[26] The partially clarified claim of the third-ranking plaintiff was aimed at establishing the invalidity of the three unlawful contract amendments as follows: it requested that the contract amendment between the second-ranking defendants dated 15 September 2017 be declared invalid due to its nullity under Section 176(4) of the Civil Code, in view of the second sentence of Section 141(8) of the Civil Code, provided that the court, pursuant to Section 237(1) of Act IV of 1959 on the Civil Code (hereinafter: the Civil Code), order the restoration of the situation prior to the conclusion of the contract by obliging the third-ranking defendant to pay the costs of the contract to the second-ranking defendant. The 16,156,300 forints paid by the 1st defendant until 19 October 2018, as well as the consideration paid for the performance of the contract until the date of the judgment, in favour of the 2nd defendant. If the court does not grant its primary claim, it requested in the alternative that the contract be declared invalid and that the 2nd and 3rd defendants be ordered to jointly pay the legal costs. It referred to Section 237 (1) of the Civil Code and Section 305 (1) of the Civil Code, with regard to the latter, it explained that in its opinion, the TVM devices did not have the property specified in the contract when they were delivered, according to which they must be designed in such a way that a device that prevents the acceptance of banknotes or coins could get in the way of the money either when receiving or returning it, or return, however, he did not file a claim on the grounds of defective performance – taking into account the specific features of the lawsuit and the jurisdiction granted to him by the Civil Code. According to his position, in the case of a TVM with a technical requirement of non-clogging, the number of clogging attempts is completely irrelevant, since if the third-order defendant had supplied TVM devices with the technical parameters specified in the contract, the clogging cases would have been caught in the experiment phase, since the issue of non-clogging does not depend on the number of attempts. In connection with the secondary claim, he stated that he was only requesting a determination in accordance with the provisions of Section 176 (1) of the Civil Code, referring to Section 1 of the Civil Code, 5/2013. Civil Code Decision (hereinafter: 5/2013. PJE), according to which in lawsuits for the determination of the invalidity of the contract, the court does not have to examine the provisions of Section 176 of the Civil Code. The conditions set out in Section 123 were met. When determining the amount of the penalty, the contractual parties' declarations regarding performance were taken into account.

The invalidity of the contract amendment concluded on 13 July 2017 was requested on the basis of Section 176 (4) of the Civil Code, in view of the second sentence of Section 141 (8) of the Civil Code, on the basis of the nullity ground under Section 137 (1) a) of the Civil Code, in addition to the determination of the legal costs. He referred to the findings of the decision, stating that the web sales system has been developed and its operation has been continuous since then. constitutes the contractual task of the second-order defendant. Accordingly, the service is irreversible.

In this case, he only requested a determination, also referring to the PJE. He indicated the value of the subject matter of the lawsuit at 659,000,400 forints, which is the same as the value of the contract.

The invalidity of the contract amendment concluded on December 22, 2016, with a net value of HUF 125,038,099, was also requested based on Section 176 (4) of the Civil Code, with regard to the second sentence of Section 141 (8) of the Civil Code, on the grounds of nullity existing under Section 137 (1) a) of the Civil Code, and requested the restoration of the original state based on Section 237 (1) of the Civil Code, and the obligation of the third-rank defendant to repay HUF 125,038,099 to the second-rank defendant. In the alternative, it was requested solely to declare the invalidity on the grounds of nullity already referred to, and it was also requested that the second-rank defendants be jointly and severally liable for the payment of the legal costs. It referred to the relevant contractual elements established in its decision and the legal conclusions drawn from them for the benefit of the contracting parties. It also reiterated its arguments regarding the contract amendment of 15 September 2017.

[28] In connection with the claim of the first-tier plaintiff, he emphasized in the preamble that the infringement was established against the successful tenderer solely for the violation of a legal norm to which it was the addressee, namely the addressees of the provisions on contract modification set out in Section 141 of the Civil Code are the parties concluding the contract. Section 141 of the Civil Code – adopting the reverse logic of Article 72 of the Directive – regulates, the main rule is found in paragraph (8), while Section 141 paragraphs (1)-(7) contain the specified cases of modification, in the absence of which the parties may not modify the contract.

The infringement indicated in the ex officio initiative was the unlawful modification of the contract, and the legal basis was Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code. The first-rank defendant referred to point 53 of the decision, arguing that Section 158(1) of the Civil Procedure Code was not applicable, as it did not examine the infringement beyond the infringement indicated in the ex officio initiative. In connection with the lack of an initiator's motion, he referred to point 45 of his decision.

The notice of initiation of the procedure made it clear what the position of the successful tenderer was in the legal remedy procedure and there was no question that it was involved in the capacity of a petitioner. It received all comments during the procedure and was able to fully exercise its client rights.

[29] According to Section 145 (1) of the Public Procurement Act, the provisions of Act CXL of 2004 on the general rules of public administrative procedure and service (hereinafter: the Public Procurement Act) were to apply to the proceedings of the Public Procurement Arbitration Board, unless otherwise provided for in this Act and the Government Decree enacted on the basis of the authorization of this Act. According to Section 33 (3) (c) of the Public Procurement Act, unless otherwise provided for in law, the time from the invitation to remedy the deficiency or to provide the data necessary to clarify the facts until its fulfillment shall not be included in the administrative deadline. The Public Procurement Act does not contain any different rule regarding the suspension of the deadline, so the rules of the Public Procurement Act shall apply, taking into account Section 145 (1) of the Public Procurement Act. With regard to exceeding the three-day deadline, the winning bidder disregarded the rules regarding the suspension of the deadline. It correctly determined the first day of the deadline, but did not take into account that, in the context of clarifying the facts, the first-tier defendant requested, among other things, all original documents and other data and information from the contracting authority, until the receipt of which documents, the deadline was suspended for more than 14 days, thus rendering the first-tier plaintiff's motion unfounded.
Otherwise, the Constitutional Court and Supreme Court decisions cannot be considered analogous to a significant omission that exceeded the administrative deadline several times in the administrative procedures that formed the basis of the referenced decisions.

[30] Contracts concluded on the basis of a public procurement procedure are subject to civil law regulations, in this case the Civil Code. According to Section 240 (1) of the Civil Code, the law does not make any exceptions; the parties may amend the content of the contract or change the legal title of their commitment by mutual agreement. According to Section 141 (1) of the Civil Code, the provisions of this sub-title shall apply to amendments made by the contracting parties – or by one of the parties entitled to do so – and to changes in the legal relationship of the parties in accordance with the provisions of the contract (hereinafter collectively referred to as: contract amendment). The parties amended the contract on several occasions. The addressees of the civil and public procurement regulations are clearly the parties, i.e. in this case the successful tenderer and the contracting authority. The conditions for the amendment were not met, so the contract amendment was unlawful, these legal provisions can only be violated jointly, the contracting authority could not amend the contract on its own, as this requires the mutual agreement of the parties. Its position was confirmed by the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

[31] In connection with the 4th initiative element, the defendant did not consider it possible to take into account the court decisions made on the basis of the old Public Procurement Act, also because the applicability of the negotiated type of public procurement procedure without a notice in the case decisions was questionable. Although the Public Procurement Act still includes a procedural type related to the contract amendment case, but with by no means identical conditions, it referred to this in point 58 of the decision. It referred to points 56 and 58 of its decision by stating that, prior to the conclusion of the TVM contract, the contracting authority wanted to implement its web sales channel within the framework of the AFC Project. The fact that the procurement requirement for the procurement of the web sales channel arose earlier than TVM

Machine Translated by Google

The conclusion of a contract for the implementation of a sales channel excludes the legal provision regarding the admissibility of a modification case that requires procurement from the original contracting party.

[32] With regard to initiative elements 5 and 6, it referred to point 64 of the decision, highlighting that a valid bid based on the technical description of the tender could only be submitted with a TVM in which tampering with the seal was excluded. The winning bidder's bid had to include a TVM offering that met the conditions specified in the technical description, so the large number of tampering with the seal could not be the reason for the cited contract modification case, since successful tampering was excluded in the case of TVM according to the technical description. The fact that the seal was ultimately successful in the case of TVM devices cannot in any way be considered an unforeseeable circumstance. The fact that the examination of the requirement of foreseeability may arise on the side of which contracting party shows no connection with the legal consequence of the illegality of a contract modification concluded with the unity of the parties' will, which can be applied against which contracting party.

[33] The findings regarding the contractual values were also disputed. The contractual price set out in the Main Project Contract included a final delivery schedule for an optional order of 30 units, which although was included in the value of the Main Project Contract, was correctly calculated when the contract was amended, taking into account Section 141(5) of the Civil Code. However, the so-called Cost Compensation Agreement was not explicitly taken into account, the value of which should have been taken into account when maximizing the actual value of the amendment by 50%.

[34] In opposition to the claim argument regarding the fine, it consistently emphasized that the infringement was committed jointly by the parties, and that the consequences of the contractual amendments reached by mutual agreement are borne jointly and equally by the parties. The winning bidder was unable to identify a group of data that was relevant and that it did not present in this context. The first-tier defendant referred to paragraph 73 of its decision, in which it took into account that no infringement had been established against the winning bidder in the past two years. The aspects taken into account in the context of imposing the fine were recorded in the relevant part of the decision.

[35] In connection with its claim, the second-tier claimant referred to the fact that, in paragraph 73 of the decision, it gave detailed reasons for why it decided to impose the fine and what aspects it took into particular account when determining its amount.
It is a flawed logic that, based on previous defendant decisions, casts doubt on the imposition of a fine related to the violation of Section 30(4) of the old Civil Procedure Code, after which only all the circumstances of the case can be taken into account.

[36] The plaintiff of the second rank claims, in breach of the document, that he considered the 3rd amendment to the contract to be unlawful because the condition under Section 141(4)(b) of the Civil Code did not exist. The decision clearly states that a violation was found because none of the amendment conditions existed. In this regard, he referred to points 53 and 59 of his decision. The defendant of the first rank examined the amendment conditions separately, including the condition under Section 4(b), the absence of which he provided detailed justification for in point 58 of the decision. In addition, he repeated the arguments highlighted in connection with the plaintiff of the first rank's claim. He denied that it could be read from his decision that he had acknowledged the existence of an economic reason.

[37] In connection with the Cost Compensation Agreement, citing the statements of claim of the contracting parties, it concluded that both contracting parties considered performance and compensation for it to be the content of this agreement, i.e. the parties themselves emphasized the agreement to perform performance differently from the provisions of the basic contract. Therefore, the first-tier defendant could not assess this as anything other than an amendment to the basic contract. With regard to Section 141(4)(c) of the Civil Code, it referred to point 64 of its decision, emphasizing that it did not find an appreciable connection between the requirement of unforeseeability and the large number of blockages referred to by the contracting authority, for which it provided detailed justification with regard to TVMs with the technical requirement of impenetrability.

[38] The Court found contract amendment No. 4 to be unlawful for three reasons, which it explained in detail in paragraphs 68 and 69 of its decision. Paragraph 70 provides a justification for one element of the amendment condition. The administrative error is unacceptable, and the formality of the information notice to be published on the amendment is completely irrelevant, since the contract amendment document also includes the unlawful amount specified in its decision as the maximum amount.

[39] The intervener, in agreement with the counterclaim of the first-tier defendant, argued that the contracting authority is the primary, but not the exclusive, obligor for the proper conduct of the public procurement procedure. The responsibility for compliance with public procurement law requirements is more nuanced when amending a contract concluded as a result of a previous public procurement procedure. It is not uncommon for the successful tenderer itself to initiate this. In such cases, the successful tenderer necessarily has more information about the performance/fulfilment of the public procurement contract concluded in the previous public procurement procedure in accordance with the Public Procurement Act, and about the existence of the conditions of any possible contract amendment in the Public Procurement Act. The Public Procurement Act restricts the parties' freedom to conclude contracts with regard to contract amendments. However, this does not change the fundamental civil law principle that contract amendments presuppose the unanimous expression of will of the parties to the contract.

This, and the obligation to cooperate, also presupposes the transfer of information between the parties. Therefore, the argument that the tenderer has no opportunity or influence to examine the fulfilment of the conditions of the contract amendment in the Public Procurement Act is incorrect. Although the contract amendments also served the economic interest of the successful tenderer, the risks related to the legality of the amendments were placed exclusively on the contracting authority. The judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union clearly supports the defendant's intervener position.
National legislation which, in addition to the contracting authority,

Machine Translated by Google

It also allows for the determination of a violation and the imposition of a fine against the winning bidder.

[40] The intervener also agreed with the first-tier defendant that the ex officio extension was not necessary. The first-tier defendant acted within the framework of the initiative. The successful bidder's rights in the appeal procedure were not violated.

[41] It was possible to impose a fine. The Constitutional Court decision and the Curia's case-by-case decision set fixed deadlines for each specific legal institution.

[42] In relation to contract amendment no. 3, it was highlighted that the possibility of changing the original contractual partner was not ruled out a priori due to the objective technical and legal nature and specificities of the contracting authority's procurement requirement, but rather due to the specific method chosen by the contracting authority to satisfy the procurement requirement.

[43] Initiative elements 5 and 6 are closely related. Essentially, the same circumstance made the contract amendment necessary. On the one hand, the combined value of the compensation agreement and amendment number 4 exceeded 50%, thus it conflicts with Section 141(4)(c)(cc) of the Civil Code, and on the other hand, the condition of unforeseeability was not met.

[44] In connection with the application for a reduction of the fine, the intervener failed to specify the amount of the reduction, referring to Section 121(1)(e) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

[45] In its application for damages, the second-ranking plaintiff submitted that the contracting authority did not dispute the violation of Section 30(4) of the old Civil Code, the fining practice had become stricter, the fine applied by the first-ranking defendant was well-founded, and the assessment criteria were relevant.

[46] Against the claim argument related to the 4th initiative element, he referred to the EU public procurement directives and the regulation of the Public Procurement Act, and its unchangeability regarding the primacy of competition, stating that the contracting authority satisfied its procurement requirement for the introduction and development of the new sales channel by amending the contract, thereby providing only the existing contractual partner, the winning bidder, with the opportunity to fulfill the order, thereby excluding competition.

[47] In relation to initiative element 5, it is considered relevant that as a result of the Cost Compensation Agreement, the contract has been amended, it can be clearly established that certain repair works had to be carried out within a shorter period than the time within which the winning bidder was obliged to repair them under the original contract, and thus the contracting authority undertook additional expenses. The contracting authority's references to unforeseeability are contradictory, as it defined the requirements for the implementation of the TVM system in a way that contractually excluded the possibility of abuses such as blockages and withdrawals. Thus, it is not possible to later claim that the customer could not have foreseen the occurrence of a circumstance whose possibility it itself had completely excluded in advance in the contract.

[48] Regarding the 6th initiative element, the contracting authority cannot reasonably rely on the probability that it would not have exhausted the maximum amount set in contract amendment no. 4, the violation is already founded on the fact of endangerment, and based on the contract amendment, the possibility of exceeding 50% of the contract value was opened, taking into account the value of the cost compensation agreement.

[49] Regarding the claim element regarding the reduction of the amount of the fine, the defendant intervener also referred to the lack of a specific request. The first-tier defendant assessed numerous circumstances when determining the amount, including the contribution of the first-tier plaintiffs.

[50] In their counterclaim, the defendants II and III requested the dismissal of the plaintiff III's claim and the determination of their costs, maintaining their arguments in their claims regarding the legality of the 3rd and 4th contract amendments and the Cost Compensation Agreement concluded between them, as a result of which the plaintiff III's claim is unfounded.

Judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union C-263/19

[51] In response to a request for a preliminary ruling submitted by the Budapest Metropolitan Court under Article 267 TFEU, the Court of Justice of the European Union (hereinafter: CJEU) ruled in its judgment No. C-263/19 (hereinafter: CJEU judgment) that Article 2(e)(2) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, was not applicable. Article 2e) (2) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2007/66, Recitals 19 to 21, and Directive 2004/17/EC on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors repealing [correctly Recitals 12, 113, 115 and 117, Article 1(2) and Article 89 of Directive 2014/245/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which, in the context of a review procedure initiated by the supervisory authority ex officio, allows not only the contracting authority but also the successful tenderer of the public contract to be held liable for the infringement and to be fined in the event that, when a public contract in progress is amended, the rules on the award of public contracts have been unlawfully disregarded. However, where national legislation provides for such a possibility, the review procedure must respect Union law, including its fundamental principles, since the public contract concerned itself, both in its original form and after its unlawful modification, falls within the material scope of the public procurement directives. The amount of the fine sanctioning an unlawful modification of a public contract concluded between the contracting authority and the successful tenderer must be determined taking into account the conduct of each party.

[52] The CJEU emphasised that Directives 89/665 and 92/13 are undoubtedly limited to requiring Member States to ensure that a remedy is available at least to those persons who have an interest in, or have had an interest in, the award of a contract and who have been or are likely to be harmed by the alleged infringement. (See paragraph 50) The provisions of those directives are intended to protect economic operators from the arbitrariness of the contracting authority and thus to ensure that effective remedies are available in all Member States in order to ensure the effective application of the EU rules on public procurement, in particular where the infringement can still be remedied (See paragraph 51). Article 2(e) of Directive 89/665 and Article 2(e) of Directive 92/13, which are identical in wording, require Member States to provide for either invalidity or alternative sanctions, which may include the imposition of fines on the contracting authority, in the event of infringement of certain provisions of those directives (see paragraph 52). However, while Directives 86/665 and 92/13 may provide for remedies for undertakings which have an interest in, or have had an interest in, the award of a contract and which have been or are likely to be harmed by the alleged infringement, those directives cannot be regarded as achieving complete harmonisation and, therefore, as taking into account all the remedies available in the field of public procurement (see paragraph 53). It follows that Article 2(e) of Directive 89/665 and Article 2(e) of Directive 92/13 apply only to actions brought by undertakings which have or had an interest in obtaining a given contract and which are or are likely to be harmed by the alleged infringement (see paragraph 54). In those circumstances, those articles cannot prevent a supervisory authority from initiating a review procedure of its own motion or from imputing the infringement resulting from the modification of a public contract in progress in breach of the rules on the award of public contracts not only to the contracting authority but also to the successful tenderer and, consequently, from imposing a penalty in the form of a fine on both the contracting authority and the successful tenderer (see paragraph 55). Nor can it be inferred from Article 25(1) of Directive 2014/25 that the award of a public contract in question is based on the same principle. From Article 1(2) of the Directive, which covers both its material and personal nor from recital 12 of that directive, which, in support of that provision, clarifies, inter alia, the concept of contracting authority, that the rules laid down in that directive do not apply to the successful tenderer of a public contract (see paragraph 57). However, where national legislation provides for a review procedure initiated by the supervisory authority of its own motion, which results in the liability of the successful tenderer of that contract being established for an infringement consisting in an unlawful modification of a public contract in progress and consequently in the imposition of a fine on that contract, that must be compatible with EU law, since such a contract itself falls within the material scope of the public procurement directives, both in its original form and after its unlawful modification (see paragraph 65). According to the principle of proportionality, which is a general principle of EU law, rules adopted by the Member States or by contracting authorities in the context of the implementation of the public procurement directives must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of those directives (see paragraph 71). While it may be for the referring court in the present case to assess whether the amount of the fine imposed on the first-tier applicant is proportionate to the objectives of the public procurement law, the supervisory authority or the referring court cannot, when determining such an amount, confine itself to taking into account solely the fact that, by virtue of the contractual relationship between the contracting parties, their joint conduct is necessary in order to amend their public procurement contract. That amount must be determined in the light of the conduct or activities of the parties to the public procurement contract concerned during the period during which the parties intended to amend that contract (see paragraph 72).

Decision No. III/1920-4/2020 of the Constitutional Court

[53] In its decision No. III/1920-4/20, the Constitutional Court (hereinafter: AB) rejected the judicial initiative to declare the second sentence of Section 197 (1) of the Civil Code and the phrase “with the exception of the second sentence of Section 197 (2)” of the Civil Code unconstitutional and to exclude their application. The provisions challenged in the motion result in the fact that, after the entry into force of the new Civil Code, the provisions of Section 141 of the new Civil Code must be applied with regard to amendments to contracts concluded under the old Civil Code, which do not result in a restriction of rights, because the new substantive law governing contract amendments is not more disadvantageous to legal entities, which was also not referred to by the parties or the petitioning judicial panel. According to the practice cited in the decision of the Supreme Court, the prohibition of retroactive legislation does not violate the prohibition of retroactive legislation if the application of new legal provisions does not modify the legal fact that occurred before the entry into force in a way that is detrimental to the legal entities. According to the Supreme Court, the substantive law on contract amendments regulated under Section 132 of the old Civil Code and Section 141 of the new Civil Code was regulated differently, since the old Civil Code “negatively” recorded the prohibited cases of contract amendments, while the substantive law under the new Civil Code “positively” regulates those cases that are lawful cases of contract amendments, however, this regulatory difference – mainly due to the implementation of the new EU directive – does not result in ad malam partem retroactive legislation. It considered it a question of professional law to assess when and whether contract amendments were made lawfully.

The court's decision and its legal reasons

[54] The Metropolitan Court – given that the legal remedy proceedings were initiated on 2 October 2017 – necessarily merged the lawsuits initiated under Section 170(1) of the Civil Procedure Code and Section 176(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, as a result of which it applied the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (Act III of 1952) in force at the earliest at the time the claim was received by the court. It proceeded in the lawsuit in a panel consisting of three professional judges, pursuant to Section 324(4) of the Civil Procedure Code.

[56] The claim of the second-ranking plaintiff is unfounded, the claim of the first-ranking plaintiff is partially well-founded.

[57] At the court's initiative, it examined ex officio the question of the unconstitutionality of the applicable law, and the Supreme Administrative Court ruled that no such unconstitutionality had arisen. The Metropolitan Court therefore reviewed the defendant's decision pursuant to Section 170(1) of the Civil Procedure Code and Section 324 of the Civil Procedure Code, in the proceedings pursuant to Chapter XX of the Civil Procedure Code, pursuant to Section 339/A of the Civil Procedure Code, on the basis of the applicable legislation at the time the decision was made - designated in point 42 of the decision of the first-tier defendant - and the existing facts, within the framework of the claims and counterclaims (Section 215 of the Civil Procedure Code). According to Section 335/A of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff may amend his claim at the first hearing. The claim may only be extended to the uncontested and independent parts of the administrative decision within the time limit for initiating proceedings.

[58] The court established the facts based on the statements of the parties and the public procurement and administrative documents at its disposal. According to consistent judicial practice, the client, or the party whose legitimate interests have been harmed, may request judicial review of the decision on the merits of the administrative case, citing a violation of the law.
In his claim, he may also refer to a violation of substantive and procedural law, as well as to the fact that the law applied when the decision was made was misinterpreted. The decision can only be set aside due to a violation of procedural law in itself if the violation of procedural law is significant, affects the merits of the decision, and cannot be remedied in court proceedings. Therefore, the primary issue was the objections to the remedy of the first-tier plaintiff of the winning bidder, so it was necessary to examine whether an unlawful extension of the remedy had occurred? Did the defendant comply with the remedy deadlines?

[59] Section 158 of the Public Procurement Act provides for the scope of the proceedings of the first-tier defendant. According to paragraph (1), if the Public Procurement Arbitration Board becomes aware of a violation of the law beyond that examined on the basis of the application or initiative, before making the substantive decision, it may also act ex officio in relation to additional conditions – in the event of a violation of principle – in the event of a violation of the law being detected. The intervener defendant initiated the examination of the agreements by referring to Section 2(3), Section 141(2) and (4) (b); (c) of the Public Procurement Act, however, according to the content of his initiative, it concerned the illegality of the contract amendments for the reason he indicated. The first-tier defendant correctly argued that the extension of the legal remedy proceedings was not justified, and that it did not occur unlawfully, considering the scope of his decision. There is no doubt that in the initiative, the Public Procurement Arbitration Board According to Section 152 (4), the violated legal provision must be clearly identified, among other things, in accordance with Section 149 (1) d) with respect to all application elements, but this assumes a coherent scope with the content description of the unlawful event. There is only one Section under the subtitle of the Contract Amendment Act, Section 141, and its paragraph (1) makes it clear that the provisions of this subtitle must be applied to the amendment of the contract by the parties - or by one of the parties entitled to do so - and to the change in the legal relationship of the parties in accordance with the provisions contained in the contract. The examination of possible and lawful changes regulated in the Section may ultimately lead to the determination of a new public procurement procedure that was unlawfully omitted and its consequences, which is set out in paragraph (8). The court therefore agreed with the first-tier defendant that the issue of examining the infringement beyond the infringements under examination did not arise, and that its procedure remained within the framework of the initiative when examining the conduct of the parties involved in the contract amendment. The first-tier defendant referred to the Supreme Court decision (since confirmed by the Curia practice) on the principles crystallized in the practice of law enforcement regarding the relationship between the basic principles and substantive legal provisions, and explained its position in point 62 of the decision, limiting itself exclusively to the examination of substantive legal provisions. However, since the initiative also contained the designation of substantive legal provisions, the basic principles specified therein cannot raise the illegality of the first-tier defendant's procedure due to the lack of extension. The winning bidder had to be aware of the reason for and extent of the legal remedy proceedings initiated and conducted, during which it could exercise its procedural rights, in accordance with the Civil Procedure Code. Section 158 is not violated.

[60] The first-rank defendant correctly referred to the fact that the deadline was not delayed during the appeal proceedings, taking into account Section 33(3)(c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, after the first-rank defendant ordered the correction of deficiencies in the case. Thus, the administrative deadline initiated on 2 October 2017 and extended once by ten days, the 14-day suspension of the deadline requiring the correction of deficiencies and the decision made on 15 December 2017 cannot be considered to have resulted in a delay. On the one hand, if the delay could have been determined, it would not have had any significance for the merits of the case due to the potentially significant duration of the delay, so the court could not have taken this into account. On the other hand, the reduction of the fine or its exclusion could not have been determined for this reason. The first-tier defendant correctly argued in this regard that there was no analogy to the Constitutional Court decision or the Curia decision referred to by the first-tier plaintiff.

In the context of the right to a fair trial, exceeding the administrative deadline, and the application of a fine, several interpretations have come to light since the AB decision referred to by the first-degree plaintiff, including the Kúria's judgment Kfv.V.35.523/2018/5., which in paragraph 28 refers to the Constitutional Court's decision 17/2019. (V.30.) AB as a guideline determining the framework and aspects of legal remedies during judicial review.

[61] The first-tier plaintiff referred to the lack of consideration of the special regulation (identical to the relevant content of EU law) on public service contracts and the application of the provisions of Government Decree 307/2015.(X.27.) on specific public procurement rules for public procurement by public service providers beyond the deadline provided for amending the claim, since this objection cannot be included among the grounds listed under Section 121 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore the court did not examine this reference on its merits.

[62] In the absence of a procedural right infringement, the Metropolitan Court further examined the substantive claims, respecting the guidelines set out in the CJEU judgment. The provisions of Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code shall apply to the modification of the contract by the parties - or by one of the parties entitled to do so - and to the change in the legal relationship of the parties in accordance with the provisions set out in the contract. It can be seen from this provision that the addressees of the provisions are the contracting parties, since it concerns a change in the contractual relationship between them as a result of the public procurement procedure, the manner of which, in accordance with Section 141(2)-(6) of the Civil Procedure Code, may determine whether one or all of the parties to the contract are liable and to what extent, if the contract is modified in breach of these rules. The liability of the contracting parties under public procurement law cannot be derived solely from the existence of a civil law relationship between the parties and the conditions of the contract amendment defined by civil law (mutual agreement). This position is reinforced by the CJEU judgment, when the CJEU states that it is not contrary to EU law to establish liability for the infringement not only of the contracting authority but also of the successful tenderer of the public procurement contract and to impose a fine on him, but at the same time it calls for respect for EU law, including its fundamental principles, by stipulating that the amount of the fine sanctioning the unlawful amendment of the public procurement contract concluded between the contracting authority and the successful tenderer must be determined taking into account the conduct of the individual parties. However, the application of the fine as a public law sanction and the determination of the amount of the fine may obviously be related to the unlawful conduct of the contracting parties under public procurement law, according to the extent of their involvement.

[63] The court therefore agreed with the argument of the first-tier plaintiff-winning bidder that treating the liability of the contracting authority and the winning bidder as identical in the absence of any further examination of the influence is unlawful, but did not accept, in light of the CJEU judgment, its arguments that it cannot be the recipient of the fine.

It could not successfully claim that in the absence of national legislation applicable to the case, an infringement could not be attributed to it. The rules defining the scope of application of the Public Procurement Act and requiring compliance with the basic principles contain provisions for the contracting authority and the economic operator in general and the individual procedural rules in their respective places. Since the provisions of Sections 141 and 165 of the Public Procurement Act do not limit the person committing the infringement to one or the other subject of the public procurement procedure, it cannot be inferred from the rules applicable to the case that the winning tenderer would not be liable under national legislation – notably the Public Procurement Act. While Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act names the contracting parties, Section 165 of the Public Procurement Act Section 165 of the Code of Civil Procedure allows for the imposition of a fine against the infringing organization or person or the organization or person responsible for the infringement in a legal relationship with the organization or person responsible for the infringement. The court therefore examined the defendant's decision on individual contract amendments along these principles.

[64] According to Section 141(2) of the Public Procurement Act, a contract may be modified without conducting a new public procurement procedure - without examining the conditions set out in paragraphs (4) or (6) - if the increase in the consideration as a result of the modification - or in the case of several modifications, their net total value - does not reach any of the values set out herein, and the modification does not change the general nature of the contract and is consistent with the nature of the original contract (de minimis modification). Paragraph (4) provides that, in addition to the cases regulated in paragraph (2), a contract may be modified or modified without conducting a new public procurement procedure - without examining the conditions set out in paragraph (6) - in any of the cases listed from points a) to c).

[65] In its judgment Kfv.VI.37.948/2019/5., the Curia explained, among other things, that ensuring the transparency and public control of the efficient use of public funds, as well as creating conditions for fair competition in public procurement, is a requirement that must also be met when amending the contract. Certain circumstances may justify amending the contract, but this possibility must not lead to abuse, must not be aimed at violating the fairness of competition, or circumventing the Public Procurement Act. Therefore, amending the contract is only possible if the conditions specified in the Public Procurement Act are fully met. The contracting authority must determine its public procurement needs, and in doing so, it sets the individual conditions itself – within the framework of the law. Only those reasons that the contracting authority indicated as the reason for amending the contract in the published notice can be examined. The Curia Kfv.III.38.151/2018/18. In its judgment no. 101/2001, the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) in connection with the public procurement law assessment of the conduct of the contracting parties during the performance of the contract concluded as a result of the public procurement procedure, attributed importance to the real existence of a unity of will between the parties behind the performance of the contract with different content, which must be supported by specific facts and evidence (judgment [76] point). At the time of the two decisions considered as guiding in the case, the CJEU judgment was not yet known. They should be considered guiding even in the knowledge of the decision, insofar as the title of the contract amendment and the reasons supporting its legality must be made clear to the contracting parties at the time of the amendment, which ultimately – if a notice is published – is recorded in the published notice, and the legality of the contract amendment cannot be justified later on based on arguments different from those. When deciding on the issue of influence and liability, the actual existence of unity of will should be a determining factor in assessing the conduct of the parties with regard to the relevant public procurement law elements of the obligation.

[66] The I-II. Plaintiff did not consider the Cost Compensation Agreement to be a contract amendment, while the contracting parties justified contract amendment No. 3 essentially on the basis of Section 141(4)(b), sub-paragraphs ba) and bb) of the Civil Code, citing the FINA World Championships as an unforeseen circumstance and the large number of blockage cases, which would become a problem that could be alleviated by a new sales channel. According to Annex 1 to the contract, the legal basis for contract amendment No. 4 was paragraph (4) (c). In the former case, it is lawful to amend the contract if it is necessary to procure additional construction works, services or goods from the original contracting party that were not included in the original contract, if a change in the identity of the contracting party ba) is not feasible for economic or technical reasons, in particular due to interchangeability or cooperation with existing equipment, services or facilities purchased under the original contract; and bb) at a significant disadvantage for the contracting authority or would result in a multiplication of costs. However, the increase in the consideration - or in the case of several modifications, their combined net value - may not exceed 50% of the value of the original contract. In the latter case, if the following conditions are met: ca) the modification was made necessary by circumstances that the contracting authority could not have foreseen if it had exercised due diligence; cb) the modification does not change the general nature of the contract; cc) the increase in the consideration does not exceed 50% of the value of the original contract. According to paragraph (8), the contract may be modified only as a result of a new public procurement procedure, except in the cases provided for in Section 141. If the modification of the contract is carried out by unlawfully omitting a public procurement procedure, the modification is null and void pursuant to Section 137(1)(a) .

[67] In paragraphs 54-61 of its decision, the first-tier defendant listed its arguments regarding contract amendment No. 3, which led to the finding of a violation of Section 141(8) of the Civil Code by the parties. The court agreed with the method of its examination, since the contract amendment cannot be considered unlawful if any of the conditions set out in the statutory provision are met, that it had to assess all relevant elements (referred to by the contracting parties). The court also agreed that contract amendment No. 3 meant the creation and operation of a fee product sales channel constituting a new procurement requirement. In the factual part of its decision, the defendant also presented the relevant elements of the contracting authority's project running in parallel with or prior to the Main Project Contract, to which the contracting authority itself referred in the Main Project Contract and its annexes, and the contractual terms and conditions were drawn up with this in mind. In connection with the product to be purchased, such exclusive aspects that could have justified the exclusion of competition by establishing the procurement requirement were not indicated. The decision finding that the development of individual sales channels is possible independently; the web sales channel can be established independently of the TVM system; the development of the data connection with the AFC system can also be implemented as an independent development was not refuted by the statements of the parties in the lawsuit. The reason for the easy implementation of the procurement requirement appeared as the decision of the contracting authority that the integration into the AFC system should take place as a module of the TVM system. The plaintiff of the first and second degree did not refute that the development of the connection with the AFC system could also have been implemented as another development, as is also a matter of fact that the development of the AFC system had already started prior to the project in question, the development of the web channel was planned, and it is not the case that its acquisition via the TVM system is necessary. The contracting authority also unsuccessfully argued that it could be read from the defendant's decision that the existence of the economic reason among the reasons underlying contract amendment No. 3 and its justification by the first-rank defendant were not disputed. On the one hand, the first-rank defendant referred to the fact in paragraph 58 of its decision, among the economic considerations, that the reference to the ticket verification mechanism is only an additional benefit, since the main subject of the contract amendment was the development and operation of the web sales channel, and on the other hand, the purpose is not a consideration when examining the contract amendment. The court agreed with the contracting authority's argument that the formulation of its procurement requirement is its own, unquestionable decision, but if, during its procurement, it acts in violation of the rules of the applicable Public Procurement Act, it must bear responsibility for that. There is no doubt that the Public Procurement Act The conditions under Section 141(4)(b) do not define exclusive rights, but they do assume the necessity of purchasing from the original contracting party under additional conditions. The first-tier defendant essentially claimed the absence of this necessity when the need for the sales channel had previously existed and its connection to the AFC system had not been established.

This condition is accompanied by additional (conjunctive) conditions ba) and bb), so the second-tier plaintiff wrongly argued that the economic advantage he presented creates the legal possibility of amending the contract.

[68] The Metropolitan Court also agreed with the reasoning in the decision that no connection was found between the acquisition of the new sales channel, the increased travel demand due to the FINA World Championships currently being held, and the contract concluded with the Main Project Contract that would meet the condition set out in Section 141(4)(c) of the Civil Code, since the conditions regulated there must obviously be interpreted in relation to the contract to be amended, and circumstances that may justify the amendment must arise in connection with it. The arguments regarding the copyright obligation were not accepted by the First-tier Defendant – correctly – since they did not concern the acquisition requirement for the web sales channel itself, but rather the integration into the central system of TVM, as well as the advantages that it did not dispute, such as the integration between the two sales channels, the use of the TVM hardware park and the existence of costs, as well as the advantages of the procurement ensuring competition. The fact that the value of the purchase did not exceed 50% of the original contract value is therefore irrelevant, since the decision of the first-tier defendant was not based on this element of the investigation (which can be taken into account under additional conjunctive conditions).

[69] In its claim, the first-tier claimant, the successful tenderer, mainly referred to the undoubtedly similar case-law decisions regulating the choice of a public procurement procedure that legally restricts competition, the protection of exclusive rights and the consideration of technical specificities, regulated by the previous Public Procurement Act. However, these case-law decisions are irrelevant, although some elements of the regulation regulating the choice of a negotiated procedure without a notice regulated by the old Public Procurement Act are similar, they still represent a fundamental difference, in that the regulation requires the examination of an independent procurement request, while the regulation of contract modification is fundamentally aligned with the framework of the contract between the parties. However, even by examining these legal cases, it cannot be doubted that the condition according to which the change of the contracting party should not be feasible for economic or technical reasons cannot be justified in any way along the logic of the successful tenderer's claim, which did nothing more than reverse the reasoning of the first-tier defendant in the decision. The first-tier defendant argued in favor of establishing a violation of the law that the contracting authority itself developed its new procurement requirement when developing the web sales area in such a way that it would implement it through the TVM system operated by the successful tenderer. At the same time, according to the logic of the first-tier plaintiff, the circumstance in itself that another economic operator would have been able to develop a similar web sales interface does not necessarily mean that this other solution would have met the specific procurement requirement of the specific contracting authority. However, this circumstance alone does not establish the existence of the legal conditions ensuring the amendment of the contract, as explained earlier.

[70] The first-tier defendant based its findings on the breach of contract against the contracting authority due to contract amendment no. 3, but at the same time, its findings do not imply a breach of contract against the winning bidder, since the first-tier defendant consistently based its decision on the fact that it was the contracting authority's burden and responsibility to ensure that the new applicant wanted to implement its purchasing requirement by integrating it into the central system of TVM (point 56). The contracting authority was condemned as having created a factual situation by its conduct that excluded competition, which resulted exclusively in the use of the successful tenderer (paragraph 58). With regard to this contract amendment, it did not indicate any circumstances giving rise to the contract amendment that would have indicated the establishment of the liability of the successful contracting authority under public procurement law. The contract amendment, as a bilateral legal transaction, is a specific feature of the obligation, but does not in itself establish liability under public procurement law. For this reason, the general arguments of the first-tier plaintiff, supported by the judgment of the CJEU, regarding the liability of the contracting authority under this contract amendment, were well-founded.

[71] Regarding the Cost Compensation Agreement, the Metropolitan Court shared the position of the first-tier defendant in that it was based on the will of the contracting parties and brought changes to the basic agreement in such elements that met the conditions for amending the contract, while exceeding the changes permitted under Section 141 of the Civil Code. In this regard, the first-tier defendant argued with Section III.4.2 of the operating contract, which clarified the obligation of the winning bidder to correct unforeseeable and unavoidable errors, including those resulting from the intentional or negligent conduct of the contracting authority's clients or third parties, or from criminal acts, within a given deadline. By radically reducing the repair deadline (5 or 1 day) due to the unexpected number of blockage cases compared to the 15-day deadline provided for troubleshooting, and by creating the legal framework for the performance already performed within the scope of the service, the parties amended the contract by this agreement, compensating for the additional performance. In this regard, the need to examine Section 141(4)(c) of the Civil Code arose, which, according to the contracting parties, was justified by the high, unexpected number of blockage cases. The first-tier defendant took into account the elements of the contract concluded by the parties that contain the technical requirements imposed on the TVM and the guarantees of uninterrupted operation, and argued with reason that the issue of impermeability arose during the public procurement procedure, that it was also part of the tender conditions and the bid submitted and accepted as the winner, so the parties anticipated possible problems. The Main Project Contract and its related elements contain detailed regulations on the cases of device failure, the related liability and risk of damage, so a lack of foreseeability cannot arise, since they also took into account the possibility of manipulation.

The first-tier defendant could not give a civil law answer to that question due to the lack of jurisdiction, although a given technical content was a requirement, the number of cases of blockages was still so high that it justified the partial transformation of the rules of operation and failure on the part of the parties, and only the latter could draw the public procurement law consequences. The argument of the second-tier plaintiff, which referred to the settlement of the interpretation disputes between him and the winning bidder and the settlement disputes that arose as a result of the repair of the failures, which resulted in the Cost Compensation Agreement, strengthens the argument of the first-tier defendant, who well-foundedly concluded from the agreement resulting from the negotiations between the parties that the condition of unforeseeability was not met, and the parties unlawfully agreed on an additional payment of HUF 125,038,099. The requirement of foreseeability and due diligence is set out in the Civil Code. According to Section 141(4)(c)(ca), the requirement imposed on the contracting authority, however, the absence of this condition may result from the situation generated by the contractual conduct of the contracting parties, as revealed by the first-tier defendant.

[72] In point 65 of the decision of the first-rank defendant – since the parties did not consider the Cost Compensation Agreement to be an amendment to the contract – the violation of the principle of publicity set out in Section 2(2) of the Public Procurement Act and Section 141(8) of the Public Procurement Act was established to the detriment of both the successful tenderer and the contracting authority in relation to the initiative, since the observance of the conditions relating to the amendment of the contract is an obligation of both contracting parties and its unlawful application presupposes a breach of the rights of both parties, based on the specific facts revealed, the court agreed with the determination of the first-rank defendant. The successful tenderer correctly referred to the violation of the principle of publicity set out in Section 2(2) of the Public Procurement Act. Section 2(1) contains the reference to paragraph (2) may be an obvious typo, however, this has no significance on the merits of the case, especially considering that the operative part of the decision records the violation exclusively in the substantive infringement of rights, the first-tier defendant did not impose any additional conduct on the contracting parties that would have independently justified the finding of a fundamental infringement of rights on his part.

[73] The reasons for the infringement regarding the 4th amendment to the contract were revealed by the 1st defendant in paragraphs 66-70 of its decision. It examined the arguments based on Section 141(4)(c) of the Civil Code. In this amendment to the contract, the parties concluded an agreement that differed from the content of the operating contract, which clearly defined the content of the contractual relationship between them, both in terms of the contractual obligations of the winning bidder and its remuneration. The concepts of “blocking”, “banknote withdrawal” and “customer error” were reinterpreted, and the fees for the related services were re-regulated, and they also agreed to add a new 11th point to Part III of the operating contract, and at the same time, certain provisions of the operating contract would not be applied, subject to the deviation pursuant to the Cost Compensation Agreement. The parties themselves referred to the Cost Compensation Agreement as a precedent, among other things, and their arguments in favor of the legality of the amendment were identical to that. The first-tier defendant argued well in connection with the Cost Compensation Agreement, identical to what has already been explained in relation to the sealing cases. The court agreed and will not repeat its reasons here.

[74] The first-rank defendant also alleged the absence of the condition pursuant to Section 141(4)(c)(cc) of the Civil Code, based on the calculation set out in point 5 of the contract amendment.
The court agreed with the argument of the first-tier defendant that, from the point of view of examining the infringement, what is recorded in the contract is significant, administrative error, actual payment adjusted to the occurrence of the number of cases and the settlement of the parties along a case-by-case, special logic, or the forecasted final, expectedly lower amount cannot be taken into account. The event examined from the point of view of the infringement of public procurement law is the contract amendment, the contracting authority (in this case, the parties involved in the development of the conditions of the contract amendment) must then calculate with all circumstances that make it possible for him/her to decide whether he/she can apply Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act, or whether the amendment is prohibited, because, in terms of paragraph (8), the contract could not be concluded illegally without conducting a new public procurement procedure. Therefore, the court did not accept the argument of the second-tier plaintiff on the basis of the basis of the calculation he/she gave.

And the fact that the advertisement template to be filled out may give rise to misunderstandings obviously cannot be a consideration against compliance with the mandatory provisions of the Civil Code.

[75] The first-tier defendant, having determined the infringement, imposed a fine on the basis of Section 165 (3) d) of the Code of Civil Procedure, referring to Section 165 (6) e). When determining the amount of the fine, it referred to both the percentage rate under Section 165 (4) and (7) of the Code of Civil Procedure. As can be seen from point 73 of its decision, it considered the imposition of a fine mandatory for elements 4; 5; 6 of the initiative, while it considered element 2 as an option.

[76] According to Section 165(11) of the Civil Procedure Code, the first-tier defendant had to assess all aspects relevant to the case when determining the necessity of applying a fine (if the law allows this) and the amount of the fine and to account for them in his decision. The law provides an exemplary list in this regard, therefore, the specific characteristics of the case determine the range of aspects that can actually be taken into account.

[77] According to Section 339/B of the Code of Civil Procedure, an administrative decision made in the exercise of discretion shall be deemed lawful if the administrative body has sufficiently investigated the facts, complied with the procedural rules, the criteria for the assessment can be established, and the reasoning of the decision shows that the evidence was considered reasonable. The court, acting within the limits of the claim, examined whether the decision of the first-tier defendant was lawful, and in this regard it did not deviate from the guiding principles set out in numerous decisions of the Curia. In this regard, the EBH refers to the principled decision of 2017. K. 30. that only the reasons stated in the contested decision may be taken into account during the judicial review of the administrative decision; an administrative decision made in the exercise of discretion is unlawful if it does not - or does not contain in sufficient detail - the criteria for the assessment.

[78] The first-tier defendant assessed the parties' contribution and liability as the same in all amendments with regard to the infringement established for initiative elements 4; 5; 6, but in the case of contract amendment no. 3, it took into account the contracting authority's conduct, as a result of which the product could be purchased exclusively from the winning bidder. In the case of the other two amendments, it argued that both parties were responsible for the situation regarding the management of the impermeability. The estimated value, the contractual values, and the blatant seriousness of the infringement were assessed equally to the detriment of both parties, however, the two parties' history with regard to the infringement was different, which was not weighted, and the first-tier defendant did not provide a reason for not making a distinction. The first-rank defendant considered the fine sanction as an option after the infringement established according to the 2nd element of the initiative - following from the reasoning - and considered the application of a fine to be justified. It considered the infringement to be serious due to the guarantee nature of the act, and applied the difference between the two sanctions as a result of this infringement, consequently the significant delay in sending the information notice - which was not disputed by the second-rank plaintiff - resulted in the imposition of a fine of 10,000,000 forints on it. The court could not have taken into account how the defendant's fining practice develops in the case of similar infringements, since this cannot be a criterion for examining an individual decision. Cooperative behavior is expected from the parties to the proceedings during the appeal procedure, and it cannot be assessed separately in favor of the client. However, it is undeniable that the second-rank plaintiff The first-order plaintiff admitted the violation, as well as the fact that he fulfilled his obligation with a significant delay, which the first-order defendant assessed in his favor, and the delay

The duration of the contract was also taken into account. Since the contracting authority did not disclose any additional circumstances that should have been taken into account but that it failed to assess, the size of the fine in itself does not call into question the fact that the consideration was made, its legality and reasonableness, and the court had no legal opportunity to change, reduce or waive the decision on the fine.

[79] The Budapest Metropolitan Court has already explained in point [60] of the reasoning that, in light of the CJEU judgment, the issue of liability cannot be derived from a mere agreement under the law of obligations. A sanction may be related to liability under public procurement law, which, in the case of a contract amendment, can be clarified by examining the circumstances that necessitated the amendment and may lead to the infringement of one of the cases allowing the amendment regulated in Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act. The court demonstrated that the first-order defendant himself considered contract amendment no. 3 to arise from the contracting authority's new procurement requirement, which he repeated in the decision point justifying the fine sanction, for this reason the infringement established against the first-order plaintiff and the sanction applied in relation to initiative element no. 4 are unlawful. The relevant circumstances of the Cost Compensation Agreement and Contract Amendment No. 4 were revealed by the First-tier Defendant, and both during the examination of the infringement and the application of the sanction, he addressed the reasons why he considered it justified to condemn the winning bidder, especially because of its involvement, in comparison to the initiative, with which reasons the court agreed according to the reasoning of the judgment related to these two contract amendments. This involvement was the basis for the application of the fine sanction, the sole reason for the change of which was the change in the number of infringements attributed to the winning bidder, and the circumstance that – unlike the contracting authority – no infringement had been established against the winning bidder in the previous two years.

[80] In view of all this, the Metropolitan Court partially changed the defendant's decision based on Section 339 (2) point q) of the Code of Civil Procedure, in accordance with the authorization granted in Section 172 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, disregarded the infringement established against the first-degree plaintiff with regard to the 4th element of the ex officio initiative and reduced the fine of 70,000,000 forints to 40,000,000 forints, and dismissed the claims of the first and second-degree plaintiffs in excess of this. The subject matter of the lawsuit in this part was the review of an administrative decision, the claims submitted alternatively regarding the fine sanction contained the indication of the infringement for each claim in accordance with the petition, thus the condition pursuant to Section 121 (1) point e) of the Code of Civil Procedure was met, for this reason there was no obstacle to the court's decision.

[81] Due to the unfoundedness of the three actions for the absence of a violation of Section 141(8) of the Civil Code, brought regarding the amendment of the contract, the Metropolitan Court had to decide on their nullity based on the action of the third-tier plaintiff.

[83] In a lawsuit initiated under Section 176(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, the Metropolitan Court found that since Contract Amendments Nos. 3 and 4 and the Cost Compensation Agreement were unlawfully concluded under Section 141(8) of the Civil Procedure Code, it is a necessary legal consequence that these contracts are to be considered null and void under Section 137(1)(a) of the Civil Procedure Code. According to Section 137(3) of the Civil Procedure Code, the wording of Section 137(3) of the Civil Procedure Code in force until 31 December 2017 allows the court to declare a contract null and void due to a violation of public procurement law valid if the performance of the contract is of paramount public interest. From the point of view of determining the overriding public interest, the purpose of the service, the objective sought by the contracting authority through the contract, is of fundamental importance (BH2000. 44.)

[84] Section 176(4) of the Civil Code provides that if the court, in a lawsuit pursuant to paragraph (1), establishes the invalidity of the contract for the reasons specified in Section 137(1), it shall apply the legal consequences of invalidity in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Code and this Act. In accordance with paragraph (7), in a unified lawsuit, the provisions of Chapter XX of the Civil Code shall apply.
Its Chapter shall be applied with the exceptions set out in Sections (2), (5)-(7) of Section 173 and Section 174.
Section 174 (2) of the Civil Code – identically to Section 176 (5) – stipulates that if the court declares a contract concluded on the basis of a public procurement procedure to be valid pursuant to Section 137 (3), it shall impose a fine, the amount of which shall be - taking into account all the circumstances of the case - no more than 15% of the value of the contract. If, when applying the legal consequences of invalidity, the court orders monetary compensation for the value of the service for which no consideration has been provided, it shall impose a fine, the amount of which shall be - taking into account all the circumstances of the case - no more than 10% of the value of the contract.

[85] The Metropolitan Court did not see any possibility to satisfy the primary claim of the third-tier plaintiff, based on the statement of the contracting parties, due to the termination of the contract amendment and the continuous performance, which the second-tier defendant pays periodically, based on subsequent settlement, and may apparently generate a settlement dispute between the contracting parties that goes beyond the scope of the single lawsuit, to which the third-tier plaintiff also referred by reference to Section 305 of the Civil Code. The court therefore ruled in accordance with the third-tier plaintiff's secondary claim, limited to a declaration of nullity, after the third-tier plaintiff himself referred to the judicial practice established for the application of Section 239/A of the Civil Code regarding the consideration of Section 5/2013 of the Civil Code and Section 123 of the Civil Code in such cases. The second-tier defendant The 3rd-rank defendant did not request the declaration of the contracts as valid due to the overriding public interest in the performance, the 3rd-rank plaintiff did not have a motion to this effect, and the court itself did not see any reason that would have allowed the overriding public interest to be established.

[86] The plaintiff II.r., as well as the defendant II.r. for the entire case, the plaintiff I.r. was partially unsuccessful in the administrative part of the case. The plaintiff III.r. was successful in the civil part of the case, the defendant I.r. and the defendant intervener supporting him were largely successful. By applying the appropriate provisions of Article 3(2)(b) and (c) and (6) of Decree 32/2003 (VIII.22) of the Ministry of Justice on the legal representation costs and attorneys' fees that may be determined in court proceedings (hereinafter: the Decree), the court found that the amount of litigation costs to be borne by the contracting authority and the successful tenderer separately, taking into account the ratio of winning and losing the case. It was mindful of the fact that it had to act on the basis of five claims, each in lawsuits with a high value of the subject matter of the lawsuit. It did not accept the arguments of the second-ranking plaintiff, who was also the second-ranking defendant, on the merits, for the reasons explained there, and consequently, the values of the subject matter of the lawsuit had to be considered as guiding in the civil parts of the lawsuit to the extent specified by the third-ranking plaintiff in the statements of claim. It assessed the amount of the work of the first-ranking defendant, as well as the third-ranking plaintiff and the defendant intervener, their professional demands, the time spent, and the number of hearings held in the lawsuit, thus determining the amount of litigation costs in accordance with the operative part, which was to be borne by the Pp. Pursuant to Sections 77 and 78 (1), Section 82 (2) and Section 83 (1), the first and second-ranking plaintiffs, as well as the second- and third-ranking defendants, are liable separately.

[87] The provision on the application fees is based on Sections 37(1); 39(1); 42(1)(a); and 43(3) of Act XCIII of 1990 on Fees (hereinafter: Act XCIII of 1990).

Based on the five claims – taking into account the provisions of the Administrative-Labor-Civil Law Uniformity Resolution 1/2012 on the application of Section 38 (1) and Section 39 (1)-(3) of Act XCIII of 1990 on Fees to Act CLVI of 2011 on the amendment of certain tax laws and other related laws – the fee had to be charged separately for each claim, for each initiated procedure. Taking into account the proportions of losing and winning the case, the total of HUF 7,500,000 is divided between the parties as follows: in the administrative lawsuit initiated by the first-order plaintiff, the Itv. From the fee recorded due to the right to record a fee in respect of the subject matter provided for in Section 62 (1) h), the first-order plaintiff is obliged to pay a fee of HUF 1,000,000 in view of his partial success in the case, HUF 500,000 in fee remains at the expense of the state due to the exemption from fees of the first-order defendant pursuant to Section 5 (1) c) of the Civil Procedure Act; from the total amount of HUF 4,500,000 allocated to the civil lawsuit, according to Section 176 (1) of the Civil Procedure Act, the third-order plaintiff is obliged to pay HUF 1,500,000 in accordance with the infringement of rights. The second-order defendant is obliged to pay HUF 1,500,000 in fee due to the full personal exemption from fees. In view of the plaintiff's loss in the case, he is obliged to pay the fee of 1,500,000 forints incurred in the administrative lawsuit, while he must pay 3,000,000 forints of the fee incurred in the civil lawsuit.

[88] The judgment is subject to appeal, subject to Section 174(3) of the Civil Procedure Code, which is applicable accordingly under Section 176(7) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Subject of the lawsuit: challenge to administrative decision No. D.561/17/2017 in a public procurement case í t is let:

The Metropolitan Court partially changes the decision No. D.561/17/2017 of the first-rank defendant and reduces the fine of 70,000,000 (seventy million) forints imposed on the first-rank plaintiff to 50,000,000 (fifty million) forints, and rejects the claim of the first-rank plaintiff in excess of this amount.

Machine Translated by Google

The first-rank defendant is ordered to pay the first-rank plaintiff 50,000 (fifty thousand) forints in partial litigation costs within 15 days.

The first-class plaintiff is ordered to pay a partial claim fee of HUF 500,000 (five hundred thousand) upon a separate request from the authority acting in the tax case, and the remaining partial claim fee of HUF 1,000,000 (one million) shall be borne by the Hungarian State.

The judgment may be appealed within 15 days of its publication. The appeal must be submitted electronically to the Budapest Court of Appeals, addressed to the Budapest Court of Appeals. The appeal must contain the violation of the law on which it is based, with the precise indication of the legal text, as well as the published court decision and the part thereof from which the judgment deviates in terms of law. Failure to indicate the violation of the law and the precise indication of the violated legal text shall result in the appeal being rejected without any correction.

In the meantime

The facts underlying the judgment

[1] In its decision No. D.561/17/2017 dated 15 December 2017, the first-tier defendant, acting on the ex officio initiative of the intervener, found that the contracting authority (the second-tier plaintiff in the main proceedings) had violated the provisions of Section 30(4) of Act CVIII of 2011 on Public Procurement (hereinafter: the old Public Procurement Act) (2nd element of the claim).

It further found that the contracting authority and the first-rank plaintiff had violated the provisions of Section 141(8) of Act XLIII of 2015 on Public Procurement (hereinafter: the Public Procurement Act) (elements 4, 5 and 6). It therefore imposed a fine of HUF 80 million on the contracting authority and HUF 70 million on the first-rank plaintiff. It found that there was no violation of the law with regard to elements 1 and 3 of the initiative.

[2] The first-rank defendant ordered the payment of the fine in accordance with Section 165(4); (3)(d); (6)-(7); (11) of the Civil Procedure Code. It assessed the estimated value of the public procurement, and also noted that the final value of the Main Project Contract without amendments was HUF 5,561,690,409, while the value of the part affected by the established infringement was HUF 3,589,454,369. The Cost Compensation Agreement and the 3rd and 4th contract amendments were concluded unlawfully, the total value of which agreements was HUF 3,314,633,969. It assessed that infringements had been established against the contracting authority several times in the past two years, but it also noted that no such infringement had been established against the first-rank plaintiff before. He described the infringement as extremely serious. He highlighted that when the contracting authorities determined the main subject of contract amendment No. 3, the procurement requirement was formulated with the condition that it could be obtained exclusively from the first-tier plaintiff. With regard to the contract amendments dealing with blockage cases, he assessed that that in the cost compensation agreement the parties themselves stated that both parties were responsible for the situation created by the clogged “unclogable TVMs”. It assessed the fact that the breach of law could not be repaired to the detriment of the contracting parties. In the case of the 4th contract amendment, the parties first qualified the contractual concept of clogging cases and the provisions relating to it as damage in the protocol evaluating the provisions of the contract, and then, within the framework of the contract amendment, clogging cases were not interpreted as damage, but a new contractual provision was created for them, although it is clear that this is a case specified as a technical requirement in the technical specifications of the contracting authority. It also took into account that the contract was partly financed from a grant, so the breach of law may be subject to a sanction for the repayment of the grant in the proceedings of another body. It specifically mentioned that it considered the imposition of a fine for element 2 of the ex officio initiative to be justified, given that the posting of the notice on the modification of the contract is a guarantee-type obligation of the contracting authority, the failure to which constitutes a serious infringement, but it assessed that the information notice was published subsequently, although also that it was almost two years after the statutory deadline. At the same time, it assessed the contracting authority's benefit in the context of cooperation that it acknowledged the infringement for element 2. The different amount of the fine was justified by the fact of an additional infringement established against the contracting authority, while it assessed the legal acts assessed as infringing on the basis of elements 4, 5 and 6 as being identical in terms of the contribution and liability of the contracting authority and the successful tenderer.

Claims and counterclaims

[3] The first-ranking plaintiff filed his action for review of the first-ranking defendant's decision, in relation to the 4th, 5th and 6th requests of the ex officio initiative, requesting, pursuant to Section 339(2)(q) of Act III of 1952 on the Code of Civil Procedure (hereinafter: Pp.) and Section 172(3) of the Civil Procedure Code, the amendment of the decision and the determination of the absence of a violation of law with respect to the first-ranking plaintiff, and, in the alternative, the Pp. Pursuant to Section 339 (1), the provisions of the decision relating to him are repealed, thirdly, the decision is amended in this respect and the fine is waived, fourthly, the decision is repealed and the first-tier defendant is ordered to initiate new proceedings, stating that there is no legal possibility to impose a fine on the first-tier plaintiff, while fifthly, the decision is amended to the effect that a reduction in the amount of the fine is justified in the case of the first-tier plaintiff. He also requested payment of his costs incurred in the lawsuit.

[4] In addition to its primary argument regarding the imposition of the fine, which was that the application of this sanction against it was unlawful, it claimed that the first-tier defendant's reasoning was unreasonable and contained blatant logical contradictions, because it ignored important circumstances when it considered the involvement and liability to be the same for the contracting parties. Thus, it ignored that the necessity of the contract amendments was initiated by the contracting authority, i.e. the formulation of the procurement request in each case.
There was no evidence of intent, bad faith, or any collusion on his part.
Its activities were always responsive and, as a company operating in a competitive market environment, it tried to show as much flexibility as possible in order to meet the needs of its clients. In point 53 of the decision, the first-tier defendant itself established that the comparison of the modification condition and the facts is the responsibility of the contracting authority, and the first-tier defendant or even the ex officio initiator cannot take this on. This necessarily leads to the conclusion that neither is the winning bidder. The statement in point 61 of the decision, according to which the fact that the conclusion of the Cost Compensation Agreement was not treated as a modification and, as a result, the guarantee procedure rules specified in the public procurement regulations, such as the publication of the notice, were disregarded, should be assessed as a burden on both parties involved in the contract modification, is also unfounded. The latter is the obligation of the contracting authority, therefore the failure to do so cannot be attributed to the first-tier plaintiff in the same way as the contracting authority. Point 73 of the decision states that the contracting authority has been fined several times in the past two years, while no such fine has been imposed on the winning bidder, but the amount of the fine does not reflect this difference either.

[5] In its counterclaim, the first-rank defendant requested the dismissal of the first-rank plaintiff's claim. In response to the claim argument regarding the fine, it consistently emphasized that the infringement was committed jointly by the parties, and that the consequences of the contractual amendments reached by mutual agreement are borne jointly and equally by the parties. The first-rank plaintiff was unable to identify a relevant data group that was not presented in this context. The first-rank defendant referred to point 73 of its decision, in which it took into account that no infringement had been established against the winning bidder in the past two years. The aspects taken into account in the context of imposing the fine were recorded in the relevant part of the decision.

[6] The intervener defendant - in agreement with the counterclaim of the first-tier defendant - argued that the contracting authority is the primary, but not the only, obligor for the proper conduct of the public procurement procedure. The judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union in Case C-263/2019 (hereinafter: CJEU judgment) clearly supports the intervener defendant's position. National legislation that allows both the establishment of an infringement and the imposition of a fine against the successful tenderer in addition to the contracting authority is not contrary to EU law.

Judgment No. 103.K.702.699/2021/5 of the Metropolitan Court

[7] In its first-instance judgment, the Metropolitan Court partially changed the decision No. D.561/17/2017 of the first-tier plaintiff and, with regard to the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, omitted the provision establishing the infringement of Section 141 (8) of Act CXLIII of 2015 on Public Procurement (hereinafter: the Public Procurement Act) against the first-tier plaintiff and reduced the amount of the fine imposed on the first-tier plaintiff to HUF 40,000,000 (forty million), exceeding which it dismissed the claim of the first-tier plaintiff and dismissed the claim of the second-tier plaintiff. It further ruled on the amendment to the contract No. 3 between the first-tier and second-tier plaintiffs dated July 13, 2017; on the nullity of the cost compensation agreement concluded on December 22, 2016 and the contract amendment No. 4 concluded on September 15, 2017, as well as on the payment of legal costs.

[8] According to point [78] of the first-instance judgment, the 1st-tier defendant assessed the parties' contribution and liability as the same in all amendments regarding the infringement of the 4th; 5th; 6th initiative elements, but in the case of contract amendment number 3, it took into account the contracting authority's conduct, as a result of which the product could be purchased exclusively from the winning bidder. In the case of the other two amendments, it argued that both parties were responsible for the situation regarding the management of the impermeability. The estimated value, the contractual values, and the blatant seriousness of the infringement as criteria were assessed equally to the detriment of both parties, however, the two parties' history with regard to the infringement was different, which was not weighted, and the 1st-tier defendant did not provide a reason for the reason for which it refrained from making a distinction. The first-rank defendant considered the fine sanction as an option after the infringement established according to element 2 of the initiative – following from the justification – and considered the application of a fine to be justified. It considered the infringement serious due to the guarantee nature of the act, and applied the difference between the two sanctions as a result of this infringement, consequently the significant delay in sending the information notice – which was not disputed by the second-rank plaintiff – resulted in the imposition of a fine of HUF 10,000,000.

[9] In light of the CJEU judgment, the Budapest Metropolitan Court concluded in paragraph [79] of its judgment that the issue of liability cannot be derived from a mere agreement under the law of obligations. A sanction may be related to liability under public procurement law, which in the case of a contract amendment can be clarified by examining the circumstances that necessitated the amendment and may lead to the infringement of one of the cases allowing the amendment regulated in Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code. Since the first-rank defendant himself considered contract amendment No. 3 to arise from the contracting authority’s new procurement requirement, which he also repeated in the decision paragraph justifying the fine sanction, for this reason the infringement established against the first-rank plaintiff and the sanction applied in relation to initiative element No. 4 are unlawful. At the same time, the relevant circumstances of the Cost Compensation Agreement and Contract Amendment No. 4 were revealed by the First-tier Defendant, and both during the examination of the infringement and the application of the sanction, he addressed the reasons why he considered it justified to condemn the winning bidder, in comparison to the initiative, precisely because of its involvement, with which reasons the court agreed according to the reasoning of the judgment related to these two contract amendments. This involvement was the basis for the application of the fine sanction, the sole reason for the change of which was the change in the number of infringements attributed to the winning bidder, and the circumstance that – unlike the contracting authority – no infringement had been established against the winning bidder in the previous two years.

Interim ruling of the Curia Kf.I.40.725/2021/18.

[10] In its interim judgment, the Curia did not affect the provision of the first instance court's judgment not affected by the appeal, changed the part affected by the appeal and dismissed the claim of the first-tier plaintiff with regard to the legal basis for establishing an infringement under the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, omitted the provision on reducing the amount of the fine and upheld the fourth element of the ex officio initiative.

In relation to the examination of the amount of the fine imposed on the first-degree plaintiff for the violation of the law under the first-degree element, the court of first instance ordered a new hearing of the case and a new decision.

[11] The Curia set aside the provision of the first-instance court's judgment regarding the partial claim fee of HUF 1,000,000 out of the HUF 2,500,000 imposed on the first-instance plaintiff, and the partial claim fee of HUF 500,000 imposed on the state due to the personal exemption from the fee of the first-instance defendant. The fee for the cross-appeal is HUF 8,000 (eight thousand), which is borne by the first-instance plaintiff. The parties themselves shall bear the legal costs incurred in the second-instance proceedings. [12] In paragraphs [46]-[47] of the Curia's judgment, it was established that the first-instance defendant had factually pointed out that, as stated in the Curia's judgment Kfv.II.37.434/2017/12. "The liability for the violation of public procurement law is objective." (Judgment No. Kfv.II.37.434/2017/12, paragraph [44]). At the same time, it noted that the facts of the referenced judgment No. Kfv.II.37.434/2017/12 and the present litigation are not completely identical, since in the referenced case there was no public procurement procedure and no amendment of the contract concluded as a result of the public procurement procedure, and the infringement of public procurement law was not established against the bidder (in the absence of a public procurement procedure, there was no bidder). The Curia assessed that the difference between the factual situations, and thus the difference in the violations that occurred, is not relevant to the examination of the liability structure as a legal issue, since there is an identity in that in both cases a public procurement violation occurred in which the legislator does not make the application of the legal consequence dependent on consideration, but rather imposes a mandatory fine. In addition to the similarity of these basic characteristics, the difference in the further factual elements does not affect the determination of the liability structure, and thus the answer to the legal issue of what liability structure the Civil Code regulates in the case of unlawful contract modification as a violation. Before further examining the liability structure, the Curia points out that the first-order defendant's argument in relation to the CJEU judgment is correct insofar as the CJEU judgment makes individualization and consideration mandatory not when establishing the violation, but when imposing a fine. However, the first-tier defendant incorrectly concludes that the CJEU judgment would support the existence of the strict liability model, since the CJEU judgment did not examine the liability model itself, but rather ruled that it is not contrary to the relevant EU standards if national law also establishes the liability of the tenderer for the infringement.

[13] The Curia explained in paragraph [48] of its judgment that "The Curia points out in connection with the liability structure that strict liability is typically an administrative liability, which differs from both the liability structures typical of criminal law (based on guilt/culpability) and civil law (typically based on blameworthiness). Strict liability was examined in detail by the Constitutional Court in its Decision 60/2009. (V. 28.) AB in the context of liability for road traffic violations, to which it also referred in its later decisions [e.g. Decision 16/2018. (X. 8.) AB]. As is evident from the decisions of the Constitutional Court, the characteristic of objective liability, which is widespread in the field of administrative liability, is that it attaches the legal consequence to the unlawful conduct itself, regardless of the culpability or blameworthiness of the violator, and thus the application of the sanction is more effective, as it encourages lawful conduct through the inevitability of liability."

Machine Translated by Google

[14] In paragraph [50] of the Curia judgment, it referred to the provisions of the CJEU judgment, stating that “The CJEU judgment does not contain any provision that would break this objective liability; the determination of the infringement and the application of the legal consequence related to it continue to be made on an objective basis, taking into account the fact of the implementation of the unlawful conduct. The CJEU judgment sets out the requirements necessary for ensuring compliance with the fundamental principles of the EU in relation to the circumstances to be assessed in the context of the amount of the fine, which influence the amount of the fine, but do not affect the determination of liability for the infringement and the mandatory application of the legal consequence of the fine.”

[15] According to point [51] of the second-instance judgment, “The conclusion drawn in the judgment of the first-instance court that no circumstances giving rise to a contract amendment were presented in the decision of the first-tier defendant that would have indicated the establishment of public procurement law liability cannot result in the omission of the establishment of a violation in the case of contract amendment no. 3, since in the case of strict liability, the establishment of a violation is based on the implementation of unlawful conduct - in this case, the unlawful amendment of the contract by omitting public procurement - and furthermore, it does not follow from either the provisions of the Civil Code or the judgment of the CJEU that a liability form different from strict liability would apply.”

[16] Consequently, the Curia emphasized that the provisions of Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act must be interpreted in light of the provisions of the CJEU judgment, i.e., not only the contracting authority but also the contracting parties may be held liable for an unlawful contract amendment in relation to a public procurement contract. In this regard, it referred to the provisions of Section [21] of the Kfv.IV.37.130/2021/4. judgment, stating that the successful tenderer of the public procurement contract is also liable for the unlawful disregard of the rules set out in Section 141 of the Public Procurement Act and may be subject to a sanction in the appeal proceedings initiated by the supervisory authority. Thus, the infringement is incumbent on the First-tier Plaintiff in relation to contract amendment No. 3, and therefore there is a mandatory case for imposing a fine in this regard as well. It agreed with the content of the appeal of the first-tier defendant, with the exception that in points [56] and [58] of its decision it did not examine the extent of liability for the infringement, but rather assessed whether one of the circumstances listed there establishes the legality of the contract amendment, taking into account the conditions set out in point b) of paragraph (4) of Section 141 of the Civil Code. Point [70] of the reasoning of the first-tier judgment therefore contains an erroneous conclusion that one of these circumstances excludes the finding of a breach of the first-tier plaintiff. The proportion of liability for the infringement and the degree of contribution do not influence the determination of the infringement, but the amount of the fine.

[17] Paragraph [55] of the second-instance judgment stated that the first-instance court, taking a different position on the legal basis, omitted to establish an infringement by the first-rank defendant, as a result of which it did not rule on the element of the first-rank plaintiff's claim relating to the imposition and amount of the fine in this part. Paragraph [79] of the first-instance judgment expressly states that one of the reasons for changing the fine was the change in the seriousness of the infringement, and it is also clear from this paragraph that the

The court of first instance assessed the legality of the fine imposed on the first-tier plaintiff, including the determination of the first-tier defendant's involvement in the infringement, solely with regard to the cost compensation agreement and contract amendment no. 4. However, the legality of the fine imposed on the first-tier plaintiff for contract amendment no. 3, which is the subject of the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, as a violation, was not examined, so the first-tier plaintiff's claim in this part remained unexamined.

[18] According to points [60] and [64] of the interim judgment, the first instance court must decide in the new proceedings, within the limits of the claim of the first-rank plaintiff and the counterclaim of the first-rank defendant, on the claim for a fine imposed on the first-rank plaintiff for the violation established due to contract amendment no. 3 under the fourth element of the ex officio initiative, and on the payment of a partial fee of HUF 1,500,000.

New procedure of the Metropolitan Court

[19] In the repeated proceedings, the first-rank plaintiff maintained his claim for a reduction of the fine and the grounds on which it was based. Despite the fact that Section 165(11) of the Public Procurement Act provides with regard to the amount of sanctions that the Public Procurement Arbitration Board is obliged to take into account all the circumstances of the case when determining the amount of the fine, he claimed that the first-rank defendant's decision – in direct contradiction to the statement contained therein – did not at all address the circumstances to be examined in the determination of the amount of the fine imposed on the first-rank plaintiff. The amount of the fine was not determined in accordance with the extent of the infringement. The extent of the liability of the contracting parties cannot in any way be considered to be automatically the same without any further consideration. In practice, the tenderer is typically faced with a ready-made situation and has no influence on the situation arising from the newly formulated customer requirement, in particular not on making decisions relevant to public procurement (such as the decision to refrain from conducting a public procurement procedure). The tenderer does not actually have information about the relevant circumstances to assess whether conducting a public procurement procedure is necessary in the given case.

[20] The first-rank plaintiff, primarily based on Section 339 (2) point q) of the Code of Civil Procedure, requested the amendment of the decision in view of the interim judgment of the Curia Kf.I.40.725/2021/18., so that the court significantly reduces the amount of the fine imposed in respect of each infringement established in relation to the first-rank plaintiff, based on the substantive assessment of the contribution of the parties involved; secondly, based on Section 339 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Curia Kf.I.40.725/2021/18. In view of the provisions of its interim judgment no. 1, the Court requested the annulment of the provision imposing the fine as unlawful and the obligation of the first-rank defendant to conduct new proceedings, with the instruction that the amount of the fine for the ice violation be determined separately for each established violation in relation to the first-rank plaintiff, taking into account the contribution of the parties involved. The first-rank defendant failed to break down the amount of the fine imposed by violation, since it was imposed uniformly, without further detail,

It was established in the nature of a declaration, and in the present proceedings, it is therefore necessary to review the entire amount of the fine imposed, regardless of the fact that the Curia formally ordered the court of first instance to conduct a new procedure only with regard to contract amendment no. 3.
For the sake of clarity, it referred to the fact that it cannot be determined from its decision what part of the uniformly determined fine amount belonged to each violation, thus the issue of the fine for the violation related to contract amendment no. 3 cannot be assessed in isolation, as it necessarily opens the possibility of reviewing the fine amount in relation to the other violations.

[21] The first-tier plaintiff, taking into account the limitations of the new procedure, requested that the amount of the fine be reduced to the amount imposed in the main proceedings, since it was established that the defendant's decision did not contain any relevant element that would justify the plaintiff's participation. He also requested that his legal costs be determined.

[22] The first-rank defendant requested the dismissal of the action, referring to the arguments it had put forward in the main proceedings in connection with the imposition of the fine. The infringement was committed jointly by the parties. The consequences of the contract amendments concluded by mutual agreement of the parties are borne jointly and equally by the parties. It is an indisputable fact that the conduct of the public procurement procedure is the obligation of the contracting authority, however, the amendment of the contract cannot be concluded without the same intervention of the party contracting as the winning bidder. Since point 73 of the decision states that no infringement has been established against the first-rank plaintiff in the past two years, the claim that the first-rank defendant did not assess it is unfounded.

[23] The defendant intervener did not make a statement in the repeated proceedings.

The court's decision and its legal reasons

[24] The claim is partly well-founded as follows.

[25] The court of first instance is bound by the operative part and reasoning of the judgment of the court of second instance, its findings and resolutions. In the new proceedings, the court of first instance was only able to examine the amount of the fine imposed on the first-tier plaintiff in respect of contract amendment number 3 within the limits of the claim and counterclaim.
All this placed the following constraints on the trial court.

[26] In its decision, the first-tier defendant made a difference of 10 million forints between the amount of the fine imposed on the contracting authority and the first-tier plaintiff, regarding which the first-tier court determined in point [78] of its decision that it should be assessed as a sanction for a further infringement of the law imposed on the contracting authority, which determination cannot be appealed in the absence of an appeal.

was part of the appeal proceedings, so in this part the first instance judgment is final. This means that the 70 million - 70 million forint fine is the amount that is imposed on the contracting parties equally, as an objective sanction for the unlawfully concluded contract amendments.

[27] The defendant did not differentiate between the three violations it assessed as contractual amendments, either by contract or by the involvement of the contracting parties (the latter being claimed to be identical). The trial court was not allowed to examine the fine sanction for the violation due to the conclusion of the Cost Compensation Agreement and Contract Amendment No. 4.

[28] In point [79] of its decision, the court of first instance assessed the difference in the history of the contracting parties in favor of the first-degree plaintiff, in addition to the number of violations, as a reason for the change, since this difference (whether they committed violations in the previous two years or not) does not appear in the decision, if the 10 million forint excess for the contracting authority is the result of the further violation. The second-degree judgment did not address this judgment finding – in the absence of separate appeal arguments relating to this finding – but this aspect influencing the amount of the fine is part of the omitted provision.

[29] The Curia assessed the arguments appearing in paragraphs 56 and 58 of the decision as an examination of the conditions pursuant to Section 141(4)(b) of the Civil Procedure Code and, due to objective liability, excluded its consideration as a reason for the absence of a violation, but at the same time accepted it as a circumstance to be assessed when imposing a fine.

[30] According to Section 339/B of the Code of Civil Procedure, an administrative decision made in the exercise of discretion shall be deemed lawful if the administrative body has sufficiently investigated the facts, complied with the procedural rules, the criteria for the exercise of discretion can be established, and the reasoning of the decision demonstrates the reasonableness of the exercise of the evidence. According to established judicial practice (Curia Kf.III.38.211/2019/5, Kf.III.37.630/2019/6.), there is a possibility of mitigation if the defendant failed to assess a relevant circumstance or incorrectly took a circumstance into account when determining the amount of the fine. Therefore, the court has no possibility of overriding the defendant's decision regarding the amount of the fine determined after reasonably taking into account the circumstances. According to the EBH 2017. K. 30. principle decision, only the reasons stated in the contested decision may be taken into account during the judicial review of an administrative decision; an administrative decision made in the exercise of discretion is unlawful if it does not - or does not contain in sufficient detail - the considerations of the discretion.

[31] The amount of the fine was determined by the defendant by consideration. Points 72 and 73 of the decision contain the considerations of consideration with reference to Section 165 (6); (7) and (11) of the Public Procurement Act. According to paragraph (11), in deciding whether the imposition of a fine is justified and in determining the amount of the fine and the duration of the ban, the Public Procurement Arbitration Board shall take into account all the circumstances of the case - in particular the gravity of the infringement, the subject and value of the public procurement, the reason for the infringement closing the public procurement procedure.

the influence on the decision, the repeated conduct in breach of this Act, the cooperative conduct of the infringer in assisting the procedure, the long period of time between the occurrence of the infringement and the initiation of the legal remedy procedure, and in the case of a procurement carried out with support, the circumstance that the infringement may be subject to a sanction for repayment of the support in the proceedings of another body - shall be taken into account. When determining the amount of the fine and the duration of the ban, it shall also be taken into account if the infringement was obviously intentional. When imposing the fine, the first-tier defendant took into account the contractual values, the gravity of the infringement, whether there had been an infringement before, and did not separately assess the cooperative conduct after the parties had fulfilled their legal obligations. The Metropolitan Court found that the first-tier defendant had assessed all relevant aspects, and the lack of intentional bad faith complained of by the first-tier plaintiff cannot be taken into account as a fine reduction criterion, since the parties are expected to act in good faith, so the lack of separate mention or assessment of this circumstance cannot be held accountable.

[32] The range of assessment criteria is therefore complete, according to established judicial practice (Curia Kf.III.38.211/2019/5., Kf.III.37.630/2019/6.) there is a possibility of mitigation if the defendant did not assess a relevant circumstance or incorrectly took into account a circumstance when determining the amount of the fine. In the case of contract amendment No. 3, the first-order defendant highlighted the contracting authority's definition of the main subject of the amendment and the method of formulating the procurement requirement when assessing the gravity of the infringement, which is the exclusive competence of one of the contracting parties. However, in comparison, in the amendments concerning sealing cases, he assessed a number of joint or joint decisions arising from the contractual relationship of the parties, which led to the summary finding that the 4th; 5th; The legal acts judged as infringing on the basis of element 6 result in the same contribution and liability, making it unreasonable. In the logical system of the reasoning of the decision, the arguments regarding the applied sanction, in particular the findings justifying the gravity of the infringement, are to be interpreted together with the reasons underlying the finding of the infringement. In points 56 and 58 of the decision of the first-tier defendant, the contracting authority identified (exclusion of competition) acts during the examination of the occurrence of the infringement, which – regardless of the issue of liability for the infringement – makes the ratio of the contribution of the contracting parties to the decision of the contracting authority that triggers public procurement law consequences and the economic operator acting fundamentally along economic considerations to be assessed. The Curia also considered this justified according to point [54] of the second-instance intermediate judgment, regardless of the establishment of objective liability for the infringement.

[33] Based on the provisions of the first-instance judgment that were not challenged on appeal and the interim judgment of the Curia, the Metropolitan Court, taking into account all of this, reduced the amount of the fine by 20 million forints, taking into account the following considerations. The first-instance defendant did not weight the amount of the 70 million forint fine imposed on the first-instance plaintiff for each individual contract amendment, and the sanction part of the first-instance judgment for the other two contract amendments cannot be the subject of the new proceedings, while the first-instance defendant referred to the identity of its assessment. The aspects listed in point 73 of the first-instance defendant’s decision are comprehensive and well-founded, with two exceptions. It did not unreasonably differentiate between the first-instance plaintiff and the contracting authority with regard to the amount of the fine, even though it had not previously found any infringement against the first-instance plaintiff. This circumstance – regardless of the gravity of the violation of each contract amendment – is the first-order plaintiff to be assessed in favor of. Based on the reasons of the first-rank defendant, the court considered the amount of the fine to be the same for each violation on the part of the first-rank defendant. In the case of contract amendment no. 3, it had to take into account that the violation can be established against the first-rank plaintiff, but at the same time, its contribution to the occurrence of the violation is, as mentioned above, smaller than that of the contracting authority, so the first-rank defendant unjustifiably ignored it, although it itself stated this in several places in its decision.

[34] In the absence of an appeal, the repeated proceedings did not include the examination of the part of the fine imposed on the First-tier Plaintiff based on the Cost Compensation Agreement and Contract Amendment No. 4, and the reason for disregarding the first-tier judgment ruling on the reduction of the fine was solely the different assessment of the possibility of establishing liability due to Contract Amendment No. 3. The First-tier Plaintiff's motion that the court examine this part of the decision in its entirety was unfounded and contrary to the binding nature of the second-tier judgment.

[35] In view of all this, the Metropolitan Court partially changed the defendant's decision based on Section 339 (2) q) of the Code of Civil Procedure (and taking into account the procedural rules containing rules different from the Code of Civil Procedure applicable at the time of the initiation of the legal remedy proceedings and applicable at the time of the submission of the statement of claim) and applied by the first-order defendant with temporal effect pursuant to point 41 of its decision (October 2, 2017) in accordance with the authorization received in Section 172 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure (2 October 2017), reduced the 70 million forint fine imposed on the first-order plaintiff to 50 million forints for element 4 of the ex officio initiative, and dismissed the first-order plaintiff's claim in excess of this (with regard to the examination of the sanction covering all violations, and the reduction to 40 million forints as previously).

[36] By applying Section 3(2)(b) and (6) of Decree 32/2003. (VIII.22) of the Ministry of Justice on attorneys' fees incurred in legal representation and ascertainable in court proceedings (hereinafter: IM.r.), the court determined the amount of the legal fees, taking into account the ratio of winning and losing the case, based on the amount of the fine as the subject matter of the case, in favor of the first-rank plaintiff in the new proceedings, which it obliged the first-rank defendant to bear based on Sections 77 and 78(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure. No separate costs were incurred by the intervener's proceedings, so there was no need to decide on this matter.

[37] The decision on the 1,500 thousand forints earnings fee shall be made based on the instructions of the Curia, and its amount shall be based on Section 37 (1); Section 39 (1); Section 42 (1) a); Section 43 (3) of Act XCIII of 1990 on Fees (hereinafter: Act).
In the administrative lawsuit initiated by the first-rank plaintiff, the first-rank plaintiff is required to pay a fee of HUF 500,000 from the fee recorded due to the right to record a subject-matter fee provided for in Section 62 (1) h) of the Civil Procedure Act, in view of his partial victory in the lawsuit, and HUF 1 million of the fee remains the responsibility of the state due to the exemption of the first-rank defendant from the fee pursuant to Section 5 (1) c) of the Civil Procedure Act.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Tenth Chamber)

11 June 2020 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Directive 2014/24/EU — Procurement procedure for the award of a service contract — Architectural and engineering services — Article 19(1) and Article 80(2) — National legislation limiting participation solely to economic operators in certain legal forms)

In Case C-219/19,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy), made by decision of 16 January 2019, received at the Court on 11 March 2019, in the proceedings

THE COURT (Tenth Chamber), composed of I. Jarukaitis, President of the Chamber, E. Juhász (Rapporteur) and M. Ilešič, Judges,

Advocate General: P. Pikamäe,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Parsec Fondazione Parco delle Scienze e della Cultura, by A. Pontenani and I. Cecchi, avvocati, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and C. Pluchino, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara, P. Ondrůšek and L. Haasbeek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of recital 14, Article 19(1) and Article 80(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Parsec Fondazione Parco delle Scienze e della Cultura (‘Parsec’), on the one hand, and Ministero delle Infrastrutture e dei Trasporti (Ministry of Infrastructure and Transport) and Autorità nazionale anticorruzione (ANAC) (National Anti-Corruption Authority, Italy), on the other hand, concerning the latter’s decision rejecting Parsec’s application for inclusion in the national register of engineering firms and firms of professionals entitled to provide architectural and engineering services.

Legal context

3 Under recital 14 of Directive 2014/24:

‘It should be clarified that the notion of “economic operators” should be interpreted in a broad manner so as to include any persons and/or entities which offer the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market, irrespective of the legal form under which they have chosen to operate. Thus, firms, branches, subsidiaries, partnerships, cooperative societies, limited companies, universities, public or private, and other forms of entities than natural persons should all fall within the notion of economic operator, whether or not they are “legal persons” in all circumstances.’

4 Article 2(1) of that directive, that article being entitled ‘Definitions’, provides:

10. “economic operator” means any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities, including any temporary association of undertakings, which offers the execution of works and/or a work, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market;

5 Article 19(1) of that directive, that article being entitled ‘Economic operators’, provides:

‘Economic operators that, under the law of the Member State in which they are established, are entitled to provide the relevant service, shall not be rejected solely on the ground that, under the law of the Member State in which the contract is awarded, they would be required to be either natural or legal persons.

However, in the case of public service and public works contracts as well as public supply contracts covering in addition services or siting and installation operations, legal persons may be required to indicate, in the tender or the request to participate, the names and relevant professional qualifications of the staff to be responsible for the performance of the contract in question.’

6 Article 80 of the directive, entitled ‘Rules on the organisation of design contests and the selection of participants’, provides:

‘1. When organising design contests, contracting authorities shall apply procedures which are adapted to the provisions of Title I and this Chapter.

2. The admission of participants to design contests shall not be limited:

(a) by reference to the territory or part of the territory of a Member State;

(b) on the grounds that, under the law of the Member State in which the contest is organised, they would be required to be either natural or legal persons.

3. Where design contests are restricted to a limited number of participants, the contracting authorities shall lay down clear and non-discriminatory selection criteria. In any event, the number of candidates invited to participate shall be sufficient to ensure genuine competition.’

7 Decreto legislativo n. 50 — Attuazione delle direttive 2014/23/UE, 2014/24/UE e 2014/25/UE sull'aggiudicazione dei contratti di concessione, sugli appalti pubblici e sulle procedure d'appalto degli enti erogatori nei settori dell'acqua, dell'energia, dei trasporti e dei servizi postali, nonché per il riordino della disciplina vigente in materia di contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture (Legislative Decree No 50 implementing Directives 2014/23/EU, 2014/24/EU and 2014/25/EU on the award of concession contracts, on public procurement and on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, and reforming the existing provisions in relation to public works, service and supply contracts) of 18 April 2016 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016) constitutes the Codice dei contratti pubblici (Public Procurement Code).

8 Whereas Article 45 of that code defines in broad terms the concept of economic operator allowed to take part in procurement procedures for the award of public contracts, Article 46 thereof establishes a special regime for architectural and engineering services. Under the latter provision:

'1. Participation in procurement procedures in relation to architectural and engineering services is open to the following:

(a) providers of engineering and architectural services: independent or associated professionals, firms of professionals as referred to in subparagraph (b), engineering firms as referred to in subparagraph (c), consortia, European Economic Interest Groupings (EEIGs), temporary groupings of the abovementioned forms, which provide public and private customers operating on the market with engineering and architectural services as well as technical and administrative activities, and economic and financial feasibility studies related to these activities, including, as regards measures relating to the restoration and maintenance of movable property and surfaces decorated with architectural objects, persons qualified as restorers of cultural objects in accordance with the regulations in force;

(b) firms of professionals: firms constituted exclusively from among professionals enrolled with the respective professional associations provided for by the professional regulations in force, in the form of partnerships as referred to in Chapters II, III and IV of Title V of Book V of the Civil Code and in the form of cooperative societies as referred to in Chapter I of Title VI of Book V of the Civil Code, which provide private and public developers with engineering and architectural services such as feasibility studies, research, consultations, design or site management work, technical and economic feasibility assessments or environmental impact assessments;

(c) engineering firms: limited liability companies as referred to in Chapters V, VI and VII of Title V of Book V of the Civil Code, or in the form of cooperative societies as referred to in Chapter I of Title VI of Book V of the Civil Code, which do not meet the conditions to be classified as firms of professionals, and which carry out feasibility studies, research, consultancy, design or site management work, technical and economic feasibility studies or impact assessments as well as other goods production activities associated with the provision of these services;

(d) providers of engineering and architectural services identified under CPV codes 74200000-1 to 74276400-8, 74310000-5 to 74323100-0 and 74874000-6 established in other Member States, constituted in accordance with the legislation in force in the respective countries;

(e) temporary groupings constituted from among the forms referred to in subparagraphs (a) to (d);

(f) permanent groupings of firms of professionals and of engineering firms, including in a mixed form, consisting of at least three members that have operated in the sectors of engineering and architectural services.

2. For the purpose of taking part in the procurement procedures referred to in paragraph 1, firms may, within five years from their constitution, show compliance with the economic/financial and technical/organisational conditions required in the contract notice, including the conditions relating to the members of the firm where the firm is constituted in the form of a partnership or a cooperative society, and those relating to the technical managers or professionals employed on a permanent basis by the firm, where the latter is constituted in the form of a limited liability company.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

9 Parsec is a non-profit-making private-law foundation constituted in accordance with the Italian Civil Code.

10 Its seat is located in Prato (Italy) and, as provided for in its founding document, it is active inter alia in the study of natural disasters, the detection and prevention of risk conditions, environmental and land use planning, management and monitoring as well as civil and environmental protection. It created a seismology 'observatory' in its midst, which operates in stable cooperation with the Istituto nazionale di geofisica e vulcanologia (National Institute of Geophysics and Volcanology, Italy). Through that observatory, Parsec manages a network of stations for measuring seismic activity, works in cooperation with universities and research bodies, and provides seismic risk management, civil protection and land use planning services for the benefit of numerous municipalities and local authorities. It carries out all of those activities thanks to staff that is highly qualified in that field.

11 In order to be able to take part in tendering procedures for the service of classifying the territory according to seismic risk, Parsec lodged an application for inclusion in ANAC's register of operators entitled to provide engineering and architectural services. However, since Parsec did not fall within any of the categories of economic operators referred to in Article 46(1) of the Public Procurement Code, ANAC issued a decision rejecting the application for inclusion, against which Parsec lodged an action before the referring court, namely the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy).

12 Before that court, both the Ministry for Infrastructure and Transport and ANAC submit, as a preliminary point, that the fact that Parsec is not included in ANAC's register of economic operators as referred to in Article 46 of the Public Procurement Code does not preclude it from taking part in the tendering procedures for the services in question.

13 The referring court notes, in the first place, that the services covered by the proceedings before it, namely seismic services and that of classifying the territory according to seismic risk, fall within the architectural and engineering services referred to in the Public Procurement Code. For the performance of services, Article 46 of the code provides that participation in the tendering procedures is open solely to certain categories of operators, which do not include non-profit-making bodies such as Parsec. According to the referring court, this is due to the fact, that since those bodies may not enrol on ANAC's register, it is impossible for the contracting authority to verify the professional characteristics of such bodies wishing to submit a tender.

14 In the second place, the referring court is of the opinion that that special rule, which has the effect of limiting the scope of the concept of 'economic operator' set out in Article 45 of the Public Procurement Code, can be justified by the significant degree of professionalism required of the tenderers to guarantee the quality of the services they would have to provide and by a 'presumption' that the persons providing those services on a continuous professional basis, subject to remuneration, are more likely to have performed their activity without interruption and to have undergone professional development training.

15 In the third place, the referring court states that in its judgment of 23 December 2009, CoNISMa (C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807), the Court declared the incompatibility with EU law of Italian legislation that prohibited entities which were primarily non-profit-making from taking part in a procurement procedure for the award of public contracts, even though such entities were entitled to offer the services covered by the contract in question. According to the referring court, while the Italian legislature in Article 45 of the Public Procurement Code — which defines in broad terms the concept of 'economic operator' — reproduced the Court's broad definition of that concept in that judgment, by adopting Article 46 of the code, it chose a narrower definition for architectural and engineering services.

16 In view of the general guidance given in that judgment, the referring court asks whether under EU law Member States may nonetheless adopt narrower definitions with regard to the services covered by the dispute in the main proceedings. In that regard, it notes that under the wording of Article 19(1) and that of Article 80(2) of Directive 2014/24, even if only by implication, it seems that Member States may limit participation in procurement procedures for the award of public contracts solely to natural persons and certain legal persons. It notes, in addition, that economic operators established in another Member State are not affected by the restrictive definition provided for in Article 46 of the Public Procurement Code given the applicability to those operators of the general rule set out in Article 45(1) of that code, according to which, in line with the provisions of Article 80(2) of Directive 2014/24, those operators are permitted to take part in procurement procedures for the award of contracts according to the legislation of the Member State in which they are established.

17 In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Does recital 14 in conjunction with Articles 19(1) and 80(2) of Directive [2014/24] preclude a legal provision such as Article 46 of [the Public Procurement Code], by which the Italian Republic transposed Directives 2014/23, 2014/24 and 2014/25 into national law, which permits only economic operators created in the legal forms indicated in that provision to take part in tendering procedures for the award of “architectural and engineering services”, which has the effect of excluding from participation in such procedures economic operators that perform such services using a different legal form?’

18 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 19(1) and Article 80(2) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of recital 14 thereof, are to be interpreted as precluding national legislation that prevents non-profit-making entities from being able to take part in a procurement procedure for the award of a public contract for engineering and architectural services, even though those entities are entitled under national law to offer the services covered by the contract in question.

19 As a preliminary point, it is important to note that it is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that under the national legislation applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings, a foundation such as Parsec, whose activity is non-profit-making, is not allowed to take part in a procurement procedure for the award of a public contract for engineering and architectural services, even though that entity is entitled under national law to offer the services covered by the contract in question.

20 The Court has previously held, in paragraphs 47 to 49 of the judgment of 23 December 2009, CoNISMa (C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807), with regard to national legislation that transposed into domestic law Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), that Member States have indeed a discretion as to whether or not to allow certain categories of economic operators to provide certain services and they can, inter alia, determine whether or not entities which are non-profit-making and whose primary object is teaching and research are authorised to operate on the market, according to whether the activity in question is compatible with their objectives as an institution and those laid down in their statutes. However, if and to the extent that such entities are entitled to offer certain services on the market, national law cannot prohibit them from taking part in procurement procedures for the award of public contracts for the provision of those services.

21 That case-law of the Court was confirmed in respect of that directive (judgments of 19 December 2012, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 27, and of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme, C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraph 35) as well as the directive that it replaced, namely Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (judgment of 18 December 2014, Data Medical Service, C-568/13, EU:C:2014:2466, paragraph 36).

22 That case-law of the Court remains relevant with the entry into force of Directive 2014/24, which repealed and replaced Directive 2004/18. In addition to the fact that the concept of ‘economic operator’ set out in Article 1(8) of Directive 2004/18 was reproduced, without substantial modification, in point 10 of Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/24, recital 14 thereof now states explicitly that that concept is to be interpreted ‘in a broad manner’, so as to include any persons or entities active on the market ‘irrespective of the legal form under which they have chosen to operate’. Similarly, both Article 19(1) and Article 80(2) of the directive explicitly provide that an economic operator cannot be precluded from taking part solely on the ground that, under national law, it would be required to be either a natural or a legal person.

23 It follows that, in accordance with the Court’s case-law set out in paragraphs 20 and 21 above, national law cannot prohibit a non-profit-making foundation entitled to offer certain services on the domestic market from taking part in procurement procedures for the award of public contracts for the provision of those services.

24 That interpretation cannot be challenged on the ground, put forward by the referring court in its request for a preliminary ruling and referred to in the Italian Government’s written observations, that the narrow definition of the concept of ‘economic operator’ set out in Article 46 of the Public Procurement Code in the context of services relating to architecture and engineering are justified by the significant degree of professionalism required to guarantee the quality of those services and by an alleged presumption that the persons providing those services on a continuous professional basis, subject to remuneration, are more likely to have performed their activity without interruption and to have undergone professional development training.

25 In the first place, as observed by the European Commission, the Italian Government has not established the existence of any specific correlation between, on the one hand, the degree of professionalism demonstrated in providing a service and, consequently, the quality of the service provided, and, on the other hand, the legal form of the economic operator providing that service.

26 In the second place, with regard to the ‘presumption’ that the persons providing services in relation to architecture and engineering on a professional basis and subject to remuneration are more likely to have performed their activity without interruption and to have undergone professional development training, suffice it to note that such a presumption cannot prevail in EU law since it is incompatible with the Court’s case-law set out in paragraph 20 above, from which it follows that to the extent that an entity is entitled under national law to offer on the market engineering and architectural services in the Member State concerned, it cannot be precluded from being able to take part in a procurement procedure for the award of a public contract concerning the provision of those services.

27 Lastly, it should be added that the EU legislature appreciated the importance, for candidates and tenderers in the case of public service contracts and public works contracts as well as certain public supply contracts, of presenting a high degree of professionalism. It is to that end that it provided, in Article 19(1) of Directive 2014/24, that legal persons may be required to indicate in their offers or the request to participate, the names and relevant professional qualifications of the staff to be responsible for the performance of the contract in question. By contrast, the EU legislature, to that same end, did not introduce a different treatment on account of the legal form under which such candidates and tenderers have chosen to operate.

28 The answer to the question referred is therefore that Article 19(1) and Article 80(2) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of recital 14 thereof, are to be interpreted as precluding national legislation that prevents non-profit-making entities from being able to take part in a procurement procedure for the award of a public contract for engineering and architectural services, even though those entities are entitled under national law to offer the services covered by the contract in question.

Costs

29 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Tenth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 19(1) and Article 80(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, read in the light of recital 14 thereof, are to be interpreted as precluding national legislation that prevents non-profit-making entities from being able to take part in a procurement procedure for the award of a public contract for engineering and architectural services, even though those entities are entitled under national law to offer the services covered by the contract in question.

(1) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(2) having legal personality; and

(3) financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law; or are subject to management supervision by those authorities or bodies; or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.'

Decree-Law No 220

5 Article 1 of decreto-legge n. 220 – Disposizioni urgenti in materia di giustizia sportiva (Decree-Law No 220 laying down urgent provisions concerning sports law) of 19 August 2003 (GURI No 192 of 20 August 2003), converted into law, following amendment, by Article 1 of Legge n. 208 (Law No 208) of 17 October 2003 (GURI No 243 of 18 October 2003), provides:

'1. The Italian Republic recognises and promotes the autonomy of national sports law as an expression of international sports law falling within the purview of the International Olympic Committee.

2. The relationship between sports law and Italian law is governed by the principle of autonomy, except in cases involving individual rights linked to sports law which are of relevance to the legal system of the Italian Republic.'

Legislative Decree No 242

6 Article 1 of decreto legislativo n. 242 – Riordino del Comitato olimpico nazionale italiano - CONI, a norma dell'articolo 11 della legge 15 marzo 1997, n^{o} 59 (Legislative Decree No 242 on the reorganisation of the Italian National Olympic Committee - CONI, pursuant to Article 11 of Law No 59 of 15 March 1997) of 23 July 1999 (GURI No 176 of 29 July 1999), in the version applicable to the disputes in the main proceedings ('Legislative Decree No 242'), is worded as follows:

'1. The [Comitato Olimpico Nazionale Italiano (Italian National Olympic Committee; "the CONI")] shall have legal personality under public law, with its seat in Rome and shall be responsible to the Ministero per i Beni e le Attività Culturali (Ministry of Heritage and Cultural Activities, Italy).'

7 Article 2(1) of that legislative decree states:

'The CONI … shall comply with the principles of international sports law, in line with the decisions and guidelines issued by the International Olympic Committee ("IOC"). The CONI shall be responsible for the organisation and enhancement of national sport and, in particular, the preparation of athletes and the provision of adequate resources for the Olympic Games and for all other national or international sports events geared towards preparation for the Olympic Games. It shall also be responsible, within the framework of sports law …, for adopting measures to prevent and eliminate the use of substances that alter the natural physical performance of athletes in sports activities, as well as for promoting the practice of sports on the broadest possible scale …, within the limits laid down in the decreto del Presidente della Repubblica n. 616 (Decree of the President of the Republic No 616) of 24 July 1977. …'

8 Article 4(1) and (2) of Legislative Decree No 242 provides:

'1. The National Council shall be composed of:

(a) the President of the CONI at its head;

(b) the presidents of the national sports federations;

(c) Italian members of the IOC;

(d) athletes and coaches representing national sports federations and associated sports disciplines, provided that they have never been suspended from sports activity by way of penalty for any use of substances altering natural physical performance during sports activities;

2. The representatives of [national sports] federations, as defined in the context of Olympic sports, must represent the majority of voters within the CONI National Council.’

9 Article 5 of Legislative Decree No 242 provides:

‘1. In accordance with the decisions and guidelines of the IOC, the National Council shall work to promote the dissemination of the Olympic spirit and regulate and coordinate national sports activities, harmonising to that end the actions undertaken by national sports federations and national sports disciplines.

2. The National Council shall have as its task to:

(a) adopt the statutes and other normative measures falling within its competence, as well as guidelines on the interpretation and implementation of the rules in force;

(b) define the fundamental principles with which the statutes of national sports federations, associated sports disciplines, sports promotion bodies and sports associations and societies must be aligned in order to be recognised for sporting purposes;

(c) take decisions to recognise for sporting purposes national sports federations, sports societies and associations, sports promotion bodies, charitable organisations and other sports disciplines associated with the CONI and the federations, in accordance with the requirements laid down in the statute …;

(e) establish criteria and conditions governing the exercise of controls over national sports federations, associated sports disciplines and recognised sports promotion bodies;

(e ter) adopt, on a proposal from the National Board, decisions to place national sports federations or associated sports disciplines under administrative supervision in cases of serious management irregularities or serious infringements of sports law by the governing bodies, in cases of the proven inability of those bodies to function, or where the proper launch and running of national sports competitions cannot be ensured;

…’

10 Article 6(1) of that legislative decree provides:

‘The National Board shall consist of:

(a) the President of the CONI at its head;

(b) Italian members of the IOC;

(c) 10 representatives of the national sports federations and associated sports disciplines;

11 Article 7 of Legislative Decree No 242 is worded as follows:

‘1. The National Board shall act as a directorate-general for the administration and management of the CONI, defining its objectives and programmes and verifying that the results are consistent with the guidelines given.

2. The National Board shall carry out the following tasks:

(e) it exercises, on the basis of the criteria and procedures established in accordance with Article 5(2)(e), the power of control over national sports federations, associated sports disciplines and recognised sports promotion bodies with regard to the proper organisation of competitions, Olympic preparation, high-level sports activity and the use of the financial aid referred to in point (d) of this paragraph;

(f) it proposes to the National Council the placing of national sports federations or associated sports disciplines under administrative supervision in cases of serious management irregularities or serious infringements of sports law by the governing bodies, in cases of the proven inability of those bodies to function, or where the regulatory requirements are not complied with in order to ensure the launch and proper conduct of national sporting competitions;

12 Article 15(1) to (6) of that legislative decree states:

‘1. The national sports federations and associated sports disciplines shall pursue sports activities in accordance with the decisions and guidelines of the IOC, international federations and the CONI, and with due regard for the public dimension of certain types of activity which are set out in the CONI Statute. Sports societies and associations shall participate in those activities, as shall individual members solely in the cases provided for in the statutes of national sports federations and associated sports disciplines concerning that particular activity.

2. National sports federations and associated sports disciplines shall take the form of associations having legal personality under private law. They shall be non-profit-making and, except as otherwise expressly provided for in this Decree, shall be governed by the provisions of the Civil Code and the relevant implementing provisions.

3. The budgets of national sports federations and associated sports disciplines shall be approved annually by the administrative body of each federation and shall be subject to the approval of the CONI National Board. In the event of a negative opinion by the auditors of a federation or associated federation or in the event that a budget is not approved by the CONI National Board, an assembly of societies and associations shall be convened in order to deliberate on approving the budget.

4. The assembly competent to elect the management bodies shall approve the administrative body’s indicative budgetary programmes, which shall be submitted to the assembly for scrutiny at the end of each four-year period or at the end of the mandate for which they have been approved.

5. National sports federations and associated sports disciplines shall be recognised for sporting purposes by the National Council.

6. Recognition of new national sports federations and associated sports disciplines as having legal personality under private law shall be granted in accordance with the decreto del Presidente della Repubblica n. 361 (Decree of the President of the Republic No 361) of 10 February 2000, subject to recognition for sporting purposes by the National Council.’

13 Article 16(1) of Legislative Decree No 242 provides:

‘National sports federations and associated sports disciplines shall be governed by the provisions of statutes and regulations on the basis of the principle of internal democracy, the principle of sport for all on equal terms, and in accordance with national and international sports law.’

The CONI Statute

14 Article 1 of the CONI Statute states:

‘1. The [CONI] shall be the confederation of national sports federations … and associated sports disciplines …

2. The CONI … shall be the authority responsible for disciplining, regulating and managing sports activities, regarded as being an essential component of the physical and mental development of the individual and an integral part of national education and culture. …’

15 Article 6 of the CONI Statute provides:

‘1. The National Council, in its capacity as supreme representative body for Italian sport, shall be responsible for disseminating the Olympic ideal, ensuring that the actions necessary to prepare for the Olympic Games are taken, regulating and coordinating national sports activities and harmonising the action of national sports federations and associated sports disciplines.

4. The National Council shall:

(b) establish the fundamental principles that must govern, as a condition of acquisition of recognition for sporting purposes, the statutes of national sports federations, associated sports disciplines, sports promotion bodies, associations of recognised standing in the field of sport and sports associations and societies, and adopt the Sports Disciplinary Code, which must be observed by all national sports federations and associated sports disciplines;

(c) adjudicate on the recognition for sporting purposes of national sports federations, associated sports disciplines, sports promotion bodies and associations of recognised standing in the field of sport, in accordance with the requirements laid down in the statutes, taking into account also to that end the representation and Olympic nature of the sport in question, any recognition by the IOC and the sporting tradition of the discipline;

(e) establish the criteria and procedures governing the carrying out by the CONI of checks of national sports federations, associated sports disciplines and, for sports matters, recognised sports promotion bodies;

(e1) lay down, with a view to ensuring that sports championships are properly organised, the criteria and procedures governing checks by federations of [member] sports corporations and the CONI’s substitute oversight function in the event of proven failure on the part of national sports federations to carry out checks;

(f1) decide, on a proposal from the National Board, the placing of national sports federations or associated sports disciplines under administrative supervision in cases of serious management irregularities or serious infringements of sports law by the governing bodies, in cases of the proven inability of those bodies to function, or where the launch and proper conduct of national sporting competitions cannot be ensured;

…’

16 Article 7(5) of the CONI Statute provides:

‘The National Board shall:

(e) on the basis of the criteria and procedures established by the National Council, oversee national sports federations in matters of a public nature and, in particular, in matters concerning the proper organisation of competitions, Olympic preparations, high-level sporting activities and the use of awards of financial assistance, and lay down the criteria for granting financial assistance to federations;

(f) make proposals to the National Council on the placement of national sports federations or associated sports disciplines under administrative supervision in cases of serious management irregularities or serious infringements of sports law by the governing bodies, in cases of the proven inability of those bodies to function, or where national sports federations have failed to adopt regulatory procedures, or on the placement of the competent internal bodies under administrative supervision in order to ensure the proper launch and conduct of national sports competitions;

(g2) approve the budgets and related activity programmes, as well as the annual balance sheets of national sports federations and associated sports disciplines;

(h1) appoint auditors to represent the CONI in national sports federations and associated sports disciplines and on the CONI's regional committees;

(l) approve, for sporting purposes, the statutes, regulations implementing the statutes, sports regulations and anti-doping rules of national sports federations and associated sports disciplines, determining whether they comply with the law, the CONI Statute, fundamental principles, and the guidelines and criteria laid down by the National Council, and referring them back, where appropriate, to the national sports federations and associated sports disciplines within 90 days to enable the necessary amendments to be made;

17 Article 20(4) of the CONI Statute is worded as follows:

'National sports federations shall engage in sports activities and the corresponding promotional activities in accordance with the decisions and guidelines of the IOC and the CONI and taking into account the public dimension of certain aspects of those activities. In the context of sports law, national sports federations shall enjoy technical, organisational and managerial autonomy, subject to oversight by the CONI.'

18 Under Article 21 of the CONI Statute:

'1. The CONI shall recognise national sports federations which fulfil the following conditions:

(a) the carrying out of a sporting activity, on national territory and at international level, including participation in competitions and the implementation of training programmes for athletes and coaches;

(b) membership of an international federation recognised by the IOC, where such a federation exists, and the management of the activity in accordance with the Olympic Charter and the rules of the international federation to which they belong;

(c) a statutory and regulatory regime based on the principle of internal democracy and the participation of women and men in sporting activity under conditions of equality and equal opportunities, and in compliance with IOC and CONI resolutions and guidelines;

(d) electoral procedures and the composition of management bodies in accordance with Article 16(2) of [Legislative Decree No 242].

3. If a recognised national sports federation fails to comply with the requirements laid down in paragraph 1 above, the CONI National Council shall decide to revoke recognition granted at the time.'

19 Article 22 of the CONI Statute provides:

'1. The statutes of the national sports federations must respect the fundamental principles laid down by the National Council and aim, in particular, to strike a constant balance between the rights and duties of the professional and amateur sectors, including between the various categories of the same sporting area.

2. The statutes of the national sports federations shall lay down the procedures governing the exercise of the right to vote and to stand for election of athletes and trainers, in accordance with the IOC's recommendations and with the fundamental principles of the CONI National Council.

4. The second-level assembly, made up of representatives elected at the territorial level, is authorised in national sports federations with more than 2 000 associations and affiliated societies entitled to vote.

5. The National Board has 90 days to approve, for sporting purposes, the statutes of the national sports federations. In order to do so, it must assess their compliance with the law, the CONI Statute and the fundamental principles laid down by the CONI National Council. In the event of non-compliance and within 90 days from the date of lodgement of the statute with the Secretariat-General, the National Board shall forward that document to the federations concerned, indicating to them the criteria to be complied with, so that the necessary amendments may be made. If that period of 90 days elapses without the document having been so forwarded, the federal statute shall be deemed to have been approved. If the national sports federations do not amend their statute in the sense indicated, the National Board may appoint an ad hoc administrator and, in the most serious cases, after formal notice has been given, withdraw recognition.

5 bis. The statutes shall define the powers of supervision and control which may be exercised by federations in the light of the associative organisation of their structure.

20 Article 23 of the CONI Statute provides:

'1. In accordance with Legislative Decree No 242, as subsequently amended and supplemented, in addition to the activities the public nature of which is expressly provided for by law, the only national sports federation activities to have a public dimension shall be those which concern the following: the admission and membership of sports societies, associations, and individuals; revocation on any ground; the amendment of admission or membership decisions; scrutiny as to the proper running of professional sports competitions and championships; the use of public subsidies; the prevention and punishment of doping; high-level activities connected with preparations for the Olympics; the training of coaches; and the use and management of public sports facilities.

1 bis. In pursuing the activities of a public nature to which paragraph 1 refers, national sports federations shall comply with the guidelines and controls applied by the CONI and operate in accordance with the principles of impartiality and transparency. The public nature of an activity shall not change the ordinary rules of private law to which the individual acts and related individual legal situations are subject.

1 ter. The National Board shall establish the criteria and procedures for ensuring that decisions taken by federations comply with the CONI's programmes in so far as concerns the competitiveness of national teams, the safeguarding of the national sports heritage and its specific identity and the need to ensure effective internal management.

2. The National Board, acting on the basis of the criteria and procedures laid down by the National Council, shall approve national sports federation budgets and establish the financial contributions payable to them, determining, where appropriate, the purpose for which those contributions are to be used, with particular attention being paid to the promotion of youth sport, preparation for the Olympic Games and high-level sporting activities.

3. The National Board shall oversee the proper functioning of national sports federations. In the event of proven serious management irregularities or serious infringements of sports law by the governing bodies, in cases of the proven inability of those bodies to function, or where the proper launch and conduct of sports competitions cannot be ensured, the National Board shall propose that the National Council appoint an administrator.'

The disputes in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

21 De Vellis Servizi Globali was invited to participate in a negotiated procedure organised by the FIGC for the award of a contract for porterage services for accompanying the national football teams and for the purposes of the FIGC store in Rome (Italy) for a period of three years. Since the contract had been awarded at the end of that procedure to Consorzio, De Vellis Servizi Globali challenged, before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy), the detailed rules governing the conduct of that procedure, arguing that the FIGC ought to have been regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 3(1)(d) of the Public Procurement Code and should, therefore, have complied with the rules on publication laid down by that code.

22 The Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) granted the application of De Vellis Servizi Globali and annulled the award of the contract to Consorzio.

23 The FIGC and Consorzio both brought an appeal against the judgment of that court before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy). They both contest the premiss that the FIGC should be classified as a 'body governed by public law' and, therefore, the jurisdiction of the administrative courts and the granting of the application by the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio).

24 The referring court states that, in order to determine whether the Italian administrative courts have jurisdiction to adjudicate on that dispute and whether the FIGC was required to apply the rules relating to the award of public contracts, it is necessary, first, to establish whether the FIGC may be classified as a 'body governed by public law', within the meaning of Article 3(1)(d) of the Public Procurement Code, which transposes Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24.

25 In particular, the referring court asks, in the first place, whether the FIGC fulfils the condition, laid down in Article 2(1)(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, that 'bodies governed by public law' means bodies that are established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

26 In that regard, the referring court observes, first, that, as a national sports federation, the FIGC is a private-law entity with legal personality, which the State is content to recognise in accordance with the procedural rules for recognising legal persons governed by private law, and the public nature of certain activities carried out by the FIGC does not alter the ordinary rules of private law to which it is subject. In addition, having regard to the FIGC's ability to finance itself and in the light of the judgment of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (C-44/96, EU:C:1998:4), activities other than tasks of a public nature which are entrusted to it on the basis of an exhaustive list could be regarded as falling within its general private-law capacity irrespective of its obligation to carry out those tasks.

27 Secondly, the referring court explains that it could also be considered that that formal qualification as a matter of law is not decisive, in so far as the national sports federations subject to the supervisory powers of the CONI are required by law to pursue the public-interest aims exhaustively set out in Article 23 of the CONI Statute, to comply with the CONI's guidelines and controls, to be recognised for sporting purposes by the CONI and to observe the principles of impartiality and transparency. In those circumstances, it could be considered that any ancillary activity such as porterage services is of such a functional character in relation to the tasks of a public nature that it forms an integral part of them.

28 In the second place, the referring court, while noting that the FIGC is not covered by the first and third parts of the alternative, provided for in Article 2(1)(4)(c) of Directive 2014/24, is uncertain whether that federation fulfils the condition referred to in the second part of that alternative, according to which, in order for an entity to be classified as a 'body governed by public law', it must be subject to management supervision by a public authority such as the CONI.

29 In that regard, the referring court points out that the CONI, which is itself subject to the supervision of the Ministro per i beni e le attività culturali (Minister for Heritage and Cultural Activities), has various powers with regard to national sports federations such as the FIGC, such as the powers of recognition for sporting purposes, powers of oversight and direction of activities of a public nature and powers of approving annual balance sheets and placing under administrative supervision.

30 The referring court, however, also points out that the FIGC could be regarded as not being under the dominant influence of the CONI because the national sports federations participate in the supreme bodies of the CONI and the powers of the CONI with regard to them do not constitute the usual supervision of bodies governed by public law, since approval of annual balance sheets is limited to verifying the use of public contributions.

31 In those circumstances the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling the following questions, which are identical in Cases C-155/19 and C-156/19:

'(1) (a) On the basis of the characteristics of national sports law, can the [FIGC] be classified as a body governed by public law in so far as it was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character?

(b) In particular, is the requirement relating to the purpose of the body satisfied in respect of the [FIGC], even in the absence of a formal act establishing a public authority and despite its membership base, on account of its incorporation into a sector (sports) organised in accordance with models of a public-law nature and the fact that it is required to comply with the principles and rules drawn up by the [CONI] and international sporting bodies, as a result of the recognition, for sporting purposes, of the national public entity?

(c) Furthermore, can this requirement arise in relation to a sports federation such as the [FIGC], which has the ability to fund itself, in respect of an activity of no significance in the context of public law, such as that at issue in this case, or must the requirement that the application of the rules on public and open tendering be ensured in any event, where such an entity awards any type of contract to third parties, be regarded as taking precedence?

(2) (a) On the basis of the legal relationship between the CONI and the FIGC …, does the former have a dominant influence over the latter in the light of the legal powers relating to recognition of the undertaking for sporting purposes, approval of annual budgets, supervision of the management and proper functioning of the bodies, and placing the entity itself under administrative supervision?

(b) On the other hand, are those powers insufficient to meet the requirement relating to the dominant public influence of a body governed by public law on account of the significant participation of the presidents and representatives of the sports federations in the key bodies of the [CONI]?'

32 By decision of the President of the Court of 2 April 2019, Cases C-155/19 and C-156/19 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedures and of the judgment.

Consideration of the questions referred

33 By its first question, the referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, whether Article 2(1)(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that an entity entrusted with tasks of a public nature exhaustively defined by national law may be regarded as having been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, within the meaning of that provision, even though it was established not in the form of a public authority but of an association governed by private law and some of its activities, for which it enjoys a self-financing capacity, are not public in nature.

34 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, under Article 2(1)(4)(a) to (c) of Directive 2014/24, an entity is to be classified as a 'body governed by public law' where, first, it is established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, secondly, it has legal personality and, thirdly, it is financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law, or is subject to management supervision by those authorities or bodies, or has an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

35 The Court has already ruled that the three conditions in Article 2(1)(4)(a) to (c) of Directive 2014/24 are cumulative, it being understood that the three criteria mentioned in the third condition are alternative in nature (see, to that effect, judgments of 12 September 2013, IVD, C-526/11, EU:C:2013:543, paragraph 20, and of 5 October 2017, LitSpecMet, C-567/15, EU:C:2017:736, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

36 As regards the first of those three conditions, referred to in Article 2(1)(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, it is apparent from the case-law of the Court that the EU legislature intended to make only entities established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and whose activity meets such needs subject to the binding rules on public contracts (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 October 2017, LitSpecMet, C-567/15, EU:C:2017:736, paragraph 35).

37 In that respect, whether since its establishment or afterwards, the entity concerned must actually meet needs in the general interest, and the assumption of responsibility for meeting those needs must be capable of being objectively determined (see, to that effect, judgment of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 63).

38 In the present case, it is apparent from the explanations provided by the referring court that, in Italy, the activity of general interest comprised by sport is pursued by each of the national sports federations within the framework of tasks of a public nature expressly assigned to those federations by Article 15(1) of Legislative Decree No 242 and exhaustively listed in Article 23(1) of the CONI Statute.

39 In that connection, it is apparent that several of the tasks listed in Article 23(1) of the CONI Statute, such as the supervision of the proper running of competitions and championships, the prevention and punishment of doping, and Olympic and high-level preparation, are not of an industrial or commercial nature, which it is, however, for the referring court to verify. In those circumstances, if it does in fact carry out such tasks, a national sports federation fulfils the condition laid down in Article 2(1)(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24.

40 That conclusion cannot be called into question, in the first place, by the fact that the FIGC has the legal form of an association governed by private law and that it was not, therefore, established by a formal act instituting a public administration.

41 First, the wording of Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24 does not contain either a reference to the rules for establishing the entity or to its legal form. Secondly, it must be borne in mind that the concept of a 'body governed by public law' must be interpreted in functional terms independent of the formal rules for its application, with the result that, in view of that requirement, no distinction should be drawn by reference to the legal form and rules which govern the entity concerned under national law or to the legal form of the provisions establishing that entity (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 November 1998, BFI Holding, C-360/96, EU:C:1998:525, paragraph 62; of 15 May 2003, Commission v Spain, C-214/00, EU:C:2003:276, paragraphs 55 and 56; and of 12 September 2013, IVD, C-526/11, EU:C:2013:543, paragraph 21 and the case-law cited).

42 In the second place, it is also irrelevant that the FIGC pursues, alongside the activities of general interest exhaustively listed in Article 23(1) of the CONI Statute, other activities which constitute a large part of its overall activities and are self-financed.

