est actionnaire tant de la SLSP "Sambre & Biesme" que de l'intercommunale IGRETEC et exerce un contrôle sur ces deux entités, elle ne revendique pas l'existence d'une relation du type « in house collatéral », laquelle permet à deux entités contrôlées par le même pouvoir adjudicateur de conclure entre elles des marchés sans mise en concurrence préalable. En toute hypothèse, il ne paraît pouvoir être satisfait à ce type de contrôle que dans le cas où les deux entités cocontractantes sont contrôlées de manière exclusive par la même autorité (concl.av. gén. P Mengozzi, 23 janvier 2014, aff. C-15/13, Technische Universität Hamburg-Harburg, pts. 44 et 45), quod non en l'espèce, la commune de Farciennes ne détenant l'intercommunale IGRETEC et la SLSP "Sambre & Biesme" que conjointement avec d'autres actionnaires publics et même privés, pour ce qui concerne cette dernière entité.

Les parties au litige semblent, par ailleurs, considérer que la réponse à la question posée pourrait différer selon qu'un effet direct est – ou non – reconnu à l'article 12.3 de la directive 2014/24/EU du Parlement européen et du Conseil du 26 février 2014 sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE. Comme le relève la requérante, cette directive était déjà en vigueur au moment des faits et aurait dû être transposée tandis que la loi qui la transposait n'était, elle, pas encore entrée en vigueur. Il s'indique, dès lors, d'interroger également la Cour pour savoir s'il y a lieu de reconnaître un tel effet à la disposition précitée […] ».

Les questions suivantes ont dès lors été posées à la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne :

« 1) L'article 12.3 de la directive 2014/24/EU du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, telle que modifiée par le règlement délégué (UE) 2015/2170 de la commission du 24 novembre 2015, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE doit-il être interprété en ce sens qu'il produit un effet direct ?

2) En cas de réponse affirmative à cette première question, l'article 12.3 de la directive 2014/24/EU précitée doit-il être interprété dans ce sens que la condition pour un pouvoir adjudicateur, en l'occurrence une société de logement de service public, d'être représenté au sein des organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, en l'occurrence une société coopérative intercommunale, est remplie au seul motif qu'une personne siégeant au sein du conseil d'administration de cette société coopérative intercommunale en sa qualité de conseiller communal d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur participant, en l'occurrence une commune, se trouve, en raison de circonstances exclusivement factuelles et sans garantie juridique de représentation, être également administrateur au sein de la société de logement de service public tandis que la commune est actionnaire (non exclusif) tant de l'entité contrôlée (société coopérative intercommunale) que de la société de logement de service public ?

3) En cas de réponse négative à la première question posée, faut-il considérer qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur, en l'occurrence une société de logement de service public, « participe » aux organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, en l'occurrence une société coopérative intercommunale, au seul motif qu'une personne siégeant au sein du conseil d'administration de cette société coopérative intercommunale en sa qualité de conseiller communal d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur participant, en l'occurrence une commune, se trouve, en raison de circonstances exclusivement factuelles et sans garantie juridique de représentation, être également administrateur au sein de la société de logement de service public tandis que la commune est actionnaire (non exclusif) tant de l'entité contrôlée (société coopérative intercommunale) que de la société de logement de service public ? »

Aux deux premières questions posées, la Cour de justice a répondu ce qui suit :

« 1) L'article 12, paragraphes 3 et 4, de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE, doit être interprété en ce sens que :

il produit des effets directs dans le cadre de litiges opposant des personnes morales de droit public au sujet de l'attribution directe de marchés publics, alors que l'État membre concerné s'est abstenu de transposer cette directive dans l'ordre juridique national dans les délais impartis.

2) L'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que :

afin d'établir qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale adjudicataire analogue à celui qu'ils exercent sur leurs propres services, l'exigence visée à cette disposition, tenant à ce qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur soit représenté dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, n'est pas satisfaite au seul motif que siège au conseil d'administration de cette personne morale le représentant d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur qui fait également partie du conseil d'administration du premier pouvoir adjudicateur ».

La Cour n'a pas répondu à la troisième question posée, compte tenu de la réponse apportée à la première question.

S’agissant, en particulier, de sa réponse à la deuxième question posée, la Cour de justice a précisé les éléments suivants :

« Sur la deuxième question dans les affaires C‑383/21 et C‑384/21

53. Par sa deuxième question dans les affaires C-383/21 et C-384/21, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l’article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que, afin d’établir qu’un pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d’autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale adjudicataire analogue à celui qu’ils exercent sur leurs propres services, l’exigence visée à cette disposition, tenant à ce qu’un pouvoir adjudicateur soit représenté dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, est satisfaite au seul motif que siège au conseil d’administration de cette personne morale le représentant d’un autre pouvoir adjudicateur qui fait également partie du conseil d’administration du premier pouvoir adjudicateur.

54 Conformément à une jurisprudence constante, lors de l’interprétation d’une disposition du droit de l’Union, il y a lieu de tenir compte non seulement des termes de celle-ci, mais également de son contexte et des objectifs poursuivis par la réglementation dont elle fait partie. La genèse d’une disposition du droit de l’Union peut également révéler des éléments pertinents pour son interprétation (arrêt du 9 juin 2022, IMPERIAL TOBACCO BULGARIA, C-55/21, EU:C:2022:459, point 44 et jurisprudence citée).

55 En premier lieu, s’agissant du libellé de l’article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la directive 2014/24, il convient d’observer que cette disposition vise l’un des critères devant être satisfait afin d’établir, en vertu de l’article 12, paragraphe 3, premier alinéa, sous a), de cette directive, qu’un pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d’autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale concernée, analogue à celui qu’ils exercent sur leurs propres services.

56 En l’occurrence, l’article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de ladite directive énonce que les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée doivent être composés de représentants de tous les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants, une même personne pouvant représenter plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants ou l’ensemble d’entre eux.

57 Il résulte ainsi des termes de cette disposition que celle-ci requiert qu’un pouvoir adjudicateur exerçant un contrôle conjoint sur une personne morale dispose d’un membre agissant en qualité de représentant de ce pouvoir adjudicateur dans les organes décisionnels de cette personne morale, ce membre pouvant, le cas échéant, représenter également d’autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs.

58 Cette interprétation est corroborée, en deuxième lieu, par le contexte dans lequel s’insère ladite disposition.

59 En effet, premièrement, il convient d’observer que l’article 12, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2014/24, relatif à l’hypothèse où un pouvoir adjudicateur unique exercerait sur la personne morale à laquelle un marché public est attribué un contrôle analogue à celui exercé sur ses propres services, prévoit, à son second alinéa, que ce contrôle peut également être exercé par une autre personne morale, qui est elle-même contrôlée de la même manière par le pouvoir

adjudicateur.

60 Par ailleurs, le paragraphe 2 de cet article 12 dispose, notamment, que le paragraphe 1 de celui-ci est également susceptible de s'appliquer lorsqu'une personne morale contrôlée, qui est elle-même un pouvoir adjudicateur, attribue un marché au pouvoir adjudicateur qui la contrôle, ou à une autre personne morale contrôlée par le même pouvoir adjudicateur.

61 En revanche, pour ce qui est de l'article 12, paragraphe 3, de cette directive, cette disposition prévoit qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur qui n'exerce pas de contrôle sur une personne morale, au sens du paragraphe 1 de cet article 12, peut, néanmoins, attribuer un marché public à cette personne morale sans appliquer ladite directive lorsque ce pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale concernée. Toutefois, il importe de souligner que, à la différence des paragraphes 1 et 2 dudit article, ladite disposition ne prévoit pas que les conditions relatives au contrôle du pouvoir adjudicateur sur la personne morale adjudicataire puissent être satisfaites de manière indirecte.

62 En particulier, l'exigence de représentation visée à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la directive 2014/24 requiert que la participation d'un pouvoir adjudicateur au sein des organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs s'effectue par l'intermédiaire d'un représentant de ce pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même. Cette exigence ne peut donc pas être satisfaite par l'intermédiaire d'un membre de ces organes y siégeant seulement en qualité de représentant d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur.

63 Deuxièmement, l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous ii), de cette directive prévoit, au titre des conditions devant être réunies pour que soit établi que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs exercent un contrôle conjoint sur une personne morale, au sens de l'article 12, paragraphe 3, premier alinéa, sous a), de ladite directive, que ces pouvoirs adjudicateurs doivent être en mesure d'exercer conjointement une influence décisive sur les objectifs stratégiques poursuivis par la personne morale contrôlée et sur les décisions importantes que celle-ci est susceptible de prendre.

64 Eu égard à la portée de la condition énoncée à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous ii), de la directive 2014/24, laquelle a trait à la détermination du contenu de ces objectifs et de ces décisions, il convient donc de comprendre le critère figurant à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de cette directive comme visant à poser une exigence distincte portant sur les conditions formelles de la participation de ces pouvoirs adjudicateurs dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale concernée.

65 Ces constatations sont confirmées par la genèse de l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, de ladite directive.

66 Ainsi qu'il ressort du considérant 31 de la même directive, tout en relevant l'existence d'une importante insécurité juridique quant à la question de savoir dans quelle mesure les règles sur la passation des marchés publics devraient s'appliquer aux marchés conclus entre des entités appartenant au secteur public et, partant, la nécessité d'apporter des précisions à cet égard, le législateur de l'Union a considéré que ces précisions devraient s'appuyer sur les principes énoncés dans la jurisprudence pertinente de la Cour et, partant, n'a pas entendu remettre en cause cette jurisprudence (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 28 mai 2020, Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung, C-796/18, EU:C:2020:395, point 66).

67 À cet égard, il ressort de ladite jurisprudence que la question de savoir si un pouvoir adjudicateur exerce sur la personne morale concernée un contrôle analogue à celui qu'il exerce sur ses propres services s'apprécie au regard de l'ensemble des dispositions législatives et des circonstances pertinentes. Dès lors, les éléments dont il y a lieu de tenir compte ne recouvrent pas seulement des circonstances factuelles, mais incluent également la législation applicable ainsi que, notamment, les mécanismes de contrôle prévus par les statuts de cette personne morale (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 10 septembre 2009, Sea, C-573/07, EU:C:2009:532, points 65 et 66 ainsi que jurisprudence citée).

68 Au titre des précisions apportées à la jurisprudence de la Cour s'agissant des conditions dans lesquelles les marchés conclus entre des entités appartenant au secteur public ne relèvent pas des règles sur la passation des marchés publics, le législateur de l'Union a entendu renforcer l'exigence tenant à cette condition de représentation.

69 En effet, il y a lieu d'observer que, antérieurement à l'adoption de la directive 2014/24, le fait que les organes décisionnels de la personne morale concernée soient composés de représentants des pouvoirs adjudicateurs exerçant sur celle-ci un contrôle conjoint était un des éléments dont il était tenu compte afin d'établir, dans le chef du pouvoir adjudicateur concerné, la possibilité d'une influence déterminante tant sur les objectifs stratégiques que sur les décisions importantes de cette personne (voir, notamment, arrêts du 13 novembre 2008, Coditel Brabant, C-324/07, EU:C:2008:621, points 28, 29, 33 et 34 ainsi que jurisprudence citée, et du 10 septembre 2009, Sea, C-573/07, EU:C:2009:532, points 65, 66 et 86 ainsi que jurisprudence citée).

70 Or, en les visant à des dispositions distinctes, à savoir à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i) et ii), de cette directive, le législateur de l'Union a entendu faire des conditions de représentation des pouvoirs adjudicateurs exerçant un contrôle conjoint sur la personne morale adjudicataire une exigence autonome par rapport à celle tenant à la possibilité d'exercer une telle influence décisive.

71 En troisième lieu, l'interprétation selon laquelle cette disposition exige que la participation d'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerçant un tel contrôle conjoint au sein des organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée s'effectue par l'intermédiaire d'un membre agissant en qualité de représentant de ce pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même, ce membre pouvant, le cas échéant, représenter également d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, est confortée par l'objectif poursuivi par les dispositions de l'article 12, paragraphe 3, de ladite directive.

72 En effet, ainsi qu'il a été rappelé aux points 46 et 48 du présent arrêt, l'exclusion du champ d'application de la directive 2014/24 des marchés publics satisfaisant les critères visés, notamment, à son article 12, paragraphe 3, résulte de la reconnaissance, ainsi qu'il ressort du considérant 5 et du considérant 31, deuxième alinéa, de cette directive, de la liberté des État membres de prévoir que les pouvoirs publics puissent fournir certains services par eux-mêmes et exercer les missions de service public qui leur sont confiées en utilisant leurs propres ressources.

73 Or, il ne saurait être considéré qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur utilise ses propres ressources et agit par lui-même lorsqu'il n'est pas en mesure d'intervenir dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale à qui le marché public est attribué par la voie d'un représentant qui agit au nom de ce pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même ainsi que, le cas échéant, au nom d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, et que, par conséquent, l'expression de ses intérêts au sein de ces organes décisionnels est subordonnée au fait que lesdits intérêts soient communs avec ceux que les autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs y font valoir par l'intermédiaire de leurs propres représentants au sein de ces organes.

74 En l'occurrence, sous réserve de vérification par la juridiction de renvoi, il ressort des éléments fournis à la Cour que l'exigence visée à l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de ladite directive, tenant à ce que la participation d'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerçant un contrôle conjoint sur une personne morale au sein des organes décisionnels de celle-ci s'effectue par l'intermédiaire d'un membre agissant en qualité de représentant de ce pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même, ce membre pouvant, le cas échéant, représenter également d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, n'apparaît pas être satisfaite dans les circonstances en cause au principal. En effet, d'une part, les associés de catégorie C, dont fait partie la SLSP Sambre & Biesme, ne disposaient, notamment, d'aucun représentant au sein du conseil d'administration de l'Igretec et, d'autre part, bien que siégeant également au conseil d'administration de la SLSP Sambre & Biesme, ce n'est qu'en qualité de représentant de la commune de Farciennes, associée de catégorie A, que le conseiller communal siégeait au conseil d'administration de l'Igretec.

75 Eu égard aux considérations qui précèdent, il y a lieu de répondre à la deuxième question dans les affaires C-383/21 et C-384/21 que l'article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i), de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que, afin d'établir qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale adjudicataire analogue à celui qu'ils exercent sur leurs propres services, l'exigence visée à cette disposition, tenant à ce qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur soit représenté dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, n'est pas satisfaite au seul motif que siège au conseil d'administration de cette personne morale le représentant d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur qui fait également partie du conseil d'administration du premier pouvoir adjudicateur ».

L'article 12, § 3, de la directive 2014/24/EU du Parlement européen et du Conseil du 26 février 2014 sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE, qui fixe les conditions du contrôle in house conjoint permettant d'échapper à l'application de la réglementation des marchés publics, dispose comme il suit :

« 3. Un pouvoir adjudicateur qui n'exerce pas de contrôle sur une personne morale régie par le droit privé ou le droit public au sens du paragraphe 1 peut néanmoins attribuer un marché public à cette personne morale sans appliquer la présente directive, lorsque toutes les conditions suivantes sont réunies :

a) le pouvoir adjudicateur exerce, conjointement avec d'autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, un contrôle sur la personne morale concernée, analogue à celui qu'ils exercent sur leurs propres services;

b) plus de 80 % des activités de cette personne morale sont exercées dans le cadre de l'exécution des tâches qui lui sont confiées par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs qui la contrôlent ou par d'autres personnes morales contrôlées par les mêmes pouvoirs adjudicateurs; et

c) la personne morale contrôlée ne comporte pas de participation directe de capitaux privés à l'exception des formes de participation de capitaux privés sans capacité de contrôle ou de blocage requises par les dispositions législatives nationales, conformément aux traités, qui ne permettent pas d'exercer une influence décisive sur la personne morale contrôlée.

Aux fins du premier alinéa, point a), les pouvoirs adjudicateurs exercent un contrôle conjoint sur une personne morale lorsque toutes les conditions suivantes sont réunies :

i) les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée sont composés de représentants de tous les pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants, une même personne pouvant représenter plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs participants ou l'ensemble d'entre eux;

ii) ces pouvoirs adjudicateurs sont en mesure d'exercer conjointement une influence décisive sur les objectifs stratégiques et les décisions importantes de la personne morale contrôlée; et

iii) la personne morale contrôlée ne poursuit pas d'intérêts contraires à ceux des pouvoirs adjudicateurs qui la contrôlent ».

Dans l'arrêt intermédiaire du 15 juin 2021, le Conseil d'État a relevé que « [p]our rejeter l'hypothèse de l'exception in house invoquée par la SLSP "Sambre & Biesme", l'acte attaqué se fonde sur l'absence de rapport de "contrôle analogue" entre cette société et l'intercommunale IGRETEC » en sorte qu'il ne devait être procédé qu'à l'examen de la légalité de ce motif.

Sur le respect de la condition d'un « contrôle analogue », le Conseil d'État a, dans cet arrêt, déjà jugé que la partie adverse avait valablement pu considérer que les associés de catégorie C – dont fait partie la SLSP « Sambre et Biesme » – ne participaient, dans aucune mesure et d'aucune manière, à l'exercice d'un contrôle analogue conjoint sur l'intercommunale IGRETEC, compte tenu de la position très minoritaire des associés de catégorie C, de la prépondérance donnée par les statuts de l'intercommunale aux communes (associés de catégorie A), de l'absence de tout mécanisme pour assurer la protection des associés minoritaires (notamment les associés de catégorie C) et de l'absence de représentants, au sein du conseil d'administration de l'intercommunale, d'associés de catégorie C.

La requérante ne démontre pas – et le Conseil d'État n'aperçoit pas – en quoi les réponses données par la Cour aux questions préjudicielles qui lui ont été posées – notamment la production d'effets directs reconnue à l'article 12, § 3, de la directive 2014/24 précitée – sont de nature à remettre en cause les constats déjà portés dans l'arrêt n° 250.896.

La seule question qui subsistait à l'issue des débats et qui a justifié d'interroger, à titre préjudiciel, la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne est liée à la présence avérée, au moment des faits, d'une conseillère communale de la commune de Farciennes siégeant à la fois au conseil d'administration de la requérante et au conseil d'administration de l'intercommunale IGRETEC. La question se posait de savoir si cet « état de fait » – qui n'est pas garanti en droit, comme le précisait déjà l'arrêt n° 250.896 – suffisait à satisfaire à la condition de représentation de la requérante au sein des organes décisionnels de l'intercommunale IGRETEC, étant entendu toutefois que la personne concernée siégeait au conseil d'administration de cette intercommunale en sa qualité de « conseiller communal à Farciennes » et que « rien ne permet[tait] de considérer qu'elle était, à ce titre, également réputée représenter les intérêts de la SLSP "Sambre et Biesme" ».

La Cour de justice a clairement répondu par la négative à la question posée, en jugeant que l'exigence prévue par l'article 12, § 3, alinéa 2, sous i), de la directive 2014/24, tenant à ce qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur soit représenté dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée, « n'est pas satisfaite au seul motif que siège au conseil d'administration de cette personne morale le représentant d'un autre pouvoir adjudicateur qui fait également partie du conseil d'administration du premier pouvoir adjudicateur ».

L'affirmation de la requérante, dans son dernier mémoire déposé après la réouverture des débats, suivant laquelle les associés communaux de catégorie A représenteraient l'ensemble des associés – et donc également les associés de catégorie C dont fait partie la requérante – est contredite par la structure et les mécanismes de gestion de l'intercommunale IGRETEC, qui font clairement la distinction entre différentes catégories d'associés. Ainsi, la requérante relevait elle-même, dans le dernier mémoire qu'elle a déposé avant la réouverture des débats, que l'article 13.4, alinéa 3, des statuts de l'intercommunale prévoit que « chacune des catégories d'associés se réunit séparément pour désigner un nombre de candidats administrateurs, correspondant au nombre de mandats à conférer sur sa proposition ». Les statuts identifient clairement des communautés d'intérêts distinctes parmi les associés, suivant la catégorie à laquelle ils appartiennent. Par ailleurs, les mêmes statuts, dans leur version applicable au litige, accordaient une telle prépondérance aux communes dans les organes de gestion d'IGRETEC – au détriment des autres catégories d'associés – qu'il ne peut être sérieusement soutenu que les administrateurs communaux représenteraient l'ensemble des associés de l'intercommunale.

La requérante ne peut, non plus, être suivie lorsqu'elle affirme, que [D.] siégeait au sein du conseil d'administration de l'intercommunale IGRETEC à la fois en qualité de conseillère communale de la commune de Farciennes et en qualité d’administratrice de la SLSP « Sambre et Biesme ». Le seul fait que [D.] est administratrice de la SLSP « Sambre et Biesme » ne signifie pas qu’en siégeant au conseil d’administration de l’intercommunale IGRETEC, elle « représente » la SLSP.

Comme l’a déjà jugé le Conseil d’État dans son arrêt intermédiaire, il apparaît des pièces produites par la requérante que [D.] siégeait en sa seule qualité de « conseiller communal à Farciennes » alors qu’aucun représentant des associés de catégorie C – dont fait partie la SLSP « Sambre et Biesme » – ne siégeait au sein du conseil d’administration de l’Intercommunale IGRETEC. Dans les considérants de son arrêt, la Cour de justice a confirmé que « l’article 12, paragraphe 3, de cette directive […] ne prévoit pas que les conditions relatives au contrôle du pouvoir adjudicateur sur la personne morale adjudicataire puissent être satisfaites de manière indirecte », qu’ « [e]n particulier, l’exigence de représentation […] requiert que la participation d’un pouvoir adjudicateur au sein des organes décisionnels de la personne morale contrôlée conjointement avec d’autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs s’effectue par l’intermédiaire d’un représentant de ce pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même » et que « cette exigence ne peut donc pas être satisfaite par l’intermédiaire d’un membre de ces organes y siégeant seulement en qualité de représentant d’un autre pouvoir adjudicateur ».

La circonstance que la commune de Farciennes serait actionnaire de la SLSP « Sambre et Biesme » et que ces deux entités partageraient des intérêts communs, notamment le projet de création d’un écoquartier, ne suffit pas à démontrer que la SLSP exercerait sur l’intercommunale IGRETEC un contrôle analogue conjoint au sens de l’article 12, § 3, de la directive 2014/24. La Cour de justice a ainsi jugé dans son arrêt qu’« il ne saurait être considéré qu’un pouvoir adjudicateur utilise ses propres ressources et agit par lui-même lorsqu’il n’est pas en mesure d’intervenir dans les organes décisionnels de la personne morale à qui le marché public est attribué par la voie d’un représentant qui agit au nom de ce pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même ainsi que, le cas échéant, au nom d’autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs, et que, par conséquent, l’expression de ses intérêts au sein de ces organes décisionnels est subordonnée au fait que lesdits intérêts soient communs avec ceux que les autres pouvoirs adjudicateurs y font valoir par l’intermédiaire de leurs propres représentants au sein de ces organes ». Dans le même arrêt, la Cour insiste sur le fait qu’ « en les visant à des dispositions distinctes, à savoir à l’article 12, paragraphe 3, second alinéa, sous i) et ii), de cette directive, le législateur de l’Union a entendu faire des conditions de représentation des pouvoirs adjudicateurs exerçant un contrôle conjoint sur la personne morale adjudicataire une exigence autonome par rapport à celle tenant à la possibilité d’exercer une telle influence décisive » (paragraphe 70) et « entendu renforcer l’exigence tenant à cette condition de représentation » (paragraphe 68).

Au vu des exigences rappelées par la Cour dans son arrêt et des constats déjà opérés dans l’arrêt intermédiaire du 15 juin 2021, l’affirmation de la requérante – non autrement démontrée – selon laquelle « la présence d’une même conseillère communale au sein de la SLSP et d’IGRETEC ne relève nullement du hasard mais bien d’une volonté de cohésion dans la prise de décision au sein des trois entités » ne suffit pas à établir que cette personne représente les intérêts de la SLSP « Sambre & Biesme” lorsqu’elle siège au sein du conseil d’administration de l’intercommunale IGRETEC en qualité de « conseiller communal à Farciennes ».

La partie adverse a, dès lors, valablement pu considérer que, dans le chef de la requérante, « la condition relative à un contrôle analogue n’est pas rencontrée en l’état actuel des statuts d’IGRETEC » et que celle-ci ne peut, dès lors, se prévaloir d’une relation in house qui l’unirait à cette intercommunale.

Le premier moyen n’est pas fondé.

Quant au deuxième moyen de la requête, le Conseil d’État l’a jugé non fondé dans l’arrêt n° 250.896 du 15 juin 2021.

V. Indemnité de procédure

La partie adverse sollicite une indemnité de procédure liquidée à la somme de 700 euros. Il y a lieu de faire droit à cette demande.

PAR CES MOTIFS,
LE CONSEIL D’ÉTAT DÉCIDE :

Article 1er.

La requête est rejetée.

Article 2.

La partie requérante supporte les dépens, à savoir le droit de rôle de 200 euros, la contribution de 20 euros et l’indemnité de procédure de 700 euros accordée à la partie adverse.

A R R Ê T

n^o^ 256.871 du 20 juin 2023

A. 222.113/VI-21.018

En cause : la commune de Farciennes
ayant élu domicile chez
M^es^ Jean BOURTEMBOURG et
Nathalie FORTEMPS, avocats,
Boulevard Brand Whitlock, 114 bte 12
1200 Bruxelles,

contre :

la Société wallonne du logement (SWL),
ayant élu domicile chez
M^e^ Marie VASTMANS, avocat,
avenue Tedesco 7
1160 Bruxelles.

I. Objet de la requête

Par une requête introduite le 2 mai 2017, la commune de Farciennes demande l'annulation de :

« la décision de la Société wallonne de Logement prise le 25 février 2017, en exécution de l'article 168 du Code wallon du logement et de l'habitat durable, annulant les décisions prises par le conseil d'administration de la SLSP SAMBRE & BIESME le 9 février 2017 de conclure une convention cadre de marchés conjoints avec la Commune de FARCIENNES et de ne pas mettre en concurrence un marché de services d'inventaire amiante en raison de la relation in house l'unissant à l'intercommunale IGRETEC et déclarant, par conséquent, le recours introduit par le Commissaire de la SWL contre les deux décisions susmentionnées, fondé ».

II. Procédure

Par un arrêt n° 250.897 du 15 juin 2021, le Conseil d'État a sursis à statuer, a posé des questions préjudicielles à la Cour de Justice de l'Union européenne et a chargé un membre de l'auditorat de déposer un rapport complémentaire.

Par un arrêt du 22 décembre 2022, la Cour de Justice de l'Union européenne a répondu aux questions préjudicielles précitées.

M^me^ Geneviève Martou, premier auditeur au Conseil d'État, a rédigé un rapport sur la base de l'article 13 du règlement général de procédure, rapport concluant au rejet du recours.

Le rapport a été notifié à la partie requérante.

M^me^ Geneviève Martou, premier auditeur au Conseil d'État, a rédigé une note, le 2 mars 2023, demandant que soit mise en œuvre la procédure organisée par l'article 14*quater* de l'arrêté du Régent du 23 août 1948 déterminant la procédure devant la section du contentieux administratif du Conseil d'État.

Par un courrier du 8 mars 2023, le greffe a informé la partie requérante que la chambre allait statuer en décrétant le désistement d'instance à moins qu'elle ne demande, dans un délai de quinze jours, à être entendue.

Il est fait application des dispositions relatives à l'emploi des langues, inscrites au titre VI, chapitre II, des lois sur le Conseil d'État, coordonnées le 12 janvier 1973.

III. Désistement d'instance

L'article 21 des lois sur le Conseil d'État, coordonnées le 12 janvier 1973, dispose, en son alinéa 7, qu'il existe, dans le chef de la partie requérante, une présomption de désistement d'instance lorsqu'elle n'introduit aucune demande de poursuite de la procédure dans un délai de trente jours à compter de la notification d'un rapport de l'auditeur concluant au rejet du recours.

La partie requérante n'ayant pas introduit de demande de poursuite de la procédure dans le délai imparti et n'ayant pas non plus demandé à être entendue, elle est donc présumée légalement se désister de son recours.

IV. Indemnité de procédure

La partie adverse sollicite « une indemnité de procédure liquidée à la somme de 700,00 € ». Il y a lieu de faire droit à sa demande.

PAR CES MOTIFS,
LE CONSEIL D'ÉTAT DÉCIDE :

Article 1er.

Le désistement d'instance est décrété.

Article 2.

La partie requérante supporte les dépens, à savoir le droit de rôle de 200 euros et l'indemnité de procédure de 700 euros accordée à la partie adverse.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Eighth Chamber)

16 June 2022 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Regulation (EU, Euratom) 2018/1046 – Regulation (EU, Euratom) No 966/2012 – Inapplicability to public contracts awarded by Member States and financed by resources from the European Structural and Investment Funds – Directive 2014/24/EU – Direct and unconditional reference to provisions of EU law in national legislation – Applicability to a contract whose estimated value is lower than the threshold set in the directive – Article 32(2)(a) – Option for a contracting authority to invite only one economic operator to participate in a negotiated procedure without prior publication after deeming a prior open procedure unsuccessful – Obligation to maintain the initial conditions of the contract without introducing substantial alterations)

In Case C-376/21,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Varhoven administrativen sad (Supreme Administrative Court, Bulgaria), made by decision of 28 May 2021, received at the Court on 17 June 2021, in the proceedings

Zamestnik-ministar na regionalnoto razvitie i blagoustroystvoto i rakovoditel na Upravlyavashtia organ na Operativna programa 'Regioni v rastezh' 2014-2020

Obshtina Razlog,

THE COURT (Eighth Chamber),

composed of N. Jääskinen, President of the Chamber, M. Safjan and M. Gavalec (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: L. Medina,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– the European Commission, by D. Drambozova, P. Ondrůšek, P. Rossi and G. Wils, acting as Agents,

having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 102 and 104 of Regulation (EU, Euratom) No 966/2012 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 25 October 2012 on the financial rules applicable to the general budget of the Union and repealing Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 (OJ 2012 L 298, p. 1), as amended by Regulation (EU, Euratom) 2015/1929 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 28 October 2015 (OJ 2015 L 286, p. 1) ('Regulation No 966/2012'), as well as Articles 160 and 164 of Regulation (EU, Euratom) 2018/1046 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 18 July 2018 on the financial rules applicable to the general budget of the Union, amending Regulations (EU) No 1296/2013, (EU) No 1301/2013, (EU) No 1303/2013, (EU) No 1304/2013, (EU) No 1309/2013, (EU) No 1316/2013, (EU) No 223/2014, (EU) No 283/2014, and Decision No 541/2014/EU and repealing Regulation No 966/2012 (OJ 2018 L 193, p. 1) ('the Financial Regulation').

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the Zamestnik-ministar na regionalnoto razvitie i blagoustroystvoto i rakovoditel na Upravlyavashtia organ na Operativna programa 'Regioni v rastezh' 2014-2020 (Deputy Minister for Regional Development and Public Works and Head of the Managing Authority of the operational programme 'Regions in Growth' 2014-2020; 'the Minister') and the Obshtina Razlog (municipality of Razlog, Bulgaria) concerning that managing authority's decision to apply a financial correction to that municipality because of breaches of rules relating to, first, public procurement and, second, the use of EU funds allocated to that municipality.

Legal context

European Union law

Regulation No 966/2012

3 Article 102 of Regulation No 966/2012, entitled 'Principles applicable to public contracts', provided:

'1. All public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget [of the European Union] shall respect the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination.

2. All contracts shall be put out to competition on the broadest possible basis, except when use is made of the procedure referred to in point (d) of Article 104(1).

…'

4 Article 104 of that regulation, entitled 'Procurement procedures', provided, in paragraph 1 thereof:

'Procurement procedures for awarding concession contracts or public contracts, including framework contracts shall take one of the following forms:

(d) negotiated procedure, including without prior publication;

…'

5 Article 117 of that regulation, entitled 'The contracting authority', provided, in paragraph 1 thereof:

'The institutions within the meaning of Article 2, executive agencies and bodies within the meaning of Articles 208 and 209 shall be deemed to be contracting authorities in the case of contracts awarded on their own account, except where they purchase from a central purchasing body. …

Those institutions shall delegate, in accordance with Article 65, the necessary powers for the exercise of the function of contracting authority.'

The Financial Regulation

6 Article 2 of the Financial Regulation, entitled 'Definitions', provides:

'For the purposes of this Regulation, the following definitions apply:

(51) "public contract" means a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities within the meaning of Articles 174 and 178, in order to obtain, against payment of a price paid in whole or in part from the budget, the supply of movable or immovable assets, the execution of works or the provision of services, comprising:

(b) supply contracts;

…’

7 Article 63 of that regulation, entitled ‘Shared management with Member States’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Where the [European] Commission implements the budget under shared management, tasks relating to budget implementation shall be delegated to Member States. The Commission and Member States shall respect the principles of sound financial management, transparency and non-discrimination and shall ensure the visibility of the Union action when they manage Union funds. To that end, the Commission and Member States shall fulfil their respective control and audit obligations and assume the resulting responsibilities laid down in this Regulation. Complementary provisions shall be laid down in sector-specific rules.’

8 Article 160 of that regulation, entitled ‘Principles applicable to contracts and scope’, provides:

‘1. All contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget shall respect the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination.

2. All contracts shall be put out to competition on the broadest possible basis, except when use is made of the procedure referred to in point (d) of Article 164(1).

…’

9 Article 164 of that regulation, entitled ‘Procurement procedures’, provides:

‘1. Procurement procedures for awarding concession contracts or public contracts, including framework contracts shall take one of the following forms:

(d) negotiated procedure, including without prior publication;

4. In all procedures involving negotiation, the contracting authority shall negotiate with tenderers the initial and any subsequent tenders or parts thereof, except their final tenders, in order to improve their content. The minimum requirements and the criteria specified in the procurement documents shall not be subject to negotiation.

…’

10 Article 174 of the Financial Regulation, entitled ‘The contracting authority’, provides, in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Union institutions, executive agencies and Union bodies referred to in Articles 70 and 71 shall be deemed to be contracting authorities in respect of contracts awarded on their own account, except where they purchase from a central purchasing body. Departments of Union institutions shall not be deemed to be contracting authorities where they conclude service-level agreements amongst themselves.’

Directive 2014/24/EU

11 Recitals 2 and 50 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2015/2170 of 24 November 2015 (OJ 2015 L 307, p. 5) ('Directive 2014/24'), state:

'(2) Public procurement … [is] one of the market-based instruments to be used to achieve smart, sustainable and inclusive growth, while ensuring the most efficient use of public funds. For that purpose, the public procurement rules adopted pursuant to Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1)] and Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)] should be revised and modernised in order to increase the efficiency of public spending …

(50) In view of the detrimental effects on competition, negotiated procedures without prior publication of a contract notice should be used only in very exceptional circumstances. This exception should be limited to cases where publication is either not possible, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable for and not attributable to the contracting authority, or where it is clear from the outset that publication would not trigger more competition or better procurement outcomes, not least because there is objectively only one economic operator that can perform the contract. This is the case for works of art, where the identity of the artist intrinsically determines the unique character and value of the art object itself. Exclusivity can also arise from other reasons, but only situations of objective exclusivity can justify the use of the negotiated procedure without publication, where the situation of exclusivity has not been created by the contracting authority itself with a view to the future procurement procedure.

Contracting authorities relying on this exception should provide reasons why there are no reasonable alternatives or substitutes such as using alternative distribution channels including outside the Member State of the contracting authority or considering functionally comparable works, supplies and services.

Where the situation of exclusivity is due to technical reasons, they should be rigorously defined and justified on a case-by-case basis. They could include, for instance, near technical impossibility for another economic operator to achieve the required performance or the necessity to use specific know-how, tools or means which only one economic operator has at its disposal. Technical reasons may also derive from specific interoperability requirements which must be fulfilled in order to ensure the functioning of the works, supplies or services to be procured.

Finally, a procurement procedure is not useful where supplies are purchased directly on a commodity market, including trading platforms for commodities such as agricultural products, raw materials and energy exchanges, where the regulated and supervised multilateral trading structure naturally guarantees market prices.'

12 Article 4 of that directive, entitled 'Threshold amounts', provides:

'This Directive shall apply to procurements with a value net of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than the following thresholds:

(c) EUR 209 000 for public supply and service contracts awarded by sub-central contracting authorities and design contests organised by such authorities; …

…'

13 Under Article 5 of that directive, entitled ‘Methods for calculating the estimated value of procurement’:

‘1. The calculation of the estimated value of a procurement shall be based on the total amount payable, net of VAT, as estimated by the contracting authority, including any form of option and any renewals of the contracts as explicitly set out in the procurement documents.

3. The choice of the method used to calculate the estimated value of a procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive. A procurement shall not be subdivided with the effect of preventing it from falling within the scope of this Directive, unless justified by objective reasons.

4. That estimated value shall be valid at the moment at which the call for competition is sent, or, in cases where a call for competition is not foreseen, at the moment at which the contracting authority commences the procurement procedure, for instance, where appropriate, by contacting economic operators in relation to the procurement.

14 Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

15 Article 26 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Choice of procedures’, provides, in paragraphs 4 and 6 thereof:

‘4. Member States shall provide that contracting authorities may apply a competitive procedure with negotiation or a competitive dialogue in the following situations:

(b) with regard to works, supplies or services where, in response to an open or a restricted procedure, only irregular or unacceptable tenders are submitted. In such situations contracting authorities shall not be required to publish a contract notice where they include in the procedure all of, and only, the tenderers which satisfy the criteria set out in Articles 57 to 64 and which, during the prior open or restricted procedure, submitted tenders in accordance with the formal requirements of the procurement procedure.

In particular, tenders which do not comply with the procurement documents, which were received late, where there is evidence of collusion or corruption, or which have been found by the contracting authority to be abnormally low, shall be considered as being irregular. In particular tenders submitted by tenderers that do not have the required qualifications, and tenders whose price exceeds the contracting authority’s budget as determined and documented prior to the launching of the procurement procedure shall be considered as unacceptable.

6. In the specific cases and circumstances referred to expressly in Article 32, Member States may provide that contracting authorities may apply a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a call for competition. Member States shall not allow the application of that procedure in any other cases than those referred to in Article 32.’

16 Article 32 of that directive, entitled ‘Use of the negotiated procedure without prior publication’, provides, in paragraph 2 thereof:

‘The negotiated procedure without prior publication may be used for public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts in any of the following cases:

(a) where no tenders or no suitable tenders or no requests to participate or no suitable requests to participate have been submitted in response to an open procedure or a restricted procedure, provided that the initial conditions of the contract are not substantially altered and that a report is sent to the Commission where it so requests.

A tender shall be considered not to be suitable where it is irrelevant to the contract, being manifestly incapable, without substantial changes, of meeting the contracting authority’s needs and requirements as specified in the procurement documents. A request for participation shall be considered not to be suitable where the economic operator concerned is to be or may be excluded pursuant to Article 57 or does not meet the selection criteria set out by the contracting authority pursuant to Article 58;

Bulgarian law

The Law on public procurement

17 The zakon za obshtestvenite porachki (Law on public procurement) (DV No 13 of 16 February 2016), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings (‘the Law on public procurement’), provides, in Article 2 thereof:

‘(1) Public contracts shall be awarded in accordance with the principles of [the FEU Treaty], in particular the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment, freedom to provide services and mutual recognition, and with the principles deriving therefrom:

1. equal treatment and non-discrimination;

2. free competition;

3. proportionality;

4. publicity and transparency.

(2) When awarding public contracts, contracting authorities are not entitled to restrict competition by laying down conditions or requirements which confer an unjustified advantage or which unduly restrict the participation of economic operators in public procurement and which are not linked to the subject matter, value, complexity, quantity or volume of the contract concerned.’

18 Article 18 of that law provides, in paragraphs 1, 2 and 7 thereof:

‘(1) The procedures covered by this Law are:

8. negotiation without prior publication;

9. negotiation without prior invitation to participate;

10. negotiation without publication of a contract notice;

13. direct negotiation.

(2) Open procedures and public competitive tendering are procedures in which any interested party may submit a tender.

(7) In negotiated procedures within the meaning of points 8 to 10 of paragraph 1, as well as point 13 thereof, the contracting authority shall negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more well-defined persons.'

19 According to Article 79(1) of that law:

'Public contracting authorities may use a negotiated procedure without prior publication only in the following cases:

1. where, in an open or restricted procedure, no tender or request to participate has been submitted or where the tenders or requests to participate were not suitable, and the initial conditions of the contract are not substantially altered;

…'

20 Article 110 of that law provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

'The contracting authority shall discontinue the procedure by reasoned decision where:

1. no tender, request to participate or competitive project has been submitted, or where no participant has attended negotiations;

2. none of the tenders or requests to participate satisfied the conditions for submission, including with regard to forms, methods and deadlines, or none of those tenders or requests to participate were suitable;

…'

21 Article 182 of the Law on public procurement provides:

'(1) The contracting authority may negotiate directly with specified persons where one of the grounds referred to in points 3 and 5 to 9 of Article 79(1) applies or where:

2. the procedure for the award of a contract by means of public competitive tendering was discontinued on the ground that no tender had been submitted or that the tenders submitted were not suitable and that the initial conditions were not substantially altered;

…'

The Law on the European structural and investment funds

22 Article 49(2) of the zakon za upravlenie na sredstvata ot Evropeyskite strukturni i investitsionni fondove (Law on the management of resources from the European Structural and Investment Funds) (DV No 101 of 22 December 2015), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings ('the Law on the European structural and investment funds'), provides:

'For the appointment of a contractor responsible for tasks related to works, services and/or supplies of goods which are the subject of a public contract within the meaning of the Law on public procurement, the following rules shall apply:

1. the rules laid down in the Law on public procurement, where the beneficiary is a contracting authority within the meaning of that law;

…’

The Regulation implementing the Law on public procurement

23 Article 64 of the pravilnik za prilagane na zakona za obshtestvenite porachki (Regulation implementing the Law on public procurement) (DV No 28 of 8 April 2016), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘In the decision discontinuing the procedure referred to in points 8 to 10 and 13 of Article 18(1) of the Law on public procurement, contracting authorities shall also indicate the persons who shall be invited to participate in the negotiation, except in the cases referred to in points 7 and 8 of Article 79(1), point 2 of Article 138(1), [and] points 9 and 10 of Article 164(1) of [that law], as well as in the cases referred to in point 3 of Article 182(1) of [that law].’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

24 The municipality of Razlog received EU funds allocated with a view to improving the educational infrastructure and learning process in the Vocational High School of Agricultural Mechanisation located in its territory. To that end, it organised, in its capacity as contracting authority, a procurement procedure involving public competitive tendering, the subject matter of which was the supply of technology, equipment and furniture for the needs of that school.

25 The contract was divided into four lots. The only tender submitted exclusively concerned Lot No 2, entitled ‘Metalworking equipment’. The contracting authority did not deem that tender to be in line with the conditions of the contract, on the ground that its amount was more than twice the estimated value of the contract. The contracting authority then found that that procedure had been unsuccessful and discontinued it by a decision of 1 November 2017 taken on the basis of points 1 and 2 of Article 110(1) of the Law on public procurement.

26 By decision of 1 December 2017, the contracting authority, pursuant to point 1 of Article 79(1) of that law, used a negotiated procedure without prior publication, the subject matter of which was the ‘Supply of metalworking equipment for the needs of the Vocational High School of Agricultural Mechanisation of the town of Razlog’. The estimated value of the contract, which reproduced, without alteration, the initially announced conditions of the contract for that lot, was 33 917.82 leva (BGN) excluding VAT (approximately EUR 17 370). The contracting authority stated that the reason for choosing that form of award was the lack of a suitable tender for that lot in the prior open procedure.

27 The contracting authority invited only one economic operator to take part in that negotiated procedure without prior publication – in this instance, Dikar Konsult OOD – and awarded it, by a contract concluded on 29 December 2017, a contract with a value of BGN 33 907 excluding VAT (approximately EUR 17 365).

28 That negotiated procedure without prior publication was the subject of a report made to the Minister. That report criticised the contracting authority for having, without any justification, favoured the chosen economic operator and for having thus eliminated free competition, in breach of the principles referred to, in particular, in Article 160 of the Financial Regulation.

29 By letter of 20 March 2020, the Minister informed the contracting authority, in its capacity as a recipient of EU funds, of the report received and the initiation of a financial correction procedure.

30 The contracting authority maintained that it was entitled to choose, in accordance with Article 18(7) of the Law on public procurement, to negotiate with one or more specified persons. Furthermore, it argued that the negotiated procedure without prior publication was inseparable from the public competitive tendering procedure which preceded it, in which all interested parties had the opportunity to participate. It stated that the submission of only one tender, the amount of which was more than twice the estimated value of the contract, demonstrated that there was a lack of interest in participating in that procedure because of the low value of the contract. The fact that the public competitive tendering procedure had been discontinued without a successful result thus justified the contracting authority’s decision to invite only one economic operator to participate in the subsequent negotiated procedure without prior publication.

31 By decision of 15 April 2020 (‘the decision of 15 April 2020’), the Minister applied to the contracting authority a financial correction of 10% of the expenditure eligible for funding from the EU funds linked to the contract concluded with Dikar Konsult. In that decision, the Minister challenged the methods for the implementation of the negotiated procedure without prior publication. He stated that it is apparent in particular from Article 160 of the Financial Regulation that the principle of free competition absolutely must be complied with in a public procurement procedure. Accordingly, point 1 of Article 79(1) of the Law on public procurement cannot justify the award of a contract that has not been put out to competition at all, given that, by referring to ‘persons’ in the plural, Article 64(1) and (3) of the regulation implementing that law expressly requires that several persons must be invited to participate in the negotiations. Thus, by inviting only Dikar Konsult without giving reasons for that decision, the contracting authority conferred an unjustified advantage on that economic operator and restricted the participation of an undefined circle of economic operators interested in the contract.

32 Following an action brought by the contracting authority, the Administrativen sad Blagoevgrad (Administrative Court, Blagoevgrad, Bulgaria) annulled the decision of 15 April 2020. According to that court, the conditions under which the negotiated procedure without prior publication was conducted make it factually impossible to apply the principle of safeguarding competition on the broadest possible basis, either because of the specific subject matter of the contract or given the lack of suitable tenders. Furthermore, Article 18(7) of the Law on public procurement expressly provides the contracting authority with the option to negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more specified persons.

33 Hearing an appeal on a point of law brought by the Minister, the Varhoven administrativen sad (Supreme Administrative Court, Bulgaria) questions whether a contracting authority infringes the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and free competition when it sends an invitation to conclude a public contract to only one economic operator in a negotiated procedure without prior publication which, first, is launched following the discontinuation of an unsuccessful open procedure and, second, reproduces the initial conditions of the contract without altering them, even though the subject matter of the contract does not have special characteristics which justify its performance being entrusted to the economic operator invited to negotiate.

34 In that regard, that court notes divergences among the Bulgarian courts, including within the referring court itself, as regards the interpretation of point 1 of Article 79(1) of the Law on public procurement, read in conjunction with Article 160(2) and Article 164(1)(d) of the Financial Regulation. It observes, first of all, that although Article 160(2) of the Financial Regulation allows, exceptionally, derogation from the principle of public procurement involving competition on the broadest possible basis, that provision does not have the effect of setting aside the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination. The first sentence of Article 164(4) of the Financial Regulation refers, moreover, to ‘tenderers’ in the plural.

35 Next, although the Financial Regulation does not normally apply to national contracting authorities, the referring court considers that it is necessary for it to apply that regulation in this case, since the value of the public contract concerned does not reach the threshold set by Directive 2014/24. The application of Article 160(1) and (2) of the Financial Regulation may be justified by the use of resources from the budget of the Union.

36 Lastly, the referring court notes that the relevant facts in this case occurred while Regulation No 966/2012 was still in force, whereas the decision of 15 April 2020 was adopted after the repeal of that regulation and the entry into force of the Financial Regulation. In any event, the content of Article 160 of the Financial Regulation and that of Article 102(1) and (2) of Regulation No 966/2012, which is applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings, are identical.

37 In those circumstances the Varhoven administrativen sad (Supreme Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Are Article 160(1) and (2) of Regulation 2018/1046 and Article 102(1) and (2) of Regulation No 966/2012 to be interpreted as also applying to contracting authorities of Member States of the European Union where the public contracts that they award are financed by resources from the European Structural and Investment Funds?

(2) If the first question is answered in the affirmative, are the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination enshrined in Article 160(1) of Regulation 2018/1046 and Article 102(1) of Regulation No 966/2012 to be interpreted as permitting a total restriction of competition in the award of a public contract by way of a negotiated procedure without prior publication where the subject matter of the public contract does not have special characteristics which objectively require it to be performed only by the economic operator invited to negotiate? In particular, are Article 160(1) and (2) of Regulation 2018/1046, read in conjunction with Article 164(1)(d) thereof, and Article 102(1) and (2) of Regulation No 966/2012, read in conjunction with Article 104(1)(d) thereof, to be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, under which, following the discontinuation of a public procurement procedure on the ground that the sole tender submitted is unsuitable, the contracting authority may invite only one economic operator to participate in a negotiated procedure without prior publication where the subject matter of the public contract does not have special characteristics which objectively require it to be performed only by the economic operator invited to negotiate?’

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

38 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 160(1) and (2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 102(1) and (2) of Regulation No 966/2012 must be interpreted as applying to procedures for the award of public contracts organised by contracting authorities of the Member States where those contracts are financed by resources from the European Structural and Investment Funds.

39 Article 160 of the Financial Regulation, entitled ‘Principles applicable to contracts and scope’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof, that ‘all contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget shall respect the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination’. Paragraph 2 of that provision states that ‘all contracts shall be put out to competition on the broadest possible basis, except when use is made of the procedure referred to in point (d) of Article 164(1)’, namely the negotiated procedure, including without prior publication.

40 As is apparent from paragraph 35 of this judgment, that first question is based on the premiss that, although not applicable to national contracting authorities, the Financial Regulation could nevertheless offset the inapplicability of Directive 2014/24 to a public contract whose value does not reach the threshold set by that directive.

41 The referring court rightly observes that the Financial Regulation does not apply to procurement procedures organised by contracting authorities of the Member States.

42 It follows from Article 2(51) of the Financial Regulation that, for the purposes of that regulation, a ‘public contract’ means ‘a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities within the meaning of Articles 174 and 178, in order to obtain, against payment of a price paid in whole or in part from the budget, the supply of movable or immovable assets, the execution of works or the provision of services …’.

43 Article 174 of that regulation, which is entitled ‘The contracting authority’, provides, in the first sentence of the first subparagraph of paragraph 1 thereof, that ‘Union institutions, executive agencies and Union bodies referred to in Articles 70 and 71 shall be deemed to be contracting authorities in respect of contracts awarded on their own account, except where they purchase from a central purchasing body’.

44 As indicated in Annex II to the Financial Regulation, the wording of Article 174 of that regulation corresponds to that of Article 117(1) of Regulation No 966/2012, which was repealed by the Financial Regulation with effect from 2 August 2018.

45 Accordingly, the essence of the concept of ‘contracting authority’ derived from Regulation No 966/2012 remained unchanged after the entry into force of the Financial Regulation, with the result that that concept must be interpreted in the same way in both of those regulations.

46 Thus it is clear from Article 174 of the Financial Regulation that the concept of ‘contracting authority’ to which Article 2(51) of that regulation refers includes, like Article 117 of Regulation No 966/2012, only the institutions of the European Union, executive agencies and bodies of the European Union referred to in Articles 70 and 71 of the Financial Regulation.

47 It follows that neither of those regulations is applicable to procedures for the award of public contracts by the contracting authorities of the Member States.

48 Moreover, it follows from Article 63(1) of the Financial Regulation that, where the Commission implements the budget under shared management, tasks relating to budget implementation are to be delegated to Member States. The Member States must comply, in particular, with the complementary provisions laid down in sector-specific rules. Therefore, as the Commission pointed out in its written observations, Article 63(1) of that regulation requires Member States, even when carrying out budget implementation tasks through public procurement financed by resources from the European Structural and Investment Funds, to apply not the Financial Regulation but their national legislation, including the provisions transposing the directives on public procurement.

49 It consequently appears that, even where a public contract is financed by resources from the European Structural and Investment Funds, the obligation on the contracting authorities of the Member States to comply with the fundamental principles of public procurement, namely the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, transparency and proportionality, cannot arise from Article 160 of the Financial Regulation.

50 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 160(1) and (2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 102(1) and (2) of Regulation No 966/2012 must be interpreted as not applying to procedures for the award of public contracts organised by contracting authorities of the Member States, even where those contracts are financed by resources from the European Structural and Investment Funds.

The second question

51 As a preliminary point, it should be recalled that a question referred for a preliminary ruling must be examined in the light of all the provisions of the Treaties and of secondary legislation which may be relevant to the issue raised (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 July 1985, Mutsch, 137/84, EU:C:1985:335, paragraph 10). The fact that a national court’s question refers to certain provisions of EU law does not mean therefore that the Court of Justice may not provide the national court with all the guidance on points of interpretation that may be of assistance in adjudicating on the case pending before it, whether or not that court has referred to those points in its question (see, to that effect, judgments of 12 December 1990, SARPP, C-241/89, EU:C:1990:459, paragraph 8, and of 8 June 2017, Medisanus, C-296/15, EU:C:2017:431, paragraph 55).

52 By its second question, the referring court refers to Articles 160 and 164 of the Financial Regulation and Articles 102 and 104 of Regulation No 966/2012. It follows from the answer given to the first question that those provisions do not apply in the present case.

53 However, those provisions, which set out the principles of public procurement, have a purpose equivalent to that of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, which also gives rise to an obligation to comply with the fundamental principles of public procurement.

54 Although the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings does not reach the threshold for the applicability of Directive 2014/24, which is fixed in Article 4(c) thereof at EUR 209 000 for supply contracts awarded by sub-central contracting authorities, such as the municipality of Razlog, the provisions of Directive 2014/24 have been made applicable, directly and unconditionally, by national law to situations which, like that of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, normally fall outside its scope. It follows from Article 49(2) of the Law on the European structural and investment funds that the Law on public procurement, which faithfully transposed Directive 2014/24 into the Bulgarian legal system, applies to all public procurement procedures subsidised by the European Structural and Investment Funds, irrespective of the value of the contracts concerned.

55 Where, in regulating situations outside the scope of an act of EU law, national legislation seeks to adopt, directly and unconditionally, the same solutions as those adopted in that act, it is clearly in the interest of the European Union that provisions taken from that act be given a uniform interpretation. This means that future differences of interpretation can be forestalled and identical treatment of internal situations and situations falling within the scope of those provisions can be ensured (see, to that effect, judgments of 18 October 1990, Dzodzi, C-297/88 and C-197/89, EU:C:1990:360, paragraphs 36 and 37; of 5 April 2017, Borta, C-298/15, EU:C:2017:266, paragraphs 33 and 34; and of 31 March 2022, Smetna palata na Republika Bulgaria, C-195/21, EU:C:2022:239, paragraph 43).

56 Moreover, since the second question concerns a negotiated procedure without prior publication for public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, it should be noted that Article 32(2) of Directive 2014/24, which lists, in points (a) to (c) thereof, ‘any of the … cases’ in which it is permitted to use such a procedure, is relevant for the answer to that second question. That list is exhaustive, since Article 26(6) of that directive specifies that Member States must not allow the application of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a call for competition in any other cases than those referred to in Article 32 of that directive (see, by analogy, judgments of 8 April 2008, Commission v Italy, C-337/05, EU:C:2008:203, paragraphs 56 and 57, and of 15 October 2009, Commission v Germany, C-275/08, not published, EU:C:2009:632, paragraph 54).

57 In those circumstances, Article 32(2)(a) of that directive, read in conjunction with Article 18(1) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may, in a negotiated procedure without prior publication, approach a single economic operator where that procedure reproduces, without substantial alterations, the initial conditions of the contract that were referred to in a prior open procedure which was discontinued on the ground that the only tender submitted was unsuitable, even if the subject matter of the contract in question does not have special characteristics which objectively justify its performance being entrusted exclusively to that economic operator.

58 Under the first subparagraph of Article 32(2)(a) of Directive 2014/24, use of that procedure is allowed, inter alia, for public supply contracts where no tenders or no suitable tenders have been submitted in response to an open procedure or a restricted procedure, provided that the initial conditions of the contract are not substantially altered and that a report is sent to the Commission where it so requests.

59 Accordingly, it is clear from the wording of that provision that a contracting authority may use a negotiated procedure without prior publication where three cumulative conditions are satisfied. In the first place, it must demonstrate that it did not receive any tender or, at the very least, any suitable tender in a prior open or restricted procurement procedure which it discontinued on that ground. In the second place, the subsequent negotiated procedure without prior publication must not substantially alter the initial conditions of the contract, as set out in the contract notice published in the prior open or restricted procedure. In the third and last place, the contracting authority must be able to send a status report to the Commission if the latter so requests.

60 Since that last condition is not at issue in this case, it is necessary to clarify the content of the first two conditions for the application of the first subparagraph of Article 32(2)(a) of Directive 2014/24.

61 As regards the first condition, it is apparent from the second subparagraph of Article 32(2)(a) of that directive that a tender will be considered not to be suitable where it is irrelevant to the contract, being manifestly incapable, without substantial changes, of meeting the contracting authority’s needs and requirements as specified in the procurement documents.

62 A tender must be considered not to be suitable where it is ‘unacceptable’ within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 26(4)(b) of that directive, which covers, inter alia, competitive procedures with negotiation. Under that provision, tenders submitted by tenderers whose price exceeds the contracting authority's budget as determined and documented before the launching of the procurement procedure are to be considered unacceptable.

63 That is clearly the case for a tender which, like that referred to in paragraph 25 of this judgment, had proposed an amount more than twice the estimated value of the contract declared by the contracting authority.

64 As regards the second condition for the application of that provision, it seems to follow from the request for a preliminary ruling that, in the negotiated procedure at issue in the main proceedings, the contracting authority did not substantially alter the initial conditions of the contract, which it is, however, for the referring court to verify.

65 Moreover, neither recital 50 nor Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 can invalidate that literal interpretation of Article 32(2)(a) of that directive.

66 As is apparent from its general scheme, recital 50 of Directive 2014/24 refers to cases in which a negotiated procedure without prior publication may be used which do not correspond to that referred to in Article 32(2)(a) of that directive.

67 Furthermore, where a contracting authority decides to approach a single economic operator in a negotiated procedure without prior publication, which is organised following the failure of an open or restricted procedure and which reproduces, without substantial alterations, the conditions which initially appeared in the contract notice published in the prior open or restricted procedure, such conduct remains compatible with the principles of procurement set out in the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, even if the subject matter of the contract in question does not objectively require that contracting authority to approach that operator. In such a situation, both the prior open or restricted procedure and the subsequent negotiated procedure without prior publication form an indivisible whole, with the result that the fact that the economic operators potentially interested in the contract concerned have had the opportunity to come forward and to compete cannot be overlooked.

68 In those circumstances, economic operators who have failed to act diligently by not submitting a suitable tender during an open or restricted procedure cannot compel the contracting authority, in the subsequent negotiated procedure without prior publication, to enter into negotiations with them. It was open to them to submit a tender in the prior open or restricted procedure and, therefore, to benefit fully, in that procedure, from the principles of equality, non-discrimination, transparency and proportionality.

69 Nevertheless, in order to be able to demonstrate that the contract in question was not designed with the intention of excluding it from the scope of Directive 2014/24 or of artificially narrowing competition, as required by the second subparagraph of Article 18(1) thereof, the contracting authority must be able to prove that the price on which it has agreed with the successful tenderer corresponds to the market price and that it does not exceed the estimated value of the contract, calculated in accordance with the requirements of Article 5 of that directive. In so doing, the contracting authority complies with the principle that the burden of proving the actual existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation under Article 32 of that directive lies on the person seeking to rely on that derogation (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 March 1987, Commission v Italy, 199/85, EU:C:1987:115, paragraph 14, and of 8 April 2008, Commission v Italy, C-337/05, EU:C:2008:203, paragraph 58).

70 Furthermore, by establishing that the price of the contract concluded at the end of the negotiated procedure without prior publication corresponds to the market price, the contracting authority demonstrates that it has made the best possible use of public funds, as provided for in recital 2 of the same directive, and therefore that no irregularity within the meaning of the EU rules on the European structural and investment funds has been committed (see, by analogy, judgments of 26 May 2016, Județul Neamț and Județul Bacău, C-260/14 and C-261/14, EU:C:2016:360, paragraph 46, and of 1 October 2020, Elme Messer Metalurgs, C-743/18, EU:C:2020:767, paragraph 51).