43 The Court has held that it is immaterial whether, in addition to its duty to meet needs in the general interest, an entity carries out other activities, and the fact that meeting needs in the general interest constitutes only a relatively small proportion of the activities actually pursued by that entity is also irrelevant, provided that it continues to attend to the needs which it is specifically required to meet (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 November 1998, BFI Holding, C-360/96, EU:C:1998:525, paragraph 55).

44 It must be pointed out that, in those circumstances, the fact that a national sports federation has a self-financing capacity in the light, in particular, of the non-public activities which it carries out cannot be of any relevance, as the Advocate General observed in point 56 of his Opinion, since such a self-financing capacity has no bearing on the assignment of public tasks.

45 Furthermore, nor does the judgment of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (C-44/96, EU:C:1998:4), enable a different conclusion to be reached.

46 First, the considerations set out in paragraphs 20 to 35 of that judgment specifically illustrate the line of case-law referred to in paragraph 43 above, which means, in essence, that, in order to determine whether an entity may be regarded as a body governed by public law, it is immaterial whether that entity carries out activities other than those intended to meet needs in the general interest, even if the activities intended to meet those needs in the general interest are not considerable.

47 Secondly, the considerations set out in paragraphs 38 to 41 of the judgment of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (C-44/96, EU:C:1998:4), are not relevant to resolving the case in the main proceedings, whose characteristics differ from those of the situation described in that judgment, which was that of a company established and held for the most part by a contracting authority with a view to carrying out commercial activities in relation to which that company benefited from a transfer of the funds derived from the activities pursued by that contracting authority in order to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

48 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 2(1)(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that an entity entrusted with tasks of a public nature exhaustively defined by national law may be regarded as having been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, within the meaning of that provision, even though it was established not in the form of a public authority but of an association governed by private law and some of its activities, for which it enjoys a self-financing capacity, are not public in nature.

49 By its second question, the referring court seeks to ascertain whether the second part of the alternative referred to in Article 2(1)(4)(c) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that a national sports federation must be regarded as being subject to management supervision by a public authority having regard, first, to the powers conferred on that authority with regard to such a federation and, secondly, to the fact that the key bodies of that authority are composed for the most part of representatives of all the national sports federations.

50 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that each of the alternative criteria in Article 2(1)(4)(c) of Directive 2014/24, as set out in paragraph 34 above, reflects the close dependency of a body on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law; more specifically, as regards the criterion of management supervision, such supervision is based on the finding that there is active control over the management of the body concerned such as to give rise to the dependency of that body on the public authorities equivalent to that which exists where one of the two other alternative criteria is fulfilled, which is likely to enable those authorities to influence that body's decisions with regard to public contracts (see, to that effect, judgment of 27 February 2003, Adolf Truley, C-373/00, EU:C:2003:110, paragraphs 68, 69 and 73 and the case-law cited).

51 Consequently, in principle, a review ex post facto does not satisfy that criterion, in that it does not enable the public authorities to influence the decisions of the body in question with regard to public contracts (see, to that effect, judgment of 12 September 2013, IVD, C-526/11, EU:C:2013:543, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

52 In the present case, it is apparent from the national rules – and, in particular, from Article 1 of Decree-Law No 220, in conjunction with Articles 2(1) and 5(1) of Legislative Decree No 242 and Articles 1(2) and 6(1) of the CONI Statute – that, as the authority responsible for the discipline, regulation and management of sports activities, the CONI's primary tasks, within the framework of the autonomy of sports law and in compliance with the principles of international sports law, are as follows: the organisation and enhancement of national sport, in particular the preparation of athletes and the provision of adequate resources for preparation for the Olympic Games; the adoption of anti-doping measures; and the promotion of the practice of sports on the broadest possible scale. To that end, the CONI National Council, as the supreme representative body of Italian sport, is responsible for disseminating the Olympic ideal, ensures that the actions necessary to prepare for the Olympic Games are taken, regulates and coordinates national sports activities, and harmonises, inter alia, the action of national sports federations.

53 It is therefore apparent that, by carrying out essentially a regulatory and coordination function, the CONI is an umbrella organisation which aims above all to issue to national sports federations common sporting, ethical and structural rules in order to regulate the practice of sport in a harmonised manner in accordance with international rules, in particular in the context of competitions and preparation for the Olympic Games. In that regard, it should moreover be noted that, under Article 7(2)(e) of Legislative Decree No 242, the CONI's power of control over those federations appears essentially limited to the proper organisation of competitions, Olympic preparation, high-level sporting activity and the use of financial aid, which it is for the referring court to verify.

54 By contrast, it is not apparent from the documents before the Court that the CONI is responsible for regulating the details of day-to-day sporting practice or interfering in the actual management of national sports federations and in the relations which they maintain – as the Advocate General observed, in essence, in point 29 of his Opinion – with the lower-level structures consisting in clubs, associations and other public or private bodies and with any individual wishing to practise sport.

55 That definition of the role and mission of the CONI appears to be supported by Article 20(4) of the CONI Statute, according to which national sports federations, while being required to engage in sports activities and associated promotional activities in accordance with the decisions and instructions of the IOC and the CONI, enjoy, subject to oversight by the CONI, technical, organisational and managerial autonomy in the context of sports law. It is therefore apparent that, with the exception of the areas in which the CONI is authorised to intervene and exercise control, those federations enjoy broad autonomy as regards their own management and the management of the different aspects of the sporting discipline for which they are responsible, their relationship with the CONI being limited, primafacie, to complying with the guidelines and general rules issued by it. Article 15(4) of Legislative Decree No 242 states, moreover, that it is the assembly of the national sports federation concerned which approves and monitors the administrative body's indicative budgetary programmes, which again tends to show that those federations have full management autonomy.

56 In the case of such a configuration which, given the diverse range of solutions adopted in the different Member States, is specific to Italian sports law, it must be found that a public authority responsible in essence for laying down sporting rules, verifying that they are properly applied and intervening only as regards the organisation of competitions and Olympic preparation, without regulating the day-to-day organisation and practice of the different sporting disciplines, cannot be regarded, prima facie, as a hierarchical body capable of controlling and directing the management of national sports federations, and even less so when those federations enjoy management autonomy.

57 The management autonomy conferred on the national sports federations in Italy thus seems, a priori, to militate against active control on the part of the CONI to the extent that it would be in a position to influence the management of a national sports federation such as the FIGC, particularly in relation to the award of public contracts.

58 That said, such a presumption may be rebutted if it is established that, in practice, the various powers conferred on the CONI in relation to the FIGC have the effect of making the FIGC dependent on the CONI to such an extent that the CONI may influence its decisions with regard to public contracts. In that regard, the spirit of sports competition the organisation and actual management of which come within the remit of the national sports federations, as has been seen in paragraph 55 above, necessitates that the various powers of the CONI should not be understood in an overly technical sense, but interpreted more substantively than formally.

59 It is, therefore, for the referring court to examine whether the various powers vested in the CONI in relation to the FIGC reveal, on the whole, the existence of dependency coupled with such a possibility of influence. While that verification is solely a matter for the referring court, the Court of Justice, when giving a preliminary ruling on a reference, may, in appropriate cases, nonetheless give clarifications to guide the national court in its decision (see, to that effect, judgment of 2 May 2019, Fundación Consejo Regulador de la Denominación de Origen Protegida Queso Manchego, C-614/17, EU:C:2019:344, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited).

60 As regards, first, the CONI's power to recognise national sports federations for sporting purposes – as follows from Articles 5(2)(c) and 15(5) and (6) of Legislative Decree No 242 and from Article 6(4)(b) and (c) of the CONI Statute – it should be noted, first, that the CONI applies in that context general rules which, according to the written observations of the Italian Government, are common to any sports association which wishes to obtain legal personality or is dependent even for a minority of its finances on public contributions. Secondly, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that recognition by the CONI is only a preliminary stage which relates solely to the process of recognition for sporting purposes, with all national sports federations being recognised uniformly in accordance with the detailed rules and conditions laid down by the Italian regulations in force, in this case Decree No 361 of the President of the Republic of 10 February 2000.

61 In addition, it follows from Article 6(4)(c) in conjunction with Article 21(1) of the CONI Statute that, subject to verification by the referring court, the criteria on the basis of which recognition is granted do not in any way concern aspects of the management of the federation concerned, but relate to general conditions which must be met by any national sports federation in respect of sport and organisation and to compliance with basic rules and principles, such as the principle of internal democracy or the principle of gender equality and equal opportunities. Similarly, the recognition of a national sports federation may be revoked by the CONI National Council, pursuant to Article 21(3) of the CONI Statute, only if the federation concerned no longer fulfils the conditions referred to in Article 21(1) of that statute.

62 Admittedly, as the Advocate General observed in point 71 of his Opinion, the recognition process appears – by reason of Article 5(2)(b) of Legislative Decree No 242 in conjunction with Article 6(4)(b) of the CONI Statute – to be linked to the examination of whether the statutes of the national sports federation concerned are consistent with the fundamental principles established by the CONI National Council. However, the expression 'fundamental principles', read in conjunction with the principles which the statutory and regulatory provisions of those federations must observe in accordance with Article 16(1) of Legislative Decree No 242 and Articles 21(1)(c) and 22(1) to (3) of the CONI Statute, appears to show that the CONI National Council may define only organisational rules, based on the principle of internal democracy which the statutes of those federations must observe, without being able to impose detailed and far-reaching management rules on those federations.

63 Since the CONI's intervention is limited to establishing fundamental principles in order to harmonise the general rules to which all national sports federations are subject and to ensure that those federations are operational, in the sports discipline for which they are responsible, at national and international level, by pursuing the objectives laid down by law and adopting provisions in the statutes and regulations which comply with that law and with the principle of internal democracy, it does not appear, prima facie, that prior recognition of the FIGC for sporting purposes of itself enables the CONI subsequently to exercise active control over the management of that federation to such an extent as to be able to influence the latter's decisions with regard to public contracts.

64 As regards, secondly, the CONI's power – provided for in Articles 5(2)(a) and 15(1) of Legislative Decree No 242 and in Articles 20(4) and 23(1 bis) and (1 ter) of the CONI Statute – to adopt, with regard to Italian sports federations, the guidelines, decisions, directives and instructions relating to the exercise of the sporting activity which those federations supervise, the referring court must ascertain whether, as the FIGC, the CONI and the Italian Government contended during the hearing, those norms all seek to impose on national sports federations overall, broad and abstract rules or general guidelines relating to the organisation of sport in its public dimension, with the result that, accordingly, the CONI does not intervene actively in the management of those federations to the extent of being able to influence their decisions with regard to public contracts; alternatively, the referring court must ascertain whether, on the contrary, the CONI is able to make those national federations subject to very detailed management rules and impose on them a specific course of management, in particular with regard to public contracts (see, to that effect, judgment of 1 February 2001, Commission v France, C-237/99, EU:C:2001:70, paragraphs 50 to 52 and 57).

65 As regards, thirdly, the CONI's power to approve for sporting purposes national sports federation statutes, it should be noted that, in exercising that power as set out in Articles 7(5)(l) and 22(5) of the CONI Statute, the CONI may only assess whether those federations' statutes comply with the law, its own Statute and the fundamental principles established by the CONI. In those circumstances, it is for the referring court to ascertain whether the CONI could have imposed on the FIGC, when approving the statutes, such amendments as would have restricted its management autonomy or, when assessing the statutes, revoked the FIGC's recognition, on the ground that the FIGC had not accepted amendments designed to restrict its management autonomy, or imposed on it predetermined management conduct.

66 As regards, fourthly, the CONI's power to approve the national sports federations' annual balance sheets and budgets, as set out in Article 15(3) of Legislative Decree No 242 and Articles 7(5)(g2) and 23(2) of the CONI Statute, it is for the referring court to ascertain whether, in that regard, the CONI confines itself to purely accounting checks of the balance sheets and of the balancing of the budget, which would not indicate that there is active control over the management of those federations (see, to that effect, judgments of 1 February 2001, Commission v France, C-237/99, EU:C:2001:70, paragraph 53, and of 12 September 2013, IVD, C-526/11, EU:C:2013:543, paragraph 29), or whether those checks also concern the conduct of those federations, in particular from the point of view of proper accounting, regularity, economy, efficiency and expediency, which would tend to show the existence of active control over management (see, to that effect, judgment of 27 February 2003, Adolf Truley, C-373/00, EU:C:2003:110, paragraph 73).

67 As regards specifically the approval of the balance sheets, the referring court must verify that the only 'penalty' linked to the failure of the CONI to approve the balance sheets consists in their non-publication. Such evidence would tend to show that the CONI has no power of coercion concerning the national sports federations in that regard.

68 As regards the approval of the budget, it will be for the referring court to ascertain whether, as evidenced by the explanations provided by the CONI during the hearing, the national sports federations ultimately decide on their budgets, without the CONI being able to oppose their adoption and therefore control the management of those federations on that point, which would again indicate that the CONI has no power of coercion.

69 As regards the CONI's power, referred to in Article 23(2) of its statute, to determine the financial contributions allocated to national sports federations and to define the purposes for which those contributions are to be used, it will be for the referring court to ascertain the effect of that power on the actual management of the FIGC and on the FIGC's ability to retain control over its decisions with regard to public contracts. In that context, the referring court will have to take account of the fact that, first, the public contributions seem to be apportioned, under that provision, according to very general categories within the public dimension of sport, namely the promotion of youth sport, preparation for the Olympic Games and preparation for high-level sporting activity, and, secondly, in any event in the specific case of the FIGC – as is apparent from the order for reference and the information provided during the hearing – a minority of that federation's funding is public, since the federation has a considerable self-financing capacity.

70 As regards, fifthly, the CONI's power to appoint, pursuant to Article 7(5)(h1) of the CONI Statute, auditors representing it in national sports federations, it will be for the referring court to ascertain whether the auditors are in a position to influence that federation's management policy, particularly in the area of public contracts, given that, as evidenced by the written observations of the FIGC and the CONI, those auditors would have no veto power and would not have any representative or management powers.

71 As regards, sixthly, the CONI's power, provided for in Article 5(2)(e) of Legislative Decree No 242 and Articles 6(4)(e) and (e1), 7(5)(e) and 23(3) of its Statute, to oversee the exercise of activities of a public nature entrusted to national sports federations and, more generally, the proper functioning of those federations, it will be for the referring court to ascertain the scope of that oversight of the management autonomy of those federations and of their decision-making capacity with regard to public contracts. In particular, the referring court will have to determine whether, as stated in paragraph 53 above, oversight of the proper functioning of national sports federations is limited essentially to the proper organisation of competitions, Olympic preparation, high-level sporting activity and the use of financial aid, or whether more active oversight of the management of those federations is carried out by the CONI.

72 As regards specifically the CONI's power to place national sports federations under administrative supervision in cases of serious management irregularities, serious infringements of sports law, the inability of those federations to function, or problems with the proper conduct of sports competitions, it will be for the referring court, in order to exclude the existence of active control over the management of those federations, to determine whether, as the FIGC, the CONI and the Italian Government have argued both in their written observations and during the hearing, those cases of intervention by the CONI – as derived from Articles 5(2)(e ter) and 7(2)(f) of Legislative Decree No 242 and Articles 6(4)(f1), 7(5)(f) and 23(3) of the CONI Statute – fall within the mere verification of legality, and not the management policy of national sports federations, and whether, regardless of the exceptional nature of placing under administrative supervision, the exercise of that power does not imply permanent supervision of the management of those federations (see, to that effect, judgment of 1 February 2001, Commission v France, C-237/99, EU:C:2001:70, paragraphs 55 and 56).

73 It should be pointed out, as the Advocate General observed in essence in point 66 of his Opinion, that, in order to assess the existence of active control by the CONI over the management of the FIGC and of the possibility of the CONI influencing FIGC's decisions with regard to public contracts, the analysis of the CONI's various powers must be the subject of an overall assessment, bearing in mind that, as a general rule, the existence of such control will be likely to be revealed by a body of evidence (see, to that effect, judgment of 1 February 2001, Commission v France, C-237/99, EU:C:2001:70, paragraph 59).

74 As regards the circumstance, noted by the referring court, that if it were concluded that the CONI exercises supervision over the management of national sports federations such as the FIGC, within the meaning of the second part of the alternative referred to in Article 2(1)(4)(c) of Directive 2014/24, those federations would, on account of their majority participation in the CONI's main deliberative and collegiate bodies, pursuant to Articles 4 and 6 of Legislative Decree No 242, exert an influence over the CONI's activity which would offset that supervision, it should be emphasised that that circumstance would be relevant only if it could be established that each national sport federation, considered individually, is in a position to exert a significant influence over the management supervision exercised by the CONI over it with the result that that supervision would be offset and such a national sports federation would thus regain control over its management, notwithstanding the influence of the other national sports federations in a similar situation.

75 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second question is that the second part of the alternative referred to in Article 2(1)(4)(c) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that where a national sports federation has management autonomy under national law, that federation may be regarded as being subject to management supervision by a public authority only if it emerges from an overall analysis of the powers which that authority has in relation to that federation that there is active management control which, in practice, calls into question that autonomy to such an extent as to allow the authority to influence the federation's decisions with regard to public contracts. The circumstance that the various national sports federations exert an influence over the activity of the public authority concerned on account of their majority participation in that authority's main deliberative and collegiate bodies is relevant only if it can be established that each federation, considered individually, is in a position to exert a significant influence over the public supervision exercised by that authority over it with the result that that supervision would be offset and such a national sports federation would thus regain control over its management, notwithstanding the influence of the other national sports federations in a similar situation.

Costs

76 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 2(1)(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that an entity entrusted with tasks of a public nature exhaustively defined by national law may be regarded as having been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, within the meaning of that provision, even though it was established not in the form of a public authority but of an association governed by private law and some of its activities, for which it enjoys a self-financing capacity, are not public in nature.

2. The second part of the alternative referred to in Article 2(1)(4)(c) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that where a national sports federation has management autonomy under national law, that federation may be regarded as being subject to management supervision by a public authority only if it emerges from an overall analysis of the powers which that authority has in relation to that federation that there is active management control which, in practice, calls into question that autonomy to such an extent as to allow the authority to influence the federation's decisions with regard to public contracts. The circumstance that the various national sports federations exert an influence over the activity of the public authority concerned on account of their majority participation in that authority's main deliberative and collegiate bodies is relevant only if it can be established that each federation, considered individually, is in a position to exert a significant influence over the public supervision exercised by that authority over it with the result that that supervision would be offset and such a national sports federation would thus regain control over its management, notwithstanding the influence of the other national sports federations in a similar situation.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 1 October 2020 (1)

Joined Cases C-155/19 and C-156/19

Federazione Italiana Giuoco Calcio (FIGC),

Consorzio Ge.Se.Av. S. c. arl

De Vellis Servizi Globali Srl,

interveners:

Consorzio Ge.Se.Av. S. c. arl,

Comitato Olimpico Nazionale Italiano (CONI),

Federazione Italiana Giuoco Calcio (FIGC)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement of supplies, works or services – Directive 2014/24/EU – Contracting authority – Body governed by public law – Concept – National football federation – Meeting of needs in the general interest – Supervision of the federation's management by a body governed by public law)

1. In the judgment of 11 September 2019, (2) the Court analysed whether a national Olympic committee (in that case, the Italian Olympic Committee) had exercised 'public control' over two sports federations in that country, (3) 'with a view to classifying them either within the public authorities sector or within the sector of NPISHs [(non-profit institutions serving households)]' under the European System of Accounts. (4)

2. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) has now submitted to the Court two substantively identical requests for a preliminary ruling relating to the same issue, from the point of view this time not of accounting but of public procurement. In the disputes in the main proceedings, it falls to be ascertained whether the Federazione Italiana Giuoco Calcio (Italian Football Federation; 'the FIGC') was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest and, if so, whether the Comitato Olimpico Nazionale Italiano (Italian National Olympic Committee; 'CONI') controls its management.

3. The answers to those questions may determine whether a contract concluded by the FIGC, which forms the subject of the disputes at issue, is subject to the procedures laid down in Directive 2014/24/EU (5) and in the national rules transposing that directive into domestic law. This will be the case only if the [Italian] national sports federations ('NSFs'), when procuring works, supplies and services above a certain threshold, are capable of being classified as contracting authorities because they are bodies governed by public law within the meaning of Directive 2014/24.

I. Legal framework

A. EU law. Directive 2014/24

4. Article 2 reads:

‘1. For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions apply:

(1) “contracting authorities” means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law or associations formed by one or more such authorities or one or more such bodies governed by public law;

(4) “bodies governed by public law” means bodies that have all of the following characteristics:

(a) they are established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) they have legal personality; and

(c) they are financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law; or are subject to management supervision by those bodies or authorities; or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law;

B. Italian law

1. Legislative Decree No 50 of 18 April 2016 (‘Public Procurement Code’)

5. Article 3(1)(d) reproduces, in essence, the definition of ‘body governed by public law’ contained in Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24.

2. Decree-Law No 220 of 19 August 2003 (6)

6. Article 1 provides:

‘1. The Republic recognises and promotes the autonomy of the national system of sports governance as an expression of the international system of sports governance deriving from the International Olympic Committee.

2. The relationship between the system of sports governance and the Republic’s legal system shall be governed by the principle of autonomy, except in cases involving subjective situations linked to the system of sports governance which are relevant to the Republic’s legal system.’

3. Legislative Decree No 242 of 23 July 1999 on the reorganisation of CONI (7)

7. Article 1 states:

‘[CONI] shall have legal personality under public law … and shall be responsible to the Ministry of Heritage and Cultural Activities.’

8. Article 2 provides:

‘1. CONI … shall be responsible for the organisation and enhancement of national sport, in particular the preparation of athletes and the provision of adequate resources for the Olympic Games and for all other national or international sports events. It shall also be responsible, within the framework of the system of sports governance, for adopting measures to prevent and eliminate the use of substances that alter the natural physical performance of athletes in sports activities, as well as for promoting the practice of sports on the broadest possible scale, within the limits laid down in Decree of the President of the Republic No 616 of 24 July 1977.

9. According to Article 4(2) thereof:

'Representatives of the [NSFs], selected from the Olympic sports, shall make up the majority of the votes on [CONI].'

10. Article 5 provides:

'1. In accordance with the decisions and guidelines of the International Olympic Committee, the National Council shall work to promote the dissemination of the Olympic spirit and regulate and coordinate national sports activities, harmonising to this end the actions undertaken by NSFs and associated sports disciplines.

2. The National Council shall have as its task to:

(a) adopt the statute and other normative measures falling within its competence, as well as guidelines on the interpretation and implementation of the rules in force;

(b) define the fundamental principles with which the statutes of [NSFs], associated sports disciplines, sports promotion bodies and sports associations and societies must be aligned in order to be recognised for sporting purposes;

(c) take decisions to recognise for sports purposes [NSFs], sports societies and associations, sports promotion bodies, charitable organisations and other sports disciplines associated with CONI and [national sports] federations, in accordance with the requirements laid down in the Statute …;

(e) establish criteria and conditions governing the exercise of controls by [NSFs], associated sports disciplines and recognised sports promotion bodies;

(e ter) adopt, on a proposal from the National Board, decisions to place [NSFs] or associated sports disciplines under guardianship in cases of serious management irregularities or serious infringements of sports law by the governing bodies, in cases of the proven inability of those bodies to function or where the lawfulness of the operation and running of sports competitions cannot be guaranteed;

11. In accordance with Article 15:

'1. [NSFs] … shall pursue sports activities in accordance with the decisions and guidelines of the [International Olympic Committee], international federations and CONI, and with due regard for the public dimension of certain types of activity which are set out in the CONI statutes. Membership [of NSFs] shall be made up of sports societies and associations and, only in the cases provided for by [NSF] statutes … in connection with certain activities, individuals too.

2. [NSFs] … shall take the form of associations having legal personality under private law. They shall be non-profit-making and, to the extent that they are not provided for in this Decree, shall be governed by the provisions of the Civil Code and the relevant implementing provisions.

3. The budgets of [NSFs] … shall be approved annually by the administrative body of each federation and shall be subject to the approval of the National Board of CONI. In the event of a negative opinion by a federation's auditors … or in the event that a budget is not approved by the National Board of CONI, an assembly of societies and associations shall be convened in order to deliberate on approving the budget.

4. The assembly competent to elect the management bodies shall approve the administrative body's indicative budgetary programmes, which shall be submitted to the assembly for scrutiny at the end of each four-year period or at the end of the mandate for which they have been approved.

5. [NSFs] … shall be recognised for sports purposes by the National Council.

6. Recognition of [NSFs] … as having legal personality under private law shall be granted in accordance with the decreto del Presidente della Repubblica 10 febbraio 2000, n. 361 (Decree of the President of the Republic No 361 of 10 February 2000), subject to recognition for sports purposes by the National Council.

4. The CONI Statute (8)

12. Article 1 ('Definitions') states:

'1. [CONI] shall be the confederation of [NSFs] and associated sports disciplines.

2. CONI … shall be the authority responsible for disciplining, regulating and managing sports activities, regarded as being an essential component of the physical and mental development of the individual and an integral part of education and national culture. …'

13. Article 6 ('National Council') states:

'1. The National Council, in its capacity as supreme representative body for Italian sport, shall be responsible for disseminating the Olympic ideal, ensuring that the actions necessary to prepare for the Olympic Games are taken, regulating and coordinating national sports activities and harmonising the action of [NSFs] and associated sports disciplines.

4. The National Council shall:

(b) establish the fundamental principles that must govern, as a condition of acquisition of recognition for sports purposes, the statutes of [NSFs], associated sports disciplines, sports promotion bodies, associations of recognised standing in the field of sport and sports associations and societies, and adopt the Sports Disciplinary Code, which must be observed by all [NSFs] …;

(c) adjudicate on the recognition of [NSFs] … for sports purposes in accordance with the requirements laid down in its statutes, taking into account also to that end the representation and Olympic nature of the sport in question, any recognition by the [International Olympic Committee] and the sports tradition of the discipline;

(e) define the criteria and procedures for applying CONI's controls to [NSFs] …;

(e1) with a view to ensuring that sports competitions are run properly, define the criteria and procedures for deploying the controls which federations must apply to [associated] sports societies and the subsidiary control exercised by CONI in the event that the controls applied by [NSFs] are found to be unsuitable;

(f1) adjudicate, on a proposal from the National Board, on the managerial performance of [NSFs] … in the event of serious management irregularities or serious infringements of the system of sports governance by the management bodies, or in the event that they are found to be unable to perform their functions or the proper organisation and running of national sports competitions cannot be guaranteed;

…’

14. Paragraph 5 of Article 7 (‘National Board’) reads:

‘The National Board shall:

(g2) approve the budgets, together with the relevant activity programmes and annual accounts, of [NSFs] …;

(h1) appoint auditors to represent CONI within [NSFs] … and the regional committees of CONI;

(l) check, for sports purposes, the statutes, regulations implementing those statutes, regulations on sports discipline, and anti-doping regulations of [NSFs] …, assessing their compliance with the law, with the CONI statutes, and with the fundamental principles, guidelines and criteria established by the National Council, and, where appropriate, return them to [NSFs] … within a period of 90 days so that they can make the necessary amendments;

…’

15. Paragraph 4 of Article 20 (‘System of governance of [NSFs]’) provides:

‘[NSFs] shall engage in sports activities and the corresponding promotional activities in accordance with the decisions and guidelines of the [International Olympic Committee] and CONI and taking into account the public dimension of certain aspects of those activities. In the context of the system of sports governance, [NSFs] shall enjoy technical, organisational and managerial autonomy, subject to supervision by CONI.’

16. In accordance with paragraph 3 of Article 21 (‘Requirements governing the recognitions of [NSFs]’):

‘If a recognised [NSF] fails to comply with the requirements laid down in paragraph 1 above, the National Council of CONI shall decide to revoke recognition granted at the time.’

17. Article 23 (‘Guidelines and controls applicable to [NSFs]’) provides:

‘1. In accordance with Legislative Decree No 242 of 23 July 1999, as subsequently amended and supplemented, in addition to the activities the public nature of which is expressly provided for by law, the only [NSF] activities to have a public dimension shall be those relating to the admission and membership of sports societies and associations, as well as individuals, revocation on any ground and the amendment of admission or membership decisions, scrutiny as to the proper running of professional sports competitions and championships, the use of public subsidies and the prevention and sanctioning of doping, as well as high-level activities connected with preparations for the Olympics, the training of coaches and the use and management of public sports facilities.

1 bis. In pursuing the activities of a public nature to which paragraph 1 refers, [NSFs] shall comply with the guidelines and controls applied by CONI and operate in accordance with the principles of impartiality and transparency. The public nature of an activity shall not change the ordinary rules of private law to which their individual measures and the associated subjective legal situations are subject.

1 ter. The National Board shall establish the criteria and procedures for ensuring that decisions taken by federations comply with CONI's programmes in so far as concerns the competitiveness of national teams, the safeguarding of the national sports heritage and its specific identity and the need to ensure effective internal management.

2. The National Board, acting on the basis of the criteria and procedures laid down by the National Council, shall approve [NSF] budgets and establish the financial contributions payable to them, determining, where appropriate, the purpose for which those contributions are to be used, with particular attention being paid to the promotion of youth sport, preparation for the Olympiads and high-level activities.

3. The National Board shall supervise the proper functioning of [NSFs]. In the event of serious management irregularities or serious infringements of the sports regulations by [NSF bodies] and in the event that the organisation and proper running of sports competitions cannot be guaranteed or [NSF bodies] are found not to be capable of performing their functions, it shall propose that the National Council appoint a receiver.'

II. Facts and questions referred

18. The FIGC launched a procedure for the award of three-year contracts for the porterage services needed to accompany the national football squads when travelling and to support the Federation's store in Rome. (9) It invited De Vellis Servizi Globali, s.r.l. ('De Vellis') and Consorzio Ge.Se.Av. S. c. arl ('Consorzio') to participate. The contract was ultimately awarded to Consorzio.

19. De Vellis brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy) challenging the way in which the tendering procedure had been conducted, inasmuch as the rules on disclosure laid down in the Code of Public Procedure had been infringed.

20. The court of first instance (judgment No 4101/2018) upheld the action and annulled the award of the contract to Consorzio. In particular, it classified the FIGC as a body governed by public law, dismissed the plea of lack of jurisdiction and annulled the measures adopted in the context of the tendering procedure on the grounds which De Vellis had put forward.

21. The FIGC and Consorzio have each lodged appeals against that judgment. They contest the finding that the FIGC is a body governed by public law and, consequently, the jurisdiction of the administrative courts to hear and determine the dispute.

22. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) submits that, before it is determined whether the FIGC was obliged to apply the rules relating to the award of public contracts, and which court has jurisdiction, it falls to be ascertained whether the FIGC can be classified as a body governed by public law in accordance with Article 3(1)(d) of the Public Procurement Code, which transposes Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24.

23. It is in those circumstances that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has referred the following questions to the Court for preliminary ruling:

'(1) (a) On the basis of the characteristics of national sports law, can the [FIGC] be classified as a body governed by public law in so far as it was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having a commercial character?

(b) In particular, is the requirement relating to the purpose of the body satisfied in respect of the [FIGC], even in the absence of a formal act establishing a public authority and despite its membership base, on account of its incorporation into a sector (sports) organised in accordance with models of a public-law nature and the fact that it is required to comply with the principles and rules drawn up by [CONI] and international sporting bodies, as a result of the recognition, for sporting purposes, of the national public entity?

(c) Furthermore, can this requirement arise in relation to a sports federation such as the [FIGC], which has the ability to fund itself, in respect of an activity of no significance in the context of public law, such as that at issue in this case, or must the requirement that the application of the rules on public and open tendering be ensured in any event, where such an entity awards any type of contract to third parties be regarded as taking precedence?

(2) (a) On the basis of the legal relationship between CONI and the [FIGC], does the former have a dominant influence over the latter in the light of the legal powers relating to recognition of the undertaking for sporting purposes, approval of annual budgets, supervision of the management and proper functioning of the bodies, and placing the entity into receivership?

(b) On the other hand, are those powers insufficient to meet the requirement relating to the dominant public influence of a body governed by public law on account of the significant participation of the presidents and representatives of the sports federations in the key bodies of [CONI]?'

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice

24. The orders for reference were received at the Court on 22 February 2019.

25. Written observations have been lodged by the FIGC, CONI, De Vellis, Consorzio, the Italian Government and the Commission.

26. At the hearing held on 1 July 2020, which was attended via video conference by the FIGC, CONI, the Italian Government and, in an observer capacity, the Commission, the Court invited the parties to comment on the bearing on this case of the judgment in FIG and FISE.

IV. Assessment

A. Preliminary observation

27. A comparison of situations across Europe shows that models for the relationship between NSFs and the public authorities vary substantially. To put it simply, some Member States have opted for 'liberal' approaches whereby NSFs are given maximum autonomy; (10) others have chosen more 'interventionist' formulas under which public supervision may in some cases be rigorous; (11) while certain others combine both models.

28. In public law, it is common for the legal system to entrust certain private entities, set up in order to achieve objectives common to their members, with the task of achieving public aims, including by delegating to them functions which would typically be administrative. (12)

29. In Italy, NSFs follow this format: on the same strict membership basis as that on which the clubs operate as first-tier sports associations, NSFs are set up as second-tier private associations, (13) to which the government authorities entrust certain functions of a public nature.

30. In that context, the referring court will of course be bound by the situation at issue and the specific features of the sports law in force in Italy. It will have to determine, in accordance with that law:

– whether the FIGC was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character;

– whether the relationship between the public supervisory authority (CONI) and the FIGC allows the former to be recognised as exercising control over the latter and, if so, to what extent;

– whether the characteristics of the FIGC set it apart from other NSFs as regards the application of Directive 2014/24.

31. As the judgment in FIG and FISE made clear, the Court itself cannot dispel those points of uncertainty, the resolution of which falls to the referring court as being alone able to interpret its own national law. (14) The submissions that follow are therefore geared exclusively towards providing the referring court with some guidance on the interpretation of the provisions of Directive 2014/24.

B. First question

32. Directive 2014/24 takes a very broad view of the concept of contracting authority, (15) which extends beyond the State and local authorities to bodies governed by public law, if they meet all of the three requirements laid down in Article 2(1)(4) thereof.

33. In considering whether a particular body meets those requirements, the Court avoids formal methodologies and relies instead on a 'functional interpretation' whereby the scheme of law contained in that directive takes second place. (16)

34. The first of those requirements is that the body should have been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. It is with the interpretation of that wording that the first question referred is concerned. (17)

35. Although an analysis of the formal aspects of the entity's establishment is not essential, the referring court will have to determine whether, for Italian NSFs, recognition by CONI (18) is a substantive condition or no more than a step in the process of acquiring legal personality. I shall look at this point later.

36. From a material point of view, which is the one that matters most, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) must pay attention first and foremost to the content of the public functions performed by the FIGC. From this it will be able to infer whether that body was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, or meets them objectively in practice. (19)

37. Classification as such a body, as I have said, is not precluded by the fact that needs in the general interest are met by a technically private entity, particularly if that entity forms part of an organisational system the structure and configuration of which are laid down by law and administrative in nature. (20)

38. Now, the referring court itself infers from Legislative Decree No 242/1999 (Article 15(1)) that Italian NSFs are entrusted with the performance of functions of a 'public dimension'. (21)

39. It reaches that conclusion on the basis of an examination of Article 23 of the CONI Statute, in accordance with which NSF activities having a 'public dimension' are those relating to: (i) the admission and membership of sports societies and associations; (ii) the revocation and amendment of decisions on admission and membership; (iii) scrutiny as to the proper running of professional sports competitions and championships; (iv) the use of public subsidies; (v) the prevention and sanctioning of doping; (vi) high-level activities relating to Olympic preparations; (vii) the training of coaches; and (viii) the use and management of public sports facilities.

40. The FIGC, for its part, recognises that it has entrusted to it, 'under delegation from CONI …, certain pre-defined powers characterised by their public purpose', although, in its opinion, 'the public nature of the delegating [body] cannot be extended to the delegated [body] in such a way as to bind the latter beyond the predetermined limits of the delegation'. (22)

41. After noting that each NSF is responsible for a single sports discipline and for organising competitions relating to that discipline, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) submits that, according to the rules of sports law in Italy, 'public-interest aims are achieved by bodies which are technically private, albeit that they operate within the framework of an organisational system the structure and configuration of which are laid down by law (rather than being an expression of private autonomy) and administrative in nature'. (23)

42. This assessment is consistent with that carried out by the Court when analysing the relationship between NSFs and CONI. In the judgment in FIG and FISE, it referred to 'the public face of the sporting activity, that is to say, … in a formalised, official or representative context …'. It also took the view that the public dimension of the activities carried on by NSFs was apparent 'in the proper organisation of competitions, Olympic preparations and high-level sporting activities'. (24)

43. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) emphasises, in short, that, in Italy, sport has the status of an 'activity in the public interest which is for that reason organised, promoted, incentivised and financed by the State'. (25)

44. It is particularly significant that the referring court interprets the rules governing NSFs as meaning that the tasks having a public dimension which they perform seem to 'exhaust the scope of their operations and [are] the very reason for their establishment. Any other activity, including portage services for the national football squads, at issue in this dispute, operates as an instrument in service to the tasks having a "public dimension" which are laid down in the CONI statutes'. (26)

45. If that is its interpretation of national law, the referring court may draw the inference that NSFs, the primary purpose of which is to meet needs in the general interest within the context of sport, satisfy the first condition laid down in Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24.

46. Those needs in the general interest do not have an industrial or commercial character and are met by NSFs on the basis of a monopoly, (27) following the delegation to them of public functions by CONI. It makes no difference, for the purposes of this case, that NSFs also perform other, instrumental activities of an economic nature, as I shall go on to explain now.

47. The foregoing having been established, the doubts expressed by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) have to do not so much with whether the FIGC has been entrusted with functions in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character (which, as I have said, that federation expressly recognises), as with the extent to which its procurement activities are linked to those public functions.

48. The referring court's uncertainty would be prompted by the fact that, according to Article 23(1 bis) of the CONI Statute, the public nature of the activities carried on by NSFs does nothing to alter the ordinary rules of private law to which the individual measures they take and the subjective legal situations associated with those measures are subject.

49. In my opinion, however, that provision is not decisive. The Court has held that 'it [is] immaterial whether, in addition to its duty to meet needs in the general interest, an entity [is] free to carry out other activities. The fact that meeting needs in the general interest constitutes only a relatively small proportion of the activities actually pursued by that entity is also irrelevant, provided that it continues to attend to the needs which it is specifically required to meet'. (28)

50. The Italian Government, (29) in common with the FIGC and CONI, (30) argues that the private activities carried on by NSFs, which are purely economic in nature, should be differentiated from those that serve a purpose in the general interest.

51. However, that differentiation does not strike me as being suitable for determining whether, in their contractual relations, NSFs meet needs in the general interest. The Court has held in this regard that '[the provision equivalent to Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24] [does not make] a distinction between public contracts awarded by a contracting authority for the purposes of fulfilling its task of meeting needs in the general interest and those which are unrelated to that task'. (31)

52. The argument put forward by the Italian Government, the FIGC and CONI has already been put to the Court, which rejected it in its judgment of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others. (32) It opted instead for the so-called 'contagion theory' argument, whereby it is 'immaterial that such an entity is free to carry out other activities in addition to [functions in the general interest] …', with the result that ‘the condition, laid down in [the provision equivalent to Article 2(1)(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24] …, does not mean that it should be entrusted only with meeting such needs’. (33)

53. That position would later be corroborated by the judgments in BFI Holding, (34)Korhonen and Others (35) and Adolf Truley, (36) and definitively endorsed in the judgment in Ing. Aigner. (37) In the latter judgment, the Court, in the face of doubts expressed by the referring court with respect to the application of the case-law established in the judgment of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others, (38) in a situation where the public and private activities of a single entity were clearly distinguishable, (39) confirmed that, ‘having regard to the reasons of legal certainty, transparency and predictability which govern the implementation of procedures for all public procurement, the case-law of the Court [set out in the judgments cited above] must be followed’. (40)

54. In any event, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has stated that the contract forming the subject of the dispute (porterage services for the Italian football squad) was instrumental to the performance of the FIGC’s public functions, in particular those relating to the national teams in that sport.

55. Nor is it decisive, for our purposes here, whether or not NSFs carry on commercial activities or aim to make a profit. (41) The line of case-law which I have just set out supports that conclusion.

56. Finally, the fact that the FIGC is financially self-sufficient does not in any way prevent it from performing functions in the general interest under delegation from the public authorities. Its economic self-sufficiency sets the FIGC apart from other Italian NSFs whose subsistence depends to a large extent on public funds. As I have said, however, that fact is irrelevant for the purposes of determining whether it is entrusted with functions in the general interest. (42)

57. In short, unless it draws a different inference from its analysis of its domestic law, the referring court could interpret Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24 as meaning that the FIGC fulfils the first (point (a)) of the three conditions laid down in that provision.

C. Second question

58. The third requirement (point (c)) laid down in Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24 itself breaks down into three conditions. (43) It is sufficient for any one of those conditions to be present in order for the requirement as a whole to be regarded as being fulfilled.

59. Of those conditions, the only one at issue here is that of whether the FIGC ‘is subject to management supervision’ (44) by the State or other bodies governed by public law. The referring court has doubts as to whether the rules of Italian law governing the relationship between the FIGC and CONI support the assertion that the latter exerts a ‘decisive influence’ over the management of the latter.

60. It is common ground that CONI is a body governed by public law. Legislative Decree No 242/1999 (Article 1) expressly confers on it the status of a body having ‘legal personality under public law’, which is responsible to the Ministry of Heritage and Cultural Activities. The judgment in FIG and FISE even classified it as a ‘public authority’. (45)

61. So far as concerns the relationship between CONI and NSFs, the Court summarised this in the judgment in FIG and FISE, (46) listing a number of powers exercised by the former that might give an indication of the extent of its supervision of the latter.

62. That list included the powers of CONI:

‘– to approve the budgets, related activity programmes and the annual balance sheets of national sports federations;

– to oversee national sports federations in matters of a public nature;

– to approve, “for sporting purposes”, the statutes, regulations implementing the statutes, sports regulations governing sports disciplinary matters and anti-doping rules of national sports federations, and, where appropriate, propose the necessary amendments to those texts;

– to appoint auditors to represent it within national sports federations;

– to place national sports federations under supervision in the event of serious mismanagement or serious violations of sports law by the governing bodies;

– to establish the criteria and procedures governing the carrying out by CONI of checks of national sports federations;

– to lay down, with a view to ensuring that sports competitions are properly organised, the criteria and procedures governing the checks carried out by national sports federations on member sports corporations and CONI's substitute oversight function in the event of failure;

– to lay down the fundamental principles which, in order to obtain recognition for sporting purposes, must govern the statutes of national sports federations and to adopt the code of sporting discipline to be observed by all national sporting federations;

– … to adopt, in relation to national sports federations, guidelines concerning the pursuit of the sporting activities for which they are responsible.'

63. As I have already stated, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) asks whether, on the basis of that relationship between NSFs and CONI, the latter exerts a 'decisive influence' over the former. A potential obstacle to the existence of such an influence is the fact that the presidents and representatives of NSFs have a qualifying holding within the main bodies of CONI.

64. I shall look first at the supervision exercised by CONI over NSFs and, later, at the composition of CONI itself.

1. Supervision exercised by CONI over NSFs

65. The Court classifies 'management supervision' as supervision which gives rise to 'dependence on the public authorities equivalent to that which exists where one of the other alternative criteria is fulfilled, … enabling the public authorities to influence [the] decisions [of the body in question] in relation to public contracts'. (47)

66. The various indicators of control must be analysed by way of an 'overall assessment', since, 'while a single indicator may be sufficient, in some cases, to establish control, the existence of such control will, in most cases, be evidenced by a set of indicators'. (48)

67. In the field of public procurement, the Court has taken into consideration as factors indicative of the exercise of control over entities capable of being classified as bodies governed by public law the fact, inter alia, that the public authority:

– is able to dissolve the entity concerned, appoint a liquidator, order the suspension of its managerial organs and appoint a provisional administrator, in the event of serious omissions or irregularities; (49)

– has a power of inspection allowing it to carry out studies, audits or assessments in the field of activity of the entity concerned, as well as to draw up proposals as to the action to be taken following its inspection reports; (50)

– verifies that the entity which is responsible to it implements the measures it has adopted; (51)

– is authorised to examine the annual accounts of the entity concerned, as well as its conduct from the point of view of proper accounting, regularity, economy, efficiency and expediency, or is able to inspect its business premises and facilities and to report the results of those inspections to the competent bodies. (52)

68. In the judgment in FIG and FISE, the Court, after taking note of all of the powers which CONI enjoys in relation to NSFs, called upon the national court to assess whether the former was able to 'exert an actual and substantial influence over the [latter's] general policy or programme', notwithstanding the 'technical, organisational and management autonomy' which NSFs enjoy. (53)

69. By the same token, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) will have to consider the various factors present in this case, not that this prevents the Court from providing it with some guidelines on the interpretation of Directive 2014/24.

70. I shall set these out under four headings.

(a) Powers relating to the establishment of NSFs

71. One of the functions of CONI is to recognise NSFs for sports purposes. (54) The referring court will have to determine whether such recognition is purely formal or, as appears to be the case, a matter of substance, inasmuch as it is linked to an examination of NSF statutes.

72. In order to approve the statutes of NSFs, (55) CONI has to assess their conformity with the law, with CONI's own Statute and with the fundamental principles which it has itself laid down. (56) It may refuse to grant such approval, in which case it returns the statutes presented to it to the NSF concerned, with an indication of the criteria that must be observed, so that the relevant amendments can be incorporated. (57) Compliance with those indications is compulsory. (58)

73. The referring court takes the view that 'recognition [of NSFs] for sports purposes may be regarded as comparable, from the point of view of the requirement relating to purpose, to the establishment of a body governed by public law', (59) a position which is of a piece with its assertions to the effect that the public functions entrusted to NSFs are 'the reason for their establishment'. (60)

74. If the public functions entrusted to NSFs are the reason why CONI plays such a decisive role in the recognition of the status of those federations, that role in itself reflects the influence which CONI, as a body governed by public law, exerts at the first stage in the existence of the NSFs.

(b) Powers relating to the activities of NSFs

75. NSFs are required to carry on the sports activity for which they are responsible in harmony with the decisions and guidelines of CONI. (61) Although they enjoy technical, organisational and management autonomy, they exercise that autonomy under CONI's supervision. (62) In performing their public activities, they must comply with the CONI guidelines and controls. (63)

76. Some of the parties to the dispute argue that those legislative provisions establish not control mechanisms but reciprocal cooperation. They go on to say that, because of their general and abstract nature, the aforementioned guidelines act as soft law and are not suitable for determining the management policies or strategies of NSFs. (64)

77. It is once again for the referring court to assess the extent of CONI's powers in relation to NSFs. In so doing, it will have to determine, inter alia, whether the former issues to the latter binding instructions, which are capable of being coercively imposed.

78. In the order for reference, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) takes the view that CONI exercises enhanced control over all of the activities carried on by NSFs, not just those of a public nature. It states that NSFs 'seem to lack the freedom to attain at will the aim pursued by a collective body', since 'their nature is in fact one that is institutional and externally determined, either by law or by measures adopted by the authorities …, not only as regards matters relating to their essential structure but also as regards their principal spheres of activity and the ways in which that activity is to be carried on, a fact which leads in consequence to the elimination or reduction of the space and freedom of organisation inherent in private autonomy'. (65)

79. If that is the case, intervention by the public authorities (in particular, CONI) in the business of NSFs does not seem to stop at adopting statutory or regulatory rules with which those federations must comply, (66) since CONI is able, by way of guidelines or other types of measure, to mark out the main lines that the activities carried on by NSFs must follow. In that connection, the Commission notes that CONI could, for example, influence the FIGC's decisions on the selection of which tenderers are to be awarded public contracts. (67)

80. Prominent among the powers conferred on CONI is its ability to place NSFs under its guardianship in the case where: (a) they commit serious management irregularities or serious infringements of sports law; (b) the managerial organs are found to be incapable of functioning; or (c) the proper operation or running of sports competitions cannot be guaranteed. In those circumstances, a receiver may be appointed. (68)

81. Those powers are consistent with the general mandate to the effect that CONI must ensure the proper functioning of NSFs and is even able to revoke their recognition as such. (69)

82. The case-law of the Court to which I have referred previously regards as a sign of control on the part of public authorities the fact that they can order an entity to be dissolved, appoint a liquidator or order the suspension of managerial staff in cases of serious irregularity. (70)

83. As the Commission notes, (71) the only way of telling the difference between a serious irregularity and one of lesser importance is the permanent and systematic control of an NSF's activities: CONI is free to decide whether, in the first case, it must intervene and place the NSF in question under its guardianship.

84. That same permanent supervisory link is in keeping with the task, also entrusted to CONI, of replacing an NSF in the case where the controls it applies to sports societies are shown to be unsuitable for ensuring the proper running of championships. (72)

85. A replacement measure of this kind goes to the core of a federation's activities, since the very purpose of the FIGC is to organise football competitions. As the Commission notes, (73) in order to be able to ascertain whether controls are unsuitable, CONI must hold a position allowing it to determine on an ongoing basis whether NSFs are complying with the requirements imposed on sports societies with respect to the proper running of championships. Those requirements must be consistent with the criteria and conditions of control laid down by CONI.

86. From the foregoing evidence, the referring court will be able to draw its own conclusions as to the extent of the supervision which CONI exercises over NSFs.

87. In that same context, it will have to assess whether CONI's general supervision of the activities carried on by NSFs extends to the way in which the latter draw up their public procurement policy, or at least to the precautions which have to be put in place so that the organisational autonomy of NSFs complies, in this field, with rules on disclosure, transparency, non-discrimination and respect for competition such as those laid down in Directive 2014/24. In that connection, CONI might exert an influence over the NSFs' procurement policy.

88. It is not inconceivable, moreover, that the irregularities forming the subject of supervision by CONI might arise under a procurement scheme operated by NSFs which is not governed by the rules on disclosure and transparency, in which case the risks of corruption would increase. (74) CONI's supervisory powers appear to include not only responding to such irregularities but also preventing them.

(c) Powers relating to NSF budgets and accounts

89. CONI also has the power to approve NSF budgets. (75) Unlike in the case of approval of NSF statutes, in connection with which CONI's view is imposed in the manner already analysed, its disagreement with the budgets presented to it does not have the same effects. (76)

90. Once again, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) will have to gauge whether, even in cases where it rejects an NSF budget but is not able to replace it, (77) CONI exercises some control over NSFs, as the Commission maintains. (78) As the approval of budgets is based on the criteria and conditions laid down by CONI, (79) the latter may play an important role in their make-up.

91. In assessing the instruments available to CONI for controlling the economic activities carried on by NSFs, it should not be forgotten, finally, that CONI can appoint auditors to act within NSFs. (80)

92. The Court has held that 'auditors are not regarded as "officers" and are thus not in a position to determine an entity's "general policy or programme"'. (81) They may nonetheless be regarded as an additional means of exercising permanent supervision over the financial activities of NSFs.

93. According to the FIGC statutes, intervention by the auditors appointed by CONI is more significant than it might seem at first sight. Those auditors make up the majority (two thirds) of the FIGC's College of Auditors (82) and are entitled to attend all meetings of the Federation's organs.

94. Depending on the extent of their powers, a permanent presence of CONI's auditors within the decision-making bodies of the FIGC (83) might meet the conditions to which the judgment in Adolf Truley referred in connection with the financial supervision of entities by public authorities. (84)

(d) Powers relating to revocation of the recognition of NSFs

95. If an NSF fails to fulfil the obligations to which its recognition was made subject, CONI may revoke that recognition. (85) Together with receivership and guardianship, revocation is the strongest measure by which Italian law confers effective powers of supervision on CONI.

96. The fact that revocation is adopted only in situations of particular seriousness does nothing to alter its status as a mechanism by which CONI exercises supervision over NSFs. It would appear to be a power that may be likened to those which the Court examined in the judgment in Commission v France, (86) whereby the public authority was authorised to order the dissolution of an entity and to appoint a liquidator and a provisional administrator.

97. According to the Court, 'the exercise of the powers conferred on [the authority] by those provisions[, even though it] is in fact the exception, … nonetheless implies permanent supervision, which provides the only means of detecting gross mismanagement or failure to act on the part of the managerial organs'. (87)

98. Finally, in the case of the FIGC, its dissolution, even if voluntary, does not entail a distribution of its assets, which are transferred to CONI. (88) This fact confirms, to my mind, that the public component of the FIGC's activities, which is subject to supervision by CONI, determines the entirety of the rules of law by which that federation is governed. (89)

2. Does CONI control the NSFs or do the NSFs control CONI?

99. Worthy of particular attention is the fact that those who argue that the NSFs are fully independent of CONI submit that it is in fact the NSFs which control CONI itself, given their participation in the latter's supreme organs. (90)

100. The Court addressed that same argument in the judgment in FIG and FISE, emphasising that '[that fact] is relevant only if it can be established that each federation, considered individually, is able to exert a significant influence over the public control exercised by CONI in respect of it so as to neutralise that control'. (91)

101. Albeit from a different point of view, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), too, rejects such a proposition. It takes view, with which I concur, that:

– first, the persons who make up the essential organs of CONI (even if they do, for the most part, come from the NSFs) 'are obliged to respect the official duties inherent in their position, without regard to where they have come from';

– secondly, 'CONI is itself subject … to supervision by the ministerial authority …, which may order the dissolution of the National Board and remove from office the President of CONI …', in the circumstances provided for in Article 13 of Legislative Decree No 242/1999. (92)

102. The point of reference for determining who controls whom cannot be anything other than the legal configuration of the relationship between CONI and the NSFs. A situation in which, notwithstanding that the law confers on CONI the power of supervision over NSFs, that relationship were to become effectively inverted, because the members of CONI did not act 'without regard to where they have come from' and overlooked the fact that they are performing public functions, would constitute an anomaly (93) which would have to be corrected.

103. Consequently, in determining whether the FIGC is a body governed by public law within the meaning of Directive 2014/24, the referring court will have to take into account the legal conception of the relationship between CONI and the NSFs, regardless of any dysfunction which may in practice arise.

V. Conclusion

104. In the light of the foregoing, I suggest that the Court's answer to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) should be as follows:

'(1) In accordance with Article 2(1)(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, a national sports federation may be classified as a body governed by public law if, in addition to having its own legal personality, it has been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and its management is subject to the supervision of another body governed by public law such as a national Olympic committee on which the law of a Member State confers that status.

(2) The national court may infer that national sports federations meet needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character in the case where the public functions which the legal system has entrusted to them by way of a monopoly and which constitute the reason for the existence of those non-profit making entities make up the essential core of their activities, with the result that their remaining activities are purely instrumental in relation to the former. It is immaterial for these purposes whether the national sports federation is financially self-sufficient or depends on public contributions.

(3) In order to determine whether a public authority such as the national Olympic committee forming the subject of the dispute in the main proceedings exercises supervision over national sports federations, the national court will have to carry out an overall assessment of the powers which that committee enjoys in relation to the management of those federations. Factors capable of being classified as indications the presence of which would, in principle, demonstrate that the national Olympic committee exercises powers of control are the fact that it:

– grants recognition for sports purposes to national sports federations, following approval of their statutes, and, in that event, may revoke such recognition;

– is authorised to issue guidelines and adopt decisions on the public activities of national sports federations;

– may require national sports federations to comply with the general provisions, guidelines and decisions of the national Olympic committee, and, in the event of serious management irregularities or serious infringements of the sports regulations, order that the aforementioned federations be placed into receivership;

– exercises permanent supervision over the functioning of national sports federations;

– approves the budgets, activity programmes and annual accounts of national sports federations, and may appoint auditors (who, in that event, hold a controlling majority within the College of Auditors) to represent it within the organs of those federations.

(4) The fact that the representatives from the national sports federations have a qualifying or majority holding within the organs of the national Olympic committee does not prevent those federations from being regarded as bodies governed by public law which are subject to the supervision of that committee.'

2 Judgment in FIG and FISE (C-612/17 and C-613/17, EU:C:2019:705; 'the judgment in FIG and FISE'). Although relating to the European System of National and Regional Accounts of the European Union, the arguments set out in that judgment may be useful in the context of this reference for a preliminary ruling, inasmuch as the question of who supervises the management of bodies governed by public law is a relevant factor in the sphere of the procurement activities of such bodies too. It should nonetheless be noted that the criteria for determining whether such supervision exists vary significantly as between the sphere of procurement and that of accounting.

12 In using private membership-based bodies to perform public functions, the State avoids the need to create public structures. The function in question is owned by the delegating State, which retains powers of control and supervision so as to ensure that the delegated function does not deviate from the aims established by the legal system.

16 Judgments of 10 November 1998, BFI Holding (C-360/96, EU:C:1998:525, paragraph 62), and of 15 May 2003, Commission v Spain (C-214/00, EU:C:2003:276, paragraph 56): ‘the effectiveness of [the Directive] would not be fully preserved if [its] application … to an entity which fulfils the three … conditions [governing recognition as a body governed by public law] could be excluded solely on the basis of the fact that, under the national law to which it is subject, its legal form and rules which govern it fall within the scope of private law’.

17 There will be no need to examine the second requirement (legal personality), since it is common ground that the FIGC is a legal person. Italian NSFs are in the ‘nature of associations having legal personality under private law’ (paragraph 3.3 of the orders for reference).

---

18 The existence of an NSF seems to depend not only on the will of the first-tier associations comprising it (the clubs), but also on official recognition by CONI, without which they will not acquire legal personality.

19 ‘A body which was not established to satisfy specific needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, but which has subsequently taken responsibility for such needs, which it has since satisfied, fulfils the requirement …, on condition that the assumption of responsibility for the satisfaction of those needs can be established objectively’ (judgment of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others (C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, operative part, paragraph 1).

20 In the judgment of 13 January 2005, Commission v Spain (C-84/03, EU:C:2005:14), the Court held that the Kingdom of Spain had failed to comply with the public procurement directives precisely because it excluded bodies governed by private law (that is to say, commercial corporations whose activities were governed by private law) from classification as bodies governed by public law within the meaning of those directives.

27 In the judgment of 22 May 2003, Korhonen and Others (C-18/01, EU:C:2003:300, paragraph 51), the Court held that needs of an industrial or commercial character are usually met by bodies which operate under normal market conditions, aim to make a profit and bear the losses associated with the exercise of their activities, characteristics which are not exhibited by Italian NSFs.

29 Paragraphs 15 and 16 of its written observations. It cites, in support of its argument, the judgment of 1 July 2008, MOTOE (C-49/07, EU:C:2008:376), which, however, is not concerned with NSFs, but with a private organisation organising motorcycling events in Greece the status of which as an undertaking had been called into question. It also relies on the judgment of 10 May 2001, Agorà and Excelsior (C-223/99, EU:C:2001:259), in which the Court recognised (paragraph 39) that the Ente Autonomo Fiera Internazionale di Milano met needs in the general interest but of an industrial or commercial character in organising fairs, exhibitions and other similar initiatives, and could not therefore be classified as being subject to the public procurement rules.

30 The FIGC states (paragraph 27 of its observations) that there is no justification for subjecting it to rules of public law in circumstances, such as those of this case, where it pursues interests of a commercial nature not consistent with those of CONI. The latter submits (paragraph 42 of its observations) that there is no reason to subject the FIGC, in the context of its contractual activities, to the rules of public law.

39 Judgment of 10 April 2008, Ing. Aigner (C-393/06, EU:C:2008:213, paragraph 49): ‘the referring court asks whether all contracts awarded by an entity which is a body governed by public law, within the meaning of [Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18, are to be subject to the rules of one or other of those directives if, through effective precautions, a clear separation is possible between the activities carried out by that body to accomplish its task of meeting needs in the general interest and the activities which it carries out in competitive conditions’.

40 Ibidem, paragraph 54. In paragraph 53, citing the Opinion of Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo, the Court stated that 'there must be serious doubts that, in reality, it is possible to establish such a separation between the different activities of one entity consisting of a single legal person which has a single system of assets and property and whose administrative and management decisions are taken in unitary fashion, even ignoring the many other practical obstacles with regard to reviewing before and after the event the total separation between the different spheres of activity of the entity concerned and the classification of the activity in question as belonging to a particular sphere'.

41 According to Article 15(2) of Legislative Decree No 242/1999, NSFs 'shall not be profit-making'. The referring court appears implicitly to dismiss the commercial nature of the FIGC's activities, on which some of the parties rely (in reference to its ability to finance itself).

42 If the FIGC were financed mainly by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law, it would automatically fulfil the third requirement laid down in Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24. On those aspects of public financing that are relevant to the interpretation of that provision, see the judgment of 3 October 2000, University of Cambridge (C-380/98, EU:C:2000:529). The judgment in FIG and FISE (paragraphs 95 to 107) recognises that, in certain circumstances, the fees paid to an Italian NSF by its members may be classified as public contributions and may, in some cases, indicate the existence of public control by CONI. At the hearing, the Commission suggested that the referring court (whose orders for reference do not address this matter) might take note of the judgment in FIG and FISE in assessing the extent to which the FIGC is publicly financed.

43 These are that the body: (i) must be financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law; or (ii) must be subject to management supervision by those authorities or bodies; or (iii) must have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

44 I shall use without distinction the terms 'supervision' and 'control' employed by the different language versions in this provision. Thus, the English (supervision), the Spanish (supervisión) and the German (Aufsicht) opt for the former, while the French (contrôle) and the Portuguese (controlo) opt for the latter. The Italian version uses the term vigilanza.

45 The judgment in FIG and FISE, paragraphs 77 and 85, as well as paragraph 2 of the operative part.

47 The judgment in Adolf Truley, paragraphs 69 and 70: '… the criterion of managerial supervision cannot be regarded as being satisfied in the case of mere review since, by definition, such supervision does not enable the public authorities to influence the decisions of the body in question in relation to public contracts'.

51 Ibidem, paragraph 58. See, to the same effect, the judgment of 17 December 1998, Commission v Ireland (C-353/96, EU:C:1998:611, paragraph 38), which states that the 'Minister's power to give instructions to Coillte Teoranta, in particular requiring it to comply with State policy on forestry or to provide specified services or facilities, and the powers conferred on that Minister and the Minister for Finance in financial matters give the State the possibility of controlling Coillte Teoranta's economic activity'. See, in identical wording, paragraph 33 of the judgment of the same date, Connemara Machine Turf (C-306/97, EU:C:1998:623).

52 The judgment in Adolf Truley, paragraph 73. The same is not true if the authority simply verifies that the body's budget is balanced (judgment of 12 September 2013, IVD (C-526/11, EU:C:2013:543, paragraph 29)).

ORDER OF THE COURT (Ninth Chamber)

6 February 2020 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice – Public procurement – Directive 2014/24/EU – Article 10(h) – Article 12(4) – Specific exclusions for service contracts – Civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services – Non-profit organisations or associations – Ordinary and emergency medical transport services – Regional legislation requiring priority to be given to recourse to a partnership between contracting authorities – Freedom of the Member States to choose how services are provided – Limits – Obligation to state reasons)

In Case C-11/19,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), made by decision of 26 July 2018, received at the Court on 7 January 2019, in the proceedings

Azienda ULSS n. 6 Euganea

THE COURT (Ninth Chamber),

composed of S. Rodin, President of the Chamber, D. Šváby (Rapporteur) and N. Piçarra, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Pia Opera Croce Verde Padova, by A. Veronese and R. Colagrande, avvocati,

– the Romanian Government, by C.-R. Canţăr and S.-A. Purza, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara, P. Ondrůšek and L. Haasbeek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to give a decision by reasoned order, pursuant to Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice,

makes the following

Order

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), read in conjunction with recital 28 and Article 12(4) of that directive.

2 The request has been made in the context of a dispute between the Azienda ULSS n. 6 Euganea (Local Health Authority No 6 Euganea, Italy; 'AULSS No 6') and Pia Opera Croce Verde Padova (Green Cross Charity, Padua, Italy; 'Croce Verde') concerning the award of ambulance transport services for patients receiving haemodialysis by AULSS No 6 and the Azienda Ospedaliera di Padova (Padua Hospital Centre, Italy).

3 Recitals 2, 5, 28, 31 and 33 of Directive 2014/24 state:

'(2) Public procurement plays a key role in the Europe 2020 strategy, set out in the [European] Commission Communication of 3 March 2010 entitled "Europe 2020, a strategy for smart, sustainable and inclusive growth" …, as one of the market-based instruments to be used to achieve smart, sustainable and inclusive growth while ensuring the most efficient use of public funds. For that purpose, the public procurement rules adopted pursuant to Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1)] and Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)] should be revised and modernised in order to increase the efficiency of public spending, facilitating in particular the participation of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in public procurement, and to enable procurers to make better use of public procurement in support of common societal goals. There is also a need to clarify basic notions and concepts to ensure legal certainty and to incorporate certain aspects of related well-established case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

(5) It should be recalled that nothing in this Directive obliges Member States to contract out or externalise the provision of services that they wish to provide themselves or to organise by means other than public contracts within the meaning of this Directive. …

(28) This Directive should not apply to certain emergency services where they are performed by non-profit organisations or associations, since the particular nature of those organisations would be difficult to preserve if the service providers had to be chosen in accordance with the procedures set out in this Directive. However, that exclusion should not be extended beyond that strictly necessary. It should therefore be set out explicitly that patient transport ambulance services should not be excluded. In that context it is furthermore necessary to clarify that CPV [Common Procurement Vocabulary] Group 601 "Land Transport Services" does not cover ambulance services, to be found in CPV class 8514. It should therefore be clarified that services, which are covered by CPV code 85143000-3, consisting exclusively of patient transport ambulance services, should be subject to the special regime set out for social and other specific services (the "light regime"). Consequently, mixed contracts for the provision of ambulance services in general would also be subject to the light regime if the value of the patient transport ambulance services were greater than the value of other ambulance services.

(31) There is considerable legal uncertainty as to how far contracts concluded between entities in the public sector should be covered by public procurement rules. The relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union is interpreted differently between Member States and even between contracting authorities. It is therefore necessary to clarify in which cases contracts concluded within the public sector are not subject to the application of public procurement rules.

Such clarification should be guided by the principles set out in the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union. The sole fact that both parties to an agreement are themselves public authorities does not as such rule out the application of public procurement rules. However, the application of public procurement rules should not interfere with the freedom of public authorities to perform the public service tasks conferred on them by using their own resources, which includes the possibility of cooperation with other public authorities.

It should be ensured that any exempted public-public cooperation does not result in a distortion of competition in relation to private economic operators in so far as it places a private provider of services in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

(33) Contracting authorities should be able to choose to provide jointly their public services by way of cooperation without being obliged to use any particular legal form. Such cooperation might cover all types of activities related to the performance of services and responsibilities assigned to or assumed by the participating authorities, such as mandatory or voluntary tasks of local or regional authorities or services conferred upon specific bodies by public law. The services provided by the various participating authorities need not necessarily be identical; they might also be complementary.

Contracts for the joint provision of public services should not be subject to the application of the rules set out in this Directive provided that they are concluded exclusively between contracting authorities, that the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest and that no private service provider is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

In order to fulfil those conditions, the cooperation should be based on a cooperative concept. Such cooperation does not require all participating authorities to assume the performance of main contractual obligations, as long as there are commitments to contribute towards the cooperative performance of the public service in question. In addition, the implementation of the cooperation, including any financial transfers between the participating contracting authorities, should be governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest.’

4 Article 2(1)(4) of that directive defines ‘bodies governed by public law’ as:

‘bodies that have all of the following characteristics:

(a) they are established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) they have legal personality; and

(c) they are financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law; or are subject to management supervision by those authorities or bodies; or which have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.’

5 Articles 7 to 12 of that directive can be found in Section 3, headed ‘Exclusions’, of Chapter I of that directive, entitled ‘Scope and definitions’.

6 Under the heading ‘Specific exclusions for service contracts’, Article 10 of Directive 2014/24 provides:

‘This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts for:

(h) civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, and which are covered by CPV codes 75250000-3 [Fire-brigade and rescue services], 75251000-0 [Fire-brigade services], 75251100-1 [Firefighting services], 75251110-4 [Fire-prevention services], 75251120-7 [Forest-fire-fighting services], 75252000-7 [Rescue Services], 75222000-8 [Civil defence services], 98113100-9 [Nuclear safety services] and 85143000-3 [Ambulance services] except patient transport ambulance services;

7 Under the heading ‘Public contracts between entities within the public sector’, Article 12 of that directive provides:

‘1. A public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contracting authority exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of the controlled legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

4. A contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common;

(b) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

(c) the participating contracting authorities perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation;

8 The light regime referred to in recital 28 of Directive 2014/24 is defined in Articles 74 to 77 thereof.

Italian law

9 Dealing with ‘agreements between public authorities’, Article 15 of legge n. 241 – Nuove norme in materia di procedimento amministrativo e di diritto di accesso ai documenti amministrativi (Law No 241 concerning new provisions on administrative procedure and the right of access to administrative documents) of 7 August 1990 (GURI No 192 of 18 August 1990), in the version applicable to the facts of the case in the main proceedings (‘Law No 241/1990’), provides in its paragraph 1:

‘Even in cases other than those referred to in Article 14, public administrative authorities may at any time enter into agreements among themselves with a view to laying down rules governing cooperation in activities of common interest.’

10 Headed ‘Common principles on exclusion for concessions, public contracts and contracts between public bodies and contracting authorities in the public sector’, Article 5 of decreto legislativo n. 50 – Codice dei contratti pubblici (Legislative Decree No 50 establishing the public procurement code) of 18 April 2016 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016; ‘the public procurement code’) provides in its paragraph 6:

‘A contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities shall fall outside the scope of this code where all of the following conditions are satisfied:

(a) the contract establishes or implements cooperation between the participating contracting authorities or the participating public contracting bodies with the aim of ensuring that the public services that they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives which they have in common;

(b) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

(c) the participating contracting authorities or the participating public contracting bodies perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation.’

11 Article 17 of that code, headed ‘Specific exclusions for service contracts and concessions’, provides, in its paragraph 1:

‘The provisions of this code do not apply to service contracts and concessions in respect of:

(h) civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, and which are covered by CPV codes 75250000-3 [Fire-brigade and rescue services], 75251000-0 [Fire-brigade services], 75251100-1 [Firefighting services], 75251110-4 [Fire-prevention services], 75251120-7 [Forest-fire-fighting services], 75252000-7 [Rescue Services], 75222000-8 [Civil defence services], 98113100-9 [Nuclear safety services] and 85143000-3 [Ambulance services] except patient transport ambulance services;

12 In decreto legislativo n. 117 – Codice del Terzo settore (Legislative Decree No 117 establishing the third sector code) of 3 July 2017 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 179 of 2 August 2017), Article 57, headed ‘Emergency medical transport services’, provides as follows in its paragraph 1:

‘Contracts for the provision of emergency medical transport services may, as a matter of priority, be awarded to voluntary organisations which have been included in the single national third sector register for at least six months and belong to a network of associations as referred to in Article 41(2) and are accredited under relevant regional legislation, if it exists, where, on account of the specific nature of the service, the direct award of a contract ensures that a service in the public interest is provided, in a system which actually contributes to a social purpose and pursues objectives connected with the good of the community, in an economically efficient and appropriate manner, and in compliance with the principles of transparency and non-discrimination.’

13 Legge regionale n. 26 – Disciplina del sistema regionale di trasporto sanitario di soccorso ed emergenza (Regional Law No 26 on the regional system of medical transport (emergency response and emergency care)) of 27 July 2012 (Bollettino Ufficiale della Regione del Veneto, No 61 of 3 August 2012; ‘Regional Law No 26/2012’) establishes the ‘regional system of emergency medical transport services’.

14 Article 1 of that law, headed ‘Subject matter and purpose’, provides:

‘1. The Region of Veneto [(Italy)] shall lay down the rules governing the regional system of emergency response medical transport services, giving health-care bodies and authorised and accredited associations the possibility of tendering to provide intrinsically health-related emergency and rescue transport services, having regard to their geographic coverage, how well they are established in the health and welfare fabric of Veneto, and efficiency and quality of the service rendered, in the public interest and in compliance with the principles of universality, the good of the community, economic efficiency and suitability.’

15 Article 2 of that law, headed ‘Definitions’, provides, in its paragraph 1:

‘For the purposes of this Law, [“]emergency medical transport[”] comprises those activities which are carried out using emergency vehicles by the personnel, medical or otherwise, responsible for that service, in the exercise of the following functions:

(a) emergency transport services provided using emergency vehicles under the direction of the [Servizio urgenze ed emergenze mediche (emergency medical service) (SUEM)] coordination centres;

(b) transport services provided with [livelli essenziali di assistenza (essential levels of care) (LEA)] using emergency vehicles;

(c) transport services provided in circumstances where the patient’s condition requires the use of an emergency vehicle and the attention, during the journey, of medical or specially trained personnel, and also requires uninterrupted care to be ensured.’

16 Under Article 4 of Regional Law No 26/2012, which concerns the ‘Regional list’:

‘1. Within 60 days of the entry into force of this Law, the Regional Government shall approve a regional list containing, for an initial period, already authorised health care bodies and associations which have provided emergency patient transport services in the region for at least five years, on behalf of the [unità locali socio-sanitarie (local health and welfare bodies) (ULSSs)] with local competence, on the basis of specific contracts and/or agreements that have been entered into for that purpose, and which meet the authorisation requirements referred to in [legge regionale n. 22 – Autorizzazione e accreditamento delle strutture sanitarie, socio-sanitarie e sociali (Regional Law No 22 on approval and accreditation of health and social facilities) of 16 August 2002 (Bollettino Ufficiale della Regione del Veneto n. 82)] and successive amendments, in compliance with EU legislation on freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services.

2. In addition to the persons referred to in paragraph 1, the regional list referred to therein shall include the committees of the Italian Red Cross (CRI), following specific agreement by the Veneto regional committee thereof, and the Istituti Pubblici di Assistenza e Beneficienza (public welfare and charity organisations) (IPABs) which provide emergency patient transport services, on the agreement and related sworn declaration that the conditions for authorisation, set out in Regional Law [No 22] and its subsequent amendments, as well as the conditions specified by the Regional Government, under Article 3(2), are satisfied, in compliance with EU legislation on freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services.

3. The regional list referred to in paragraph 1 shall be updated annually with the addition of new health bodies and associations which satisfy the authorisation and accreditation conditions set out by Regional Law [No 22] and its subsequent amendments.

4. Persons on the regional list shall be subject to periodic checks in order to establish that the conditions continue to be satisfied.’

17 Article 5 of that law, concerning the ‘organisation of emergency medical transport’, provides:

‘1. The provision of emergency medical transport services shall be carried out by [ULSSs] and by persons on the regional list referred to in Article 4.

2. The relationship with the [ULSSs], and the ways in which the persons on the regional list referred to in Article 4 may participate in the provision of emergency medical services shall be governed by specific agreements, entered into on the basis of a model approved by the Regional Government and made public in accordance with the national and EU legislation on public procurement in force.

3. The agreements referred to in paragraph 2 shall provide for a budgeting system established in accordance with criteria based on the application of standard costs identified by the Regional Government and updated every three years.

5. If the provision of emergency medical transport services cannot be carried out by the persons on the regional list referred to in Article 4, the [ULSSs] may award the contract for the provision of those services, in return for payment, to persons identified by means of a public tendering procedure, in accordance with national and EU legislation on public procurement in force, who meet the requirements designed to ensure appropriate levels of quality and to enhance the welfare function of the service.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

18 In 2017, AULSS No 6 launched a call for tenders for a contract to provide, for a period of five years with an option for an additional year, ambulance transport services for patients receiving haemodialysis, to be awarded in accordance with the criterion of the most economically advantageous offer (‘the contested call for tenders’). The annual value of that contract was estimated at EUR 5 043 560, amounting to EUR 25 217 800 for the five-year period.

19 Croce Verde brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Veneto (Regional Administrative Court, Veneto, Italy) against the decision of AULSS No 6 to opt for awarding a public contract rather than a partnership between entities within the public sector. When the required conditions for entering such a partnership are satisfied, it argued, Regional Law No 26/2012 requires that an agreement governed by Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 5(6) of the public procurement code be entered into with the accredited public body without there being any need to contemplate the award of a public contract, even under the simplified regime, as provided for by Article 10(h) of that directive and Article 17(1)(h) of that code.

20 In that regard, Croce Verde states that it is not a mere association governed by private law doing voluntary work but rather a non-economic public body – more precisely, an IPAB. In that connection, it states that it has been involved for more than a century in the health care of the inhabitants of the territory of Padua (Italy), principally providing transport for the wounded and sick on a non-profit basis. It was also awarded AULSS No 6’s emergency medical services by an agreement entered into on 22 December 2017 pursuant to Regional Law No 26/2012. In addition, following a call for tenders launched in 2010, which had been extended twice and expired on 31 March 2018, it was also awarded the ordinary transport service.

21 The Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Veneto (Regional Administrative Court, Veneto) took the view, however, that Articles 10 and 74 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 17(1)(h) of the public procurement code provided for the award of contracts for non-emergency ambulance transport services by means of a call for tenders.

22 Since that court nevertheless upheld the plea alleging that AULSS No 6 was not entitled to organise the contested call for tenders, AULSS No 6 appealed against the judgment of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Veneto (Regional Administrative Court, Veneto), arguing that point before the referring court, namely the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy).

23 The referring court, which dismissed the main appeal, must still rule on the cross-appeal in which Croce Verde reiterates the argument which it raised at first instance.

24 The referring court takes the view that it is necessary to distinguish between, on the one hand, emergency ambulance services and, on the other hand, (ordinary) patient transport ambulance services. Article 10 of Directive 2014/24, in conjunction with recital 28 thereof, and Article 17(1)(h) of the public procurement code exclude emergency ambulance services, which consist in non-profit organisations transporting a patient by ambulance and providing first aid in situations of extreme emergency, from the rules on the public procurement procedure. By contrast, patient transport ambulance services that are non-emergency in nature are subject to the 'light regime' established by Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24 when, as in the case in the main proceedings, their value is at least equivalent to the threshold of EUR 750 000 provided for by Directive 2014/24.

25 However, according to the referring court, Article 5 of Regional Law No 26/2012 provides that, when they are not carried out directly by ULSSs, 'emergency medical transport' services must be carried out by persons on the regional list referred to in Article 4 of that law and that the relationship with the ULSSs and the methods of performance of that service are governed by specific agreements. In addition, the contract for emergency medical transport services may be awarded following a competitive public tendering procedure only when that service cannot be performed by persons on that regional list.

26 Furthermore, under Article 2 of Regional Law No 26/2012, the regime for the award of the contract for 'emergency medical transport' services covers services provided, using emergency vehicles, by healthcare personnel among others, consisting in particular of 'transport services provided with essential levels of care (LEA) using emergency vehicles' and 'transport services provided in circumstances where the patient's condition requires the use of an emergency vehicle and the attention, during the journey, of healthcare personnel, or specially trained personnel, in order to ensure uninterrupted care'. According to the referring court, the activities covered by that regime are therefore, particularly in the latter case, activities which appear to come within the category of ordinary (non-emergency) transport of patients rather than within that of emergency transport.

27 Consequently, the referring court takes the view that the service at issue in the main proceedings can be classified as an 'ordinary transport service' or 'medical transport service' and not as an 'emergency medical transport service'. Therefore, in accordance with Article 5 of Regional Law No 26/2012, the referring court considers that the contracting authority could organise a tendering procedure only if it were impossible directly to award the contract by means of an agreement.

28 The referring court is, however, uncertain whether Article 5 of Regional Law No 26/2012 is compatible with EU law when that article is applied in respect of services other than those relating to emergency medical transport. Its uncertainty also relates to the supposition that direct award of the contract constitutes the implementation of a partnership between contracting authorities.

29 The referring court notes that, under Article 15 of Law No 241/1990, public bodies may still conclude agreements between themselves in order to lay down rules governing cooperation in activities of common interest. Nevertheless, such collaboration between public bodies cannot interfere with the main objective of the applicable EU rules on public procurement, namely the free movement of services and the opening up of undistorted competition in all Member States.

30 Article 5(6) of the public procurement code confirms the exclusion from the application of the public procurement rules when the conditions set out therein are satisfied, which, it finds, is the case here. AULSS No 6 and Croce Verde have the common objectives of encouraging participation of the persons on the regional list referred to in Article 4 of Regional Law No 26/2012 and promoting the use of voluntary work. In addition, Croce Verde features on that regional list in its capacity as an IPAB. Lastly, it carries out a minimal portion of its activity on the market for emergency medical transport services.

31 The referring court states, however, that Article 15 of Law No 241/1990 and Article 5(6) of the public procurement code merely present a partnership between entities within the public sector as an alternative to awarding a public contract and cannot impose it as a method to be given priority. An agreement between contracting authorities is therefore an option available to the contracting authorities and would require the creation of a bilateral agreement between the contracting parties. It follows that a contracting authority may merely express its wish to enter into such a partnership, without compelling another contracting authority to choose that option. The referring court notes, in this regard, that, in the present case, AULSS No 6 did not intend to exercise that option since it decided to launch the contested call for tenders.

32 Furthermore, the referring court takes the view that Article 5 of Regional Law No 26/2012 cannot oblige the contracting authority to state reasons for its choice in awarding the contract for the service in question by means of a call for tenders. Such a requirement to state reasons would, in its view, be justified only in the event that the contracting authority intends to make a direct award, following bilateral negotiations, since that does not provide comparative data serving to identify the most economically advantageous tender.

33 Conversely, in its view, the tendering procedure guarantees compliance with the EU-law principles of impartiality, right of access, transparency, participation and equal treatment through the comparison of several tenders having regard to the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender.

34 Thus, since EU law does not qualify general, different and concomitant interests such as the promotion of volunteering, the direct award of the contract by means of an agreement cannot, in the view of the referring court, be justified. That is so in the present case since Croce Verde claims to be the only authorised public body in the Veneto region, which would eliminate all competition and comparison between operators potentially interested in providing the service at issue in the main proceedings. By contrast, like the other volunteer organisations on the regional list referred to in Article 4 of Regional Law No 26/2012, Croce Verde is fully entitled, as an economic operator, to participate in the contested tendering procedure and could therefore assert in that context the advantageous nature of its tender.

35 It was in that context that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Where both parties concerned are public bodies, do recital 28 of Directive [2014/24] and Articles 10 and 12(4) thereof preclude the applicability of Article 5 of [Regional Law No 26/2012], in conjunction with Articles 1 [to] 4 thereof, on the basis of the public-public partnership referred to in Article 12(4) of [that directive], [Article] 5(6) of [the public procurement code] and [Article] 15 of Law No 241/1990?

(2) Where both parties concerned are public bodies, do recital 28 of Directive [2014/24] and Articles 10 and 12(4) thereof preclude the applicability of the provisions of [Regional Law No 26/2012], on the basis of the public-public partnership referred to in Article 12(4) of [that directive] and [Article] 5(6) of [the public procurement code] and [Article] 15 of Law No 241/1990, in the limited sense of placing the contracting authority under an obligation to give reasons for the decision to award the contract for the provision of ordinary patient transport services by way of a tendering procedure rather than by direct award of the contract?’

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

36 Under Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, where the reply to a question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling may be clearly deduced from existing case-law or where the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling admits of no reasonable doubt, the Court may at any time, on a proposal from the Judge-Rapporteur and after hearing the Advocate General, decide to rule by reasoned order.

37 That provision must be applied in the present case.

38 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 10(h) and Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding regional legislation that makes the award of a public contract conditional on there being no partnership between entities within the public sector which would be capable of providing the ordinary medical transport service.

39 As the Court stated in the judgment of 3 October 2019, Irgita (C-285/18, EU:C:2019:829, 'the Irgita judgment', paragraph 41), the purpose of Directive 2014/24, as stated in recital 1 thereof, is to coordinate national procurement procedures above a certain value.

40 It is clear from paragraph 43 of the Irgita judgment that the effect of Article 12(1) of that directive, concerning internal operations, also known as in-house transactions, which thus does no more than state the conditions which a contracting authority must satisfy when it wishes to conclude an in-house transaction, is solely to empower the Member States to exclude such a transaction from the scope of Directive 2014/24.

41 That provision cannot, consequently, deprive the Member States of the freedom to give preference to one means of providing services, performing work or obtaining supplies to the detriment of others. That freedom implies a choice which is at a stage prior to that of procurement and which cannot, therefore, come within the scope of Directive 2014/24 (the Irgita judgment, paragraph 44).

42 The freedom of the Member States to choose the means of providing services whereby the contracting authorities meet their own needs follows, moreover, from recital 5 of Directive 2014/24, which states that 'nothing in this Directive obliges Member States to contract out or externalise the provision of services that they wish to provide themselves or to organise by means other than public contracts within the meaning of this Directive', thereby reflecting the case-law of the Court prior to that directive (the Irgita judgment, paragraph 45).

43 Thus, just as Directive 2014/24 does not require the Member States to have recourse to a public procurement procedure, it cannot compel them to have recourse to an in-house transaction where the conditions laid down in Article 12(1) are satisfied (the Irgita judgment, paragraph 46).

44 Further, as the Court stated in paragraph 47 of the Irgita judgment, the freedom thus left to the Member States is more clearly distinguished in Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1), which states:

'This Directive recognises the principle of free administration by national, regional and local authorities in conformity with national and Union law. Those authorities are free to decide how best to manage the execution of works or the provision of services, to ensure in particular a high level of quality, safety and affordability, equal treatment and the promotion of universal access and of user rights in public services.

Those authorities may choose to perform their public interest tasks with their own resources, or in cooperation with other authorities, or to confer them upon economic operators.'

45 The freedom of Member States to choose the management method that they judge to be most appropriate for the performance of works or the provision of services cannot, however, be unlimited. It must, rather, be exercised with due regard to the fundamental rules of the FEU Treaty, in particular the free movement of goods, the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency (the Irgita judgment, paragraph 48).

46 Consequently, the Court held, in paragraph 50 of the Irgita judgment, that Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding a rule of national law whereby a Member State imposes a requirement that the conclusion of an in-house transaction should be subject, inter alia, to the condition that public procurement does not ensure that the quality of the services performed, their availability or their continuity can be guaranteed, provided that the choice made in favour of one means of providing services in particular, made at a stage prior to that of public procurement, has due regard to the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency.

47 It follows from the foregoing that, in the first place, the freedom of the Member States to choose the means of providing services whereby the contracting authorities meet their own needs authorises them, mutatis mutandis, to make the award of a public contract conditional on it being impossible for contracting authorities to enter into a partnership, in accordance with the conditions laid down in Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24.

48 According to that provision, a partnership between contracting authorities may be concluded only if (i) the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that the public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives that they have in common, (ii) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest, and (iii) the participating contracting authorities perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation.

49 In that regard, it must be stated, as the Commission did in its written observations, that, even though Croce Verde is an IPAB, it is in no way certain that it is a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24.

50 It is also for the referring court to satisfy itself that Article 5(2) and (3) of Regional Law No 26/2012 is in fact capable of establishing the existence of cooperation between contracting authorities given that, according to that provision, the relationships between the ULSSs and the persons on the regional list referred to in Article 4 of that law and which participate in the provision of emergency services are governed by specific agreements, concluded on the basis of a uniform format approved by the Regional Government.

51 In the second place, the freedom of the Member States to choose the means of providing services whereby the contracting authorities meet their own needs allows them, in the context of civil protection, civil defence and danger prevention, to favour a public procurement procedure, with non-profit organisations or associations, subject to the light regime defined in Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24, provided that the conditions set out in Article 10(h) of that directive are satisfied.

52 In that regard, it must be borne in mind that Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that the exclusion from the application of the public procurement rules that that article lays down covers the care of patients in an emergency situation in a rescue vehicle by an emergency worker/paramedic, covered by CPV code 75252000-7 (rescue services) and transport by qualified ambulance covered by CPV code 85143000-3 (ambulance services), provided that, as regards transport by qualified ambulance, it is in fact undertaken by personnel properly trained in first aid and, second, it is provided to a patient whose state of health is at risk of deterioration during that transport (judgment of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck, C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234, paragraph 51). The benefit of that exclusion is also only available when the ambulance service is provided by non-profit organisations or associations, within the meaning of that provision, and there is an emergency (order of 20 June 2019, Italy Emergenza and Associazione Volontaria di Pubblica Assistenza 'Croce Verde', C-424/18, EU:C:2019:528, paragraph 28).

53 Lastly, in the two cases mentioned in paragraphs 47 and 51 of the present order, it is for the Member States, in exercising their freedom to choose the means of providing services whereby the contracting authorities meet their own needs, to ensure due regard to the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency (the Irgita judgment, paragraph 48).

54 The answer to the first question is therefore that Article 10(h) and Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding a regional law that makes the award of a public contract conditional on the fact that a partnership between public bodies cannot provide the ordinary medical transport service, provided that the choice made in favour of one means of providing services in particular, made at a stage prior to that of public procurement, has due regard to the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency.

55 By the second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 10(h) and Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding a regional law that requires a contracting authority to provide reasons for its decision to award the contract for the provision of ordinary patient transport services by way of a tendering procedure rather than by direct award of the contract by means of an agreement entered into with another contracting authority.

56 As is clear from the answer to the first question, neither Article 10(h) nor Article 12(4) of that directive precludes a regional law which envisages the award of a public contract only as an alternative and by way of derogation.

57 Accordingly, EU law, in particular Article 10(h) and Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24, cannot preclude a regional law which requires a contracting authority to demonstrate that the conditions for application of those provisions are not satisfied.

58 The answer to the second question is, therefore, that Article 10(h) and Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 do not preclude a regional law that requires a contracting authority to provide reasons for its decision to award the contract for the provision of ordinary patient transport services by way of a tendering procedure rather than by direct award of the contract by means of an agreement entered into with another contracting authority.

Costs

59 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 10(h) and Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as not precluding a regional law that makes the award of a public contract conditional on a partnership between public bodies being unable to provide the ordinary medical transport service, provided that the choice made in favour of one means of providing services in particular, made at a stage prior to that of public procurement, has due regard to the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency.

2. Article 10(h) and Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 do not preclude a regional law that requires a contracting authority to provide reasons for its decision to award the contract for the provision of ordinary patient transport services by way of a tendering procedure rather than by direct award of the contract by means of an agreement entered into with another contracting authority.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Second Chamber)

4 June 2020 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 2004/18/EC – Central purchasing bodies – Small municipalities – Restriction to only two organisational models for central purchasing bodies – Prohibition on using a central purchasing body governed by private law and involving the participation of private entities – Territorial restrictions on the activities of central purchasing bodies)

In Case C-3/19,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) by a decision of 20 September 2018, received at the Court on 3 January 2019, in the proceedings

Autorità Nazionale Anticorruzione (ANAC),

with the intervention of:

Associazione Nazionale Aziende Concessionarie Servizi entrate (Anacap),

THE COURT (Second Chamber), composed of A. Arabadjiev, President of the Chamber, K. Lenaerts (Rapporteur), President of the Court, acting as a Judge of the Second Chamber, P.G. Xuereb, T. von Danwitz and A. Kumin, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: R. Schiano, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 29 January 2020,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Asmel Soc. cons. a r.l., by M. Chiti, A. Sandulli, L. Lentini and B. Cimino, avvocati, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, C. Colelli and C. Pluchino, avvocatesse dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara, P. Ondrůšek and L. Haasbeek, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 2 April 2020,

Judgment

1 The request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(10) and Article 11 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1336/2013 of 13 December 2013 (OJ 2013 L 335, p. 17) (‘Directive 2004/18’), and the principles of freedom to provide services and of opening up to competition as far as possible in the field of public service contracts. Directive 2004/18 was repealed by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 This request was made in proceedings between Asmel Soc. cons. a r.l. (‘Asmel’) and the Autorità Nazionale Anticorruzione (National Anti-Corruption Authority, Italy) (‘the ANAC’) relating to the ANAC’s decision No 32 of 30 April 2015 in which it prohibited Asmel from performing brokerage activities in the field of public procurement and declared the tendering procedures it had conducted to be unlawful, on the grounds that Asmel had not complied with the organisational models for central purchasing bodies established by Italian law (‘the decision at issue’).

3 According to recital 2 of Directive 2004/18, which applied at the time of the facts at issue in the main proceedings:

‘The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.’

4 Recital 16 of that directive states:

‘In order to take account of the different circumstances obtaining in Member States, Member States should be allowed to choose whether contracting authorities may use framework agreements, central purchasing bodies, dynamic purchasing systems, electronic auctions or the competitive dialogue procedure, as defined and regulated by this Directive.’

5 Article 1(8) to (10) of that directive provides:

‘8. The terms “contractor”, “supplier” and “service provider” mean any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or bodies which offers on the market, respectively, the execution of works and/or a work, products or services.

The term “economic operator” shall cover equally the concepts of contractor, supplier and service provider. It is used merely in the interest of simplification.

9. “Contracting authorities” means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

A “body governed by public law” means any body:

(a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) having legal personality; and

(c) financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

10. A “central purchasing body” is a contracting authority which:

– acquires supplies and/or services intended for contracting authorities, or

– awards public contracts or concludes framework agreements for works, supplies or services intended for contracting authorities.’

6 Article 2 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

7 According to the first indent of Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18, the directive applies, inter alia, to public supply and service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than those listed in Annex IV to that directive and which have a value exclusive of value added tax equal to or greater than EUR 207 000. Under Article 7(c), that threshold is EUR 5 186 000 for public works contracts.

8 Article 11 of that directive, entitled ‘Public contracts and framework agreements awarded by central purchasing bodies’, reads as follows:

‘1. Member States may stipulate that contracting authorities may purchase works, supplies and/or services from or through a central purchasing body.

2. Contracting authorities which purchase works, supplies and/or services from or through a central purchasing body in the cases set out in Article 1(10) shall be deemed to have complied with this Directive insofar as the central purchasing body has complied with it.’

Legislative Decree No 267/2000

9 The first paragraph of Article 30 of decreto legislativo n. 267 – Testo unico delle leggi sull’ordinamento degli enti locali (Legislative Decree No 267 – Consolidated Law on the rules governing local authorities) of 18 August 2000 (GURI No 227 of 28 September 2000; ‘Legislative Decree No 267/2000’) states:

‘In order to discharge certain functions and to provide certain services in a coordinated manner, local bodies may enter into appropriate agreements with each other.’

10 Under the first paragraph of Article 31 of that legislative decree, entitled ‘Consortia (Consorzi)’:

‘Local bodies for the associated management of one or more services and for the associated exercise of functions may form a consortium (consorzio) in accordance with the rules laid down for special undertakings provided for in Article 114, in so far as they are compatible. Other public bodies may participate in the consortium, when they are authorised to do so, in accordance with the laws to which they are subject.’

11 The first paragraph of Article 32 of that legislative decree defines an ‘association of municipalities’ as ‘a local body formed of two or more municipalities, usually contiguous, for the associated exercise of functions and provision of services’.

12 Article 3(25) of decreto legislativo n. 163 – Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 establishing the Public Works Contracts, Public Supply Contracts and Public Service Contracts Code implementing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006; 'Legislative Decree No 163/2006') defines 'contracting authorities' as 'State administrative authorities; regional or local authorities; other non-economic public bodies; bodies governed by public law; associations, unions, consortia, however named, established by those entities'.

13 Under Article 3(34) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, 'central purchasing body' means:

'A contracting authority which:

– acquires supplies or services intended for contracting authorities or other contracting entities, or

– awards public contracts or concludes framework agreements for works, supplies or services intended for contracting authorities or other contracting entities.'

14 Article 33(3a) of that legislative decree, inserted by decreto-legge n. 201 – Disposizioni urgenti per la crescita, l'equità e il consolidamento dei conti pubblici (Decree Law No 201 on urgent provisions relating to growth, fairness and the consolidation of public accounts) of 6 December 2011 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 284 of 6 December 2011), converted into a law and amended by legge n. 214 (Law No 214) of 22 December 2011 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 300 of 27 December 2011), states:

'Municipalities with a population not exceeding 5 000 inhabitants situated within the territory of each province shall compulsorily entrust to a single central purchasing body the acquisition of works, services and supplies within the framework of the associations of municipalities, as provided for in Article 32 of [Legislative Decree No 267/2000], where they exist, or by establishing a special consortium agreement between those municipalities and relying on the support of the relevant departments.'

15 Article 9(4) of decreto-legge n. 66 – Misure urgenti per la competitività e la giustizia sociale (Decree Law No 66 on urgent measures to promote competitiveness and social justice) of 24 April 2014 (GURI No 95 of 24 April 2014), converted into a law and amended by Law No 89 of 23 June 2014 (GURI No 143 of 23 June 2014), amended Article 33(3a) as follows:

'Municipalities that are not the provincial capital shall acquire works, goods and services within the framework of the associations of municipalities provided for in Article 32 of Legislative Decree [No 267/2000], where they exist, or by establishing a special consortium agreement between those municipalities and relying on the support of the relevant departments, or using an aggregator or the provincial authorities, pursuant to Law No 56 of 7 April 2014. …'

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16 Asmel, a limited liability consortium company established on 23 January 2013, is owned by the municipality of Caggiano (Italy) (51%), the private association Asmel, whose members include the Associazione nazionale piccoli comuni italiani (National Association of Small Italian Municipalities) (25%), and the Consorzio Asmel (Asmel Consortium), a consortium of private undertakings and municipalities (24%).

17 In the past, Asmel has carried on activities as a central purchasing body for various local authorities. Specifically, it arranged an invitation to tender for framework agreements to provide the service for collecting and overseeing municipal property taxes and enforcing tax debts, and 152 e-tender procedures to award various kinds of public contracts.

18 According to Asmel's operating arrangements, the local authorities became members of the Asmel Association by a decision of the municipal council, and, subsequently, by a decision of the municipal board, entrusted their procurement responsibilities to Asmel. Asmel was remunerated for the services supplied via an e-platform at a rate of 1.5% of the contract price, payable by the successful tenderer.

19 Following several complaints, the ANAC began an investigation which found that Asmel did not conform to the organisational models for central purchasing bodies established in Article 33(3a) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006.

20 According to the ANAC, Asmel was an entity governed by private law, whereas Italian law requires central purchasing bodies to behave as public bodies acting through public entities or associations of local authorities, such as associations or consortia of municipalities established under agreements concluded pursuant to Article 30 of Legislative Decree No 267/2000. The ANAC also highlighted that, while private entities may be used, they must, under all circumstances, be in-house bodies that operate only within the territory of the founding municipalities, whereas in the case under analysis the requirements that there be comparable oversight and that the activities be performed in a restricted area were not met.

21 The ANAC also found that the local authorities were only indirectly involved in the central purchasing body, given that they initially became members of the Asmel association and then, under a decision of the municipal board, entrusted responsibility for procurement to Asmel.

22 In terms of Asmel's legal nature, the ANAC held that it could not be classed as a 'body governed by public law' because it operated only indirectly to meet the needs of its member local authorities and therefore did not directly serve the public interest needs that those authorities are required to satisfy.

23 The ANAC therefore made the decision at issue.

24 Asmel challenged the decision at issue before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy). It argued that, although it was a body governed by ordinary law, it had legal personality, met public interest needs, was non-industrial and non-commercial in nature, and was funded by its local authority members and operated under their dominant influence. It was therefore a body governed by public law and, accordingly, a contracting authority that satisfied the requirements to be classed as a 'central purchasing body'.

25 By a judgment of 22 February 2016, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) dismissed Asmel's action. In view of the way in which it was financed and how the company's management was supervised, that court found that it could not be classed as a 'body governed by public law' since it did not satisfy the requirement of operating under the dominant influence of public bodies. It also found that Asmel did not comply with the organisational models laid down for central purchasing bodies by Legislative Decree No 163/2006 and that its operating area should be restricted to the territory of the founding municipalities.

26 Asmel appealed that judgment to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), advancing, among other claims, that, first, it is incorrect to find the operational model consisting of a consortium (consorzio) governed by private law in the form of a company to be incompatible with the provisions of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 relating to central purchasing bodies and, secondly, that Legislative Decree No 163/2006 does not impose any territorial restriction on the activities of central purchasing bodies.

27 The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) states that although, under the provisions of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 on central purchasing bodies, any contracting authority can act as a central purchasing body, Article 33(3a) of that legislative decree derogates from that rule to provide that small municipalities can only use central purchasing bodies configured in accordance with two specific organisational models, that is to say, the association of municipalities under Article 32 of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 or the consortium (consorzio) of local authorities under Article 31 of that legislative decree. In the opinion of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), that obligation on small municipalities seems to be at odds with the fact that under Directive 2004/18 central purchasing bodies can be used without any restrictions on the forms of cooperation.

28 The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) also harbours doubts in relation to the obligation imposed on small municipalities to use public-law organisational models, excluding participation by private entities, in so far as concerns consortia (consorzi) of municipalities. That exclusion is potentially contrary to the principles of freedom to provide services and of opening up procurement procedures to competition as far as possible, enshrined in EU law, in that the provision of services which can be classed as 'economic activities' and which, as such, could be better provided under a system of free competition within the internal market, is reserved solely to Italian public-law bodies as specified in an exhaustive list.

29 The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) also states that, while the domestic legislation does not define an operating area for central purchasing bodies, it does provide that their operating area must be the same as the territory of the small municipalities that use the services of those central purchasing bodies. The operating area is therefore restricted to the territory of the municipalities that are members of the association or consortium (consorzio). According to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), that restriction may be contrary to the principles of freedom to provide services and of opening up procurement procedures to competition as far as possible, since in its view it establishes exclusive operating zones for central purchasing bodies.

30 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) stayed the proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Does a provision of national legislation, such as Article 33(3a) of Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006, which restricts the autonomy of municipalities to entrust [procurement] to a central purchasing body to only two organisational models (the union of municipalities, if it already exists, or a consortium to be established between municipalities), infringe EU law?

(2) In any event, does a provision of national legislation, such as Article 33(3a) of Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 which, read in conjunction with Article 3(25) thereof, regarding the organisational model based on consortia of municipalities, excludes the possibility of creating entities governed by private law, such as a consortium under ordinary law whose members include private entities, infringe EU law, in particular the principles of free movement of services and of opening up to competition as far as possible in the field of public service contracts?

(3) Does a provision of national legislation, such as Article 33(3a) which, if interpreted in the sense of allowing consortia of municipalities that are central purchasing bodies to operate in a territory corresponding to that of the participating municipalities as a whole, and so, at most, to the provincial territory, limits the scope of operation of those central purchasing bodies, infringe EU law, in particular the principles of free movement of services and of opening up to competition as far as possible in the field of public service contracts?'

31 In the first place, the Italian Government argues that the request for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible because it is hypothetical.

32 That government contends that the referring court relies on a twofold premiss to the effect that, first, the procurement of goods and services on behalf of a contracting authority is an economic activity, namely a service within the meaning of Article 57 TFEU, and that, secondly, Asmel, which does not satisfy the requirements under EU law and Italian law to be classed as a 'central purchasing body', must by definition be classed as an 'economic operator'. According to that government, even if the Court found that EU law does preclude the provisions of Italian law at issue in the main proceedings, that finding would not enable the referring court to uphold the appeal brought before it, since the procurement services at issue in the main proceedings were not entrusted to Asmel on completion of a competitive procedure in accordance with EU law.

33 It should be noted here that, according to settled case-law, questions on the interpretation of EU law referred by a national court, in the factual and legislative context which that court is responsible for defining and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court to determine, enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a request for a preliminary ruling from a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (judgment of 27 November 2019, Tedeschi and Consorzio Stabile Istant Service, C-402/18, EU:C:2019:1023, paragraph 24 and the case-law cited).

34 According to equally consistent case-law, the justification for a reference for a preliminary ruling is not that it enables advisory opinions on general or hypothetical questions to be delivered but rather that it is necessary for the effective resolution of a dispute (judgment of 10 December 2018, Wightman and Others, C-621/18, EU:C:2018:999, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited).

35 In the case under analysis, it is clear from the request for a preliminary ruling that the dispute in the main proceedings being heard by the referring court concerns whether Asmel was lawfully prevented from being among the entities that may act as central purchasing bodies for small local authorities. According to the referring court, the reason for that exclusion lies in the restrictions imposed by the provisions of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 relating to central purchasing bodies. By the questions it has referred for a preliminary ruling, the referring court invites the Court to rule on precisely whether EU law precludes those restrictions.

36 Under those circumstances, it is not ‘quite obvious’ that the interpretation of EU law sought by the referring court bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose or that the questions referred relate to a hypothetical issue.

37 The presumption that the questions referred are relevant cannot be rebutted, in the present case, by the Italian Government’s argument that the Court’s answer would not enable the referring court to uphold Asmel’s appeal – on the grounds that the procurement of goods and services was not entrusted to that company following a competitive procedure in accordance with EU law – because it is apparent from the order for reference that the decision at issue prohibits Asmel from acting as a central purchasing body for local authorities, in general, as opposed to for a specific contract, even though, according to Asmel, that prohibition is contrary to EU law.

38 In the second place, in its written observations, the European Commission expressed doubts as to whether the questions referred are relevant to resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings on the ground that Article 33(3a) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, mentioned in the wording of the questions referred, was subsequently repealed by the Italian legislature, and that the dispute in the main proceedings may therefore have become devoid of purpose.

39 It must be observed in that respect that, in proceedings brought under Article 267 TFEU, it is not for the Court to specify the relevant provisions of national law applicable to the main proceedings. That is the prerogative of the referring court which, while setting out the internal legal framework, leaves it open to the Court to provide all the criteria for interpreting EU law so as to permit the court making the reference to assess the compatibility of national legislation with EU rules (see to that effect, judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraph 22 and the case-law cited).

40 The admissibility of the questions referred cannot, therefore, be called into question on the grounds that the provision of national law that the referring court found to be applicable to the main proceedings has subsequently been repealed.

41 Furthermore, when examined on the point of view expressed by the Commission that the questions referred may not be relevant to resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings, the Italian Government stated at the hearing that the new rules on central purchasing bodies, which have repealed and replaced Article 33(3a) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, will not take effect until 31 December 2020, meaning that the dispute in the main proceedings is still governed by that article, a situation that the Commission also acknowledged at the hearing.

42 In the light of the foregoing, the request for a preliminary ruling cannot be dismissed as inadmissible.

43 The Italian Government and the Commission also expressed doubts as to whether the third question referred is admissible, on the grounds that, according to information provided in the order for reference, the territorial restriction on the area of operation of central purchasing bodies created by local authorities, on which the referring court seeks a ruling, may amount to an advantage for a central purchasing body. Specifically, the Italian Government points to a contradiction in that order regarding whether such a territorial restriction amounts to a disadvantage or an advantage for such a body. Those issues can appropriately be addressed as part of examination of the third question.

The questions referred

44 In its questions, the referring court looks in general to EU law and to the principles of freedom to provide services and of opening up to competition as far as possible in the field of public service contracts. However, it is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that the referring court's uncertainties concern specifically Article 56 TFEU, which enshrines the freedom to provide services, and Article 1(10) and Article 11 of Directive 2004/18 on central purchasing bodies.

45 As regards which provisions of primary or secondary law should be interpreted in order to provide the referring court with a reply of use, it should be noted, first, that the questions referred are intended to enable that court to determine whether Legislative Decree No 163/2006 is compatible with EU law. It is clear from the title itself of that decree that it implements Directive 2004/18.

46 Secondly, it is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that the concept of 'central purchasing body' established in Article 1(10) and Article 11 of Directive 2004/18 is crucial to the dispute in the main proceedings.

47 Thirdly and lastly, the thresholds for Directive 2004/18 to apply, laid down in Article 7, have been reached. It can be seen from documents in the case file before the Court that in a number of the 152 tendering procedures arranged by Asmel between May 2013 and February 2014, vitiated by unlawfulness as a result of the decision at issue, the contract price exceeds the relevant thresholds under that article. Moreover, the decision at issue prohibits Asmel from carrying on any brokerage activities in public procurement procedures irrespective of the amount involved.

48 Under those circumstances, the questions referred should be examined only in the light of Directive 2004/18, and of Article 1(10) and Article 11 thereof in particular.

Substance

First and second questions

49 By its first and second questions, which must be examined together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(10) and Article 11 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding a provision of national law which restricts the autonomy of small municipalities to use the services of a central purchasing body to only two exclusively public organisational models with no participation by private persons or undertakings.

50 To answer those questions, it should be noted, in the first place, that the concept of 'central purchasing body' is defined in Article 1(10) of Directive 2004/18 and denotes a contracting authority which acquires supplies and/or services intended for contracting authorities, or awards public contracts or concludes framework agreements for works, supplies or services intended for contracting authorities.

51 The concept of 'central purchasing body' is thus defined in Directive 2004/18 by reference to the concept of 'contracting authority'.

52 The concept of 'contracting authority', in turn, is defined in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 and, according to the first subparagraph thereof, means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

53 Under the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, ‘body governed by public law’ means any body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, having legal personality and financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

54 The Court has already had occasion to indicate that Article 1(9) of that directive defines the concept of ‘contracting authority’ broadly and in functional terms, in order to secure the objectives of that directive which seeks to exclude both the risk of preferring national tenderers or bidders in any contract award made by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional authorities or other bodies governed by public law may be guided by considerations other than economic ones (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 October 2017, LitSpecMet, C-567/15, EU:C:2017:736, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited). Furthermore, there is no requirement under that article to adhere to any specific organisational models in order to fall within the definition of ‘contracting authority’.

55 It needs to be said, in the second place, that, according to recital 16 of Directive 2004/18, ‘in order to take account of the different circumstances obtaining in Member States, Member States should be allowed to choose whether contracting authorities may use … central purchasing bodies, … as defined and regulated by this Directive’. Accordingly, under Article 11(1) of Directive 2004/18, Member States may stipulate that contracting authorities may purchase works, supplies and/or services from or through a central purchasing body. Under Article 11(2), contracting authorities which purchase works, supplies and/or services from or through a central purchasing body in the cases set out in Article 1(10) of that directive are to be deemed to have complied with Directive 2004/18 in so far as the central purchasing body has complied with it.

56 It is apparent from Article 11 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 1(9) and (10) and recital 16 thereof, that the only restriction which the directive places on the choice of a central purchasing body is that requiring the purchasing body to be classed as a ‘contracting authority’. That wide margin of discretion also applies to how the Member States may define the organisational models for central purchasing bodies, provided the measures that they take to implement Article 11 of Directive 2004/18 comply with the restriction laid down by that directive to the effect that the entity that the contracting authorities wish to use as a central purchasing body must be classed as a contracting authority. That means that a national rule cannot recognise an entity as being classed as a ‘central purchasing body’, and therefore one to which Directive 2004/18 applies, where it is not classed as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(9) of that directive.

57 In the third place, the foregoing interpretation of Directive 2004/18 is, moreover, consistent with its underlying principles, namely the principles of the freedom to provide services and of the opening up to undistorted competition in all the Member States, set out in recital 2 thereof.

58 Although under Article 11(2) of Directive 2004/18 contracting authorities that use a central purchasing body are themselves not subject, in the situations to which that article refers, to the public procurement procedures laid down by that directive, under the same article that central purchasing body is subject to the obligation on contracting authorities to comply with the procedures laid down by the directive. The main objective of the rules of EU law in the field of public contracts, namely freedom to provide services and the opening up of undistorted competition in all the Member States (see, to that effect, judgment of 8 December 2016, Undis Servizi, C-553/15, EU:C:2016:935, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited), is thereby secured.

59 The Court’s judgment of 20 October 2005, Commission v France (C-264/03, EU:C:2005:620), does not preclude that conclusion, holding as it does that the agency agreement of delegated project contracting, governed by the French town planning legislation, which reserved the role of agent to certain exhaustively listed categories of legal persons under French law, was a public service contract for the purposes of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), and, in so far as it prescribes no procedure for putting the choice of agent out to competition, infringed that directive.

60 That judgment does not concern the provisions of Directive 2004/18 that expressly prescribe that contracting authorities may use central purchasing bodies. In any event, it emerges from that judgment that the agent's responsibilities included various tasks constituting provisions of services that had been entrusted to it without reference to any competitive procedure prescribed by Directive 92/50 (judgment of 20 October 2005, Commission v France, C-264/03, EU:C:2005:620, paragraphs 46, 51 and 55).

61 In view of the Member States' broad margin of discretion, referred to in paragraph 56 of this judgment, there is likewise nothing in Directive 2004/18 or in its underlying principles that precludes the Member States from tailoring the organisational models of those central purchasing bodies to their own needs and the particular circumstances pertaining in a Member State and for that purpose stipulating purely public organisational models, with no participation by private persons or undertakings.

62 Against that background, the Italian Government has stated that the Italian legislature, by initially encouraging local authorities to use central purchasing bodies, created in accordance with defined organisational models, and then requiring small local authorities to use the services of those bodies, sought not only to guard against the risk of infiltration by the mafias but to provide a means of controlling expenditure.

63 In any event, as the Advocate General indicated in essence in points 70 to 72 of his Opinion, since the concept of 'contracting authority' is closely linked to that of 'central purchasing body', as expounded in paragraphs 51 to 58 of this judgment, central purchasing bodies cannot be regarded as offering services on a market open to competition by private undertakings.

64 A central purchasing body acts in fact as a contracting authority, in order to satisfy the needs of a contracting authority, not as an economic operator in its own commercial interests.

65 National legislation that restricts the freedom of choice of small local authorities when using a central purchasing authority, by stipulating two exclusively public organisational models with no participation by private persons or undertakings, is therefore not contrary to the objective pursued by Directive 2004/18 of freedom to provide services and opening up to undistorted competition in all the Member States, since it does not place any private undertaking at an advantage over its competitors.

66 Furthermore, the national legislation at issue does not give preference to any national tenderer. On the contrary, it furthers the objective referred to in the preceding paragraph because it protects small local authorities from the risk of a cartel consisting of a central purchasing body and a private undertaking that holds capital in that central purchasing body.

67 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first and second questions is that Article 1(10) and Article 11 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude a provision of national law which restricts the autonomy of small municipalities to use the services of a central purchasing body to only two exclusively public organisational models with no participation by private persons or undertakings.

Third question

68 By its third question the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(10) and Article 11 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding a provision of national law which restricts the operating area of the central purchasing bodies created by local authorities to the territory of those local authorities.

69 It should be noted, first, that, since Directive 2004/18 contains no express provision governing any territorial limits on the operating area of a central purchasing body, that question relates to the implementation of the provisions of that directive on central purchasing bodies, in respect of which, as can be seen from paragraph 56 of the present judgment, the Member States have a wide margin of discretion.

70 A measure by which a Member State restricts the geographical operating area of central purchasing bodies to the respective territories of the local authorities that created them, to ensure that those central purchasing bodies act in the public interest of those authorities instead of in their own commercial interests, further afield than those territories, must be found to be consistent with Article 1(10) of Directive 2004/18, which provides that a central purchasing body must be classed as a contracting authority and must, as such, satisfy the conditions under Article 1(9) of that directive. As the Court has already stated, according to Article 1(9), a contracting authority is an entity not having an industrial or commercial character which performs a task in the general interest. As a general rule, such a body does not pursue gainful activity on the market (see, to that effect, judgment of 23 December 2009, CoNISMa, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 38). A provision of national law such as that at issue in the main proceedings must, therefore, be considered to fall within the bounds of the margin of discretion available to the Member States when implementing Directive 2004/18.

71 Secondly, as regards the referring court's uncertainty as to whether the territorial restriction at issue in the main proceedings is compatible with the principles of the freedom to provide services and the opening up to competition as far as possible in the field of public service contracts which underlie Directive 2004/18, which that court believes may give rise to exclusive operating zones for central purchasing bodies, mindful of the reasons set out in the examination of the first and second questions, it must be held that a provision of national law that limits the operating area of central purchasing bodies to the respective territories of the local authorities that created them does not, as such, place any private undertaking at an advantage over its competitors and thereby infringe those principles.

72 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the third question is that Article 1(10) and Article 11 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude a provision of national law which restricts the operating area of the central purchasing bodies created by local authorities to the territory of those local authorities.

Costs

73 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main action, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber), hereby rules:

1. Article 1(10) and Article 11 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1336/2013 of 13 December 2013,must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude a provision of national law which restricts the autonomy of small municipalities to use the services of a central purchasing body to only two exclusively public organisational models with no participation by private persons or undertakings.

2. Article 1(10) and Article 11 of Directive 2004/18, as amended by Regulation No 1336/2013, must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude a provision of national law which restricts the operating area of the central purchasing bodies created by local authorities to the territory of those local authorities.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

delivered on 2 April 2020(1)

Case C-3/19

Asmel società consortile a r.l.

A.N.A.C. — Autorità Nazionale Anticorruzione,

with the intervention of:

A.N.A.C.A.P. — Associazione Nazionale Aziende Concessionarie Servizi entrate

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Central purchasing bodies — Small municipalities — Restriction to only two public-law organisational models for purchasing bodies — Prohibition of the involvement of private capital — Member States' margin of discretion — Territorial restrictions on their activities)

1. Under the Italian law in force at the time of the events, as interpreted by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), small local authorities may make use of central purchasing bodies in order to purchase works, goods and services, provided that they use organisational models that are exclusively public, such as municipal consortia or associations of municipalities.

2. The referring court has doubts as to whether this measure is consistent with EU law, since it could restrict the use of central purchasing bodies in a way that is incompatible with Directive 2004/18/EC, (2) which applies ratione temporis at the time addressed in the question referred, and with 'the principles of free movement of services and of opening up to competition as far as possible in the field of public service contracts'.

I. Legal framework

A. EU law. Directive 2004/18

3. Recital 15 of the directive reads as follows:

'Certain centralised purchasing techniques have been developed in Member States. Several contracting authorities are responsible for making acquisitions or awarding public contracts/framework agreements for other contracting authorities. In view of the large volumes purchased, those techniques help increase competition and streamline public purchasing. Provision should therefore be made for a Community definition of central purchasing bodies dedicated to contracting authorities. A definition should also be given of the conditions under which, in accordance with the principles of non-discrimination and equal treatment, contracting authorities purchasing works, supplies and/or services through a central purchasing body may be deemed to have complied with this Directive.'

4. Recital 16 states that:

'In order to take account of the different circumstances obtaining in Member States, Member States should be allowed to choose whether contracting authorities may use framework agreements, central purchasing bodies, dynamic purchasing systems, electronic auctions or the competitive dialogue procedure, as defined and regulated by this Directive.'

5. According to Article 1 ('Definitions'):

9. "Contracting authorities" means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

(a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) having legal personality; and

(c) financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

Non-exhaustive lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in (a), (b) and (c) of the second subparagraph are set out in Annex III. Member States shall periodically notify the Commission of any changes to their lists of bodies and categories of bodies.

10. A "central purchasing body" is a contracting authority which:

– acquires supplies and/or services intended for contracting authorities, or

– awards public contracts or concludes framework agreements for works, supplies or services intended for contracting authorities.

6. Article 11 ('Public contracts and framework agreements awarded by central purchasing bodies') establishes that:

'1. Member States may stipulate that contracting authorities may purchase works, supplies and/or services from or through a central purchasing body.

2. Contracting authorities which purchase works, supplies and/or services from or through a central purchasing body in the cases set out in Article 1(10) shall be deemed to have complied with this Directive in so far as the central purchasing body has complied with it.'

B. Italian law

1. Testo unico degli enti locali (Consolidated law on local authorities) (3)

7. Under Article 30(1):

‘In order to discharge certain functions and to provide certain services in a coordinated manner, local bodies may enter into appropriate agreements with each other.’

8. Article 31(1) provides that:

‘Local bodies for the associated management of one or more services and for the associated exercise of functions may form a consortium in accordance with the rules laid down for special undertakings provided for in Article 114, in so far as they are compatible. Other public bodies may participate in the consortium, when they are authorised to do so, in accordance with the laws to which they are subject.’

9. According to Article 32(1):

‘An association of municipalities is a local body formed of two or more municipalities, usually contiguous, for the associated exercise of functions and provision of services.’

2. Codice dei contratti pubblici (Public procurement code) (4)

10. Article 3(25) classifies as contracting authorities:

‘State administrative authorities; regional or local authorities; other non-economic public bodies; bodies governed by public law; associations, consortia, however named, established by those entities.’

11. According to Article 3(34), a central purchasing body is:

‘A contracting authority which:

– acquires supplies or services intended for contracting authorities or other contracting entities, or

– awards public contracts or concludes framework agreements for works, supplies or services intended for contracting authorities or other contracting entities.’

12. The original version of Article 33(3)bis (5) stipulates that:

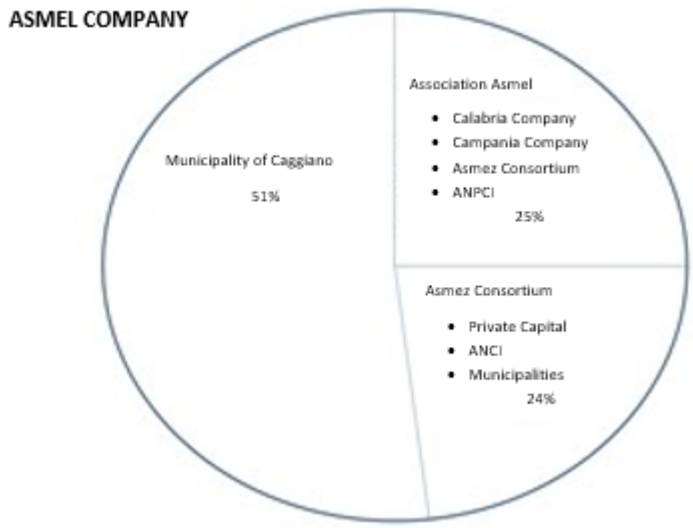
‘Municipalities with a population not exceeding 5 000 inhabitants situated within the territory of each province shall compulsorily entrust to a single central purchasing body the acquisition of works, services and supplies within the framework of the associations of municipalities, as provided for in Article 32 of the consolidated text contained in Legislative Decree No 267 of 18 August 2000, where they exist, or by establishing a special consortium agreement between those municipalities and relying on the support of the relevant departments.’

13. The amended wording (6) (introduced in 2014) of Article 33(3)bis reads as follows:

‘Municipalities that are not the provincial capital shall acquire works, goods and services within the framework of the associations of municipalities provided for in Article 32 of Legislative Decree No 267 of 18 August 2000, where they exist, or by establishing a special consortium agreement between those municipalities and relying on the support of the relevant departments, or using an aggregator or the provincial authorities, pursuant to Law No 56 of 7 April 2014. Alternatively, those municipalities may carry out their own purchases by means of the electronic purchasing tools managed by Consip SpA or by another reference aggregator.’

II. Facts and question referred

14. Asmel società consortile a r.l. (‘Asmel s.c.a.r.l.’) is a limited liability consortium company, established on 23 January 2013, whose shares are held by the Asmez Consortium (24%), (7) the private association Asmel (25%) (8) and the municipality of Caggiano (51%).



15. Over the years, Asmel s.c.a.r.l. has acted as the central purchasing body for the local authorities. (9)

16. Under the relationship between Asmel s.c.a.r.l. and non-member municipalities, the governments of non-member municipalities took the procurement decisions in which:

– firstly, they referred to a previous decision under which they had resolved to join the Asmel association and form a consortium within the meaning of Article 33(3)bis of the CCP;

– secondly, they gave Asmel s.c.a.r.l. responsibility for carrying out the public procurement processes on an electronic platform. (10)

17. Following several complaints, the Autorità Nazionale Anticorruzione (National Anti-Corruption Authority, 'the ANAC') began an investigation which found that Asmel s.c.a.r.l. and the Asmez Consortium did not comply with the organisational models for central purchasing bodies established in the CCP.

18. According to the ANAC, Asmel s.c.a.r.l. was a private entity, more specifically, a company governed by private law made up, in turn, of other associations. Therefore, it could not be a central purchasing body, because the Italian legislation requires these to behave as public bodies acting through public entities or associations of local authorities, such as associations or consortia of municipalities established under agreements concluded pursuant to Article 30 of the TUEL. The ANAC also noted that, while private entities can be used, these must be in-house bodies that operate only within the territory of the founding municipalities, whereas in the case under consideration in these proceedings the requirement for comparable oversight was not met and there was no territorial restriction on the activities performed.

19. The ANAC found that Asmel s.c.a.r.l. was performing its activity of purchasing goods for member organisations, but that members were only indirectly involved in the central purchasing body. The ANAC explained that, first, the local authorities became members of the Asmel association and then, under a decision of the Board, they entrusted responsibility for procurement to Asmel s.c.a.r.l.

20. In decision No 32 of 30 April 2015, the ANAC ruled that Asmel s.c.a.r.l. could not be classed as a body governed by public law, prohibited it from performing brokerage activities in the field of public procurement and declared that the tendering procedures it had conducted were unlawful.

21. Asmel s.c.a.r.l. challenged the ANAC's decision in the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy). Asmel considered that although it was a body governed by ordinary law, it had legal personality, met public interest needs, was non-industrial and non-commercial in nature, was funded by its local authority members and operated under their dominant influence. It therefore maintained that it was a contracting authority that satisfied the requirements needed in order to be classed as a 'central purchasing body'.

22. The court of first instance dismissed the appeal by Asmel s.c.a.r.l. in judgment No 2339 of 22 February 2016. In view of the way it was financed and the supervision of its management, the court ruled that it was not a body governed by public law. The court found that it did not conform to the organisational models for central purchasing bodies laid down by the CCP and ruled that its activities should be confined to the territory of the founding municipalities.

23. Asmel s.c.a.r.l. brought an appeal against the judgment of the court of first instance to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), citing various grounds; the Council of State considers two of those grounds to be relevant for present purposes:

– the ruling that the organisational model consisting in a consortium in the form of a company is incompatible with the CCP's provisions on central purchasing bodies is incorrect; and – the CCP does not impose any territorial restrictions on the operations of those central purchasing bodies.

24. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of States) notes that regional and local public authorities are included among the contracting authorities referred to in Article 3(25) of the CCP. In principle, any of these authorities may act as a central purchasing body (Article 3(34) of the CCP). However, small municipalities must do so through a 'specific organisational model' (Article 33(3)bis of the CCP) which is different from the model generally established for other administrative authorities.

25. Under this 'specific model', small municipalities (11) may only use central purchasing bodies that conform to one of the following two models: (a) the associations provided for in Article 32 of the TUEL; and (b) the consortia between local authorities established in Article 31 of the TUEL. (12)

26. In the opinion of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), this obligation on small municipalities seems to be at odds with the possibility of using central purchasing bodies without any restrictions on the forms of cooperation.

27. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) also considers that the national legislation contains an additional restriction on municipal consortia that excludes participation by private entities. (13) That exclusion could be contrary to the EU legal principles of free movement of services and maximum possible competition, in that the provision of services which can be classed as commercial activities and which, as such, could be better provided under a system of free competition within the internal market, is reserved solely to Italian public-law bodies as specified in an exhaustive list.

28. In addition, according to its interpretation, while the domestic legislation does not define a geographical operating area for central purchasing bodies, it does provide that the operating area must be the same as the territory of the municipalities using the central purchasing body. The operating area is therefore restricted to the territory of the municipalities in the association or the consortium. In its view, this restriction is also contrary to the principles of free movement of services and maximum possible competition, since it establishes exclusive operating zones for central purchasing bodies.

29. Against this background, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of States), refers the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

> 'Does a provision of national legislation, such as Article 33(3)bis of Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006, which restricts the autonomy of municipalities to entrust [procurement] to a central purchasing body to only two organisational models (an association of municipalities, if it already exists, or a consortium to be established between municipalities), infringe EU law?
> In any event, does a provision of national legislation, such as Article 33(3)bis of Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 which, read in conjunction with Article 3(25) of that legislative decree, regarding the organisational model based on consortia of municipalities, excludes the possibility of creating entities governed by private law, such as a consortium under ordinary law whose members include private entities, infringe EU law, in particular the principles of free movement of services and of opening up to competition as far as possible in the field of public service contracts?
> Lastly, does a provision of national legislation, such as Article 33(3)bis which, if interpreted in the sense of allowing consortia of municipalities that are central purchasing bodies to operate in a territory corresponding to that of the participating municipalities as a whole, and so, at most, to the provincial territory, limits the scope of operation of those central purchasing bodies, infringe EU law, in particular the principles of free movement of services and of opening up to competition as far as possible in the field of public service contracts?'

III. Proceedings before the Court of Justice

30. The order for reference was received at the Court of Justice on 3 January 2019.

31. Written observations were submitted by Asmel s.c.a.r.l., the Government of Italy and the European Commission, all of whom attended the hearing held on 29 January 2020.

IV. Assessment

A. Admissibility of the questions referred

32. Both the Commission and the Government of Italy raise some objections concerning the admissibility of the questions referred.

33. In the Italian Government's opinion, the entire set of questions is inadmissible because they are hypothetical. It states that, whatever answer is given by the Court of Justice, it would not render the appeal to the referring court admissible, because Asmel s.c.a.r.l. was not entrusted with any procurement service as the result of a competitive procedure.

34. This objection cannot be upheld, because it is for the referring court to assess whether a reference is needed in order for it to rule on the proceedings before it, and the Court of Justice could refuse to reply to the question only if it were absolutely clear that no such need existed (which is not the case here).

35. The objection raised by the Italian Government relates more to the substance of the dispute than to the admissibility of the actual reference. Determining the type of central purchasing bodies that may be used by small municipalities — that is, whether these are public bodies or may include private-sector participation — is not a hypothetical issue but a real one, and in order to answer it the restrictions imposed by Italian legislation must be examined in the light of EU law.

36. The Commission states, first, that the provision applied by the ANAC, about which the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has doubts as regards its compatibility with EU law, seems to have been repealed, in which case any potential damage to Asmel s.c.a.r.l. that is addressed in the reference will have disappeared. The litigation may therefore in the interim have become devoid of purpose.

37. The repeal referred to by the Commission is the 2016 repeal relating to the text of Article 33(3)bis of the CCP, following its amendment in 2014. It is for the national court to verify the impact of that repeal in the proceedings being heard in the referring court but, so far as the point at issue here is concerned, it is not possible to speak of the reference for a preliminary ruling having become devoid of purpose, particularly if the case is to be decided under the legislation in force at the material time. (14)

38. With regard to the objection of inadmissibility raised by the Commission in connection with the third question referred, I shall address this point in my analysis of that question.

B. Preliminary observations

39. To summarise, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) wishes to know whether an organisational model which, in the case of small local authorities, restricts them (15) to two types of central purchasing bodies (associations and consortia of municipalities) is compatible with EU law.

40. The order for reference mentions the freedom to provide services (Article 56 TFEU) as being the principle that could be called into question by the Italian legislation, and also expressly cites the provisions in Directive 2004/18 regarding central purchasing bodies.

41. In cases concerning government procurement, the case-law of the Court of Justice looks to the fundamental freedoms in the TFEU where the relevant directive does not apply. In the present case, the directive which, ratione temporis, governed public procurement (and, therefore, the legal framework for central purchasing bodies under EU law) was Directive 2004/18.

42. Moreover, Article 3(34) of the CCP reproduces the definition of central purchasing body found in Article 1(10) of Directive 2004/18, thus demonstrating that this national legislation incorporates the directive into domestic law.

43. Consequently, I agree with the Commission that the response to the questions referred must be found within the framework provided by Directive 2004/18.

44. The fact that the order for reference does not specify the amount of any public contract being challenged in the main proceedings, which would allow us to know whether it reaches the applicable threshold in Directive 2004/18, is irrelevant. The description of the scale of the activities of Asmel s.c.a.r.l. provides sufficient grounds to assume that it exceeds the minimum laid down in Article 7 of Directive 2004/18, (16) and it is to that activity, in general, that the order for reference refers.

45. While I will give a single final answer to the three questions referred, I believe it is more appropriate to analyse them separately, in the order proposed by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State).

C. First question referred

46. According to the referring court, Article 33(3)bis of the CCP 'restricts the autonomy of municipalities to entrust procurement to a central purchasing body to only two organisational models (an association of municipalities, if it already exists, or a consortium to be established between municipalities)'. Its question is whether that provision infringes EU law (with no further details). (17)

47. The degree of autonomy enjoyed by local authorities in each Member State, which is mentioned by the referring court, is a matter for the legislature in constitutional terms or the ordinary legislature of those States to determine; EU law does not lay down specific rules on this point.

48. I shall therefore focus on Directive 2004/18, which introduced 'central purchasing bodies' into EU law, reflecting a practice common in some Member States that was designed to enable public authorities to purchase goods or services through such a centralised system. (18)

49. While not applicable here, ratione temporis, Directive 2014/24/EU (19) has opted to retain this centralised purchasing technique in even clearer terms than the previous directive. (20)

50. According to the definition in Article 1(10) of Directive 2004/18, 'a "central purchasing body" is a contracting authority which … acquires supplies and/or services intended for contracting authorities, or … awards public contracts or concludes framework agreements for works, supplies or services intended for contracting authorities'.

51. Under Article 11 of Directive 2004/18, Member States may stipulate that contracting authorities 'may purchase works, supplies and/or services from or through a central purchasing body'. (21)

52. Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 defines which entities are contracting authorities: 'the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law'.

53. In the structure of Directive 2004/18, there is nothing to prevent a body governed by public law from including private entities, under strict conditions. According to the second paragraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, whether or not a body is governed by public law is determined by certain factors relating to its origin and legal personality (22) on the one hand, and its dependence on and supervision by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law, on the other. (23)

54. A private legal person could, therefore, in principle, be part of a public body that is classed as a contracting authority, provided that the body in question satisfies the above requirements. (24)

55. According to the order for reference, where small local authorities are concerned, in order to create local central purchasing bodies they must establish bodies composed exclusively of public persons, such as associations or consortia of municipalities. Therefore, these central purchasing bodies, which can be used by small local authorities in order to purchase works, goods and services, may not include participation by private legal persons.

56. While Directive 2004/18 stipulates that central purchasing bodies must be contracting authorities, it does require Member States to ensure that any body governed by public law (whether or not it includes participation by private persons) that is classed as a contracting authority must use these central purchasing bodies.

57. Directive 2004/18 gives Member States considerable discretion in this area. 'In order to take account of the different circumstances obtaining in Member States', recital 16 emphasises that 'Member States should be allowed to choose whether contracting authorities may use … central purchasing bodies, … as defined and regulated by this Directive'.

58. This recital is given legislative force in Article 11(1) of Directive 2004/18, which I alluded to earlier. Under this provision, Member States may opt to permit their contracting authorities (in this case, local authorities) to use central purchasing bodies.

59. In my opinion, that same option extends to choosing the regulation that best meets the public interest, given that Directive 2004/18 does not establish specific rules on the inclusion of private legal persons in central purchasing bodies. It will therefore suffice for national legislation not to distort the essential features of that body and to require those central bodies to comply with the provisions of Directive 2004/18 in their operations (final part of Article 11(2)).

60. The recent judgment in Irgita (25) provides some interpretation guidelines that can also be applied in this reference for a preliminary ruling. Although that judgment was given in a different context (26) (albeit one that still concerned public procurement) and concerned a provision of legislation (Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24) that does not deal with public purchasing bodies, the judgment underlines that the provision in question does not deprive Member States 'of the freedom to give preference to one means of providing services, performing work or obtaining supplies to the detriment of others'. (27)

61. In Irgita, the Court of Justice:

- states that 'the freedom of the Member States as to the choice of means of providing services whereby the contracting authorities meet their own needs follows moreover from recital 5 of Directive 2014/24'; (28)
- looks to Directive 2014/23/EU (29) as a supporting argument, in so far as this highlights the freedom of Member States to decide how best to manage the performance of works or the provision of services. (30) In support of its position, it cites Article 2(1) of that directive. (31)

62. Based, therefore, on this freedom of choice available to Member States, in my view, Directive 2004/18 does not prevent a Member State from opting to require its small local authorities that wish to use their own central purchasing body to have recourse to cooperative structures, such as associations and consortia of municipalities, that are exclusively public in nature.

63. I reiterate that Member States are free to establish centralised public procurement models or techniques (which may operate at national, regional, provincial or local level), depending on their own interests and on the particular circumstances at any given time. (32) As was later to be confirmed by the final part of Article 37(1) of Directive 2014/24, they may also 'provide that certain procurements are to be made by having recourse to central purchasing bodies or to one or more specific central purchasing bodies'.

64. Associations and consortia of municipalities are organisational models available to local authorities which, like the authorities themselves, are public law bodies. There is therefore nothing unusual in the fact that the national law that governs those models, which were established to enable joint management of services or the joint exercise of public functions, does not provide that private individuals or undertakings may participate in them.

65. The national legislature may choose either a decentralised local public procurement system (in which each municipality purchases its goods, works or services separately) or a centralised or aggregated system (that is, a model involving joint procurement run by several municipalities or by central purchasing bodies used by the municipalities). (33)

66. With regard to this latter system, Directive 2004/18, I repeat, gives the national legislature freedom to design the system. While not expressly stated in that directive (although it is stated in Directive 2014/24), that freedom includes power to make the system compulsory for some contracting authorities.

67. There would be nothing to prevent the involvement of private persons in the central purchasing bodies. But I cannot see why it would be contrary to Directive 2004/18, or any other rule of EU law, for the public organisational model followed by the associations and consortia of municipalities also to apply to the central purchasing bodies established by those associations or consortia to enable the municipalities in question to purchase work, services and supplies.

68. Nevertheless, it is true that the freedom of the national legislature is not unlimited — as was also noted, in a similar context, in Irgita — and that its chosen option must not contravene the rules and principles in the FEU Treaty or the freedoms enshrined in that treaty. (34)

69. On this point, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) restricts itself to stating that, as 'the central purchasing bodies are undertakings which offer contracting authorities the service of purchasing goods and supplies', (35) the restriction imposed by the Italian legislature could be in breach of the freedom to provide services recognised by Article 57 TFEU.

70. The fact that a central purchasing body may be classed as an economic operator in its relations with third parties (36) is not sufficient on its own to determine the application of Articles 56 and 57 TFEU when that concept cannot be separated from that of a contracting authority and, under Directive 2004/18, the latter concept covers only 'the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law'.

71. Consequently, I agree with the Italian Government when it argues that the status of a central purchasing body that is responsible, on a permanent basis, for performing the function of a contracting authority on behalf of public authorities, can be reserved by the national legislature to persons governed by public law. (37)

72. Under Directive 2004/18, those central purchasing bodies did not compete in a non-existent market for central purchasing bodies' services with private legal persons who provided the same services to public bodies. The fact that private undertakings or entities may be able to supply the contracting authorities with purely ancillary activities in support of their procurement activities (in the form of consultancy services, for example), in return for payment, is a separate matter.

73. The situation may have changed following Directive 2014/24, Article 37(4) of which permits the award of a 'public service contract for the provision of centralised purchasing activities to a central purchasing body'.

74. The fact that such an award may be made 'without applying the procedures provided for in this Directive', as the provision expressly states, could be due to the fact that the award must be made to central purchasing bodies governed by public law (which may include some limited private participation under public oversight). Otherwise — that is to say, if the award could be made to a private legal person — it would be hard to see how such a person could be awarded the contract without first having been made subject to the procedures laid down in Directive 2014/24.

75. Based on these premisses, in my view Articles 56 and 57 TFEU do not apply directly to the present case. Quite apart from the fact that the situation in these proceedings is confined in all respects to Italy, and there is no indication of any cross-border links, (38) the key point is that the interpretation of the EU law that must be deemed to apply (Directive 2004/18) does not require the central purchasing bodies established by small local authorities necessarily to include private legal persons.

76. I do not consider that the Italian legislation, when assessed from the perspective of competition law (39) in connection with public procurement, is in breach of that law. The competition which EU law seeks to protect in this field is, fundamentally, competition between economic operators who provide works, goods or services to contracting authorities. Provided that those authorities (in this case, the central purchasing bodies established by the associations and consortia of municipalities) comply with the procedures in Directive 2004/18 when they obtain those supplies, competition between those economic operators is preserved.

77. In other words, the requirement for small local authorities to use their own central purchasing bodies (through associations or consortia of municipalities) does not mean that the competitive market for the supply of goods, works or services to those public authorities by the economic operators concerned becomes closed.

D. Second question referred

78. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) seeks to ascertain whether a provision of national legislation which 'excludes the possibility of creating entities governed by private law, such as a consortium under ordinary law whose members include private entities' infringes EU law ('in particular the principles of free movement of services and of opening up to competition as far as possible in the field of public service contracts').

79. I should begin by pointing out that, in spite of its actual wording, the second question referred is not asking whether private entities must, in general, be permitted to participate in consortia of municipalities. Viewed in context, the referring court's question is instead asking whether the prohibition on private-sector participation in the central purchasing bodies established by those consortia is compatible with EU law.

80. When the question is interpreted in this way, I believe that the answer to it can be inferred from the answer to the first question referred, and therefore no further comment would be required.

81. The Commission, however, maintains (40) that the decision by the ANAC that gave rise to the proceedings goes further than it should in that it imposes an absolute prohibition on Asmel s.c.a.r.l. acting as an 'aggregator' under any circumstances and rules that the company cannot be classed as a contracting authority. (41)

82. According to the Commission, a provision of national legislation which, as in the present case, excludes entities that have a particular legal form and involve the participation of private legal persons is compatible with EU law provided that, for functions other (42) than those that are the subject of that provision, those entities can be classed as bodies governed by public law within the meaning of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

83. At the hearing, the Commission qualified its position: having first confirmed that Article 11(1) of Directive 2004/18 is compatible with a provision of national legislation such as that at issue, which restricts the organisational models for central purchasing bodies available to smaller local authorities to two, the Commission stated that its objection related solely to other methods of awarding public contracts that did not involve the use of such central bodies.

84. I do not believe that the Court of Justice needs to give a ruling on this observation by the Commission, given that the referring court's question relates only to the specific functions of associations and consortia of municipalities in establishing permanent central purchasing bodies, and not to any other functions. If local authorities have the power to carry out their own procurement, under non-centralised purchasing arrangements, that is something that goes beyond the scope of the reference for a preliminary ruling.

E. Third question referred

85. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) starts from the premiss that the provision of national legislation at issue should be interpreted 'in the sense of allowing consortia of municipalities that are central purchasing bodies to operate in a territory corresponding to that of the participating municipalities as a whole, and so, at most, to the provincial territory'.

86. Based on that interpretation, the referring court seeks to ascertain whether that provision of national law infringes the principles of free movement of services and of opening up to competition as far as possible in the field of public service contracts.

87. Both the Italian Government and the Commission express certain reservations about the way in which the question is posed:

- The Italian Government states that the reasons invoked by the referring court are unclear, which makes it impossible to take a position on this question. In its opinion, the court puts forward contradictory arguments in that it states, on the one hand, (43) that the provision would introduce 'exclusive operating zones for central purchasing bodies operating on behalf of small municipalities' (which, according to the Italian Government, would seem to imply that it gives consortia of municipalities an advantage); and, on the other, it asserts that the territorial restriction puts the central purchasing bodies at a disadvantage.

- In the Commission's view, the question is hypothetical, because the geographical restriction would benefit, rather than disadvantage, a central purchasing body such as Asmel s.c.a.r.l., in that it would extend (rather than reduce) its area of activity, which differs from that of the associations and consortia of municipalities.

88. In my opinion, the question is not hypothetical. The issue it raises, which goes beyond the literal wording in the order for reference, is whether the territorial restriction on the activities of certain central purchasing bodies, namely those formed by the associations and consortia of municipalities, infringes EU law (that is, the principles referred to above).

89. It is true that the full significance of this question would be in relation to a decision in a possible future dispute concerning the establishment of a (public) consortium of municipalities as a central purchasing body; but that is not the matter directly at issue in the main proceedings. Given that those proceedings concern only the decision by the ANAC on the ability of Asmel s.c.a.r.l. to operate as a central purchasing body on behalf of any municipality, with no geographical restrictions on its operations, the objections raised by the Commission carry some weight.

90. However, once again, the presumption must prevail that the question referred, as posed by the referring court, is relevant. If that court believes that a response is needed from the Court of Justice on a point of law which, in its opinion, requires the interpretation of a provision of EU law, the Court of Justice must provide that response, unless it is patently unnecessary to the main proceedings, which is not the case here.

91. With regard to the substance of the question, I cannot find any provision in Directive 2004/18 that imposes mandatory rules on Member States with regard to defining the territorial scope of the central purchasing bodies established by associations and consortia of municipalities.

92. Moreover, it seems to me to be consistent with the design of these models for cooperation between local authorities that the central purchasing bodies established by them should be restricted to the territory of the local authorities as a whole. From the perspective of the municipalities that are the recipients of the services provided by the central purchasing body, the effects of the relationship between the central purchasing body and those municipalities can only apply within the territory of those municipalities.

93. Once again, the potential difficulties in endorsing those models could arise from the requirement to respect the fundament freedoms enshrined in the treaties. However, for the reasons I set out in connection with the first question, I believe that neither Article 56 TFEU nor the rules of competition law are infringed. In any event, it is not clear from the wording of the decision to refer why any of those freedoms could be adversely affected.

94. I will add that, as regards the people who supply work, goods and services to the municipalities through the central purchasing bodies established by them, there is nothing to indicate that those works, services or supplies must come from undertakings based in the territory of the municipalities in question. In other words, there is no reason to think that the market is closed to undertakings from outside that territory, whether those undertakings are Italian or from any other Member State.

V. Conclusion

95. In the light of the above, I recommend that the Court of Justice should reply to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) in the following terms:

> EU law, in particular, Article 11 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, does not preclude a provision of national legislation under which, according to the interpretation of the referring court, small local authorities are required to purchase works, goods and services through central purchasing bodies established in accordance with two specific organisational models, namely an association of municipalities or a consortium of municipalities, whose sphere of operation is restricted to the territory of the municipalities in question as a whole.

7 The Asmez Consortium was established in Naples on 25 March 1994 by private undertakings. It came into operation when Selene service s.r.l., which has an agreement with the Associazione Nazionale Comuni Italiani (National Association of Italian Municipalities), joined its membership. Municipalities in Basilicata and Calabria subsequently became members.

8 The Asmel association was formed on 26 May 2010 by Asmenet Campania and Asmenet Calabria, both of which are limited liability consortium companies, and by the Asmez Consortium and the Associazione Nazionale Piccoli Comuni Italiani (National Association of Small Italian Municipalities).

---

9 Specifically, according to the order for reference, it organised an invitation to tender for framework agreements to provide the service for collecting and overseeing municipal property taxes and enforcing tax debts, as well as 152 e-tender procedures of various kinds for municipalities connected with Asmel s.c.a.r.l.

---

10 Payment for these services was set at 1.5% of the contract price, payable by the successful tenderer for each contract concluded via the platform.

---

11 Originally, under the first version of this provision, municipalities with a population of less than 5 000 inhabitants; then, under the 2014 wording, all municipalities that were not provincial capitals.

---

12 It should be added, however, that, as noted by the Italian Government, following the amendment introduced in 2014, the provision at issue permits that 'alternatively, those municipalities may carry out their own purchases by means of the electronic purchasing tools managed by Consip SpA or by another reference aggregator'. The ANAC's decision of 30 April 2015 referred to these two possibilities, stressing that small municipalities could also use the central purchasing body established at a national level for public procurement (Consip) or other 'reference aggregators' including, among others, the regional central purchasing bodies.

13 According to the definition of 'contracting authority' in Article 3(25) of the CCP, consortia that are classed as contracting authorities can be formed only between bodies governed by public law.

---

14 At the hearing, the Italian Government stated that the new regulation of central purchasing bodies (Article 37(4) of Legislative Decree No 50 of 18 April 2016), which was to replace the repealed Article 33(3)bis of the CCP, would not come into force until 31 December 2020, pursuant to Article 1 of Law No 55 of 2019. In the light of this information, the Commission acknowledged that the reply to the reference for a preliminary ruling would be helpful in deciding the case, in spite of the 2016 amendments to the legislation.

15 This assertion provides the basis for the order for reference. See, however, the clarification provided by the Italian Government concerning the scope for small municipalities also to use national or regional central purchasing bodies (see footnote 12).

---

16 Paragraph 1.4 of the order for reference, referred to by the Commission in paragraph 34 of its observations, notes that Asmel s.c.a.r.l. conducted at least 152 procurement procedures on behalf of various local authorities (see footnote 9 of this Opinion).

---

21 According to the English version of the article, 'contracting authorities may purchase works, supplies and/or services from or through a central purchasing body' (no italics in the original). The use of that dual phrase (from or through) would seem to anticipate the dual classification and functions of central purchasing bodies that are set out more clearly in the subsequent Directive 2014/24: they may act either as wholesalers, which buy, stock and resell, or as intermediaries for the contracting authorities, for which they award contracts, operate dynamic purchasing systems or conclude framework agreements to be used by contracting authorities (see recital 69 of Directive 2014/24).

22 They must be bodies established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, may not have an industrial or commercial character, and must have legal personality.

---

23 They must be bodies ‘financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law’.

24 With regard to Asmel s.c.a.r.l, the decision not to recognise it as a body governed by public law was based on the way it was financed and the fact that it included businesses and other private entities over the management or supervision of which the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law cannot exercise the oversight required by the legislation. It will be for the referring court to determine whether or not this assessment by the court of first instance is correct.

While the references are to Directive 2014/24, which, ratione temporis, does not apply to this case, that same paragraph 45 notes that recital 5 ‘[reflects] the case-law of the Court prior to that directive’. According to that recital, ‘nothing in this Directive obliges Member States to contract out or externalise the provision of services that they wish to provide themselves or to organise by means other than public contracts within the meaning of this Directive’.

31 ‘This Directive recognises the principle of free administration by national, regional and local authorities in conformity with national and Union law. Those authorities are free to decide how best to manage the execution of works or the provision of services, to ensure in particular a high level of quality, safety and affordability, equal treatment and the promotion of universal access and of user rights in public services. Those authorities may choose to perform their public interest tasks with their own resources, or in cooperation with other authorities or to confer them upon economic operators.’

32 In reproducing part of the ANAC’s decision of 30 April 2015, the Italian Government notes that the disputed provision was introduced to guard against the risk of infiltration by the mafias (Article 13 of Law 136/2010, ‘extraordinary plan against the mafias’). Under the subsequent ‘Salva-Italia’ Decree (Article 23(4) of Decree Law No 201 of 6 December 2011, approved by Law No 214 of 22 December 2011), centralisation of procurement by the smallest municipalities was made compulsory and became a means of controlling expenditure, with the introduction of the new version of Article 33(3)bis of the CCP.

33 The question of the limits which the Constitution of each State may impose on the legislative power as regards the local autonomy of regional or local authorities (that is, their capacity for self-organisation) is outside the remit of these proceedings.

34 Irgita, paragraph 48: ‘The freedom of the Member States as to the choice of the management method that they judge to be most appropriate for the performance of works or the provision of services cannot however be unlimited. That freedom must, on the contrary, be exercised with due regard to the fundamental rules of the FEU Treaty, in particular the free movement of goods, the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency’.

35 Paragraph 10.3 of the order for reference.

---

36 As is the case with Asmel s.c.a.r.l., whose clients pay for its services.

---

37 Observations of the Italian Government, paragraph 70 et seq.

---

38 Judgment of 15 November 2016, Ullens de Schooten (C-268/15, EU:C:2016:874, paragraph 47), citing previous case-law: ‘the provisions of the FEU Treaty on … the freedom to provide services … do not apply to a situation which is confined in all respects within a single Member State’.

---

39 From that perspective, the risk that competition will be distorted may be prompted more by the aggregation and centralisation of purchases which, as noted by recital 59 of Directive 2014/24, could give rise to an ‘excessive concentration of purchasing power and collusion’.

---

40 Paragraphs 60 to 63 of its written observations.

---

41 The Commission recognises that a decision on whether or not Asmel s.c.a.r.l. is a body governed by public law is purely a matter for the national court and that, in reaching its decision, the court would have to assess, among other factors, whether public authorities exercise a dominant influence over that company. Asmel s.c.a.r.l. agrees with this starting point.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

28 May 2020 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 2014/24/EU – Article 2(1)(5) – Article 12(4) – Article 18(1) – Concept of 'contract for pecuniary interest' – Contract between two contracting authorities pursuing a common objective in the public interest – Transfer of software for the coordination of fire service operations – No financial consideration – Link with a cooperation agreement under which supplementary modules of that software are made mutually available free of charge – Principle of equal treatment – Prohibition on placing a private undertaking in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors)

In Case C-796/18,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany), made by decision of 28 November 2018, received at the Court on 19 December 2018, in the proceedings

– the Austrian Government, by J. Schmoll and by G. Hesse and M. Fruhmann, acting as Agents, – the European Commission, by L. Haasbeek, M. Noll-Ehlers and P. Ondrůšek, acting as agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 29 January 2020,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 2(1)(5) and Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung (ISE) mbH and Stadt Köln (City of Cologne, Germany) concerning two contracts concluded between the City of Cologne and Land Berlin (Land of Berlin, Germany) which provide, respectively, for the transfer of fire service operations management software to the City of Cologne free of charge and for cooperation with a view to the development of that software.

Legal context

3 Recitals 31 and 33 of Directive 2014/24 state:

‘(31) There is considerable legal uncertainty as to how far contracts concluded between entities in the public sector should be covered by public procurement rules. The relevant case-law of the Court of Justice … is interpreted differently between Member States and even between contracting authorities. It is therefore necessary to clarify in which cases contracts concluded within the public sector are not subject to the application of public procurement rules.

Such clarification should be guided by the principles set out in the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice … The sole fact that both parties to an agreement are themselves public authorities does not as such rule out the application of procurement rules. However, the application of public procurement rules should not interfere with the freedom of public authorities to perform the public service tasks conferred on them by using their own resources, which includes the possibility of cooperation with other public authorities.

It should be ensured that any exempted public-public cooperation does not result in a distortion of competition in relation to private economic operators in so far as it places a private provider of services in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

(33) Contracting authorities should be able to choose to provide jointly their public services by way of cooperation without being obliged to use any particular legal form. Such cooperation might cover all types of activities related to the performance of services and responsibilities assigned to or assumed by the participating authorities, such as mandatory or voluntary tasks of local or regional authorities or services conferred upon specific bodies by public law. The services provided by the various participating authorities need not necessarily be identical; they might also be complementary.

Contracts for the joint provision of public services should not be subject to the application of the rules set out in this Directive provided that they are concluded exclusively between contracting authorities, that the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest and that no private service provider is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

In order to fulfil those conditions, the cooperation should be based on a cooperative concept. Such cooperation does not require all participating authorities to assume the performance of main contractual obligations, as long as there are commitments to contribute towards the cooperative performance of the public service in question. In addition, the implementation of the cooperation, including any financial transfers between the participating contracting authorities, should be governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest.’

4 Article 1 of that directive, entitled ‘Subject matter and scope’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4.’

5 Article 2(1)(5) of the directive defines ‘public contracts’ as ‘contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services’.

6 Article 12 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Public contracts between entities within the public sector’, provides in paragraph 4:

‘A contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common;

(b) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

(c) the participating contracting authorities perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation’.

7 Article 18 of the directive, which sets out the ‘principles of procurement’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

German law

8 Paragraph 103(1) of the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law against restrictions on competition) of 26 June 2013 (BGBl. 2013 I, p. 1750), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings (‘the Law against restrictions on competition’), provides that public contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded between contracting authorities and undertakings having as their object the supply of products, the execution of works or the provision of services.

9 Under the first sentence of Paragraph 106(1) of that Law, recourse may be had to the bodies responsible for reviewing the award of public contracts in the case of the award of public contracts whose value, exclusive of VAT, is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down.

10 Paragraph 108(6) of that Law provides that recourse may not be had to the bodies responsible for reviewing the award of public contracts in the case of contracts concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities where:

‘1. the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common,

2. the implementation of the cooperation referred to in paragraph 1 is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

3. the contracting authorities perform on the market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation referred to in paragraph 1.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11 The Land of Berlin, which has the largest professional fire brigade in Germany, uses the ‘IGNIS Plus’ software which it acquired, under a contract, from Sopra Steria Consulting GmbH for the purpose of managing operations carried out by its fire services. The contract allows it, inter alia, to transfer that software to other safety authorities free of charge.

12 In Germany, under the ‘Kiel’ decisions of 1979, which established the principles for the exchange of software between public administrative authorities, the transfer of software by one public body to another free of charge is not regarded as a procurement procedure for which an invitation to tender must be issued. According to the principle of general reciprocity, software developments in respect of which commercialisation by public authorities is not permitted may be transferred between administrative authorities free of charge, since they are not in competition with one another.

13 On 10 September 2017, pursuant to those decisions, the City of Cologne and the Land of Berlin entered into a contract for the permanent transfer of the ‘IGNIS Plus’ software free of charge (‘the software transfer contract’), which stipulates inter alia:

‘1. Subject matter of the contract

The following provisions apply to the permanent transfer and use of the customised software “IGNIS Plus”. The software provider holds the rights over this software.

The customised software “IGNIS Plus” is the software provider’s operations management software for emergency calls, scheduling and operational tracking for activities of the fire service in firefighting, technical assistance, emergency rescue and disaster control. …

2. Nature and scope of performance

2.1. The software provider shall provide the software recipient with the customised software “IGNIS Plus” for the purpose of the agreements in the cooperation agreement.

4. Remuneration for transfer

The customised software “IGNIS Plus” is to be provided for use as operations management software free of charge. …’

14 On the same day, the City of Cologne and the Land of Berlin also entered into a cooperation agreement concerning that software (‘the cooperation agreement’), with a view, inter alia, to adapting the software to the requirements of the partner and making it available to it by adding new technical functionalities in the form of ‘supplementary add-on technical modules’ to be provided to the cooperation partners free of charge.

15 The cooperation agreement provides in particular:

‘Article 1 – Purpose of the willingness to cooperate

… The partners have decided to put in place an equal partnership entailing, if necessary, a readiness to compromise in order to adapt the software to each other’s needs and to make it available to each other on a cooperative basis. …

Article 2 – Definition of the objective of the cooperation

The objective pursued by the cooperation partners is to implement the “IGNIS Plus” operations management software as a computer-aided dispatch system in the control centres of the fire service. The software system can be extended by further specialised functionalities in the form of modules and transferred to the other cooperation partners for them to use on a cost-neutral basis. …

Article 5 – Structure of the cooperation

… The base software shall be transferred on a cost-neutral basis. Supplementary add-on technical modules shall be provided to the cooperation partners on a cost-neutral basis.

The adaptation of the base software and the modules to individual processes must be independently commissioned and financed.

… The cooperation agreement is binding only together with the [software transfer contract] as a joint document.'

16 ISE, which develops and sells operations management software for safety authorities, submitted an application for review to the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Rhineland Public Procurement Board, Germany) with the aim of having the software transfer contract and the cooperation agreement declared to be ineffective on grounds of failure to comply with public procurement rules. According to ISE, the participation of the City of Cologne in the further development of the 'IGNIS Plus' software provided free of charge constitutes a sufficient economic advantage for the Land of Berlin, such that those contracts are for pecuniary interest.

17 By decision of 20 March 2018, the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Rhineland Public Procurement Board) dismissed the application for review as inadmissible on the ground that the contracts did not constitute public contracts because they are not for pecuniary interest. In particular, the cooperation at issue lacked the synallagmatic connection between performance and consideration.

18 ISE lodged an appeal against that decision before the referring court, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany). It reaffirms that the cooperation agreement is a contract for pecuniary interest since the Land of Berlin sought to acquire an economic advantage by providing the software at issue in the main proceedings, the City of Cologne being obliged to make supplementary add-on software modules developed by it available to the Land of Berlin. ISE also complains that the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Rhineland Public Procurement Board) wrongly disregarded the fact that the procurement of the base software entailed the commissioning of the producer with follow-up contracts, as it alone would be able to adapt, support and maintain the software.

19 The City of Cologne contends that the decision of the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Rhineland Public Procurement Board) should be upheld and, furthermore, asserts that, were the cooperation agreement to be regarded as a contact for pecuniary interest, it would constitute cooperation between contracting authorities and therefore would not come within the scope of public procurement law under Paragraph 108(6) of the Law against restrictions on competition.

20 Since it has doubts as the validity of the decision of the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Rhineland Public Procurement Board), the referring court considers it necessary to refer questions to the Court concerning the interpretation of Directive 2014/24.

21 The first question referred thus seeks to ascertain whether a 'public contract' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 is different from a 'contract' under Article 12(4) of that directive. If so, a contract which is not for pecuniary interest could, without constituting a public contract, be categorised as a 'contract' within the meaning of Article 12(4) of the directive and therefore fall outside the scope of the public procurement rules, provided that the conditions set out in points (a) to (c) of that provision are met.

22 Furthermore, in its previous case-law the referring court has adopted a broad understanding of the concept of a contract for pecuniary interest which characterises public contracts within the meaning of Paragraph 103(1) of the Law against restrictions on competition, regarding any legal relationship of reciprocal performance as being sufficient. Consequently, although the provision of the 'IGNIS Plus' software leads to cooperation that gives rise to entitlements only if one of the cooperation partners wishes to extend the functionalities of that software, the offer of cooperation at issue is for pecuniary interest, despite the uncertainty surrounding further developments of the software in the future.

23 The referring court is, however, uncertain whether, having regard to the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985), it is necessary to adopt an understanding of the terms 'public contract' and 'contract for pecuniary interest' in Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 which is narrower than that which it has previously adopted and which does not cover situations such as the one at issue in the main proceedings.

24 Lastly, the contracts awarded by the City of Cologne for the adaptations and maintenance of the 'IGNIS Plus' software should be regarded as being for pecuniary interest. They are independent contractual agreements with third parties that are severable from the provision of the software.

25 The second question concerns the subject matter of the cooperation between the contracting authorities under Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. After comparing the German, English and French versions of the directive and having regard to the beginning of recital 33 of that directive, the referring court considers that ancillary activities can be the subject matter of that cooperation without it being necessary for the cooperation to have taken place in the provision of the public services themselves.

26 The third question is justified by the fact that, according to the Court's case-law on Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), the prohibition on placing an economic operator in a position of advantage was interpreted as meaning that horizontal cooperation could be exempt from public procurement law only if no private undertaking was placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors. Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 does not provide for any such prohibition, even though it is mentioned in recital 33 of the directive.

27 Against this background, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Does the provision of software by one public administrative authority to another public administrative authority, which is agreed in writing and linked to a cooperation agreement, constitute a "public contract" within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive [2014/24] or a contract within the meaning of Article 12(4) of that directive which – at least initially, subject to Article 12(4)(a) to (c) thereof – comes within the scope of the directive if, although the software recipient does not have to pay a price or reimbursement costs for the software, the cooperation agreement connected with the provision of the software provides that each cooperation partner – and therefore also the software recipient – is required to make available to the other partner, free of charge, any of its own further developments of the software that it may create – but is not obliged to create – in the future?

(2) [If Question 1 is answered in the affirmative], [p]ursuant to Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, does the subject matter of the cooperation of the participating contracting authorities have to be the actual public services that are to be provided to citizens and must be provided jointly, or is it sufficient if the cooperation relates to activities that in some way serve the public services that are to be provided in the same way but do not necessarily have to be provided jointly?

(3) Does a so-called – unwritten – prohibition on placing a party in a position of advantage apply in the context of Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 and, if so, what is its scope?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

28 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that an agreement which (i) provides that one contracting authority is to transfer software to another contracting authority free of charge and (ii) is linked to a cooperation agreement under which each party to that agreement is required to make available to the other party, free of charge, any further developments of the software that it may create constitutes a ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of the directive or a ‘contract’ within the meaning of Article 12(4) of the directive.

29 It should be noted as a preliminary point that, by referring only to ‘contract’ and not to ‘public contract’, the wording of Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 might suggest that these are two distinct concepts. However, in actual fact no distinction should be drawn.

30 First, Article 1 of that directive, which defines its ‘subject matter and scope’, provides in paragraph 1 that ‘this Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4 [of that directive]’. It follows that the directive regulates only public contracts and design contests, to the exclusion of contracts which do not constitute a public contract.

31 Second, Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/24, which defines the main concepts governing the application of the directive, does not make any mention of ‘contract’, but only of ‘public contracts’, which suggests that the term ‘contract’ is merely an abbreviated version of the expression ‘public contract’.

32 Third, that interpretation is supported by the title of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24, which refers to ‘public contracts between entities within the public sector’. Consequently, the term ‘contract’ in Article 12(4) of that directive must be understood as referring to the concept of ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of that directive.

33 Fourth, that interpretation is also supported by the travaux préparatoires relating to Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24. As the European Commission pointed out in its written observations, whilst its Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement of 20 December 2011 (COM(2011) 896 final) included an Article 11 entitled ‘Relations between public authorities’, paragraph 4 of which provided that ‘an agreement concluded between two or more contracting authorities shall not be deemed to be a public contract within the meaning of Article 2(6) of this Directive where the following cumulative conditions are fulfilled’, the EU legislature did not wish to adopt that proposal. It follows that the effect of Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 cannot be to preclude the characterisation of cooperation between contracting authorities as a public contract. Its effect is confined to excluding such a contract from the procurement rules normally applicable.

34 Fifth, this interpretation is confirmed by an analysis of the context of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24. That article is included in Section 3, entitled ‘Exclusions’, of Chapter I of the directive. It would be inconsistent for the EU legislature to have sought to exclude contracts which do not constitute public contracts from the rules on public procurement. By definition, the exclusion Articles do not apply to such contracts.

35 It follows, first, that exclusion from the public procurement rules presupposes that the contract in question is a public contract within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24 and, second, that a public contract satisfying the conditions laid down in Article 12(4)(a) to (c) of the directive retains its legal nature as a ‘public contract’ even if those rules are not applicable to it.

36 Consequently, the concept of ‘contract’ in Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 is congruent with the concept of ‘public contract’ defined in Article 2(1)(5) of the directive.

37 In these circumstances, it must be determined whether an agreement which (i) provides that one contracting authority is to transfer software to another contracting authority free of charge and (ii) is linked to a cooperation agreement under which each party to that agreement is required to make available to the other party, free of charge, any further developments of the software that it may create constitutes a ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24.

38 It should be noted as a preliminary point that in order to determine whether a multi-stage operation should be categorised as a ‘public contract’ within the meaning of that provision, the operation must be examined as a whole, taking account of its purpose (see, by analogy, judgments of 10 November 2005, Commission v Austria, C-29/04, EU:C:2005:670, paragraph 41, and of 21 December 2016, Remondis, C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985, paragraph 37).

39 Under that provision, ‘public contracts’ are defined as contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services.

40 Consequently, to be categorised as a ‘public contract’ within the meaning of that provision, a contract must have been concluded for pecuniary interest, meaning that the contracting authority which has concluded a public contract receives under that contract, in return for consideration, a service which must be of direct economic benefit to that contracting authority. In addition, the contract must have a synallagmatic nature, which is an essential element of a public contract, (see, by analogy, judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis, C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985, paragraph 43).

41 In this case, the pecuniary nature of the software transfer contract and of the cooperation agreement appears to be conditional on the synallagmatic nature of the cooperation thereby established.

42 Since the third paragraph of Article 5 of the cooperation agreement provides that the contract is binding ‘only together with the [software transfer contract] as a single document’, account should be taken, in assessing the synallagmatic nature of the contractual framework formed by those two contracts, not only of their terms but also of the regulatory environment in which they were concluded.

43 On this latter point, it appears that, as the City of Cologne stated both in its written observations and at the hearing, the German rules on fire protection, technical assistance and disaster control and the rules on the emergency services, emergency response and ambulance transport by undertakings require the German local authorities responsible for those tasks to use the operations management system as optimally as possible and to adapt it to requirements on an ongoing basis.

44 It is on that basis that the Court will examine the terms of the contractual framework at issue.

45 In this regard, both the terms of the software transfer contract and the terms of the cooperation agreement make the existence of consideration likely. Although Article 4 of the software transfer contract states that the provision of the software is ‘free of charge’, it is nevertheless clear from Article 1 of the contract that it is ‘permanent’. A software transfer contract like that at issue in the main proceedings, which is intended to be for the long term, will inevitably be subject to changes in order to take account of adaptations required by new rules, developments in the organisation of the emergency services or technological progress, as was asserted by ISE in particular at the hearing. Furthermore, according to statements made by the City of Cologne at the hearing, significant modifications are made to the software and supplementary modules are added three or four times each year.

46 In addition, as is stipulated in Article 2.1 of the software transfer contract, the ‘IGNIS Plus’ software is provided ‘for the purpose of the agreements in the cooperation agreement’, which suggests that the Land of Berlin introduced a form of conditionality. Consequently, although free of charge, the provision of the software does not appear to be disinterested.

47 Furthermore, according to Article 1 of the cooperation agreement, its purpose is to create ‘an equal partnership entailing, if necessary, a readiness to compromise in order to adapt the software to each other’s needs and to make it available to each other’. The wording also suggests that the parties undertake to develop the initial version of the software at issue in the main proceedings where the optimal use of the operations management system and the ongoing adaptation of that system to requirements call for such developments.

48 Moreover, Article 5 of that agreement stipulates that ‘the adaptation of the base software and the modules to individual processes must be independently commissioned and financed’, which reflects the Land of Berlin’s financial interest in the provision of the software free of charge. In addition, in response to a question asked by the Court at the hearing, the City of Cologne acknowledged that such a contract should allow each partner to make savings.

49 Lastly, in the event that one of the contracting parties to the contractual framework at issue in the main proceedings made adaptations to the software at issue in the main proceedings and did not pass them on to the other party, it would seem that the other party could terminate the cooperation agreement and, if necessary, the software transfer contract, or even bring legal proceedings to claim the benefit of the adaptation which had been made. It thus appears that the obligations arising from the public contract at issue in the main proceedings are legally binding and that their execution is legally enforceable (judgment of 25 March 2010, Helmut Müller, C-451/08, EU:C:2010:168, paragraph 62).

50 Thus, subject to verification by the referring court, it is clear from the above considerations that the software transfer contract and the cooperation agreement have a synallagmatic nature in so far as the provision of the 'IGNIS Plus' software free of charge gives rise to a reciprocal obligation to develop that software where the optimal use of the operations management system and the ongoing adaptation of that system to requirements call for such developments, which results in the financing of supplementary modules which must subsequently be provided to the other partner free of charge.

51 In those circumstances, it seems, as the Advocate General noted in essence in points 59 and 62 of his Opinion, that it is inevitable in practice that the 'IGNIS Plus' software will eventually have to be updated, with the result that the consideration is not dependent on a purely potestative condition.

52 Since the adaptation of the software at issue in the main proceedings by one of the partners presents a clear financial interest for the other partner, if the referring court were to conclude that the contractual framework formed by the software transfer contract and the cooperation agreement were synallagmatic in nature, those contracts would have to be regarded as having been concluded for pecuniary interest, with the result that the conditions for categorisation as a public contract, as recalled in paragraph 40 of this judgment, would be satisfied.

53 The answer to the first question is therefore that Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that an agreement which (i) provides that one contracting authority is to transfer software to another contracting authority free of charge and (ii) is linked to a cooperation agreement under which each party to that agreement is required to make available to the other party, free of charge, any further developments of the software that it may create constitutes a 'public contract' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of that directive where it is clear from the terms of those agreements and from the applicable national rules that the software will, in principle, be subject to adaptations.

54 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that cooperation between contracting authorities may fall outside the scope of the public procurement rules laid down in the directive where that cooperation relates to activities ancillary to the public services that are to be provided, even individually, by each cooperation partner, provided that the ancillary activities contribute to the effective performance of those public services.

55 It should be determined, first, whether Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 authorises contracting authorities to establish cooperation relating to public service tasks which they do not provide jointly.

56 Under that provision, a public contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities falls outside the scope of the directive where it establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common.

57 As the Advocate General noted in essence in point 71 of his Opinion, that provision simply mentions common objectives, without requiring the joint provision of a single public service. As is stated in the first paragraph of recital 33 of Directive 2014/24, 'the services provided by the various participating authorities [in such cooperation] need not necessarily be identical; they might also be complementary'.

It does not therefore seem essential for the public service activity to be provided in common by public entities participating in the cooperation.

58 It follows that Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as indiscriminately authorising the participating contracting authorities to carry out a public service task, either jointly or each individually, provided their cooperation makes it possible to achieve objectives they have in common.

59 Second, according to Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the first paragraph of recital 33 of the directive, cooperation between public entities can cover all types of activities related to the performance of services and responsibilities assigned to or assumed by the participating authorities.

60 The expression ‘all types of activities’ can potentially cover an activity ancillary to a public service as long as that ancillary activity contributes to the effective performance of the public service task to which the cooperation between the participating contracting authorities relates. The third paragraph of recital 33 of Directive 2014/24 provides that cooperation between public authorities ‘does not require all participating authorities to assume the performance of main contractual obligations, as long as there are commitments to contribute towards the cooperative performance of the public service in question’.

61 In addition, it is not certain that software for tracking fire service operations in firefighting, technical assistance, emergency rescue and disaster control, like that at issue in the main proceedings, which would seem to be essential to the performance of those tasks, can be reduced to the status of a purely ancillary activity. This must, however, be ascertained by the referring court.

62 The answer to the second question is therefore that Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that cooperation between contracting authorities may fall outside the scope of the public procurement rules laid down in that directive where that cooperation relates to activities ancillary to the public services that are to be provided, even individually, by each cooperation partner, provided that those ancillary activities contribute to the effective performance of those public services.

The third question

63 By its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, first, whether Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 33 and Article 18(1) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that cooperation between contracting authorities must not have the effect, in accordance with the principle of equal treatment, of placing a private undertaking in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors and, second, what the scope of that principle is.

64 As is rightly noted by the referring court, it is clear from the Court’s case-law concerning Directive 2004/18 that European Union rules on public procurement are not applicable to contracts which establish cooperation between public entities with the aim of ensuring that a public task that they all have to perform is carried out in so far as such contracts are concluded exclusively by public entities, without the participation of a private party, no private provider of services is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis competitors and implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations and requirements relating to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest. Such contracts can fall outside the scope of European Union public procurement rules only if they fulfil all those criteria cumulatively (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 December 2012, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817, paragraphs 34 to 36, and of 13 June 2013, Piepenbrock, C-386/11, EU:C:2013:385, paragraphs 36 to 38).

65 Although Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 does not mention that contracting authorities participating in cooperation must not place a private undertaking in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors, the EU legislature did not in any way intend to depart from the Court’s case-law cited in the preceding paragraph.

66 First, whilst noting that there is ‘considerable legal uncertainty as to how far contracts concluded between entities in the public sector should be covered by public procurement rules’ and that it is therefore necessary to provide clarification in this regard, Directive 2014/24 states, in recital 31, that such clarification should be guided by the principles set out in the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice. It follows that the EU legislature did not intend to call into question the Court's case-law on this point.

67 Second, according to the second paragraph of recital 33 of the directive, contracts for the joint provision of public services should not be subject to the application of the rules set out in the directive provided that they are concluded exclusively between contracting authorities, that the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest and that no private service provider is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors, which corresponds, in essence, to the Court's existing case-law concerning Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18, as mentioned in paragraph 64 of this judgment.

68 Third, in any event, since cooperation between contracting authorities satisfying the conditions laid down in Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 remains a 'public contract' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of that directive, as follows from the answer given to the first question, Article 18 of the directive, which sets out the principles of public procurement, is applicable to such cooperation.

69 Under Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, contracting authorities must treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and act in a transparent and proportionate manner and, furthermore, the design of the procurement may not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of the directive or of artificially narrowing competition, which is considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.

70 Thus, however regrettable it may be, in particular in the light of the principle of legal certainty, which is a fundamental principle of EU law and requires, in particular, that rules should be clear and precise, so that individuals may be able to ascertain unequivocally what their rights and obligations are and may take steps accordingly (judgments of 9 July 1981, Gondrand and Garancini, 169/80, EU:C:1981:171, paragraph 17; of 13 February 1996, Van Es Douane Agenten, C-143/93, EU:C:1996:45, paragraph 27, and of 14 April 2005, Belgium v Commission, C-110/03, EU:C:2005:223, paragraph 30), the failure in Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 to mention that, in the context of cooperation between contracting authorities, a private provider may not be placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors cannot be decisive.

71 In this case, the Land of Berlin acquired the 'IGNIS Plus' software from Sopra Steria Consulting before transferring it, free of charge, to the City of Cologne.

72 As ISE has asserted, without being contradicted by the City of Cologne at the hearing before the Court, the adaptation of the software is a very complex process the economic value of which is much higher than that corresponding to the initial acquisition of the base software. Thus, according to ISE, the City of Cologne has already estimated the costs of adapting the software at EUR 2 million, whilst the Land of Berlin published a pre-information notice in the Official Journal of the European Union relating to the development of the 'IGNIS Plus' software for an amount of EUR 3.5 million. Consequently, according to ISE, the economic interest lay not in the acquisition or sale of the base software but at the later stage of the adaptation, maintenance (which costs EUR 100 000 per year) and development of the software.

73 ISE considers that, in practice, the contracts for the adaptation, maintenance and development of the base software are reserved exclusively for the software publisher since its development requires not only the source code for the software but also other knowledge relating to the development of the source code.

74 It should be stated in this regard that, if a contracting authority is considering organising a public procurement procedure for the maintenance, adaptation or development of software acquired from an economic operator, it must ensure that adequate information is communicated to potential candidates and tenderers in order to allow effective competition to develop on the secondary market for the maintenance, adaptation or development of the software.

75 In this case, in order to ensure compliance with the principles of public procurement set out in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, the referring court must establish, first, that both the Land of Berlin and the City of Cologne have the source code for the ‘IGNIS Plus’ software, second, that, in the event that they organise a public procurement procedure for the maintenance, adaptation or development of that software, those contracting authorities communicate that source code to potential candidates and tenderers and, third, that access to that source code is in itself a sufficient guarantee that economic operators interested in the award of the contract in question are treated in a transparent manner, equally and without discrimination.

76 In the light of the above considerations, the answer to the third question is be Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the second paragraph of recital 33 and Article 18(1) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that cooperation between contracting authorities must not, in accordance with the principle of equal treatment, have the effect of placing a private undertaking in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

Costs

77 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that an agreement which (i) provides that one contracting authority is to transfer software to another contracting authority free of charge and (ii) is linked to a cooperation agreement under which each party to that agreement is required to make available to the other party, free of charge, any further developments of the software that it may create constitutes a ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of that directive where it is clear from the terms of those agreements and from the applicable national rules that the software will, in principle, be subject to adaptations.

2. Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that cooperation between contracting authorities may fall outside the scope of the public procurement rules laid down in the directive where that cooperation relates to activities ancillary to the public services that are to be provided, even individually, by each cooperation partner, provided that the ancillary activities contribute to the effective performance of those public services.

3. Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with the second paragraph of recital 33 and Article 18(1) of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that cooperation between contracting authorities must not have the effect, in accordance with the principle of equal treatment, of placing a private undertaking in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

delivered on 29 January 2020 (1)

Case C-796/18

Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung (ISE) mbH

v

Stadt Köln,

intervener:

Land Berlin

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2014/24/EU — Concept of contract for pecuniary interest — Horizontal cooperation between contracting authorities — Making available of software for the coordination of fire-fighting operations — Cooperation agreement on updating and developing the software — Activity ancillary to the public service — Prohibition on placing third parties in a position of advantage)

1. The first European rules on public procurement date back to the 1970s. A number of successive provisions enacted since then culminated in the adoption in 2014 of three texts intended to regulate all aspects of this field: Directive 2014/24/EU (2) (the interpretation of which forms the subject of this reference for a preliminary ruling), Directive 2014/23/EU (3) and Directive 2014/25/EU. (4)

2. Prior to the entry into force of the 2014 Directives, the Court of Justice had already accepted that the rules of EU law governing public procurement did not apply, in principle, in the case where, subject to certain conditions:

– a contracting authority entrusted the performance of certain tasks to a legal person under its control without recourse to other external entities (vertical cooperation or in-house award); or – two contracting authorities worked together to ensure the performance of a public-service task common to both (horizontal cooperation).

3. In the case of the second form of cooperation between public authorities mentioned above, the case-law of the Court of Justice had generated a degree of legal uncertainty (5) which Directive 2014/24 attempted to dispel. I am not convinced that that attempt has been as successful as might have been expected.

4. In the dispute giving rise to this reference for a preliminary ruling, a company (Informatikgesellschaft für Software-Entwicklung; ‘ISE’) is challenging before the referring court a contract between Stadt Köln (City of Cologne) and Land Berlin under which the latter transfers to the former software for managing interventions by its fire service, and which is accompanied by an agreement on cooperation between the two authorities.

5. The referring court needs to know, first and foremost, whether or not the relationship between the contracting authorities which prompted this dispute falls outside the public procurement rules contained in Directive 2014/24. The Court thus has an opportunity to supplement its previous case-law, albeit in the light of a new provision (Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24) on the subject of which, unless I am mistaken, no judgment has yet been given.

I. Legal framework

6. Recital 5 states:

> '… nothing in this Directive obliges Member States to contract out or externalise the provision of services that they wish to provide themselves or to organise by means other than public contracts within the meaning of this Directive. […]'.

7. Recital 31 reads:

> 'There is considerable legal uncertainty as to how far contracts concluded between entities in the public sector should be covered by public procurement rules. The relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union is interpreted differently between Member States and even between contracting authorities. It is therefore necessary to clarify in which cases contracts concluded within the public sector are not subject to the application of public procurement rules.
> Such clarification should be guided by the principles set out in the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union. The sole fact that both parties to an agreement are themselves public authorities does not as such rule out the application of procurement rules. However, the application of public procurement rules should not interfere with the freedom of public authorities to perform the public service tasks conferred on them by using their own resources, which includes the possibility of cooperation with other public authorities.
> It should be ensured that any exempted public-public cooperation does not result in a distortion of competition in relation to private economic operators in so far as it places a private provider of services in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors'.

8. According to recital 33:

> 'Contracting authorities should be able to choose to provide jointly their public services by way of cooperation without being obliged to use any particular legal form. Such cooperation might cover all types of activities related to the performance of services and responsibilities assigned to or assumed by the participating authorities, such as mandatory or voluntary tasks of local or regional authorities or services conferred upon specific bodies by public law. The services provided by the various participating authorities need not necessarily be identical; they might also be complementary.
> Contracts for the joint provision of public services should not be subject to the application of the rules set out in this Directive provided that they are concluded exclusively between contracting authorities, that the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest and that no private service provider is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.
> In order to fulfil those conditions, the cooperation should be based on a cooperative concept. Such cooperation does not require all participating authorities to assume the performance of main contractual obligations, as long as there are commitments to contribute towards the cooperative performance of the public service in question. In addition, the implementation of the cooperation, including any financial transfers between the participating contracting authorities, should be governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest'.

9. Article 1(4) provides:

'This Directive does not affect the freedom of Member States to define, in conformity with Union law, what they consider to be services of general economic interest, how those services should be organised and financed, in compliance with the State aid rules, and what specific obligations they should be subject to. Equally, this Directive does not affect the decision of public authorities whether, how and to what extent they wish to perform public functions themselves pursuant to Article 14 TFEU and Protocol No 26'.

10. Article 2(1)(5), defines public contracts as follows:

'… contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services'.

11. Article 12 ('Public contracts between entities within the public sector') states, in paragraph 4:

'A contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

a) the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common;

b) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

c) the participating contracting authorities perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation'.

12. Article 18(1) states:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators'.

B. National law

13. Under Article 91c(1) of the German Basic Law, 'the Federation and the Länder may cooperate in planning, constructing and operating information technology systems needed to enable them to discharge their responsibilities'.

14. Paragraph 108 of the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law against restrictions on competition; 'the GWB') reproduces Article 12 of Directive 2014/24.

15. According to the so-called 'Kiel decisions', adopted in 1979, a public authority may transfer software developed or acquired (by itself or on its behalf) to other public authorities in Germany, provided that there is reciprocity. Reciprocity is granted where the budgetary provisions or the budgetary laws or by-laws of the entities in question — the owner and the recipient of the software — have taken into account the budgetary rules recommended in 1980 by the Conference of Finance Ministers. Generally speaking, reciprocity is measured in political rather than commercial terms. It is seen not as a mutual exchange per se but as the possibility of one. (6)

II. The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16. In September 2017, Stadt Köln and Land Berlin concluded a software transfer contract whereby the latter transferred to the former, free of charge and for an indefinite period, software for managing interventions by its fire service.

17. The transfer was to comply with the conditions set out in a cooperation agreement of the same date that contained, inter alia, the following articles:

> ‘Article 1. Purpose of the willingness to cooperate
> […] The partners have decided to put in place an equal partnership and, if necessary, to exhibit a readiness to compromise in order to adapt the software to each other’s prevailing needs and to make it available to each other on a cooperative basis […].
> […] The software system can be extended by further specialised functionalities in the form of modules and transferred to the other partners in cooperation for them to use on a cost-neutral basis […].
> Article 5. Form of cooperation
> […] Transfer of the basic software shall be cost-neutral. Specialised add-on modules shall be offered to the partners in cooperation on a cost-neutral basis.
> The cooperation agreement shall be binding only with the [software transfer] contract as a joint document’.

18. ISE, which develops and sells software, applied to the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Rhineland Public Procurement Board, Germany) for a review of the contracts concluded between Land Berlin and Stadt Köln, claiming that they should be terminated. It argued that Stadt Köln had awarded a public supply contract the value of which exceeded the amount exempt from the obligation to apply the public procurement rules. Stadt Köln’s involvement in developing the software represented, in its opinion, a sufficient economic advantage. Furthermore, the purchase of the base software entailed new orders from the manufacturer, inasmuch as, for a third party, developing and maintaining that software would represent an unbearable economic cost.

19. The Vergabekammer Rheinland (Rhineland Public Procurement Board) dismissed ISE’s application for review, on the ground that the agreements between Stadt Köln and Land Berlin could not be classified as ‘public contracts’ for the purposes of the European legislation. In the Board’s opinion, the two parties had simply established a scheme for fair cooperation under which the software was transferred free of charge.

20. ISE appealed that decision to the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany). Stadt Köln opposed the appeal on the ground that the decision under appeal was correct.

21. It was in those circumstances that the aforementioned court referred the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

> (1) Does the provision of software by one public administrative authority to another public administrative authority, which is agreed in writing and linked to a cooperation agreement, constitute a ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5) of Directive 2014/24/EU or a contract within the meaning of Article 12(4) of that directive which — at least initially, subject to Article 12(4)(a) to (c) thereof — comes within the scope of the directive if, although the software recipient does not have to pay a price or reimbursement costs for the software, the cooperation agreement connected with the provision of the software provides that each cooperation partner — and therefore also the software recipient — is required to make available to the other partner, free of charge, any of its own further developments of the software that it may create — but is not obliged to create — in the future?

(2) Pursuant to Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24/EU, does the subject matter of the cooperation of the participating contracting authorities have to be the actual public services that are to be provided to citizens and which must be provided jointly, or is it sufficient if the cooperation relates to activities that in some way serve the public services that are to be provided in the same way but do not necessarily have to be provided jointly?

(3) Does a so-called — unwritten — prohibition on placing a party in an advantageous position ('Besserstellungsverbot') apply in the context of Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU and, if so, with what content does it apply?

22. The order for reference was received at the Court on 19 December 2018. Written observations have been lodged by Stadt Köln, the Austrian Government and the Commission.

23. A hearing attended by counsel for ISE, Stadt Köln, the Austrian Government and the Commission was held on 6 November 2019.

III. Analysis

A. Issues raised and preliminary observations

24. The provision of services through intra-administrative cooperation, also known as 'horizontal' or 'public-public' cooperation, was expressly incorporated into EU law in Section 3 ('Exclusions') of Chapter I of Title I of Directive 2014/24, in particular, Article 12(4). (7)

25. According to that provision, 'a contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities shall fall outside the scope of' Directive 2014/24 where all of the conditions which it lists are fulfilled. (8)

26. The text in force accommodates horizontal cooperation more generously than the Court's case-law prior to the 2014 Directives did. That case-law, (9) to which recital 31 of Directive 2014/24 refers, (10) had laid down certain conditions for verifying that public services could be provided without recourse to the market by way of cooperation between public administrative authorities.

27. As well as requiring that the entities entering into a such a scheme with each other should be contracting authorities, those conditions stipulated that the inter-administrative agreement must:

– be intended to ensure the performance of a public-service task common to the entities concerned;

– be concluded exclusively by public entities, without the participation of a private undertaking;

– not favour any private supplier over its competitors;

– establish cooperation governed only by considerations and requirements characteristic of the pursuit of public-interest objectives.

28. Directive 2014/24, however, does not simply codify the arrangements that were already in place, but reformulates, clarifies, removes and supplements one or more of the aforementioned requirements. It follows that, when it comes to interpreting that directive, it will not always be relevant or expedient simply to turn back to the previous case-law.

29. The provisions relevant in this instance are Article 12(4) and recitals 31 and 33 of Directive 2014/14. Taken together, these create a legal regime that reconciles two competing objectives: on the one hand, the desire not to interfere with the way in which Member States organise their internal administration; on the other hand, the need to ensure that exclusion does not have the effect of infringing the principles governing public procurement under EU law.

30. Directive 2014/24 makes it clear that Member States are under no obligation to turn to the market in order to procure or obtain the services they need to carry on their activities. (11)

31. However, removing this type of inter-administrative contract from the public procurement procedures may operate to the detriment of the objective of establishing an internal market in this area too. The more contracts that are excluded, the less scope there is for creating and developing the internal market in public procurement.

32. Self-supply on the part of public entities, be this in the form of 'in-house' or 'horizontal' cooperation, is not without risk for the free movement of goods and services. (12) Equally legitimate are the misgivings about its effects on free competition beyond the situation expressly referred to in the second paragraph, in fine, of recital 33 of Directive 2014/24, which warns against cooperation that places an economic operator in a position of advantage vis-à-vis other competitors.

33. Inappropriate use of these collaborative mechanisms could indeed have the effect of 'shrinking' the demand side of the market and reducing the number of suppliers which that market could sustain. Neither is it inconceivable, in theory, that the public authorities would abuse the (collective) dominant position they might come to hold.

34. It is also true that, viewed from another perspective, the greater flexibility which Directive 2014/24 grants to horizontal cooperation between contracting authorities (as a result of a political decision on the part of the European legislature) may at the same time have positive effects on competition in the sense of incentivising private operators to offer better contract terms.

35. A Member State's decision about how to provide a public service (which may indeed be to do so not by recourse to the market but by way of administrative cooperation) must comply with the fundamental rules of the TFEU, in particular those relating to the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, as well as the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. (13) These rules and principles must also be taken into account when it comes to interpreting Article 12 of Directive 2014/24.

36. The sum of the foregoing considerations explains the existence of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 and justifies the prerequisites for 'public-public' cooperation which are explicitly set out in paragraph 4 thereof.

37. It should be noted, finally, that the exclusion of those mechanisms for collaboration between contracting authorities from the scope of Directive 2014/24 is dictated not by the binary logic of rule versus exception, but by a different understanding of the field of play on which that directive operates.

38. After all, what Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 seeks to do in stating that the collaborative relationships between contracting authorities for which it provides 'fall outside' (14) the scope of that directive is to set the limits of that directive, all the other rules of which are simply not enforceable against such relationships. It follows, in my opinion, that the findings contained in the aforementioned judgments with respect to the (restrictive) interpretative criterion applicable to exceptions, as opposed to the general rule, are not, strictly speaking, an automatic point of reference for the interpretation of that exclusion. (15)

B. First question referred for a preliminary ruling: the transfer of software and the scope of Directive 2014/24/UE

1. Preliminary point: factual premiss for the application of Article 12

39. The referring court asks, in the first place, whether a transfer of software such as that which took place between Land Berlin and Stadt Köln falls within the scope of Directive 2014/24: either as a 'public contract' (within the meaning of Article 2(1)(5), or as a mere 'contract' (within the meaning of Article 12(4)).

40. The question, as raised, is prompted by the (apparent) lack of pecuniary interest in the transfer. Its wording supports the inference that, in the view of the referring court, the scope of Directive 2014/24 is not defined by Article 2 alone. The fact that, in Article 12(4), the term 'contract' is not accompanied by the adjective 'public' could mean that certain contracts not consistent with the definition given in Article 2(1)(5), are also subject to the EU public procurement rules.

41. Rather than undertaking a detailed analysis of the different meanings that attach to the term ‘contract’ and its accompanying adjectives depending on the various provisions of Directive 2014/24 in which that term appears, (16) I shall focus on interpreting Article 12(4) thereof with a view to determining whether it is applicable to a relationship such as that agreed upon between Land Berlin and Stadt Köln. I shall therefore address the first question referred in the light of the special nature of that provision.

42. The word ‘contract’ in Article 12(4) is explained by reference to its schematic relationship not so much with Article 2 of Directive 2014/24 as with the other paragraphs of Article 12 itself. In that context, it reflects the difference between it and vertical cooperation (paragraphs 1 to 3 of that provision), whereby the relationship between the participants is structured around internal control. It would appear to serve, in effect, to express the idea that there must be an agreement or arrangement that establishes the basis of, and legal framework for, the relationship between the parties, the objective of the cooperation and the activities (contributions) which each party has to carry out (make). (17)

43. The same idea is conveyed by the second paragraph of recital 33 of Directive 2014/24, when it refers to ‘contracts for the joint provision of public services’, and, then, by the third paragraph, ‘commitments to contribute towards the cooperative performance of the […] service’, which do not necessarily have to take the form of the performance by all the parties of the main contractual obligations.

44. On that premiss, Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 envisages two types of situation in which the usual meaning of ‘public contract’ may not be very appropriate because those situations are, more accurately, alternatives to that category.

45. First, it provides for ‘vertical cooperation’ (paragraphs 1, 2 and 3), whereby, as I have stated elsewhere, ‘under the in-house system, the contracting authority does not, from a functional point of view, contract with a separate body but, in effect, contracts with itself, given the nature of its connection with the formally separate body. Strictly speaking, there is no award of a contract, but simply an order or task, which the other “party” cannot refuse to undertake, whatever the name given to it’. (18)

46. Secondly, it also provides for ‘horizontal cooperation’, which is to say that which contracting authorities establish between themselves in the form of a contract aimed at ensuring that the public services for which they are responsible are provided with a view to achieving a common objective, within a framework guided only by the public interest and with due regard for free competition (Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24).

47. There is, of course, another type of inter-administrative relationship that falls outside the scope of Directive 2014/24, even though its enacting provisions do not expressly say as much, such as those arising from a transfer or delegation of competence, (19) including the creation of a consortium of entities having legal personality under public law. Such situations are regarded, in principle, as ‘fall[ing] outside the sphere of public procurement law’. (20)

48. Under a horizontal cooperation scheme, a contracting authority, which could meet its needs (in terms of goods, works or services) by resorting to private suppliers via a call for tender, chooses to dispense with that route and, instead, collaborates with another public body that is able to satisfy those needs.

49. From an objective point of view, this type of collaboration between public bodies is special in three ways: the form of cooperation that governs the inter partes relationship; the common purpose which that cooperation pursues; and the public interest objective by which the cooperation must be guided.

50. The collaboration usually entails contributions from all the parties, which are subsequently paid for from the public purse. The relationship between those parties, however, does not stop at the ‘quid pro quo’ which defines a synallagmatic contract and which, according to the Court’s case-law, characterises a public contract subject to the procurement directives. (21)

51. A legal transaction involving mutually enforceable acts of performance by all those party to it will be present in so far as the respective contributions of those parties are intended to achieve a shared ulterior objective. It is precisely that common goal, which must serve the public interest, that forms the reason for the contributions made.

2. Whether the relationship between Land Berlin and Stadt Köln is for pecuniary interest or free of charge

52. In order to determine whether the relationship between Stadt Köln and Land Berlin was governed by the rules of Directive 2014/24, account must be taken not only of the transfer contract (by which the software is made available to the former) but also of the cooperation agreement accompanying it. (22)

53. The parties themselves devised the relationship between them as a single unit, making it explicit in Article 5 of the cooperation agreement that the latter is inseparable from the software transfer contract. (23)

54. As I have already said, the referring court's doubts stem from the apparent lack of pecuniary interest in the relationship between Land Berlin and Stadt Köln.

55. Being of pecuniary interest is part of the definition of a 'public contract' given in Article 2(1)(5), of Directive 2014/24. It may also, in my opinion, be regarded as a characteristic component of the relationship between contracting authorities that is provided for in Article 12(4), which, as I have already explained, is not necessarily identical to the usual meaning of a 'public contract'.

56. As regards the meaning of pecuniary interest, I would recall that this has been the subject of extensive interpretation in the Court's case-law. (24)

57. In the relationship between Land Berlin and Stadt Köln, provision of the software is free of charge and fundamental to a scheme of cooperation aimed at developing and adapting that software to meet the management needs of the respective fire services.

58. As the referring court states, (25) the subsequent development of the software has an economic value which is potentially very high. (26) In the description of the facts, Stadt Köln states that the software is made available to it so that it can participate in the cooperation scheme. It has previously recognised that the fire-fighting services — which, according to its submissions at the hearing, it has a statutory obligation to provide — cannot feasibly be delivered without an optimum incident management system that must be continuously adapted to the operational requirements of the fire service, and for this, effective software is essential.

59. It is therefore reasonable to take the view, as the Commission maintains, that, even though the agreement does not lay down an obligation stricto sensu to develop the software, it would be unrealistic to assume that the software will not be developed and, if it is, that it will not be the subject of successive adaptations. As became apparent at the hearing, it is all but inevitable that the software will have to be updated, in the short term and subsequently. (27)

60. There is therefore a reasonable expectation that Stadt Köln will contribute developments and modular extensions of the software. This serves as consideration for the provision of the software by Land Berlin, otherwise, the transfer contract would not have been accompanied by a cooperation agreement.

61. In short, from the point of view of Stadt Köln, the consideration which makes it possible to speak of pecuniary interest in its relationship with Land Berlin is its participation in a cooperation scheme suitable for generating benefits for the latter in the form of adaptations of the software (Article 1 of the cooperation agreement) and additional specialised modules (Article 5 of that agreement). Those adaptations are bound to take place, at a given economic cost, because fire incident control centres cannot function without them.

62. The consideration is not therefore dependent on an optional condition; it is just a matter of time as to when it will materialise. We are therefore dealing not with the mere expression of an intention to cooperate but with an enforceable undertaking the discharge of which is a matter of when (when the update will take place) rather than if (if the update takes place).

63. It is true that the cooperation agreement provides for the possibility of software developments by both parties, and that, in theory, either of them could remain inactive and simply await contributions from the other. As I have already said, however, such a scenario is highly unlikely, inasmuch as it would have the effect of putting at risk the provision of the public service each party is responsible for delivering. That approach would render meaningless the very cooperation agreement the parties voluntarily entered into with each other.

64. In short, the contractual relationship between the contracting authorities which concluded an agreement on the transfer of the software in question and the conditions of their cooperation in developing that software is caught by Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24.

C. Second question referred for a preliminary ruling: subject matter of the cooperation

1. Issue

65. The public fire service which the cooperating entities in this case are responsible for providing is not delivered jointly: it cannot be, not least because of the geographical distance between the territories on which those entities are respectively active.

66. For that reason, the referring court is uncertain whether the cooperation in question is covered by Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 and asks whether, in order for that to be the case, '[it is] sufficient if the cooperation relates to activities that in some way serve the public services that are to be provided in the same way but do not necessarily have to be provided jointly'.

67. The answer calls for separate analyses of two matters: (a) the joint performance of the public service to which the cooperation relates; and (b) the 'public service' nature of the activity in which the cooperation occurs.

(a) Joint provision of the public service: from a 'common public service task' to 'common public interest objectives'

68. In accordance with the Court's case-law prior to Directive 2014/24, the viability of horizontal cooperation was conditional upon, inter alia, the requirement that the parties should perform a common public service task. The Court was not for that matter required to address the question whether that commonality extended to the actual provision of the service.

69. The model for horizontal cooperation which was excluded from the European public procurement rules was Case C-480/06, Commission v Germany, in which that cooperation, which took the form of actions and undertakings of a different nature and scale, effectively guaranteed the performance of a public service task which all of the contracting authorities were responsible for performing. That case concerned the disposal of waste, an activity in which all of those involved participated, inasmuch as they operated the facility for disposing of that waste.

70. The present issue was not the subject of special consideration in that judgment or in other, later judgments, in which the commonality of the public service task as a condition of its joint provision was lacking. (28)

71. Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 provides that, in order for intra-administrative cooperation to fall outside the scope of that directive, the contract must cover objectives which the participating contracting authorities have in common. Each of those authorities must provide the 'public services they have to perform' (29) 'with a view to achieving objectives they have in common'. The contract or agreement must specify the form of provision in order to ensure that this is the case. The wording of that directive shows that that commonality now extends to the objectives, not to a particular public service task.

72. The preparatory texts for the directive show that the legislature's intention was to take a more flexible approach to the subject matter of the cooperation. (30)

73. The proposal for a Commission directive still spoke of the 'joint performance of their [the contracting authorities'] public service tasks'. On its passage through the Council and the Parliament, the text received different forms of words until the current version was arrived at. The current recital 33 also went through a process of modification in tandem with the transition of the wording of the article and of the opening line itself.

74. The final negotiations saw the disappearance from Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 of the reference to the joint performance of tasks, although this still appears in the current recital 33. The reference to common objectives was introduced at the Parliament's suggestion, at the same time as the description of the concept of cooperation as including ‘common management and decision making and sharing of risks responsibilities and synergy effects’ was removed from the corresponding recital (then, recital 14). (31)

75. The statement in the first paragraph in fine of recital 33 to the effect that the public services provided by the cooperating entities do not have to be identical but can be complementary, confirms that the requirement of a common public service task has been dispensed with.

76. In that context, the reference to the joint provision of services, which appears a number of times in the same recital, probably means that the public services, whether identical or complementary, which are the responsibility of each of the contracting authorities must be performed ‘cooperatively’, which is to say by each entity with support from the other or in a coordinated fashion.

77. The foregoing may appear to be semantic niceties, but it is a feature of the law that the legal consequences attendant upon the choice of one set of terms or another may differ significantly. The important point, as I have said, is that the (new) rule refers to objectives that are common to the contracting authorities cooperating with each other.

(b) ‘Public service’ and ‘activities in support of a public service’

78. The second question referred for a preliminary ruling also calls for an analysis of the nature of the activity in which the contracting authorities cooperate: must that activity itself be a ‘public service’ (32) or can it be an ancillary activity, that is to say one in support of a public service? (33)

79. In the case-law prior to Directive 2014/24, the judgment in Commission v Germany threw some light on the type of activities suitable for the ‘public-public’ cooperation which is excluded from the public procurement rules. (34)

80. A reading of that judgment supported the inference that activities which were not in and of themselves public services, but which were directly related to the public service covered by the cooperation agreement between the contracting authorities, could be the subject matter of the cooperation.

81. The foregoing, however, does not answer the question whether the cooperation may relate exclusively to an activity which is not in and of itself a public service in a context such as that at issue in this dispute. I note that, in this case, the participating contracting authorities each provide the same public service (the fire service) on their own account and on a separate basis, while the cooperation is confined to an ancillary activity (the computerised management of the incident control centre).

82. So far as Directive 2014/24 is concerned, recital 33 points towards an affirmative answer to that question, inasmuch as it states that cooperation may cover ‘all types of activities related to the performance of services and responsibilities assigned to or assumed by the participating authorities […]’. (35) The legislative works again show that there was a desire to highlight this feature of cooperation, which had not appeared in the Commission’s original proposal. (36)

83. The flexibility which I have mentioned as being a characteristic of horizontal cooperation under Directive 2014/24, and which is significant by comparison with the previous legislative position, the Court’s previous case-law and the Commission’s proposal, bears out the correctness of that affirmative answer.

84. This does not mean, however, that horizontal cooperation on this basis is unlimited. It goes without saying that the requirement that such cooperation should be directed at the provision of public services which the parties are responsible for providing still stands. (37) Where the subject matter of the cooperation is not the public service itself but an activity ‘related’ to it, that relationship must be such that the activity is functionally steered towards the performance of the service.

85. The balance between the competing objectives present in this field, as discussed earlier, (38) also indicates that, for the purposes of analysing that relationship, a distinction should be drawn according to the extent to which the various activities in question are linked to the service the provision of which they contribute to. To my mind, Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 permits the acceptance of, inter alia, supporting activities which are immediately and inseparably linked to the public service, which is to say those that are of such fundamental importance that the service itself could not be performed as a public service without them.

86. The cooperation must also meet the other requirements laid down in Article 12(4) (with respect to the authorities providing the cooperation, the purpose of that cooperation and the principles by which it must be guided) which I highlighted earlier.

2. The cooperation between Land Berlin and Stadt Köln

87. As I have already said, the two contracting authorities in this case do not jointly perform the principal public service activity, that is to say the fire service. The objective of their cooperation, on the other hand, is to create and keep updated a software package that is essential to enabling each of them to ensure optimum management of the operations carried out by their respective fire services in their own geographical areas.

88. According to the description of the software and its updates contained in the documents before the Court, combined with the consistent submissions made in this regard at the hearing, the software was and is essential to the provision of that public service.

89. It follows that the cooperation between Land Berlin and Stadt Köln, inasmuch as it relates to an activity essential to the effective performance of a public service which both contracting authorities have to provide, satisfies the requirement laid down in Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24.

D. Third question referred for a preliminary ruling: placing third parties in a position of advantage

90. The agreement between Land Berlin and Stadt Köln faces other objections, based on the tension between horizontal cooperation and competition law. The referring court addresses these in its third question, when it asks whether Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 contains an implicit unwritten prohibition on placing a party in a position of advantage and, if it does, to what substantive effect.

1. Horizontal cooperation and competition law

91. The condition that no private operator be placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors as a result of horizontal cooperation is not expressly and separately laid down in Article 12 of Directive 2014/24. It was laid down, however, in the previous case-law. (39)

92. In order to look at whether, despite the lack of verbatim reference to it, that requirement subsists, I note that the Member States enjoy a broad margin of discretion in deciding whether to provide services themselves or to outsource them.

93. In the first of those two scenarios (self-supply, in a broad sense), provided that certain conditions should be met, the Member States are not required to follow the rules and procedures of EU public procurement law. They do, however, remain subject to other rules, (40) including those relating to free competition that are laid down in Article 106(2) TFEU.

94. For that reason, the second subparagraph of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 states, in a related context, that ‘the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition’.

95. Thus, the limitation imposed by the rules on free competition also affects horizontal cooperation between contracting authorities. It does this in at least two ways:

– First, it governs their relationship with private operators as a whole, in their capacity as competitors on the market.

– Secondly, it determines how public entities must act in order to ensure that their cooperation, if it also involves private operators in some way, does not distort competition between them.

96. Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 is intended to avoid any distortion of competition in the context referred to in the first indent above, when it requires that the collaboration should take place exclusively between contracting authorities. (41) At the same time, it also lays down a number of restrictions with the same aim in mind:

– The cooperation must be confined to the provision of public services which the participating contracting authorities have to perform, which is to say that it must not extend to its ordinary economic activities (point (a)).

– It must be guided exclusively by reasons in the public interest, not market-related reasons (point (b)).

– If the entities cooperating with each other are also active on the open market, they may not perform there more than 20% of the activities concerned by that cooperation.

97. It is not possible to take the view, as Stadt Köln attempts to do, that the obligation to have regard for free competition is confined to the situation where the contracting authorities compete on the market with private operators as a whole.

98. On the contrary, as I have already explained, the general duty not to distort competition is found in primary law (Article 106(2) TFEU) and, within the specific context of public procurement, in the second subparagraph of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24.

2. Contracting third parties

(a) General considerations

99. Recitals 31 and 33 of Directive 2014/24 confirm that cooperation between contracting authorities must not 'result in a distortion of competition' by placing a private provider of services in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors. (42) It is important to make the point that those recitals do not actually add any new normative material to the enacting terms of the directive; they simply serve as a guide to the interpretation of Article 12(4).

100. It follows that any conduct by the contracting authorities which distorted competition and placed a private provider of services at a disadvantage vis-à-vis its competitors would not comply with Directive 2014/24. 'Placing a party in a position of advantage', as referred to by the national court, inasmuch as it favours one private operator over others, is therefore prohibited.

101. Two not exactly equivalent situations may be presented in this regard:

– Horizontal cooperation in which one contracting authority makes available to another certain goods or services which the former itself acquired from a private operator without complying with the public procurement rules. In so far as those rules were applicable at that time (on account of the subject matter or value of the contract, and so on), the third party operator would suffer new and, as it were, twofold disadvantageous treatment on account of the failure to take those rules into account both the first time and subsequently.

– Horizontal cooperation requiring for its future development the participation of economic operators other than the contracting authorities. If any of those private operators were, in a discriminatory or arbitrary way, robbed of the opportunity to join the mechanism for the future supply of goods and services, those affected would be in a position of disadvantage.

102. In the second of those scenarios, in which a tendering process is initiated with a view to supplementing or continuing an inter-administrative cooperation scheme, there are no grounds on which it may be claimed that an individual is, in law or in fact, inevitably in a better position than his competitors to contribute to the tasks comprising that scheme.

(b) Contracting third parties for the purposes of the cooperation between the Land Berlin and Stadt Köln

103. The documents before the Court do not contain sufficient information to be able to say on what basis Land Berlin originally purchased the software package that it would later transfer to Stadt Köln. Neither is it entirely certain whether Land Berlin acquires new software modules, outside the context of its cooperation with Stadt Köln, on or off the market. (43) It will be for the referring court to verify these points of fact.

104. The future development of the cooperation scheme, on the other hand, appears to require the participation of third parties, and Stadt Köln has therefore published a notice of a (restricted) invitation to tender for a contract for the adaptation, deployment and maintenance of the software transferred by Land Berlin. (44)

105. The extensions and updates of the software transferred by Land Berlin to Stadt Köln for the purposes of cooperation are characterised by their high economic value. It is therefore logical that the interest of market operators (45) should be centred on the subsequent contracts for its adaptation, maintenance and development.

106. ISE argues that the technical complexity of those operations is such that nobody other than the manufacturer would be able to carry them out. If that were the case, the decision relating to the original purchase of the software might have a significant bearing on the award of the later public contracts, inasmuch as it might effectively block the participation of operators other than the software creator.

107. In those circumstances (which it is for the referring court to verify), the requirement not to place market operators in a position of advantage vis-à-vis their competitors (46) would call for special care to be taken when it comes to drawing up calls for tenders for subsequent services. In particular, all potentially interested parties would have to be provided with the information necessary to enable them to take part in such a process. (47)

108. This may nonetheless prove to be insufficient, which would indicate that the problem lies at an earlier point in time, that is to say when the software was first purchased. It is for the referring court to determine whether, for technical reasons, the original purchase gives rise to a situation of exclusivity that predetermines later procurement procedures, and, if that is the case, to establish the relevant measures for correcting the effects of that exclusivity. (48)

IV. Conclusion

109. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the answer to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany) should be as follows:

‘(1) Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that a transfer of software agreed in writing between two contracting authorities and linked to a cooperation agreement between those two authorities constitutes a “contract” within the meaning of the aforementioned provision.

That contractual relationship is for pecuniary interest even where the transferring entity does not have to pay a price or reimbursement costs for the software, if each of the parties (and, therefore, the transferee too) undertakes to make available to the other the future adaptations and developments of that software and these, being essential to the provision of a public service which both contracting authorities have to perform, will inevitably take place.

(2) Cooperation between the contracting authorities under Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 does not necessarily have to relate to the actual public services that have to be provided to citizens. Cooperation which relates to activities in support of those services will still be covered by Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24 in the case, inter alia, where the ancillary activity is of such fundamental importance to the public service that the latter could not be performed without it.

(3) Cooperation between public authorities which places a private operator in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors on the market cannot be covered by Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24’.

5 Described as ‘considerable’ in recital 31 of Directive 2014/24. That recital states that the relevant case-law ‘is interpreted differently between Member States and even between contracting authorities’.

6 A study conducted in 2014 found that, in Germany, the Kiel decisions are commonly understood to operate in practice as follows: where the principle of general reciprocity provided for in those decisions is applied to a unique form of cooperation, an essential component of a public contract as defined in the GWB is lacking. The absence of any consideration for the transfer of software supports the idea that such a transfer is free from the point of view of the GWB. Pursuant to the principle of general reciprocity, the recipient of the service does not specifically undertake to furnish pecuniary consideration; it has merely determined in the abstract to provide software developments free of charge in a comparable situation, if necessary (Gutachten: Evaluierung der Kieler Besschlüsse II, 20.08.2014, p. 106).

7 A similar scheme is provided for in Article 17 of Directive 2014/23 and in Article 28 of Directive 2014/25.

References to horizontal cooperation can be found in other judgments relating to vertical cooperation.

10 According to that recital, the clarification as to which contracts between public-sector entities fall outside the scope of Directive 2014/24 ‘should be guided by the principles set out in the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union’.

---

11 The discretion to decide whether or not to go to the market had been reiterated in the Court’s case-law concerning vertical cooperation: see the judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5), paragraph 48; the judgment of 13 November 2008, Coditel Brabant (C-324/07, EU:C:2008:621), paragraph 48; and, recently, the judgment of 3 October 2019, Irgita (C-285/18, EU:C:2019:829; ‘the judgment in Irgita’), paragraph 50 and paragraph 2 of the operative part. So far as concerns horizontal cooperation, see the judgment in Commission v Germany, paragraph 45.

12 The risks are similar to those which Directive 2014/24 identifies in connection with the aggregation and centralisation of purchases, which, according to recital 59 of that directive, 'should be carefully monitored in order to avoid excessive concentration of purchasing power and collusion, and to preserve transparency and competition, as well as market access opportunities for SMEs'.

---

13 Judgment in Irgita, paragraphs 48 and 50 and paragraph 2 of the operative part, by way of interpretation of 12(1) of Directive 2014/24.

---

14 This is the expression used in the first paragraph of Article 12(4) of Directive 2014/24.

---

15 See, in connection with vertical cooperation, the Opinion of Advocate General Hogan in Irgita (C-285/18, EU:C:2019:369), point 45. The same idea is expressed in the judgments of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5), paragraph 46; of 13 October 2005, Parking Brixen (C-458/03, EU:C:2005:605), paragraph 63; and of 11 May 2006, Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei (C-340/04, EU:C:2006:308), paragraph 45; and in the judgment in Datenlotsen, paragraph 23.

16 There are arguments to support the proposition that the term 'contract' has only one meaning: the title of Article 12 itself ('Public contracts between entities within the public sector'); the fact that that term is used at various points in Directive 2014/24 and in other directives as an abbreviated form for 'public contract'; the addition or otherwise of the adjective 'public' to qualify the noun 'contract' varies depending on which language version of the text is consulted: thus, it appears in Article 12 (in particular, paragraph 1 thereof) in some versions, such as German, French, English and Italian, but not in others, such as Spanish.

17 Article 11(4) of the proposal for a Directive of 20 December 2011, COM(2011) 896 final, used this form of words: 'An agreement concluded between two or more contracting authorities shall not be deemed to be a public contract within the meaning of Article 2(6) of this Directive' […]' (emphasis added).

18 Opinion in LitSpecMe (C-567/15, EU:C:2017:319), point 70.

19 On the conditions under which a transfer of competence relating to the performance of public functions falls outside the scope of the public procurement rules (contained, at that time, in Directive 2004/18), see the judgment of 21 December 2016, Remondis (C-51/15, EU:C:2016:985; 'judgment in Remondis'), paragraph 41 et seq..

---

20 Judgment in Remondis, paragraph 53.

---

21 Ibidem, paragraph 43.

---

22 See, by analogy, the judgment in Remondis, paragraph 37: 'For possible categorisation of a multi-stage operation as a public contract […], the operation must be examined as a whole, taking account of its purpose'.

---

23 That relationship could have been devised differently, as counsel for Stadt Köln stated at the hearing in reference to a software transfer contract between Land Berlin and the city of Hamburg which does not have a cooperation agreement attached to it.

24 Consiglio Nazionale order, paragraph 38; judgment in Remondis, paragraph 43; judgment of 18 October 2018, IBA Molecular Italy (C-606/17, EU:C:2018:843), paragraph 31. In her Opinion in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others (C-159/11, EU:C:2012:303), point 32, Advocate General Trstenjak stated that 'the view can be taken that only a broad understanding of the notion of "pecuniary interest" is consistent with the purpose of the procurement directives, which is to open up the markets to genuine competition', and made specific reference to other forms of remuneration such as swaps or the waiver of reciprocal claims existing between the contracting parties.

25 Paragraph 29 of the order for reference.

---

26 It may exceed that of the software itself. ISE mentioned this at the hearing, in the context of the third question referred for a preliminary ruling.

---

27 Counsel for Stadt Köln distinguished between major updates and other, more minor ones. The former must be carried out three or four times a year and take place following consultation of the other party (or parties) to the cooperation scheme in order, as far as possible, to take account of their requirements. The latter, involving the correction of minor errors, do not require consultation.

---

28 Judgment in ASL, paragraph 37. The Court's later rulings adhered to the case-law established in the judgment in ASL in cases which were almost identical as regards the nature of the parties concerned and the substantive issue raised: see order of 16 May 2013, Consulta Regionale Ordine Ingegneri della Lombardia (C-564/11, not published, EU:C:2013:307), and Consiglio Nazionale order. That case-law was also applied to other fields in the judgments in Piepenbrock, paragraph 39, and Datenlotsen, paragraph 35.

29 In my opinion, the requirement that the contracting authorities have to perform the service in question means that they were responsible for providing it before they concluded the cooperation agreement. That expression could also include a public service to be provided as part of a specific cooperation scheme.

---

30 That flexibility is also in evidence in relation to the persons providing the cooperation: see recital 32, on horizontal cooperation between contracting authorities in which there is private capital participation. Article 11(4)(e) of the Commission's proposal, on the other hand, ruled out that possibility.

---

31 See the note from the Council of the European Union of 26 June 2013, number 11644/13.

---

32 I note that Article 12(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 expressly refers to the 'public services they [the contracting authorities] have to perform'. This category of service is mentioned only in Article 93 TFEU. To a large extent, its equivalent is the 'service of general interest' (SGI), which may or may not have economic content. The freedom of the Member States to define, organise and finance services of general economic interest (SGEI) is dealt with in Article 1(4) of Directive 2014/24, which in turn refers to Article 14 TFEU and Protocol No 26 annexed to the TFEU and the TEU. See, in that regard, the Opinion of Advocate General Hogan in Engie Cartagena (C-523/18, EU:C:2019:769).

33 Directive 2014/24 does not specify the priority, status or nature (principal or auxiliary; compulsory or optional; economic or otherwise) of the public services to which horizontal cooperation may relate. Recital 33 suggests that there is much flexibility in this regard. It is therefore safe to say that cooperation is not confined to activities which serve a core (principal) function of the contracting authority, as appeared to follow from the judgment in ASL, first sentence of paragraph 37.

34 In that case, one of the contributions was the provision of facilities for the recovery of waste collected by the participants in the geographical area for which they were each responsible. Another field of cooperation was the provision of surplus capacity: waste disposal capacity unused by one party could offset another party's lack of disposal capacity. A further contribution consisted in an undertaking by the street cleaning service of one of the contracting authorities to defend the rights of the other services against the facility operator in the event that the latter caused loss or damage to the former.

35 Emphasis added.

---

36 See, by way of comparison, interinstitutional document number 12167/13.

---

37 In its previous case-law, the Court had held as follows in the judgment in Datenlotsen, paragraph 16 (by reference from paragraph 34): '… neither the University nor HIS are public authorities, and HIS is not entrusted directly with the performance of a public service task'.

---

38 Point 29 et seq. above: the desire not to interfere in the Member States' organisation of their internal administration must be reconciled with the requirement that exclusion from the scope of EU law does not give rise to an infringement of the principles of public procurement and free competition.

---

39 Judgments in Commission v Germany, paragraph 47; ASL, paragraphs 35, 38 and the operative part; Consegli Nazionale order paragraph 44 and the operative part.

---

40 Points 30 to 35 above.

---

41 Although, in line with the in-house cooperation scheme, Directive 2014/24 does allow some private capital participation in public entities; see footnote 30 above.

---

42 There are of course other conceivable forms of distortion, as, for example, if the acquisition of the software and the successive maintenance or add-on operations were made the subject of individual contracts as a way of avoiding a single contract the value of which would exceed the threshold beyond which public procurement is compulsory. See the judgment of 18 January 2007, Auroux and Others (C-220/05, EU:C:2007:31), paragraph 67; and the judgment in Commission v Germany, in which the Court says that the authorities in question were 'contriving to circumvent the rules on public procurement' (paragraph 48).

43 At the hearing, counsel for ISE stated that, in July 2018, Land Berlin had published a notice of an invitation to tender for a contract for the development of that software worth EUR 3 500 000.

---

44 At the hearing, it was stated that the notice (reference number: 2019-0040-37-3) was published in OJ 2019/S 160-394603 and that the economic value of the call for tenders is EUR 2 000 000.

---

45 At the hearing, counsel for ISE stated that the economic interest lay not in the acquisition of the base software, or in its sale, but in the subsequent operations of adapting, maintaining and developing the program.

---

46 Together with the objective of awarding the contract to the supplier submitting the economically most advantageous tender.

---

47 At the hearing, it was debated whether it was sufficient to indicate in later calls for tender that the successful tenderer would have access to the software source code. Stadt Köln emphasised that this was what it had done, although ISE contended that this step would not be sufficient, given the practical difficulties associated with developing adaptations from the base program in a risk-free way.

48 The possibility that the purchase of the original software would give rise to a blocking effect should, ideally, have been assessed at the time when it was purchased. Otherwise, at the current juncture, such an assessment would not be possible, and any remedies could only be palliative. At the hearing, the Commission suggested that the software manufacturer be asked to give an undertaking to cooperate with the suppliers having successfully tendered to provide subsequent services.

Le cadre juridique

3 Le considérant 101 de la directive 2014/24 énonce :

Compte tenu du fait qu'ils seront responsables des conséquences d'une éventuelle décision erronée de leur part, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs devraient également avoir la faculté de considérer qu'il y a eu faute professionnelle grave lorsque, avant qu'une décision finale et contraignante quant à l'existence de motifs d'exclusion obligatoires ne soit prise, ils peuvent démontrer, par tout moyen approprié, que l'opérateur économique a manqué à ses obligations, y compris ses obligations relatives au paiement d'impôts et taxes ou de cotisations de sécurité sociale, sauf disposition contraire du droit national. Ils devraient également pouvoir exclure des candidats ou des soumissionnaires lorsque des défaillances importantes dans l'exécution d'obligations essentielles ont été constatées lors de l'exécution de marchés publics antérieurs, par exemple un défaut de fourniture ou d'exécution, des carences notables du produit ou du service fourni qui le rendent impropre aux fins prévues, ou un comportement fautif jetant sérieusement le doute quant à la fiabilité de l'opérateur économique. La législation nationale devrait prévoir une durée maximale pour ces exclusions.

Lorsqu'ils appliquent des motifs facultatifs d'exclusion, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs devraient accorder une attention particulière au principe de proportionnalité. Des irrégularités mineures ne devraient entraîner l'exclusion d'un opérateur économique que dans des circonstances exceptionnelles. Toutefois, des cas répétés d'irrégularités mineures peuvent susciter des doutes quant à la fiabilité d'un opérateur économique, ce qui pourrait justifier son exclusion. »

4 L'article 57 de cette directive, intitulé « Motifs d'exclusion », dispose :

4. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent exclure ou être obligés par les États membres à exclure tout opérateur économique de la participation à une procédure de passation de marché dans l'un des cas suivants :

[...]

c) le pouvoir adjudicateur peut démontrer par tout moyen approprié que l'opérateur économique a commis une faute professionnelle grave qui remet en cause son intégrité ;

[...]

g) des défaillances importantes ou persistantes de l'opérateur économique ont été constatées lors de l'exécution d'une obligation essentielle qui lui incombait dans le cadre d'un marché public antérieur, d'un marché antérieur passé avec une entité adjudicatrice ou d'une concession antérieure, lorsque ces défaillances ont donné lieu à la résiliation dudit marché ou de la concession, à des dommages et intérêts ou à une autre sanction comparable ;

6. Tout opérateur économique qui se trouve dans l'une des situations visées aux paragraphes 1 et 4 peut fournir des preuves afin d'attester que les mesures qu'il a prises suffisent à démontrer sa fiabilité malgré l'existence d'un motif d'exclusion pertinent. Si ces preuves sont jugées suffisantes, l'opérateur économique concerné n'est pas exclu de la procédure de passation de marché.

À cette fin, l'opérateur économique prouve qu'il a versé ou entrepris de verser une indemnité en réparation de tout préjudice causé par l'infraction pénale ou la faute, clarifié totalement les faits et circonstances en collaborant activement avec les autorités chargées de l'enquête et pris des mesures concrètes de nature technique et organisationnelle et en matière de personnel propres à prévenir une nouvelle infraction pénale ou une nouvelle faute.

Les mesures prises par les opérateurs économiques sont évaluées en tenant compte de la gravité de l'infraction pénale ou de la faute ainsi que de ses circonstances particulières. Lorsque les mesures sont jugées insuffisantes, la motivation de la décision concernée est transmise à l'opérateur économique.

Un opérateur économique qui a été exclu par un jugement définitif de la participation à des procédures de passation de marché ou d'attribution de concession n'est pas autorisé à faire usage de la possibilité prévue au présent paragraphe pendant la période d'exclusion fixée par ledit jugement dans les États membres où le jugement produit ses effets.

7. Par disposition législative, réglementaire ou administrative et dans le respect du droit de l'Union, les États membres arrêtent les conditions d'application du présent article. Ils déterminent notamment la durée maximale de la période d'exclusion si aucune des mesures visées au paragraphe 6 n'a été prise par l'opérateur économique pour démontrer sa fiabilité. Lorsque la durée de la période d'exclusion n'a pas été fixée par jugement définitif, elle ne peut dépasser cinq ans à compter de la date de la condamnation par jugement définitif dans les cas visés au paragraphe 1 et trois ans à compter de la date de l'événement concerné dans les cas visés au paragraphe 4. »

5 L'article 80, paragraphe 5, sous c), du decreto legislativo n. 50 Codice dei contratti pubblici (décret législatif n° 50, portant code des contrats publics), du 18 avril 2016 (supplément ordinaire à la GURI n° 91, du 19 avril 2016, ci-après le « code des contrats publics »), dispose qu'un opérateur économique peut être exclu d'une procédure d'appel d'offres notamment lorsque :

« les pouvoirs adjudicateurs démontrent, par des moyens appropriés, que l'opérateur économique s'est rendu coupable de fautes professionnelles graves, de nature à mettre en doute son intégrité ou sa fiabilité. Font partie des fautes professionnelles graves, les défaillances importantes dans l'exécution d'un contrat de marché public antérieur ou d'une concession antérieure lorsque ces défaillances ont donné lieu à leur résiliation anticipée, non contestée en justice ou confirmée à l'issue d'une procédure juridictionnelle, à des dommages et intérêts ou à une autre sanction comparable [...] »

Le litige au principal et la question préjudicielle

6 Par un avis publié le 21 février 2017, la préfecture de Tarente a lancé un appel d'offres ouvert pour la conclusion d'un contrat-cadre pour le service d'accueil temporaire de ressortissants étrangers demandeurs de protection internationale, pour la période allant du 1er mai 2017 au 31 décembre 2017.

7 À la suite de l'évaluation des offres techniques et économiques qui lui ont été soumises, la commission d'appel d'offres a adjugé provisoirement le marché de services en question à Indaco Service, qui était classée à la quatorzième position au classement provisoire.

8 Pendant le déroulement de cette procédure d'appel d'offres, la préfecture de Tarente a, cependant, résilié, par un décret du 26 juin 2017 (ci-après le « décret de résiliation »), un contrat conclu avec Indaco Service le 19 décembre 2016 et portant sur un service d'accueil de ressortissants étrangers demandeurs de protection internationale. La préfecture de Tarente a en effet considéré que le comportement d'Indaco Service constituait un manquement contractuel grave qui ne permettait pas le maintien de la nécessaire relation de confiance dans la collaboration avec l'administration concernée.

9 Le 13 juillet 2017, Indaco Service a demandé à la préfecture de Tarente l'accès au dossier administratif, ainsi que la copie des actes relatifs à la résiliation du contrat afin d'apprécier la légalité des pénalités qui lui ont été infligées par cette préfecture et, partant, la possibilité de former un recours juridictionnel contre le décret de résiliation.

10 Par une note du 13 juillet 2017 (ci-après la « décision d'exclusion »), publiée sur son site Internet le 17 juillet 2017, la préfecture de Tarente a exclu Indaco Service de la procédure d'appel d'offres en cause au principal en se référant au décret de résiliation et a, en conséquence, attribué, de manière définitive, le marché de services en question à d'autres opérateurs.

11 Indaco Service a alors saisi le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia (tribunal administratif régional des Pouilles, Italie) d'un recours en annulation de la décision d'exclusion.

14 Par ailleurs, l'article 329 du code de procédure civile régirait l'acquiescement de manière telle que celui-ci peut se produire par la « renonciation expresse à une voie de recours » contre l'acte faisant grief ou par un comportement implicite clairement incompatible avec la volonté de contester la légalité de l'acte en justice. L'acquiescement ne pourrait donc être constaté que dans le cas où le destinataire d'un acte a clairement la volonté d'en accepter les effets.

15 Or, en l'occurrence, Indaco Service n'aurait pas acquiescé au décret de résiliation. Sa demande d'accès au dossier administratif en témoignerait, celle-ci ayant vocation à lui permettre d'apprécier la possibilité de former un recours à l'encontre de ce décret. Indaco Service ajoute que les délais impartis pour attaquer ou contester en justice cet acte n'avaient pas encore expiré. Enfin, la préfecture de Tarente n'aurait produit les documents relatifs au décret de résiliation que le 9 août 2017, de sorte qu'Indaco Service n'aurait pas pu intenter une action en justice avant cette date ou, en tout état de cause, avant la publication de la décision d'exclusion sur le site Internet de cette préfecture, le 17 juillet 2017.

17 Par décision du 25 septembre 2018, le président de la Cour a décidé de suspendre l'examen de la présente affaire dans l'attente du prononcé de l'arrêt du 19 juin 2019, Meca (C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507).

Sur la question préjudicielle

19 Il y a lieu de faire application de cette disposition dans le cadre de la présente affaire.

20 Par sa question, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 57, paragraphe 4, sous c) et g), de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il s'oppose à une réglementation nationale en vertu de laquelle l'introduction d'un recours juridictionnel contre une décision de résilier un contrat de marché public prise par un pouvoir adjudicateur en raison d'une « faute professionnelle grave », survenue lors de l'exécution de ce contrat, empêche le pouvoir adjudicateur qui lance un nouvel appel d'offres d'exclure un opérateur, au stade de la sélection des soumissionnaires, sur la base d'une appréciation de la fiabilité de cet opérateur.

23 Cela étant, ainsi que la Cour l'a jugé dans l'arrêt du 19 juin 2019, Meca (C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, point 33), le pouvoir d'appréciation des États membres n'est pas absolu de telle sorte que, une fois qu'un État membre décide d'intégrer une des causes facultatives d'exclusion prévues par la directive 2014/24, il doit en respecter les caractéristiques essentielles, telles qu'elles y sont exprimées. En spécifiant que les États membres arrêtent « les conditions d'application du présent article » « dans le respect du droit de l'Union », l'article 57, paragraphe 7, de la directive 2014/24 empêche que les États membres dénaturent les causes facultatives d'exclusion établies à cette disposition ou ignorent les objectifs ou les principes qui inspirent chacune de ces causes.

24 Il ressort en effet du libellé de l'article 57, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 que le législateur de l'Union a entendu confier au pouvoir adjudicateur, et à lui seul, et non pas à une juridiction nationale, le soin d'apprécier, au stade de la sélection des soumissionnaires, si un candidat ou un soumissionnaire doit être exclu d'une procédure de passation de marché (arrêt du 19 juin 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, points 28 et 34).

25 Dans ces conditions, il est manifeste qu'une disposition nationale telle que l'article 80, paragraphe 5, sous c), du code des contrats publics n'est pas de nature à préserver l'effet utile de la cause facultative d'exclusion prévue à l'article 57, paragraphe 4, sous c) ou g), de la directive 2014/24 (arrêt du 19 juin 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, point 37).

26 En effet, le pouvoir d'appréciation que l'article 57, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2014/24 confère au pouvoir adjudicateur est paralysé du seul fait de l'introduction par un candidat ou un soumissionnaire d'un recours dirigé contre la résiliation d'un précédent contrat de marché public dont il était signataire, alors même que son comportement a paru suffisamment déficient pour justifier cette résiliation (arrêt du 19 juin 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, point 38).

27 En outre, une règle telle que celle énoncée à l'article 80, paragraphe 5, sous c), du code des contrats publics n'incite manifestement pas un adjudicataire visé par une décision de résiliation d'un précédent contrat de marché public à adopter des mesures correctives alors même que ces mesures soulignent l'importance qui est attachée à la fiabilité de l'opérateur économique, cette fiabilité influençant profondément les causes d'exclusion relatives aux caractéristiques subjectives du soumissionnaire. Dans cette mesure, une telle règle est susceptible de heurter les prescriptions de l'article 57, paragraphe 6, de la directive 2014/24 (arrêt du 19 juin 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, points 40 et 41).

28 Compte tenu de l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent, il y a lieu de répondre à la question posée que l'article 57, paragraphe 4, sous c) et g), de la directive 2014/24 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il s'oppose à une réglementation nationale en vertu de laquelle l'introduction d'un recours juridictionnel contre une décision de résilier un contrat de marché public prise par un pouvoir adjudicateur en raison d'une « faute professionnelle grave », survenue lors de l'exécution de ce contrat, empêche le pouvoir adjudicateur qui lance un nouvel appel d'offres d'exclure un opérateur, au stade de la sélection des soumissionnaires, sur la base d'une appréciation de la fiabilité de cet opérateur.

Sur les dépens

29 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens. Les frais exposés pour soumettre des observations à la Cour, autres que ceux desdites parties, ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un remboursement.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (neuvième chambre) dit pour droit :

L'article 57, paragraphe 4, sous c) et g), de la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE, doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il s'oppose à une réglementation nationale en vertu de laquelle l'introduction d'un recours juridictionnel contre une décision de résilier un contrat de marché public prise par un pouvoir adjudicateur en raison d'une « faute professionnelle grave », survenue lors de l'exécution de ce contrat, empêche le pouvoir adjudicateur qui lance un nouvel appel d'offres d'exclure un opérateur, au stade de la sélection des soumissionnaires, sur la base d'une appréciation de la fiabilité de cet opérateur.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of recitals 21 and 46 and Article 16 of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1), Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65) and Article 3(4), Article 4(1) and (2) and Article 13 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between, of the one part, Pegaso Srl Servizi Fiduciari, Sistemi di Sicurezza Srl and YW (together 'Pegaso') and, of the other, Poste Tutela SpA and Poste Italiane SpA, concerning the legality of a contract notice for the award, in an open procedure, of caretaking, reception and access control services for the premises of Poste Italiane and of other companies in its group.

Legal context

Directive 2004/17/EC

3 Article 6 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), entitled 'Postal services', provided in paragraph 1 thereof:

'This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision of postal services or, on the conditions set out in paragraph 2(c), other services than postal services.'

4 Recitals 21 and 46 of Directive 2014/23 state:

'(21) The notion of "bodies governed by public law" has been examined repeatedly in the case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union. A number of clarifications are key to the full understanding of this concept. It should therefore be clarified that a body which operates in normal market conditions, aims to make a profit, and bears the losses resulting from the exercise of its activity should not be considered to be a "body governed by public law", since the needs in the general interest, that it has been set up to meet or been given the task of meeting, can be deemed to have an industrial or commercial character. Similarly, the condition relating to the origin of the funding of the body considered, has also been examined by the Court, which has clarified that financed for "the most part" means for more than half and that such financing may include payments from users which are imposed, calculated and collected in accordance with rules of public law.

(46) Concessions awarded to controlled legal persons should not be subject to the application of the procedures provided for by this Directive if the contracting authority or contracting entity as referred to point (a) of Article 7(1) exercises a control over the legal person concerned which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments provided that the controlled legal person carries out more than 80% of its activities in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or contracting entity or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority or contracting entity, regardless of the beneficiary of the contract performance. …’

5 Article 6 of that directive, entitled ‘Contracting authorities’, states, in paragraph 4 thereof:

‘“Bodies governed by public law” means bodies that have all of the following characteristics:

(a) they are established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) they have legal personality; and

(c) they are financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law; or are subject to management supervision by those bodies or authorities; or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.’

6 Article 16 of Directive 2014/23, entitled, ‘Exclusion of activities which are directly exposed to competition’, provides:

‘This Directive shall not apply to concessions awarded by contracting entities where, for the Member State in which such concessions are to be performed, it has been established pursuant to Article 35 of Directive 2014/25/EU that the activity is directly exposed to competition in accordance with Article 34 of that Directive.’

7 The definition of the concept of ‘bodies governed by public law’ in Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24 corresponds to that in Article 6(4) of Directive 2014/23.

Directive 2014/25

8 The definition of the concept of ‘bodies governed by public law’ in Article 3(4) of Directive 2014/25 also corresponds to that in Article 6(4) of Directive 2014/23.

9 Article 4(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/25 is worded as follows:

‘1. For the purpose of this Directive contracting entities are entities, which:

(a) are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14;

(b) when they are not contracting authorities or public undertakings, have as one of their activities any of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14, or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State.

2. “Public undertaking” means any undertaking over which the contracting authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it.

A dominant influence on the part of the contracting authorities shall be presumed in any of the following cases in which those authorities, directly or indirectly:

(a) hold the majority of the undertaking’s subscribed capital;

(b) control the majority of the votes attaching to shares issued by the undertaking;

(c) can appoint more than half of the undertaking’s administrative, management or supervisory body.’

10 Article 6(1) and (2) of that directive provides:

‘1. In the case of contracts intended to cover several activities, contracting entities may choose to award separate contracts for the purposes of each separate activity or to award a single contract. Where contracting entities choose to award separate contracts, the decision as to which rules apply to any one of such separate contracts shall be taken on the basis of the characteristics of the separate activity concerned.

Notwithstanding Article 5, where contracting entities choose to award a single contract, paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Article shall apply. However, where one of the activities concerned is covered by Article 346 TFEU or Directive 2009/81/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 July 2009 on the coordination of procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts by contracting authorities or entities in the fields of defence and security, and amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (OJ 2009 L 216, p. 76)], Article 26 of this Directive shall apply.

The choice between awarding a single contract or awarding a number of separate contracts shall not, however, be made with the objective of excluding the contract or contracts from the scope of application either of this Directive or, where applicable, Directive 2014/24/EU or Directive 2014/23/EU.

2. A contract which is intended to cover several activities shall be subject to the rules applicable to the activity for which it is principally intended.’

11 Articles 8 to 14 of Directive 2014/25 list the activities to which that directive applies. Those activities are gas and heat (Article 8), electricity (Article 9), water (Article 10), transport services (Article 11), ports and airports (Article 12), postal services (Article 13) and the extraction of oil and gas and exploration for, or extraction of, coal or other solid fuels (Article 14).

12 Article 13 of that directive is worded as follows:

‘1. This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision of:

(a) postal services;

(b) other services than postal services, on condition that such services are provided by an entity which also provides postal services within the meaning of point (b) of paragraph 2 of this Article and provided that the conditions set out in Article 34(1) are not satisfied in respect of the services falling within point (b) of paragraph 2 of this Article.

2. For the purpose of this Article and without prejudice to Directive 97/67/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 15 December 1997 on common rules for the development of the internal market of Community postal services and the improvement of quality of service (OJ 1998 L 15, p. 14)]:

(a) “postal item” means an item addressed in the final form in which it is to be carried, irrespective of weight. In addition to items of correspondence, such items also include for instance books, catalogues, newspapers, periodicals and postal packages containing merchandise with or without commercial value, irrespective of weight;

(b) “postal services” means services consisting of the clearance, sorting, routing and delivery of postal items. This shall include both services falling within as well as services falling outside the scope of the universal service set up in conformity with Directive 97/67/EC;

(c) “other services than postal services” means services provided in the following areas:

(i) mail service management services (services both preceding and subsequent to despatch, including mailroom management services);

(ii) services concerning postal items not included in point (a), such as direct mail bearing no address.’

13 Article 19(1) of Directive 2014/25 provides:

‘This Directive shall not apply to contracts which the contracting entities award for purposes other than the pursuit of their activities as described in Articles 8 to 14 or for the pursuit of such activities in a third country, in conditions not involving the physical use of a network or geographical area within the Union nor shall it apply to design contests organised for such purposes.’

14 Decreto legislativo n. 50 – Attuazione delle direttive 2014/23/UE, 2014/24/UE e 2014/25/UE sull’aggiudicazione dei contratti di concessione, sugli appalti pubblici e sulle procedure d’appalto degli enti erogatori nei settori dell’acqua, dell’energia, dei trasporti e dei servizi postali, nonché per il riordino della disciplina vigente in materia di contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture (Legislative Decree No 50, implementing Directive 2014/23/EU on the award of concession contracts, Directive 2014/24/EU on public procurement and Directive 2014/25/EU on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, and reforming the existing provisions in relation to public works, service and supply contracts) of 18 April 2016 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016) established the Codice dei contratti pubblici (Public Procurement Code).

15 Article 3(1)(d) of that code defines the concept of ‘bodies governed by public law’, within the meaning of that code, in the same terms as that concept is defined in Article 6(4) of Directive 2014/23, Article 2(1)(4) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 3(4) of Directive 2014/25.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16 By notice published on 29 July 2017 in the Official Journal of the European Union, Poste Tutela, 100% owned at the time by Poste Italiane, launched an open tendering procedure with a view to establishing framework agreements for caretaking, reception and access control services for the premises of Poste Italiane and of other companies in its group, subdivided territorially into seven cumulative lots, for a period of 24 months (with a further 12 months, in the event of contract renewal), for a total estimated amount of EUR 25 253 242. The contract notice indicated Directive 2014/25 as the ‘legal basis’.

17 Taking the view that the contract notice was contrary to certain provisions of the Public Procurement Code, Pegaso brought an action before the referring court, which, by interim order of 20 October 2017, suspended the tendering procedure.

18 Before that court, Poste Italiane, with which Poste Tutela merged with effect from 1 March 2018, argued that the action was inadmissible on the ground that the administrative courts had no jurisdiction to hear it. Poste Italiane explains that, while, at the date on which the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings was published, Poste Tutela took the form of a public undertaking, the services concerned by that contract notice did not come under one of the special sectors covered by Directive 2014/25. It adds that that point of view was upheld in an order of the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation, Italy) of 1 October 2018, which found that the ordinary courts have jurisdiction in respect of public contracts concluded by Poste Italiane, even though it has the status of a public undertaking, where those contracts concern activities unconnected with those covered by the special sector concerned.

19 In any event, Poste Italiane submits that the subject matter of the dispute has ceased to exist, since the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings was withdrawn after the present request for a preliminary ruling was made.

20 Pegaso, for its part, disputes the plea of lack of jurisdiction raised by Poste Italiane. It maintains that it is necessary to include among the services covered by the special sectors not only the services directly referred to in the applicable legislation, such as postal services, but also complementary and ancillary services, the purpose of which is to ensure that the postal services are actually provided.