71 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second question is that Article 32(2)(a) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 18(1) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may, in a negotiated procedure without prior publication, approach a single economic operator where that procedure reproduces, without substantial alteration, the initial conditions of the contract that were mentioned in a prior open procedure which was discontinued on the ground that the only tender submitted was unsuitable, even if the subject matter of the contract in question does not have special characteristics which objectively justify its performance being entrusted exclusively to that economic operator.

Costs

72 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 160(1) and (2) of Regulation (EU, Euratom) 2018/1046 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 18 July 2018 on the financial rules applicable to the general budget of the Union, amending Regulations (EU) No 1296/2013, (EU) No 1301/2013, (EU) No 1303/2013, (EU) No 1304/2013, (EU) No 1309/2013, (EU) No 1316/2013, (EU) No 223/2014, (EU) No 283/2014, and Decision No 541/2014/EU and repealing Regulation (EU, Euratom) No 966/2012, as well as Article 102(1) and (2) of Regulation (EU, Euratom) No 966/2012 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 25 October 2012 on the financial rules applicable to the general budget of the Union and repealing Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002, as amended by Regulation (EU, Euratom) 2015/1929 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 28 October 2015, must be interpreted as not applying to procedures for the award of public contracts organised by contracting authorities of the Member States, even where those contracts are financed by resources from the European Structural and Investment Funds.

2. Article 32(2)(a) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2015/2170 of 24 November 2015, read in conjunction with Article 18(1) of that directive, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2015/2170, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may, in a negotiated procedure without prior publication, approach a single economic operator where that procedure reproduces, without substantial alteration, the initial conditions of the contract that were mentioned in a prior open procedure which was discontinued on the ground that the only tender submitted was unsuitable, even if the subject matter of the contract in question does not have special characteristics which objectively justify its performance being entrusted exclusively to that economic operator.

ORDONNANCE DE LA COUR (neuvième chambre)

6 octobre 2021 (*)

« Renvoi préjudiciel – Article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour – Directive 2014/24/UE – Déroulement de la procédure – Choix des participants et attribution des marchés – Article 63 – Soumissionnaire recourant aux capacités d'une autre entité pour satisfaire aux exigences du pouvoir adjudicateur – Non-respect des conditions tenant aux capacités techniques et professionnelles du soumissionnaire par l'entité aux capacités desquelles le soumissionnaire entend recourir – Obligation de permettre audit soumissionnaire de remplacer ladite entité – Principe de proportionnalité »

Dans l'affaire C-316/21,

ayant pour objet une demande de décision préjudicielle au titre de l'article 267 TFUE, introduite par le Raad van State (Conseil d'État, Belgique), par décision du 7 mai 2021, parvenue à la Cour le 21 mai 2021, dans la procédure

Monument Vandekerckhove NV

contre

Stad Gent,

en présence de :

Denys NV,

Aelterman BVBA,

LA COUR (neuvième chambre), composée de M. N. Piçarra, président de chambre, MM. D. Šváby (rapporteur) et S. Rodin, juges,

avocat général : M. M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

greffier : M. A. Calot Escobar,

vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée, conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation de l'article 63 de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE (JO 2014, L 94, p. 65), telle que modifiée par le règlement délégué (UE) 2017/2365 de la Commission du 18 décembre 2017 modifiant la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil en ce qui concerne les seuils d'application pour les procédures de passation des marchés (JO 2017, L 337, p. 19), ainsi que des principes du droit de l'Union d'égalité de traitement, de non-discrimination et de transparence.

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige opposant Monument Vandekerckhove NV à la Stad Gent (ville de Gand, Belgique) au sujet de la décision de cette dernière de ne pas sélectionner cette société dans la procédure de passation d'un marché public de travaux et d'attribuer ce marché aux entreprises Denys NV et Aelterman BVBA, constituées en une société momentanée.

Le cadre juridique

La directive 2014/24

3 Le considérant 84 de la directive 2014/24 énonce :

« De nombreux opérateurs économiques, et en particulier les PME, estiment que les lourdeurs administratives découlant de l'obligation de produire un nombre important de certificats ou d'autres documents en rapport avec les critères d'exclusion et de sélection constituent l'un des principaux obstacles à leur participation aux marchés publics. Limiter ces exigences, par exemple en utilisant un document unique de marché européen (DUME) consistant en une déclaration sur l'honneur actualisée, pourrait conduire à une simplification considérable dont bénéficieraient tant les pouvoirs adjudicateurs que les opérateurs économiques.

Le soumissionnaire à qui il a été décidé d'attribuer le marché devrait néanmoins être tenu de produire les éléments de preuve pertinents ; à défaut, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs ne devraient pas passer de marché avec lui. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs devraient également être autorisés à demander, à tout moment, communication de tout ou partie des documents justificatifs lorsqu'ils l'estiment nécessaire pour assurer le bon déroulement de la procédure. Cela pourrait notamment être le cas lors de procédures en deux étapes (procédure restreinte, procédure concurrentielle avec négociation, dialogue compétitif et partenariat d'innovation) dans le cadre desquelles le pouvoir adjudicateur recourt à la possibilité de limiter le nombre de candidats invités à soumissionner. Demander que les documents justificatifs soient produits au moment de la sélection des candidats à inviter pourrait se justifier afin d'éviter que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs invitent des candidats qui se montreraient ultérieurement incapables de présenter les documents justificatifs au stade de l'attribution du marché, empêchant ainsi des candidats remplissant par ailleurs les conditions requises de participer.

Il convient d'indiquer expressément que le DUME devrait également fournir les informations pertinentes concernant les entités aux capacités desquelles un opérateur économique a recours, de sorte qu'il puisse être procédé à la vérification des informations concernant ces entités parallèlement aux vérifications concernant l'opérateur économique principal et aux mêmes conditions. »

4 L'article 4 de cette directive, intitulé « Montants des seuils », prévoit :

« La présente directive s'applique aux marchés dont la valeur estimée hors taxe sur la valeur ajoutée (TVA) est égale ou supérieure aux seuils suivants :

a) 5 548 000 [euros] pour les marchés publics de travaux ;

[...] »

5 L'article 18 de ladite directive, qui se rapporte aux « Principes de la passation de marchés », dispose :

« 1. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité et sans discrimination et agissent d'une manière transparente et proportionnée.

Un marché ne peut être conçu dans l'intention de le soustraire au champ d'application de la présente directive ou de limiter artificiellement la concurrence. La concurrence est considérée comme artificiellement limitée lorsqu'un marché est conçu dans l'intention de favoriser ou de défavoriser indûment certains opérateurs économiques.

2. Les États membres prennent les mesures appropriées pour veiller à ce que, dans l'exécution des marchés publics, les opérateurs économiques se conforment aux obligations applicables dans les domaines du droit environnemental, social et du travail établies par le droit de l'Union, le droit national, les conventions collectives ou par les dispositions internationales en matière de droit environnemental, social et du travail énumérées à l'annexe X. »

6 Intitulé « Opérateurs économiques », l'article 19 de la même directive dispose, à son paragraphe 2, premier alinéa :

7 L'article 57 de la directive 2014/24, intitulé « Motifs d'exclusion », prévoit, à son paragraphe 6 :

« Tout opérateur économique qui se trouve dans l'une des situations visées aux paragraphes 1 et 4 peut fournir des preuves afin d'attester que les mesures qu'il a prises suffisent à démontrer sa fiabilité malgré l'existence d'un motif d'exclusion pertinent. Si ces preuves sont jugées suffisantes, l'opérateur économique concerné n'est pas exclu de la procédure de passation de marché.

À cette fin, l'opérateur économique prouve qu'il a versé ou entrepris de verser une indemnité en réparation de tout préjudice causé par l'infraction pénale ou la faute, clarifié totalement les faits et circonstances en collaborant activement avec les autorités chargées de l'enquête et pris des mesures concrètes de nature technique et organisationnelle et en matière de personnel propres à prévenir une nouvelle infraction pénale ou une nouvelle faute.

Les mesures prises par les opérateurs économiques sont évaluées en tenant compte de la gravité de l'infraction pénale ou de la faute ainsi que de ses circonstances particulières. Lorsque les mesures sont jugées insuffisantes, la motivation de la décision concernée est transmise à l'opérateur économique.

Un opérateur économique qui a été exclu par un jugement définitif de la participation à des procédures de passation de marché ou d'attribution de concession n'est pas autorisé à faire usage de la possibilité prévue au présent paragraphe pendant la période d'exclusion fixée par ledit jugement dans les États membres où le jugement produit ses effets. »

8 Aux termes de l'article 59 de cette directive, qui s'intitule « Document unique de marché européen » :

« 1. Lors de la présentation de demandes de participation ou d'offres, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs acceptent le document unique de marché européen (DUME) consistant en une déclaration sur l'honneur actualisée à titre de preuve a priori en lieu et place des certificats délivrés par des autorités publiques ou des tiers pour confirmer que l'opérateur économique concerné remplit l'une des conditions suivantes :

a) il ne se trouve pas dans l'une des situations, visées à l'article 57, qui doit ou peut entraîner l'exclusion d'un opérateur ;

b) il répond aux critères de sélection applicables qui ont été établis conformément à l'article 58 ;

c) le cas échéant, il respecte les règles et critères objectifs qui ont été établis conformément à l'article 65.

Lorsque l'opérateur économique a recours aux capacités d'autres entités en vertu de l'article 63, le DUME comporte également les informations visées au premier alinéa, du présent paragraphe en ce qui concerne ces entités.

Le DUME consiste en une déclaration officielle par laquelle l'opérateur économique affirme que le motif d'exclusion concerné ne s'applique pas et/ou que le critère de sélection concerné est rempli et il fournit les informations pertinentes requises par le pouvoir adjudicateur. Le DUME désigne en outre l'autorité publique ou le tiers compétent pour établir les documents justificatifs et contient une déclaration officielle indiquant que l'opérateur économique sera en mesure, sur demande et sans tarder, de fournir lesdits documents justificatifs.

Lorsque le pouvoir adjudicateur peut obtenir directement les documents justificatifs en accédant à une base de données en vertu du paragraphe 5, le DUME contient également les renseignements requis à cette fin, tels que l'adresse internet de la base de données, toute donnée d'identification et, le cas échéant, la déclaration de consentement nécessaire.

4. Un pouvoir adjudicateur peut demander à des soumissionnaires et des candidats, à tout moment de la procédure, de fournir tout ou partie des documents justificatifs, si cela est nécessaire pour assurer le bon déroulement de la procédure.

Avant l'attribution du marché, le pouvoir adjudicateur exige du soumissionnaire auquel il a décidé d'attribuer le marché, sauf pour les marchés fondés sur des accords-cadres lorsque ces marchés sont conclus conformément à l'article 33, paragraphe 3, ou à l'article 33, paragraphe 4, point a), qu'il présente des documents justificatifs mis à jour conformément à l'article 60 et, le cas échéant, à l'article 62. Le pouvoir adjudicateur peut inviter les opérateurs économiques à compléter ou à expliciter les certificats reçus en application des articles 60 et 62.

5. Nonobstant le paragraphe 4, les opérateurs économiques ne sont pas tenus de présenter des documents justificatifs ou d'autres pièces justificatives lorsque et dans la mesure où le pouvoir adjudicateur a la possibilité d'obtenir directement les certificats ou les informations pertinentes en accédant à une base de données nationale dans un État membre qui est accessible gratuitement, comme un registre national des marchés publics, un dossier virtuel d'entreprise, un système de stockage électronique de documents ou un système de préqualification.

Nonobstant le paragraphe 4, les opérateurs économiques ne sont pas tenus de présenter des documents justificatifs lorsque le pouvoir adjudicateur ayant attribué le marché ou conclu l'accord cadre a déjà ces documents en sa possession.

Aux fins du premier alinéa, les États membres veillent à ce que les bases de données qui contiennent des informations pertinentes concernant les opérateurs économiques et qui peuvent être consultées par leurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs puissent l'être également, dans les mêmes conditions, par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs d'autres États membres.

6. Les États membres rendent accessible et mettent à jour dans la base e-Certis une liste complète des bases de données contenant les informations pertinentes relatives aux opérateurs économiques qui peuvent être consultées par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs d'autres États membres. Les États membres communiquent aux autres États membres, à leur demande, toute information relative aux bases de données visées au présent article. »

9 Intitulé « Moyens de preuve », l'article 60 de ladite directive dispose, à son paragraphe 1 :

« Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent exiger la production des certificats, déclarations et autres moyens de preuve visés aux paragraphes 2, 3 et 4, ainsi qu'à l'annexe XII, à titre de preuve de l'absence des motifs d'exclusion visés à l'article 57 et du respect des critères de sélection conformément à l'article 58.

Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs n'exigent pas de moyens de preuve autres que ceux visés au présent article et à l'article 62. En ce qui concerne l'article 63, les opérateurs économiques peuvent avoir recours à tout moyen approprié pour prouver au pouvoir adjudicateur qu'ils disposeront des moyens nécessaires. »

10 Aux termes de l'article 63 de la directive 2014/24 qui se rapporte au « Recours aux capacités d'autres entités » :

« 1. Un opérateur économique peut, le cas échéant et pour un marché déterminé, avoir recours aux capacités d'autres entités, quelle que soit la nature juridique des liens qui l'unissent à ces entités, en ce qui concerne les critères relatifs à la capacité économique et financière énoncés à l'article 58, paragraphe 3, et les critères relatifs aux capacités techniques et professionnelles, visés à l'article 58, paragraphe 4. En ce qui concerne les critères relatifs aux titres d'études et professionnels visés à l'annexe XII, partie II, point f), ou à l'expérience professionnelle pertinente, les opérateurs économiques ne peuvent toutefois avoir recours aux capacités d'autres entités que lorsque ces dernières exécuteront les travaux ou fourniront les services pour lesquels ces capacités sont requises. Si un opérateur économique souhaite recourir aux capacités d'autres entités, il apporte au pouvoir adjudicateur la preuve qu'il disposera des moyens nécessaires, par exemple, en produisant l'engagement de ces entités à cet effet.

Le pouvoir adjudicateur vérifie, conformément aux articles 59, 60 et 61, si les entités aux capacités desquelles l'opérateur économique entend avoir recours remplissent les critères de sélection applicables et s'il existe des motifs d'exclusion en vertu de l'article 57. Le pouvoir adjudicateur exige que l'opérateur économique remplace une entité qui ne remplit pas un critère de sélection applicable ou à l'encontre de laquelle il existe des motifs d'exclusion obligatoires. Le pouvoir adjudicateur peut exiger ou peut être obligé par l'État membre à exiger que l'opérateur économique remplace une entité à l'encontre de laquelle il existe des motifs d'exclusion non obligatoires.

2. Pour les marchés de travaux, les marchés de services et les travaux de pose ou d'installation dans le cadre d'un marché de fournitures, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent exiger que certaines tâches essentielles soient effectuées directement par le soumissionnaire lui-même ou, si l'offre est soumise par un groupement d'opérateurs économiques visé à l'article 19, paragraphe 2, par un participant dudit groupement. »

Le droit belge

11 L'article 73, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de l'arrêté royal du 18 avril 2017, relatif à la passation des marchés publics dans les secteurs classiques (ci–après l'« arrêté royal de 2017 »), dispose :

« Le pouvoir adjudicateur vérifie, conformément aux articles 73 à 76 de la [loi du 17 juin 2016 relative aux marchés publics], si les entités à la capacité desquelles l'opérateur économique entend avoir recours remplissent les critères de sélection et s'il existe des motifs d'exclusion dans leur chef, sans préjudice de la possibilité d'appliquer des mesures correctrices conformément à l'article 70 de [cette loi]. Le pouvoir adjudicateur exige que l'opérateur économique remplace une entité à l'encontre de laquelle il existe des motifs d'exclusion visés aux articles 67 et 68 de [ladite loi] ou qui ne remplit pas un critère de sélection applicable. Le pouvoir adjudicateur peut en outre exiger que l'opérateur économique remplace une entité à l'encontre de laquelle il existe des motifs d'exclusion non obligatoires visés à l'article 69 de la [même loi]. L'absence de remplacement suite à une telle demande donne lieu à une décision de non-sélection ».

12 Le rapport au Roi (Moniteur belge du 9 mai 2017, p. 55345) indique, à l'égard de cet article (p. 55374) :

« Le présent article transpose l'article 63 de la directive 2014/24/UE et correspond à l'article 74 de l'arrêté royal du 15 juillet 2011. Il traite du cas du candidat ou du soumissionnaire qui ne répond pas par lui–même aux critères de sélection et qui fait dès lors appel à la capacité d'entités tierces.

[...]

Selon l'alinéa 2, le pouvoir adjudicateur doit vérifier si les entités à la capacité desquelles il est fait appel ne se trouvent pas en situation d'exclusion. Lorsqu'un motif d'exclusion obligatoire ou un motif d'exclusion relatif aux dettes fiscales ou sociales est détecté dans le chef de l'entité dont la capacité est invoquée ou que cette dernière ne satisfait pas au critère de sélection relatif à la capacité à laquelle il est fait appel, le pouvoir adjudicateur doit exiger son remplacement. Par contre, lorsqu'un motif d'exclusion facultatif est détecté dans le chef de cette entité, le pouvoir adjudicateur peut exiger son remplacement sans qu'il ne s'agisse ici d'une obligation. Il convient en outre de souligner que lorsque le remplacement de l'entité à la capacité de laquelle il est fait appel est demandé, l'absence de remplacement donne lieu à la non–sélection ».

Le litige au principal et les questions préjudicielles

13 Par un avis de marché publié, le 13 décembre 2018, au Bulletin der Aanbestedingen (Bulletin des adjudications), modifié le 5 février 2019, la ville de Gand a lancé une procédure ouverte de passation d'un marché public de travaux ayant pour objet la restauration de gazomètres protégés dans cette ville. Le seul critère d'attribution de ce marché, dont la valeur est estimée à 4 265 221,01 euros, hors TVA, est celui du moins-disant.

14 Quatre soumissionnaires, dont Monument Vandekerckhove et la société momentanée Denys – Aelterman, ont déposé une offre.

15 Après l'ouverture des offres, la ville de Gand a demandé, par lettres du 23 avril 2019 et du 20 mai 2019, des documents et des précisions à Monument Vandekerckhove, concernant notamment les capacités techniques en matière de rivetage des sous-traitants que cette société avait proposés. Monument Vandekerckhove a répondu à chacune de ces demandes.

16 Le rapport d'adjudication du 26 juin 2019 proposait de ne sélectionner que la société momentanée Denys – Aelterman et de lui attribuer le marché en cause. Il y était constaté, notamment, que seul l'un des trois sous-traitants auxquels Monument Vandekerckhove entendait recourir satisfaisait aux critères de sélection. Les deux autres sous-traitants ne satisfaisaient pas aux exigences relatives aux diplômes et aux références requises afin d'attester de l'expertise générale dans le domaine du marché. Or, il ressortait du cahier des charges que l'offre devait être accompagnée d'une déclaration indiquant les sous–traitants et qu'il fallait indiquer au moins trois sous-traitants par spécialité, et garantir que le travail sera effectué par l'un d'entre eux. Ces sous-traitants devaient, en outre, être soumis aux mêmes critères relatifs à l'expertise générale et aux qualifications d'études et professionnelles que les exécutants.

17 Le 10 juillet 2019, le collège des bourgmestre et échevins de la ville de Gand a décidé, en se référant au rapport d'adjudication du 26 juin 2019, d'une part, de ne pas sélectionner l'offre de Monument Vandekerckhove et, d'autre part, d'attribuer le marché à la société momentanée Denys – Aelterman (ci-après la « décision litigieuse »).

18 Par un arrêt du 12 septembre 2019, le Raad van State (Conseil d'État, Belgique) a rejeté la demande de suspension en extrême urgence de l'exécution de la décision litigieuse introduite par Monument Vandekerckhove le 21 août 2019.

19 Le 4 octobre 2019, Monument Vandekerckhove a introduit un recours au fond tendant à l'annulation de la décision litigieuse, au soutien duquel elle a fait valoir, en premier lieu, que c'est à tort qu'elle n'a pas été sélectionnée. La ville de Gand aurait en effet dû, conformément à l'article 73, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de l'arrêté royal de 2017, lui permettre de proposer d'autres sous-traitants pour remplacer ceux qui, selon elle, ne convenaient pas.

20 Monument Vandekerckhove relève également que c'est de manière erronée que le Raad van State (Conseil d'État) s'est appuyé, dans son arrêt du 12 septembre 2019, sur l'arrêt du 14 septembre 2017, Casertana Costruzioni (C-223/16, EU:C:2017:685). Cet arrêt reposerait, en effet, sur l'article 48, paragraphe 3, de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO 2004, L 134, p. 114). Or, cette disposition aurait été abrogée, avec effet au 18 avril 2016, par l'article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24, lequel aurait substantiellement modifié le régime du recours aux capacités d'autres entités dans le cadre d'un marché public.

21 Au demeurant, le principe de transparence aurait été respecté dès lors qu'il était clair, pour tous les soumissionnaires, que le remplacement était possible, puisque l'article 73, paragraphe 1, de l'arrêté royal de 2017 s'appliquait. Par ailleurs, le principe d'égalité de traitement ne saurait être en cause, étant donné que le remplacement des deux sous-traitants n'aurait pas eu de conséquence sur l'unique critère d'attribution, à savoir le prix, et n'aurait dès lors eu aucune incidence sur le classement.

22 L'article 73, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de l'arrêté royal de 2017 devrait donc être interprété en ce sens que c'est uniquement à titre exceptionnel, en cas de risque d'atteinte aux principes d'égalité de traitement, de non-discrimination, de transparence et de proportionnalité, que le pouvoir adjudicateur peut refuser le remplacement.

23 Monument Vandekerckhove allègue, en second lieu, une violation de l'obligation de motivation, dès lors que le rapport d'adjudication s'est borné à constater sa non–sélection, sans justifier les raisons de l'inapplication de l'article 73, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de l'arrêté royal de 2017.

24 La ville de Gand estime, quant à elle, que l'article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24 ne peut contraindre le pouvoir adjudicateur à autoriser, en tout état de cause, un soumissionnaire à remplacer les sous-traitants qui ne répondent pas aux critères requis.

25 Elle allègue, également, que les principes d'égalité de traitement et de transparence s'opposent à la modification d'une offre postérieurement à son dépôt. À cet égard, la société momentanée Denys – Aelterman ajoute que le pouvoir adjudicateur ne peut être tenu au remplacement d'un sous-traitant que dans la mesure où cela n'a pas pour effet de modifier l'offre ou de régulariser un manquement substantiel qui existait déjà à la date du dépôt de cette offre.

26 Dans son arrêt du 12 septembre 2019, le Raad van State (Conseil d'État) a rejeté la demande de suspension de l'exécution de la décision litigieuse, au motif que, prima facie, le pouvoir adjudicateur semble disposer d'une certaine marge d'appréciation dans le cadre de l'application de l'article 73, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de l'arrêté royal de 2017. Aussi ne saurait-il être tenu d'autoriser, de manière inconditionnelle, un soumissionnaire à remplacer une entité aux capacités de laquelle il entend recourir et qui ne satisfait pas aux critères de sélection.

27 Dans le cadre du recours au fond, la juridiction de renvoi estime que se pose la question de la portée de l'article 73, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de l'arrêté royal de 2017, ainsi que celle de l'article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24 dans la mesure où la première de ces dispositions retranscrit quasi littéralement la seconde.

28 Selon cette juridiction, bien que la valeur du marché en cause au principal soit inférieure au seuil d'applicabilité de la directive 2014/24, qui est fixé, par son article 4, sous a), à un montant de 5 548 000 euros, hors TVA, l'arrêté royal n'établit aucune distinction selon que la valeur des marchés est inférieure ou supérieure au seuil fixé pour une publication à l'échelle de l'Union, de sorte que les dispositions de cette directive sont applicables, de manière directe et inconditionnelle, aux marchés publics dont la valeur n'atteint pas le seuil d'applicabilité de ladite directive, conformément à la jurisprudence initiée par l'arrêt du 18 octobre 1990, Dzodzi (C-297/88 et C-197/89, EU:C:1990:360, points 33 et suivants).

29 Ladite juridiction relève que se pose la question de savoir si, lorsqu'il énonce que « [l]e pouvoir adjudicateur exige que l'opérateur économique remplace une entité qui ne remplit pas un critère de sélection applicable ou à l'encontre de laquelle il existe des motifs d'exclusion obligatoires », l'article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24 impose une obligation au pouvoir adjudicateur et crée, de ce fait, un droit pour le soumissionnaire de pouvoir remplacer le sous-traitant concerné ou si elle confère seulement au pouvoir adjudicateur la faculté d'exiger de l'opérateur économique qu'il procède au remplacement. Il conviendrait également de déterminer s'il existe des circonstances dans lesquelles, eu égard au principe d'égalité de traitement et de non–discrimination et au principe de transparence, par exemple en fonction du déroulement de la procédure d'attribution, le pouvoir adjudicateur ne doit pas (ou plus) ou ne peut pas (ou plus) exiger qu'il soit procédé à un remplacement.

30 La juridiction de renvoi considère que l'article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens que le pouvoir adjudicateur a la faculté, et non l'obligation, d'exiger de l'opérateur économique qu'il procède au remplacement d'une entité aux capacités de laquelle il a recours et qui ne satisfait pas aux critères de sélection. Toutefois, dans l'exercice de cette faculté, il incomberait au pouvoir adjudicateur de tenir compte des principes d'égalité de traitement, de non–discrimination et de transparence.

31 C’est dans ce contexte que le Raad van State (Conseil d’État) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour les questions préjudicielles suivantes :

« 1) L’article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de la directive [2014/24], considéré isolément et conjointement avec l’incidence des principes de droit de l’Union, à savoir l’égalité de traitement, la non-discrimination et la transparence en matière de marchés publics, doit-il être interprété en ce sens que, lorsqu’il constate qu’une entité aux capacités de laquelle un opérateur économique a recours ne remplit pas les critères de sélection, le pouvoir adjudicateur a l’obligation de demander à cet opérateur de remplacer cette entité ou bien a la faculté de demander ce remplacement, si l’opérateur veut être sélectionné ?

2) Eu égard aux principes d’égalité de traitement, de non-discrimination et de transparence, et en fonction du déroulement de la procédure d’attribution, existe-t-il des circonstances dans lesquelles le pouvoir adjudicateur ne doit pas (ou plus) ou ne peut pas (ou plus) exiger qu’il soit procédé au remplacement ? »

Sur les questions préjudicielles

32 En vertu de l’article 99 de son règlement de procédure, la Cour peut à tout moment décider, sur proposition du juge rapporteur, l’avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d’ordonnance motivée notamment lorsque la réponse à une question posée à titre préjudiciel peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence ou qu’elle ne laisse place à aucun doute raisonnable.

33 Il y a lieu de faire application de cette disposition dans la présente affaire.

34 À titre liminaire, il convient de souligner que, ainsi qu’il ressort du point 28 de la présente ordonnance, la juridiction de renvoi a précisé, conformément à l’article 94 du règlement de procédure de la Cour, que les dispositions du droit de l’Union en cause ont été rendues applicables par la législation nationale aux situations dont tous les éléments se cantonnent à l’intérieur d’un seul État membre, de sorte que, en dépit de son caractère purement interne, le litige pendant devant elle présente un élément de rattachement avec le droit de l’Union qui rend l’interprétation préjudicielle sollicitée nécessaire à la solution de ce litige (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 15 novembre 2016, Ullens de Schooten, C-268/15, EU:C:2016:874, points 53 et 55).

35 Par ses questions, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l’article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec les principes d’égalité de traitement, de non-discrimination et de proportionnalité tels qu’énoncés à l’article 18, paragraphe 1, de cette directive, doit être interprété en ce sens que, lorsqu’il constate qu’une entité aux capacités de laquelle un opérateur économique entend recourir ne remplit pas les critères de sélection, le pouvoir adjudicateur est tenu ou a simplement la faculté de demander à cet opérateur de remplacer cette entité, s’il ne veut pas être exclu de la procédure de passation du marché public concerné.

36 À cet égard, il y a lieu de relever que l’article 63, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2014/24 prévoit le droit pour un opérateur économique d’avoir recours, pour un marché déterminé, aux capacités d’autres entités, quelle que soit la nature juridique des liens qui l’unissent à ces entités, afin de satisfaire tant aux critères relatifs à la capacité économique et financière énoncés à l’article 58, paragraphe 3, de cette directive qu’aux critères relatifs aux capacités techniques et professionnelles, visés à l’article 58, paragraphe 4, de ladite directive (arrêts du 3 juin 2021, Rad Service e.a., C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, point 30 ainsi que jurisprudence citée, et du 7 septembre 2021, „Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras“, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, point 150).

37 L’opérateur économique qui entend se prévaloir de ce droit doit, en vertu de l’article 59, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2014/24, transmettre au pouvoir adjudicateur, lors de la présentation de sa demande de participation ou de son offre, un DUME par lequel cet opérateur affirme, notamment, que tant lui-même que les entités aux capacités desquelles il entend recourir, d’une part, remplissent les critères de sélection applicables qui ont été établis conformément à l’article 58 de cette directive et, d’autre part, ne se trouvent pas dans l’une des situations, visées à l’article 57 de ladite directive, qui doit ou peut entraîner l’exclusion d’un opérateur économique. Ainsi que l’énonce le considérant 84, troisième alinéa, de ladite directive, le DUME doit fournir les informations pertinentes concernant les entités aux capacités desquelles un opérateur économique a recours, de sorte qu'il puisse être procédé à la vérification des informations concernant ces entités parallèlement aux vérifications concernant l'opérateur économique principal et aux mêmes conditions.

38 Il appartient alors, en vertu de l'article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24, au pouvoir adjudicateur de vérifier, d'une part, que, conformément aux articles 59 à 61 de celle-ci, les entités aux capacités desquelles l'opérateur économique entend recourir remplissent les critères de sélection applicables et, d'autre part, s'il existe des motifs d'exclusion, visés à l'article 57 de cette directive, concernant tant cet opérateur économique lui-même que ces entités.

39 À cet égard, il ressort du libellé de l'article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, deuxième phrase, de la directive 2014/24 que le pouvoir adjudicateur exige, notamment, que l'opérateur économique remplace une entité qui ne remplit pas un critère de sélection applicable. Ce faisant, cette disposition ne laisse aucune marge d'appréciation au pouvoir adjudicateur et lui impose d'exiger d'un opérateur économique le remplacement d'une entité aux capacités desquelles il entend recourir lorsque celle-ci ne satisfait pas un critère de sélection applicable.

40 Une telle interprétation s'impose d'autant plus que, dans une situation dans laquelle une entité aux capacités desquelles un opérateur économique entend recourir ne satisfait pas à une condition de diplôme ou d'expérience professionnelle imposée par le pouvoir adjudicateur, une régularisation apparaît, par principe, inenvisageable.

41 Il s'ensuit que, dans un tel contexte, le mécanisme des mesures correctives (self-cleaning) prévu à l'article 57, paragraphe 6, de cette directive s'avère inadapté et n'a pas vocation à s'appliquer de sorte que le pouvoir adjudicateur n'a d'autre alternative que d'imposer à l'opérateur économique concerné le remplacement de l'entité aux capacités desquelles il entendait recourir.

42 L'interprétation ainsi faite de l'article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, deuxième phrase, de la directive 2014/24, contribue, en outre, à assurer le respect du principe de proportionnalité par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs, conformément à l'article 18, paragraphe 1, de cette directive, en ce qu'elle évite de devoir exclure d'emblée un opérateur économique qui entendait recourir aux capacités d'autres entités en raison du non-respect des critères de sélection par ces dernières.

43 Il convient, cependant, de préciser que, lorsqu'il exige d'un soumissionnaire qu'il remplace une entité aux capacités desquelles il entend recourir, le pouvoir adjudicateur doit veiller, conformément aux principes de transparence et d'égalité de traitement énoncés à l'article 18, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2014/24, à ce que le remplacement de l'entité concernée n'aboutisse pas à une modification substantielle de l'offre de ce soumissionnaire (arrêt du 3 juin 2021, Rad Service e.a., C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, point 42).

44 En effet, l'obligation pour le pouvoir adjudicateur de respecter le principe d'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires, qui a pour objectif de favoriser le développement d'une concurrence saine et effective entre les entreprises participant à un marché public et qui relève de l'essence même des règles de l'Union relatives aux procédures de passation des marchés publics, implique, notamment, que les soumissionnaires doivent se trouver sur un pied d'égalité aussi bien au moment où ils préparent leurs offres qu'au moment où celles-ci sont évaluées par ledit pouvoir adjudicateur. Le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence s'opposent ainsi à toute négociation entre le pouvoir adjudicateur et un soumissionnaire dans le cadre d'une procédure de passation de marché public, ce qui implique que, en principe, une offre ne peut pas être modifiée après son dépôt, que ce soit à l'initiative du pouvoir adjudicateur ou du soumissionnaire. Il s'ensuit que, à l'instar d'une demande de clarification d'une offre, la demande d'un pouvoir adjudicateur exigeant le remplacement d'une entité aux capacités desquelles un soumissionnaire entend recourir ne doit pas aboutir à la présentation, par ce dernier, de ce qui apparaîtrait, en réalité, comme une nouvelle offre, tant elle modifierait de façon substantielle l'offre initiale (arrêt du 3 juin 2021, Rad Service e.a., C-210/20, EU:C:2021:445, points 43 et 44 ainsi que jurisprudence citée).

45 Eu égard aux considérations qui précèdent, il y a lieu de répondre aux questions posées que l'article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24, lu en combinaison avec les principes d'égalité de traitement, de non-discrimination et de proportionnalité tels qu'énoncés à l'article 18, paragraphe 1, de cette directive, doit être interprété en ce sens que, lorsqu'il constate qu'une entité aux capacités de laquelle un opérateur économique entend recourir ne remplit pas les critères de sélection, le pouvoir adjudicateur est tenu de demander à cet opérateur de remplacer cette entité, s'il ne veut pas être exclu de la procédure de passation du marché public concerné.

Sur les dépens

46 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens. Les frais exposés pour soumettre des observations à la Cour, autres que ceux desdites parties, ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un remboursement.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (neuvième chambre) dit pour droit :

L'article 63, paragraphe 1, deuxième alinéa, de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE, lu en combinaison avec les principes d'égalité de traitement, de non-discrimination et de proportionnalité tels qu'énoncés à l'article 18, paragraphe 1, de cette directive, doit être interprété en ce sens que, lorsqu'il constate qu'une entité aux capacités de laquelle un opérateur économique entend recourir ne remplit pas les critères de sélection, le pouvoir adjudicateur est tenu de demander à cet opérateur de remplacer cette entité, s'il ne veut pas être exclu de la procédure de passation du marché public concerné.

Judgment

1 These requests for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of (i) Article 1(1), Article 2(1)(a) and Article 2a(2) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1) ('Directive 89/665'), (ii) Article 1(1) and Article 35 of Regulation (EU) No 1215/2012 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 12 December 2012 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (OJ 2012 L 351, p. 1), (iii) Article 81(1) TFEU, (iv) the principle of equivalence, (v) Article 4, Article 5(5) and Article 33(3) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), and (vi) Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter').

2 The requests have been made in proceedings between EPIC Financial Consulting Ges.m.b.H. ('EPIC'), on the one hand, and the Republic of Austria and Bundesbeschaffung GmbH ('the federal purchasing company'), on the other, concerning the award by the Republic of Austria and Bundesbeschaffung GmbH of public contracts for the supply of tests to detect antigens produced by the SARS-CoV-2 virus (COVID-19) ('the antigen tests').

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 89/665

3 The fifth recital of Directive 89/665 is worded as follows:

'… since procedures for the award of public contracts are of such short duration, competent review bodies must, among other things, be authorised to take interim measures aimed at suspending such a procedure or the implementation of any decisions which may be taken by the contracting authority; … the short duration of the procedures means that the aforementioned infringements need to be dealt with urgently'.

4 Article 1 of that directive, entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides, in paragraphs 1 and 3 thereof:

'1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive [2014/24] unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 37 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, works and services concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] …, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

5 Article 2 of Directive 89/665, entitled ‘Requirements for review procedures’, provides:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

3. When a body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting authority, reviews a contract award decision, Member States shall ensure that the contracting authority cannot conclude the contract before the review body has made a decision on the application either for interim measures or for review. The suspension shall end no earlier than the expiry of the standstill period referred to in Article 2a(2) and Article 2d(4) and (5).

4. Except where provided for in paragraph 3 and Article 1(5), review procedures need not necessarily have an automatic suspensive effect on the contract award procedures to which they relate.

5. Member States may provide that the body responsible for review procedures may take into account the probable consequences of interim measures for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to grant such measures when their negative consequences could exceed their benefits.

A decision not to grant interim measures shall not prejudice any other claim of the person seeking such measures.

6 Article 2a of that directive, entitled ‘Standstill period’, states:

‘1. The Member States shall ensure that the persons referred to in Article 1(3) have sufficient time for effective review of the contract award decisions taken by contracting authorities, by adopting the necessary provisions respecting the minimum conditions set out in paragraph 2 of this Article and in Article 2c.

2. A contract may not be concluded following the decision to award a contract falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] or Directive 2014/23/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1)] before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned if fax or electronic means are used or, if other means of communication are used, before the expiry of a period of either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of the contract award decision.

Tenderers shall be deemed to be concerned if they have not yet been definitively excluded. An exclusion is definitive if it has been notified to the tenderers concerned and has either been considered lawful by an independent review body or can no longer be subject to a review procedure.

Candidates shall be deemed to be concerned if the contracting authority has not made available information about the rejection of their application before the notification of the contract award decision to the tenderers concerned.

The communication of the award decision to each tenderer and candidate concerned shall be accompanied by the following:

– a summary of the relevant reasons as set out in Article 55(2) of Directive [2014/24], subject to Article 55(3) of that Directive, or in the second subparagraph of Article 40(1) of Directive [2014/23], subject to Article 40(2) of that Directive, and

– a precise statement of the exact standstill period applicable pursuant to the provisions of national law transposing this paragraph.'

7 Under Article 2b of that directive, entitled 'Derogations from the standstill period':

'Member States may provide that the periods referred to in Article 2a(2) of this Directive do not apply in the following cases:

(c) in the case of a contract based on a framework agreement as provided for in Article 33 of Directive [2014/24] and in the case of a specific contract based on a dynamic purchasing system as provided for in Article 34 of that Directive.

If this derogation is invoked, Member States shall ensure that the contract is ineffective in accordance with Articles 2d and 2f of this Directive where:

– there is an infringement of point (c) of Article 33(4) or of Article 34(6) of Directive [2014/24], and – the contract value is estimated to be equal to or to exceed the thresholds set out in Article 4 of Directive [2014/24].'

Directive 2007/66/EC

8 Recitals 3, 4 and 36 of Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665/EEC and 92/13/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) state:

'(3) Consultations of the interested parties and the case-law of the Court of Justice have revealed a certain number of weaknesses in the review mechanisms in the Member States. …

(4) The weaknesses which were noted include in particular the absence of a period allowing an effective review between the decision to award a contract and the conclusion of the contract in question. This sometimes results in contracting authorities and contracting entities who wish to make irreversible the consequences of the disputed award decision proceeding very quickly to the signature of the contract. In order to remedy this weakness, which is a serious obstacle to effective judicial protection for the tenderers concerned, namely those tenderers who have not yet been definitively excluded, it is necessary to provide for a minimum standstill period during which the conclusion of the contract in question is suspended, irrespective of whether conclusion occurs at the time of signature of the contract or not.

(36) This Directive respects fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised in particular by [the Charter]. In particular, this Directive seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second subparagraphs of Article 47 of the Charter.'

Directive 2014/24

9 The thresholds for the applicability of Directive 2014/24, relating to the estimated value of procurements, are set out in Article 4 thereof.

10 Article 5 of that directive, entitled ‘Methods for calculating the estimated value of procurement’, provides, in paragraph 5 thereof:

‘With regard to framework agreements and dynamic purchasing systems, the value to be taken into consideration shall be the maximum estimated value net of [value added tax (VAT)] of all the contracts envisaged for the total term of the framework agreement or the dynamic purchasing system.’

11 Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, provides, in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.’

12 Article 32 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Use of the negotiated procedure without prior publication’, provides, in paragraph 2 thereof:

‘The negotiated procedure without prior publication may be used for public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts in any of the following cases:

(c) in so far as is strictly necessary where, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authority, the time limits for the open or restricted procedures or competitive procedures with negotiation cannot be complied with. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency shall not in any event be attributable to the contracting authority.’

13 Article 33, entitled ‘Framework agreements’, provides, in paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof:

‘2. Contracts based on a framework agreement shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures laid down in this paragraph and in paragraphs 3 and 4.

Those procedures may be applied only between those contracting authorities clearly identified for this purpose in the call for competition or the invitation to confirm interest and those economic operators party to the framework agreement as concluded.

Contracts based on a framework agreement may under no circumstances entail substantial modifications to the terms laid down in that framework agreement, in particular in the case referred to in paragraph 3.

3. Where a framework agreement is concluded with a single economic operator, contracts based on that agreement shall be awarded within the limits of the terms laid down in the framework agreement.

For the award of those contracts, contracting authorities may consult the economic operator party to the framework agreement in writing, requesting it to supplement its tender as necessary.’

14 Article 49 of that directive, entitled ‘Contract notices’, provides:

‘Contract notices shall be used as a means of calling for competition in respect of all procedures, without prejudice to the second subparagraph of Article 26(5) and Article 32. Contract notices shall contain the information set out in Annex V part C and shall be published in accordance with Article 51.’

15 Article 50 of that directive, entitled ‘Contract award notices’, provides, in paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof:

‘1. Not later than 30 days after the conclusion of a contract or of a framework agreement, following the decision to award or conclude it, contracting authorities shall send a contract award notice on the results of the procurement procedure.

Such notices shall contain the information set out in Annex V part D and shall be published in accordance with Article 51.

2. Where the call for competition for the contract concerned has been made in the form of a prior information notice and the contracting authority has decided that it will not award further contracts during the period covered by the prior information notice, the contract award notice shall contain a specific indication to that effect.

In the case of framework agreements concluded in accordance with Article 33, contracting authorities shall not be bound to send a notice of the results of the procurement procedure for each contract based on that agreement. Member States may provide that contracting authorities shall group notices of the results of the procurement procedure for contracts based on the framework agreement on a quarterly basis. In that case, contracting authorities shall send the grouped notices within 30 days of the end of each quarter.’

16 Article 72 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Modification of contracts during their term’, provides:

‘1. Contracts and framework agreements may be modified without a new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive in any of the following cases:

(e) where the modifications, irrespective of their value, are not substantial within the meaning of paragraph 4.

…’

Regulation No 1215/2012

17 Recital 10 of Regulation No 1215/2012 states:

‘The scope of this Regulation should cover all the main civil and commercial matters apart from certain well-defined matters, in particular maintenance obligations, which should be excluded from the scope of this Regulation following the adoption of Council Regulation (EC) No 4/2009 of 18 December 2008 on jurisdiction, applicable law, recognition and enforcement of decisions and cooperation in matters relating to maintenance obligations [(OJ 2009 L 7, p. 1)].’

18 Article 1(1) of that regulation provides:

‘This Regulation shall apply in civil and commercial matters whatever the nature of the court or tribunal. It shall not extend, in particular, to revenue, customs or administrative matters or to the liability of the State for acts and omissions in the exercise of State authority (acta iure imperii).’

19 Article 35 of that regulation provides:

‘Application may be made to the courts of a Member State for such provisional, including protective, measures as may be available under the law of that Member State, even if the courts of another Member State have jurisdiction as to the substance of the matter.’

Austrian law

The Law on Public Procurement

20 Paragraph 144(1) of the Bundesvergabegesetz 2018 (Federal Law on the award of public contracts 2018) (BGBl. I, 65/2018; ‘the Law on Public Procurement’) provides:

‘The contracting authority may not award the contract before the expiry of the standstill period, failing which that contract shall be null and void. The standstill period shall begin when the notification of the contract award decision is communicated or made available. That period shall be 10 days in case of communication or making available by electronic means, and 15 days in case of communication by post or other suitable carrier.’

21 Paragraph 334 of that law provides:

‘(1) The Bundesverwaltungsgericht [(Federal Administrative Court, Austria)] shall rule, in accordance with the provisions of this section, on applications for review procedures (Section 2), for the adoption of interim orders (Section 3) and for declaratory proceedings (Section 4). Such applications shall be lodged directly with the Bundesverwaltungsgericht [(Federal Administrative Court)].

(2) Until the contract is awarded or the contract award procedure is revoked, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht [(Federal Administrative Court)] shall have jurisdiction, for the purpose of rectifying infringements of this federal law and regulations issued on the basis thereof or infringements of directly applicable EU law,

1. to adopt interim orders, and

2. to annul the contracting authority’s separately contestable decisions within the framework of the complaints put forward by the applicant.

(3) After a contract has been awarded, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht [(Federal Administrative Court)] shall have jurisdiction

3. to determine whether a contract award procedure has been unlawfully carried out without prior publication of a contract notice;

5. to determine whether a contract for the provision of a service on the basis of a framework agreement or a dynamic purchasing system has been awarded unlawfully on account of an infringement of Paragraph 155(4) to (9), Paragraph 162(1) to (5), Paragraph 316(1) to (3) or Paragraph 323(1) to (5);

…’

22 In accordance with Paragraph 336 of that law:

‘(1) Contracting authorities and contracting entities coming within the scope of this federal law must provide the Bundesverwaltungsgericht [(Federal Administrative Court)] with all the information necessary for the performance of its duties and submit to it in due form all the documents required to that end. The same shall apply to the undertakings involved in a contract award procedure.

(2) If a contracting authority, a contracting entity or an undertaking has failed to submit documents, has failed to provide information, or has provided information but has failed to submit the contract award procedure documents, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht [(Federal Administrative Court)] may, if the contracting entity or undertaking has been expressly informed in advance of the consequences of that failure, rule on the basis of the claims of the participant that has not failed to do so.’

23 Paragraph 340 of that law states:

‘(1) For applications under Paragraphs 342(1), 350(1) and 353(1) and (2), the applicant must pay a flat-rate fee in accordance with the following provisions:

1. The flat-rate fee must be paid when the application is lodged, in accordance with the rates set by the Federal Government by way of regulation.

4. In respect of applications under Paragraph 350(1), a fee equal to 50% of the fee set must be paid.

7. If an application is withdrawn before the hearing or, if no hearing takes place, before the delivery of the judgment or order, only a fee that is equal to 75% of the fee set for the respective application or the fee reduced in accordance with point 5 must be paid. Amounts previously paid in excess must be reimbursed.'

24 Paragraph 342 of the Law on Public Procurement provides:

'(1) An undertaking may, until a contract has been awarded or until a declaration of revocation has been made, apply for the contracting authority's separately contestable decision in the contract award procedure to be reviewed on account of unlawfulness, in so far as

1. it claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract coming within the scope of this federal law; and

2. the alleged unlawfulness has harmed or risks harming it.

(3) The application shall have no suspensive effect on the relevant contract award procedure.

…'

25 Paragraph 344 of that law provides:

'(1) An application under Paragraph 342(1) must in any event contain:

1. the designation of the relevant contract award procedure and of the contested, separately contestable decision,

2. the designation of the contracting authority, the applicant and, where applicable, the contracting entity, including their electronic addresses,

3. a presentation of the relevant facts, including of the interest in the conclusion of the contract, and where the contract award decision is being challenged in particular, the designation of the tenderer envisaged for the award of the contract,

4. information about the harm that the applicant claims it risks suffering or is already suffering,

5. the designation of the applicant's rights that it claims have been infringed (complaints) and the grounds on which the claim of unlawfulness is based,

6. an application for annulment of the contested, separately contestable decision,

7. the information necessary to assess whether the application has been lodged in due time.

(2) The application is in any event inadmissible in its entirety where

1. it does not concern a separately contestable decision, or

2. it has not been lodged within the time limit laid down in Paragraph 343, or

3. the appropriate fee has not been paid, despite requests having been made to that end.

(3) If an application pursuant to Paragraph 342(1) is lodged only after the contract has been awarded or the contract award procedure has been revoked, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht [(Federal Administrative Court)] must treat it as an application for a declaration under Paragraph 353(1), if the applicant could not have known about the award or revocation and the application was lodged within the time limit referred to in Paragraph 354(2). At the request of the Bundesverwaltungsgericht [(Federal Administrative Court)], the applicant must, within a reasonable time limit laid down by that court, specify which declaration under Paragraph 353(1) he or she is applying for. If no declaration pursuant to Paragraph 353(1) is applied for until the expiry of that time limit, the application shall be rejected.'

26 Paragraph 350 of that law states:

'(1) The Bundesverwaltungsgericht [(Federal Administrative Court)] must, where an undertaking that does not clearly fail to meet the requirements relating to the application pursuant to Paragraph 342(1) requests it, order without delay interim measures, such as appear necessary and appropriate to remedy or prevent any harm to the applicant's interests that has occurred or risks occurring imminently on account of the alleged unlawfulness of a separately contestable decision.

(2) The application for the adoption of an interim order must contain:

1. the precise designation of the relevant contract award procedure, of the separately contestable decision, and of the contracting authority, the applicant and, where applicable, the contracting entity, including their electronic addresses,

2. a presentation of the relevant facts and of the fact that the conditions referred to in Paragraph 342(1) have been met,

3. the precise designation of the alleged unlawfulness,

4. the precise presentation of the harm to the applicant's interests that risks occurring imminently and a credible presentation of the relevant facts,

5. the precise designation of the interim measure sought and

6. the information necessary to assess whether the application has been lodged in due time.

(5) The Bundesverwaltungsgericht [(Federal Administrative Court)] must immediately notify the contracting authority and, where applicable, the contracting entity, that it has received an application for the adoption of an interim order seeking to prohibit the contract from being awarded, a framework agreement from being concluded, the declaration of revocation from being made or the tenders from being opened. Applications for the adoption of interim orders seeking to prohibit the contract from being awarded, a framework agreement from being concluded, the declaration of revocation from being made or the tenders from being opened shall have suspensive effect from the date of receipt of the communication that the application has been lodged until the decision on the application. The contracting authority or contracting entity may not, until a decision on the application has been taken:

1. award the contract or conclude the framework agreement, or

2. revoke the contract award procedure; or

3. open the tenders.

(7) An application for the adoption of an interim order shall be inadmissible if the appropriate fee has not been paid, despite requests having been made to that end.'

27 Paragraph 382 of that law states:

‘This federal law transposes or takes account of the following acts of EU law:

2. Directive [89/665].

16. Directive [2014/24].’

The General Law on Administrative Procedure

28 Under Paragraph 49(1) of the Allgemeine Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetz (General Law on Administrative Procedure):

‘A witness may refuse to give testimony:

1. in relation to questions the answer to which would entail, for the witness, one of his or her relatives … direct pecuniary harm, the risk of criminal prosecution, or dishonour;

…’

The Regulation on Flat-Rate Fees 2018

29 The Verordnung der Bundesregierung betreffend die Pauschalgebühr für die Inanspruchnahme des Bundesverwaltungsgerichtes in den Angelegenheiten des öffentlichen Auftragswesens (BVwG-Pauschalgebührenverordnung Vergabe 2018 – BVwG-PauschGebV Vergabe 2018) (Regulation of the Federal Government relating to the flat-rate fees for bringing proceedings before the Federal Administrative Court in public procurement matters (Regulation on Flat-Rate Fees 2018 – BVwG-PauschGebV 2018)) provides:

‘On the basis of

1. Paragraph 340(1)(1) of the [Law on Public Procurement], the following shall apply:

Fee rates

Paragraph 1. For applications under Paragraph 342(1) and Paragraph 353(1) and (2) [of the Law on Public Procurement], for applications under Paragraph 135 of [the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen im Verteidigungs- und Sicherheitsbereich (Bundesvergabegesetz Verteidigung und Sicherheit 2012 – BVergGVS 2012) (Federal Law on the awarding of public contracts in the field of defence and security (Federal Law on defence and security public procurement 2012 – BVergGVS 2012)) (BGBl. I, 10/2012)], in conjunction with Paragraph 342(1) and Paragraph 353(1) and (2) [of the Law on Public Procurement], and for applications under Paragraph 86(1) and Paragraph 97(1) and (2) [of the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Konzessionsverträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz Konzessionen 2018 – BVergGKonz 2018) (Federal Law on the awarding of concession public contracts (Federal law on public procurement concessions 2018 – BVergGKonz 2018)) (BGBl. I, 65/2018)], the applicant must, in each case, pay a flat-rate fee in accordance with the following provisions:

Federal Constitutional Law on accompanying measures in respect of COVID-19 in public procurement matters

30 Under Paragraph 5 of the Bundesverfassungsgesetz betreffend Begleitmaßnahmen zu COVID-19 in Angelegenheiten des öffentlichen Auftragswesens (COVID-19 Begleitgesetz Vergabe) (Federal Constitutional Law on accompanying measures in respect of COVID-19 in public procurement matters (COVID-19 Accompanying Law on Procurement)) (BGBl. I, 24/2020), which was extended until 30 June 2021 (BGBl. I, 5/2021):

‘If it appears, on the basis of the information contained in the application for the adoption of an interim order as regards a review in the context of the award of contracts in accordance with the [Law on Public Procurement] or the BVergGVS 2012, or if the contracting authority credibly states that a procurement procedure … serves to prevent and combat the spread of COVID-19 as a matter of urgency or to maintain public order in relation to the prevention and combating of the spread of COVID-19, the application for the adoption of an interim order seeking to prohibit the tenders from being opened, a framework agreement from being concluded, or the contract from being awarded shall have no suspensive effect. In that case, the contracting authority may award the contract, conclude the framework agreement or open the tenders before a decision on that application has been made.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

31 At the end of 2020, the Republic of Austria and the federal purchasing company (together, ‘the contracting authority’ or ‘the defendants in the main proceedings’) concluded 21 framework agreements worth EUR 3 million with a view to purchasing antigen tests.

32 On 1 December 2020, EPIC brought an action for review before the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) seeking, in essence, to challenge the conclusion of those framework agreements, on the ground that it had not been transparent and had infringed public procurement law. That action was accompanied by an application for an interlocutory injunction seeking, in essence, to prohibit, provisionally, the contracting authority from continuing the procedure or procedures for the award of contracts to supply antigen tests, the lawfulness of which is disputed by EPIC.

33 On the same day, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) issued an initial order for regularisation vis-à-vis EPIC on the ground that its application initiating proceedings did not make it possible to identify clearly the separately contestable decisions, for the purposes of Directive 89/665, the annulment of which EPIC was seeking, or the contract award procedures referred to in its application for an interlocutory injunction.

34 By written submission of 7 December 2020, EPIC disputed the need to regularise its application and stated that it was directed at the only decision of the contracting authority of which it had become aware via the media, namely the decision to have recourse to a direct award procedure for the award of a public contract concerning the order of several million additional antigen tests with a view to carrying out mass testing in Austria. EPIC claimed that, in flagrant breach of the principle of transparency, it had not been able to have access to any documents relating to the contract in question, with the result that it cannot be required to designate specifically the contract award procedure concerned, failing which its right to effective judicial protection would be infringed.

35 By additional written submission of 9 December 2020, EPIC stated that it sought to challenge not the actual conclusion of the 21 framework agreements by the contracting authority, but exclusively the purchases of some two million additional antigen tests from the company R between 29 October and 24 November 2020 for over EUR 3 million. It asserted that those purchases should be regarded as resulting from an unlawful direct award of a contract on the ground that they significantly exceed the volume laid down by the framework agreement concerned.

36 On 14 December 2020, EPIC stated that its application for an interlocutory injunction merely objected to any new orders made since 20 November 2020, from three named undertakings, which exceeded the maximum purchase value of EUR 3 million provided for in the framework agreements concerned.

37 Lastly, EPIC stated, in a written submission of 5 January 2021, that it now disputed exclusively purchases made starting from 20 November 2020 under the framework agreements concluded on 13 and 18 November 2020 respectively, with companies I and S. According to EPIC, those purchases exceeded the maximum purchase value of EUR 3 million provided for in those framework agreements.

38 EPIC states, ultimately, that it could not know, at the time it brought its action for review, the amount of the flat-rate court fees which it would be liable to pay since those fees are calculated on the basis of the number of contested measures. That number would have been impossible to determine in the light of the lack of transparency of the contract award procedures at issue in the main proceedings.

39 For their part, the defendants in the main proceedings dispute the locus standi of EPIC since, until 10 December 2020, it did not have the professional qualifications required to market antigen tests. They also claim that EPIC's action for review is inadmissible, since it has not referred to the decision that is actually being contested and the procedure for the award of a public contract to which that decision relates. The defendants in the main proceedings also submit that, on 1 December 2020, they published, in the Official Journal of the European Union, a notice relating to an open procedure for the conclusion of a framework agreement for the supply of antigen tests. Moreover, the inadmissibility of the action for review brought before the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) entails, as a consequence, the inadmissibility of the application for an interlocutory injunction. In any event, according to them, pursuant to Paragraph 5 of the COVID-19 Accompanying Law, referred to in paragraph 30 of this judgment, that application cannot have a suspensive effect since the contested purchase of antigen tests was intended to prevent and combat the spread of COVID-19 as a matter of urgency. The defendants in the main proceedings also submit that each of the 21 framework agreements disputed by EPIC had been concluded with a single partner, which EPIC could clearly establish by consulting the website of the federal purchasing company. Lastly, since EPIC's action for review was notified, no purchase of antigen tests has been carried out under the framework agreements concluded with the companies S and I respectively. Therefore, there is no separately contestable decision.

40 The Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) states, first, that, in Austria, litigants bringing an action for review in public procurement matters must pay flat-rate fees for each of their applications. Those fees are calculated, inter alia, by reference to the number of contested decisions under a specific procedure for the award of a public contract. According to the case-law of the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court, Austria), the fee becomes payable at the time when the application is lodged and must be paid at that stage to the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court). Accordingly, an action for review or an application for an interlocutory injunction is inadmissible where the fee relating to that action or application has not been duly paid despite a request having been made to that end. Similarly, that court cannot take formal note of a withdrawal until the flat-rate fees that are due have been paid to it. As the case may be, the members of that court could be regarded as having caused, by their fault, pecuniary damage to the State Treasury, for which they are liable with their own funds. It follows that, in the event of a non-transparent procedure for the award of a public contract, the applicant would be able to acquaint him- or herself with the amount of the flat-rate fees linked to his or her action for review only after the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) has carried out extensive investigations in order to identify the procedures for the award of a public contract and the separate decisions referred to by the applicant.

41 The referring court states in that regard that, for actions for review concerning the direct award of contracts, a flat-rate fee of EUR 324 must be paid per contract award procedure and per separately contestable decision. That sum is increased by 50%, thus amounting to EUR 486, where the action for review is accompanied by an application for an interlocutory injunction. However, if the estimated value of the contract exceeds by twenty times the threshold value fixed at EUR 750 000 for contracts for public services relating to public health, it is necessary to pay, for each procedure for the award of a public contract and each contested decision of the contracting authority, a fee of EUR 19 440.

42 Pursuant to those rules, the referring court informed EPIC that, in the circumstances of the dispute in the main proceedings, if, for each of the 21 framework agreements, it intended to challenge three decisions and seek interim measures by way of interlocutory procedures, the flat-rate fees would amount to EUR 1 061 424. Since, until now, EPIC has paid only EUR 486 in flat-rate fees, it could therefore be called upon to regularise the situation by paying an additional flat-rate fee of approximately EUR 1 000 000, which it could not necessarily have expected when it brought its action.

43 Second, the referring court states that EPIC has not demonstrated that, for the period prior to 10 December 2020, EPIC or its supplier had the professional qualifications required in Austria in order to market antigen tests.

44 Third, the referring court considers it likely that, at the time EPIC brought its action for review, it was unaware of both the number and type of contract award procedures conducted by the contracting authority and the number of separately contestable decisions already adopted in the contract award procedures at issue in the main proceedings. Thus, according to the referring court, EPIC could only make imprecise claims, even though the Austrian rules of civil procedure require, in principle, every applicant to set out the facts on which its action is based.

45 Fourth, the referring court states that, at the stage of its investigation, it was able to establish that there were 15 framework agreements concluded by the contracting authority, in autumn 2020, with a view to supplying antigen tests. Each of those framework agreements had been concluded with a single economic operator following a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, in accordance with Article 32(2)(c) and Article 33(3) of Directive 2014/24.

46 Fifth, according to that court, EPIC has now limited itself to challenging specifically public contracts for the supply of antigen tests that have been directly awarded to the companies S and I and that exceed the estimated value of the framework agreement concluded with each of those companies. It should therefore be regarded, under Austrian law, as having withdrawn its action for review concerning the decisions adopted in the context of the other 19 framework agreements to which it had initially referred.

47 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) considers that the dispute in the main proceedings raises four sets of questions, having regard to EU law.

48 In the first place, that court states that actions for review concerning acts linked to a procedure for the award of a public contract come within the scope of civil matters within the meaning of Regulation No 1215/2012. The public procurement rules contained in Directive 2014/24 govern the pre-contractual obligations of contracting authorities and undertakings wishing to conclude agreements with those authorities. Therefore, the rules on public procurement come, in so far as they concern the conclusion of contracts, within the scope of special civil law and therefore within the scope of Regulation No 1215/2012.

49 Therefore, in accordance with the principle of equivalence, rules of civil procedure which are more flexible than those which that court must itself follow should apply. The referring court states in particular that, in civil matters, the court rules on the action for review and the application for an interlocutory injunction even if the applicant has not paid the flat-rate fees at the outset and without that calling into question the right of the Member State to collect those fees. Furthermore, no special flat-rate fee is payable before the civil courts in respect of applications for an interlocutory injunction linked to an action, which is itself subject to the obligation to pay a fee.

50 If the special fee system which prevails in the field of public procurement were held to be contrary to EU law, the referring court would consider the investigative measures necessary to set the fee to be subsidiary and could therefore, in accordance with the principle of procedural economy, dispose of the application for an interlocutory injunction very quickly, without first having to carry out extensive research in order to determine the number of contract award procedures and the decisions which were initially challenged.

51 In the second place, the referring court is uncertain whether the special fee system applicable in the field of public procurement is consistent with the right, guaranteed by Directive 89/665, that actions for review and applications for an interlocutory injunction may be disposed of as rapidly as possible and independently of matters connected with flat-rate court fees. In that regard, the obligation to identify, in mandatory terms, the contested decisions and procedures prior to the examination of the action for review on its merits, and the fact that it is impossible for a litigant to ascertain in advance, in particular where the procedure in question lacks transparency, the amount of the flat-rate court fees which he or she is liable to pay, raise difficulties. That court is also uncertain whether, in the event of the award of a contract following a non-transparent procedure, the right to effective judicial protection, guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter, precludes the application of a court fee system under which the amount of the fees to be paid depends on the estimated value of the contract, the number of contract award procedures at issue and the number of contested, separately contestable decisions.

52 In the third place, that court considers that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 may be interpreted as meaning that the conclusion of a framework agreement with a single economic operator corresponds, for the contracting authority, to the conclusion of a contract and is equivalent to the award of the contract at issue. Therefore, in the present case, the application for an interlocutory injunction should be dismissed on the ground that the contract concerned has already been awarded. According to the referring court, it is also necessary to specify the legal classification of public contracts awarded under a framework agreement whose maximum value has already been exceeded, as well as the methods for calculating the estimated value of such a contract.

53 In the fourth place, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) states that Paragraph 336 of the Law on Public Procurement authorises it to give a judgment by default on the basis of the information provided by one party to the proceedings if another party thereto does not provide the information or documents requested. The obligation for the board members or staff of the contracting authority to provide details or information in order to eliminate the risk that such a judgment by default might be given to the detriment of that authority could be contrary to the prohibition on self-incrimination, which follows from Article 48 of the Charter. Contrary to what is provided for in Paragraph 49(1)(1) of the General Law on Administrative Procedure, Paragraph 336 of the Law on Public Procurement does not include any right to refuse to provide information. The information thus provided may reveal facts which may be used against the board members and staff of the contracting authority, in criminal proceedings or with a view to bringing actions for damages. The referring court states, moreover, that, according to a press article, members of the Austrian Federal Government are being prosecuted. That court thus considers that the possible relevance of the Court of Justice's answer to the question whether Paragraph 336 of the Law on Public Procurement is compatible with the prohibition on self-incrimination will be demonstrated, in the present case, by future investigations carried out in the context of the criminal proceedings reported by the media, which relate to certain administrators and concern the purchases of the antigen tests at issue in the main proceedings.

54 In those circumstances, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) decided, in Case C-274/21, to stay the proceedings on the application for an interlocutory injunction lodged by EPIC and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Does the procedure for granting an interlocutory injunction provided for in Article 2(1)(a) of Directive [89/665], which is also provided for at national level in Austria in proceedings before the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court), in which it is also possible to bring about, for example, a temporary prohibition on the conclusion of framework agreements or on the conclusion of supply contracts, constitute a dispute concerning a civil and commercial matter within the meaning of Article 1(1) of [Regulation No 1215/2012]? Does such a procedure for granting an interlocutory injunction as referred to in the preceding question at least constitute a civil matter pursuant to Article 81(1) [TFEU]? Is the procedure for granting interlocutory injunctions pursuant to Article 2(1)(a) of Directive [89/665] a procedure for granting provisional measures pursuant to Article 35 of [Regulation No 1215/2012]?

(2) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the principle of equivalence to be interpreted as conferring subjective rights on individuals against the Member State and as precluding the application of Austrian national rules under which the court must, before disposing of an application for an interlocutory injunction, as provided for in Article 2(1)(a) of Directive [89/665], determine the type of contract award procedure and the (estimated) contract value as well as the total number of contested, separately contestable decisions from specific award procedures and also, if necessary, the lots from a specific award procedure, in order then to issue, if necessary, an order for regularisation via the presiding judge of the competent chamber of the court for the purpose of recovering fees and, in the event of non-payment of fees, to prescribe – before or no later than at the same time as rejecting an application for an interlocutory injunction due to failure to pay fees subsequently demanded – the procedural fees via the chamber of the court competent to deal with the action for review, failing which a loss of entitlement would ensue, when in (other types of) civil cases in Austria, such as, for example, in the case of actions seeking compensation or injunctions for infringements of competition law, non-payment of fees does not otherwise preclude the disposal of an application for an interlocutory injunction lodged in conjunction with an action, irrespective of the issue of the fees payable for judicial protection, whatever the amount, and, moreover, non-payment of flat-rate fees does not, in principle, preclude the disposal of an application for an interlocutory injunction lodged separately from an action in proceedings before the civil courts; and, by way of further comparison, in Austria, non-payment of appeal fees for bringing appeals against administrative decisions or for appeals or appeals on points of law [(Revision)] against decisions of administrative courts to the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) or the Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court[, Austria]) does not lead to the dismissal of an appeal owing to non-payment of fees and, for example, does not lead to applications for the granting of suspensive effect being disposed of only by way of their rejection in such appeals or appeals on points of law?

(2.1) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the principle of equivalence to be interpreted as precluding the application of Austrian national rules under which, prior to the disposal of an application for an interlocutory injunction as provided for in Article 2(1)(a) of Directive [89/665], an order for regularisation of fees is to be made by the presiding judge of the chamber, sitting as a single judge, in the event of insufficient payment of flat-rate fees, and that single judge must reject the application for an interlocutory injunction in the event of non-payment of fees, when otherwise in civil actions in Austria, under the Gerichtsgebührengesetz (Law on Court Fees), no additional flat-rate court fees are to be paid, in principle, for an application for an interlocutory injunction lodged together with an action, on top of the fees for the action at first instance, and, moreover, with regard to applications for the granting of suspensive effect which are lodged together with an appeal against an administrative decision to an administrative court, an appeal on points of law [(Revision)] to the [Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court)] or an appeal to the [Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court)], and which, from a functional point of view, have the same or a similar objective in terms of judicial protection as an application for an interlocutory injunction, no separate fees must be paid for such ancillary applications for the granting of suspensive effect?

(3) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the [principle of acting expeditiously enshrined in] Article 2(1)(a) of Directive [89/665], to take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, to be interpreted as meaning that that requirement to act without undue delay confers a subjective right to have a decision taken without undue delay on an application for an interlocutory injunction and that it precludes the application of Austrian national rules under which, even in the case of contract award procedures conducted in a non-transparent manner, the court must, before disposing of an application for an interlocutory injunction aimed at preventing further procurement by the contracting authority, determine the type of award procedure and the (estimated) contract value as well as the total number of separately contestable decisions contested or to be contested from specific award procedures and also, if necessary, the lots from a specific award procedure, even if those elements do not bear any relevance to the court's decision, in order then to issue, if necessary, an order for regularisation via the presiding judge of the competent chamber of the court for the purpose of recovering fees and, in the event of non-payment of fees, to prescribe – before or no later than at the same time as rejecting an application for an interlocutory injunction due to failure to pay fees subsequently demanded – the procedural fees via the chamber of the court competent to rule on the application for review, failing which a loss of entitlement vis-à-vis the applicant would ensue?

(4) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the right to a fair trial before a court or tribunal under Article 47 of [the Charter] to be interpreted as conferring subjective rights on individuals and as precluding the application of Austrian national rules under which, even in the case of contract award procedures conducted in a non-transparent manner, the court must, before disposing of an application for an interlocutory injunction aimed at preventing further procurement by the contracting authority, determine the type of award procedure and the (estimated) contract value as well as the total number of contested, separately contestable decisions from specific award procedures and also, if necessary, the lots from a specific award procedure, even if those elements do not bear any relevance to the court's decision, in order then to issue, if necessary, an order for regularisation via the presiding judge of the competent chamber of the court for the purpose of recovering fees and, in the event of non-payment of fees, to prescribe – before or no later than at the same time as rejecting an application for an interlocutory injunction due to failure to pay fees subsequently demanded – the procedural fees via the chamber of the court competent to rule on the application for review, failing which a loss of entitlement vis-à-vis the applicant would ensue?

(5) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the principle of equivalence to be interpreted as conferring on individuals subjective rights against the Member State and as precluding the application of Austrian national rules under which, in the event of non-payment of flat-rate fees for an application for an interlocutory injunction within the meaning of Directive [89/665], (only) a chamber of an administrative court, as a judicial body, must prescribe flat-rate fees (leading to curtailed possibilities of judicial protection for the party liable to pay the fees) when fees for actions, interlocutory injunctions and appeals in civil court proceedings are otherwise prescribed, in the event of non-payment, by an administrative decision in accordance with the [Gerichtliches Einbringungsgesetz (Law on Judicial Collection)] and, in administrative law, appeal fees for appeals to an administrative court or to the [Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court)] or for appeals on points of law [(Revision)] to the [Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court)] are as a general rule prescribed, in the event of non-payment of those fees, by way of a notice of a tax authority (notice prescribing fees), against which an appeal can always be brought before an administrative court and then, in turn, an appeal on points of law [(Revision)] before the [Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court)] or an appeal before the [Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court)]?

(6) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is Article 1(1) of Directive [89/665] to be interpreted as meaning that the conclusion of a framework agreement with a single economic operator pursuant to Article 33(3) of Directive [2014/24] constitutes the conclusion of a contract pursuant to Article 2a(2) of Directive [89/665]?

(6.1) Are the words "contracts based on that agreement" in Article 33(3) of Directive [2014/24] to be interpreted as meaning that a contract based on the framework agreement exists where the contracting authority awards an individual contract expressly on the basis of the framework agreement concluded? Or is the cited phrase "contracts based on that agreement" to be interpreted as meaning that if the total quantity covered by the framework agreement within the meaning of the judgment [of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice (C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034, paragraph 64)], has already been exhausted, there is no longer a contract based on the framework agreement originally concluded?

(7) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the right to a fair trial before a court or tribunal under Article 47 of [the Charter] to be interpreted as precluding the application of a rule under which the contracting authority designated in the procurement dispute must, in the proceedings for the granting of an interlocutory injunction, provide all the information required and produce all the documents required – whereby failure to do so in either respect may lead to a default decision to its detriment – if the officials or employees of that contracting authority who are required to provide that information on behalf of the contracting authority may thereby be exposed to the risk of possibly having to incriminate themselves under criminal law if they provide the information or produce the documents?

(8) Taking account also of the right to an effective remedy under Article 47 of the Charter, and having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the requirement under Article 1(1) of Directive [89/665] that procurement review procedures must, in particular, be conducted effectively, to be interpreted as meaning that those provisions confer subjective rights and preclude the application of national rules under which the party seeking judicial protection by way of an application for an interlocutory injunction is required to specify in his or her application for an interlocutory injunction the specific contract award procedure and the specific decision of a contracting authority, even where, in the case of award procedures without prior publication of a contract notice, that applicant will generally not know how many non-transparent award procedures the contracting authority has conducted and how many award decisions have already been taken in the non-transparent award procedures?

(9) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the requirement of a fair trial before a court or tribunal under Article 47 of the Charter to be interpreted as meaning that that provision confers subjective rights and precludes the application of national rules under which the party seeking judicial protection by way of an application for review is required to specify in his or her application for an interlocutory [injunction] the specific contract award procedure and the specific contested, separately contestable decision of a contracting authority, even if, in the case of award procedures without prior publication of a contract notice that are non-transparent for that applicant, he or she cannot generally know how many non-transparent award procedures the contracting authority has conducted and how many award decisions have already been taken in the non-transparent award procedures?

(10) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the requirement of a fair trial before a court or tribunal under Article 47 of the Charter to be interpreted as meaning that that provision confers subjective rights and precludes the application of national rules under which the party seeking judicial protection by way of an application for an interlocutory injunction is required to pay flat-rate fees in an amount which he or she cannot ascertain in advance, because, in the case of contract award procedures without prior publication of a contract notice that are non-transparent for that applicant, he or she cannot generally know whether non-transparent award procedures have been conducted by the contracting authority and, if so, the number of such procedures and their estimated contract value and how many separately contestable award decisions have already been taken in the non-transparent award procedures?’

55 In the circumstances set out in paragraphs 40 to 53 of this judgment, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) decided, in Case C-275/21, to stay the proceedings on the action for review brought by EPIC and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Does a review procedure before the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court), which takes place in implementation of Directive [89/665], constitute a dispute concerning a civil and commercial matter within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Regulation [No 1215/2012]? Does such a review procedure as referred to in the preceding question at least constitute a civil matter pursuant to Article 81(1) [TFEU]?

(2) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the principle of equivalence to be interpreted as conferring subjective rights on individuals against the Member State and as precluding the application of Austrian national rules under which the court must, before disposing of an application for review, which must be directed at the annulment of a separately contestable decision of a contracting authority, determine the type of contract award procedure and the (estimated) contract value as well as the total number of contested, separately contestable decisions from specific award procedures and also, if necessary, the lots from a specific award procedure, in order then to issue, if necessary, an order for regularisation via the presiding judge of the competent chamber of the court for the purpose of recovering fees and then, in the event of non-payment of fees, to prescribe – before or no later than at the same time as rejecting an application for review due to failure to pay fees subsequently demanded – the procedural fees via the chamber of the court competent to deal with the application for review, failing which a loss of entitlement would ensue, when in civil cases in Austria, such as, for example, in the case of actions seeking compensation or injunctions for infringements of competition law, non-payment of fees does not otherwise preclude the disposal of an action, irrespective of the issue of the fees payable for judicial protection, whatever the amount, and, by way of further comparison, in Austria, non-payment of appeal fees for bringing appeals against administrative decisions or for appeals or appeals on points of law [(Revision)] against decisions of administrative courts to the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) or the Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court) does not lead to the dismissal of an appeal owing to non-payment of fees?

(2.1) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the principle of equivalence to be interpreted as precluding the application of Austrian national rules under which, prior to the disposal of an application for an interlocutory injunction as provided for in Article 2(1)(a) of Directive [89/665], an order for regularisation of fees is to be made by the presiding judge of the chamber, sitting as a single judge, in the event of insufficient payment of flat-rate fees, and that single judge must reject the application for an interlocutory injunction in the event of non-payment of fees, when otherwise in civil actions in Austria, under the Gerichtsgebührengesetz (Law on Court Fees), no additional flat-rate court fees are to be paid, in principle, for an application for an interlocutory injunction lodged together with an action, on top of the fees for the action at first instance, and, moreover, with regard to applications for the granting of suspensive effect which are lodged together with an appeal against an administrative decision to an administrative court, an appeal on points of law [(Revision)] to the [Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court)] or an appeal to the [Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court)], and which, from a functional point of view, have the same or a similar objective in terms of judicial protection as an application for an interlocutory injunction, no separate fees must be paid for such ancillary applications for the granting of suspensive effect?

(3) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the [principle of acting expeditiously] under Article 1(1) of Directive [89/665], according to which procurement review procedures must, in particular, be conducted as rapidly as possible, to be interpreted as meaning that that [principle] confers a subjective right to a rapid review procedure and precludes the application of Austrian national rules under which, even in the case of contract award procedures conducted in a non-transparent manner, the court must in every case determine, before disposing of an application for review, which must be directed at the annulment of a separately contestable decision of a contracting authority, the type of award procedure and the (estimated) contract value as well as the total number of contested, separately contestable decisions from specific award procedures and also, if necessary, the lots from a specific award procedure, in order then to issue, if necessary, an order for regularisation via the presiding judge of the chamber of the court for the purpose of recovering fees and, in the event of non-payment of fees, to prescribe – before or no later than at the same time as rejecting an application for review due to failure to pay fees subsequently demanded – the procedural fees via the chamber of the court competent to rule on the application for review, failing which a loss of entitlement would ensue?

(4) Having regard to the principle of transparency under Article 18(1) of Directive [2014/24] and the other provisions of EU law, is the right to a fair trial before a court or tribunal under Article 47 of the [Charter] to be interpreted as precluding the application of Austrian national rules under which, even in the case of contract award procedures conducted in a non-transparent manner, the court must in every case, before disposing of an application for review, which must be directed at the annulment of a separately contestable decision of a contracting authority, determine the type of award procedure and the (estimated) contract value as well as the total number of contested, separately contestable decisions from specific award procedures and also, if necessary, the lots from a specific award procedure, in order then to issue, if necessary, an order for regularisation via the presiding judge of the chamber of the court for the purpose of recovering fees and, in the event of non-payment of fees, to prescribe – before or no later than at the same time as rejecting an application for review due to failure to pay fees subsequently demanded – the procedural fees via the chamber of the court competent to deal with the application for review, failing which a loss of entitlement would ensue?

(5) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the principle of equivalence to be interpreted as conferring subjective rights on individuals against the Member State and as precluding the application of Austrian national rules under which, in the event of non-payment of flat-rate fees for the lodging of an application for review of decisions of contracting authorities within the meaning of Directive [89/665], as amended (or, as the case may be, also for a finding of illegality in connection with a contract award for the purpose of obtaining compensation), (only) a chamber of an administrative court, as a judicial body, must prescribe flat-rate fees which have not been paid but are payable (leading to curtailed possibilities of judicial protection for the party liable to pay the fees) when fees for actions and appeals in civil court proceedings are otherwise prescribed, in the event of non-payment, by an administrative decision in accordance with the Gerichtliches Einbringungsgesetz (Law on Judicial Collection) and, moreover, in administrative law, appeal fees for appeals to an administrative court or to the [Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court)] or for appeals on points of law [(Revision)] to the [Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court)] are as a general rule prescribed, in the event of non-payment of the fees, by way of a notice of an administrative authority (notice prescribing fees), against which an appeal can as a general rule always be brought before an administrative court and then, in turn, an appeal on points of law [(Revision)] before the [Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Supreme Administrative Court)] or an appeal before the [Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court)]?

(6) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is Article 1(1) of Directive [89/665], to be interpreted as meaning that the conclusion of a framework agreement with a single economic operator pursuant to Article 33(3) of Directive [2014/24] constitutes the conclusion of a contract pursuant to Article 2a(2) of Directive [89/665], and, consequently, the decision of a contracting authority as to the single economic operator pursuant to Article 33(3) of Directive [2014/24] with which that framework agreement is to be concluded constitutes a contract award decision pursuant to Article 2a(1) of Directive [89/665]?

(6.1) Are the words “contracts based on that agreement” in Article 33(3) of Directive [2014/24] to be interpreted as meaning that a contract based on the framework agreement exists where the contracting authority awards an individual contract expressly on the basis of the framework agreement concluded? Or is the cited phrase “contracts based on that agreement” to be interpreted as meaning that if the total quantity covered by the framework agreement within the meaning of the judgment [of 19 December 2018, Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato – Antitrust and Coopservice (C-216/17, EU:C:2018:1034, paragraph 64)], has already been exhausted, there is no longer a contract based on the framework agreement originally concluded?

(6.2) If Question 6.1. is answered in the affirmative: Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, are Articles 4 and 5 of Directive [2014/24] to be interpreted as meaning that the estimated contract value of an individual contract based on the framework agreement is always the estimated contract value pursuant to Article 5(5) of Directive [2014/24]? Or, in the case of a single contract based on a framework agreement, is the estimated contract value pursuant to Article 4 of that directive the contract value derived in application of Article 5 of that directive for the purposes of determining the estimated contract value for a single supply contract based on the framework agreement?

(7) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the right to a fair trial before a court or tribunal under Article 47 of the [Charter] to be interpreted as precluding the application of a rule under which the contracting authority designated in the procurement dispute must provide all the information required and produce all the documents required – whereby failure to do so in either respect may lead to a default decision to its detriment – if the officials or employees of that contracting authority who are required to provide that information on behalf of the contracting authority may thereby be exposed to the risk of possibly having to incriminate themselves under criminal law if they provide the information or produce the documents?

(8) Taking account also of the right to an effective remedy under Article 47 of the Charter, and having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the requirement under Article 1(1) of Directive [89/665], that procurement review procedures must, in particular, be conducted effectively, to be interpreted as meaning that those provisions confer subjective rights and preclude the application of national rules under which the party seeking judicial protection by way of an application for review is required to specify in his or her application for review the specific award procedure in each case and the specific separately contestable decision of a contracting authority, even if, in the case of award procedures without prior publication of a contract notice that are non-transparent for that applicant, he or she will generally not know whether the contracting authority has conducted direct award procedures under national law that are non-transparent for the applicant or negotiated procedures without prior publication of a contract notice that are non-transparent for the applicant, or whether one or more non-transparent award procedures with one or more contestable decisions have been conducted?

(9) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the requirement of a fair trial before a court or tribunal under Article 47 of the Charter to be interpreted as meaning that that provision confers subjective rights and precludes the application of national rules under which the party seeking judicial protection by way of an application for review is required to specify in his or her application for review the specific contract award procedure and the specific separately contestable decision of a contracting authority, even if, in the case of award procedures without prior publication of a contract notice, that applicant cannot generally know whether the contracting authority has conducted direct award procedures under national law that are non-transparent for the applicant or negotiated procedures without prior publication of a contract notice that are non-transparent for the applicant, or whether one or more award procedures with one or more separately contestable decisions have been conducted?

(10) Having regard to the other provisions of EU law, is the requirement of a fair trial before a court or tribunal under Article 47 of the Charter to be interpreted as meaning that that provision confers subjective rights and precludes the application of national rules under which the party seeking judicial protection by way of an application for review is required to pay flat-rate fees in an amount which he or she cannot foresee at the time when the application is lodged, because, in the case of contract award procedures without prior publication of a contract notice that are non-transparent for that applicant, he or she cannot generally know whether the contracting authority has conducted direct award procedures under national law or non-transparent negotiated procedures without prior publication of a contract notice, and how high the estimated contract value is in the case of any negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice that may have been conducted, or how many separately contestable decisions have already been issued?’

Consideration of the questions referred

The first questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21

56 By its first questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the concept of ‘civil and commercial matters’ within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Regulation No 1215/2012 must be interpreted as including the procedures for granting an interlocutory injunction and review procedures as referred to in Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665.

57 In that regard, it is sufficient to recall that Regulation No 1215/2012 is applicable only where a dispute concerns several Member States or a single Member State provided, in the latter case, that there is an international element because of the involvement of a third State. That situation is such as to raise questions relating to the determination of international jurisdiction (see, to that effect, judgments of 1 March 2005, Owusu, C-281/02, EU:C:2005:120, paragraphs 25 and 26, and of 7 May 2020, Rina, C-641/18, EU:C:2020:349, paragraph 25).

58 In the present case, that international element is lacking.

59 It follows that that regulation does not apply in the dispute in the main proceedings and that, accordingly, there is no need to answer the first questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21.

The sixth questions and the sixth questions, point 1, in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21, and the sixth question, point 2, in Case C-275/21

The sixth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21

60 By its sixth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that the conclusion of a framework agreement with a single economic operator, in accordance with Article 33(3) of Directive 2014/24, corresponds to the conclusion of a contract as referred to in Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665.

61 At the outset, it must be stated that the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 expressly provides that the concept of 'contracts', within the meaning of that directive, includes framework agreements.

62 Therefore, the first subparagraph of Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665 is applicable to framework agreements. Pursuant to that provision, a contract may not be concluded following the decision to award a framework agreement concluded with a single economic operator, in accordance with Article 33(3) of Directive 2014/24, before the expiry of a standstill period of at least 10 or 15 calendar days, depending on the means of communication used, with effect from the day following the date on which the decision to award that framework agreement is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned.

63 Furthermore, as the European Commission has submitted in its written observations, that interpretation is such as to ensure the effectiveness of Directive 89/665. As the case may be, as stated in recital 4 of Directive 2007/66, which amended and supplemented Directive 89/665, the absence of a period allowing an effective review between the decision to award a contract and the conclusion of the contract in question could result in contracting authorities and contracting entities who wish to make irreversible the consequences of the disputed award decision proceeding very quickly to the signature of the contract. It is precisely in order to remedy that weakness in the review mechanisms existing in the Member States, which is a serious obstacle to effective judicial protection for the tenderers concerned, namely those tenderers who have not yet been definitively excluded, that a minimum standstill period has been introduced, during which the conclusion of the contract in question is suspended, irrespective of whether that conclusion occurs at the time of signature of the contract or not.

64 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the sixth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21 is that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that the conclusion of a framework agreement with a single economic operator, in accordance with Article 33(3) of Directive 2014/24, corresponds to the conclusion of a contract as referred to in Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665.

The sixth questions, point 1, in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21

65 By its sixth questions, point 1, in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 33(3) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may continue to rely, for the purpose of awarding a new contract, on a framework agreement in respect of which the quantity and/or maximum value of the works, supplies or services concerned laid down therein has or have already been reached.

66 In that regard, it is clear from the case-law of the Court that, by concluding a framework agreement, a contracting authority may make commitments only up to a maximum quantity and/or a maximum value of the works, supplies or services concerned, with the result that, once that limit has been reached, that framework agreement will no longer have any effect (judgment of 17 June 2021, Simonsen & Weel, C-23/20, EU:C:2021:490, paragraph 68).

67 Accordingly, as the Austrian Government and the Commission have submitted in their written observations, a contract can no longer be lawfully awarded, pursuant to Article 33(2) of Directive 2014/24, on the basis of a framework agreement whose limit has been exceeded and which, therefore, is rendered ineffective, unless that award does not substantially modify that agreement, for the purposes of Article 72(1)(e) of Directive 2014/24 (see, to that effect, judgment of 17 June 2021, Simonsen & Weel, C-23/20, EU:C:2021:490, paragraph 70).

68 The answer to the sixth questions, point 1, is therefore that Article 33(3) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may no longer rely, for the purpose of awarding a new contract, on a framework agreement in respect of which the quantity and/or maximum value of the works, supplies or services concerned laid down therein has or have already been reached, unless the award of that contract does not entail a substantial modification of that framework agreement, as provided for in Article 72(1)(e) of that directive.

The sixth question, point 2, in Case C-275/21

69 In view of the answer given to the sixth question, point 1, in Case C-275/21, there is no need to answer the sixth question, point 2, in that case.

The second questions, the second questions, point 1, and the fifth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21

70 By its second questions, its second questions, point 1, and its fifth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the principle of equivalence must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which lays down, in respect of applications for an interlocutory injunction and actions for review relating to a procedure for the award of a public contract, procedural rules that are different from those which apply, inter alia, to civil proceedings.

71 By those questions, the referring court refers, more specifically, to three national rules that apply in particular to applications for an interlocutory injunction and actions for review lodged in the field of public procurement: first, the rule that, in that field, the admissibility of an application for an interlocutory injunction or of an action for review is subject to the payment by the litigant of flat-rate court fees, so that the merits of that action or application may be examined only if those fees have been paid in advance; second, the rule that, in that field, an application for an interlocutory injunction lodged at the same time as an action for review on the merits gives rise to the imposition of a specific flat-rate fee and, third, the rule that, in that same field, flat-rate court fees are not imposed by an administrative decision, with the result that those fees cannot be challenged before a court with unlimited jurisdiction.

72 It must be borne in mind that Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States, as regards procedures for the award of public contracts, to take the measures necessary to guarantee reviews which are effective and as rapid as possible against decisions of the contracting authorities which are incompatible with EU law and to ensure that the review procedures are available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. That directive thus leaves Member States a discretion in the choice of the procedural guarantees for which it provides, and the formalities relating thereto. In particular, that directive does not contain any provision relating specifically to the court fees to be paid by individuals when they lodge, in accordance with Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of that directive, an application for an interlocutory injunction or an action for annulment against an allegedly unlawful decision concerning a procedure for the award of a public contract (judgment of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraphs 43 to 45).

73 Therefore, in the absence of EU rules governing the matter, it is for each Member State, in accordance with the principle of the procedural autonomy of the Member States, to lay down the detailed rules of administrative and judicial procedures governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from EU law. Those detailed procedural rules must, however, be no less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and must not render practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by EU law (principle of effectiveness) (judgments of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 46, and of 21 December 2021, Randstad Italia, C-497/20, EU:C:2021:1037, paragraph 58).

74 The fact that the flat-rate court fees that a litigant must pay, in the context of procedures for the award of a public contract, are higher than the fees due in civil proceedings cannot, as such, demonstrate an infringement of the principle of equivalence (see, by analogy, judgment of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 66).

75 That principle requires that actions based on an infringement of national law and similar actions based on an infringement of EU law be treated equally and not that there be equal treatment of national procedural rules applicable to proceedings of a different nature such as civil proceedings, on the one hand, and administrative proceedings, on the other, or applicable to proceedings falling within two different branches of law (judgment of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 67).

76 Moreover, that principle is not relevant as regards two types of actions both of which are based on a breach of EU law (see, to that effect, judgment of 6 October 2015, Târşia, C-69/14, EU:C:2015:662, paragraph 34).

77 The principle of equivalence cannot therefore be interpreted as requiring Member States to extend their most favourable rules to all actions brought in a certain field of law (see, to that effect, judgments of 15 September 1998, Edis, C-231/96, EU:C:1998:401, paragraph 36, and of 26 January 2010, Transportes Urbanos y Servicios Generales, C-118/08, EU:C:2010:39, paragraph 34).

78 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second questions, the second questions, point 1, and the fifth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21 is that the principle of equivalence must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which lays down, in respect of applications for an interlocutory injunction and actions for review relating to a procedure for the award of a public contract, procedural rules that are different from those which apply, inter alia, to civil proceedings.

The eighth and ninth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21

79 By its eighth and ninth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation requiring a litigant to identify, in his or her application for an interlocutory injunction and action for review, the procedure for the award of a public contract concerned and the separately contestable decision that he or she is challenging, even where the contracting authority has opted for a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice.

80 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that, in the present cases, the Court is not asked about the interpretation of Article 32(2)(c) of Directive 2014/24 in order to determine whether the contracting authority having recourse to a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice is compatible with that directive. The referring court appears to endorse the contracting authority's choice to have recourse, in the dispute in the main proceedings, to such a procedure in order to obtain the supply of antigen tests as a matter of urgency. The Austrian Government and the Commission state, moreover, that it is apparent from point 2.3.4 of the Guidance from the European Commission on using the public procurement framework in the emergency situation related to the COVID-19 crisis (OJ 2020 C 108 I, p. 1) that 'negotiated procedures without prior publication may offer the possibility to meet immediate needs' and that those procedures 'cover the gap until more stable solutions can be found, such as framework contracts for supplies and services, awarded through regular procedures (including accelerated procedures)'.

81 In any event, it cannot be disputed that, in the absence of prior publication of a contract notice, referred to in Article 49 of that directive, or of a contract award notice, referred to in Article 50 thereof, a litigant is not in a position to determine the type of procedure for the award of a public contract concerned and the number of contestable decisions.

82 It follows that national legislation requiring, in such a situation, a litigant to indicate that type of information, in his or her application for an interlocutory injunction and action for review, has the effect of rendering practically impossible the exercise of rights conferred by EU law and, accordingly, compromises the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 (see, by analogy, judgments of 28 January 2010, Uniplex (UK), C-406/08, EU:C:2010:45, paragraph 40, and of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraphs 39 and 40), the objective of which is to ensure that decisions taken unlawfully by contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible (judgment of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 43).

83 Such legislation is also contrary to the right to an effective remedy guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter, which is sufficient in itself and need not be made more specific by provisions of EU or national law to confer on individuals a right which they may rely on as such (judgment of 17 April 2018, Egenberger, C-414/16, EU:C:2018:257, paragraph 78).

84 In those circumstances, the answer to the eighth and ninth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21 is that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation requiring a litigant to identify, in his or her application for an interlocutory injunction or action for review, the procedure for the award of a public contract concerned and the separately contestable decision that he or she is challenging, where the contracting authority has opted for a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice and the contract award notice has not been published yet.

The third and fourth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21

85 By its third and fourth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which, for the sole purpose of calculating the amount of the flat-rate court fees which the litigant must pay, failing which his or her application for an interlocutory injunction or action for review would be dismissed on that ground alone, requires a court to determine, before ruling on such an application or action, the type of procedure for the award of a public contract concerned, the (estimated) value of the contract at issue and the total number of separately contestable decisions and, where appropriate, the lots from the procedure for the award of a public contract concerned, where the contracting authority has opted for a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice and, at the time the action for review is brought, the contract award notice has not been published yet.

86 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, under the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, the Member States must take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards public contracts falling inter alia within the scope of Directive 2014/24, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of Directive 89/665, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed EU law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

87 As has been pointed out in paragraph 72 of this judgment, Directive 89/665 does not, however, contain any provision relating specifically to the court fees to be paid by individuals when they lodge, in accordance with Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of that directive, an application for an interlocutory injunction or an action for annulment against an allegedly unlawful decision concerning a procedure for the award of a public contract.

88 That being so, it is for the Member States, when they lay down detailed procedural rules governing the judicial remedies intended to safeguard rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, to ensure that neither the effectiveness of Directive 89/665, the objective of which is to ensure that decisions taken unlawfully by contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible, nor rights conferred on individuals by EU law are undermined. In addition, as is clear from recital 36 thereof, Directive 2007/66, and Directive 89/665 that it amended and supplemented, seek to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, enshrined in the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter (see, to that effect, judgments of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraphs 72 and 73; of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraphs 42 to 46; of 7 August 2018, Hochtief, C-300/17, EU:C:2018:635, paragraph 38; and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 128).

89 In that context, it should be noted that the provisions of Directive 89/665, intended to protect tenderers against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority, are designed to reinforce existing arrangements for ensuring the effective application of the EU rules on the award of public contracts, in particular where infringements can still be rectified (see, to that effect, judgments of 11 August 1995, Commission v Germany, C-433/93, EU:C:1995:263, paragraph 23, and of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 41).

90 In the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract organised in a non-transparent manner, the right to apply for interim protection is crucial. Recital 5 of Directive 89/664 states, furthermore, that, since procedures for the award of public contracts are of such short duration, competent review bodies must, among other things, be authorised to take interim measures aimed at suspending such a procedure or the implementation of any decisions which may be taken by the contracting authority, and that the short duration of the procedures means that the infringements of the rules of public procurement procedures need to be dealt with urgently.

91 In order to achieve that objective, Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides for the establishment in the Member States of review procedures which are effective, and in particular as rapid as possible, against decisions which may have infringed EU law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law. More specifically, Article 2(1)(a) of that directive requires Member States to make provision for the powers to 'take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned' (judgment of 9 December 2010, Combinatie Spijker Infrabouw-De Jonge Konstruktie and Others, C-568/08, EU:C:2010:751, paragraphs 52 and 53).

92 Where the contracting authority has opted for a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice and, at the time when the action for annulment against a decision linked to that procedure is brought, the contract award notice has not been published yet, that right to interim protection is very likely to be reduced to nothing if the court called upon to rule on the application for an interlocutory injunction must, before being able to adopt an interim measure and for the sole purpose of calculating the amount of the flat-rate court fees which the litigant must pay, identify the type of procedure followed for the award of the public contract, state the estimated value of the contract at issue, and identify all the decisions taken by the contracting authority in the context of that procedure. That risk is even higher where a procedure has been organised in breach of the principle of transparency enshrined in the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24. In that type of situation, it is highly likely that that court might have to conduct long and complicated investigations. As long as its investigations continue, it will be impossible for that court to suspend the contracting authority's purchases challenged by the applicant.

93 Such a constraint on a court called upon to rule in urgent proceedings is thus manifestly disproportionate to the point of undermining the right to an effective remedy guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter.

94 Furthermore, it is important to point out, as the Court has already stated, that the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 is called into question where the only possible remedy is that before the court ruling on the merits. The option of bringing proceedings for the annulment of the contract itself is not such as to compensate for the impossibility of challenging the act of awarding the contract concerned, before the contract is concluded. Thus, where the contract has already been signed, the fact that the only judicial review provided for is an ex post review excludes the possibility of bringing an action at a stage where infringements can still be rectified and therefore does not make it possible to ensure full legal protection of the applicant before the conclusion of the contract (see, to that effect, judgments of 3 April 2008, Commission v Spain, C-444/06, EU:C:2008:190, paragraph 38; of 11 June 2009, Commission v France, C-327/08, not published, EU:C:2009:371, paragraph 58; and of 23 December 2009, Commission v Ireland, C-455/08, not published, EU:C:2009:809, paragraph 28).

95 In those circumstances, national legislation which prevents a court with which an application for an interlocutory injunction has been lodged from ruling on that application until, first, the information referred to in paragraph 92 of this judgment has been gathered and, second and consequently, the flat-rate court fees have been paid by the person making that application, infringes both Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 89/665 and Article 47 of the Charter.

96 By contrast, the requirement for acting expeditiously does not apply to the same degree to a situation in which a litigant brings an action before a national court seeking the annulment of a separately contestable decision taken by a contracting authority and to a situation where the litigant lodges an application for an interlocutory injunction, as a preventive measure. Therefore, national legislation, such as the Austrian legislation, which requires the communication of the information referred to in paragraph 92 of this judgment, in proceedings for the annulment of a separately contestable decision taken by the contracting authority, does not infringe EU law.

97 The answer to the third and fourth questions referred in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21 is therefore that Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as:

– precluding national legislation which requires a court with which an application for an interlocutory injunction is lodged seeking to prevent purchases on the part of the contracting authority, to determine, before ruling on that application, the type of contract award procedure concerned, the (estimated) value of the contract at issue and the total number of separately contestable decisions and, where appropriate, the lots from the contract award procedure concerned, for the sole purpose of calculating the amount of the flat-rate court fees which the person making that application must pay, failing which that application would be dismissed on that ground alone, where the contracting authority has opted for a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice and, at the time the action for annulment against a decision linked to that procedure is brought, the contract award notice has not been published yet;

– not precluding national legislation which requires a court before which an action for the annulment of a separately contestable decision taken by the contracting authority is brought to determine, before ruling on that action, the type of contract award procedure concerned, the (estimated) value of the contract at issue and the total number of separately contestable decisions and, where appropriate, the lots from the contract award procedure concerned, for the sole purpose of calculating the amount of the flat-rate court fees which the applicant must pay, failing which his or her action would be dismissed on that ground alone.

The tenth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21

98 By its tenth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 47 of the Charter must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which requires a litigant lodging an application for an interlocutory injunction or an action for review to pay flat-rate court fees of an amount impossible to foresee, where the contracting authority has opted for a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice or, as the case may be, without subsequent publication of a contract award notice, with the result that it can be impossible for the litigant to ascertain the estimated value of the contract and the number of separately contestable decisions adopted by the contracting authority on the basis of which those fees were calculated.

99 At the outset, it must be pointed out, as the Austrian Government has stated, that the person lodging an application for an interlocutory injunction or an action for review can ascertain in advance the detailed rules for calculating the flat-rate court fees payable by him or her, in the field of public procurement, since those rules are clear from Paragraph 340 of the Law on Public Procurement, read in conjunction with the Regulation on Flat-Rate Fees 2018 referred to in paragraph 29 above.

100 Nevertheless, where the contracting authority has recourse to a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice, a litigant who has lodged an application for an interlocutory injunction or an action for review may be aware neither of the estimated value of the contract concerned nor of the number of separately contestable decisions already adopted by the contracting authority on the basis of which those flat-rate fees are calculated.

101 Accordingly, that litigant can be unable to foresee the amount of the flat-rate fees which he or she must pay.

102 According to the referring court, in the circumstances of the dispute in the main proceedings, it was the fact that it was impossible for EPIC, first, to determine the type of procedure for the award of a public contract followed by the contracting authority and, second, to count the contestable decisions adopted by the contracting authority that led that company to challenge, initially, the 21 framework agreements concluded by the contracting authority and the three decisions taken under each of those framework agreements. Since EPIC chose to lodge an application for an interlocutory injunction and an action for review on the merits against all those decisions, it incurred, according to the referring court, the payment of flat-rate court fees of an amount exceeding EUR 1 000 000.

103 Thus, national legislation which requires a litigant to pay flat-rate court fees of an amount that is impossible to foresee before that person lodges his or her application for an interlocutory injunction or action for review makes it practically impossible or excessively difficult for him or her to exercise his or her right to an effective remedy, and therefore infringes Article 47 of the Charter, including where that amount represents only a tiny fraction of the value of the contract(s) concerned.

104 The answer to the tenth questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21 therefore is that Article 47 of the Charter must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which requires a litigant lodging an application for an interlocutory injunction or an action for review to pay flat-rate court fees of an amount impossible to foresee, where the contracting authority has opted for a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice or, as the case may be, without subsequent publication of a contract award notice, with the result that it can be impossible for the litigant to ascertain the estimated value of the contract and the number of separately contestable decisions adopted by the contracting authority on the basis of which those fees were calculated.

The seventh questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21

105 By its seventh questions in Cases C-274/21 and C-275/21, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 47 and 48 of the Charter preclude national legislation pursuant to which a contracting authority which has the status of defendant in a dispute relating to the award of a public contract must submit, in the context both of an application for an interlocutory injunction and of an action for review, all the information and documents requested of it, even where, first, a judgment by default may be given against it and, second, the communication of that information and those documents may lead to its administrators or staff incriminating themselves under criminal law.

106 In that regard, it should be noted, as the Austrian Government has submitted and as has been pointed out it in paragraph 53 of this judgment, that it follows from the requests for a preliminary ruling that, in the present case, the relevance of the answer to those questions will be demonstrated by any potential future investigations to be carried out in the context of the criminal proceedings reported by the media, relating to certain administrators and concerning the purchases of the antigen tests at issue in the main proceedings.

107 In so doing, the referring court itself points out the hypothetical nature of the seventh questions in the present cases. In addition, that court merely refers to criminal proceedings brought against members of the Austrian Federal Government, without establishing a link between those proceedings and the present cases.

108 Moreover, as the Commission has stated in its written observations, those questions are irrelevant in so far as the referring court does not explain how the prohibition against self-incrimination could apply in a situation where the administrators or staff of the contracting authority provide a national court with information relating to the conduct of the contracting authority, without themselves incurring a priori any criminal penalty.

109 Lastly, the referring court merely makes a general reference to Articles 47 and 48 of the Charter, and merely submits that the Austrian legislation severely restricts the effectiveness of the judicial protection guaranteed by Directive 89/665, without, however, identifying the provisions of EU law that are liable to apply to the situation at issue in the main proceedings and, accordingly, render those two articles of the Charter applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings.

110 It follows that the seventh questions are hypothetical and, accordingly, inadmissible.

Costs

111 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, must be interpreted as meaning that the conclusion of a framework agreement with a single economic operator, in accordance with Article 33(3) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, corresponds to the conclusion of a contract as referred to in Article 2a(2) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2014/23.

2. Article 33(3) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may no longer rely, for the purpose of awarding a new contract, on a framework agreement in respect of which the quantity and/or maximum value of the works, supplies or services concerned laid down therein has or have already been reached, unless the award of that contract does not entail a substantial modification of that framework agreement, as provided for in Article 72(1)(e) of that directive.

3. The principle of equivalence must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which lays down, in respect of applications for an interlocutory injunction and actions for review relating to a procedure for the award of a public contract, procedural rules that are different from those which apply, inter alia, to civil proceedings.

4. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2014/23, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation requiring a litigant to identify, in his or her application for an interlocutory injunction or action for review, the procedure for the award of a public contract concerned and the separately contestable decision that he or she is challenging, where the contracting authority has opted for a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice and the contract award notice has not been published yet.

5. Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2014/23, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights, must be interpreted as:

   – precluding national legislation which requires a court with which an application for an interlocutory injunction is lodged seeking to prevent purchases on the part of the contracting authority, to determine, before ruling on that application, the type of contract award procedure concerned, the (estimated) value of the contract at issue and the total number of separately contestable decisions and, where appropriate, the lots from the contract award procedure concerned, for the sole purpose of calculating the amount of the flat-rate court fees which the person making that application must pay, failing which that application would be dismissed on that ground alone, where the contracting authority has opted for a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice and, at the time the action for annulment against a decision linked to that procedure is brought, the contract award notice has not been published yet;

   – not precluding national legislation which requires a court before which an action for the annulment of a separately contestable decision taken by the contracting authority is brought to determine, before ruling on that action, the type of contract award procedure concerned, the (estimated) value of the contract at issue and the total number of separately contestable decisions and, where appropriate, the lots from the contract award procedure concerned, for the sole purpose of calculating the amount of the flat-rate court fees which the applicant must pay, failing which his or her action would be dismissed on that ground alone.

6. Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which requires a litigant lodging an application for an interlocutory injunction or an action for review to pay flat-rate court fees of an amount impossible to foresee, where the contracting authority has opted for a procedure for the award of a public contract without prior publication of a contract notice or, as the case may be, without subsequent publication of a contract award notice, with the result that it can be impossible for the litigant to ascertain the estimated value of the contract and the number of separately contestable decisions adopted by the contracting authority on the basis of which those fees were calculated.

having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 These requests for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The requests have been made in two sets of proceedings between, in Case C-213/21, Italy Emergenza Cooperativa Sociale ('Italy Emergenza') and the Azienda Sanitaria Locale Barletta-Andria-Trani (Local Health Authority, Berletta-Andria-Trani, Italy), and, in Case C-214/21, Italy Emergenza and the Azienda Sanitaria Provinciale di Cosenza (Provincial Health Authority, Cosenza, Italy), concerning two decisions by which those health authorities launched selection procedures with a view to awarding, by contract, the emergency ambulance transport service to voluntary organisations.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Recitals 28 and 118 of Directive 2014/24 state:

'(28) This Directive should not apply to certain emergency services where they are performed by non-profit organisations or associations, since the particular nature of those organisations would be difficult to preserve if the service providers had to be chosen in accordance with the procedures set out in this Directive. However, the exclusion should not be extended beyond that strictly necessary. It should therefore be set out explicitly that patient transport ambulance services should not be excluded. In that context it is furthermore necessary to clarify that CPV Group 601 'Land Transport Services' does not cover ambulance services, to be found in CPV class 8514. It should therefore be clarified that services, which are covered by CPV code 85143000-3, consisting exclusively of patient transport ambulance services should be subject to the special regime set out for social and other specific services (the 'light regime'). Consequently, mixed contracts for the provision of ambulance services in general would also be subject to the light regime if the value of the patient transport ambulance services were greater than the value of other ambulance services.

(118) In order to ensure the continuity of public services, this Directive should allow that participation in procurement procedures for certain services in the fields of health, social and cultural services could be reserved for organisations which are based on employee ownership or active employee participation in their governance, and for existing organisations such as cooperatives to participate in delivering these services to end users. This provision is limited in scope exclusively to certain health, social and related services, certain education and training services, library, archive, museum and other cultural services, sporting services, and services for private households, and is not intended to cover any of the exclusions otherwise provided for by this Directive. Those services should only be covered by the light regime.'

4 Article 10 of that directive, entitled 'Specific exclusions for service contracts', states:

‘This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts for:

(h) civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, and which are covered by CPV codes 75250000-3, 75251000-0, 75251100-1, 75251110-4, 75251120-7, 75252000-7, 75222000-8, 98113100-9 and 85143000-3 except patient transport ambulance services;

…’

5 Article 77 of that directive, entitled ‘Reserved contracts for certain services’, provides in paragraphs 1 and 2:

‘1. Member States may provide that contracting authorities may reserve the right for organisations to participate in procedures for the award of public contracts exclusively for those health, social and cultural services referred to in Article 74, which are covered by CPV codes 75121000-0, 75122000-7, 75123000-4, 79622000-0, 79624000-4, 79625000-1, 80110000-8, 80300000-7, 80420000-4, 80430000-7, 80511000-9, 80520000-5, 80590000-6, from 85000000-9 to 85323000-9, 92500000-6, 92600000-7, 98133000-4, 98133110-8.

2. An organisation referred to in paragraph 1 shall fulfil all of the following conditions:

(a) its objective is the pursuit of a public service mission linked to the delivery of the services referred to in paragraph 1;

(b) profits are reinvested with a view to achieving the organisation’s objective. Where profits are distributed or redistributed, this should be based on participatory considerations;

(c) the structures of management or ownership of the organisation performing the contract are based on employee ownership or participatory principles, or require the active participation of employees, users or stakeholders;

…’

Italian law

6 Article 17 of decreto legislativo n. 50 – Codice dei contratti pubblici (Legislative Decree No 50 on the Public Contracts Code) of 18 April 2016 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016), entitled ‘Specific exceptions for public contracts and service concessions’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘The provisions of this code do not apply to public contracts or service concessions in respect of:

(h) civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, and which come under CPV codes 75250000-3, 75251000-0, 75251100-1, 75251110-4, 75251120-7, 75252000-7, 75222000-8, 98113100-9 and 85143000-3 except patient transport ambulance services;

…’

7 Decreto legislativo n. 117 – Codice del Terzo settore (Legislative Decree No 117 enacting the Third Sector Code) of 3 July 2017 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 179 of 2 August 2017) (‘Legislative Decree No 117/2017’) contains Article 4, entitled ‘Third sector organisations’, which provides, in paragraph 1:

‘Third sector organisations include voluntary organisations, associations for social advancement, philanthropic entities, social enterprises, including social cooperatives, association networks, mutual benefit societies, recognised or unrecognised associations, foundations and private-law entities, other than corporations, created for the non-profit-making pursuit of civic objectives or objective of solidarity or social utility, which carry on, exclusively or principally, one or more activities of general interest in the form of voluntary work or the free provision of money, goods or services, or mutual assistance or production, or the exchange of goods or services, and which are registered in the national third sector register.'

8 Article 57 of Legislative Decree No 117/2017, entitled 'Emergency ambulance transport services, states:

'1. Emergency ambulance transport services may be awarded, on a preferential basis, by contract, to voluntary organisations which have been registered for at least six months in the national third sector register, belong to a network of associations referred to in Article 41(2) and are accredited under the relevant regional legislation, if any, where, by reason of the particular nature of the service, direct contracting ensures that a service which is in the public interest can be provided within a framework of effective contributions to social goals, which pursues objectives of solidarity, in an economically efficient and appropriate manner and in accordance with the principles of transparency and non-discrimination.

2. The provisions of paragraphs 2, 3, 3a and 4 of Article 56 shall apply to contracts for the services referred to in paragraph 1.'

9 Article 2514 of the Codice civile (Civil Code), entitled 'Requirements relating to cooperatives that are predominantly mutual', is worded as follows:

'Cooperatives that are predominantly mutual shall include in their articles of association:

(a) a prohibition on the distribution of dividends on capital invested that would exceed the maximum interest payable on post office savings certificates plus 2.5 percent;

(b) a prohibition on the remuneration of financial instruments offered for subscription by cooperative members that would exceed the maximum limit fixed for dividends by two percent;

(c) a prohibition on the distribution of reserves among cooperative members;

(d) the obligation, in the event of the winding up of the cooperative society, to attribute all the assets, deducting only the share capital and any dividends acquired, to mutual funds for the promotion and development of cooperation;

Cooperatives shall take a decision on the insertion and deletion of the clauses referred to in the preceding paragraph based on the majorities set for the extraordinary general meeting.'

10 According to Article 2545e of the Civil Code, entitled 'Rebates':

'The instrument of incorporation shall define the criteria for the distribution of rebates to members in proportion to the quantity and quality of mutual exchanges.

The general meeting may decide to distribute rebates to each member, including a proportionate increase in the respective shares or the issue of new shares, in derogation from Article 2525, or by issuing financial instruments.'

11 Decreto legislativo n. 112 – Revisione della disciplina in materia di impresa sociale (Legislative Decree No 112, amending the legislation on social enterprises) of 3 July 2017 (GURI No 167 of 19 July 2017) ('Legislative Decree No 112/2017'), provides in Article 3, entitled 'Non-profit-making objective':

'1. Without prejudice to paragraph 3 and to Article 16, a social enterprise shall allocate any profits and operating surpluses to the pursuit of its activities under its articles of association or to the increase of its assets.

2. For the purposes of paragraph 1, the distribution, including indirectly, of profits and operating surpluses, of funds and reserves, irrespective of their designation, to the founders, members or partners, employees and associates, administrators and other members of the enterprise's bodies shall be prohibited, including in the event of termination or any other case of individual termination of the relationship. In the case of social enterprises established in the forms referred to in Book V of the Civil Code, repayment to the member of the capital actually invested and, where appropriate, revalued or increased within the limits referred to in paragraph 3(a), shall be permitted. For the purposes of the present paragraph, 'indirect distribution of profits' shall, in any event, mean:

(a) the payment to the administrators, auditors and any person exercising a social mandate, of individual remuneration which is not proportionate to the activity carried out, to the responsibilities assumed and to the specific skills or, in any event, which is greater than the remuneration paid in entities operating in identical or similar sectors and circumstances.

2a. For the purposes referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2, the distribution, between members, of rebates associated with an activity in the general interest referred to in Article 2, carried out in accordance with Article 2545e of the Civil Code and in compliance with the conditions and limits laid down by law and their articles of association, by social enterprises incorporated in the form of cooperative societies, shall not be considered to be a distribution, even indirectly, of profits and operating surpluses, provided that their articles of association or instrument of incorporation indicate the criteria for the distribution of rebates to members in proportion to the quantity and quality of mutual exchanges and provided that a mutual operating surplus is recorded.

…'

The disputes in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 By a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union of 27 April 2020, the Azienda Sanitaria Locale Barletta-Andria-Trani launched a competitive tendering procedure for the award, by contract, of the emergency ambulance transport service, for the territory within its competence, to voluntary organisations satisfying the requirements laid down in Article 57 of Legislative Decree No 117/2017.

13 Taking the view that that call for tenders contained unlawful clauses which prevented it from taking part in that procedure, Italy Emergenza, a social cooperative whose activity is the provision of the basic health and care ambulance service, challenged that procedure by bringing an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia (Regional Administrative Court, Puglia, Italy). Italy Emergenza considered that Article 57 of Legislative Decree No 117/2017 was contrary to Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of recital 28 of that directive, on the ground that it authorised the direct award, by contract, of emergency ambulance transport services only to voluntary organisations and, consequently, excluded social cooperatives. For the purposes of the direct award, by contract, of emergency services, in Italy Emergenza's view, Article 10(h) fully treats social cooperatives as voluntary associations.

14 That court dismissed the action. First, it held that the service which was the subject of that call for tenders was an ambulance transport service in a 'qualified' ambulance, falling within the exception provided for in Article 10(h). Second, that court held that the exclusion of social cooperatives from the scope of that exception complied with EU law because those cooperatives pursued a business purpose justifying treatment that differed from the treatment of voluntary organisations or associations which do not pursue a profit-making objective. In the present case, as regards Italy Emergenza, its exclusion is justified in the light of Article 5 of that social cooperative's articles of association, which provides for the possibility of distributing dividends of a limited amount.

15 Italy Emergenza brought an appeal against the judgment of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia (Regional Administrative Court, Puglia) before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), the referring court, again stating that Article 57 of Legislative Decree No 117/2017 infringes Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24.

16 The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has doubts as to whether Article 57 of Legislative Decree No 117/2017 complies with Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24. While Article 57 mentions only voluntary organisations and, therefore, appears to exclude the award, by contract, of emergency ambulance transport services to social cooperatives, Article 10(h) refers to 'non-profit' organisations or associations and is not limited solely to voluntary organisations or associations.

17 In that context, the referring court states, first of all, that, in the judgment of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck (C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234), the Court held that organisations and associations whose purpose is to undertake social tasks, which have no commercial purpose and which reinvest any profits in order to achieve their objective constitute 'non-profit organisations or associations' within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24. The Court has thus emphasised that the decisive criterion for falling within that provision is the pursuit of a non-profit-making objective. According to the referring court, a social cooperative such as Italy Emergenza is characterised by the absence of a profit-making objective. Article 6 of its articles of association states that 'the social cooperative operates on a non-profit-making basis and pursues the general interest of the community in human advancement and social integration'. It is true that Article 5 of those articles of association provides for 'a prohibition on the distribution of dividends on capital invested that would exceed the maximum interest payable on post office savings certificates plus 2.5 percent'. However, Article 5 cannot be regarded as having probative value, since it is a provision that reproduces Article 2514 of the Civil Code.

18 Next, the referring court states that social cooperatives differ from voluntary organisations or associations. While the latter do not confer any economic advantage, even indirectly, on their members and merely reimburse the costs incurred by their members, social cooperatives produce an economic advantage for their members, even if they pursue objectives of integration and social advancement on a non-profit basis. Thus, those cooperatives are characterised by their business purpose of a mutual nature. However, that court puts that difference into context, because it is apparent from the case-law of the Court that a contract whereby the sole consideration is the reimbursement of costs incurred falls within the concept of a 'public contract' as a contract for pecuniary interest.

19 In addition, the referring court notes another factor capable of lessening the difference between voluntary organisations or associations and social cooperatives. This is, first, the fact that a voluntary organisation or association can employ workers and, second, the fact that a social cooperative can have voluntary members to whom only their expenses are reimbursed.

20 Finally, that court states that, even if, unlike voluntary organisations or associations, a social cooperative cannot be awarded, on a preferential basis, by contract, an emergency ambulance transport service, pursuant to Article 57 of Legislative Decree No 117/2017, the award of such a service to a social cooperative can take place only following a public procurement procedure, which, however, is contrary to Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24.

21 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Does Article 10(h) of Directive [2014/24] – together with recital 28 of that directive – preclude national legislation which provides that contracts for the provision of emergency ambulance transport services may be directly awarded, on a preferential basis, solely to voluntary organisations – provided that they have been registered for at least six months in the national third sector register, belong to a network of associations and are accredited under the relevant sectoral regional legislation (if any) and on the condition that such an award ensures that the service can be provided within a framework of effective contributions to social goals, which pursues objectives of solidarity, in an economically efficient and appropriate manner and in accordance with the principles of transparency and non-discrimination – to the exclusion of other non-profit organisations, and more specifically social cooperatives, such as non-profit-making social enterprises?'

22 By a notice published on 26 February 2020, the Azienda Sanitaria Provinciale di Cosenza launched a selection procedure for the award, by contract, of the emergency ambulance transport service, for the territory within its competence, to voluntary organisations and the Croce Rossa Italiana (Italian Red Cross).

23 Taking the view that that call for tenders contained unlawful clauses which prevented it from taking part in that procedure, Italy Emergenza challenged that call for tenders by bringing an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Calabria (Regional Administrative Court, Calabria, Italy), relying on the same pleas as those set out in paragraph 13 of the present judgment.

24 That court dismissed that action on the same grounds as those set out in paragraph 14 of the present judgment.

25 Italy Emergenza brought an appeal before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), the referring court, which, on the same grounds as those set out in paragraphs 16 to 20 of the present judgment, has doubts as to whether Article 57 of Legislative Decree 117/2017 is compatible with Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24. That court is also unsure of the effect of Article 3(2)a of Legislative Decree No 112/2017, which authorises a social cooperative not to reinvest all of its profits and to distribute them to its members in the form of rebates.

26 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Does Article 10(h) of Directive [2014/24] – together with recital 28 of that directive – preclude national legislation which provides that contracts for the provision of emergency ambulance transport services may be directly awarded, on a preferential basis, solely to voluntary organisations – provided that they have been registered for at least six months in the national third sector register, belong to a network of associations and are accredited under the relevant sectoral regional legislation (if any) and on the condition that such an award ensures that the service can be provided within a framework of effective contributions to social goals, which pursues objectives of solidarity, in an economically efficient and appropriate manner and in accordance with the principles of transparency and non-discrimination – to the exclusion of other non-profit organisations, and more specifically social cooperatives, such as non-profit-making social enterprises, including social cooperatives which offer rebates to their members in relation to activities of general interest, within the meaning of Article 3(2)a of Legislative Decree No 112/2017?’