21 The referring court considers that it is necessary, at the outset, to resolve the question whether the case in the main proceedings falls within the jurisdiction of the administrative courts or the ordinary courts. To that end, it is essential to determine whether Poste Tutela, now Poste Italiane, was under the obligation to initiate a tendering procedure with a view to awarding the services at issue in the main proceedings. On that point, the referring court considers that Poste Italiane possessed all the characteristics necessary to be classified as a body governed by public law, within the meaning of Article 3(1)(d) of the Public Procurement Code and Directives 2014/23, 2014/24 and 2014/25. However, it also notes that the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) reached a different conclusion, in the order mentioned in paragraph 18 above, emphasising in particular that Poste Italiane is now essentially driven by industrial and commercial requirements.

22 In those circumstances the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Should the company Poste Italiane, on the basis of characteristics set out above, be classified as a “body governed by public law” within the meaning of Article 3(1)(d) of [the Public Procurement Code] and of the relevant EU directives (2014/23, 2014/24 and 2014/25)?

(2) Should that classification be extended to include the wholly owned subsidiary company [Poste Tutela] – whose merger with Poste Italiane is already under way – bearing in mind what is stated in recital 46 of Directive 2014/23 concerning controlled legal persons? (See, also, to that effect, judgment of 5 October 2017[, LitSpecMet (C-567/15, EU:C:2017:736)]: competitive tendering requirement for companies controlled by public authorities; judgment No 6211 of the Consiglio di Stato [(Council of State, Italy)], Chamber VI, of 24 November 2011).

(3) Are those companies, as contracting entities, required to conduct competitive tendering procedures only when awarding contracts in connection with activities carried out in the special sectors, pursuant to Directive 2014/25 – such contracting entities having to be deemed bodies governed by public law under the rules laid down in Part II of the Public Procurement Code – whilst, on the other hand, having unfettered freedom and being subject only to private-sector rules for contracts not connected to such sectors, bearing in mind the principles set out in recital 21 and Article 16 of Directive 2014/23?

(4) On the other hand, with regard to contracts considered not to be directly connected with the specific activities covered by the special sectors, are those companies, where they satisfy the requirements for being classified as bodies governed by public law, subject to the general Directive 2014/24 (and therefore to the rules governing competitive tendering procedures), even when performing primarily entrepreneurial activities under competitive market conditions, having developed from when they were originally established?

(5) In any event, in the case of offices in which activities connected to the universal service and activities unrelated to it are both performed, may the concept of functionality, in connection with a service which is specifically in the public interest, be said to be inapplicable as regards contracts relating to ordinary and extraordinary maintenance, cleaning, furnishing, caretaking and storage services for such offices?

(6) Finally, were the arguments of Poste Italiane to be endorsed, should the fact that a decision to organise a competitive tendering procedure has been taken without there being any obligation to conduct such a procedure – which is not subject to all the guarantees of transparency and equal treatment, as governed by the Public Procurement Code – and the fact that the decision is duly published without any further notice in that regard in the Gazzetta Ufficiale della Repubblica italiana (Official Journal of the Italian Republic) and the Official Journal of the European Union, be regarded as incompatible with the established principle that the legitimate expectations of tenderers must be protected?’

23 After the Court was informed by Poste Italiane that the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings had been annulled, the Court asked the referring court whether it wished to withdraw its request for a preliminary ruling. On 26 October 2018, the referring court informed the Court that it was maintaining its request for a preliminary ruling.

24 In response to a request from the Court to explain the grounds on which it considered that the dispute at issue in the main proceedings was still pending before it, the referring court provided clarification in that regard on 18 March 2019.

Admissibility

25 Poste Italiane and the Italian Government contend that the request for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible, arguing that the subject matter of the dispute in which the request was made has ceased to exist, since the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings was withdrawn after the action was brought before the referring court.

26 In that regard, it must be borne in mind that, in accordance with the Court's settled case-law, in the context of the cooperation between the Court and the national courts provided for in Article 267 TFEU, it is solely for the national court before which a dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where the questions submitted concern the interpretation or the validity of a rule of EU law, the Court is in principle bound to give a ruling (judgment of 1 October 2019, Blaise and Others, C-616/17, EU:C:2019:800, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited).

27 It follows that questions relating to EU law enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to give a ruling on a question referred by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation, or the determination of validity, of a rule of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (judgment of 1 October 2019, Blaise and Others, C-616/17, EU:C:2019:800, paragraph 35 and the case-law cited)

28 In the present case, it is common ground that, following the merger by incorporation of Poste Tutela into Poste Italiane, Poste Italiane had its decision 'to annul/revoke' the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings published in the Official Journal of the European Union (S series, of 29 September 2018) and that, as confirmed by the referring court to the Court of Justice on 18 March 2019, Poste Italiane had published in the Official Journal of the European Union (S series, of 19 January 2019) a new contract notice concerning caretaking, reception and access control services for the premises of Poste Italiane and of the other companies in its group. Moreover, Pegaso does not deny that the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings was withdrawn, even though it argues that the referring court is still required to rule on the substance of dispute in the main proceedings, in particular on whether that contract notice was lawful, both for the purposes of a possible claim for compensation and for the purposes of costs.

29 In those circumstances, it must be found that, notwithstanding the initial doubts of the referring court in that regard, the subject matter of the dispute in the main proceedings has indeed ceased to exist.

30 However, the referring court considers that, in order to be able to determine what action is to be taken on the application brought before it, it must first settle the question whether it has jurisdiction to hear the case. It states that that would be the case if the contract at issue in the main proceedings were governed by one of the European Union's public procurement directives.

31 Consequently, the request for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

Consideration of the questions referred

The third and fifth questions

32 By its third and fifth questions, which it is appropriate to examine together at the outset, the referring court seeks, in essence, to ascertain whether Article 13(1) of Directive 2014/25 must be interpreted as applying to activities consisting in the provision of caretaking, reception and access control services for the premises of postal service providers, such as Poste Italiane and other companies in its group.

33 As a preliminary point, it must be stated, first, that Directive 2014/25 repealed and replaced Directive 2004/17. In that regard, as regards the provisions of Directive 2014/25 having essentially the same scope as the relevant provisions of Directive 2004/17, the Court's case-law on Directive 2004/17 is also applicable to Directive 2014/25.

34 Secondly, it is common ground between the parties that Poste Tutela and Poste Italiane have the status of 'public undertakings' within the meaning of Article 4(2) of Directive 2014/25 and therefore, as contracting entities, fall within the scope ratione personae of that directive. Consequently, there is no need to examine whether those undertakings also constitute a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 3(4) of that directive.

35 According to Article 13(1) of Directive 2014/25, that directive is to apply to activities relating to the provision, first, of postal services and, secondly, services other than postal services, on condition that those other services are provided by an entity which also provides postal services. The concepts 'postal services' and 'other services than postal services' are defined in Article 13(2)(b) and (c) of that directive as referring, respectively, to (i) services consisting in the clearance, sorting, routing and delivery of postal items and (ii) mail service management services and services concerning items other than postal items, such as direct mail bearing no address.

36 In addition, Article 19(1) of Directive 2014/25 states, in particular, that that directive is not to apply to contracts which the contracting entities award for purposes other than the pursuit of their activities as described in Articles 8 to 14 of that directive.

37 In that regard, the Court has held that Directive 2004/17 in fact applied not only to contracts awarded in the sphere of one of the activities expressly listed in Articles 3 to 7 thereof, but also to contracts which, even though they were different in nature and could as such normally fall within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), were used in the exercise of activities defined in Directive 2004/17. The Court inferred from this that where a contract awarded by a contracting entity was connected with an activity which that entity carried out in the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of that directive, in the sense that that contract was awarded in connection with and for the exercise of activities in one of those sectors, the contract was subject to the procedures laid down in that directive (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 April 2008, Ing. Aigner, C-393/06, EU:C:2008:213, paragraphs 31 and 56 to 59, and of 19 April 2018, Consorzio Italian Management and Catania Multiservizi, C-152/17, EU:C:2018:264, paragraph 26).

38 Article 6(1) of Directive 2004/17 applied, inter alia, to 'activities relating to the provision of postal services' and Article 13(1) of Directive 2014/25, which replaced that provision, defines the scope of Directive 2014/25 by referring, in particular, to 'activities relating to the provision of postal services'.

39 In those circumstances, and is apparent from the comparison between the introductory parts of those two provisions, the scope ratione materiae of Directive 2014/25 cannot be interpreted more restrictively than that of Directive 2004/17 and it cannot, therefore, be limited solely to activities of providing postal services as such, but also includes, in addition, activities relating to the provision of such services.

40 It follows that the interpretation adopted by the Court in its case-law referred to in paragraph 37 above, based on a systematic interpretation of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18, has been confirmed, since the entry into force of Directive 2014/25, by the wording of Article 13(1) thereof, which sets out the scope of that new directive.

41 It must, therefore, be determined whether, as Pegaso and the European Commission assert, services such as those at issue in the main proceedings may be regarded as being connected, within the meaning of paragraph 37 above, with the activity carried out by the contracting entity concerned in the postal sector.

42 In that regard, in order to be of use in carrying out the activity falling within the postal sector, the connection between the contract at issue and that sector cannot be of just any kind, on pain of misconstruing the meaning of Article 19(1) of Directive 2014/25. It is not sufficient that the services which are the subject of that contract make a positive contribution to the activities of the contracting entity and increase profitability, in order to be able to establish the existence of a connection between that contract and the activity falling within the scope of the postal sector, for the purposes of Article 13(1) of that directive.

43 It is, therefore, appropriate to consider as activities relating to the provision of postal services, within the meaning of that provision, all activities which actually serve to carry out the activity falling within the postal services sector, by enabling that activity to be carried out adequately, having regard to the normal conditions under which it is carried out, to the exclusion of activities carried out for purposes other than the pursuit of the sectoral activity concerned.

44 The same applies to activities which, being complementary and transverse in nature, could in other circumstances serve to carry out other activities outside the scope of the special sectors directive.

45 In the present case, it is difficult to imagine that postal services may be adequately provided in the absence of the caretaking, reception and access control services for the premises of the provider concerned. That finding applies both to premises which are open to the recipients of postal services and thus admit the public and to premises used for administrative functions. As the Advocate General observed in point 116 of his Opinion, the provision of postal services also includes the management and planning of those services.

46 In those circumstances, a contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings cannot be regarded as awarded for purposes other than the pursuit of the activity falling within the postal services sector, in terms of Article 19(1) of Directive 2014/25, and, on the contrary, having regard to the considerations set out in paragraph 43 above, displays a connection with that activity which justifies the contract being subject to the regime established by that directive.

47 Accordingly, in view of the fact that Poste Italiane has the status of a public undertaking within the meaning of Article 4(2) of Directive 2014/25, as has been pointed out in paragraph 34 above, and that the services at issue in the main proceedings are activities related to the provision of postal services, which they actually serve to carry out, that directive is, therefore, applicable both ratione personae and ratione materiae to the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

48 Such a conclusion is not invalidated by Poste Italiane’s argument that the reception and caretaking activities which are the subject of the tender at issue in the main proceedings are also provided for the benefit of activities which are outside the material scope of Directive 2014/25, such as payment services, mobile telephony, insurance or digital services.

49 As the Advocate General observed, in essence, in points 119 and 120 of his Opinion, Article 6(1) of Directive 2014/25 provides, in the case of contracts intended to cover several activities, that contracting entities may decide to award separate contracts for each of the different activities or to award a single contract. In the latter case, it follows from Article 6(2) of that directive that that single contract is to be subject to the rules applicable to the activity for which it is principally intended.

50 However, the information provided to the Court does not enable it to be established that the contract at issue in the present case was principally intended for activities not falling within the material scope of Directive 2014/25.

51 Consequently, it cannot be held, in the context of the information provided to the Court and subject to verification by the referring court, that the contract at issue in the main proceedings falls outside the material scope of Directive 2014/25.

52 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the third and fifth questions is that Article 13(1) of Directive 2014/25 must be interpreted as applying to activities consisting in the provision of caretaking, reception and access control services for the premises of postal services providers, where such activities are connected with the activity falling within the postal sector, in the sense that such activities actually serve to carry out that activity by enabling it to be carried out adequately, having regard to the normal conditions under which it is carried out.

The other questions

53 In the light of the reply given to the third and fifth questions, there is no need to answer the other questions referred.

Costs

54 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 13(1) of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC must be interpreted as applying to activities consisting in the provision of caretaking, reception and access control services for the premises of postal services providers, where such activities are connected with the activity falling within the postal sector, in the sense that such activities actually serve to carry out that activity by enabling it to be carried out adequately, having regard to the normal conditions under which it is carried out.

delivered on 23 April 2020(1)

Case C-521/18

Pegaso Srl Servizi Fiduciari,

Sistemi di Sicurezza Srl,

YW

v

Poste Tutela SpA, joined parties:

Poste Italiane SpA,

Services Group

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2014/25/EU — Postal services — Activities relating to postal services — Caretaking, reception and access control services — Withdrawal of the contract notice in the course of the proceedings — Interest to act of the applicants despite that withdrawal — Outstanding decision on costs)

I. Introduction

1. A contract notice was issued in 2017 by Poste Tutela SpA (‘Poste Tutela’), back then a wholly owned subsidiary of Poste Italiane SpA (‘Poste Italiane’). That contract notice aimed at establishing framework agreements for caretaking, reception and access control services for the premises of Poste Italiane and of other companies in its group.

2. Pegaso Srl Servizi Fiduciari, Sistemi di Sicurezza Srl and YW sought the annulment of that contract notice before the referring court. Within the framework of that procedure, the referring court wishes to know whether the activities covered by that contract notice fall within the scope of application of Directive 2014/25/EU (2) (‘the Utilities Directive’) or of Directive 2014/24/EU (3) (‘the Public Sector Directive’).

3. However, after the order for reference, the contested contract notice was withdrawn. That fact opens up the preliminary issue of whether this Court remains validly seised of the case. In particular, does the fact that the referring court still has to make a pronouncement on costs suffice to establish that an answer should be given to the questions posed by the request for a preliminary ruling?

II. Legal framework

A. EU law

1. The Public Sector Directive

4. Recital 10 of the Public Sector Directive states that:

‘The notion of “contracting authorities” and in particular that of “bodies governed by public law” have been examined repeatedly in the case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union. … [I]t should be clarified that a body which operates in normal market conditions, aims to make a profit, and bears the losses resulting from the exercise of its activity should not be considered as being a “body governed by public law” since the needs in the general interest, that it has been set up to meet or been given the task of meeting, can be deemed to have an industrial or commercial character.

Similarly, the condition relating to the origin of the funding of the body considered, has also been examined in the case-law, which has clarified inter alia that being financed for “the most part” means for more than half, and that such financing may include payments from users which are imposed, calculated and collected in accordance with rules of public law.’

5. According to Article 1(1) of the Public Sector Directive:

‘This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting authorities with respect to public contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 4.’

6. Pursuant to Article 2(1) of that directive:

‘(1) “contracting authorities” means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law or associations formed by one or more such authorities or one or more such bodies governed by public law;

(4) “bodies governed by public law” means bodies that have all of the following characteristics:

(a) they are established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) they have legal personality; and

(c) they are financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law; or are subject to management supervision by those authorities or bodies; or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law;

7. Pursuant to Article 7 of the Public Sector Directive:

‘This Directive shall not apply to public contracts and design contests which, under Directive 2014/25/EU, are awarded or organised by contracting authorities exercising one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14 of that Directive and are awarded for the pursuit of those activities …’

2. The Utilities Directive

8. Recital 16 of the Utilities Directive reads as follows:

‘… contracts might be awarded for the purpose of meeting the requirements of several activities, possibly subject to different legal regimes. It should be clarified that the legal regime applicable to a single contract intended to cover several activities should be subject to the rules applicable to the activity for which it is principally intended. Determination of the activity for which the contract is principally intended can be based on an analysis of the requirements which the specific contract must meet, carried out by the contracting entity for the purposes of estimating the contract value and drawing up the procurement documents. …’

9. Recital 19 reads as follows:

‘To ensure a real opening up of the market and a fair balance in the application of procurement rules in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors it is necessary for the entities covered to be identified on a basis other than their legal status. It should be ensured, therefore, that the equal treatment of contracting entities operating in the public sector and those operating in the private sector is not prejudiced. It is also necessary to ensure, in keeping with Article 345 TFEU, that the rules governing the system of property ownership in Member States are not prejudiced.’

10. Article 1(1) of the Utilities Directive provides that:

‘This Directive establishes rules on the procedures for procurement by contracting entities with respect to contracts as well as design contests, whose value is estimated to be not less than the thresholds laid down in Article 15.’

11. Article 4(1) defines ‘contracting entities’ as ‘entities, which:

(a) are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14;

(b) when they are not contracting authorities or public undertakings, have as one of their activities any of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14, or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State.’

12. Under Article 4(2) of the Utilities Directive:

‘“Public undertaking” means any undertaking over which the contracting authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it.

A dominant influence on the part of the contracting authorities shall be presumed in any of the following cases in which those authorities, directly or indirectly:

(a) hold the majority of the undertaking’s subscribed capital;

(b) control the majority of the votes attaching to shares issued by the undertaking,

(c) can appoint more than half of the undertaking’s administrative, management or supervisory body.’

13. By virtue of Article 5(4):

‘In the case of contracts which have as their subject-matter procurement covered by this Directive as well as procurement not covered by this Directive, contracting entities may choose to award separate contracts for the separate parts or to award a single contract. Where contracting entities choose to award separate contracts for separate parts, the decision as to which legal regime applies to any one of such separate contracts shall be taken on the basis of the characteristics of the separate part concerned.

Where contracting entities choose to award a single contract, this Directive shall, unless otherwise provided in Article 25, apply to the ensuing mixed contract, irrespective of the value of the parts that would otherwise fall under a different legal regime and irrespective of which legal regime those parts would otherwise have been subject to.

14. Article 13(1) of the Utilities Directive provides that:

‘This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision of:

(a) postal services;

(b) other services than postal services, on condition that such services are provided by an entity which also provides postal services within the meaning of point (b) of paragraph 2 of this Article and provided that the conditions set out in Article 34(1) are not satisfied in respect of the services falling within point (b) of paragraph 2 of this Article.’

15. Article 13(2) defines, under (b), ‘postal services’ as ‘services consisting of the clearance, sorting, routing and delivery of postal items. This shall include both services falling within as well as services falling outside the scope of the universal service set up in conformity with Directive 97/67/EC’. Under (c), ‘other services than postal services’ are defined as mail service management services (services both preceding and subsequent to despatch, including mailroom management services) and certain services concerning postal items, such as direct mail bearing no address.

16. By virtue of Article 19(1) of the Utilities Directive:

‘This Directive shall not apply to contracts which the contracting entities award for purposes other than the pursuit of their activities as described in Articles 8 to 14 …’

III. Facts, procedure and questions referred

17. Poste Italiane is a stock company. The order for reference indicates that 29.26% of its share capital is held by the Ministero dell’Economia e delle Finanze (Ministry of Economic Affairs and Finance, Italy), 35% by Cassa Depositi e Prestiti and the remainder by private investors. Poste Italiane holds the concession for the universal postal service. It also operates in the financial, insurance and mobile phone sectors.

18. At the time of the issuance of the contested contract notice, Poste Tutela was a wholly owned subsidiary of Poste Italiane. It merged with Poste Italiane with effect as from 1 March 2018.

19. In July 2017, Poste Tutela issued a contract notice for establishing framework agreements in connection with caretaking, reception and access control services for the premises of Poste Italiane and of other companies in its group, for a period of 24 months (with a further 12 months, in the event of contract renewal), for a total estimated amount of EUR 25 253 242.

20. That contract notice specified the Utilities Directive as its legal basis. It was published in Gazzetta Ufficiale della Repubblica Italiana (Official Journal of the Italian Republic; ‘GURI’) (4) and in the Official Journal of the European Union. (5)

21. On 28 September 2017, Pegaso Srl Servizi Fiduciari, Sistemi di Sicurezza Srl and YW (‘the applicants’) challenged the contract notice in question before the referring court. They alleged a number of infringements of the Italian Public Procurement Code.

22. On 20 October 2017, the referring court decided to suspend the procurement procedure in question by way of an interim order on the grounds that the applicants’ allegations were prima facie founded.

23. Poste Tutela and Poste Italiane (‘the defendants’) raised a preliminary objection concerning the jurisdiction of the referring court. They argued that administrative courts do not have jurisdiction in cases where procurement procedures are launched by a public undertaking for the provision of services unconnected to those included in special sectors, such as the postal sector.

24. The referring court considers that that issue of jurisdiction requires it to determine whether Poste Tutela (and now Poste Italiane) was obliged to launch a procurement procedure to decide on the award of the services at issue. According to the referring court, Poste Tutela/Poste Italiane meet the conditions to be characterised as a ‘body governed by public law’ within the meaning of Directive 2014/23/EU (6) (‘the Concessions Directive’), the Public Sector Directive and the Utilities Directive.

25. It is under those circumstances that the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy) stayed the proceedings and referred the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

> ‘(1) Should the company Poste Italiane SpA, on the basis of characteristics set out above, be classified as a “body governed by public law” within the meaning of Article 3(1)(d) of Legislative Decree No 50 of 2016 and of the relevant EU directives (2014/23/EU, 2014/24/EU and 2014/25/EU)?
> (2) Should that classification be extended to include the wholly owned subsidiary company Poste Tutela SpA — whose merger with Poste Italiane SpA is already under way — bearing in mind what is stated in recital 46 of Directive 2014/23/EU concerning controlled legal persons? (See, also, in this respect, judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union (Fourth Chamber) of 5 October 2017, Case [C-567/15]: competitive tendering requirement for companies controlled by public authorities; judgment No 6211 of the Consiglio di Stato [(Council of State, Italy)], Chamber VI, of 24 November 2011.)
> (3) Are those companies, as contracting entities, required to conduct competitive tendering procedures only when awarding contracts in connection with activities carried out in the special sectors, pursuant to Directive 2014/25/EU — such contracting entities having to be deemed bodies governed by public law under the rules laid down in Part II of the Public Procurement Code — whilst, on the other hand, having unfettered freedom and being subject only to private-sector rules for contracts not connected to such sectors, bearing in mind the principles set out in recital 21 and Article 16 of Directive 2014/23/EU?
> (4) On the other hand, with regard to contracts considered not to be directly connected with the specific activities covered by the special sectors, are those companies, where they satisfy the requirements for being classified as bodies governed by public law, subject to the general Directive 2014/24/EU (and therefore to the rules governing competitive tendering procedures), even when performing primarily entrepreneurial activities under competitive market conditions, having developed from when they were originally established?
> (5) In any event, in the case of offices in which activities connected to the universal service and activities unrelated to it are both performed, may the concept of functionality, in connection with a service which is specifically in the public interest, be said to be inapplicable as regards contracts relating to ordinary and extraordinary maintenance, cleaning, furnishing, caretaking and storage services for such offices?
> (6) Finally, were the arguments of Poste Italiane SpA to be endorsed, should the fact that a decision to organise a competitive tendering procedure has been taken without there being any obligation to conduct such a procedure — which is not subject to all the guarantees of transparency and equal treatment, as governed by the Public Procurement Code — and the fact that the decision is duly published without any further notice in that regard in the [GURI] and the Official Journal of the European Union, be regarded as incompatible with the established principle that the legitimate expectations of tenderers must be protected?’

26. On 11 October 2018, Poste Italiane informed both the referring court and the Court, by way of letter, that it had withdrawn the challenged contract notice. Poste Italiane expressly asked the referring court to declare the applicants’ action therefore inadmissible. On 20 October 2018, the referring court rejected that request.

27. On 16 October 2018, after the Court was informed by the defendants that the contract notice had been annulled, the Court asked the referring court whether it wanted to withdraw its reference for a preliminary ruling. On 26 October 2018, the referring court expressed its wish to maintain its reference for a preliminary ruling.

28. On 9 January 2019, in reply to the Court's request to substantiate the grounds for which the referring court considers that the dispute at issue is still pending before it, the Court received an additional clarification from the referring court. The latter stated why, in its view, the dispute was still pending before it and why therefore the questions posed should be answered by the Court.

29. On 3 April 2019, the referring court further informed the Court that an application was introduced seeking the annulment of another contract notice launched by Poste Italiane concerning the same services. According to the referring court, that contract notice is identical to the one at issue at the present case. The referring court has suspended this new case until the Court makes a decision in the present case.

30. Written observations have been submitted by Pegaso Srl Servizi Fiduciari and Sistemi di Sicurezza Srl, Poste Italiane, the Italian Government and the European Commission. All of them participated at the hearing held on 22 January 2020.

IV. Assessment

31. This Opinion is structured as follows. I will first explain why, in view of the developments taking place after the introduction of the present request for a preliminary ruling, there is no need to answer the referring court's questions (A). Should the Court not share my position, I will briefly sketch out how the key questions should be answered on the merits. I will suggest that activities such as the ones at issue in the main proceedings (caretaking, reception and access control services of the premises of Poste Italiane) are subject to EU public procurement rules, namely those laid down in the Utilities Directive regarding the special sectors (B).

A. Existence of a pending dispute in the main proceedings?

32. According to established case-law, questions regarding the interpretation of EU law are referred by a national court in the factual and legislative context which that court is responsible for defining, and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court to determine. Such questions enjoy a presumption of relevance. (7)

33. However, it is also established case-law that it is clear from both the wording and the scheme of Article 267 TFEU that the preliminary ruling procedure presupposes that a dispute is actually pending before the national courts in which they are called upon to give a decision which is capable of taking account of the preliminary ruling. Therefore, the Court may verify of its own motion that the dispute in the main proceedings is continuing. (8) If the object of the dispute has disappeared while the proceedings before the Court are still pending, thereby making the questions posed hypothetical or unrelated to an actual dispute, the Court is to decide that there is no need to give a ruling on the request for a preliminary ruling. (9)

34. In the present case, there is controversy as to whether there is still a pending dispute before the national court. The disagreement is twofold: first, has the contested contract notice been withdrawn by Poste Italiane? Second, despite the withdrawal, would there be any other ground on which the applicants would still have an interest to act before the referring court?

1. The withdrawal of the contract notice

35. In reply to the question posed by the Court as to whether there is still a dispute pending before it, the referring court noted that Poste Italiane has published a notice to that effect in the GURI and shorter notices in daily newspapers. In the notice in the GURI, it was stated that Poste Italiane decided to 'annul/revoke' the contract notice in view of the complex restructuring of Poste Italiane following the merger between the latter and Poste Tutela. However, the referring court goes on to note that in the other, shorter notices published in the daily newspapers, Poste Italiane only declared that the procurement procedure had been interrupted. The referring court continues to wonder whether, in so doing, Poste Italiane aimed at rectifying the infringements alleged by the applicants or to proceed differently (through a direct award) in order to satisfy the needs that were the object of the contract notice.

36. Poste Italiane and the Italian Government claim that the contract notice has been formally withdrawn. In particular, Poste Italiane argues that the annulment was duly published in all the required fora (the GURI, two national and two local newspapers and the Official Journal). Following the annulment, a new procurement procedure was launched in order to fulfil more efficiently the new needs of Poste Italiane after the restructuring of the group, in particular the rescaling of the needs in matters of safety and monitoring.

37. The applicants are not contesting the fact that the contract notice has been withdrawn. They nevertheless maintain that the request for a preliminary ruling remains admissible, but for different reasons, discussed in the next section. (10)

38. I must admit to being somewhat puzzled at this stage. With the exception of the referring court, everybody else appears to agree that the contract notice in question was withdrawn. The referring court itself confirms that in the full notice published in GURI, the term used was to 'annul/revoke'. The referring court also notes that in the other, shorter versions of the notice published in daily press, it was stated that the procedure 'has been interrupted', but that was the consequence of the interim order issued by the referring court already on 20 October 2017. (11)

39. On the basis of all the facts presented before this Court, it indeed seems that the contract notice has been withdrawn. The referring court appears to have reserved its decision on whether or not the withdrawal has taken place. In its reply to this Court, it stressed that, irrespective of that question, there is still the issue of competence: whether administrative courts have jurisdiction in relation to such contract notices.

40. I am well aware of the standard division of tasks within the preliminary rulings procedure. Indeed, it remains solely for the referring court to ascertain whether the contract notice at issue was withdrawn, both on the facts as well as to their evaluation under national law. The launching of a new procurement procedure by the same tenderer may be a further hint of such a withdrawal.

41. However, this case pushes that traditional division of tasks to its limits. Despite the great degree of deference that this Court normally shows towards its reference partners under Article 267 TFEU, it is ultimately the responsibility of this Court to assess whether or not it remains validly seised. (12)

42. On all the available documentation, the contract notice was withdrawn. In fact, a new contract notice for the same services has been issued. The referring court nonetheless still harbours doubts as to whether the contract notice was 'formally' withdrawn.

43. Although I have difficulty understanding that statement, I would have less difficulty in understanding that a referring court would still wish to receive an answer in a case in which it would be suggested that a certain respondent keeps withdrawing contract notices as a matter of strategy. I could imagine a situation in which an entity, which does not desire certain matters to be authoritatively settled by a court, would keep withdrawing contract notices if challenged, thus systematically seeking to deprive national courts of their jurisdiction.

44. That would certainly be a different matter. In such a case, even already at the stage of the assessment of admissibility of a request for a preliminary ruling, (13) greater flexibility could perhaps be shown with regard to the notion of what is a pending dispute. After all, prohibition of abuse is a transversal principle of EU law. (14)

45. However, none of the parties, and nor the referring court, have suggested that Poste Italiane repetitively withdrew contract notices, with the intention to avoid judicial review or with the aim of deterring certain candidates from participating in the procurement procedure. (15) In fact, it is rather to the contrary: Poste Italiane offered a plausible explanation as to why the original contract notice was withdrawn, and appears to have acted consistently with that explanation. (16)

46. In those circumstances, it indeed appears that the dispute in the main proceedings has lost its object.

2. The applicants' ongoing interest to act at the national level

47. In the alternative, the referring court, the applicants, as well as, partially, the European Commission, appear to consider that that interest still exists, independently from the withdrawal of the contract notice.

48. The referring court is of the view that it cannot be presumed that the applicants had no longer an interest to act against the contract notice, even if the latter was withdrawn. The Court must therefore address its reference for a preliminary ruling, especially in view of the principle of effective judicial review.

49. The applicants claim that, despite the withdrawal, Italian law still requires the competent court to rule on the lawfulness of the contested acts for the purposes of awarding damages and deciding who shall bear the costs. In particular, under Italian law, an action for damages may be filed within 120 days after the annulment judgment has become final. To rule on that action, it must first be established whether the referring court has jurisdiction. That issue requires one to determine whether Poste Italiane is subject to public procurement rules.

50. According to the European Commission, should it be assumed that the contract notice was formally withdrawn, that latter fact is by no means a decisive element. The referring court's Question 6 requires an answer inasmuch as that question concerns the consequences attached to a possible violation of legitimate expectations, thus a matter that is independent from the keeping into force of the contested contract notice. In addition, determining whether the contested contract notice concerns a tender falling within the scope of the Utilities Directive is decisive in order to establish what is the competent court before which the applicants could ask for damages.

51. By contrast, according to Poste Italiane and the Italian Government, the applicants no longer have any interest to act. While Poste Italiane considers that a judgment of the referring court would have no favourable effects vis-à-vis the applicants, the Italian Government submits that the applicants have not launched an action for damages. Therefore, the prospect of such an action is merely hypothetical.

52. Thus, in spite of the contract notice being withdrawn, it has been suggested that (a) the applicants might introduce an action for damages in relation to the contested contract notice and (b) the issue of costs must still be determined by the referring court.

(a) The prospect of a future action for damages

53. It is settled case-law that the justification for a reference for a preliminary ruling is not that it enables advisory opinions on general or hypothetical questions to be delivered, but rather that it is necessary for the effective resolution of a dispute. (17) In circumstances similar to the ones in the main proceedings, the Court has already held that the intention of bringing an action for damages, the latter being merely possible and hypothetical, could not justify maintaining a request for a preliminary ruling where the main proceedings no longer have a purpose. (18)

54. The applicants confirmed at the hearing that an action for damages has not been filed yet before the referring court, or any other national court for that matter. It is certainly true that if an action for damages were eventually filed, then the issue of whether the contract notice was mandatory and, accordingly, which national court would be competent to adjudicate on the matter, would be of importance. However, it would be precisely of importance for that later potential action that is not currently pending. Thus, within the framework of the present proceedings before the referring court, the issues relating to potential future action for damages are entirely hypothetical.

55. The fact, underlined by the European Commission, that the applicants may have entertained legitimate expectations with regard to the continuance of the procurement procedure, and that there would in any case be the need to answer Question 6, does not alter the previous conclusion.

56. First, prima facie, I personally would be rather surprised to learn that the EU principle of legitimate expectation effectively prevents a contracting authority from ever withdrawing a contract notice. Would that then mean that, once published, a public contract must be run to an end, whatever the (changed) circumstances?

57. Second, if that is not the case, then Question 6 also effectively becomes an issue that would be assessed in a potential successive claim for damages, as the infringement of any other rights of candidates to a tendering procedure. (19) However, once more, those issues are not the object of the proceedings currently pending before the referring court.

(b) The decision on costs

58. Finally, there is the issue of costs of national proceedings. Even if the contract notice were withdrawn, the referring court would still need to decide on the costs of the proceedings. Thus, it could be suggested that there is still a dispute pending before the national court relating to, at least, the matter of costs.

59. I do not think that that logic can be embraced.

60. First, my understanding of the general statements of what is a dispute pending (20) has always been one which considers that what is required is a reasonable correlation (albeit, indeed, perhaps not a perfect match) between the scope of the questions posed by the referring court and the legal dispute before it. Thus, the subject matter of the questions posed must have some bearing on the resolution of the dispute pending before the national judge. Outside that scope (and thus hypothetical) are questions that, in whatever way the Court provides the answer to them, would have no impact on the resolution of the dispute before the referring court.

61. In this light, I fail to see how the settling of the six rather detailed questions, which were all posed in view of the review of an ongoing tendering procedure and its contract notice, would have any bearing whatsoever on the settling of the issue of costs before the national court after that notice has been withdrawn. That is simply a matter for national law, with the answers solicited from this Court having no bearing on the outstanding issue of costs.

62. Second, in general, unless costs in a given case are in a specific way tied to an issue of interpretation of EU law, which then should be properly explained in the order for reference, the fact that, following the object of a dispute falling away, there is still a need to decide on costs, is not enough to maintain the jurisdiction of the Court. (21)

63. In principle, the Court's jurisdiction disappears when there is no longer any dispute pending before the referring court, for instance because the applicant obtained what he or she wanted in the course of the proceedings, or because the author of the contested measure withdrew it, or because the applicable national provisions have changed. (22) In those circumstances, the dispute is considered to have been settled. The fact that the national court is still to decide on costs is immaterial. (23) If it is not for the Court to settle the dispute by applying EU law provisions to the facts at issue, it is a fortiori even less so for the Court to decide on the costs of a dispute that no longer exists. Thus, decisions on costs are a matter for the sole referring court to make, on the basis of national law. (24)

64. Of course, there is the caveat: unless the issue of costs before the national court is itself tied to the interpretation of EU law solicited before this Court. This will notably be the case in two instances.

65. First, the Court certainly has jurisdiction when the subject matter of the dispute in the main proceedings is precisely the costs. In such a factual context, it is within the mission of the Court under Article 267 TFEU to interpret any EU law provision that specifically deals with the costs of judicial proceedings or, more generally, the right to an effective access to justice. (25) However, in those cases, what the Court is called to interpret are concrete, harmonised provisions of EU law that provide for costs allocation or their capping in certain matters. A notable example in the latter category is a provision stating that costs in environmental matters are 'not prohibitively expensive'. (26)

66. Second, there are also borderline cases, in which there are no EU harmonised rules on costs, but the question of interpretation or validity posed to this Court has a clear impact on the decision on costs. It is in this way that I would interpret why the Court decided to provide an answer on merits in Amt and Others. (27)

67. Amt and Others concerned the decision of a contracting authority to launch a tender procedure for the award of public transport services in a region of Italy. The national legislation did not allow economic operators to bring an action against the decisions of a contracting authority relating to a tendering procedure in which they have decided not to participate. The referring court essentially sought to know whether such economic operators had standing under EU law.

68. In the course of the proceedings, the contracting authority decided not to pursue the call for tenders after the adoption of a new law. Thus, the object of the dispute had formally disappeared. Nevertheless, the Court considered that the request for a preliminary ruling remained admissible and it answered the question on the merits. That was understandable given the structure of that case and the only question asked by the referring court: does EU law preclude national law that does not allow non-participants in the tendering procedure to challenge the documents relating to the tendering procedure?

69. The positive (or negative) answer to that question was decisive for settling the matter of whether or not the applicants in the main proceedings, who challenged the tendering documentation even though it did not participate in the tendering procedure, would pay the costs of the proceedings.

70. One may only contrast that scenario, in which one single targeted question by the referring court is conclusive for the issue of costs still outstanding, with the present case. The six rather detailed questions posed by the referring court concern the applicability of a number of public procurement rules to caretaking, reception and access control services for the premises of Poste Italiane. They do not raise any issues of interpretation of EU rules governing costs or, more generally, the overall cost of the review procedure that was launched by the applicants. Likewise, none of the referring court's questions raise any issues that could have a direct impact on the decision on costs. In particular, the applicants' standing against the contract notice at issue is not contested. I therefore fail to see how, whatever answer were to be provided by this Court in response to the six detailed questions posed, it could have any bearing on the issue of costs in the present proceedings, within the parameters of the two scenarios outlined above.

71. As a consequence, in the circumstances of the present case, since the object of the dispute (the contract notice) has disappeared and because no action for damages is currently pending, the outstanding decision on costs cannot be the only reason to justify the maintaining of the preliminary reference.

72. On a closing note, I readily acknowledge that the issue of the relevance of the answer to be given by the Court for the settlement of a real dispute pending before the national court is hardly a two-sided, clear-cut divide. There are admittedly also cases in which the Court has shown greater lenience (or rather greater imagination) as to how exactly the answer given by it would be relevant for the specific dispute pending before the national court. (28)

73. Be that as it may, and even acknowledging that it is indeed rather a continuum of relevance than a two-sided clarity, the six questions posed in the present request for a preliminary ruling are at the outer end of that continuum. Again, the only issue which remains is how those questions are relevant for the scope of the dispute currently pending before the national court. The uneasy answer is that they are not.

74. It follows that there is no need to answer any of the questions posed by the referring court.

B. Consideration of the questions referred

75. In view of the mission of Advocates General to (fully) assist the Court (Article 252 TFEU), I will briefly address the merits of the referring court's questions, should the Court not share my view on the (absence of the) need to adjudicate in the circumstances of the present case. However, I shall only do so briefly and to the extent that it would have been necessary had the object of the dispute not fallen away. Even if the Court were to adjudicate on the merits of the case, it would not have been necessary to address all the questions posed by the referring court.

76. The referring court has asked six questions. Through all those questions, the referring court seeks, in essence, to know whether the services at issue, that were tendered by Poste Tutela before its merger with Poste Italiane, fall within the scope of EU public procurement rules, in particular the Utilities Directive and the Public Sector Directive. (29)

77. Questions 1, 2 and 4 (and, partly, Question 3) concern the legal characterisation of Poste Italiane (and Poste Tutela) as bodies governed by public law within the meaning of the Public Sector Directive and the Utilities Directive. Questions 3 and 5 concern the applicability of the Utilities Directive to activities such as those in the main proceedings. As to Question 6, its scope is somewhat unclear. It could be understood as a generic question as to what legitimate expectations are created for the tenderers by the launching of a procurement procedure and whether those expectations prevent the withdrawal of an already published notice. (30) It could also be understood as enquiring whether any legitimate expectations are created for the tenderers in a case in which a body, which would normally not be obliged to organise a tendering procedure, does so of its own accord.

78. For the purposes of the present case, whereby the referring court seeks to know whether the activities in question are governed by EU public procurement rules and, if so, by which one, it is entirely sufficient to answer Questions 3 and 5, in relation to the applicability of the Utilities Directive. In my view, in the context of the contract notice that was the subject matter of the case before the referring court, it was the Utilities Directive that would have been applicable to the activities at issue.

1. The respective scopes of application of the Public Sector Directive and the Utilities Directive

79. The respective scopes of application of the Public Sector Directive and of the Utilities Directive are defined differently. As far as their applicability in the individual case is concerned, both instruments are supposed to be mutually exclusive. (31)

80. The scope of application of the Public Sector Directive is primarily defined ratione personae. It generally applies to contracting authorities, thus, in particular the State, regional or local authorities and bodies governed by public law, (32) because of their formal status and their quality as certain types of legal persons.

81. By contrast, the scope of application of the Utilities Directive is primarily defined materially, by reference to the nature of the activities. (33) Those activities are referred to in Articles 8 to 14 of that directive. They notably cover heat, electricity, water, transport services, ports and airports and postal services.

82. At the same time, the Utilities Directive is less strict as to the quality of the persons it covers. It applies to a wide range of ‘contracting entities’. The latter category includes contracting authorities, public undertakings, and undertakings enjoying exclusive or special rights. (34) That broad personal scope of application is the logical consequence of the material scope of the directive. The latter indeed aims at regulating the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors. Yet, in those sectors where there used to be State monopolies, entities that currently operate therein take various legal forms so that ‘it is necessary for the entities covered to be identified on a basis other than their legal status’. (35)

83. It follows from those provisions that the material scope of the Utilities Directive is defined rather strictly. One of the more important consequences of that conceptual difference is that, for that reason, in the context of Utilities Directive, there is no room for application of the approach known as the ‘contagion theory’.

84. That approach was originally set out by the Court in 1998 in its judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others. (36) That case concerned the legal characterisation of the Austrian State printing office (Österreichische Staatsdruckerei; ‘ÖS’). Under Austrian law, ÖS used to be a State undertaking, which later became a trader for the purposes of the Commercial Code. ÖS was primarily entrusted with the production of official administrative documents requiring secrecy or security measures. However, it also pursued other activities, such as the publication of books or newspapers. The Court held that ÖS was a body governed by public law within the meaning of the then applicable Public Sector Directive. As a consequence, all its activities fell within the scope of that directive. Even its commercial activities were thus considered subject to the Public Sector Directive because of its legal status as a body governed by public law.

85. In a metaphorical nutshell, therefore, much like King Midas, the public law body’s touch ‘taints’ all its activities and makes them all fall under the Public Sector Directive (albeit perhaps not necessarily turning them into gold).

86. By contrast, the Court refused to extend that logic to the Utilities Directive in Ing. Aigner. (37) That case regarded an undertaking, Fernwärme Wien, that was established for the purpose of supplying heating in the City of Vienna. At the same time, that undertaking was engaged in the general planning of refrigeration plants for large real estate projects. In carrying out that activity, it competed with other undertakings. In its judgment, the Court reinstated that all contracts entered into by a contracting authority were subject to EU public procurement rules, since Fernawärme Wien happened to also be a ‘body governed by public law’. However, the Court distinguished between the activities at issue: while the contracts related to activities enumerated in the Utilities Directive were subject to the rules laid down therein, the other contracts were covered by the Public Sector Directive.

87. It follows that the legal status as a body governed by public law has the effect of extending the application of EU public procurement rules to all its activities under the Public Sector Directive. However, it does not stretch the potential applicability of the Public Sector Directive to activities expressly covered by the Utilities Directive. The material scope of the latter therefore remains intact irrespective of the legal status of the undertaking at issue. Equally, the contagion theory does not apply within and across the activities under the Utilities Directive.

88. Thus, the Utilities Directive is lex specialis, while the Public Sector Directive is lex generalis. As a lex specialis, the Utilities Directive is to be applied in a stricter manner.

2. 'Postal Services' under the Utilities Directive

89. What is then the scope of the notion of postal services under the Utilities Directive? According to Article 13(1), that directive applies to activities relating to the provision of postal services and of other services than postal services, notably on condition that such services are provided by an entity which also provides postal services.

90. Transcribed, this provision appears to set out two categories: (i) the postal services (in the narrow sense); (ii) the other services enumerated in Article 13(2)(c) of the Utilities Directive, provided that the conditions laid down in Article 13(1)(b) are met. However, the introduction of Article 13(1) of the Utilities Directive also clearly says that it is not just those services in the narrow sense, but (iii) the activities relating to the provision of postal services or the other services enumerated in Article 13(2)(c).

91. First, what exactly are postal services is legislatively defined in Article 13(2)(b) as services consisting of the clearance, sorting, routing and delivery of postal items, with a successive definition of 'postal item' in Article 13(2)(a). The definition includes both services falling within, as well as services falling outside, the scope of the universal service.

92. Second, Article 13(2)(c) defines those 'other services' than postal services as 'mail service management services (services both preceding and subsequent to despatch, including mailroom management services)' and 'services concerning postal items not included in [Article 13(2)(a)], such as direct mail bearing no address'.

93. Third, what about the residual or additional category of 'activities relating to the provision' of postal services and other than postal services?

94. According to Poste Italiane and the Italian Government, since no 'contagion theory' is applicable in the context of the Utilities Directive, the scope of Article 13 of the Utilities Directive is to be interpreted narrowly. Only those two types of activities explicitly listed in Article 13(1) of the Utilities Directive are covered.

95. I agree with the first proposition. I disagree with the second one.

96. Indeed, the statement made by the Court in this regard in Ing. Aigner is good law. However, the correct interpretation of Article 13 of the Utilities Directive is that its scope is not as narrow as Poste Italiane and the Italian Government suggest.

97. In my view, there is clearly a third category inscribed in Article 13(1) of the Utilities Directive: activities relating to the provision of postal services.

98. First, there is the wording not only of Article 13(1), but also of Article 1(2) of the Utilities Directive: 'procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a supply, works or service contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting entities from economic operators chosen by those contracting entities, provided that the works, supplies or services are intended for the pursuit of one of the activities referred to in Articles 8 to 14'. (38) Both of these turns of phrases indicate that what is supposed to be covered are not just those postal services in the narrow sense, but also other necessary supplies or services that make that main service happen.

99. Second, the same is also confirmed by the logic of the sector. It is fair to assume that the provision of postal services in the narrow sense (clearing, sorting, routing, and the delivery of postal items) would normally be done by the contracting entities themselves. It would be rather surprising to find out that a post, in particular the provider of the universal postal service, would in fact not be delivering any postal items itself. However, if it were to be then said, as Poste Italiane is essentially suggesting, that the obligation to resort to public procurement procedures relates only to postal services in the narrow sense, then Article 13(1)(a), as well as 13(1)(b) for that matter, would be in practice vacated of any content. What would those provisions then be applicable to?

100. Thus, it is rather clear to me that what Article 13 of the Utilities Directive aims at are, in particular, works, supplies or services that are intended to enable the provision of postal services. As stated by the Court, 'where a contracting entity exercising one of the activities mentioned in [the Utilities Directive] contemplates, in the exercise of that activity, the award of a supply, works or service contract or the organisation of a design contest, that contract or contest is governed by the provisions of this directive'. (39)

101. Thus, in general, the Utilities Directive applies not only to contracts awarded in the sphere of one of the activities expressly listed therein, but also to contracts which are entered into in the exercise of activities defined in the Utilities Directive. Consequently, where a contract awarded by a contracting entity is connected with an activity which that entity carries out in the sectors listed in the Utilities Directive, that contract is subject to the procedures laid down in that directive. (40)

102. However, the crucial question then becomes how far does that logic of 'in relation to' or 'in order to enable' reach. On the one hand, it is certainly not as narrow as suggested by Poste Italiane. On the other hand, it is not as broad as to amount to a de facto application of the contagion theory also within the Utilities Directive.

103. In my view, 'activities relating to the provisions of' under Article 13(1) of the Utilities Directive should best be understood as including all those activities that are necessary for or usually connected with the exercise of postal services. Necessary in the sense that without them, postal services could not be properly provided. However, 'relating to' in this sense would also include activities which are not, strictly speaking, necessary, but which are normally and usually connected with the provision of such types of services.

104. I would suggest including both categories, because the borderline between the two may be sometimes rather blurred. Of course, nowadays, electricity to run postal offices, cars or scooters to deliver the mail, or specific outfits making postal agents identifiable for the public, may all be classed as examples of the necessary supplies. However, already the last example might be challenged: is a special uniform for postal agents really necessary for effective delivery of postal items? It could indeed be suggested that a fancy uniform is not strictly speaking necessary for the effective delivery of postal items. A postal agent in jeans and a T-shirt can certainly do the job as well.

105. That is why 'relating to' should not only cover strictly technically necessary, but also usually connected with. Thus, activities not usually connected with the provision of postal services, such as contracting car insurance, selling newspapers or journals, or the opening of a massage corner in the lobby of a post office for that matter, are unlikely to be qualified as activities relating to the normal provision of postal services. (41)

106. Beyond that, it will certainly be a matter for the national courts to decide whether, on the facts of the particular case, the concrete supply or activity in question is usually relating to the provision of postal services or other services than postal services. The logic is to capture the package that nowadays is normally understood as constituting the proper provision of postal services.

3. Application to the present case

107. The present case concerns caretaking, reception and access control services on the premises of Poste Italiane and of other companies in that group. Do such activities fall within the scope of the Utilities Directive?

108. According to the applicants, even if they themselves are not directly postal services, the services at issue are necessary and/or connected to the exercise of the activities mentioned in Article 13 of the Utilities Directive, in so far as they enable the exercise of the activities pertaining to the universal service. The efficient operation of the premises where the universal service is provided is also ensured by the concierge and the wardens.

109. According to Poste Italiane, the activities at issue do not fall within the activities enumerated in the Utilities Directive. The activities at issue do not pertain to those services that justify the application of public law rules because they do not consist in a service including mail collection and delivery. The activities at issue are not ancillary to postal services since they are not necessary for the exercise of those services. Caretaking, reception and access control services are complementary and transversal activities with regard to all types of services provided by Poste Italiane. The premises concerned by the activities at issue are simultaneously used as administrative offices and head office for the financial services. By the same token, the services at issue are provided to companies of the whole group, thereby including those that do not provide postal services (for instance, PostePay SpA, which is specialised in payment services, digital services and mobile phones; or Poste Vita, which provides insurance services).

110. According to the European Commission, the Utilities Directive is applicable to services that are functionally linked to the services expressly covered therein. In the present case, the premises that constitute the bedrock of the services at issue are the same as those where the postal services are provided. Not only is it immaterial that those premises are also used for financial operations, but it is not necessary to establish the degree of intensity of the functional link existing between the services at issue and postal services for the purposes of deciding whether the Utilities Directive is applicable.

111. I essentially agree with the applicants and the European Commission. There is no doubt that the activities at issue fall within the scope of the Utilities Directive in so far as they are necessary for the proper exercise of postal services, and thus relating to the provision of postal services pursuant to Article 13 of the Utilities Directive.

112. First, Poste Italiane (and Poste Tutela at the time of the issuance of the contract notice) falls within the personal scope of the Utilities Directive. Although there has been an extensive discussion in the written and oral observations submitted by the parties regarding the legal nature of Poste Italiane, it is not necessary, for the purposes of the applicability of the Utilities Directive, to establish whether Poste Italiane is a ‘body governed by public law’.

113. It is sufficient to note that Poste Italiane fulfils the criteria of Article 4(2) of the Utilities Directive to be characterised as a ‘public undertaking’. Since the majority of the shares of Poste Italiane are owned by the State or State-related bodies, (42) a dominant influence of the State over Poste Italiane is to be presumed. It follows that Poste Italiane is a public undertaking within the meaning of Article 4(2) of the Utilities Directive.

114. Second, the services at issue are within the material scope of the Utilities Directive. In my view, caretaking, reception and access control on the premises of Poste Italiane would be necessary for an adequate completion of postal services. Certainly, in a similar vein to the general points above, (43) there could be a discussion on whether those specific services are, strictly speaking, necessary for the provision of postal services. (44) However, they are certainly usually connected with the provision of such services and in this sense indeed relating to them.

115. In that respect, the fact that the services at issue are not provided for only postal offices, but also for administrative offices that do not receive the public and in premises where financial or insurance services are provided, is of no relevance.

116. First, even if administrative offices do not normally receive the public — the users of postal services — the fact that policies regarding postal services are decided and implemented in those offices means that they are simply part of postal services. In a way, this is the continuation of the argument of Poste Italiane suggesting that postal services are effectively only the physical handling of postal items. Nevertheless, by necessity, postal services must also include the management and planning of those services: postal services do not happen spontaneously.

117. Second, as regards the other types of services performed by Poste Italiane, they are for their part likely to be provided on the same premises as postal services. In order to establish the absence of a functional link between the activities at issue and postal services, it should in any event be proven that those activities have been contracted out exclusively for premises that do not directly or indirectly touch upon postal services.

118. Third, Article 5(4) of the Utilities Directive does in fact foresee that there might be some overreach in cases where contracting entities choose to award a single contract (covering postal and non-postal services). However, even in such cases, that directive applies to the ensuing mixed single contract.

119. However, such an overreach is not inevitable. It is the consequence of the choice of the contracting entity to proceed in this way and to have all those services bundled into one contract. Article 6(1) indeed allows contracting entities to award separate contracts in order to avoid an undifferentiated application of the Utilities Directive to all— admittedly diverse — activities of Poste Italiane, no matter how diverse.

120. In sum, the logic of the operation of the Utilities Directive is in a way contrary to what Poste Italiane seems to be suggesting. It is indeed possible to escape the applicability of the Utilities Directive if, instead of bidding for one mixed contract applicable transversally to all the activities, including postal ones, the contracting entity chooses to award separate contracts for the purposes of each separate activity. It is nonetheless not possible to escape the applicability of the Utilities Directive by bidding for a mixed contract and then claiming that, since the directive would not apply to some parts of the contract if they were to stand alone, it does not apply to the entire contract.

V. Conclusion

121. I propose that there is no need to answer the questions referred by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy).

15 It is to be noted that, in another case pending before the Court (C-419/19, Irideos, OJ 2019 C 328, p. 5) which raises very similar questions as the present case, the contract notice in issue has not been withdrawn by Poste Italiane.

21 The contrary suggestion would lead to rather absurd consequences: since a national court has always to decide on outstanding costs, even if the object of the dispute before it fell away for whatever reason, would it then mean that a case before this Court can never be withdrawn, because there will always remain the issue of costs before the national court? Thus, irrespective of the fate of a case at the national level, would the Court remain validly seised forever?

29 The referring court also mentions Directive 2014/23 on the award of concession contracts. However, I do not see how the latter is of any relevance for the present case. In the somewhat unlikely scenario in which the activities in issue happened to be provided through a concession, the last subparagraph of Article 5(4) of the Utilities Directive provides that, in principle, 'in the case of mixed contracts containing elements of supply, works and service contracts and of concessions, the mixed contract shall be awarded in accordance with this Directive' (my emphasis).

30 Which would appear to be the understanding of the European Commission in relation to the issue of what questions of the referring court would remain relevant in spite of the contract notice being withdrawn (above, point 50).

41 Although no doubt that, certainly with regard to the latter activity, it would be nice.

42 Above, point 17 of this Opinion.

43 Above, points 101 to 103 of this Opinion.

44 But such an objection could then in fact be made with regard to any activities that would, on a reasonable construction, be normally seen as a necessary part of postal services. Certainly, postal services could be perhaps delivered without electricity (postal offices being lit by candles), without cars (postal agents can walk), or without cleaning services (piles of rubbish may not physically prevent customers from accessing a counter at a post office).

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

Judgment

1 These requests for a preliminary ruling concern, in essence, the interpretation of Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31), ('Directive 89/665'), of Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2007/66, ('Directive 92/13'), of Article 83(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), of Article 99(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243), of Articles 41 and 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter') and of the principles of legal certainty and proportionality.

2 The requests have been made in two sets of proceedings brought, first, by Hungeod Közlekedésfejlesztési, Földmérési, Út- és Vasúttervezési Kft. ('Hungeod'), Sixense Soldata ('Sixense') and Budapesti Közlekedési Zrt. (Case C-496/18), and, second, by Budapesti Közlekedési (Case C-497/18) against the Közbeszerzési Hatóság Közbeszerzési Döntőbizottság (Public Procurement Arbitration Panel of the Public Procurement Authority, Hungry; 'the Arbitration Panel') concerning the amendment of contracts in the course of being performed that were entered into following public procurement

Directive 89/665

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the ground that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

4 Article 2d of Directive 89/665, headed ‘Ineffectiveness’, was inserted by Directive 2007/66 and is worded as follows:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

(a) if the contracting authority has awarded a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union without this being permissible in accordance with Directive 2004/18/EC;

2. The consequences of a contract being considered ineffective shall be provided for by national law.’

Directive 92/13

5 Article 1 of Directive 92/13 provides:

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/17/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p 1)], decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.’

6 Article 2d of Directive 92/13, headed ‘Ineffectiveness’, was inserted by Directive 2007/66 and provides as follows:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

(a) if the contracting authority has awarded a contract without prior publication of a notice in the Official Journal of the European Union without this being permissible in accordance with Directive 2004/17/EC;

2. The consequences of a contract being considered ineffective shall be provided for by national law.’

7 Recitals 2, 25, 27 and 36 of Directive 2007/66 state:

‘(2) Directives [89/665] and [92/13] … apply only to contracts falling within the scope of Directives [2004/18] and [2004/17] as interpreted by the Court of Justice of the European Communities, whatever competitive procedure or means of calling for competition is used, including design contests, qualification systems and dynamic purchasing systems. According to the case-law of the [Court], the Member States should ensure that effective and rapid remedies are available against decisions taken by contracting authorities and contracting entities as to whether a particular contract falls within the personal and material scope of Directives [2004/18] and [2004/17].

(25) Furthermore, the need to ensure over time the legal certainty of decisions taken by contracting authorities and contracting entities requires the establishment of a reasonable minimum period of limitation on reviews seeking to establish that the contract is ineffective.

(27) As this Directive strengthens national review procedures, especially in cases of an unlawful direct award, economic operators should be encouraged to make use of these new mechanisms. For reasons of legal certainty the enforceability of the ineffectiveness of a contract is limited to a certain period. The effectiveness of these time-limits should be respected.

(36) This Directive respects fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised in particular by the [Charter]. In particular, this Directive seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter.'

8 Recitals 121 and 122 of Directive 2014/24 state:

'(121) The evaluation has shown that there is still considerable room for improvement in the application of the Union public procurement rules. With a view to a more efficient and consistent application of the rules, it is essential to get a good overview on possible structural problems and general patterns in national procurement policies, in order to address possible problems in a more targeted way. …

(122) Directive [89/665] provides for certain review procedures to be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement of Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law. Those review procedures should not be affected by this Directive. However, citizens, concerned stakeholders, organised or not, and other persons or bodies which do not have access to review procedures pursuant to Directive [89/665] do nevertheless have a legitimate interest, as taxpayers, in sound procurement procedures. They should therefore be given a possibility, otherwise than through the review system pursuant to Directive [89/665] and without it necessarily involving them being given standing before courts and tribunals, to indicate possible violations of this Directive to a competent authority or structure. …'

9 As set out in Article 83(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24:

'1. In order to effectively ensure correct and efficient implementation, Member States shall ensure that at least the tasks set out in this Article are performed by one or more authorities, bodies or structures. They shall indicate to the Commission all authorities, bodies or structures competent for those tasks.

2. Member States shall ensure that the application of public procurement rules is monitored.

10 Recitals 127 and 128 of Directive 2014/25 are, in essence, identical to recitals 121 and 122 of Directive 2014/24.

11 Article 99(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/25 provides:

‘1. In order to effectively ensure correct and efficient implementation, Member States shall make sure that at least the tasks set out in this Article are performed by one or more authorities, bodies or structures. They shall indicate to the Commission all authorities or structures competent for those tasks.

2. Member States shall ensure that the application of public procurement rules is monitored.

The 2003 Law on Public Procurement

12 Article 303(1) of the közbeszerzésekről szóló 2003. évi CXXIX. törvény (Law No CXXIX of 2003 on Public Procurement; ‘the 2003 Law on Public Procurement’) provides:

‘The parties may amend the part of the contract established on the basis of the conditions set out in the call for tenders or in the documentation relating thereto, and on the basis of the content of the tender, only where the contract, as a result of a circumstance which has arisen after the contract has been entered into – for a reason which was not foreseeable at the time when the contract was entered into – infringes the substantive legitimate expectations of one of the co-contractors.’

13 Article 306/A(2) of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement is worded as follows:

‘Any contract coming within the scope of this law shall be void where:

(a) the public procurement procedure was unlawfully disregarded at the time when that contract was entered into

14 Article 307 of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement provides:

‘(1) The contracting entity is required to draw up, in accordance with the model laid down specifically by law, a statement regarding amendments to and performance of the contract, and shall publish it by way of a notice to be included in the Közbeszerzési Értesítő [Public Procurement Journal]. That notice shall be delivered no later than 15 working days from the amendment of the contract or from the performance of the contract by both parties. In the case of a contract concluded for a period exceeding one year or for an indefinite period, a statement of the partial performance of the contract shall be drawn up annually from the date on which the contract is entered into. The obligation to provide information relating to the performance of the contract requires – if performance takes place on another date, or on dates other than those envisaged – that date of performance of the contract recognised by the contracting entity and the date when payment is made be specifically stated. The party which entered into the contract as a tenderer shall declare in the statement whether it agrees with the elements set out therein.

(3) The President of the Council on Public Procurement shall take the initiative to commence a procedure of his own motion before [the Arbitration Panel] if it is plausible that the contract was amended in breach of Article 303, or that the contract was performed in breach of Article 304 or Article 305.’

15 Article 327 of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement provides:

‘(1) The following bodies or persons may take the initiative to commence proceedings of their own motion before [the Arbitration Panel] if, in exercising their powers, they become aware of conduct or an omission which is contrary to this law:

(a) the President of the Council on Public Procurement;

(2) A procedure may be commenced of a body’s own motion before [the Arbitration Panel]:

(a) on the initiative of one of the bodies referred to in paragraph 1(a), (b) and (d) to (i) within 30 days as from the date on which that body becomes aware of the infringement or, in the case where the public procurement procedure has been disregarded, from the date on which the contract was entered into, or – if that date cannot be established – from the date on which that body becomes aware of the start of the performance of the contract by one of the parties, but at the latest within one year as from the occurrence of the infringement, or within three years in cases where the public procurement procedure has been disregarded.

16 Article 328 of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement provides:

‘(1) The President of the Council on Public Procurement shall take the initiative to commence proceedings of his own motion before [the Arbitration Panel]

(c) in the case referred to in Article 307(3).

(2) Article 327(2) to (7) shall apply to the initiative referred to in paragraph 1 above.’

17 As set out in Article 379(2) of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement:

‘The Council [on Public Procurement]

(l) shall follow attentively the amendment and performance of contracts entered into following a public procurement procedure (Article 307(4));

…’

The 2015 Law on Public Procurement

18 Article 2(8) of the közbeszerzésekről szóló 2015. évi CXLIII. törvény (Law No CXLIII of 2015 on Public Procurement; ‘the 2015 Law on Public Procurement’) provides:

‘Unless otherwise provided in this law, the provisions of the [Civil Code] shall apply to contracts concluded following a public procurement procedure.’

19 Article 148(1) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement Law is worded as follows:

‘A procedure before [the Arbitration Panel] shall be initiated upon application or on a body or person’s own motion.’

20 Article 152(1) and (2) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement provides:

‘(1) The following bodies or persons may take the initiative to commence a procedure of their own motion before [the Arbitration Panel] if, in exercising their powers, they become aware of conduct or an omission which is contrary to this law:

(a) the Közbeszerzési Hatóság Elnöke [the President of the Public Procurement Authority, Hungary];

(2) One of the bodies or persons referred to in paragraph 1 may take the initiative to commence a procedure of its own motion before [the Arbitration Panel] within 60 days as from the date on which that body becomes aware of the infringement, but

(a) at the latest within the time period of 3 years as from the occurrence of the infringement,

(b) by way of derogation from (a) above, where purchases have been made without a public procurement procedure having been organised, within a maximum of five years as from the date on which the contract was entered into, or – if that date cannot be established – as from the commencement of the performance of the contract by one of the parties, or

(c) by way of derogation from (a) and (b) above, where acquisitions have been made with financial aid, during the period for which documents must be retained as laid down specifically by law relating to the payment and use of the aid provided, but as a minimum within a period of 5 years from the occurrence of the infringement – where acquisitions have been made without a public procurement procedure having been organised, as from the date on which the contract was entered into or, if that date cannot be established, as from the commencement of the performance of the contract by one of the parties.'

21 As set out in Article 153 of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement:

'(1) The President of the Public Procurement Authority shall take the initiative to commence the procedure of his own motion before [the Arbitration Panel]

(c) if it is plausible, in the light of the result of the monitoring carried out by the Public Procurement Authority in accordance with Article 187(2)(j), or even without administrative monitoring having been carried out, that the amendment or performance of the contract has been carried out in infringement of this law, in particular if an infringement of the type referred to in Article 142(2) has been committed.

(3) Article 152(2) to (8) shall apply to the initiative referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2.'

22 Article 187(1) and (2) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement provides:

'(1) The task of the Public Procurement Authority shall be to contribute effectively, while taking into account the public interest and the interests of contracting entities and tenderers, to the development of public procurement policy, and to the emergence and generalisation of conduct that complies with public procurement law, in order to promote publicity and transparency of public spending.

The [Public Procurement] Authority

(j) shall follow attentively the amendment of contracts entered into following a public procurement procedure and, in the context of the administrative review …, performance shall also be monitored – in accordance with the detailed rules provided for specifically by law – and, inter alia, adopt the measures referred to in Article 153(1)(c) and in Article 175;

23 As set out in Article 197(1) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement:

‘The provisions of this law shall apply to contracts entered into following award procedures … or public procurement procedures which commenced after its entry into force, to competition procedures commenced after that date, and to review procedures relating thereto which have been requested, commenced or brought of an authority’s own motion, including dispute settlement procedures preceding an action. Article 139, Article 141, Article 142, Article 153(1)(c) and Article 175 shall apply to the possibility of amending, without carrying out a new public procurement procedure, contracts entered into following public procurement procedures which commenced before the entry into force of this law, and to the monitoring of amendments and the performance of contracts. The provisions of Chapter XXI shall also apply to review procedures relating to such contracts.’

Government Decree 4/2011

24 Article 1(1) of the 2007–2013 programozási időszakban az Európai Regionális Fejlesztési Alapból, az Európai Szociális Alapból és a Kohéziós Alapból származó támogatások felhasználásának rendjéről szóló 4/2011. (I. 28.) Korm. Rendelet (Government Decree 4/2011 of 28 January 2011 on the use of aid from the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund for the 2007–2013 programming period; ‘Government Decree 4/2011’) provides as follows:

‘The scope of this Regulation shall extend to (i) the assumption and implementation of commitments – whether for consideration or by way of grants – from the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund … for the 2007–2013 programming period – with the exception of aid from European Territorial Cooperation programmes; (ii) the monitoring of implementation; (iii) natural and legal persons and entities without legal personality involved in the use, payment and monitoring of the grants; and (iv) applicants, recipients and beneficiaries of grants.’

25 As set out in Article 80(3) of Government Decree 4/2011:

‘The beneficiary and the bodies involved in the payment of aid shall keep separate accounts for each project, register all the documents related to the project separately and retain them until at least 31 December 2020.’

The Civil Code

26 Article 200(2) of the Polgári Törvénykönyvről szóló 1959. évi IV. törvény (Law No IV of 1959 establishing the Civil Code) provides:

‘Contracts which breach legal provisions and contracts concluded by evading a legal provision shall be void, save where a different legal consequence is provided for by law.’

27 Article 6:95 of the Polgári törvénykönyvről szóló 2013. évi V. törvény (Law No V of 2013 establishing the Civil Code) provides:

‘Contracts which breach legal provisions and contracts concluded by evading a legal provision shall be void, save where a different legal consequence is provided for by law. Without prejudice to other legal penalties, a contract shall be void where a legal provision states so specifically or where the purpose of that provision is to prohibit the legal effect sought by means of the contract in question.’

The disputes in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Case C-496/18

28 On 30 September 2005, Budapesti Közlekedési, acting as contracting authority, published a call for tenders in the Official Journal of the European Union for the award of a public contract for the ‘acquisition of a monitoring system for the surveillance of movements of the structures and the control of noise and vibrations during the first stage of construction of Line 4 of the metro in Budapest (Hungary)’, the estimated value of which exceeded the Community thresholds and which received financial assistance from the European Union. The contract was awarded to a consortium of undertakings consisting of Hungeod and Sixense.

29 The corresponding contract was concluded on 1 March 2006.

30 On 5 October 2009, the contracting parties decided to amend the contract, claiming that unforeseeable circumstances had arisen. On 18 November 2009, a notice of that amendment of the contract was published in the Közbeszerzési Értesítő (Public Procurement Journal).

31 On 29 May 2017, the President of the Public Procurement Authority referred the matter to the Arbitration Panel, seeking, first, a declaration that the applicants in the main proceedings had committed an infringement by amending the contract in breach of Article 303(1) of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement and, second, the imposition of fines on the applicants. The President stated that he had become aware of the infringement on 30 March 2017 and referred to Article 153(3) and Article 152(2)(a) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement as the basis for his request.

32 In its decision of 3 August 2017, the Arbitration Panel found, at the outset, that the procedural provisions of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement were applicable in the present instance, since, although that law did not enter into force until 1 November 2015 and, in principle, concerns only contracts entered into after that date, it applies, by virtue of the transitional provisions contained in Article 197(1) thereof, to the review of amendments to contracts made before it entered into force. The Arbitration Panel pointed out that the project carried out under the contract at issue in the main proceedings received EU funding and that, therefore, in accordance with Article 80(3) of Government Decree 4/2011, the period for a body or person to initiate a procedure of its own motion expires on 31 December 2020.

33 On the merits, after finding that there had been an infringement of Article 303 of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement, the Arbitration Panel ordered Budapesti Közlekedési to pay a fine of HUF 25 000 000 (approximately EUR 81 275) and Hungeod and Sixense to pay, jointly and severally, a fine of HUF 5 000 000 (approximately EUR 16 255).

34 The applicants in the main proceedings brought an action against the Arbitration Panel’s decision before the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court, Hungary).

35 The referring court is uncertain as to the requirements which arise from EU law, more specifically from the principle of legal certainty, in a situation where new legislation of a Member State, such as the 2015 Law on Public Procurement, authorises, in respect of a public contract concluded before that legislation entered into force, the monitoring authority to initiate of its own motion, notwithstanding the expiry of the limitation periods laid down by previous national legislation, an investigation into public procurement infringements committed before the new legislation entered into force in order to have the Arbitration Panel establish that an infringement has been committed and to impose a penalty.

36 The referring court states that, unlike cases in which the Court has been called upon to rule on time limits for bringing a review in public procurement procedures, Case C-496/18 concerns the right of a monitoring authority to initiate a review in the interest of the objective protection of rights. It is uncertain as to the application in such a situation of the principles of EU law, such as those of legal certainty or effectiveness.

37 The referring court also refers to the content of Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 and questions whether there are limits on the powers conferred on the Member States in relation to the prerogatives of the monitoring authorities and whether the requirements of EU law concerning the protection of persons with an interest in obtaining a particular contract also hold good in that context.

38 It expresses doubts as to the compatibility with EU law of the power provided for, as a transitional measure, in Article 197(1) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement to review contractual amendments which were made before that law entered into force.

39 The referring court is uncertain as to whether it is possible to apply the rule that, in the case of a project financed by EU funds, the time limit for bringing a review is linked to the period for which documents are to be retained, since that rule was introduced by the 2015 Law on Public Procurement.

40 It wishes to know if it is relevant, for the purposes of determining the above questions of law, to ascertain the legal, regulatory, technical or organisational deficiencies or other obstacles that prevented an investigation from being conducted into the infringement of public procurement rules at the time when the infringement took place.

41 The referring court points out that recitals 25 and 27 of Directive 2007/66 emphasise the requirement of legal certainty only as regards reviews seeking to establish that the contract is ineffective and not as regards actions seeking to establish, and impose penalties in respect of, an infringement.

42 In those circumstances, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 41(1) and Article 47 of the [Charter], recitals 2, 25, 27 and 36 of Directive [2007/66], Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive [92/13] and, in this context, the principle of legal certainty, as a general principle of EU law, and the requirement for effective and rapid remedies against decisions by contracting authorities in public procurement cases, be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State which, in relation to public procurement contracts entered into before that legislation came into force, provides a general authorisation that enables the competent (monitoring) authority created by that legislation, after the periods established in the Member State’s previous legislation for bringing an action for review of public procurement infringements committed prior to the entry into force of the new legislation have expired but within the time period established in the new legislation, to commence proceedings to investigate a specific public procurement infringement and to rule on the substance, leading to a ruling that the infringement did take place, the imposition of a public procurement penalty, and the application of the consequences of the voiding of the public contract?

(2) Can the legal rules and principles referred to in Question 1 — and also the effective exercise of the (subjective and personal) right of review enjoyed by parties with an interest in the award of a public contract — be applied to the right to commence and conduct review proceedings conferred on the (monitoring) authorities created by the law of the Member State, which have the power to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest?

(3) Does Article 99(1) and (2) of Directive [2014/25] mean that, in order to defend EU financial interests in the field of public procurement, the law of the Member State may, through the adoption of new legislation, confer on the (monitoring) authorities which have power under the law of the Member State to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest, a general power to investigate public procurement infringements committed before the entry into force of the legislation in question and to commence and conduct proceedings, even where the time periods established under the previous legislation have expired?

(4) If — having regard to the legal rules and principles referred to in Question 1 — the (monitoring) authorities’ power of investigation described in Questions 1 and 3 is held to be compatible with EU law, is any relevance to be ascribed to the legal, regulatory, technical or organisational deficiencies or other obstacles that prevented the public procurement infringement from being investigated at the time when the infringement took place?

(5) Even if, in the light of the above principles, the (monitoring) authorities which are authorised by the law of the Member State to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest may be granted the power referred to in Questions 1 to 4, must Article 41(1) and Article 47 of the [Charter], recitals 2, 25, 27 and 36 of Directive [2007/66], Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive [92/13] and, in this context, the principle of legal certainty, as a general principle of EU law, and the requirement for effective and rapid remedies against decisions by contracting authorities in public procurement cases, and the proportionality principle, be interpreted as meaning that the national courts may assess whether the period of time that has elapsed between the occurrence of the infringement, the expiry of the period previously established for bringing an action for review, and the commencement of the proceedings to investigate the infringement, is reasonable and proportionate, and may use this as a basis for determining the legal consequences of the nullity of the contested decision or other consequences established by the law of the Member State?'

43 On 3 January 2009, Budapesti Közlekedési published, in its capacity as contracting authority, a call for tenders in the Official Journal of the European Union with a view to awarding a public contract for 'the provision of services requiring expertise in relation to the management of the DBR project during the first stage of construction of metro Line 4. 7th part: Risk management expert', the estimated value of which exceeded the Community thresholds and which received financial assistance from the European Union. The contract was awarded to Matrics Consults Ltd, which is established in the United Kingdom.

44 The corresponding contract was concluded on 14 May 2009. It was terminated on 16 November 2011 by Budapesti Közlekedési with effect from 31 December 2011.

45 On 30 May 2017, the President of the Public Procurement Authority referred the matter to the Arbitration Panel, seeking, first, a declaration that Budapesti Közlekedési and Matrics Consults had committed infringements and, second, the imposition on them of fines. The President stated that, although the parties to the contract had not amended it in writing, they had, as a result of their conduct when paying invoices and issuing certificates of performance, departed from the payment conditions defined at the time of the tender submission and included in the contract to such an extent that those changes had to be regarded as an amendment to the contract. Accordingly, the President of the Public Procurement Authority took the view that the parties had infringed Article 303(1) of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement. He stated that he had become aware of the infringement on 31 March 2017, the infringement being deemed to have taken place on 8 February 2010.

46 In its decision of 18 August 2017, the Arbitration Panel found, at the outset, that the procedural provisions of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement were applicable in the present instance, since, although that law did not enter into force until 1 November 2015 and, in principle, concerns only contracts concluded after that date, it applies, by virtue of the transitional provisions contained in Article 197(1) thereof, to the review of amendments to contracts made before the date on which it entered into force.

47 On the merits, the Arbitration Panel found that there had been an infringement of Article 303 of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement and ordered Budapesti Közlekedési to pay a fine of HUF 27 000 000 (approximately EUR 88 938) and Matrics Consults to pay a fine of HUF 13 000 000 (approximately EUR 42 822).

48 Budapesti Közlekedési and Matrics Consults brought an action against the Arbitration Panel's decision before the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court).

49 The referring court sets out considerations which are similar to those in Case C-496/18, as set out in paragraphs 35 to 41 of the present judgment.

50 In those circumstances, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Must Article 41(1) and Article 47 of the [Charter], recitals 2, 25, 27 and 36 of Directive [2007/66], Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive [89/665] and, in this context, the principle of legal certainty, as a general principle of EU law, and the requirement for effective and rapid remedies against decisions by contracting authorities in public procurement cases, be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State which, in relation to public procurement contracts entered into before that legislation came into force, provides a general authorisation that enables the competent (monitoring) authority created by that legislation, after the periods established in the Member State's previous legislation for bringing an action for review of public procurement infringements committed prior to the entry into force of the new legislation have expired but within the time period established in the new legislation, to commence proceedings to investigate a specific public procurement infringement and to rule on the substance, leading to a ruling that the infringement did take place, the imposition of a public procurement penalty, and the application of the consequences of the voiding of the public contract?

(2) Can the legal rules and principles referred to in Question 1 — and also the effective exercise of the (subjective and personal) right of review enjoyed by parties with an interest in the award of a public contract — be applied to the right to commence and conduct review proceedings conferred on the (monitoring) authorities created by the law of the Member State, which have the power to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest?

(3) Does Article 83(1) and (2) of Directive [2014/24] mean that, in order to defend EU financial interests in the field of public procurement, the law of the Member State may, through the adoption of new legislation, confer on the (monitoring) authorities which have power under the law of the Member State to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest, a general power to investigate public procurement infringements committed before the entry into force of the legislation in question and to commence and conduct proceedings, even where the time periods established under the previous legislation have expired?

(4) If — having regard to the legal rules and principles referred to in Question 1 — the (monitoring) authorities' power of investigation described in Questions 1 and 3 is held to be compatible with EU law, is any relevance to be ascribed to the legal, regulatory, technical or organisational deficiencies or other obstacles that prevented the public procurement infringement from being investigated at the time when the infringement took place?

(5) Even if, in the light of the above principles, the (monitoring) authorities which are authorised by the law of the Member State to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest may be granted the power referred to in Questions 1 to 4, must Article 41(1) and Article 47 of the [Charter], recitals 2, 25, 27 and 36 of Directive [2007/66], Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive [89/665] and, in this context, the principle of legal certainty, as a general principle of EU law, and the requirement for effective and rapid remedies against decisions by contracting authorities in public procurement cases, and the proportionality principle, be interpreted as meaning that the national courts may assess whether the period of time that has elapsed between the occurrence of the infringement, the expiry of the period previously established for bringing an action for review, and the commencement of the proceedings to investigate the infringement, is reasonable and proportionate, and may use this as a basis for determining the legal consequences of the nullity of the contested decision or other consequences established by the law of the Member State?'

51 By decision of the President of the Court of 18 September 2018, Cases C-496/18 and C-497/18 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedure and of the judgment.

Admissibility of the requests for a preliminary ruling

52 The President of the Public Procurement Authority and the Hungarian Government take the view that the requests for a preliminary ruling are inadmissible on the ground that the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings, specifically Article 303 of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement and Article 197 of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement, does not come within the scope of EU law.

53 In that regard, it should be noted that, according to settled case-law, questions on the interpretation of EU law referred by a national court in the factual and legislative context which that court is responsible for defining, and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court of Justice to determine, enjoy a presumption of relevance. Where such questions concern the interpretation of EU law, the Court is, in principle, bound to give a ruling (see, to that effect, judgment of 17 October 2019, Comida paralela 12, C-579/18, EU:C:2019:875, paragraph 18 and the case-law cited).

54 Thus, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case, both the need for a preliminary ruling in order for it to deliver judgment, and the relevance of the questions submitted to the Court (judgment of 17 October 2019, Comida paralela 12, C-579/18, EU:C:2019:875, paragraph 19 and the case-law cited).

55 However, where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it, it may reject the request for a preliminary ruling as inadmissible (judgment of 17 October 2019, Comida paralela 12, C-579/18, EU:C:2019:875, paragraph 20 and the case-law cited).

56 In the present cases, by the questions which it has referred, the referring court asks the Court whether various provisions of EU law, be they set out in the Charter, in Directives 89/665 and 92/13 relating to review procedures in the field of public procurement, or in Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25 on the award of public contracts, and certain general principles of EU law, in particular those of legal certainty and proportionality, preclude the possibility, provided for by Hungarian legislation, of a national monitoring authority being authorised to initiate of its own motion, under new legislation, a procedure for the review of amendments made to a public contract so that the monitoring authority can impose penalties on the contracting parties and the contractual amendments may be set aside by the national court.

57 It is apparent from the orders for reference that, when they were entered into, the contracts that were the subject of the amendments at issue in the main proceedings came within the scope of EU law, since the corresponding public contracts exceeded the thresholds laid down by the relevant EU legislation.

58 Furthermore, it is, prima facie, particularly necessary for the referring court to be provided with clarification as to whether the directives or the general principles of EU law which it invokes preclude procedures that can be initiated by an authority of its own motion, such as the procedure at issue in the main proceedings.

59 Lastly, there is nothing in the documents before the Court to suggest that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the subject matter of the disputes in the main proceedings or their purpose, or that the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions referred.

60 It follows from the foregoing that the requests for a preliminary ruling are admissible.

Consideration of the questions referred

Preliminary observations

61 According to the referring court, the outcome of the disputes in the main proceedings depends on whether the directives and general principles of EU law, referred to in paragraph 56 of the present judgment, preclude national legislation under which a national monitoring authority may initiate, of its own motion, a review procedure in respect of amendments made to public contracts, even though those amendments took place under previous legislation and the limitation period laid down by that legislation had already expired as at the date on which the monitoring authority initiated the procedure of its own motion.

62 In the first place, it should be noted that the provisions of the Charter invoked by the referring court are not relevant to a resolution of the disputes in the main proceedings.

63 It is clear from the wording of Article 41 of the Charter that it is addressed not to the Member States but solely to the institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the European Union (see, to that effect, judgments of 21 December 2011, Cicala, C-482/10, EU:C:2011:868, paragraph 28, and of 9 March 2017, Doux, C-141/15, EU:C:2017:188, paragraph 60).

64 In addition, it should be noted that, when defining the detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers adversely affected by decisions of contracting authorities, the Member States are required to take care to ensure that the rights conferred on private individuals by EU law, in particular the right to an effective remedy and the right to a fair hearing, enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter, are not undermined (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraphs 43 to 45, and order of 14 February 2019, Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco, C-54/18, EU:C:2019:118, paragraph 30).

65 However, there is nothing in the documents before the Court to suggest that the procedure initiated by an authority of its own motion for the review of infringements of public procurement rules undermines the right to an effective remedy or the right to a fair hearing.

66 In the second place, as the various questions referred overlap in several respects, it is appropriate for them to be regrouped and reformulated in order to provide the referring court with the most precise answers possible.

67 Accordingly, it must be found that the referring court is asking, in essence, first, by its second questions, whether recitals 25 and 27 of Directive 2007/66, Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 92/13, Article 83(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/25 require the Member States to adopt, or preclude them from adopting, legislation under which a monitoring authority may initiate of its own motion, on grounds of the protection of the European Union's financial interests, a procedure for the review of infringements of public procurement rules, second, by its first, third and fourth questions, whether the general principle of legal certainty precludes, in a review procedure initiated by a monitoring authority of its own motion, on grounds of protection of the European Union's financial interests, national legislation from providing that, in order to review the legality of amendments to public contracts, such a procedure must be brought within the limitation period set out in that national legislation, even where the limitation period laid down by previous legislation applicable on the date of the amendments has expired, and, third, by its fifth questions, if the first, third and fourth questions are answered in the negative, whether the principle of proportionality precludes a national court from being able to assess the reasonableness and proportionality of the periods that have elapsed between the commission of the infringement, the expiry of the previous limitation period and the procedure initiated in order to investigate the infringement, and from being able to draw the necessary conclusions as to the validity of the contested administrative decision, or any other legal consequence provided for by the law of the Member State.

The second questions

68 By its second questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether recitals 25 and 27 of Directive 2007/66, Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 92/13, Article 83(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/25 require the Member States to adopt, or preclude them from adopting, legislation under which a monitoring authority may initiate of its own motion, on grounds of protection of the European Union's financial interests, a review procedure in order to monitor infringements of public procurement rules.

69 In the first place, although the Hungarian Government submits that the recitals of an EU act are not binding, it must be pointed out that the operative part of an act is indissociably linked to the statement of reasons for it, with the result that, when it has to be interpreted, account must be taken of the reasons which led to its adoption (judgments of 27 June 2000, Commission v Portugal, C-404/97, EU:C:2000:345, paragraph 41, and of 4 December 2019, Consorzio Tutela Aceto Balsamico di Modena, C-432/18, EU:C:2019:1045, paragraph 29).

70 It follows that Directive 2007/66 must be interpreted in the light of recitals 25 and 27 of that directive.

71 In the second place, it should be pointed out that Directives 89/665 and 92/13, in particular Article 1(3) of those directives, do indeed merely provide that the Member States are to ensure that review procedures are available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 October 2010, Symvoulio Apochetefseon Lefkosias, C-570/08, EU:C:2010:621, paragraph 37).

72 Those provisions are intended to protect economic operators against arbitrary behaviour on the part of contracting authorities and thus seek to ensure the existence, in all Member States, of effective remedies, so as to ensure the effective application of the EU rules on the award of public contracts, in particular at a stage where infringements can still be rectified (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 41).

73 Nonetheless, although Directives 89/665 and 92/13 require that remedies should be available to undertakings having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and which have been or risk being harmed by an alleged infringement, Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 cannot be regarded, as the Advocate General observes in point 63 of his Opinion, as carrying out a complete harmonisation and, therefore, as envisaging all possible remedies in public procurement matters.

74 Consequently, those provisions must be interpreted as neither requiring Member States to provide for, nor precluding them from providing for, the existence of remedies in favour of national monitoring authorities so that those authorities can, in order to ensure the protection of the European Union's financial interests, obtain a declaration that infringements of public procurement rules have occurred.

75 Neither recitals 25 and 27 nor Articles 1 and 2 of Directive 2007/66, which inserted Article 2d into Directives 89/665 and 92/13, respectively, undermine such an interpretation.

76 By providing, in essence, that Member States are to ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body that is independent of the contracting authority, Article 2d of Directive 89/665 and Article 2d of Directive 92/13 have served only to strengthen the review procedures which those directives require the Member States to implement, that is to say, review procedures available to undertakings having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and which have been or risk being harmed by an alleged infringement.

77 In the third place, Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25, which are drafted in identical terms, cannot be interpreted as requiring Member States to provide for, or as precluding them from providing for, a mechanism for a review brought by an authority of its own motion in the public interest, such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

78 In that regard, it must be stated that Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 – further context for which is given, respectively, in recitals 121 and 122 of the former directive and in recitals 127 and 128 of the latter directive – appear in Title IV, headed 'Governance', of each of those directives.

79 Thus, recital 121 of Directive 2014/24 and recital 127 of Directive 2014/25 merely state that those provisions seek to ensure a 'good overview of possible structural problems and general patterns in national procurement policies, in order to address possible problems in a more targeted way'.

80 Recital 122 of Directive 2014/24 and recital 128 of Directive 2014/25 state that the review procedures provided by Directives 89/665 and 92/13, respectively, should not be affected by Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25. Those recitals go on to state that citizens, concerned stakeholders and other persons or bodies which do not have access to those review procedures have a legitimate interest, as taxpayers, in sound procurement procedures, and should therefore be given a possibility, otherwise than through the review system pursuant to Directives 89/665 and 92/13 and without it necessarily involving them being given standing before courts and tribunals, to indicate possible breaches of Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25 to a competent authority or structure.

81 In that context, Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 each provide, in their respective paragraphs 1, that, in order effectively to ensure correct and efficient implementation of those directives, Member States are to ensure that at least the tasks set out in those articles are performed by one or more authorities, bodies or structures and, in their respective paragraphs 2, that Member States are to ensure that the application of public procurement rules is monitored.

82 In so doing, those provisions contain minimum requirements pursuant to which the Member States are obliged to establish mechanisms for monitoring the application of public procurement rules.

83 In that context, it must be noted that those provisions do not prohibit the Member States from providing for the existence of review procedures in favour of national monitoring authorities which allow those authorities to obtain a declaration of their own motion that there have been infringements of public procurement rules in order to ensure the protection of the European Union's financial interests in the field of public procurement. On the contrary, as the Advocate General states in points 72 and 73 of his Opinion, a procedure of that nature is one of the possible expressions of the new role ascribed to national monitoring authorities by Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and by Article 99 of Directive 2014/25.

84 It follows from the foregoing that the various provisions and recitals examined in paragraphs 69 to 83 of the present judgment neither require Member States to allow, nor preclude them from allowing, a monitoring authority to initiate of its own motion, on grounds of protection of the European Union's financial interests in the field of public procurement, a review procedure in order to monitor infringements of public procurement rules.

85 However, it should be noted that, where such an automatic review procedure is provided for, it comes within the scope of EU law since the public contracts which are the subject of such a review come within the material scope of the public procurement directives.

86 Accordingly, such an automatic review procedure must comply with EU law, including the general principles of EU law, of which the general principle of legal certainty forms part.

87 Consequently, the answer to the second questions referred is that recitals 25 and 27 of Directive 2007/66, Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 92/13, Article 83(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/25 must be interpreted as neither requiring Member States to adopt, nor as precluding them from adopting, legislation under which a monitoring authority may initiate of its own motion, on grounds of protection of the European Union's financial interests, a review procedure in order to monitor infringements of public procurement rules. However, where provision is made for such a procedure, it comes within the scope of EU law since the public contracts which are the subject of such a review come within the material scope of the public procurement directives and it must therefore comply with EU law, including the general principles of EU law, of which the general principle of legal certainty forms part.

The first, third and fourth questions

88 By its first, third and fourth questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the general principle of legal certainty precludes, in the context of a review procedure initiated by a monitoring authority of its own motion on grounds of protection of the European Union's financial interests, new national legislation from providing that, in order to review the legality of amendments to public contracts, such a procedure must be initiated within the limitation period which is laid down in that legislation, even though the limitation period laid down by previous legislation applicable at the date of those amendments has expired.

89 At the outset, it should be noted that EU law prohibits only substantial amendments to a public contract corresponding to amendments to the provisions of a public contract during its currency which constitute a new award of a contract, within the meaning of Directive 2014/24, on the ground that they are materially different in character from the original contract and, therefore, such as to demonstrate the parties' intention to renegotiate its essential terms (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 June 2008, pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351, paragraph 34, and of 29 April 2010, Commission v Germany, C-160/08, EU:C:2010:230, paragraph 99).

90 While, under EU law, the principle of legal certainty is binding on every national authority, that is so only when that authority is responsible for applying EU law (judgments of 17 July 2008, ASM Brescia, C-347/06, EU:C:2008:416, paragraph 65, and of 21 March 2019, Unareti, C-702/17, EU:C:2019:233, paragraph 34).

91 As is clear from paragraph 85 of the present judgment, where a national monitoring authority initiates of its own motion a review procedure in respect of amendments made to a public contract which is in the course of being performed and which comes within the scope of EU public procurement rules, such a review also comes within the scope of EU law.

92 It is therefore necessary to examine whether such a review, initiated by an authority of its own motion in order to have a penalty imposed on contracting parties which have unlawfully amended the contract binding them, or even to obtain a declaration that the contract is ineffective on that ground, complies with the principle of legal certainty where the new national legislation which makes provision for that review allows the limitation periods to be reopened in respect of the amendments made, even though those amendments took place while previous legislation was in force and the limitation period provided for by that previous legislation had already expired on the date on which the review procedure was initiated.

93 In that regard, the principle of legal certainty requires, in particular, that rules of law be clear, precise and predictable in their effects, in particular where they may have negative consequences for individuals and undertakings (judgments of 17 July 2008, ASM Brescia, C-347/06, EU:C:2008:416, paragraph 69, and of 17 December 2015, X-Steuerberatungsgesellschaft, C-342/14, EU:C:2015:827, paragraph 59).

94 It must also be borne in mind that, while the principle of legal certainty precludes rules from being applied retroactively, that is to say, to a situation which existed before those rules entered into force, and irrespective of whether such application might produce favourable or unfavourable effects for the person concerned, the same principle requires that any factual situation should normally, in the absence of any express contrary provision, be examined in the light of the legal rules existing at the time when the situation obtained, the new rules thus being valid only for the future and also applying, save for derogation, to the future effects of situations which came about during the period of validity of the old law (see, to that effect, judgments of 3 September 2015, A2A, C-89/14, EU:C:2015:537, paragraph 37, and of 26 May 2016, Județul Neamț and Județul Bacău, C-260/14 and C-261/14, EU:C:2016:360, paragraph 55).

95 Furthermore, as regards limitation periods specifically, it is clear from the Court's case-law that, in order to fulfil their function of ensuring legal certainty, limitation periods must be fixed in advance (see, to that effect, judgments of 15 July 1970, ACF Chemiefarma v Commission, 41/69, EU:C:1970:71, paragraph 19, and of 5 May 2011, Ze Fu Fleischhandel and Vion Trading, C-201/10 and C-202/10, EU:C:2011:282, paragraph 52) and be sufficiently foreseeable (see, to that effect, judgments of 5 May 2011, Ze Fu Fleischhandel and Vion Trading, C-201/10 and C-202/10, EU:C:2011:282, paragraph 34, and of 17 September 2014, Cruz & Companhia, C-341/13, EU:C:2014:2230, paragraph 58).

96 In the present cases, it is clear from the documents before the Court that, having regard to the dates of the amendments to the public contracts at issue in the main proceedings, Article 327(2)(a) of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement was applicable. The time limit afforded by that provision to the President of the Council on Public Procurement for initiating of his own motion a procedure before the Arbitration Panel in respect of those amendments had already passed several years prior to the date on which the 2015 Law on Public Procurement entered into force, this, however, being a matter which the referring court will have to verify.

97 Accordingly, by allowing procedures to be initiated by an authority of its own motion with regard to amendments made to public contracts where those procedures were time-barred under the relevant provisions of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement applicable to those amendments, Article 197(1) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement is not intended to cover existing legal situations, but is a provision with retroactive effect.

98 As Budapesti Közlekedési and the Commission have stated, that legislation authorises the authority competent to initiate such a procedure to reopen the limitation period even though that period had expired while the previous legislation was in force.

99 It is true that EU law exceptionally allows an act to be recognised as having retroactive effect when the purpose to be attained so demands and when the legitimate expectations of the persons concerned are duly respected (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 July 2004, Gerekens and Procola, C-459/02, EU:C:2004:454, paragraph 24).

100 However, the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations precludes amendments to national legislation which allow a national monitoring authority to initiate a review procedure even though the limitation period provided for by previous legislation, which was applicable on the date of those amendments, has expired.

101 Lastly, the considerations set out in paragraphs 90 to 100 of the present judgment cannot be called into question by the fact that the 2015 Law on Public Procurement seeks to ensure the protection of the European Union's financial interests in relation to public procurement and to mitigate the legal, technical or organisational deficiencies which allegedly resulted from the application of the previous legislation.

102 Consequently, the answer to the first, third and fourth questions is that the general principle of legal certainty precludes, in a review procedure initiated by a monitoring authority of its own motion on grounds of protection of the European Union's financial interests, new national legislation from providing that, in order to review the legality of amendments to public contracts, such a procedure must be initiated within the limitation period laid down in the new legislation, even though the limitation period provided for by the previous legislation, which was applicable on the date of those amendments, has expired.

The fifth questions

103 By its fifth questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether, in the event that the first, third and fourth questions are answered in the negative, the principle of proportionality precludes a national court from being able to assess the reasonableness and proportionality of the periods that have elapsed between the commission of the infringement, the expiry of the previous limitation periods and the procedure initiated in order to investigate the infringement, and from being able to draw conclusions as to the validity of the contested administrative decision or any other legal consequence provided for by the law of the Member State.

104 In the light of the answer given to the first, third and fourth questions, there is no need to answer the fifth questions.

Costs

105 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the actions pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Recitals 25 and 27 of Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665/EEC and 92/13/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts, Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66, Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2007/66, Article 83(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, and Article 99(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC must be interpreted as neither requiring Member States to adopt, nor as precluding them from adopting, legislation under which a monitoring authority may initiate of its own motion, on grounds of protection of the European Union's financial interests, a review procedure in order to monitor infringements of public procurement rules. However, where provision is made for such a procedure, it comes within the scope of EU law since the public contracts which are the subject of such a review come within the material scope of the public procurement directives and it must therefore comply with EU law, including its general principles, of which the general principle of legal certainty forms part.

2. The general principle of legal certainty precludes, in a review procedure initiated by a monitoring authority of its own motion on grounds of protection of the European Union's financial interests, new national legislation from providing that, in order to review the legality of amendments to public contracts, such a procedure must be initiated within the limitation period laid down in the new legislation, even though the limitation period provided for by the previous legislation, which was applicable on the date of those amendments, has expired.

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Modifications of public contracts — Remedies Directives — Review initiated ex officio by a public authority of an alleged infringement of public procurement rules — Time limits for the initiation of a review — Expiry of time limits under the national legislation in force at the time of the alleged infringement — Ex officio review initiated under new legislation — Imposition of fines on the contracting authority and on the tenderers — Principles of legal certainty and non-retroactivity — Article 83 of Directive 2014/24/EU and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25/EU — Protection of the financial interests of the Union)

I. Introduction

1. Budapesti Közlekedési Zrt. (‘the contracting authority’) concluded two public contracts, in 2006 and in 2009, in relation to the construction of Line 4 of the Budapest Metro. In 2017, the Közbeszerzési Hatóság Elnöke (President of the Public Procurement Authority; ‘the President of the PPA’) initiated ex officio reviews, pursuant to national provisions adopted in 2015, of modifications made to those contracts in 2009 and 2010 respectively. Following those reviews, the Közbeszerzési Döntőbizottság (Public Procurement Arbitration Panel; ‘the Arbitration Panel’) imposed fines on the contracting authority and on the tenderers.

2. The key question raised by these cases can be summarised as follows: does EU law permit reviews of modifications of public contracts to be initiated ex officio by public authorities after the expiry of the time limits laid down for that purpose by the national legislation in force at the time of the modifications, when such reviews lead, years after the modifications occurred, to the imposition of sanctions on both parties to the contracts?

3. In my view, EU law neither requires nor prevents ex officio reviews of public contracts or modifications to such contracts. However, the EU law principle of legal certainty bars national public authorities from initiating such reviews once the applicable time limits have expired.

II. Legal framework

1. Directive 89/665 and Directive 92/13, as amended by Directive 2007/66

4. Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (2) and Article 1 of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, (3) both as amended by Directive 2007/66, (4) provide that, within their respective scopes of application:

> Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that … decisions taken by contracting [authorities/entities] may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.
> 3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

5. In addition, recital 25 of Directive 2007/66 reads as follows:

> '… the need to ensure over time the legal certainty of decisions taken by contracting authorities and contracting entities requires the establishment of a reasonable minimum period of limitation on reviews seeking to establish that the contract is ineffective.'

6. Furthermore, recital 27 of Directive 2007/66 states that '… for reasons of legal certainty the enforceability of the ineffectiveness of a contract is limited to a certain period. The effectiveness of these time limits should be respected'.

2. Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25

7. Recital 122 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (5) and recital 128 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (6) state that the review procedures provided for by Directives 89/665 and 92/13 respectively 'should not be affected by' those directives. However, 'citizens, concerned stakeholders, organised or not, and other persons or bodies which do not have access to review procedures pursuant to [either of those directives] do nevertheless have a legitimate interest, as taxpayers, in sound procurement procedures. They should therefore be given a possibility, otherwise than through the review system pursuant to [those directives] and without it necessarily involving them being given standing before courts and tribunals, to indicate possible violations of [those directives] to a competent authority or structure. So as not to duplicate existing authorities or structures, Member States should be able to provide for recourse to general monitoring authorities or structures, sectoral oversight bodies, municipal oversight authorities, competition authorities, the ombudsman or national auditing authorities'.

8. Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25, which are entitled 'Enforcement' and which fall within Title IV 'Governance' provide that:

2. Member States shall ensure that the application of public procurement rules is monitored.

Where monitoring authorities or structures identify by their own initiative or upon the receipt of information specific violations or systemic problems, they shall be empowered to indicate those problems to national auditing authorities, courts or tribunals or other appropriate authorities or structures, such as the ombudsman, national parliaments or committees thereof.

…’

B. Hungarian law

1. The 2003 Law on Public Procurement

9. Article 303(1) of the közbeszerzésekről szóló 2003. évi CXXIX. törvény (Law No CXXIX of 2003 on Public Procurement; ‘the 2003 Law on Public Procurement’) reads as follows:

‘The parties may amend the part of the contract established on the basis of the conditions set out in the call for tenders or in the documentation relating thereto, and on the basis of the content of the tender, only where the contract, as a result of a circumstance which has arisen after the contract has been entered into – for a reason which was not foreseeable at the time the contract was entered into – infringes the substantive legitimate expectations of one of the co-contractors.’

10. Article 306/A is worded as follows:

‘(1) Any contract falling within the scope of this law shall be void where

(a) the public procurement procedure was unlawfully disregarded at the time said contract was entered into …

…’

11. By virtue of Article 307(3), ‘the Közbeszerzések Tanácsának elnöke [(President of the Council on Public Procurement)] shall take the initiative to commence a procedure of his own motion before [the Arbitration Panel] if it is plausible that the amendment of the contract was carried out in breach of Article 303 …’.

12. Article 327 provides that:

‘(1) The following bodies or persons may take the initiative to commence proceedings of their own motion before [the Arbitration Panel] if, in exercising their powers, they become aware of conduct or an omission which is contrary to this law:

(a) the President of the Council on Public Procurement;

(2) A procedure may be commenced of a body’s own motion before [the Arbitration Panel]:

(a) on the initiative of one of the bodies referred to in paragraph 1(a), (b) and (d) to (i) within 30 days as from the date on which that body becomes aware of the infringement or, in the case where the public procurement procedure has been disregarded, from the date on which the contract was entered into, or — if that date cannot be established — from the date on which that body becomes aware of the start of the execution of the contract by one of the parties, but at the latest within 1 year as from the occurrence of the infringement, or within 3 years in cases where the public procurement procedure has been disregarded,

13. Under Article 328(1):

‘The President of the Council on Public Procurement shall take the initiative to commence a procedure of his own motion before [the Arbitration Panel]

(c) in the case referred to in Article 307(3).’

14. Pursuant to Article 379(2):

‘The Council [on Public Procurement] …

(l) shall follow attentively the amendment and execution of contracts entered into following a public procurement procedure (Article 307(4)).’

2. The 2015 Law on Public Procurement

15. Article 152 of the közbeszerzésekről szóló 2015. évi CXLIII. törvény (Law No CXLIII of 2015 on Public Procurement; ‘the 2015 Law on Public Procurement’) provides that:

‘(1) The following bodies or persons may take the initiative to commence proceedings of their own motion before [the Arbitration Panel] if, in exercising their powers, they become aware of conduct or an omission which is contrary to this law:

(a) [the President of the PPA];

(2) One of the bodies referred to in paragraph 1 may take the initiative to commence a procedure of its own motion before [the Arbitration Panel] within 60 days as from the date on which that body becomes aware of the infringement, but

(a) at the latest within the time period of 3 years as from the occurrence of the infringement,

(b) by way of derogation from (a) above, where purchases have been made without a public procurement procedure having been organised, within a maximum of 5 years as from the date on which the contract was entered into, or — if that date cannot be established — as from the commencement of the execution of the contract by one of the parties, or

(c) by way of derogation from (a) and (b) above, where acquisitions have been made as a result of aid, for the duration of the conservation of documents laid down specifically by law relating to the payment and use of the aid considered, but as a minimum within a time period of 5 years as from the occurrence of the infringement — where acquisitions have been made without a public procurement procedure having been organised, as from the date the contract was entered into or, if that date cannot be established, as from the commencement of the execution of the contract by one of the parties.

16. Article 153(1) is worded as follows:

(c) if it is plausible, in the light of the result of the monitoring carried out by the Public Procurement Authority in accordance with Article 187(2)(j), or even without administrative monitoring having been carried out, that the amendment or execution of the contract has been carried out in infringement of this law, in particular if an infringement of the type referred to in Article 142(2) has been committed …

…’

17. Article 187 provides that:

(2) The [Public Procurement] Authority …

(j) shall follow attentively the amendment of contracts entered into following a public procurement procedure and, in the context of the administrative review pursuant to the [közigazgatási hatósági eljárás és szolgáltatás általános szabályairól 2004. évi CXL. törvény (Law No CXL of 2004 laying down general provisions on administrative services and procedure)] execution shall also be monitored — in accordance with the detailed rules provided for specifically by law — and, inter alia, adopt the measures referred to in Article 153(1)(c) and Article 175;

18. By virtue of Article 197(1):

‘The provisions of this law shall apply to contracts entered into following procedures for the award [of concessions] or public procurement procedures which commenced after its entry into force, to competition procedures commenced after that date, as well as to review procedures relating thereto which have been requested, commenced or brought of an authority’s own motion, including dispute settlement procedures preceding an action. Articles 139, 141, 142, 153(1)(c) and 175 shall apply to the possibility of amending, without carrying out a new public procurement procedure, contracts entered into following public procurement procedures which commenced before the entry into force of this law, and to the monitoring of amendments and the execution of contracts. Moreover, the provisions of Chapter XXI shall apply to review procedures relating to such contracts.’

3. Decree No 4/2011

19. Under Article 80(3) of 2007-2013 programozási időszakban az Európai Regionális Fejlesztési Alapból, az Európai Szociális Alapból és a Kohéziós Alapból származó támogatások felhasználásának rendjéről szóló 4/2011. (I. 28.) Korm. rendelet (Decree No 4/2011 of 28 January 2011 on the use of aid from the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund for the 2007-2013 programming period):

‘The beneficiary and the bodies involved in the payment of aid shall keep separate accounts for each project, register all the documents related to the project separately and retain them until at least 31 December 2020.’

III. Facts, procedure and the questions referred

A. Case C-496/18

20. On 30 September 2005, the contracting authority published a call for tenders in the Official Journal of the European Union for the purposes of the ‘acquisition of a monitoring system for the surveillance of movements of the structures and the control of noise and vibrations during the first stage of construction of Line 4 of the Budapest Metro’. The estimated value of the contract exceeded the Community (EU) thresholds. The project received EU funding (under the Operational Programme for Transport).

21. The contract was awarded to a consortium of service providers consisting of Sol-Data SA (which later changed its name to SIXENSE Soldata) and HUNGEOD Kft. On 1 March 2006, the contracting authority concluded a public contract with the members of the Sol-Data — Hungeod Konzorcium.

22. On 5 October 2009, the parties modified the contract, claiming that unforeseeable circumstances had arisen. On 18 November 2009, a notice of the modification of the contract was published in the Közbeszerzési Értesítő (Public Procurement Journal).

23. According to the order for reference, a review procedure concerning the modification of the contract with Sol-Data SA and HUNGEOD Kft. was initiated ex officio by Az Európai Támogatásokat Auditáló Főigazgatóság (the Directorate-General for the Audit of European Aid). However, on 9 November 2010, the Arbitration Panel rejected that review application as being out of time.

24. On 29 May 2017, the President of the PPA, the intervener in support of the Arbitration Panel, commenced a procedure of his own motion, pursuant to Article 153(1)(c) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement, against HUNGEOD Kft., Sol-Data and the contracting authority ('the applicants'). In its view, by modifying the contract at issue, the applicants infringed Article 303(1) of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement since the conditions for modifications laid down in that provision were not satisfied. The President of the PPA identified the date of the modification of the contract, namely 5 October 2009, as the date of the infringement. However, he gave 30 March 2017 as the date on which he became aware of the infringement.

25. On 3 August 2017, in the decision at issue in the main proceedings, the Arbitration Panel found that the applicants had infringed Article 303 of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement.

26. In its decision, prior to its finding on the merits, the Arbitration Panel dismissed a procedural objection regarding the issue of whether the President of the PPA had initiated the procedure in due time. According to the Arbitration Panel, while the 2003 Law on Public Procurement was applicable to the substance of the case, the 2015 Law on Public Procurement applied as far as the procedure was concerned. The second sentence of Article 197(1) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement provides, as a transitional provision, that it is necessary to apply, inter alia, the 2015 Law on Public Procurement to the monitoring of modifications of contracts entered into following public procurement procedures launched before the entry into force of that law, and to apply the chapter of that law concerning the rules governing review procedures to review procedures related to the monitoring of such modifications. Consequently, the Arbitration Panel did not consider that the applicants were entitled to rely on the principles of non-retroactivity and legal certainty. Thus, the President of the PPA was correct in initiating a review within the time limits laid down in Article 152(2) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement.

27. The Arbitration Panel also found that a significant part of the project at issue, and of the modification of the contract under examination, had been carried out with EU financing, therefore falling under Decree No 4/2001. The Arbitration Panel found that it was necessary to apply Article 80(3) of that decree to the modification of the contract at issue. Accordingly, the time period within which a body can commence a procedure of its own motion was due to expire on 31 December 2020. It follows that the President of the PPA acted within that time frame in commencing the procedure of his own motion on 29 May 2017.

28. As a consequence of the finding of an infringement, the Arbitration Panel imposed a fine on the contracting authority in the amount of 25 000 000 Hungarian forint (HUF). It also imposed a fine in the amount of HUF 5 000 000 on HUNGEOD Kft. and SIXENSE Soldata jointly and severally.

29. The applicants challenged the Arbitration Panel's decision before the referring court, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court, Hungary). Harbouring doubts as to the correct interpretation of EU law, the referring court decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

> '1. Must Article 41(1) and Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, recitals 2, 25, 27 and 36 of [Directive 2007/66], Article 1(1) and (3) of [Directive 92/13], and, in this context, the principle of legal certainty, as a general principle of EU law, and the requirement for effective and rapid remedies against decisions by contracting authorities in public procurement cases, be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State which, in relation to public procurement contracts entered into before that legislation came into force, provides a general authorisation that enables the competent (monitoring) authority created by that legislation, after the periods established in the Member State's previous legislation for bringing an action for review of public procurement infringements committed prior to the entry into force of the new legislation have expired but within the time period established in the new legislation, to commence proceedings to investigate a specific public procurement infringement and to rule on the substance, leading to a ruling that the infringement did take place, the imposition of a public procurement penalty, and the application of the consequences of the voiding of the contract?

2. Can the legal rules and principles referred to in question 1 — and also the effective exercise of the (subjective and personal) right of review enjoyed by parties with an interest in the award of a public contract — be applied to the right to commence and conduct review proceedings conferred on the (monitoring) authorities created by the law of the Member State, which have the power to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest?

3. Does Article 99(1) and (2) of [Directive 2014/25] mean that in order to defend EU financial interests in the field of public procurement, the law of the Member State may, through the adoption of new legislation, confer on the (monitoring) authorities which have power under the law of the Member State to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest, a general power to investigate public procurement infringements committed before the entry into force of the legislation in question and to commence and conduct proceedings, even where the time periods established under the previous legislation have expired?

4. If — having regard to the legal rules and principles referred to in question 1 — the (monitoring) authorities' power of investigation described in questions 1 and 3 is held to be compatible with EU law, is any relevance to be ascribed to the legal, regulatory, technical or organisational deficiencies or other obstacles that prevented the public procurement infringement from being investigated at the time when the infringement took place?

5. Even if, in the light of the above principles, the (monitoring) authorities which are authorised by the law of the Member State to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest may be granted the power referred to in questions 1 to 4, must Article 41(1) and Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, recitals 2, 25, 27 and 36 of [Directive 2007/66], Article 1(1) and (3) of [Directive 92/13] and, in this context, the principle of legal certainty, as a general principle of EU law, and the requirement for effective and rapid remedies against decisions by contracting authorities in public procurement cases, and the proportionality principle, be interpreted as meaning that the national courts may assess whether the period of time that has elapsed between the occurrence of the infringement, the expiry of the period previously established for bringing an action for review, and the commencement of the proceedings to investigate the infringement, is reasonable and proportionate, and may use this as a basis for determining the legal consequences of the nullity of the contested decision or other consequences established by the law of the Member State?'

B. Case C-497/18

30. On 3 July 2009, the contracting authority published a call for tenders in the Official Journal of the European Union for the purposes of 'the provision of services requiring expertise in relation to the management of the DBR project during the first stage of construction of metro Line 4'. The estimated value of the contract (HUF 90 000 000 over a period of 3 years) exceeded the Community (EU) thresholds. The project received EU funding (under the Operational Programme for Transport).

31. The public contract was awarded to Matrics Consult Ltd. The contracting authority concluded the contract on 14 May 2009. It terminated the contract on 16 November 2011, with effect from 31 December 2011.

32. On 30 May 2017, the President of the PPA commenced a procedure ex officio, pursuant to Article 153(1)(c) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement, against the contracting authority and Matrics Consult Ltd, seeking a declaration that the public procurement rules had been infringed and the imposition of a fine. Although the parties had not amended the contract at issue in writing, they had, as a result of their conduct when paying invoices and issuing certificates of performance, departed to a great extent from the payment conditions defined at the time of the tender submission and inserted into the contract. Those changes were regarded as a modification to the contract amounting to an infringement of Article 303(1) of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement since the conditions for contractual modifications laid down in that article were not satisfied. In his review application, the President of the PPA gave 8 February 2010 as the date of the infringement, namely the date on which the invoice was paid, the payment of which led to the parties exceeding the amount of the consideration agreed in the contract. The date given for when the President of the PPA became aware of the infringement was 31 March 2017.

33. On 18 August 2017, the Arbitration Panel found that the contracting authority and Matrics Consult Ltd had infringed Article 303 of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement by unlawfully modifying the contract relating to a public procurement procedure that they had entered into. The Arbitration Panel imposed a fine on the contracting authority in the amount of HUF 27 000 000 and a fine in the amount of HUF 13 000 000 on Matrics Consult Ltd.

34. Before making that finding on merits, the Arbitration Panel dismissed a procedural objection regarding whether the initiation of the review procedure by the President of the PPA had taken place within the applicable time limit. The Arbitration Panel considered that the provisions regarding time limits laid down in the 2015 Law on Public Procurement were applicable to the de facto modification of the contract that occurred before the entry into force of that law, meaning that the parties to the contract were not entitled to rely on the principles of non-retroactivity and legal certainty.

35. The contracting authority challenged the Arbitration Panel's decision before the referring court, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court). That court decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

> '1. Must Article 41(1) and Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, recitals 2, 25, 27 and 36 of [Directive 2007/66], Article 1(1) and (3) of [Directive 89/665] and, in this context, the principle of legal certainty, as a general principle of EU law, and the requirement for effective and rapid remedies against decisions by contracting authorities in public procurement cases, be interpreted as precluding legislation by a Member State which, in relation to public procurement contracts entered into before that legislation came into force, provides a general authorisation that enables the competent (monitoring) authority created by that legislation, after the periods established in the Member State's previous legislation for bringing an action for review of public procurement infringements committed prior to the entry into force of the new legislation have expired but within the time period established in the new legislation, to commence proceedings to investigate a specific public procurement infringement, leading to a ruling that the infringement did take place, the imposition of a public procurement penalty, and the application of the consequences of the voiding of the public contract?
> 2. Can the legal rules and principles referred to in question 1 — and also the effective exercise of the (subjective and personal) right of review enjoyed by parties with an interest in the award of a public contract — be applied to the right to commence and conduct review proceedings conferred on the (monitoring) authorities created by the law of the Member State, which have the power to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest?
> 3. Does Article 83(1) and (2) of [Directive 2014/24] mean that in order to defend EU financial interests in the field of public procurement, the law of the Member State may, through the adoption of new legislation, confer on the (monitoring) authorities which have power under the law of the Member State to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest, a general power to investigate public procurement infringements committed before the entry into force of the legislation in question and to commence and conduct proceedings, even where the time periods established under the previous legislation have expired?
> 4. If — having regard to the legal rules and principles referred to in question 1 — the (monitoring) authorities' power of investigation described in questions 1 and 3 is held to be compatible with EU law, is any relevance to be ascribed to the legal, regulatory, technical or organisational deficiencies or other obstacles that prevented the public procurement infringement from being investigated at the time when the infringement took place?
> 5. Even if, in the light of the above principles, the (monitoring) authorities which are authorised by the law of the Member State to identify and investigate public procurement infringements of their own motion, and which are under a duty to defend the public interest may be granted the power referred to in questions 1 to 4, must Article 41(1) and Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, recitals 2, 25, 27 and 36 of [Directive 2007/66], Article 1(1) and (3) of [Directive 89/665] and, in this context, the principle of legal certainty, as a general principle of EU law, and the requirement for effective and rapid remedies against decisions by contracting authorities in public procurement cases, and the proportionality principle, be interpreted as meaning that the national courts may assess whether the period of time that has elapsed between the occurrence of the infringement, the expiry of the period previously established for bringing an action for review, and the commencement of the proceedings to investigate the infringement, is reasonable and proportionate, and may use this as a basis for determining the legal consequences of the nullity of the contested decision or other consequences established by the law of the Member State?'

36. By decision of 18 September 2018, the President of the Court joined the two cases.

37. Written submissions were lodged by the contracting authority, the Arbitration Panel, the President of the PPA, the Hungarian Government and the European Commission. All of them presented oral argument at the hearing held on 4 September 2019.

IV. Analysis

38. This Opinion is structured as follows. I will start with several introductory remarks concerning the specificities of the Hungarian system of ex officio review of public contracts by public authorities. It will also be necessary to determine, at the outset, the rules of EU law applicable to the present case and to rephrase the questions posed by the referring court (A). Next, I will address Question 2 regarding the scope of application of Directives 89/665 and 92/13 ('the Remedies Directives'), as amended by Directive 2007/66, and of Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25: do ex officio reviews of public contracts initiated by public authorities fall within the scope of those directives (B)? I will subsequently turn to Questions 1, 3 and 4, which I shall assess together, since they all deal essentially with the same issue: does EU law, in particular the principle of legal certainty, preclude the ex officio initiation of such reviews after the expiry of the time limits for review, laid down by the national legislation in force at the time of the allegedly illegal modifications of the contracts (C)? Finally, I will conclude with Question 5 on national courts' powers with regard to the examination of potential infringements raised ex officio by national public authorities (D).

A. Preliminary considerations

1. The Hungarian system of review in public procurement matters and the cases at hand

39. Hungarian law provides for two types of review of public contracts, depending on the identity of the person initiating the review.

40. On the one hand, a review can be sought by persons that have a subjective interest (in the sense of a real and individual interest) in the public contract at issue, such as the successful tenderer, the unsuccessful (actual or potential) tenderers or even the relevant contracting authority. That type of review facilitates the private enforcement of public procurement rules.

41. On the other hand, Hungarian law also provides for reviews that may be initiated ex officio by a number of public authorities charged with protecting the general interest, including, for example, the upholding of the principle of legality and/or monitoring the use of public funds. That type of review represents the public enforcement of public procurement rules.

42. The President of the PPA is one of those public authorities. He has the right to commence a procedure of his own motion under Article 153(1) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement. Once such an ex officio review has been initiated, it is subsequently for the Arbitration Panel to carry out the review as regards both admissibility and the merits. When an infringement of public procurement rules is found, the Arbitration Panel may impose a fine on the persons responsible for the infringement. The imposition of a fine appears to be compulsory when the finding of an infringement arises from an ex officio review initiated by the President of the PPA under Article 153 of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement. In addition, it was explained at the hearing that a finding of an infringement may also lead to the annulment of the contract, but only following a decision of a court of law.

43. In the cases at hand, the President of the PPA initiated ex officio reviews of the modifications of the two public contracts at issue. The modifications occurred in 2009 and 2010 respectively. At the time of the modifications, the applicable national legislation was the 2003 Law on Public Procurement. However, the transitional provisions of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement (in Article 197) have been interpreted in such a way that the procedural provisions of that law apply to modifications of public contracts that occurred before that law entered into force.

44. In line with this reasoning, the President of the PPA launched ex officio reviews before the Arbitration Panel in 2017, that is, 7 and 8 years respectively after the alleged infringements had occurred. At that time, the time limits for review laid down by the 2003 Law on Public Procurement had already lapsed. The President of the PPA justified such apparently belated reviews by the fact that he only became aware of the infringements at issue in 2017. The Arbitration Panel subsequently assessed whether the reviews had been initiated in due time with reference to the 2015 Law on Public Procurement and concluded that they had. In both cases, the Arbitration Panel ultimately imposed the contested fines on both the contracting authority and the tenderers. However, neither the contracts nor the allegedly unlawful modifications were declared null and void.

45. It is against this factual and procedural background that the referring court has posed a set of questions to the Court. It is not for this Court to interpret the rather complex national legislative landscape and procedural background. However, I wish to stress two points that appear to be uncontested and that this Opinion takes as points of departure.

46. First, both the 2003 Law on Public Procurement and the 2015 Law on Public Procurement contain deadlines by which an authority entitled to launch an ex officio review must act. I understand those rules to be contained in Article 327(2) of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement and Article 152(2) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement. (7) The structure of both provisions is similar. Each contains a combination of subjective and objective limitation periods. What changed, however, between the 2003 and 2015 iterations of those provisions was the length of the limitation periods, which were more than doubled by the 2015 Law on Public Procurement.

47. Second, and rather importantly to my mind, the referring court states, without being contradicted on this point by any party to these proceedings, (8) that the time limits for review that were in force and applicable at the time of the modifications had already lapsed before the 2015 Law on Public Procurement entered into force. (9)

2. Relevant provisions of EU law and rephrasing of the questions

48. In each of the joined cases, the referring court poses five near identical questions. (10) The wording of those questions is, unfortunately, not very clear. Their content also overlaps to some extent. Thus, some rephrasing is called for in order to provide the referring court with a useful answer in the light of the factual and legal context of the present cases.