Consideration of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

27 By its question in Case C-213/21 and its question in Case C-214/21, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 precludes national legislation which provides that emergency ambulance transport services may be awarded, by contact, on a preferential basis, only to voluntary organisations, and not to social cooperatives which can offer rebates associated with their activities to their members.

28 It should be noted that Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 excludes from its scope public service contracts for services falling within the CPV codes referred to in that provision and which are provided by ‘non-profit organisations or associations’.

29 However, that directive does not define the concept of ‘non-profit’ organisations or associations.

30 In accordance with the requirements for the uniform application of EU law and the principle of equality, the terms of a provision of EU law which makes no express reference to the law of the Member States for the purpose of determining its meaning and scope must normally be given an autonomous and uniform interpretation throughout the European Union, having regard to the context of the provision and the objective pursued by the legislation in question (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck, C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited).

31 In the first place, the concept of 'non-profit' organisations or associations is, by definition, in contrast to a profit-making group which is established for the purpose of making a profit. In that sense, that concept appears sufficiently broad to cover organisations based on employee ownership or active employee participation in the governance of those organisations, such as social cooperatives, provided that they pursue a non-profit-making objective.

32 In the second place, the objective of the exception provided for in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 is, as stated in recital 28 of that directive, to preserve the particular nature of non-profit organisations and associations by preventing them from being subject to the procedures set out in that directive. However, that recital states that that exclusion must not be extended beyond what is strictly necessary. In that respect, that exception must, as a derogation from the scope of that directive, be interpreted strictly (see, by analogy, judgment of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State printing office), C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194, paragraph 77).

33 It follows that the concept of 'non-profit' organisations or associations, within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, must be strictly confined to organisations and associations of a particular nature, that is to say, those which do not pursue a profit-making objective and which cannot provide any benefit, even indirectly, to their members.

34 In the third place, it should be noted that the Court has held that organisations and associations whose purpose is to undertake social tasks, which have no commercial purpose and which reinvest any profits in order to achieve the objective of that organisation or association, fall within that concept (judgment of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck, C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234, paragraph 59).

35 By requiring that any profits be reinvested in order to achieve the objective of the organisation or association concerned, the Court, first, considered that those profits had to be allocated for the performance of the social tasks pursued by that organisation or association and, second, clearly ruled out the possibility that those profits could be distributed to the shareholders or members of that organisation or association. It follows that organisations or associations which are able to distribute profits to their members do not fall within the scope of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24.

36 That interpretation is, moreover, supported by Article 77 of that directive, read in the light of recital 118 of the directive, which authorises Member States to provide that contracting authorities may reserve, for organisations that satisfy the conditions listed in Article 77(2), the right to participate in special procedures for the award of public contracts, exclusively in respect of certain services. Those conditions include, first, in point (b) of Article 77(2), the condition that, where profits are distributed or redistributed, this should be based on participatory considerations and, second, in point (c) of Article 77(2), the condition that the structures of management or ownership of the organisation performing the contract are based on employee ownership or participatory principles, or require the active participation of employees, users or stakeholders.

37 Thus, the EU legislature has provided for different treatment between, on the one hand, 'non-profit' organisations or associations referred to in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 and, on the other hand, the organisations referred to in the preceding paragraph of the present judgment. It follows that the organisations and associations referred to in Article 10(h) of that directive cannot be treated in the same way as organisations based on employee ownership or active employee participation in the governance of the organisation, such as cooperatives, referred to in recital 118 and Article 77 of that directive (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck, C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234, paragraph 60).

38 It follows from the foregoing considerations that, where the members of an association or organisation can obtain a benefit, even indirectly, linked to the activities of that association or organisation, that association or organisation cannot fall within the exception laid down in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24.

39 In the present case, and without prejudice to the analysis of the national legislation and the articles of association of the organisations in question in the main proceedings, which it is for the referring court to carry out, it follows from a reading of Article 3(2)a of Legislative Decree No 112/2017 in conjunction with Article 34 of the articles of association of Italy Emergenza that the general meeting may decide to offer rebates to each of the members. As is apparent from both the orders for reference and the observations of several interested parties, since rebates are an instrument allowing an advantage to be conferred on the members of a cooperative, the existence of such a possibility of distributing 'profits' would have to preclude the classification of a social cooperative, such as Italy Emergenza, as a 'non-profit' organisation or association, within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24.

40 The answer to the questions referred is, therefore, that Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which provides that emergency ambulance transport services may be awarded, by contract, on a preferential basis, only to voluntary organisations, and not to social cooperatives which can offer rebates associated with their activities to their members.

Costs

41 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which provides that emergency ambulance transport services may be awarded, by contract, on a preferential basis, only to voluntary organisations, and not to social cooperatives which can offer rebates associated with their activities to their members.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Eighth Chamber)

31 March 2022 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 2014/24/EU – Applicability to a purely internal situation – Article 58(1) and (4) – Selection criteria – Technical and professional ability of the tenderers – Protection of the financial interests of the European Union – Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 – Article 8(3) – Control measures – Possibility for national authorities protecting the financial interests of the European Union to assess differently a public procurement procedure)

In Case C-195/21,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Rayonen sad Lukovit (District Court, Lukovit, Bulgaria), made by decision of 26 March 2021, received at the Court on 26 March 2021, in the proceedings

v

Smetna palata na Republika Bulgaria,

THE COURT (Eighth Chamber),

composed of N. Jääskinen, President of the Chamber, M. Safjan and M. Gavalec (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: P. Pikamäe,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– LB, by A.S. Aslanyan, advokat,

– the Smetna palata na Republika Bulgaria, by T. Tsvetkov and D.A. Dimitrova, acting as Agents, – the European Commission, by G. Wils, J. Baquero Cruz and P. Ondrůšek and by D. Drambozova, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 58(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2365 of 18 December 2017 (OJ 2017 L 337, p. 19) (‘Directive 2014/24’), Article 8(3) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 of 18 December 1995 on the protection of the European Communities’ financial interests (OJ 1995 L 312, p. 1) and the principles of legal certainty and effectiveness.

2 The request was made in the course of proceedings between LB and the Smetna palata na Republika Bulgaria (Chamber of Audit of the Republic of Bulgaria) ('the Chamber of Audit') concerning an administrative penalty which the latter has imposed on LB on account of irregularities committed during a public procurement procedure.

Legal framework

European Union law

Regulation No 2988/95

3 Regulation No 2988/95 contains three titles: Title I, entitled 'General principles' (Articles 1 to 3), Title II, entitled 'Administrative measures and penalties' (Articles 4 to 7) and Title III, entitled 'Checks' (Articles 8 to 11).

4 Article 8(2) and (3) of that regulation provides:

'2. Measures providing for checks shall be appropriate to the specific nature of each sector and in proportion to the objectives pursued. They shall take account of existing administrative practice and structures in the Member States and shall be determined so as not to entail excessive economic constraints or administrative costs.

The nature and frequency of the checks and inspections on the spot to be carried out by the Member States and the procedure for performing them shall be determined as necessary by sectoral rules in such a way as to ensure uniform and effective application of the relevant rules and in particular to prevent and detect irregularities.

3. The sectoral rules shall include the provisions necessary to ensure equivalent checks through the approximation of procedures and checking methods.'

Regulation (EU) No 1303/2013

5 Recitals 43 and 122 of Regulation (EU) No 1303/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 December 2013 laying down common provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund, the Cohesion Fund, the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development and the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund and laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund, the Cohesion Fund and the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund and repealing Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 (OJ 2013 L 347, p. 320), state:

'(43) In the interests of ensuring proportionate control arrangements and of safeguarding the added value of financial instruments, intended final recipients should not be deterred by there being an excessive administrative burden. …

(122) … In order to reduce the administrative burden on beneficiaries, specific rules should be introduced to reduce the risk of overlap between audits of the same operations by various institutions, namely the European Court of Auditors, the Commission and the audit authority.'

6 Article 2 of that regulation, entitled 'Definitions', provides:

'For the purposes of this Regulation, the following definitions apply:

(36) "irregularity" means any breach of Union law, or of national law relating to its application, resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator involved in the implementation of the [European Structural and Investment Funds (ESI Funds)], which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the budget of the Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the budget of the Union.

Directive 2014/24

7 Article 1 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Subject matter and scope’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4.’

8 Article 4 of that directive, entitled ‘Threshold amounts’, states:

‘This Directive shall apply to procurements with a value net of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than the following thresholds:

(a) EUR 5 548 000 for public works contracts;

…’

9 Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

10 Article 58 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Selection criteria’, states:

‘1. Selection criteria may relate to:

(a) suitability to pursue the professional activity;

(b) economic and financial standing;

(c) technical and professional ability.

Contracting authorities may only impose criteria referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 on economic operators as requirements for participation. They shall limit any requirements to those that are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. All requirements shall be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

4. With regard to technical and professional ability, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary human and technical resources and experience to perform the contract to an appropriate quality standard.

Contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a sufficient level of experience demonstrated by suitable references from contracts performed in the past. A contracting authority may assume that an economic operator does not possess the required professional abilities where the contracting authority has established that the economic operator has conflicting interests which may negatively affect the performance of the contract.

In procurement procedures for supplies requiring siting or installation work, services or works, the professional ability of economic operators to provide the service or to execute the installation or the work may be evaluated with regard to their skills, efficiency, experience and reliability.

11 In accordance with Article 67 of that directive, entitled ‘Contract award criteria’:

‘1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions concerning the price of certain supplies or the remuneration of certain services, contracting authorities shall base the award of public contracts on the most economically advantageous tender.

2. The most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting authority shall be identified on the basis of the price or cost, using a cost-effectiveness approach, such as life-cycle costing in accordance with Article 68, and may include the best price-quality ratio, which shall be assessed on the basis of criteria, including qualitative, environmental and/or social aspects, linked to the subject matter of the public contract in question. Such criteria may comprise, for instance:

(a) quality, including technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, accessibility, design for all users, social, environmental and innovative characteristics and trading and its conditions;

(b) organisation, qualification and experience of staff assigned to performing the contract, where the quality of the staff assigned can have a significant impact on the level of performance of the contract; or

Bulgarian law

Law on public procurement

12 Article 1(1) of the Zakon za obshtestvenite porachki (Law on public procurement, DV No 13, of 16 February 2016), in the version applicable to the facts in the main proceedings (‘the Law on public procurement’), provides:

‘This law determines the conditions and procedures for the award of public works, supply or service contracts and the running of competitions organised by contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring the efficient allocation of:

2. resources granted under European funds and programmes;

…’

13 Article 2 of that law provides:

‘(1) Public contracts shall be awarded in accordance with the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and in particular the principles of free movement of goods, freedom of establishment, freedom to provide services and mutual recognition, as well as the principles deriving therefrom:

1. equality and prohibition of all discrimination;

2. free competition;

3. proportionality;

4. publicity and transparency.

(2) In the award of public contracts, contracting authorities shall not be empowered to restrict competition by imposing conditions or requirements which result in an undue advantage or which unduly restrict the access of economic operators to public contracts and which are not proportionate to the subject matter, value, complexity, quantity or scope of the public contract.

…’

14 In accordance with Article 59 of that law:

‘(1) The contracting authority may lay down selection criteria for candidates or tenderers in relation to:

3. technical and professional ability.

(2) Contracting authorities may apply to candidates or tenderers only the selection criteria set out in this law which are necessary to ensure that they are able to perform the contract. The criteria laid down must be consistent with the subject matter, value, scope and complexity of the contract. Where the contract is divided into lots, the selection criteria for each lot must take account of the subject matter, value, scope and complexity of the lot concerned.

15 Article 247(1) of that law states:

‘… A contracting authority which infringes the prohibition referred to in Article 2(2), Article 11(5), Article 16, Article 21(14), (15) or (17), Article 149(8) or Article 150(4) shall be punished by a pecuniary penalty of 2% of the value of the contract, including VAT, but not exceeding 10 000 [leva (BGN)] [(approximately EUR 5 100)].

16 In accordance with Article 260(1) and (2) of the Law on public procurement:

‘(1) Investigations finding that infringements have been committed under this law, carried out by the authorities of the Chamber of Audit, shall be documented by authorised auditors within a period of six months from the day on which the perpetrator was discovered. This time limit may not exceed three years from the date on which the offence was committed.

(2) Decisions imposing administrative penalties shall be adopted by the President of the Chamber of Audit or by officials authorised by him.’

17 Paragraph 3 of the ‘supplementary provisions’ of the Law on public procurement provides that that law introduces the requirements laid down by Directive 2014/24.

Law on European funds

18 Article 49(2) of the Zakon za upravlenie na sredstvata ot evropeyskite strukturni i investitsionni fondove (Law on the management of resources from the European Structural and Investment Funds, DV No 101 of 22 December 2015), in the version applicable to the facts in the main proceedings (‘the Law on European funds’), provides:

‘In respect of the appointment of a contractor for activities related to works, services and/or supplies of goods which are the subject of public procurement within the meaning of the Law on public procurement, the rules laid down in:

1. the Law on public procurement – where the recipient is a contracting authority within the meaning of that law;

… shall apply. …’

Law on spatial planning

19 In accordance with Article 137(1) of the Zakon za ustroystvo na teritoriata (Law on spatial planning, DV No 1 of 2 January 2001), in the version applicable to the facts in the main proceedings (‘the Law on spatial planning’):

‘… Construction works shall be classified in the following manner according to their characteristics, size, complexity and operating risks:

1. first category:

(g) geo-protection and shoreline reinforcement equipment;

…’

20 Article 163a of that law provides:

‘(1) … The contractor shall be obliged to employ technically qualified persons by means of contracts of employment to carry out the technical management of the works.

(2) … Technically qualified persons are persons who hold a diploma from an accredited institution of higher education with the qualification “civil engineer”, “engineer” or “architect”, as well as persons who have completed secondary education and four years of vocational training leading to a professional qualification in the fields of “architecture and construction” or “engineering”.

(4) … The technical supervisor shall be a civil engineer, architect or construction technician who supervises the works and ensures the implementation of the responsibilities under Article 163(2)(1) to (5), and for constructions in the fifth category – also the responsibilities under Article 168(1) and Article 169a(1). Other technically qualified persons pursuant to paragraph 2 may carry out the specialised technical supervision of individual construction and installation works in accordance with their acquired specialisation and professional qualification.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

21 Under a management contract concluded on 21 March 2018 between the Minister for the Environment and Water (Bulgaria), in his capacity as Director of the Managing Authority of the Operational Programme ‘Environment 2014-2020’, and the municipality of Lukovit (Bulgaria), a grant cofinanced by the European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) and the Cohesion Fund was awarded to that town up to a maximum amount of BGN 649 732.14 (approximately EUR 331 000). That grant was intended to finance work to stabilise a landslide on the road leading to a regional landfill site located within that town.

22 By decision of 5 April 2018, LB, in his capacity as Mayor of Lukovit, launched a ‘public tender’ procedure for the award of a public contract for the performance of those works. The estimated value of that contract was BGN 482 668 excluding VAT (approximately EUR 247 000).

23 That decision, which was published on the same day in the Public Procurement Agency’s public procurement register, approved the contract notice and the public procurement documents at issue in the main proceedings.

24 The contract notice stated that the objective of the project was to reconstruct and improve the road section as a means of transport and that the award criteria would be ‘quality’ and ‘price’, each with a weighting of 50%.

25 Under the conditions for participation in that procurement procedure, the contract notice stated, first, that each participant had to be registered in the Central professional register of the building industry with a view to carrying out building works in Group IV, Category I, falling within the scope of Article 137(1)(1)(g) of the Law on spatial planning, or in a corresponding register for participants established in another Member State.

26 Moreover, with regard to the requirements relating to 'technical and professional ability', the contract notice stated that candidates had to prove, inter alia, that they had carried out building construction activities with the same or a similar subject matter to that of the contract at issue in the main proceedings during the five years preceding the submission of the tender. The contract notice specified, in that regard, that 'similar' activities meant activities to strengthen landslides and/or hillsides and/or banks and/or pits, or an equivalent building under construction.

27 Finally, with regard to the requirements applicable to technical engineering staff, the contract notice stated that the specific features of the contract required inter alia the presence of a technical director of construction who had the professional qualification of a 'designer' or 'civil engineer' or a similar specialisation where the qualification was obtained in a Member State in which there was no corresponding specialisation. The technical director also had to demonstrate a minimum of three years' experience in his or her specialisation.

28 Three tenders were submitted within the prescribed period. After additional explanations were requested from each of the three participants, the Mayor of Lukovit, by decision of 24 July 2018, decided, first, to exclude two of them on the ground that they did not meet the selection criteria and, secondly, to award the contract to the third. Subsequently, on 29 August 2018, a contract with a value of BGN 481 293.72 excluding VAT (approximately EUR 245 500) was concluded between that town and the successful tenderer.

29 By decision of 9 November 2018, on the basis of an ex post check of the legality of the procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings, the managing authority of the operational programme 'Environment 2014-2020' imposed a general financial correction of 5% of the value of the expenditure concerned and recognised as eligible under the contract of 29 August 2018. That authority criticised the contracting authority for having, first, evaluated a tender which did not comply with the required technical specifications and, secondly, given unclear and confusing instructions to one of the participants, which led to its unlawful exclusion and prevented it from submitting a tender with a lower price than that offered by the selected tenderer.

30 In determining the correction to be applied to each of the two irregularities, that managing authority took into consideration, as mitigating circumstances, the fact that, first, three tenders had been submitted, which indicated a satisfactory level of competition, secondly, the estimated value of the contract was below the thresholds for mandatory disclosure in the Official Journal of the European Union, with the result that the lack of cross-border effects would have limited the circle of interested parties, and, thirdly, the award criterion of the 'optimum price-quality ratio' would not necessarily have guaranteed that the tender with the lowest price would be ranked in first place.

31 Alongside the check carried out by that managing authority, by order of 2 October 2019, the Vice President of the Chamber of Audit ordered an audit of the compliance of the management of public funds and the activities of the municipality of Lukovit during the period from 1 January 2018 to 30 June 2019.

32 On 18 June 2020, an auditor from the Chamber of Audit issued a document finding that there had been an administrative infringement, stating that, by his decision of 5 April 2018, the Mayor of Lukovit had infringed the principle of free competition laid down in Article 2(2) of the Law on public procurement. By requiring the presence of a technical director of construction who had the professional qualification of a 'designer' and/or 'civil engineer' with a minimum of three years' experience in his or her specialisation, the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings set a more stringent qualification requirement than that resulting from Article 163a(2) of the Law on spatial planning.

33 The Mayor of Lukovit lodged an objection against the document finding an infringement, justifying the qualification requirement at issue in the main proceedings, referred to in paragraph 27 of this judgment, by the specific features of a landslide stabilisation operation and its engineering complexity. He also stated that that requirement stemmed from the operational programme through which the financing of the project had been secured. The Mayor of Lukovit added that, moreover, no infringement of the rules on free competition provided for in Article 2(2) of the Law on public procurement had been found during the ex post check carried out by the managing authority of the operational programme 'Environment 2014-2020'.

34 By decision of 16 December 2020, the President of the Chamber of Audit rejected the objection and, on the basis of the findings and conclusions contained in that document finding an infringement, imposed a fine of BGN 10 000 (approximately EUR 5 100) on the Mayor of Lukovit under Article 260(2) of the Law on public procurement.

35 The Mayor of Lukovit challenged that decision by bringing an action before the Rayonen sad Lukovit (District Court, Lukovit, Bulgaria), which is the referring court.

36 In the first place, that court asks whether Article 58(4) of Directive 2014/24 precluded the contracting authority from setting a more stringent qualification requirement than that laid down in Article 163a of the Law on spatial planning or whether, on the contrary, as the latter provision merely lays down minimum requirements which apply to all categories of construction, that authority could lawfully set the qualification requirement at issue in the main proceedings, in view of the fact that land stabilisation works are among the most complex construction activities.

37 In the second place, the referring court asks how the various national authorities responsible for ensuring compliance with the Law on public procurement or the Law on European funds must coordinate their checks and conclusions regarding the legality of public procurement procedures. In that regard, various provisions of 'soft law' are said to advocate, first, prohibiting the managing authority and the supervisory authorities from interpreting more strictly the rules governing the selection of the successful tenderer and, secondly, coordinating the opinions of the different supervisory authorities with a view to avoiding any divergence as to the legality of procedures and expenditure incurred.

38 However, it states that account must also be taken, as the Chamber of Audit has noted, of the independence and complementarity of the various supervisory authorities. Thus, in the event of an established infringement of the Law on public procurement constituting an irregularity, the managing authority imposes financial corrections solely on legal persons who are beneficiaries, whereas the Chamber of Audit may impose administrative penalties on the natural persons responsible. To that end, it may challenge the administrative criminal liability of contracting authorities or authorised persons designated by them.

39 In the third place, the referring court asks whether the administrative measures and penalties provided for in Title II of Regulation No 2988/95 must vary according to whether or not there is wrongful conduct and according to the degree of social danger. Since the nature and gravity of the infringement and its financial consequences for the EU budget are taken into account when determining financial corrections, by the authorities responsible for ensuring compliance with the Law on European Funds, the referring court seeks to ascertain whether those same circumstances must also be taken into account in the case where penalties are imposed for infringement of EU public procurement rules.

40 In the fourth place and finally, the referring court asks whether Article 247(1) of the Law on public procurement, under which the contracting authority may be subject to 'a pecuniary penalty of 2% of the value of the contract, including VAT, but not exceeding BGN 10 000', which is said to be equivalent to approximately 16 times the minimum wage, is consistent with the principles of legality, effectiveness and proportionality.

41 It was in that context that the Rayonen sad Lukovit (District Court, Lukovit) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Must Article 58(4) of Directive [2014/24] be interpreted as meaning that the requirements imposed by the selection criteria on the professional ability of the staff of economic operators in respect of a specialised contract in the construction sector may be stricter than the minimum requirements for training and professional qualifications laid down by the specific national law (Article 163a(4) of the [Law on spatial planning]) without being a priori restrictive of competition, and, more specifically, does the prescribed condition of "proportionality" of the participation requirements imposed in relation to the subject matter of the contract (a) require the national court to carry out an assessment of proportionality on the basis of the evidence gathered and the specific parameters of the contract, even in cases where the national law defines a large number of professionals who are in principle qualified to carry out the activities under the contract, or (b) permit judicial review to be limited only to an examination of whether the participation requirements are too restrictive in relation to those provided for in principle in the specific national law?

(2) Must the provisions of Title II "Administrative measures and penalties" of Regulation No 2988/95 be interpreted as meaning that the same infringement of the [Law on public procurement] transposing Directive [2014/24] (including the infringement in the determination of the selection criteria for which the complainant was penalised) may give rise to different legal consequences depending on whether the infringement was committed without fault or intentionally or was caused by negligence?

(3) Do the principles of legal certainty and effectiveness, having regard to the objective of Article 8(3) of Regulation No 2988/95 and recitals 43 and 122 to Regulation No 1303/13, permit the various national authorities called on to protect the financial interests of the European Union to assess the same facts differently in the procurement procedure, in that, more specifically, the managing authority of the operational programme finds no infringement in the determination of the selection criteria, whereas the Chamber of Audit, upon subsequent control and without there being any special or new circumstances, finds that those criteria are restrictive of competition and imposes an administrative penalty on the contracting authority on account of that finding?

(4) Does the principle of proportionality preclude a provision of national law, such as that in Article 247(1) of the Law on public procurement, which provides that a contracting authority which formally infringes the prohibition laid down in Article 2(2) of that law is to be punished by way of a pecuniary penalty of 2% of the value of the contract, including VAT, but not exceeding 10 000 leva (BGN), without it being necessary to establish the seriousness of the infringement and its actual or potential impact on the interests of the European Union?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

The first question

42 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that the estimated value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, amounting to BGN 482 668 excluding VAT (approximately EUR 247 000), is below the threshold for the applicability of Directive 2014/24, set at EUR 5 548 000 by Article 4(a) thereof with regard to public works contracts, and therefore that contract does not fall within the scope of that directive.

43 Nevertheless, as is clear from the Court's settled case-law, where, in regulating situations outside the scope of the EU measure concerned, national legislation seeks to adopt, directly and unconditionally, the same solutions as those adopted in that measure, it is clearly in the interest of the European Union that provisions taken from that measure should be interpreted uniformly. That makes it possible to forestall future differences of interpretation and to ensure that those situations and situations falling within the scope of those provisions are treated in the same way (see, to that effect, judgments of 18 October 1990, Dzodzi, C-297/88 and C-197/89, EU:C:1990:360, paragraphs 36 and 37; of 5 April 2017, Borta, C-298/15, EU:C:2017:266, paragraphs 33 and 34; and of 10 September 2020, Tax-Fin-Lex, C-367/19, EU:C:2020:685, paragraph 21).

44 In the present case, the Law on public procurement, which transposed Directive 2014/24 into Bulgarian law, applies more generally to all public procurement procedures subsidised by European funds, irrespective of the value of the contracts, as is clear from both Article 1(1) of that law and Article 49(2) of the Law on European funds.

45 Thus, since the provisions of Directive 2014/24 have been made directly and unconditionally applicable to situations which, like that of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, would normally fall outside its scope, the Court must answer the first question referred for a preliminary ruling.

46 By that question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 58(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that, in a public procurement procedure, a contracting authority may impose, as part of the selection criteria relating to the technical and professional ability of economic operators, requirements which are more stringent than the minimum requirements laid down by the national legislation in that regard.

47 It should be noted that the answer to that question clearly follows from the very wording of Article 58 of Directive 2014/24.

48 In accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 58(1) of that directive, a contracting authority may only impose criteria referred to in Article 58(2), (3) and (4) of that directive on economic operators as requirements for participation, relating respectively to the suitability to pursue the professional activity, economic and financial standing and technical and professional ability. Those requirements must, moreover, be limited to those that are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. Furthermore, all of those requirements must be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

49 When determining the selection criteria, a contracting authority must also comply with the fundamental principles of procurement set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24. It must also, first, treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and act in a transparent and proportionate manner and, secondly, ensure that procurement is not designed with the intention of excluding it from the scope of that directive or of artificially narrowing competition, by designing it with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.

50 Nevertheless, as it is best placed to assess its own needs, the contracting authority has been granted a broad discretion by the EU legislature when determining selection criteria, as can be seen inter alia from the recurring use of the term ‘may’ in Article 58 of Directive 2014/24. Thus, in accordance with paragraph 1 of that article, it has some flexibility in setting those requirements for participation in a procurement procedure which it considers to be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract and appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the legal and financial capacities and the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded. More specifically, according to paragraph 4 of that article, the contracting authority is free to determine which requirements for participation it considers appropriate, from its point of view, to ensure inter alia the performance of the contract to a quality standard which it considers appropriate.

51 Therefore, where a qualification requirement is justified by the subject matter of the contract, it remains proportionate to it and also complies with the other conditions recalled in paragraphs 48 and 49 of this judgment, Article 58 of Directive 2014/24 cannot prevent a contracting authority from imposing that requirement in the contract notice on the sole ground that it exceeds the minimum level imposed by national legislation. To that end, it is for national courts to interpret, to the greatest extent possible, their national law in conformity with EU law (see, to that effect, judgments of 24 June 2019, Popławski, C-573/17, EU:C:2019:530, paragraph 57, and of 6 October 2021, Sumal, C-882/19, EU:C:2021:800, paragraph 70).

52 In the present case, the qualification requirement at issue in the main proceedings appears to be justified in the light of Article 58 of Directive 2014/24, which, however, is a matter for the referring court to establish. First, that requirement undoubtedly has a link with the subject matter of the contract at issue in the main proceedings. Secondly, that requirement does not appear to have exceeded the discretion enjoyed by the contracting authority when defining selection criteria, particularly since three tenders were submitted even though the estimated value of that contract was modest as it was not even 5% of the threshold for the applicability of Directive 2014/24.

53 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question referred for a preliminary ruling is that Article 58(1) and (4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding, in a public procurement procedure, a contracting authority from being able to impose, under the selection criteria relating to the technical and professional abilities of the economic operators, stricter requirements than the minimum requirements set by the national legislation, provided that such requirements are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded, that they are related to the subject matter of the contract and that they are proportionate to it.

The second and fourth questions

54 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 4 and 5 of Regulation No 2988/95 must be interpreted as meaning that the imposition by a contracting authority of selection criteria which infringe Article 58 of Directive 2014/24 may have different consequences depending on whether the infringement was committed without fault or intentionally or was caused by negligence.

55 The fourth question seeks, in essence, to ascertain whether the principle of proportionality must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which a contracting authority which infringes public procurement rules may be fined 2% of the value of the contract concluded, including VAT, but limited to BGN 10 000, thus approximately EUR 5 100, without it being necessary to establish the seriousness of the infringement and its actual or potential impact on the interests of the European Union.

56 It should be noted that the second and fourth questions are based on the premiss that the qualification requirement at issue in the main proceedings was set by the contracting authority in breach of Article 58 of Directive 2014/24.

57 In so far as it is clear from the answer to the first question that such a requirement appears to be compatible with that provision, there is no need for the Court to examine the second and fourth questions.

The third question

58 By its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 8(3) of Regulation No 2988/95, read in conjunction with recitals 43 and 122 of Regulation No 1303/2013, must be interpreted as precluding national authorities protecting the financial interests of the European Union from assessing the same facts differently in a public procurement procedure.

59 It should be recalled that, in accordance with Article 8(3) of Regulation No 2988/95, the sectoral rules must include the provisions necessary to ensure equivalent checks through the approximation of procedures and checking methods.

60 Recital 43 of the sectoral regulation applicable in the main proceedings, namely Regulation No 1303/2013, states, inter alia, that, in the interests of ensuring proportionate control arrangements and of safeguarding the added value of financial instruments, intended final recipients should not be deterred by there being an excessive administrative burden. Recital 122 of that regulation specifies that, in order to reduce the administrative burden on beneficiaries, specific rules should be introduced to reduce the risk of overlap between audits of the same operations by various institutions, namely the European Court of Auditors, the Commission and the audit authority.

61 However, it is clear from the order for reference that the audit of the management of the municipality of Lukovit was carried out by the Chamber of Audit with a view to ensuring compliance with the Law on public procurement and not compliance with Regulation No 1303/2013, with the result that that audit and the penalty imposed on the basis of it do not fall within the scope of that regulation.

62 Moreover, as the Commission noted in its written observations, Regulation No 1303/2013 does not prevent Member States from establishing bodies responsible for monitoring and auditing the activities of public or private bodies and therefore the competence of such bodies is not governed by that regulation.

63 Accordingly, recitals 43 and 122 of that regulation do not affect the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling.

64 It therefore appears that no provision of Regulations No 2988/95 and No 1303/2013 precludes a public procurement procedure from being subject to two checks, one carried out by the managing authority and the other by the audit authority. Both the independence of each of those authorities and the different purposes assigned to them mean that they may monitor in turn the same public procurement procedure.

65 Furthermore, the fact that, in the present case, the managing authority of the operational programme 'Environment 2014-2020' considered that the qualification requirement at issue in the main proceedings was not contrary to the rules on public procurement cannot give rise to any legitimate expectation on the part of the contracting authority. The right to rely on the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations extends only to a person in a situation in which an administrative authority has caused that person to entertain expectations which are justified by precise unconditional and consistent assurances provided to him or her and originating from authorised, reliable sources. Nevertheless, the concept that a State is to be viewed as a single entity, which prevails both in public international law and in EU law, precludes, in principle, a national authority from relying on the principle of EU law of legitimate expectations in the context of a dispute between that authority and another component of that State (judgment of 20 May 2021, Riigi Tugiteenuste Keskus, C-6/20, EU:C:2021:402, paragraphs 69 and 70).

66 Thus, the fact that the managing authority of the operational programme 'Environment 2014-2020' had already approved, albeit implicitly, the qualification requirement at issue in the main proceedings cannot be relied on by the contracting authority in order to prevent the Chamber of Audit from examining its compatibility with EU law.

67 It should be noted, however, first, that the joint intervention by a managing authority and an audit authority must respect the rights and principles guaranteed by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, and in particular the principle of proportionality. In that regard, Article 8(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 provides, moreover, that measures providing for checks must be determined so as not to entail excessive economic constraints or administrative costs.

68 In the present case, subject to verification by the national court, there is nothing to suggest that the recipients of EU funds would be deterred in the territory of the Republic of Bulgaria from applying for such funds on account of there being an excessive administrative burden.

69 Secondly, the ex post checks carried out by a managing authority and an audit authority cannot affect the legality of an award decision which has become final as regards the contract participants and the contracting authority, since the assessments made in that regard by the contracting authority fall within the scope of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33).

70 It follows from the foregoing considerations that Article 8(3) of Regulation No 2988/95, read in conjunction with Regulation No 1303/2013, must be interpreted as meaning that, subject to the principle of proportionality, it does not preclude national authorities protecting the financial interests of the European Union from assessing the same facts in a public procurement procedure differently.

Costs

71 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 58(1) and (4) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2017/2365 of 18 December 2017, must be interpreted as not precluding, in a public procurement procedure, a contracting authority from being able to impose, under the selection criteria relating to the technical and professional abilities of the economic operators, stricter requirements than the minimum requirements set by the national legislation, provided that such requirements are appropriate to ensure that a candidate or tenderer has the technical and professional abilities to perform the contract to be awarded, that they are related to the subject matter of the contract and that they are proportionate to it.

2. Article 8(3) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 of 18 December 1995 on the protection of the European Communities financial interests, read in conjunction with Regulation (EU) No 1303/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 December 2013, laying down common provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund, the Cohesion Fund, the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development and the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund and laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund, the Cohesion Fund and the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund and repealing Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006, must be interpreted as meaning that, subject to the principle of proportionality, it does not preclude national authorities protecting the financial interests of the European Union from assessing the same facts in a public procurement procedure differently.

Judgment

1 These requests for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Article 3(27) and Articles 10, 19 and 28 of Directive 2007/46/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 September 2007 establishing a framework for the approval of motor vehicles and their trailers, and of systems, components and separate technical units intended for such vehicles (Framework Directive) (OJ 2007 L 263, p. 1), and of Articles 60 and 62 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243).

2 The references have been made in two sets of proceedings between, on the one hand, Iveco Orecchia SpA and APAM Esercizio SpA (C-68/21) and, on the other hand, between Iveco Orecchia SpA and Brescia Trasporti SpA (C-84/21), concerning two public contracts awarded by APAM Esercizio SpA and Brescia Trasporti SpA, respectively.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 2007/46

3 Recitals 2, 3 and 14 of Directive 2007/46 state:

‘(2) For the purposes of the establishment and operation of the internal market of the Community, it is appropriate to replace the Member States’ approval systems with a Community approval procedure based on the principle of total harmonisation.

(3) The technical requirements applicable to systems, components, separate technical units and vehicles should be harmonised and specified in regulatory acts. Those regulatory acts should primarily seek to ensure a high level of road safety, health protection, environmental protection, energy efficiency and protection against unauthorised use.

(14) The main objective of the legislation on the approval of vehicles is to ensure that new vehicles, components and separate technical units put on the market provide a high level of safety and environmental protection. …’

4 Article 1 of that directive, entitled ‘Subject matter’, provides:

‘This Directive establishes a harmonised framework containing the administrative provisions and general technical requirements for approval of all new vehicles within its scope and of the systems, components and separate technical units intended for those vehicles, with a view to facilitating their registration, sale and entry into service within the Community.

This Directive also establishes the provisions for the sale and entry into service of parts and equipment intended for vehicles approved in accordance with this Directive.

Specific technical requirements concerning the construction and functioning of vehicles shall be laid down in application of this Directive in regulatory acts, the exhaustive list of which is set out in Annex IV.'

5 Article 2 of that directive, entitled 'Scope', states in paragraph 1 thereof:

'This Directive applies to the type-approval of vehicles designed and constructed in one or more stages for use on the road, and of systems, components and separate technical units designed and constructed for such vehicles.

…'

6 Article 3 of Directive 2007/46, headed 'Definitions', states:

'For the purposes of this Directive and of the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV, save as otherwise provided therein:

1. "regulatory act" means a separate directive or regulation or a UNECE Regulation annexed to the Revised 1958 Agreement;

2. "separate directive or regulation" means a directive or regulation listed in Part I of Annex IV. This term includes also their implementing acts;

3. "type-approval" means the procedure whereby a Member State certifies that a type of vehicle, system, component or separate technical unit satisfies the relevant administrative provisions and technical requirements;

5. "EC type-approval" means the procedure whereby a Member State certifies that a type of vehicle, system, component or separate technical unit satisfies the relevant administrative provisions and technical requirements of this Directive and of the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV or XI;

23. "system" means an assembly of devices combined to perform one or more specific functions in a vehicle and which is subject to the requirements of any of the regulatory acts;

24. component" means a device subject to the requirements of a regulatory act and intended to be part of a vehicle, which may be type-approved independently of a vehicle where the regulatory act makes express provisions for so doing;

25. "separate technical unit" means a device subject to the requirements of a regulatory act and intended to be part of a vehicle, which may be type-approved separately, but only in relation to one or more specified types of vehicle where the regulatory act makes express provisions for so doing;

26. "original parts or equipment" means parts or equipment which are manufactured according to the specifications and production standards provided by the vehicle manufacturer for the production of parts or equipment for the assembly of the vehicle in question. This includes parts or equipment which are manufactured on the same production line as these parts or equipment. It is presumed unless the contrary is proven, that parts constitute original parts if the part manufacturer certifies that the parts match the quality of the components used for the assembly of the vehicle in question and have been manufactured according to the specifications and production standards of the vehicle manufacturer;

27. "manufacturer" means the person or body who is responsible to the approval authority for all aspects of the type-approval or authorisation process and for ensuring conformity of production. It is not essential that the person or body be directly involved in all stages of the construction of the vehicle, system, component or separate technical unit which is the subject of the approval process;

7 Under Article 5 of Directive 2007/46, entitled ‘Obligations of manufacturers’:

‘1. The manufacturer is responsible to the approval authority for all aspects of the approval process and for ensuring conformity of production, whether or not the manufacturer is directly involved in all stages of the construction of a vehicle, system, component or separate technical unit.

8 Article 10 of that directive, entitled ‘Specific provisions concerning systems, components or separate technical units’, is worded as follows:

‘1. Member States shall grant an EC type-approval in respect of a system which conforms to the particulars in the information folder and which meets the technical requirements laid down in the relevant separate directive or regulation, as prescribed in Annex IV or Annex XI.

2. Member States shall grant a component or separate technical unit EC type-approval in respect of a component or separate technical unit which conforms to the particulars in the information folder and which meets the technical requirements laid down in the relevant separate directive or regulation, as prescribed in Annex IV.

9 Under Article 19 of that directive, entitled ‘EC type-approval mark’:

‘1. The manufacturer of a component or separate technical unit, whether or not it is part of a system, shall affix to each component or unit manufactured in conformity with the approved type the EC type-approval mark, required by the relevant separate directive or regulation.

2. Where no EC type-approval mark is required, the manufacturer shall affix at least his trade name or trade mark, and the type number and/or an identification number.

10 Article 28 of that directive, entitled ‘Sale and entry into service of components and separate technical units’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Member States shall permit the sale or entry into service of components or separate technical units if and only if they comply with the requirements of the relevant regulatory acts and are properly marked in accordance with Article 19.’

11 Article 38(1) of Directive 2007/46, entitled ‘Information intended for manufacturers of components or separate technical units’, provides:

‘The vehicle manufacturer shall make available to the manufacturers of components or separate technical units all those particulars including, as the case may be, drawings specifically listed in the annex or appendix to a regulatory act that are necessary for EC type-approval of components or separate technical units, or necessary to obtain an authorisation under Article 31.

…’

12 Annex IV to Directive 2007/46, entitled ‘Requirements for the purpose of EC type-approval of vehicles’, contains two parts. Part I of that annex contains the list of European Union regulatory acts, while Part II lists certain regulations of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe (UNECE), stating that an approval must be recognised as an alternative to an EC type-approval granted under the relevant separate directive or regulation in the table of Part I.

Regulation (EC) No 1400/2002

13 Article 1(u) of Commission Regulation (EC) No 1400/2002 of 31 July 2002 on the application of Article 81(3) of the Treaty to categories of vertical agreements and concerted practices in the motor vehicle sector (OJ 2002 L 203, p. 30), which, under Article 12(3) of that regulation, expired on 31 May 2010, defined:

‘“spare parts of matching quality” means exclusively spare parts made by any undertaking which can certify at any moment that the parts in question match the quality of the components which are or were used for the assembly of the motor vehicles in question.’

14 Recitals 56 and 83 of Directive 2014/25 are worded as follows:

‘(56) Nothing in this Directive should prevent the imposition or enforcement of measures necessary to protect public policy, public morality, public security, health, human and animal life, the preservation of plant life or other environmental measures, in particular with a view to sustainable development, provided that those measures are in conformity with the TFEU.

(83) …

Consequently, technical specifications should be drafted in such a way as to avoid artificially narrowing down competition through requirements that favour a specific economic operator by mirroring key characteristics of the supplies, services or works habitually offered by that economic operator. Drawing up the technical specifications in terms of functional and performance requirements generally allows that objective to be achieved in the best way possible. …

…’

15 Article 1 of that directive, headed ‘Subject matter and scope’, provides:

‘1. This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting entities with respect to contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 15.

2. Procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a supply, works or service contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting entities from economic operators chosen by those contracting entities, provided that the works, supplies or services are intended for the pursuit of one of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14.’

16 Article 3(1) of that directive provides:

‘For the purpose of this Directive “contracting authorities” means State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law or associations formed by one or more such authorities or one or more such bodies governed by public law.’

17 Article 4(1)(a) of Directive 2014/25 provides:

‘For the purpose of this Directive contracting entities are entities, which:

(a) are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14’.

18 Under Article 11 of that directive, entitled ‘Transport services’:

‘This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

19 Article 15 of that directive, in the version applicable to the facts in the main proceedings, provided that it applied, in the case of supply contracts, to procurements with a value net of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than a threshold of EUR 414 000, save where those contracts were excluded by virtue of the exclusions in Articles 18 to 23 or pursuant to Article 34 concerning the pursuit of the activity in question.

20 Article 60 of that directive, entitled ‘Technical specifications’, is worded as follows:

‘1. The technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex VIII shall be set out in the procurement documents. The technical specifications shall lay down the characteristics required of a works, service or supply.

2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access of economic operators to the procurement procedure and shall not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.

3. Without prejudice to mandatory national technical rules, to the extent that they are compatible with Union law, the technical specifications shall be formulated in one of the following ways:

(b) by reference to technical specifications and, in order of preference, to national standards transposing European standards, European Technical Assessments, common technical specifications, international standards, other technical reference systems established by the European standardisation bodies or – when any of those do not exist – national standards, national technical approvals or national technical specifications relating to the design, calculation and execution of the works and use of the supplies; each reference shall be accompanied by the words “or equivalent”;

4. Unless justified by the [subject matter] of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or to a particular process which characterises the products or services provided by a specific economic operator, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted, on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the [subject matter] of the contract pursuant to paragraph 3 is not possible. Such reference shall be accompanied by the words “or equivalent”.

5. Where a contracting entity uses the option of referring to the technical specifications referred to in point (b) of paragraph 3, it shall not reject a tender on the ground that the works, supplies or services tendered for do not comply with the technical specifications to which it has referred, once the tenderer proves in its tender by any appropriate means, including the means of proof referred to in Article 62, that the solutions proposed satisfy in an equivalent manner the requirements defined by the technical specifications.

21 Under Article 62 of Directive 2014/25, entitled ‘test reports, certification and other means of proof’:

‘1. Contracting entities may require that economic operators provide a test report from a conformity assessment body or a certificate issued by such a body as means of proof of conformity with requirements or criteria set out in the technical specifications, the award criteria or the contract performance conditions.

Where contracting entities require the submission of certificates drawn up by a specific conformity assessment body, certificates from equivalent other conformity assessment bodies shall also be accepted by the contracting entities.

2. Contracting entities shall accept other appropriate means of proof than those referred to in paragraph 1, such as a technical dossier of the manufacturer where the economic operator concerned had no access to such certificates or test reports referred to in paragraph 1, or no possibility of obtaining them within the relevant time limits, provided that the lack of access is not attributable to the economic operator concerned and provided that the economic operator concerned thereby proves that the works, supplies or services meet the requirements or criteria set out in the technical specifications, the award criteria or the contract performance conditions.

Italian law

Order No 32721 of the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transport of 28 April 2008

22 Directive 2007/46 was transposed in Italian law by decreto n^{o} 32721 del Ministero delle Infrastrutture e dei Trasporti – Recepimento della direttiva 2007/46/CE del Parlamento europeo e del Consiglio del 5 settembre 2007, relativa all’omologazione dei veicoli a motore e dei loro rimorchi, nonché dei sistemi, componenti ed entità tecniche destinati a tali veicoli (Order No 32721 of the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transport transposing Directive 2007/46/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 September 2007 establishing a framework for the approval of motor vehicles and their trailers, and of systems, components and separate technical units intended for such vehicles) of 28 April 2008 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 162 of 12 July 2008).

23 Article 3(ff) of that order defines a ‘manufacturer’ as ‘the person or body who is responsible to the approval authority for all aspects of the type-approval or authorisation process and for ensuring conformity of production. It is not essential that the person or body be directly involved in all stages of the construction of the vehicle, system, component or separate technical unit which is the subject of the approval.’

Decree of the President of the Republic No 445 of 28 December 2000

24 Under Article 49 of the decreto del Presidente della Repubblica n^{o} 445 – Testo unico delle disposizioni legislative e regolamentari in materia di documentazione amministrativa (Decree of the President of the Republic No 445 on the consolidated text of the laws and regulations on administrative documentation) of 28 December 2000 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 42 of 20 February 2001), ‘certificates … of origin, EC conformity, trade marks or patents cannot be replaced by another document, unless otherwise provided by the applicable legislation’.

Legislative Decree No 50 of 18 April 2016

25 Under Article 68 of the decreto legislativo n^{o} 50 – Codice dei contratti pubblici(Legislative Decree No 50 laying down a public procurement code) of 18 April 2016 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016):

‘1. The technical specifications defined in point 1 of Annex XIII shall be included in the procurement documents and shall define the characteristics required of the works, services or supplies. …

5. Without prejudice to mandatory national technical rules, the technical specifications shall be formulated in one of the following ways: … (b) by reference to technical specifications and, in order of preference, to national standards transposing European standards, European Technical Assessments, common technical specifications, international standards, other technical reference systems established by the European standardisation bodies or – when any of those do not exist – national standards, national technical approvals or national technical specifications relating to the design, calculation and execution of the works and use of the supplies. Each reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent" …

6. Unless justified by the subject matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or to a particular process which characterises the products or services provided by a specific economic operator, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract pursuant to paragraph 5 is not possible. Such reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent".

7. Where a contracting authority uses the option of referring to the technical specifications referred to in point (b) of paragraph 5, it shall not declare that tender inadmissible or shall not reject it on the grounds that the works, supplies or services offered do not comply with the technical specifications to which it has referred, once the tenderer proves in its tender by any appropriate means, including the means of proof referred to in Article 86, that the solutions proposed satisfy in an equivalent manner the requirements defined by the technical specifications.'

26 Article 86(5) of this legislative decree provides that: 'Proof of the technical capability of economic operators' may be demonstrated by one or more of the means listed in Annex XVII, Part II, depending on the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services'.

27 Part II(k) of Annex XVII to that legislative decree states that the means of proof demonstrating the technical capability for the products to be supplied are: '(i) samples, descriptions or photographs the authenticity of which must be certified at the request of the contracting authority; (ii) certificates issued by official bodies or departments responsible for quality control and recognised as competent, confirming the conformity of products well identified by references to technical specifications or standards'.

28 By notice of invitation to tender published on 21 August 2018, APAM Esercizio, a public undertaking operating in the local public transport sector in Mantua (Italy), launched a procedure for the conclusion of a framework agreement for the supply of 'original Iveco spare parts, or equivalent, for buses', the value of which was estimated at EUR 710 000.

29 Article 5.1 of the tender specifications, entitled 'Typology of the spare parts', distinguished between three types of spare parts, namely 'Spare parts intended for vehicle safety and environmental protection', 'Original (or first-fit) spare parts' and 'equivalent spare parts', the latter being defined as 'spare parts (parts, components, equipment) of a quality equivalent to that of the original, or parts of a quality at least equal to that of the components used for vehicle assembly, produced according to the technical specifications and production standards of the manufacturer of the original spare part'.

30 In that regard, it was stated that 'in accordance with EU legislation and the legal provisions in force, the aforementioned [equivalent] spare parts may be manufactured by any undertaking able to certify at any time, in accordance with the rules in force (UNI-CEI-ENISO/IEC 17050), that the quality of the spare parts is consistent with that of the original components used in the assembly of the motor vehicles in question'.

31 Article 5.2 of the tender specifications, headed ‘Certifications and declarations’, stated that, in the event of the supply of an equivalent spare part, the tenderer ‘shall submit in the course of the tender procedure, in respect of any equivalent spare part proposed, a certificate of conformity or a specific type-approval for the replacement component, provided by the manufacturer, the type-approval body or the laboratory for tests certified according to ISO 45000 standard’.

32 In accordance with Article 15 of the tender specifications, entitled ‘administrative documentation’, the administrative documents to be submitted with the offer included, as laid down in Article 15(d), ‘the appropriate technical documentation for each equivalent spare part proposed, accompanied by: … a product type-approval certificate, where mandatory, issued by the manufacturer of the equivalent spare part proposed; a certificate as to the equivalence of the product proposed in relation to the relevant original (or first-fit) product, in that it is a perfect substitute requiring no adaptation of the spare part, the unit or the system into which it is to be fitted, and performance characteristics ensuring the product’s regular functionality and safety in the system, as well as an identical lifetime, issued by the producer of the equivalent spare part proposed’.

33 Three undertakings participated in the tendering procedure, including, inter alia, Veneta Servizi International Srl unipersonale (‘VSI’) and Iveco Orecchia, two undertakings established in Italy.

34 By decision of 29 January 2019, APAM Esercizio made a final award of the contract to VSI.

35 By an action brought before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia – sezione staccata di Brescia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Brescia Section, Italy), Iveco Orecchia, which was ranked second, challenged the award of the contract to VSI. In support of that action, Iveco Orecchia claimed, inter alia, that VSI should have been excluded from the call for tenders because the tender which it had submitted was incomplete, given that that undertaking had not provided, for the purposes of proving that the spare parts which it allegedly manufactured complied with the technical specifications, the certificates of approval or conformity and the technical documents, the submission of which was required, on pain of exclusion, by the tender specifications. According to Iveco Orecchia, VSI had merely submitted a general self-certification of equivalence of those spare parts, claiming, that it was both the ‘fabbricante’ and the ‘costruttore’ of those spare parts, although it was merely a dealer.

36 By judgment of 25 June 2019, le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia – Sezione staccata di Brescia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Brescia Section) dismissed Iveco Orecchia’s action as unfounded. That court held, inter alia, that the rules attached to the call for tenders relating to the documentation to be submitted by tenderers required production of a certificate of conformity or a specific type-approval, which means that it was sufficient to submit such a certificate. Moreover, Iveco Orecchia did not establish, as regards the individual spare parts covered by the relevant market, on what legal basis it was also necessary to adduce proof confirming the approval of those parts.

37 Iveco Orecchia brought an appeal against that judgment before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy).

38 By notice of invitation to tender published on 21 November 2018, Brescia Trasporti, a public undertaking operating in the local public transport sector in Brescia (Italy), launched an award procedure, with a basic contract value estimated at EUR 2 100 000, ‘for the supply of spare parts for Iveco buses fitted with an Iveco engine – CIG 7680570EDB’.

39 Article 1 of the technical specifications annexed to the call for tenders, entitled ‘Technical definitions’, defined three types of spare parts, namely, ‘original spare parts’, ‘first-fit original spare parts’ and ‘equivalent spare parts’, the latter being defined as ‘[spare] parts of a quality at least equal to that of the components used for vehicle assembly, produced in accordance with the spare part manufacturer’s own technical specifications and production standards’.

40 Under Article 3 of the technical specifications, in the case of ‘equivalent quality spare parts’, the tender had to be accompanied, on pain of exclusion, by a ‘certificate from the spare part manufacturer showing, in respect of each spare part (i) that its quality is of a level high enough to ensure that its use will not compromise the reputation of the authorised network; (ii) that it is perfectly interchangeable with the original spare parts, … and requires no adaptation of the spare part, the unit or the system onto which it is to be fitted'. That provision also provided that 'the supplier shall also submit the product type-approval certificate, where this is mandatory. As regards brake linings, brake discs and drums, the supplier shall, in addition to the aforementioned documents, provide a certificate confirming Community type-approval [under Regulation No 90 (UNECE)].'

41 Two undertakings took part in the tendering procedure, namely VAR Srl, a company also established in Italy, and Iveco Orecchia.

42 By decision of 28 February 2019, Brescia Trasporti made a final award of the contract to VAR.

43 By an action brought before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia – sezione staccata di Brescia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Brescia Section), Iveco Orecchia, which was ranked in second position, challenged the decision awarding the contract to VAR. In support of that action, Iveco Orecchia claimed, inter alia, that VAR should have been excluded from the call for tenders because the tender which it had submitted was incomplete, since that undertaking had not provided, in respect of the equivalent spare parts which it proposed, certificates from the manufacturer demonstrating the equivalence of those spare parts. The certificates from VAR itself are irrelevant, since it is a trader/distributor of spare parts and not a 'fabbricante/costruttore'. In addition, VAR did not provide any certificates confirming the type-approval of those spare parts or any information concerning their possible approval.

44 By judgment of 26 August 2019, le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia – Sezione staccata di Brescia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Brescia Section) dismissed Iveco Orecchia's action as unfounded. That court held, inter alia, that a tenderer who demonstrates the equivalence of its products cannot be excluded from a call for tenders and that the relevant legislation did not require each component of a vehicle to be approved. The argument that all spare parts covered by the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46 must be subject to a specific type-approval is unfounded. The absence of proof of type-approval for equivalent spare brake drums offered by VAR, for which approval is required by Regulation No 90 UNECE, is not relevant, given, in particular, that that regulation applies only to vehicles registered after November 2016.

45 Iveco Orecchia brought an appeal against that judgment before the referring court.

46 Di Pinto & Dalessandro Spa and Bellizzi srl, two companies established in Italy and operating in the bus maintenance market, participated in that procedure.

Questions referred for a preliminary ruling

47 The referring court considers that a distinction must be drawn between two aspects relating to the call for tenders procedures at issue, namely, first, that of the equivalence of spare parts proposed by the tenderers to original spare parts, which presupposes an assessment of the quality of the spare parts at issue and a comparison of the goods concerned and, second, that of the type-approval of such spare parts, which implies that they correspond to a European or national technical specification.

48 That court also observes that the principle that, in the context of a call for tenders, equivalent products are allowed is intended to safeguard free competition and equal treatment between tenderers.

49 Spare parts subject to approval, in particular those capable of compromising vehicle safety and environmental performance, may be sold only where they have been type-approved and authorised by the type-approval authority. In that regard, Annex IV to Directive 2007/46 contains a detailed list of the categories of components for which there are relevant and specific rules on approval.

50 In the procurement procedures at issue in the main proceedings, the rules set out in the call for tenders relating to the documentation to be provided by tenderers required a type-approval certificate to be provided, in the event that such approval was compulsory. In the present case, however, the successful tenderers submitted, and the contracting authorities accepted, as an alternative proof of the equivalence of the spare parts proposed to the original parts, a declaration by the tenderer which was not accompanied by the required type-approval certificate or other equivalent technical documents, for example conformity verification tests.

51 In the first place, the question therefore arises whether, in the case of equivalent spare parts subject to approval, the tenderer must also produce, on pain of exclusion of its tender, the type-approval certificate as evidence that those parts are indeed equivalent to the original parts or, at the very least, adduce concrete proof that the spare part has been type-approved, or whether it is sufficient, as an alternative to those documents, to supply a declaration by the tenderer that the spare parts proposed in its tender are equivalent to the original parts.

52 According to the referring court, it appears that, if a spare part is covered by one of the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46, it may be marketed only if it has been subject to prior approval, in accordance with the relevant provisions of that directive and with the principles of equal treatment, reasonableness, proper functioning and impartiality. However, it cannot be ruled out that it may be sufficient, instead of proof of such approval, to provide a certificate of equivalence stating that the spare part complies with the technical specifications laid down in the call for tenders at issue.

53 In the second place, it is necessary to determine which entity is responsible for issuing the declarations of equivalence and, in particular, whether they must necessarily be drawn up by the manufacturer of the spare part proposed or whether they may also be drawn up by a reseller or dealer.

54 According to the referring court, the concept of 'costruttore', as defined in Article 3(27) of Directive 2007/46, may be interpreted restrictively which would result in that concept being the same as that of 'fabbricante'. Article 1(1)(u) of Regulation No 1400/2002 supports such an approach. By contrast, that concept may also be understood in a broader sense, namely as covering the producer, within the meaning of the EU legislation on consumer protection or the operator who places on the market and markets, under its own name and own responsibility, equivalent parts manufactured by others.

55 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings in the two cases in the main proceedings and to refer the following questions, worded identically in each of those two cases, to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is it compatible with EU law, and in particular with the provisions of Directive 2007/46/EC (laid down in Articles 10, 19 and 28 of that directive) and the principles of equal treatment and impartiality, open competition and sound administration, for – with specific reference to the supply through public procurement of replacement parts for buses intended for public service – a contracting authority to be allowed to accept replacement parts intended for a particular vehicle, made by a manufacturer other than the vehicle manufacturer, and therefore not approved together with the vehicle, falling into one of the categories of components covered by the technical rules listed in Annex IV to that directive ([entitled] 'List of requirements for the purpose of EC type-approval of vehicles') and put to tender without being accompanied by the type-approval certificate and without any information on the actual type-approval, and indeed on the assumption that type-approval is not needed, as only a declaration of equivalence to the type-approved original made by the tenderer is sufficient?

(2) Is it compatible with EU law, and in particular Article 3(27) of Directive 2007/46/EC to allow – in relation to the supply through public procurement of replacement parts for buses intended for public service – an individual tenderer to describe itself as 'manufacturer' of a specific non-original replacement part intended for a particular vehicle, especially where it falls into one of the categories of components covered by the technical rules listed in Annex IV (List of requirements for the purpose of EC type-approval of vehicles) to Directive 2007/46/EC, or must that tenderer prove – for each of the replacement parts thus subject to tender and in order to certify their equivalence to the technical specifications of the tender – that it is the entity who is responsible to the approval authority for all aspects of the type-approval and for ensuring conformity of production and the related level of quality and is directly involved in at least some of the stages of the construction of the component which is the subject of the approval, and if so, by what means is such proof to be provided?'

Procedure before the Court

56 By decision of 16 March 2021, Cases C-68/21 and C-84/21 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral parts of the procedure, and of the judgment.

Consideration of the questions referred

Preliminary observations

57 In the first place, it should be noted as a preliminary point that, in the procedure laid down by Article 267 TFEU providing for cooperation between national courts and the Court of Justice, it is for the latter to provide the national court with an answer which will be of use to it and enable it to determine the case before it. To that end, the Court may have to reformulate the questions referred to it. The Court has a duty to interpret all provisions of EU law which national courts require in order to decide on the actions pending before them, even if those provisions are not expressly indicated in the questions referred to the Court by those courts (judgment of 19 December 2019, Nederlands Uitgeversverbond and Groep Algemene Uitgevers, C-263/18, EU:C:2019:1111, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited).

58 To that end, the Court can extract from all the information provided by the national court, in particular from the grounds of the order for reference, the points of EU law which require interpretation in view of the subject matter of the dispute in the main proceedings (judgment of 19 December 2019, Nederlands Uitgeversverbond and Groep Algemene Uitgevers, C-263/18, EU:C:2019:1111, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

59 In the present case, while it is true that the referring court refers, in its questions for a preliminary ruling, only to certain provisions of Directive 2007/46 and only to a number of legal principles, it is apparent both from the explanations provided by that court and from its questions referred for a preliminary ruling that those questions relate to the means of proof which tenderers may or must be asked to submit in the context of a call for tenders. It follows that, in order to give a useful answer to the questions referred, account must also be taken of the provisions of EU law relating specifically to the means of proof which tenderers may or must be asked to submit in the context of a call for tenders in order to establish that their tenders comply with the technical specifications laid down in that call for tenders.