49. Before doing so, a note on the relevant rules of EU law is warranted. The referring court cites in its questions a number of provisions of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter') and of several public procurement directives, together with some general principles of EU law. However, only some appear to be fully relevant to the cases at hand. Conversely, other rules of EU law not referred to might in fact be relevant.

50. First, I do not think that Article 41 and Article 47 of the Charter are relevant to the present cases. Article 41, regarding the right to good administration, is addressed only to the institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the European Union. (11) Likewise, Article 47 of the Charter is not applicable to the cases at hand. In mentioning that article, the referring court wonders whether the initiation of a review 7 or 8 years after the commission of the alleged infringements is compatible with the requirement to conduct legal proceedings within a reasonable time. However, on the facts of the cases at hand, the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in the sense of Article 47 does not appear to be at issue. The real issue appears to be respect for limitation periods by an administrative authority.

51. Second, as regards the general principles of EU law that were raised by the referring court, the principle of legal certainty is key to the resolution of Questions 1, 3 and 4, while the principle of proportionality has some relevance for Question 5. The requirement to have swift and effective remedies against the decisions of contracting authorities is specifically enshrined in Article 1(1) of the Remedies Directives.

52. Third, since the referring court has invoked in general the protection of the financial interests of the Union, I will examine that aspect of the case with regard to provisions of EU law that have not been raised by the referring court, but were discussed at the hearing, namely Regulation No 2988/95 (12) and Regulation No 1083/2006. (13)

53. Turning now to the specific questions posed by the referring court, they can, in my view, be regrouped as follows.

54. By Question 2, the referring court seeks, in essence, to determine whether EU law — in particular the Remedies Directives, as notably amended by Directive 2007/66, and Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25 — governs or in any way limits the possibility for public authorities to conduct reviews in the public interest. More precisely, I understand this question as asking the Court whether reviews such as those at issue in the main proceedings fall within the scope of any of those directives.

55. By Question 1, the Court is called on to determine whether EU law, in particular the general principle of legal certainty, allows public authorities to initiate reviews of modifications to public contracts — and, as the case may be, to impose sanctions — even though the time limits for such reviews under the national legislation in force at the time of the modifications have already lapsed. Questions 3 and 4 concern the possible impact of the need to protect the financial interests of the Union on the answer to Question 1. Questions 1, 3 and 4 will therefore be addressed together.

56. Question 5 is, for its part, relevant only if it is assumed that EU law does not preclude ex officio review in the circumstances of the cases at hand. In that case, does EU law, in particular the principle of proportionality, empower national courts to review the sanctions that were imposed?

B. Question 2

57. By Question 2, the referring court seeks to determine whether EU law governs or limits the possibility for public authorities acting in the general interest to initiate ex officio reviews of modifications of public contracts. In particular, do such reviews fall within the scope of the Remedies Directives, as amended by Directive 2007/66, or Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25?

58. According to the President of the PPA, the Remedies Directives do not govern reviews initiated in the public interest by public authorities. It is for the Member States only to adopt rules to that effect. It follows that the present cases are outside the scope of EU law.

59. The Hungarian Government also considers that the national provisions relating to time limits for initiating ex officio reviews in the public interest do not implement the Remedies Directives, nor do they fall within their scope of application. It relies on Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 to explain that the prerogatives of monitoring authorities are, by their nature, fundamentally different from the review at the disposal of economic operators with an interest in securing a contract.

60. According to the Commission, in the absence of provisions to that effect, the Remedies Directives do not oblige Member States to establish, or preclude them from establishing, ex officio reviews of the decisions of contracting authorities. Nor do Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 require Member States to establish ex officio reviews in the public interest. However, Member States must uphold the general principles of EU law, including the principle of legal certainty.

61. I broadly agree with the Commission. In my opinion, the Remedies Directives, Directive 2014/24 and Directive 2014/25 neither oblige Member States to provide for ex officio reviews initiated by public authorities in the public interest, nor prevent them from doing so. However, even if such reviews are not mandated by those directives, if a Member State decides to provide for such mechanisms, they fall within the (material) scope of application of those directives. Therefore, the questions posed by the referring court, and in particular Question 2, are admissible.

62. The Remedies Directives only require Member States to provide for reviews on the initiative of affected undertakings. Indeed, Article 1(3) requires Member States to ensure that review procedures are available 'at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement'. (14)

63. The wording of that provision suggests that the Remedies Directives do not require a comprehensive system of review in public procurement matters. As stated by the Court, 'Directive 89/665, as is apparent, in particular, from Article 1(3) thereof, does not seek to completely harmonise the relevant national legislation'. (15) It sets a minimum requirement ('at least') for the Member States to provide for a review mechanism for undertakings, and not necessarily also for public authorities acting in the public interest.

64. That reading is further confirmed by the context and purpose of Article 1(3) of the Remedies Directives, as amended by Directive 2007/66. First, as regards the overall context of Article 1(3), the EU legislature has introduced mechanisms aimed at strengthening the framework for reviews initiated by undertakings. (16) Second, as regards the system and purpose of the Remedies Directives, it is established case-law that they aim at protecting tenderers against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority and ensuring the effective application of the EU rules on the award of public contracts, in particular where infringements can still be rectified. (17) It follows that, although upholding legality is certainly also a key aim of the Remedies Directives, the type of review provided for in those directives in order to achieve that aim is clearly one initiated by economic operators, as further suggested by recital 27 of Directive 2007/66. (18)

65. The fact that Directive 2007/66 also provides for the so-called 'corrective mechanism' (19) does not alter that conclusion. Under that mechanism, the Commission is empowered to request the correction of serious infringements of EU law that occurred during a contract award procedure. Even if that mechanism could be said to pertain to the public enforcement of public procurement rules, it cannot be inferred therefrom that the Remedies Directives, as amended by Directive 2007/66, require the establishment by the Member States of reviews in the public interest. That mechanism rather shows, a contrario, that the Remedies Directives do not provide for any other form of review in the public interest.

66. By the same token, Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25, which are both phrased in an identical manner, cannot be interpreted as requiring Member States to establish a mechanism of review in the public interest, such as the one at issue in the main proceedings.

67. Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 only require that specific infringements or systemic problems regarding the application of public procurement rules may be 'indicated' to courts or tribunals or other appropriate authorities or structures. There is therefore no obligation to bring actual proceedings, but merely an option, in cases where specific infringements are identified. The main task of public authorities under Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 appears rather to consist in reporting structural problems and suggesting appropriate remedies. (20)

68. Therefore, although Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 clearly promote public enforcement of public procurement rules, (21) they do not require Member States to establish review mechanisms such as those at issue in the main proceedings.

69. It follows that the Remedies Directives, Directive 2014/24 and Directive 2014/25 neither require nor preclude Member States from establishing other types of reviews, such as an ex officio review initiated by public authorities in the interest of legality and the protection of public funds.

70. However, if such review mechanisms are in fact established by a Member State, those reviews, in particular their impact and outcomes, will still fall within the scope of application of EU law.

71. First, in so far as public contracts fall within the scope ratione materiae of the public procurement directives, modifications of them are also governed by EU law. (22) Logically, reviews of such modifications fall within the scope of EU law to the extent that they seek to ensure compliance with substantive EU public procurement rules on modifications of public contracts.

72. Second, and as a subsidiary argument, the specific type of review at issue in the cases at hand pertains to Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25. Although Article 83 and Article 99, respectively, of those directives do not require the Member States to establish a review such as the one in the main proceedings, such reviews still constitute one of the possible expressions (at the discretion of the Member States) of the new role ascribed to monitoring authorities by Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25.

73. Any other conclusion would have the singular consequence that the regulation of the subject matter of the ex officio public review procedure (namely the public contract itself and modifications to it) would be harmonised by EU law, while the potentially significant consequences of the review (sanctions imposed on the contracting authority or on the tenderers, or the annulment of the public contract), which could impact upon the entire tendering procedure, would fall completely outside of an otherwise harmonised area only by virtue of being initiated by a public authority. That can hardly be the case.

74. On the other hand, the fact that there is no specific EU harmonising measure governing that type of review means that only the general principles of EU law will apply to such review procedures.

75. It follows that Question 2 must be answered as follows: the Remedies Directives, Directive 2014/24 and Directive 2014/25 neither require Member States to establish, nor prevent them from establishing, ex officio reviews by public authorities of alleged infringements of public procurement rules. However, once established and initiated, such reviews fall within the scope of application of EU law.

C. Questions 1, 3 and 4

76. By Questions 1, 3 and 4, the referring court seeks to know, in essence, whether EU law — in particular the general principles of legal certainty and the protection of the financial interests of the Union — allows public authorities, on the basis of newly adopted provisions of national law or of EU law, to initiate a review of modifications of a public contract — and, as the case may be, to impose fines — even if the time limits for review under the national legislation in force at the time of the modifications have already lapsed.

77. In my view, the answer is clearly ‘no’.

1. The EU principle of legal certainty

78. The referring court acknowledges that Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 enhance the role of monitoring authorities. However, it wonders whether EU law, in particular the principle of legal certainty, limits the powers conferred upon them, or whether Article 194 of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement, which transposed those provisions, can be relied on to ‘reopen’ time limits that have already expired in order to allow for the exercise of those new competences.

79. According to the contracting authority, the ex officio reviews at issue in the main proceedings breach the principle of legal certainty. Even if the 2015 Law on Public Procurement created new competences for public authorities, that could not, as a result, reopen time limits that had already expired.

80. According to the Arbitration Panel, Hungarian law grants the President of the PPA a period of 60 days from the date on which he became aware of the infringement in order to initiate an ex officio review. Such a review may be initiated until 31 December 2020, which corresponds to the end of the duty to keep the relevant documents available.

81. The Hungarian Government acknowledges the relevance of the principle of legal certainty. That principle requires that legal rules be clear, precise and predictable in their effects. However, that government is of the view that the national provisions at issue are predictable.

82. According to the Commission, the principle of legal certainty precludes the ex officio review of a decision of a contracting authority, leading to the imposition of a fine, when the time limits to that effect have already lapsed. Time limits may only be reopened in exceptional circumstances, which are not present in the cases at hand.

83. To my mind, save in very exceptional circumstances, the EU principle of legal certainty precludes the ‘reopening’ of time limits that have already expired.

84. According to the settled case-law of the Court, as a matter of principle, new rules apply immediately to the future effects of a situation which arose under the old rule. It is otherwise, subject to the principle of the non-retroactivity of legal acts, only if the new rule is accompanied by special provisions which specifically lay down its conditions of temporal application. (23)

85. It is also settled case-law that procedural rules are generally held to apply to all proceedings pending at the time when they enter into force, whereas substantive rules are usually interpreted as not applying to situations existing before their entry into force. (24) According to the Court, 'this interpretation ensures respect for the principles of legal certainty and the protection of legitimate expectation, by virtue of which the effect of [EU] legislation must be clear and predictable for those who are subject to it'. (25)

86. More generally, the principle of legal certainty — which is one of the general principles of European Union law — requires that rules of law be clear and precise and predictable in their effect, especially where they may have negative consequences for individuals and undertakings, so that interested parties can ascertain their position in situations and legal relationships governed by European Union law. (26) The same principle must be observed by the national legislature when it adopts legislation within the sphere of EU law. (27)

87. As far as limitation periods are concerned, they must be fixed in advance to ensure legal certainty (28) and in order to be sufficiently foreseeable. (29)

88. In the cases at hand, what is at issue is not the application of new procedural rules to ongoing situations. Without wishing to reopen the debate on whether limitation periods are procedural or substantive rules, (30) the important point to my mind is rather that, as far as the time limits were concerned, the legal situation was closed (and time-barred).

89. It might again be recalled (31) that under the previously applicable legislation, namely Article 327(2) of the 2003 Law on Public Procurement, the (objective) time limits for review lapsed 3 years after the occurrence of the infringement. Thus, with regard to Case C-496/18, they lapsed in 2012. In Case C-497/18, the initiation of the review became time-barred in 2013. In 2015, the new Article 153(1)(c) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement entered into force. In 2017, those new time limits were invoked as apparently starting to run from 2015 and allowing for the reopening of the review of the modifications to the public contracts at issue. (32)

90. If my understanding of those facts and of national law — both of which are ultimately for the national court to verify — is correct, then there is, to my mind, no ongoing legal situation to which new procedural rules are being applied. This is an instance of true retroactivity. What is sought is to reopen already expired time limits by enacting new legislation setting new deadlines.

91. If it were accepted that, in ordinary circumstances, time limits for review that have already expired can be reopened (or, in effect, reset) every time that new national provisions containing general time limits are adopted, that could lead to a situation where contractual modifications could in fact be reviewed without any limitation in time. (33) In this way, the national legislation could endlessly reset the clock, simply by enacting new time limits. Such an outcome is clearly not acceptable in the light of the principle of legal certainty.

92. No compelling grounds have been put forward (before this Court at least) that could justify such reopening of time limits and, in effect, (true) retroactivity of new rules. Such retroactivity is possible only in exceptional circumstances, only when the purpose to be attained so demands and when the legitimate expectations of the persons concerned are duly respected. (34)

93. Before I turn to the arguments relating to the purpose behind the construction of the temporality rules advanced by the Arbitration Panel and the Hungarian Government (sections 2, 3, and 4 below), I would note that the laying down of new deadlines in new legislation applicable to past events years after the fact can hardly be labelled as foreseeable or respecting the legitimate expectations of the persons concerned. In addition, I agree with the Commission that Article 197 of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement, which governs the rationae temporis applicability of that law, lacks clarity and, therefore, foreseeability for the parties to the contracts. Thus, that provision does not contain anything close to the level of justification that would be required in order to justify such (true) retroactivity.

94. Question 1 must therefore be answered as follows: the principle of legal certainty precludes the application of national provisions allowing for ex officio review of infringements of public procurement rules that occurred before their entry into force, in a situation where the time limits laid down under the previously applicable national legislation have already elapsed.

2. The new role of monitoring authorities under Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25

95. The Arbitration Panel argues that the present cases are not about the (re)opening of time limits that have already lapsed under the previous procedural provisions in force at the time of the modifications, but about allowing the exercise, in the context of administrative review, of new monitoring competences laid down in Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25. The predecessor of the Public Procurement Authority did not have such a review competence. Consequently, the 2015 Law on Public Procurement does not allow for the reopening of an expired deadline, but it does allow for the exercise of an entirely new competence. The President of the PPA and the Hungarian Government largely share that view, although with some minor variations.

96. I must admit that I am very puzzled by that argument.

97. Subject to verification by the national court, it would appear to me that the 2003 Law on Public Procurement already contained the possibility for certain public authorities to initiate ex officio reviews in the public interest. (35) Indeed, the 2015 recast of the law brought about some amendments to that competence and, importantly, set new longer time limits for its exercise. (36) But the competence to carry out such a type of review can hardly be described as new.

98. In addition, it should be noted that Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 are not applicable ratione temporis to the present cases. Moreover, as confirmed at the hearing, those provisions have been transposed by Article 194 of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement. However, the reviews at issue in the main proceedings were initiated on the basis of Article 153, not of Article 194.

3. The protection of the financial interests of the Union

99. By Question 3, the referring court specifically enquires whether the answer to Question 1 may be affected by the fact that the tenders at issue received EU subsidies. In other words, as the referring court puts it: beyond legal certainty, are there other public interests, such as the protection of the financial interests of the Union, that could justify allowing for the review of public contracts after the expiry of the time limits to that effect, potentially until 2020? (37)

100. In the context of Question 3, the referring court relies on Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25. It also explains that, under the 2015 Law on Public Procurement, the time limit for review in the public interest of public contracts carried out using EU subsidies was linked with the duration of the obligation to keep documents available (in connection with EU subsidies), so that the national legislature could, as a result, prolong those time limits.

101. According to the contracting authority, the protection of the financial interests of the Union can be ensured through other means than ex officio review in the public interest, for instance, through financial corrections, which are possible at any time. Financial corrections have already been applied in the present cases, so that the imposition of fines constitutes, in practice, a second penalty for the same alleged infringements.

102. According to the Arbitration Panel, the ex officio reviews at issue are primarily aimed at protecting public funds, especially the financial interests of the Union.

103. According to the Hungarian Government, one of the aims of Article 152(2)(c) of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement is that the ex officio procedure could be initiated at any time during the period in which Article 90 of Regulation No 1083/2006 imposes an obligation to keep available all supporting documents regarding expenditure and audits under the operational programme concerned. In addition, Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 demonstrate the importance, from an EU law perspective, of ensuring that public spending is monitored.

104. According to the Commission, the fact that an infringement of public procurement rules concerns a project partly financed by EU funds does not require Member States to reopen time limits to investigate that infringement. Even if they do so in the name of the protection of the Union's financial interests, Member States must still respect the EU general principle of legal certainty.

105. I agree with the Commission.

106. It should be noted that Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 are not directly relevant for the protection of the Union's financial interests. Admittedly, the draft proposals for the directives that were initially tabled by the Commission insisted on the EU budget dimension of those proposals. (38) However, in the versions currently in force, Article 83 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 do not mention the protection of the financial interests of the Union.

107. The relevant secondary acts of EU law are therefore rather Regulation No 1083/2006 and Regulation No 2988/95. (39)

108. First, as regards the obligation, laid down by Article 90 of Regulation No 1083/2006, to keep available for a certain duration all the supporting documents regarding expenditure, it does not necessarily entail the possibility of providing for review proceedings — and the imposition of sanctions — for that same duration.

109. As rightly stated by the contracting authority at the hearing, limitation periods for the initiation of reviews are simply different from periods during which documents must be kept. Of course, as a matter of legislative design, a national (or EU) legislature could decide to apply the same time periods to both. But such a choice would have to be clearly and unequivocally provided for in the applicable legislation, since one does not automatically follow from the other. In the same vein, Article 98 of Regulation No 1083/2006 only requires the Member States to investigate irregularities and make the financial corrections required during that period. It does not provide for reviews or, a fortiori, penalties as a means of redress for identified irregularities in the use of EU funds.

110. Second, the protection of the Union's financial interests cannot be construed as simply overriding the EU principle of legal certainty as a matter of course. Rather, the protection of the Union's financial interests must be weighed against the principle of legal certainty. This is normally achieved through the adoption of clear and foreseeable time limits. Thus, while the importance of the protection of financial interests must be acknowledged, at a certain point in time even illegal decisions must become final.

111. Without taking any position on its applicability to the specific cases at hand, Regulation No 2988/95 serves as an illustration of that balancing exercise. (40) Under Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95, the standard limitation period for proceedings is 4 years from the time when the irregularity was committed. The limitation period expires at the latest on the day on which a period equal to twice the limitation period lapses without the competent authority having imposed a penalty. (41) That is seen as appropriate to pursue the objective of protecting the Union's financial interests. (42)

112. Those provisions illustrate that, under EU law, the protection of financial interests does not justify either extendable time limits or temporally limitless review. As stated by the Court, even if Member States do retain the option of applying a period longer than 4 years, a longer national limitation period must, inter alia, not go clearly beyond what is necessary to achieve the objective of protecting the European Union's financial interests. In assessing whether the limitation periods are reasonable, one must look at 'the legal traditions of those States and the perception in their respective legal systems of what length of time is necessary and sufficient for a diligent public service to bring proceedings in respect of irregularities committed to the detriment of the public authorities and national budgets'. (43)

113. Thus, as far as national limitation periods are concerned, there is indeed a caveat to the reasonable length of the initial time limits. The outer limit is reasonableness. Only if the initial time limits were so short as to fail to guarantee the effectiveness of the review (44) can the issue of their appropriateness be opened. In any case, that principle certainly does not automatically warrant either true retroactivity or (even less) selective disregard for applicable deadlines because administrative authorities were not, for whatever reason, able to act in time.

114. I do not think that it is necessary, in the context of the main proceedings, to engage in a discussion on Taricco (45) and its potential implications for the case at hand. The facts of that case were quite different from those of the cases at hand. Taricco concerned criminal penalties for VAT fraud (VAT being an EU own resource), where the limitation periods were still running when the new legislation was adopted. Moreover, the main issue was the fact that the limitation periods were too short, thereby preventing the application of effective and deterrent penalties to counter fraud affecting the financial interests of the Union.

115. In any case, in view of the clarifications subsequently made in the judgments in M.A.S. and Scialdone, (46) I would no longer consider Taricco a good precedent on the specific point of whether time limits that normally apply can be disregarded in the name and for the sake of the protection of the financial interests of the Union.

4. Deficiencies in the review procedure

116. By Question 4, the referring court seeks to know whether the answer to Question 1 can be affected by the fact that there was no investigation into the infringement of public procurement rules at the time of the commission of the infringement, and the potential reasons for that lack of investigation.

117. According to the Arbitration Panel and the President of the PPA, it was because of regulatory deficiencies in the 2003 Law on Public Procurement that it had not been possible to detect the unlawful contract modifications. The contracting authority had not submitted an information notice relating to the modification of the contracts and the notices published concerning the execution of the contracts did not suggest an infringement. Consequently, the predecessor of the President of the PPA did not have the information that would have enabled it to check the performance and modification of the contract. In short, the 2003 Law on Public Procurement did not ensure the level of transparency and administrative oversight that was subsequently achieved in the 2015 Law on Public Procurement. As a result, it was necessary to apply the provisions of the latter national legislation.

118. That argument can be dismissed with relative ease.

119. Assuming, as a matter of fact, that there had been any such structural deficiencies, which would have prevented effective ex officio monitoring and enforcement of the public procurement rules, (47) that fact still would not justify resorting to truly retroactive measures in order to remedy such deficiencies ex post. The Roman law maxim nemo auditur propriam turpitudinem allegans traditionally applies in the realm of civil law. I think that it could also be applied to a state or public authority that has crafted and applied certain rules. Having perhaps later realised that those rules, which it had sole responsibility for developing and applying, did not operate in an optimal way, it cannot be allowed to then seek to reset the clock altogether and have ‘another bite at the apple’, to the detriment of the parties concerned.

120. It is therefore for the Member States to ensure that they monitor infringements of their own laws effectively. Deficiencies in their own laws or their enforcement cannot be turned against third parties by resetting time limits that have already expired. (48)

D. Question 5

121. The wording of Question 5 is not very clear. I understand it as follows. The referring court starts from the assumption that the Court answers Question 2 in the opposite way to that suggested in the present Opinion. Thus, if ex officio reviews can be carried out in the circumstances of the cases at hand, does EU law (especially the principle of proportionality) empower national courts evaluating the sanction that was imposed in the context of those reviews to look at the specific aspects of the case in order to determine the appropriateness of the sanction?

122. According to the Arbitration Panel, national courts should not be able to declare invalid the contested administrative decision, or impose any other legal consequence, since the Arbitration Panel has already assessed, within the exercise of its competence, the elements raised by the referring court. In particular, the Arbitration Panel has taken into account, in deciding the amount of the fines, the fact that several years elapsed between the infringement and the initiation of the review. National courts should not make a new assessment in that respect.

123. According to the Hungarian Government, it is for the national legislature to decide what national courts are entitled to do as regards the scope of their assessment of the decision of the Arbitration Panel and the type of legal consequences that can follow.

124. According to the Commission, there is no need to separately address Question 5 since it overlaps with Question 1.

125. Since my suggested answer to Question 1 is a negative one (the EU law principle of legal certainty precludes the ex officio review of potential infringements of public procurement rules in cases in which the applicable time limits have already expired), there is indeed no need to address Question 5. It is therefore not necessary, in the circumstances of the present cases, to examine whether national courts hearing such cases can assess the sanction(s) in concreto, in the light of factors such as the passage of time, the fact that time limits under the previous legislation have already lapsed or the severity of the infringement.

126. Beyond that, it might only be mentioned in lieu of a conclusion that the specific type of review of administrative decisions falling within the scope of EU law is a matter of choice of a national legislature, (49) provided that it is guaranteed, at the stage of either administrative review or review by a court, that the proportionality of the sanction, which constitutes a general principle of EU law, will be duly assessed. (50)

V. Conclusion

127. I propose that the Court answer the questions posed by the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court, Hungary) as follows:

– Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, and Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC, neither require Member States to establish nor prevent them from establishing ex officio reviews by public authorities of alleged infringements of public procurement rules. However, once provided for and initiated, such reviews and their outcomes fall within the scope of application of EU law.

– The principle of legal certainty precludes the application of national provisions allowing for ex officio review of infringements of public procurement rules that occurred before the entry into force of those new provisions, in circumstances where the time limits laid down for that purpose in the previously applicable national legislation had already expired.

7 Reproduced above, in points 12 and 15 of this Opinion.

8 The argument advanced by the President of the PPA and the Arbitration Panel, restated above in points 26, 34 and 44, appears to be of a different nature, namely that for reviews launched after 2015, the time limits of the 2015 Law on Public Procurement became applicable, including for modifications of public contracts carried out before 2015.

9 As noted above in point 23 of this Opinion, in Case C-496/18, a review procedure concerning the amendment of the contract with Sol-Data SA and HUNGEOD Kft. was initiated ex officio by another Hungarian public authority, namely the Directorate-General for the Audit of European Aid. However, on 9 November 2010, the Arbitration Panel rejected that application as being out of time. I can only assume that this was done while applying the then (in 2010) applicable time limit stemming from the 2003 Law on Public Procurement.

10 The only difference between them lies in the fact that different public procurement directives are applicable. In Case C-496/18, Directive 92/13 and Article 99 of Directive 2014/25 apply, while in Case C-497/18, it is Directive 89/665 and Directive 2014/24.

16 In particular, Directive 2007/66 introduced minimum time limits and standstill periods to the benefit of tenderers in award procedures, especially unsuccessful ones, in order to guarantee the effectiveness of their right of review. 32 Since the public procurement projects at issue received EU funds, the Arbitration Panel considers that the time limits for ex officio review could potentially extend until 31 December 2020, hence 10 and 11 years, respectively, after the allegedly illegal modifications took place.

33 Needless to say, in circumstances where all the relevant facts occurred years or even decades previously. In the present cases, all the relevant facts apparently happened while the 2003 Law on Public Procurement was in force. The only event that happened while the 2015 Law on Public Procurement was in force was that the relevant authority declared that it became (subjectively) aware of the infringement.

40 That regulation constitutes the general (as opposed to sectoral) legislation on the protection of the Union's financial interests through *administrativ*e checks, measures and penalties. For the criminal aspect, see Directive (EU) 2017/1371 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 July 2017 on the fight against fraud to the Union's financial interests by means of criminal law (OJ 2017 L 198, p. 29).

41 It should be noted that, under Article 12 of Directive 2017/1371, the standard period for criminal offences affecting the Union's financial interest is 5 years.

42 See, for example, judgment of 5 May 2011, Ze Fu Fleischhandel and Vion Trading (C-201/10 and C-202/10, EU:C:2011:282, paragraph 43).

43 Judgment of 5 May 2011, Ze Fu Fleischhandel and Vion Trading (C-201/10 and C-202/10, EU:C:2011:282, paragraphs 38 to 39).

44 See, to that effect, judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraph 39 to 44). Furthermore, it is established case-law that, under the Remedies Directives, 'the setting of reasonable limitation periods for bringing proceedings must be regarded as satisfying, in principle, the requirement of effectiveness under [the Remedies Directives], since it is an application of the fundamental principle of legal certainty’. See, for example, judgments of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others (C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 76); of 21 January 2010, Commission v Germany (C-17/09, not published, EU:C:2010:33, paragraph 22); and of 12 March 2015, eVigilo (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 51).

45 Judgment of 8 September 2015, Taricco and Others (C-105/14, EU:C:2015:555).

---

47 It need only be recalled, as stated above at point 23, that at least in Case C-496/18, an ex officio review was actually initiated under the 2003 Law on Public Procurement, albeit unsuccessfully.

---

48 It might be recalled that in both cases at hand, sanctions were imposed not only on the contracting authority, but also on the successful tenderers — see above, points 28 and 33. While there could potentially be greater leeway where a Member State wishes to monitor and impose budgetary sanctions on its own departments or emanations while leaving contracts already entered into untouched, it is a different matter altogether to reopen the procurement procedures, sanction all the participants thereto, and even potentially nullify the contracts in question a number of years later.

49 But see, by analogy, the requirements concerning the effectiveness of any such national institutional choice in judgment of 29 July 2019, Torubarov (C-556/17, EU:C:2019:626, paragraphs 64 to 66 and 77).

---

50 See, to that effect, judgment of 9 February 2012, Urbán (C-210/10, EU:C:2012:64, paragraph 23), and my Opinion in Link Logistik N&N (C-384/17, EU:C:2018:494, points 104 to 112).

4 June 2019 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice — Public procurement in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors — Directive 2004/18/EC — Point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) — Grounds for exclusion — Grave professional misconduct — Infringement of competition rules)

In Case C-425/18,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (Regional Administrative Court of Piedmont, Italy), made by decision of 7 February 2018, received at the Court on 28 June 2018, in the proceedings

Consorzio Nazionale Servizi Società Cooperativa (CNS)

THE COURT (Ninth Chamber),

composed of K. Jürimäe, President of the Chamber, D. Šváby (Rapporteur) and S. Rodin, Judges,

Advocate General: P. Pikamäe,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Consorzio Nazionale Servizi Società Cooperativa (CNS), by F. Cintioli, G. Notarnicola, E. Perrettini and A. Police, avvocati, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by D. Del Gaizo, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and P. Ondrůšek and by L. Haasbeek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to give a decision by reasoned order, pursuant to Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice,

makes the following

Order

1 This request for a preliminary ruling relates to the interpretation of Article 53(3) and Article 54(4) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) and point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Consorzio Nazionale Servizi Società Cooperativa (CNS) and Gruppo Torinese Trasporti GTT SpA (‘GTT’) seeking, inter alia, annulment of the decision of GTT to withdraw the award to CNS of a public contract.

Legal context

Directive 2004/17

3 Article 53(3) of Directive 2004/17, under the heading ‘Qualification systems’, and Article 54(4) of the same directive, under the heading ‘Criteria for qualitative selection’, provide that the criteria and rules for qualification and also the criteria for qualitative selection ‘may include the exclusion criteria listed in Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 on the terms and conditions set out therein’.

Directive 2004/18

4 Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, which is headed ‘Personal situation of the candidate or tenderer’, appears in a section entitled ‘Criteria for qualitative selection’ and provides as follows:

2. Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate;

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for [EU] law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.

…’

Italian law

5 Decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 establishing the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006) (‘the Code on public contracts’) transposed Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18 into Italian law.

6 Article 38 of the Code on public contracts, entitled ‘General requirements’, listed, in paragraph 1, the grounds on which an economic operator may be excluded from participating in a public contract:

‘The following persons shall be excluded from participation in procedures for the award of concessions and public works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts and may not be awarded subcontracts or conclude any related contract:

(f) any person who, in the reasoned assessment of the contracting authority, has been guilty of serious negligence or bad faith in the performance of any contract awarded to that person by the contracting authority which published the contract notice or any person who has been found guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authority can demonstrate;

…’

7 Article 230(1) of that code provided as follows:

‘Contracting entities shall apply Article 38 to verify that candidates or tenderers comply with the general requirements.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

8 GTT is a company operating urban railway, tramway, trolleybus and bus transport services.

9 By a notice sent for publication in the Official Journal of the European Union on 30 July 2015 and a letter of invitation of 27 November 2015, GTT opened a restricted procedure, in accordance with Directive 2004/17, for the procurement of services for the cleaning of vehicles, premises and sites, services for the movement and refuelling of vehicles, and ancillary services at the contracting authority’s establishments.

10 GTT stated that the total value of the contract, consisting of six lots, was EUR 29 434 319.39 excluding value added tax (VAT), the value of each lot being between EUR 4 249 999.10 and EUR 6 278 734.70.

11 Having awarded three of those lots to CNS, GTT then withdrew that award, by a decision of 14 July 2017 (‘the contested decision’). In so doing, it relied on a decision of the Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato (Competition Authority, Italy) (‘the AGCM’) of 22 December 2015 (‘the AGCM’s decision’), which imposed a fine of EUR 56 190 090 on CNS for having participated in an anticompetitive horizontal agreement, with the aim of influencing the outcome of a procurement procedure opened by another administration.

12 In the contested decision, it was also noted that the AGCM’s decision had already been upheld by a judicial decision with the force of res judicata. The contested decision relies additionally on two judgments, of 29 March and 3 April 2017, in which the referring court held that an anticompetitive agreement implemented by the operator in question in another procurement procedure and established in the course of administrative proceedings constituted grave professional misconduct within the meaning of Article 38(1)(f) of the Code on public contracts and point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18. It is also claimed, first, that, in the procedure for the award of the contract in question, CNS failed to mention in its participation file that penalty proceedings were pending against it before the AGCM and, secondly, that CNS only put compliance measures into place during the course of the procurement procedure, meaning that, at the start of the procedure, the ground for exclusion still existed.

13 GTT therefore took the view that the conduct penalised by the AGCM was such as to break the relationship of trust with the contracting authority.

14 By an interim order of 11 October 2017, the referring court dismissed an application for interim measures submitted by CNS.

15 Both that interim order and the judgments delivered by the referring court on 29 March and 3 April 2017 were reversed by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) by, respectively, an order of 20 November 2017 and two decisions of 4 December 2017 and 5 February 2018. According to the explanations provided by the referring court, those decisions make it clear that conduct constituting an infringement in competition matters cannot be classified as 'grave professional misconduct' for the purposes of the application of Article 38(1)(f) of the Code on public contracts and that 'only failures and negligence committed in the performance of a public contract' can be classified as such. 'Matters, even unlawful ones, which occurred during the preceding award procedure should therefore be ruled out.' That interpretation is based on the legal certainty of economic operators. According to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), that interpretation is compatible with the judgment of 18 December 2014, Generali-Providencia Biztosító (C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469), from which it can be inferred only that national legislation which expressly classifies an infringement of competition law as 'grave professional misconduct' does not breach EU law, and not that EU law requires such infringements to be included in the concept of 'grave professional misconduct'. It follows that, under Italian law, the commission of such infringements is irrelevant in public procurement procedures governed by the Code on public contracts.

16 CNS relies on those three decisions of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) in support of its action for annulment of the contested decision.

17 Referring to the judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 33), the referring court observes, however, that, since the Italian Republic had availed itself of the power granted to Member States by Article 54(4) of Directive 2004/17 to include the exclusion criteria listed in Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 in the criteria for the qualitative selection of operators in the special sectors, the Court's case-law relating to that provision is relevant to the case in the main proceedings, even though it concerns a restricted procedure under Directive 2004/17.

18 The referring court further observes that, in the judgments of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 27), and of 18 December 2014, Generali-Providencia Biztosító (C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469, paragraph 35), the Court already clarified that the concept of 'professional misconduct' covers all wrongful conduct having an impact on the professional credibility of the operator at issue and that the commission of an infringement of the competition rules, in particular where that infringement has been penalised by a fine, constitutes a cause for exclusion under point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18.

19 The referring court essentially infers, from a comparison of the judgments of 9 February 2006, La Cascina and Others (C-226/04 and C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94, paragraph 23), and of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 25), that Member States have a limited power of assessment with regard to the optional grounds for exclusion which do not refer to national legislation or rules to specify the implementing conditions thereof.

20 However, since the referring court considers the Court's case-law on the so-called 'optional' grounds for exclusion, which developed pursuant to Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) and Directive 2004/18, to be ambiguous in its interpretation, it is seeking clarification from the Court in this regard.

21 In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (Regional Administrative Court of Piedmont, Italy) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Do Articles 53(3) and 54(4) of [Directive 2004/17], in conjunction with [point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2)] of [Directive 2004/18], preclude a provision such as Article 38(1)(f) of [the Code on public contracts], as interpreted by national case-law, which excludes from the scope of "grave professional misconduct" on the part of an economic operator conduct consisting in infringement of the competition rules, which has been established and penalised by the national competition authority by decision upheld by the courts, thereby precluding a priori the contracting authorities from assessing such infringements independently for the purposes of determining whether such an economic operator is to be excluded from a tender procedure for the award of a public contract, as a possible but not a mandatory outcome?'

Consideration of the question referred

22 Under Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court, where the reply to a question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling may be clearly deduced from existing case-law or where the answer to the question referred admits of no reasonable doubt, the Court may at any time, on a proposal from the Judge-Rapporteur and after hearing the Advocate General, decide to rule by reasoned order.

23 That provision must be applied in the present case.

24 By its question, the referring court is essentially asking whether point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as Article 38(1)(f) of the Code on public contracts, which is interpreted as excluding from the scope of 'grave professional misconduct' on the part of an economic operator conduct consisting in infringement of the competition rules, which has been established and penalised by the national competition authority by decision upheld by the courts, thereby precluding the contracting authorities from assessing such infringements independently for the purposes of determining whether such an economic operator is potentially to be excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract.

25 According to settled case-law, Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 does not provide for uniform application at national level of the grounds of exclusion it mentions, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds of exclusion at all or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level. In that context, the Member States have the power to make the criteria laid down in that provision less onerous or more flexible (judgments of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici, C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063, paragraph 36, and of 14 December 2016, Connexxion Taxi Services, C-171/15, EU:C:2016:948, paragraph 29).

26 That being the case, it must be noted that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, unlike the provisions relating to the grounds for exclusion in points (a), (b), (e) and (f) of the same subparagraph, does not refer to national legislation or rules, but that the second subparagraph of Article 45(2) provides that Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for EU law, its implementing conditions, (judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 25).

27 It is therefore clear from the case-law — and as the referring court has observed — that where an optional ground for exclusion provided for in Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, such as that contained in point (d) of the first subparagraph thereof, does not refer to national law, the Member States' discretion is more strictly circumscribed. In such a case, it falls to the Court to define the scope of such an optional ground for exclusion (see, to that effect, judgments of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraphs 25 to 31, and of 18 December 2014, Generali-Providencia Biztosító, C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469, paragraph 35).

28 Consequently, the concepts of 'professional' 'grave' 'misconduct', in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) can be specified and explained in national law, provided that it has regard for EU law (judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 26).

29 In that regard, it should be noted that the concept of 'professional misconduct' covers all wrongful conduct which has an impact on the professional credibility of the operator at issue (judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 27), or on its integrity or reliability.

30 It follows that the concept of 'professional misconduct', which is interpreted broadly, cannot be limited only to failures and negligence committed in the performance of a public contract.

31 In addition, the concept of ‘grave misconduct’ must be understood as normally referring to conduct by the economic operator at issue which denotes a wrongful intent or negligence of a certain gravity on its part (judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 30).

32 Finally, point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 allows the contracting authorities to prove professional misconduct by any demonstrable means. Since a judgment which has the force of res judicata is not required in order to prove professional misconduct (judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 28), the decision of a national competition authority establishing that an operator has infringed the competition rules can undoubtedly be indicative of the existence of grave misconduct by that operator.

33 In those circumstances, the commission of an infringement of the competition rules, in particular where that infringement has been penalised by a fine, constitutes a ground for exclusion under point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 (judgment of 18 December 2014, Generali-Providencia Biztosító, C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469, paragraph 35).

34 It should be noted, however, that the decision of a national competition authority establishing an infringement of the competition rules does not necessarily result in the automatic exclusion of an economic operator from a procedure for the award of a public contract. In accordance with the principle of proportionality, a finding of ‘grave misconduct’ requires, in principle, a specific and individual assessment of the conduct of the economic operator concerned to be carried out (see, to that effect, judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 31).

35 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which is interpreted as excluding from the scope of ‘grave professional misconduct’ on the part of an economic operator conduct consisting in infringement of the competition rules, which has been established and penalised by the national competition authority by decision upheld by the courts, thereby precluding the contracting authorities from assessing such infringements independently for the purposes of determining whether such an economic operator is potentially to be excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract.

Costs

36 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

Point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which is interpreted as excluding from the scope of ‘grave professional misconduct’ on the part of an economic operator conduct consisting in infringement of the competition rules, which has been established and penalised by the national competition authority by decision upheld by the courts, thereby precluding the contracting authorities from assessing such infringements independently for the purposes of determining whether such an economic operator is potentially to be excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract.

having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to rule by reasoned order in accordance with Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court, makes this

Order

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 It has been made in the context of two disputes, the first between Italy Emergenza Cooperativa Sociale ('Italy Emergenza') and ULSS 5 Polesana Rovigo (local public health unit 5 of the Polesine of Rovigo, Italy, 'ULSS 5 Polesana'), and the second between Associazione Volontaria di Pubblica Assistenza 'Croce Verde' ('Croce Verde') and ULSS 5 Polesana and Regione del Veneto (Region of Veneto, Italy), concerning the award by ULSS 5 Polesana, by means of direct contracting, of a contract for ambulance transport services.

Legal background

3 Recital 28 of Directive 2014/24 states:

'This Directive should not apply to certain emergency services where they are performed by non-profit organisations or associations, since the particular nature of those organisations would be difficult to preserve if the service providers had to be chosen in accordance with the procedures set out in this Directive. However, the exclusion should not be extended beyond that strictly necessary. It should therefore be set out explicitly that patient transport ambulance services should not be excluded. In that context, it is furthermore necessary to clarify that CPV [Common Procurement Vocabulary] Group 601 'Land Transport Services' does not cover ambulance services, to be found in CPV class 8514. It should therefore be clarified that services, which are covered by CPV code 85143000-3, consisting exclusively of patient transport ambulance services, should be subject to the special regime set out for social and other specific services (the 'light regime'). Consequently, mixed contracts for the provision of ambulance services in general would also be subject to the light regime if the value of the patient transport ambulance services were greater than the value of other ambulance services.'

4 Article 10 of the directive, headed 'Specific exclusions for service contracts', provides, in paragraph (h):

'This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts for:

(h) civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, and which are covered by CPV codes 75250000-3 [Fire-brigade and rescue services], 75251000-0 [Fire-brigade services], 75251100-1 [Firefighting services], 75251110-4 [Fire-prevention services], 75251120-7 [Forest-firefighting services], 75252000-7 [Rescue Services], 75222000-8 [Civil defence services], 98113100-9 [Nuclear safety services] and 85143000-3 [Ambulance services] except patient transport ambulance services;

…'

5 Title III of the directive, headed 'Particular Procurement Regimes', contains a Chapter I consisting of Articles 74 to 77. Those articles make provision for the light regime which is applicable to social and other specific services.

6 Decreto legislativo n. 50 — Attuazione delle direttive 2014/23/UE, 2014/24/UE e 2014/25/UE sull'aggiudicazione dei contratti di concessione, sugli appalti pubblici e sulle procedure d'appalto degli enti erogatori nei settori dell'acqua, dell'energia, dei trasporti e dei servizi postali, nonché per il riordino della disciplina vigente in materia di contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture (Legislative Decree No 50 making provision for the application of Directives 2014/23/EU [on the award of concession contracts], 2014/24/EU and 2014/25/EU, on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, and reorganising the legislation applicable to public works contracts, public services contracts and public supply contracts), of 18 April 2016 (GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016), constitutes the new Codice dei contratti pubblici ('public contracts code').

7 Article 17 of that code, headed 'Specific exceptions for public contracts and service concessions', provides, in paragraph (1):

'The provisions of this code do not apply to public contracts or service concessions in respect of:

(h) civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, and which are covered by CPV codes 75250000-3, 75251000-0, 75251100-1, 75251110-4, 75251120-7, 75252000-7, 75222000-8, 98113100-9 and 85143000-3 except patient transport ambulance services.'

8 Article 57 of decreto legislativo n. 117 — Codice del Terzo settore (Legislative Decree No 117 enacting the third sector code) of 3 July 2017 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 179 of 2 August 2017) provides:

'Emergency ambulance transport services may be awarded as a priority, by direct contracting, to volunteer organisations which have been registered for at least 6 months in the national third sector register, which belong to a network of associations for the purposes of Article 41(2), and which are accredited under the relevant regional legislation, if any, where, by reason of the particular nature of the service, direct contracting ensures that a service which is in the public interest can be provided within a framework of effective contributions to social goals, which pursues objectives of solidarity, in an economically efficient and appropriate manner, and in accordance with the principles of transparency and non-discrimination.'

9 The decreto del Presidente del Consiglio dei Ministri — Definizione e aggiornamento dei livelli essenziali di assistenza, di cui all'articolo 1, comma 7, del decreto legislativo 30 dicembre 1992 n. 502 (Decree of the President of the Council of Ministers defining and updating the basic levels of care provided for in Article 1(7) of Legislative Decree No 502 of 30 December 1992) of 12 January 2017 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 65 of 18 March 2017), provides in Article 7, headed 'Local emergency medical care':

'1. The national health service shall ensure that medical care is provided rapidly, with a view to stabilising the patient's condition, in emergencies arising out of hospital, through the provision of safe transport to the most appropriate hospital facility. Local emergency services shall be coordinated and managed by '118' centres of operations, 24 hours a day.

2. In particular, the following shall be ensured:

(a) medical intervention by means of ground and air vehicles providing basic and advanced emergency care, and carrying appropriately trained medical personnel,

(b) secondary ambulance transport services, with or without the provision of care,

(c) medical care and coordination in the event of major emergencies or incidents carrying a nuclear, biological, chemical or radiological (NBCR) risk,

(d) medical care in respect of demonstrations and scheduled events, in accordance with the detailed provisions laid down by the regions and autonomous provinces.

3. The delivery of local emergency medical services shall be integrated with the emergency hospital care provided by the first response and emergency services, and with the provision of basic and ongoing care.'

10 Article 2(1) of the legge regionale n. 26 — Disciplina del sistema regionale di trasporto sanitario di soccorso ed emergenza (Regional Law of Veneto No 26 on the regional system of medical transport (emergency response and emergency care)) of 27 July 2012 ('Regional Law No 26/2012'), provides:

'For the purposes of this law, emergency response ambulance transport comprises those activities which are carried out using emergency vehicles by the personnel, in particular the medical personnel, responsible for that service, in the exercise of the following functions:

(a) emergency transport services provided using emergency vehicles under the direction of the emergency medical service (SUEM) coordination centres;

(b) transport services provided with the Livelli Essenziali di Assistenza (basic levels of care), using emergency vehicles;

(c) transport services provided in circumstances where the patient's condition requires the use of an emergency vehicle and the attention, during the journey, of medical or specially trained personnel, and also requires uninterrupted care to be ensured.'

11 Resolution No 1515 of the Giunta Regionale del Veneto (Executive Organ of the Region of Veneto, Italy), of 29 October 2015, provides that 'during the delivery of the service, a driver with emergency response training shall be present on board the ambulance together with at least one emergency responder with the qualifications and skills mandatory for that activity', which are obtained by completing a course and passing an examination in three subjects, namely anatomy, physiology and emergency response. It follows that the secondary service, which includes the service of transport alone, is delivered in a context which brings ordinary transport together with medical care.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 Italy Emergenza, which is a social cooperative organisation providing ambulance transport services, brought an action seeking, principally, the annulment of Decision No 1754 of the Director-General of ULSS 5 Polesana of 28 December 2017, together with a series of preparatory measures taken with a view to its adoption. By that decision, that local unit, ULSS 5 Polesana, had awarded the provision of emergency and secondary ambulance transport services, within its geographical area, to Croce Verde, by direct contracting. The contract, which runs from 1 April 2018 to 31 March 2020, can be renewed for a further 2 years provided that Croce Verde continues to meet the accreditation requirements of Regional Law No 26/2012 and Decision No 179/2014 of the Regional Council of Veneto. It quantifies the reimbursable costs at EUR 2 291 260 per annum, representing EUR 6 873 780 over 3 years.

13 Italy Emergenza submits that secondary ambulance transport services are not among the services excluded from the public procurement rules by Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 28 of that directive.

14 While that action was pending before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Veneto (Regional Administrative Court for Veneto, Italy), by Decision No 372 of 24 April 2018, ULSS 5 Polesana annulled Decision No 1754, so as to reflect a judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), of 22 February 2018, which held that only emergency ambulance services could fall within the exclusion from the award procedure, and only where they were provided by non-profit organisations. A service consisting simply in transport by ambulance, or in other words in the ordinary non-urgent transport of patients, was, on the other hand, held to be subject to the light regime provided for in Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24.

15 Following the adoption of Decision No 372, Italy Emergenza, in essence, indicated a wish to withdraw its action, on the basis that Croce Verde would not seek to have that decision annulled.

16 Croce Verde did challenge the decision, however, submitting that the distinction between emergency transport services and ordinary transport services had not been settled beyond argument. While recital 28 of Directive 2014/24 appeared to make the light regime applicable ‘exclusively’ to patient transport ambulance services, no such stipulation was to be found in Article 10(h) of the directive.

17 In a judgment delivered in a similar matter, on 9 March 2018, the referring court held that in accordance with that article, and with Article 17(1)(h) of the public contracts code, which transposes it word-for-word, the ‘ambulance services’ covered by CPV code 85143000-3 are, by derogation from the usual rules of public procurement, excluded from the provisions of the public contracts code, with the exception of ‘patient transport ambulance services’, which remain subject to the light regime. In order for the exclusion in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 to apply, it held, the emergency assistance services must be provided by ambulance, must consist in the provision of transport and first aid to patients in an emergency, and must be provided by a non-profit organisation. Ambulance transport services alone, or in other words the ordinary transport of patients where there is no emergency, were held to be subject to the light regime.

18 The referring court states, however, that while it is easy to distinguish emergency response services from mere patient transport services, there are intermediate forms of transport where the proper classification is less than obvious. This is true, in particular, of certain healthcare services referred to in Article 2 of Regional Law 26/2012, such as transport services provided with basic levels of care (which comprise an obligation on the part of the Servizio Sanitario Nazionale (National Health Service, Italy), to provide all citizens, free of charge or on payment of a contribution, with services delivered using emergency vehicles), or transport services provided in circumstances where the patient’s condition requires the use of an emergency vehicle and the attention, during the journey, of healthcare personnel, or specially trained personnel, in order to ensure uninterrupted care.

19 The referring court states that Article 2 of Regional Law No 26/2012 treats all such services as emergency transport services delivered using emergency vehicles and thus brings them, where they are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, within the exclusion in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 17(1)(h) of the public contracts code.

20 Against that background, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Veneto (Regional Administrative Court for Veneto) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 10(h) and recital 28 of Directive [2014/24] be interpreted as meaning that:

(a) ambulance services that require the presence on board of a driver with emergency response training and at least one emergency responder with the qualifications and skills obtained from completing a course and passing an examination in emergency response, and

(b) transport services provided with basic levels of care using emergency vehicles are covered by the exclusion laid down in the above-mentioned Article 10(h), or must they be among the services referred to in Articles 74 to 77 of Directive [2014/24]?

(2) Must Directive 2014/24/EU be interpreted as precluding national legislation which provides that, even in the absence of an actual emergency,

(a) ambulance services that require the presence on board of a driver with emergency response training and at least one emergency responder with the qualifications and skills obtained from completing a course and passing an examination in emergency response, and

(b) transport services provided with basic levels of care using emergency vehicles are awarded as a priority to voluntary associations by means of direct contracting?’

Consideration of the questions referred

21 Under Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court, where the reply to a question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling may be clearly deduced from existing case-law or where the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling admits of no reasonable doubt, the Court may at any time, on a proposal from the Judge-Rapporteur and after hearing the Advocate General, decide to rule by reasoned order.

22 It is appropriate to apply that provision in the present case.

23 By its questions, which can appropriately be examined together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 28 of that directive, is to be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which, first, ambulance services requiring the presence on board of a driver with emergency response training and at least one emergency responder with the qualifications and skills obtained from completing a course and passing an examination in emergency response, and second, transport services provided with basic levels of care using emergency vehicles, fall, in the absence of any emergency, within the exclusion provided for by that article.

24 In answering that question, it should be observed that Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 excludes public service contracts relating to civil defence services, civil protection services and danger prevention services from the scope of the traditional public procurement rules, provided that they fall within the CPV codes referred to in that article and are provided by non-profit organisations or associations. That exclusion to the public procurement rules is itself subject to an exception, however, in that it does not extend to patient transport ambulance services, which are subject to the light regime provided for in Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24 (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck, C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234, paragraph 38).

25 It is clear from Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of recital 28 thereof, that the exclusion from the public procurement rules laid down in that provision in favour of danger prevention services only benefits certain emergency services provided by non-profit organisations or associations and that it must not go beyond what is strictly necessary (judgment of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck, C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234, paragraph 43).

26 Thus, as regards danger prevention services, the inapplicability of the public procurement rules laid down in Article 10(h) of that directive is inextricably linked to the existence of an emergency service, such that the presence of qualified personnel on board an ambulance cannot suffice to establish, in itself, the existence of an ambulance service covered by CPV code 85143000-3 (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck, C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234, paragraphs 44 and 45).

27 An emergency may nevertheless be shown to exist, at least potentially, where it is necessary to transport a patient whose state of health is at risk of deterioration during that transport, although it must be possible, in principle, for that risk to be objectively assessed. It is only in those circumstances that transport by qualified ambulance could fall within the scope of the exclusion from the application of the public procurement rules laid down in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 (see, to that effect, judgment of 21 March 2019, Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck, C-465/17, EU:C:2019:234, paragraphs 46 and 49).

28 It follows from the considerations set out above that neither ambulance services which, under the legislation at issue in the main proceedings, require the presence on board of an appropriately trained emergency response driver and at least one appropriately trained emergency responder, nor transport services provided with basic levels of care using emergency vehicles, can automatically fall within the exclusion in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24. The benefit of that exclusion is only available where, in addition to appropriately trained first responders being present, the ambulance service is provided by non-profit organisations or associations, within the meaning of that provision, and there is an emergency.

29 Accordingly, the answer to the questions referred is that Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 28 of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which ambulance services that require the presence on board of a driver with emergency response training and at least one emergency responder with the qualifications and skills obtained from completing a course and passing an examination in emergency response, and transport services provided with basic levels of care using emergency vehicles, fall, in the absence of any emergency, within the exclusion provided for in that article.

Costs

30 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, read in conjunction with recital 28 of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which ambulance services that require the presence on board of a driver with emergency response training and at least one emergency responder with the qualifications and skills obtained from completing a course and passing an examination in emergency response, and transport services provided with basic levels of care using emergency vehicles, fall, in the absence of any emergency, within the exclusion provided for in that article.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Second Chamber)

30 January 2020(*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement of supplies, works or services — Directive 2014/24/EU — Article 18(2) — Article 57(4) — Optional grounds for exclusion — Ground for exclusion of a subcontractor mentioned in the economic operator's tender — Subcontractor's failure to comply with environmental, social and labour law obligations — National legislation providing for automatic exclusion of the economic operator for such a failure)

In Case C-395/18,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy), made by decision of 21 February 2018, received at the Court on 14 June 2018, in the proceedings

Tim SpA — Direzione e coordinamento Vivendi SA

Consip SpA,

Ministero dell'Economia e delle Finanze,

intervener:

E-VIA SpA,

THE COURT (Second Chamber),

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 11 July 2019,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 57(4) and Article 71(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 That request has been made in proceedings between Tim SpA — Direzione e coordinamento Vivendi SA ('Tim') and Consip SpA and the Ministero dell'Economia e delle Finanze (Ministry of the Economy and Finance, Italy) concerning the exclusion of Tim from an open tender procedure organised by Consip.

Legal context

3 Recitals 40, 101 and 102 of Directive 2014/24 state:

'(40) Control of the observance of the environmental, social and labour law provisions should be performed at the relevant stages of the procurement procedure, when applying the general principles governing the choice of participants and the award of contracts, when applying the exclusion criteria and when applying the provisions concerning abnormally low tenders. …

(101) Contracting authorities should further be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable, for instance because of violations of environmental or social obligations, including rules on accessibility for disabled persons or other forms of grave professional misconduct, such as violations of competition rules or of intellectual property rights. …

In applying facultative grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities should pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality. Minor irregularities should only in exceptional circumstances lead to the exclusion of an economic operator. However repeated cases of minor irregularities can give rise to doubts about the reliability of an economic operator which might justify its exclusion.

(102) Allowance should, however, be made for the possibility that economic operators can adopt compliance measures aimed at remedying the consequences of any criminal offences or misconduct and at effectively preventing further occurrences of the misbehaviour. Those measures might consist in particular of personnel and organisational measures such as the severance of all links with persons or organisations involved in the misbehaviour, appropriate staff reorganisation measures, the implementation of reporting and control systems, the creation of an internal audit structure to monitor compliance and the adoption of internal liability and compensation rules. Where such measures offer sufficient guarantees, the economic operator in question should no longer be excluded on those grounds alone. Economic operators should have the possibility to request that compliance measures taken with a view to possible admission to the procurement procedure be examined. However, it should be left to Member States to determine the exact procedural and substantive conditions applicable in such cases. They should, in particular, be free to decide whether to allow the individual contracting authorities to carry out the relevant assessments or to entrust other authorities on a central or decentralised level with that task.'

4 Under Article 2(1), points (10) to (12), of that directive:

'For the purpose of this Directive:

10. “economic operator” means any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities, including any temporary association of undertakings, which offers the execution of works and/or a work, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market;

11. “tenderer” means an economic operator that has submitted a tender;

12. “candidate” means an economic operator that has sought an invitation or has been invited to take part in a restricted procedure, in a competitive procedure with negotiation, in a negotiated procedure without prior publication, in a competitive dialogue or in an innovation partnership;’

5 Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’ and which constitute the first provision of Chapter II of that directive, entitled ‘General Rules’, provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.

2. Member States shall take appropriate measures to ensure that in the performance of public contracts economic operators comply with applicable obligations in the fields of environmental, social and labour law established by Union law, national law, collective agreements or by the international environmental, social and labour law provisions listed in Annex X.’

6 Under Article 56(1)(b) of that directive:

‘Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of criteria laid down in accordance with Articles 67 to 69, provided that the contracting authority has verified in accordance with Articles 59 to 61 that all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(b) the tender comes from a tenderer that is not excluded in accordance with Article 57 …’

7 Article 57 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Exclusion grounds’, provides in paragraphs 4 to 7 thereof:

‘4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(a) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by any appropriate means a violation of applicable obligations referred to in Article 18(2);

At any time during the procedure, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4.

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. …

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. …'

8 Article 71(6)(b) of that Directive provides:

'With the aim of avoiding breaches of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2), appropriate measures may be taken, such as:

(b) Contracting authorities may, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify or may be required by Member States to verify whether there are grounds for exclusion of subcontractors pursuant to Article 57. In such cases, the contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces a subcontractor in respect of which the verification has shown that there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by a Member State to require that the economic operator replaces a subcontractor in respect of which the verification has shown that there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.'

9 Article 17 of legge n. 68 — Norme per il diritto al lavoro dei disabili (Law No 68 concerning the rules on disabled persons' right to work) of 12 March 1999 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 68, of 23 March 1999) provides:

'Both public and private sector companies which take part in public procurement procedures, operate concessions or have agreements with government bodies must first provide the government body in question with a declaration by their legal representative stating that they comply with the rules on disabled persons' right to work. If they fail to do so they face exclusion.'

10 Article 80(5)(i) of decreto legislativo n. 50 — Codice dei contratti pubblici (Legislative Decree No 50 establishing the public procurement code) of 18 April 2016 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016, 'the Public Procurement Code') provides:

'The contracting authorities shall exclude an economic operator from participation in a tendering procedure in any of the following situations, and this shall also apply to a subcontractor of the economic operator in the cases referred to in Article 105(6), where:

(i) the economic operator fails to submit the certification referred to in Article 17 of Law No 68 … or to self-certify that the requirement in question has been satisfied; …'

11 Article 105(6) and (12) of the Public Procurement Code is worded as follows:

'6. The list of three subcontractors must be provided where the value of the works contracts, service contracts or supply contracts is equal to or greater than the thresholds laid down in Article 35 and no special qualifications are required in order to perform the contracts. In such cases this requirement must be specified in the call for tenders. The contracting authority may specify in the call for tenders other situations in which the list of three subcontractors must be provided even where the value of the contract is below the threshold laid down in Article 35.

12. The successful tenderer shall provide for the replacement of subcontractors for whom it has been shown, following verification to that effect, that the grounds for exclusion under Article 80 were present.’

The dispute in the main proceedings, the questions referred and the procedure before the Court

12 By a call for tenders published on 3 August 2016 in the Official Journal of the European Union, Consip, the Italian central authority for public procurement, launched an open procedure for the award of a contract for the supply of an optical communication system, known as the ‘Wavelength Division Multiplexing (WDM) system’, for the interconnection of the data processing centre of several departments of the Ministry of Economy and Finance.

13 Tim submitted a tender mentioning three subcontractors whom it intended to use in the event of being awarded the contract at issue in the main proceedings, attaching for each of them the Single European Market Document (SEMD).

14 In the course of the procedure, the contracting authority found that one of the subcontractors mentioned by Tim in its tender did not comply with the standards relating to the right to work for people with disabilities. Consip therefore excluded Tim from the procedure pursuant to Article 80(5)(i) of the Public Procurement Code.

15 Tim brought an action before the national court, challenging the unfair and disproportionate nature of its exclusion. According to Tim, it is apparent from Directive 2014/24 that the finding of a ground for exclusion in respect of a subcontractor cannot result in the imposition of a penalty more severe than replacement of that subcontractor. Tim adds that it could, in any event, have had recourse, in order to perform the contract at issue in the main proceedings, to the two other subcontractors in respect of whom no grounds for exclusion were found, especially since recourse to subcontracting was not indispensable for the performance of that contract, since Tim fulfilled all the conditions necessary to perform the services concerned on its own.

16 The referring court observes that Tim’s exclusion is in accordance with Article 80(5)(i) of the Public Procurement Code, since the replacement of a subcontractor may be required, in accordance with Article 105(12) of that code, only if the ground for exclusion is established in respect of that subcontractor after the award of the contract.

17 The referring court asks, however, whether, by providing that the contracting authority is required, where there is a ground for exclusion found in respect of a subcontractor at the tender stage, to exclude from the procedure the tenderer who has indicated its intention to have recourse to that subcontractor, Article 80(5)(i) of the Public Procurement Code is compliant with Articles 57(4) and (5) and 71(6)(b) of Directive 2014/24.

18 In particular, the referring court asks whether the grounds for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4) and (5) of Directive 2014/24 can lead to the exclusion of the tenderer only if they relate to the tenderer or whether such exclusion is also possible where those grounds relate to a subcontractor designated by the tenderer. Furthermore, the referring court seeks to ascertain whether Article 71(6) of Directive 2014/24 precludes an automatic exclusion of the tenderer, such as that provided for in Article 80(5) of the Public Procurement Code, whereas that provision of the directive appears to provide only for the replacement of a subcontractor as the maximum penalty which may be imposed on the tenderer following the finding of a ground for exclusion in respect of a subcontractor.

19 In the alternative, the referring court asks whether, if the Court were to find that the provisions of Directive 2014/24 do not preclude national legislation such as Article 80(5) of the Public Procurement Code, such legislation complies with the principle of proportionality, where exclusion of the tenderer is automatic, without the possibility of exceptions, the contracting authority not having the option to require the tenderer to replace the subcontractor or to refrain from using that tenderer, even where recourse to subcontracting is not strictly necessary for the performance of the contract.

20 In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘1. Do Articles 57 and 71(6) of Directive [2014/24] preclude national legislation, such as Article 80(5) of [the Public Procurement Code], which requires the exclusion of a tendering economic operator where, during the tendering procedure, a ground is established for excluding a subcontractor forming part of the group of three subcontractors specified in the tender, rather than requiring the tenderer to replace the designated subcontractor?

2. In the alternative, if the [Court] considers that the option of excluding the tenderer is one of the options open to the Member State, does the principle of proportionality enshrined in Article 5 of the EU Treaty, referred to in recital 101 of Directive [2014/24] and established as a general principle of EU law by the [Court], preclude national legislation, such as Article 80(5) of [the Public Procurement Code], which provides that, where a ground for excluding a designated subcontractor is established during the tendering procedure, a tendering economic operator is to be excluded in all cases, including where there are other subcontractors that have not been excluded and satisfy the requirements for the provision of the services to be subcontracted, or where the tendering economic operator declares that it will not subcontract as it satisfies the requirements for the provision of the services on its own?’

21 On 27 February 2019, pursuant to Article 101 of its Rules of Procedure, the Court sent the referring court a request for clarification, seeking in particular to ascertain whether Tim was required to indicate three subcontractors in its tender and, if so, whether it was required to use those three subcontractors or at least one of them in the event that it was awarded the contract at issue in the main proceedings. The referring court was also asked to state whether, when drawing up its tender, Tim was required, under the Italian legislation, to verify that the subcontractors which it intended to designate in its tender were not affected by the ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, transposed into Italian law by Article 80(5)(i) of the Public Procurement Code, and whether it had the practical possibility of doing so.

22 In its reply, received at the Registry of the Court on 26 March 2019, the referring court stated, first of all, that Tim was obliged to indicate a fixed number of three subcontractors only in so far as it wished to reserve the option of subcontracting in the event of being awarded the contract at issue in the main proceedings. It went on to state that Tim was not obliged to use the three subcontractors mentioned in its tender or even one of them if it was awarded the contract. Finally, it stated that Tim was not required, under the Italian legislation, to verify that the subcontractors which it intended to designate in its tender were not affected by the ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 and that such verification required, in any event, the cooperation of the subcontractors concerned.

The request to have the oral procedure reopened

23 By letter of 15 July 2019 addressed to the Registry of the Court of Justice, the Austrian Government requested the reopening of the oral phase of the proceedings pursuant to Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure. In that regard, it argued that paragraph 52 of the Advocate General’s Opinion does not accurately reflect the reasoning underlying the argument it developed in its written observations.

24 Pursuant to Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure, the Court may at any time, after hearing the Advocate General, order the opening or reopening of the oral part of the procedure, in particular if it considers that it lacks sufficient information or where a party has, after the close of that part of the procedure, submitted a new fact which is of decisive significance for the decision of the Court, or where the case must be decided on the basis of an argument which has not been debated between the parties or the interested persons referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

25 In the present case, the Court, after hearing the Advocate General, considers that it has all the information necessary to answer the questions raised by the referring court and that the case does not have to be examined in the light of a new fact which is of decisive significance for its decision or of an argument which has not been debated before it.

26 In so far as the application for the reopening of the oral phase of the proceedings is to be understood as meaning that the Court lacks sufficient information on the Austrian Government’s argument on account of the considerations expressed by the Advocate General in point 52 of his Opinion, it should be borne in mind, first, that the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union and the Rules of Procedure of the Court make no provision for interested parties to submit observations in response to the Advocate General's Opinion (judgment of 22 November 2018, MEO — Serviços de Comunicações e Multimédia, C-295/17, EU:C:2018:942, paragraph 26 and the case-law cited).

27 Second, under the second paragraph of Article 252 TFEU, it is the duty of the Advocate General, acting with complete impartiality and independence, to make, in open court, reasoned submissions on cases which, in accordance with the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union, require the Advocate General's involvement. In that regard, the Court is not bound either by the Advocate General's Opinion or by the reasoning on which it is based (judgment of 16 September 2015, Société des Produits Nestlé, C-215/14, EU:C:2015:604, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

28 In those circumstances, since the Austrian government's argument clearly emerges from its written observations and since the Advocate General's Opinion is not binding on the Court as regards the exposition or interpretation of that argument, the Court must be held not to lack sufficient information within the meaning of Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure.

29 The application for the oral procedure to be reopened must therefore be dismissed.

Consideration of the questions referred

30 By its questions, which must be examined together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 2014/24 and the principle of proportionality preclude national legislation under which the contracting authority is required automatically to exclude an economic operator from the contract award procedure where the ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4)(a) of that directive is found in respect of one of the subcontractors mentioned in that operator's tender.

31 Under Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, contracting authorities may exclude or be obliged by Member States to exclude any economic operator from participation in a contract award procedure where they can demonstrate, by any appropriate means, a failure to comply with the applicable obligations referred to in Article 18(2) of that directive.

32 It should be noted, first of all, that it follows from Article 2(1)(10) of Directive 2014/24 that 'economic operator' is defined as any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities, including any temporary association of undertakings, which offers the execution of works and/or a work, the supply of products or the provision of services on the market.

33 As regards an optional ground for exclusion such as that provided for in Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, it should be noted at the outset that, in accordance with Article 57(7) of that directive, it is for the Member States, in compliance with EU law, to lay down the 'implementing conditions'.

34 It is apparent from the case-law of the Court of Justice that Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 does not provide for uniform application at Union level of the exclusion grounds it mentions, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds, or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level. Member States therefore enjoy some discretion in determining the implementing conditions of the optional grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 (see, by analogy, judgment of 20 December 2017, Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani et Guerrato, C-178/16, EU:C:2017:1000, paragraphs 31 and 32).

35 As regards the optional ground for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, it must be emphasised, as the Advocate General points out in point 32 of his Opinion, that that ground is drafted impersonally, without specifying who is responsible for the failure to fulfil the obligations referred to in Article 18(2) of that directive. Consequently, it must be held that the wording of Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, even when read in the light of the first subparagraph of recital 101 of that directive, from which it is apparent that contracting authorities should be able to exclude unreliable economic operators for failure to comply with environmental or social obligations, does not prevent Member States from considering that the party responsible for the identified failure to fulfil obligations may also be the subcontractor and thus provide for the contracting authority to have the option, or even the obligation, to exclude, as a result, the economic operator who submitted the tender from participation in the contract award procedure.

36 It should be noted, however, that it is necessary, in interpreting a provision of EU law, to take into account not only the wording of the provision concerned, but also its context and the general scheme of the rules of which it forms part and the objectives pursued thereby (judgment of 5 July 2018, X, C-213/17, EU:C:2018:538, paragraph 26).

37 As regards, in the first place, the context of Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 and the general scheme of that directive, it must be noted that that provision expressly refers to a failure to fulfil the obligations referred to in Article 18(2) of that directive, namely the obligations applicable in the fields of environmental, social and labour law.

38 In this respect, it should be noted that Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, is the first article of Chapter II of that directive devoted to ‘general rules’ on public procurement procedures. Accordingly, by providing in paragraph 2 of that article that economic operators must comply, in the performance of the contract, with obligations relating to environmental, social and labour law, the Union legislature sought to establish that requirement as a principle, like the other principles referred to in paragraph 1 of that article, namely the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, transparency, proportionality and prohibiting the exclusion of a contract from the scope of Directive 2014/24 or artificially narrowing competition. It follows that such a requirement constitutes, in the general scheme of that directive, a cardinal value with which the Member States must ensure compliance pursuant to the wording of Article 18(2) of that directive.

39 In those circumstances, the need to ensure appropriate compliance with the obligations referred to in Article 18(2) of Directive 2014/24 must enable Member States, when determining the implementing conditions of the ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4)(a) of that directive, to consider that the party responsible for the failure to fulfil obligations may be not only the economic operator who submitted the tender, but also the subcontractors which the latter intends to use. The contracting authority may legitimately claim to award the contract only to economic operators who, at the stage of the contract award procedure, demonstrate their capacity to ensure in an appropriate manner, during the performance of the contract, that those obligations are fulfilled, where appropriate by having recourse to subcontractors who themselves comply with those obligations.

40 It follows that Member States may provide, for the purposes of applying Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, that the contracting authority has the option, or even the obligation, to exclude the economic operator who submitted the tender from participating in the contract award procedure where a failure to fulfil the obligations referred to in Article 18(2) of that directive is established with regard to one of the subcontractors referred to in that operator’s tender.

41 That interpretation is supported, secondly, by the objective underlying Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24. In that connection, it should be borne in mind that the option, or even the obligation, for the contracting authority to exclude an economic operator from participating in a contract award procedure is intended in particular to enable it to assess the integrity and reliability of each of the economic operators. In particular, the optional ground for exclusion mentioned in Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 101 of that directive, is based on an essential element of the relationship between the successful tenderer and the contracting authority, namely the reliability of the successful tenderer, on which the contracting authority’s trust is founded (see, by analogy, judgment of 3 October 2019, Delta Antrepriză de Construcţii şi Montaj 93, C-267/18, EU:C:2019:826, paragraph 26 and the case-law cited).

42 Combined with the specific objective of Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, which is to ensure compliance with obligations under environmental, social and labour law, the objective relating to the reliability of the economic operator must enable the Member States to grant the contracting authority the option, or even the obligation, to regard as reliable only those economic operators who, when drawing up their tenders, have exercised the care and diligence required to ensure that, in the course of performance of the contract, the obligations concerned are complied with in all circumstances, whether by themselves or by the subcontractors to whom they intend to entrust part of that performance.

43 It follows from the foregoing considerations that Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 does not preclude national legislation under which the contracting authority has the option, or even the obligation, to exclude the economic operator who submitted the tender from participation in the contract award procedure where the ground for exclusion referred to in that provision is found in respect of one of the subcontractors mentioned in that operator's tender.

44 That being so, it should be recalled, as stated in paragraph 33 of the present judgment, that Member States, when adopting the implementing conditions of Article 57 of Directive 2014/24, must, under paragraph 7 of that article, comply with EU law.

45 In that regard, it should be borne in mind, first, that the contracting authorities must, throughout the procedure, observe the principles of procurement set out in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, which include, inter alia, the principles of equal treatment and proportionality (judgment of 26 September 2019, Vitali, C-63/18, EU:C:2019:787, paragraph 39 and the case-law cited), and, second, that, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, which is a general principle of EU law, the rules laid down by the Member States or contracting authorities in implementing the provisions of that directive, such as the rules intended to lay down the implementing conditions of Article 57 of that directive, must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of that directive (see, to that effect, judgments of 7 July 2016, Ambisig, C-46/15, EU:C:2016:530, paragraph 40, and of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

46 Accordingly, first, where the contracting authority undertakes to verify during the contract award procedure, as it is obliged to do under Article 56(1)(b) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of recital 40 of that directive, whether there are exclusion grounds within the meaning of Article 57(4)(a) of that directive and the national rules provide that it has the option, or even the obligation, to exclude the economic operator on the grounds that a subcontractor has failed to comply with obligations relating to environmental, social and labour law, it is required, in order to comply with the principle of equal treatment, to verify whether there is any failure to comply with those obligations in respect not only of all the economic operators who have submitted a tender, but also in respect of all the subcontractors indicated by those operators in their respective tenders.

47 Since such a uniform verification takes place at the stage of the contract award procedure, it should be made clear that the principle of equal treatment does not preclude national legislation from providing that a finding of failure to fulfil obligations in respect of a subcontractor after the award of the contract does not entail the exclusion of the successful tenderer, but only the replacement of the subcontractor. Since all the economic operators and subcontractors indicated in those operators' tenders were subject, in the course of the procurement procedure, to a verification process carried out under identical conditions by the contracting authority, those operators and subcontractors should be considered to have been treated on an equal footing in that regard during the procurement procedure, the principle of equal treatment not precluding the provision of a different rule where the failure to fulfil obligations could not be established until later, during the performance phase of the contract.

48 As regards, second, the principle of proportionality, it should be recalled, in addition to the case-law referred to in paragraph 45 of the present judgment, that it follows from the third paragraph of recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 that, when applying optional grounds for exclusion such as that set out in Article 57(4)(a) of that directive, contracting authorities must pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality, taking into account in particular the minor nature of the irregularities committed or the repetition of minor irregularities. That attention must be even greater where the exclusion provided for by national legislation is imposed on the economic operator who submitted the tender for a failure to fulfil obligations committed not directly by that operator but by a person outside his undertaking, in relation to the control of whom the operator may not have all the authority required or all the necessary means at his disposal.

49 The need to comply with the principle of proportionality is also reflected in the first subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, according to which any economic operator who, inter alia, is in the situation referred to in Article 57(4)(a) of that directive including, as is apparent from paragraph 43 of the present judgment, by the effect of a failure found in respect of a subcontractor indicated in the tender, may provide evidence to show that the measures it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of that ground for exclusion. The first subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 specifies that, if such evidence is considered sufficient, the economic operator concerned must not be excluded from the contract award procedure. That provision thus introduces a mechanism for corrective measures (self-cleaning) which underlines the importance attaching to the reliability of the economic operator (judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraphs 40 and 41).

50 It follows that, where he runs the risk of being excluded from participation in the procurement procedure because of a failure to fulfil environmental, social and labour law obligations attributable to one of the subcontractors he is considering using, the economic operator who submitted the tender can demonstrate to the contracting authority that he remains reliable despite the existence of such a ground for exclusion, the contracting authority being required, in accordance with the third subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, to assess the evidence provided by that operator in the light of the seriousness of the situation and the particular circumstances of the case.

51 However, the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings provides in a general and abstract manner for the automatic exclusion of the economic operator where a failure to fulfil obligations under environmental, social and labour law is established in relation to one of the subcontractors indicated in that operator's tender, irrespective of the circumstances which led to that failure, and thus establishes an irrebuttable presumption that the economic operator must be excluded for any failure attributable to one of its subcontractors, without leaving the contracting authority the option of assessing, on a case-by-case basis, the particular circumstances of the case or the economic operator being able to demonstrate its reliability despite the finding of that failure.

52 In particular, such legislation does not allow the contracting authority to take account, for the purposes of assessing the situation, of a series of relevant factors such as the means which the economic operator submitting the tender had at its disposal to verify whether there was a failure on the part of the subcontractors or any indication in its tender that it is able to perform the contract without necessarily having recourse to the subcontractor in question.

53 In those circumstances, national legislation providing for such automatic exclusion of the economic operator who submitted the tender infringes the principle of proportionality by requiring the contracting authorities to proceed automatically to that exclusion on the ground of the failure of a subcontractor and thus exceeding the discretion enjoyed by the Member States pursuant to Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24, in specifying the implementing conditions for the ground for exclusion set out in Article 57(4)(a) of that directive in compliance with EU law. Such a regulation also deprives the economic operator of the possibility of demonstrating, in accordance with Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, its reliability despite the existence of a failure to fulfil obligations on the part of one of its subcontractors (see, by analogy, judgments of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 30; of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraphs 34 and 35; and of 26 September 2019, Vitali, C-63/18, EU:C:2019:787, paragraphs 40 and 41).

54 Consequently, an automatic exclusion of the economic operator who submitted the tender, provided for by the national legislation, in so far as it deprives, first, that operator of the possibility of providing detailed information about the situation and, secondly, the contracting authority of any discretion in that regard, cannot be regarded as being compatible with Article 57(4) and (6) of Directive 2014/24 and the principle of proportionality (see, by analogy, judgment of 26 September 2019, Vitali, C-63/18, EU:C:2019:787, paragraphs 42 and 43).

55 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the questions referred must be that Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 does not preclude national legislation under which the contracting authority has the option, or even the obligation, to exclude the economic operator who submitted the tender from participation in the contract award procedure where the ground for exclusion referred to in that provision is established in respect of one of the subcontractors mentioned in that operator's tender. However, that provision, read in conjunction with Article 57(6) of that directive, and the principle of proportionality preclude national legislation providing for the automatic nature of such exclusion.

Costs

56 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC does not preclude national legislation under which the contracting authority has the option, or even the obligation, to exclude the economic operator who submitted the tender from participation in the contract award procedure where the ground for exclusion referred to in that provision is established in respect of one of the subcontractors mentioned in that operator's tender. However, that provision, read in conjunction with Article 57(6) of that directive, and the principle of proportionality preclude national legislation providing for the automatic nature of such an exclusion.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

delivered on 11 July 2019(1)

Case C-395/18

v

Consip SpA,

Ministero dell'Economia e delle Finanze,

with the intervention of:

E-VIA SpA

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Directive 2014/24/EU — Public procurement — Optional grounds for exclusion — Exclusion of an economic operator from participating in a tender procedure due to non-compliance of a subcontractor proposed by it — Breach of the environmental, social or labour law obligations referred to in Article 18(2) — Exclusion of the tenderer — Article 71 — Article 57(4)(a))

1. An Italian contracting authority (Consip SpA) (2) issued a tender for a public contract for the provision of certain services. The tender specifications permitted the services to be subcontracted. In order to take advantage of this option, tenderers had to state in their tenders that they intended to subcontract part of the services and had to provide a list of three subcontractors.

2. One of the tenderers (Tim SpA) stated in its tender that it would subcontract some of the services covered by the contract and listed the names of three subcontractors. As one of the subcontractors was subject to an optional ground for exclusion (it had breached social and labour law requirements), the contracting authority excluded the tenderer from the procedure.

3. In summary, the referring court wishes to know whether, under Directive 2014/24/EU, (3) the contracting authority is entitled to exclude a tenderer from the procurement procedure on grounds that have to do with the subcontractor proposed in the tender.

I. Legal framework

A. EU law. Directive 2014/24

4. Recital 101 is as follows:

‘Contracting authorities should further be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable, for instance because of violations of environmental or social obligations …

In applying facultative grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities should pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality. Minor irregularities should only in exceptional circumstances lead to the exclusion of an economic operator. However repeated cases of minor irregularities can give rise to doubts about the reliability of an economic operator which might justify its exclusion.’

5. Recital 105 states that:

‘It is important that observance by subcontractors of applicable obligations in the fields of environmental, social and labour law, established by Union law, national law, collective agreements or by the international environmental, social and labour law provisions listed in this Directive, provided that such rules, and their application, comply with Union law, be ensured …

It should also be clarified that the conditions relating to the enforcement of observance of applicable obligations in the fields of environmental, social and labour law, established by Union law, national law, collective agreements or by the international environmental, social and labour law provisions listed in this Directive, provided that such rules, and their application, comply with Union law, should be applied whenever the national law of a Member State provides for a mechanism of joint liability between subcontractors and the main contractor. Furthermore, it should be stated explicitly that Member States should be able to go further, for instance by extending the transparency obligations, by enabling direct payment to subcontractors or by enabling or requiring contracting authorities to verify that subcontractors are not in any of the situations in which exclusion of economic operators would be warranted. Where such measures are applied to subcontractors, coherence with the provisions applicable to main contractors should be ensured so that the existence of compulsory exclusion grounds would be followed by a requirement that the main contractor replace the subcontractor concerned. Where such verification shows the presence of non-compulsory grounds for exclusion, it should be clarified that contracting authorities are able to require the replacement. It should, however, also be set out explicitly that contracting authorities may be obliged to require the replacement of the subcontractor concerned where exclusion of main contractors would be obligatory in such cases.

It should also be set out explicitly that Member States remain free to provide for more stringent liability rules under national law or to go further under national law on direct payments to subcontractors.’

6. Article 18 (‘Principles of procurement’) provides as follows:

2. Member States shall take appropriate measures to ensure that in the performance of public contracts economic operators comply with applicable obligations in the fields of environmental, social and labour law established by Union law, national law, collective agreements or by the international environmental, social and labour law provisions listed in Annex X.’

7. Article 57 (‘Exclusion grounds’) stipulates that:

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(a) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by any appropriate means a violation of applicable obligations referred to in Article 18(2);

8. Article 71 (‘Subcontracting’) establishes that:

‘1. Observance of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2) by subcontractors is ensured through appropriate action by the competent national authorities acting within the scope of their responsibility and remit.

2. In the procurement documents, the contracting authority may ask or may be required by a Member State to ask the tenderer to indicate in its tender any share of the contract it may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors.

4. Paragraphs 1 to 3 shall be without prejudice to the question of the main contractor’s liability.

6. With the aim of avoiding breaches of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2), appropriate measures may be taken, such as:

(a) Where the national law of a Member State provides for a mechanism of joint liability between subcontractors and the main contractor, the Member State concerned shall ensure that the relevant rules are applied in compliance with the conditions set out in Article 18(2).

(b) Contracting authorities may, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify or may be required by Member States to verify whether there are grounds for exclusion of subcontractors pursuant to Article 57. In such cases, the contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces a subcontractor in respect of which the verification has shown that there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by a Member State to require that the economic operator replaces a subcontractor in respect of which the verification has shown that there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.

7. Member States may provide for more stringent liability rules under national law or to go further under national law on direct payments to subcontractors, for instance by providing for direct payments to subcontractors without it being necessary for them to request such direct payment.

8. Member States having chosen to provide for measures pursuant to paragraphs 3, 5 or 6 shall, by law, regulation or administrative provisions and having regard for Union law, specify the implementing conditions for those measures. In so doing, Member States may limit their applicability, for instance in respect of certain types of contracts, certain categories of cont[r]acting authorities or economic operators or as of certain amounts.’

B. Italian law. Legislative Decree No 50/2016 (4)

9. Article 80(5) provides as follows:

‘The contracting authorities shall exclude an economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure in any of the following situations, and this shall also apply to a subcontractor of the economic operator in the cases referred to in Article 105(6), where:

(i) the economic operator fails to submit the certification referred to in Article 17 of Law No 68 of 12 March 1999 or to self-certify that the requirement in question has been satisfied; [(5)]

…’

10. Article 105 stipulates that:

6. The list of three subcontractors must be provided where the value of the works contracts, service contracts or supply contracts is equal to or greater than the thresholds laid down in Article 35 and no special qualifications are required in order to perform the contracts. In such cases this requirement must be specified in the call for tenders. The contracting authority may specify in the call for tenders other situations in which the list of three subcontractors must be provided even where the value of the contract is below the thresholds laid down in Article 35.

12. The contractor must replace any subcontractors which, following an inspection, are shown to be subject to the grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 80.

…’

II. Facts of the case and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11. On 29 July 2016, Consip published an invitation to tender for ‘a contract for the provision of the WDM system for interconnecting the data processing centre for the RGS, DT and DAG Departments’. (6) The estimated value of the contract was EUR 1 420 785.60, excluding VAT.

12. Clause 11 of the tender conditions permitted subcontracting. In order to subcontract, tenderers had to state in their tenders that they intended to avail themselves of this option and provide a list of three subcontractors.

13. Tim submitted its tender, in which it listed the three subcontractors it intended to use if it was awarded the contract. It attached the European single procurement document (ESPD) for each subcontractor.

14. When it checked the status of the subcontractors, the contracting authority found that, according to a certificate dated 5 April 2017 issued by Milan City Council, one of them (Maticmind SpA) was in breach of the rules on disabled persons’ right to work.

15. Consip therefore excluded Tim from the tender procedure under Article 80(5)(i) of the PPC.

16. Tim lodged an appeal against that decision with the referring court arguing, in summary, that:

– The exclusion was unfair and disproportionate because, under Directive 2014/24, where there are grounds for excluding a subcontractor the only permissible outcome is the replacement of the subcontractor.

– In any event, in order to perform the contract it could have used the other two subcontractors, to which no grounds for exclusion applied.

– Subcontracting was not essential in order to perform the contract, as Tim fulfilled all the requirements needed in order to perform the services itself.

17. According to the referring court, Tim’s exclusion is compliant with Article 80(5) of the PPC. However, the referring court’s reading of paragraphs 6 and 12 of Article 105 of the PPC leads it to identify different courses of action where a subcontractor is found to be subject to a ground for exclusion:

– If the fact that one of the group of three subcontractors on the list is subject to a ground for exclusion is identified during the tender procedure, the tenderer is excluded (Article 80(5) of the PPC).

– If the issue is identified after the contract has been signed, the contracting authority must ask the contractor to replace the subcontractor (Article 105(12) of the PPC).

18. Given this difference in treatment, the referring court has doubts as to whether the exclusion of the tender in the circumstances of the present case is compatible with Article 71(6) of Directive 2014/24 and with the proportionality principle.

19. In view of the situation, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy) refers the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Do Articles 57 and 71(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU preclude national legislation, such as Article 80(5) of Legislative Decree No 50 of 2016, which requires the exclusion of a tendering economic operator where, during the tendering procedure, a ground is established for excluding a subcontractor forming part of the group of three subcontractors specified in the tender, rather than requiring the tenderer to replace the designated subcontractor?

(2) In the alternative, if the Court of Justice considers that the option of excluding the tenderer is one of the options open to the Member State, does the principle of proportionality enshrined in Article 5 of the EU Treaty, referred to in recital 101 of Directive 2014/24/EU and established as a general principle of EU law by the Court of Justice, preclude national legislation, such as Article 80(5) of Legislative Decree No 50 of 2016, which provides that, where a ground for excluding a designated subcontractor is established during the tendering procedure, a tendering economic operator is to be excluded in all cases, including where there are other subcontractors that have not been excluded and satisfy the requirements for the provision of the services to be subcontracted, or where the tendering economic operator declares that it will not subcontract as it satisfies the requirements for the provision of the services on its own?’

III. Proceedings before the Court of Justice

20. The order for reference was received at the Court on 14 June 2018.

21. Under Article 101 of the Rules of Procedure, the Court of Justice asked the referring court to clarify certain aspects of the procurement procedure. In its reply of 26 March 2019, the referring court clarified that:

– If Tim intended to subcontract, it had to list three subcontractors in its tender. Alternatively, it could have opted not to list any subcontractors, in which case it would forego the option to subcontract.

– Tim was not under any obligation to use all or any of the subcontractors on the list if it was awarded the contract. It could opt not to subcontract, and perform the contract itself.

– In preparing its tender, Tim was not required to verify whether the proposed subcontractors were subject to the optional ground for exclusion in Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, since it was only asked to provide the ESPD issued by the representative of each subcontractor.

22. Written observations have been submitted by Tim, Consip, the Austrian Government and the Commission. With the exception of the Austrian Government, all of them attended the hearing held on 2 May 2019.

IV. Assessment

A. The issue

23. Under the Italian legislation, breaches committed by a subcontractor can impact on the tenderer which included the proposed subcontractor in its tender, resulting in the exclusion of the tenderer from the procurement procedure.

24. That same legislation, however, treats two sets of circumstances differently:

– If the breach by the subcontractor comes to light after the contract has been awarded, the successful tenderer must replace the subcontractor.

– By contrast, if the breach is uncovered during the contractor selection stage the consequences are more extreme, as the tenderer is then excluded.

25. The referring court has doubts as to whether this dual treatment is compatible with Directive 2014/24. In order to answer its questions, I believe that we first need to examine whether it is permissible under Article 57 of that directive for a breach by a subcontractor to constitute grounds for excluding a tenderer, before going on to ascertain whether such an exclusion is possible under the provisions on subcontracting in Article 71 of that directive.

26. In both cases, the background to Tim's exclusion is failure (by the subcontractor) to comply with social or labour law obligations — specifically, failure to comply with national regulations on the employment of disabled persons.

27. Article 18(2) of Directive 2014/24 requires Member States (7) to take appropriate measures to ensure that in the performance of public contracts economic operators comply with their obligations in the fields of social and labour law (amongst others), as established in national law.

28. This requirement applies both to main contractors and to subcontractors, since both groups are economic operators. In this way, the EU legislator sought to use administrative procurement as a tool to achieve certain other public interest objectives, and this is reflected in Articles 57 and 71 of Directive 2014/24.

29. In particular, 'control of the observance of the … social and labour law provisions should be performed at the relevant stages of the procurement procedure, when applying the general principles governing the choice of participants and the award of contracts, when applying the exclusion criteria …'. (8)

B. The interpretation of Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24

30. The EU legislator makes a link between Article 18(2) of Directive 2014/24 and the optional ground for exclusion in Article 57(4)(a) of that directive. This latter provision refers specifically to breach of the obligations that apply under the former provision.

31. The question is whether the behaviour of the subcontractor can justify the (optional) exclusion of the tenderer, or whether the tenderer can be excluded only on grounds of actions attributable to the tenderer itself.

32. An examination of the wording of Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 reveals that it is deliberately generic. It uses an impersonal expression (in Spanish, 'se ha[ya]n incumplido obligaciones') (9) to refer to breach of social or labour obligations, without specifying who has perpetrated those breaches. Viewed literally, this provision thus contrasts with other provisions that identify who is responsible for behaviour that constitutes grounds for exclusion.

33. Under this grammatical construction it is therefore possible for the breach (and, consequently, the ground for exclusion) to have been committed by the subcontractor which, as a party that employs workers on its account in the course of the public contract, is subject to national rules of social or labour law.

34. If one adopts a systematic approach to interpretation, attributing a breach committed by the subcontractor to the tenderer during the initial selection stage is consistent with recital 40 of Directive 2014/24, which states that 'control of the observance of the environmental, social and labour law provisions should be performed at the relevant stages of the procurement procedure'. (10)

35. Applying this approach, Article 57(5) of Directive 2014/24 confirms that any economic operator (which therefore includes the tenderer) may be excluded 'in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure'. Failure by the tenderer to carry out checks when it includes in its tender a subcontractor that has breached the obligations in Article 18(2) is, at the very least, a case of negligent omission.

36. Finally, Article 71(6)(a) of Directive 2014/24 refers explicitly, in connection with the application of Article 18(2), to 'joint liability between subcontractors and the main contractor' as one of the mechanisms that may be used by Member States.

37. Recital 105 of Directive 2014/24 reiterates that both parties are liable, in that it authorises the Member State to establish 'a mechanism of joint liability between subcontractors and the main contractor'. It is well known that an action to require joint obligors to perform their obligations and to enforce the consequences of breach can be brought against any of the obligors, regardless of the internal relationship that holds between them.

38. The objective of Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 provides support for this approach, which I believe is the most appropriate in the light of the EU legislator's clear intention to safeguard social and labour rights by also strengthening protection for these rights in the field of public procurement.

39. The desire to ensure fair competition between tenderers also points in the same direction. Competition would be distorted if, while others complied with the rules, one tenderer were to submit its tender in the knowledge that one of its main elements (the subcontractor to which it intended to entrust a significant part of the contract) had an illegal cost advantage precisely because it did not comply with its social obligations. This would affect the credibility of the tenderer which sought to exploit this unfair advantage.

40. Once this premiss has been established, then logically the tenderer's suitability as a contractor could be affected by breaches committed by the subcontractor. Given that it is the tenderer that decides of its own volition to use the subcontracting mechanism and that selects and proposes the subcontractors to be involved in performing the contract, there is no reason why the tenderer's liability should not extend to cover the conduct of those subcontractors in respect of that contract (even if only on grounds of culpa in eligendo).

41. Moreover, ploys designed to avoid liability and achieve an unjustified reduction in the main contractor's labour costs are not uncommon in the field of administrative subcontracting, and they can take shape even during the initial (tender) stage of the procurement.

42. It is true that, in its general approach to administrative procurement, EU law attaches great importance to ensuring freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, and to encouraging competition between economic operators. This objective is facilitated by opening up procurement procedures as widely as possible, and could be hampered by excessive use of the optional grounds for exclusion.

43. However, the optional grounds for exclusion enable Member States to satisfy public interest objectives and are, in any event, intended to ensure the reliability, diligence, professional honesty and responsibility of the tenderer. (11)

44. As I noted in my Opinion in Delta Antrepriză de Construcţii şi Montaj 93, (12) Directive 2014/24 includes reliability as a key element of the relationship. Under the first paragraph of recital 101, contracting authorities may exclude 'economic operators which have proven unreliable'. The element of reliability thus imbues the grounds for exclusion concerning the status of both the tenderer and the other economic operators which the tenderer intends to use as subcontractors to perform the contract.

45. Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24 is not immune from this influence. Indeed, recital 101 begins with a reference to the unreliability of the economic operator prompted precisely by violations of 'environmental or social obligations, including rules on accessibility for disabled persons'.

46. The case-law of the Court of Justice allows Member States considerable discretion in configuring the optional grounds for exclusion. (13) Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 nevertheless makes clear that Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for those grounds 'having regard to Union law'.

47. It seems to me that a Member State can legitimately use that discretion in order to enable its contracting authorities to use the optional ground for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4)(a) against a tenderer in situations where the breach of social or labour obligations has been committed by one of the tenderer's proposed subcontractors.

48. However, the scope to exclude the tenderer is not automatic: it will instead depend on the specific circumstances of the case, as assessed in accordance with the principles underpinning administrative procurement, including the principle of proportionality. (14)

49. Under the proportionality principle, in order for offences by the subcontractor to impact so significantly on the tenderer as to prompt its exclusion from the procedure, the breaches committed by the subcontractor will generally have to be such that the contracting authority is unable to trust the tenderer. I will address this issue below.

C. The interpretation of Article 71 of Directive 2014/24

50. Article 71(1) of Directive 2014/24 imposes a duty on the competent authorities to ensure 'observance of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2) by subcontractors' (including, amongst others, social and labour obligations).

51. Article 71(6) gives Member States authority so that 'with the aim of avoiding breaches [by subcontractors] of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2), appropriate measures may be taken'.

52. Some of the parties taking part in the proceedings (15) have argued that Article 71 of Directive 2014/24 does not apply to the tenderer selection stage but to the contract performance stage. In support of their argument they cite recital 105 of the directive, which refers only to the main contractor and the subcontractors, but not to tenderers.

53. In my view, this terminological objection is not decisive. In fact, in addition to 'main contractor' (meaning 'the economic operator to whom the public contract has been awarded'), Article 71 of Directive 2014/24 also uses the terms 'subcontractor', 'tenderer' (the person who has submitted a tender) and 'economic operator'. This last term is the broadest, encompassing any undertaking that supplies its goods or services in the market, (16) which logically includes subcontractors.

54. Recital 105 should be read in conjunction with the express references in Article 71 of Directive 2014/24 to the tenderer, main contractor and economic operators. There is therefore nothing to prevent this provision from applying both prior to the award of the contract (that is, to the tenderers) and after the award (that is, to the contractors) so that it covers the relationship between both tenderers and contractors and their subcontractors.

55. Specifically, Article 71(6)(b) of Directive 2014/24, which deals specifically with the exclusion of a subcontractor for breach of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2), refers to the 'economic operator', and therefore it applies during both the selection stage and the contract performance stage.

56. This is logical, because the information which the economic operator has to supply to the contracting authority regarding the subcontractors' relationship to the contract is central to Directive 2014/24. On this point, I refer to my comments in the Opinion in Delta Antrepriză de Construcţii şi Montaj 93. (17)

57. This desire on the part of the legislator finds its legislative expression in Article 71(2) and (5) of Directive 2014/24, which refers to the obligation on the tenderer and the main contractor respectively to inform the contracting authority of any subcontracting, whether proposed (during the selection stage) or in operation (after the award of the contract).

58. Article 71(6)(b) establishes a link with this duty to provide information when it authorises contracting authorities to use the means provided for in Articles 59, 60 and 61 of Directive 2014/24 to verify whether there are grounds for excluding any subcontractor pursuant to Article 57.

59. The reference in Article 71 to Article 57 covers both the mandatory and the optional grounds for exclusion, in the context of breach of the obligations in Article 18(2). The consequences are different, however:

– If the subcontractor is subject to a mandatory ground of exclusion, (18) the economic operator shall be required to replace the subcontractor.

– In the case of a non-mandatory ground for exclusion, (19) the contracting authority may require the economic operator to replace the subcontractor. As I shall explain, this is one of several measures that may be taken to guard against unsuitable subcontractors.

60. In this regard, two elements of the legislation are particularly significant:

– Firstly, the open formulation used in Article 71(6) of Directive 2014/24 ('With the aim of avoiding breaches of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2), appropriate measures may be taken, such as: …').

– Second, the power for Member States to provide for 'more stringent liability rules' (Article 71(7)).

61. Taken together, in my view, these two elements reinforce what can already be inferred from the interpretation of Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, namely that in these circumstances Member States have the power to attribute direct liability to tenderers which have proposed subcontractors that have breached the obligations referred to in Article 18(2) of the directive.

62. Indeed, the wording of Article 71(6) of Directive 2014/24 leaves the door open to the introduction of other national measures. The EU legislator has set out, purely by way of example, some of the measures that may be taken in respect of breach of social and labour obligations, such as replacing the subcontractor to which the (mandatory or optional) grounds of exclusion apply; but it does not close off other options. Under Article 71(8), Member States must specify the implementing conditions for those measures.

63. This same approach prevails in Article 71(7), when it makes provision for Member States to decide to implement 'more stringent liability rules' regarding subcontracting in national law. In my opinion, a reading of this paragraph shows that these rules are not limited to 'direct payments to subcontractors' (where the text uses the expression 'to go further'), but may apply more generally.

64. This can be inferred more clearly from recital 105 of Directive 2014/24, which states that 'Member States remain free to provide for more stringent liability rules under national law or to go further under national law on direct payments to subcontractors'. Use of the conjunction 'or' shows that these are two different types of (possible) interventions.

65. These powers available to Member States do not apply only to the relationship between the main contractor and its subcontractors, but may also extend to the relationship between the contracting authority and a tenderer that has submitted a tender in which it proposes to use the services of a subcontractor affected by one of the grounds for exclusion. I refer to my earlier comments on the joint liability of main contractors and subcontractors.

66. Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 deals specifically with grounds for exclusion, and in referring to that provision Article 71(6) and (7) reinforces the possibility of excluding tenderers on the grounds of breaches by subcontractors which have failed to comply with the obligations referred to in Article 18(2). The exclusion of tenderers is specifically addressed in Article 57 but, I repeat, the provisions on subcontracting in Article 71 confirm that possibility.

D. The Italian provisions on exclusion due to offences committed by subcontractors, as they apply to the facts of the case

67. Under the combined application of Articles 80(5) and 105(12) of the PPC, where a tender includes a subcontractor which has breached the social and labour obligations regarding disabled persons, the tenderer which freely chose to propose that subcontractor is automatically excluded, provided the situation is identified before the contract is signed.

68. This categorical outcome may perhaps be incompatible with the principle of proportionality. The Court of Justice ruled on the optional grounds of exclusion in connection with Directive 2004/18 (20) and ruled out their automatic application. It can be concluded from the judgment in Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (21) that automatic application might exceed the limits of the discretion granted to Member States by Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 (now Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24).

69. That judgment held that ‘a specific and individual assessment of the conduct of the economic operator concerned’ (22) must be carried out. The Court of Justice ruled that provisions of national legislation that ‘require the contracting authority … to exclude an economic operator from a … procedure for the award of a contract … without allowing the contracting authority the power to assess, on a case-by-case basis, the gravity of the allegedly wrongful conduct of that operator …’ were incompatible with EU law, because they did not comply with that requirement.

70. However, in Connexxion Taxi Services the Court of Justice did not follow that case-law, which had been followed in previous judgments. In weighing up the (previously mandatory) requirement for a tenderer’s offence to be assessed under the proportionality principle against respect for the principles of transparency and equal treatment, the Court came down in favour of the latter. It concluded that the latter principles took precedence in a case where, according to the ‘tender conditions of [the] contract, a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct must necessarily be excluded, without consideration of the proportionality of that sanction’. (23)

71. It would therefore seem that different types of assessment are required, depending on whether the requirement for automatic exclusion appears only in the legislation (in which case the proportionality check must be capable of being applied, even if the legislation makes no such provision) or whether it is explicitly included in the tender specifications.

72. Neither the order for reference nor the subsequent clarification (24) indicates that the requirement for automatic exclusion was included in the documents governing the award of the contract. It will be for the national court to decide whether Clause 11, or any other clause in the tender specifications, included such a mandatory requirement. If it did, the principles of transparency and equal treatment of tenderers, as set out in the Connexxion Taxi Services judgment, (25) will take precedence, thereby ensuring that a tenderer which complied with the tender specifications is not passed over in favour of someone who breached the requirements.

73. If the requirement for automatic exclusion was not included in the tender documentation, then the demands imposed by the proportionality principle come into play. Once again, it is for the referring court to assess all the relevant factors, in this case in order to decide whether the sanction of excluding the tenderer is appropriate to the seriousness of its conduct.

74. The factors to be assessed could include the point put forward by the referring court in its clarificatory submission, namely that the excluded tenderer was under no obligation to check whether the ESPD supplied by the subcontractor was correct, which could mitigate the tenderer’s negligence. The tenderer would, however, still be negligent, albeit to a lesser extent, because there was nothing to prevent it from using other means to verify the subcontractor’s non-compliance beforehand (as the contracting authority did subsequently).

75. The fact that, in addition to the non-compliant subcontractor, the tenderer included two other economic operators with an unblemished record on the list of subcontractors is not enough to reduce its liability. If such a practice were to be allowed, it could encourage a form of fraud involving the designation of a non-compliant subcontractor (which, as I noted earlier, tends to have lower labour or social costs), whose services will be called upon if the irregularity goes unnoticed, and two other subcontractors which are simply there to make up the numbers.

76. Nor does the fact that the tenderer could have performed the contract itself without using a subcontractor reduce its liability. Given that it was free to use the subcontracting mechanism and that it had informed the contracting authority in its tender that it intended to make use of this option and to submit a list of three subcontractors, it was responsible for ensuring that the list did not include anyone who had breached national requirements regarding the employment of disabled persons.

V. Conclusion

77. In the light of the reasoning set out above, I suggest that the Court of Justice should reply to the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy) in the following terms:

‘(1) Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC does not in principle preclude the exclusion of a tenderer which stated in its tender that it intended to subcontract to an economic operator where the subcontractor in question has breached its labour or social obligations under national law.

(2) In reaching a decision on exclusion, the contracting authority must have power to assess the proportionality of the measure on a case-by-case basis, taking into account all relevant circumstances in order to determine the tenderer’s reliability, unless the tender specifications stipulate that the tenderer must be excluded without taking into consideration the proportionality of the sanction.’

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation de l'article 4, paragraphe 3, TUE, de l'article 19, paragraphe 1, second alinéa, TUE, de l'article 49 TFUE, de l'article 47 de la charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne, de la directive 89/665/CEE du Conseil, du 21 décembre 1989, portant coordination des dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives relatives à l'application des procédures de recours en matière de passation des marchés publics de fournitures et de travaux (JO 1989, L 395, p. 33), telle que modifiée par la directive 2007/66/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 11 décembre 2007 (JO 2007, L 335, p. 31) (ci-après la « directive 89/665 »), de la directive 92/13/CEE du Conseil, du 25 février 1992, portant coordination des dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives relatives à l'application des règles communautaires sur les procédures de passation des marchés des entités opérant dans les secteurs de l'eau, de l'énergie, des transports et des télécommunications (JO 1992, L 76, p. 14), telle que modifiée par la directive 2007/66 (ci-après la « directive 92/13 »), de la directive 93/37/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux (JO 1993, L 199, p. 54), ainsi que des principes de primauté, d'équivalence et d'effectivité du droit de l'Union.

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige opposant Hochtief AG à la Fővárosi Törvényszék (cour de Budapest-Capitale, Hongrie) au sujet d'un dommage prétendument causé par cette dernière juridiction, dans l'exercice de ses compétences juridictionnelles, à Hochtief.

Le cadre juridique

Le droit de l'Union

3 L'article 1er, paragraphe 1, troisième alinéa, et l'article 1er, paragraphe 3, de la directive 89/665, rédigés en des termes quasiment identiques à ceux, respectivement, de l'article 1er, paragraphe 1, troisième alinéa, et de l'article 1er, paragraphe 3, de la directive 92/13, prévoient :

« 1. [...]

Les États membres prennent, en ce qui concerne les procédures de passation des marchés publics relevant du champ d'application de la directive 2004/18/CE [du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO 2004, L 134, p. 114)], les mesures nécessaires pour garantir que les décisions prises par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent faire l'objet de recours efficaces et, en particulier, aussi rapides que possible, dans les conditions énoncées aux articles 2 à 2 septies de la présente directive, au motif que ces décisions ont violé le droit [de l'Union] en matière de marchés publics ou les règles nationales transposant ce droit.

[...]

3. Les États membres s'assurent que les procédures de recours sont accessibles, selon des modalités que les États membres peuvent déterminer, au moins à toute personne ayant ou ayant eu un intérêt à obtenir un marché déterminé et ayant été ou risquant d'être lésée par une violation alléguée. »

4 L'article 2, paragraphe 1, de la directive 89/665 dispose :

« Les États membres veillent à ce que les mesures prises aux fins des recours visés à l'article 1er prévoient les pouvoirs permettant :

a) de prendre, dans les délais les plus brefs et par voie de référé, des mesures provisoires ayant pour but de corriger la violation alléguée ou d'empêcher qu'il soit encore porté atteinte aux intérêts concernés, y compris des mesures destinées à suspendre ou à faire suspendre la procédure de passation de marché public en cause ou l'exécution de toute décision prise par le pouvoir adjudicateur ;

b) d'annuler ou de faire annuler les décisions illégales, y compris de supprimer les spécifications techniques, économiques ou financières discriminatoires figurant dans les documents de l'appel à la concurrence, dans les cahiers des charges ou dans tout autre document se rapportant à la procédure de passation du marché en cause ;

c) d'accorder des dommages et intérêts aux personnes lésées par une violation. »

5 L'article 2, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/13 prévoit :

« Les États membres veillent à ce que les mesures prises aux fins des recours visés à l'article 1er prévoient les pouvoirs permettant :

soit

a) de prendre, dans les délais les plus brefs et par voie de référé, des mesures provisoires ayant pour but de corriger la violation alléguée ou d'empêcher que d'autres préjudices soient causés aux intérêts concernés, y compris des mesures destinées à suspendre ou à faire suspendre la procédure de passation de marché en cause ou l'exécution de toute décision prise par l'entité adjudicatrice et

b) d'annuler ou de faire annuler les décisions illégales, y compris de supprimer les spécifications techniques, économiques ou financières discriminatoires figurant dans l'avis de marché, l'avis périodique indicatif, l'avis sur l'existence d'un système de qualification, l'invitation à soumissionner, les cahiers des charges ou dans tout autre document se rapportant à la procédure de passation de marché en cause ;

c) de prendre, dans les délais les plus brefs, si possible par voie de référé et, si nécessaire, par une procédure définitive quant au fond, d'autres mesures que celles prévues aux points a) et b), ayant pour but de corriger la violation constatée et d'empêcher que des préjudices soient causés aux intérêts concernés ; notamment d'émettre un ordre de paiement d'une somme déterminée dans le cas où l'infraction n'est pas corrigée ou évitée.

Les États membres peuvent effectuer ce choix soit pour l'ensemble des entités adjudicatrices, soit pour des catégories d'entités définies sur la base de critères objectifs, en sauvegardant en tout cas l'efficacité des mesures établies afin d'empêcher qu'un préjudice soit causé aux intérêts concernés ;

d) et, dans les deux cas susmentionnés, d'accorder des dommages-intérêts aux personnes lésées par la violation.

Lorsque des dommages-intérêts sont réclamés au motif qu'une décision a été prise illégalement, les États membres peuvent prévoir, si leur système de droit interne le requiert et s'il dispose d'instances ayant la compétence nécessaire à cet effet, que la décision contestée doit d'abord être annulée ou déclarée illégale. »

Le droit hongrois

6 L'article 260 du polgári perrendtartásról szóló 1952. évi III. törvény (loi n° III de 1952, instituant le code de procédure civile, ci-après le « code de procédure civile ») prévoit :

« 1. La révision est ouverte contre un jugement définitif lorsque

a) une partie se prévaut d'un fait ou de preuves, ou d'une décision définitive d'une juridiction ou autre autorité que la juridiction n'a pas appréciés au cours de la procédure, à condition que ces éléments – s'ils avaient été appréciés – aient été de nature à conduire à une décision plus favorable à cette partie ;

2. En application du paragraphe 1, sous a), une partie ne peut exercer un recours en révision que lorsque, sans faute de sa part, elle n'a pas pu faire valoir au cours de la procédure antérieure le fait, les preuves ou la décision qu'elle invoque dans ce recours. »

7 L'article 361, sous a), du code de procédure civile dispose :

Le litige au principal et les questions préjudicielles

8 Le 5 février 2005, le Budapest Főváros Önkormányzata (municipalité de Budapest-Capitale, Hongrie) (ci-après le « pouvoir adjudicateur ») a publié un appel à participer à une procédure de passation d'un marché public de travaux d'un montant dépassant le seuil prévu par le droit de l'Union, suivant la procédure négociée avec publication préalable d'un avis de marché. Cinq candidatures ont été reçues dans le délai requis, au nombre desquelles figurait celle d'un consortium dirigé par Hochtief (ci-après le « consortium »).

9 Le 19 juillet 2005, le pouvoir adjudicateur a annoncé au consortium que sa candidature était invalide en raison d'une incompatibilité et qu'elle avait été rejetée. Cette décision était motivée par le fait que le consortium avait désigné comme chef de projet un expert qui avait participé à la préparation de l'appel d'offres aux côtés du pouvoir adjudicateur.

10 Par sentence du 12 septembre 2005, le Közbeszerzési Döntőbizottság (commission arbitrale des marchés publics, Hongrie) (ci-après la « commission arbitrale ») a rejeté le recours administratif introduit par le consortium contre cette décision, estimant que la désignation de l'expert dans la demande de participation ne pouvait être considérée comme étant une erreur administrative, comme le faisait valoir Hochtief.

11 Le 4 novembre 2005, Hochtief a introduit un recours contre la sentence de la commission arbitrale auprès du Fővárosi Bíróság (tribunal de Budapest, Hongrie).

12 Par jugement du 28 avril 2006, le Fővárosi Bíróság (tribunal de Budapest) a rejeté ce recours.

13 Le consortium a interjeté appel devant la Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (cour d'appel régionale de Budapest-Capitale, Hongrie) contre le jugement mentionné au point précédent. À l'appui de son appel, il a, notamment, invoqué l'arrêt du 3 mars 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 et C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), qui n'a été disponible en langue hongroise que postérieurement à l'introduction de son recours contre la sentence du 12 septembre 2005.

14 Par décision du 13 février 2008, la Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (cour d'appel régionale de Budapest-Capitale) a saisi la Cour d'une demande de décision préjudicielle, qui a donné lieu à l'arrêt du 15 octobre 2009, Hochtief et Linde-Kca-Dresden (C-138/08, EU:C:2009:627).

15 À la suite du prononcé de cet arrêt, la Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (cour d'appel régionale de Budapest-Capitale) a, par un arrêt du 20 janvier 2010, confirmé le jugement du Fővárosi Bíróság (tribunal de Budapest) du 28 avril 2006.

17 Entre temps, le 23 août 2010, Hochtief avait introduit un recours en révision contre l'arrêt de la Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (cour d'appel régionale de Budapest-Capitale) du 20 janvier 2010, en demandant l'annulation de celui-ci et son remplacement par une nouvelle décision.

18 À l'appui de son recours en révision, Hochtief a fait valoir que l'arrêt du 3 mars 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 et C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), qu'elle n'avait pu invoquer ni devant la commission arbitrale ni dans le cadre de son recours contre la sentence de cette dernière dès lors qu'il n'était pas disponible en langue hongroise, tout comme l'arrêt du 15 octobre 2009, Hochtief et Linde-Kca-Dresden (C-138/08, EU:C:2009:627), constituaient des faits nouveaux, au sens de l'article 260, paragraphe 1, sous a), du code de procédure civile, susceptibles de justifier la révision de l'arrêt de la Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (cour d'appel régionale de Budapest-Capitale) du 20 janvier 2010.

19 Le recours en révision de la Hochtief a été rejeté par ordonnance du Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (tribunal administratif et du travail de Budapest-Capitale, Hongrie) du 6 juin 2013. Saisie d'un appel de Hochtief contre cette ordonnance, la Fővárosi Törvényszék (cour de Budapest-Capitale), statuant en dernier ressort, a, par ordonnance du 29 mai 2014, confirmé l'ordonnance de rejet du recours en révision.

20 Le 15 août 2014, Hochtief a formé un recours constitutionnel contre l'ordonnance visée au point précédent. Ce recours a été rejeté comme irrecevable par ordonnance de l'Alkotmánybíróság (Cour constitutionnelle) du 9 février 2015.

21 Hochtief a alors saisi la juridiction de renvoi d'une action en réparation du préjudice que la Fővárosi Törvényszék (cour de Budapest-Capitale) lui aurait causé dans l'exercice de sa compétence juridictionnelle, en adoptant l'ordonnance du 29 mai 2014, qui a confirmé sur appel le rejet de son recours en révision.

22 À l'appui de son recours, Hochtief fait valoir que la Fővárosi Törvényszék (cour de Budapest-Capitale), en tant que juridiction statuant en dernier ressort, a commis une violation suffisamment caractérisée du droit de l'Union, d'une part, en méconnaissant le droit à une protection juridictionnelle effective, consacré à l'article 19, paragraphe 1, second alinéa, TUE, ainsi que les principes fondamentaux du droit de l'Union en matière de marchés publics, tels qu'affirmés dans l'arrêt du 15 octobre 2009, Hochtief et Linde-Kca-Dresden (C-138/08, EU:C:2009:627), et, d'autre part, en omettant de soumettre une question préjudicielle à la Cour, en application de l'article 267, troisième alinéa, TFUE.

24 C'est dans ces circonstances que la Székesfehérvári Törvényszék (cour de Székesfehérvár, Hongrie) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour les questions préjudicielles suivantes :

« 1) Faut-il interpréter les principes fondamentaux et les règles du droit de l'Union (notamment l'article 4, paragraphe 3, TUE et l'exigence d'une interprétation uniforme du droit), tels que la Cour les a interprétés notamment dans l'arrêt [du 30 septembre 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513),] en ce sens que la responsabilité de l'État en raison d'une décision contraire au droit de l'Union d'une juridiction statuant en dernier ressort peut être établie en se fondant uniquement sur le droit national ou sur des critères développés par le droit national ? Dans la négative, faut-il interpréter les principes fondamentaux et les règles du droit de l'Union, notamment les trois critères dégagés par la Cour dans [l'arrêt du 30 septembre 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513),] à propos de la responsabilité de l'"État", en ce sens que la réalisation des conditions de la responsabilité de l'État membre en raison d'une violation du droit de l'Union par les juridictions dudit État membre doit être appréciée sur la base du droit national ?

2) Faut-il interpréter les règles et les principes fondamentaux du droit de l'Union (notamment l'article 4, paragraphe 3, TUE et l'exigence d'un recours effectif), en particulier les arrêts de la Cour relatifs à la responsabilité des États membres [du 19 novembre 1991, Francovich e.a. (C-6/90 et C-9/90, EU:C:1991:428), du 5 mars 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur et Factortame (C-46/93 et C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79), ainsi que du 30 septembre 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513)], en ce sens que l'autorité de la chose jugée de décisions contraires au droit de l'Union rendues par des juridictions statuant en dernier ressort exclut que la responsabilité de l'État membre puisse être établie ?

3) Faut-il interpréter les principes d'"effectivité" et d'"équivalence" prévus dans les directives [89/665], [92/13] et [2007/66], ainsi que dans les arrêts [du 13 janvier 2004, (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17), du 16 mars 2006, Kapferer (C-234/04, EU:C:2006:178), du 26 janvier 2010, Transportes Urbanos y Servicios Generales (C-118/08, EU:C:2010:39), et du 10 juillet 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti (C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067),] en ce sens qu'une partie ne doit plus pouvoir se prévaloir, au stade de la procédure de révision, des constatations d'un arrêt de la Cour rendu à l'issue d'une procédure préjudicielle engagée dans la procédure principale par une juridiction de second degré, étant précisé que celles-ci n'ont pas été prises en compte dans la procédure principale, notamment dans le cas où la juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort a rejeté le pourvoi en cassation formé contre l'arrêt rendu dans la procédure principale au motif que la partie ne s'est pas prévalue en temps utile de l'arrêt de la Cour ?

4) Faut-il interpréter les directives visées à la troisième question ainsi que la jurisprudence de la Cour sur la question de l'ouverture de la révision, résultant notamment des arrêts [du 13 janvier 2004, (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17), du 16 mars 2006, Kapferer (C-234/04, EU:C:2006:178), du 26 janvier 2010, Transportes Urbanos y Servicios Generales (C-118/08, EU:C:2010:39), et du 10 juillet 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti (C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067)], ainsi, également, que les principes dégagés par la Cour dans les arrêts [du 12 décembre 2002, Universale-Bau e.a. (C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746), du 27 février 2003, Santex (C-327/00, EU:C:2003:109), ainsi que du 11 octobre 2007, Lämmerzahl (C-241/06, EU:C:2007:597)], à propos des délais du droit national appliqués dans des procédures de recours en matière de marchés publics, en ce sens que les juridictions nationales peuvent légalement opposer la forclusion à la partie qui, en seconde instance, se prévaut, d'une part, d'un arrêt de la Cour que la juridiction de seconde instance a obtenu dans le cadre de l'affaire pendante devant elle et, d'autre part, d'un arrêt de la Cour qui n'a été disponible dans la langue officielle de l'État membre qu'en seconde instance, puis rejeter, malgré cela, la demande de révision introduite par ladite partie sur la base des arrêts de la Cour invoqués par celle-ci, mais non pris en compte, et des faits qui sont pertinents en vertu desdits arrêts ?

5) Faut-il interpréter les directives susmentionnées, ainsi que la jurisprudence de la Cour résultant notamment des arrêts [du 13 janvier 2004, Kühne & Heitz (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17), du 16 mars 2006, Kapferer (C-234/04, EU:C:2006:178), du 26 janvier 2010, Transportes Urbanos y Servicios Generales (C-118/08, EU:C:2010:39), et du 10 juillet 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti (C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067),] en ce sens que les juridictions nationales peuvent légalement, alors même que la partie au litige cite l'arrêt [du 12 février 2008, Kempter (C-2/06, EU:C:2008:78)] – en vertu duquel une partie n'a pas l'obligation d'invoquer explicitement les arrêts de la Cour, la juridiction étant tenue de [les] appliquer d'office – ne pas tenir compte desdits arrêts en se prévalant du droit procédural national – au point de ne même pas mentionner cette circonstance dans la décision clôturant la procédure, pas plus que dans ses motifs – puis rejeter, malgré cela, la demande de révision introduite par ladite partie sur la base des arrêts de la Cour invoqués par celle-ci, mais non pris en compte, et des faits qui sont pertinents en vertu desdits arrêts ?

6) Faut-il interpréter la condition d'une "violation suffisamment caractérisée", dégagée dans les arrêts [du 30 septembre 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513), et du 13 juin 2006, Traghetti del Mediterraneo (C-173/03, EU:C:2006:391),] comme n'étant pas remplie lorsque la juridiction statuant en dernier ressort passe entièrement sous silence une jurisprudence de la Cour bien établie et très précisément décrite – et que différents avis juridiques ont par ailleurs confortée – et, en contradiction manifeste avec celle-ci, rejette sans aucune motivation au regard du droit de l'Union une demande de révision sans, visiblement, n'avoir examiné ni même évoqué la nécessité d'un renvoi préjudiciel devant la Cour, alors même que cette nécessité a également été démontrée dans le moindre détail dans la jurisprudence pertinente de la Cour ? Compte tenu de l'arrêt [du 6 octobre 1982, Cilfit e.a. (283/81, EU:C:1982:335),] rendu par la Cour, la juridiction nationale doit-elle fournir une motivation lorsqu'elle n'autorise pas la révision en s'écartant d'une interprétation de la Cour dotée d'un caractère contraignant et s'abstient, sans donner de motivation, de saisir la Cour d'une question préjudicielle à ce propos ?

7) Faut-il interpréter les principes de recours effectif et d'équivalence, au sens de l'article 19 et de l'article 4, paragraphe 3, TUE, ainsi que la liberté d'établissement et de prestation de services consacrée à l'article 49 TFUE, ou encore la directive [93/37], ainsi que les directives [89/665], [92/13] et [2007/66], en ce sens que ceux-ci permettent que les autorités et les juridictions saisies rejettent systématiquement, au mépris manifeste du droit de l'Union applicable, les recours exercés par le requérant pour avoir été exclu de la procédure de marché public, étant précisé que ces recours exigent le cas échéant de rédiger de nombreux mémoires au prix d'un investissement important de temps et d'argent, sans oublier la participation à des audiences, et que, même s'il existe en théorie la possibilité d'établir la responsabilité en raison d'un dommage causé dans l'exercice d'une compétence juridictionnelle, la réglementation en cause empêche le requérant de pouvoir exiger de la juridiction réparation du préjudice qu'il a subi en raison des mesures illégales ?

8) Faut-il interpréter les principes qui ont été dégagés dans les arrêts [du 9 novembre 1983, San Giorgio (199/82, EU:C:1983:318), du 30 septembre 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513), et du 13 juin 2006, Traghetti del Mediterraneo (C-173/03, EU:C:2006:391),] en ce sens que le dommage causé par le fait que la juridiction statuant en dernier ressort, en contradiction avec la jurisprudence constante de la Cour, n'a pas autorisé la révision demandée en temps utile par une partie et dans le cadre de laquelle ladite partie aurait pu exiger le remboursement des frais qui lui ont été occasionnés n'est pas un dommage susceptible d'être indemnisé ?

9) Dès lors que le droit national commande d'autoriser la révision lorsque celle-ci est nécessaire pour rétablir la constitutionnalité en raison d'une nouvelle décision de la juridiction constitutionnelle, ne devrait-il pas alors, en vertu du principe d'équivalence et de [l'arrêt du 26 janvier 2010, Transportes Urbanos y Servicios Generales (C-118/08, EU:C:2010:39)], autoriser la révision dans le cas où un arrêt de la Cour rendu antérieurement dans une autre affaire, ainsi qu'un arrêt de la Cour obtenu dans l'affaire principale, de même que les faits qui sont pertinents en vertu desdits arrêts, ne sont pas pris en compte dans la procédure principale en raison des dispositions du droit national relatives aux délais de procédure ? »

Sur les questions préjudicielles

25 En vertu de l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour, lorsque la réponse à une question posée à titre préjudiciel peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence ou lorsque la réponse à une telle question ne laisse place à aucun doute raisonnable, la Cour peut, à tout moment, sur proposition du juge rapporteur, l'avocat général entendu, décider de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

26 Il y a lieu de faire application de cette disposition dans le cadre de la présente affaire.

Considérations liminaires

27 Ainsi qu'il ressort de la décision de renvoi, l'affaire au principal porte sur une demande de réparation du préjudice prétendument subi par Hochtief du fait de l'ordonnance de la Fővárosi Törvényszék (cour de Budapest-Capitale) du 29 mai 2014, mentionnée au point 19 de la présente ordonnance, par laquelle cette juridiction, statuant en dernier ressort, a confirmé l'ordonnance du Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (tribunal administratif et du travail de Budapest-Capitale) du 6 juin 2013 ayant rejeté le recours en révision introduit par cette société contre l'arrêt de la Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (cour d'appel régionale de Budapest-Capitale) du 20 janvier 2010, mentionné au point 15 de la présente ordonnance.

28 Il s'ensuit que l'affaire au principal suppose de déterminer si, en procédant ainsi, la Fővárosi Törvényszék (cour de Budapest-Capitale) a commis une violation du droit de l'Union susceptible de fonder une obligation de réparer le préjudice que Hochtief allègue avoir subi du fait de cette violation.

29 Dans ce contexte, la juridiction de renvoi se demande si le droit de l'Union doit être interprété en ce sens qu'une juridiction nationale saisie d'un recours en révision d'un jugement revêtu de l'autorité de la chose jugée postérieur à un arrêt rendu par la Cour sur le fondement de l'article 267 TFUE est tenue de faire droit à ce recours.

Sur la recevabilité de la septième question

30 Par sa septième question, la juridiction de renvoi demande à la Cour, en substance, si le rejet systématique, en méconnaissance du droit de l'Union, de recours introduits par un soumissionnaire évincé d'une procédure de marché public, tel que Hochtief, est compatible avec le droit de l'Union.

31 À cet égard, il y a lieu de rappeler que, selon une jurisprudence constante de la Cour, la procédure prévue à l'article 267 TFUE est un instrument de coopération entre celle-ci et les juridictions nationales. Il en découle qu'il appartient aux seules juridictions nationales qui sont saisies du litige et qui doivent assumer la responsabilité de la décision juridictionnelle à intervenir d'apprécier, au regard des particularités de chaque affaire, tant la nécessité d'une décision préjudicielle pour être en mesure de rendre leur jugement que la pertinence des questions qu'elles posent à la Cour. En conséquence, dès lors que les questions posées par les juridictions nationales portent sur l'interprétation d'une disposition du droit de l'Union, la Cour est, en principe, tenue de statuer (arrêt du 29 juillet 2019, Hochtief Solutions Magyarországi Fióktelepe, C-620/17, ci-après l'« arrêt Hochtief Solutions », EU:C:2019:630, point 30 et jurisprudence citée).

32 Toutefois, le refus de statuer sur une question préjudicielle posée par une juridiction nationale est possible, notamment, lorsqu'il apparaît de manière manifeste que l'interprétation du droit de l'Union sollicitée n'a aucun rapport avec la réalité ou l'objet du litige au principal ou lorsque le problème est de nature hypothétique (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 31 et jurisprudence citée).

33 Or, la septième question relève, précisément, de ce dernier cas de figure. En effet, il apparaît de manière manifeste que cette question n'a aucun rapport avec l'objet de l'affaire au principal, tel qu'il a été résumé au point 28 de la présente ordonnance, et qu'elle présente, dès lors, un caractère hypothétique.

34 Il s'ensuit que la septième question est irrecevable.

Sur les première, deuxième, sixième et huitième questions

35 Par ces questions, qu'il convient d'examiner ensemble, la juridiction de renvoi cherche à obtenir des indications concernant, en particulier, les principes énoncés par la Cour en matière de responsabilité d'un État membre pour les dommages causés aux particuliers en raison d'une violation du droit de l'Union par une juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort. La juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si lesdits principes doivent être interprétés en ce sens, premièrement, que la responsabilité de l'État membre concerné doit être appréciée sur la base du droit national, deuxièmement, que le principe de l'autorité de la chose jugée exclut que la responsabilité de cet État membre puisse être établie, troisièmement, qu'il y a une violation suffisamment caractérisée du droit de l'Union lorsque la juridiction statuant en dernier ressort refuse de soumettre à la Cour une question d'interprétation du droit de l'Union qui a été soulevée devant elle et, quatrièmement, qu'ils s'opposent à une règle de droit national qui exclut des dommages susceptibles de faire l'objet d'une réparation les frais occasionnés à une partie par la décision juridictionnelle en cause.

36 En premier lieu, il convient de rappeler que, s'agissant des conditions d'engagement de la responsabilité d'un État membre pour des dommages causés aux particuliers par des violations du droit de l'Union qui lui sont imputables, la Cour a itérativement jugé que les particuliers lésés ont un droit à réparation dès lors que trois conditions sont réunies, à savoir que la règle de droit de l'Union violée a pour objet de leur conférer des droits, que la violation de cette règle est suffisamment caractérisée et qu'il existe un lien de causalité direct entre cette violation et le dommage subi par ces particuliers (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 35 et jurisprudence citée).

37 Il convient également de rappeler que la responsabilité d'un État membre pour des dommages causés par une décision d'une juridiction statuant en dernier ressort qui viole une règle de droit de l'Union est régie par les mêmes conditions (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 36 et jurisprudence citée).

38 Par ailleurs, les trois conditions rappelées au point 36 de la présente ordonnance sont nécessaires et suffisantes pour engendrer au profit des particuliers un droit à obtenir réparation, sans pour autant exclure que la responsabilité d'un État membre puisse être engagée dans des conditions moins restrictives sur le fondement du droit national (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 37 et jurisprudence citée).

39 Il en résulte que le droit de l'Union ne s'oppose pas à une règle de droit national qui prévoit, pour l'engagement de la responsabilité d'un État membre au titre des dommages causés aux particuliers par des violations du droit de l'Union qui lui sont imputables, des conditions moins restrictives que celles établies par la jurisprudence de la Cour rappelée au point 36 de la présente ordonnance (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 38 et jurisprudence citée).

40 En deuxième lieu, ainsi qu'il ressort de la jurisprudence de la Cour, le principe de l'autorité de la chose jugée ne s'oppose pas à la reconnaissance du principe de la responsabilité d'un État membre du fait de la décision d'une juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort qui viole une règle de droit de l'Union. En effet, en raison, notamment, de la circonstance qu'une violation des droits tirés du droit de l'Union par une telle décision ne peut normalement plus faire l'objet d'un redressement, les particuliers ne sauraient être privés de la possibilité d'engager la responsabilité de l'État afin d'obtenir par ce moyen une protection juridique de leurs droits (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 39 et jurisprudence citée).

41 En troisième lieu, il découle d'une jurisprudence constante de la Cour que la mise en œuvre des conditions rappelées au point 36 de la présente ordonnance permettant d'établir la responsabilité d'un État membre pour des dommages causés aux particuliers par des violations du droit de l'Union qui lui sont imputables doit, en principe, être opérée par les juridictions nationales conformément aux orientations fournies par la Cour pour procéder à cette mise en œuvre (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 40 et jurisprudence citée).

42 À cet égard, s'agissant, en particulier, de la deuxième de ces conditions, il convient de rappeler que, selon la jurisprudence de la Cour, la responsabilité d'un État membre pour des dommages causés par une décision d'une juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort qui viole une règle de droit de l'Union ne saurait être engagée que dans le cas exceptionnel où la juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort a méconnu de manière manifeste le droit applicable (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 41 et jurisprudence citée).

43 Afin de déterminer s'il existe une violation suffisamment caractérisée du droit de l'Union, la juridiction nationale saisie d'une demande en réparation doit tenir compte de tous les éléments qui caractérisent la situation qui lui est soumise. Parmi les éléments pouvant être pris en considération à cet égard figurent, notamment, le degré de clarté et de précision de la règle violée, l'étendue de la marge d'appréciation que la règle violée laisse aux autorités nationales, le caractère intentionnel ou involontaire du manquement commis ou du préjudice causé, le caractère excusable ou inexcusable d'une éventuelle erreur de droit, la circonstance que, le cas échéant, les attitudes prises par une institution de l'Union européenne ont pu contribuer à l'adoption ou au maintien de mesures ou de pratiques nationales contraires au droit de l'Union, ainsi que l'inexécution, par la juridiction nationale en cause, de son obligation de renvoi préjudiciel en vertu de l'article 267, troisième alinéa, TFUE (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 42 et jurisprudence citée).

44 En tout état de cause, une violation du droit de l'Union est suffisamment caractérisée lorsqu'elle est intervenue en méconnaissance manifeste de la jurisprudence de la Cour en la matière (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 43 et jurisprudence citée).

45 S'agissant du litige au principal, il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi d'apprécier, en tenant compte de tous les éléments qui caractérisent la situation en cause au principal, si la Fővárosi Törvényszék (cour de Budapest-Capitale), par l'ordonnance du 29 mai 2014, mentionnée au point 19 de la présente ordonnance, a commis une violation suffisamment caractérisée du droit de l'Union en méconnaissant de manière manifeste le droit de l'Union applicable, y compris la jurisprudence de la Cour pertinente, notamment les arrêts du 3 mars 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 et C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), ainsi que du 15 octobre 2009, Hochtief et Linde-Kca-Dresden (C-138/08, EU:C:2009:627) (voir, en ce sens, arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 44).

47 À cet égard, il ressort de la jurisprudence de la Cour que la réparation des dommages causés aux particuliers par des violations du droit de l'Union doit être adéquate au préjudice subi, de nature à assurer une protection effective de leurs droits (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 46 et jurisprudence citée).

48 Or, une règle de droit national en vertu de laquelle, dans un cas où la responsabilité d'un État membre est engagée pour des dommages causés du fait d'une violation d'une règle de droit de l'Union par une décision d'une juridiction de cet État statuant en dernier ressort, les frais occasionnés à une partie par cette décision sont de manière générale exclus des dommages susceptibles de faire l'objet d'une réparation peut rendre, en pratique, excessivement difficile ou même impossible d'obtenir une réparation adéquate du préjudice subi par cette partie (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 47).

49 Compte tenu de ce qui précède, il y a lieu de répondre aux première, deuxième, sixième et huitième questions que la responsabilité d'un État membre pour des dommages causés par la décision d'une juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort qui viole une règle de droit de l'Union est régie par les conditions énoncées par la Cour, notamment au point 51 de l'arrêt du 30 septembre 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513), sans pour autant exclure que la responsabilité de cet État puisse être engagée dans des conditions moins restrictives sur le fondement du droit national. Cette responsabilité n'est pas exclue du fait que cette décision a acquis l'autorité de la chose jugée. Dans le cadre de la mise en œuvre de cette responsabilité, il appartient à la juridiction nationale saisie de la demande en réparation d'apprécier, en tenant compte de tous les éléments qui caractérisent la situation en cause, si la juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort a commis une violation suffisamment caractérisée du droit de l'Union en méconnaissant de manière manifeste le droit de l'Union applicable, y compris la jurisprudence de la Cour pertinente. En revanche, le droit de l'Union s'oppose à une règle de droit national qui, dans un tel cas, exclut de manière générale des dommages susceptibles de faire l'objet d'une réparation les frais occasionnés à une partie par la décision préjudiciable de la juridiction nationale.

Sur les troisième, quatrième, cinquième et neuvième questions

50 Compte tenu du contexte de l'affaire au principal, tel que rappelé aux points 28 et 29 de la présente ordonnance, il convient de comprendre que, par ses troisième, quatrième, cinquième et neuvième questions, la juridiction de renvoi demande à la Cour, en substance, si le droit de l'Union, notamment la directive 89/665 et la directive 92/13 ainsi que les principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité, doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il ne s'oppose pas à la réglementation d'un État membre qui n'autorise pas la révision d'un jugement, revêtu de l'autorité de la chose jugée, d'une juridiction dudit État membre, ayant statué sur un recours en annulation contre un acte d'un pouvoir adjudicateur sans aborder une question dont l'examen était envisagé dans un arrêt antérieur de la Cour prononcé en réponse à une demande de décision préjudicielle présentée dans le cadre de la procédure relative à ce recours en annulation ou dans un arrêt antérieur de la Cour prononcé en réponse à une demande de décision préjudicielle posée dans le cadre d'une autre affaire.

51 À cet égard, il y a lieu de rappeler que l'article 1er, paragraphe 1, de la directive 89/665 et l'article 1er, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/13 imposent aux États membres l'obligation d'adopter les mesures nécessaires pour s'assurer que les décisions prises par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs dans le cadre des procédures de passation des marchés concernés par ces directives peuvent faire l'objet de recours efficaces et, en particulier, aussi rapides que possible, au motif qu'elles ont violé le droit de l'Union en matière de marchés publics ou les règles nationales transposant ce droit (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 50 et jurisprudence citée).

53 Ni la directive 89/665 ni la directive 92/13 ne contiennent de dispositions régissant spécifiquement les conditions dans lesquelles ces voies de recours peuvent être exercées. Ces directives ne prévoient que des dispositions établissant les conditions minimales auxquelles doivent répondre les procédures de recours instaurées dans les ordres juridiques nationaux, afin de garantir le respect des prescriptions du droit de l'Union en matière de marchés publics (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 52 et jurisprudence citée).

54 En l'occurrence, il ressort des éléments fournis par la juridiction de renvoi que, en droit procédural hongrois, la révision, au sens de l'article 260 du code de procédure civile, est une voie de recours extraordinaire, permettant, lorsque les conditions posées par cette disposition sont remplies, de remettre en cause l'autorité de la chose jugée attachée à un jugement définitif (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 53).

55 Or, il convient de rappeler l'importance que revêt, tant dans l'ordre juridique de l'Union que dans les ordres juridiques nationaux, le principe de l'autorité de la chose jugée. En effet, en vue de garantir aussi bien la stabilité du droit et des relations juridiques qu'une bonne administration de la justice, il importe que des décisions juridictionnelles devenues définitives après épuisement des voies de recours disponibles ou après expiration des délais prévus pour ces recours ne puissent plus être remises en cause (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 54, ainsi que arrêt du 11 septembre 2019, Călin, C-676/17, EU:C:2019:700, point 26 et jurisprudence citée).

56 Partant, le droit de l'Union n'impose pas au juge national d'écarter l'application des règles de procédure internes conférant l'autorité de la chose jugée à une décision juridictionnelle, même si cela permettrait de remédier à une situation nationale incompatible avec ce droit (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 55, ainsi que arrêt du 11 septembre 2019, Călin, C-676/17, EU:C:2019:700, point 27 et jurisprudence citée).

57 En effet, il a été jugé que le droit de l'Union n'exige pas que, pour tenir compte de l'interprétation d'une disposition pertinente de ce droit adoptée par la Cour, un organe juridictionnel national doive, par principe, revenir sur sa décision revêtue de l'autorité de la chose jugée (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 56, ainsi que arrêt du 11 septembre 2019, Călin, C-676/17, EU:C:2019:700, point 28 et jurisprudence citée).

58 L'arrêt du 13 janvier 2004, Kühne & Heitz (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17), évoqué par la juridiction de renvoi, ne saurait remettre en cause cette considération.

59 Certes, il ressort de cet arrêt que le principe de coopération loyale, consacré à l'article 4, paragraphe 3, TUE, impose à un organe administratif, saisi d'une demande en ce sens, de réexaminer une décision administrative définitive afin de tenir compte de l'interprétation de la disposition pertinente retenue entre-temps par la Cour lorsque, notamment, cet organe dispose, selon le droit national, du pouvoir de revenir sur cette décision (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 13 janvier 2004, Kühne & Heitz, C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17, point 28).

60 Il est constant toutefois que cette considération ne concerne qu'un éventuel réexamen d'une décision définitive d'un organe administratif et non pas, comme en l'occurrence, d'une juridiction (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 59).

61 À cet égard, il ressort de la jurisprudence de la Cour que si les règles de procédure internes applicables comportent la possibilité, sous certaines conditions, pour le juge national, de revenir sur une décision revêtue de l'autorité de la chose jugée en vue de rendre la situation issue de cette décision compatible avec le droit national, cette possibilité doit, conformément aux principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité, prévaloir, si ces conditions sont réunies, afin que soit restaurée la conformité de cette situation avec la réglementation de l'Union (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 60, ainsi que arrêt du 11 septembre 2019, Călin, C-676/17, EU:C:2019:700, point 29 et jurisprudence citée).

62 En l'occurrence, il ressort des indications fournies par la juridiction de renvoi que, aux termes de l'article 260 du code de procédure civile, la révision d'un jugement définitif est ouverte lorsqu'une partie peut se prévaloir, notamment, d'une décision juridictionnelle définitive dont il n'a pas été tenu compte au cours de la procédure ayant abouti au jugement dont la révision est sollicitée et uniquement si cette partie n'a pas été en mesure, sans que cela résulte d'une faute de sa part, de faire valoir l'existence de cette décision au cours de ladite procédure (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 61).

64 Il appartient, dès lors, à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier si les règles procédurales hongroises comportent la possibilité de revenir sur un jugement revêtu de l'autorité de la chose jugée, en vue de rendre la situation issue de ce jugement compatible avec une décision juridictionnelle définitive antérieure, dont la juridiction qui a rendu ce jugement ainsi que les parties à l'affaire ayant donné lieu à celui-ci avaient déjà connaissance. Si tel était le cas, conformément à la jurisprudence de la Cour citée au point 61 de la présente ordonnance, cette possibilité devrait, conformément aux principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité, dans les mêmes conditions, prévaloir, pour rendre la situation compatible avec un arrêt antérieur de la Cour (voir, en ce sens, arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 63).

65 C'est dans le même contexte qu'il y a lieu d'apprécier l'éventuelle pertinence de la circonstance qu'un tel arrêt antérieur de la Cour, en l'occurrence l'arrêt du 3 mars 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 et C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), n'est devenu disponible en langue hongroise qu'en cours d'instance, avant que la juridiction saisie en appel rende son jugement.

66 Cela étant, il convient, en tout état de cause, de rappeler qu'il est de jurisprudence constante que, en raison, notamment, de la circonstance qu'une violation des droits tirés du droit de l'Union par une décision juridictionnelle définitive ne peut normalement plus faire l'objet d'un redressement, les particuliers ne sauraient être privés de la possibilité d'engager la responsabilité de l'État afin d'obtenir par ce moyen une protection juridique de leurs droits (arrêt Hochtief Solutions, point 64).

67 Compte tenu de l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent, il y a lieu de répondre aux troisième, quatrième, cinquième et neuvième questions que le droit de l'Union, notamment la directive 89/665 et la directive 92/13 ainsi que les principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité, doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il ne s'oppose pas à la réglementation d'un État membre qui n'autorise pas la révision d'un jugement, revêtu de l'autorité de la chose jugée, d'une juridiction dudit État membre, ayant statué sur un recours en annulation contre un acte d'un pouvoir adjudicateur sans aborder une question dont l'examen était envisagé dans un arrêt antérieur de la Cour prononcé en réponse à une demande de décision préjudicielle présentée dans le cadre de la procédure relative à ce recours en annulation ou dans un arrêt antérieur de la Cour prononcé en réponse à une demande de décision préjudicielle dans une autre affaire. Toutefois, si les règles de procédure internes applicables comportent la possibilité, pour le juge national, de revenir sur un jugement revêtu de l'autorité de la chose jugée en vue de rendre la situation issue de ce jugement compatible avec une décision juridictionnelle définitive nationale antérieure, dont la juridiction qui a rendu ledit jugement ainsi que les parties à l'affaire ayant donné lieu à celui-ci avaient déjà connaissance, cette possibilité doit, conformément aux principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité, dans les mêmes conditions, prévaloir, pour rendre la situation compatible avec le droit de l'Union, tel qu'interprété par un arrêt antérieur de la Cour.

Sur les dépens

Par ces motifs, la Cour (neuvième chambre) ordonne :

1) La responsabilité d'un État membre pour des dommages causés par la décision d'une juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort qui viole une règle de droit de l'Union est régie par les conditions énoncées par la Cour, notamment au point 51 de l'arrêt du 30 septembre 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513), sans pour autant exclure que la responsabilité de cet État puisse être engagée dans des conditions moins restrictives sur le fondement du droit national. Cette responsabilité n'est pas exclue du fait que cette décision a acquis l'autorité de la chose jugée. Dans le cadre de la mise en œuvre de cette responsabilité, il appartient à la juridiction nationale saisie de la demande en réparation d'apprécier, en tenant compte de tous les éléments qui caractérisent la situation en cause, si la juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort a commis une violation suffisamment caractérisée du droit de l'Union en méconnaissant de manière manifeste le droit de l'Union applicable, y compris la jurisprudence de la Cour pertinente. En revanche, le droit de l'Union s'oppose à une règle de droit national qui, dans un tel cas, exclut de manière générale des dommages susceptibles de faire l'objet d'une réparation les frais occasionnés à une partie par la décision préjudiciable de la juridiction nationale.

2) Le droit de l'Union, notamment la directive 89/665/CEE du Conseil, du 21 décembre 1989, portant coordination des dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives relatives à l'application des procédures de recours en matière de passation des marchés publics de fournitures et de travaux, telle que modifiée par la directive 2007/66/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 11 décembre 2007, et la directive 92/13/CEE du Conseil, du 25 février 1992, portant coordination des dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives relatives à l'application des règles communautaires sur les procédures de passation des marchés des entités opérant dans les secteurs de l'eau, de l'énergie, des transports et des télécommunications, telle que modifiée par la directive 2007/66, ainsi que les principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité, doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il ne s'oppose pas à la réglementation d'un État membre qui n'autorise pas la révision d'un jugement, revêtu de l'autorité de la chose jugée, d'une juridiction dudit État membre, ayant statué sur un recours en annulation contre un acte d'un pouvoir adjudicateur sans aborder une question dont l'examen était envisagé dans un arrêt antérieur de la Cour prononcé en réponse à une demande de décision préjudicielle présentée dans le cadre de la procédure relative à ce recours en annulation ou dans un arrêt antérieur de la Cour prononcé en réponse à une demande de décision préjudicielle dans une autre affaire. Toutefois, si les règles de procédure internes applicables comportent la possibilité, pour le juge national, de revenir sur un jugement revêtu de l'autorité de la chose jugée en vue de rendre la situation issue de ce jugement compatible avec une décision juridictionnelle définitive nationale antérieure, dont la juridiction qui a rendu ledit jugement ainsi que les parties à l'affaire ayant donné lieu à celui-ci avaient déjà connaissance, cette possibilité doit, conformément aux principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité, dans les mêmes conditions, prévaloir, pour rendre la situation compatible avec le droit de l'Union, tel qu'interprété par un arrêt antérieur de la Cour.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Tenth Chamber)

5 September 2019 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Review procedures on the award of public supply and public works contracts — Directive 89/665/EEC — Action for annulment of the decision awarding a public contract by a tenderer whose bid was unsuccessful — Counterclaim brought by the successful tenderer — Admissibility of the main action in the event that the counterclaim is well founded)

In Case C-333/18,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), made by decision of 14 February 2018, received at the Court on 23 May 2018, in the proceedings

Lombardi Srl

v

Comune di Auletta,

Delta Lavori SpA,

Msm Ingegneria Srl,

intervening party:

Robertazzi Costruzioni Srl,

THE COURT (Tenth Chamber),

composed of C. Lycourgos, President of the Chamber, E. Juhász (Rapporteur) and M. Ilešič, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and P. Ondrůšek and by L. Haasbeek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) (‘Directive 89/665’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Lombardi Srl, on the one hand, and the Commune di Auletta (Municipality of Auletta, Italy), Delta Lavori SpA and Msm Ingegneria, on the other, concerning the award of a public contract by the Municipality of Auletta to design and carry out hydrogeological works.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provides:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts [(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, public works concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

…’

4 Article 112 of the codice di procedura civile (Code of Civil Procedure) provides:

‘The court must address the application in its entirety, but may not exceed the limits thereof; and may not rule of its own motion on counterclaims that may only be raised by the parties.’

5 Under the terms of Article 2697 of the codice civile (Civil Code):

‘The party seeking to enforce a right in the courts must prove the facts on which that claim is founded. The party alleging that those facts are immaterial or that the right has altered or been extinguished must prove the facts on which that plea is founded.’

6 Article 2909 of the codice civile (Civil Code) is drafted as follows:

‘Findings made in judgments which have acquired the force of res judicata shall be binding in all respects on the parties, their lawful successors and assignees.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

7 In a notice published on 29 June 2015, the Commune di Auletta (Municipality of Auletta) issued an open call for tenders with a view to awarding a contract for the design and execution of hydrogeological improvements to the historical centre of that municipality. According to the procurement documents, the total amount of that contract was EUR 6 927 970.95 and the selection process was to be based on the most economically advantageous bid.

8 Lombardi, placed third in the final ranking, brought proceedings before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (Regional Administrative Court, Campania, Italy) disputing, first, the admission to the tendering procedure of the successful tenderer, Delta Lavori, on the ground that the designer indicated by that firm, Msm Ingegneria, did not possess the characteristics required by the tender specifications, and, second, the tenderer in second place, Robertazzi Costruzioni Srl — Giglio Costruzioni Srl, a temporary association of undertakings.

9 Delta Lavori requested that the action be dismissed and filed a counterclaim contending that Lombardi should have been excluded from the public procurement procedure (the '"excluding" counterclaim'), on the grounds that in the course of the procedure, the latter had ceased to satisfy the eligibility criteria laid down in the call for tender.

10 The remaining tenderers ranked lower than Lombardi did not intervene in the dispute.

11 The Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (Regional Administrative Court, Campania) gave priority to examining Delta Lavori's counterclaim, and granted that claim, after declaring the public procurement procedure in the main proceedings invalid due to the fact that Lombardi had not been excluded. On that basis, that court dismissed Lombardi's claim as being inadmissible on the ground of its lack of interest in bringing proceedings.

12 Lombardi brought an appeal before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), alleging, inter alia, infringement of the principles established by the Court in the judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE, (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199). It argued that irrespective of the court's ruling on the counterclaim, the substance of the main action should have been examined in consideration of Lombardi's derived (strumentale) and indirect interest in having the failure to exclude the successful tenderer declared unlawful, since a decision to that effect could have led to the contracting authority cancelling the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings and issuing a new public procurement procedure.

13 The Fifth Chamber of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), having observed divergences in the case-law of that court regarding the implementation of the judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199), decided to refer the following question to the plenary session of that court:

'In an action for review against measures in an open public procurement procedure, is the court required to examine the main action and the successful tenderer's counterclaim to exclude the applicant, even if other candidates, whose tenders have not been challenged, took part in the procurement process and the court finds that only the contested tenders are marred by the irregularities relied on in support of the action?'

14 The Plenary Session of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) noted that, under national case-law, if only two tenderers have responded to a call for tenders and each has brought an action seeking exclusion of the other, both the main action and the counterclaim have to be examined. Furthermore, it was clear to that court that where there are more than two tenderers, the same applies if the main action is founded on pleas which, if granted, would result in the entire procedure being repeated, whether those claims contest the eligibility of the successful tenderer and the other tenderers still in play in the procedure, or the validity of the selection procedure itself.

15 However, doubts remain where, as in the present case, the main action is not founded on pleas which, if granted, would result in the entire procedure being repeated.

16 There is conflicting national case-law on that point. One branch of case-law interprets the judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199) as requiring, under those circumstances, examination of the main action even after the counterclaim has been granted, regardless of how many undertakings are party to the proceedings or the irregularities raised as pleas in the main action. The referring court observes, however, that that branch of case-law fails to take account of the judgment of 21 December 2016, Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung und Caverion Österreich (C-355/15, EU:C:2016:988), in which the Court of Justice held that Directive 89/665 does not preclude a tenderer who has been excluded from a public procurement procedure by a decision of the contracting authority which has become final being refused access to a review of the decision awarding the public contract concerned. The referring court adds that that line of case-law fails to take account of the fact that the review and cancellation of the public procurement procedure is entirely optional, with the result that the main applicant does not have a vested legal interest in the case.

17 Under the other branch of case-law, the main action for review must be examined solely where the merits of the claim would confer a real advantage on the applicant, meaning that the bids by tenderers not party to the proceedings were marred by the same illegality as that underpinning the decision allowing the main action for review. However, according to the referring court, that interpretation has been criticised as being at variance with the judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199) and overlooking the fact that, even if, upon examination of the counterclaim and the main action, it were found that all of the bids, including those submitted by tenderers not party to the proceedings, contain defects analogous to those marring the bids examined by the court, the fact remains that the contracting authority would merely have the option, but not the obligation, to recommence the tendering procedure.

18 In the opinion of the Plenary Session of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), for reasons of consistency with national procedural law and the principle of procedural autonomy based on the initiative of the parties, the applicant's legal interest should be assessed in concrete terms by the court hearing the case, not by reference to purely theoretical grounds. From that perspective, Member States should be allowed to determine the methods for demonstrating whether the party has a vested interest in the case, whilst safeguarding the rights of defence of the tenderers still in play in the public procurement procedure, but not joined to the proceedings, and observing the principles in relation to the burden of proof.

19 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Can the third paragraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive [89/665] be interpreted as allowing, where several undertakings have participated in the tendering procedure and have not been joined to the legal proceedings (and in any event no objection has been lodged in respect of the tenders submitted by some of them), it to be left to the court concerned, by virtue of the procedural autonomy accorded to the Member States, to assess whether the interest claimed in the main action by the candidate against whom an "excluding" counterclaim, considered to be well founded, has been brought, is a vested interest, using the procedural instruments available to it under the national legal order and thus ensuring that the protection of that subjective position is in line with the consolidated national principles: (i) that the court must address all the parties' claims but can grant only the relief sought by them (Article 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure); (ii) relating to proof of the interest alleged (Article 2697 of the Civil Code); and (iii) that a judgment having the force of res judicata has effect only as between the parties to the proceedings and cannot concern the position of persons not involved in the dispute (Article 2909 of the Civil Code)?'

Consideration of the question referred

20 By its question, the referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, whether the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that a main action for review brought by a tenderer with an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or could be adversely affected by an alleged infringement of EU public procurement law or rules transposing that law, seeking the exclusion of another tenderer, can be declared inadmissible under national jurisprudential procedural rules or practices on the treatment of actions brought by the parties, seeking exclusion of one another (the 'reciprocal "excluding" actions'), irrespective of the number of tenderers having participated in the procurement procedure or the number of those having brought actions for review.

21 As a preliminary point, it should be observed that, as apparent from the second recital of Directive 89/665, that directive is intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms, at both national and EU levels, to ensure the effective application of the directives relating to public procurement, in particular at a stage when infringements can still be corrected (judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others, C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 30).

22 It follows from the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 that in order for the review of decisions taken by contracting authorities to be regarded as effective, they must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

23 Accordingly, where, following a public procurement procedure, two tenderers bring actions, each seeking the exclusion of the other, each of those tenderers will have an interest in obtaining a particular contract, within the meaning of the provisions referred to in the preceding paragraph. On the one hand, the exclusion of one tenderer may lead to the other being awarded the contract directly in the same procedure. On the other, if all tenderers are excluded and a new public procurement procedure is launched, each of those tenderers may participate in the new procedure and thus obtain the contract indirectly (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 27).

24 It follows that the counterclaim brought by the successful tenderer cannot bring about the dismissal of an action for review brought by an unsuccessful tenderer where the validity of the bid submitted by each of the operators is challenged in the course of the same proceedings, given that, in such a situation, each competitor can claim a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bid submitted by the other, which may lead to a finding that the contracting authority is unable to select a lawful bid (judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb, C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448, paragraph 33, and of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 24).

25 The principle established in the judgments referred to in the preceding paragraph that the interests pursued in actions by tenderers, in the context of reciprocal ‘excluding’ actions, are to be regarded as equivalent in principle, means, for the courts hearing those proceedings, to refrain from declaring inadmissible the main action seeking exclusion under national procedural rules providing for the counterclaim by the other tenderer to be examined first.

26 That principle also applies when, as is the case in the main proceedings, other tenderers have submitted bids in the context of the procurement process and when the reciprocal ‘excluding’ actions by parties, do not relate to bids ranked lower than those that are the subject of the ‘excluding’ actions.

27 It must be recognised that the tenderer ranked in third place, as in the present case, who brought the main action, has a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bids submitted by the successful tenderer and the second-placed tenderer, for even if its bid were declared invalid, it cannot be excluded that the contracting authority would find that it could not select another valid bid, and would therefore organise a new procedure.

28 In particular, if the action by the unsuccessful tenderer were held to be well founded, the contracting authority could decide to cancel the procurement procedure and open a new one on the ground that the remaining valid bids do not sufficiently meet the contracting authority’s expectations.

29 Under those circumstances, the admissibility of the main action cannot, without depriving Directive 89/665 of its effectiveness, be contingent on a prior finding that all of the bids ranked lower than that of the tenderer are invalid. That admissibility cannot, moreover, be made subject to the condition that the tenderer adduces evidence that the contracting authority will have to restart the public procurement procedure. The mere existence of such a possibility must be regarded as being sufficient in that respect.

30 It must be added that the fact that other bidders ranked lower than the applicant in the main action were not party to the main proceedings has no bearing on that interpretation. As the Court has previously held, the number of participants in the public procurement procedure concerned, as well as the number of participants who have instigated actions for review and the differing legal grounds relied on by those participants are irrelevant to the question of the applicability of the principle established by the case-law referred to in paragraph 25 above (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 29).

31 The judgment of 21 December 2016, Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung und Caverion Österreich (C-355/15, EU:C:2016:988), cited by the referring court, is not incompatible with such an interpretation. Although it is true that in paragraphs 13 to 16, 31 and 36 of that judgment, the Court held that the tenderer whose bid had been excluded by the contracting authority from a public procurement procedure could be refused access to a review of the decision awarding the public contract, in the case giving rise to that judgment, the decision to exclude that tenderer had been confirmed by a decision that had acquired the force of res judicata before the court hearing the review of the contract award decision gave its decision, so that that tenderer had to be regarded as definitively excluded from the public procurement procedure at issue (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraph 57).

32 In the main proceedings, none of the tenderers who have brought an action to have the other party excluded have been definitively excluded from the procurement process. Therefore, that judgment in no way undermines the legal principle referred to in the preceding point.

33 Finally, as regards the principle of procedural autonomy of the Member States, it is sufficient to note that that principle may not, in any case, serve to justify provisions of domestic law that render virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by the EU legal order (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 April 2019, PORR Építési Kft., C-691/17, EU:C:2019:327, paragraph 39 and the case-law cited). For the reasons set out in the paragraphs above, it follows from the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, as interpreted by the Court, that a tenderer who has brought an action for review such as that at issue in the main proceedings may not, on the basis of national procedural rules or practices, such as those described by the referring court, be deprived of its right to an examination of the substance of his claim.

34 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred is that the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding a main action for review brought by a tenderer with an interest in obtaining a particular contract, who has been or could be adversely affected by an alleged infringement of EU public procurement law or rules transposing that law, and seeking the exclusion of another tenderer, from being declared inadmissible in application of national jurisprudential procedural rules or which concern the treatment of reciprocal ‘excluding’ actions brought by the parties, irrespective of the number of tenderers having participated in the procurement procedure or the number of those having brought actions for review.

Costs

35 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Tenth Chamber) hereby rules:

The third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, must be interpreted as precluding a main action for review brought by a tenderer with an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or could be adversely affected by an alleged breach of EU public procurement law or rules transposing that law, and seeking the exclusion of another tenderer, from being declared inadmissible in application of national jurisprudential procedural rules or which concern the treatment of reciprocal ‘excluding’ actions brought by the parties, irrespective of the number of tenderers having participated in the procurement procedure or the number of those having brought actions for review.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Ninth Chamber)

2 May 2019 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2014/24/EU — Labour costs — Automatic exclusion of tenderer where those costs were not listed separately in the tender — Principle of proportionality)

In Case C-309/18,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy), made by decision of 20 March 2018, received at the Court on 7 May 2018, in the proceedings

Lavorgna Srl

v

Comune di Montelanico,

Comune di Supino,

Comune di Sgurgola,

Comune di Trivigliano,

intervener:

Gea Srl,

THE COURT (Ninth Chamber),

composed of K. Jürimäe, President of the Chamber, S. Rodin (Rapporteur) and N. Piçarra, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Gea Srl, by E. Potena, avvocato,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by M. Santoro, avvocato dello Stato,

– the Polish Government, by B. Majczyna, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara, P. Ondrůšek and L. Haasbeek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), and the principles of EU law on public procurement.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between, of the one part, Lavorgna Srl and, of the other, the Comune di Montelanico (municipality of Montelanico, Italy), the Comune di Supino (municipality of Supino, Italy), the Comune di Sgurgola (municipality of Sgurgola, Italy) and the Comune di Trivigliano (municipality of Trivigliano, Italy), concerning the award of a public contract to a company that failed to list its labour costs separately in its financial tender.

Legal context

3 Recitals 40 and 98 of Directive 2014/24 are worded as follows:

‘(40) Control of the observance of the … labour law provisions should be performed at the relevant stages of the procurement procedure, when applying the general principles governing the choice of participants and the award of contracts, when applying the exclusion criteria and when applying the provisions concerning abnormally low tenders. …

(98) [The] requirements concerning the basic working conditions regulated in Directive 96/71/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 December 1996 concerning the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services (OJ 1997 L 18, p. 1), such as minimum rates of pay, should remain at the level set by national legislation or by collective agreements applied in accordance with Union law in the context of that Directive.’

4 Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.

2. Member States shall take appropriate measures to ensure that in the performance of public contracts economic operators comply with applicable obligations in the fields of environmental, social and labour law established by Union law, national law, collective agreements or by the international environmental, social and labour law provisions listed in Annex X.’

5 According to Article 56(3) of that directive:

‘Where information or documentation to be submitted by economic operators is or appears to be incomplete or erroneous or where specific documents are missing, contracting authorities may, unless otherwise provided by the national law implementing this Directive, request the economic operators concerned to submit, supplement, clarify or complete the relevant information or documentation within an appropriate time limit, provided that such requests are made in full compliance with the principles of equal treatment and transparency.’

Italian law

6 Article 83(9) of decreto legislativo no. 50 — Codice dei contratti pubblici (Legislative Decree No 50 establishing the public procurement code) of 18 April 2016 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016), as amended by decreto legislativo no. 56 (Legislative Decree No 56) of 19 April 2017

(ordinary supplement to GURI No 103 of 5 May 2017), ('the Code of Public Contracts') is worded as follows:

'Shortcomings in any formal element of the application may be regularised using the soccorso istruttorio procedure [a procedure whereby a tenderer is permitted to rectify shortcomings in its tendering documentation] referred to in this paragraph. In particular, if the information and the European Single Procurement Document referred to in Article 85 are absent or incomplete, or where there is any other material irregularity affecting that information or those declarations, with the exception of defects relating to the technical and financial tender, the contracting authority shall give the tenderer a period, not exceeding 10 days, in which to submit, supplement or regularise the required declarations, and will indicate what they should contain and who is required to produce them …'

7 According to Article 95(10) of the Code of Public Contracts:

'In their financial tender operators must list their labour costs and the amount of business charges allocated to complying with their health and safety at work obligations, excluding supplies not requiring siting operations, intellectual services and the contracts referred to in Article 36(2)(a). In relation to labour costs, contracting authorities shall, before awarding the contract, verify that Article 97(5)(d) has been complied with.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

8 By a notice of 29 September 2017, the municipality of Montelanico published an open tender procedure with a contract value exceeding the threshold in Article 4 of Directive 2014/24. That notice did not expressly refer to the obligation on operators, under Article 95(10) of the Code of Public Contracts, to list labour costs in their financial tenders.

9 Six tenderers, which included Gea Srl and Lavorgna, submitted tenders.

10 After expiry of the deadline for submitting tenders, the awards committee, using the soccorso istruttorio procedure under Article 83(9) of the Code of Public Contracts, invited a number of the tenderers, including Gea, to state their labour costs.

11 By a decision of 22 December 2017, the municipality of Montelanico awarded the public contract to Gea.

12 Lavorgna, which was ranked second on conclusion of the selection procedure, brought proceedings before the referring court seeking, in particular, annulment of that decision, arguing that Gea ought to have been excluded from the tendering procedure because it had failed to list the labour costs in its tender, and ought not to have been given the opportunity to avail itself of the soccorso istruttorio procedure.

13 The Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy) observes that, in its judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404), and its order of 10 November 2016, Edra Costruzioni and Edilfac (C-140/16, not published, EU:C:2016:868), the Court of Justice ruled on whether participants may be excluded from a public procurement procedure for failing to specify the costs relating to safety and security at work and whether such an omission can be regularised subsequently. On that occasion, the Court stated that, in a situation where a condition for participating in a procurement procedure, on pain of the tenderer being excluded, is not expressly laid down in the contract documentation and that condition can be identified only by a judicial interpretation of national law, the contracting authority may grant the excluded tenderer a sufficient period in order to regularise its situation.

14 The referring court states that when the national legislature adopted the Code of Public Contracts in order to transpose Directive 2014/24 into the Italian legal system, that legislature expressly imposed an obligation on tenderers to list their labour costs in the financial tender, and at the same time ruled out the possibility that the contracting authority could use the soccorso istruttorio procedure to invite tenderers who have not satisfied that obligation to regularise their situation.

15 The Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) entertains doubts as to whether the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings is compatible with the general principles of protection of legitimate expectations, legal certainty and proportionality, in particular where, as in the case before it, the financial tender, which does not contain a statement of labour costs, was drawn up by the undertaking participating in the tender procedure in conformity with the documentation devised for that purpose by the contracting authority, and where the substantive compliance with the rules on labour costs is not in doubt.

16 The referring court notes that applying that national legislation could prove to be discriminatory against undertakings established in other Member States wishing to participate in a tendering procedure published by an Italian authority, because those undertakings could not rely on the accuracy of the tender application form provided by the contracting authority.

17 In those circumstances the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Do the [EU] principles of the protection of legitimate expectations and legal certainty, together with the principles of the free movement of goods, the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, laid down in the [FEU Treaty], as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equality of treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency, referred to in Directive [2014/24], preclude the application of national legislation, such as the Italian legislation founded on the combined provisions of [Article 95(10) and Article 83(9) of the Code of Public Contracts], according to which the failure to list the labour costs separately in the financial tender in a procedure for the award of public services inevitably results in the exclusion of the tendering undertaking concerned without the possibility of supplementing or amending its tendering documentation [‘soccorso istruttorio’], even where the obligation to list those costs separately was not set out in the tender documents, and even though, in substantive terms, the tender in question actually took into account the minimum labour costs, in accordance, moreover, with a declaration for that purpose made by the tenderer?’

18 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the principles of legal certainty, equal treatment and transparency, to which Directive 2014/24 refers, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, according to which failure to list the labour costs separately, in a financial tender submitted in a procedure for the award of public services, results in that tender being excluded without the possibility of supplementing or amending the tendering documentation, even where the obligation to list those costs separately was not set out in the tender documents.

19 In that regard, it is settled case-law of the Court that, first, the principle of equal treatment requires tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the tenders of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions. Secondly, the obligation of transparency, which is its corollary, is intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. That obligation implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, secondly, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 36 and the case-law cited).

20 In the light of those considerations, the Court has held that the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency must be interpreted as precluding an economic operator from being excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract as a result of that economic operator’s non-compliance with an obligation which does not expressly arise from the documents relating to that procedure or out of the national law in force, but from an interpretation of that law and those documents and from the incorporation of provisions into those documents by the national authorities or administrative courts (judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 51; see, to that effect, order of 10 November 2016, Spinosa Costruzioni Generali and Melfi, C-162/16, not published, EU:C:2016:870, paragraph 32).

21 By contrast, those same principles do not, as a rule, preclude an economic operator from being excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract because it has failed to comply with an obligation that is expressly imposed — on pain of the operator's being excluded — by the documents relating to that procedure or provisions of national law in force.

22 The foregoing applies all the more since, according to the settled case-law of the Court, where obligations were clearly imposed in the documents relating to the public procurement procedure — on pain of the operator's being excluded — the contracting authority cannot accept any rectification whatsoever of failures to comply with those obligations (see, by analogy, judgments of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraphs 46 and 48; of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 49; and of 10 November 2016, Ciclat, C-199/15, EU:C:2016:853, paragraph 30).

23 It should be added in that respect that under Article 56(3) of Directive 2014/24 Member States may restrict the situations in which the contracting authorities can request the economic operators concerned to submit, supplement, clarify or complete the supposedly incomplete, incorrect or missing information or documentation within an appropriate time limit.

24 Lastly, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, which is a general principle of EU law, since the purpose of national legislation relating to public procurement procedures is to safeguard the equal treatment of tenderers, such legislation must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the intended objective (see, to that effect, judgment of 8 February 2018, Lloyd's of London, C-144/17, EU:C:2018:78, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

25 In the present case, it is apparent from the information provided by the referring court that the obligation, on pain of an operator's being excluded, to list labour costs separately, is clearly apparent from reading Article 95(10) of the Code of Public Contracts in conjunction with Article 83(9) of that code, in force when the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings was published. On the basis of Article 56(3) of Directive 2014/24, the Italian legislature decided to exclude, in Article 83(9) of that code, use of the soccorso istruttorio procedure where, in particular, the missing information relates to labour costs.

26 Furthermore, although the referring court states that the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings did not expressly refer to the obligation on potential tenderers, under Article 95(10) of the Code of Public Contracts, to list their labour costs in the financial tender, it is nonetheless apparent from the information in the file available to the Court that the contract notice stated that 'the rules of the [Code of Public Contracts shall apply] to matters not expressly provided for in this notice and the tender documents and specifications'.

27 It follows that any reasonably informed tenderer exercising ordinary care was, as a rule, in a position to be aware of the relevant rules applicable to the tender procedure at issue in the main proceedings, including the obligation to list labour costs in the financial tender.

28 In those circumstances, the principles of equal treatment and transparency do not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, according to which the absence of a statement of labour costs causes the tenderer concerned to be excluded with no opportunity to use the soccorso istruttorio procedure, even where the contract notice did not expressly refer to the statutory obligation to provide that statement.

29 Nevertheless, it is apparent from Gea's written observations to the Court that it was not physically possible for the tenderers in the tender at issue in the main proceedings to list their labour costs separately on the tender application form that they were obliged to use. Moreover, the specifications for that tender procedure stated that tenderers could not submit any document that had not been specifically requested by the contracting authority.

30 It is for the referring court, which alone has jurisdiction to rule on the facts of the main proceedings and the documents relating to the contract notice at issue, to verify whether it was in fact physically impossible for the tenderers to list the labour costs in accordance with Article 95(10) of the Code of Public Contracts, and to assess whether, as a result, those documents gave rise to confusion in the minds of tenderers, even though they expressly referred to the clear provisions of that code.

31 Should the referring court conclude that this was in fact the case, it would then be necessary to add that, in such a situation, having regard to the principles of legal certainty, transparency and proportionality, the contracting authority may give such a tenderer the opportunity to regularise its position and comply with the obligations under the relevant national legislation within a period set by the contracting authority (see, to that effect, judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 51, and order of 10 November 2016, Spinosa Costruzioni Generali and Melfi, C-162/16, not published, EU:C:2016:870, paragraph 32).

32 In the light of all the foregoing, the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling is that the principles of legal certainty, equal treatment and transparency, as referred to in Directive 2014/24, must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, according to which failure to list the labour costs separately, in a financial tender submitted in a procedure for the award of public services, results in that tender being excluded without the possibility of supplementing or amending the tendering documentation, even where the obligation to list those costs separately was not set out in the tender documents, in so far as that requirement and that possibility of exclusion are clearly provided for by the national legislation on public procurement expressly referred to in those tender documents. However, if the provisions of the tender procedure do not enable the tenderers to list those costs in their financial tenders, the principles of transparency and proportionality must be interpreted as not precluding tenderers from being allowed to regularise their position and to comply with the obligations under the relevant national legislation within a period set by the contracting authority.

Costs

33 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules that:

The principles of legal certainty, equal treatment and transparency, as referred to in Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, according to which failure to list the labour costs separately, in a financial tender submitted in a procedure for the award of public services, results in that tender being excluded without the possibility of supplementing or amending the tendering documentation, even where the obligation to list those costs separately was not set out in the tender documents, in so far as that requirement and that possibility of exclusion are clearly provided for by the national legislation on public procurement expressly referred to in those tender documents. However, if the provisions of the tender procedure do not enable the tenderers to list those costs in their financial tenders, the principles of transparency and proportionality must be interpreted as not precluding tenderers from being allowed to regularise their position and to comply with the obligations under the relevant national legislation within a period set by the contracting authority.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 7 May 2019,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(2)(a) and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114); Articles 1, 12 and 18 of Directive 2014/24/EU on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65); Articles 18, 49, 56 and 106 TFEU, and Article 36 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter').

2 The request has been made in proceedings brought by Kauno miesto savivaldybė (the Municipality of the City of Kaunas, Lithuania; 'the city of Kaunas) and the Kauno miesto savivaldybės administracija (Administration of the Municipality of the City of Kaunas; 'the contracting authority') concerning the conclusion, between UAB 'Kauno švara' and the contracting authority, of a contract for the supply of services.

Legal context

3 Recitals 1, 2, 5, 7, 31 and 32 of Directive 2014/24 state:

'(1) The award of public contracts by or on behalf of Member States' authorities has to comply with the principles of the [FEU Treaty], and in particular the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, provisions should be drawn up coordinating national procurement procedures so as to ensure that those principles are given practical effect and public procurement is opened up to competition.

(2) Public procurement plays a key role in the Europe 2020 strategy, set out in the Commission Communication of 3 March 2010 entitled "Europe 2020, a strategy for smart, sustainable and inclusive growth" … as one of the market-based instruments to be used to achieve smart, sustainable and inclusive growth while ensuring the most efficient use of public funds. For that purpose, the public procurement rules adopted pursuant to Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council [of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1)] and Directive [2004/18] should be revised and modernised in order to increase the efficiency of public spending, facilitating in particular the participation of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in public procurement, and to enable procurers to make better use of public procurement in support of common societal goals. There is also a need to clarify basic notions and concepts to ensure legal certainty and to incorporate certain aspects of related well-established case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

(5) It should be recalled that nothing in this Directive obliges Member States to contract out or externalise the provision of services that they wish to provide themselves or to organise by means other than public contracts within the meaning of this Directive. …

(7) It should finally be recalled that this Directive is without prejudice to the freedom of national, regional and local authorities to define, in conformity with Union law, services of general economic interest, their scope and the characteristics of the service to be provided, including any conditions regarding the quality of the service, in order to pursue their public policy objectives. This Directive should also be without prejudice to the power of national, regional and local authorities to provide, commission and finance services of general economic interest in accordance with Article 14 TFEU and Protocol No 26 on Services of General Interest annexed to the [FEU Treaty] and to the [EU Treaty]. In addition, this Directive does not deal with the funding of services of general economic interest and does not apply to systems of aids granted by Member States, in particular in the social field, in accordance with [EU] rules on competition.

(31) There is considerable legal uncertainty as to how far contracts concluded between entities in the public sector should be covered by public procurement rules. The relevant case-law of [the Court] is interpreted differently between Member States and even between contracting authorities. It is therefore necessary to clarify in which cases contracts concluded within the public sector are not subject to the application of public procurement rules.

Such clarification should be guided by the principles set out in the relevant case-law of [the Court]. The sole fact that both parties to an agreement are themselves public authorities does not as such rule out the application of procurement rules. However, the application of public procurement rules should not interfere with the freedom of public authorities to perform the public service tasks conferred on them by using their own resources, which includes the possibility of cooperation with other public authorities.

It should be ensured that any exempted public-public cooperation does not result in a distortion of competition in relation to private economic operators in so far as it places a private provider of services in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

(32) Public contracts awarded to controlled legal persons should not be subject to the application of the procedures provided for by this Directive if the contracting authority exercises a control over the legal person concerned which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, provided that the controlled legal person carries out more than 80% of its activities in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority, regardless of the beneficiary of the contract performance.

4 Article 1(4) of that directive, that article being headed ‘Subject matter and scope’, provides:

‘This Directive does not affect the freedom of Member States to define, in conformity with Union law, what they consider to be services of general economic interest, how those services should be organised and financed, in compliance with State aid rules, and which specific obligations they should be subject to. Equally, this Directive does not affect the decision of public authorities whether, how and to what extent they wish to perform public functions themselves pursuant to Article 14 TFEU and Protocol No 26.’

5 Article 12(1) of that directive, that article relating to ‘Public contracts between entities within the public sector’, provides:

‘A public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contracting authority exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of the controlled legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

6 Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24, that article being headed ‘Principles of procurement’, provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

7 By virtue of the first paragraph of Article 91 of Directive 2014/24, that directive repealed Directive 2004/18 with effect from 18 April 2016.

Lithuanian law

8 According to Article 10(5) of the Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law on Public Procurement of the Republic of Lithuania; ‘the Law on Public Procurement’), in the version in force from 1 January 2014 to 1 July 2017, an in-house transaction ‘[could] be entered into … only with the consent of the Public Procurement Authority’.

9 In the version that has been in force since 1 July 2017, Article 10 of the Law on Public Procurement provides:

‘1. The requirements of this Law shall not apply to in-house transactions concluded by a contracting authority with another contracting authority in the case where all the following conditions are satisfied:

(1) the contracting authority exercises control over the other contracting authority similar to that which it exercises over its own departments or structural divisions, exercising decisive influence over its strategic goals and significant decisions, including decisions on long-term investments, disposals, leases, securities and mortgages; acquisition or transfer of shareholdings in other economic entities; transfer of management of one branch of another entity. Such control may also be exercised by another legal person, which is itself controlled in the same way by the contracting authority;

(2) income received from contracts concluded with the controlling contracting authority or with legal entities controlled by that contracting authority and intended to meet its/their needs or to perform its/their functions accounts for more than 80% of the average income received by the controlled contracting authority from sales contracts during the previous three financial years. If the controlled contracting authority has been active for less than three years, its results must be estimated on the basis of its business plan;

(3) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled contracting authority.

2. An in-house transaction may be concluded only in an exceptional case, when the conditions set out in paragraph 1 of this article are satisfied and the continuity, good quality and availability of services cannot be ensured if they are purchased through public procurement procedures.

5. Public undertakings, public limited liability companies, and private limited liability companies in which State-owned shares confer more than half of the votes at the general meeting of shareholders may not conclude any in-house transactions.’

10 Article 4 of the Lietuvos Respublikos konkurencijos įstatymas (Law on Competition of the Republic of Lithuania) of 23 March 1999, Žin., 1999, No 30-856 ('the Law on Competition'), provides as follows:

'1. When carrying out the assigned tasks relating to the regulation of economic activities within the Republic of Lithuania, entities of public administration must ensure freedom of fair competition.

2. Entities of public administration shall be prohibited from adopting legal acts or other decisions which grant privileges to, or discriminate against, any individual economic entities or their groups and which give rise to, or may give rise to, differences in the conditions of competition for economic entities competing in a relevant market, except where the difference in the conditions of competition cannot be avoided when complying with the requirements of the laws of the Republic of Lithuania.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11 On 7 February 2014 the contracting authority published notice of a contract for the supply of services relating to the maintenance and management of plantations, forests and parks in the city of Kaunas.

12 That contract, in three parts, was awarded in its entirety to Irgita and led, inter alia, to the signature, on 18 March 2014, of a contract to supply mowing and cutting services for a period of 3 years, that is, until 18 March 2017.

13 That contract made provision for the maximum quantity of services that could be sought from Irgita. However, the contracting authority gave no commitment to order all the services nor the entire quantity of services provided for in that contract. Further, the contracting authority was required to pay Irgita only for those services that were actually performed according to the tariffs laid down in that contract.

14 On 1 April 2016 the contracting authority requested the consent of the Viešųjų pirkimų tarnyba (the Public Procurement Authority, Lithuania) to the conclusion with Kauno švara of an in-house transaction concerning services that were essentially the same as those for which Irgita had been made responsible by the contract of 18 March 2014.

15 Kauno švara, which has legal personality, is controlled by the contracting authority, which own 100% of its shares. Further, in 2015 Kauno švara achieved 90.07% of its turnover from activities performed solely for the benefit of the contracting authority.

16 On 20 April 2016 the Public Procurement Authority consented to the conclusion of a contract between Kauno švara and the contracting authority for the supply of the services concerned, while imposing on the contracting authority the obligation to assess, before the conclusion of that contract, the possibility of obtaining those services by organising a public procurement procedure. In any event, the contracting authority was bound to comply with Article 4(2) of the Law on competition.

17 On 3 May 2016 the city of Kaunas decided to conclude a contract for the supply of mowing and cutting services with Kauno švara and set the tariffs for the services to be performed ('the contested decision').

18 On 19 May 2016 the contracting authority and Kauno švara concluded that contract ('the contested contract'). That contract, the duration of which was fixed at 5 years, provides, inter alia, that orders for services will depend on the needs of the contracting authority, that the services will be paid for according to the tariffs laid down in the contract and that the term of the contract may be extended.

19 On 20 May 2016 Irgita brought, before the Lithuanian court of first instance with jurisdiction, an action challenging the contested decision and the contested contract. In that action, Irgita claimed that, having regard to the contract of 18 March 2014 concluded between it and the contracting authority, the latter was not in a position to conclude the contested contract.

20 That action having been dismissed at first instance, Irgita's action was then upheld by the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania), which, by a decision of 4 October 2017, annulled the contested decision and declared the contested contract null and void.

21 That court stated that the right to conclude an in-house transaction, provided for in Article 10(5) of the Law on Public Procurement, in the version in force from 1 July 2014 to 1 July 2017, cannot be an exception to the prohibitions on undermining competition between economic operators, on granting privileges to one economic operator, and discriminating against others, as laid down in Article 4(2) of the Law on Competition. The contested contract, according to that court, was unlawful, on the grounds, in particular, that it entailed a reduction in the quantity of services ordered from Irgita and, by concluding an in-house transaction, with no objective need, the contracting authority had granted to the undertaking that it controlled privileges liable to distort the conditions of competition between economic operators in the market for the maintenance of wooded areas in the city of Kaunas.

22 In the appeal on a point of law brought before it by the city of Kaunas and the contracting authority, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) states, first, that the contested contract is clearly an in-house transaction and, second, that the main proceedings raise the general question of the relationship between in-house transactions and compliance with the principle of free competition between independent operators.

23 The referring court observes further that, from the end of 2011 until the middle of 2015, the case-law of the Lietuvos vyriausiasis administracinis teismas (Administrative Supreme Court of Lithuania) had been settled on the point that in-house transactions that satisfied the criteria laid down in the judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562), were lawful. However, from the middle of 2015, taking into consideration two orders of the Lietuvos Respublikos Konstitucinis Teismas (Constitutional Court of the Republic of Lithuania), the Lietuvos vyriausiasis administracinis teismas (Administrative Supreme Court of Lithuania) held that the lawfulness of in-house transactions was subject not only to satisfying the criteria laid down in the judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562), but also to other assessment criteria deriving from, inter alia, the Law on Competition. Those criteria include the continuity, good quality and availability of the service and the effect of the envisaged in-house transaction, first, on equal treatment of other economic operators and, second, on whether those operators have an opportunity to compete in order to supply the services concerned.

24 The referring court considers that the concept of an ‘in-house transaction’ constitutes an autonomous concept of EU law in that, having regard to the judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562), it appears to stem from the general concept of ‘public contract’. Since the definition of that concept makes no reference to the law of the Member States, that concept falls within the scope of EU law, as is apparent from the judgment of 18 January 2007, Auroux and Others (C-220/05, EU:C:2007:31).

25 Further, it is apparent from Article 12 of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of recitals 2, 31 and 32 of that directive, that the lawfulness of an in-house transaction for the purposes of that article depends exclusively on the conditions laid down in the judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562), which, according to the referring court, rules out other factors being taken into consideration and suggests that Directive 2014/24 is carrying out a strict harmonisation of in-house transactions.

26 The referring court is conscious however that the Member States retain a degree of discretion. In that regard, in the wording of Article 1(4) of Directive 2014/24, that directive does not affect the freedom of Member States to define, in conformity with EU law, what they consider to be ‘services of general economic interest’, how those services should be organised and financed, in compliance with State aid rules, and what specific obligations they should be subject to. Equally, that directive does not affect the right of public authorities to decide whether and how they wish to perform public functions themselves pursuant to Article 14 TFEU and Protocol No 26. Article 36 of the Charter also provides that the Union recognises and respects access to services of general economic interest as provided for in national laws and practices, in accordance with the treaties, in order to promote the social and territorial cohesion of the Union.

27 In the opinion of the referring court, the Member States should be able to decide that the possibility of having recourse to an in-house transaction should be subject to compliance with requirements of clarity, predictability and the protection of legitimate expectations in particular, provided that those requirements are clearly laid down in their legislation and do not emerge solely from the case-law.

28 Further, even in the event that the national courts might make provision for restrictions on entering into in-house transactions, the referring court doubts whether those restrictions would be well founded. According to the referring court, the reasoning of the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania) would amount to calling into question the right of the contracting authority to enter into an in-house transaction in accordance with the criteria laid down in the judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562), since economic operators other than the controlled undertaking are capable of performing the services concerned.

29 In those circumstances, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Given the circumstances in the case under consideration, does the in-house transaction come within the scope of application of Directive 2004/18 or of Directive 2014/24, when the procedures for the conclusion of the disputed in-house transaction, inter alia, the administrative procedures, were initiated at a time when Directive 2004/18 was still in force but the contract itself was concluded on 19 May 2016, when Directive 2004/18 was no longer in force?

(2) Assuming that the in-house transaction comes within the scope of application of Directive 2004/18:

(a) Must Article 1(2)(a) of the Directive (but not limited thereto), taking into account the judgments of the Court of Justice of [18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562); of 18 January 2007, Auroux and Others (C-220/05, EU:C:2007:31); and of 6 April 2006, ANAV (C-410/04, EU:C:2006:237], and other cases, be understood and interpreted as meaning that the concept of an “in-house transaction” comes within the scope of EU law, and that the content and application of that concept are not affected by the national law of Member States, inter alia, by limitations on the conclusion of such transactions, for example, by the condition that public procurement contracts cannot ensure the quality, availability and continuity of the services to be provided?

(b) If the answer to the previous question is in the negative, that is to say, the concept of an in-house transaction comes, either partially or fully, within the scope of the law of the Member States, should the abovementioned provision of Directive 2004/18 be interpreted as meaning that Member States have a discretion to establish limitations or additional conditions for the conclusion of in-house transactions (in comparison with EU law and the case-law of the Court of Justice interpreting that law) but can implement that discretion only by means of specific and clear provisions of substantive law governing public procurement?

(3) On the assumption that the in-house transaction comes within the scope of application of Directive 2014/24:

(a) Must the provisions of Article 1(4) and Article 12 of the Directive and those of Article 36 of the Charter, either together or separately (but not limited thereto), taking into account the judgments of the Court [of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562); of 18 January 2007, Auroux and Others (C-220/05, EU:C:2007:31); and of 6 April 2006, ANAV (C-410/04, EU:C:2006:237] and other cases, be understood and interpreted as meaning that the concept of an “in-house transaction” comes within the scope of EU law, and that the content and application of that notion are not affected by the national law of Member States, inter alia, by limitations on the conclusion of such transactions, for example, by the condition that public procurement contracts cannot ensure the quality, availability and continuity of the services to be provided;

(b) If the answer to the previous question is in the negative, that is to say, the concept of an in-house transaction, either partially or fully, comes within the scope of the law of the Member States, should the provisions of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 be interpreted as meaning that Member States have a discretion to establish limitations or additional conditions for the conclusion of in-house transactions (in comparison with EU law and the case-law of the Court of Justice interpreting that law) but can implement that discretion only by means of specific and clear provisions of substantive law governing public procurement?

(4) Irrespective of which directive covers the disputed in-house transaction, should the principles of equality and non-discrimination of public procurement suppliers and transparency (Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 18 of Directive 2014/24), the general prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality (Article 18 TFEU), the freedom of establishment (Article 49 TFEU), the freedom to provide services (Article 56 TFEU), the possibility of granting undertakings exclusive rights (Article 106 TFEU), and the case-law of the Court of Justice (judgments of 18 November 1999, Teckal, C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562; of 6 April 2006, ANAV, C-410/04, EU:C:2006:237; of 10 September 2009, Sea, C-573/07, EU:C:2009:532; of 8 December 2016, Undis Servizi, C-553/15, EU:C:2016:935] and others) be understood and interpreted as meaning that an in-house transaction being concluded by a contracting authority and by an entity legally separate from that contracting authority, where the contracting authority exercises control over that entity similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and the activity of that entity consists mainly of an activity carried out for the benefit of the contracting authority, is in itself lawful, inter alia, does not infringe the right of other economic operators to fair competition, does not discriminate against those other operators, and no privileges are conferred on the controlled entity which concluded the in-house transaction?'

Consideration of the questions referred

30 By its first question, the referring court seeks, in essence, to ascertain whether a situation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, where a public contract has been awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person over which it exercises a control similar to the control it exercises over its own departments, as part of a procedure initiated when Directive 2004/18 was still in force, which led to the conclusion of a contract after the repeal of that directive, falls within the scope of Directive 2004/18 or within the scope of Directive 2014/24.

31 As is apparent from settled case-law, the directive applicable to a public contract is, as a rule, the one in force at the time when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether a prior call for competition needs to be issued for the award of a public contract (see, inter alia, judgments of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraph 31, and of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 83).

32 Since Directive 2004/18 was, in accordance with the first paragraph of Article 91 of Directive 2014/24, repealed with effect from 18 April 2016, it is necessary to examine whether, on that date, the contracting authority had already adopted, in the main proceedings, the definitive decision to have recourse to an in-house transaction.

33 In this case, it is clear from the order for reference that the contracting authority made a request, on 1 April 2016, to the Public Procurement Authority to obtain consent to conclude the in-house transaction at issue in the main proceedings and that that consent was issued to it on 20 April 2016, namely after the repeal of Directive 2004/18.

34 Consequently, as stated by the Advocate General in point 34 of his Opinion, since the Public Procurement Authority issued its consent after the repeal of Directive 2004/18, the situation at issue in the main proceedings necessarily falls within the scope of Directive 2014/24.

35 Further, since a condition of that consent was that the contracting authority was required to assess the possibility of its obtaining the services at issue in the main proceedings by means of a normal public procurement procedure, the contracting authority could not have definitively resolved the question whether it was obliged to initiate a competition procedure prior to the award of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings on the date of repeal of Directive 2004/18, namely 18 April 2016.

36 In those circumstances, the answer to the first question is that a situation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, where a public contract has been awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person over which it exercises a control similar to the control it exercises over its own departments, as part of a procedure initiated when Directive 2004/18 was still in force, which led to the conclusion of a contract after the date of repeal of that directive, namely 18 April 2016, falls within the scope of Directive 2014/24 where the contracting authority definitively resolved the question whether it was obliged to initiate a prior competition procedure for the award of a public contract after that date.

37 Having regard to the answer given to the first question, there is no need to answer the second question.

The third question, part (a)

38 First, it must be observed that part (a) of the third question refers, inter alia, to Article 1(4) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 36 of the Charter, provisions which concern services of general economic interest.

39 However, since the order for reference contains no explanation of why an interpretation of the concept of 'services of general economic interest' is relevant to the resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings, it fails to put the Court in a position to give a useful answer to part (a) of the third question, in so far as that question concerns Article 1(4) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 36 of the Charter.

40 It is necessary therefore to reformulate part (a) of the third question, and to hold that, by that question, the referring court seeks to ascertain whether Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding a rule of national law whereby a Member State imposes the requirement that the conclusion of in-house transaction should be subject, inter alia, to the condition that public procurement fails to ensure that the quality of the services performed, their availability or their continuity can be guaranteed.

41 It must be observed, first, that the purpose of Directive 2014/24, as stated in recital 2 thereof, is to coordinate national procurement procedures above a certain value.

42 That consideration can guide the Court in the interpretation of Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24, according to which 'A public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions [set out in Article 12(1)(a) to (c)] are fulfilled'.

43 The effect of that provision, which thus does no more than state the conditions which a contracting authority must observe when it wishes to conclude an in-house transaction, is solely to empower the Member States to exclude such a transaction from the scope of Directive 2014/24.

44 That provision cannot, consequently, deprive the Member States of the freedom to give preference to one means of providing services, performing work or obtaining supplies to the detriment of others. That freedom implies a choice which is at a stage prior to that of procurement and which cannot, therefore, fall within the scope of Directive 2014/24.

45 The freedom of the Member States as to the choice of means of providing services whereby the contracting authorities meet their own needs follows moreover from recital 5 of Directive 2014/24, which states that 'nothing in this Directive obliges Member States to contract out or externalise the provision of services that they wish to provide themselves or to organise by means other than public contracts within the meaning of this Directive', thereby reflecting the case-law of the Court prior to that directive.

46 Thus, just as Directive 2014/24 does not require the Member States to have recourse to a public procurement procedure, it cannot compel them to have recourse to an in-house transaction where the conditions laid down in Article 12(1) are satisfied.

47 Further, the freedom thus left to the Member States is more clearly distinguished in Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1), which states:

‘This Directive recognises the principle of free administration by national, regional and local authorities in conformity with national and Union law. Those authorities are free to decide how best to manage the performance of works or the provision of services, to ensure in particular a high level of quality, safety and affordability, equal treatment and the promotion of universal access and of user rights in public services.

Those authorities may choose to perform their public interest tasks with their own resources or in cooperation with other authorities or to confer them upon economic operators.’

48 The freedom of the Member States as to the choice of the management method that they judge to be most appropriate for the performance of works or the provision of services cannot however be unlimited. That freedom must, on the contrary, be exercised with due regard to the fundamental rules of the FEU Treaty, in particular the free movement of goods, the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency (see, by analogy, judgments of 9 July 1987, CEI and Bellini, 27/86 to 29/86, EU:C:1987:355, paragraph 15; of 7 December 2000, Telaustria and Telefonadress, C-324/98, EU:C:2000:669, paragraph 60; and of 10 September 2009, Sea, C-573/07, EU:C:2009:532, paragraph 38).

49 Within those limits, it is open to a Member State to impose on a contracting authority conditions, not laid down in Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24, if it is to conclude an in-house transaction, including conditions to guarantee the continuity, good quality and availability of the service.

50 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to part (a) of the third question is that Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding a rule of national law whereby a Member State imposes a requirement that the conclusion of an in-house transaction should be subject, inter alia, to the condition that public procurement fails to ensure that the quality of the services performed, their availability or their continuity can be guaranteed, provided that the choice made in favour of one means of providing services in particular, made at a stage prior to that of public procurement, has due regard to the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency.

The third question, part (b)

51 By its third question, part (b), the referring court seeks, in essence, to ascertain whether Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of the principle of transparency, must be interpreted as meaning that the conditions to which Member States subject the conclusion of in-house transactions must be made known by means of precise and clear rules of the substantive law governing public procurement.

52 As stated in paragraph 44 of the present judgment, Directive 2014/24 does not have the effect of depriving Member States of the freedom to give preference, at a stage prior to that of public procurement, to one means of providing services, performing work or obtaining supplies to the detriment of others.

53 It follows that, where a Member State introduces rules under which one such means of providing services, performing work or obtaining supplies is given preference over others, as has been done, in this case, with respect to the conditions subject to which Lithuanian law permits the conclusion of in-house transactions for the purposes of Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24, the introduction of those rules cannot be covered by the transposition of that directive.

54 The fact remains, however, that where the Member States decide to proceed in that way, they continue to be subject, as stated in paragraph 48 of the present judgment, to the need to respect various principles, including the principle of transparency.

55 The principle of transparency requires, like the principle of legal certainty, that the conditions to which the Member States subject the conclusion of in-house transactions should be made known by means of rules that are sufficiently accessible, precise and predictable in their application to avoid any risk of arbitrariness.

56 In the light of the foregoing, it is for the referring court to assess whether the changes in the interpretation of the provisions of the Law on Competition that have been effected by the higher courts of Lithuania as from the middle of 2015 have emerged with sufficient clarity and precision and whether those changes have been sufficiently publicised so that both the contracting authorities and the economic operators concerned might reasonably have been aware of them.

57 The answer therefore to part (b) of the third question is that Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of the principle of transparency, must be interpreted as meaning that the conditions to which the Member States subject the conclusion of in-house transactions must be made known by means of precise and clear rules of the substantive law governing public procurement which must be sufficiently accessible, precise and predictable in their application to avoid any risk of arbitrariness, which it is, in this case, for the referring court to determine.

The fourth question

58 By its fourth question, the referring court seeks, in essence, to ascertain whether the conclusion of an in-house transaction which satisfies the conditions laid down in Article 12(1)(a) to (c) of Directive 2014/24 is, as such, compatible with EU law.

59 It follows from Article 12(1)(a) to (c) of Directive 2014/24 that a public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law does not fall within the scope of that directive where (i) the contracting authority exercises a control over that legal person which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, (ii) more than 80% of the activities of that legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by the latter and (iii) there is, as a rule, no direct private capital participation in that legal person.

60 However, that provision concerns solely the scope of Directive 2014/24 and cannot be construed as establishing the conditions governing whether a public contract is to be awarded in the form of an in-house transaction.

61 As follows, in essence, from paragraph 48 of the present judgment, the fact that an in-house transaction, within the meaning of Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24, does not fall within the scope of that directive cannot relieve the Member States or the contracting authorities of the obligation to have due regard to, inter alia, the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency.

62 It must moreover be observed that recital 31 of that directive states, in relation to cooperation between entities belonging to the public sector, that it should be ensured that any cooperation of that kind, which is excluded from the scope of that directive, does not result in a distortion of competition in relation to private economic operators.

63 In this case, it is particularly the task of the referring court to assess whether, by concluding the in-house transaction at issue in the main proceedings, the subject matter of which overlaps with that of a public contract still in force and performed by Irgita, as the party to whom that contract was awarded, the contracting authority has not acted in breach of its contractual obligations, arising from that public contract, and of the principle of transparency; whether it had to be established that the contracting authority failed to define its requirements sufficiently clearly, in particular by not guaranteeing the provision of a minimum volume of services to the party to whom that contract was awarded, or, further, whether that transaction constitutes a substantial amendment of the general structure of the contract concluded with Irgita.

64 The answer therefore to the fourth question is that the conclusion of an in-house transaction which satisfies the conditions laid down in Article 12(1)(a) to (c) of Directive 2014/24 is not as such compatible with EU law.

Costs

65 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. A situation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, where a public contract has been awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person over which it exercises a control similar to the control it exercises over its own departments, as part of a procedure initiated when Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts was still in force and which led to the conclusion of a contract after the date of repeal of that directive, namely 18 April 2016, falls within the scope of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 where the contracting authority definitively resolved the question of whether it was obliged to initiate a prior competition procedure for the award of a public contract after that date.

2. Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding a rule of national law whereby a Member State imposes a requirement that the conclusion of an in-house transaction should be subject, inter alia, to the condition that public procurement does not ensure that the quality of the services performed, their availability or their continuity can be guaranteed, provided that the choice made in favour of one means of providing services in particular, made at a stage prior to that of public procurement, has due regard to the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency.

3. Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of the principle of transparency, must be interpreted as meaning that the conditions to which the Member States subject the conclusion of in-house transactions must be made known by means of precise and clear rules of the substantive law governing public procurement, which must be sufficiently accessible, precise and predictable in their application to avoid any risk of arbitrariness, which it is, in this case, for the referring court to determine.

4. The conclusion of an in-house transaction which satisfies the conditions laid down in Article 12(1(a) to (c) of Directive 2014/24 is not as such compatible with EU law.

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2004/18/EC — Scope ratione temporis — Directive 2014/24/EU — 'In-house transactions' — Additional conditions for an 'in-house transaction' under national law)

I. Introduction

1. This request for a preliminary ruling deals, in essence, with the question whether a Member State can impose additional requirements on a contracting authority for the conclusion of an 'in-house contract' (2) although this contract satisfies the criteria for an 'in-house transaction' under the case-law of the Court and, if applicable, Article 12 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC. (3)

2. The referring court has also asked for clarification on the applicability ratione temporis of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (4) and of Directive 2014/24.

II. Legal framework

A. EU law

3. Recitals 1, 2, 4, 5 and 31 of Directive No 2014/24 state:

'(1) The award of public contracts by or on behalf of Member States' authorities has to comply with the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and in particular the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, provisions should be drawn up coordinating national procurement procedures so as to ensure that those principles are given practical effect and public procurement is opened up to competition.

(2) Public procurement plays a key role in the Europe 2020 strategy, set out in the Commission Communication of 3 March 2010 entitled "Europe 2020, a strategy for smart, sustainable and inclusive growth" …, as one of the market-based instruments to be used to achieve smart, sustainable and inclusive growth while ensuring the most efficient use of public funds. … There is also a need to clarify basic notions and concepts to ensure legal certainty and to incorporate certain aspects of related well-established case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

(4) The increasingly diverse forms of public action have made it necessary to define more clearly the notion of procurement itself; that clarification should not however broaden the scope of this Directive compared to that of Directive 2004/18/EC. The Union rules on public procurement are not intended to cover all forms of disbursement of public funds, but only those aimed at the acquisition of works, supplies or services for consideration by means of a public contract. …

(5) It should be recalled that nothing in this Directive obliges Member States to contract out or externalise the provision of services that they wish to provide themselves or to organise by means other than public contracts within the meaning of this Directive. …

(31) There is considerable legal uncertainty as to how far contracts concluded between entities in the public sector should be covered by public procurement rules. The relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union is interpreted differently between Member States and even between contracting authorities. It is therefore necessary to clarify in which cases contracts concluded within the public sector are not subject to the application of public procurement rules.

Such clarification should be guided by the principles set out in the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union. The sole fact that both parties to an agreement are themselves public authorities does not as such rule out the application of procurement rules. However, the application of public procurement rules should not interfere with the freedom of public authorities to perform the public service tasks conferred on them by using their own resources, which includes the possibility of cooperation with other public authorities.

It should be ensured that any exempted public-public cooperation does not result in a distortion of competition in relation to private economic operators in so far as it places a private provider of services in a position of advantage vis-à-vis its competitors.'

4. Article 1 of Directive No 2014/24, headed 'Subject matter and scope', provides, in paragraph 4:

'This Directive does not affect the freedom of Member States to define, in conformity with Union law, what they consider to be services of general economic interest, how those services should be organised and financed, in compliance with the State aid rules, and what specific obligations they should be subject to. Equally, this Directive does not affect the decision of public authorities whether, how and to what extent they wish to perform public functions themselves pursuant to Article 14 TFEU and Protocol No 26.'

5. Article 12 of Directive No 2014/24, headed 'Public contracts between entities within the public sector', provides, in paragraph 1:

'A public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contracting authority exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of the controlled legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

A contracting authority shall be deemed to exercise over a legal person a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments within the meaning of point (a) of the first subparagraph where it exercises a decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of the controlled legal person. Such control may also be exercised by another legal person, which is itself controlled in the same way by the contracting authority.'

6. The first paragraph of Article 91 of Directive 2014/24 provides:

'Directive 2004/18/EC is repealed with effect from 18 April 2016.'

B. Lithuanian law

1. Viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law on Public Procurement) of 13 August 1996, No I 1491

7. Article 3 of the Law on Public Procurement of the Republic of Lithuania of 13 August 1996, No I-1491 ('the Law on Public Procurement'), provides as follows:

'1. The contracting authority shall ensure, in the course of performance of procurement procedures and the award of contracts, that there is compliance with the principles of equal rights, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency.

8. Article 10(5) of the Law on Public Procurement (as applicable on 1 January 2016), provides as follows:

'The requirements of this Law shall not apply to procurement procedures where a contracting authority concludes a contract with an entity having separate legal personality, over which it exercises a control identical to that which it exercises over its own department or structural division and in which it is the sole member (or exercises the rights and obligations of the State or the municipality as the sole member) and where the controlled entity receives at least 80% of sales income in the last financial year (or in the period from the day of the establishment of the entity if the entity has carried out its activities for less than one financial year) from activities intended to meet the needs of the contracting authority or to perform the functions of the contracting authority. A procurement procedure in the manner specified in this paragraph may be commenced only upon receipt of the consent of the Viešųjų pirkimų tarnyba (Public Procurement Office). ...'

9. Article 10 of the Law on Public Procurement (as applicable on 1 July 2017) provides, inter alia, as follows:

'1. The requirements of this Law shall not apply to in-house transactions concluded by a contracting authority with another contracting authority in the case where all of the following conditions are present without exception:

(1) the contracting authority exercises control over the other contracting authority identical to that which it exercises over its own department or structural division, exercising decisive influence over its strategic goals and significant decisions ...;

(2) income received from contracts concluded with the controlling contracting authority or with legal entities controlled by that contracting authority and intended to meet its/their needs or to perform its/their functions accounts for more than 80% of the average income received by the controlled contracting authority from sales contracts during the previous three financial years. ...;

(3) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled contracting authority.

2. An in-house transaction may be concluded only in an exceptional case, when the conditions set out in paragraph 1 of this article are satisfied and the continuity, good quality and availability of services cannot be ensured if they are purchased through public procurement procedures.

5. Public undertakings, public limited liability companies, and private limited liability companies in which State-owned shares grant more than half of the votes at the general meeting of shareholders may not conclude any in-house transactions.'

2. Konkurencijos įstatymas (Law on Competition) of 23 March 1999, No VIII 1099

10. Article 4 of the Lietuvos Respublikos konkurencijos įstatymas (Law on Competition of the Republic of Lithuania) of 23 March 1999, No VIII-1099 ('the Law on Competition'), provides as follows:

'1. When carrying out the assigned tasks relating to the regulation of economic activities within the Republic of Lithuania, entities of public administration must ensure freedom of fair competition.

2. Entities of public administration shall be prohibited from adopting legal acts or other decisions which grant privileges to, or discriminate against, any individual economic entities or their groups and which give rise to, or may give rise to, differences in the conditions of competition for economic entities competing in a relevant market, except where the difference in the conditions of competition cannot be avoided when complying with the requirements of the laws of the Republic of Lithuania.'

III. Background facts and main proceedings

11. The request for a preliminary ruling has been made in appeal proceedings before the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) brought by Kauno miesto savivaldybė (Municipality of the City of Kaunas) and Kauno miesto savivaldybės administracija (Administration of the Municipality of the City of Kaunas) against a judgment of the private law division of the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania). The initial action was brought by UAB Irgita ('Irgita'), a limited liability company, against the Municipality of the City of Kaunas, the Administration of the Municipality of the City of Kaunas and UAB Kauno švara ('Kauno švara'), a limited liability company.

12. On 7 February 2014, the Administration of the Municipality of the City of Kaunas ('the contracting authority') launched a procurement procedure for services relating to the maintenance and management of plantations, forests and forest parks in the City of Kaunas.

13. On 18 March 2014, a contract for the provision of those services was concluded between the contracting authority and the successful bidder, Irgita. The contract's period of validity was three years. Payment was to be made on the basis of the services ordered and rendered. The contracting authority had no obligation to order all its relevant services or a specific minimum quantity of services from Irgita.

14. On 1 April 2016, the contracting authority requested the consent of the Viešųjų pirkimų tarnyba (Public Procurement Office) to conclude an 'in-house transaction' for services which were essentially similar to those provided under the existing contract between the contracting authority and Irgita. The request related to a possible contract with Kauno švara. The Municipality of the City of Kaunas was the sole owner of Kauno švara. In 2015, the year preceding the transaction, Kauno švara had received 90.07% of its income from activities performed for the benefit of the contracting authority.

15. On 20 April 2016, the Public Procurement Office gave its consent to the 'in-house transaction' described above. However, it stated, inter alia, that, prior to concluding the 'in-house transaction', the contracting authority should evaluate whether it was possible to procure the services in accordance with the Law on Public Procurement with a view to the rational use of financial resources and in order to ensure competition between suppliers. It noted that, in any event, the decision of the contracting authority would have to comply with Article 4(2) of the Law on Competition.

16. On 3 May 2016, the Council of the Municipality of the City of Kaunas adopted a decision approving the conclusion of the 'in-house transaction' with Kauno švara referred to above ('the disputed Council decision').

17. Accordingly, on 19 May 2016, the contracting authority and Kauno švara concluded a contract for services ('the disputed contract').

18. On 20 May 2016, Irgita brought proceedings before the court of first instance challenging the disputed Council decision and the disputed contract, claiming that the contracting authority was not entitled to enter into an 'in-house transaction' for the relevant services as its contract with Irgita was still in force. Further, it claimed that the disputed contract was contrary to the Law on Public Procurement and the Law on Competition, distorted free and fair competition and conferred privileges on Kauno švara that discriminated against other providers.

19. By decision of 13 March 2017, the court at first instance dismissed Irgita's action. However, in its judgment of 4 October 2017, the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania) decided in favour of Irgita. Both courts agreed in their reasoning that the exercise of the right to conclude an 'in-house transaction' in accordance with Article 10(5) of the Law on Public Procurement must not infringe the mandatory requirement laid down in Article 4(2) of the Law on Competition that competition between economic operators must not be adversely affected. The courts differed in their assessment whether, in the circumstances, competition between suppliers had been adversely affected.

20. The Municipality of the City of Kaunas and the contracting authority lodged an appeal with the referring court, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania), requesting a review of the judgment of the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania).

21. The Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) states that the disputed contract is clearly a transaction fulfilling the criteria for an 'in-house transaction' set out in EU law (5) and the case-law of the Court. This assessment is shared by all the parties to the dispute.

22. The Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) explains that the Lietuvos vyriausiasis administracinis teismas (Supreme Administrative Court of Lithuania) has consistently held since 2011 that contracts satisfying the Teckal criteria were to be considered lawful. From mid-2015 onwards, on the basis of two orders of the Lietuvos Respublikos Konstitucinis Teismas (Constitutional Court of the Republic of Lithuania), further criteria were taken into consideration, emanating from the Law on Competition, such as, for example, the continuity, the quality and accessibility of services as well as the effects on the equality of treatment of other economic operators and the possibility for them to compete for such services. The referring court points out that Article 4(2) of the Law on Competition, as applied by the courts, had in fact not changed since its original wording, which has remained the same since 23 March 1999, and that only the interpretation of the provision in the case-law had changed since 2015.

23. In this context, the referring court has doubts whether, taking into account the case-law of the Court of Justice, the criteria that have to be fulfilled for an 'in-house transaction' to be permissible are stipulated exhaustively by EU law or whether the Member States have a margin of discretion to establish additional rules regarding in-house transactions and, if such discretion exists, the manner in which it can be exercised.

IV. Request for a preliminary ruling and the procedure before the Court

24. In those circumstances, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Given the circumstances in the case under consideration, does the in-house transaction come within the scope of application of Directive 2004/18 or of Directive 2014/24, when the procedures for the conclusion of the disputed in-house transaction, inter alia, the administrative procedures, were initiated at a time when Directive 2004/18 was still in force but the contract itself was concluded on 19 May 2016, when Directive 2004/18 was no longer in force?

(2) Assuming that the in-house transaction comes within the scope of application of Directive 2004/18:

(a) Must Article 1(2)(a) of the directive (but not limited thereto), taking into account the judgments of the Court of Justice in Teckal (C-107/98), Jean Auroux and Others (C-220/05), ANAV (C-410/04), and other cases, be understood and interpreted as meaning that the notion of an "in-house transaction" comes within the scope of EU law, and that the content and application of that notion are not affected by the national law of Member States, inter alia, by limitations on the conclusion of such transactions, for example, the condition that public procurement contracts cannot ensure the quality, availability and continuity of the services to be provided?

(b) If the answer to the previous question is in the negative, that is to say, the notion of an "in-house transaction" comes, either partially or fully, within the scope of the law of the Member States, should the abovementioned provision of Directive 2004/18 be interpreted as meaning that Member States have a discretion to establish limitations or additional conditions for the conclusion of in-house transactions (in comparison with EU law and the case-law of the Court of Justice interpreting that law) but can implement that discretion only by means of specific and clear positive legal provisions governing public procurement?

(3) On the assumption that the in-house transaction comes within the scope of application of Directive 2014/24:

(a) Must the provisions of Article 1(4) and Article 12 of the Directive and those of Article 36 of the Charter, either together or separately (but not limited thereto), taking into account the judgments of the Court of Justice in Teckal (C-107/98), Jean Auroux and Others (C-220/05), ANAV (C-410/04), and other cases, be understood and interpreted as meaning that the notion of an "in-house transaction" comes within the scope of EU law, and that the content and application of that notion are not affected by the national law of Member States, inter alia, by limitations on the conclusion of such transactions, for example, the condition that public procurement contracts cannot ensure the quality, availability and continuity of the services to be provided?

(b) If the answer to the previous question is in the negative, that is to say, the notion of an "in-house transaction", either partially or fully, comes within the scope of the law of the Member States, should the provisions of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 be interpreted as meaning that Member States have a discretion to establish limitations or additional conditions for the conclusion of in-house transactions (in comparison with EU law and the case-law of the Court of Justice interpreting that law) but can implement that discretion only by means of specific and clear positive legal provisions governing public procurement?

(4) Irrespective of which directive covers the disputed in-house transaction, should the principles of the equality and non-discrimination of public procurement suppliers and transparency (Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 18 of Directive 2014/24), the general prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality (Article 18 TFEU), the freedom of establishment (Article 49 TFEU), the freedom to provide services (Article 56 TFEU), the possibility of granting undertakings exclusive rights (Article 106 TFEU), and the case-law of the Court of Justice (judgments in Teckal, ANAV, Sea, Undis Servizi, and in other cases) be understood and interpreted as meaning that an in-house transaction being concluded by a contracting authority and by an entity legally separate from that contracting authority, where the contracting authority exercises control over that entity similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and the activity of that entity consists mainly of an activity carried out for the benefit of the contracting authority, is in itself lawful, inter alia, does not infringe the right of other economic operators to fair competition, does not discriminate against those other operators, and no privileges are conferred on the controlled entity which concluded the in-house transaction?’

25. Written observations were submitted by Irgita, the contracting authority, Kauno švara, the Estonian, Lithuanian and Polish Governments (in the case of the Polish Government, however, these submissions were limited to Question 4, which will not be dealt with here) and the European Commission.

V. Assessment

26. Without prejudice to any answer that the Court may give to Question 4, but, in line with the request by the Court, I propose to confine my observations to Question 1 and, depending on the answer to that question, Question 2 or 3 asked by the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania).

A. Application ratione materiae of Directives 2004/18 and 2014/24

27. It should be noted that the application of Directives 2004/18 and 2014/24 to the disputed contract is subject to the condition that the estimated value of that contract reaches the thresholds laid down in Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18 or Article 4(c) of Directive 2014/24 respectively.

28. According to the estimations of the referring court, the value of the transaction at issue is nearly EUR 490 000 and may be considerably higher. Thus, irrespective of which directive covers the disputed contract, the value of that contract surpasses the minimum threshold amounts laid down in either Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18 or Article 4(c) of Directive 2014/24 required for them to apply.

B. Application ratione temporis of Directives 2004/18 and 2014/24

29. Since Directive 2014/24 has repealed Directive 2004/18 with effect from 18 April 2016, it is necessary to determine the relevant point in time that determines which directive is to apply.

30. According to the settled case-law of the Court, the relevant point in time for identifying the legislation applicable to a public contract is when the authority not only chooses the type of procedure to be followed but also decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract. (6) If such a decision was taken before the date on which the period for transposition of the later directive, here Directive 2014/24, was reached, it would be plainly contrary to the principle of legal certainty to determine the law applicable to the case in the main proceedings by reference to the date of the award of the contract. (7)

31. Several events which took place up to and including the time when the contract between the contracting authority and Kauna švara was concluded may have qualified as the moment when the final decision on the type of procedure — and thus the decision on whether a call for competition was necessary — was taken. These include the date on which the request for consent to conclude the disputed contract was submitted to the Public Procurement Office for consent to an ‘in-house transaction’, the date of the Public Procurement Office’s decision, the date of the disputed Council decision and the date of the disputed contract. Only the submission of the request to the Public Procurement Office took place before the repeal of Directive 2004/18; the three latter events took place thereafter.

32. It is thus pertinent to consider whether the request for consent submitted to the Public Procurement Office already constituted a final decision on whether a public procurement procedure had to be initiated. Article 10(5) of the Law on Public Procurement applicable until 1 July 2017 indeed stipulated that ‘a procurement procedure in the manner specified in this paragraph may be commenced only upon receipt of the consent of the Viešųjų pirkimų tarnyba (Public Procurement Office)’. While it is for the referring court to interpret its national legislation, that court described the procedure to obtain the consent of the Public Procurement Office as an ‘administrative filter’. Accordingly, it does not appear that even the consent of the Public Procurement Office of 20 April 2016 compelled the contracting authority to enter into the disputed contract.

33. This view is corroborated by the Lithuanian Government in its observations. (8) The assessment that the Public Procurement Office’s decision of 20 April 2016 was not decisive is further supported by a statement made by the Public Procurement Office in that assessment. The Public Procurement Office prompted the contracting authority to evaluate whether it was possible to procure the services in accordance with the Law on Public Procurement prior to concluding the disputed contract. It further clarified that, in any event, the decision of the contracting authority would have to comply with Article 4(2) of the Law on Competition. Such guidance presupposes that (i) the decision on the procedure was still open at that point in time, (ii) the contracting authority could refrain from concluding the disputed contract and (iii) according to the Public Procurement Office, if the conditions set out in Article 4(2) of the Law on Competition were not fulfilled, the contracting authority was obliged to refrain from doing so, despite consent from the Public Procurement Office having been granted.

34. As the Public Procurement Office reached its decision on 20 April 2016, a date after Directive 2004/18 was repealed, it follows that the applicable directive must be Directive 2014/24.

C. Whether the criteria for an 'in-house transaction' under EU law are exhaustive 35. As Directive 2014/24 is applicable, I propose to answer only Question 3.

36. Further, I propose to deal with Question 3(a) together with the first part of Question 3(b). The Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) wishes to know whether Member States can limit the possibility for public authorities to enter into 'in-house transactions' by stipulating further criteria, such as the criterion in the present case, which provides that 'in-house transactions' can be concluded only, inter alia, if 'public procurement contracts cannot ensure the quality, availability and continuity of the services to be provided'. This calls for an assessment whether the criteria for an 'in-house transaction' under EU law are exhaustive or whether Member States can supplement these criteria.

37. First, it is appropriate to define 'in-house transactions' and recall why they are treated differently from other contracts in the area of public procurement.

1. Meaning of the term 'in-house transaction'

38. Directive 2014/24 does not use the term 'in-house transaction' or 'in-house award', although, as will be seen later, Article 12(1) does, in fact, deal with those types of contracts. The terms 'in-house transaction', 'in-house contract', 'in-house operation', (9) 'in-house service' (10) and 'in-house award' (11) have, however, gradually come into use. (12) While, in some cases, the terms were used more loosely, (13) they are now generally used to describe contracts between a contracting authority and another public body (or a separate entity that is in some way linked to that contracting authority) that fulfil certain criteria. These criteria were initially established by the case-law of the Court and have meanwhile been enshrined in Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24. (14)

39. First of all, when we are talking about 'in-house transactions', as the term is generally used, we are not dealing with cases in which a public authority simply carries out a task by using its own resources. While the activity is obviously carried out 'in-house' in those cases, there is no award, transaction or contract. These cases are generally outside the scope of public procurement law as they do not in fact constitute procurement at all. (15) Rather, for the concept of procurement to be relevant, the relationship between the contracting parties must be a contractual one.

40. For a transaction to be considered to be 'in-house', it must also fulfil certain criteria. Since the Court's landmark decision in Teckal, the basic criteria have been that (i) the contracting authority exercises over a separate legal person with which it enters into a contract a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, (ii) that separate legal person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities which control it. (16) Contracts between entities that fulfil these criteria are generally referred to as 'in-house transactions'.

41. As mentioned above, the requirements for transactions to be considered in-house transactions and, thus, to be exempt from the public procurement regime are now set out in Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24. Those requirements are that (i) the contracting authority exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, (ii) the controlled legal person exercises more than 80% of its activities in the performance of tasks for the controlling entity, and (iii) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled entity (subject to some exceptions for certain private capital participations that do not give control). The first two requirements are derived from the case-law of the Court since the judgment in Teckal. (17) Only the exact figure of 80% was added. The third criterion has been applied since the judgment in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau. (18)

2. Reason for the exemption of in-house transactions from the public procurement regime

42. In-house transactions as described above are outside the scope of public procurement law because, as Advocate General Sánchez-Bordona stated: 'Under the in-house system, the contracting authority does not, from a functional point of view, contract with a separate body but, in effect, contracts with itself, given the nature of its connection with the formally separate body. Strictly speaking, there is no award of a contract, but simply an order or task, which the other "party" cannot refuse to undertake, whatever the name given to it. … Procurement procedures make sense only between two separate and autonomous bodies, since what those procedures seek to do is precisely to create between them the kind of bilateral legal relationship that is essential for concluding a contract for consideration on equal terms rather than those of dependence or subordination in a hierarchy. The term "in-house transaction" thus describes a contract that, due to its own particularities, is assimilated to a case in which a contracting authority uses its own resources, i.e., "in-house resources".' (19)

3. Degree of harmonisation

43. Whether the provisions of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 are exhaustive depends on the degree of harmonisation of the area that the provision deals with. In the case of full harmonisation, it is not permissible for a Member State to introduce further measures in that area as this would amount, in essence, to undermining the harmonisation effected by the directive with regard to the issues that have been harmonised. (20) The question is whether Article 12(1) constitutes a complete harmonisation of the area of in-house transactions.

44. First, according to recital 4 of Directive 2014/24, it is not the directive's aim to harmonise the entire area of the disbursements of public funds, but only of those aimed at the acquisition of works, supplies or service for consideration by means of a public contract. While the disputed contract is a public contract, the situation of an in-house transaction is, according to the case-law, assimilated to cases in which the public authority acts using its own resources. (21) Thus, recital 4 cannot be considered as conclusive regarding the question whether the area of in-house transactions was meant to be fully harmonised.

45. While it is clear, given the purpose of the rules on public procurement in Directive 2014/24 and the inclusion of Article 12 in Section 3 thereof, headed 'Exclusions', that the exceptions contained in that directive may not be expanded, (22) so that Member States cannot apply them selectively or less strictly, (23) the purpose of that directive is not compromised if Member States are allowed to apply more stringent rules that further limit the right to enter into in-house transactions. These considerations, together with the fact that that directive does not contain a clear statement that full harmonisation is intended, constitute weighty arguments in favour of the right of Member States to provide for additional criteria for in-house transactions.

46. If Article 12(1) constituted full harmonisation, this would in fact mean that a contracting authority must enter into an in-house transaction (or carry out the service at issue by its own means) in cases in which the requirements of Article 12(1) can be fulfilled. In my opinion, this is not the case. I reach this conclusion for the following further reasons.

47. First, the wording of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 does not seem to support this supposition. The wording of Article 12 is clear in that it states that a public contract that fulfils certain criteria is to fall outside of the scope of that directive. Accordingly, the application of that provision presupposes the existence of a contract. It does not purport to deal in general with situations in which an in-house transaction is possible. Thus, if a Member State decides, for whatever reason, not to allow public contracts in the form of an in-house transaction, that situation is not dealt with at all in the specific exception contained in Article 12(1).

48. Furthermore, Article 1(4) of Directive 2014/24 refers to the freedom of Member States to define, in conformity with EU law, not only what they consider to be services of general economic interest, but also how those services should be organised. (24) It also states that that directive does not affect the decision of public authorities whether, how and to what extent they wish to perform public functions themselves pursuant to Article 14 TFEU and Protocol No 26. (25) The word 'freedom' makes it clear that Member States are also free to provide for the application of public procurement procedures in cases in which EU law does not prohibit the use by a public authority of its own resources or indeed the conclusion of an in-house transaction. This is in line with the case-law of the Court.

49. It should also be observed that, as the Commission points out in its observations, the fact that a Member State decides to limit the possibilities for entering into in-house transactions and, thus, extends the area of application of the rules on public procurement is in line with the objectives of the public procurement directives. (26) The principle that public procurement is a means of ensuring the most efficient use of public funds, as stated in recital 2 of Directive 2014/24, also seems to have been at the centre of the Lithuanian legislative decision. The Lithuanian Government claims in its written observations that a market study of the Lietuvos Respublikos konkurencijos taryba (Competition Council of the Republic of Lithuania) in the area of public waste management came to the conclusion that the prices were highest in communities where services were carried out by companies controlled by those communities and that this had encouraged the Republic of Lithuania to give precedence to public procurement transactions over in-house transactions. (27) This is a policy decision by the Republic of Lithuania which it is, naturally, free to take.

50. Thus, in the current state of harmonisation provided for by Directive 2014/24, a Member State is not prevented from stipulating additional requirements limiting the opportunities for public authorities to enter into in-house transactions, despite the entry into that transaction being permissible under EU law.

51. It should be pointed out, however, that a Member State's freedom when implementing such additional requirements is naturally not unlimited. The settled case-law clearly provides that the fundamental rules of the TFEU generally apply to the economic activities of public bodies, even in cases which are outside the ambit of the directives on public procurement (28) provided that those public bodies do not carry them out themselves, including by means of in-house transactions. (29)

52. This principle is also contained in recital 1 of Directive 2014/24, which states as a general consideration that the award of public contracts by or on behalf of Member States' authorities has to comply with the principles of the TFEU, and, in particular, the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. These rules are, of course, applicable to all transactions, regardless of their specific value. It is only once transactions surpass a certain value that the specific procurement procedures set out in Directive 2014/24 must be followed.

53. This means that the fundamental rules of the TFEU also apply to an exercise of a Member State's legislative power in the area of public bodies' economic activities in the context of public procurement.

54. The additional requirements stipulated by Lithuanian law to allow for in-house transactions — namely, that public procurement contracts cannot ensure the quality, availability and continuity of the services to be provided — do not give rise to any doubt that they might be contrary to any of the aforementioned principles.

D. Whether such additional requirements must be enshrined in positive law

55. Beyond the question whether such additional requirements can be stipulated as such, in the second part of Question 3(b) the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) specifically wishes to know whether these requirements can only be implemented by means of specific and clear positive provisions of the law on public procurement, rather than by case-law on the basis of provisions of competition law. The specific question posed by the referring court is whether the manner in which a Member State introduced such rules might amount in itself to an infringement of EU law.

56. As I have already observed, it is, generally, up to the Member States to determine whether they wish to provide for additional criteria limiting public authorities' choice as to whether they can enter into in-house transactions. If it is up to a Member State whether to provide for such additional criteria, which are not a requirement of EU law, it is generally also within their discretion how they are to be provided for. However, as set out above, the fundamental rules of the TFEU also apply if a Member State is acting outside its obligations under a directive.

57. In cases dealing with the implementation of Member States' obligations under EU law or the transposition of directives, the Court has consistently held that legislative action is not necessarily required. (30) It should be kept in mind that those decisions were taken in application of the EU law principle of legal certainty, as they must give to the persons concerned by such measures certainty as regards the extent of their rights in areas governed by EU law. Given that the present case deals with the implementation of national measures that are not required by EU law, the requirements cannot be more stringent.

58. It follows therefrom that there is no requirement under EU law obliging Member States that are establishing limitations or additional conditions for the conclusion of in-house transactions to do so only by means of specific and clear positive legal provisions governing public procurement.

VI. Conclusion

59. Accordingly, I propose that the Court answer Questions 1 and 3 referred by the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) as follows:

(1) As a rule, the directive applicable to an in-house transaction is the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and definitively decides against a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract. It is for the referring court to assess when this decision was finally taken by the contracting authority.

(3) (a) The provisions of Articles 1(4) and 12 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be understood and interpreted as listing the minimum requirements for an in-house transaction to be admissible under EU law. This does not, however, prevent a Member State from stipulating additional conditions limiting the possibility of public authorities to enter into in-house transactions as long as these additional conditions are not contrary to EU law, such as, for example, the condition that public procurement contracts cannot ensure the quality, availability and continuity of the services to be provided.

(b) There is no requirement under EU law that obliges Member States establishing limitations or additional conditions for the conclusion of in-house transactions to do so only by means of specific and clear positive legal provisions governing public procurement.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

3 October 2019 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public Procurement — Public procurement procedure — Directive 2014/24/EU — Article 57(4) — Optional grounds for exclusion — Exclusion of an economic operator from participating in a public procurement procedure — Early termination of a prior contract on account of partial subcontracting — Concept of 'significant or persistent deficiencies' — Scope)

In Case C-267/18,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania), made by decision of 2 April 2018, received at the Court on 17 April 2018, in the proceedings

Delta Antrepriză de Construcţii şi Montaj 93 SA

v

Compania Naţională de Administrare a Infrastructurii Rutiere SA,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of M. Vilaras, President of the Chamber, K. Jürimäe, D. Šváby (Rapporteur), S. Rodin and N. Piçarra, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: R. Şereş, administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 27 February 2019,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Delta Antrepriză de Construcţii şi Montaj 93 SA, by I.G. Iacob, R.E. Cîrlig, I. Cojocaru, A.M. Abrudan and I. Macovei, avocaţi, – the Romanian Government, by C.-R. Canţăr and by R.I. Haţieganu and L. Liţu, acting as Agents,

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by A. Biolan, P. Ondrůšek and L. Haasbeek, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 8 May 2019,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Delta Antrepriză de Construcții și Montaj 93 SA ('Delta') and Compania Națională de Administrare a Infrastructurii Rutiere SA (national company for the administration of road infrastructure, ‘CNAIR’), in its capacity as contracting authority, concerning Delta’s exclusion from participation in a public procurement procedure.

Legal context

EU law

3 Recitals 101 and 102 of Directive 2014/24 state:

‘(101) Contracting authorities should … be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable, for instance because of violations of environmental or social obligations, including rules on accessibility for disabled persons or other forms of grave professional misconduct, such as violations of competition rules or of intellectual property rights. It should be clarified that grave professional misconduct can render an economic operator’s integrity questionable and thus render the economic operator unsuitable to receive the award of a public contract irrespective of whether the economic operator would otherwise have the technical and economical capacity to perform the contract.

> Bearing in mind that the contracting authority will be responsible for the consequences of its possible erroneous decision, contracting authorities should also remain free to consider that there has been grave professional misconduct, where, before a final and binding decision on the presence of mandatory exclusion grounds has been rendered, they can demonstrate by any appropriate means that the economic operator has violated its obligations, including obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions, unless otherwise provided by national law. They should also be able to exclude candidates or tenderers whose performance in earlier public contracts has shown major deficiencies with regard to substantive requirements, for instance failure to deliver or perform, significant shortcomings of the product or service delivered, making it unusable for the intended purpose, or misbehaviour that casts serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator. National law should provide for a maximum duration for such exclusions.
> In applying facultative grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities should pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality. Minor irregularities should only in exceptional circumstances lead to the exclusion of an economic operator. However repeated cases of minor irregularities can give rise to doubts about the reliability of an economic operator which might justify its exclusion.

(102) Allowance should, however, be made for the possibility that economic operators can adopt compliance measures aimed at remedying the consequences of any criminal offences or misconduct and at effectively preventing further occurrences of the misbehaviour. Those measures might consist in particular of personnel and organisational measures such as the severance of all links with persons or organisations involved in the misbehaviour, appropriate staff reorganisation measures, the implementation of reporting and control systems, the creation of an internal audit structure to monitor compliance and the adoption of internal liability and compensation rules. Where such measures offer sufficient guarantees, the economic operator in question should no longer be excluded on those grounds alone. Economic operators should have the possibility to request that compliance measures taken with a view to possible admission to the procurement procedure be examined. However, it should be left to Member States to determine the exact procedural and substantive conditions applicable in such cases. They should, in particular, be free to decide whether to allow the individual contracting authorities to carry out the relevant assessments or to entrust other authorities on a central or decentralised level with that task.’

4 Article 57 of that directive, headed ‘Exclusion grounds’, provides:

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(g) where the economic operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract which led to early termination of that prior contract, damages or other comparable sanctions;

(h) where the economic operator has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, has withheld such information or is not able to submit the supporting documents required pursuant to Article 59; or

5. Contracting authorities shall at any time during the procedure exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2.

At any time during the procedure, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4.

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

An economic operator which has been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement or concession award procedures shall not be entitled to make use of the possibility provided for under this paragraph during the period of exclusion resulting from that judgment in the Member States where the judgment is effective.

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. They shall, in particular, determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 6 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability. Where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period shall not exceed 5 years from the date of the conviction by final judgment in the cases referred to in paragraph 1 and 3 years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4.’

5 Article 71 of Directive 2014/24, relating to ‘Subcontracting’, provides:

2. In the procurement documents, the contracting authority may ask or may be required by a Member State to ask the tenderer to indicate in its tender any share of the contract it may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors.

5 In the case of works contracts and in respect of services to be provided at a facility under the direct oversight of the contracting authority, after the award of the contract and at the latest when the performance of the contract commences, the contracting authority shall require the main contractor to indicate to the contracting authority the name, contact details and legal representatives of its subcontractors, involved in such works or services, in so far as known at this point in time. The contracting authority shall require the main contractor to notify the contracting authority of any changes to this information during the course of the contract as well as of the required information for any new subcontractors which it subsequently involves in such works or services.

Notwithstanding the first subparagraph, Member States may impose the obligation to deliver the required information directly on the main contractor.

Where necessary for the purposes of point (b) of paragraph 6 of this Article, the required information shall be accompanied by the subcontractors' self-declarations as provided for in Article 59. The implementing measures pursuant to paragraph 8 of this Article may provide that subcontractors which are presented after the award of the contract shall provide the certificates and other supporting documents instead of the self-declaration.

The first subparagraph shall not apply to suppliers.

Contracting authorities may extend or may be required by Member States to extend the obligations provided for in the first subparagraph to for instance:

(a) supply contracts, to services contracts other than those concerning services to be provided at the facilities under the direct oversight of the contracting authority or to suppliers involved in works or services contracts;

(b) subcontractors of the main contractor's subcontractors or further down the subcontracting chain.

6. With the aim of avoiding breaches of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2), appropriate measures may be taken, such as:

(a) Where the national law of a Member State provides for a mechanism of joint liability between subcontractors and the main contractor, the Member State concerned shall ensure that the relevant rules are applied in compliance with the conditions set out in Article 18(2).

(b) Contracting authorities may, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify or may be required by Member States to verify whether there are grounds for exclusion of subcontractors pursuant to Article 57. In such cases, the contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces a subcontractor in respect of which the verification has shown that there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by a Member State to require that the economic operator replaces a subcontractor in respect of which the verification has shown that there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.

Implementing Regulation (EU) 2016/7

6 Commission Implementing Regulation (EU) 2016/7 of 5 January 2016 establishing the standard form for the European Single Procurement Document (OJ 2016 L 3, p. 16), includes Annex 2, entitled 'Standard Form for the European Single Procurement Document (ESPD)'. Part III of that annex, entitled 'Exclusion grounds', defines the detailed rules for the application of Article 57 of Directive 2014/24.

Romanian law

7 Article 167(1) of Legea nr. 98/2016 privind achiziţiile publice (Law No 98/2016 on public procurement) of 19 May 2016 (Monitorul Oficial al României, Part I, No 390 of 23 May 2016), provides:

‘1. The contracting authority shall exclude from the procedure for the award of a public contract or framework agreement any economic operator that is in one of the following situations:

(g) where the economic operator has committed serious or repeated breaches of its principal obligations under a public contract, a sectoral procurement contract or a concession contract concluded previously, and those breaches have led to the early termination of that prior contract, the payment of damages or other comparable sanctions;

(h) where the economic operator has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required by the contracting authority for the purposes of establishing the non-existence of any grounds for exclusion or compliance with the selection or qualifying criteria, has withheld such information or is unable to submit the supporting documents required; …

8. Under paragraph 1(g), examples of serious breaches of contractual obligations are, for instance, the failure to perform a contract or the delivery/supply/performance of products/works/services that present significant shortcomings making them unusable for the intended purpose provided for in the contract.’

8 Article 171 of that Law provides:

‘1. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in Articles 164 and 167 which entail exclusion from the award procedure may provide evidence to the effect that the measures which it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of the grounds for exclusion.

2. If the contracting authority takes the view that the evidence submitted by the economic operator in accordance with paragraph 1 is sufficient to demonstrate its reliability in practice, it shall not exclude the economic operator from the award procedure.

3. The evidence that an economic operator which is in any of the situations set out in Articles 164 and 167 may provide to the contracting authority, pursuant to paragraph 1, shall be to the effect that: it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct; clarified the facts and circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities, and taken concrete and suitable technical, organisational and personnel measures, such as severing ties with persons and organisations involved in the unlawful conduct; taken measures for the reorganisation of personnel; implemented monitoring and reporting systems; established an internal auditing structure to verify compliance with laws and regulations; or adopted internal rules on liability and compensation for damage, in order to prevent further criminal offences or other cases of misconduct.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

9 By a decision of 3 October 2014, the Municipality of Râmincu Vâlcea (Romania) (‘the municipality’) awarded to a consortium of which Delta was lead contractor (‘Consortium No 1’) a works contract for the restoration and modernisation of a leisure facility (‘contract No 1’).

10 On 7 June 2017, that municipality terminated that contract early on the ground that Consortium No 1 had used a subcontractor without the municipality's prior authorisation.

11 On 25 July 2017, the municipality lodged, on the on-line platform known as the 'Electronic public procurement system' ('the EPPS platform'), a report ('the report') stating, first, that that contract had been terminated early on account of misconduct by Consortium No 1 and, secondly, that that early termination caused the municipality losses evaluated at 2 345 299.70 Romanian lei (RON) (approximately EUR 521 000).

12 By a notice of tender of 27 July 2017, CNAIR initiated an open public procurement procedure for the construction project for widening a national road. To that end, it envisaged entering into a framework agreement in the amount of RON 210 627 629 (approximately EUR 46 806 140) for an 84-month period.

13 In the context of that procedure, the consortium formed by Delta, Aleandri SpA and Luca Way Srl ('Consortium No 2') submitted a tender.

14 After searching the EPPS platform in respect of each tenderer, the CNAIR evaluation committee became aware of the report and requested clarification in that regard from the municipality and from Delta.

15 In reply to the request for clarification, Delta stated, first, that even if that report reflects reality, it does not prove that Delta committed serious breaches of its contractual obligations on several occasions and, secondly, that it has brought two actions before the Romanian courts, which are currently pending and are directed against that report and the decision terminating contract No 1 early, respectively.

16 For its part, the municipality stated that the early termination of contract No 1 was justified by the fact that, during its performance, significant parts of the works concerned had been subcontracted without the municipality's prior authorisation.

17 In the light of the replies obtained, the CNAIR evaluation committee concluded that Delta had failed to show that the report had been suspended or annulled. In addition, since Consortium No 2 had declared, in the European Single Procurement Document, that it did not come within the scope of the exclusion grounds for grave professional misconduct and that it was not in a situation in which a prior public procurement contract had been terminated early, or damages or other comparable penalties had been imposed in connection with contract No 1, that committee found that the tender submitted by that consortium came within the provisions of Article 167(1)(g) of Law No 98/2016. Consequently, CNAIR excluded Consortium No 2's tender by a decision of 18 December 2017 ('the exclusion decision').

18 Delta therefore requested CNAIR to remedy the alleged breach of the laws regulating public contracts by revoking the exclusion decision, and by proceeding to a fresh assessment of the documents and of the tender submitted by Consortium No 2.

19 It is apparent from the order for reference that CNAIR has not filed any response to that request.

20 On 8 January 2018, Delta lodged a complaint with the Consiliul Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (National Council for the Resolution of Complaints, Romania; 'the CNSC'), which was rejected by a decision of 2 February 2018. In that decision, the CNSC found that it did not have the power to analyse the lawfulness of the report, or to ascertain any misconduct in the performance of Contract No 1. It stated, however, that since the report had not been annulled by a final judgment, it benefited from a presumption of lawfulness such as to prove the serious breach of the contractual obligations under Contract No 1. The CNSC also noted that the contracting authority had not relied solely on that report in order to exclude Consortium No 2. It had taken steps in order to assess the information apparent from that report and relied on the observations of the parties to the main proceedings. Lastly, Consortium No 2 had relied solely on the alleged unlawfulness of the report, without adducing evidence of its own reliability in respect of the grounds of exclusion, as required by Article 171 of Law No 98/2016.

21 In order to seek the annulment of the CNSC's decision of 2 February 2018, Delta brought proceedings against CNAIR before the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania), on 16 February 2018.

22 Delta disputes CNAIR's right to exclude it from the public procurement procedure, relating to the widening of a national road, on the basis of the early termination decision referred to in paragraph 10 above. The early termination of contract No 1 on the ground that part of the works was subcontracted without the contacting authority's prior authorisation amounts to a minor irregularity, not a breach of a principal obligation of the contract. Consequently, such an irregularity could only in exceptional circumstances lead to an economic operator being excluded, in accordance with recital 101 of Directive 2014/24. In that regard, Delta refers to paragraph 30 of the judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801), from which it is apparent that the concept of 'grave misconduct' refers to conduct by the economic operator at issue which denotes a wrongful intent or negligence of a certain gravity on its part.

23 Since it noted that the Court of Justice has not yet had occasion to interpret Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24, the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Can Article 57(4)(g) of [Directive 2014/24] be interpreted as meaning that the early termination of a public works contract on the ground that part of the works was subcontracted without the contracting authority's authorisation reflects a significant or persistent deficiency in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract leading to an economic operator being excluded from participation in a public procurement procedure?'

Consideration of the question referred

24 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that subcontracting, by an economic operator, of part of the works under a prior public contract, decided upon without the contracting authority's authorisation and which led to the early termination of that contract, constitutes a significant or persistent deficiency shown in the performance of a substantive requirement under that public contract, within the meaning of that provision, and justifies excluding that economic operator from participation in a subsequent public procurement procedure.

25 As is clear from the wording of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, the EU legislature intended to confer on the contracting authority, and to it alone, the task of assessing whether a candidate or tenderer must be excluded from a public procurement procedure during the stage of selecting the tenderers (judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraph 34).

26 The option available to any contracting authority to exclude a tenderer from a procurement procedure is particularly intended to enable it to assess the integrity and reliability of each of the tenderers. In particular, the optional ground for exclusion mentioned in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24, read in conjunction with recital 101 of that directive, is based on an essential element of the relationship between the successful tenderer and the contracting authority, namely the reliability of the successful tenderer, on which the contracting authority's trust is founded (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraphs 29 and 30).