60 As regards call for tenders such as those concerned by the cases in the main proceedings, those provisions appear in Articles 60 and 62 of Directive 2014/25. Furthermore, as the Commission noted in its written observations, the two calls for tenders at issue in the main proceedings fall within the scope of that directive, in accordance with Article 1(1) and (2), Article 4(1), Article 11(1) and Article 15 of that directive, given that they concern the acquisition of supplies by contracting entities operating a network intended to provide a service to the public in the field of transport by bus, those supplies are intended for the performance of that activity and the value of the contracts at issue in the main proceedings exceeds the threshold laid down by that directive.

61 In the second place, it should be noted that although, under Article 88 of Regulation (EU) 2018/858 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 30 May 2018 on the approval and market surveillance of motor vehicles and their trailers, and of systems, components and separate technical units intended for such vehicles, amending Regulations (EC) No 715/2007 and (EC) No 595/2009 and repealing Directive 2007/46/EC (OJ 2018 L 151, p. 1), Directive 2007/46 was repealed by that regulation with effect from 1 September 2020, it is however apparent from the order for reference that the facts giving rise to the main proceedings took place before that date. Consequently, the provisions of Directive 2007/46 are the relevant provisions for the purpose of answering the questions referred for a preliminary ruling.

62 In the third place, it is apparent from the questions referred for a preliminary ruling that they relate only to legislation concerning spare parts for buses belonging to the types of components, within the meaning of Article 3(24) of Directive 2007/46, covered by the regulatory acts, within the meaning of Article 3(1) of that directive, which are listed in Annex IV to that directive.

63 By its first question, which is divided into two parts, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 10(2), Article 19(1) and Article 28(1) of Directive 2007/46 must be interpreted as precluding a contracting authority from accepting, in the context of a call for tenders for the supply of spare parts for buses intended for public service, a tender proposing components which are covered by the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46, without being accompanied by a certificate confirming the type-approval of such spare parts and without submitting any proof of the actual existence of such approval, or, if, in the light of Articles 60 and 62 of Directive 2014/25, a declaration of equivalence to the type-approved spare parts, issued by the tenderer, is sufficient to permit such acceptance.

64 As regards the first part of that question, it should be noted, as a preliminary point, that Directive 2007/46 aims, as is apparent from recitals 2 and 3 of that directive, to 'replace the Member States' approval systems with a Community approval procedure based on the principle of total harmonisation' and for 'the technical requirements applicable to systems, components, separate technical units and vehicles [to] be harmonised and defined in regulatory acts'.

65 Thus, the first paragraph of Article 1 of Directive 2007/46 defines the subject matter of that directive as establishing 'a harmonised framework containing the administrative provisions and general technical requirements for approval of all new vehicles within its scope and of the systems, components and separate technical units intended for those vehicles, with a view to facilitating their registration, sale and entry into service within the Community'.

66 According to the second paragraph of Article 1 of that directive, it 'also establishes the provisions for the sale and entry into service of parts and equipment intended for vehicles approved in accordance with this Directive'.

67 Furthermore, in order to define the scope of the first question, it should be noted, first, that, although Directive 2007/46 distinguishes between several forms of type-approval, it may be inferred from the specific reference in that question to Articles 10, 19 and 28 of that directive that the first question refers only to EC type-approval, within the meaning of Article 3(5) of that directive, namely the act by which a Member State certifies that a type of vehicle, system, component or separate technical unit satisfies the relevant administrative provisions and technical requirements of that directive and of the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV or Annex XI thereto; the latter annex refers to special purposes vehicles and the provisions which are applicable to them.

68 Article 10 of Directive 2007/46 appears in Chapter IV of that directive, entitled 'Conduct of EC type-approval procedures', while Article 19 of that directive concerns, as is apparent from its title, the 'EC type-approval mark' and Article 28(1) of that directive, referred to by the referring court in its order for reference, refers to Article 19 of Directive 2007/46.

69 Second, Directive 2007/46 establishes, in Article 6, the procedures to be followed for the EC type-approval of vehicles and, in Article 7, the procedure to be followed for the EC type-approval of systems, components or separate technical units. Since it is apparent from the order for reference that the components at issue in the main proceedings were not approved with the type of vehicle for which they were proposed by the tenderers, but were presented as equivalent to the original components approved with that type of vehicle, it must be held that the provisions of Directive 2007/46 relating to EC type-approval of systems, components or separate technical units are relevant to the present case.

70 In that regard, it is apparent, first of all, from the wording of Article 10(2) of Directive 2007/46 that Member States grant a component EC type-approval in respect of a component which conforms to the particulars in the information folder and which meets the technical requirements laid down in the relevant separate directive or regulation, as prescribed in Annex IV.

71 Next, Article 19(1) of Directive 2007/46 provides that the manufacturer of a component is to affix to each component manufactured in conformity with the approved type the EC type-approval mark, required by the relevant separate directive or regulation.

72 Lastly, under Article 28(1) of Directive 2007/46, Member States are to permit the sale or entry into service of components only if those components satisfy the requirements of the relevant regulatory acts and are properly marked in accordance with Article 19 of that directive.

73 It is apparent, first, from a combined reading of Article 10(2), Article 19(1), Article 28(1) of that directive and Annex IV thereto that the components covered by the regulatory acts, within the meaning of Article 3(1) of that directive, listed in that annex, are subject to compulsory type-approval, provided that those regulatory acts provide for such approval.

74 Second, it follows, as the Advocate General observed in point 51 of his Opinion, that the instrument selected by the EU legislature in the context of Directive 2007/46 to establish that vehicle components comply with the requirements laid down in the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV, is that of type-approval.

75 Such an interpretation is confirmed by the main objective of the legislation on the approval of vehicles which is, in accordance with recital 14 of Directive 2007/46, ‘to ensure that new vehicles, components and separate technical units put on the market provide a high level of safety and environmental protection’. By means of an EC component type-approval, the Member State concerned certifies, as follows from the definition in Article 3(5) of Directive 2007/46, that that component satisfies the relevant technical requirements listed in Annex IV or Annex XI thereto, thereby confirming that that component provides a high level of safety and environmental protection.

76 It is true that it is apparent from Article 19(2) of Directive 2007/46 that EC type-approval is not required for every type of component. That provision concerns the situation where the affixing of an EC type-approval mark is not required, which means that certain types of components may be exempt from the obligation to obtain such approval.

77 However, that finding does not affect the conclusion referred to in paragraph 73 of the present judgment that the components covered by the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46 are subject to compulsory type-approval, provided that those regulatory acts require such approval. Therefore, such components may be sold or entered into service, in accordance with Article 28(1) and Article 19(1) of that directive, only if they have been subject to such approval.

78 That conclusion is not called into question by the principles of equal treatment and impartiality, free competition and sound administration, to which the referring court has referred. As regards, first, the principle of equal treatment, it must be borne in mind that, in so far as a type of component must be approved, that obligation is incumbent on all manufacturers. As the Advocate General observed, in substance, in point 56 of his Opinion, that compulsory approval does not therefore stem from any discrimination to the detriment of manufacturers of spare parts equivalent to original spare parts by comparison with manufacturers of those original spare parts.

79 Second, as regards the effect of such a compulsory approval on competition, besides the fact that, as has just been established, that obligation is incumbent on any manufacturer of components, suffice it to note that, in accordance with Article 38(1) of Directive 2007/46, the manufacturer of a vehicle must make available to manufacturers of components for that type of vehicle all the particulars necessary for the EC type-approval of such components.

80 Third, concerning the principles of impartiality and sound administration, the referring court has not explained how those principles could be relevant for the purpose of interpreting the provisions of Directive 2007/46 referred to in the first question.

81 As regards the second part of the first question, which seeks to determine whether a contracting authority may accept, in the context of a call for tenders such as those referred to in that question, a tender proposing components covered by the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46 which does not establish that those components have been subject to approval, as long as such a tender is accompanied by a declaration by the tenderer that those components are equivalent to the original approved parts, it must be noted, as does the Advocate General in point 59 of his Opinion, that the concepts of ‘type-approval’ and ‘equivalence’ have different contents.

82 As is apparent from Article 3(5) of Directive 2007/46, type-approval certifies, following appropriate checks carried out by the competent authorities, that, as regards the EC type approval of components, a type of component satisfies the requirements of Directive 2007/46, including the technical requirements set out in the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to that directive.

83 The concept of ‘equivalence’ is not defined in Directive 2007/46 and designates, according to its ordinary meaning, the status of having the same value or function. Therefore, the equivalence of a component concerns the question whether that component has the same qualities as another component, whether or not the latter has been approved. As the Advocate General observed in point 62 of his Opinion, proof of type-approval is therefore not interchangeable with proof of equivalence, since a type-approved component can be non-equivalent to an original component referred to in a call for tenders.

84 Admittedly, it cannot be ruled out that non-type-approved components may in fact be equivalent to the original components referred to in the call for tenders at issue. However, since the EU legislature decided, as has been noted in paragraph 77 of the present judgment, that components of a type for which the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46 require approval may be sold or entered into service, in accordance with Article 28(1) and Article 19(1) of that directive, only if that type of component has been subject to such approval, it must be found that, for those types of components, proof of approval cannot be replaced by a declaration of equivalence issued by the tenderer.

85 That finding is not called into question by the provisions of Articles 60 and 62 of Directive 2014/25, which refer to the technical specifications which may be included in a call for tenders such as those which gave rise to the main proceedings and the proof by which tenderers are able to demonstrate that their tenders meet those technical specifications.

86 It follows from Article 60(2) of that directive that the technical specifications which, under Article 60(1) of that directive, define the characteristics required of the works, services or supplies referred to in that directive, afford economic operators equal access to the procurement procedure and do not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.

87 Article 60(4) of Directive 2014/25 allows, on an exceptional basis, technical specifications to refer to ‘trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production’, if that is necessary to provide a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract, and provided that such a reference is accompanied by the words ‘or equivalent’, an option which was relied on in the calls for tenders which gave rise to the main proceedings.

88 In such a case, Article 60(5) of Directive 2014/25 allows the tenderer to prove that the solutions which it proposes satisfy in an equivalent manner the requirements defined in the technical specifications ‘by any appropriate means, including the means of proof referred to in Article 62’ of that directive, which includes, in addition to the means referred to in Article 62(1) of that directive, such as a certificate issued by a conformity assessment body, other ‘appropriate means of proof’ within the meaning of Article 62(2) of that directive.

89 As is also apparent from recital 83 of Directive 2014/25, those provisions seek to ensure that the technical specifications are drawn up in terms of functional and performance requirements and to prevent those technical specifications from artificially narrowing down competition through requirements that favour a specific economic operator by mirroring key characteristics of the supplies, services or works habitually offered by that economic operator.

90 However, it should be noted that, in accordance with recital 56 thereof, Directive 2014/25 cannot disregard mandatory requirements imposed by other rules of EU law concerning, inter alia, safety and environmental protection, such as the approval requirement laid down, for the same reasons, by Directive 2007/46.

91 Therefore, as the Advocate General observes in point 80 of his Opinion, Directive 2014/25 must not prevent the application of Directive 2007/46 inasmuch as that directive seeks, in accordance with recital 3 thereof, to ensure a high level of road safety, health protection, environmental protection, energy efficiency and protection against unauthorised use. To the extent that Directive 2007/46 requires, with a view to attaining those very objectives, that certain vehicle spare parts be type-approved, that requirement becomes mandatory and cannot be circumvented by recourse to Directive 2014/25.

92 In the main proceedings, the calls for tenders related to the supply of components which could be Iveco original parts or equivalent parts. As has been pointed out in paragraph 77 of the present judgment, the components referred to in the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46, which are subject to compulsory type-approval, may be sold or entered into service only if they have been subject to such approval.

93 Consequently, in order to satisfy the mandatory requirements laid down by Directive 2007/46, since the components are subject to compulsory type-approval, only components which have been subject to such approval and may therefore be marketed, can be regarded as equivalent within the meaning of the terms of those calls for tenders.

94 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 10(2), Article 19(1) and Article 28(1) of Directive 2007/46 must be interpreted as precluding a contracting authority from accepting, in the context of a call for tenders for the supply of spare parts for buses intended for public service, a tender proposing components belonging to a type of component covered by the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46, without being accompanied by a certificate confirming the type-approval of such a component and without submitting any proof of the actual existence of such approval, provided that those regulatory acts provide for such approval.

95 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 60 and 62 of Directive 2014/25 must be interpreted as precluding, in the light of the definition of the term ‘manufacturer’ in Article 3(27) of Directive 2007/46, a contracting authority from accepting, in the context of a call for tenders for the supply of spare parts for buses intended for public service, as proof of the equivalence of components, covered by the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to that directive and offered by the tenderer, a declaration of equivalence issued by that tenderer, where that tenderer, while describing itself as a manufacturer of those components, is merely a reseller or dealer.

96 As the Court pointed out, in its judgment of 12 July 2018, VAR and ATM (C-14/17, EU:C:2018:568, paragraph 35), as regards the interpretation of Article 34 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), ‘when the technical specifications in the contract documentation refer to a specific mark, origin or production, the contracting authority must require the tenderer to submit, already in its tender, proof that the products which it proposes are equivalent to those defined in the technical specifications.’

97 In that judgment, the Court also stated that the contracting authority ‘has a discretion in determining the means that may be used by tenderers to prove such equivalence in their tenders. That discretion must, however, be exercised in such a way that the means of proof allowed by the contracting entity actually enable that entity to carry out a meaningful assessment of the tenders submitted to it and do not go beyond what is necessary in order to do so’.

98 The same interpretation must be adopted in respect of Articles 60 and 62 of Directive 2014/25, which replaced Directive 2004/17, since those articles require, like Article 34 of the latter directive, that a tenderer wishing to rely on the option to propose products equivalent to those defined by reference to a specific mark, origin or production already provide, in its tender, by any appropriate means, proof of the equivalence of the products concerned.

99 It follows from that case-law that, notwithstanding the contracting authority’s discretion in that regard, the means of proof accepted by it must enable it to carry out an effective assessment of the tender in order to determine whether it complies with the technical specifications referred to in the call for tenders in question.

100 In order to be considered an ‘appropriate means’, within the meaning of Article 60(5) and Article 62(2) of Directive 2014/25, a declaration of equivalence must therefore be issued by a body which is able to guarantee such equivalence, which means that that body assumes technical responsibility for the components in question and possesses the means necessary to ensure the quality of those components. Those conditions can be satisfied only by the producer or manufacturer of those components.

101 Such an interpretation is confirmed by Article 62(2) of Directive 2014/25, which provides that an appropriate means of proof may be a ‘technical dossier of the manufacturer’, which means that that proof is issued by the manufacturer of the spare part in question. That interpretation is also consistent with Article 1(u) of Regulation No 1400/2002, according to which, for the purposes of that regulation, ‘spare parts of matching quality’ meant ‘exclusively spare parts made by any undertaking which can certify at any moment that the parts in question match the quality of the components which are or were used for the assembly of the motor vehicles in question’. Although that regulation expired on 31 May 2010, Article 1(u) thereof confirmed that, in order to be relevant, a declaration of equivalence had to be made by the manufacturer.

102 Furthermore, under Article 3(27) of Directive 2007/46, the term ‘manufacturer’ is defined as ‘the person or body who is responsible to the approval authority for all aspects of the type-approval or authorisation process and for ensuring conformity of production’; that person or body does not necessarily have to intervene directly at all stages of the construction of a vehicle, system, component or separate technical unit subject to approval.

103 Although that definition refers only to vehicles and spare parts which are subject to approval, it provides useful guidance for determining who may be regarded as the ‘manufacturer’ of a component, in order to examine whether a declaration of equivalence issued by a person describing itself as a ‘manufacturer’ of that component may constitute an appropriate means of proof. It is apparent from that definition that, in order to be classified as a ‘manufacturer’ of a component, an undertaking does not necessarily have to intervene directly at all stages of the construction of that component.

104 The definition of the terms ‘original parts or equipment’ in Article 3(26) of Directive 2007/46, according to which ‘It is presumed unless the contrary is proven, that parts constitute original parts if the part manufacturer certifies that the parts match the quality of the components used for the assembly of the vehicle in question and have been manufactured according to the specifications and production standards of the vehicle manufacturer’ is also useful in that context.

105 It is apparent from that definition that, in order to be able to demonstrate that a spare part may be regarded as an original part, a declaration to that effect must be issued by the manufacturer of that component, notwithstanding the fact that the construction of that component was carried out in accordance with the specifications and production standards laid down by the manufacturer of the vehicle for which it is intended.

106 Accordingly, it must be found that, in order to be considered an appropriate means of proof, in the context of a call for tenders such as those which gave rise to the main proceedings, a declaration of equivalence of a component must be issued by the manufacturer of that component, even though that manufacturer does not necessarily have to intervene directly at all stages of the construction of that component.

107 By contrast, a declaration of equivalence from a reseller or dealer cannot be regarded as capable of constituting an appropriate means of proof.

108 Although it is for the referring court to determine whether, in the cases in the main proceedings, tenderers may be classified as ‘manufacturers’ of the components which they proposed, it must be stated, in order to give a useful answer to that court, that, contrary to what certain parties which took part in the procedure before the Court have argued, the fact that a tenderer manufactures spare parts other than those covered by the call for tenders at issue, whether that tenderer is registered with a chamber of commerce or its activity has been the subject of quality certification, is irrelevant for the purpose of determining whether that tenderer may be considered the manufacturer of the components which it proposes in its tender.

109 Furthermore, the argument that a broader interpretation of the concept of ‘manufacturer’ is necessary because, under certain EU directives on consumer protection, and in particular Article 1(2)(d) of Directive 1999/44/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 25 May 1999 on certain aspects of the sale of consumer goods and associated guarantees (OJ 1999 L 171, p. 12) and Article 2(4) of Directive (EU) 2019/771 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 20 May 2019 on certain aspects concerning contracts for the sale of goods, amending Regulation (EU) 2017/2394 and Directive 2009/22/EC, and repealing Directive 1999/44/EC (OJ 2019 L 136, p. 28), the concept of ‘producer’ is to be understood as including the operator who merely markets the product, placing its name on it, without having materially participated in the construction process, must also be disregarded. That legislation seeks in particular to ensure the protection of consumers, as is apparent from Article 1(1) of Directive 1999/44 and Article 1 of Directive 2019/771, and is therefore not relevant for the purposes of interpreting EU public procurement legislation.

110 Lastly, it should be recalled, as is apparent from the case-law cited in paragraph 96 of the present judgment, that proof of the equivalence of the products proposed by a tenderer, in relation to those defined in the technical specifications set out in the call for tenders, must already be provided in the tender and that that proof actually enables the contracting entity to carry out a meaningful assessment of the tenders submitted to it.

111 Having regard to all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second question is that Articles 60 and 62 of Directive 2014/25 must be interpreted, in the light of the definition of the term ‘manufacturer’ in Article 3(27) of Directive 2007/46, as precluding a contracting authority from accepting, in the context of a call for tenders for the supply of spare parts for buses intended for public service, as proof of the equivalence of components, covered by the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46 and proposed by the tenderer, a declaration of equivalence issued by that tenderer where that tenderer cannot be regarded as being the manufacturer of those components.

Costs

112 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Sixth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 10(2), Article 19(1) and Article 28(1) of Directive 2007/46/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 September 2007 establishing a framework for the approval of motor vehicles and their trailers, and of systems, components and separate technical units intended for such vehicles (Framework Directive) must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude a contracting authority from accepting, in the context of a call for tenders for the supply of spare parts for buses intended for public service, a tender proposing components belonging to a type of component covered by the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46, without being accompanied by a certificate confirming the type-approval of such a component and without submitting any proof of the actual existence of such approval, provided that those regulatory acts provide for such approval.

2. Articles 60 and 62 of Directive of the Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC must be interpreted as meaning that in the light of the definition of the term ‘manufacturer’ in Article 3(27) of Directive 2007/46, they preclude a contracting authority from accepting, in the context of a call for tenders for the supply of spare parts for buses intended for public service, as proof of the equivalence of components, covered by the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46 and proposed by the tenderer, a declaration of equivalence issued by that tenderer where that tenderer cannot be regarded as being the manufacturer of those components.

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 2014/25/EU – Articles 60 and 62 – Technical specifications – Components for buses of the Iveco make or equivalent – Proof of equivalence – Directive 2007/46/EC – Article 10(2), Article 19(1), Article 28(1) and Annex IV – EC type-approval – Components – Need for components covered by one of the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to be EC type-approved)

1. In Italy, two public undertakings responsible for providing urban and interurban passenger transport services in their respective municipalities (Mantua and Brescia) issued calls for tenders for the supply of spare parts for buses. The spare parts could be either originals made by Iveco, the vehicle manufacturer, or equivalents.
2. Following the award of the supply contracts, an unsuccessful tenderer brought an action concerned with whether 'equivalent spare parts' had to be EC type-approved in accordance with Directive 2007/46/EC. (2)
3. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) wishes to ascertain first and foremost whether type-approval is necessary for the supply of equivalent spare parts or whether the submission, along with the tender, of a declaration of equivalence to the type-approved original would be sufficient.

I. Legal framework. European Union law

A. Directive 2007/46

4. Article 1 ('Subject matter') states:

   'This Directive establishes a harmonised framework containing the administrative provisions and general technical requirements for approval of all new vehicles within its scope and of the systems, components and separate technical units intended for those vehicles, with a view to facilitating their registration, sale and entry into service within the Community.

   This Directive also establishes the provisions for the sale and entry into service of parts and equipment intended for vehicles approved in accordance with this Directive.

   Specific technical requirements concerning the construction and functioning of vehicles shall be laid down in application of this Directive in regulatory acts, the exhaustive list of which is set out in Annex IV'.

5. According to Article 2 ('Scope'):

   '1. This Directive applies to the type-approval of vehicles designed and constructed in one or more stages for use on the road, and of systems, components and separate technical units designed and constructed for such vehicles.

   …'

6. In accordance with Article 3 (‘Definitions’):

‘For the purposes of this Directive and of the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV, save as otherwise provided therein:

1. “regulatory act” means a separate directive or regulation or a UNECE Regulation annexed to the Revised 1958 Agreement;

2. “separate directive or regulation” means a directive or regulation listed in Part I of Annex IV. This term includes also their implementing acts;

3. “type-approval” means the procedure whereby a Member State certifies that a type of vehicle, system, component or separate technical unit satisfies the relevant administrative provisions and technical requirements;

4. “national type-approval” means a type-approval procedure laid down by the national law of a Member State, the validity of such approval being restricted to the territory of that Member State;

5. “EC type-approval” means the procedure whereby a Member State certifies that a type of vehicle, system, component or separate technical unit satisfies the relevant administrative provisions and technical requirements of this Directive and of the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV or XI;

24. “component” means a device subject to the requirements of a regulatory act and intended to be part of a vehicle, which may be type-approved independently of a vehicle where the regulatory act makes express provisions for so doing;

…’

7. Article 7 (‘Procedure to be followed for the type-approval of systems, components or separate technical units’) reads:

‘1. The manufacturer shall submit the application to the approval authority. Only one application may be submitted in respect of a particular type of system, component or separate technical unit and it may be submitted in only one Member State. A separate application shall be submitted for each type to be approved.

2. The application shall be accompanied by the information folder, the content of which is specified in the separate directives or regulations.

8. Article 10 (‘Specific provisions concerning systems, components or separate technical units’) provides:

2. Member States shall grant a component or separate technical unit EC type-approval in respect of a component or separate technical unit which conforms to the particulars in the information folder and which meets the technical requirements laid down in the relevant separate directive or regulation, as prescribed in Annex IV.

…’

9. Article 19 (‘EC type-approval mark’) states:

‘1. The manufacturer of a component or separate technical unit, whether or not it is part of a system, shall affix to each component or unit manufactured in conformity with the approved type the EC type-approval mark, required by the relevant separate directive or regulation.

2. Where no EC type-approval mark is required, the manufacturer shall affix at least his trade name or trade mark, and the type number and/or an identification number.

3. The EC type-approval mark shall be in accordance with the Appendix to Annex VII.’

10. Article 28 (‘Sale and entry into service of components and separate technical units’) provides:

‘1. Member States shall permit the sale or entry into service of components or separate technical units if and only if they comply with the requirements of the relevant regulatory acts and are properly marked in accordance with Article 19.

11. Article 46 (‘Penalties’) reads:

‘Member States shall determine the penalties applicable for infringement of the provisions of this Directive, and in particular of the prohibitions contained in or resulting from Article 31, and of the regulatory acts listed in Part I of Annex IV and shall take all necessary measures for their implementation. …’

12. Annex IV (‘List of requirements for the purpose of EC type-approval of vehicles’) comprises two parts: one sets out a list of ‘regulatory acts’ (separate directives and regulations) and the other, after defining what the UNECE Regulations are [‘the ones to which the Community has adhered as a Contracting Party to the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe “Revised 1958 Geneva Agreement” by virtue of Council Decision 97/836/EC [of 27 November 1997 (OJ 1997 L 346, p. 78)], or subsequent Council decisions as referred to in Article 3(3) of that Decision’], lists them.

B. Directive 2014/25/EU ([3])

13. Article 60 (‘Technical specifications’) states:

‘1. The technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex VIII shall be set out in the procurement documents. The technical specifications shall lay down the characteristics required of a works, service or supply.

2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access of economic operators to the procurement procedure and shall not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.

3. Without prejudice to mandatory national technical rules, to the extent that they are compatible with Union law, the technical specifications shall be formulated in one of the following ways:

(a) in terms of performance or functional requirements, including environmental characteristics, provided that the parameters are sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject matter of the contract and to allow contracting entities to award the contract;

(b) by reference to technical specifications and, in order of preference, to national standards transposing European standards, European Technical Assessments, common technical specifications, international standards, other technical reference systems established by the European standardisation bodies or – when any of those do not exist – national standards, national technical approvals or national technical specifications relating to the design, calculation and execution of the works and use of the supplies; each reference shall be accompanied by the words “or equivalent”;

(c) in terms of performance or functional requirements referred to in point (a), with reference to the technical specifications referred to in point (b) as a means of presuming conformity with such performance or functional requirements;

(d) by reference to the technical specifications referred to in point (b) for certain characteristics, and by reference to the performance or functional requirements referred to in point (a) for other characteristics.

4. Unless justified by the subject matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or to a particular process which characterises the products or services provided by a specific economic operator, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted, on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract pursuant to paragraph 3 is not possible. Such reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent".

5. Where a contracting entity uses the option of referring to the technical specifications referred to in point (b) of paragraph 3, it shall not reject a tender on the ground that the works, supplies or services tendered for do not comply with the technical specifications to which it has referred, once the tenderer proves in its tender by any appropriate means, including the means of proof referred to in Article 62, that the solutions proposed satisfy in an equivalent manner the requirements defined by the technical specifications.

In its tender, the tenderer shall prove by any appropriate means including those referred to in Article 62, that the supplies, service or work in compliance with the standard meets the performance or functional requirements of the contracting entity.'

14. Article 62 ('Test reports, certification and other means of proof') states:

'1. Contracting entities may require that economic operators provide a test report from a conformity assessment body or a certificate issued by such a body as means of proof of conformity with requirements or criteria set out in the technical specifications, the award criteria or the contract performance conditions.

Where contracting entities require the submission of certificates drawn up by a specific conformity assessment body, certificates from equivalent other conformity assessment bodies shall also be accepted by the contracting entities.

2. Contracting entities shall accept other appropriate means of proof than those referred to in paragraph 1, such as a technical dossier of the manufacturer where the economic operator concerned had no access to such certificates or test reports referred to in paragraph 1, or no possibility of obtaining them within the relevant time limits, provided that the lack of access is not attributable to the economic operator concerned and provided that the economic operator concerned thereby proves that the works, supplies or services meet the requirements or criteria set out in the technical specifications, the award criteria or the contract performance conditions.

…'

II. Facts, procedures and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

A. Contested awards

1. Case C-68/21

15. APAM Esercizio SpA, an undertaking operating in the urban and interurban public transport sector in Mantua (Italy), published a notice ([4]) advertising an open tender procedure for the biannual supply of 'original Iveco spare parts or equivalents for buses' (CIG 7602877C91), the value of the contract having been estimated at EUR 710000.

16. Article 5.1 ('Typology of the spare parts') of the technical specifications distinguished between:

— 'Spare parts intended for vehicle safety and environmental protection'. So far as these are concerned, being 'components tested for type-approval with the vehicle or as separate technical units, only original components or equivalents legally approved in accordance with national legislation (the Highway Code) and Community legislation (Directive 98/14/EEC, Directive 2007/46 and Annex IV thereto) [should] be supplied'.

— 'Original (or first-fit) spare parts'.

— 'Equivalent spare parts', defined as being 'spare parts (parts, components, equipment) of a quality equivalent to that of the original, or parts of a quality at least equal to that of the components used for vehicle assembly, produced according to the technical specifications and production standards of the manufacturer of the original spare part'.

17. That article went on to say that, 'in accordance with EU legislation and the provisions of [national] law in force, the aforementioned [equivalent] spare parts may be manufactured by any undertaking able to certify at any time, in accordance with the rules in force (UNI-CEI-ENISO/IEC 17050), that the quality of the spare parts is consistent with that of the original spare parts used in the assembly of the motor vehicles in question'.

18. Article 5.2 ('Certifications and declarations') of the technical specifications stated that the tenderer 'shall submit in the course of the tender procedure, in respect of the equivalent spare part proposed, a certificate of conformity or a specific type-approval for the replacement component, provided by the manufacturer, the type-approval body or the laboratory for tests certified according to ISO 45000 standard'.

19. Article 15 ('Administrative documentation') of the tender document stipulated, in point (d), the submission of '… the appropriate technical documentation for each equivalent spare part proposed, accompanied by: … a product type-approval certificate, where mandatory, issued by the manufacturer of the equivalent spare part proposed; a certificate as to the equivalence of the product proposed in relation to the relevant original (or first-fit) product, in that it is a perfect substitute requiring no adaptation of the spare part, the unit or the system into which it is to be fitted, and performance characteristics ensuring the product's regular functionality and safety in the system, as well as an identical lifetime, issued by the producer of the equivalent spare part proposed'.

20. Three undertakings participated in the procedure, including Iveco Orecchia and Veneta Servizi International Srl unipersonale, which was awarded the contract.

2. Case C-84/21

21. Brescia Trasporti SpA, an undertaking operating in the urban and interurban public transport sector in Brescia (Italy), published a notice ([5]) advertising a procedure for the award of a contract, with a basic value estimated at EUR 2100000, for 'the supply of spare parts for Iveco buses fitted with an Iveco engine – CIG 7680570EDB'.

22. Article 1 ('Technical definitions') of the document containing the technical specifications for the call for tenders provided for three types of spare part: 'original spare parts', 'first-fit original spare parts' and 'equivalent spare parts'.

23. According to Article 1(3), 'spare parts of a quality equivalent to that of the original are parts the quality of which is at least equal to that of the components used in the manufacture of the vehicle and which have been produced in accordance with the spare part manufacturer's own technical specifications and production standards'.

24. Article 2 ('Characteristics of the spare parts to be supplied …') of that same document stated that the tenderer was to indicate in respect of each replacement whether it wished to supply an original spare part, a first-fit spare part or an equivalent.

25. Article 3 ('Documentation to be submitted with the tender') required, so far as concerns 'equivalent quality spare parts', that the tender be accompanied, on pain of exclusion, by 'a certificate from the spare part manufacturer attesting, in respect of each spare part:

— that its quality is of a level high enough to ensure that its use will not compromise the reputation of the authorised network;

— that it is perfectly interchangeable with the original spare parts, … and requires no adaptation of the spare part, the unit or the system onto which it is to be fitted …'.

26. Article 3 went on to say that 'the supplier shall also submit the product type-approval certificate, where this is mandatory. As regards break linings, brake discs and drums, the supplier shall, in addition to the aforementioned documents, provide a certificate attesting to Community type-approval ECE R90'.

27. Tenders were submitted by Iveco Orecchia and VAR Srl, which was awarded the contract.

B. National proceedings and reference for a preliminary ruling

28. Iveco Orecchia challenged the two award decisions before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia – sezione staccata di Brescia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Brescia Section), arguing in essence that:

— the successful tenderers had not proved, by certificate or any other means, that the components were type-approved, as required by the contract documents and relevant legislation;

— in the alternative, the tender documents were unlawful, inasmuch as they did not require, where necessary, the provision of a type-approval certificate issued by a competent authority, or, in any event, proof of the existence of such type-approval.

29. The court of first instance dismissed the two actions brought by Iveco Orecchia in judgments of 25 June and 26 August 2019, against which that company brought appeals before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State). (6)

30. According to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State): (7)

— The original Iveco spare parts forming the subject of the supply contract are type-approved along with the vehicle.

— Spare parts subject to type-approval, in particular those capable of compromising vehicle safety and environmental performance, may be sold only where they have been type-approved and authorised by the type-approval authority.

— Annex IV to Directive 2007/46 contains a specific and detailed list of the categories of component for which there is relevant and also specific legislation relating to their type-approval.

— The technical specifications required the submission of a type-approval certificate where necessary. (8)

— It falls to be determined, in the light of the foregoing factors, whether non-original components made by a manufacturer of such components need to be type-approved.

— The applicable legislation, that is to say Directive 2007/46 and the national transposing provisions, appears to impose the same type-approval obligations on both vehicle manufacturers (which type-approve vehicles as a whole and, in so doing, thus automatically type-approve each of the parts thereof) and component manufacturers.

— Thus, if a part or component is subject to the provisions of a regulatory act (referred to in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46), it may be placed on the market only if it has been type-approved.

— However, it could also be argued, as the respondent undertakings contend, that offers of spare parts as provided for in the typology of the aforementioned Annex IV which are made by parties other than vehicle manufacturers must not be required to provide the same technical documents evidencing testing as are required in the case of original type-approved components. From that point of view, an adequate alternative to such documentation might be a generic certificate of equivalence declaring the spare part to be compliant with the technical specifications laid down in the tender documentation and the solutions proposed to be consistent with the requirement set out in that documentation.

31. It is against that background that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has made a reference for a preliminary ruling on two questions, of which I shall look only at the first, as instructed by the Court. This is worded as follows:

‘Is it compatible with EU law, and in particular with the provisions of Directive 2007/46/EC (laid down in Articles 10, 19 and 28 of that directive) and the principles of equal treatment and impartiality, open competition and sound administration, for – with specific reference to the supply through public procurement of replacement parts for buses intended for public service – a contracting authority to be allowed to accept replacement parts intended for a particular vehicle, made by a manufacturer other than the vehicle manufacturer, and therefore not approved together with the vehicle, falling into one of the categories of components covered by the technical rules listed in |Annex IV to that directive (List of requirements for the purpose of EC type-approval of vehicles) and put to tender without being accompanied by the type-approval certificate and without any information on the actual type-approval, and indeed on the assumption that type-approval is not needed, as only a declaration of equivalence to the type-approved original made by the tenderer is sufficient?'

III. Procedure before the Court

32. The requests for a preliminary ruling were registered at the Court of Justice on 3 and 11 February 2021 respectively.

33. Written observations were lodged by Iveco Orecchia, Brescia Trasporti SpA, Var Srl, Veneta Servizi International Srl unipersonale, Di Pinto & Dalessandro SpA, APAM Esercizio SpA, the Italian Government and the European Commission. With the exception of Di Pinto & Dalessandro SpA, all of these parties attended the hearing held on 10 March 2022.

IV. Assessment

A. Preliminary observation

34. Although the referring court seeks an interpretation only of Articles 10, 19 and 28 of Directive 2007/46, it cannot be overlooked that the disputes relate to supply contracts that were awarded by means of a procedure subject to the requirements of Directive 2014/25.

35. After all, as the Commission notes and as was highlighted at the hearing, the contested awards were each made by an entity operating in the urban and interurban transport sector, the rules governing which are contained in Directive 2014/25.

36. Both the orders for reference and some of the written observations cite Directive 2014/24/EU. ([9]) However, I do not consider this to be an appropriate reference provision.

37. As I have already said, the subject matter of the contracts put out to tender in these cases was the supply of spare parts for buses used to provide public transport services. Such contracts are subject to Directive 2014/25, since they are instrumental to 'activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by … bus', as referred to in Article 11 thereof.

38. Transport services are explicitly included in the scope of Directive 2014/25, according to Article 1(2) thereof.

39. In any event, the articles of Directive 2014/25 which are relevant here (Articles 60 and 62) are equivalent to their counterparts in Directive 2014/24 (Articles 42 and 44).

B. First question referred

40. The point of uncertainty raised by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) is clearly defined. It wishes to ascertain whether a contracting authority can accept spare parts for buses where, cumulatively:

— Those components fall into one of the categories listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46.

— They were made by a manufacturer other than the bus manufacturer, which is to say that they were not type-approved together with the bus.

— They are not accompanied by a type-approval certificate or any other indication of actual type-approval, it being assumed that such type-approval is not necessary and a declaration of equivalence (to the original component) by the tenderer itself is sufficient.

41. In order to clarify that point of uncertainty, I shall first analyse the EU rules on the type-approval of motor vehicles and of the systems, components and separate technical units intended for such vehicles. Next, I shall consider the differences between type-approval and equivalence, and, finally, I shall look at the impact of Directive 2014/25 in these cases.

1. Type-approval of vehicles and their components

42. Directive 2007/46 seeks to 'replace the Member States' approval systems with a Community approval procedure based on the principle of total harmonisation'. (10)

43. Article 1 of Directive 2007/46, in referring to the subject matter of that directive, mentions the establishment of 'a harmonised framework containing the administrative provisions and general technical requirements for approval' not only of the new vehicles within its scope but also of the systems, components and separate technical units intended for those vehicles.

44. That framework establishes '… the provisions for the sale and entry into service of parts and equipment intended for vehicles approved in accordance with this Directive'.

45. Directive 2007/46 introduces the concept of 'type-approval', (11) as distinct from individual approval. Type-approval may be either 'national', in which case its validity is restricted to the territory of a Member State, or an 'EC type-approval'. The latter certifies compliance with 'the relevant administrative provisions and technical requirements of [the] Directive and of the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV or XI'. (12)

46. As I have already noted, the question referred for a preliminary ruling refers only to the categories of components (13) appearing in the regulatory acts (14) listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46.

47. Components can be EC type-approved either together with the new vehicle or independently. (15) In accordance with Article 3(24) of Directive 2007/46, a component intended to be part of a vehicle may be type-approved independently of that vehicle.

48. EC type-approval for separate components is granted in accordance with a procedure that is governed by Article 7 of Directive 2007/46 and the specific provisions of which are contained in Article 10 thereof. According to Article 10(2), 'Member States shall grant … EC type-approval in respect of a component … which meets the technical requirements laid down in the relevant separate directive or regulation, as prescribed in Annex IV'.

49. Albeit not quite as clearly as might be hoped for, Article 10(2), Article 19 and Article 28(1) of Directive 2007/46 support the inference that the vehicle components listed in Annex IV thereto are in principle subject to type-approval.

50. It is thus significant that, in accordance with Article 28(1) of Directive 2007/46, Member States may permit the sale or entry into service only of type-approved components, that is to say components which 'comply with the requirements of the relevant regulatory acts [as set out in Annex IV] and are properly marked in accordance with Article 19'.

51. The – only – instrument selected by Directive 2007/46 for the purposes of establishing that vehicle components (whether original or otherwise) comply with the technical requirements laid down in the regulatory acts referred to in Annex IV is type-approval itself. This, to my mind, is the most appropriate interpretation of Article 10(2) of that directive, read in the light of the regulatory acts referred to in Annex IV thereto.

52. It may be, however, (as the VAR pointed out in its written observations and as the Commission and the Italian Government confirmed at the hearing), that, in accordance with those same regulatory acts, a particular component is exempt from the type-approval requirement. In that event, there would be no obligation to provide the type-approval certificate which must of necessity be submitted for the other components listed in Annex IV.

53. It is that possibility which is provided for in Article 19(2) of Directive 2007/46: 'where no EC type-approval mark is required, the [component] manufacturer shall affix at least his trade name or trade mark, and the type number and/or an identification number'.

54. Other than in that situation, therefore, the components referred to in any of the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46 may not be placed on the market if they have not first been granted EC type-approval. Without it, as I have said, their sale and entry into service are not permitted.

55. That condition is linked to vehicle traffic safety requirements necessitating type-approval for (some but not all) spare parts. (16) EC type-approval thus becomes a precondition for suitability that is applicable not only to public-procurement-based channels of introduction but also to any form of placing spare parts on the market.

56. Whether the components are manufactured by the trade mark proprietor or by a spare parts producer is immaterial, as is whether they are to be fitted to a new or a used vehicle. There cannot therefore be said to be any discrimination to the detriment of manufacturers of equivalent spare parts: where components require EC type-approval, equivalents and originals are both subject to the same rules. (17)

57. On that premiss, it must be stated in reply to the first part of the first question referred that:

— In principle, a contracting authority may not accept replacement components covered by the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46 without a type-approval certificate, where such acts require type-approval for those components.

— It is for the referring court to determine, in the light of the specific components that were the subject of the call for tenders, whether they were subject to compulsory type-approval under the aforementioned regulatory acts.

2. Type-approval and equivalence

58. In the second part of the first question, the referring court wishes to ascertain whether, in the circumstances which it describes, a declaration of equivalence to the type-approved original, issued by the tenderer itself, would be sufficient.

59. The concepts of type-approval and equivalence have meanings specific to them and not identical to each other:

— Type-approval is a control mechanism used by an authority, a body or an entity acting under their auspices to certify that a vehicle (or, in this case, the components thereof) complies with certain regulatory provisions and technical requirements.

— (A declaration of) equivalence is simply an objective comparison of certain products, whether or not they have previously been type-approved.

60. Type-approval is, as I have already mentioned, a condition of placing on the market vehicle components that must comply with a number of very detailed technical specifications. It is based on mandatory and, in the case of vehicles to be used on the public highway, unavoidable safety requirements.

61. Equivalence (in this case, that between spare parts produced by different manufacturers that perform the same function) has more to do with the similar or dissimilar characteristics of the products compared.

62. Proof of either status is not interchangeable with that of the other. A type-approved component may not be equivalent to the component required by the contracting authority. Conversely, a non-type-approved component may be materially equivalent to the originals provided for in the technical specifications of the call for tenders.

63. It might be thought that, if two spare parts, one type-approved and the other not, are of equivalent quality and interchangeable, it is because they both meet the technical requirements that must be fulfilled in order to pass the type-approval test. To my mind, however, Directive 2007/46 does not permit that presumption. Where considerations of road safety and environmental protection are present, each prototype must be tested by a third party (the authority or body granting type-approvals in accordance with specific procedures and tests), unless a regulatory act deems this unnecessary.

64. In my view, replacement components are not exempt from type-approval testing (and subject only to a declaration of equivalence) solely because they are to be fitted to a used car. The fact that they are intended to be incorporated (by definition, retrospectively) into a used car does not automatically make them safer, which is what some of the parties to the dispute appear to think.

65. The clauses governing the two awards at issue in the present disputes were informed by that principle. In the case of equivalent spare parts subject to type-approval, tenderers were required, on pain of exclusion of their tender, to submit a type-approval certificate.

66. It is not therefore possible, in relation to that particular type of spare part, to accept as an alternative to the submission of type-approval certificates a mere unilateral declaration by the tenderer as to the equivalence of spare parts to original components.

67. Accordingly, so far as concerns replacement components subject to compulsory type-approval, a declaration of equivalence to the type-approved original issued by the tenderer is not sufficient.

68. It remains to be examined whether that interpretation of Directive 2007/46 is compatible with the principles and the provisions of Directive 2014/25.

3. Impact of Directive 2014/25

69. Contracting authorities are required to define, in the tender documents they publish, the characteristics of the works, services or supplies of goods which they propose to obtain by way of public procurement. Those characteristics may include the ‘technical specifications’ of the products or services concerned.

70. As I have said previously, ‘a biased description of those technical specifications may, at the very least, amount to a significant “barrier to entry” for certain tenderers and, in extreme cases, predetermine (including fraudulently) the final choice of successful tenderer if characteristics of products or services are stipulated which that tenderer alone is in a position to supply’. (18)

71. The concern to avoid irregular practices and the aim of ‘allow[ing] public procurement to be open to competition as well as to achieve objectives of sustainability. To that end, it should be possible to submit tenders that reflect the diversity of technical solutions, standards and technical specifications in the marketplace, including those drawn up on the basis of performance criteria linked to the life cycle and the sustainability of the production process of the works, supplies and services’. (19)

72. That goal is reflected in Article 60(2) of Directive 2014/25: ‘Technical specifications shall afford equal access of economic operators to the procurement procedure and shall not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition’.

73. As a rule, then, ‘technical specifications should be drafted in such a way as to avoid artificially narrowing down competition through requirements that favour a specific economic operator by mirroring key characteristics of the supplies, services or works habitually offered by that economic operator. Drawing up the technical specifications in terms of functional and performance requirements generally allows that objective to be achieved in the best way possible’. (20)

74. By way of exception, however, Article 60(4) of Directive 2014/25 allows reference to be made ‘to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production’. Nonetheless, that possibility, which favours certain producers, is mitigated by the requirement that any such reference be accompanied by the words ‘or equivalent’. (21)

75. It is consistent with the principles of Article 60(2) of Directive 2014/25 that paragraph 5 of that same article and Article 62(2) should provide for the possibility of demonstrating compliance with the technical specifications, with a view to proving the equivalence of spare parts, in an open and flexible way, 'which means that the use of any appropriate means is permitted'. (22)

76. In this case, the contracts were for the supply of spare parts, which could be either Iveco originals or equivalents. However, in the case of spare parts subject to the requirement of type-approval, the certificate attesting to such type-approval could not be dispensed with, since, without it, those spare parts (be they originals or equivalents) could not be offered by a tenderer, since they would fail to meet an unavoidable precondition for being placed on the market.

77. Directive 2014/25 lays down the rules governing proof of compliance with the technical specifications without referring to the type-approval of the goods being supplied. This is only logical given that whether or not type-approval is required will depend on the type of supply to be procured, (23) and the sectors covered by that directive are very diverse.

78. Nonetheless, Directive 2014/25, however much it is driven by the goal of opening up public procurement to greater competition, cannot dispense with the mandatory requirements imposed by other provisions of EU law.

79. This is recognised in recital 56 of Directive 2014/25, which states that 'nothing in this Directive should prevent the imposition or enforcement of measures necessary to protect … security, health, human and animal life, the preservation of plant life or other environmental measures'.

80. Directive 2014/25, therefore, 'should not prevent' the application of Directive 2007/46 inasmuch as the latter regulation seeks to '… ensure a high level of road safety, health protection, environmental protection, energy efficiency and protection against unauthorised use'. (24) To the extent that Directive 2007/46 requires, with a view to attaining those very objectives, that certain vehicle spare parts be type-approved, that requirement becomes unavoidable and cannot be circumvented by recourse to Directive 2014/25.

81. As the Commission submits, (25) that same principle informs other rules relating to the functioning of the internal market whereby the EU legislature has pointed out the fact that the lex specialis (such as, for example, that governing the movement of motor vehicles) takes precedence over the general provisions on the free movement of goods.

82. In any event, the obligation to type-approve spare parts is not incompatible with opening up public procurement to competition. In order to safeguard competition, Article 38(1) of Directive 2007/46 makes it easier for competitors of the vehicle manufacturer to access the production of separate components. The vehicle manufacturer must provide its competitors with the relevant particulars, 'including, as the case may be, drawings specifically listed in the annex or appendix to a regulatory act that are necessary for EC type-approval of [separate] components'.

V. Conclusion

83. In the light of the foregoing, I suggest that the Court's answer to the first question referred for a preliminary ruling by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) be as follows:

'Articles 10(2), 19(1) and 28(1) of Directive 2007/46/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 September 2007 establishing a framework for the approval of motor vehicles and their trailers, and of systems, components and separate technical units intended for such vehicles must be interpreted as meaning that, where a call for tenders for a public contract for the supply of replacement components for buses to be used to provide public transport services permits offers of equivalent spare parts the type-approval of which is mandatory under one of the regulatory acts listed in Annex IV to the aforementioned directive, tenderers must submit the corresponding EC type-approval certificate, the submission of a declaration of equivalence alone being insufficient for these purposes'.

(1) Original language: Spanish.

(2) Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 September 2007 establishing a framework for the approval of motor vehicles and their trailers, and of systems, components and separate technical units intended for such vehicles (Framework Directive) (OJ 2007 L 263, p. 1). This was replaced by Regulation (EU) 2018/858 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 30 May 2018 on the approval and market surveillance of motor vehicles and their trailers, and of systems, components and separate technical units intended for such vehicles, amending Regulations (EC) No 715/2007 and (EC) No 595/2009 and repealing Directive 2007/46 (OJ 2018 L 151, p. 1). Regulation 2018/858 is not applicable, ratione temporis, to these disputes.

(3) Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243).

(4) Contract notice published in the supplement to the European public procurement OJ of 21 August 2018 (under reference 2018/S 159-365946).

(5) Contract notice published in the supplement to the European public procurement OJ of 13 November 2018 (under reference 2018/S 218-500319).

(6) In the judgment of 26 August 2019, the court of first instance dismissed the first ground of the action brought by Iveco Orecchia, on the ground, inter alia, that it had failed to indicate exactly which spare parts offered by Brescia Trasporti SpA should be type-approved.

(7) Paragraphs VIII.1, VIII.2 and VIII.4 of the two orders for reference.

(8) The order for reference in Case C-84/21 states that, ‘in the call for tenders at issue, the technical specifications required the submission of the type-approval certificate where necessary, and, in the case of equivalent brake discs and drums, referred expressly to Article 34 of Directive 2007/46 (which in turn refers to the UNECE Regulations laid down for the purposes of EC type-approval’.

(9) Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

(10) Second recital.

(11)

(12) Article 3(5) of Directive 2007/46.

(13) It therefore leaves out systems and separate technical units.

(14) Article 3(1) of Directive 2007/46 defines ‘regulatory act’ as ‘a separate directive or regulation or a UNECE [United Nations Economic Commission for Europe] Regulation annexed to the Revised 1958 Agreement’ [‘to which the Community has adhered as a Contracting Party to the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe “Revised 1958 Geneva Agreement” by virtue of Council Decision 97/836/EC’ (Part II of Annex IV to the Framework Directive)]. In accordance with Article 34(1) of Directive 2007/46, ‘UNECE Regulations to which the Community has acceded and which are listed in Part I of Annex IV … are part of the EC type-approval of a vehicle in the same way as the separate directives or regulations’.

(15) In these disputes, the spare parts for buses are not type-approved together with the vehicle itself but separately from it.

(16) Accordingly, Article 46 of Directive 2007/46 requires Member States to determine ‘the penalties applicable for infringement of the provisions of this Directive …, and of the regulatory acts listed in Part I of Annex IV and [to] take all necessary measures for their implementation’.

(17) In its written observations (p. 15 of the original Italian), VAR states that ‘it has never maintained that … type-approval for a spare part equivalent to a component subject to compulsory type-approval “would not be necessary”, or that, in such circumstances, type-approval could be replaced by a “declaration of equivalence to the type-approved original submitted by the tenderer”’.

(18) Opinion in VAR and ATM (Case C-14/17, EU:C:2018:135, point 2).

(19) Recital 83 of Directive 2014/25.

(20) Ibidem.

(21) In point 33 et seq. of the Opinion in VAR and ATM (C-14/17, EU:C:2018:135), I examined at greater length the Court's case-law on 'the inclusion, in invitations to tender for public contracts or in the relevant contract documents, of technical specifications which refer to a specific trade mark'.

(22) Judgment of 12 July 2018, VAR and ATM (C-14/17, EU:C:2018:568, paragraph 33).

(23) Many supply contracts will not be subject to EU rules governing type-approval of the products concerned. In the present cases, on the other hand, since tenders were sought for spare parts for vehicles forming the subject of a harmonised framework, the contracts in question are bound by rigorous legislation that makes type-approval mandatory unless exempted, in the case of certain spare parts, by the relevant regulatory act in Annex IV to Directive 2007/46.

(24) Recital 3 of Directive 2007/46.

(25) Paragraph 42 and footnote 37 of its written observations, in which it cites recital 5 of Regulation (EC) No 765/2008 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 9 July 2008 setting out the requirements for accreditation and market surveillance relating to the marketing of products and repealing Regulation (EEC) No 339/93 (OJ 2008 L 218, p. 30). According to that recital, 'the framework for market surveillance established by this Regulation should complement and strengthen existing provisions in Community harmonisation legislation relating to market surveillance and the enforcement of such provisions. However, in accordance with the principle of lex specialis, this Regulation should apply only in so far as there are no specific provisions with the same objective, nature or effect in other existing or future rules of Community harmonisation legislation. Examples can be found in the following sectors: drug precursors, medical devices, medicinal products for human and veterinary use, motor vehicles and aviation. The corresponding provisions of this Regulation should not therefore apply in the areas covered by such specific provisions' (emphasis added).

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 12 May 2022,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 18(1) and Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), Article 2(1) of Directive (EU) 2016/943 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 8 June 2016 on the protection of undisclosed know-how and business information (trade secrets) against their unlawful acquisition, use and disclosure (OJ 2016 L 157, p. 1), and of Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 2(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2017 L 94, p. 1).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Antea Polska S.A., Pectore-Eco sp. z o.o. and Instytut Ochrony Środowiska – Państwowy Instytut Badawczy, acting together as a single tenderer (‘Antea’), and the Państwowe Gospodarstwo Wodne Wody Polskie (National Water Management Authority, Poland; ‘the contracting authority’), supported by Arup Polska sp. z o.o. (‘Arup’), by CDM Smith sp. z o.o. (‘CDM Smith’), and by Multiconsult Polska sp. z o.o., Arcadis sp. z o.o. and Hydroconsult sp. z o.o. Biuro Studiów i Badań Hydrogeologicznych i Geofizycznych, acting together as a single tenderer (‘Multiconsult’), concerning the award of a public contract to CDM Smith.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 89/665

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provides:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive [2014/24] …

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that … decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

…’

4 Recitals 90 and 92 of Directive 2014/24 state:

‘(90) Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria that ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment, with a view to ensuring an objective comparison of the relative value of the tenders in order to determine, in conditions of effective competition, which tender is the most economically advantageous tender. It should be set out explicitly that the most economically advantageous tender should be assessed on the basis of the best price-quality ratio, which should always include a price or cost element. It should equally be clarified that such assessment of the most economically advantageous tender could also be carried out on the basis of either price or cost effectiveness only. It is furthermore appropriate to recall that contracting authorities are free to set adequate quality standards by using technical specifications or contract performance conditions.

(92) When assessing the best price-quality ratio contracting authorities should determine the economic and qualitative criteria linked to the subject matter of the contract that they will use for that purpose. Those criteria should thus allow for a comparative assessment of the level of performance offered by each tender in the light of the subject matter of the contract, as defined in the technical specifications. In the context of the best price-quality ratio, a non-exhaustive list of possible award criteria which include environmental and social aspects is set out in this Directive. …

The chosen award criteria should not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority and they should ensure the possibility of effective and fair competition and be accompanied by detailed rules that allow the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified.

5 Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

…’

6 Article 21 of that directive, entitled ‘Confidentiality’, provides:

‘1. Unless otherwise provided in this Directive or in the national law to which the contracting authority is subject, in particular legislation concerning access to information, and without prejudice to the obligations relating to the advertising of awarded contracts and to the information to candidates and tenderers set out in Articles 50 and 55, the contracting authority shall not disclose information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential, including, but not limited to, technical or trade secrets and the confidential aspects of tenders.

2. Contracting authorities may impose on economic operators requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which the contracting authorities make available throughout the procurement procedure.’

7 Article 50 of that directive, entitled ‘Contract award notices’, states:

‘1. Not later than 30 days after the conclusion of a contract or of a framework agreement, following the decision to award or conclude it, contracting authorities shall send a contract award notice on the results of the procurement procedure.

Those notices shall contain the information set out in Annex V Part D …

4. Certain information on the contract award or the conclusion of the framework agreement may be withheld from publication where its release would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would harm the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators.’

8 Article 55 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Information to candidates and tenderers’, provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities shall as soon as possible inform each candidate and tenderer of decisions reached concerning the conclusion of a framework agreement, the award of the contract or admittance to a dynamic purchasing system …

2. On request from the candidate or tenderer concerned, the contracting authority shall as quickly as possible, and in any event within 15 days from receipt of a written request, inform:

(b) any unsuccessful tenderer of the reasons for the rejection of its tender …;

(c) any tenderer that has made an admissible tender of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected, as well as the name of the successful tenderer or the parties to the framework agreement;

3. Contracting authorities may decide to withhold certain information referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2, regarding the contract award, the conclusion of framework agreements or admittance to a dynamic purchasing system, where the release of such information would impede law enforcement or would otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, whether public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators.’

9 Article 58 of that directive, entitled ‘Selection criteria’, provides:

‘1. Selection criteria may relate to:

(a) suitability to pursue the professional activity;

(b) economic and financial standing;

(c) technical and professional ability.

4. With regard to technical and professional ability, contracting authorities may impose requirements ensuring that economic operators possess the necessary human and technical resources and experience to perform the contract to an appropriate quality standard.

Contracting authorities may require, in particular, that economic operators have a sufficient level of experience demonstrated by suitable references from contracts performed in the past. …

In procurement procedures for supplies requiring siting or installation work, services or works, the professional ability of economic operators to provide the service or to execute the installation or the work may be evaluated with regard to their skills, efficiency, experience and reliability.

10 Under Article 59 of that directive, entitled ‘European Single Procurement Document’:

‘1. At the time of submission of requests to participate or of tenders, contracting authorities shall accept the European Single Procurement Document (ESPD), consisting of an updated self-declaration as preliminary evidence in replacement of certificates issued by public authorities or third parties confirming that the relevant economic operator fulfils the following conditions:

(a) it is not in one of the situations referred to in Article 57 in which economic operators shall or may be excluded;

(b) it meets the relevant selection criteria that have been set out pursuant to Article 58;

(c) where applicable, it fulfils the objective rules and criteria that have been set out pursuant to Article 65.

Where the economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities pursuant to Article 63, the ESPD shall also contain the information referred to in the first subparagraph of this paragraph in respect of such entities.

The ESPD shall consist of a formal statement by the economic operator that the relevant ground for exclusion does not apply and/or that the relevant selection criterion is fulfilled and shall provide the relevant information as required by the contracting authority. …

4. A contracting authority may ask tenderers and candidates at any moment during the procedure to submit all or part of the supporting documents where this is necessary to ensure the proper conduct of the procedure.

…’

11 Article 60 of that directive, entitled ‘Means of proof’, states:

‘1. Contracting authorities may require the certificates, statements and other means of proof referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this Article and Annex XII as evidence for the absence of grounds for exclusion as referred to in Article 57 and for the fulfilment of the selection criteria in accordance with Article 58.

Contracting authorities shall not require means of proof other than those referred to in this Article and in Article 62. In respect of Article 63, economic operators may rely on any appropriate means to prove to the contracting authority that they will have the necessary resources at their disposal.

3. Proof of the economic operator’s economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be provided by one or more of the references listed in Annex XII Part I.

4. Evidence of the economic operators’ technical abilities may be provided by one or more of the means listed in Annex XII Part II, in accordance with the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services.

…’

12 Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Reliance on the capacities of other entities’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. With regard to criteria relating to the educational and professional qualifications as set out in point (f) of Annex XII Part II, or to the relevant professional experience, economic operators may however only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required. Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

…’

13 In accordance with Article 67 of that directive, entitled ‘Contract award criteria’:

‘1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions concerning the price of certain supplies or the remuneration of certain services, contracting authorities shall base the award of public contracts on the most economically advantageous tender.

2. The most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting authority shall be identified on the basis of the price or cost …, and may include the best price-quality ratio, which shall be assessed on the basis of criteria, including qualitative, environmental and/or social aspects, linked to the subject matter of the public contract in question. Such criteria may comprise, for instance:

(a) quality, including technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, accessibility, design for all users, social, environmental and innovative characteristics and trading and its conditions;

(b) organisation, qualification and experience of staff assigned to performing the contract, where the quality of the staff assigned can have a significant impact on the level of performance of the contract; or

(c) after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery conditions such as delivery date, delivery process and delivery period or period of completion.

The cost element may also take the form of a fixed price or cost on the basis of which economic operators will compete on quality criteria only.