27 The establishment of a relationship of trust between the contracting authority and the successful tenderer assumes, therefore, that that contracting authority is not automatically bound by an assessment conducted, in the context of an earlier public procurement procedure, by another contracting authority, so that in particular it may be in a position to pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality when applying the optional grounds for exclusion (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 June 2019, Meca, C-41/18, EU:C:2019:507, paragraphs 30 and 32). That principle requires the contracting authority to examine and assess the facts itself. In that regard, as the Advocate General observed in point 32 of his Opinion, it is apparent from the wording of Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 that the irregularity committed by the tenderer must have been serious enough to make it justifiable, in the light of the principle of proportionality, to terminate the contract early.

28 It follows that a contracting authority cannot automatically infer from the decision of another contracting authority to terminate a prior public contract early, on the ground that the successful tenderer subcontracted part of the works without its prior authorisation, that significant or persistent deficiencies, within the meaning of Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24, have been committed by that successful tenderer in the performance of a substantive requirement under that public contract.

29 It is for the contracting authority to carry out its own evaluation of the economic operator's conduct covered by the early termination of a prior public contract. In that regard, it must examine, diligently and impartially, on the basis of all the relevant factors, in particular the early termination decision, and in the light of the principle of proportionality, whether that operator is, from its point of view, responsible for significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement imposed on it under that contract, those deficiencies being such as to break the relationship of trust with the economic operator in question.

30 In the circumstances of the main proceedings, CNAIR must, in particular, determine whether, in its view, Consortium No 1's use of a subcontractor without having sought prior authorisation from the municipality constituted a significant deficiency and, if so, whether that deficiency affected the performance of a substantive requirement imposed on the successful tenderer under contract No 1.

31 To that effect, CNAIR must evaluate the significance of the part of contract No 1 which was subcontracted and determine, as the Advocate General observed in point 45 of his Opinion, whether the subcontractor's involvement had an adverse impact on the performance of that contract.

32 CNAIR must also examine whether the actual contract included an obligation which had to be performed by the successful tenderer itself or whether it made using a subcontractor conditional upon obtaining prior authorisation from the municipality, such requirements being compatible with Article 71(2) of Directive 2014/24, as the Advocate General observed, in essence, in point 39 of his Opinion. It is apparent from that provision that, 'in the procurement documents, the contracting authority may ask or may be required by a Member State to ask the tenderer to indicate in its tender any share of the contract it may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors'. As the Advocate General observed in point 38 of his Opinion, it is only on the basis of that information that the contracting authority will be able to gauge whether the subcontractor is itself reliable. The request for prior authorisation from the contracting authority is intended, in particular, to enable the latter to satisfy itself that there are no grounds on which the subcontractor which the successful tenderer envisages using may be excluded.

33 CNAIR must also ask itself whether or not the use of a subcontractor is likely to constitute a substantial amendment of the tender submitted by the successful tenderer (see, by analogy, judgment of 13 April 2010, Wall, C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182, paragraph 39), in the sense that it introduces conditions which, if they had been part of the original award procedure, would have allowed for the admission of tenderers other than those originally admitted or would have allowed for the acceptance of an offer other than that originally accepted (judgments of 13 April 2010, Wall, C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182, paragraph 38, and of 19 June 2008, pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351, paragraph 35).

34 Furthermore, it is for CNAIR to assess whether or not, in failing to inform it of the early termination of contract No 1, Consortium No 2 adopted conduct caught by Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24. As the Advocate General observed, in essence, in point 53 of his Opinion, that provision encompasses both active conduct, such as falsification, and an omission, provided that the communication of false information is, in the same way as the concealment of true information, likely to have a bearing on the decision adopted by the contracting authority.

35 That interpretation is moreover supported by the second subparagraph of Article 57(5) of Directive 2014/24, which provides that, 'at any time during the procedure, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4'.

36 In the present case, since the early termination of contract No 1 has been formally determined, it was for Consortium No 2, in accordance with the requirements of transparency and good faith, to inform the contracting authority of its situation. Accordingly, it ought to have provided at the outset all the information that could prove that the characterisation as subcontracting was mistaken, so that it had not failed to fulfil its obligations in the context of contract No 1, or that the failure to obtain the contracting authority's authorisation in the context of the prior public contract constituted only a minor irregularity. Such information could in particular have been mentioned in the standard form for the European Single Procurement Document, annexed to Implementing Regulation 2016/7. Part III of that form, which concerns 'Exclusion grounds', includes Point C on 'Grounds relating to insolvency, conflicts of interests or professional misconduct'. In the context of Point C, tenderers must, in particular, answer whether they are guilty of grave professional misconduct and, if so, they are requested to provide details.

37 Lastly, if the contracting authority concludes that the conditions laid down in Article 57(4)(g) or (h) of Directive 2014/24 are fulfilled, it must, in order to meet the requirements of Article 57(6) of that directive, read in conjunction with recital 102 of that same directive, allow the economic operator in question the opportunity to provide evidence to the effect that the corrective measures taken by it are sufficient to prevent the irregularity giving rise to the early termination of the prior public contract being repeated and are, therefore, capable of demonstrating the operator's reliability despite the existence of a relevant optional ground for exclusion.

38 In those circumstances, the answer to the question referred is that Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that the subcontracting, by an economic operator, of part of the works under a prior public contract, decided upon without the contracting authority's authorisation and which led to the early termination of that contract, constitutes a significant or persistent deficiency shown in the performance of a substantive requirement under that public contract, within the meaning of that provision, and is therefore capable of justifying that economic operator being excluded from participation in a subsequent public procurement procedure if, after conducting its own evaluation of the integrity and reliability of the economic operator concerned by the early termination of the prior public contract, the contracting authority which organises that subsequent procurement procedure considers that such subcontracting entails breaking the relationship of trust with the economic operator in question. Before deciding such an exclusion, the contracting authority must however, in accordance with Article 57(6) of that directive, read in conjunction with recital 102 thereof, allow that economic operator the opportunity to set out the corrective measures adopted by it further to the early termination of the prior public contract.

Costs

39 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that the subcontracting, by an economic operator, of part of the works under a prior public contract, decided upon without the contracting authority's authorisation and which led to the early termination of that contract, constitutes a significant or persistent deficiency shown in the performance of a substantive requirement under that public contract, within the meaning of that provision, and is therefore capable of justifying that economic operator being excluded from participation in a subsequent public procurement procedure if, after conducting its own evaluation of the integrity and reliability of the economic operator concerned by the early termination of the prior public contract, the contracting authority which organises that subsequent procurement procedure considers that such subcontracting entails breaking the relationship of trust with the economic operator in question. Before deciding such an exclusion, the contracting authority must however, in accordance with Article 57(6) of that directive, read in conjunction with recital 102 thereof, allow that economic operator the opportunity to set out the corrective measures adopted by it further to the early termination of the prior public contract.

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 8 May 2019 (1)

Case C-267/18

Delta Antrepriză de Construcţii şi Montaj 93 SA

v

Compania Naţională de Administrare a Infrastructurii Rutiere SA

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Directive 2014/24/EU — Public procurement — Optional grounds for exclusion — Exclusion of an economic operator from participating in a tendering procedure on grounds of the termination of a prior contract on account of subcontracting not communicated to the contracting authority — Concept of significant or persistent deficiencies — Withholding of information on the termination of a prior contract — Information on the participation of subcontractors in the performance of the contract — Objectives and purposes — Seriousness of the withholding of information)

1. Directive 2014/24/EU (2) authorises contracting authorities to exclude from public procurement procedures a tenderer which has exhibited ‘significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract … which led to early termination of that prior contract’ (Article 57(4)(g)).

2. A Romanian court has raised with the Court of Justice its uncertainty as to whether that provision is applicable in the case where the ‘early termination of the prior contract’ came about because the successful tenderer had subcontracted some of the work without notifying the administrative authority. That situation was further characterised by the fact that, in the new procurement procedure, the same economic operator also failed to inform the (second) contracting authority that the prior contract had been terminated.

I. Legal framework

A. EU law: Directive 2014/24

3. According to recital 101:

> ‘Contracting authorities should further be given the possibility to exclude economic authorities which have proven unreliable, for instance because of violations of environmental or social obligations, including rules on accessibility for disabled persons or other forms of grave professional misconduct, such as violations of competition rules or of intellectual property rights. It should be clarified that grave professional misconduct can render an economic operator’s integrity questionable and thus render the economic operator unsuitable to receive the award of a public contract irrespective of whether the economic operator would otherwise have the technical and economical capacity to perform the contract.

Bearing in mind that the contracting authority will be responsible for the consequences of its possible erroneous decision, contracting authorities should also remain free to consider that there has been grave professional misconduct, where, before a final and binding decision on the presence of mandatory exclusion grounds has been rendered, they can demonstrate by any appropriate means that the economic operator has violated its obligations, including obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions, unless otherwise provided by national law. They should also be able to exclude candidates or tenderers whose performance in earlier public contracts has shown major deficiencies with regard to substantive requirements, for instance failure to deliver or perform, significant shortcomings of the product or service delivered, making it unusable for the intended purpose, or misbehaviour that casts serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator. National law should provide for a maximum duration for such exclusions.

In applying facultative grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities should pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality. Minor irregularities should only in exceptional circumstances lead to the exclusion of an economic operator which might justify its exclusion'.

4. Article 57 ('Exclusion grounds') states:

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(g) where the economic operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract which led to early termination of that prior contract, damages or other comparable sanctions;

(h) where the economic operator has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, has withheld such information or is not able to submit the supporting documents required pursuant to Article 59;

5. Contracting authorities shall at any time during the procedure exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of its acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2.

At any time during the procedure, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4.

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

5. Article 71 (‘Subcontracting’) states:

2. In the procurement documents, the contracting authority may ask or may be required by a Member State to ask the tenderer to indicate in its tender any share of the contract it may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors.

5. In the case of works contracts and in respect of services to be provided at a facility under the direct oversight of the contracting authority, after the award of the contract and at the latest when the performance of the contract commences, the contracting authority shall require the main contractor to indicate to the contracting authority the name, contact details and legal representatives of its subcontractors, involved in such works or services, in so far as known at this point in time. The contracting authority shall require the main contractor to notify the contracting authority of any changes to this information during the course of the contract as well as of the required information for any new subcontractors which it subsequently involves in such works or services.

Notwithstanding the first subparagraph, Member States may impose the obligation to deliver the required information directly on the main contractor.

Where necessary for the purposes of point (b) of paragraph 6 of this Article, the required information shall be accompanied by the subcontractors’ self-declarations as provided for in Article 59. …

6. With the aim of avoiding breaches of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2), appropriate measures may be taken, such as:

(b) Contracting authorities may, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify or may be required by Member States to verify whether there are grounds for exclusion of subcontractors pursuant to Article 57. In such cases, the contracting authority shall require that the economic authority replaces a subcontractor in respect of which the verification has shown that there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by a Member State to require that the economic operator replaces a subcontractor in respect of which the verification has shown that there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.

B. National law: Legea nr. 98/2016 privind achizițiile publice (Law No 98/2016 on public procurement (‘Law No 98/2016’))

6. Article 167 states:

‘(1) The contracting authority shall exclude from the procedure for the award of a public contract or framework agreement any economic operator that is in one of the following situations:

(g) where the economic operator has committed serious or repeated breaches of its principal obligations under a public contract, a sectoral procurement contract or a concession contract concluded previously, and those breaches have led to the early termination of that prior contract, the payment of damages or other comparable sanctions;

(h) where the economic operator has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required by the contracting authority for the purposes of establishing the non-existence of any grounds for exclusion or compliance with the selection or qualifying criteria, has withheld such information or is unable to submit the supporting documents required;

(8) Under paragraph 1(g), examples of serious breaches of contractual obligations are, for instance, the failure to perform a contract or the delivery/supply/performance of products/works/services that present significant shortcomings making them unusable for the intended purpose provided for in the contract'.

7. Article 171 provides:

'(1) Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in Articles 164 and 167 which entail exclusion from the award procedure may provide evidence to the effect that the measures which it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of the grounds for exclusion.

(2) If the contracting authority takes the view that the evidence submitted by the economic operator in accordance with paragraph 1 is sufficient to demonstrate its reliability in practice, it shall not exclude the economic operator from the award procedure.

(3) The evidence that an economic operator which is in any of the situations set out in Articles 164 and 167 may provide to the contracting authority, pursuant to paragraph 1, shall be to the effect that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities, and taken concrete and suitable technical, organisational and personnel measures, such as severing ties with persons and organisations involved in the unlawful conduct, taking measures for the reorganisation of personnel, for the implementation of monitoring and reporting systems aimed at establishing an internal auditing structure to verify compliance with laws and regulations, or for the adoption of internal rules on liability and compensation for damage, in order to prevent further criminal offences or other cases of misconduct.

II. Facts of the dispute and question referred for a preliminary ruling

8. On 3 October 2010, the Municipality of Râmnicu Vâlcea (Romania) awarded to Delta Antrepriză de Construcții și Montaj 93 SA ('Delta') and a further two companies with which Delta formed a consortium ('Consortium 1') a works contract for the restoration and modernisation of a leisure facility.

9. On 7 June 2017, the Municipality decided to terminate that contract on the ground that Consortium 1 had breached it by subcontracting large parts of the work without the Municipality's prior authorisation, despite the fact that the tender specifications contained a provision to the effect that subcontractors were not permitted to participate in the performance of the contract without the consent of the contracting authority. (3)

10. On 25 July 2017, the early termination of that contract on grounds attributable to Consortium 1 was communicated to the Sistemul Electronic de Achiziții Publice (Electronic Public Procurement System; 'public e-procurement system') online platform.

11. On 27 July 2017, the Compania Națională de Administrare a Infrastructurii Rutiere SA (National company for the administration of road infrastructure; ‘CNAIR’) issued a call for tenders for the public construction works contract ‘Proiectare și execuție lărgire la 4 benzi DN 7 Bâldana-Titu km 30 + 950 — 52 + 350’ (Planning and implementation of the widening to four lanes of National Road DN 7 Bâldana-Titu km 30 + 950 — 52 + 350), with an estimated value of RON 210 627 629 (EUR 46 806 139.78) and a term of 84 months.

12. Delta joined two other companies to form a new consortium (‘Consortium 2’) and participated as a tenderer in that procedure. In its tender, it stated that it was not affected by any of the grounds for exclusion.

13. When conducting a search on the public e-procurement system, the CNAIR evaluation committee accessed the findings report issued by the Municipality of Râmnicu Vâlcea, which contained a record of the termination of the contract that had existed between Consortium 1 and that municipality.

14. On 18 December 2017, after hearing Delta and the Municipality of Râmnicu Vâlcea, the CNAIR evaluation committee excluded Consortium 2 from the procedure for the award of the national road widening contract. It stated in this regard that the early termination of the prior contract and the failure to disclose it in the course of the second procedure were grounds for exclusion as provided for in Article 167(1)(g) and (h) of Law No 98/2016.

15. Consortium 2 asked the contracting authority to reverse the decision to exclude it and to re-examine its tender. In the absence of any response from the CNAIR, it filed a claim with the National Council for the Resolution of Claims (‘NCRC’).

16. On 2 February 2018, the NCRC dismissed that claim, after stating that:

– it was competent to examine the lawfulness of the decision to exclude the tender and to establish whether the ground for exclusion provided for by law was present, but not to analyse the lawfulness of the findings report;

– that report, inasmuch as it benefits from the presumption of lawfulness, constituted proof of a serious breach of obligations under a prior public contract;

– Consortium 2 had confined itself to putting forward grounds relating to the unlawfulness of the findings report, without adducing evidence of its own reliability, as required by Article 171 of Law No 98/2016.

17. The NCRC’s decision was challenged before the referring court on 16 February 2018. In the application, it was claimed, in essence, (a) that the findings report was not a suitable means of proving that Delta had committed a serious and repeated breach of its contractual obligations, and (b) that the information contained in that report, even if it were true, could not be brought within the scope of the ground for exclusion consisting in a serious or repeated breach of contractual obligations. (4)

18. In those circumstances, the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania) has referred the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

> ‘Can Article 57(4)(g) of [Directive 2014/24] be interpreted as meaning that the termination of a public works contract on the ground that part of the works was subcontracted without the contracting authority’s authorisation constitutes a significant or persistent deficiency in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract leading to an economic operator being excluded from participation in a public procurement procedure?’

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice

19. The order for reference was received at the Court of Justice on 17 April 2018.

20. Written observations have been lodged by Delta, the Romanian Government and the European Commission. The hearing, which was held on 27 February 2019, was attended by Delta, the Austrian Government and the Commission.

IV. Assessment

A. Preliminary observation

21. The question from the referring court is confined to the interpretation of Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24. I take the view, however, that, in keeping with the Court's consistent practice, (5) its reply can be extended to include other provisions of that directive that relate to the same facts so as to provide the referring court with material that will make its adjudication easier.

22. In particular, it is true that the ground for exclusion relating to the early termination of the contract is dealt with in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24. However, the order for reference itself (6) states that, according to the contracting authority's evaluation committee, 'Article 167(1)(h) of Law No 98/2016 was also applicable to the tender in question'. As that provision transposes into national law the ground for exclusion contained in Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24, the Court's answer will be more comprehensive if it addresses the presence of that ground for exclusion in the facts at issue. (7)

B. The ground for exclusion under Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24

23. As I pointed out in my Opinion in Meca, (8) Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 refers under the heading of conduct on the part of economic operators that may justify their exclusion from a procurement procedure both to 'grave professional misconduct which renders [their] integrity questionable' (point (c)) and to 'significant … deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract … which led to early termination of that prior contract' (point (g)).

24. Recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 supports the inference that the professional misconduct referred to in point (c) is predominantly non-contractual in nature, which is to say that it is improper conduct that generally takes place outside the scope of the contractual relationship. This is the case with misconduct involving a breach of environmental or social obligations or an infringement of competition rules or intellectual or industrial property rights, or with a failure to comply with tax or social security obligations. The conduct provided for in point (g), on the other hand, is a typical breach of contract.

25. It is true, however, that some breaches of contract can at the same time constitute a form of grave professional misconduct, which is to say misconduct committed within the context of a prior administrative contract the significance of which was sufficient to warrant the breakdown of the contractual relationship.

26. From that point of view, the link between those two points (of Article 57(4)) would be that between a lex generalis (point (c)) and a lex specialis (point (g)), in which case the principles that must govern the interpretation of the rule contained in point (g) could be identified by reference to the aims of, and justifications for, the general provision.

27. Both grounds for exclusion rest on an essential ingredient in the relationship between the supplier awarded the contract and the contracting authority, that is to say the reliability of the former, on which the trust which the latter has in the former is founded. Although Directive 2004/18/EC (9) made no express reference to that factor, the Court of Justice took it took it into account in its case-law. (10)

28. Directive 2014/24 makes reliability a key component of that relationship in the very context of grave professional misconduct. According to the first paragraph of recital 101, contracting authorities can exclude 'economic operators which have proven unreliable'. The second paragraph of that recital provides for activities under prior contracts that '[cast] serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator'.

29. The importance given to the economic operator's reliability is apparent in a number of paragraphs (6 and 7) of Article 57 of Directive 2014/24, inasmuch as these allow the economic operator to demonstrate that it is worthy of trust, notwithstanding the presence of a ground for exclusion. In this way, the reliability ingredient is integral to the grounds for exclusion that relate to the candidate's subjective circumstances.

30. Now, according to the scheme of Article 57 of Directive 2014/24, the contracting authority must have the freedom to evaluate that component (the candidate's reliability) without necessarily being bound by the findings of other public bodies. It is for contracting authorities and them alone to assess the extent of any misconduct entailing a substantive breach of contract so serious as to justify the termination of a prior contract on grounds of loss of trust.

31. As has already been explained, the ground for exclusion under Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24, which is being invoked in this case, applies where, under a prior contract, the operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies (11) in the performance of a substantive requirement which led to the early termination of that contract.

32. The most important point to be drawn from the foregoing is that the irregularity committed by the tenderer must have been serious ('significant') enough to make it justifiable, in the light of the principle of proportionality, to terminate the contract early.

33. A comparison of certain language versions of the provision in question (12) shows that that ground for exclusion requires there to have been a breach of an essential obligation under a prior public contract. That obligation can be either material or formal, there being no reason why formal obligations should not be essential to the performance of a public contract. (13)

34. For the exclusion to apply, it is not therefore sufficient for the prior public contract simply to have been unilaterally terminated. The contracting authority will have to carry out the additional task of assessing the breach for which the contractor was held responsible at the time in order to establish whether or not the requirements of Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 are met.

35. The Court of Justice must not replace with its own the referring court's assessment of the facts or its evaluation of the seriousness of the breach on account of which Delta was excluded. It therefore falls to the referring court to determine whether, in this case, the unauthorised subcontracting (14) of the leisure facility construction work constituted a significant deficiency in the performance of the contract between Consortium 1 and the Municipality of Râmnicu Vâlcea.

36. The Court of Justice may nonetheless provide the referring court with some guidance that will be useful to it when it comes to carry out its own assessment.

37. In the first place, it will be necessary to look at the content of the procurement documents and, in particular, the extent to which those documents laid down a duty for the contractor to communicate its intention to subcontract some of the work and to obtain the contracting authority's authorisation to do so. According to the Romanian Government, there were specific clauses pursuant to which no subcontractor could participate in the performance of the contract without the contracting authority's consent. (15)

38. It should not be forgotten that Article 71(2) of Directive 2014/24 provides that, 'in the procurement documents, the contracting authority may ask … the tenderer to indicate in its tender any share of the contract it may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors'. It is only on the basis of this information that the contractor will be able to gauge whether the subcontractor is itself reliable. (16)

39. A clause in the procurement documents requiring a prior indication to that effect thus has a sound legal basis in EU law. What is more, the introduction of such a clause is of a piece with the scheme of Directive 2014/24, in so far as this is concerned with mechanisms for communicating any intention to subcontract and the identity of the subcontractor.

40. While Directive 2004/18 said little in this regard, (17) inasmuch as it simply mentioned the advisability of including provisions on subcontracting in order to encourage the involvement of small and medium-sized undertakings in the public contracts procurement market, (18) Directive 2014/24 emphasises why 'transparency in the subcontracting chain' is so important.

41. In particular, the preamble to Directive 2014/24 explains that 'this gives contracting authorities information on who is present at building sites … It should be clarified that the obligation to deliver the required information is in any case incumbent upon the main contractor, either on the basis of specific clauses, that each contracting authority would have to include in all procurement procedures, or on the basis of obligations which Member States would impose on main contractors by means of generally applicable provisions'. (19)

42. From a strictly prescriptive point of view, Article 71(6)(b) of Directive 2014/24 provides that 'contracting authorities may … verify or may be required by Member States to verify whether there are grounds for exclusion of subcontractors pursuant to Article 57'. It is only logical that, in order for such verification to be possible, the contractor must first have informed the contracting authorities that it is proposing to subcontract part of the work.

43. That premiss having been established, it falls to be ascertained in addition whether, pursuant to the procurement documents, the failure to comply with the duty to notify the contracting authority of the existence of the subcontractor triggered the early termination of the contract. In that event, the contracting authority, in terminating the contract, would simply be 'comply[ing] strictly with the criteria which it has itself laid down' within the meaning of the judgment in Connexxion Taxi Services. (20)

44. In the second place, it will be necessary to assess whether performance by the contractor itself and by it alone was an obligation essential to the attainment of the objective pursued by the contracting authority. If not, that is to say if the use of subcontractors under that works contract seems viable, albeit subject to the duty of prior notification and subsequent administrative authorisation, it will be necessary to gauge whether the absence of that notification (and, hence, of the required authorisation) was nothing more than a mere administrative error that was otherwise insignificant and could be made good afterwards. (21)

45. In the third place, the referring court will be able to consider to what extent the subcontracting affected a large part of the municipal leisure facility construction works and whether the subcontractor's involvement had an adverse impact on the performance of those works. (22)

46. Such assessments will be relevant to the examination of the exclusion measure from the point of view of the principle of proportionality. (23) If the conduct of the economic operator which infringed its obligations under the first contract was not of at least some significance (that is to say, if it was only de minimis), its exclusion from the second contract may have been inappropriate because disproportionate.

47. In the fourth place, if that ground for exclusion is found to be present, Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 (transposed in Article 171 of Law No 98/2016) still allows the tenderer to provide evidence to the effect that, since its previous conduct, it has shown itself to be reliable. (24)

48. Finally, Delta's submission with respect to the pending disputes in connection with the decision of the Municipality of Râmnicu Vâlcea to terminate Consortium 1's contract (25) does not, in and of itself, preclude the application of that ground for exclusion. As I maintained in my Opinion in Meca, (26) the mere fact that a decision to terminate a contract early has been challenged cannot be regarded as an obstacle preventing the contracting authority from assessing the conduct that prompted that decision and the operator's subsequent reliability.

C. The ground for exclusion under Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24

49. The situations provided for in Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24 as grounds for excluding an economic operator from a public procurement procedure include the following:

– where it 'has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria'; and

– where it 'has withheld such information'. (27)

50. The Court of Justice was confronted with the first of those situations when, in the judgment in Esaprojekt, (28) it interpreted the provision in Directive 2004/18 (that is to say, Article 45(2)(g)) which similarly made it possible to exclude an economic operator from participation in a public contract on account of its false declarations to the contracting authority.

51. In that judgment, it held that the false declaration did not have to be intentional, it being sufficient for there to be 'some degree of negligence which may have a decisive effect on the decisions to exclude candidates from being selected or awarded a public contract'. Since this was the case in those proceedings, the economic operator could be regarded as being guilty of 'serious misrepresentation', a fact which justified 'the decision of the contracting authority to exclude that operator from the public contract concerned'. (29)

52. The second situation was addressed in the judgment in Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani and Guerrato, (30) in relation to the corresponding provision of Directive 2004/18. (31) In that case, the tenderer had chosen not to disclose in its tender information relating to the criminal record of a director who had been convicted of a number of offences. The Court took the view that such a circumstance formed a sufficient basis on which to exclude the tenderer from the award procedure. (32)

53. Although it might seem from the wording of Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24 that 'seriousness' is required only in relation to the provision of false information and not in relation to the withholding of information, that is not the case in my view. Whether the conduct is active (falsification) or passive (concealment), the important point is that the information, whether false or concealed, should have a bearing on the decision adopted by the contracting authority. To my mind, this, once again, is a consequence of the principle of proportionality.

54. In this reference, as I have already said, the national court does not concern itself with the ground for exclusion which I am analysing, unlike the contracting authority, which did. (33) After all, as Delta refrained from informing the CNAIR that its previous public contract had been terminated because of its failure to comply with the subcontracting clause, the CNAIR chose to apply (in conjunction with the ground for exclusion already examined in the preceding section) Article 167(1) of Law No 98/2016, that is to say the national provision transposing Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24.

55. In that context, if the referring court considers it advisable to look at the second ground for exclusion applied by the CNAIR, it will have to take into account the particular circumstances in which the information in question was concealed and the seriousness of that conduct.

56. More specifically, in order to assess the seriousness of the information concealed from the contracting authority, it will not be sufficient to establish whether the tenderer chose not to disclose the presence of a possible ground for exclusion. It will be essential to consider also the significance of the information omitted.

57. In a case such as this, where there has been a formally declared prior termination of a contract, (34) the principle of fair dealing compelled Delta to notify the contracting authority of that objective fact at the outset, a course of action which would not have prevented it from providing as much information as it might have thought necessary to demonstrate that, in its view, the breach of obligations did not exist or was of scant significance. (35)

58. In any event, it will be for the national court to consider the factual circumstances of the dispute in order to determine, in the light of the principle of proportionality, whether the tenderer's exclusion on either ground was adequately justified.

V. Conclusion

59. In the light of the foregoing lines of reasoning, I propose that the Court's answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling by the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania) should be as follows:

(1) Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that:

– a contracting authority is in principle authorised to exclude from a procedure for the procurement of public works an economic operator which has been the subject of a decision to terminate a prior public contract early on the ground that it breached the clause imposing on it the obligation to inform the contracting authority, as a condition of the authorisation required to do so, of its intention to award some of those works to a subcontractor;

– it is for the national court to determine, in the light of the particular circumstances of the dispute and in accordance with the principle of proportionality, whether the early termination of the (first) public contract was due to a significant deficiency in the performance of a substantive requirement applicable under that contract that is sufficient to warrant the economic operator's exclusion from the (second) contract.

(2) Article 57(4)(h) of Directive 2014/24 does not preclude the contracting authority from excluding from a (second) public contract a tenderer which has concealed from it the fact that a prior contract awarded to it was terminated early on the ground of the existence of significant deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement applicable under that (first) contract. It is for the national court to consider, in the light of the principle of proportionality, the seriousness of that concealment of information.

11 This article refers to deficiencies in the plural. It is my view, however, that the criterion is qualitative rather than quantitative, meaning that a single deficiency could trigger exclusion in its own right. This point was also made by the Commission and the Austrian Government at the hearing. Recital 101 of Directive 2014/24, when giving some examples of the 'major deficiencies' it has in mind, uses the singular to refer to 'failure to deliver or perform' or 'misbehaviour that casts serious doubt as to the reliability of the economic operator'. Everything hangs, I would emphasise, on the proportionality of the measure to the seriousness of the conduct.

12 The Spanish version uses the expression requisito de fondo, but the other versions refer rather to the substance of that requirement: to wit the French (obligation essentielle); the English (substantive requirement); the German (einer wesentlichen Anforderung); and the Italian (requisito sostanziale).

---

13 The malicious concealment of participation by a subcontractor, which the tenderer chooses not to mention in order to evade those provisions of the contract that reflect the binding rules of Directive 2014/24, notwithstanding that it appears to be formal, may bring about serious losses and be classified, by reference to these and to the fraudulent intent behind it, as significant.

---

14 Delta states that, in actual fact, there was no subcontracting, only a relationship with another undertaking for the provision of services and the supply of materials. The order for reference, the statement of facts contained in which the Court must take as read, seems to start from the premiss that subcontracting did indeed take place.

---

17 A comparison of the subcontracting rules in Directive 2004/18 (Article 25) and those in Directive 2014/24 (Article 71) shows that, in essence, the latter retains the duty, if so provided for in the procurement documents, to let the contracting authority know how much of the work is to be subcontracted and the identity of the proposed subcontractors.

---

21 This is one of the possibilities noted by the Commission in its written observations (along with others, such as the hypothesis that Consortium 1 sought to mislead the contracting authority as to the identity of the subcontractor).

---

22 The Romanian Government takes the view that, although the order for reference does not specify whether there were any defects in the performance of those works, the declaration as to the liability of Consortium 1 would indicate that there were.

23 Directive 2014/24 requires the measure to be proportionate, even in the context of mandatory exclusion grounds such as the non-payment of taxes or social security contributions (second subparagraph of Article 57(3)).

24 Paragraph 21 of the order for reference asserts that Consortium 2 ‘relied exclusively on grounds relating to the unlawfulness of the findings report, without providing any evidence of its reliability …’. At the hearing, Delta did not claim to have taken corrective measures aimed at rectifying its conduct and thus restoring its reliability (it simply stated that it had tried to make good its failure to give notice of its intention to subcontract).

35 At the hearing, Delta acknowledged that it did not include this fact in the European Single Procurement Document, giving as its reason the fact that there was no space on the form for comments. However, there would have been nothing to stop it, had it wished to explain the details of the termination of its contract, to provide that explanation in a separate document.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

6 June 2019 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Directive 2014/24/EU — Article 10, (c), and (d)(i), (ii) and (v) — Validity — Scope — Exclusion of arbitration and conciliation services and of certain legal services — Principles of equal treatment and subsidiarity — Articles 49 and 56 TFEU)

In Case C-264/18,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Grondwettelijk Hof (Constitutional Court, Belgium), made by decision of 29 March 2018, received at the Court on 13 April 2018, in the proceedings

– the European Commission, by L. Haasbeek and P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 10(c) and (d)(i), (ii) and (v) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between P. M., N. G.d.M. and P. V.d.S. and the Ministerraad (Council of Ministers, Belgium) concerning the exclusion, under the Belgian law transposing Directive 2014/24, of certain legal services from the application of the procedures for the award of public contracts.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Recitals 1, 4, 24 and 25 of Directive 2014/24 state:

‘(1) The award of public contracts by or on behalf of Member States’ authorities has to comply with the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and in particular the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, provisions should be drawn up coordinating national procurement procedures so as to ensure that those principles are given practical effect and public procurement is opened up to competition.

(4) The increasingly diverse forms of public action have made it necessary to define more clearly the notion of procurement itself; that clarification should not however broaden the scope of this Directive compared to that of Directive 2004/18/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)]. The Union rules on public procurement are not intended to cover all forms of disbursement of public funds, but only those aimed at the acquisition of works, supplies or services for consideration by means of a public contract. …

(24) It should be recalled that arbitration and conciliation services and other similar forms of alternative dispute resolution are usually provided by bodies or individuals which are agreed on, or selected, in a manner which cannot be governed by procurement rules. It should be clarified that this Directive does not apply to service contracts for the provision of such services, whatever their denomination under national law.

(25) A certain number of legal services are rendered by service providers that are designated by a court or tribunal of a Member State, involve representation of clients in judicial proceedings by lawyers, must be provided by notaries or are connected with the exercise of official authority. Such legal services are usually provided by bodies or individuals designated or selected in a manner which cannot be governed by procurement rules, such as for instance the designation of State Attorneys in certain Member States. Those legal services should therefore be excluded from the scope of this Directive.’

4 Article 10 of that directive, entitled ‘Specific exclusions for service contracts’, provides in points (c) and (d):

‘This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts for:

(c) arbitration and conciliation services;

(d) any of the following legal services:

(i) legal representation of a client by a lawyer within the meaning of Article 1 of Council Directive 77/249/EEC [of 22 March 1977 to facilitate the effective exercise by lawyers of freedom to provide services (OJ 1977 L 78, p. 17)], in:

– an arbitration or conciliation held in a Member State, a third country or before an international arbitration or conciliation instance; or – judicial proceedings before the courts, tribunals or public authorities of a Member State or a third country or before international courts, tribunals or institutions;

(ii) legal advice given in preparation of any of the proceedings referred to in point (i) of this point or where there is a tangible indication and high probability that the matter to which the advice relates will become the subject of such proceedings, provided that the advice is given by a lawyer within the meaning of Article 1 of Directive [77/249];

(v) other legal services which in the Member State concerned are connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of official authority’.

Belgian law

5 By the Law on public contracts of 17 June 2016 (Moniteur belge of 14 July 2016, p. 44219), the Belgian legislature revised the procurement rules and brought its legislation into line with Directive 2014/24. Paragraph 28 of that law provides:

‘(1) Subject to paragraph 2, the following public service contracts shall not be subject to this law:

3° arbitration and conciliation services;

4° any of the following legal services:

(a) legal representation of a client by a lawyer within the meaning of Article 1 of Council Directive [77/249], in:

(i) an arbitration or conciliation held in a Member State, a third country or before an international arbitration or conciliation instance; or

(ii) judicial proceedings before the courts, tribunals or public authorities of a Member State or a third country or before international courts, tribunals or institutions;

(b) legal advice given in preparation of any of the proceedings referred to in point (a) of this point or where there is a tangible indication and high probability that the matter to which the advice relates will become the subject of such proceedings, provided that the advice is given by a lawyer within the meaning of Article 1 of Directive [77/249];

(e) other legal services which in the Member State concerned are connected, even on an occasional basis, with the exercise of public authority;

(2) The King may establish procurement rules to which the contracts covered by paragraph 1, 4(a) and (b) shall be subject, in circumstances that He shall determine.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

6 On 16 January 2017, P. M., N. G.d.M. and P. V.d.S., the applicants in the main proceedings, brought an action for annulment before the referring court, the Grondwettelijk Hof (Constitutional Court, Belgium), against the provisions of the Law on public contracts, which excludes certain legal services and certain arbitration and conciliation services from the scope of application of that law.

7 The applicants in the main proceedings submit that those provisions create, in so far as their effect is to exclude the award of contracts for the services they cover from the public procurement rules laid down by that law, a difference of treatment which cannot be justified.

8 The referring court therefore considers that the question arises as to whether the exclusion of those services from the public procurement rules breaches the objectives, pursued by the European Union legislature by the adoption of Directive 2014/24, relating to full competition, freedom to provide services and freedom of establishment, and whether the principles of subsidiarity and equal treatment should have led to the harmonisation of EU law rules as regards those services also.

9 According to that court, in order to assess the constitutionality of the provisions of national law, the annulment of which is sought before it, it is necessary to examine whether the provisions of Article 10(c) and (d)(i), (ii) and (v) of that directive comply with the principles of equal treatment and subsidiarity and with Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

10 In those circumstances, the Grondwettelijk Hof (Constitutional Court) decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Is Article 10[(c) and (d)(i), (ii) and (v)] of [Directive 2014/24] compatible with the principle of equal treatment, whether or not read in conjunction with the principle of subsidiarity and with Articles 49 and 56 [TFEU], since the services mentioned therein are excluded from the application of the procurement rules in the aforementioned directive which nevertheless guarantee full competition and free movement in the procurement of services by public authorities?’

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

11 The Czech and Cypriot Governments contest the admissibility of the question referred and therefore the reference for a preliminary ruling.

12 The Czech Government alleges that the question bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, which concerns whether the Belgian constitution precludes national law from excluding from the scope of national public procurement rules certain legal services also excluded from the scope of application of Directive 2014/24. However, EU law does not oblige a Member State to include the services in question within the scope of the national rules which implement it. That question should therefore be decided purely on the basis of the Belgian constitution.

13 The Cypriot Government submits that the question referred concerns whether Article 10(c) and (d)(i), (ii) and (v) of that directive is consistent with Articles 49 and 56 TFEU. However, any national measure in an area which has been the subject of exhaustive harmonisation at EU level must be assessed in the light of the provisions of that harmonising measure and not those of primary law.

14 In that regard, it should be remembered that, when a question on the validity of a measure adopted by the institutions of the European Union is raised before a national court, it is for that court to decide whether a decision on the matter is necessary to enable it to give judgment and, consequently, whether it should request the Court to rule on that question. Consequently, where the questions referred by the national court or tribunal concern the validity of a provision of EU law, the Court is, as a general rule, obliged to give a ruling (judgments of 11 November 1997, Eurotunnel and Others, C-408/95, EU:C:1997:532, paragraph 19, of 10 December 2002, British American Tobacco (Investments) and Imperial Tobacco, C-491/01, EU:C:2002:741, paragraph 34 and of 28 March 2017, Rosneft, C-72/15, EU:C:2017:236, paragraph 49).

15 The Court may refuse to give a ruling on a question referred by a national court for a preliminary ruling, under Article 267 TFEU, only where, for instance, the requirements concerning the content of a request for a preliminary ruling, set out in Article 94 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court, are not satisfied or where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of a provision of EU law, or the assessment of its validity, which is sought by the national court, bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or to its purpose or where the problem is hypothetical (judgment of 28 March 2017, Rosneft, C-72/15, EU:C:2017:236, paragraph 50).

16 In the present case, it is clear from the order for reference that the national provisions at issue in the main proceedings, the annulment of which is sought before the referring court, concern the law which transposes, into Belgian law, Directive 2014/24 and, in particular, the exclusion of certain legal services from its scope of application.

17 In those circumstances, contrary to the submissions advanced by the Czech and Cypriot governments, the question of the validity of Article 10(c) and (d)(i),(ii) and (v) of Directive 2014/24 is not irrelevant for the outcome of the dispute in the main proceedings. If the exclusion laid down in those provisions were held to be invalid, the provisions in respect of which annulment is sought before the referring court would also have to be regarded as contrary to EU law.

18 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the question referred and, therefore, the reference for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

Consideration of the question referred

19 By its question the referring court asks, in essence, the Court of Justice to rule on the validity of the provisions of Article 10(c) and (d)(i), (ii) and (v) of Directive 2014/24, having regard to the principles of equal treatment and subsidiarity, as well as Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

20 As regards, in the first place, the principle of subsidiarity and compliance with Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, it must be recalled, first, that the principle of subsidiarity, set out in Article 5(3) TEU, provides that, in areas which do not fall within its exclusive competence, the European Union is to act only if and in so far as the objectives of the proposed action cannot be sufficiently achieved by the Member States and can therefore, by reason of the scale or effects of the proposed action, be better achieved at EU level (see, to that effect, the judgment of 4 May 2016, Philip Morris Brands and Others, C-547/14, EU:C:2016:325, paragraph 215 and the case-law cited).

21 It necessarily follows from the fact that the EU legislature excluded from the scope of application of Directive 2014/24 the services covered by Article 10(c) and (d)(i), (ii) and (v) that, in so doing, it considered that it was for national legislatures to determine whether those services should be subject to the public procurement rules.

22 Therefore, it cannot successfully be claimed that those provisions were adopted in breach of the principle of subsidiarity.

23 Second, as regards compliance with Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, recital 1 of Directive 2014/24 states that the award of public contracts by or on behalf of Member States' authorities must comply with the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, including the provisions concerning the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services.

24 According to the Court's settled case-law, the purpose of coordinating, at European Union level, the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, to that effect, the judgment of 13 November 2007, Commission v Ireland, C-507/03, EU:C:2007:676, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

25 It does not however follow that, by excluding the services covered by Article 10(c) and (d)(i), (ii) and (v) of Directive 2014/24 from its scope of application and, therefore, not requiring Member States to subject those services to public procurement rules, that directive would adversely affect the freedoms guaranteed by the treaties.

26 As regards, secondly, the EU legislature's discretion and the general principle of equal treatment, according to its settled case-law, the Court has acknowledged that, in the exercise of the powers conferred on it, the EU legislature has a broad discretion where its action involves political, economic and social choices and where it is called on to undertake complex assessments and evaluations (judgments of 16 December 2008, Arcelor Atlantique et Lorraine and Others, C-127/07, EU:C:2008:728, paragraph 57, and of 30 January 2019, Planta Tabak, C-220/17, EU:C:2019:76, paragraph 44). Only if a measure adopted in this field is manifestly inappropriate in relation to the objectives which the competent institutions are seeking to pursue can the lawfulness of such a measure be affected (judgment of 14 December 2004, Swedish Match, C-210/03, EU:C:2004:802, paragraph 48).

27 However, even where it has such a discretion, the EU legislature is obliged to base its choice on objective criteria appropriate to the aim pursued by the legislation in question (judgment of 16 December 2008, Arcelor Atlantique et Lorraine and Others, C-127/07, EU:C:2008:728, paragraph 58).

28 Furthermore, according to the Court's settled case-law, the principle of equal treatment, as a general principle of EU law, requires comparable situations not to be treated differently and different situations not to be treated in the same way, unless such treatment is objectively justified (judgment of 16 December 2008, Arcelor Atlantique et Lorraine and Others, C-127/07, EU:C:2008:728, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited).

29 The comparability of different situations must be assessed having regard to all the elements which characterise them. Those elements must, in particular, be determined and assessed in the light of the subject matter and purpose of the EU act which makes the distinction in question. The principles and objectives of the field to which the act relates must also be taken into account (judgment of 12 May 2011, Luxembourg v Parliament and Council, C-176/09, EU:C:2011:290, paragraph 32, and of 30 January 2019, Planta Tabak, C-220/17, EU:C:2019:76, paragraph 37).

30 It is in the light of those principles that the validity of Article 10(c) and (d)(i)(ii) and (v) of Directive 2014/24, having regard to the principle of equality treatment, must be examined.

31 Thus, as regards, in the first place, arbitration and conciliation services covered by Article 10(c) of Directive 2014/24, recital 24 thereof states that bodies or individuals providing arbitration and conciliation services and other similar forms of alternative dispute resolution are selected in a manner which cannot be governed by procurement rules.

32 Arbitrators and mediators must always be accepted by all parties to a dispute and are designated by them by common agreement. A public body that launches a public procurement procedure for an arbitration or conciliation service may not therefore impose the successful tenderer for that contract on the other party as the common arbitrator or mediator.

33 Taking their objective characteristics into account, arbitration and conciliation services, covered by Article 10(c), are not therefore comparable with other services included within the scope of application of Directive 2014/24. It follows that the EU legislature was able, in the exercise of its discretion, to exclude the services covered by Article 10(c) of Directive 2014/24 from its scope of application without infringing the principle of equal treatment.

34 In the second place, regarding services provided by lawyers, covered by Article 10(d)(i) and (ii) of Directive 2014/24, it is clear from recital 25 of that directive that the EU legislature took into account the fact that such legal services are usually provided by bodies or individuals designated or selected in a manner which cannot be governed by procurement rules in certain Member States, so that it was appropriate to exclude those legal services from the scope of that directive.

35 In that regard, it must be observed that Article 10(d)(i) and (ii) of Directive 2014/24 does not exclude all services provided by a lawyer for the benefit of a contracting authority, but only the legal representation of their client in proceedings before an international arbitration or conciliation instance, before courts or public authorities of a Member State or a third country, or in judicial proceedings before international courts or institutions, and also legal advice given in preparation for, or in view of the probability of, such proceedings. Such services provided by a lawyer are to be conceived only in the context of a relationship intuitu personae between the lawyer and his or her client, characterised by the utmost confidentiality.

36 First, such a relationship intuitu personae between a lawyer and his or her client, which is characterised by the free choice of representative and the relationship of trust that unites the client with their lawyer, renders it difficult to provide an objective description of the quality expected of the services to be provided.

37 Second, the confidentiality of the relationship between the lawyer and their client, the purpose of which is, particularly in the circumstances described in paragraph 35 above, both to safeguard the full exercise by individuals of their rights of the defence and to protect the requirement that all persons must have the possibility of consulting their lawyer without constraint (see, to that effect, judgment of 18 May 1982, AM & S Europe v Commission, 155/79, EU:C:1982:157, paragraph 18), could be threatened by a requirement for the contracting authority to provide details of the conditions for the award of such a contract and the publicity that must be given to such conditions.

38 It follows that, having regard to their objective characteristics, the services covered by Article 10(d)(i) and (ii) of Directive 2014/24 are not comparable with other services included within the scope of application of that directive. Having regard to that objective difference, the EU legislature was also able, in the exercise of its discretion, to exclude those services from the scope of that directive without infringing the principle of equal treatment.

39 In the third place, as regards legal services involving activities connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of official authority, covered by Article 10(d)(v) of Directive 2014/24, those activities and, therefore, those services are excluded, under Article 51 TFEU, from the scope of the provisions of the Treaty relating to the freedom of establishment and from those relating to freedom to provide services under Article 62 TFEU. Such services are different from those falling within the scope of the directive in that they directly or indirectly participate in the exercise of public authority and in functions the purpose of which is to safeguard the general interests of the State or other public authorities.

40 It follows that, by their very nature, legal services connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of public authority are not comparable, because of their objective characteristics, with the services included in the scope of application of Directive 2014/24. Having regard to that objective difference, the EU legislature was also able, in the exercise of its discretion, to exclude those services from the scope of Directive 2014/24 without infringing the principle of equal treatment.

41 Therefore, the examination of the provisions of Article 10(c) and (d)(i), (ii) and (v) of Directive 2014/24 has disclosed no factor of such a kind as to affect their validity having regard to the principles of equal treatment and subsidiarity, and also Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

42 In view of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that the examination thereof has disclosed no factor of such a kind as to affect the validity of the provisions of Article 10(c) and (d)(i), (ii) and (v) of Directive 2014/24 having regard to the principles of equal treatment and subsidiarity, and also Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

Costs

43 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

The examination of the question referred has disclosed no factor of such a kind as to affect the validity of the provisions of Article 10(c) and (d)(i), (ii) and (v) of Directive 2014/24/EU, of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, having regard to the principles of equal treatment and subsidiarity, and also Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Tenth Chamber)

28 March 2019 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 45(2), first subparagraph, point (b) — Personal situation of the candidate or tenderer — Possibility for the Member States to exclude from participation in a public contract any operator subject to a procedure for an arrangement with creditors — National legislation providing for the exclusion of persons subject to an 'ongoing' procedure for a declaration of admission to an arrangement with creditors, except where the insolvency plan provides for the continuation of the business — Operator having filed an application for an arrangement with creditors, reserving the possibility to submit a plan providing for the continuation of the business)

In Case C-101/18,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), made by decision of 11 January 2018, received at the Court on 12 February 2018, in the proceedings

Idi Srl

v

Agenzia Regionale Campana Difesa Suolo (Arcadis), intervening parties:

Regione Campania,

THE COURT (Tenth Chamber),

composed of C. Lycourgos, President of the Chamber, E. Juhász (Rapporteur) and M. Ilešič, Judges,

Advocate General: E. Tanchev,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Idi Srl, by L. Lentini, avvocato,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by V. Fedeli and C. Colelli, avvocati dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and P. Ondrůšek and by L. Haasbeek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Idi Srl and the Agenzia Regionale Campana Difesa Suolo (Arcadis) (Regional Agency of Campania for Soil Protection, Italy) concerning the exclusion from the ad hoc consortium of undertakings ('the Consortium') of which Idi was the representative, from participating in a tendering procedure for a public services contract.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, headed 'Personal situation of the candidate or tenderer', provides in paragraph 2:

'Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(a) is bankrupt or is being wound up, where his affairs are being administered by the court, where he has entered into an arrangement with creditors, where he has suspended business activities or is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(b) is the subject of proceedings for a declaration of bankruptcy, for an order for compulsory winding up or administration by the court or of an arrangement with creditors or of any other similar proceedings under national laws and regulations;

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.'

4 Directive 2004/18 was repealed, with effect from 18 April 2016, by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), which is not applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings.

5 Article 57 of Directive 2014/24, headed 'Exclusions from the scope', provides:

'Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(b) the economic operator is bankrupt, subject to insolvency or winding-up procedures, where its assets are being administered by a liquidator or by a court, where it is in an arrangement with creditors, where its business activities are suspended, or where it is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure provided for under national laws or regulations;

6 Article 38(1) of Decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 adopting the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts and transposing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), in the version applicable to the facts in the main proceedings ('the Public Procurement Code') provides:

‘The following persons shall be excluded from participation in procedures for the award of concessions and public works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts and may not be awarded subcontracts or conclude any related contract:

(a) persons against whom insolvency proceedings or compulsory liquidation proceedings have been opened or who are in an arrangement with creditors, except in a case under Article 186a of Royal Decree No 267 of 16 March 1942, or with respect to whom proceedings seeking a declaration of one of those situations is ongoing.

7 Article 161 of the legge fallimentare (Bankruptcy Law), approved by Regio Decreto n. 267 (Royal Decree No 267) of 16 March 1942 (GURI No 81 of 6 April 1942; ‘Law on bankruptcy’), headed ‘Application for an arrangement with creditors’, provides:

‘1. An application for admission to an arrangement with creditors shall be submitted in an application, signed by the debtor, filed at the court of the place where the undertaking has its head office; a relocation of the head office in the year prior to the application is irrelevant for the purpose of determining jurisdiction.

2. The debtor shall attach the following documents to the application:

(e) a plan that contains an analytical description of the detailed rules and deadlines for the implementation of the proposal; in any event, the application must specify and quantify in an economically measurable manner the benefit to which the person making the proposal guarantees each of the creditors.

6. The entrepreneur may file the originating application, containing the application for an arrangement with creditors, together with the balance sheets for the last three financial years and a list of the names of the creditors, indicating their respective claims, and reserving the right to submit the proposal, the plan and the documents as provided for in paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Article, within a time limit of 60 to 120 days to be determined by the Court, which may be extended for no more than 60 days where the reasons are justified. … By reasoned decision fixing the time limit pursuant to the first sentence, the court may appoint the insolvency administrator within the meaning of Article 163(2)(3). Article 170(2) shall apply …

7. Upon filing of the originating application … the debtor may, with the prior approval of the court, take urgent measures of extraordinary administration, whereby the court may obtain summary information and must obtain the opinion of a judicial auditor, if appointed. At the same time, and within the same time limit, the debtor may also take measures of ordinary administration. …’

8 Article 168 of the Law on bankruptcy, entitled ‘Effects of the lodgement of the action’, states:

‘1. From the date of publication of the application in the Companies Register and up until the time when the decree approving the arrangement with creditors becomes final, creditors whose title or cause arose prior thereto shall not, on pain of nullity, start or pursue enforcement and precautionary actions on the assets of the debtor.

Creditors cannot acquire pre-emptive rights as against competing creditors, unless they are authorised by the court in the cases provided for in the previous article. Judicial mortgages registered in the 90 days prior to the date of publication of the action in the register of companies are ineffective with regard to creditors prior to the arrangement.’

9 Article 186*bis* of the Law on bankruptcy, entitled ‘Arrangements with creditors as a going concern’, provides:

‘1. When the insolvency plan referred to in Article 161(2)(e) provides for the activity of the undertaking to be continued by the debtor, for the transfer of the continuing business, or for the continuing business to be assigned into one or more companies, including newly formed companies, the provisions of this article shall apply. The plan may also provide for the sale of assets that are not necessary for the operation of the undertaking.

4. After the application has been submitted, participation in procedures for the award of public contracts must be authorised by the court, after hearing the opinion of the judicial auditor, if appointed; if no judicial auditor has been appointed, the court shall decide.

5. Admission to an arrangement with creditors shall not prevent participation in procedures for the award of public contracts provided that the undertaking submits for the purpose of the call for tenders:

(a) a report by an expert fulfilling the conditions set out in Article 67(3)(d) confirming that participation consistent with the plan and the contract could reasonably be performed;

(b) a declaration by another operator fulfilling the general conditions relating to financial, technical and economic capacities, as well as certification required for the award of the contract, who has undertaken, in relation to the tenderer and the contracting authority, to make available, for the duration of the contract, the resources necessary to perform the contract, and to take over from the assisted undertaking if the latter becomes insolvent during the tender procedure or after the contract has been entered into, or is for any other reason no longer in a position properly to perform the contract. Article 49 of Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 shall apply.

6. Subject to the provisions of the previous paragraph, the undertaking that has entered into an arrangement with creditors may also participate in an ad hoc tendering consortium, provided it is not acting as principal and that the other undertakings forming the consortium are not subject to collective proceedings. In that circumstance, the declaration referred to in the fourth subparagraph under (b) may also be made by an operator belonging to the consortium.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10 It is apparent from the file submitted to the Court that, by a notice of 24 July 2013, Arcadis launched a call for tenders for the award of a public services contract for project management, evaluation and accounting, assistance with inspection, as well as coordination of safety and health matters. The estimated value of this service contract was EUR 1 028 096.59.

11 On 14 October 2013, TEI Srl, as the principal of the consortium, submitted a request to participate in the call for tenders mentioned in the previous paragraph.

12 On 29 April 2014, the public services contract was provisionally awarded to the consortium.

13 On 18 June 2014, TEI filed an application with the Tribunale di Milano (District Court, Milan, Italy) seeking admission to an arrangement with creditors, reserving the right, pursuant to Article 161(6) of the Law on bankruptcy, to submit a plan for an arrangement as a going concern.

14 By decision notified on 9 December 2014 (‘the exclusion decision’), Arcadis excluded the Consortium from the public procurement procedure. In that regard, Arcadis based its decision on the fact that, in accordance with Article 38(1) of the Public Procurement Code, the filing of an application by a company for admission to an arrangement with creditors precludes its participation in a public tendering procedure, except if, as distinct from the present case, the debtor has submitted with the application a plan for an arrangement as a going concern (concordato in continuità aziendale).

15 By judgment of 29 April 2015, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (Regional Administrative Court, Campania, Italy) dismissed the application for annulment brought by Idi against the exclusion decision. That court held that the filing of an application for an arrangement with creditors by TEI amounted to an admission that it was in a crisis situation, which justified the exclusion of the Consortium from any participation in public procurement procedures.

16 Idi brought an appeal before the referring court, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy).

17 That court observes that the exclusion decision is compatible with its case-law.

18 According to that case-law, an economic operator who has filed an application for an arrangement with creditors may participate in public procurement procedures only if it has been admitted to the arrangement with creditors as a going concern, provided for Article 186*bis* of the Law on bankruptcy, or if, having applied to be admitted to the latter procedure, it has been authorised by the competent court to participate in public procurement procedures.

19 On the other hand, according to that case-law, any operator whose application for an arrangement with creditors is not accompanied by a plan that expressly provides for the continuation of the business is excluded from public procurement procedures. In fact, in such a situation, called 'blank arrangement' (concordato in bianco), the absence of such a plan constitutes an admission by the operator of the economic difficulties it faces.

20 The referring court adds that the 'blank arrangement', which is a 'contingent' arrangement with creditors for the purpose of Article 161(6) of the Law on bankruptcy allows, on one hand, applications for bankruptcy filed by creditors to be temporarily 'frozen' (normally between 30 and 120 days) and, on the other hand, enables the applicant to choose either to submit an arrangement plan or to submit a corporate restructuring agreement, in order to postpone such a choice until the outcome of a renegotiation with the general body of creditors.

21 However, that court expresses doubts as to the compatibility of such case-law with Article 45(2), first subparagraph, points (a) and (b), of Directive 2004/18.

22 In that connection, it submits that, where the creditors request the opening of insolvency proceedings, such a procedure is regarded as being 'open' only once the competent court has declared the debtor to be insolvent. However, where an economic operator applies for a 'blank arrangement' the procedure is regarded as being 'open' from the time the application is lodged.

23 The referring court therefore asks whether Article 45(2), first subparagraph, points (a) and (b), of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that it covers the situation of an economic operator, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which filed an for admission to the 'blank arrangement' procedure.

24 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is it compatible with Article 45(2)(a) and (b) of Directive 2004/18 … to regard a debtor that has merely made a request to the competent judicial body to enter into an arrangement with creditors as being "the subject of proceedings"?

(2) Is it compatible with the abovementioned provision to regard a debtor's declaration that it is in a state of insolvency and wishes to submit a preliminary request (the features of which are described above) to enter into an arrangement with creditors as grounds for excluding that debtor from a public tendering procedure, thereby interpreting broadly the term "the subject of proceedings" used in the provisions of [EU] law (Article 45 of [Directive 2004/18]) and of national law (Article 38 of [the Public Procurement Code]) cited above?'

Admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

25 The Italian Government questions the admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling.

26 First of all, the Italian Government observes that, in the order for reference, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) merely referred to the content of its case-law concerning the effects of the application of 'blank arrangements' on the public procurement procedures and reproduced the provisions of Article 45(2), first subparagraph, points (a) and (b), of Directive 2004/18 without explaining why it has doubts about the conformity of the national legislation to Article 45.

27 The Italian Government further claims that the questions raised by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) are hypothetical. In this regard, it states that TEI's participation in the public procurement procedure in the main proceedings was refused because the Tribunale di Milano (District Court, Milan), at which TEI had filed an application for an arrangement, had not authorised it to participate in the procedure for the award of that contract. That implies that '[the] cause of exclusion [from such a participation] exists regardless of … the date from which the collective procedure can be considered to be ongoing'.

28 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, according to settled case-law of the Court, questions on the interpretation of EU law referred by a national court in the factual and legislative context which that court is responsible for defining and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court to determine enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling from a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it, which requires the national court to define the factual and legal context of the questions it is asking or, at the very least, to explain the factual circumstances on which those questions are based (judgments of 21 September 2016, Etablissements Fr. Colruyt, C-221/15, EU:C:2016:704, paragraph 14, and of 31 May 2018, Zheng, C-190/17, EU:C:2018:357, paragraph 48 and the case-law cited).

29 In the present case, and as the observations set out by the Italian Government regarding the answer to be given to the preliminary questions confirm, the factual and legal elements mentioned in the order for reference make it possible to understand why the national court has referred such a question to the Court.

30 Furthermore, as regards the alleged hypothetical nature of the questions referred, it must be stated that the legality of the exclusion decision at issue in the main proceedings necessarily depends on the answer to the question referred. By that question, the referring court asks whether Article 45(2), first subparagraph, points (a) and (b), of Directive 2004/18, which recognises that Member States have the right to exclude from participation in public procurement procedures operators in arrangements with creditors or which are the subject of an arrangement with creditors, covers the situation of a company that has filed an application seeking admission to the 'blank arrangement'. It is clear from the information contained in the order for reference that the Consortium was excluded precisely because TEI was in such a situation.

31 It follows that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling are admissible.

Consideration of the questions referred

32 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that, in the formulation of its questions, the referring court makes reference to Article 45(2) first subparagraph, point (a), and to Article 45(2), first subparagraph, point (b), of Directive 2004/18.

33 Since an economic operator may be excluded from public procurement procedures either on the basis of Article 45(2), first subparagraph, point (a), or Article 45(2), first subparagraph, point (b), of Directive 2004/18, it must be held that, having regard to the circumstances which characterise the case in the main proceedings, only the latter provision is relevant.

34 In those circumstances, by its two questions, which should be examined together, the referring court essentially asks whether Article 45(2), first subparagraph, point (b), of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which allows for the exclusion from a public procurement procedure of an economic operator who, at the date of the exclusion decision, has filed an application for admission to an arrangement with creditors, while reserving the right to submit a plan that provides for the continuation of the business.

35 According to settled case-law, as regards public contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18, Article 45(2) thereof leaves the application of the seven grounds for excluding candidates from participation in a contract, relating to their professional honesty, solvency and reliability, to the determination of the Member States, as evidenced by the phrase ‘may be excluded from participation in a contract’, which appears at the beginning of that provision (judgment of 14 December 2016, Connexxion Taxi Services, C-171/15, EU:C:2016:948, paragraph 28).

36 More specifically, in order to guarantee the solvency of the party entering into the contract with the contracting authority, Article 45(2), first subparagraph, point (b), of that directive permits, allows for the exclusion from participation in a public contract of any economic operator who is the subject of an arrangement with creditors.

37 Under Article 45(2), second subparagraph, of that directive, the Member States are to specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for EU law, the implementing conditions for that paragraph. It follows that the concepts in Article 45(2), first paragraph, including the expression ‘entered into an arrangement with creditors’ may be specified and explained in national law, provided that that is done with regard for EU law (see, to that effect, judgment of 4 May 2017, Esaprojekt, C-387/14, EU:C:2017:338, paragraph 74 and the case-law cited).

38 In the present case, as is clear from the national legislation, and from Article 168 of the Law on bankruptcy in particular, one of the effects of filing an application for an arrangement with creditors is that creditors are prevented, for a period determined by the Law on bankruptcy, from bringing actions against the debtor’s estate and the applicant’s rights over its estate are limited, since from the time the application is lodged the applicant is unable to take extraordinary measures of administration with regard to its estate itself, that is without the authorisation of a court.

39 Therefore, filing of such an application produces legal effects on the rights and obligations of both the applicant and the creditors. That means that the filing of that application must be regarded, even before any decision by the competent judge, as the starting point of the arrangement with creditors referred to in Article 45(2), first paragraph, point (b) of Directive 2004/18 and, therefore, as the act initiating such procedure.

40 That finding is also justified by the applicant’s economic and financial situation. By filing such an application, the economic operator acknowledges that it is in a state of financial difficulty which may jeopardise its economic stability. As stated in paragraph 35 of the present judgment, the optional ground of exclusion referred to in Article 45(2), first subparagraph, point (b), of Directive 2004/18 specifically aims to guarantee the contracting authority that it will enter into a contract with an economic operator with sufficient economic stability.

41 It follows that, from the time the application is filed, it must be considered that the economic operator is subject to an arrangement with creditors, within the meaning of that provision.

42 The fact that, in its application for an arrangement with creditors, the economic operator reserves the right to submit a plan that provides for the continuation of its business cannot affect that finding.

43 It is true, as is apparent from the order for reference that an economic operator who has filed an application for a court approved arrangement including a plan for the continuation of the business may, under the conditions laid down by national law, participate in public procurement procedures. It follows that Italian legislation provides for a difference in treatment, as regards their eligibility to participate in public procurement procedures, as between economic operators who have filed an application for an arrangement with creditors depending on whether or not they have included a plan in their application that provides for the continuation of the business.

44 However, that difference in treatment is not incompatible with the case-law of the Court.

45 Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 does not provide for uniform application at EU level of the grounds of exclusion it mentions, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds of exclusion at all or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level. In that context, Member States have the power to make the criteria laid down in Article 45(2) less onerous or more flexible (judgment of 14 December 2016, Connexxion Taxi Services, C-171/15, EU:C:2016:948, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

46 In that case, the Member State concerned is entitled to determine the conditions under which the optional grounds for exclusion do not apply (see, to that effect, judgment of 20 December 2017, Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E Mantovani and Guerrato, C-178/16, EU:C:2017:1000, paragraph 41).

47 As the Italian Government observed, the fact that an economic operator is the subject of an arrangement with creditors pursuant to Article 45(2), first subparagraph, point (b), of Directive 2004/18, does not, however, prevent the relevant national legislation from authorising that economic operator to participate in public procurement procedures, under the conditions defined by that legislation.

48 It is equally consistent with EU law and specifically the principle of equality in public procurement procedures for national legislation to exclude from participation in a public contract an economic operator who has submitted an application for ‘blank arrangement’ or to include it.

49 Furthermore, the situation in which that operator has not yet, on the date on which the exclusion decision is made, committed itself to enter into an arrangement with creditors as a going concern is not comparable, in terms of its financial stability, to the situation of an economic operator which undertakes to continue its economic activity on that date.

50 In the light of all the foregoing, the answer to the questions referred is that Article 45(2), first subparagraph, point (b), of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which allows the exclusion from a public procurement procedure of an economic operator who, at the date of the exclusion decision, has filed an application for an arrangement with creditors, while reserving the right to present a plan which provides for the continuation of the business.

Costs

51 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Tenth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 45(2), first subparagraph, point (b), of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which allows the exclusion from a public procurement procedure of an economic operator who, at the date of the exclusion decision, has filed an application for an arrangement with creditors, while reserving the right to present a plan which provides for the continuation of the business.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

26 September 2019 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Articles 49 and 56 TFEU — Public procurement — Directive 2014/24/EU — Article 71 — Subcontracting — National legislation limiting the possibility of subcontracting to 30% of the total amount of the contract)

In Case C-63/18,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Italy), made by decision of 13 December 2017, received at the Court on 1 February 2018, in the proceedings

Vitali SpA

Autostrade per l'Italia SpA,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber), composed of E. Regan (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, C. Lycourgos, E. Juhász, M. Ilešič and I. Jarukaitis, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by C. Colelli and V. Nunziata, avvocati dello Stato,

– the Norwegian Government, by K.H. Aarvik, H. Røstum and C. Anker, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by L. Haasbeek, G. Gattinara and P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, Article 71 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2015/2170 of 24 November 2015 (OJ 2015 L 307, p. 5) ('Directive 2014/24'), and the principle of proportionality.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Vitali SpA and Autostrade per l'Italia SpA concerning a decision taken by the latter, in its capacity as contracting authority, to exclude the former from a public procurement procedure.

Legal context

EU law

3 Recitals 1, 41, 78, 100 and 105 of Directive 2014/24 state:

‘(1) The award of public contracts by or on behalf of Member States’ authorities has to comply with the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and in particular the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as the principles deriving therefrom, such as equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, provisions should be drawn up coordinating national procurement procedures so as to ensure that those principles are given practical effect and public procurement is opened up to competition.

(41) Nothing in this Directive should prevent the imposition or enforcement of measures necessary to protect public policy, public morality [and] public security …, provided that those measures are in conformity with the TFEU.

(78) Public procurement should be adapted to the needs of [small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs)]. Contracting authorities should be encouraged to make use of the Code of Best Practices set out in the Commission Staff Working Document of 25 June 2008 entitled “European Code of Best Practices Facilitating Access by SMEs to Public Procurement Contracts”, providing guidance on how they may apply the public procurement framework in a way that facilitates SME participation. To that end and to enhance competition, contracting authorities should in particular be encouraged to divide large contracts into lots. …

Member States should remain free to go further in their efforts to facilitate the involvement of SMEs in the public procurement market, by extending the scope of the obligation to consider the appropriateness of dividing contracts into lots to smaller contracts, by requiring contracting authorities to provide a justification for a decision not to divide contracts into lots or by rendering a division into lots obligatory under certain conditions. With the same purpose, Member States should also be free to provide mechanisms for direct payments to subcontractors.

(100) Public contracts should not be awarded to economic operators that have participated in a criminal organisation or have been found guilty of corruption, fraud to the detriment of the Union’s financial interests, terrorist offences, money laundering or terrorist financing. …

(105) It is important that observance by subcontractors of applicable obligations in the fields of environmental, social and labour law, established by Union law, national law, collective agreements or by the international environmental, social and labour law provisions listed in this Directive, provided that such rules, and their application, comply with Union law, be ensured through appropriate actions by the competent national authorities within the scope of their responsibilities and remit, such as labour inspection agencies or environmental protection agencies.

… Furthermore, it should be stated explicitly that Member States should be able to go further, for instance by extending the transparency obligations, by enabling direct payment to subcontractors or by enabling or requiring contracting authorities to verify that subcontractors are not in any of the situations in which exclusion of economic operators would be warranted. …

It should also be set out explicitly that Member States remain free to provide for more stringent liability rules under national law or to go further under national law on direct payments to subcontractors.'

4 In accordance with Article 4(a) of Directive 2014/24, that directive applies, in the case of public works contracts, to procurements with a value net of value added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than the threshold of EUR 5 225 000.

5 Article 18 of that directive, headed 'Principles of procurement', provides in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.'

6 Article 57 of that directive, headed 'Exclusion grounds', provides in paragraph 1 that contracting authorities are to exclude an economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure where they have established, by verifying in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, or are otherwise aware that that economic operator has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment for one of the reasons listed in that provision.

7 Article 63 of the directive, headed 'Reliance on the capacities of other entities', provides in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1:

'With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. With regard to criteria relating to the educational and professional qualifications as set out in point (f) of Annex XII Part II, or to the relevant professional experience, economic operators may however only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required. Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.'

8 Article 71 of Directive 2014/24, headed 'Subcontracting', provides:

'1. Observance of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2) by subcontractors is ensured through appropriate action by the competent national authorities acting within the scope of their responsibility and remit.

2. In the procurement documents, the contracting authority may ask or may be required by a Member State to ask the tenderer to indicate in its tender any share of the contract it may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors.

3. Member States may provide that at the request of the subcontractor and where the nature of the contract so allows, the contracting authority shall transfer due payments directly to the subcontractor for services, supplies or works provided to the economic operator to whom the public contract has been awarded (the main contractor). Such measures may include appropriate mechanisms permitting the main contractor to object to undue payments. The arrangements concerning that mode of payment shall be set out in the procurement documents.

4. Paragraphs 1 to 3 shall be without prejudice to the question of the main contractor's liability.

5. In the case of works contracts and in respect of services to be provided at a facility under the direct oversight of the contracting authority, after the award of the contract and at the latest when the performance of the contract commences, the contracting authority shall require the main contractor to indicate to the contracting authority the name, contact details and legal representatives of its subcontractors, involved in such works or services, in so far as known at this point in time. The contracting authority shall require the main contractor to notify the contracting authority of any changes to this information during the course of the contract as well as of the required information for any new subcontractors which it subsequently involves in such works or services.

Notwithstanding the first subparagraph, Member States may impose the obligation to deliver the required information directly on the main contractor.

Where necessary for the purposes of point (b) of paragraph 6 of this Article, the required information shall be accompanied by the subcontractors' self-declarations as provided for in Article 59. The implementing measures pursuant to paragraph 8 of this Article may provide that subcontractors which are presented after the award of the contract shall provide the certificates and other supporting documents instead of the self-declaration.

The first subparagraph shall not apply to suppliers.

Contracting authorities may extend or may be required by Member States to extend the obligations provided for in the first subparagraph to for instance:

(a) supply contracts, to services contracts other than those concerning services to be provided at the facilities under the direct oversight of the contracting authority or to suppliers involved in works or services contracts;

(b) subcontractors of the main contractor's subcontractors or further down the subcontracting chain.

6. With the aim of avoiding breaches of the obligations referred to in Article 18(2), appropriate measures may be taken, such as:

(a) Where the national law of a Member State provides for a mechanism of joint liability between subcontractors and the main contractor, the Member State concerned shall ensure that the relevant rules are applied in compliance with the conditions set out in Article 18(2).

(b) Contracting authorities may, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify or may be required by Member States to verify whether there are grounds for exclusion of subcontractors pursuant to Article 57. In such cases, the contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces a subcontractor in respect of which the verification has shown that there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by a Member State to require that the economic operator replaces a subcontractor in respect of which the verification has shown that there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.

7. Member States may provide for more stringent liability rules under national law or go further under national law on direct payments to subcontractors, for instance by providing for direct payments to subcontractors without it being necessary for them to request such direct payment.

8. Member States having chosen to provide for measures pursuant to paragraphs 3, 5 or 6 shall, by law, regulation or administrative provisions and having regard for Union law, specify the implementing conditions for those measures. In so doing, Member States may limit their applicability, for instance in respect of certain types of contracts, certain categories of contacting authorities or economic operators or as of certain amounts.'

Italian law

9 The third sentence of Article 105(2) of decreto legislativo n. 50 — Codice dei contratti pubblici (Legislative Decree No 50 establishing the public procurement code) of 18 April 2016 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016, 'Legislative Decree No 50/2016') provides:

'Save as provided for in paragraph 5, any subcontracting shall not exceed 30% of the total amount of the contract for works, services or supplies.'

10 Article 105(5) of Legislative Decree No 50/2016 is worded as follows:

‘For works referred to in Article 89(11), and without prejudice to the limits provided for in that paragraph, any subcontracting shall not exceed 30% of the amount of the works and shall not be subdivided without objective reasons.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

11 By a public contract notice published in August 2016, Autostrade per l’Italia launched a restricted tendering procedure for the award of works to widen the fifth lane of the Italian A8 motorway between the toll barrier at North Milan (Italy) and the interconnection in Lainate (Italy), for a basic amount of EUR 85 211 216.84, excluding VAT.

12 Vitali was excluded from the tendering procedure on the ground that the 30% limit in respect of subcontracting laid down in Article 105(2) of Legislative Decree No 50/2016 had been exceeded.

13 Vitali brought an action before the referring court seeking, inter alia, its readmission to the tendering procedure.

14 By partial judgment of 5 January 2018, the referring court rejected all the pleas in law advanced by Vitali in support of the action, with the exception of the plea alleging that the 30% limit on subcontracting provided for by Italian law is not in conformity with EU law.

15 The referring court has doubts as to whether such a quantitative limit is compatible with Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, Article 71 of Directive 2014/24 and the principle of proportionality.

16 That court points out that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) has ruled that the national legislature is entitled to fix limits on subcontracting that are more stringent than those provided for in the relevant provisions of EU law, in so far as more stringent limits are justified, first, in the light of the principles of social sustainability and, second, in the light of the values set out in Article 36 TFEU, which include public policy and public security. The referring court also points out that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) is of the opinion that the Court’s case-law relating to the quantitative limits on subcontracting in the field of public procurement, which concerns Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), does not apply in the context of Directive 2014/24.

17 However, the referring court also observes that, like Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) and Directive 2004/18, Directive 2014/24 does not impose any quantitative limit on subcontracting. According to the referring court, the setting of a general limit on subcontracting of 30% of the total amount of the contract may make it more difficult for undertakings, particularly small and medium-sized undertakings, to access public contracts, thereby hindering the exercise of freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services. That limit is set in abstract terms as a certain percentage of the contract, irrespective of the possibility of verifying the capacities of potential subcontractors and without mention of the essential character of the tasks in question.

18 Consequently, the referring court is uncertain as to whether the national legislation at issue goes beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives pursued.

19 In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Italy) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Do the principles of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services referred to in Articles 49 and 56 of the [TFEU], Article 71 of [Directive 2014/24], which does not contemplate quantitative limitations on subcontracting, and the EU-law principle of proportionality preclude the application of national legislation in matters relating to public procurement, such as the Italian rule set out in the third sentence of Article 105(2) of [Legislative Decree No 50/2016], pursuant to which subcontracting cannot exceed 30% of the total amount of the contract for works, services or supplies?'

20 The referring court's request that its request for a preliminary ruling be determined pursuant to an expedited procedure in accordance with Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice was refused by order of the President of the Court of 8 March 2018, Vitali (C-63/18, not published, EU:C:2018:199).

Consideration of the question referred 21 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 49 and 56 TFEU and Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which limits to 30% the share of the contract which the tenderer is permitted to subcontract to third parties.

22 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that since the value, net of VAT, of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is greater than the threshold of EUR 5 225 000 prescribed by Article 4(a) of Directive 2014/24, it is in the light of that directive that the present request for a preliminary ruling must be answered.

23 That directive, as is apparent, in essence, from recital 1, seeks to ensure compliance, in the award of public contracts, with, inter alia, the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, as well as with the principles deriving therefrom, in particular equal treatment, non-discrimination, proportionality and transparency, and to ensure that public procurement is opened up to competition.

24 In particular, to that end, the directive explicitly contemplates, in Article 63(1), the possibility for tenderers to rely, subject to certain conditions, on the capacities of other entities to meet certain selection criteria for economic operators.

25 In addition, Article 71 of that directive, which deals specifically with subcontracting, provides, in paragraph 2, that the contracting authority may ask, or may be required by a Member State to ask, the tenderer to indicate in its tender any share of the contract it may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors.

26 It follows that, like Directive 2004/18 that it repealed, Directive 2014/24 provides for the possibility for tenderers to rely on subcontractors for the performance of a contract, provided that the conditions laid down in that directive are met (see, to that effect, in respect of Directive 2004/18, judgment of 14 July 2016, Wrocław — Miasto na prawach powiatu, C-406/14, EU:C:2016:562, paragraphs 31 to 33).

27 According to settled case-law, and as recital 78 of Directive 2014/24 makes clear, it is in the interests of the European Union to ensure, in the field of public procurement, that the opening up of competition in tendering procedures is enhanced. The use of subcontractors, which is likely to facilitate access of small and medium-sized undertakings to public contracts, contributes to the pursuit of that objective (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 April 2017, Borta, C-298/15, EU:C:2017:266, paragraph 48 and the case-law cited).

28 Furthermore, the Court held in paragraph 35 of its judgment of 14 July 2016, Wrocław — Miasto na prawach powiatu (C-406/14, EU:C:2016:562), which concerned the interpretation of Directive 2004/18, that a clause in the tender specifications for a public works contract which imposes limits on the use of subcontractors for a share of the contract fixed in abstract terms as a certain percentage of that contract, irrespective of the possibility of verifying the capacities of potential subcontractors and without any mention of the essential character of the tasks which would be concerned, is incompatible with Directive 2004/18, which was applicable in the context of the proceedings giving rise to that judgment.

29 In that regard it should be noted that, while Article 71 of Directive 2014/24 reproduces, in essence, the wording of Article 25 of Directive 2004/18, it nevertheless prescribes additional rules on subcontracting. In particular, Article 71 provides for the possibility for the contracting authority to ask, or of being required by a Member State to ask, the tenderer to inform it of its intentions as regards subcontracting, and for the possibility, subject to certain conditions, for the contracting authority to transfer due payments directly to the subcontractor for services, supplies or works provided to the main contractor. In addition, Article 71 provides that contracting authorities may verify, or may be required by Member States to verify, whether there are grounds to exclude subcontractors pursuant to Article 57 of that directive due to, inter alia, participation in a criminal organisation, corruption or fraud.

30 However, it cannot be inferred from the intention of the EU legislature to circumscribe more precisely, by means of the adoption of such rules, the situations in which the tenderer uses subcontractors that Member States now have the power to limit that use to a share of the contract fixed in abstract terms as a certain percentage of the contract, as in the case of the limit imposed by the legislation at issue in the main proceedings.

31 In that regard, the Italian Government submits that it is open to Member States to provide for measures other than those specifically listed in Directive 2014/24, in order to ensure, inter alia, observance of the principle of transparency in public procurement procedures, given the greater emphasis placed on that principle in the context of that directive.

32 More specifically, the Italian Government highlights the fact that the limit on the use of subcontracting at issue in the main proceedings is justified in the light of the particular circumstances prevailing in Italy, where subcontracting has always been one of the mechanisms used to carry out criminal operations. By limiting the share of the contract that can be subcontracted, the national legislation makes participation in public purchasing less attractive to criminal organisations, and this is capable of preventing the phenomenon of mafia infiltration in public purchasing and thus protecting public policy.

33 It is true, as the Italian Government points out, that recitals 41 and 105 of Directive 2014/24 and certain provisions thereof, such as Article 71(7), explicitly state that Member States remain free to provide for rules in their national legislation that in some respects are more stringent than those provided for by the directive as regards subcontracting, provided that those rules are compatible with EU law.

34 It is also true, as is apparent from, inter alia, the qualitative selection criteria provided for in Directive 2014/24, in particular the exclusion grounds laid down in Article 57(1), that, by adopting such provisions, the EU legislature intended to prevent economic operators who have been the subject of a conviction by final judgment in the circumstances prescribed in that article from participating in a procurement procedure.

35 Similarly, recital 41 of Directive 2014/24 states that nothing in that directive should prevent the imposition or enforcement of measures necessary, inter alia, to protect public policy, public morality and public security, provided that those measures are in conformity with the TFEU, while recital 100 of that directive states that public contracts should not be awarded, inter alia, to economic operators who have participated in a criminal organisation.

36 In addition, according to settled case-law, Member States must be recognised as having a certain discretion for the purpose of adopting measures intended to ensure observance of the principle of transparency, which is binding on contracting authorities in any procedure for the award of a public contract. Each Member State is best placed to identify, in the light of historical, legal, economic or social considerations specific to it, situations propitious to conduct liable to bring about breaches of that principle (see, to that effect, judgment of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraph 26 and the case-law cited).

37 More specifically, the Court has already held that combating the phenomenon of infiltration of the public procurement sector by organised crime constitutes a legitimate objective capable of justifying a restriction on the fundamental rules and general principles of the TFEU which apply in public procurement procedures (see, to that effect, judgment of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraphs 27 and 28).

38 However, even if a quantitative limit on the use of subcontracting may be regarded as likely to combat such a phenomenon, a restriction such as that at issue in the main proceedings goes beyond what is necessary to achieve that objective.

39 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that the contracting authorities must, throughout the procedure, observe the principles of procurement set out in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, which include, inter alia, the principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality (judgment of 20 September 2018, Montte, C-546/16, EU:C:2018:752, paragraph 38).

40 In particular, as pointed out in paragraph 30 of the present judgment, the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings prohibits, in general and abstract terms, use of subcontracting which exceeds a fixed percentage of the public contract concerned, so that that prohibition applies whatever the economic sector concerned by the contract at issue, the nature of the works or the identity of the subcontractors. Furthermore, such a general prohibition does not allow for any assessment on a case-by-case basis by the contracting entity (see, by analogy, judgment of 5 April 2017, Borta, C-298/15, EU:C:2017:266, paragraphs 54 and 55).

41 It follows that, in the context of national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, in respect of all contracts, a significant part of the works, supplies or services concerned must be performed by the tenderer itself, failing which it will be automatically excluded from the procurement procedure, including where the contracting entity would be able to verify the identity of the subcontractors concerned and would take the view, after verification, that such a prohibition is not necessary in order to combat organised crime in the context of the contract in question.

42 As the Commission points out, the objective pursued by the Italian legislature could be achieved by less restrictive measures, as in the case of those provided for in Article 71 of Directive 2014/24 and referred to in paragraph 29 of the present judgment. In fact, as the referring court states, Italian law already provides for numerous measures explicitly intended to prohibit undertakings suspected of belonging to the mafia, or in any event of being linked to the interests of the main criminal organisations operating in the country, from having access to public tendering procedures.

43 Accordingly, a restriction on the use of subcontracting such as that at issue in the main proceedings cannot be regarded as compatible with Directive 2014/24.

44 That conclusion cannot be called into question by the argument put forward by the Italian Government that the checks which the contracting authority is required to carry out under national law are ineffective. That fact, which, as seems clear from the Italian Government's own observations, results from the specific manner in which those checks are carried out, does not in any way alter the restrictive nature of the national measure at issue in the main proceedings. Moreover, in the present case the Italian Government has not in any way demonstrated that the various rules provided for in Article 71 of Directive 2014/24, by which Member States may limit the use of subcontracting, and the grounds for excluding subcontractors made possible under Article 57 of that directive, which are referred to in Article 71(6)(b), cannot be implemented in such a way as to achieve the objective pursued by the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings.

45 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling is that Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which limits to 30% the share of the contract which the tenderer is permitted to subcontract to third parties.

Costs

46 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2015/2170 of 24 November 2015, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which limits to 30% the share of the contract which the tenderer is permitted to subcontract to third parties.

Order

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(1) and (2) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 3), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1) (‘Directive 89/665’), read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (‘the Charter’) and the principles of equivalence and effectiveness.

2 The request has been made in a dispute between Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco Soc. coop. soc. Impresa Sociale Onlus (‘Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco’), on one hand, and Consorzio Intercomunale Servizi Sociali di Pinerolo (‘CISS di Pinerolo’) and Azienda Sanitaria Locale To3 di Collegno e Pinerolo, on the other, concerning the award of a public services contract for home care services to an ad hoc consortium of undertakings constituted by Ati Cilte Soc. coop. soc., Coesa Pinerolo Soc. coop. soc. arl and La Dua Valadda Soc. coop. soc. (‘the ad hoc consortium’).

Legal context

European Union law

3 The fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 provide as follows:

‘Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65)] or Directive [2014/23], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that review procedures are available, under detailed rules which Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

4 Article 2c of that directive, relating to 'time limits for applying for review', provides:

'Where a Member State provides that any application for review of a contracting authority's decision taken in the context of, or in relation to, a contract award procedure falling within the scope of Directive [2014/24] or [Directive 2014/23] must be made before the expiry of a specified period, this period shall be at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting authority's decision is sent to the tenderer or candidate if fax or electronic means are used or, if other means of communication are used, this period shall be either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting authority's decision is sent to the tenderer or candidate or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of the contracting authority's decision. The communication of the contracting authority's decision to each tenderer or candidate shall be accompanied by a summary of the relevant reasons. In the case of an application for review concerning decisions referred to in Article 2(1)(b) of this Directive that are not subject to a specific notification, the time period shall be at least 10 calendar days from the date of the publication of the decision concerned.'

Italian law

5 Article 120(2-bis) of Annex I to decreto legislativo n. 104 — Codice del processo amministrativo (Legislative Decree No 104 establishing the Administrative Procedure Code) of 2 July 2010 (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 156 of 7 July 2010), as amended by Article 204 of decreto legislativo n. 50 — Codice dei contratti pubblici (Legislative Decree No 50 establishing the Public Procurement Code) of 18 April 2016 (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016) ('the Administrative Procedure Code'), provides:

'The decision determining exclusions from a tendering procedure and admissions to it on the outcome of the evaluation of the subjective economic-financial and technical-professional requirements must be challenged within 30 days from its publication on the contracting authority's website, in accordance with Article 29(1) of the [Public Procurement Code]. Failure to mount a challenge excludes the possibility of pleading illegality in respect of subsequent decisions in the tendering procedure, including by cross-appeal. Any challenge to the proposal for award of the contract, when it is made, and of other intermediate decisions made during the procedure which do not cause immediate harm shall also be inadmissible.'

6 Article 29 of Legislative Decree No 50 establishing the Public Procurement Code of 18 April 2016, as amended by decreto legislativo n. 56 (Legislative Decree No 56) of 19 April 2017 (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 103 of 5 May 2017) ('the Public Procurement Code') provides:

'… In order to allow an action to be brought pursuant to Article 120(2-bis) of the Administrative Procedure Code, the decision determining exclusions from a tendering procedure and admissions to it following verification of the documents establishing a lack of grounds for exclusion as set out in Article 80, as well as the fulfilment of the economic-financial and technical-professional requirements, shall also be published within the two days following the adoption of the relevant decisions. Within that same period of two days, the candidates and tenderers shall be given notice … of that decision, stipulating the office or restricted-access computer links at which the relevant documents are available. The period for the challenge referred to in the aforementioned Article 120(2-bis) starts to run from the moment the documents referred to in the second sentence are made effectively available, together with the reasoning adopted by the contracting authority.'

7 Article 53(2) and (3) of the Public Procurement Code provides:

'2. Without prejudice to the provisions laid down by the present code concerning the contracts awarded on condition of confidentiality or the implementation of which requires specific security measures, the right of access shall be postponed:

(a) until the expiry of the time limit for submission of the tender in open procedures, as regards the list of persons having submitted tenders;

(b) until the expiry of the time limit for the submission of tenders in the restricted and negotiated procedures and in informal calls for tender, as regards the list of persons having requested an invitation to participate or who have expressed their interest, and the list of persons who have been invited to submits tenders and the list of persons who have submitted those tenders; the persons whose request for an invitation was rejected may have access to the list of persons who have requested an invitation to participate or who have expressed their interest, after the official notification by the contracting authorities of the name of candidates to be invited;

(c) as regards tender, until the contract is awarded;

(d) as regards the procedure for checking anomalies in the tender, until the contract is awarded;

3. The decisions indicated in paragraph 2, until the expiry of the time limits set out therein, cannot be communicated to third parties or disseminated in any manner whatsoever.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

8 By decision of 19 May 2017, the CISS di Pinerolo awarded the public services contract for home assistance services within its territorial remit to the ad hoc consortium for the period from 1 June 2017 to 31 May 2020, applying the criterion of the most economically advantageous offer.

9 Once the award was made, the Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco, which was ranked second, brought an action for annulment before the referring court, namely the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (Regional Administrative Court, Piedmont, Italy), against the decision awarding the public contract concerned and various decisions in the course of the tendering procedure, including the decision not to exclude the ad hoc consortium, arguing, inter alia, that due to the failure to lodge a provisional deposit of the required amount or to satisfy the conditions for participation, that group should not have been allowed to participate in the tendering procedure.

10 The referring court states that the contracting authority and the ad hoc consortium pleaded the inadmissibility of the action, on the ground that it was brought against the final decision of the contracting authority. In accordance with the accelerated procedure established by the combined provisions of Article 29 of the Public Procurement Code and Article 120(2-bis) of the Administrative Procedure Code, the action brought by Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco should have been brought within 30 days from the notification of the act authorising the tenderers to participate in the bidding procedure.

11 The referring court states, in that regard, that the introduction of the accelerated procedure for challenging decisions to exclude or admit tenderers, laid down in Article 120(2-bis) of the Administrative Procedure Code, responds to the need to enable disputes to be resolved before the award decision, by determining, in an exhaustive manner, the persons eligible to participate in the tendering procedure before the examination of the tenders and, therefore, the designation of the successful tenderer.

12 It states, however, that that accelerated procedure is just as open to criticism with regard to certain aspects, in particular, with regard to EU law.

13 In that connection, it observes, first of all, that that procedure obliges the tenderer who is not eligible to participate in the tendering procedure to seek a review of the decision relating to admission or non-exclusion of all the tenderers so that, on one hand, it does not know at that time who will be the successful tenderer and, on the other hand, it does not itself have any advantage in challenging the award decision without a ranking in the final classification. That tenderer is therefore obliged to bring legal proceedings without any guarantee that that initiative will yield real benefits, while obliging it to bear the costs related to the initial costs of bringing those procedures.

14 The referring court then points out that a tenderer required to bring proceedings in that way in accordance the accelerated procedure not only has no actual and current interest but, under Article 120(2-bis) of the Administrative Procedure Code, also suffers various types of damage. The first results from the substantial financial costs related to bringing multiple actions. The second relates to the possible compromise of its position in the eyes of the adjudicating authority. The third relates to the negative consequences of its ranking, as Article 83 of the Public Procurement Code provides that the influence of proceedings brought by the tenderer is a negative criterion.

15 Lastly, the referring court points out that the excessively difficult access to administrative justice is made worse by Article 53 of the Public Procurement Code, paragraph 3 of which prohibits public officials or persons responsible for public services from communicating or, in any event making public, subject to criminal penalties, the decisions in the tendering procedure, access to which is deferred until the award decision. Having regard to the mandatory nature of that prohibition, the persons responsible for the procedure are reluctant to disclose the administrative documents relating to tenderers, apart from the admission decision, which forces economic operators to bring proceedings 'blindfolded'.

16 In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (Regional Administrative Court, Piedmont) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Do the European rules on the rights of defence, due process and effective substantive operation of the protection afforded, in particular, by Articles 6 and 13 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed in Rome on 4 November 1950, Article 47 of [the Charter] and Article 1(1) and (2) of [Directive 89/665] preclude a provision of national law, such as Article 120(2-bis) of [the Administrative Procedure Code], which requires an operator taking part in a tendering procedure to challenge the admission of/failure to exclude another entity, within a period of 30 days of the communication of the decision to admit/exclude participants?

(2) Do the European rules on the rights of defence, due process and effective substantive operation of the protection afforded, in particular, by Articles 6 and 13 ECHR, Article 47 of [the Charter] and Article 1(1) and (2) of [Directive 89/665], preclude a provision of national law, such as Article 120(2-bis) of [the Administrative Procedure Code], which prevents an economic operator from claiming, upon conclusion of the procedure, even by cross-appeal, that the decision to admit other operators is unlawful, in particular the one awarded the contract or the applicant in the main action, if they had not previously challenged the decision to admit in the manner set out in the preceding question?'

Consideration of the questions referred

17 Pursuant to Article 99 of its Rules of Procedure, where the answer to a question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling may be clearly deduced from existing case-law, the Court may at any time, on a proposal from the Judge-Rapporteur and after hearing the Advocate General, give its decision by reasoned order.

18 It is appropriate to apply that article in the present case.

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

19 As a preliminary point, it must be observed, as is clear from the observations presented to the Court, that the value of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings is EUR 5 684 000, which largely exceeds the thresholds laid down in Article 4 of Directive 2014/24.

20 Directive 89/665 is therefore applicable to that contract in accordance with Article 46 of Directive 2014/23 and, therefore, the request for a preliminary ruling cannot be declared inadmissible simply on the ground that there was no mention of the value of that contract in the order for reference, contrary to the Italian Government's submissions.

21 Neither can the request for a preliminary ruling be declared inadmissible on the ground that it asks the Court to review the discretionary choice of the Italian legislature in transposing Directive 89/665, as the CISS di Pinerolo argues. The questions referred are clearly directed towards the interpretation of a number of provisions of that directive.

22 The reference for a preliminary ruling is therefore admissible.

The first question

23 By its first question, the referring court asks essentially whether Article 1(1) and (2) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides that actions against the decisions by contracting authorities to admit or exclude tenderers from participation in public procurement procedures must be brought within 30 days of their notification to the parties concerned, failing which they will be time-barred.

24 It must be recalled, first of all, that in accordance with Article 2c of Directive 89/665, Member States may lay down time limits within which an action may be brought against a decision of a contracting authority taken in the context of an award procedure for a contract falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24.

25 That provision states that that time limit is to be at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting authority's decision is sent to the tenderer or candidate if fax or electronic means are used or, if other means of communication are used, this period shall be either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting authority's decision is sent to the tenderer or candidate or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of the contracting authority's decision. The same provision also states that the contracting authority's decision is to be sent to each tenderer or candidate, accompanied by a summary of the relevant reasons.

26 Thus it is clear from the very wording of Article 2c of Directive 89/665 that a time limit, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, within which actions against decisions of contracting authorities to admit or exclude tenderers from participation in public procurement procedures falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24 must be brought within 30 days from the time that the decisions are sent to the parties concerned, failing which those actions will be time-barred is, in principle, compatible with EU law, provided that those decisions contain a summary of the relevant reasons.

27 Furthermore, Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to ensure that decisions taken by contracting authorities may be reviewed as effectively and as rapidly as possible. The Court has already had occasion to point out that the imposition of time limits for bringing actions which will be time-barred if those time limits are not complied with, enables the objective of rapidity pursued by Directive 89/665, which requires operators to challenge promptly preliminary measures or interim decisions taken in public procurement procedures, to be attained (see, to that effect, judgment of 28 January 2010, Commission v Ireland, C-456/08, EU:C:2010:46, paragraph 60 and the case-law cited).

28 The Court also held that setting reasonable time limits for bringing proceedings must be regarded, in principle, as satisfying the requirement of effectiveness under Directive 89/665, since it is an application of the fundamental principle of legal certainty (judgments of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 76, and of 21 January 2010, Commission v Germany, C-17/09, not published, EU:C:2010:33, paragraph 22), and is compatible with the fundamental right to effective legal protection (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 September 2014, Fastweb, C-19/13, EU:C:2014:2194, paragraph 58).

29 The objective of rapidity pursued by Directive 89/665 must, however, be achieved in national law in compliance with the requirements of legal certainty. Thus, Member States have the obligation to put in place rules on time limits which are sufficiently precise, clear and transparent so as to enable individuals to ascertain their rights and obligations (see, to that effect, judgments of 30 May 1991, Commission v Germany, C-361/88, EU:C:1991:224, paragraph 24, and of 7 November 1996, Commission v Luxembourg, C-221/94, EU:C:1996:424, paragraph 22).

30 In that connection, when defining the detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, the Member States must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 or the rights conferred on individuals by EU law, in particular, the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter (see, that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraphs 43 to 45).

31 The objective laid down in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 of guaranteeing effective procedures for review of infringements of the provisions applicable in the field of public procurement can be realised only if the periods laid down for bringing such proceedings start to run only from the date on which the claimant knew, or ought to have known, of the alleged infringement of those provisions (judgments of 28 January 2010, Uniplex (UK), C-406/08, EU:C:2010:45, paragraph 32; of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 52; and of 8 May 2014, Idrodinamica Spurgo Velox and Others, C-161/13, EU:C:2014:307 paragraph 37).

32 It follows that a national law, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides that actions against the decisions of contracting authorities admitting or excluding tenderers from participating in public procurement procedures must be brought within 30 days from their communication to the parties concerned, failing which they will be time-barred, is compatible with Directive 89/665 only if the decisions sent contain a summary of the relevant reasons ensuring that the parties concerned knew or ought to have known of the infringements of EU law alleged.

33 According to the Court's settled case-law, the effectiveness of the judicial review guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter requires that the person concerned must be able to ascertain the reasons upon which the decision taken in relation to him is based, either by reading the decision itself or by requesting and obtaining notification of those reasons, so as to make it possible for him to defend his rights in the best possible conditions and to decide, with full knowledge of the relevant facts, whether there is any point in his applying to the court with jurisdiction, and in order to put the latter fully in a position in which it may carry out the review of the lawfulness of the national decision in question (see, to that effect, judgments of 15 October 1987, Heylens and Others, 222/86, EU:C:1987:442, paragraph 15, and of 4 June 2013, ZZ, C-300/11, EU:C:2013:363, paragraph 53).

34 However, the referring court points out that the tenderer who wishes to challenge a decision to admit a competitor must bring its action within 30 days of its notification, that is at a time when it is often unable to determine whether there is really an interest, as it does not know whether that competitor will ultimately be awarded the contract or whether it will be in a position to win the contract itself.

35 It should be recalled, in that connection, that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 provides that Member States must ensure that review procedures are available, under detailed rules which they themselves may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

36 The latter provision is intended to apply, inter alia, to the situation of any tenderer which considers that a decision allowing a competitor to participate in a tender procedure is unlawful and is likely to cause it harm, that likelihood of harm being sufficient to justify an immediate interest in bringing an action against that decision, leaving aside harm which may also result from the award of the contract to another candidate.

37 In any event, the Court has ruled that a decision allowing a tenderer to participate in an award procedure is a decision which may, under Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665, be subject to an independent judicial review (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others, C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraphs 26 to 29 and 34).

38 Therefore, the answer to the first question is that Directive 89/665 and, in particular, Articles 1 and 2c, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude a national law, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides that actions against the decisions of contracting authorities to allow or exclude tenderers from participation in public procurement award procedures must be brought within 30 days from their communication to the parties concerned, failing which they will be time-barred, provided that decisions communicated contain a summary of the relevant reasons, ensuring that the persons concerned knew or could have known of the infringement of EU law alleged.

The second question

39 By its second question, the referring court asks essentially whether Article 1(1) and (2) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides that, in the absence of remedies against the decisions of the contracting authorities to allow tenderers to participate in public procurement procedures within 30 days of their communication, it is no longer possible for the parties concerned to rely on the illegality of those decisions in the context of an appeal against subsequent acts and, in particular, against award decisions.

40 In that connection, the Court has repeatedly held that Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as not, in principle, precluding national legislation which provides that any application for review of a contracting authority's decision must be commenced within a time limit laid down to that effect and that any irregularity in the award procedure relied upon in support of such application must be raised within the same period, if it is not to be out of time, with the result that, when that period has passed, it is no longer possible to challenge such a decision or to raise such an irregularity, provided that the time limit in question is reasonable (judgments of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 79; of 27 February 2003, Santex, C-327/00, EU:C:2003:109, paragraph 50; and of 11 October 2007, Lämmerzahl, C-241/06, EU:C:2007:597, paragraph 50).

41 That case-law is based on the consideration that full implementation of the objective sought by Directive 89/665 would be undermined if candidates and tenderers were allowed to invoke, at any stage of the award procedure, infringements of the rules of public procurement, thus obliging the contracting authority to restart the entire procedure in order to correct such infringements (judgments of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 75; of 11 October 2007, Lämmerzahl, C-241/06, EU:C:2007:597, paragraph 51; and of 28 January 2010, Commission v Ireland, C-456/08, EU:C:2010:46, paragraph 52). Such conduct, in so far as it may delay, without any objective reason, the commencement of the review procedures which Member States were required to institute by Directive 89/665 impairs the effective implementation of the EU directives on the award of public contracts (judgment of 12 February 2004, Grossmann Air Service, C-230/02, EU:C:2004:93, paragraph 38).

42 In the present case, it follows from the case-law of the Court that Directive 89/665, in particular, Article 2c thereof, must be interpreted as meaning that, in principle, it does not preclude the provisions of Italian law under which there is no possibility for a tenderer to rely on the unlawfulness of the decision in the context of an action brought against a subsequent act where no action is brought against the decision of a contracting authority within 30 days.

43 However, although national rules on limitation periods are not in themselves contrary to the requirements of Article 2c of Directive 89/665, it cannot be excluded that, in the context of the particular circumstances, or having regard to some of their rules, their application may entail a breach of the rights conferred on individuals by EU law, in particular, the right to an effective remedy and the right to a fair trial, enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter (see, to that effect, judgments of 27 February 2003, Santex, C-327/00, EU:C:2003:109, paragraph 57, and of 11 October 2007, Lämmerzahl, C-241/06, EU:C:2007:597, paragraphs 55 and 56).

44 Thus, the Court has already had the occasion to rule that Directive 89/665 was to be interpreted as preluding rules on limitation periods laid down by national law from being applied in such a way that a tenderer is refused access to a review of an unlawful decision even though he became aware of that illegality only after the expiry of the time limit (see, to that effect, judgments of 27 February 2003, Santex, C-327/00, EU:C:2003:109, paragraph 60, and of 11 October 2007, Lämmerzahl, C-241/06, EU:C:2007:597, paragraphs 59 to 61 and 64).

45 It must also be pointed out, as set out in paragraph 31 of the present order, that the Court also held that effective procedures for review of infringements of the provisions applicable in the field of public procurement can be realised only if the time limits within which to bring proceedings start to run from the date on which the claimant knew, or ought to have known, of the alleged infringement of those provisions (see, to that effect, judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 52 and the case-law cited).

46 Therefore, it is for the referring court to determine whether, in the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, the Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco did in fact know or ought to have known from the notification by the contracting authority of the decision to allow the ad hoc consortium to participate in the tender procedure, in accordance with Article 29 of the Public Procurement Code, of the grounds for the unlawfulness of that decision that it alleges, based on the failure to lodge a provisional security in the amount required or to prove that the conditions for participation were satisfied and, therefore, whether it was in fact in a position to bring an action within the time limit of 30 days laid down in Article 120(2-bis) of the Administrative Procedure Code.

47 In particular, it is for the referring court to ensure that, in the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, the combined application of the provisions of Article 29 and Article 53(2) and (3) of the Public Procurement Code, which regulate access to the tender documents and their dissemination, did not exclude all possibilities for the Cooperativa Animazione Valdocco to learn of the illegality of the decision to allow the ad hoc consortium to participate that it alleges or to bring an action from the time at which it knew of that decision, within the time limit laid down in Article 120(2-bis) of the Administrative Procedure Code.

48 It must be added that it is for the referring court interpret the national law in a way which accords with the objective of Directive 89/665. Where an interpretation in accordance with the objective of Directive 89/665 is not possible, the national court must refrain from applying provisions of national law which are at variance with that directive (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 October 2007, Lämmerzahl, C-241/06, EU:C:2007:597, paragraphs 62 and 63), since Article 1(1) thereof is unconditional and sufficiently precise to be relied on against the contracting authority (judgments of 2 June 2005, Koppensteiner, C-15/04, EU:C:2005:345, paragraph 38, and of 11 October 2007, Lämmerzahl, C-241/06, EU:C:2007:597, paragraph 63).

49 Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to the second question is that Directive 89/665, and in particular Articles 1 and 2c thereof, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides that, in the absence of an action against the decisions of contracting authorities allowing tenderers to participate in public procurement procedures within 30 days from the communication of those decisions, it is no longer possible for the persons concerned to plead the illegality of the decisions in an action against subsequent decisions and, in particular, against award decisions, subject to the proviso that such a time limit may be relied on only if the persons concerned knew or ought to have known from that notification of the illegality they allege.

Costs

50 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, and in particular Articles 1 and 2c thereof, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude a national law, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides that actions against the decisions of contracting authorities to allow or exclude tenderers from participation in public procurement award procedures must be brought within 30 days from their communication to the parties concerned, failing which they will be time-barred, provided that decisions communicated contain a summary of the relevant reasons, ensuring that the persons concerned knew or ought to have known of the infringement of EU law alleged.

2. Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2014/23, and in particular Articles 1 and 2c thereof, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights, must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides that, in the absence of an action against the decisions of contracting authorities allowing tenderers to participate in public procurement procedures within 30 days from the communication of those decisions, it is no longer possible for the persons concerned to plead the illegality of the decisions in an action against subsequent decisions and, in particular, against award decisions, subject to the proviso that such a time limit may be relied on only if the persons concerned knew or ought to have known from that notification of the illegality they allege.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

19 June 2019 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2014/24/EU — Article 57(4)(c) and (g) — Award of public service contracts — Optional grounds for exclusion from participation in a procurement procedure — Grave professional misconduct rendering the integrity of the economic operator questionable — Early termination of a prior contract owing to deficiencies in its performance — Legal challenge preventing the contracting authority from assessing the breach of contract until the end of the legal proceedings)

In Case C-41/18,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Campania (Regional Administrative Court, Campania, Italy), made by decision of 22 November 2017, received at the Court on 22 January 2018, in the proceedings

Meca Srl

v

Comune di Napoli,

other parties:

Sirio Srl,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber), composed of M. Vilaras, President of the Chamber, R. Silva de Lapuerta, Vice-President of the Court, D. Šváby (Rapporteur), S. Rodin and N. Piçarra, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: R. Schiano, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 13 December 2018,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of – the Comune di Napoli, by A. Andreottola and A. Cuomo, avvocati, – Sirio Srl, by L. Lentini and C. Sito, avvocati,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara, P. Ondrůšek and L. Haasbeek, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 7 March 2019,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Meca Srl and the Comune di Napoli (Municipality of Naples, Italy) concerning the decision of the Municipality of Naples to authorise Sirio Srl to continue to participate in a call for tenders.

Legal context

EU law

3 Recitals 101 and 102 of Directive 2014/24 state:

‘(101) Contracting authorities should … be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable, for instance because of violations of environmental or social obligations, including rules on accessibility for disabled persons or other forms of grave professional misconduct, such as violations of competition rules or of intellectual property rights. It should be clarified that grave professional misconduct can render an economic operator’s integrity questionable and thus render the economic operator unsuitable to receive the award of a public contract irrespective of whether the economic operator would otherwise have the technical and economical capacity to perform the contract.

Bearing in mind that the contracting authority will be responsible for the consequences of its possible erroneous decision, contracting authorities should also remain free to consider that there has been grave professional misconduct, where, before a final and binding decision on the presence of mandatory exclusion grounds has been rendered, they can demonstrate by any appropriate means that the economic operator has violated its obligations, including obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions, unless otherwise provided by national law. They should also be able to exclude candidates or tenderers whose performance in earlier public contracts has shown major deficiencies with regard to substantive requirements, for instance failure to deliver or perform, significant shortcomings of the product or service delivered, making it unusable for the intended purpose, or misbehaviour that casts serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator. National law should provide for a maximum duration for such exclusions.

In applying facultative grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities should pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality. Minor irregularities should only in exceptional circumstances lead to the exclusion of an economic operator. However repeated cases of minor irregularities can give rise to doubts about the reliability of an economic operator which might justify its exclusion.

(102) Allowance should, however, be made for the possibility that economic operators can adopt compliance measures aimed at remedying the consequences of any criminal offences or misconduct and at effectively preventing further occurrences of the misbehaviour. Those measures might consist in particular of personnel and organisational measures such as the severance of all links with persons or organisations involved in the misbehaviour, appropriate staff reorganisation measures, the implementation of reporting and control systems, the creation of an internal audit structure to monitor compliance and the adoption of internal liability and compensation rules. Where such measures offer sufficient guarantees, the economic operator in question should no longer be excluded on those grounds alone. Economic operators should have the possibility to request that compliance measures taken with a view to possible admission to the procurement procedure be examined. However, it should be left to Member States to determine the exact procedural and substantive conditions applicable in such cases. They should, in particular, be free to decide whether to allow the individual contracting authorities to carry out the relevant assessments or to entrust other authorities on a central or decentralised level with that task.’

4 Article 57 of that directive, entitled ‘Exclusion grounds’, provides:

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(g) where the economic operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract which led to early termination of that prior contract, damages or other comparable sanctions;

5. Contracting authorities shall at any time during the procedure exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2.

At any time during the procedure, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4.

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

An economic operator which has been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement or concession award procedures shall not be entitled to make use of the possibility provided for under this paragraph during the period of exclusion resulting from that judgment in the Member States where the judgment is effective.

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. They shall, in particular, determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 6 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability. Where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period shall not exceed five years from the date of the conviction by final judgment in the cases referred to in paragraph 1 and three years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4.’

Italian law

5 Article 80(5)(c) of decreto legislativo n. 50 Codice dei contratti pubblici (Legislative Decree No 50 on the Public Procurement Code) of 18 April 2016 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016;

‘the Public Procurement Code’) provides:

‘The contracting authorities shall exclude an economic operator from participation in the tendering procedure in any of the following situations, which may also concern a subcontractor in any of the cases provided for in Article 105(6), where:

(c) the contracting authorities demonstrate, by appropriate means, that the economic operator has committed grave professional misconduct such as to render its integrity or reliability questionable. Grave professional misconduct shall include: major deficiencies in the performance of a prior public contract or a prior concession contract where those deficiencies have led to the early termination of those contracts that has not been challenged in court or upheld following legal proceedings, to damages or to another comparable sanction; an attempt to influence unduly the decision-making process of the contracting authority or to obtain confidential information with a view to personal gain; the provision, even due to oversight, of incorrect or misleading information capable of influencing the decisions on exclusion, selection or award, or the omission of the information required for the proper conduct of the selection procedure;

…’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

6 The Municipality of Naples issued a call for tenders with a view to awarding a public service contract for school catering for the school year 2017/2018. That contract was divided into 10 lots, each of the lots corresponding to one of the districts in the Municipality of Naples.

7 It is apparent from the order for reference that, in the previous school year, Sirio and the Municipality of Naples had entered into a contract for the provision of school catering services in respect of two lots, which was terminated ahead of time in May 2017 on account of food poisoning caused by the presence of coliform bacteria in food served in a school canteen.

8 In that regard, after analyses carried out by the Agenzia regionale per la protezione ambientale della Campania (ARPAC) (the Campania Regional Environmental Protection Agency, Italy) on food samples kept by the management of the school in question confirmed the presence of coliform bacteria, in particular in braised beef, the public contract for school catering services in the school year 2016/2017 was awarded to Meca, which had been ranked second at the end of the tendering procedure for the award of that public contract.

9 In the context of its participation in the call for tenders referred to in paragraph 6 above, Sirio expressly stated that ‘by decision … of 29 June 2017, the Municipality of Naples terminated the contract … of 9 May 2017 early on account of a case of food poisoning’ and that an action contesting that early termination of contract had been lodged with the Tribunale di Napoli (District Court, Naples, Italy).

10 On 1 August 2017, the contracting authority authorised Sirio to proceed with its participation in that call for tenders for the lot in respect of which it had submitted a tender. Meca challenged the participation of Sirio in that call for tenders before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Campania (Regional Administrative Court, Campania, Italy), without waiting for the Municipality of Naples to adopt a decision awarding the contract at issue in the main proceedings, which it did on 7 November 2017, granting the contract to Sirio.

11 Meca takes the view that Sirio should not have been authorised to continue participating in the tendering procedure since its contract with the Municipality of Naples for the provision of school catering services in the school year 2016/2017 had been terminated early by the latter following the food poisoning of pupils and school staff.

12 In support of its action before the referring court, Meca complains that the Municipality of Naples did not assess the gravity of Sirio's breach of its obligations under the public contract to provide school catering services in the school year 2016/2017, despite Article 80(5)(c) of the Public Procurement Code, which entitles the Municipality to demonstrate 'by appropriate means, that the economic operator has committed grave professional misconduct such as to render its integrity or reliability questionable'. In the view of Meca, the challenge by Sirio before a civil court of the early termination of the contract for the provision of services referred to in paragraph 7 above cannot divest the contracting authority of that power. Thus, in view of the food poisoning which occurred in May 2017, the Municipality of Naples should not have automatically allowed Sirio to participate in the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings.

13 Conversely, both the Municipality of Naples and Sirio consider that the action brought by Sirio before the Tribunale di Napoli (District Court, Naples) prevented the contracting authority from conducting an assessment of the latter's reliability.

14 The referring court notes that the position of the Municipality of Naples and Sirio is not without basis since, according to the case-law of the Italian courts, it can be inferred from Article 80(5)(c) of the Public Procurement Code that a tenderer whose performance of a prior public contract has shown deficiencies must be admitted to a subsequent tendering procedure if it has brought an action, which is still pending, against the early termination of contract which resulted from those deficiencies.

15 The referring court considers that EU law may, however, preclude a national provision such as Article 80(5)(c) of the Public Procurement Code. That provision has the effect of rendering ineffective the optional ground for exclusion provided for therein since the contracting authority's discretion is rendered nugatory in the event that litigation is brought against the early termination of a prior contract. Although the Court has not yet had an opportunity to interpret Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, it is clear from the Court's case-law relating to Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), a provision repealed by Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, that EU law opposes automatic decisions concerning the optional exclusion of tenderers for grave professional misconduct, since such decisions must necessarily take the principle of proportionality into account.

16 The referring court submits that, conversely, the principles of proportionality and effectiveness should forbid automatic rules in the event that it is impossible to exclude an economic operator. Therefore, by preventing the contracting authority from conducting a reasoned assessment of the gravity of the professional misconduct giving rise to the early termination of a prior contract on the ground that a challenge to the early termination of that contract has been brought before a civil court, Article 80(5) of the Public Procurement Code infringes those principles and consequently Directive 2014/24. The referring court takes the view that Article 57(4)(g) of that directive does not in any way require a final, and therefore judicial, finding that the contractor was responsible.

17 The referring court submits that it is also apparent from the judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801), that 'professional misconduct' is a ground for exclusion where it has the characteristics of objective gravity. Under Italian law, the outcome of participation in a call for tenders is subject to an event that is within the control of the contractor alone, namely the decision to bring a legal action against the early termination of a prior contract.

18 Lastly, the referring court considers that the Italian legislation is also incompatible with the aims set out in recital 102 of Directive 2014/24, which introduces the mechanism enabling tenderers to take 'compliance measures'. Automatic admission to participate which results from the lodging of a civil action against the early termination of a prior contract discourages undertakings from adopting compliance measures even though these are necessary in order to avoid a recurrence of the conduct which led to that early termination.

19 It is in that context that the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Campania (Regional Administrative Court, Campania) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Do the EU principles of protection of legitimate expectations and of legal certainty, laid down in the [TFEU], and the principles deriving therefrom, such as those of equal treatment, non-discrimination, proportionality and effectiveness, referred to in Directive [2014/24], and the provisions of Article 57(4)(c) and (g) of that directive, preclude the application of a national provision, such as that contained in Article 80(5)(c) of [the Public Procurement Code], according to which challenging before the courts significant deficiencies identified in the performance of a previous procurement contract, which resulted in the early termination of that contract, excludes any assessment by the procuring entity as to the reliability of the tenderer, until a final ruling has been issued in the civil proceedings, when the undertaking concerned has not demonstrated that it has adopted any “self-cleaning” measures in order to remedy the breaches and avoid any repetition of them?’

Question referred for a preliminary ruling

Preliminary observations

20 In the first place, it is apparent from the file submitted to the Court that the estimated value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is EUR 1 127 660 and that consequently it exceeds the threshold of EUR 750 000 laid down in Article 4(d) of Directive 2014/24 for public service contracts for specific services listed in Annex XIV to that directive. It follows that Directive 2014/24 is applicable to the main proceedings and that the question referred by the national court must be understood exclusively in the light of the provisions of that directive.

21 In the second place, during the hearing before the Court, the Italian Government claimed that the interpretation of Article 80(5)(c) of the Public Procurement Code provided by the referring court in its request for a preliminary ruling no longer corresponds to the new legal position in Italian law.

22 Nevertheless, in a situation where opinions appear to differ as regards the applicable national legislation, it is settled case-law that, in preliminary ruling proceedings brought under Article 267 TFEU, it is not for the Court to specify the relevant provisions of national law applicable to the main proceedings. That is the prerogative of the referring court which, while setting out the internal legal framework, leaves it open to the Court to provide all the criteria for interpreting EU law so as to permit the court making the reference to assess the compatibility of national legislation with EU rules (judgment of 26 June 2008, Burda, C-284/06, EU:C:2008:365, paragraph 39).

23 In that context, the question referred by the national court must be answered on the basis of the factual and legal circumstances as they appear from the order for reference.

Substance

24 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 57(4)(c) and (g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding a national provision under which the lodging of a legal challenge to a decision adopted by a contracting authority to terminate a public contract early on account of major deficiencies in the performance thereof prevents the contracting authority which issues a further call for tenders from conducting an assessment, at the stage of selecting tenderers, of the reliability of the operator concerned by that early termination.

25 In the first place, as the Advocate General noted in point 32 of his Opinion, the wording of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 is sufficiently close to that of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 — a provision which it repealed — for the interpretation sought by the referring court to draw on the case-law of the Court relating to the latter provision.

26 Thus, when the Court interpreted the optional grounds for exclusion, such as those provided for in points (d) and (g) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, the only provisions which did not refer to national law, the Court relied on the second subparagraph of Article 45(2) of that directive, under which the Member States were to specify, having regard for EU law, the implementing conditions of paragraph 2, in order to circumscribe more strictly the discretion of the Member States and itself determine the scope of the optional ground for exclusion at issue (see, inter alia, judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraphs 25 to 31).

27 In that regard, it is undeniable that Directive 2014/24 restricts the discretion of the Member States. While a reference to national law and regulations was provided for in five of the seven situations referred to in Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, now, among the nine situations envisaged in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, only the situation referred to in point (b) of paragraph 4 includes such a reference.

28 In the second place, under Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, 'contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the [situations referred to in that provision]'. Thus, it follows from the wording of that provision that it is the contracting authorities, and not a national court, that have been entrusted with determining whether an economic operator must be excluded from a procurement procedure.

29 In the third place, the option available to any contracting authority to exclude a tenderer from a procurement procedure is particularly intended to enable it to assess the integrity and reliability of each of the tenderers, as is apparent from Article 57(4)(c) and (g) and recital 101 of Directive 2014/24.

30 As the Advocate General noted in points 42 and 43 of his Opinion, those two grounds for exclusion are based on an essential element of the relationship between the successful tenderer and the contracting authority, namely the reliability of the successful tenderer, on which the contracting authority's trust is founded. Thus, the first paragraph of recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 states that contracting authorities may exclude 'economic operators which have proven unreliable', while the second paragraph of that recital takes into consideration, in the performance of prior public contracts, 'misbehaviour that casts serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator'.

31 In the fourth place, under Article 57(5) of Directive 2014/24, contracting authorities must be able to exclude an economic operator 'at any time during the procedure' and not only after a court has delivered its judgment, which is additional evidence of the EU legislature's intention to enable the contracting authority to conduct its own assessment of the acts which an economic operator has committed or omitted either before or during the procurement procedure, in any of the cases referred to in Article 57(4) of that directive.

32 Lastly, if a contracting authority were to be automatically bound by an assessment conducted by a third party, it would probably be difficult for it to pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality when applying the optional grounds for exclusion. According to recital 101 of Directive 2014/24, that principle implies in particular that, before deciding to exclude an economic operator, that authority should take into account the minor nature of the irregularities committed or the repetition of minor irregularities.

33 It is thus clear, as the Advocate General observed in points 35 and 36 of his Opinion, that the Member States' discretion is not absolute and that, once a Member State decides to incorporate one of the optional grounds for exclusion provided for in Directive 2014/24, it must respect the essential characteristics thereof, as expressed in that directive. By stipulating that the Member States are to specify 'the implementing conditions for this Article' 'having regard to Union law', Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 prevents Member States from distorting the grounds for exclusion laid down in that provision or ignoring the objectives or principles underlying each of those grounds.

34 As has been pointed out in paragraph 28 above, it is clear from the wording of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 that the EU legislature intended to confer on the contracting authority, and on it alone, the task of assessing whether a candidate or tenderer must be excluded from a procurement procedure during the stage of selecting the tenderers.