Member States may provide that contracting authorities may not use price only or cost only as the sole award criterion or restrict their use to certain categories of contracting authorities or certain types of contracts.

4. Award criteria shall not have the effect of conferring an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority. They shall ensure the possibility of effective competition and shall be accompanied by specifications that allow the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified in order to assess how well the tenders meet the award criteria. In case of doubt, contracting authorities shall verify effectively the accuracy of the information and proof provided by the tenderers.

5. The contracting authority shall specify, in the procurement documents, the relative weighting which it gives to each of the criteria chosen to determine the most economically advantageous tender, except where this is identified on the basis of price alone.

14 Annex V to that directive, entitled ‘Information to be included in the notices’, lists in Part D, entitled ‘Information to be included in contract award notices (referred to in Article 50)’:

12. For each award, name, address …, telephone, fax number, email address and internet address of the successful tenderer(s) including:

(a) information whether the successful tenderer is small and medium enterprise,

(b) information whether the contract was awarded to a group of economic operators (joint venture, consortium or other).

13. Value of the successful tender (tenders) or the highest tender and lowest tender taken into consideration for the contract award or awards.

14. Where appropriate, for each award, value and proportion of contract likely to be subcontracted to third parties.

19. Any other relevant information.’

15 Under Annex XII to that directive, entitled ‘Means of proof of selection criteria’:

‘Part I: Economic and financial standing

Proof of the economic operator’s economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) appropriate statements from banks or, where appropriate, evidence of relevant professional risk indemnity insurance;

(b) the presentation of financial statements or extracts from the financial statements, where publication of financial statements is required under the law of the country in which the economic operator is established;

(c) a statement of the undertaking’s overall turnover and, where appropriate, of turnover in the area covered by the contract for a maximum of the last three financial years available, depending on the date on which the undertaking was set up or the economic operator started trading, as far as the information on these turnovers is available.

Part II: Technical ability

Means providing evidence of the economic operators’ technical abilities, as referred to in Article 58:

(a) the following lists:

(i) a list of the works carried out over at the most the past five years, accompanied by certificates of satisfactory execution and outcome for the most important works; where necessary in order to ensure an adequate level of competition, contracting authorities may indicate that evidence of relevant works carried out more than five years before will be taken into account;

(ii) a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided over at the most the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, whether public or private, involved. Where necessary in order to ensure an adequate level of competition, contracting authorities may indicate that evidence of relevant supplies or services delivered or performed more than three years before will be taken into account;

(b) an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, whether or not belonging directly to the economic operator's undertaking, especially those responsible for quality control and, in the case of public works contracts, those upon whom the contractor can call in order to carry out the work;

(c) a description of the technical facilities and measures used by the economic operator for ensuring quality and the undertaking's study and research facilities;

(d) an indication of the supply chain management and tracking systems that the economic operator will be able to apply when performing the contract;

(e) where the products or services to be supplied are complex or, exceptionally, are required for a special purpose, a check carried out by the contracting authorities or on their behalf by a competent official body of the country in which the supplier or service provider is established, subject to that body's agreement, …

(f) the educational and professional qualifications of the service provider or contractor or those of the undertaking's managerial staff, provided that they are not evaluated as an award criterion;

(g) an indication of the environmental management measures that the economic operator will be able to apply when performing the contract;

(h) a statement of the average annual manpower of the service provider or contractor and the number of managerial staff for the last three years;

(i) a statement of the tools, plant or technical equipment available to the service provider or contractor for carrying out the contract;

(j) an indication of the proportion of the contract which the economic operator intends possibly to subcontract;

…'

Directive 2016/943

16 Article 1 of Directive No 2016/943, entitled 'Subject matter and scope', provides, in paragraph 1:

'This Directive lays down rules on the protection against the unlawful acquisition, use and disclosure of trade secrets.

…'

17 Article 2 of that directive, entitled 'Definitions', provides:

'For the purpose of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

(1) "trade secret" means information which meets all of the following requirements:

(a) it is secret in the sense that it is not, as a body or in the precise configuration and assembly of its components, generally known among or readily accessible to persons within the circles that normally deal with the kind of information in question;

(b) it has commercial value because it is secret,

(c) it has been subject to reasonable steps under the circumstances, by the person lawfully in control of the information, to keep it secret;

Polish law

The Law on public procurement

18 The Ustawa Prawo zamówień publicznych (Law on public procurement) of 29 January 2004 (Dz. U. 2015, item 2164), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings ('the Law on public procurement'), provides in Article 8:

'1. The procurement procedure shall be public.

2. The contracting authority may restrict access to information relating to the procurement procedure only in the cases determined by law.

2a. The contracting authority may set out in the tender specifications requirements that must be met in order to maintain the confidentiality of information provided to the economic operator in the course of the procedure.

3. Information constituting trade secrets within the meaning of the provisions on combating unfair competition shall not be disclosed if the tenderer so requested before the expiry of the deadline for submission of tenders or applications to take part in the procedure and demonstrated that it constitutes trade secrets. The tenderer may not designate as confidential the information referred to in Article 86(4). …'

19 Under Article 86(4) of that law:

'The name (company name) and the address of tenderers, as well as information on the price, the period for performance of the contract, the guarantee period and the conditions of payment contained in the tenders, shall be disclosed when the tenders are opened.'

20 Article 96 of that law provides:

'1. In the course of the procedure for the award of the contract, the contracting authority shall draw up a report containing at least:

(5) the name or company name of the tenderer whose tender was accepted as the most advantageous and the justification for that choice, and, if known, the part of the contract or framework agreement which that tenderer intends to subcontract to third parties; and where that information is known at that stage, the names or company name of the potential subcontractors;

(7) where applicable, the results of the examination of the grounds for exclusion, assessment of compliance with the conditions for participation in the selection procedure or criteria, including:

(a) the name or company name of tenderers who have not been excluded, have demonstrated that they meet the conditions for taking part in the procedure or have fulfilled the selection criteria, along with the reasons justifying their selection;

(b) the name or company name of the unsuccessful tenderers who have been excluded, have not demonstrated that they meet the conditions for taking part in the procedure or have not fulfilled the selection criteria, and the reasons why they were not invited to participate in the procedure;

(8) the reasons for the rejection of tenders;

2. Tenders, expert reports, statements,… notices, requests, other documents and information submitted by the contracting authority and tenderers, as well as the public contract concluded, take the form of annexes to the report.

3. The report and the annexes thereto shall be public. The annexes to the report shall be made available after the most advantageous tender has been selected or the procedure cancelled, subject to the proviso that tenders shall be made available from the time of their opening, the initial tenders from the time of the invitation to tender, and requests to participate in the procedure, from the date on which the results of the examination of compliance with the conditions for participation in the procedure are communicated.'

Law on combating unfair competition

21 Article 11(2) of the Ustawa o zwalczaniu nieuczciwej konkurencji (Law on combating unfair competition) of 16 April 1993 (consolidated text, Dz. U. 2020, item 1913), states:

'A "trade secret" shall be construed as technical, technological, scientific and organisational information of an undertaking or other information of economic value that is not, as a body or in the precise configuration and assembly of its components, generally known among or readily accessible to persons normally dealing with that type of information, provided that the entity authorised to use or dispose of such information has taken reasonable measures to keep it confidential.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

22 In 2019, the contracting authority published a public contract notice, within the scope of Directive 2014/24, for the purposes of developing projects relating to the environmental management of certain river basin districts in Poland. The tender specifications set out the conditions for participation in the procedure, the documents required and the criteria for the award of that contract.

23 In the latter regard, the tender specifications stated that the tenders would be evaluated on the basis of three criteria, namely price (40% weighting), project development design (42% weighting) and the description of the manner of performance of the contract (weighting of 18%), the latter two criteria relating to the quality of the tender which were themselves subject to a number of sub-criteria.

24 Following the evaluation of the four tenders submitted, the contract was awarded to CDM Smith. Although the price of the Antea tender was lower than that of CDM Smith's tender, Antea obtained an overall score lower than that obtained by that other tenderer, more points having been awarded to that tenderer in respect of the quality criteria.

25 Antea brought an action before the referring court seeking, inter alia, annulment of the decision awarding the contract to CDM Smith, a fresh examination of the tenders and the disclosure of certain information.

26 In support of that action, Antea complains, in particular, that the contracting authority failed to disclose the information communicated to it by CDM Smith, Multiconsult and Arup concerning their tenders. This includes, in particular, lists of services previously provided, lists of persons who, if the contract were awarded, would be assigned to the performance of the contract, information relating to subcontractors or other third parties providing resources and, more generally, the project development design and the description of the manner of performance of the contract.

27 Antea claims that, by agreeing to treat that information confidentially, the contracting authority infringed the Law on public procurement and the Law on combating unfair competition. It wrongly considered that CDM Smith, Multiconsult and Arup had established that that information constituted trade secrets.

28 Moreover, the contracting authority failed to fulfil its obligation to give adequate reasons, on the basis of the sub-criteria set out in the tender specifications, for the scoring of each of the tenders.

29 Antea submits that it was deprived of its right to an effective remedy on account, first, of the excessive nature of the confidential treatment accorded to the information contained in its competitors' tenders and, second, of the lack of an adequate statement of reasons for the scores awarded. In the light of the principles of equal treatment and transparency, the right to confidential treatment of certain information should be interpreted strictly. Economic operators who decide to participate in a public procurement procedure should agree that certain information about their activities might be disclosed.

30 The contracting authority disputes those arguments.

31 It considers that the project development design and the description of the manner of performance of the contract contain studies based on experience acquired over the years and refined for the procedure in question. Those studies thus form part of the intellectual property of their author.

32 The contracting authority maintains that disclosure of that information could, in any event, undermine the legitimate interests of the tenderer. Thus, the information contained in CDM Smith's tender has commercial value and, by means of internal rules, contractual clauses and instructions for the organisation of work and security of documents, that tenderer took the necessary measures for them to remain secret. Their disclosure would enable competitors to use the tenderer's know-how and the technical or organisational solutions which it has developed.

33 In the present case, the contracting authority maintains that each tenderer provided credible and coherent explanations concerning the classification of the information as trade secrets, on the basis of which it was decided to grant the confidential treatment requested. It considers, in that regard, that the principle of transparency does not override the right to protection of trade secrets.

34 Confidentiality extends, in particular, to the lists of persons assigned to perform the contract. The disclosure of such lists, which contain information enabling experts to be identified, would expose tenderers to loss of staff, since competitors might attempt to recruit those experts. Information on subcontractors or other third parties also includes information relating to their experts.

35 The contracting authority submits, moreover, that each of the award criteria was applied in accordance with the tender specifications and that the evaluation of the tenders in relation to those criteria took place in an exhaustive manner.

36 According to CDM Smith and Multiconsult, the information on the organisation and manner of performance of their services, such as that sent to the contracting authority, constitutes an intangible asset forming part of the tenderer's 'intellectual capital'. In the event of disclosure of that information, competitors could make use of the ideas and solutions presented therein. Moreover, and in any event, information on human resources is of high commercial value and constitutes a trade secret.

37 The referring court notes that it follows from Article 96 of the Law on public procurement that, in principle, tenderers have full access to the documents submitted in the context of public procurement procedures. The absence of such access would, according to that court, have a negative impact on the confidence of tenderers in the decisions of contracting authorities and on the exercise of the right to an effective remedy.

38 That court states that many tenderers seek confidential treatment of the documents that they submit to the contracting authorities, asserting that the information contained in them is a trade secret. Under Article 8(3) of the Law on public procurement, contracting authorities are prohibited from disclosing such information if the tenderer has made such a request and adduced the necessary evidence.

39 There is uncertainty as to the scope of Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 and as to the relevance, in that context, of Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943. It is necessary, in order to ensure as far as possible uniformity of practice in the field of public procurement, to provide an interpretation of Article 21 which is consistent, in particular, with the principles of fair competition, equal treatment, transparency and proportionality.

40 According to the referring court, information provided by the tenderers to the contracting authority cannot all be regarded as being a trade secret or, more generally, as confidential. If the EU legislature had taken the view that all the information referred to in Articles 59 and 60 of Directive 2014/24 and Annex XII thereto is a trade secret, it would have indicated this. To facilitate, on the basis of an excessively broad interpretation of the concept of trade secrets, the grant of confidential treatment of the information transmitted by the tenderers would undermine the abovementioned principles.

41 That court presents an overview of the information and, in particular, of the design elements which each tenderer was required, in this instance, in accordance with the tender specifications, to submit to the contracting authority. It observes that, while the technical and methodological solutions thus submitted to the contracting authority have intellectual value and may therefore fall within the scope of a work protected by copyright, it does not necessarily follow that those elements constitute trade secrets.

42 Nor is that court convinced by the relevance of the risk of 'poaching' of experts relied on by the contracting authority. It is true that such a risk exists, but it is not problematic. It is natural for employees to look for new jobs and for employers to look for new employees, particularly in areas where expertise is required.

43 By contrast, the fact that a tenderer has very little information about the tenders which its competitors have submitted to the contracting authority is problematic, since that would have the effect of impeding or even preventing the effective use of remedies. In that regard, that court asks whether, in the event that it finds that certain documents should not have been treated as confidential, it would be necessary to allow the applicant to bring a new action.

44 The referring court also raises the issue of the award criteria relating to the 'project development design' and the 'description of the manner of performance of the contract'. It asks whether such criteria are too broad and vague. Any criterion laid down by the contracting authority should enable the contracting authority to take a decision on the basis of objective data which are easily comparable and quantifiable.

45 In those circumstances, the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber, Poland) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive [2014/24] permit Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 2(1) of Directive [2016/943], including in particular the terms "is not, as a body or in the precise configuration and assembly of its components, generally known among or readily accessible" and "has commercial value because it is secret" and the indication that "the contracting authority shall not disclose information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential", to be interpreted in such a manner that an economic operator can reserve, as a trade secret, any information on the ground that it does not wish to disclose that information to competing economic operators?

(2) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU permit Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU and Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted in such a manner that economic operators competing for a public contract may reserve the documents referred to in Articles 59 and 60 of Directive 2014/24 and in Annex XII to Directive 2014/24 in whole or in part as trade secrets, including in particular the description of their experience, the list of references, the list of persons proposed to perform the contract and their professional qualifications, the names and capacities of the entities whose capacities they rely on or of their subcontractors, where those documents are required in order to prove fulfilment of the conditions for participation in the procedure or for the purpose of conducting an evaluation in accordance with the criteria for the evaluation of tenders or for ascertaining the compliance of the tender with the other requirements of the contracting authority contained in the procedure documentation (contract notice, tender specifications)?

(3) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU, read in conjunction with Articles 58(1), 63(1) and 67(2)(b) thereof, permit the contracting authority to accept the economic operator's declaration that it has at its disposal the personal resources required by the contracting authority or declared by the economic operator, the entities on whose resources it wishes to rely or their subcontractors, which it must demonstrate to the contracting authority in accordance with applicable laws, and at the same time the economic operator's declaration that the mere disclosure to competing economic operators of the details of those persons or entities (their names, experience and qualifications) may result in their being “poached” by those economic operators, with the result that it is necessary to treat that information as a trade secret? In the light of the foregoing, may such an impermanent link between the economic operator and those persons and entities be regarded as evidence of the availability of the resource in question and, in particular, may the economic operator be awarded additional points under the tender evaluation criteria?

(4) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 permit Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted in such a manner that economic operators competing for a public contract may reserve as trade secrets documents required for the purpose of examining the compliance of their tender with the requirements of the contracting authority contained in the tender specifications (including the description of the subject matter of the contract) or for the purpose of evaluating the tender under the tender evaluation criteria, particularly where those documents relate to the fulfilment of the requirements of the contracting authority laid down in the tender specifications, in applicable laws or in other documents which are generally available or accessible to interested parties, and in particular where that evaluation does not take place according to objectively comparable schemes and mathematically or physically measurable and comparable indicators, but rather according to an individual assessment by the contracting authority? Consequently, are Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU and Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted as meaning that a declaration made by an economic operator in the context of its tender that it will perform the subject matter of the contract in accordance with the contracting authority's requirements included in the tender specifications, compliance with which is monitored and assessed by the contracting authority, can be regarded as a trade secret of the economic operator in question, even though it is for the economic operator to choose the methods intended to achieve the result required by the contracting authority (the subject matter of the contract)?

(5) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Article 67(4) thereof, which provides that award criteria must not have the effect of conferring an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority, must ensure the possibility of effective competition and must allow the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified in order to assess how well the tenders meet the award criteria, permit the contracting authority to establish a tender evaluation criterion, including in particular a criterion evaluated according to the contracting authority’s own judgment, even though it is known at the time at which the criterion is established that economic operators will designate the part of their tender relating to that criterion as a trade secret, to which the contracting authority does not object, with the result that competing economic operators, being unable to verify their competitors’ tenders and compare them with their own tenders, may have the impression that the contracting authority examines and evaluates tenders in an entirely discretionary manner?

(6) Are the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU, read in conjunction with Article 67(4) thereof, which provides that award criteria must not have the effect of conferring an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority, must ensure the possibility of effective competition and must allow the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified in order to assess how well the tenders meet the award criteria, to be interpreted as permitting the contracting authority to establish a tender evaluation criterion such as, in the present case, the criterion concerning the “[project development design]” and the criterion concerning the “description of the manner of performance of the contract”?

(7) Is Article 1(1) and (3) of [Directive 89/665], requiring the Member States to ensure that economic operators have effective remedies against decisions taken by contracting authorities and that review procedures are available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement, to be interpreted as meaning that a finding by the adjudicating authority that documents reserved by the economic operators in a particular procedure are not trade secrets, which results in the contracting authority being obliged to disclose them and to make them available to competing economic operators – if such an effect is not directly provided for in applicable laws – imposes an obligation on the adjudicating authority to make a ruling enabling the economic operator in question to lodge an appeal again – within the scope arising from the content of those documents which the economic operator did not know beforehand, as a result of which it was not in a position to make effective use of a legal remedy – against an action with respect to which it would not be entitled to lodge an appeal on account of the expiry of the period for doing so, for instance by declaring invalid the examination and evaluation of tenders to which the documents in question reserved as trade secrets pertained?'

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

46 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 18(1) and Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation on public procurement which requires that, with the sole exception of trade secrets, information sent by the tenderers to the contracting authorities must be published in its entirety or communicated to the other tenderers, and a practice on the part of contracting authorities whereby requests for confidential treatment in respect of trade secrets are accepted as a matter of course.

47 In that regard, it should be noted at the outset that Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 establishes the principles governing the award of public contracts referred to in that directive. As follows from paragraph 1 of that provision, contracting authorities must treat economic operators 'equally and without discrimination' and must act 'in a transparent … manner'.

48 However, notwithstanding the obligation of the contracting authorities to act in a transparent manner, under Article 21(1) of that directive, such an entity may not disclose 'information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential'.

49 In that regard, the Court has repeatedly held that the principal objective of the EU rules on public procurement is to ensure undistorted competition, and that, in order to achieve that objective, it is important that the contracting authorities do not release information relating to public procurement procedures which could be used to distort competition, whether in an ongoing procurement procedure or in subsequent procedures. Since public procurement procedures are founded on a relationship of trust between the contracting authorities and participating economic operators, those operators must be able to communicate any relevant information to the contracting authorities in such a procedure, without fear that the authorities will communicate to third parties items of information whose disclosure could be damaging to those operators (judgments of 14 February 2008, Varec, C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91, paragraphs 34 to 36, and of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 115).

50 That said, the principle of the protection of confidential information must be reconciled with the requirements of effective judicial protection. To that end, the prohibition laid down in Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be weighed against the general principle of good administration, from which the obligation to state reasons stems. That balancing exercise must take account of the fact that, in the absence of sufficient information enabling it to ascertain whether the decision of the contracting authority to award the contract is vitiated by errors or unlawfulness, an unsuccessful tenderer will not, in practice, be able to rely on its right, referred to in Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, to an effective review (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraphs 121 to 123).

51 In the present case, it is apparent from the order for reference that the request made by the applicant in the main proceedings for access to the information submitted to the contracting authority by CDM Smith, Arup and Multiconsult was examined on the basis of the Law on public procurement. In accordance with Article 8 of that law, trade secrets are, at the request of the tenderers holding them, to be treated confidentially, while any other information submitted by the tenderers to the contracting authority must, pursuant to Article 96 of that law, be made public in an annex to the report drawn up by that entity.

52 It is also apparent from the order for reference that the concept of 'trade secrets', which is defined in Polish law in Article 11(2) of the Law on combating unfair competition, refers to information which has commercial value and is not generally known to persons who normally deal with the kind of information in question or is not easily accessible to them, provided that the person authorised to use or dispose of that information diligently took steps to preserve its confidentiality.

53 That definition corresponds essentially to that of the concept of trade secrets in Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943.

54 It must be held that it does not follow either from the wording or objective of Directive 2014/24 that it precludes the use, by the legislature of a Member State, of such a concept to define the scope of Article 21(1) of that directive.

55 It is true that the concept of 'trade secret', as defined in Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943, or in a corresponding provision of national law, overlaps only in part with the words 'information forwarded to it … designated as confidential' contained in Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24. According to the very wording of that provision, the information referred to therein includes 'but [is] not limited to, technical or trade secrets and the confidential aspects of tenders' which indicates, as the Advocate General noted in points 34 and 35 of his Opinion, that the scope of the protection of confidentiality set out in Directive 2014/24 is broader than that of protection covering trade secrets alone. The Court has, moreover, already held that the rules on the unlawful acquisition, use or disclosure of trade secrets, within the meaning of Directive 2016/943, do not release public authorities from the confidentiality obligations which may arise under Directive 2014/24 (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraphs 97 and 99).

56 However, Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 states that the prohibition on disclosure of information communicated in confidence applies 'unless otherwise provided … in the national law to which the contracting authority is subject'.

57 It follows from that indication that it is permissible for each Member State to strike a balance between the confidentiality referred to in that provision of Directive 2014/24 and the rules of national law pursuing other legitimate interests, including that, expressly mentioned in that provision, of ensuring 'access to information', in order to ensure the greatest possible transparency in public procurement procedures.

58 However, if the effectiveness of EU law is not to be undermined, the Member States, when exercising the discretion conferred on them by Article 21(1) of that directive, must refrain from introducing regimes which do not ensure full respect for the purpose of that provision, referred to in paragraph 49 of the present judgment, which undermine the balancing exercise referred to in paragraph 50 of the present judgment or which alter the regime relating to the publicising of awarded contracts and the rules relating to information to candidates and tenderers set out in Article 50 and 55 of that directive.

59 In that regard, it should be noted that any regime relating to confidentiality must, as Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 expressly states, be without prejudice to the abovementioned regime and to those rules laid down in Articles 50 and 55 of that directive.

60 Under Article 50(1) of that directive, the contracting authority must, at the end of the procurement procedure, issue, for publication, a contract award notice containing, in accordance with Part D of Annex V to that directive, certain information relating, inter alia, to the successful tenderer and to the tender submitted by that tenderer. However, Article 50(4) of Directive 2014/24 also provides that that information may be withheld from publication where its release would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would harm the legitimate commercial interests of an economic operator, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition.

61 Similarly, although Article 55(2) of Directive 2014/24 expressly allows any tenderer that has made an admissible tender to request the contracting authority to inform it of the reasons for the rejection of its tender, the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected and the name of the successful tenderer, it is nevertheless provided, in paragraph 3 of that article, that the contracting authority may decide to withhold certain information, where its release would impede law enforcement, would otherwise be contrary to the public interest or would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of an economic operator or might prejudice fair competition.

62 National legislation which requires publicising of any information which has been communicated to the contracting authority by all tenderers, including the successful tenderer, with the sole exception of information covered by the concept of trade secrets, is liable to prevent the contracting authority, contrary to what Articles 50(4) and 55(3) of Directive 2014/24 permit, from deciding not to disclose certain information pursuant to interests or objectives mentioned in those provisions, where that information does not fall within that concept of a trade secret.

63 Consequently, Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Articles 50 and 55 of that directive, first, does not preclude a Member State from establishing a regime that limits the scope of the obligation to treat information as confidential on the basis of a concept of trade secrets corresponding, in essence, to that contained in Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943. Second, it precludes such a regime where it does not contain an adequate set of rules allowing contracting authorities, in circumstances where Articles 50 and 55 apply, exceptionally to refuse to disclose information which, while not covered by the concept of trade secrets, must remain inaccessible pursuant to an interest or objective referred to in Articles 50 and 55.

64 As regards, lastly, the practice, described by the referring court, whereby, in the Member State concerned, contracting authorities accept requests from tenderers to classify as trade secrets any information that they do not wish to disclose to competing tenderers as a matter of course, it must be stated that such a practice, on the assumption that it has actually been put into effect, which it is not for the Court to ascertain, is liable to undermine not only the balance between the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 and the principle of confidentiality referred to in Article 21(1) of that directive, but also the requirements, recalled in paragraph 50 of this judgment, of effective judicial protection, and the general principle of good administration, which derives from the obligation to state reasons.

65 In that regard, it must be borne in mind that the contracting authority cannot be bound by an economic operator’s mere claim that the information submitted is confidential but must require that that operator demonstrate the genuinely confidential nature of the information which it claims should not be disclosed (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 117).

66 Furthermore, in order to comply with the general principle of good administration and to reconcile the protection of confidentiality with the requirements of effective judicial protection, the contracting authority must not only state the reasons for its decision to treat certain data as confidential but must also communicate in a neutral form – to the extent possible and in so far as such disclosure is capable of preserving the confidentiality of the specific elements of that data which merit protection on that basis – the essential content of that data to an unsuccessful tenderer which requests it, and in particular the content of the data concerning the decisive aspects of its decision and of the successful tender (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraphs 122 and 123).

67 Thus, the contracting authority may, inter alia and in so far as it is not precluded from doing so by the national law to which it is subject, communicate in summary form certain aspects of an application or tender and their technical characteristics, in such a way that the confidential information cannot be identified. In addition, assuming that the non-confidential information is adequate in order to ensure that the unsuccessful tenderer’s right to an effective review is respected, the contracting authority may request the successful tenderer to provide it with a non-confidential version of the documents containing confidential information (judgment of 7 September 2021, *Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centra*s, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraphs 124 and 125).

68 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 18(1) and Article 21(1), read in conjunction with Article 50(4) and Article 55(3) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation on public procurement which requires that, with the sole exception of trade secrets, information sent by the tenderers to the contracting authorities must be published in its entirety or communicated to the other tenderers, and as precluding a practice of contracting authorities whereby requests for confidential treatment in respect of trade secrets are accepted as a matter of course.

The second to fourth questions referred 69 The second to fourth questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, concern, in particular, the interpretation of Article 18(1) and Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24.

70 That said, as stated in paragraph 59 of this judgment, the latter provision is without prejudice, in particular, to the regime on informing candidates and tenderers laid down in Article 55 of that directive.

71 Independently of the scope of Article 21(1) of that directive, Article 55(2) expressly allows any tenderer that has made an admissible tender to request the contracting authority to inform it of the reasons for the rejection of its tender, the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected and the name of the successful tenderer, subject, only, to the possibility granted in paragraph 3 of that article to the contracting authority to decide to withhold certain information, where its release would impede law enforcement, would otherwise be contrary to the public interest or would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of an economic operator or might prejudice fair competition.

72 In the light of the relevance of all those provisions, it must be held that, by its second to fourth questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 18(1), Article 21(1) and Article 55 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority must allow or, on the contrary, refuse to allow a tenderer whose admissible tender has been rejected access to the information that the other tenderers submitted concerning their relevant experience and the references relating to that experience, concerning the identity and professional qualifications of the persons proposed to perform the contract or the sub-contractors, and concerning the design of the projects to be carried out under the contract and the manner of performance of that contract.

73 As regards, first of all, the tenderers' relevant experience and the reference material which they attach to their tenders, by way of demonstration of that experience and their capacities, it must be held that such information, which largely corresponds to that referred to in Annex XII to Directive 2014/24, to which Articles 60 and 63 thereof refer, cannot be classified as confidential in its entirety.

74 Where an economic operator participates in a public procurement procedure, it cannot legitimately request that the list of contracts obtained or projects carried out, pursuant to which it acquired the relevant experience for the public contract in question, and the references used to demonstrate such experience, be treated as confidential in whole or in part.

75 Since the experience of a tenderer is not, as a general rule, secret, its competitors cannot, in principle, be deprived of information relating to that experience, on the basis of the concept of 'trade secrets' contained in the law of the Member State concerned in order to define the scope of the confidentiality referred to in Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24, or on the basis of the protection of 'legitimate commercial interests' or the preservation of 'fair competition' within the meaning of Article 55(3) of that directive.

76 In any event, in accordance with the principles deriving from the Court's case-law recalled in paragraphs 66 and 67 of the present judgment, tenderers must, in the interests of transparency and in order to ensure compliance with the requirements of good administration and effective judicial protection, enjoy access, at the very least, to the essential content of the information provided by each of them to the contracting authority concerning their relevant experience for the public contract in question and the references used to demonstrate that experience. Such access is, however, without prejudice to particular circumstances relating to certain contracts for sensitive products or services which may exceptionally justify a refusal of disclosure on one of the other grounds mentioned in Article 55(3) of Directive 2014/24, relating to compliance with a prohibition or requirement laid down by law or the protection of the public interest.

77 As regards, next, information on natural and legal persons, including subcontractors, on which a tenderer indicates that it may rely in order to perform the contract, a distinction must be made between information enabling those persons to be identified and that which relates, without the possibility of making such an identification, to the qualifications or professional capacities of those persons.

78 The contracting authority must determine whether the disclosure of the identity of the experts or subcontractors engaged by a tenderer to contribute to the performance of that contract in the event that it is awarded, is likely to undermine the confidentiality protection referred to in Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 in respect of that tenderer, as well as those experts or subcontractors. To that end, that contracting authority should take into account all relevant circumstances, including the subject matter of the public contract in question, and the interest of that tenderer and those experts and subcontractors in taking part, with the same commitments negotiated in confidence, in subsequent procurement procedures. The disclosure of information sent to the contracting authority in the context of a public procurement procedure cannot be refused if that information, although relevant to the procurement procedure in question, has no commercial value in the wider context of the activities of those economic operators.

79 In the light of those considerations and in so far as it is plausible that the tenderer and the experts or subcontractors proposed by it have created a synergy with commercial value, it cannot be ruled out that access to the name-specific data relating to those commitments must be refused on the basis of the prohibition on disclosure laid down in Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 or may be refused under Article 55(3) of that directive.

80 As regards non-name-specific data, indicating, without the possibility of personal identification, the qualifications or professional capacities of the natural or legal persons engaged to perform the contract, the size and format of the workforce thus created, or the share of performance of the contract that the tenderer intends to assign to subcontractors, it must be held, in view of the importance of that information for the award of the contract, that the principle of transparency and the right to an effective remedy require, at the very least, that the essential content of the information be accessible to all tenderers.

81 As regards, finally, the design of the projects planned to be carried out under the public contract and the description of the manner of performance of the contract, it is for the contracting authority to examine whether those projects constitute elements or contain elements which can be protected by an intellectual property right, in particular by copyright, and thus fall within the scope of the ground for refusal of disclosure set out in Article 55(3) of Directive 2014/24, relating to the application of laws.

82 In that regard, it should however be borne in mind that, even where that design and description, or a part thereof, are regarded as constituting works protected by copyright, which implies that they are regarded as original in the sense that they constitute intellectual creations specific to their author, reflecting the author’s personality (see, to that effect, judgment of 29 July 2019, Funke Medien NRW, C-469/17, EU:C:2019:623, paragraph 19 and the case-law cited), that protection is reserved for elements which are the expression of such a creation and does not extend to ideas, procedures, operating methods or mathematical concepts as such (see, to that effect, judgment of 13 November 2018, Levola Hengelo, C-310/17, EU:C:2018:899, paragraphs 37 and 39 and the case-law cited). That protection does not therefore relate to technical or methodological solutions such as those works may include.

83 In addition, and irrespective of whether they constitute or contain elements protected by an intellectual property right, the design of the projects planned to be carried out under the public contract and the description of the manner of performance of the relevant works or services may, as the case may be, have a commercial value which would be unduly undermined if that design and that description were disclosed as they stand. Their publication may, in such a case, be liable to distort competition, in particular by reducing the ability of the economic operator concerned to distinguish itself using the same design and description in future public procurement procedures.

84 It is therefore possible that full access to information relating to the design of the projects planned to be carried out under the public contract and to the description of the manner of performance of the contract should be refused on the basis of the prohibition on disclosure laid down in Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 or may be refused under Article 55(3) of that directive. However, it is excessively difficult, if not impossible, for other tenderers to exercise their right to an effective remedy against decisions of the contracting authority concerning the evaluation of tenders if they have no information on that design or manner of performance. Consequently, the essential content of that part of the tenders must be accessible, in accordance with the principles arising from the case-law referred to in paragraphs 66 and 67 of the present judgment.

85 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second, third and fourth questions is that Article 18(1), Article 21(1) and Article 55 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority must, in order to determine whether it will refuse a tenderer whose admissible tender has been rejected access to the information which other tenderers submitted concerning (i) their relevant experience and the references relating thereto, (ii) the identity and professional qualifications of the persons that they have proposed to perform the contract or the sub-contractors and (iii) the design of the projects to be performed under the public contract and the manner of performance of that contract, assess whether that information has a commercial value outside the scope of the public contract in question, where its disclosure might undermine legitimate commercial concerns or fair competition. The contracting authority may, moreover, refuse to grant access to that information where, even though it does not have such commercial value, its disclosure would impede law enforcement or would be contrary to the public interest. A contracting authority must, where full access to information is refused, grant that tenderer access to the essential content of that information, so that observance of the right to an effective remedy is ensured.

The fifth question

86 The fifth question is based on the factual premiss that, in the Member State of the referring court, contracting authorities as a matter of course accept requests from tenderers to treat as confidential information contained in tenders which is decisive in terms of the contract award criteria chosen by the contracting authority. It follows that no tenderer is in a position to form an opinion on the quality of its competitors' tenders. In such circumstances, it is impossible for each tenderer to know whether the award of the contract is based on an objective or arbitrary comparison.

87 Although it is not for the Court, in the context of a reference for a preliminary ruling, to examine whether that premiss actually corresponds to a practice of contracting authorities in that Member State, it must be noted that it is apparent from paragraphs 71 to 85 of the present judgment that the information contained in the tenders which is relevant for the evaluation of those tenders and the award of the contract on the basis of the criteria set out in the contract notice and the contract documents cannot systematically and entirely be classified as confidential. It follows that Directive 2014/24 precludes a practice such as that described in the fifth question in respect of its factual premiss. Consequently, there is no need to answer that question, which relates to the contract award criteria that may be used where such a practice in respect of confidential treatment is followed.

The sixth question

88 By its sixth question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of Article 67(4) thereof, must be interpreted as precluding the 'project development design' to be carried out under the public contract in question and the 'description of the manner of performance of the contract' for that contract from being included among the criteria for the award of the contract.

89 Those provisions of Directive 2014/24 require compliance with the principles of transparency and equal treatment, which allow the conditions of effective competition to be ensured.

90 As stated, moreover, in recital 90 of that directive, public contracts should be awarded on the basis of criteria which ensure compliance with those principles, with a view to ensuring an objective comparison of the relative value of the tenders in order to determine which tender is the most economically advantageous tender on the basis of the best price-quality ratio. To that end, contracting authorities are free to set adequate quality standards by using technical specifications or contract performance conditions. In the same vein, recital 92 of that directive states that the economic and qualitative criteria determined by the contracting authority should allow for a comparative assessment of the level of performance offered by each tenderer.

91 It is therefore important that the award criteria do not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority (judgment of 20 September 2018, Montte, C-546/16, EU:C:2018:752, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited). Therefore, as is apparent from Article 67(4) of Directive 2014/24, those criteria must be accompanied by specifications that allow the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified in order to assess how well the tenders meet those criteria.

92 Therefore, where, as in the present case, the contracting authority establishes award criteria intended to measure the quality of the tenders, those criteria cannot merely refer to the design of the projects to be performed under the public contract and the manner of performance of that contract described by the tenderer, but must be accompanied by indications which allow a sufficiently concrete comparative assessment of the level of service offered to be made. In a case such as that at issue in the main proceedings, where the quality criteria correspond, in total, to 60% of the points that may be allocated for the purposes of awarding the tender, it is all the more important, in order to guarantee an objective comparison and to eliminate the risk of arbitrary treatment, that those criteria be clearly set out.

93 Such indications may, in particular, be provided by establishing sub-criteria.

94 Where the service which is the subject of the contract relates, as in the case in the main proceedings, to a project development service, account should be taken, in particular, of the training and professional experience of the members of the team proposed to perform the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgment of 26 March 2015, Ambisig, C-601/13, EU:C:2015:204, paragraphs 31 to 34).

95 In the present case, it is for the referring court to ascertain whether the sub-criteria relating to the ‘project development design’ and the ‘description of the manner of performance of the contract’ were sufficiently clear to enable the contracting authority to make a concrete and objective assessment of the tenders submitted.

96 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the sixth question referred is that Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of Article 67(4) thereof, must be interpreted as not precluding the ‘project development design’ planned to be carried out under the public contract in question and the ‘description of the manner of performance of the contract’ for that contract from being included among the criteria for the award of the contract, provided that those criteria are accompanied by indications enabling the contracting authority to make a specific and objective assessment of the tenders submitted.

The seventh question

97 As is apparent from the elements of the dispute in the main proceedings summarised in paragraphs 25 to 27 of the present judgment, Antea brought an action seeking annulment of the contract award decision on the ground, inter alia, that it did not have access, after that decision was adopted, to information that its competitors, including the successful tenderer, had forwarded to the contracting authority.

98 By its seventh question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that, in the event of a finding, when dealing with an action brought against a decision awarding a public contract, of an obligation on the part of the contracting authority to disclose to the applicant information which was wrongly treated as confidential, that finding must also lead to the adoption, by that contracting authority, of a new award decision in order to enable the applicant to bring a fresh action.

99 It follows from Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 that decisions taken by a contracting authority in a procurement procedure that falls under EU law must be capable of being reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible; that review makes it possible to challenge the compliance of those decisions with EU law or national rules transposing EU law. Article 1(3) states, moreover that those review procedures must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

100 Article 1 is thus intended to protect economic operators against arbitrary decisions by a contracting authority by ensuring that there are, in all the Member States, effective remedies, so as to ensure the effective application of EU rules on public procurement, in particular at a stage where infringements can still be rectified. The purpose of Directive 89/665 is therefore to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial, as enshrined in the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraphs 127 and 128).

101 In order to observe that right to an effective remedy, the national court hearing an action relating to a procedure for the award of a public contract must ascertain, taking into account the obligation on the part of the contracting authority to provide the unsuccessful tenderer with sufficient information to safeguard that right to an effective remedy and the right of other economic operators to protection of confidentiality, that the contracting authority rightly considered that the information it refused to disclose to the applicant was confidential. To that end, that court must carry out a full examination of all the relevant matters of fact and law. Accordingly, it must necessarily be able to have at its disposal the information required in order to decide in full knowledge of the facts (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraphs 129 and 130).

102 Where, at the end of that verification, the national court finds that certain information was wrongly classified as confidential, that court must be able to annul the contracting authority's decision refusing to disclose that information and, as the case may be, the decision dismissing the administrative appeal against that refusal. Furthermore, if it is permitted to do so under national law, that court must itself be able to take a new decision in that regard (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 136).

103 As regards the effects of failure to disclose that information on the legality of the procurement procedure and, thus, on the contract award decision, the provisions of Directive 89/665 do not make it possible to determine the detailed procedural rules under which the national court must examine those effects. It is therefore for each Member State to determine those detailed rules, which must, in accordance with Article 1(3) of that directive, enable any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement to challenge effectively and rapidly decisions taken by contracting authorities (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2021, Klaipėdos regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, C-927/19, EU:C:2021:700, paragraph 136).

104 Therefore, in a case such as that at issue in the main proceedings, in which the applicant seeks annulment of the contract award decision on the ground, inter alia, that certain information was wrongly classified as confidential, it is for the court hearing the case to examine whether that information should have been disclosed and, if so, to assess whether the failure to disclose that information deprived the applicant of the possibility of bringing an effective action against that award decision.

105 It is then for that court to ensure that any infringement of any established right to an effective remedy is remedied.

106 In that context, that court must in particular take into account the settled case-law of the Court to the effect that the purpose, set out in Article 1 of Directive 89/655, of guaranteeing effective procedures for review of infringements of the provisions applicable in the field of public procurement can be realised only if the periods laid down for bringing such proceedings start to run only from the date on which the applicant knew, or ought to have known, of the alleged infringement of those provisions (judgments of 28 January 2010, Uniplex (UK), C-406/08, EU:C:2010:45, paragraph 32, and of 8 May 2014, Idrodinamica Spurgo Velox and Others, C-161/13, EU:C:2014:307, paragraph 37, and order of 14 February 2019, Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco, C-54/18, EU:C:2019:118, paragraph 45).

107 Consequently, in the event that national procedural law does not allow the court before which an action has been brought against a decision to award a public contract to take, during the proceedings, measures restoring observance of the right to an effective remedy, that court must, where it transpires that that right has been infringed as a result of the failure to disclose information, either annul that award decision or find that the applicant may bring a fresh action against the award decision already taken, the time limit for doing so running only from the time that that applicant has access to all the information that was wrongly classified as confidential.

108 Accordingly, the answer to the seventh question is that Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that, in the event of a finding, when dealing with an action brought against a decision awarding a public contract, of an obligation on the part of the contracting authority to disclose to the applicant information which was wrongly treated as confidential and of a breach of the right to an effective remedy on account of the failure to disclose that information, that finding does not necessarily have to lead to the adoption, by that contracting authority, of a new contract award decision, provided that the national procedural law permits the court hearing the case to adopt, during the proceedings, measures which restore compliance with the right to an effective remedy or allow it to find that the applicant may bring a new action against the award decision that has already been made. The time limit for bringing such an action must not start to run until the applicant has access to all the information which had been wrongly classified as confidential.

Costs

109 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 18(1) and Article 21(1), read in conjunction with Article 50(4) and Article 55(3) of 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation on public procurement which requires that, with the sole exception of trade secrets, information sent by the tenderers to the contracting authorities must be published in its entirety or communicated to the other tenderers, and as precluding a practice of contracting authorities whereby requests for confidential treatment in respect of trade secrets are accepted as a matter of course.

2. Article 18(1), Article 21(1), and Article 55(3) of Directive 2014/24, must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority – must, in order to determine whether it will refuse a tenderer whose admissible tender has been rejected access to the information which other tenderers submitted concerning (i) their relevant experience and the references relating thereto, (ii) the identity and professional qualifications of the persons that they propose will perform the contract or the sub-contractors and (iii) the design of the projects to be performed under the contract and the manner of performance of that contract, assess whether that information has a commercial value outside the scope of the public contract in question, where its disclosure might undermine legitimate commercial or fair competition;

   – may, moreover, refuse to grant access to that information where, even though it does not have such commercial value, its disclosure would impede law enforcement or would be contrary to the public interest; and

   – must, where full access to information is refused, grant that tenderer access to the essential content of that information, so that observance of the right to an effective remedy is ensured.

3. Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of Article 67(4) of that directive, must be interpreted as not precluding the 'project development design', planned to be carried out under the public contract in question and the 'description of the manner of performance of the contract' for that contract from being included among the criteria for the award of the contract, provided that those criteria are accompanied by indications enabling the contracting authority to make a specific and objective assessment of the tenders submitted.

4. Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, must be interpreted as meaning that, in the event of a finding, when dealing with an action brought against a decision awarding a public contract, of an obligation on the part of the contracting authority to disclose to the applicant information which was wrongly treated as confidential and of a breach of the right to an effective remedy on account of the failure to disclose that information, that finding does not necessarily have to lead to the adoption, by that contracting authority, of a new contract award decision, provided that the national procedural law permits the court hearing the case to adopt, during the proceedings, measures which restore observance of the right to an effective remedy or allow it to find that the applicant may bring a new action against the award decision that has already been made. The time limit for bringing such an action must not start to run until the applicant has access to all the information which had been wrongly classified as confidential.

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (Public Procurement Office, Poland))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 2014/24/EU – Article 21 – Confidentiality – Reasoned request for a declaration of confidentiality and proof – Powers of the contracting authority – Declaration of confidentiality – Statement of reasons – Modification of the scope of confidentiality by national legislation – Trade secrets – Directive (EU) 2016/943 – Applicability – Assessment of confidentiality in relation to categories of documents – Exclusion – Case-by-case assessment)

1. In the present reference for a preliminary ruling, the Court is asked to specify the limits of the confidentiality of information included by tenderers in their tenders in procedures for the award of public contracts.

2. In the judgment in Klaipėdos, (2) delivered after this request for a preliminary ruling was registered, the Court addressed the issues raised by the articles of Directive 2014/24/EU, (3) in particular Article 21, that deal with the confidentiality of such information.

3. The findings in that judgment provide answers to some of the questions raised by the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (Public Procurement Office, Poland), which is the referring body. (4)

I. Legal framework

A. European Union law

1. Directive 2014/24

4. Article 21 (‘Confidentiality’) states:

‘1. Unless otherwise provided in this Directive or in the national law to which the contracting authority is subject, in particular legislation concerning access to information, and without prejudice to the obligations relating to the advertising of awarded contracts and to the information to candidates and tenderers set out in Articles 50 and 55, the contracting authority shall not disclose information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential, including, but not limited to, technical or trade secrets and the confidential aspects of tenders.

2. Contracting authorities may impose on economic operators requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which the contracting authorities make available throughout the procurement procedure.’

5. Article 50 (‘Contract award notices’) provides:

4. Certain information on the contract award or the conclusion of the framework agreement may be withheld from publication where its release would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would harm the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators.’

6. In accordance with Article 55 (‘Informing candidates and tenderers’):

3. Contracting authorities may decide to withhold certain information referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2, regarding the contract award, the conclusion of framework agreements or admittance to a dynamic purchasing system, where the release of such information would impede law enforcement or would otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, whether public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators.’

2. Directive (EU) 2016/943 (5)

7. According to recital 18:

‘Furthermore, the acquisition, use or disclosure of trade secrets, whenever imposed or permitted by law, should be treated as lawful for the purposes of this Directive. … In particular, this Directive should not release public authorities from the confidentiality obligations to which they are subject in respect of information passed on by trade secret holders, irrespective of whether those obligations are laid down in Union or national law. Such confidentiality obligations include, inter alia, the obligations in respect of information forwarded to contracting authorities in the context of procurement procedures, as laid down, for example, in … Directive 2014/24/EU …’

8. Article 1 (‘Subject matter and scope’) states:

2. This Directive shall not affect:

(c) the application of Union or national rules requiring or allowing Union institutions and bodies or national public authorities to disclose information submitted by businesses which those institutions, bodies or authorities hold pursuant to, and in compliance with, the obligations and prerogatives set out in Union or national law;

…’

9. Article 2 (‘Definitions’) states:

‘For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

(1) “trade secret” means information which meets all of the following requirements:

(a) it is secret in the sense that it is not, as a body or in the precise configuration and assembly of its components, generally known among or readily accessible to persons within the circles that normally deal with the kind of information in question;

(b) it has commercial value because it is secret;

(c) it has been subject to reasonable steps under the circumstances, by the persons lawfully in control of the information, to keep it secret;

…’

10. Article 3 (‘Lawful acquisition, use and disclosure of trade secrets’) provides:

2. The acquisition, use or disclosure of a trade secret shall be considered lawful to the extent that such acquisition, use or disclosure is required or allowed by Union or national law.’

B. Polish law

1. Ustawa z dnia 29 stycznia 2004 r. – Prawo zamówień publicznych (6)

11. Article 7 provides:

‘1. The contracting authority shall prepare and conduct the procurement procedure in a manner ensuring fair competition and equal treatment of all economic operators and in accordance with the principles of proportionality and transparency.

…’

12. Article 8 reads:

‘1. The procurement procedure shall be public.

2. The contracting authority may restrict access to information related to the procurement procedure only in the cases determined by law.

2a. The contracting authority may set out in the tender specifications requirements that must be met in order to maintain the confidentiality of information provided to the economic operator in the course of the procedure.

3. Information constituting a business secret within the meaning of the provisions on unfair competition shall not be disclosed if the economic operator, not later than the deadline for submission of tenders or requests to participate, has stated that the information concerned may not be disclosed and has demonstrated that the reserved information constitutes a business secret. An economic operator may not designate as confidential the information referred to in Article 86(4). This provision shall apply mutatis mutandis to competitions.

2. Ustawa z dnia 16 kwietnia 1993 r. o zwalczaniu nieuczciwej konkurencji (7)

13. Article 11(2) states:

‘A “business secret” shall be construed as technical, technological, scientific and organisational information of an undertaking or other information of economic value that is not, as a body or in the precise configuration and assembly of its components, generally known among or readily accessible to persons normally dealing with that type of information, provided that the entity authorised to use such information or to which such information is available has taken reasonable measures to keep it confidential.’

II. Facts, procedure and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

14. In 2019, (8) the Państwowe Gospodarstwo Wodne Wody Polskie (National Water Management Authority, Poland) launched an open procedure to award a contract for the ‘preparation of draft second updates of river basin management plans (II aPGW) together with the methodologies’.

15. The tender specifications stated that tenders would be evaluated on the basis of three criteria: price (40%), concept of the study (42%) and description of the manner of performance of the contract (18%).

16. Tenders were submitted by four operators, including a consortium of undertakings headed up by ANTEA POLSKA S.A. (‘Antea Polska’). (9) The contract was awarded to CDM Smith Sp. z o.o. (‘CDM’).

17. Antea Polska, which had been ranked second, appealed the award before the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (Public Procurement Office). Among its claims, it sought access to certain documents and to the information described by CDM and other tenderers as being a trade secret.

18. Antea Polska was of the view that classifying that information as secret infringed the principles of equal treatment and transparency requiring confidentiality to be interpreted strictly. It further claimed that the excessive admittance of information as confidential, combined with the absence of an adequate statement of reasons for the classifications granted, had deprived it of its right to an effective remedy, since it was unaware of the details of its competitors’ tenders.

19. In rebuttal of that position, the contracting authority argued, inter alia, that:

— The holders of the confidential information had discharged their duty to provide a reasonable explanation for the need to protect that information as secret.

— The concept of the study and the description of the manner of performance of the contract are authored studies the disclosure of which could prejudice the interests of their creator.

— The information contained in CDM’s tender had commercial value. Its disclosure would allow competitors to use the tenderer’s know-how and the technical or organisational solutions it had developed.

— The list of persons due to participate in the performance of the contract contains data by which those persons could be identified, an eventuality which could expose the economic operator to the risk of loss if the competition tried to ‘poach’ the persons in question. Similarly, the data in the tender form contain detailed information on the third parties providing resources which has a commercial value.

20. It was in those circumstances that the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (Public Procurement Office), which is responsible for adjudicating on the challenge to the contracting authority’s decision, referred seven questions for a preliminary ruling. As directed by the Court, I shall deal only with the first four, which are worded as follows:

‘(1) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 … permit Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943 …, including in particular the terms “is not, as a body or in the precise configuration and assembly of its components, generally known among or readily accessible” and “has commercial value because it is secret” and the indication that “the contracting authority shall not disclose information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential”, to be interpreted in such a manner that an economic operator can reserve, as a trade secret, any information on the ground that it does not wish to disclose that information to competing economic operators?

(2) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 permit Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted in such a manner that economic operators competing for a public contract may reserve the documents referred to in Articles 59 and 60 of Directive 2014/24 and in Annex XII to Directive 2014/24 in whole or in part as trade secrets, including in particular the description of their experience, the list of references, the list of persons proposed to perform the contract and their professional qualifications, the names and capacities of the entities whose capacities they rely on or of their subcontractors, where those documents are required in order to prove fulfilment of the conditions for participation in the procedure or for the purpose of conducting an evaluation in accordance with the criteria for the evaluation of tenders or for ascertaining the compliance of the tender with the other requirements of the contracting authority contained in the procedure documentation (contract notice, tender specifications)?

(3) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with Articles 58(1), 63(1) and 67(2)(b) thereof, permit the contracting authority to accept the economic operator’s declaration that it has at its disposal the personal resources required by the contracting authority or declared by the economic operator, the entities on whose resources it wishes to rely or their subcontractors, which it must demonstrate to the contracting authority in accordance with applicable laws, and at the same time the economic operator’s declaration that the mere disclosure to competing economic operators of the details of those persons or entities (their names, experience and qualifications) may result in their being “poached” by those economic operators, with the result that it is necessary to treat that information as a trade secret? In the light of the foregoing, may such an impermanent link between the economic operator and those persons and entities be regarded as evidence of the availability of the resource in question and, in particular, may the economic operator be awarded additional points under the tender evaluation criteria?

(4) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 permit Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted in such a manner that economic operators competing for a public contract may reserve as trade secrets documents required for the purpose of examining the compliance of their tender with the requirements of the contracting authority contained in the tender specifications (including the description of the subject matter of the contract) or for the purpose of evaluating the tender under the tender evaluation criteria, particularly where those documents relate to the fulfilment of the requirements of the contracting authority laid down in the tender specifications, in applicable laws or in other documents which are generally available or accessible to interested parties, and in particular where that evaluation does not take place according to objectively comparable schemes and mathematically or physically measurable and comparable indicators, but rather according to an individual assessment by the contracting authority? Consequently, are Article 21(1) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943 to be interpreted as meaning that a declaration made by an economic operator in the context of its tender that it will perform the subject matter of the contract in accordance with the contracting authority's requirements included in the tender specifications, compliance with which is monitored and assessed by the contracting authority, can be regarded as a trade secret of the economic operator in question, even though it is for the economic operator to choose the methods intended to achieve the result required by the contracting authority (the subject matter of the contract)?’

III. Procedure before the Court

21. The request for a preliminary ruling was registered at the Court on 29 January 2021.

22. Written observations were lodged by Antea Polska, Państwowe Gospodarstwo Wodne Wody Polskie (National Water Management Authority), the Austrian and Polish Governments and the European Commission.

23. The hearing, held on 16 March 2022, was attended by Antea Polska, Państwowe Gospodarstwo Wodne Wody Polskie (National Water Management Authority), CDM, the Polish Government and the Commission.

IV. Assessment

A. Preliminary observation: Applicable directive

24. In the judgment in Klaipėdos (paragraphs 96 to 102), the Court held that the legislation applicable to cases relating to the protection of confidentiality in procedures for the award of public contracts is contained in Directive 2014/24, which is the lex specialis, and not in Directive 2016/943.

25. That finding took into account, among other considerations, the fact that:

- 'Having regard to its purpose, as set out in Article 1(1) thereof, read in conjunction with recital 4 thereof, Directive 2016/943 concerns only the unlawful acquisition, use or disclosure of trade secrets and does not provide for measures to protect the confidentiality of trade secrets in other types of court proceedings, such as proceedings relating to public procurement'. (10)

- Recital 18 of Directive 2016/943 reads '… this Directive should not release public authorities from the confidentiality obligations to which they are subject in respect of information passed on by trade secret holders, irrespective of whether those obligations are laid down in Union or national law. Such confidentiality obligations include, inter alia, the obligations in respect of information forwarded to contracting authorities in the context of procurement procedures, as laid down, for example, in … Directive [2014/24] …'.

26. On that basis, there is no reason why account should not be taken of the concepts under Directive 2016/943 (11) where, as here, the national legislation refers to them in laying down the rules governing confidentiality in public procurement procedures. I shall come back to this point later.

B. First question

27. The referring court wishes to ascertain first and foremost whether the interpretation of Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 (12) authorises the tenderer to classify as confidential, on the ground that it is a trade secret, any information which it does not wish to disclose to its competitors.

28. It must be assumed that the concern which the referring court raises by that question has to do not so much which the tenderer's unilateral action as with the consequences which that action has for the contracting authority.

29. To my mind, the answer can be inferred from the judgment in Klaipėdos, where the Court held:

- '… the principal objective of the EU rules on public procurement is the opening-up of public procurement to undistorted competition in all the Member States and …, in order to achieve that objective, it is important that the contracting authorities do not release information relating to public procurement procedures which could be used to distort competition, whether in an ongoing procurement procedure or in subsequent procedures.' (13)

- 'It follows from the provisions of Directive 2014/24, cited in paragraphs 113 and 114 [of this judgment] [Article 21(1) and (2), Article 50 and Article 55(2)(c) of Directive 2014/24], and from … case-law …, that a contracting authority which has received a request from an economic operator for disclosure of information deemed confidential in the tender of the competitor to which the contract was awarded, must not, in principle, disclose that information.' (14)

- ‘However, … the contracting authority cannot be bound by an economic operator’s mere claim that the information submitted is confidential. Such an operator must demonstrate the genuinely confidential nature of the information which it claims should not be disclosed, by establishing, for example, that that information contains technical or trade secrets, that it could be used to distort competition or that its disclosure could be damaging to that operator.’ (15)

- ‘… If the contracting authority has doubts as to the confidential nature of the information submitted by that operator, it must, before taking a decision granting the applicant access to that information, give the operator concerned the opportunity to provide additional evidence in order to ensure that its rights of defence are respected.’ (16)

30. Thus, both the contracting authority and the bodies reviewing its decisions are entrusted with the task of evaluating the confidentiality claimed by the tenderer, rather than simply being able to assume that assertion to be true. They have sufficient powers to combat what, according to the order for reference, would constitute an abusive practice (‘pathological abuse’) on the part of tenderers used to making disproportionate use of the option of classifying as confidential elements of their tenders which are in fact not.

31. It follows from the order for reference that, notwithstanding that the Polish legislature sought to limit the extent of confidentiality, certain tenderers systematically claim that a large part of the information contained in their tenders is a trade secret and contracting authorities are inclined to give credence to such claims. (17)

32. If that is the case and there is an anomaly in the implementation of the national provision transposing Directive 2014/24, it is for the national courts to correct that anomaly in accordance with EU law.

33. Although the referring body does not devote particular attention to the issue which I shall be looking at now, the restriction imposed by the national provision (Article 8(3) of the Law on public procurement), which prevents the disclosure only of the information constituting a trade secret within the meaning of the legislation on unfair competition, was discussed both in the parties’ observations and at the hearing. (18)

34. That issue had to do with whether the aforementioned national provision is compliant with Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, which protects a much broader sphere of confidentiality than technical and trade secrets (19) (it also covers, for example, ‘confidential aspects of tenders’).

35. As I have explained previously, (20) in accordance with Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, protection is not confined to technical and trade secrets but also extends to, inter alia, the confidential aspects of tenders. That provision may therefore cover information that cannot strictly be classified as a technical or trade secret. In my view, that same idea is latent in various passages of the judgment in Klaipèdos. (21)

36. In so far as the reform of Article 11 of the Law on unfair competition, (22) which transposes Directive 2016/943, includes the definition of ‘trade secret’ contained in that directive, the Polish legislation on public procurement arrives, via that chain of references, at a concept of ‘trade secret’ as that term is used in Directive 2016/943. (23)

37. This indirectly raises the question as to whether Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 is compatible with domestic legislation which confers on confidentiality a more restricted scope than that specified in that provision.

38. At first sight, there would appear to be no reason why the national law should not contain such a restriction, since Directive 2014/24 applies ‘unless otherwise provided in this Directive or in the national law to which the contracting authority is subject’.

39. That caveat confers on Member States a discretion similar to that conferred by other provisions of Directive 2014/24 that refer to national legislation. An example is Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24, which requires Member States to specify the implementing conditions for that article, ‘having regard to Union law’.

40. The Court, however, has adopted the interpretation that ‘the Member States’ discretion is not absolute and …, once a Member State decides to incorporate one of the optional grounds for exclusion provided for in Directive 2014/24, it must respect the essential characteristics thereof, as expressed in that directive. By stipulating that the Member States are to specify “the implementing conditions for this Article” “having regard to Union law”, Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 prevents Member States from distorting the grounds for exclusion laid down in that provision or ignoring the objectives or principles underlying each of those grounds’. (24)

41. In my opinion, that case-law is transposable, by analogy, to this case. Since Member States may modulate the scope of confidentiality, provided that they have due regard for EU law, there is in principle no reason why the types of information benefiting from protection should not be confined to ‘trade secrets’ and, as such, be more restricted than under the general provision contained in Article 21 of Directive 2014/24.

42. When it comes to interpreting the concept of trade secret, it may be useful to refer to Directive 2016/943, which clarifies the definition of that concept as employed in Article 21 of Directive 2014/24. This will be the case in particular where national legislation, by the operation of references which I have described above, links the assessment of confidentiality in the context of public procurement to trade secrets as defined in the law transposing Directive 2016/943.

43. Directive 2016/943, in so far as it is intended to lay down general rules on trade secrets, will enable the contracting authority – and the bodies reviewing its decisions – to strike a balance between the principles that specifically apply to confidentiality and those on which the system of public procurement under Directive 2014/24 is based, as well as to access an effective scheme of remedies.

44. However, it is important to take into account provisions of Directive 2014/24 other than Article 21, in the light of the general objectives pursued by that directive. Pursuant to these, certain confidential information, even if it does not strictly fall within the concept of trade secret, must be protected in order to preserve undistorted competition between economic operators or the legitimate commercial interests of an economic operator.

45. Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 requires the contracting authority to provide candidates and tenderers with the information laid down in Articles 50 and 55. That information does not in principle constitute confidential information but it may become confidential should the circumstances referred to in Article 50(4) and Article 55(3) of Directive 2014/24 materialise.

46. Thus, the duty of confidentiality is to apply to data (not necessarily constituting trade secrets) the disclosure of which ‘would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator … or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators’.

47. Although Article 55(3) of Directive 2014/24 specifically refers to the information mentioned in paragraphs 1 and 2 of that article, what matters for the purposes of this case is the exhortation not to prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of a (rival) economic operator and to preserve competition.

48. In its case-law on public procurement, the Court has adopted a broader interpretation of that twofold exhortation. It follows from this that:

– - Competition between operators could suffer if one of them takes unlawful advantage of sensitive information supplied by others in procedures of this kind. In the judgment in Klaipèdos, the Court confirmed that ‘… it is important that the contracting authorities do not release information relating to public procurement procedures which could be used to distort competition, whether in an ongoing procurement procedure or in subsequent procedures’. (25)

– The need to avoid any detriment to the legitimate interests of other economic operators, whether public or private, must act as a logical limit to the disclosure of information which those operators have provided to the contracting authority. (26) It is the contracting authority itself which is responsible for assessing whether or not there is a legitimate interest in preserving the secrecy of particular information, at the behest of the tenderer requesting that it be kept secret.

49. Article 50(4) and Article 55(3) of Directive 2014/24 leave in the hands of the contracting authorities the decision not to communicate the sensitive information to which those two provisions refer. Since neither of those provisions includes the reservation that characterises Article 21(1) of that directive ('unless otherwise provided … in national law'), their application is not conditional upon provisions of national law.

50. In any event, the ability of contracting authorities to disclose information contained in tenders, even if it is not a trade secret stricto sensu, may be limited by other sectoral provisions imposing such restrictions. (27)

51. In short, in answer to the first question referred for a preliminary ruling, I take the view that Article 21 of Directive 2014/24:

- Precludes an economic operator from classifying any information as secret simply because it does not wish to disclose that information to competitors.

- Establishes that the contracting authority is not bound by an economic operator's mere claim that the information submitted is confidential.

- Does not preclude a Member State from limiting confidentiality to trade secrets, provided that it does so in compliance with EU law and that the information disclosed on the ground that it does not fall within that concept cannot be used to the detriment of the legitimate commercial interests of other economic operators or to distort competition between them.

C. Second, third and fourth questions

52. By these questions, which can be answered together, the referring body expresses its doubts as to whether the tenderer may seek the benefit of confidentiality in particular for:

- 'The description of their experience, the list of references, the list of persons proposed to perform the contract and their professional qualifications, the names and capacities of the entities whose capacities they rely on or of their subcontractors' (second question).

- 'The economic operator's declaration that it has at its disposal the personal resources required by the contracting authority or declared by the economic operator, the entities on whose resources it wishes to rely or their subcontractors' (third question).

- 'Documents required for the purpose of examining the compliance of their tender with the requirements of the contracting authority contained in the tender specifications (including the description of the subject matter of the contract) or for the purpose of evaluating the tender under the tender evaluation criteria, particularly where those documents relate to the fulfilment of the requirements of the contracting authority laid down in the tender specifications, in applicable laws or in other documents which are generally available or accessible to interested parties' (fourth question).

53. Once again, the judgment in Klaipèdos provides the referring body with the key to drawing its own inference, in the dispute under its examination, as to whether or not that information (or any other information included in a tenderer's tender) is confidential.

54. In the judgment in Klaipèdos, the Court takes the view, as I see it, that confidentiality should be as specific as possible: (28)

- First, the link between the 'decision to treat certain data as confidential' and the duty to 'communicate in a neutral form … the essential content of [confidential data] to … a tenderer which requests it' (29) suggests that declarations claiming comprehensive confidentiality or relating to generic categories of document should be rejected.

- Second, although the ways in which the balance between the conflicting principles can be maintained are varied and difficult to define, 'the contracting authority may, inter alia and in so far as it is not precluded from doing so by the national law to which it is subject, communicate in summary form certain aspects of an application or tender and their technical characteristics, in such a way that the confidential information cannot be identified.' (30)

- Third, the contracting authorities have available to them mechanisms which extend their discretion: 'pursuant to Article 21(2) of Directive 2014/24, [they] may impose on economic operators requirements aimed at protecting the confidential nature of information which the contracting authorities make available throughout the procurement procedure. Thus, assuming that the non-confidential information is adequate for that purpose, a contracting authority may also avail itself of that power in order to ensure that the unsuccessful tenderer's right to an effective review is respected, by requesting the successful tenderer to provide it with a non-confidential version of the documents containing confidential information.' (31)

55. The interpretation of Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 that flows from that line of case-law is consistent with other provisions of that directive that refer to the specificity of confidentiality. (32)

56. At the hearing, the attendees discussed the 'principle of minimisation', to use the referring body's term, as a criterion for limiting confidentiality to the minimum necessary. Thus, only information, data, aspects or sections of the documents included in tenders (or of the tenders themselves) which are deemed essential to safeguarding the legitimate interests of the tenderer and to ensuring that none of its rivals distorts competition between them may be treated as confidential.

57. There is no reason why that principle, which applies only to specific parts of the information supplied, and not to the documents in their entirety, should not be implemented if the contracting authority considers it appropriate to do so. In any event, it is not possible to establish a priori when any given documents are likely to be classified as confidential, since their classification as such depends on the characteristics of each document in a particular dispute.

58. The order for reference seems to support the inference that the contracting authority acted in a general manner in relation to specific categories of information, thus departing from the case-by-case classification required.

59. This, however, is an assessment that falls exclusively to the referring body, which must carry out a detailed and reasoned evaluation of:

- Whether the tenderer made a reasoned and justified request for a declaration as to the trade secret status of all or part of each document the content of which it wished to keep concealed from its competitors.

- Whether the contracting authority adjudicated on a case-by-case basis on the reasons why it was of the view that a particular document or a collection of documents should be regarded as being covered by confidentiality, and on the required scope of, and conditions governing, that confidentiality.

- Whether the reasons given by the contracting authority for not declassifying the information which the tenderer had submitted as being reserved were justified.

60. Without wishing to take the referring body's place in carrying out this task (which, in fact, has more to do with implementing the provision than with interpreting it), I shall refer briefly to the tender information with which the questions referred for a preliminary ruling are concerned, and which the referring body summarises as falling into two categories.

61. The first category includes documents which describe the 'subjective situation of the economic operator selected, from the point of view of its experience and the entities and personnel proposed for the purposes of performing the contract'.

62. According to the referring body, the only documents required by the tender specifications were those referred to in Articles 59 and 60 of, and Annex XII to, Directive 2014/24 (in addition to those required by national law).

63. If that is the case, it is difficult to regard documents the disclosure of which is prescribed by Directive 2014/24 as being capable of having the status of a trade secret or some other type of confidential information.

64. The referring body goes on to say, with regard to data relating to the tenderer's subjective situation (financial capacity), that the tender specifications simply stated that this must be in excess of a certain level, but did not require the tenderer to provide details of its financial capacity or to specify the funds which it holds in its bank.

65. Much the same can be said of the situation of third parties or entities on whose resources the tenderer wishes to rely, or of the subcontractors it proposes in its tender. Without prejudice to the general obligations in relation to the protection of personal data, no such designations can be kept secret where the tender specifications require them to be disclosed, any claim of a hypothetical risk that the tenderers' human resources may be 'poached' being insufficient in this regard.

66. The second category of documents includes 'studies required by the contracting authority … to aid the evaluation of tenders according to quality criteria', more specifically 'the concept of the study' and the 'description of the manner of performance of the contract'.

67. In principle, the possibility cannot be ruled out that one or more of the documents included by an economic operator in its tender will contain sensitive information benefiting from protection as constituting intellectual property to which third parties may not have access without proper authorisation. (33)

68. At the hearing, some of the attendees expressed disagreement with the foregoing proposition, although they ultimately confirmed that it will be for the referring body to assess, in the light of the circumstances of the dispute, whether such rights have been infringed. (34)

69. The foregoing reflections bear out how difficult it is to adopt a priori an abstract classification as confidential information, whether or not constituting a trade secret, of data included in tenderers' tenders. Inevitably, Article 21 of Directive 2014/24 has to use generic formulae that contracting authorities and review bodies can apply in a reasoned manner in each particular case.

V. Conclusion

70. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the answers to the four questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (Public Procurement Office, Poland) should be as follows:

Article 21 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that:

- The contracting authority is not bound by an economic operator's mere claim that the information submitted in its tender is confidential.

- A Member State may limit confidentiality to trade secrets, provided that it does so in compliance with EU law and that information disclosed on the ground that it does not fall within that concept cannot be used to the detriment of the legitimate interests of a particular economic operator or in order to distort fair competition between operators.

- A contracting authority to which an economic operator has submitted a request for information deemed to be confidential must make a detailed and reasoned determination of whether preference must be given to the right of the operator concerned to have its information protected over the right of its competitors to have access to that information, with a view, where appropriate, to challenging the contract award decision.

10 Judgment in Klaipėdos, paragraph 97 (emphasis added). In that case, the reference to court proceedings was apposite, as the question referred concerned the interpretation of Article 9 of Directive 2016/943 ('Preservation of the confidentiality of trade secrets in the course of legal proceedings'). The lines of reasoning informing that judgment can nonetheless readily be extended to the prior stage, in which the contracting authority must adjudicate on confidentiality.

11 Some language versions (the Spanish, English, German, Romanian, Italian and Portuguese) refer without distinction to 'trade secrets' both in Directive 2014/24 and in Directive 2016/943. Other versions (such as the Polish and the French, for example) use the expression 'trade secrets' in the former directive and 'business secrets' in the latter. The discrepancy has no bearing on this dispute, since the two terms are equivalent.

---

12 Although the question also cites the principles of equal treatment of economic operators and transparency, it can be answered simply on the basis of an interpretation of Article 21 of Directive 2014/24, which implements those principles.

15 Ibidem, paragraph 117.

16 Ibidem, paragraph 118.

17 Paragraph IV.B of the order for reference. The referring court explains that the contracting authorities have two motivations for acting in this way: on the one hand, they have a fear of disclosing documents submitted as confidential that is borne of a desire not to expose themselves to difficulties or to incur liability; and, on the other hand, such opacity suits them, inasmuch as it renders their decisions practically unchallengeable, since tenderers lack information on the qualities or weaknesses of the successful tenderer's tender.

18 That lack of attention may be due to the fact, as explained by the Polish Government at the hearing, that, if the information included in the successful tender is secret, it will fall within the concept of a trade secret. There will therefore be no need to discuss the remaining concepts under Article 21 of Directive 2014/24.

19 For the purposes of Directive 2016/943, technical secrets form part of trade secrets. Recital 14 thereof defines technical knowledge as being a component of 'trade secrets'.

20 Opinion in Klaipėdos (C-927/19, EU:C:2021:295, point 44).

21 For example, in paragraph 130, which refers to the 'need to protect genuinely confidential information and in particular the trade secrets of participants in the procurement procedure'. Emphasis added.

22 The Polish Government confirmed at the hearing that the ustawa z dnia 5 lipca 2018 r. o zmianie ustawy o zwalczaniu nieuczciwej konkurencji oraz niektórych innych ustaw (Law amending the Law on unfair competition and other Laws (Dz. U. 2018/1637 z dnia 2018.08.27)) transposed Directive 2016/943 into domestic law.

23 A comparison of Article 11(2) of the Law on unfair competition with Article 2(1) of Directive 2016/943 points to the existence between the concepts of trade secret as employed in those two texts respectively of a substantial overlap which the referring court does not suggest is in any way problematic.

24 Judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca (C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraph 33). This view is reiterated in the order of 20 November 2019, Indaco Service, (C-552/18, not published, EU:C:2019:997, paragraph 23).

25 Paragraph 115 (emphasis added).

26 Judgment in Klaipėdos, paragraph 115: '… Since public procurement procedures are founded on a relationship of trust between the contracting authorities and participating economic operators, those operators must be able to communicate any relevant information to the contracting authorities in the procurement process, without fear that the authorities will communicate to third parties items of information whose disclosure could be damaging to those operators (see, to that effect, judgments of 14 February 2008, Varec, C-450/06, EU:C:2008:91, paragraphs 34 to 36, and of 15 July 2021, Commission v Landesbank Baden-Württemberg and SRB, C-584/20 P and C-621/20 P, EU:C:2021:601, paragraph 112 and the case-law cited).' Emphasis added.

27 Considerations such as the protection of personal data and intellectual property rights were mentioned at the hearing. I shall come back to these later.

28 In paragraph 129 of the judgment in Klaipèdos, the Court refers to the notion of there being 'sufficient information' to safeguard the right to an effective remedy. That right 'must be weighed against the right of other economic operators' to have their confidential information protected.

29 Judgment in Klaipèdos, paragraph 123.

30 Ibidem, paragraph 124.

---

31 Ibidem, paragraph 125. The provision of a non-confidential version is an expression of the specific and targeted withholding of information. It means that the same document can be processed in such a way that only certain parts of it are kept from public knowledge.

---

32 This is true, for example, of Article 31(6) of Directive 2014/24: 'In the case of an innovation partnership with several partners, the contracting authority shall not, in accordance with Article 21, reveal to the other partners solutions proposed or other confidential information communicated by a partner in the framework of the partnership without that partner's agreement. Such agreement shall not take the form of a general waiver but shall be given with reference to the intended communication of specific information' (emphasis added).

---

34 The order for reference (paragraph IV.B) states that nobody has denied that 'the studies did not contain solutions which would constitute industry innovations – and therefore contained knowledge which is available to professionals'.

– the European Commission, by G. Wils, G. Gattinara and P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request was made in the course of proceedings between the Comune di Lerici (Municipality of Lerici, Italy) and the Provincia di La Spezia (Province of La Spezia, Italy) regarding the approval, by the latter, of a plan awarding ACAM Ambiente SpA the management of the municipal waste service until 2028.

Legal framework

European Union law

3 Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 provides:

‘1. A public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contracting authority exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of the controlled legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

A contracting authority shall be deemed to exercise over a legal person a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments within the meaning of point (a) of the first subparagraph where it exercises a decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of the controlled legal person. Such control may also be exercised by another legal person, which is itself controlled in the same way by the contracting authority.

2. Paragraph 1 also applies where a controlled legal person which is a contracting authority awards a contract to its controlling contracting authority, or to another legal person controlled by the same contracting authority, provided that there is no direct private capital participation in the legal person being awarded the public contract with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

3. A contracting authority, which does not exercise over a legal person governed by private or public law control within the meaning of paragraph 1, may nevertheless award a public contract to that legal person without applying this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled.

(a) the contracting authority exercises jointly with other contracting authorities a control over that legal person which is similar to that which they exercise over their own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of that legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authorities or by other legal persons controlled by the same contracting authorities; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

For the purposes of point (a) of the first subparagraph, contracting authorities exercise joint control over a legal person where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(i) the decision-making bodies of the controlled legal person are composed of representatives of all participating contracting authorities. Individual representatives may represent several or all of the participating contracting authorities;

(ii) those contracting authorities are able to jointly exert decisive influence over the strategic objectives and significant decisions of the controlled legal person; and

(iii) the controlled legal person does not pursue any interests which are contrary to those of the controlling contracting authorities.

4. A contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common;

(b) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

(c) the participating contracting authorities perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation.

5. For the determination of the percentage of activities referred to in point (b) of the first subparagraph of paragraph 1, point (b) of the first subparagraph of paragraph 3 and point (c) of paragraph 4, the average total turnover, or an appropriate alternative activity-based measure such as costs incurred by the relevant legal person or contracting authority with respect to services, supplies and works for the three years preceding the contract award shall be taken into consideration.

Where, because of the date on which the relevant legal person or contracting authority was created or commenced activities or because of a reorganisation of its activities, the turnover, or alternative activity based measure such as costs, are either not available for the preceding three years or no longer relevant, it shall be sufficient to show that the measurement of activity is credible, particularly by means of business projections.’

4 In accordance with Article 18(1) of that directive:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

5 Article 67(4) of that directive provides:

‘Award criteria shall not have the effect of conferring an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority. They shall ensure the possibility of effective competition and shall be accompanied by specifications that allow the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified in order to assess how well the tenders meet the award criteria. In case of doubt, contracting authorities shall verify effectively the accuracy of the information and proof provided by the tenderers.'

6 Article 72 of that directive states:

'1. Contracts and framework agreements may be modified without a new procurement procedure in accordance with this Directive in any of the following cases:

(d) where a new contractor replaces the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract as a consequence of either:

(ii) universal or partial succession into the position of the initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, including takeover, merger, acquisition or insolvency, of another economic operator that fulfils the criteria for qualitative selection initially established provided that this does not entail other substantial modifications to the contract and is not aimed at circumventing the application of this Directive; or

4. A modification of a contract or a framework agreement during its term shall be considered to be substantial within the meaning of point (e) of paragraph 1, where it renders the contract or the framework agreement materially different in character from the one initially concluded. In any event, without prejudice to paragraphs 1 and 2, a modification shall be considered to be substantial where one or more of the following conditions is met:

(a) the modification introduces conditions which, had they been part of the initial procurement procedure, would have allowed for the admission of other candidates than those initially selected or for the acceptance of a tender other than that originally accepted or would have attracted additional participants in the procurement procedure;

7 Article 90(1) of Directive 2014/24 is worded as follows:

'Member States shall bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with this Directive by 18 April 2016. They shall forthwith communicate to the Commission the text of those measures.'

Italian law

8 Article 1(611) and (612) of legge n. 190 – Disposizioni per la formazione del bilancio annuale e pluriannuale dello Stato (legge di stabilità 2015) (Law No 190 on provisions for the preparation of the annual and multi-annual State budget (Stability Law 2015)) of 23 December 2014 (GURI No 300 of 29 December 2014 – Ordinary Supplement No 99, p. 1), provides:

'611. Without prejudice to the provisions laid down in Article 3(27) to (29) of Law No 244 of 24 December 2007, as amended, and Article 1(569) of Law No 147 of 27 December 2013, as amended, in order to ensure the coordination of public finances, the reduction of expenditure, sound administration and the protection of competition and the market, the regions, the autonomous provinces of Trento and Bolzano, the local authorities, the chambers of commerce, industry, crafts and agriculture, the universities and public higher education establishments and the port authorities, from 1 January 2015, shall embark on a process of streamlining companies and shares held directly or indirectly in companies, in order to reduce the number of such companies and shareholdings before 31 December 2015, by taking into account in particular the following criteria:

(d) concentration of companies providing local public services of economic interest;

612. The presidents of the regions and the autonomous provinces of Trento and Bolzano, the presidents of the provinces, the mayors and other governing bodies of the administrations specified in paragraph 611, in their respective areas of competence, shall define and approve, before 31 March 2015, an operational plan for streamlining companies and shares held directly or indirectly in companies, the methods of and time limits for implementation and the detailed presentation of the savings to be made. That plan, together with a specific technical report, shall be forwarded to the competent regional audit chamber of the Court of Auditors and published on the institutional website of the administration concerned. Before 31 March 2016, the bodies listed in the first sentence shall draw up a report on the results obtained, which shall be forwarded to the competent regional audit chamber of the Court of Auditors and published on the institutional website of the administration concerned. The publication of the plan and report constitutes mandatory disclosure under Decree No 33 of 14 March 2013'.

9 In accordance with Article 3*bis*(2*bis*) of decreto-legge n. 138 – Ulteriori misure urgenti per la stabilizzazione finanziaria e per lo sviluppo (Decree-Law No 138 establishing other urgent measures for financial stability and development) of 13 August 2011 (GURI No 216 of 16 September 2011, p. 89; 'Decree-Law No 138/2011'):

'Any economic operator who universally or partially succeeds the initial concession holder following transparent corporate transactions, including mergers and acquisitions, without prejudice to fulfilment of the original qualitative criteria, shall continue to operate the services until the agreed date …'

10 Article 7(5) of decreto legislativo n. 175 – Testo unico in materia di società a partecipazione pubblica (Legislative Decree No 175 – Consolidated law on publicly owned companies) of 19 August 2016 (GURI No 210 of 8 September 2016, p. 1) provides:

'Where the instrument of incorporation requires the participation of private shareholders, the latter shall be selected by means of a public procurement procedure, in accordance with Article 5(9) of Legislative Decree No 50 of 2016'.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling 11 On 15 June 2005, by a decision expressly described as an 'in-house award', the Municipality of Lerici awarded ACAM the contract for the management of the integrated waste cycle in that municipality until 31 December 2028, that management being, more specifically, entrusted to its subsidiary, ACAM Ambiente. On that date, ACAM was a limited company the share capital of which was distributed exclusively among several municipalities, including the Municipality of Lerici.

12 On 12 July 2013, ACAM was forced to enter into a restructuring agreement with its creditors. In the context of that agreement, ACAM sought, among other publicly owned companies managing public services operating in the Italian market, a suitable company with a view to carrying out a concentration. Following the public call for tenders launched for that purpose, ACAM chose to carry out a concentration with IREN SpA, which operates throughout Italy, is under public control and is listed on the stock market.

13 Under a special investment agreement, concluded on 29 December 2017, the local authorities with shareholdings in ACAM sold their shares in ACAM to IREN and acquired an equivalent portion of IREN's shares by subscribing to a capital increase reserved for them. Through ACAM's subsidiaries, which had become its own subsidiaries, IREN continued to manage the services initially entrusted to those subsidiaries.

14 After expressing its intention, on 21 February 2017, not to approve the concentration between ACAM and IREN, the Municipality of Lerici decided, on 19 January 2018, to accept the investment agreement only in respect of the transfer of its ACAM shares to IREN and it actually transferred them to IREN on 11 April 2018.

15 By decision of 6 August 2018, the Province of La Spezia, which was now competent for the management of the integrated municipal waste service for the municipalities in its territorial remit, which includes the Municipality of Lerici, approved the updating of the area plan for the integrated management of municipal waste in the province, in that it designated ACAM Ambiente as the operator of the service for that municipality until 31 December 2028, by virtue of an in-house award.

16 The Municipality of Lerici brought an action against that decision, taking the view that the conditions for the in-house exception were no longer met. By judgment 847/2019, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Liguria (Regional Administrative Court, Liguria, Italy) dismissed that action.

17 The Municipality of Lerici brought an appeal against that judgment before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy).

18 In the first place, it points out that, while that municipality was competent to award the contract at issue to ACAM in 2005, that competence has now been transferred to the provinces, which are currently responsible for the integrated management of municipal waste services for the benefit of all municipalities within their territorial remit.

19 In the second place, that court notes that the concentration at issue in the main proceedings was concluded on the basis of Article 1(611) and (612) of Law No 190 of 23 December 2014, the objective of which is to curb public expenditure by limiting the shares in companies held by public bodies. Moreover, that operation was justified in view of the fact that ACAM had concluded a debt restructuring agreement. In such a situation, Article 3*bis*(2*bis*) of Decree-Law No 138/2011 provides for the continuation, until the agreed deadlines, of the operation of the services which had been entrusted to the initial contractor, by the economic operator succeeding it.

20 In the third place, the referring court considers that there are doubts as to the compatibility of that legislation with Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 in relation to the in-house exception in the context of the award of public contracts.

21 The concentration carried out in the present case has resulted in the municipal waste management service for the Municipality of Lerici – which had initially been awarded to ACAM, without a call for tenders, over which it is not disputed that that municipality exercised jointly with other municipalities, similar control to that exercised over its own departments, within the meaning of the case-law of the Court of Justice – now being awarded to IREN and, through it, to its subsidiary ACAM Ambiente, without the Municipality of Lerici retaining such control over either of those companies. Not only was the shareholding in IREN acquired by that municipality completely negligible, since that municipality sold that shareholding, any link between the municipality and IREN has disappeared.

22 The Province of La Spezia decided to award the service intended for the Municipality of Lerici directly, without a call for tenders. It is therefore necessary to determine whether that direct award complies with the rules of EU law on public procurement.

23 According to the referring court, it is necessary, more specifically, to examine whether the fact that ACAM’s decision to merge with IREN was preceded by a public call for tenders must be taken into account in that context.

24 In that regard, that court considers that the ultimate objective of the relevant rules of EU law is to promote competition and that that result is achieved, in the context of the award of public services, when several operators compete, or are in a position to do so, in order to obtain the contract in question, regardless of the legal classification of the instrument enabling that objective to be achieved. In those circumstances, that court is inclined to consider that it is irrelevant that a given service is awarded by means of a tendering procedure relating specifically to the award of that service, or by means of a tendering procedure for the acquisition of shares in the company providing those services, since competition is ensured in both cases.

25 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Does Article 12 of Directive [2014/24] … preclude national legislation which imposes a concentration of companies providing local public services of economic interest, as a result of which the economic operator succeeding the initial concession holder following transparent corporate transactions, including mergers and acquisitions, continues to operate the services until the agreed date, if:

(a) the initial concession holder is a company awarded the contract in-house on the basis of similar control where several other public authorities are shareholders in that company;

(b) the new economic operator has been selected by means of a public call for tenders;

(c) as a result of the concentration, the requirements for similar control where several other public authorities are shareholders in that company no longer apply in relation to some of the local authorities which originally awarded the service in question.’

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

Admissibility of the question referred

26 In accordance with Article 94 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, every request for a preliminary ruling must contain ‘a summary of the subject matter of the dispute and the relevant findings of fact as determined by the referring court or tribunal, or, at least, an account of the facts on which the questions are based’, ‘the tenor of any national provisions applicable in the case and, where appropriate, the relevant national case-law’, and ‘a statement of the reasons which prompted the referring court or tribunal to inquire about the interpretation or validity of certain provisions of European Union law, and the relationship between those provisions and the national legislation applicable to the main proceedings’.

27 In the present case, contrary to the submissions of the Austrian Government, the order for reference contains a description of the factual and legislative context of the dispute in the main proceedings which is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of Article 94 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice.

28 Thus, first, the order for reference reproduces the content of the national provisions applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings. Secondly, the description by the referring court of the decisions of 15 June 2005 and 6 August 2018 and of the call for tenders launched by ACAM is sufficient to understand the reasons for the choice of the EU provisions the interpretation of which it seeks, as well as the link it establishes between those provisions and the national legislation applicable to the dispute before it.

29 It follows that the question referred to the Court is admissible.

Substance

30 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation or practice under which the performance of a public contract, awarded initially, without a call for tenders, to an in-house entity over which the contracting authority exercised, jointly, control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, is automatically continued by the economic operator which acquired that entity, following a tendering procedure, where that contracting authority does not have such control over that economic operator.

31 As a preliminary point, it is apparent, first, from the order for reference that, in 2005, the Municipality of Lerici awarded the contract for the management of its waste services until 2028 to ACAM, the operational management of that service being entrusted to its subsidiary, ACAM Ambiente. On the date that contract was awarded, ACAM’s capital was held exclusively by a number of municipalities, including the Municipality of Lerici.

32 According to the referring court, the contract thus awarded to ACAM constituted a public service contract and could be awarded, without a call for tenders, on the ground, inter alia, that the Municipality of Lerici exercised, with the other local authority shareholders, joint control over ACAM similar to that which those municipalities exercised over their own departments, within the meaning of the case-law of the Court (see, to that effect, judgment of 13 November 2008, Coditel Brabant, C-324/07, EU:C:2008:621, paragraph 50). The question referred for a preliminary ruling must be answered on the basis of that premiss.

33 In that regard, it must be borne in mind that Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), which was applicable when the contract between the Municipality of Lerici and ACAM was entered into, did not require a contracting authority to initiate a tendering procedure for the award of a public contract where it exercised over the contractor similar control to that exercised over its own departments and where that distinct entity carried out the essential part of its activities with the contracting authority or authorities which owned it. In the case of an in-house award of that kind, the contracting authority is deemed to use its own resources since, even if the contractor is legally distinct from the contracting authority, it may, in practice, be treated in the same way as the internal departments of the contracting authority (see, to that effect, judgments of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau, C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 49, and of 18 June 2020, Porin kaupunki, C-328/19, EU:C:2020:483, paragraph 66).

34 Moreover, in the case of recourse to an entity which is jointly owned by a number of public authorities, the Court has held that ‘similar control’, within the meaning of the preceding paragraph, could be exercised jointly by those authorities (see, to that effect, judgment of 13 November 2008, Coditel Brabant, C-324/07, EU:C:2008:621, paragraph 50, and of 8 May 2014, Datenlotsen Informationssysteme, C-15/13, EU:C:2014:303, paragraph 27).

35 Secondly, it is also apparent from the order for reference that, after having concluded a restructuring agreement with its creditors in 2013, ACAM decided to launch a public call for tenders in order to select an economic operator with which to merge. That procedure resulted in the selection of IREN which acquired all of the shares in ACAM held by the local authority shareholders. Those shareholders acquired a corresponding portion of IREN’s shares in the course of a capital increase of that company reserved for them, the Municipality of Lerici deciding, for its part, to accept the agreement referred to above only in so far as it concerned the transfer of its shares in ACAM.

36 In accordance with Article 3*bis*(2*bis*) of Decree-Law No 138/2011, ACAM Ambiente, now wholly owned by IREN, continued to provide the waste management service for the municipalities which were formerly shareholders of ACAM, including the Municipality of Lerici.

37 Having made those preliminary observations, it should be noted that, where, as in the present case, a public contract has been awarded, without being put out to competitive tender, to a public capital company in accordance with the case-law referred to in paragraphs 33 and 34 of the present judgment, the acquisition of that company by another economic operator, during the period for which that contract was valid, is likely to constitute the alteration of a fundamental condition of the contract, requiring the contract to be put out for competitive tender (see, to that effect, judgments of 6 April 2006, ANAV, C-410/04, EU:C:2006:237, paragraphs 30 to 32, and of 10 September 2009, Sea, C-573/07, EU:C:2009:532, paragraph 53).

38 Such an amendment may lead to the contractor no longer being able in practice to be treated in the same way as the internal departments of the contracting authority, within the meaning of paragraph 34 of this judgment and, therefore, to the performance of the public contract concerned no longer being able to continue without a call for tenders since that contracting authority can no longer be deemed to be using its own resources.

39 In the present case, since the acquisition of ACAM by IREN took place in 2017, namely after the expiry of the period prescribed for the transposition by the Member States of Directive 2014/24, as laid down in Article 90(1) thereof, it is in the light of the provisions of that directive that it must be examined whether such an amendment required the contract to be put out for competitive tender (see, to that effect, judgment of 2 September 2021, Sisal and Others, C-721/19 and C-722/19, EU:C:2021:672, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited).

40 In that regard, first, Article 72(1)(d)(ii) of Directive 2014/24 provides that a public contract may be modified, without carrying out a new procurement procedure in accordance with the requirements of that directive, where the initial contractor is replaced by a new contractor as a consequence of, inter alia, the acquisition of the former by the latter, provided that the latter fulfils the criteria for qualitative selection initially established and provided that this does not entail other substantial modifications to the contract and is not aimed at circumventing the application of that directive.

41 It is therefore apparent from the wording of Article 72(1) that its scope is limited to cases in which the successor to the initial contractor continues to perform a public contract which was the subject of an initial procurement procedure complying with the requirements laid down by Directive 2014/24, which include compliance with the principles of non-discrimination, equal treatment and effective competition between economic operators, as notably recalled and given concrete expression in Article 18(1) and Article 67(4) of that directive.

42 That interpretation is supported by Article 72(4) of that directive, under which a modification of a contract must be considered to be substantial where it introduces conditions which, had they been part of the initial procurement procedure, would have allowed for the admission of other candidates than those initially selected or for the acceptance of a tender other than that originally accepted or would have attracted additional participants in the procurement procedure, and by the objective pursued by the directives in this area of attaining the widest possible opening up of public contracts to competition to the benefit not only of economic operators but also of contracting authorities (judgment of 27 November 2019, Tedeschi and Consorzio Stabile Istant Service, C-402/18, EU:C:2019:1023, paragraph 39).

43 Therefore, a change in the contractor, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, cannot fall within the scope of Article 72 of Directive 2014/24, contrary to the submissions of the Austrian Government, since the public contract at issue in the main proceedings was awarded initially to an in-house entity without a call for tenders.

44 Secondly, it should be noted that Article 12(1) to (3) of Directive 2014/24 incorporates, inter alia, the principles referred to in paragraphs 33 and 34 of the present judgment, while specifying the circumstances in which in-house awards fall outside the scope of that directive.

45 More specifically, under Article 12(3) of Directive 2014/24, a public contract may be awarded without applying the award procedures laid down by that directive provided that the contracting authority exercises, jointly with other contracting authorities, a control over the contractor which is similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, that more than 80% of the activities of that contractor are carried out in the performance of the tasks entrusted to it by those contracting authorities or by other legal persons controlled by them and, finally, that there is no direct private capital participation in that contractor, with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by the legislation of the Member State concerned, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the contractor.

46 Furthermore, it follows from the last subparagraph of Article 12(3) that the existence of joint control, within the meaning of that provision, presupposes, inter alia, that all the contracting authorities are represented in the decision-making bodies of the controlled entity and are able jointly to exert decisive influence over the strategic objectives and significant decisions of that entity.

47 It is apparent from the file submitted to the Court, first, that, on the date of the decision forming the subject matter of the action before the referring court, the Municipality of Lerici held no shares in IREN which is, moreover, largely open to private equity. Secondly, it does not appear to be represented in the decision-making bodies of that company or to be able to influence, even jointly with the other municipalities which held shares in ACAM, the strategic objectives or significant decisions of IREN.

48 It follows that the conditions laid down in Article 12(3) of Directive 2014/24, which enable the view to be taken that the award of a public contract falls outside the scope of the procurement procedures laid down by that directive, do not appear to be satisfied, which, however, is a matter for the referring court to establish.

49 Nor does it appear from the file submitted to the Court that IREN has a relationship with the Municipality of Lerici such that the conditions laid down in Article 12(1) or (2) of that directive enabling such a contract to be classified as an ‘in-house operation’ may be satisfied.

50 Subject to the checks to be carried out by the referring court, IREN’s continued performance of the public contract in the main proceedings must therefore be regarded as stemming from an amendment of a fundamental condition of the contract requiring the contract to be put out for competitive tender, since Directive 2014/24 authorises IREN to continue to perform the contract only after it has been designated as the successful tenderer for that contract, following a procurement procedure which complies with the requirements of that directive.

51 The fact that IREN was selected by ACAM and, therefore, by the municipalities with a shareholding in that company, following a public tendering procedure, does not alter that conclusion.

52 It is sufficient to note that, as stated in paragraph 47 of the present judgment, on the date of the decision forming the subject matter of the action before the referring court, the Municipality of Lerici held no shares, even indirectly, in IREN.

53 In the context of the performance of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings, IREN cannot therefore be treated as a mixed capital company owned both by the contracting authority, albeit indirectly, and by an entity which has been selected by the latter, following a transparent procedure which is open to competition, in accordance with the judgment of 15 October 2009, *Acoset (*C-196/08, EU:C:2009:628).

54 Therefore, it is not necessary to examine the characteristics of the public tendering procedure by which IREN was selected to determine that that procedure cannot, in any event, in the case of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings, equate to a procurement procedure which complies with the requirements laid down by Directive 2014/24 since, both before the concentration with ACAM and after the other municipalities acquired a stake in its capital, IREN is an entity which is not part of the Municipality of Lerici.

55 In the light of the foregoing, it must be concluded that Directive 2014/24 precludes the continued performance of a public contract that was awarded in house, without it being put out for competitive tender, where the contracting authority no longer holds any shares, even indirectly, in the contractor and no longer has any control over it.

56 It is also important to add that such a conclusion must also be drawn in a situation where, as the order for reference might suggest, the public contract at issue in the main proceedings must be regarded as having been re-awarded by the Province of La Spezia.

57 It is apparent from the order for reference that, on 6 August 2018, that province, which had become competent for the management of the waste service for the municipalities within its territorial remit, approved the updating of the area plan for the integrated management of municipal waste in the province, in so far as it awarded ACAM Ambiente the management of the waste service for the Municipality of Lerici until 2028.

58 Even if the decision of 6 August 2018 were to be assessed as awarding the management of such a waste service to ACAM Ambiente, a subsidiary wholly owned by IREN, the fact remains that such a direct award would not meet the requirements imposed by Directive 2014/24 either.

59 First, it is not apparent from the file submitted to the Court that the Province of La Spezia and ACAM Ambiente are in one of the situations listed in Article 12 of that directive. It should be noted, in particular, that that province does not appear to hold any shares in the capital of IREN and, therefore, in that of ACAM Ambiente, nor does it have any power of control over those entities.

60 It follows that, subject to the checks to be carried out by the referring court, Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 does not appear to be capable of justifying the award of a public service contract to ACAM Ambiente by the Province of La Spezia, without a call for tenders.

61 Secondly, having regard to the information in the file submitted to the Court, it also appears that such an award cannot be treated as the award of a public contract to a semi-public company under the conditions set out in paragraph 53 of the present judgment. Thus, it is sufficient to recall that, as noted in paragraph 59 of the present judgment, the Province of La Spezia does not appear to hold any shares in IREN and, therefore, in ACAM Ambiente.

62 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation or practice under which the performance of a public contract, awarded initially, without a call for tenders, to an in-house entity over which the contracting authority exercised, jointly, control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, is automatically continued by the economic operator which acquired that entity, following a tendering procedure, where that contracting authority does not have such control over that operator and does not hold any shares in its capital.

Costs

63 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as precluding national legislation or practice under which the performance of a public contract, awarded initially, without a call for tenders, to an in-house entity over which the contracting authority exercised, jointly, control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, is automatically continued by the economic operator which acquired that entity, following a tendering procedure, where that contracting authority does not have such control over that operator and does not hold any shares in its capital.

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation de l'article 49 TFUE, des articles 76 et 77 de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE (JO 2014, L 94, p. 65), lus en combinaison avec son article 74 et son annexe XIV, ainsi que de l'article 15, paragraphe 2, sous b), et paragraphe 7, de la directive 2006/123/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 12 décembre 2006, relative aux services dans le marché intérieur (JO 2006, L 376, p. 36).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige opposant l'Asociación Estatal de Entidades de Servicios de Atención a Domicilio (ASADE) [Association nationale des entités de soins à domicile] à la Consejería de Sanidad de la Diputación General de Aragón (ministère de la Santé du gouvernement de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon, Espagne) au sujet de la légalité du decreto 62/2017 del Gobierno de Aragón, sobre Acuerdos de Acción Concertada de Servicios Sanitarios y Convenios de Vinculación con Entidades Públicas y Entidades sin ánimo de Lucro (décret 62/2017 du gouvernement d'Aragón, relatif aux accords de conventionnement des services sanitaires et conventions de rattachement avec des entités publiques et entités sans but lucratif), du 11 avril 2017 (Boletín Oficial de Aragón, n° 76, du 21 avril 2017, p. 8529, ci-après le « décret 62/2017 »), de l'Orden SAN/1221/2017 por la que se establecen los precios y tarifas máximas aplicables en la prestación de servicios sanitarios con medios ajenos al sistema de salud de Aragón (arrêté SAN/1221/2017 relatif aux prix et tarifs maximums applicables à la prestation de services sanitaires avec des ressources étrangères à l'administration du système de santé d'Aragón), du 21 juillet 2017 (Boletín Oficial de Aragón, n° 165, du 29 août 2017, p. 21859, ci-après l'« arrêté du 21 juillet 2017 »), et de l'Orden del Consejero de Sanidad, por la que se aprueba el expediente relativo al acuerdo de acción concertada para la atención en dispositivos asistenciales de carácter residencial para enfermos de SIDA en la Comunidad Autónoma de Aragón (arrêté du ministre régional relatif à l'adoption de l'accord de conventionnement pour la prestation de services d'assistance résidentielle pour les malades du sida de la Communauté autonome d'Aragón), du 21 août 2017 (ci-après l'« arrêté du 21 août 2017 »).

Le cadre juridique

Le droit de l'Union

La directive 2006/123

3 Le considérant 27 de la directive 2006/123 énonce :

« La présente directive ne devrait pas couvrir les services sociaux dans les domaines du logement, de l'aide à l'enfance et de l'aide aux familles et aux personnes dans le besoin qui sont assurés par l'État au niveau national, régional ou local, par des prestataires mandatés par l'État ou par des associations caritatives reconnues comme telles par l'État avec pour objectif d'assister les personnes qui se trouvent de manière permanente ou temporaire dans une situation de besoin particulière en raison de l'insuffisance de leurs revenus familiaux, ou d'un manque total ou partiel d'indépendance et qui risquent d'être marginalisées. Ces services sont essentiels pour garantir le droit fondamental à la dignité et à l'intégrité humaines et sont une manifestation des principes de cohésion sociale et de solidarité et ne devraient pas être affectés par la présente directive. »

4 L'article 2, paragraphe 2, de cette directive dispose :

« La présente directive ne s'applique pas aux activités suivantes :

[...]

f) les services de soins de santé, qu'ils soient ou non assurés dans le cadre d'établissements de soins et indépendamment de la manière dont ils sont organisés et financés au niveau national ou de leur nature publique ou privée ;

[...]

j) les services sociaux relatifs au logement social, à l'aide à l'enfance et à l'aide aux familles et aux personnes se trouvant de manière permanente ou temporaire dans une situation de besoin qui sont assurés par l'État, par des prestataires mandatés par l'État ou par des associations caritatives reconnues comme telles par l'État ;

[...] »

5 L'article 15, paragraphes 2 et 7, de ladite directive prévoit :

« 2. Les États membres examinent si leur système juridique subordonne l'accès à une activité de service ou son exercice au respect de l'une des exigences non discriminatoires suivantes :

[...]

b) les exigences qui imposent au prestataire d'être constitué sous une forme juridique particulière ;

[...]

7. Les États membres notifient à la Commission [européenne] toute nouvelle disposition législative, réglementaire ou administrative qui prévoit des exigences visées au paragraphe 6 ainsi que les raisons qui se rapportent à ces exigences. La Commission communique lesdites dispositions aux autres États membres. La notification n'empêche pas les États membres d'adopter les dispositions en question.

Dans un délai de trois mois à compter de la réception de la notification, la Commission examine la compatibilité de ces nouvelles dispositions avec le droit communautaire et, le cas échéant, adopte une décision pour demander à l'État membre concerné de s'abstenir de les adopter, ou de les supprimer.

La notification d'un projet de loi nationale conformément à la directive 98/34/CE [du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 22 juin 1998, prévoyant une procédure d'information dans le domaine des normes et réglementations techniques et des règles relatives aux services de la société de l'information (JO 1998, L 204, p. 37),] vaut respect de l'obligation de notification prévue par la présente directive. »

La directive 2014/24

6 Aux termes de l'article 4 de la directive 2014/24 :

« La présente directive s'applique aux marchés dont la valeur estimée hors taxe sur la valeur ajoutée (TVA) est égale ou supérieure aux seuils suivants :

[...]

d) 750 000 [euros] pour les marchés publics de services portant sur des services sociaux et d'autres services spécifiques énumérés à l'annexe XIV. »

7 Le titre III de cette directive, intitulé « systèmes spéciaux de passation de marchés », comprend, notamment, un chapitre I, relatif aux « [s]ervices sociaux et autres services spécifiques », dans lequel figurent les articles 74 à 77 de ladite directive.

8 L'article 74 de la directive 2014/24 dispose :

« Les marchés publics pour les services sociaux et d'autres services spécifiques énumérés à l'annexe XIV sont attribués conformément au présent chapitre lorsque la valeur des marchés est égale ou supérieure au seuil indiqué à l'article 4, point d). »

9 L'article 75 de cette directive prévoit :

« 1. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs qui entendent passer un marché public pour les services visés à l'article 74 font connaître leur intention par l'un des moyens suivants :

a) un avis de marché qui contient les informations visées à l'annexe V, partie H, conformément aux formulaires types visés à l'article 51 ; ou

b) un avis de préinformation, publié de manière continue et qui contient les informations mentionnées à l'annexe V, partie I. L'avis de préinformation fait référence spécifiquement aux types de services qui feront l'objet des marchés à passer ; il indique que les marchés seront passés sans publication ultérieure et invite les opérateurs économiques intéressés à manifester leur intérêt par écrit.

Le premier alinéa ne s'applique toutefois pas lorsqu'il aurait été possible de recourir, conformément à l'article 32, à une procédure négociée sans publication préalable pour la passation d'un marché de service public.

2. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs qui ont attribué un marché public pour les services visés à l'article 74 font connaître les résultats de la procédure de passation de marché au moyen d'un avis d'attribution de marché, qui contient les informations visées à l'annexe V, partie J, conformément aux formulaires types visés à l'article 51. Toutefois, ils peuvent regrouper ces avis sur une base trimestrielle. Dans ce cas, ils envoient ces avis regroupés au plus tard trente jours après la fin de chaque trimestre.

4. Les avis visés au présent article sont publiés conformément à l'article 51. »

10 L'article 76 de ladite directive énonce :

« 1. Les États membres mettent en place, pour la passation des marchés relevant du présent chapitre, des règles nationales afin de garantir que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs respectent les principes de transparence et d'égalité de traitement des opérateurs économiques. Les États membres sont libres de déterminer les règles de procédure applicables, tant que celles-ci permettent aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs de prendre en compte les spécificités des services en question.

2. Les États membres veillent à ce que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs puissent prendre en compte la nécessité d'assurer la qualité, la continuité, l'accessibilité, le caractère abordable, la disponibilité et l'exhaustivité des services, les besoins spécifiques des différentes catégories d'utilisateurs, y compris des catégories défavorisées et vulnérables, la participation et l'implication des utilisateurs, ainsi que l'innovation. Les États membres peuvent également prévoir que le choix du prestataire de services est opéré sur la base de l'offre présentant le meilleur rapport qualité/prix, en tenant compte de critères de qualité et de durabilité en ce qui concerne les services à caractère social. »

11 Aux termes de l'article 77 de la même directive :

« 1. Les États membres peuvent prévoir que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent réserver aux organisations le droit de participer à des procédures de passation de marchés publics portant exclusivement sur les services de santé, sociaux ou culturels visés à l'article 74 relevant des codes CPV 75121000-0, 75122000-7, 75123000-4, 79622000-0, 79624000-4, 79625000-1, 80110000-8, 80300000-7, 80420000-4, 80430000-7, 80511000-9, 80520000-5, 80590000-6, de 85000000-9 à 85323000-9, 92500000-6, 92600000-7, 98133000-4 et 98133110-8.

2. Une organisation visée au paragraphe 1 remplit toutes les conditions suivantes :

a) elles ont pour objectif d'assumer une mission de service public liée à la prestation des services visés au paragraphe 1 ;

b) leurs bénéfices sont réinvestis en vue d'atteindre l'objectif de l'organisation. En cas de distribution ou de redistribution des bénéfices, celle-ci devrait être fondée sur des principes participatifs ;

c) les structures de gestion ou de propriété des organisations exécutant le marché sont fondées sur l'actionnariat des salariés ou des principes participatifs ou exigent la participation active des salariés, des utilisateurs ou des parties prenantes ;

d) les organisations ne se sont pas vu attribuer un marché par le pouvoir adjudicateur concerné pour les services visés par le présent article dans les trois années précédentes.

3. La durée maximale du marché n'est pas supérieure à trois ans.

4. L'appel à la concurrence renvoie au présent article.

5. Nonobstant l'article 92, la Commission évalue les effets du présent article et fait rapport au Parlement européen et au Conseil [de l'Union européenne] au plus tard le 18 avril 2019. »

Le droit espagnol

Le statut d'autonomie de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon

12 En vertu de l'article 71, points 34 et 55, ainsi que de l'article 77 de l'Estatuto de Autonomía de Aragón (statut d'autonomie de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon), modifié par la Ley Orgánica 5/2007 (loi organique 5/2007), du 20 avril 2007 (BOE n° 97, du 23 avril 2007, p. 17822), la Communauté autonome d'Aragon exerce une compétence en matière d'action sociale et de santé.

La loi 11/2016

13 Les compétences que détient la Communauté autonome d'Aragon conformément à son statut d'autonomie ont été mises en œuvre par la Ley 11/2016 de acción concertada para la prestación a las personas de servicios de carácter social y sanitario (loi 11/2016 relative à l'action conventionnée en matière de fourniture de services à la personne à caractère social et de santé), du 15 décembre 2016 (BOE n° 243, du 20 janvier 2017, p. 4023, ci-après la « loi 11/2016 »).

14 Le préambule de cette loi contient le passage suivant :

« La philosophie qui sous-tend la présente loi est [...] simple : si un opérateur économique aspire légitimement à tirer un gain commercial, un profit, de sa collaboration avec l'administration publique pour la fourniture de services à la personne, il ne peut le faire que dans le cadre d'une procédure de passation de marché public. La collaboration avec l'administration sous la forme d'une action conventionnée n'est possible que sur la base d'une gestion solidaire et sans but lucratif de ces prestations. »

15 L'article 3 de ladite loi, intitulé « Concept et régime général de l'action conventionnée », dispose :

« Les accords d'action conventionnée sont des instruments organisationnels de nature non contractuelle, qui offrent des garanties de non-discrimination, de transparence et d'utilisation efficace des fonds publics et visent à atteindre des objectifs sociaux et de protection de l'environnement, par lesquels les administrations publiques compétentes peuvent organiser la fourniture à la personne de services sociaux et de santé dont le financement, l'accès et le contrôle relèvent de leur compétence lorsque cela entraîne une prestation de meilleure qualité au regard desdits objectifs, tout en respectant la procédure et les exigences prévues par la présente loi ainsi que par la réglementation sectorielle applicable. »

16 Aux termes de l'article 4 de la même loi, intitulé « Principes généraux de l'action conventionnée » :

« Les administrations publiques veillent à ce que leur action conventionnée avec des tiers aux fins de la fourniture de services sociaux à la personne soit conforme aux principes suivants :

a) Principe de subsidiarité, en vertu duquel l'action conventionnée avec des entités publiques ou avec des entités privées sans but lucratif est préalablement subordonnée à l'utilisation optimale des ressources propres.

b) Principe de solidarité, en encourageant l'implication des entités du secteur non marchand dans la fourniture de services à la personne à caractère social ou de santé conformément aux dispositions de la Ley 43/2015, del Tercer Sector de acción social [(loi 43/2015 relative au troisième secteur de l'action sociale), du 9 octobre 2015].

c) Principe d'égalité, en garantissant que l'action conventionnée assure aux utilisateurs une attention identique à celle accordée aux utilisateurs directement fournis par l'administration publique.

d) Principe de publicité, les appels à candidatures pour des actions conventionnées et l'adoption des accords de conventionnement conclus étant publiés au Boletín Oficial de Aragón [(Journal officiel de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon)].

e) Principe de transparence, en diffusant sur le portail de transparence les accords d'action conventionnée conclus et les procédures en cours, dans les conditions prévues à l'article 17 de la Ley 8/2015, de Transparencia de la Actividad Pública y Participación Ciudadana de Aragón [(loi 8/2015 relative à la transparence de l'action publique et à la participation citoyenne dans la Communauté autonome d'Aragon), du 25 mars 2015].

f) Principe de non-discrimination, en fixant des conditions d'accès à l'action conventionnée garantissant l'égalité entre les entités choisissant d'y participer.

g) Principe d'efficacité budgétaire, en fixant les contreparties économiques que les entités conventionnées peuvent percevoir conformément aux tarifs maximaux et minimaux ou aux modules en vigueur, ces contreparties étant plafonnées à la couverture des coûts variables, fixes et permanents résultant de la fourniture du service, sans inclure de bénéfice commercial.

h) Principe de finalité sociale et environnementale, en atteignant divers objectifs dans ces domaines, ainsi que dans ceux de l'égalité entre les sexes et de la gestion innovante des entités et des services publics, et en intégrant expressément de tels objectifs dans l'objet des accords de conventionnement.

i) Principe de participation, par la mise en place de mécanismes visant à impliquer les utilisateurs de manière effective dans la fourniture et l'évaluation des services.

j) Principe de qualité de l'aide apportée, en tant que critère déterminant de choix de l'entité appelée à fournir le service, ce principe devant en outre inspirer l'organisation de l'action conventionnée dans tous ses aspects. »

17 L'article 5 de la loi 11/2016, intitulé « Procédure de conventionnement et critères de préférence », dispose, à son paragraphe 4 :

« La sélection des entités, le cas échéant après appel à candidatures, est basée sur les critères suivants, qui sont fixés dans l'objet et les conditions des accords de conventionnement :

g) Les bonnes pratiques sociales et en matière de gestion du personnel, le respect des droits des travailleurs et des autres avantages prévus dans les conventions collectives de travail, ainsi que le maintien de conditions d'égalité salariale adéquates et le respect des ratios de professionnels de soins directs par utilisateur prévus par la réglementation applicable, en particulier lors de la fourniture des services visés par l'action conventionnée, ainsi que l'éventuelle inclusion d'avantages volontaires en matière de travail, de salaire ou de sécurité au travail.

i) L'incorporation, dans l'équipe de travailleurs et de collaborateurs de l'entité appelés à exécuter l'accord de conventionnement, d'une proportion significative de personnes connaissant des difficultés d'accès au marché du travail et de femmes qualifiées ou occupant des postes de direction. L'accord de conventionnement détermine cette proportion au regard de la matière sociale essentielle à la fourniture du service.

j) Le respect et l'amélioration éventuelle des critères minimaux en matière d'égalité et de conciliation [de la vie privée, familiale et professionnelle] établis par la Ley Orgánica 3/2007, para la Igualdad Efectiva de Mujeres y Hombres [(loi organique 3/2007 relative à l'égalité effective entre les femmes et les hommes), du 22 mars 2007] et par la réglementation que la Communauté autonome d'Aragon adopte dans ce domaine.

[...] »

18 En vertu de l'article 6 de cette loi, intitulé « Formalisation et effets des accords de conventionnement » :

« 1. Les accords de conventionnement sont formalisés par un document administratif de conventionnement conformément à la présente loi et à la réglementation sectorielle applicable.

2. Les accords de conventionnement imposent à l'entité conventionnée de fournir à la personne les services de santé ou à caractère social dans les conditions établies par la présente loi, par la réglementation sectorielle applicable et par l'accord de conventionnement adopté conformément à cette dernière.

3. En dehors des prix publics établis, les entités conventionnées ne peuvent percevoir aucune somme auprès des utilisateurs pour les services conventionnés.

4. Le paiement des utilisateurs pour la fourniture de services complémentaires ainsi que son montant sont préalablement autorisés par l'administration publique accordant le conventionnement. Ces services complémentaires sont préalablement énumérés dans le document de conventionnement. »

Le décret 62/2017

19 Le décret 62/2017, qui a été pris en exécution de la loi 11/2016, a pour objet, conformément à son article 1er, de réglementer le régime juridique applicable aux accords de conventionnement conclus avec des entités publiques ou avec des entités privées sans but lucratif en vue de la fourniture de services de santé à la personne par des moyens extérieurs au réseau du service de santé de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon.

20 L'article 3 de ce décret, intitulé « Services et prestations de santé conventionnés », énonce, à son paragraphe 1 :

« L'action conventionnée peut porter sur les services et prestations suivants :

a) Les services de santé repris dans le catalogue de services communs du Sistema Nacional de Salud [(Système national de santé)], approuvé par le Real Decreto 1030/2006 [(décret royal 1030/2006) du 15 septembre 2006], ou dans le catalogue de services de santé du système de santé de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon, approuvé par le Decreto 65/2007 del Gobierno de Aragón [(décret 65/2007, du gouvernement de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon), du 8 mai 2007], ainsi que dans leurs modifications ou mises à jour ultérieures.

b) Les autres services de collaboration et de soutien aux soins de santé, tels que les transferts vers les centres de santé ou l'accompagnement des patients ou autres, qui sont, le cas échéant, expressément inclus dans les accords de conventionnement ou dans les conventions concernés.

21 L'article 6 dudit décret, intitulé « Critères de conventionnement », dispose :

« 1. Afin de garantir les principes d'égalité et de non-discrimination qui doivent régir l'action conventionnée en matière de services de santé, ainsi que la qualité des soins fournis aux utilisateurs, les appels à conventionnement indiquent les critères d'évaluation des candidatures des fournisseurs souhaitant adhérer à l'accord de conventionnement concerné.

2. Ces critères couvrent au moins les aspects suivants :

j) Les bonnes pratiques sociales et en matière de gestion du personnel, telle que celles expressément énoncées à l'article 5, paragraphe 4, sous g), h), i) et j), de la loi 11/2016, en particulier dans le cadre de l'exécution des prestations visées par l'action conventionnée.

[…]

m) Tout autre critère permettant d'apprécier la capacité et l'adéquation de l'entité fournissant le service conventionné. »

22 L'article 7 du décret 62/2017, intitulé « Procédure », prévoit, à son paragraphe 6 :

« L'accord de conventionnement susceptible d'être finalement conclu [...] est publié au Boletín Oficial de Aragón [(Journal officiel de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon)] et fait l'objet d'une publicité active sur le portail de transparence du gouvernement de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon. »

23 L'article 12 de ce décret, intitulé « Durée des instruments de conventionnement », dispose, à son paragraphe 1 :

« La durée des accords de conventionnement [...] est limitée à quatre ans, étant entendu qu'ils doivent inclure la possibilité de prorogations successives à concurrence d'une durée maximale de dix ans. »

L'arrêté du 21 juillet 2017

24 L'article 2 de l'arrêté du 21 juillet 2017, intitulé « Champ d'application », prévoit :

« 1. Le présent arrêté s'applique aux accords de conventionnement susceptibles d'être formalisés par le ministère de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon compétent en matière de santé ou par le service de santé de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon avec des entités publiques ou avec des entités privées sans but lucratif, en vue de la fourniture de services de santé à la population protégée de la Communauté autonome.

2. Il s'applique également aux cas de fourniture de services de santé à la personne par voie de gestion indirecte, conformément à l'une des formules établies dans la réglementation sur les marchés publics. »

Le litige au principal et les questions préjudicielles

25 L'ASADE a introduit auprès du Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Aragón (Cour supérieure de justice de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon, Espagne), qui est la juridiction de renvoi, un recours tendant à l'annulation de la réglementation de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon permettant de conclure des accords d'action conventionnée avec des entités sans but lucratif, à savoir le décret 62/2017, l'arrêté du 21 juillet 2017 et l'arrêté du 21 août 2017. Au soutien de ce recours, l'ASADE fait valoir que cette réglementation est contraire au droit de l'Union au motif que les procédures d'action conventionnée qu'elle instaure sont des procédures d'adjudication analogues à celles des marchés publics de services auxquelles seules les entités sans but lucratif peuvent participer, alors qu'il résulte de la jurisprudence de la Cour qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur ne peut attribuer directement des marchés publics qu'à des organisations de bénévolat et pour des raisons d'efficacité budgétaire et financière.

26 La juridiction de renvoi relève que la loi 11/2016 envisage la technique de l'action conventionnée comme une option de gestion des services à caractère social et de santé, conjointement à la gestion directe par des moyens propres et à la gestion indirecte par voie de marché public. Il résulterait de cette loi que l'exigence de fourniture adéquate des services, c'est-à-dire d'entière satisfaction du citoyen, est présumée remplie par chacune de ces trois modalités de fourniture des services.

27 Il en découlerait que l'objectif de l'action conventionnée est non pas la fourniture adéquate d'un service spécifique, mais la fourniture du service concerné par une entité sans but lucratif présentant certaines caractéristiques. Il s'agirait donc d'un instrument de politique sociale, dont les objectifs correspondraient aux critères de sélection établis à l'article 5, paragraphe 4, de la loi 11/2016. En outre, dans un tel contexte, toute entité sans but lucratif se verrait associer, par sa nature même, une présomption d'efficacité budgétaire et financière.

28 Cette juridiction souligne encore que l'arrêté du 21 août 2017 justifie le recours à l'action conventionnée avec des entités sans but lucratif par le fait, d'une part, que l'administration qui fournit le service concerné n'a pas de moyens propres disponibles et, d'autre part, qu'il n'est pas opportun d'augmenter les ressources matérielles et humaines dont dispose le ministère de la Santé de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon, ainsi que par la nécessité de maintenir la continuité des services de prise en charge résidentielle des malades du sida dans la Communauté autonome d'Aragon.

29 Dans ces conditions, le Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Aragón (Cour supérieure de justice de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour les questions préjudicielles suivantes :

« 1) L'article 49 TFUE et les articles 76 et 77 (en combinaison avec l'article 74 et l'annexe XIV) de la directive [2014/24] doivent-ils être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à une réglementation nationale qui permet aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs de recourir à des accords de conventionnement avec des entités privées sans but lucratif (et pas seulement avec des associations de bénévolat) pour la fourniture de toute sorte de services sociaux à la personne en contrepartie du remboursement des coûts, sans avoir recours aux procédures prévues dans cette directive, et ce quelle que soit la valeur estimée, simplement en qualifiant préalablement ces accords comme étant d'une nature différente de celle des marchés publics ?

2) L'article 49 TFUE et les articles 76 et 77 (en combinaison avec l'article 74 et l'annexe XIV) de la directive [2014/24] doivent-ils être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à une réglementation nationale qui, pour la fourniture de services sociaux ou de santé d'intérêt général, permet de contourner la réglementation en matière de passation de marchés publics en ayant recours à la technique de l'action conventionnée (à titre de complément ou de substitut à la gestion par des moyens propres) non en raison de l'aptitude de cette technique aux fins de la fourniture adéquate du service, mais en vue d'atteindre des objectifs concrets de politique sociale qui concernent le mode de fourniture du service ou que l'agent doit respecter pour être choisi à cette fin, et ce bien que les principes de publicité, de concurrence et de transparence restent en vigueur ?

3) En cas de réponse négative à la question précédente, les dispositions du droit de l'Union précitées et l'article 15, paragraphe 2, sous b), de la directive [2006/123] doivent-ils être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à ce que cette technique soit exclusivement réservée aux entités sans but lucratif (et pas seulement aux associations de bénévolat), et ce bien que les principes de transparence et de publicité soient respectés ?

4) À la lumière de l'article 15, paragraphe 2, sous b), de la directive [2006/123], faut-il considérer que le fait d'accorder aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs le pouvoir discrétionnaire de recourir à l'action conventionnée pour confier la gestion de services de santé et sociaux à des entités sans but lucratif équivaut à subordonner l'accès à la fourniture de ces services à une condition relative à la forme juridique ? En cas de réponse affirmative à cette question, une réglementation nationale telle que celle en cause, pour laquelle l'État n'a pas notifié à la Commission l'inclusion de la condition relative à la forme juridique, est-elle valide au regard de l'article 15, paragraphe 7, de la directive 2006/123 ?

5) En cas de réponse négative aux trois premières questions et de réponse affirmative à la quatrième question, les articles 49 et 56 TFUE, les articles 76 et 77 (en combinaison avec l'article 74 et l'annexe XIV) de la directive [2014/24] et l'article 15, paragraphe 2, de la directive [2006/123] doivent-ils être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils permettent aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs, afin de sélectionner les entités sans but lucratif (et pas seulement les associations de bénévolat) avec lesquelles conclure la fourniture conventionnée de toutes sortes de services sociaux à la personne [au-delà de ceux énoncés à l'article 2, paragraphe 2, sous j), de la directive 2006/123], d'inclure parmi les critères de sélection l'implantation dans la localité ou dans la zone géographique de fourniture du service ? »

La procédure devant la Cour

30 Par décision du président de la Cour du 7 septembre 2021, l'affaire a été suspendue jusqu'au prononcé de l'arrêt dans l'affaire ASADE (C-436/20).

31 À la suite du prononcé de l'arrêt du 14 juillet 2022, ASADE (C-436/20, ci-après l'« arrêt ASADE I », EU:C:2022:559), la Cour a interrogé la juridiction de renvoi sur le point de savoir si elle entendait maintenir la présente demande de décision préjudicielle, compte tenu de la connexité existant entre la présente affaire et celle ayant donné lieu à cet arrêt.

32 Par lettre du 22 septembre 2022, la juridiction de renvoi a répondu qu'elle retirait les première, troisième et cinquième questions, mais qu'elle maintenait les deuxième et quatrième questions.

Sur les questions préjudicielles

33 En vertu de l'article 53, paragraphe 2, de son règlement de procédure, lorsqu'une demande préjudicielle est manifestement irrecevable, la Cour peut à tout moment, l'avocat général entendu, décider de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée, sans poursuivre la procédure. En outre, en vertu de l'article 99 de ce règlement, la Cour peut à tout moment décider, sur proposition du juge rapporteur, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée lorsque, notamment, la réponse à une question posée peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence.

34 Il y a lieu de faire application de ces dispositions dans la présente affaire.

Sur la deuxième question

35 Par sa deuxième question préjudicielle, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 49 TFUE ainsi que les articles 76 et 77 de la directive 2014/24 doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à une réglementation nationale qui réserve aux entités sans but lucratif la faculté de conclure, dans le respect des principes de publicité, de concurrence et de transparence, des accords en vertu desquels ces entités fournissent des services sociaux ou de santé d'intérêt général, en contrepartie du remboursement des coûts qu'elles supportent, quelle que soit la valeur estimée de ces services, lorsque le recours à ces accords vise à atteindre des objectifs de solidarité, sans améliorer nécessairement l'adéquation ou l'efficacité budgétaire de la fourniture desdits services par rapport au régime généralement applicable aux procédures de passation de marchés publics.

36 À titre liminaire, il importe de relever que, contrairement à ce qu'exige l'article 94 du règlement de procédure, la juridiction de renvoi n'explicite pas en quoi, malgré le caractère purement interne du litige pendant devant elle, celui-ci présente un élément de rattachement avec la liberté d'établissement rendant nécessaire, pour la solution dudit litige, de procéder à l'interprétation préjudicielle sollicitée de l'article 49 TFUE. Plus particulièrement, cette juridiction ne fait pas expressément valoir qu'elle se trouve dans l'une des hypothèses visées aux points 50 à 53 de l'arrêt du 15 novembre 2016, Ullens de Schooten (C-268/15, EU:C:2016:874) (voir, en ce sens, arrêt ASADE I, points 47 et 48 ainsi que jurisprudence citée).

37 En outre, si, conformément à une jurisprudence constante de la Cour, la passation des marchés qui, eu égard à leur valeur, ne relèvent pas du champ d'application des directives en matière de passation des marchés publics est néanmoins soumise aux règles fondamentales et aux principes généraux du traité FUE, en particulier aux principes d'égalité de traitement et de non-discrimination en raison de la nationalité ainsi qu'à l'obligation de transparence qui en découle, pour autant que ces marchés présentent un intérêt transfrontalier certain, la juridiction de renvoi reste en défaut de fournir à la Cour les données de nature à prouver, en l'occurrence, l'existence d'un tel intérêt transfrontalier (voir, par analogie, arrêt ASADE I, point 49 et jurisprudence citée).

38 Partant, la deuxième question préjudicielle est manifestement irrecevable en ce qu'elle porte sur l'interprétation de l'article 49 TFUE.

39 Sous le bénéfice de cette précision liminaire, il importe, en premier lieu, de relever que, pour des motifs analogues à ceux énoncés aux points 53 à 71 de l'arrêt ASADE I, il découle du dossier dont dispose la Cour que la réglementation nationale en cause au principal semble régir, à tout le moins en partie, la passation de marchés publics de services soumis à la directive 2014/24.

40 En deuxième lieu, d'une part, il ressort de la demande de décision préjudicielle que les services susceptibles de faire l'objet d'un accord d'action conventionnée sont des services de santé ainsi que des services de collaboration et de soutien aux soins de santé, de sorte qu'une partie à tout le moins de ces services relève des services énumérés à l'annexe XIV de la directive 2014/24.

41 D'autre part, la deuxième question préjudicielle porte sur l'appréciation non pas des dispositions de cette directive généralement applicables aux procédures de passation de marchés publics, mais uniquement des articles 74 à 77 de ladite directive, lesquels instituent précisément un régime simplifié de passation des marchés publics ayant pour objet des services relevant de cette annexe XIV.

42 Partant, il y a lieu d'examiner cette deuxième question au regard uniquement des articles 74 à 77 de la directive 2014/24.

43 En troisième lieu, il importe de relever qu'un pouvoir adjudicateur ne peut attribuer un marché public à une organisation sur le fondement de la procédure prévue à l'article 77 de la directive 2014/24 que si plusieurs conditions cumulatives sont remplies. Au nombre de ces conditions figure celle, visée au paragraphe 3 de cet article, selon laquelle la durée maximale du marché ne peut être supérieure à trois ans (voir, en ce sens, arrêt ASADE I, points 76 à 78).

44 Or, en l'occurrence, il ressort de l'article 12 du décret 62/2017 que la durée des accords d'action conventionnée en cause au principal peut atteindre quatre ans, avec la possibilité de prorogations successives à concurrence d'une durée maximale de dix ans.

45 Partant, une réglementation telle que celle en cause au principal ne satisfait pas aux conditions requises pour relever du régime d'exception prévu à l'article 77 de la directive 2014/24.

46 Cela étant, cette disposition ne saurait être considérée comme couvrant, de manière exhaustive, les cas dans lesquels les marchés publics ayant pour objet la prestation d'un service visé à l'annexe XIV de la directive 2014/24 peuvent être réservés à certaines catégories d'opérateurs économiques (voir, en ce sens, arrêt ASADE I, points 80 à 82).

47 En quatrième lieu, l'article 76 de la directive 2014/24, qui fixe les règles, dérogatoires au droit commun, applicables à la passation de l'ensemble des marchés publics portant sur les services mentionnés dans l'annexe XIV de celle-ci, reconnaît un large pouvoir d'appréciation aux États membres pour organiser le choix des prestataires de tels services. En effet, en vertu de cet article 76, les États membres doivent, d'une part, mettre en place des règles de passation imposant aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs de respecter les principes de transparence et d'égalité de traitement des opérateurs économiques et, d'autre part, veiller à ce que ces règles permettent aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs de tenir compte des spécificités des services faisant l'objet de telles procédures de passation. À ce dernier égard, les États membres doivent autoriser les pouvoirs adjudicateurs à prendre en compte la nécessité d'assurer la qualité, la continuité, l'accessibilité, le caractère abordable, la disponibilité et l'exhaustivité de ces services, les besoins spécifiques des différentes catégories d'utilisateurs, la participation et l'implication des utilisateurs ainsi que l'innovation (voir, en ce sens, arrêt ASADE I, points 83 à 85).

48 Il convient, dès lors, d'examiner si les principes d'égalité de traitement et de transparence visés à l'article 76 de la directive 2014/24 s'opposent à une réglementation nationale réservant, afin de satisfaire à des impératifs sociaux, aux entités sans but lucratif, y compris lorsqu'elles ne remplissent pas les conditions prévues à l'article 77 de cette directive, le droit de participer aux procédures d'attribution des marchés publics ayant pour objet la prestation de services tels que ceux visés au point 20 de la présente ordonnance.

49 S'agissant, premièrement, du principe d'égalité de traitement des opérateurs économiques, le fait que les entités privées à but lucratif soient privées de la possibilité de participer à de telles procédures d'attribution des marchés publics constitue une différence de traitement entre les opérateurs économiques contraire à ce principe, à moins que cette différence ne se justifie par des considérations objectives (arrêt ASADE I, point 87).

50 En l'occurrence, sous réserve d'une vérification par la juridiction de renvoi, le recours exclusif aux entités privées sans but lucratif afin d'assurer la fourniture des services sociaux et de santé pouvant faire l'objet d'un accord d'action conventionnée paraît être motivé tant par les principes d'universalité et de solidarité, propres à un système d'assistance sociale, que par des raisons d'efficacité économique et d'adéquation, en tant qu'il permet que ces services d'intérêt général soient assurés dans des conditions d'équilibre économique sur le plan budgétaire par des entités constituées essentiellement en vue de servir l'intérêt général et dont les décisions ne sont pas guidées, comme le relève le gouvernement espagnol, par des considérations purement commerciales (voir, en ce sens, arrêt ASADE I, point 90 et jurisprudence citée).

51 Lorsqu'elle est motivée par de telles considérations, l'exclusion des entités privées à but lucratif des procédures de passation des marchés publics ayant pour objet la fourniture de tels services n'est pas contraire au principe d'égalité, pour autant que cette exclusion contribue effectivement à la finalité sociale ainsi qu'à la poursuite des objectifs de solidarité et d'efficacité budgétaire sur lesquels ce système est fondé (arrêt ASADE I, point 91 et jurisprudence citée).

52 Il importe encore de souligner, s'agissant de cet objectif d'efficacité budgétaire, que l'exclusion des entités privées à but lucratif de ces procédures de passation n'est pas contraire au droit de l'Union au seul motif qu'une procédure d'attribution qui leur aurait été ouverte aurait éventuellement pu permettre de fournir le même service d'aide à la personne à moindre coût pour le pouvoir adjudicateur. En effet, l'efficacité budgétaire doit, dans le contexte de la fourniture des services en cause au principal, être appréhendée au regard des spécificités inhérentes à cette fourniture, tenant à la nécessité d'assurer que l'exclusion des entités à but lucratif contribue effectivement à la finalité sociale ainsi qu'aux objectifs de solidarité poursuivis par ce pouvoir adjudicateur.

53 Il s'ensuit que le principe d'égalité de traitement des opérateurs économiques, tel qu'il est désormais consacré à l'article 76 de la directive 2014/24, autorise les États membres à réserver le droit de participer à la procédure d'attribution des marchés publics de services de santé et de services sociaux, énumérés à l'annexe XIV de cette directive, aux entités privées sans but lucratif, y compris à celles qui ne sont pas strictement bénévoles, pour autant, d'une part, que les éventuels bénéfices qui résultent de l'exécution de ces marchés soient réinvestis par ces entités en vue d'atteindre l'objectif social d'intérêt général qu'elles poursuivent et, d'autre part, que l'ensemble des conditions rappelées aux points 50 et 51 de la présente ordonnance soient remplies (voir, en ce sens, arrêt ASADE I, point 95).

54 En revanche, l'article 76 de la directive 2014/24 s'oppose à ce que de tels marchés publics puissent être attribués directement, sans mise en concurrence, à une entité sans but lucratif autre qu'une entité bénévole. En effet, cet article requiert que, avant de procéder à une telle attribution, le pouvoir adjudicateur compare et classe les offres respectives des différentes entités sans but lucratif ayant manifesté leur intérêt, en ayant notamment égard au prix de ces offres, quand bien même ce prix serait plafonné à la couverture des coûts résultant de la fourniture du service (voir, en ce sens, arrêt ASADE I, point 96 et jurisprudence citée).

55 S'agissant, deuxièmement, du principe de transparence, celui-ci exige de la part du pouvoir adjudicateur un degré de publicité adéquate, permettant, d'une part, une ouverture à la concurrence et, d'autre part, le contrôle de l'impartialité de la procédure d'attribution afin de permettre à tout opérateur intéressé de décider de soumissionner sur le fondement de l'ensemble des informations pertinentes ainsi que de garantir l'absence de risque de favoritisme et d'arbitraire de la part du pouvoir adjudicateur. L'obligation de transparence implique ainsi que toutes les conditions et les modalités de la procédure d'attribution soient formulées de manière claire, précise et univoque, de façon, d'une part, à permettre à tous les soumissionnaires raisonnablement informés et normalement diligents d'en comprendre la portée exacte et de les interpréter de la même manière et, d'autre part, à encadrer le pouvoir discrétionnaire du pouvoir adjudicateur et de mettre celui-ci en mesure de vérifier effectivement si les offres des soumissionnaires correspondent aux critères régissant la procédure en cause (arrêt ASADE I, point 97 et jurisprudence citée).

56 À cet égard, l'article 75 de la directive 2014/24 précise, pour les procédures d'attribution de marchés publics relevant du régime simplifié établi aux articles 74 à 77 de cette directive, les exigences de publicité qui sont requises par le principe de transparence. Or, selon cet article 75, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs qui entendent passer un marché public pour les services visés à l'annexe XIV de ladite directive doivent, en principe, faire connaître leur intention par un avis de marché ou un avis de préinformation qui est publié, conformément à l'article 51 de la même directive, par l'Office des publications de l'Union européenne ou, le cas échéant pour les avis de préinformation, sur leurs profils d'acheteur (arrêt ASADE I, points 99 et 100).

57 En l'occurrence, il semble découler de l'article 4, sous d), de la loi 11/2016 et de l'article 7, paragraphe 6, du décret 62/2017 que la publicité des avis de marché en cause est assurée par la seule publication au Boletín Oficial de Aragón (Journal officiel de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon) et sur le portail de transparence du gouvernement de la Communauté autonome d'Aragon.

58 Par conséquent, si tel était le cas, ce qu'il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier, une telle publication ne constituerait pas une mesure de publicité conforme à l'article 75 de la directive 2014/24.

59 Il résulte des considérations qui précèdent qu'il convient de répondre à la deuxième question préjudicielle que les articles 76 et 77 de la directive 2014/24 doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas à une réglementation nationale qui réserve aux entités sans but lucratif la faculté de conclure, dans le respect des principes de publicité, de concurrence et de transparence, des accords en vertu desquels ces entités fournissent des services sociaux ou de santé d'intérêt général, en contrepartie du remboursement des coûts qu'elles supportent, quelle que soit la valeur estimée de ces services, lorsque le recours à ces accords vise à atteindre des objectifs de solidarité, sans améliorer nécessairement l'adéquation ou l'efficacité budgétaire de la fourniture desdits services par rapport au régime généralement applicable aux procédures de passation de marchés publics, pour autant que,

– d'une part, le cadre légal et conventionnel dans lequel se déploie l'activité desdites entités contribue effectivement à la finalité sociale ainsi qu'à la poursuite des objectifs de solidarité et d'efficacité budgétaire sur lesquels cette réglementation est fondée, et

– d'autre part, le principe de transparence, tel qu'il est notamment précisé à l'article 75 de cette directive, est respecté.

Sur la quatrième question

60 Par sa quatrième question préjudicielle, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 15, paragraphe 2, de la directive 2006/123 doit être interprété en ce sens que la décision d'une autorité publique de réserver la gestion de certains services de santé et sociaux aux seules entités sans but lucratif constitue une exigence imposant au prestataire d'un service d'être constitué sous une forme juridique particulière, au sens de cette disposition. En cas de réponse affirmative à cette question, la juridiction de renvoi demande également si l'article 15, paragraphe 7, de cette directive doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il s'oppose à l'application de cette exigence dans le cas où celle-ci n'a pas été notifiée à la Commission.

61 Selon une jurisprudence constante, dans le cadre de la procédure instituée à l'article 267 TFUE, il appartient au seul juge national, qui est saisi du litige au principal et qui doit assumer la responsabilité de la décision juridictionnelle à intervenir, d'apprécier, au regard des particularités de chaque affaire, tant la nécessité d'une décision préjudicielle pour être en mesure de rendre son jugement que la pertinence des questions qu'il pose à la Cour. Par conséquent, dès lors que les questions posées portent sur l'interprétation du droit de l'Union, la Cour est, en principe, tenue de statuer. Il s'ensuit que les questions portant sur le droit de l'Union bénéficient d'une présomption de pertinence. Le rejet par la Cour d'une demande formée par une juridiction nationale n'est ainsi possible que s'il apparaît de manière manifeste que l'interprétation sollicitée du droit de l'Union n'a aucun rapport avec la réalité ou l'objet du litige au principal, lorsque le problème est de nature hypothétique ou encore lorsque la Cour ne dispose pas des éléments de fait et de droit nécessaires pour répondre de façon utile aux questions qui lui sont posées (arrêt du 22 décembre 2022, Quadrant Amroq Beverages, C-332/21, EU:C:2022:1031, point 32 et jurisprudence citée).

62 Aux termes de son article 2, paragraphe 2, sous f) et j), la directive 2006/123 ne s'applique pas aux services de soins de santé ainsi qu'aux services sociaux relatifs au logement social, à l'aide à l'enfance et à l'aide aux familles et aux personnes se trouvant de manière permanente ou temporaire dans une situation de besoin qui sont assurés par l'État, par des prestataires mandatés par l'État ou par des associations caritatives reconnues comme telles par l'État.

63 À cet égard, il importe de relever, en premier lieu, que, ainsi qu'il ressort de la demande de décision préjudicielle, les services pouvant faire l'objet d'un accord d'action conventionnée en vertu de l'article 3 du décret 62/2017 sont, pour l'essentiel, des services de santé, au sens de l'article 2, paragraphe 2, sous f), de la directive 2006/123, tel qu'interprété par la Cour (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 11 juillet 2013, Femarbel, C-57/12, EU:C:2013:517, points 34 à 39), de sorte que cette directive ne leur est pas applicable.

64 Partant, il est manifeste que, s'agissant de ces services de santé, l'interprétation de l'article 15 de la directive 2006/123, qui est sollicitée par la quatrième question préjudicielle, n'a aucun rapport avec l'objet du litige au principal, de sorte que cette question est, dans cette mesure, manifestement irrecevable.

65 En second lieu, les accords d'action conventionnée en cause au principal peuvent également porter sur des services de collaboration et de soutien aux soins de santé, tels que les transferts vers les centres de santé ou l'accompagnement des patients ou autres, tels qu'ils sont visés à l'article 3, paragraphe 1, sous b), du décret 62/2017.

66 À cet égard, il ressort de l'article 2, paragraphe 2, sous j), de la directive 2006/123, lu conjointement avec le considérant 27 de celle-ci, que seuls les services qui remplissent deux conditions cumulatives relèvent de la notion de « services sociaux » visée à cette disposition (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 11 juillet 2013, Femarbel, C-57/12, EU:C:2013:517, point 42).

67 Premièrement, les activités exercées doivent concerner notamment, comme il est également expliqué dans le Manuel relatif à la mise en œuvre de la directive « services », l'aide aux personnes se trouvant dans une situation de besoin, en raison, entre autres, d'un manque d'indépendance (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 11 juillet 2013, Femarbel, C-57/12, EU:C:2013:517, point 43).

68 Deuxièmement, les services concernés doivent être assurés, notamment, par des prestataires privés qui ont été mandatés par l'État au moyen d'un acte confiant de manière claire et transparente une véritable obligation d'assurer lesdits services, dans le respect de certaines conditions spécifiques d'exercice visant, notamment, à s'assurer que ces services sont offerts conformément aux exigences quantitatives et qualitatives établies et de sorte à garantir l'égalité d'accès aux prestations, sous réserve en principe d'une compensation financière adéquate dont le mode de calcul doit être préalablement défini de manière objective et transparente (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 11 juillet 2013, Femarbel, C-57/12, EU:C:2013:517, points 44 à 48 et 53).

69 En l'occurrence, il semble ressortir de la réglementation nationale en cause au principal, en particulier des articles 4 à 6 de la loi 11/2016 ainsi que de l'article 6 du décret 62/2017, que les services de collaboration et de soutien aux soins de santé qui peuvent faire l'objet d'accords d'action conventionnée remplissent les deux conditions cumulatives explicitées aux points 67 et 68 de la présente ordonnance.

70 Par conséquent, il est vraisemblable, au vu du dossier dont dispose la Cour, que ces services relèvent de la catégorie des services sociaux visés à l'article 2, paragraphe 2, sous j), de la directive 2006/123 et, partant, qu'ils doivent également être exclus du champ d'application de cette directive.

71 En tout état de cause, ce même dossier ne permet pas de déterminer si ces services ne doivent pas être exclus du champ d'application de la directive 2006/123 au titre de cet article 2, paragraphe 2, sous j).

72 Dès lors, la juridiction de renvoi n'a pas mis la Cour en mesure de s'assurer que les services mentionnés au point 65 de la présente ordonnance relèvent effectivement du champ d'application de la directive 2006/123.

73 Il résulte des considérations qui précèdent que la quatrième question préjudicielle est manifestement irrecevable.

Sur les dépens

74 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens. Les frais exposés pour soumettre des observations à la Cour, autres que ceux desdites parties, ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un remboursement.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (neuvième chambre) dit pour droit :

Les articles 76 et 77 de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE, doivent être interprétés en ce sens que :

ils ne s'opposent pas à une réglementation nationale qui réserve aux entités sans but lucratif la faculté de conclure, dans le respect des principes de publicité, de concurrence et de transparence, des accords en vertu desquels ces entités fournissent des services sociaux ou de santé d'intérêt général, en contrepartie du remboursement des coûts qu'elles supportent, quelle que soit la valeur estimée de ces services, lorsque le recours à ces accords vise à atteindre des objectifs de solidarité, sans améliorer nécessairement l'adéquation ou l'efficacité budgétaire de la fourniture desdits services par rapport au régime généralement applicable aux procédures de passation de marchés publics, pour autant que,

– d'une part, le cadre légal et conventionnel dans lequel se déploie l'activité desdites entités contribue effectivement à la finalité sociale ainsi qu'à la poursuite des objectifs de solidarité et d'efficacité budgétaire sur lesquels cette réglementation est fondée, et

– d'autre part, le principe de transparence, tel qu'il est notamment précisé à l'article 75 de cette directive, est respecté.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 56 and 69 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), Articles 38 and 49 of Directive 2009/81/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 July 2009 on the coordination of procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts by contracting authorities or entities in the fields of defence and security, and amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (OJ 2009 L 216, p. 76), and Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (‘the Charter’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Veridos GmbH, on the one hand, and the Ministar na vatreshnite raboti na Republika Bulgaria (Minister for the Interior of the Republic of Bulgaria) and the consortium Mühlbauer ID Services GmbH – S&T, on the other, concerning a decision ranking tenderers and selecting the successful tenderer in respect of a public contract.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 2014/24

3 Article 56 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘General principles’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof, that contracts are to be awarded on the basis of criteria laid down in accordance with Articles 67 to 69 thereof, provided that the contracting authority has verified that a certain number of conditions are fulfilled in accordance with Articles 59 to 61 of that directive.

4 Article 69 of that directive, entitled ‘Abnormally low tenders’, provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities shall require economic operators to explain the price or costs proposed in the tender where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, supplies or services.

2. The explanations referred to in paragraph 1 may in particular relate to:

(a) the economics of the manufacturing process, of the services provided or of the construction method;

(b) the technical solutions chosen or any exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the supply of the products or services or for the execution of the work;

(c) the originality of the work, supplies or services proposed by the tenderer;

(d) compliance with obligations referred to in Article 18(2);

(e) compliance with obligations referred to in Article 71;

(f) the possibility of the tenderer obtaining State aid.

3. The contracting authority shall assess the information provided by consulting the tenderer. It may only reject the tender where the evidence supplied does not satisfactorily account for the low level of price or costs proposed, taking into account the elements referred to in paragraph 2.

Contracting authorities shall reject the tender, where they have established that the tender is abnormally low because it does not comply with applicable obligations referred to in Article 18(2).

4. Where a contracting authority establishes that a tender is abnormally low because the tenderer has obtained State aid, the tender may be rejected on that ground alone only after consultation with the tenderer where the latter is unable to prove, within a sufficient time limit fixed by the contracting authority, that the aid in question was compatible with the internal market within the meaning of Article 107 TFEU. Where the contracting authority rejects a tender in those circumstances, it shall inform the Commission thereof.

5. Upon request, Member States shall make available to other Member States by means of administrative cooperation any information at [their] disposal, such as laws, regulations, universally applicable collective agreements or national technical standards, relating to the evidence and documents produced in relation to details listed in paragraph 2.'

Directive 2009/81

5 Under Article 35 of Directive 2009/81, entitled 'Information for candidates and tenderers':

'1. The contracting authorities/entities shall, at the earliest opportunity, inform candidates and tenderers of decisions reached concerning the award of a contract or the conclusion of a framework agreement, including the grounds for any decision not to award a contract or conclude a framework agreement for which there has been competitive tendering or to recommence the procedure; that information shall be given in writing upon request to the contracting authorities/entities.

2. At the request of the party concerned, the contracting authority/entity shall, subject to paragraph 3, at the earliest opportunity and at the latest within 15 days of receipt of the written request for information, inform the parties as follows:

(a) any unsuccessful candidate of the reasons for the rejection of the application;

(b) any unsuccessful tenderer of the reasons for the rejection of the tender, including, in particular, for the cases referred to in Article 18(4) and (5) the reasons for its decision of non-equivalence or its decision that the works, supplies or services do not meet the performance or functional requirements, and in the cases referred to in Articles 22 and 23, the reasons for its decision of non-conformity with the requirements of security of information and security of supply;

(c) any tenderer which has made an admissible tender that has been rejected, of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected, as well as the name of the successful tenderer or the parties to the framework agreement.

3. Contracting authorities/entities may decide to withhold certain information on the contract award or the conclusion of the framework agreements referred to in paragraph 1 where release of such information would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest, in particular defence and/or security interests, would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of economic operators, whether public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between them.'

6 Article 38 of that directive, entitled 'Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts', provides:

'1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 47 and 49, taking into account Article 19, after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded under Articles 39 or 40 has been checked by contracting authorities/entities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 41 to 46 and, where appropriate, with the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in paragraph 3.

2. Contracting authorities/entities may require candidates to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 41 and 42.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 41 and 42 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

These minimum levels shall be indicated in the contract notice.

3. In restricted procedures, negotiated procedures with publication of a contract notice and competitive dialogues, contracting authorities/entities may limit the number of suitable candidates they will invite to tender or with which they will conduct a dialogue. In this case:

– the contracting authorities/entities shall indicate in the contract notice the objective and non-discriminatory criteria or rules they intend to apply, the minimum number of candidates they intend to invite and, where appropriate, the maximum number. The minimum number of candidates they intend to invite may not be less than three;

– subsequently, the contracting authorities/entities shall invite a number of candidates at least equal to the minimum number set in advance, provided a sufficient number of suitable candidates is available[.]

Where the number of candidates meeting the selection criteria and the minimum levels of ability is below the minimum number, the contracting authority/entity may continue the procedure by inviting the candidate or candidates with the required capabilities.

If the contracting authority/entity considers that the number of suitable candidates is too low to ensure genuine competition, it may suspend the procedure and republish the initial contract notice in accordance with Article 30(2) and Article 32, fixing a new deadline for the submission of requests to participate. In this case, the candidates selected upon the first publication and those selected upon the second shall be invited in accordance with Article 34. This option shall be without prejudice to the ability of the contracting authority/entity to cancel the ongoing procurement procedure and launch a new procedure.

4. In the context of an award procedure, the contracting authority/entity may not include economic operators other than those which made a request to participate, or candidates without the requisite capabilities.

5. Where the contracting authorities/entities exercise the option of reducing the number of solutions to be discussed or of tenders to be negotiated, as provided for in Article 26(3) and Article 27(4), they shall do so by applying the award criteria stated in the contract notice or the contract documents. In the final stage, the number arrived at shall make for genuine competition in so far as there are enough solutions or suitable candidates.’

7 Article 49 of that directive, entitled ‘Abnormally low tenders’, provides:

‘1. If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services, the contracting authority/entity shall, before it rejects those tenders, request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant.

Those details may relate in particular to:

(a) the economics of the construction method, manufacturing process or services provided;

(b) the technical solutions chosen and/or any exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the execution of the work or for the supply of the goods or services;

(c) the originality of the work, supplies or services proposed by the tenderer;

(d) compliance with the provisions relating to employment protection and working conditions in force at the place where the work, service or supply is to be performed;

(e) the possibility of the tenderer obtaining State aid.

2. The contracting authority/entity shall verify those constituent elements by consulting the tenderer, taking account of the evidence supplied.

3. Where a contracting authority/entity establishes that a tender is abnormally low because the tenderer has obtained State aid, the tender can be rejected on that ground alone only after consultation with the tenderer where the latter is unable to prove, within a sufficient time limit fixed by the contracting authority/entity, that the aid in question was granted legally. Where the contracting authority/entity rejects a tender in those circumstances, it shall inform the Commission thereof.’

8 Article 55 of that directive is entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’; paragraphs 2 and 4 thereof are worded as follows:

‘2. Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities/entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 56 to 62, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.

4. Member States shall ensure that review procedures are available, under detailed rules which Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.’

Bulgarian law

9 Article 72 of the Zakon za obshtestvenite porachki (Law on Public Procurement), entitled ‘Abnormally low tenders’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘If, in a tenderer’s tender, an element that is linked to price or costs and is subject to assessment is more than 20% lower than the mean value of the tenders submitted by the other tenderers in respect of the same criterion for assessment, the contracting authority shall request a detailed written explanation of how that element was prepared, to be submitted within five days of receiving the request.’

10 Under Article 212 of that law, the Komisia za zashtita na konkurentsiata (Commission for Protection of Competition, Bulgaria) is to rule on complaints made against the contracting authority’s decision within one month or 15 days from the initiation of the proceedings and a reasoned decision is to be drawn up and published at the latest within seven days of the ruling on the complaint.

11 In addition, Article 216 of that law provides for an expedited procedure accompanied by shortened time limits for certain procedural steps. In accordance with paragraph 6 of that article, the Varhoven administrativen sad (Supreme Administrative Court, Bulgaria) is to rule within one month of the date of an appeal in cassation against the ruling of the Commission for Protection of Competition being lodged with it, and its decision is final.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 By a decision of 15 August 2018, the zamestnik-ministar na vatreshnite raboti (Deputy Minister for the Interior) launched a ‘restricted’ procurement procedure concerning the planning, establishment and management of a Generation 2019 system for the issue of Bulgarian identity documents. In that regard, an auxiliary commission was appointed to preselect candidates and to examine, assess and rank the tenders.

13 Following that preselection, Veridos and the consortium Mühlbauer ID Services GmbH – S&T were invited to submit tenders. By a decision of the Deputy Minister for the Interior of 29 April 2020, the contract was awarded to that consortium.

14 Veridos brought a complaint against that decision before the Commission for Protection of Competition, which, by a decision of 25 June 2020, rejected that complaint. On 13 July 2020, Veridos lodged an appeal in cassation against that decision before the Varhoven administrativen sad (Supreme Administrative Court), which is the referring court.

15 According to that court, the request for a preliminary ruling is intended to establish whether the contracting authority is under an obligation to verify whether an abnormally low tender exists, in accordance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment enshrined in EU law, in order to ensure an objective comparison of tenders and to determine, under conditions of effective competition, which tender is the most economically advantageous, without that tender, however, being abnormally low such as to distort competition.

16 In addition, that court states that Article 72(1) of the Law on Public Procurement governs the criterion for verifying whether a tender is abnormally low by requiring that that tender be ‘more than 20% lower than the mean value of the tenders submitted by the other tenderers in respect of the same criterion for assessment’. Thus, the Bulgarian legislature implicitly requires that there be at least three tenders, since one of them must be assessed against the mean value of the other two. In that regard, the referring court states that it is in that context that the Commission for Protection of Competition found that that provision did not apply, since only two tenders had been submitted, and that, consequently, that mean value could not be calculated.

17 The referring court adds that the contracting authority, namely the Deputy Minister for the Interior, had no algorithm drawn up and announced in advance, which could be subject to review in the light of EU law, for the purposes of assessing and analysing whether an abnormally low tender exists.

18 Thus, that court states that the existence of a criterion which is laid down by law but inapplicable in practice, as well as the absence of any other criterion announced in advance such as to allow abnormally low tenders to be identified, raises the questions, first, whether the contracting authority is exempt from the obligation to verify whether such a tender exists, given that the Court of Justice has expressly stated, in its case-law, that the contracting authority must be satisfied that the tenders submitted to it are genuine, and, second, whether the contracting authority is always required to state reasons for its finding that an abnormally low tender exists or whether it may defend its decision ranking tenderers by providing reasons as regards the substance in judicial review proceedings. In that context, the referring court states that the latter question must be analysed in the light of the case-law of the Court of Justice according to which the reasons for such a decision may not be explained for the first time before a court except under exceptional circumstances.

19 In those circumstances, the Varhoven administrativen sad (Supreme Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Is Article 56 of Directive [2014/24] in conjunction with Article 69 thereof, or, respectively, Article 38 of Directive [2009/81] in conjunction with Article 49 thereof, to be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority, where it is objectively impossible to apply the criterion laid down in national law for the evaluation of an abnormally low tender and in the absence of a different criterion selected by the contracting authority and announced in advance, is not required to verify whether an abnormally low tender exists?

(2) Is Article 56 of Directive 2014/24 in conjunction with Article 69 thereof, or, respectively, Article 38 of Directive 2009/81 in conjunction with Article 49 thereof, to be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority is required to verify whether abnormally low tenders exist only if there is a suspicion regarding any tender; or, conversely, is the contracting authority required to always ensure that the received tenders are genuine, and state the relevant reasons?

(3) Does such a requirement apply to the contracting authority if only two tenders have been received during the procedure for the award of a public contract?

(4) Is Article 47 of the [Charter] to be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority’s assessment as regards a lack of suspicion that an abnormally low tender exists, or, respectively, that contracting authority’s conviction that the first-ranked tenderer has submitted a genuine tender, is subject to judicial review?

(5) Should the previous question be answered in the affirmative: is Article 47 of the [Charter] to be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority in a procedure for the award of a public contract which has not verified whether an abnormally low tender exists is required to provide justification and reasons as to why there is no suspicion that an abnormally low tender has been submitted, in other words, that the first-ranked tender is genuine?’

The request for an expedited procedure

20 The referring court has requested that the Court determine the present case pursuant to an expedited procedure under Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice.

21 In support of its request, that court, first, states that the public contract at issue in the main proceedings concerns the issue and renewal of Bulgarian identity documents and that, as such, it is directly linked to national security and the legitimate legal status of Bulgarian nationals, and second, refers to the existence of an expedited procedure accompanied by shortened time limits provided for in Articles 212 and 216 of the Law on Public Procurement as regards certain procedural steps.

22 In addition, that court states that the need to determine the present reference for a preliminary ruling pursuant to the expedited procedure provided for in Article 105 of the Rules of Procedure does not stem from the financial aspect of the public contract concerned, but from the consequences of its implementation and the legal relationships linked to the main judicial proceedings. Those proceedings concern the identity documents of an indefinite number of Bulgarian citizens and their ability to exercise their fundamental rights, such as freedom of movement, freedom of establishment and the right to vote.

23 Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure provides that, at the request of the referring court or tribunal or, exceptionally, of his or her own motion, the President of the Court may, where the nature of the case requires that it be dealt with within a short time, after hearing the Judge-Rapporteur and the Advocate General, decide that a reference for a preliminary ruling is to be determined pursuant to an expedited procedure derogating from the provisions of those rules.

24 In that connection, as regards, first of all, the fact that the questions raised by the present case may affect a large number of Bulgarian nationals and legal relationships, it must be borne in mind that the expedited procedure referred to in that provision is a procedural instrument intended to address matters of exceptional urgency (judgment of 28 April 2022, Caruter, C-642/20, EU:C:2022:308, paragraph 21 and the case-law cited).

25 The large number of persons or legal situations which may be affected by the decision that a referring court must give after making a reference to the Court for a preliminary ruling does not, as such, constitute an exceptional circumstance justifying the application of the expedited procedure (judgment of 3 March 2022, Presidenza del Consiglio dei Ministri and Others (Trainee specialist doctors), C-590/20, EU:C:2022:150, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited).

26 Next, although the referring court refers to the significant and sensitive nature of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings, relating to the issue and renewal of Bulgarian identity documents, and of the responses that the Court is likely to give to the questions which have been put to it, in the field of EU law at issue, those separate elements are not such as to justify, in themselves, the present case being determined pursuant to the expedited procedure (see, to that effect, order of the President of the Court of 25 February 2021, Sea Watch, C-14/21 and C-15/21, EU:C:2021:149, paragraph 24).

27 In any event, it is not apparent from the request referred to in paragraph 20 of the present judgment in what way the length of the proceedings before the Court is likely to affect the production or issue of such documents.

28 In addition, it is apparent from the Court’s case-law that the mere interest of litigants in determining as quickly as possible the scope of their rights under EU law, while legitimate, is not such as to establish the existence of an exceptional circumstance for the purposes of Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure (judgment of 28 April 2022, Phoenix Contact, C-44/21, EU:C:2022:309, paragraph 16 and the case-law cited).

29 Lastly, as regards the existence of short procedural time limits, it must be noted that the requirement for a dispute pending before the Court to be dealt with rapidly cannot derive solely from the fact that the referring court is required to ensure the rapid settlement of the dispute or from the mere fact that the delay or suspension of the works concerned by a public contract could have adverse effects on the persons concerned (judgment of 28 April 2022, Caruter, C-642/20, EU:C:2022:308, paragraph 24 and the case-law cited).

30 In those circumstances, on 1 February 2021, after hearing the Judge-Rapporteur and the Advocate General, the President of the Court decided to reject the request referred to in paragraph 20 of the present judgment.

Consideration of the questions referred 31 As a preliminary point, it must be noted that the referring court is asking the Court to interpret both Articles 38 and 49 of Directive 2009/81 and Articles 56 and 69 of Directive 2014/24. That being said, since that court states that, even though the public contract at issue has aspects coming within the scope of Directive 2014/24, the contracting authority decided to award a single contract in accordance with the rules of Directive 2009/81, it is appropriate to interpret the relevant provisions of that latter directive. It is important, in that regard, to point out that that interpretation can be transposed to the provisions of Directive 2014/24 where those provisions are, in essence, identical to those of Directive 2009/81.

The first to third questions

32 By its first to third questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 38 and 49 of Directive 2009/81 are to be interpreted as imposing on the contracting authority the obligation to verify whether an abnormally low tender exists, even in the absence of any suspicion regarding a tender or where the criterion laid down for that purpose by national legislation, which implicitly amounts to requiring that there be at least three tenders, does not apply on account of the insufficient number of tenders submitted.

33 EU law does not define the concept of an ‘abnormally low tender’. However, as the Advocate General noted in points 30 to 32 of his Opinion, the outlines of that concept have already been defined by the Court in the context of the interpretation of directives relating to public contracts other than the directive referred to in the preceding paragraph.

34 Thus, the Court has held, on several occasions, that it is for the Member States and, in particular, the contracting authorities to determine the method of calculating an anomaly threshold constituting an abnormally ‘low’ tender (see, inter alia, judgments of 27 November 2001, Lombardini and Mantovani, C-285/99 and C-286/99, EU:C:2001:640, paragraph 67, and of 18 December 2014, Data Medical Service, C-568/13, EU:C:2014:2466, paragraph 49) or to set its value, provided that an objective and non-discriminatory method is used. It has also held that the contracting authority is under an obligation ‘to identify suspect tenders’ (see, to that effect, judgment of 27 November 2001, Lombardini and Mantovani, C-285/99 and C-286/99, EU:C:2001:640, paragraph 55).

35 Furthermore, the Court has stated that the abnormally low nature of a tender must be assessed in relation to the service concerned. Thus, in the course of examining the abnormally low nature of a tender, the contracting authority may, for the purpose of ensuring healthy competition, take into consideration all the factors that are relevant in the light of that service (see, inter alia, judgments of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraphs 29 and 30, and of 18 December 2014, Data Medical Service, C-568/13, EU:C:2014:2466, paragraph 50).

36 In that regard, Articles 38 and 49 of Directive 2009/81 mean that the contracting authority is under an obligation, first, to identify suspect tenders, second, to allow the tenderers concerned to demonstrate their genuineness by asking them to provide the details which it considers appropriate, third, to assess the merits of the information provided by the persons concerned and, fourth, to take a decision as to whether to admit or reject those tenders. It is only on condition that the reliability of a tender is, a priori, doubtful that the obligations arising from those articles are imposed on the contracting authority (see, by analogy, judgment of 19 October 2017, Agriconsulting Europe v Commission, C-198/16 P, EU:C:2017:784, paragraphs 51 and 52 and the case-law cited).

37 As the Advocate General noted in point 38 of his Opinion, the contracting authority has to identify tenders which appear suspect, and are therefore subject to the inter partes examination procedure provided for in Article 49 of Directive 2009/81, in the light of all the features of the subject matter of the invitation to tender concerned. Comparison with other, competing tenders, however useful it may be in certain cases for the purpose of identifying any anomalies, cannot constitute the sole criterion used by the contracting authority in that regard.

38 The examination of all the components relating to the invitation to tender and the contract documents concerned must enable the contracting authority to determine whether, despite the existence of distance between the suspect tender and the tenders submitted by the other tenderers, that tender is sufficiently genuine. In that regard, the contracting authority may rely on national rules which define a particular method for identifying abnormally low tenders.

39 Nevertheless, in the light of the foregoing considerations, it must be stated that Directive 2009/81 does not preclude the abnormally low nature of a tender from being assessed where only two tenders have been submitted. On the contrary, the inapplicability of the criterion laid down by national law for the purpose of assessing the abnormally low nature of a tender is not such as to exempt the contracting authority from its obligation, set out in paragraph 36 of the present judgment, to identify suspect tenders and to carry out, where there are such tenders, an inter partes examination.

40 It follows from the foregoing that Articles 38 and 49 of Directive 2009/81 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority, where there is suspicion that a tender is of an abnormally low nature, is required to verify whether this is actually the case by taking account of all the relevant components of the invitation to tender and the contract documents, without the impossibility of applying the criteria laid down for that purpose by a piece of national legislation or the number of tenders submitted being relevant in that regard.

The fourth and fifth questions

41 By its fourth and fifth questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 55(2) of Directive 2009/81, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, is to be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority's finding that there is no suspicion as regards the existence of an abnormally low tender or its conclusion that the tender submitted by a first-ranked tenderer is genuine is subject to judicial review and whether the contracting authority is then required to state the reasons for its finding in the decision awarding the contract.

42 As the Advocate General noted in points 47 and 48 of his Opinion, in referring to abnormally low tenders, Article 49 of Directive 2009/81 does not impose on a contracting authority an indiscriminate obligation explicitly to state its views on whether the tender concerned might be of an abnormally low nature. Rather, under that article, that obligation arises if, 'for a given contract', the contracting authority considers that 'tenders' appear to be 'abnormally low in relation to the … services'.

43 In that regard, it is apparent from Article 35 of Directive 2009/81 that the contracting authorities must, at the earliest opportunity, inform candidates and tenderers of decisions reached concerning the award of a contract and that that information is to be given in writing upon request. In particular, where the party concerned makes a request in writing, the contracting authorities are to communicate to it, inter alia, adequate evidence substantiating the essential decisions taken during the procedure for the award of a contract. Consequently, where a contracting authority finds that a tender appears to be abnormally low and therefore conducts an inter partes examination procedure with the tenderer concerned, it is necessary to make a record of the result in writing.

44 Thus, it is only where there is suspicion that a tender is of an abnormally low nature, and following the inter partes examination procedure referred to in paragraph 37 of the present judgment, that the contracting authority must formally adopt a reasoned decision admitting or rejecting the tender in question.

45 However, in the present case, it is apparent from the file before the Court that the contracting authority neither initiated the inter partes examination procedure provided for in Article 49 of Directive 2009/81 nor adopted an express decision in that regard.

46 In that situation, the obligation arising from Article 55(2) of Directive 2009/81 and Article 47 of the Charter, according to which the decision to award the contract at issue must be amenable to effective review, requires that tenderers who consider themselves wronged must be able to challenge that decision by claiming that the successful tender should have been classified as ‘abnormally low’.

47 In that regard, the fact that a tender is not regarded as being ‘abnormally low’, without this being set out in a specific statement of reasons, cannot, as such, lead to the annulment of the procedure for the award of a contract, since the EU legislature has not imposed on contracting authorities the obligation to adopt an express reasoned decision finding that there are no abnormally low tenders.

48 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the fourth and fifth questions is that Article 55(2) of Directive 2009/81, read in conjunction with Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as meaning that, where a contracting authority has failed to initiate a procedure to verify whether a tender might be of an abnormally low nature, on the ground that it considered that none of the tenders submitted to it was of such a nature, its assessment may be subject to judicial review in the context of proceedings against the decision to award the contract at issue.

Costs

49 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Articles 38 and 49 of Directive 2009/81/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 July 2009 on the coordination of procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts by contracting authorities or entities in the fields of defence and security, and amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority, where there is suspicion that a tender is of an abnormally low nature, is required to verify whether this is actually the case by taking account of all the relevant components of the invitation to tender and the contract documents, without the impossibility of applying the criteria laid down for that purpose by a piece of national legislation or the number of tenders submitted being relevant in that regard.

2. Article 55(2) of Directive 2009/81, read in conjunction with Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, must be interpreted as meaning that, where a contracting authority has failed to initiate a procedure to verify whether a tender might be of an abnormally low nature, on the ground that it considered that none of the tenders submitted to it was of such a nature, its assessment may be subject to judicial review in the context of proceedings against the decision to award the contract at issue.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA
delivered on 24 February 2022(1)

Case C-669/20

Veridos GmbH
v
Ministar na vatreshnite raboti na Republika Bulgaria,
Mühlbauer ID Services GmbH – S&T

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Varhoven administrativen sad (Supreme Administrative Court, Bulgaria))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts – Directive 2014/24/EU – Directive 2009/81/EC – Setting of a criterion for assessing an abnormally low tender – Existence of at least three tenders)

1. Where certain public contracts are required to be awarded to the most economically advantageous tender or the tender with the lowest price, EU law permits the contracting authority to reject 'abnormally low tenders' for which there is no satisfactory justification.

2. In this request for a preliminary ruling, a number of questions are referred in connection with the conclusion of a public contract for the planning, establishment and management of a system for the issue of Bulgarian identity documents. The referring court seeks to ascertain, in summary:

– Under what conditions and with what scope the contracting authority has an obligation to verify whether any abnormally low tenders exist, for the purposes of Directive 2009/81/EC (2) and Directive 2014/24/EU. (3)

– At what time a judicial review of a contracting authority's assessment ruling out the existence of an abnormally low tender has to be carried out, and whether reasons must be given for that assessment.

I. Legal framework

A. European Union law

1. Directive 2014/24

3. Recital 90 states:

'Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria that ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment, with a view to ensuring an objective comparison of the relative value of the tenders in order to determine, in conditions of effective competition, which tender is the most economically advantageous tender. …

In order to encourage a greater quality orientation of public procurement, Member States should be permitted to prohibit or restrict use of price only or cost only to assess the most economically advantageous tender where they deem this appropriate.

To ensure compliance with the principle of equal treatment in the award of contracts, contracting authorities should be obliged to create the necessary transparency to enable all tenderers to be reasonably informed of the criteria and arrangements which will be applied in the contract award decision. Contracting authorities should therefore be obliged to indicate the contract award criteria and the relative weighting given to each of those criteria. …'

4. Recital 92 reads:

'When assessing the best price–quality ratio contracting authorities should determine the economic and qualitative criteria linked to the subject matter of the contract that they will use for that purpose. Those criteria should thus allow for a comparative assessment of the level of performance offered by each tender in the light of the subject matter of the contract, as defined in the technical specifications. In the context of the best price–quality ratio, a non-exhaustive list of possible award criteria which include environmental and social aspects is set out in this Directive. Contracting authorities should be encouraged to choose award criteria that allow them to obtain high-quality works, supplies and services that are optimally suited to their needs.

The chosen award criteria should not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority and they should ensure the possibility of effective and fair competition and be accompanied by arrangements that allow the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified.

5. Article 56 ('General principles') provides:

'1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of criteria laid down in accordance with Articles 67 to 69, provided that the contracting authority has verified in accordance with Articles 59 to 61 that all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

…'

6. Article 69 ('Abnormally low tenders') provides:

'1. Contracting authorities shall require economic operators to explain the price or costs proposed in the tender where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, supplies or services.

3. The contracting authority shall assess the information provided by consulting the tenderer. It may only reject the tender where the evidence supplied does not satisfactorily account for the low level of price or costs proposed …'

2. Directive 2009/81

7. Recital 15 reads:

'The award of contracts concluded in the Member States by contracting entities as referred to in Directive 2004/17/EC … and by contracting authorities as referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC … is subject to compliance with the principles of the Treaty and in particular the free movement of goods, the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, and with the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency.

8. Recital 69 is worded as follows:

‘Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in a transparent and objective manner under conditions of effective competition. As a result, it is appropriate to allow the application of two award criteria only: “the lowest price” and “the most economically advantageous tender”.’

9. Pursuant to Article 38 (‘Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts’):

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 47 and 49, taking into account Article 19, after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded under Articles 39 or 40 has been checked by contracting authorities/entities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 41 to 46 and, where appropriate, with the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in paragraph 3.

10. Article 49 (‘Abnormally low tenders’) states:

‘1. If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services, the contracting authority/entity shall, before it rejects those tenders, request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant.

2. The contracting authority/entity shall verify those constituent elements by consulting the tenderer, taking account of the evidence supplied.

…’

11. Article 55 (‘Scope and availability of review procedures’) provides in paragraph 2:

‘Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities/entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 56 to 62, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed [EU] law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.’

B. Bulgarian law

12. Article 72 of the Zakon za obshtestvenite porachki (Law on Public Procurement), headed ‘Abnormally low tenders’, provides:

‘1. If, in a tenderer’s tender, an element that is linked to price or costs and is subject to assessment is more than 20% lower than the mean value of the tenders submitted by the other tenderers in respect of the same criterion for assessment, the contracting authority shall request a detailed written explanation of how that element was prepared, to be submitted within five days of receiving the request.’

II. Facts, dispute and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

13. The Ministry of the Interior of the Republic of Bulgaria, in its capacity as a contracting authority, initiated a procedure for the award of a public contract, the subject of which was the ‘planning, establishment and management of a Generation 2019 system for the issue of Bulgarian identity documents’. (4)

14. Following the appropriate preselection, Veridos GmbH (‘Veridos’) and the consortium Mühlbauer ID Services GmbH-S&T (‘Mühlbauer’) were invited to submit tenders.

15. The contract was ultimately awarded to Mühlbauer. (5)

16. Veridos challenged the award before the Komisia za zashtita na konkurentsiata (Commission for Protection of Competition, Bulgaria), arguing that the successful tender was abnormally low. (6)

17. By decision of 25 June 2020, the Commission for Protection of Competition rejected the complaint made by Veridos. The Commission for Protection of Competition took the view that Article 72 of the Law on Public Procurement was inapplicable because, as only two tenders had been submitted, it was not possible to calculate the mean value stipulated by that provision for the purpose of determining whether one of those tenders was abnormally low.

18. Veridos appealed against the decision of 25 June 2020 before the Varhoven administrativen sad (Supreme Administrative Court, Bulgaria), which has referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Is Article 56 of Directive [2014/24] in conjunction with Article 69 thereof, or, respectively, Article 38 of Directive [2009/81] in conjunction with Article 49 thereof, to be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority, where it is objectively impossible to apply the criterion laid down in national law for the evaluation of an abnormally low tender and in the absence of a different criterion selected by the contracting authority and announced in advance, is not required to verify whether an abnormally low tender exists?

(2) Is Article 56 of Directive 2014/24 in conjunction with Article 69 thereof, or, respectively, Article 38 of Directive 2009/81 in conjunction with Article 49 thereof, to be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority is required to verify whether abnormally low tenders exist only if there is a suspicion regarding any tender; or, conversely, is the contracting authority required to always ensure that the received tenders are genuine, and state the relevant reasons?

(3) Does such a requirement apply to the contracting authority if only two tenders have been received during the procedure for the award of a public contract?

(4) Is Article 47 of the [Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (‘the Charter’)] to be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority’s assessment as regards a lack of suspicion that an abnormally low tender exists, or, respectively, that contracting authority’s conviction that the first-ranked tenderer has submitted a genuine tender, is subject to judicial review?

(5) Should the previous question be answered in the affirmative: is Article 47 of the [Charter] to be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority in a procedure for the award of a public contract which has not verified whether an abnormally low tender exists is required to provide justification and reasons as to why there is no suspicion that an abnormally low tender has been submitted, in other words, that the first-ranked tender is genuine?’

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice

19. The request for a preliminary ruling was received at the Registry of the Court on 8 December 2020.

20. On 1 February 2021, the President of the Court of Justice decided not to grant the request that the reference be dealt with under the expedited procedure.

21. Observations were lodged by Veridos, Mühlbauer, the Austrian, Bulgarian, Czech and French governments and the European Commission.

22. It was not considered necessary to hold a hearing.

IV. Analysis

A. Preliminary considerations

23. Directive 2009/81 is applicable to this case because it concerns a public contract for the issue of identity documents in relation to 'the fields of defence and security'. (7) As is apparent from the order for reference, the contracting authority published the invitation to tender for the single contract in accordance with that directive. (8)

24. However, the referring court has submitted its questions in relation to the relevant articles of Directive 2009/81 and Directive 2014/24. It justifies its approach on the basis of the 'identical content and analogous function of the relevant provisions of the two directives'. (9) There is no reason not to proceed in this way, since the provisions of the two directives the interpretation of which the referring court seeks are substantially the same, so that the Court's reply will apply equally to all those provisions. (10)

25. In the same vein, the case-law of the Court of Justice in this area can be applied to the present case even where it refers to analogous provisions of public procurement directives other than the two cited above, as I shall explain below.

26. On account of their content, the referring court's questions can be grouped together in two blocks:

– The first three questions seek to determine whether the contracting authority is required to verify whether any abnormally low tenders exist and, where appropriate, under what conditions and with what scope.

– The fourth and fifth questions concern the reasoning to be provided by the contracting authority in relation to the absence of an abnormally low tender and the judicial review of that assessment.

B. Obligation to verify whether any abnormally low tenders exist (questions 1, 2 and 3)

27. According to the referring court, the legal dispute concerns only the powers exercised by the national legislature in regulating, in Article 72(1) of the Law on Public Procurement, the criterion for assessing abnormally low tenders. (11)

28. If I have understood the referring court's line of argument correctly, the inference from its interpretation of the national provision appears to be that the only criterion for categorising a tender as 'abnormally low' is that that tender is 20% lower than the mean value of the tenders submitted by the other tenderers. If that criterion could not be applied, because only two tenders exist, the contracting authority would not be able to assess whether either of those tenders is abnormally low. (12)

29. Before addressing whether the national provision, as interpreted in that way, (13) is compatible with Directives 2009/81 and 2014/24 (in particular, with Article 49 of the former and Article 69 of the latter), it should be recalled that:

– Article 49 of Directive 2009/81 imposes on the contracting authority the obligation to monitor and verify that tenders are genuine. Should the contracting authority consider any of the tenders to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services, it must request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant.

– Pursuant to Article 69 of Directive 2014/24, a contracting authority must 'require economic operators to explain the price or costs proposed in the tender where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, supplies or services.'

30. As I have pointed out above, those provisions must be read in the light of the Court's case-law because the EU legislature did not provide a definition of what constitutes an abnormally low tender; nor did it provide a specific method of calculating an anomaly threshold. (14) That, I repeat, explains the importance of the interpretation given in the case-law, which has been notably consistent in this area over a period of time. (15)

31. The Court of Justice has ruled:

– In relation to Directive 92/50, that 'it is … for the Member States and, in particular, the contracting authorities to determine the method of calculating an anomaly threshold constituting an "abnormally low tender" …' (16)

– In relation to Directive 93/37, that the contracting authority cannot avoid the obligation to 'identify suspect tenders' and, therefore, to hold the relevant (inter partes) examination procedure. (17)

– In relation to Directive 2004/18, (18) that '… the European Union legislature intended to require the awarding authority to examine the details of tenders which are abnormally low, and for that purpose obliges it to request the tenderer to furnish the necessary explanations to prove that those tenders are genuine'. (19)

32. As concerns Article 69 of Directive 2014/24, the Court has confirmed that:

– Where a tender appears to be abnormally low, contracting authorities are to require the tenderer to provide an explanation for the price or costs proposed in the tender, which could relate, inter alia, to the elements set out in paragraph 2 of that article. (20)

– The contracting authority must assess the information provided by consulting the tenderer and it may reject such a tender only where the evidence supplied does not satisfactorily account for the low level of price or costs proposed. (21)

33. In short, the EU legislation imposes on contracting authorities the obligation to examine, in all cases, whether any of the tenders submitted appear prima facie to be abnormally low.

34. It is immaterial for those purposes whether it is impossible 'to apply the criterion laid down in national law for the evaluation of an abnormally low tender' and whether a different criterion selected by the contracting authority was announced in advance. The contracting authority cannot, I repeat, refrain from examining whether the tender (all the tenders) is [(are)] suspected of being frivolous.

35. It is also immaterial whether only two candidates have submitted tenders in the procurement procedure: each of those two tenders must be scrutinised by the contracting authority, which will assess whether they are suspect.