35 It is on the basis of the foregoing considerations that the referring court must be answered.

36 As is apparent from the order for reference, Article 80(5)(c) of the Public Procurement Code entitles a contracting authority to exclude from the tendering procedure an economic operator where, inter alia, it establishes, by appropriate means, that: (i) that operator has committed grave professional misconduct such as to cast doubt on its integrity or reliability; (ii) that grave professional misconduct, which may result from major deficiencies in the performance of a prior public contract, has led to the early termination of the contract with the contracting authority, damages or another comparable sanction; and (iii) that early termination has not been challenged in court or upheld following legal proceedings.

37 It is clear that a national provision such as Article 80(5)(c) of the Public Procurement Code is not capable of safeguarding the effectiveness of the optional grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4)(c) and (g) of Directive 2014/24.

38 The discretion which Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 confers on the contracting authority can be hamstrung merely because a candidate or tenderer brings an action challenging the early termination of a prior public contract awarded to it, even though its conduct appeared sufficiently deficient as to warrant that early termination.

39 In addition, a rule such as that set out in Article 80(5)(c) of the Public Procurement Code clearly does not encourage a successful tenderer to whom a decision to terminate a prior public contract early is addressed to take corrective measures. To that extent, such a rule is likely to conflict with the requirements of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24.

40 That directive innovates, in particular by laying down, in Article 57(6), the mechanism for adopting corrective measures (‘self-cleaning’). That arrangement, which applies to economic operators which have not been excluded by a final judgment, is designed to encourage an economic operator who is in one of the situations referred to in Article 57(4) of that directive to provide evidence showing that the measures which it has taken are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant optional ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned must not be excluded from the procurement procedure. For this purpose, the economic operator must prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

41 In that regard, the corrective measures emphasise, as the Advocate General observed in point 44 of his Opinion, the importance attached to the reliability of the economic operator, as that factor profoundly influences the grounds for exclusion that relate to the tenderer’s subjective characteristics.

42 In view of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred must therefore be that Article 57(4)(c) and (g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as precluding a national provision under which the lodging of a legal challenge to a decision adopted by a contracting authority to terminate a public contract early on account of major deficiencies in the performance thereof prevents the contracting authority which issues a further call for tenders from conducting an assessment, at the stage of selecting tenderers, of the reliability of the operator concerned by that early termination.

Costs

43 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 57(4)(c) and (g) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as precluding a national provision under which the lodging of a legal challenge to a decision adopted by a contracting authority to terminate a public contract early on account of major deficiencies in the performance thereof prevents the contracting authority which issues a further call for tenders from conducting an assessment, at the stage of selecting tenderers, of the reliability of the operator concerned by that early termination.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 7 March 2019(1)

Case C-41/18

Meca Srl

v

Comune di Napoli,

with the intervention of:

Sirio Srl

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Campania (Regional Administrative Court, Campania, Italy))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Optional grounds for exclusion — Admissibility — Final award assented to by the appellant — Supervening loss of the object of the preliminary ruling proceedings — Grave professional misconduct — Termination of a previous contract due to deficiencies in performance — Legal challenge that prevents the contracting authority from assessing the breach of contract until the conclusion of the legal proceedings)

1. Under Italian public procurement rules, a candidate may be excluded from a (new) procurement procedure where significant deficiencies in its performance of a previous contract awarded to it led to the termination of that (first) contract.

2. Those rules would seem to indicate, (2) however, that, in assessing the reliability of candidates for the new procurement procedure, the contracting authority cannot take those deficiencies into account as grounds for exclusion if the economic operator that committed them has challenged the termination of the (first) contract through the courts.

3. The referring court needs to clarify whether this consequence of a legal challenge is consistent with the principles underlying Directive 2014/24/EU, (3) specifically, Article 57.

I. Legal framework

A. EU law. Directive 2014/24

4. Recital 101 is as follows:

‘Contracting authorities should further be given the possibility to exclude economic operators which have proven unreliable, for instance because of violations of environmental or social obligations, including rules on accessibility for disabled persons or other forms of grave professional misconduct, such as violations of competition rules or of intellectual property rights. It should be clarified that grave professional misconduct can render an economic operator's integrity questionable and thus render the economic operator unsuitable to receive the award of a public contract irrespective of whether the economic operator would otherwise have the technical and economical capacity to perform the contract.

Bearing in mind that the contracting authority will be responsible for the consequences of its possible erroneous decision, contracting authorities should also remain free to consider that there has been grave professional misconduct, where, before a final and binding decision on the presence of mandatory exclusion grounds has been rendered, they can demonstrate by any appropriate means that the economic operator has violated its obligations, including obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions, unless otherwise provided by national law. They should also be able to exclude candidates or tenderers whose performance in previous public contracts has shown major deficiencies with regard to substantive requirements, for instance failure to deliver or perform, significant shortcomings of the product or service delivered, making it unusable for the intended purpose, or misbehaviour that casts serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator. National law should provide for a maximum duration for such exclusions.

In applying facultative grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities should pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality. Minor irregularities should only in exceptional circumstances lead to the exclusion of an economic operator. However repeated cases of minor irregularities can give rise to doubts about the reliability of an economic operator which might justify its exclusion.'

5. Article 57 ('Exclusion grounds'), provides as follows:

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(g) where the economic operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract which led to early termination of that prior contract, damages or other comparable sanctions;

5. Contracting authorities shall at any time during the procedure exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2.

At any time during the procedure, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude an economic operator where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4.

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. They shall, in particular, determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 6 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability. Where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period shall not exceed five years from the date of the conviction by final judgment in the cases referred to in paragraph 1 and three years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4.'

B. Italian law. Legislative Decree No 50/2016 (4)

6. Article 80(5)(c) provides as follows:

'The contracting authority shall exclude from the procurement procedure any economic operator … which … can be demonstrated by appropriate means to have committed grave professional misconduct that renders its integrity or reliability questionable. Such misconduct includes significant deficiencies in the performance of a previous contract or concession contract which has led to its early termination, provided that the said termination has not been challenged through legal proceedings or that it has been confirmed on the conclusion of legal proceedings, or which has led to an award for damages or to other sanctions; attempts to exercise undue influence on the contracting authority's decision-making process or to obtain confidential information for its own benefit; and provision, including through negligence, of false or misleading information that may influence decisions on exclusion, selection or award of contracts, or failure to provide information required for the proper conduct of the selection process.'

II. Facts of the case and question referred

7. In the 2016/2017 academic year, Sirio Srl took part in a procurement procedure launched by the Municipality of Naples to provide the school meals service, for which it was awarded the contract.

8. While it was performing the contract there was a case of food poisoning, caused by the presence of coliform bacteria in the food that was supplied, which affected children and members of staff.

9. In view of this occurrence, on 29 June 2017 the Municipality of Naples: (a) ordered the suspension of the service and awarded the service to Meca, which had come second in the procurement procedure; and (b) terminated the contract with Sirio and enforced the guarantee.

10. Sirio challenged the termination of the contract in the civil courts (Tribunale di Napoli (District Court, Naples), Italy)), in proceedings in which a decision is pending.

11. In 2017/18, the Municipality of Naples opened a new procurement procedure for the school meals service, divided into 10 lots, for which Sirio submitted a tender.

12. Under Article 80(5)(c) of the PPC, in a decision of 1 August 2017, the contracting authority allowed Sirio's tender for lot No 7, without making any assessment of the seriousness of the breach of the previous contract.

13. Meca also took part in the tender process for the school meals service for 2017/2018 and is challenging the admission of Sirio in proceedings before the referring court. In its opinion, the contracting authority should have assessed Sirio's reliability, following the outbreak of food poisoning, instead of simply noting that Sirio had lodged a legal action against the termination of the previous contract.

14. The referring court considers that, in cases such as the present one, under a strict application of Italian law the contracting authority cannot assess the tenderer's reliability. In its opinion, the national legislature has opted to suspend evaluation by the administrative body and has made that evaluation entirely a matter for the courts, whose focus, moreover, is on whether the termination of the contract was correct, rather than on the reliability of the economic operator.

15. In the view of the referring court, the seriousness of the breach does not depend on an objective factor, but on a subjective decision by the economic operator which, when its contract is terminated early, opts to challenge the termination in the civil courts. The fact that a tenderer is automatically admitted to the new tender process as a result of taking legal action acts as an incentive to ignore professional misconduct and therefore as a disincentive to undertakings to take appropriate remedial action (as envisaged in recital 102 of Directive 2014/24) to prevent any reoccurrence of the breaches that led to the termination of the previous contract.

16. In these circumstances, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Campania (Regional Administrative Court, Campania, Italy) refers the following question to the Court of Justice:

> 'Do the EU principles of protection of legitimate expectations and of legal certainty, laid down in the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), and the principles deriving therefrom, such as those of equal treatment, non-discrimination, proportionality and effectiveness, referred to in Directive 2014/24 and the provisions of Article 57(4)(c) and (g) of that directive, preclude the application of a national provision, such as that contained in Article 80(5)(c) of Legislative Decree No 50/2016, according to which challenging before the courts significant deficiencies identified in the performance of a previous procurement contract, which resulted in the early termination of that contract, excludes any assessment by the contracting authority as to the reliability of the tenderer, until a final ruling has been issued in the civil proceedings, when the undertaking concerned has not demonstrated that it has adopted any "self-cleaning" measures in order to remedy the breaches and avoid any repetition of them?'

III. Proceedings before the Court of Justice

17. The order for reference was received at the Court on 22 January 2018.

18. Written observations have been submitted by Sirio, the Municipality of Naples, the Governments of Italy and Hungary, and the Commission. Only the Commission and the Government of Italy attended the hearing held on 13 December 2018.

IV. Assessment

A. The alleged supervening loss of the object of the preliminary ruling proceedings

19. In Sirio's view, the decision challenged by Meca, that is, the decision of 1 August 2017 which allowed Sirio to take part in the procurement procedure, did not prevent that procedure from going ahead, culminating, on 7 November 2017, with the award of the (new) contract to Sirio for the 2017/2018 school year.

20. As this latter administrative decision has not been challenged, Sirio maintains that the preliminary ruling proceedings have no purpose since, whatever their outcome, the award of the second contract is final and will be unaffected by the judgment.

21. I do not believe, however, that this circumstance is sufficient in order to rule that the reference for a preliminary ruling has become inadmissible. In my opinion, the challenge to the decision of 1 August 2017 remains unresolved, and a decision on it is not dependent on Meca's acceptance of the decision of 7 November 2017 on the award of the tender.

22. Specifically, if the decision of 1 August 2017 were eventually to be ruled null and void, this could have the effect of also invalidating the award of 7 November 2017 or alternatively, if that were not possible, it could provide the basis for an award for damages to Meca under domestic law, in line with Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665/EEC. (5)

23. In my view, therefore, there has been no supervening loss of the object of the preliminary ruling proceedings.

B. Comments on the interpretation of the national legislation

24. The referring court takes as a starting point that, under 'the interpretation provided by domestic case-law', Article 80(5)(c) of the PPC imposes 'an inescapable legal obligation' (6) to allow a tenderer to take part in a procurement procedure where the tenderer has had a previous contract terminated early due to significant deficiencies in performance of that contract (7) and it has challenged that termination through the courts.

25. The national legislation that now applies is different from the previous legislation (Legislative Decree No 163/2006). (8) Under the previous legislation, the contracting authority had the power, 'on the basis of any evidence', to demonstrate grave professional misconduct that would justify the exclusion of the tenderer. By contrast, the new regulations, contained in the PPC, combine points (c) and (g) of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 to produce the outcome described above.

26. Article 80(5)(c) of the PPC includes a general description of grave professional misconduct as grounds for exclusion and then goes on to specify that 'such misconduct includes significant deficiencies in the performance of a previous contract or concession contract which has led to its early termination'. However, these deficiencies only enable the tenderer in question to be excluded if the decision 'has not been challenged through legal proceedings or … has been confirmed on the conclusion of legal proceedings'.

27. However, as the Italian Government explained at the hearing, after the question was referred there seems to have been a change in the doctrine of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), (9) which has caused the Italian Government to change the main thrust of its observations.

28. The Italian Government's reading of that opinion (10) is that even if the early termination of the previous contract, terminated because of the significant deficiencies attributed to a candidate who was bidding for a new contract, were sub judice, the contracting authority has discretion to evaluate the existence of those deficiencies as grounds for excluding the tenderer, without waiting for the civil courts to give judgment.

29. Clearly, the Court of Justice cannot become involved in that debate over the interpretation of the provision of national law, which is solely a matter for the referring court. Therefore:

– if the referring court believes it can adopt the position which the Italian Government argues can be inferred from the opinion of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) of 13 November 2018, then it will be able to interpret Article 80(5)(c) of the PPC in a way that is consistent with Directive 2014/24, along the lines set out by the referring court itself in its order for reference. This would in practice remove the need for the reference;

– if, on the other hand, it were to conclude that such an interpretation of the national provision is contra legem, the question referred would continue to be pertinent.

30. In order to reply to the questions raised by the referring court, I will first consider the interpretation adopted by that court of the domestic legislation. Therefore, in the words of the question referred, I will assume that, under the national provision, 'challenging before the courts significant deficiencies identified in the performance of a previous procurement contract, which resulted in the early termination of that contract, excludes any assessment by the contracting authority as to the reliability of the tenderer, until a final ruling has been issued in the civil proceedings'.

C. The optional grounds for exclusion in Directive 2014/24

31. In introducing the list of optional grounds for exclusion, Directive 2004/18/EC (11) places the emphasis on the tenderer ('any … operator may be excluded from participation in a contract'), whereas Directive 2014/24 focuses on the contracting authority ('contracting authorities may exclude … an economic operator').

32. After these introductory phrases, both directives set out a series of optional grounds for exclusion before going on to allow Member States a degree of discretion (12) where they opt to include these grounds in their national legislation. The directives do not differ significantly on this point either:

– The final paragraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 stated that 'Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph'.

– Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 provides that 'by law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article'. (13)

33. In commenting on that discretion over the optional grounds for exclusion provided for in Directive 2004/18, the Court of Justice had held that:

– according to settled case-law, 'Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 does not provide for uniform application at EU level of the grounds of exclusion it mentions, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds of exclusion at all or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level. In that context, the Member States have the power to make the criteria laid down in Article 45(2) less onerous or more flexible'; (14)

– 'Member States … enjoy some discretion in determining the requirements governing the application of the optional grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18'. (15)

34. This degree of discretion provided the basis for the argument put forward by Sirio, the Municipality of Naples, the Government of Italy (in its written observations, but not at the hearing) and the Government of Hungary: if an optional ground for exclusion need not be included in domestic law then, a fortiori, national legislation may restrict the effect of that ground, making it conditional on satisfying certain requirements (such as, for example, stipulating that where the early termination of a previous contract due to breach on the part of the successful tenderer has been challenged through the courts, the termination must have been confirmed in a final judgment).

35. However, their argument fails to take sufficient account of the fact that Member States' power in this regard is not absolute. (16) Once a Member State has decided to include one of the optional grounds for exclusion provided for in Directive 2014/24, (17) the essential characteristics of that ground, as established in the directive, must be respected.

36. Indeed, in stipulating that Member States are to have 'regard to Union law' when specifying 'the implementing conditions for this Article', Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 prevents Member States, in their national law, from distorting the optional grounds for exclusion included in that provision or ignoring the objectives and guiding principles that underpin each of those grounds, within the uniform framework provided by Directive 2014/24.

37. As I shall argue below, the provision of Italian law which is at the centre of the order for reference does not respect the essential characteristics of the optional ground for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24.

D. The optional ground for exclusion in Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24

38. Under Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24, practices by an economic operator that may provide grounds for excluding it from a procurement procedure include both ‘grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable’ (point (c)) and ‘significant … deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract … which led to early termination of that prior contract’ (point (g)).

39. It can be inferred from recital 101 of Directive 2014/24 that the professional misconduct in point (c) is predominantly extra-contractual, in other words, irregular conduct that generally takes place outside the scope of the contractual relationship. This is the case with conduct concerning breach of environmental or social obligations, violations of competition rules or intellectual or industrial property rights, or breach of tax or social security obligations. By contrast, the behaviour described in point (g) typically involves a contractual breach.

40. It is true, however, that some breaches of contract may simultaneously involve a form of grave professional misconduct, that is to say, professional misconduct committed in the context of a previous administrative contract that was sufficiently serious to constitute grounds for terminating the contractual relationship.

41. Viewed from this perspective, the connection between the two points would be that of a lex generalis (point (c)) as compared with a lex specialis (point (g)), which would allow us to examine the objectives and reasons for the general provision in order to discern the principles to be applied in interpreting the rule in point (g). (18)

42. Both grounds for exclusion are founded on an essential element in the relationship between the successful tenderer and the contracting authority, namely the former’s reliability, which is the basis for the confidence placed in it by the latter. Although Directive 2004/18 does not expressly refer to this element, it has been established by the case-law of the Court of Justice. (19)

43. Directive 2014/24 already includes reliability as a key component in the relationship, precisely when it addresses grave professional misconduct. According to the first paragraph of recital 101, contracting authorities may exclude ‘economic operators which have proven unreliable’. The second paragraph of the same recital refers to performance in previous contracts ‘that casts serious doubts as to the reliability of the economic operator’.

44. The importance ascribed to the reliability of the economic operator appears in some paragraphs ((6) and (7)) of Article 57 of Directive 2014/24, where the economic operator is permitted to take steps to demonstrate that it is reliable despite the existence of a ground for exclusion. The reliability element thus pervades the grounds for exclusion concerning the candidate’s subjective circumstances.

45. Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 is constructed such that the contracting authority must be free to assess that component (the candidate’s reliability) without necessarily being bound by assessments made by other public bodies. It is for the contracting authorities, and them alone, to assess the extent of the misconduct involved in a substantive breach of contract that is so serious as to justify termination of a previous contract due to loss of confidence. (20)

E. The provision of Italian law in the light of Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24

46. The condition included in the Italian legislation adds an additional element that does not comply with Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24 and is not consistent with the rest of that article. Moreover, it may give rise to discrimination against other tenderers who have committed serious misconduct. While it may have been inspired by a particular view of the right to judicial protection, (21) ultimately, the domestic provision under discussion amounts to a reward for serious breach of contract, enabling the perpetrator, de facto, to avoid the subsequent consequences of that breach simply by lodging a legal challenge.

47. I will briefly address those two aspects of the Italian provision.

1. The contrast between the national law and Directive 2014/24

48. As the Commission rightly notes, Article 57(4)(g) of Directive 2014/24 does not mention the need to wait for a final judgment before assessing the significant or persistent deficiencies in the behaviour of the winner of the previous contract.

49. In similar cases, with reference to the EU law in force at the time, the Court of Justice had held that:

– With regard to grave professional misconduct, serious misrepresentation or failure to supply the information (required under Article 45(2)(d) and (g) of Directive 2004/18) could be proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate, '… without there being any need for the economic operator concerned to have been convicted by a judgment that has become final'. (22)

– 'Point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 allows the contracting authorities to prove professional misconduct by any demonstrable means. In addition, unlike point (c) of that subparagraph, a judgment which has the force of res judicata is not required in order to prove professional misconduct, within the meaning of point (d) of that subparagraph'. (23)

50. The Court of Justice therefore rejected the notion that the assessment of a ground for exclusion relating to professional misconduct was dependent on the existence of a prior judgment (unless the EU legislation itself included such a requirement). That was its interpretation of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18.

51. This doctrine can be extrapolated to the present case in order to demonstrate that Article 80(5)(c) of the PPC fails to comply with it: if a previous contract is terminated, the tenderer need only challenge that early termination in order for the contracting authority to be unable to apply the tenderer's breach of contract against it in a subsequent procurement exercise.

52. Thus, a serious breach on the part of the successful tenderer, which led a contracting authority to terminate a bilateral contract (which is permissible where one of the parties fails to satisfy its obligations), has no consequences for subsequent procedures if the tenderer challenges the early termination of the contractual relationship through the courts.

53. By ascribing this automatic effect to a legal challenge, the domestic provision deprives the contracting authority of the power to make a full assessment of the candidate's reliability, because it will be unable to take into account, as a relevant factor, the early termination of the previous contract on grounds of significant deficiencies.

54. The restriction imposed on the contracting authority where the previous breach of contract is sub judice deprives the contracting authority of the ability to exclude a tenderer 'at any time during the procedure … where it turns out that the economic operator is, in view of acts committed or omitted either before or during the procedure, in one of the situations referred to in paragraph 4', as laid down in Article 57(5) of Directive 2014/24.

55. The national provision therefore improperly imposes a condition on the scope of the actions of the contracting authority, which is expressly protected by Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 and by the case-law interpreting similar provisions in Directive 2004/18, thereby preventing it from verifying the existence of a ground for exclusion until judgment is given in a civil action taken over the early termination of the contract.

56. Likewise, Article 80(5)(c) of the PPC prevents the contracting authority from assessing whether the tenderer has adopted sufficient measures to demonstrate its reliability, despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion (Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24).

2. Discrimination against other tenderers excluded on grounds of grave misconduct

57. The domestic provision under discussion may lead to discrimination against tenderers which have committed grave professional misconduct other than breach of contract and which have challenged the assessment of that misconduct before the courts. In their case, the contracting authority will not be constrained by Article 80(5)(c) of the PPC and will therefore be free to reach a reasoned decision that they lack the necessary reliability.

58. There is no justification for this difference in the treatment of tenderers which all fall within similar optional grounds for exclusion. The difference between them (the fact that the challenge remains sub judice) depends solely on the fact that the contractor which is in breach has lodged an action against the early termination of its previous contract, thus defeating the normal powers of assessment enjoyed by the contracting authority.

59. The situation is particularly sensitive if there is a cross-border element to the contract, since it 'is likely to concern the economic operators from other Member States who are less familiar with the terms and detailed rules of application of the relevant national legislation'. (24)

60. As the filing of a civil action is entirely dependent on the wishes of the contractor, the seriousness of its breach would not be decided on the basis of an objective element but would instead be determined by an extrinsic, subjective factor (the mere decision to file an action). However, this would not be sufficient in the case of other tenderers that had committed professional misconduct, particularly tenderers established in other Member States.

V. Conclusion

61. In the light of the reasoning set out above, I suggest that the Court of Justice should state in response to the question referred by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Campania (Regional Administrative Court, Campania, Italy) for a preliminary ruling that:

> Article 57(4)(c) and (g) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC precludes national legislation under which a mere challenge through the courts to the early termination of a previous public contract on grounds of significant deficiencies in performance prevents the contracting authority from assessing that behaviour and the subsequent reliability of the tenderer as grounds for exclusion in a new procurement procedure until a judgment in the court proceedings has become final.

6 Order for reference, paragraph 2.3.

7 One of the premisses of the referring court seems to be that as Sirio was responsible for the outbreak of food poisoning it had committed one of the ‘significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract’. The reference for a preliminary ruling contains no question concerning this assessment.

8 This transposed Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18/EC into Italian law [Decreto legislativo 12 aprile 2006, n. 163. Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006 — Ordinary supplement No 107) (Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006. Code of public procurement in respect of public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts, implementing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC)]. Article 38(1)(f), which was transcribed in paragraph 8 of the judgment of 11 December 2014, Croce Amica One Italia (C-440/13, EU:C:2014:2435), provided as follows: ‘The following persons shall be excluded from participation in procedures for the award of … public works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts, and may not … conclude any related contract: … (f) any person who, in the reasoned assessment of the contracting authority, has been guilty of serious negligence or bad faith in the performance of any contract awarded to that person by the contracting authority which published the contract notice; or any person who has been found guilty of serious professional misconduct on the basis of any evidence which the contracting authority may establish’.

9 It specifically mentioned Opinion No 2616/2018 of 13 November 2018.

10 Given its consultative nature, the opinion does not equate to a judgment handed down in the exercise of judicial functions. Moreover, on 15 May 2018 (that is, after this reference) the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), acting now as a court, referred a similar question to the Court of Justice (Sicilville, C-324/18, which is still pending before the Court).

11 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

12 This was stated in the Opinion delivered in Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani y Guerrato (C-178/16, EU:C:2017:487), point 58: like the previous directive, the new directive ‘gives the Member States wide discretion to determine the “implementing conditions” for the optional grounds of exclusion’.

13 While the reference to national law differs in the two texts, it seems to me that this difference is principally one of style. In any event, the situation addressed in Directive 2004/18 that could be relevant in deciding on this reference for a preliminary ruling (had the events taken place while it was in force) is the situation provided for in Article 45(2)(d) (grave professional misconduct), now contained in Article 57(4)(c) of Directive 2014/24, and this provision did not refer to national law.

14 Judgment of 14 December 2016, Connexxion Taxi Services (C-171/15, EU:C:2016:948), paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

15 Judgment of 20 December 2017, Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani y Guerrato (C-178/16, EU:C:2017:1000), paragraph 32.

16 In my Opinion in Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani y Guerrato (C-178/16, EU:C:2017:487), point 53, I noted that the exercise of this power by Member States is not, however, unconditional, citing the judgment of 10 July 2014, Consorcio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblicci (C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063), paragraphs 29, 31 and 32.

17 The Government of Italy argued at the hearing that, within its territorial scope of application, Article 80(5) of the PPC has recognised as a mandatory ground for exclusion something which, in Directive 2014/24, is merely optional.

---

18 Indeed, the Italian legislature has combined the two cases into one, although it has added a (currently disputed) procedural condition (sub judice situations), which applies only to breach of a previous contract.

---

19 Judgments of 20 March 2018, Commission v Austria (State Printing Office) (C-187/16, EU:C:2018:194), paragraphs 88 and 91; of 14 December 2016, Connexxion Taxi Services (C-171/15, EU:C:2016:948), paragraph 28; and of 9 February 2006, La Cascina and Others (C-226/04 and C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94), paragraph 21.

---

20 The irregularity committed by the tenderer must have been sufficiently serious ('significant') to justify early termination of the contract, having regard to the proportionality principle.

---

21 The Government of Hungary argued that if the tenderer challenges the termination of contract, the presumption of innocence operates in its favour and it must be allowed to take part in the procurement procedure unless and until its breach of contract has been confirmed in a final judgment.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

11 July 2019 (1)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Award of public supply and public works contracts — Directive 2014/24/EU — Article 28(2) — Restricted procedure — Economic operators permitted to tender — Requirement for the legal and substantive identity of the tendering candidate to correspond to that of the preselected candidate — Principle of equal treatment of tenderers)

In Case C-697/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), made by decision of 19 October 2017, received at the Court on 11 December 2017, in the proceedings

Telecom Italia SpA

– the European Commission, by G. Conte, P. Ondrůšek and T. Vecchi, acting as Agents, – the EFTA Surveillance Authority, by M. Sánchez Rydelski and C. Zatschler, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 23 January 2019,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request arises out of five actions brought by Telecom Italia SpA for the annulment of decisions adopted by Infrastrutture e telecomunicazioni per l'Italia (Infratel Italia) SpA ('Infratel'), a company which the Ministero dello Sviluppo Economico (Ministry of Economic Development, Italy) has entrusted with the management of projects for the creation of a broadband and ultra-broadband network in Italy, as regards the award of public contracts for the construction, maintenance and management of public ultra-broadband networks in several regions of Italy (Abruzzo, Molise, Emilia-Romagna, Lombardy, Tuscany and Veneto).

Legal background

European Union law

Directive 2004/17/EC

3 Article 51(3) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) provided:

'Contracting entities shall verify that the tenders submitted by the selected tenderers comply with the rules and requirements applicable to tenders and award the contract on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 55 and 57.'

Directive 2014/24

4 Under Article 2(1)(12) of Directive 2014/24, a 'candidate' is defined as 'an economic operator that has sought an invitation or has been invited to take part in a restricted procedure, in a competitive procedure with negotiation, in a negotiated procedure without prior publication, in a competitive dialogue or in an innovation partnership'.

5 Article 28 of that directive, headed 'Restricted procedure', is worded as follows:

'1. In restricted procedures, any economic operator may submit a request to participate in response to a call for competition containing the information set out in Annex V parts B or C as the case may be by providing the information for qualitative selection that is requested by the contracting authority.

2. Only those economic operators invited to do so by the contracting authority following its assessment of the information provided may submit a tender. Contracting authorities may limit the number of suitable candidates to be invited to participate in the procedure in accordance with Article 65.

…'

6 Decreto legislativo n. 50 — Attuazione delle direttive 2014/23/UE, 2014/24/UE e 2014/25/UE sull'aggiudicazione dei contratti di concessione, sugli appalti pubblici e sulle procedure d'appalto degli enti erogatori nei settori dell'acqua, dell'energia, dei trasporti e dei servizi postali, nonché per il riordino della disciplina vigente in materia di contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture (Legislative Decree No 50 transposing Directives 2014/23/EU, 2014/24/EU and 2014/25/EU on the award of concession contracts, public procurement, and procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, and restructuring the legislation applicable to public works contracts, public services contracts and public supply contracts, of 18 April 2016 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 91 of 19 April 2016) (‘the Public Procurement Code’) transposed the abovementioned directives into Italian law.

7 Article 61 of the Public Procurement Code, headed ‘Restricted procedure’, transposed Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24. Paragraph 3 of that article provides:

‘Following the contracting authority’s assessment of the information provided, only those economic operators invited to do so may submit a tender.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

8 In May 2016, Infratel, on behalf of the Ministry of Economic Development, initiated a restricted procedure for the award of public contracts for the construction, maintenance and management of a public passive ultra-broadband network in the so-called ‘white’ areas of several regions of Italy (Abruzzo, Molise, Emilia-Romagna, Lombardy, Tuscany and Veneto).

9 The award procedure was part of the implementation of the State aid scheme SA.41647 (2016/N) (‘Strategia Italiana Banda Ultra-Larga’), which had been notified by the Italian authorities on 10 August 2015 and approved by a Commission decision of 30 June 2016 (C(2016) 3931 final).

10 It related to the award of five lots, and comprised the following three stages:

– submission of requests to participate (up to 18 July 2016);

– sending of invitations to preselected operators (up to 9 August 2016), and – submission of tenders (up to 17 October 2016).

11 Requests to participate were submitted in respect of each of the five lots by Telecom Italia and, amongst others, Metroweb Sviluppo Srl and Enel OpEn Fiber SpA (‘OpEn Fiber’). Although preselected, Metroweb Sviluppo did not ultimately submit a tender.

12 Infratel published the list of successful tenderers on 9 January 2017, and the provisional classification of those tenderers on 24 January 2017. OpEn Fiber was in first place in each of the five lots, with Telecom Italia second except in lot 4, where it was third.

13 Telecom Italia was not satisfied with the outcome of the award procedure and made an application for access to the documents in the file relating to that procedure.

14 It is apparent from those documents that between the preselection phase and 17 October 2016 (the deadline for submission of tenders), more specifically on 10 October 2016, a binding framework agreement was concluded between two holding companies, Enel SpA and Metroweb Italia SpA, which provided for OpEn Fiber to acquire a 100% shareholding in Metroweb SpA which controlled Metroweb Sviluppo, so as to bring about a merger by absorption of Metroweb SpA and, consequently, Metroweb Sviluppo, into OpEn Fiber. OpEn Fiber acquired Metroweb Sviluppo under a resolution of 23 January 2017, made pursuant to that framework agreement.

15 The proposed concentration had been notified to the European Commission on 10 November 2016, pursuant to Council Regulation (EC) No 139/2004 of 20 January 2004 on the control of concentrations between undertakings (OJ 2004 L 24, p. 1). By decision of 15 December 2016 (Case M.8234 — Enel/CDP Equity/Cassa Depositi e Prestiti/Enel Open Fiber/Metroweb Italia) (OJ 2017 C 15, p. 1), the Commission decided not to oppose it.

16 Telecom Italia contested the award of the five lots in five actions it brought before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Lazio (Regional Administrative Court of Lazio, Italy), all of which were dismissed by that court. Telecom Italia then brought an appeal against the decisions thus made by that court before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy).

17 The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has raised the question of whether the requirement of legal and substantive identity established by the Court, in relation to Article 51 of Directive 2004/17, in its judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin (C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347), can apply in the context of a restricted procedure under Article 28 of Directive 2014/24, such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

18 It also observes that, as at 17 October 2016 (the date for submission of tenders) the merger at issue in the main proceedings had only begun, with completion to take place at a later date; and consequently that, as at that date, there had been no change in the structure of OpEn Fiber.

19 In its view, it cannot be demonstrated that, in concluding the merger agreement in question, the parties intended to enter into an anticompetitive agreement with a view to restricting competition in relation to the procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings.

20 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Must the first sentence of Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU be interpreted as requiring pre-qualified operators and those who submit tenders in the context of a restricted procedure to be completely legally and economically identical and, in particular, must that provision be interpreted as precluding the conclusion of an agreement between the holding companies which control two pre-qualified operators at some point between pre-qualification and the submission of tenders, where: (a) that agreement has as its purpose and effect (inter alia) the completion of a merger by the absorption of one of those pre-qualified undertakings into the other (a transaction which, however, is authorised by the European Commission); (b) the effects of that merger were fully realised after the submission of a tender by the absorbing undertaking (for which reason, at the time the tender was submitted, its composition had not changed from that which existed at the time of pre-qualification); (c) the undertaking then absorbed (whose composition had not changed at the time of the deadline for submitting tenders) has however stated that it is not taking part in the restricted procedure, probably in implementation of the contractual schedule established by the agreement drawn up between the holding companies?’

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

21 Infratel, OpEn Fiber and the Italian Government submit that the request for a preliminary ruling should be declared inadmissible, on the basis that it is not relevant for the purposes of the main proceedings, and also on the basis that it is hypothetical, or does not reflect a genuine doubt on the part of the referring court.

22 In this regard, it must be borne in mind that it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where the questions referred concern the interpretation of EU law, the Court is in principle bound to give a ruling. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (judgment of 10 July 2018, Jehovan todistajat, C-25/17, EU:C:2018:551, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited).

23 In the present case, it is apparent from the order for reference that the procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings is governed by the rules set out in the contract notice, one of which refers to Article 61 of the Public Procurement Code, transposing Article 28 of Directive 2014/24. Furthermore, there is nothing in the file to indicate that the question of interpretation of EU law which is raised is unrelated to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, or that it is hypothetical. As the referring court has pointed out, its question is intended to enable it to determine whether that provision of Directive 2014/24 requires the identity of the operator submitting a tender in a restricted procurement procedure to correspond perfectly to that of the preselected operator.

24 Furthermore, while it is true that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) explains why it inclines towards a particular interpretation of Article 28 of Directive 2014/24, that does not mean that it has no doubt as to the meaning of that provision. In explaining its view, the referring court is cooperating in good faith with the Court of Justice in the context of proceedings for a preliminary ruling, and responding to the invitation in paragraph 17 of the Recommendations to national courts and tribunals in relation to the initiation of preliminary ruling proceedings (OJ 2018 C 257, p. 1), which states that 'the referring court or tribunal may also briefly state its view on the answer to be given to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling', indicating that this paragraph 17 'may be useful to the Court'.

25 In those circumstances, the request for a preliminary ruling must be held to be admissible.

On the question referred

26 By its question, the referring court asks, essentially, whether the first sentence of Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted, with regard to the requirement for the legal and substantive identity of the economic operator submitting a tender to correspond to that of the preselected operator, and in the context of a restricted procedure for the award of a public contract, as precluding a preselected candidate which has agreed to acquire another preselected candidate, under a merger agreement concluded between the preselection stage and the tendering stage, but completed after the tendering stage, from submitting a tender.

27 Under the first sentence of Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24, only those economic operators invited to do so by the contracting authority following its assessment of the information provided may submit a tender.

28 That rule is laid down in relation to the restricted procedure, which has several stages, and particularly in relation to the preselection and tendering stages.

29 It is clear from the wording of the first sentence of Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24 that the economic operator that submits the tender must, in principle, be the one that was preselected.

30 That provision does not lay down any rules concerning any changes which may have occurred in the structure or economic and technical capacity of the preselected candidate.

31 In its judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin (C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347), the Court considered, in the analogous context of Directive 2004/17, the consequences of such changes taking place during a negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract, having regard to general principles of EU law — particularly the principle of equal treatment and the consequent obligation of transparency — and the objectives pursued by EU law in the field of public procurement.

32 In that regard, it must be recalled that the principle of equal treatment and the duty of transparency mean, in particular, that tenderers must be in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the contracting authority, and constitute the basis of the EU rules on procedures for the award of public contracts (judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited).

33 The principle of equal treatment of tenderers, the aim of which is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure, requires that all tenderers must be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, and therefore implies that the tenders of all competitors must be subject to the same conditions. A strict application of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, in the context of a negotiated procedure, would lead to the conclusion that only those economic operators who have been preselected can in that capacity submit tenders and be awarded contracts (see, to that effect, judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraphs 38 and 39).

34 That approach is based on Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24, under which ‘only those economic operators invited to do so by the contracting authority following its assessment of the information provided may submit a tender’; this presupposes that the preselected economic operators and those submitting tenders are legally and substantively the same (see, by analogy, judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 40).

35 However, the Court has also held that, in a negotiated procedure, where a group of undertakings preselected as such, incorporating two economic operators, had been dissolved, one of those operators could take the place of the group and continue the procedure in its own name, provided that it was established that that economic operator by itself met the requirements initially laid down by the contracting entity, and that the continuation of its participation in that procedure did not mean that other tenderers were placed at a competitive disadvantage (see, to that effect, judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 48 and operative part).

36 It should be noted that the case which gave rise to that judgment involved a change in both the legal and the substantive identity of the tendering operator, as compared to the preselected operator, given that the procedure was not taken forward by the group of undertakings which had been preselected as such, but by one of the operators which had formed that group, and that the economic and technical capacity of the original candidate had been reduced through the loss of the capacity of one of the economic operators in question. However, that change did not mean that the procedure could not be followed through, provided that the conditions identified by the Court were satisfied.

37 In that regard, it should be emphasised that the main proceedings relate, by contrast, to a situation in which one of the tenderers has increased its capacity, through the acquisition of one of the other preselected tenderers.

38 It is therefore necessary to determine whether, in those circumstances, there has been a change in the legal and substantive identity of the preselected tenderers.

39 It is common ground in this matter that, as regards OpEn Fiber, the requirement for the legal identity of the tendering candidate to correspond to that of the preselected candidate has been met.

40 On the other hand, it is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that, between the preselection stage and the deadline for submission of tenders, the holding companies of two tenderers, OpEn Fiber and Metroweb Sviluppo, entered into a binding framework agreement on terms leading to a merger by absorption of Metroweb Sviluppo into OpEn Fiber. In so far as a firm commitment had been made, under which OpEn Fiber was obliged to acquire the assets of Metroweb Sviluppo, and in so far as OpEn Fiber could, therefore — despite the need to wait for a decision of the Commission — reasonably count on the capacity of Metroweb Sviluppo being available in relation to its future activity, it must be held that, even though the concrete and definitive effects of the merger at issue did not materialise until after submission of tenders, the substantive identity of OpEn Fiber was not the same, on the deadline for submission of tenders, as it had been on the date of preselection.

41 Consequently, it is necessary to determine whether, notwithstanding that change in substantive identity, the principle of equal treatment can be held not to have been infringed, in the light of the criteria referred to in the judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin (C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 48), cited in paragraph 36 of the present judgment.

42 In that regard, it is important to point out, as is apparent from paragraph 37 of this judgment, that those criteria were developed in the context of the case that gave rise to the judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin (C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347), where, essentially, the circumstances were such that the capacity of the initially preselected tenderer had decreased, whereas the present case concerns a situation in which one of the tenderers has increased its capacity through the acquisition of one of the other preselected tenderers. That difference of circumstances inevitably has consequences as regards the application of the criteria to the facts of the present case, bearing in mind that, unlike an increase in the capacity of a tenderer, a reduction in capacity is liable to give rise to difficulties in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract.

43 To allow a tender to be submitted by a candidate whose economic and technical capacity is appreciably less than it was at the time of preselection is, potentially, to circumvent the preselection procedure, given that a candidate whose capacity had been thus reduced might not have been preselected.

44 In a negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract, it is in the interests of the contracting authority that, where the candidates have been preselected, their economic and technical capacity is maintained throughout the procedure, as the loss of such capacity would create a risk of undermining the objective of the procedure, which is to select a tenderer capable of performing the contract in question.

45 By contrast, it is not contrary to the interests of the contracting authority for a candidate to increase its economic and technical capacity after preselection. It may even be regarded as normal for a candidate to acquire the resources necessary to satisfy itself that it can guarantee the proper performance of the contract.

46 Such an increase in economic and technical capacity may take the form, amongst other things, of the candidate availing itself of the resources of other economic operators, or indeed of partial or total absorption of another economic operator, including one participating in the same negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract.

47 In the light of those considerations, it must be held that the proviso which, essentially, requires an economic operator wishing to continue a procedure for the award of a public contract as a tenderer to establish, where its legal or substantive identity has changed between the preselection stage and the deadline for submission of tenders, that it still meets the requirements initially laid down by the contracting authority, is satisfied by hypothesis in circumstances where its substantive capacity has only increased.

48 As to the proviso that the continuing participation of the tenderer in a procedure for the award of a public contract must not place other tenderers at a competitive disadvantage, and whether that proviso is satisfied on the facts of the present case, it must be noted that there are other provisions of EU law, distinct from those governing public contracts, which are specifically intended to ensure that mergers such as that at issue in the main proceedings do not pose a threat to free and undistorted competition within the internal market. Thus, in so far as the conduct of an economic operator complies with those specific rules, its participation in such a merger cannot be regarded as being liable, in itself, to place other tenderers at a competitive disadvantage, simply on the basis that the merged entity will benefit from greater economic and technical capacity.

49 Accordingly, an acquisition such as that at issue in the main proceedings must be effected in accordance with EU legislation, and particularly Regulation No 139/2004.

50 In the present case, it is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that the Commission decided, on 15 December 2016, pursuant to that regulation, not to oppose the notified concentration.

51 It should be added that, although the principle of equal treatment is not undermined by the mere fact of a merger between two preselected tenderers, the possibility cannot be ruled out that sensitive information relating to the procurement procedure may have been exchanged by the parties to the merger, prior to its completion. Such a situation could give the acquiring operator unjustified advantages, at the tendering stage, in relation to the other tenderers, which would inevitably place those other tenderers at a competitive disadvantage (see, by analogy, judgment of 17 May 2018 Specializuotas transportas, C-531/16, EU:C:2018:324, paragraph 29).

52 In principle, such circumstances would be sufficient to prevent the acquiring operator’s tender being considered by the contracting authority (see, by analogy, judgment of 17 May 2018, Specializuotas transportas, C-531/16, EU:C:2018:324, paragraph 31).

53 However, it is not to be presumed that such exchanges of information — which, as the Commission pointed out in its observations, might infringe Article 7 of Regulation No 139/2004, under which concentrations falling within the scope of that regulation may not be implemented until they have been authorised, as well as Article 101 TFEU — have in fact taken place. In the present case, it is apparent from the information available to the Court that no collusive conduct has been established.

54 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that the first sentence of Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted, with regard to the requirement for the legal and substantive identity of the economic operator submitting a tender to correspond to that of the preselected operator, and in the context of a restricted procedure for the award of a public contract, as not preventing a preselected candidate which has agreed to acquire another preselected candidate, under a merger agreement concluded between the preselection stage and the tendering stage, but completed after the tendering stage, from submitting a tender.

Costs

55 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

The first sentence of Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be must be interpreted, with regard to the requirement for the legal and substantive identity of the economic operator submitting a tender to correspond to that of the preselected operator, and in the context of a restricted procedure for the award of a public contract, as not preventing a preselected candidate which has agreed to acquire another preselected candidate, under a merger agreement concluded between the preselection stage and the tendering stage, but completed after the tendering stage, from submitting a tender.

Case C-697/17

v

Ministero dello Sviluppo Economico,

Infrastrutture e telecomunicazioni per l'Italia SpA (Infratel Italia SpA), interveners:

Open Fiber SpA

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy))

(Preliminary-ruling proceedings — Public contracts — Directive 2014/24/EU — Restricted procedure — Economic operators invited to submit a tender — Merger by absorption carried out during the procurement procedure — Requirement that legal identity must remain the same during the preselection stage and the tender submission stage)

1. In this reference for a preliminary ruling, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) asks whether, for the purposes of Directive 2014/24/EU, (2) a company initially selected as part of a restricted public procurement procedure remains 'legally and substantively identical' if that company merges by absorption with another company which was also selected but which did not ultimately submit a tender.

2. The case now before the Court is, in some ways, the reverse of the case which led to the judgment in MT Højgaard and Züblin, (3) in which the tenderer, when it was preselected, was part of a group of undertakings that was subsequently dissolved. The question in that case was whether, following the dissolution of the group, that tenderer could continue to participate in its own name in the negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract.

3. The Court of Justice is therefore presented with a fresh opportunity to develop its case-law on the requirement that preselected economic operators and those who submit tenders must be legally and substantively identical.

I. Legislative framework

A. EU law: Directive 2014/24

4. Article 8 provides:

'This Directive shall not apply to public contracts and design contests for the principal purpose of permitting the contracting authorities to provide or exploit public communications networks or to provide to the public one or more electronic communications services.

For the purposes of this Article, “public communications network” and “electronic communications service” shall have the same meaning as in Directive 2002/21/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council.’ (4)

5. In accordance with Article 18(1):

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

6. Pursuant to Article 28:

‘1. In restricted procedures, any economic operator may submit a request to participate in response to a call for competition containing the information set out in Annex V parts B or C as the case may be by providing the information for qualitative selection that is requested by the contracting authority.

2. Only those economic operators invited to do so by the contracting authority following its assessment of the information provided may submit a tender. Contracting authorities may limit the number of suitable candidates to be invited to participate in the procedure in accordance with Article 65.

…’

B. National law: Codice dei contratti pubblici (Code on public sector contracts) (5)

7. Article 61(3) reads:

‘Following the assessment by the contracting authority of the information provided, only those economic operators invited to do so may submit a tender.’

8. In accordance with Article 48(11):

‘In restricted or negotiated procedures, or in competitive dialogue procedures, economic operators who are invited individually, or candidates who are admitted individually to the competitive dialogue procedure, shall have the possibility of submitting a tender or of negotiating on their own behalf or as representatives for associated operators.’

II. Facts and question referred for a preliminary ruling

9. Infratel Italia SpA (‘Infratel’), on behalf of the Ministero dello Sviluppo economico (Ministry of Economic Development, Italy), launched a restricted procedure for the award of a concession contract for the construction, maintenance and management of a publicly owned passive ultra-broadband network in certain regions.

10. The restricted procedure, subdivided into five lots (corresponding to five geographical areas), was split into the following stages:

(a) submission of applications to participate (by 18 July 2016);

(b) sending of invitations to participate to the selected operators (by 9 August 2016); and

(c) submission of tenders (by 17 October 2016).

11. Telecom Italia SpA (‘Telecom Italia’), Metroweb Sviluppo SpA (‘Metroweb Sviluppo’) and Enel Open Fiber SpA (‘Enel Open Fiber’), (6) in addition to other operators, submitted their applications (first stage of the procedure). Infratel accepted those applications and therefore invited those undertakings to participate (second stage of the procedure) as selected tenderers.

12. Although it was selected in that second stage, Metroweb Sviluppo did not submit any tender, thereby de facto waiving its right to participate in the tendering procedure.

13. On 9 January 2017, Infratel published the list of invited tenderers, and, on 24 January 2017, it published the provisional lists of successful tenderers. Enel Open Fiber was ranked first in the five lots while Telecom Italia was ranked second in all lots apart from Lot No 4, where it was ranked third.

14. Following the conclusion of the procedure, Telecom Italia had access to the documents held by the contracting authority and after viewing those documents it found that, at some point between the selection stage and the deadline for submitting tenders (17 October 2016), Metroweb Sviluppo and Enel Open Fiber had been involved in a complex company transaction.

15. That transaction arose from a concentration whereby the companies Enel SpA (‘Enel’) and Cassa Depositi e Prestiti SpA (‘CDP’), through its subsidiary CDP Equity SpA. (‘CDPE’), acquired overall control of the undertaking resulting from the merger of Enel Open Fiber with Metroweb Italia SpA (‘Metroweb Italia’).

16. According to the ‘investment framework agreement’ concluded on 10 October 2016 between the holding company Enel (which controlled Enel Open Fiber) and Metroweb Italia (which controlled Metroweb Sviluppo), the transaction involved:

– the acquisition by Enel and CDPE of 50% each of the share capital of Enel Open Fiber;

– the acquisition by Enel Open Fiber of 100% of the share capital of Metroweb Italia;

– the merger by absorption by Metroweb Italia of certain companies in the Metroweb Italia group, including Metroweb Sviluppo;

– the merger of Enel Open Fiber with the company resulting from the merger of the Metroweb Italia group, creating a ‘new Enel Open Fiber’. (7)

17. Pursuant to that agreement, on 17 October 2016 Metroweb Sviluppo (participating in the tendering procedure) was merged by absorption into the Metroweb group. On 23 January 2017, the merger by absorption of Metroweb into Open Fiber was agreed.

18. The proposed concentration was notified to the European Commission on 10 November 2016, (8) pursuant to Regulation (EC) No 139/2004. (9) By decision of 15 December 2016, the Commission decided not to oppose the transaction. (10)

19. Telecom Italia challenged the award of the five lots into which the restricted procedure was divided in five actions brought before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy), which dismissed those actions by five similarly worded judgments.

20. Against that background, Telecom Italia brought five appeals before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), which decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following question for a preliminary ruling:

> ‘Must the first sentence of Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU be interpreted as requiring pre-qualified operators and those who submit tenders in the context of a restricted procedure to be completely legally and economically identical and, in particular, must that provision be interpreted as precluding the conclusion of an agreement between the holding companies which control two pre-qualified operators at some point between pre-qualification and the submission of tenders, where: (a) that agreement has as its purpose and effect (inter alia) the completion of a merger by the absorption of one of those pre-qualified undertakings into the other (a transaction which, however, is authorised by the European Commission); (b) the effects of that merger were fully realised after the submission of a tender by the absorbing undertaking (for which reason, at the time the tender was submitted, its composition had not changed from that which existed at the time of pre-qualification); (c) the undertaking then absorbed (whose composition had not changed at the time of the deadline for submitting tenders) has however stated that it is not taking part in the restricted procedure, probably in implementation of the contractual schedule established by the agreement drawn up between the holding companies?'

21. The referring court points out that the disputed procedure is not governed in its entirety by Directive 2014/24 or by Directive 2014/23/EU, (11) but rather only by the rules of the invitation to tender, in accordance with which Article 61 of the CCP, transposing Article 28 of Directive 2014/24, was applicable.

22. The invitation to tender further stipulated that the outcome of the procurement procedure would be decided in favour of the most economically advantageous tender, on the basis of the best price-quality ratio, within the meaning of Article 95 of the CCP, which transposes Article 67 of Directive 2014/24.

23. The referring court considers that it is unlikely, in the context of a restricted procedure governed by Article 28 of Directive 2014/24, that it will be possible to apply the principle of legal and substantive identity established by the Court in MT Højgaard and Züblin. (12)

24. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) notes that the merger operation which ended in January 2017 had only just started on the date for the submission of tenders (October 2016), meaning that the structure of Enel Open Fiber had not yet been altered. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) believes that, ultimately, it is not possible to prove that through the merger agreement — which resulted in a stable and structural alteration of the companies concerned — the parties involved intended to engage in concerted action to distort competition in the procurement procedure.

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice and the parties' positions

25. The reference for a preliminary ruling was received at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 11 December 2017. Written observations were lodged by Telecom Italia, Infratel, Open Fiber, the EFTA Surveillance Authority, the Italian Government and the Commission. All the parties which have entered an appearance, with the exception of the EFTA Surveillance Authority, attended the hearing which was held on 15 November 2018.

26. Telecom Italia maintains that, in the case of a proposed merger by absorption, it is the substantive identity of the preselected absorbing undertaking, rather than its legal identity, which really changes, making the merger incompatible with the principle in Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24.

27. Telecom Italia further submits that the referring court underestimated the complexity of the transaction at issue, since it merely examined the subjective and formal identity of Enel Open Fiber on the deadline for the submission of tenders, thereby fragmenting the overall programme of gradual integration with Metroweb Sviluppo. In fact, in Telecom Italia's submission, leaving aside any anti-collusion principle, that overall programme was initiated by a mandatory framework agreement entered into between the preselection stage and the deadline for the submission of tenders, implemented during the tendering procedure, and concluded after the contract was finally awarded but before it was signed. The framework agreement merged the two companies into a single decision-making centre with effect from the invitation to tender stage, which enabled Metroweb Sviluppo to refrain from submitting a tender while at the same time ensuring that it could be selected as if it had submitted one. That situation should be penalised in the same way as it would if the same decision-making centre had submitted two tenders.

28. Infratel submits that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible for being hypothetical because the referring court does not ask about the interpretation of the applicable EU law and there has already been a ruling on the subject matter of the main proceedings. In the alternative, Infratel contends that the preselected entities did not change in any way from the entities which submitted tenders. At the time when it submitted its tender, Enel Open Fiber acted as a single operator with the same composition as it had during the preselection stage. The merger did not alter its legal personality and therefore its identity was the same as that of the preselected undertaking.

29. Open Fiber also contends that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible:

- first, because it raises the question of the conformity of the framework agreement with Directive 2014/24, even though the lawfulness of that agreement is not in issue in the main proceedings;
- second, because, since the tendering procedure concerns a concession for the construction of a communications network, it would be governed by Directive 2014/23, but both that directive and Directive 2014/24 are inapplicable on account of the derogation laid down therein in respect of communications networks and services. The documents relating to the procedure cannot be construed as referring to Article 28 of Directive 2014/24;
- third, because the alleged prohibition on merger by absorption between preselected entities is not an inherent principle of the EU legal order;
- fourth, because the referring court does not have any uncertainties regarding the interpretation of EU law.

30. As regards the substance, Open Fiber agrees with the view expressed by the referring court and contends that its invitation to participate in the tender evaluation stage is not contrary to Article 28 of Directive 2014/24 or the Court's case-law.

31. The Italian Government also submits that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible, arguing that the referring court merely refers, in general terms, to a rule of EU law and accepts that there is no link at all between the situation at issue and that rule, because Enel Open Fiber's tender was submitted by the same legal person which had been permitted to participate in the restricted procedure.

32. As regards the substance, the Italian Government submits that it is apparent from Article 51(2) of Directive 2004/17/EC (13) that the operator invited to participate and the operator which submits the tender must be completely economically and legally identical. However, Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24 introduced a less stringent requirement.

33. The Italian Government contends that it does not follow from either the national provisions or the general principles of EU law that the merger by absorption of the preselected entities, which was authorised by the Commission and completed after the absorbing company submitted the tender, is an unlawful operation.

34. The EFTA Surveillance Authority submits that there is no breach of the identity requirement if — as it believes occurred in this case — first, the economic operator which ultimately submits the tender fulfils the conditions established by the contracting entity and, second, the fact that that operator is permitted to submit a tender does not place other competitors at a disadvantage. The identity requirement — which is by no means an absolute requirement — does not preclude the conclusion of an agreement leading to the merger of two preselected operators during a public procurement procedure.

35. In the Commission's submission, the question should be reworded, for it could be construed as asking the Court about the lawfulness of the merger agreement.

36. The Commission maintains that the criteria laid down in MT Højgaard and Züblin, (14) in relation to Directive 2004/17, could be applied mutatis mutandis in similar circumstances governed by Directive 2014/24. However, the Commission observes that the situation which led to that judgment is very different from that now at issue. In this case, there was no change of identity whatsoever between the date for preselection of operators invited to submit a tender and the date for submission of tenders, as occurred in MT Højgaard and Züblin.

37. The Commission contends that the conclusion of a merger by absorption agreement does not in itself result in a deterioration of the competitive position of other tenderers or a breach of the principle of equal treatment. That risk can be excluded if, first, pursuant to Article 7(1) of Regulation No 139/2004, the parties have not carried out — even partially — the merger operation and have not previously exchanged sensitive information likely to influence their conduct during the public procurement procedure, and, second, all the operators participating in the procedure are aware that the merger agreement has been concluded.

38. The Commission believes that it is irrelevant that the company being absorbed waived its right to participate in the restricted procedure. That factor can have no bearing on the admission of the absorbing company to the evaluation stage, unless it makes clear that the parties have partially performed the merger and have exchanged sensitive information likely to influence their conduct during the procurement procedure, thereby infringing the principle of equal treatment.

IV. Analysis

A. The admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling

39. Infratel, Open Fiber and the Italian Government submit that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible because, they claim, it is of no relevance to the main proceedings and it is also hypothetical, in that it does not actually reflect a genuine uncertainty of the referring court.

40. I believe, however, that that plea should be dismissed.

41. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has indicated that the procurement procedure is governed by the rules contained in the invitation to tender, one of which refers to Article 61 of CCP which transposes Article 28 of Directive 2014/24 into Italian law. Moreover, the grounds of appeal put forward by Telecom Italia include the infringement of the principle of identity laid down by EU law, (15) inter alia other grounds relating to national law.

42. Having dismissed the infringements of national law alleged by the appellant, the referring court states that it only remains for it to examine the ground alleging infringement of EU law, which ‘has become relevant and decisive for the purposes of adjudicating on the dispute at issue and on which the Division considers it necessary to seek a preliminary ruling within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU.’ (16)

43. In such a situation, I believe that the presumption of the relevance of questions referred for a preliminary ruling should apply. As is well known, that presumption can be rebutted but only if very specific circumstances exist: (a) where it is quite obvious that the interpretation, or the determination of validity, of a rule of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose; (b) where the problem is hypothetical; or (c) where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. (17)

44. In my view, none of those three circumstances exist in this case. Further, although, admittedly, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) sets out the reasons which, in its opinion, support a particular interpretation of Article 28 of Directive 2014/24, that does not mean that it does not harbour uncertainties about the meaning of that provision. (18)

45. The referring court believes that its interpretation of that provision is feasible but it takes the view that another interpretation might also be possible and that, therefore, the permitted intervention of the Court of Justice is required. By acting in that way, the referring court is cooperating faithfully with the Court of Justice in the exercise of jurisdiction, in accordance with the spirit underlying point 17 of the Recommendations to national courts and tribunals in relation to the initiation of preliminary ruling proceedings. (19)

B. Substance

46. The Commission rightly suggests that the question referred by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) should be reworded, as that question might give the — incorrect — impression that it concerns the compatibility of the merger agreement with EU law. However, the referring court does not actually express any uncertainty about that agreement or cast doubt on its validity.

47. Accordingly, the dispute is confined to the determination of whether Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24 precludes an operator involved in a merger by absorption with another preselected operator from being admitted to the tender evaluation stage (in a restricted procurement procedure).

48. That is the question specifically asked by the referring court, which, as I stated above, (20) considers that Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24 is applicable (by way of reference from the national provisions) to the case on which it is required to adjudicate and that the outcome of the proceedings turns on the interpretation of that provision, once the issues of national law to be determined in those proceedings have been addressed.

49. Although Infratel, Open Fiber and the Italian Government insisted on disputing that assessment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) at the hearing, I believe that that court's interpretation of the law applicable to the case is reasonable and based on adequate reasoning.

50. In view of the clear separation of functions between the national courts and the Court of Justice which characterises the procedure laid down in Article 267 TFEU, it is solely for the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), before which the dispute has been brought and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. (21) That assertion assumes that there has been a prior determination of the legislation applicable to the case, a determination which, for the reasons set out, cannot be challenged on grounds of reasonableness or reasoning.

1. The legal and substantive identity of the operators selected in a restricted procedure

51. It is, in short, a matter of determining whether Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24 requires 'pre-qualified operators and those who submit tenders in … a restricted procedure to be completely legally and economically identical' in a situation in which two preselected operators have agreed the merger by absorption of one of them, which has the following particular features:

– the proposed merger was agreed between the selection date and the date for the submission of tenders and was subsequently authorised by the Commission;

– the effects of the merger were completed after the absorbing company had submitted its tender; and – the company being absorbed decided not to participate in the restricted procedure.

52. The so-called 'requirement for preselected economic operators and those who submit tenders to be legally and substantively identical' is based on Article 51(3) of Directive 2004/17, which states that the contracting entities are to 'verify that the tenders submitted by the selected tenderers comply [with the rules and requirements applicable to tenders] …' That is what the Court held in MT Højgaard and Züblin, (22) a judgment to which the referring court explicitly refers.

53. The same rule has been encapsulated in Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24, according to which 'only those economic operators invited to do so by the contracting authority … may submit a tender (in restricted procedures)'.

54. That requirement is ultimately intended to safeguard the principle of equal treatment of tenderers. (23) Strict application of that principle must 'lead to the conclusion that only those economic operators who have been preselected can in that capacity submit tenders and be awarded contracts.' (24)

55. Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24 is aimed at ensuring that restricted procedures really are just that; in other words, that in such procedures only economic operators who have been invited to do so by the contracting authority — and no other operators — may submit tenders. As a result of that invitation, the scope to which the tendering procedure is restricted, from a subjective point of view, is established.

56. If an economic operator who has not been preselected were permitted to submit a tender, that would constitute preferential treatment of that operator in relation to other operators. The latter will have been able to submit their tenders only after formally applying to participate in the (restricted) procedure and after having undergone the appropriate evaluation by the contracting authority.

57. In MT Højgaard and Züblin, the Court observed that the identity rule 'may be qualified in order to ensure, in a negotiated procedure, adequate competition'. (25) That observation must be understood in the context of that case, the facts of which were, as I pointed out above, completely the opposite of those now at issue.

58. Advocate General Mengozzi correctly described the background to that case when he stated that 'the factual context of the question is that a group of two undertakings, constituted in the form of a commercial company and having been preselected in a procurement procedure, was dissolved following the insolvency of one of its two members, and the contracting authority allowed the remaining member to continue to take part in the procedure in place of the group and ultimately awarded it the contract, despite the fact that that member as such had not been preselected.' (26)

59. Had the identity principle been strictly applied on that occasion and had it accordingly been concluded that the remaining member of the group of undertakings could not, as a different person, continue to participate in the procedure, the number of candidates tendering for the contract would have been reduced to three. However, that outcome was contrary to the terms of the contract notice, according to which the contracting entity considered that there should be at least four candidates in order to ensure competition. (27)

60. When striking a proper balance between the principle of equal treatment of tenderers — which the identity principle reflects — and the need to ensure effective competition — in a case in which, moreover, a reduction of the number of tenderers was liable to result in the failure of the procurement procedure — the Court held that the principle of equal treatment is not undermined where 'one of two economic operators, who formed part of a group of undertakings that had, as such, been invited to submit tenders …, [is permitted] to take the place of that group following the group's dissolution, and to take part, in its own name, in the negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract, provided that it is established, first, that that economic operator by itself meets the requirements laid down by the contracting entity and, second, that the continuation of its participation in that procedure does not mean that the other tenderers are placed at a competitive disadvantage.' (28)

61. In the case now before the Court, there is no suggestion that the exclusion of the absorbing company (this is, in truth, what Telecom Italia seeks), together with the withdrawal, on its own initiative, of the company being absorbed, would have restricted the number of tenderers so that, because that number was below the minimum required, it might have prevented the award of the contract.

62. Thus, it is not mandatory to modify the requirements of the identity principle in the interests of the principle of preservation of the procedure for the award of the contract, rather than in the interests of competition between tenderers. Accordingly, since the particular and special situation on which the approach taken in MT Højgaard and Züblin (29) was based is not present in this case, there are, in principle, no reasons to 'qualify' the requirement of identity.

63. However, the Court took the view in that case that it was necessary to 'qualify' the identity principle on the basis that it did not concern a tenderer who was completely different from the preselected tenderers and who was seeking to submit a tender (which is, I stress, the typical situation which the legislature had in mind when enacting Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24). The Court accepted that a company which, owing to its links to one of the preselected operators (of which, in fact, it formed part), was not completely unconnected to the procedure, could do so.

64. This case also involves a situation in which the financial structure of two of the preselected operators, one of which absorbed the other, was altered or was in the course of being altered. Accordingly, this case does not concern the possible involvement of a third party with no connection to the restricted procedure either.

2. The impact of the merger by absorption on the legal and substantive identity of the selected tenderer

65. According to the information provided by the referring court, there had been no change in the legal personality of Enel Open Fiber on the date on which that company, having been selected, submitted its tender, which is the exact point in the procurement procedure about which the referring court asks. The referring court states that 'its composition had not changed at the time of the deadline for submitting tenders'.

66. In that connection, it should be noted that, as the Commission has observed, (30) since the merger by absorption was a concentration with an EU dimension, it could not be performed without having first obtained the Commission's consent (more correctly, its non-opposition and a declaration that the concentration was compatible with the internal market), which was given on 15 December 2016, in other words, two months after the deadline for the submission of tenders.

67. Nonetheless, what really interests the referring court is whether the fact that the negotiations for the merger were already in progress when the operators which were to be merged were selected by the contracting authority amounted to a certain substantive change in the personality of Enel Open Fiber, which would be sufficient to support the conclusion that that company was not, de facto, the same legal person as the Enel Open Fiber which had been preselected.

68. In other words, the question is whether the fact that a change is in the process of being made to the financial structure of a preselected tenderer, which is acquiring or is proposing to absorb another preselected tenderer, is sufficient to exclude that tenderer from a (restricted) procedure. (31)

69. In support of exclusion, it could be argued that, since the merger process is set to culminate in a structural change to the absorbing company and the company being absorbed, the principles of transparency and equal treatment of tenderers require that that outcome be brought forward to the actual moment when, as a result of the planned merger agreement, substantive confusion between the companies concerned commences. The selected company and the company which submitted the tender would therefore have ceased to be substantively identical and, for those purposes, they would no longer be the same person.

70. However, I am not persuaded by that argument. First, it overlooks the fact that, in this case, the two operators (the absorbing operator and the operator being absorbed) were preselected to submit tenders prior to the merger, from which it follows that it is possible to refer to a cessation of the substantive identity and also to a substantive continuity between the two of them.

71. Second, I believe that it is disproportionate to take the requirement of substantive identity to that extreme in a situation involving the merger of companies by absorption. In a transaction of this kind, the absorbing company retains its legal personality and increases its assets, by adding to them those of the company being absorbed. (32) In fact, from a substantive point of view, that change to the acquiring company's assets is no different from that which would occur in the event of an increase in the company's share capital or other similar transactions. If the preselected tenderers were unable to carry out this kind of corporate transaction during the restricted tendering procedure, because doing so would undermine their substantive identity, their business capability would be unnecessarily and disproportionately reduced.

72. At the hearing, Telecom Italia qualified its written observations, acknowledging that transactions of this kind (including mergers) would be irrelevant, from the perspective that is important for the present purposes, if they involved operators who were not participants in the tendering procedure. In so doing, I believe that Telecom Italia accepts that its complaint is actually concerned with the risk of collusion which could result from a merger with another tenderer in the same tendering procedure, rather than the preservation of the substantive identity of the preselected tenderer (for, if its original argument were adopted the tenderer's identity would also be altered by the absorption of any other undertaking).

73. The prohibition of changes to the shareholding structure of a preselected undertaking while a restricted procedure for the award of a contract is underway could also create the legal uncertainty to which the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) refers in its order for reference. (33)

74. Directive 2014/24 provides for the possibility that, following a corporate restructuring (as a result, inter alia, of a merger), a new contractor may replace the contractor named as the successful tenderer, without the need to commence a new procurement procedure. (34) If the conditions to which the legislature has made that possibility subject are fulfilled, (35) I see no reason why that provision should not also apply to the case of a procedure which is in progress. (36)

75. It is worth pointing out that any ground of exclusion based on that reason must have been expressly stated in the tender documents, in the national provisions or in the EU provisions governing the tendering procedure. That is not so in this case and therefore the arguments set out in the judgment in Specializuotas transportas, (37) concerning the imposition on tenderers of an obligation which is not provided for in either

‘applicable national legislation [or] the call for tenders or the tender specifications …, [since it does] not constitute a clearly defined condition for the purpose of the case-law [cited]’ are fully applicable. (38)

3. The principle of equal treatment as regards (the other) selected operators

76. Based on the continuity of the two preselected operators (the absorbing company and the company being absorbed), I believe that there are no reasons to find that here has been a breach of the principle of equal treatment in relation to the other tenderers. None of those tenderers was required to compete with an economic operator who was entirely unconnected to the restricted procedure but rather with an operator which has an undeniable substantive connection to two operators which were also preselected and which were required to undergo the same evaluation procedure.

77. Therefore, there was no breach of the principle of equal treatment at the time when the tenders were submitted, which is what essentially matters for the present purposes. Although it later merged with another of the preselected operators, the fact is that Enel Open Fiber was also successful in the preselection stage, and its circumstances are radically different from those of a third party which has been invited to submit a tender without being required to follow the procedure with which operators admitted to the restricted procedure have had to comply.

78. Under the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, the aim of which is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure, all tenderers must be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders. This therefore implies that the tenders of all competitors must be subject to the same conditions, (39) and its effects extend to the whole of the procedure for the award of a contract, in particular, both when tenderers formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the contracting authority. (40)

79. Was the fact that the merger of the two operators took place after the deadline for the submission of tenders but before the definitive classification of those tenders (41) liable to be detrimental to the other tenderers by placing them in a position of inequality? I do not believe so. The decisive factor is that the contract was ultimately awarded to the tenderer who fulfilled the conditions set out in the contract notice, provided that the successful tenderer did not receive preferential treatment throughout the procedure.

80. In particular, for our purposes here, since the procedure was restricted, the following factors are relevant:

- first, Enel Open Fiber was duly preselected and kept its legal personality unchanged even though its shareholding structure was altered when it absorbed another tenderer;
- second, Metroweb Sviluppo, the tenderer which was absorbed, did not submit a tender in the end even though it had been preselected. That means that, ultimately, the merger of the two operators resulted in the submission of a single tender.

81. It was not even absolutely essential that Metroweb withdrew from the tendering procedure, for the purposes of giving full effect to the principle of equal treatment, since the Court has held that tenderers who are linked to one another may submit tenders simultaneously in the same procedure, provided that these are not ‘coordinated or concerted tenders, that is to say, tenders that are neither autonomous nor independent, which would be likely to give them unjustified advantages in relation to the other tenderers’. (42)

82. The possible risks of collusion which could arise as a result of the merger do not really have anything to do with a change in the substantive identity of Enel Open Fiber but rather with the fact that improper contact might have taken place between two of the tenderers, irrespective of whether or not they were involved in a merger operation.

83. There is nothing to suggest that Metroweb Sviluppo and Enel Open Fiber’s tenders were coordinated or concerted and, in any event, only one of them ultimately submitted a tender, which eliminates the risk of collusion.

84. Moreover, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) expressly rules out the possibility that the merger agreement was aimed at circumventing the rules of competition or that it sought, ‘in essence, to disturb the balance of the tendering procedure to the detriment of the other competitors and the procuring entity … The concentration transaction carried out under the framework agreement of 10 October 2016 cannot, in itself, be said to amount to a concerted practice between participants in the tendering procedure'. (43)

85. However, it is appropriate to consider the situations in which a merger in progress is capable of undermining the principle of equal treatment. I am not ruling out that, in the abstract, that might occur where, contrary to Article 7(1) of the EC Merger Regulation, (44) the merger has de facto begun to take effect, thereby enabling a possible exchange of information between the operators concerned — who have been preselected — which could place them at an advantage over the other tenderers. (45)

86. It is for the referring court to determine whether that occurred in this case although, I repeat, its view, as set out in the order for reference, is that the structural merger of the two companies 'falls far short of being a collusive agreement between two competitors who intend to upset the balance of an individual tendering procedure'. (46)

87. In summary, the submission of a tender by a tenderer which is in the process of merging with another tenderer, which has also been selected, is not incompatible with Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24, unless the two operators act in a coordinated or concerted manner in the restricted procurement procedure so that they have an unfair advantage over other tenderers, a matter which it is for the national court to determine.

V. Conclusion

88. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the Court of Justice reply as follows to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy):

> Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude, in a restricted procedure, the admission to the tender evaluation stage of an economic operator which has concluded an agreement for the merger by absorption of another economic operator which has also been selected, provided that:
> – that merger agreement was not legally or substantively implemented before the tender submission stage; and
> – the two operators have not acted in a coordinated or concerted manner in the restricted procurement procedure so that they have an unfair advantage over other tenderers, a matter which it is for the national court to determine.

18 Paragraph 8.2, in fine, of the order for reference states that ‘it would be possible to come to a different conclusion only if the Court of Justice were to find that EU law prohibits the conclusion of agreements between competing operators in the context of the same tendering procedure in implementation of which a transaction is carried out, such as a merger by absorption, which is in principle permitted by that same EU law.’

19 ‘The referring court or tribunal may also briefly state its view on the answer to be given to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling. That information may be useful to the Court’ (OJ 2018 C 257, 20 See points 21 to 23, 41 and 42 of this Opinion.

29 Case C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347.

30 Point 31 of its written observations.

31 As Telecom Italia states in its written observations (point 31), 'in that scenario, the [subsequent] formal legal nature of the absorbed company (Metroweb Sviluppo) is not important …; in reality, it is sufficient that the substantive, rather than legal, identity of the absorbing company (Open Fiber) changes … for the merger to be incompatible with … the principle laid down in Article 28(2) of Directive 2014/24'.

32 Pursuant to Article 3(1) of Directive 2011/35/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 April 2011 concerning mergers of public limited liability companies (OJ 2011 L 110, p. 1), '"merger by acquisition" shall mean the operation whereby one or more companies are wound up without going into liquidation and transfer to another all their assets and liabilities in exchange for the issue to the shareholders of the company or companies being acquired of shares in the acquiring company and a cash payment, if any, not exceeding 10% of the nominal value of the shares so issued or, where they have no nominal value, of their accounting par value.'

33 ‘If the principles to be inferred from Article 28(2) were more broadly construed, the consequences would be difficult for contracting authorities to manage and there would be a constant risk of the ex post nullity of acts awarding a contract … in clear contravention of the general principle of the stability of legal situations’ (paragraph 8.3 in fine of the order for reference).

34 The specific situation referred to in Article 72(1)(d)(ii) is ‘universal or partial succession into the position of the initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, including takeover, merger, acquisition or insolvency, of another economic operator that fulfils the criteria for qualitative selection initially established provided that this does not entail other substantial modifications to the contract and is not aimed at circumventing the application of this Directive’.

---

35 That possibility is based on the principle of preservation of the contract and the requirement that any changes in the shareholding structure should not be prejudiced by interference in the normal performance of corporate transactions. The latter could be affected if changes occurring in the capital had a negative impact on restricted procurement procedures. Companies would therefore be prevented from carrying out corporate restructuring programmes.

36 According to recital 110 in the preamble to Directive 2014/24, ‘… the successful tenderer performing the contract should be able, in particular where the contract has been awarded to more than one undertaking, to undergo certain structural changes during the performance of the contract, such as purely internal reorganisations, takeovers, mergers and acquisitions or insolvency. Such structural changes should not automatically require new procurement procedures for all public contracts performed by that tenderer.’

44 Pursuant to which ‘a concentration with a Community dimension … or which is to be examined by the Commission … shall not be implemented either before its notification or until it has been declared compatible with the common market pursuant to a decision’.

45 These are the situations referred to in paragraph 29 of the judgment in Specializuotas transportas (C-531/16, EU:C:2018:324), transcribed above. That situation might have occurred if the merger process had begun before the submission of tenders and the substantive (and unlawful) implementation of the merger prior to the Commission’s decision had affected the subject matter of Enel Open Fiber’s tender in the same way as would have happened if that undertaking and Metroweb Sviluppo had coordinated with one another to align their conduct throughout the successive stages of the procedure, to the detriment of other operators.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 30 April 2019,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 4(3) TEU, of the second subparagraph of Article 19(1) TEU, of Article 49 TFEU, of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) ('Directive 89/665'), of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2007/66 ('Directive 92/13'), of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) and of the EU-law principles of primacy, equivalence and effectiveness.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Hochtief Solutions AG Magyarországi Fióktelepe ('Hochtief Solutions') and the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court, Hungary), concerning damage allegedly caused by the latter court, in the exercise of its judicial powers, to Hochtief Solutions.

Legal context

EU law

3 The third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, drafted in almost identical terms to those of the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13, provide as follows:

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed [EU] law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

4 Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

'Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

5 Article 2(1) of Directive 92/13 provided:

‘The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers:

either

(a) to take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedure, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further injury to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting entity; and

(b) to set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the notice of contract, the periodic indicative notice, the notice on the existence of a system of qualification, the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure in question;

(c) to take, at the earliest opportunity, if possible by way of interlocutory procedures and if necessary by a final procedure on the substance, measures other than those provided for in points (a) and (b) with the aim of correcting any identified infringement and preventing injury to the interests concerned; in particular, making an order for the payment of a particular sum, in cases where the infringement has not been corrected or prevented.

Member States may take this choice either for all contracting entities or for categories of entities defined on the basis of objective criteria, in any event preserving the effectiveness of the measures laid down in order to prevent injury being caused to the interests concerned;

(d) and, in both the above cases, to award damages to persons injured by the infringement.

Where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision has been taken unlawfully, Member States may, where their system of internal law so requires and provides bodies having the necessary powers for that purpose, provide that the contested decision must first be set aside or declared illegal.’

Hungarian law

6 Article 260 of the polgári perrendtartásról szóló 1952. évi III. törvény (Law No III of 1952 instituting the Code of civil procedure (‘the Code of Civil Procedure’) provides:

‘1. A request for review may be submitted against a final judgment if:

(a) the party presents any fact or evidence, or any final court or administrative decision, that the court did not take into consideration during the previous proceedings, provided that it would have been to its benefit had it been considered originally;

2. Under subparagraph (a) of paragraph (1) above, either of the parties shall be able to file a request for review only if it was unable to present the fact, evidence or decision mentioned therein during the previous proceedings through no fault of its own.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

7 On 25 July 2006, the Észak-Dunántúli Környezetvédelmi és Vízügyi Igazgatóság (North Transdanubia Environmental Protection and Water Management Directorate, Hungary) (‘the contracting authority’) published a call for expressions of interest in the Official Journal of the European Union, S Series, under number 139-149235, for a public works contract concerning the development of transportation infrastructures in the intermodal centre of the national commercial harbour of Győr-Gönyű (Hungary) pursuant to the accelerated procedure under Chapter IV of the közbeszerzésekről szóló 2003. évi CXXIX. törvény (Law No CXXIX of 2003 on public procurement).

8 Section III.2.2 of the call for expressions of interest, relating to economic and financial capacity, provided that 'a candidate or sub-contractor whose balance sheet shows a negative result for more than one of the last three financial years does not fulfil the conditions for capacity'.

9 It is apparent from the order for reference that Hochtief Solutions, which did not fulfil that criterion, challenged its lawfulness before the Közbeszerzési Döntőbizottság (Public Procurement Arbitration Committee, Hungary) ('the Arbitration Committee'), arguing (i) that that criterion was discriminatory and (ii) that it was not by itself capable of providing information on the financial capacity of a tenderer.

10 The Arbitration Committee upheld Hochtief Solutions' action in part, ordering the contracting authority to pay a fine of 8 000 000 Hungarian forint (HUF) (approximately EUR 24 500), but did not find that that criterion was unlawful.

11 On 2 October 2006, Hochtief Solutions brought an action against the decision of the Arbitration Committee before the Fővárosi Bíróság (Budapest High Court, Hungary), which took the view that the results of the balance sheet constituted a suitable criterion for providing information about economic and financial capacity and, accordingly, dismissed the action.

12 On 4 June 2010, Hochtief Solutions appealed against the judgment at first instance to the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal, Hungary), which decided to stay the proceedings and to submit a request for a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice.

13 By judgment of 18 October 2012, Édukövízig and Hochtief Construction (C-218/11, EU:C:2012:643), the Court held, inter alia, that Article 44(2) and Article 47(1)(b) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may require a minimum level of economic and financial standing by reference to one or more particular aspects of the balance sheet, provided that those aspects are such as to provide information on such standing of an economic operator and that that level is adapted to the size of the contract concerned in that it constitutes objectively a positive indication of the existence of a sufficient economic and financial basis for the performance of that contract, without, however, going beyond what is reasonably necessary for that purpose. The requirement of a minimum level of economic and financial standing cannot, in principle, be disregarded solely because that level relates to an aspect of the balance sheet regarding which there may be differences between the legislation of the different Member States.

14 The Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court), which had meanwhile succeeded the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal), having taken account of that judgment of the Court, upheld the judgment delivered at first instance, holding that the criterion used by the contracting authority to assess economic and financial capacity was not discriminatory.

15 On 13 September 2013, Hochtief Solutions lodged an appeal on a point of law before the Kúria (Supreme Court, Hungary) against the judgment of the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court), in which it claimed that the results of the balance sheet were not an appropriate basis for providing the contracting authority with a genuine and objective view of a tenderer's economic and financial situation. Hochtief Solutions also requested the Kúria (Supreme Court) to make another reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

16 By judgment of 19 March 2014, the Kúria (Supreme Court), however, dismissed the appeal on the ground that that complaint had not been raised within the prescribed period, since Hochtief Solutions had raised that issue, not in its initial administrative action before the Arbitration Committee, but solely in its subsequent submissions.

17 On 25 July 2014, Hochtief Solutions lodged a constitutional appeal against the judgment of the Kúria (Supreme Court) before the Alkotmánybíróság (Constitutional Court, Hungary) by which it sought a declaration that that judgment was unconstitutional and requested that it be set aside. That appeal was dismissed as inadmissible by order of 9 February 2015.

18 In the meantime, on 26 November 2014, Hochtief Solutions filed an application before the Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (Budapest Administrative and Labour Court, Hungary) for review of the judgment of the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court), referred to in paragraph 14 of the present judgment.

19 According to the information provided by the referring court, Hochtief Solutions, in support of its application for review, claimed that the question whether the results of the balance sheet were an appropriate indicator for assessing the economic and financial capacity of a tenderer, and the judgment of 18 October 2012, Édukövízig and Hochtief Construction (C-218/11, EU:C:2012:643), had not, in fact, been subject to any examination. According to Hochtief Solutions, that omission constitutes a 'fact', within the meaning of Article 260(1)(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure, capable of justifying the opening of the judgment of the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) to review. Relying, in particular, on the judgment of 13 January 2004, Kühne & Heitz (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17, paragraphs 26 and 27), Hochtief Solutions argued that, where a judgment of the Court of Justice could not be taken into account in the main proceedings on the ground that it was out of time, it may and must be examined in the context of a review.

20 Although Hochtief Solutions requested the Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (Budapest Administrative and Labour Court) to make a reference to the Court for a preliminary ruling on the questions raised in the course of the review proceedings, that court did not accede to that request and dismissed the application for review, finding that the facts and evidence relied on by Hochtief Solutions were not new.

21 Hochtief Solutions then appealed against the order dismissing its application for review before the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court), requesting that court (i) to lay the case open to review and order examination of it on the merits and (ii) to submit a request for a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice.

22 On 18 November 2015, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) made an order confirming the order at first instance of the Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (Budapest Administrative and Labour Court).

23 Hochtief Solutions then brought an action before the referring court, the Székesfehérvári Törvényszék (Székesfehérvár High Court, Hungary), seeking compensation for the damage which, it argued, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) had caused it in exercising its jurisdiction. It claims, in this regard, that it has not been given the opportunity, in accordance with EU law, to have account taken of the facts or circumstances that it had put forward before the Arbitration Committee and in the main proceedings, but on which neither that Committee nor the national courts seised of the case had given a ruling. In so doing, it contends, the Hungarian authorities responsible for the implementation of the law deprived of their substance the rights guaranteed by the relevant rules of EU law.

24 In those circumstances, the Székesfehérvári Törvényszék (Székesfehérvár High Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Are the basic principles and rules of EU law (in particular Article 4(3) TEU, and the requirement of uniform interpretation), as interpreted by the Court of Justice of the European Union, especially in the judgment [of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513)] to be interpreted as meaning that the declaration of the liability of the court of the Member State ruling at final instance in a judgment infringing EU law may be based exclusively on national law or on the criteria laid down by national law? If not, are the basic principles and rules of EU law, particularly the three criteria laid down by the Court of Justice in [the judgment of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513)] for declaring the liability of the "State" to be interpreted as meaning that whether the conditions for the Member State to incur liability for infringement of EU law by the courts of that State are met is to be assessed on the basis of national law?

(2) Are the basic principles and rules of EU law (in particular Article 4(3) TEU and the requirement of effective judicial protection), particularly the judgments of the Court of Justice concerning the liability of the Member State …, inter alia, [of 19 November 1991, Francovich and Others

(C-6/90 and C-9/90, EU:C:1991:428); of 5 March 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame (C-46/93 and C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79), and of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513)], to be interpreted as meaning that the force of res judicata attaching to judgments that infringe EU law delivered by courts of the Member States ruling at final instance precludes a declaration that the Member State is liable for damages?

(3) In the light of Directive [89/665] and of Directive [92/13], are the review procedure concerning the award of public contracts of a value greater than the [EU] thresholds and the judicial review of the administrative decision adopted in that procedure relevant for the purposes of EU law? If so, are EU law and the case-law of the Court of Justice [in particular, the judgments of 13 January 2004, Kühne & Heitz (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17) and of 16 March 2006, Kapferer (C-234/04, EU:C:2006:178), and especially the judgment of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti (C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067)] regarding the necessity of granting review, as an extraordinary appeal, which is derived from national law on judicial review of the administrative decision adopted in the abovementioned review procedure concerning the award of public contracts, relevant for the purposes of EU law?

(4) Are the directives on review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (namely, Directive [89/665] and Directive [92/13]) to be interpreted as meaning that national legislation, under which the national courts before which the dispute in the main proceedings is brought may disregard a fact that has to be examined in accordance with a judgment of the Court of Justice, delivered in a preliminary ruling procedure in connection with a review procedure concerning the award of public contracts, a fact that is not taken into account either by the national courts ruling in proceedings instituted as a result of the review procedure brought against the decision adopted in the main proceedings, is compatible with those directives?

(5) Are Directive [89/665], in particular Article 1(1) and (3) thereof, and Directive [92/13], in particular Articles 1 and 2 thereof (especially in the light of [the judgments of 13 January 2004, Kühne & Heitz (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17); of 16 March 2006, Kapferer (C-234/04, EU:C:2006:178); of 12 February 2008, Willy Kempter (C-2/06, EU:C:2008:78); of 4 June 2009, Pannon GSM (C-243/08, EU:C:2009:350); and of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti (C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067)], to be interpreted as meaning that national legislation, or an application thereof, in accordance with which, although a judgment of the Court of Justice delivered in a preliminary ruling procedure before judgment in the proceedings at second instance establishes a relevant interpretation of the rules of EU law, the court hearing the case rejects it on the grounds that it is out of time and subsequently the court hearing the application for review does not consider the review admissible, is compatible with the abovementioned directives and with the requirements of effective judicial protection and with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness?

(6) If, under national law, review must be granted in order to re-establish constitutionality by means of a new decision of the Constitutional Court, should review not be granted, in accordance with the principle of equivalence and the principle laid down in [the judgment of 26 January 2010, Transportes Urbanos y Servicios Generales (C-118/08, EU:C:2010:39)], if it has not been possible to take into account a judgment of the Court of Justice in the main proceedings owing to the provisions of national law concerning procedural time limits?

(7) Are Directive [89/665], in particular Article 1(1) and (3) thereof, and Directive [92/13], in particular Articles 1 and 2 thereof, in the light of the judgment of the Court of Justice [of 12 February 2008, Willy Kempter (C-2/06, EU:C:2008:78)], according to which an individual need not rely specifically upon the case-law of the Court of Justice, to be interpreted as meaning that the review procedures concerning the award of public contracts governed by the abovementioned directives may be initiated only by an action containing an express description of the infringement concerning the award of public contracts invoked and, furthermore, clearly indicates the procurement rule infringed (the specific article and paragraph), that is to say, that in a review procedure concerning the award of public contracts only those infringements that the appellant has indicated by reference to the procurement provision infringed (the specific article and paragraph), whereas in any other administrative and civil procedure it is sufficient for the individual to present the facts and the evidence supporting them, and for the competent authority or court to give a ruling in accordance with their content?

(8) Is the requirement of a sufficiently serious infringement laid down in the judgments [of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513), and of 13 June 2006, Traghetti del Mediterraneo (C-173/03, EU:C:2006:391)] to be interpreted as meaning that there is no such infringement if the court ruling at final instance, in clear contravention of the established case-law, cited in the greatest detail, of the Court of Justice, supported by various legal opinions as well, refuses an individual's request for a question to be referred for a preliminary ruling as to whether review ought to be granted, on the absurd grounds that EU law, in this case, in particular, [Directives 89/665 and 92/13], contains no rules governing review, in spite of the fact that, for that purpose, reference has also been made in the greatest detail to the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice, including also [the judgment of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti (C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067)], which specifically states the need of review in relation to the public procurement procedure? In the light of the judgment of the Court of Justice in [the judgment of 6 October 1982, Cilfit and Others (283/81, EU:C:1982:335)], with what degree of detail must the national court that does not grant review justify its decision to depart from the authoritative legal interpretation given by the Court of Justice?

(9) Are the principles of effective judicial protection and of equivalence in Article 19 TEU and Article 4(3) TEU, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services laid down in Article 49 TFEU, and [Directive 93/37] and also [Directives 89/665, 92/13 and 2007/66], to be interpreted as not precluding the competent authorities and courts from dismissing one after another, in manifest disregard of the applicable EU law, the appeals brought by the appellant because it was unable to participate in a public procurement procedure, appeals for which it is necessary to prepare, depending on the circumstances, numerous documents with considerable investment of time and money or to participate at hearings, and, although it is true that, in theory, liability may be declared for damage caused in the exercise of judicial functions, the relevant legislation prevents the appellant claiming from the court compensation for harm suffered as a consequence of the unlawful measures?

(10) Are the principles laid down in the judgments [of 9 November 1983, San Giorgio (199/82, EU:C:1983:318); of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513), and of 13 June 2006, Traghetti del Mediterraneo (C-173/03, EU:C:2006:391)] to be interpreted as meaning that compensation may not be paid for damage caused by the fact that, in infringement of the established case-law of the Court of Justice, the court of the Member State ruling at final instance has not granted the review requested in good time by the individual, in which he could have claimed compensation for the costs incurred?'

Consideration of the questions referred

Preliminary observations

25 As is apparent from the order for reference, the main proceedings concern compensation for the harm allegedly suffered by Hochtief Solutions as a result of the order, mentioned in paragraph 22 of the present judgment, by which the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court), adjudicating at final instance, upheld the order of the Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (Budapest Administrative and Labour Court), mentioned in paragraph 20 of the present judgment, by which it (i) refused to submit a request to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling and (ii) dismissed the application for review brought by Hochtief Solutions against the judgment of the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court), mentioned in paragraph 14 of the present judgment.

26 It follows that the case in the main proceedings concerns the question whether, in so proceeding, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) committed a breach of EU law which is capable of forming the basis of an obligation to compensate Hochtief Solutions for the harm which it claims to have suffered as a result of that breach.

27 In this context, the referring court seeks, in particular, to ascertain whether EU law must be interpreted as meaning that, in circumstances such as those of the main proceedings, a national court dealing with an application for review of a judgment which acquired the force of res judicata after a judgment delivered by the Court on the basis of Article 267 TFEU in the proceedings which led to that national judgment is required to uphold that application.

28 It is in the light of the context, as thus defined, of the dispute in the main proceedings that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling should be examined.

The admissibility of the seventh and ninth questions

29 By its seventh question, the referring court asks the Court, in essence, to rule on the conformity with EU law of national procedural rules, relating to the mandatory content of an action in the field of public procurement, while by its ninth question it asks, in essence, whether the act of systematically dismissing, in breach of EU law, actions brought by an unsuccessful tenderer in a public procurement procedure, such as Hochtief Solutions, is compatible with EU law.

30 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, according to settled case-law of the Court, the procedure laid down in Article 267 TFEU is an instrument for cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts. It follows that it is for the national courts alone which are seised of the case and which are responsible for the judgment to be delivered to determine, in view of the special features of each case, both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable them to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which they put to the Court. Consequently, where questions submitted by national courts concern the interpretation of a provision of EU law, the Court is, in principle, obliged to give a ruling (judgment of 28 March 2019, Verlezza and Others, C-487/17 to C-489/17, EU:C:2019:270, paragraphs 27 and 28 and the case-law cited).

31 However, the Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court, inter alia, where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose or where the problem is hypothetical (judgment of 28 March 2019, Verlezza and Others, C-487/17 to C-489/17, EU:C:2019:270, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

32 The seventh and ninth questions specifically come within the latter situation. It is quite obvious that those questions bear no relation to the subject matter of the main proceedings, as summarised in paragraph 26 of the present judgment and are, therefore, hypothetical.

33 It follows that the seventh and ninth questions are inadmissible.

The first, second, eight and 10th questions

34 By these questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court seeks guidance on, in particular, the principles laid down by the Court concerning the liability of a Member State for damage caused to individuals as a result of an infringement of EU law by a national court adjudicating at final instance. The referring court asks, in essence, whether those principles must be interpreted as meaning (i) that the liability of the Member State concerned must be assessed on the basis of national law; (ii) that the principle of res judicata precludes a declaration of the liability of that Member State from being made; (iii) that there is a sufficiently serious infringement of EU law where the court adjudicating at final instance refuses to refer to the Court of Justice a question concerning the interpretation of EU law which has been raised before it; and (iv) that they preclude a rule of national law which excludes the costs incurred by a party as a result of the judicial decision in question from the damage which may be the subject of compensation.

35 In the first place, it should be noted that, with regard to the conditions under which a Member State may be rendered liable to make reparation for loss and damage caused to individuals as a result of breaches of EU law for which it is responsible, the Court has repeatedly held that individuals who have been harmed have a right to reparation if three conditions are met: the rule of EU law infringed must be intended to confer rights on them; the breach of that rule must be sufficiently serious; and there must be a direct causal link between that breach and the loss or damage sustained by those individuals (see, to that effect, in particular, judgments of 5 March 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame, C-46/93 and C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79, paragraph 51; of 30 September 2003, Köbler, C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 51; and of 28 July 2016, Tomášová, C-168/15, EU:C:2016:602, paragraph 22).

36 It should also be borne in mind that the liability of a Member State for damage caused by a decision of a court adjudicating at final instance which breaches a rule of EU law is governed by the same conditions (see, to that effect, judgments of 30 September 2003, Köbler, C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 52, and of 28 July 2016, Tomášová, C-168/15, EU:C:2016:602, paragraph 23).

37 Furthermore, the three conditions mentioned in paragraph 35 of the present judgment are necessary and sufficient to found a right in favour of individuals to obtain redress, although this does not mean that a Member State cannot incur liability under less strict conditions on the basis of national law (see, to that effect, inter alia, judgments of 5 March 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame, C-46/93 and C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79, paragraph 66, and of 30 September 2003, Köbler, C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 57).

38 It follows that EU law does not preclude a rule of national law which — in order for a Member State to incur liability for harm caused to individuals as a result of infringements of EU law for which it can be held responsible — provides for less strict conditions than those laid down by the case-law of the Court mentioned in paragraph 35 of the present judgment.

39 In the second place, as is apparent from the case-law of the Court, the principle of res judicata does not preclude recognition of the principle of liability of a Member State for the decision of a national court or tribunal adjudicating at final instance which infringes a rule of EU law. Given, inter alia, that an infringement, by such a decision, of rights deriving from EU law cannot normally be corrected thereafter, individuals cannot be deprived of the possibility of holding the State liable in order to secure legal protection of their rights (see, to that effect, judgments of 30 September 2003, Köbler, C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 34, and of 24 October 2018, XC and Others, C-234/17, EU:C:2018:853, paragraph 58 and the case-law cited).

40 In the third place, it is clear from the settled case-law of the Court that it is, in principle, for the national courts to apply the conditions mentioned in paragraph 35 of the present judgment for establishing the liability of a Member State for damage caused to individuals by breaches of EU law, for which the State can be held responsible, in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Court for the application of those conditions (see, to that effect, judgments of 30 September 2003, Köbler, C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 100, and of 4 October 2018, Kantarev, C-571/16, EU:C:2018:807, paragraph 95).

41 In that connection, as regards, in particular, the second of those conditions, it should be borne in mind that, according to the Court's case-law, the liability of a Member State for damage caused to individuals by reason of an infringement of EU law attributable to a national court adjudicating at final instance can be incurred only in the exceptional case where the national court adjudicating at final instance has manifestly infringed the applicable law (judgments of 30 September 2003, Köbler, C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 53, and of 13 June 2006, Traghetti del Mediterraneo, C-173/03, EU:C:2006:391, paragraphs 32 and 42).

42 In order to determine whether a sufficiently serious infringement of EU law has occurred, the national court before which a claim for compensation has been brought must take account of all the factors which characterise the situation brought before it. The factors which may be taken into consideration in that regard include, in particular, the degree of clarity and precision of the rule breached, the scope of the room for assessment that the infringed rule confers on national authorities, whether the infringement and the damage caused were intentional or involuntary, whether any error of law was excusable or inexcusable, and the issue, where applicable, of whether the position taken by an EU institution may have contributed to the adoption or maintenance of national measures or practices contrary to EU law, and non-compliance by the national court in question with its obligation to make a reference for a preliminary ruling under the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU (see, to that effect, judgments of 5 March 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame, C-46/93 and C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79, paragraph 56; of 30 September 2003, Köbler, C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraphs 54 and 55; and of 28 July 2016, Tomášová, C-168/15, EU:C:2016:602, paragraph 25).

43 In any event, an infringement of EU law is sufficiently serious if it was made in manifest breach of the relevant case-law of the Court (judgments of 30 September 2003, Köbler, C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 56; of 25 November 2010, Fuß, C-429/09, EU:C:2010:717, paragraph 52; and of 28 July 2016, Tomášová, C-168/15, EU:C:2016:602, paragraph 26).

44 With regard to the dispute in the main proceedings, it is for the referring court to assess, taking into account all the factors which characterise the situation at issue in the main proceedings, whether the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court), by the order mentioned in paragraph 22 of the present judgment, committed a sufficiently serious infringement of EU law by manifestly disregarding the applicable EU law, including the relevant case-law of the Court, in particular the judgment of 18 October 2012, Édukövízig and Hochtief Construction (C-218/11, EU:C:2012:643).

45 In the fourth place, where the conditions referred to in paragraph 35 of the present judgment are satisfied, the Member State must make reparation for the consequences of the loss and damage occasioned in accordance with the domestic rules on liability, provided that the conditions for reparation of loss and damage laid down by national law are not less favourable than those relating to similar domestic claims (principle of equivalence) and are not such as in practice to make it impossible or excessively difficult to obtain reparation (principle of effectiveness) (see, to that effect, judgments of 5 March 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame, C-46/93 and C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79, paragraph 67; of 30 September 2003, Köbler, C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 58; and of 28 July 2016, Tomášová, C-168/15, EU:C:2016:602, paragraph 38).

46 In that regard, it follows from the case-law of the Court that reparation for loss or damage caused to individuals as a result of breaches of EU law must be commensurate with the loss or damage sustained so as to ensure the effective protection for their rights (see, to that effect, judgments of 5 March 1996, Brasserie du pêcheur and Factortame, C-46/93 and C-48/93, EU:C:1996:79, paragraph 82, and of 25 November 2010, Fuß, C-429/09, EU:C:2010:717, paragraph 92).

47 A rule of national law under which — in a case where the liability of a Member State is incurred in respect of damage caused by an infringement of a rule of EU law by a decision of a court or tribunal of that State adjudicating at final instance — the costs incurred by one party as a result of that decision are generally excluded from the damage which may be the subject of compensation may render it, in practice, excessively difficult or even impossible to obtain adequate compensation for the harm suffered by that party.

48 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first, second, eighth and 10th questions must be that the liability of a Member State for damage caused by a decision of a national court or tribunal adjudicating at final instance which infringes a rule of EU law is governed by the conditions laid down by the Court, in particular in paragraph 51 of the judgment of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513), without excluding the possibility that that State may incur liability under less strict conditions on the basis of national law. That liability is not precluded by the fact that that decision has acquired the force of res judicata. In the context of the enforcement of that liability, it is for the national court or tribunal before which the action for damages has been brought to determine, taking into account all the factors which characterise the situation in question, whether the national court or tribunal adjudicating at final instance committed a sufficiently serious infringement of EU law by manifestly disregarding the applicable EU law, including the relevant case-law of the Court. By contrast, EU law precludes a rule of national law which, in such a case, generally excludes the costs incurred by a party as a result of the harmful decision of the national court or tribunal from damage which may be the subject of compensation.

The third, fourth, fifth and sixth questions

49 Taking account of the context of the case in the main proceedings, as noted in paragraphs 26 and 27 of the present judgment, it must be understood that, by its third, fourth, fifth and sixth questions, the referring court is asking the Court, in essence, whether EU law, in particular, Directives 89/665 and 92/13 and the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a Member State which does not allow review of a judgment, which has acquired the force of res judicata, of a court or tribunal of that Member State which has ruled on an action for annulment against an act of a contracting authority without addressing a question the examination of which was envisaged in an earlier judgment of the Court in response to a request for a preliminary ruling made in the course of the proceedings relating to that action for annulment.

50 In that connection, it must be recalled that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(1) of Directive 92/13 require the Member States to adopt the measures necessary to ensure that the decisions taken by the contracting authorities in public contract award procedures coming within the scope of those directives may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible, on the ground that they have infringed EU law on public procurement or the national rules transposing that law (judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 39).

51 Those provisions, which are intended to protect tenderers against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority, are thus designed to reinforce the existence, in all Member States, of effective remedies, so as to ensure the effective application of the EU rules on the award of public contracts, in particular where infringements can still be rectified (judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 41 and the case-law cited).

52 Neither Directive 89/665 nor Directive 92/13 contains any provisions specifically governing the conditions under which those review procedures may be used. Those directives lay down only the minimum conditions to be satisfied by the review procedures established in domestic law to ensure compliance with the requirements of EU law concerning public procurement (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 42).

53 In the present case, it is apparent from the information provided by the referring court that, under Hungarian procedural law, review, within the meaning of Article 260 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is an extraordinary remedy which, where the conditions laid down by that provision are satisfied, allows the force of res judicata attached to a judgment that has become final to be called into question.

54 Attention should be drawn to the importance, both in the legal order of the European Union and in national legal systems, of the principle of res judicata. In order to ensure both stability of the law and of legal relations and the sound administration of justice, it is important that judicial decisions which have become definitive after all rights of appeal have been exhausted or after the passing of the time limits provided for in that connection can no longer be called into question (judgments of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraph 58, and of 6 October 2015, Târşia, C-69/14, EU:C:2015:662, paragraph 28).

55 Consequently, EU law does not require a national court to disapply domestic rules of procedure conferring finality on a judgment, even if to do so would make it possible to remedy a domestic situation which is incompatible with EU law (judgments of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraph 59, and of 6 October 2015, Târşia, C-69/14, EU:C:2015:662, paragraph 29).

56 It has been held that EU law does not require a judicial body automatically to reverse a judgment having the authority of res judicata in order to take into account the interpretation of a relevant provision of EU law adopted by the Court (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraph 60, and of 6 October 2015, Târşia, C-69/14, EU:C:2015:662, paragraph 38).

57 The judgment of 13 January 2004, Kühne & Heitz (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17), relied on by the referring court, cannot call that consideration into question.

58 It is apparent from that judgment that the principle of sincere cooperation, laid down in Article 4(3) TEU, imposes on an administrative body, when so requested, an obligation to review a final administrative decision in order to take account of the interpretation of the relevant provision given in the meantime by the Court, in particular where that administrative body has, under national law, the power to reopen that decision (judgment of 13 January 2004, Kühne & Heitz, C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17, paragraph 28).

59 It is common ground, however, that that consideration concerns only the possible review of a final decision of an administrative body and not, as in the present case, a final decision of a court or tribunal.

60 In that regard, it is apparent from the case-law of the Court that, if the applicable domestic rules of procedure provide the possibility, under certain conditions, for a national court to reverse a decision having the authority of res judicata in order to render the situation arising from that decision compatible with national law, that possibility must prevail if those conditions are met, in accordance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, so that that situation is brought back into line with EU legislation (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraph 62).

61 In the present case, it is apparent from the information provided by the referring court that, under Article 260 of the Code of Civil Procedure, review of a final judgment is allowed where a party may rely on, inter alia, a final judicial decision not taken into account in the course of the proceedings which led to the judgment, the review of which is sought, and only if that party was unable to present, through no fault on its part, that decision during those proceedings.

62 Moreover, it is clear from the wording of the sixth question that Hungarian law authorises the review of a decision having the authority of res judicata in order to re-establish constitutionality by means of a new decision of the Alkotmánybíróság (Constitutional Court).

63 It is consequently a matter for the referring court to determine whether Hungarian procedural rules include the possibility of reversing a judgment which has acquired the force of res judicata, for the purpose of rendering the situation arising from that judgment compatible with an earlier judicial decision which has become final where both the court which delivered that judgment and the parties to the case leading to that judgment were already aware of that earlier decision. If that were the case, in accordance with the case-law of the Court cited in paragraph 60 above, that possibility should, in accordance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, in the same circumstances, prevail in order to render the situation compatible with an earlier judgment of the Court.

64 Nonetheless, it should, in any event, be borne in mind that it is settled case-law that, by reason, inter alia, of the fact that an infringement, by a final decision of a court of tribunal, of rights deriving from EU law cannot normally be corrected thereafter, individuals cannot be deprived of the possibility of holding the State liable in order to obtain legal protection of their rights (judgments of 6 October 2015, Târşia, C-69/14, EU:C:2015:662, paragraph 40, and of 24 October 2018, XC and Others, C-234/17, EU:C:2018:853, paragraph 58).

65 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the third, fourth, fifth and sixth questions is that EU law, in particular, Directives 89/665 and 92/13 and the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a Member State which does not allow review of a judgment, which has acquired the force of res judicata, of a court or tribunal of that Member State which has ruled on an action for annulment against an act of a contracting authority without addressing a question the examination of which was envisaged in an earlier judgment of the Court in response to a request for a preliminary ruling made in the course of the proceedings relating to that action for annulment. However, if the applicable domestic rules of procedure provide the possibility for national courts to reverse a judgment which has acquired the force of res judicata, for the purposes of rendering the situation arising from that judgment compatible with an earlier national judicial decision which has become final — where both the court which delivered that judgment and the parties to the case leading to that judgment were already aware of that earlier decision — that possibility must, in accordance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, in the same circumstances, prevail in order to render the situation compatible with EU law, as interpreted by an earlier judgment of the Court of Justice.

Costs

66 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. The liability of a Member State for damage caused by a decision of a national court or tribunal adjudicating at final instance which breaches a rule of European Union law is governed by the conditions laid down by the Court, in particular in paragraph 51 of the judgment of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513), without excluding the possibility that that State may incur liability under less strict conditions on the basis of national law. That liability is not precluded by the fact that that decision has acquired the force of res judicata. In the context of the enforcement of that liability, it is for the national court or tribunal before which the action for damages has been brought to determine, taking into account all the factors which characterise the situation in question, whether the national court or tribunal adjudicating at final instance committed a sufficiently serious infringement of European Union law by manifestly disregarding the relevant European Union law, including the relevant case-law of the Court. By contrast, European Union law precludes a rule of national law which, in such a case, generally excludes the costs incurred by a party as a result of the harmful decision of the national court or tribunal from damage which may be the subject of compensation.

2. European Union law, in particular Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, and Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2007/66, as well as the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a Member State which does not allow review of a judgment, which has acquired the force of res judicata, of a court or tribunal of that Member State which has ruled on an action for annulment against an act of a contracting authority without addressing a question the examination of which was envisaged in an earlier judgment of the Court in response to a request for a preliminary ruling made in the course of the proceedings relating to that action for annulment.However, if the applicable domestic rules of procedure include the possibility for national courts to reverse a judgment which has acquired the force of res judicata, for the purposes of rendering the situation arising from that judgment compatible with an earlier national judicial decision which has become final — where both the court which delivered that judgment and the parties to the case leading to that judgment were already aware of that earlier decision — that possibility must, in accordance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, in the same circumstances, prevail in order to render the situation compatible with European Union law, as interpreted by an earlier judgment of the Court of Justice.

BOBEK

delivered on 30 April 2019(1)

Case C-620/17

Hochtief Solutions AG Magyarországi Fióktelepe

v

Fővárosi Törvényszék

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Székesfehérvári Törvényszék (Székesfehérvár High Court, Hungary))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Review procedures — Binding force of preliminary rulings — Member State procedural autonomy — Motion for retrial — Equivalence and effectiveness — Member State liability for breaches of EU law arising from decisions of national courts — Failure to refer under the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU)

I. Introduction

1. The present case is another instalment of a rather complex procedural saga, currently in its third episode. With a considerable degree of simplification, the first episode featured the original national decisions on the merits. Within that episode (or litigation round), the appellate national court dealing with the case, the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal, Hungary), requested guidance from this Court. (2) Disagreeing with the way in which the national courts allegedly (mis)applied that guidance in the litigation on the merits, the second round of national litigation concerned a motion for a retrial brought by Hochtief Solutions AG Magyarországi Fióktelepe ('Hochtief Hungary').

2. The present request for a preliminary ruling was made within the third round of national litigation concerning a claim for damages brought by Hochtief Hungary on two grounds. First, in the view of Hochtief Hungary, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court, Hungary), acting as an appeal court in the request for a retrial in the second round, should have authorised a retrial in order to take into account the preliminary ruling of the Court given earlier in the same case. Second, it should have made a further request for a preliminary ruling to the Court so that the latter could determine whether, in the circumstances of the case, EU law required a retrial.

3. It is in this context that the Court is asked to address essentially three sets of questions: first, the consequences, under EU law, of the alleged failure of the national courts hearing the case on the merits to correctly implement the preliminary ruling of the Court due to the operation of various procedural limitations; second, whether EU law requires that the extraordinary remedy of a retrial, offered under national law in certain situations, also be extended to alleged breaches of EU law in a situation such as the one in the main proceedings; and, third, a number of elements relating to the conditions for Member State liability.

II. Legal framework

A. EU law

4. Article 1 of Directive 89/665/EEC on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (3) requires the Member States to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and that the review procedures are available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

5. Article 2(1) of Directive 92/13/EEC coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (4) requires the Member States to provide for the power either to take interim measures regarding the procedure for the award of a contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting entity and to set aside decisions taken unlawfully relating to the contract award procedure in question, or to take other types of measures with the aim of correcting any identified infringement and preventing injury to the interests concerned. Member States must also provide for the power to award damages to persons injured by the infringement.

B. Hungarian Law

6. Sections 6:548(1) and 6:549(1) of a Polgári Törvénykönyvről szóló 2013. évi V. törvény (Law V of 2013 on the Civil Code) (‘the Civil Code’) set out under the title ‘Liability for the actions of public authorities’:

> ‘Section 6:548 [Liability for the actions of administrative authorities]: (1) Liability for damage caused within the scope of administrative jurisdiction shall be established only if the damage results from actions or omissions in the exercise of public authority, and if the damage cannot be abated by common remedies or by way of administrative actions.
> Section 6:549 [Liability for the actions of courts, public prosecutors, notaries public and court bailiffs]: (1) The provisions on liability for damage caused within the scope of administrative jurisdiction shall apply mutatis mutandis to liability for the actions of courts and public prosecutors … A claim may be lodged only if common remedies have been exhausted.
> ...’

7. Section 260(1)(a) and (2) of a Polgári perrendtartásról szóló 1952. évi III. törvény (Act III of 1952 on the Code of Civil Procedure) (‘the Civil Procedural Code’) reads as follows:

> ‘(1) A request for a retrial may be submitted against a final judgment if:
> (a) the party presents any fact or evidence, or any final court or administrative decision that the court did not take into consideration during the previous proceedings, provided that it would have been to his benefit had it been considered originally;
> (2) Under Paragraph (a) of Subsection (1) above, either of the parties shall be able to file a request for a retrial only if he was unable to present the fact, evidence or decision mentioned therein during the previous proceedings through no fault of his own.’

8. Section 361(a) of the Civil Procedural Code provides that:

> ‘The Kúria (Supreme Court, Hungary) shall resolve constitutional complaints as per the following:
> (a) if the resolution of the Alkotmánybíróság (Constitutional Court, Hungary) is for the annulment of a substantive law or provision, and the case was handled by way of an action (or non-judicial proceedings) only, the applicant shall be advised of his right to submit a request for a retrial within 30 days at the competent court of first instance.'

III. Facts, procedure and questions referred

9. On 25 July 2006, the Észak-dunántúli Környezetvédelmi és Vízügyi Igazgatóság (North Transdanubia Environmental Protection and Water Management Directorate, 'the contracting authority') published a call for expressions of interest in the Official Journal of the European Union (5) for a public works contract concerning the development of transportation infrastructures in the intermodal centre of the national commercial harbour of Győr-Gönyü. The call for expressions of interest contained a number of conditions for participation in the tendering procedure. In particular, point III.2.2. of the call for expressions of interest laid down a criterion for economic and financial capacity ('the economic requirement'). Under that requirement, the profit/loss item in the candidates' balance sheet could not be negative for more than one of the last three completed financial years.

10. Hochtief Hungary is the Hungarian branch of Hochtief Solutions AG, a German construction company that is, in turn, a subsidiary of the parent company Hochtief AG. Hochtief Hungary did not participate in the tendering procedure. By decision of 14 August 2006, the contracting authority declared that only one candidate, the Hungarian Port 2006 Konzorcium, met all the qualification criteria, so only that candidate could be invited to submit a tender.

11. On 9 August 2006, Hochtief Hungary challenged the lawfulness of the economic requirement laid down in the call for expressions of interest before the Közbeszerzési Döntőbizottság (Public Procurement Arbitration Committee, Hungary, 'the Arbitration Committee'), putting forward that the economic requirement was both discriminatory and not suitable to substantiate the financial capacity of the candidates. It also sought the annulment of the call for expressions of interest and the adoption of an order to conduct a new tendering procedure.

12. In its decision of 25 September 2006, the Arbitration Committee considered that the economic requirement was not inappropriate to establish the economic and financial capacity of the candidates. However, by the same decision, the Arbitration Committee imposed a fine of 8 000 000 Hungarian forint (HUF) on the contracting authority for infringing other provisions of the national legislation on public procurement.

13. On 2 October 2006, Hochtief Hungary sought judicial review of the Arbitration Committee's decision before the Fővárosi Bíróság (Budapest Regional Court, Hungary) with regard to the committee's findings concerning financial capacity. Hochtief Hungary maintained that the economic requirement was not suitable to substantiate the financial capacity of an undertaking.

14. In its judgment of 17 March 2010, the Fővárosi Bíróság (Budapest Regional Court) dismissed Hochtief Hungary's request for judicial review. Although it noted that the latter had claimed in its original complaint before the Arbitration Committee that net worth was not suitable to substantiate financial capacity, the Fővárosi Bíróság (Budapest Regional Court) still found that the economic requirement at issue was a suitable criterion to provide information as to the candidates' financial capacity.

15. Hochtief Hungary appealed against that first-instance judgment before the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal). That court stayed the proceedings and made a request for a preliminary ruling to the Court.

16. In its judgment of 18 October 2012, the Court held that 'a contracting authority may require a minimum level of economic and financial standing by reference to one or more particular aspects of the balance sheet, provided those aspects are such as to provide information on such standing of an economic operator and that that level is adapted to the size of the contract concerned in that it constitutes objectively a positive indication of the existence of a sufficient economic and financial basis for the performance of that contract, without, however, going beyond what is reasonably necessary for that purpose. The requirement of a minimum level of economic and financial standing cannot, in principle, be disregarded solely because that level relates to an aspect of the balance sheet regarding which there may be differences between the legislations of the different Member States'. (6)

17. In its final judgment on the matter of 18 June 2013, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) concluded that, in the light of the preliminary ruling given by the Court, the economic requirement was not incompatible with EU law. The Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) further noted that the necessity and proportionality of the economic requirement had been duly examined by the Arbitration Committee and was also addressed in the first-instance judgment.

18. On 13 September 2013, Hochtief Hungary filed an appeal on points of law before the Kúria (Supreme Court) against the second-instance judgment. It argued that the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) had not examined the objective suitability of the economic requirement. In this context, Hochtief Hungary requested the Kúria (Supreme Court) to refer the case for a preliminary ruling on the question of whether the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) was entitled not to examine the objective suitability of the qualification criteria without making a new request for a preliminary ruling.

19. By its judgment of 19 March 2014, the Kúria (Supreme Court) rejected the appeal on points of law on the ground that the complaint against the economic requirement had been brought out of time, as Hochtief Hungary had not raised that issue in its original complaint before the Arbitration Committee, but only in its subsequent submissions. The only issue that was raised in time by Hochtief Hungary in relation to the contested requirement was its discriminatory nature, so only that aspect was to be assessed.

20. Subsequently, Hochtief Hungary filed a constitutional complaint before the Alkotmánybíróság (Constitutional Court), as well as a request for a retrial before the Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (Budapest Administrative and Labour Court, Hungary).

21. First, within the framework of the constitutional complaint, Hochtief Hungary contended that its rights to a fair trial and to an effective remedy had been infringed. It argued that the Kúria (Supreme Court) should have referred further questions to the Court. On 9 February 2015, the Alkotmánybíróság (Constitutional Court) declared the constitutional complaint inadmissible. The right to an effective remedy invoked by Hochtief Hungary did not guarantee a right to a specific decision and it was for the Kúria (Supreme Court) to decide whether it was necessary to request a preliminary ruling.

22. Second, as regards the request for a retrial, Hochtief Hungary contested the lack of consideration of the suitability of the economic requirement and asked for the reopening of the judicial review proceedings in their entirety, the setting aside of all previous judgments and the adoption of a new decision. It also requested the Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (Budapest Administrative and Labour Court) to request a new preliminary ruling on the question of whether a preliminary ruling could be ignored without a new referral.

23. By its order of 8 May 2015, the Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (Budapest Administrative and Labour Court) declared the request for a retrial inadmissible, while not considering a reference to the Court necessary. It noted that the facts relied on by Hochtief Hungary in its request for a retrial were not new. The courts in the main proceedings already knew them and had evaluated them. By its request for a retrial, Hochtief Hungary was seeking the review of the legal position taken by the Kúria (Supreme Court), which was a question of law and not of fact. A retrial is not designed to correct alleged errors in the application of the law.

24. Hochtief Hungary subsequently filed an appeal against the order of inadmissibility of the Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (Budapest Administrative and Labour Court) before the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court), the defendant in the present case. The latter upheld the first-instance decision in its order of 18 November 2015. It confirmed that the extraordinary remedy of a retrial aimed to rectify factual errors as opposed to errors in the application of the law. The relevant facts had been the same throughout the entire chain of proceedings, and they were assessed at every stage.

25. Eventually, Hochtief Hungary brought an action for damages before the referring court, the Székesfehérvári Törvényszék (Székesfehérvár High Court, Hungary), for the harm allegedly caused by the decision of the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court) in its capacity as the appeal court in the request for a retrial. Hochtief Hungary claims that declaring the request for a retrial inadmissible ran contrary to both national and EU law and should give rise to damages in the form of the legal costs which could have been reimbursed if a retrial had been granted and if Hochtief Hungary had ultimately been successful.

26. It is within this factual and legal context that the Székesfehérvári Törvényszék (Székesfehérvár High Court) decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court of Justice:

‘(1) Are the basic principles and rules of EU law (in particular Article 4(3) TEU, and the requirement of uniform interpretation), as interpreted by the Court of Justice of the European Union, especially in the judgment in Köbler, to be interpreted as meaning that the declaration of the liability of the court of the Member State ruling at final instance in a judgment infringing EU law may be based exclusively on national law or on the criteria laid down by national law? If not, are the basic principles and rules of EU law, particularly the three criteria laid down by the [Court of Justice] in Köbler for declaring the liability of the “State” to be interpreted as meaning that whether the conditions for the Member State to incur liability for infringement of EU law by the courts of that State are met is to be assessed on the basis of national law?

(2) Are the basic principles and rules of EU law (in particular Article 4(3) TEU and the requirement of effective judicial protection), particularly the judgments of the [Court of Justice] concerning the liability of the Member State delivered in, inter alia, Francovich, Brasserie du pêcheur and Köbler, to be interpreted as meaning that the force of res judicata attaching to judgments that infringe EU law delivered by courts of the Member States ruling at final instance precludes a declaration that the Member State is liable for damages?

(3) In the light of [Directive 89/665], as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC, (7) and of [Directive 92/13], are the review procedure concerning the award of public contracts of a value greater than the Community thresholds and the judicial review of the administrative decision adopted in that procedure relevant for the purposes of EU law? If so, are EU law and the case-law of the [Court of Justice] (inter alia, the judgments in Kühne & Heitz, Kapferer, and especially Impresa Pizzarotti) regarding the necessity of granting review, as an extraordinary appeal, which is derived from national law on judicial review of the administrative decision adopted in the abovementioned review procedure concerning the award of public contracts, relevant for the purposes of EU law?

(4) Are the directives on review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (namely, [Directive 89/665], as amended in the meantime by [Directive 2007/66], and [Directive 92/13]) to be interpreted as meaning that national legislation, under which the national courts before which the dispute in the main proceedings is brought may disregard a fact that has to be examined in accordance with a judgment of the [Court of Justice], delivered in a preliminary ruling procedure in connection with a review procedure concerning the award of public contracts, a fact that is not taken into account either by the national courts ruling in proceedings instituted as a result of the review procedure brought against the decision adopted in the main proceedings, is compatible with those directives?

(5) Are [Directive 89/665], in particular Article 1(1) and (3) thereof, and [Directive 92/13], in particular Articles 1 and 2 thereof (especially in the light of the judgments delivered in Willy Kempter, Pannon GSM and VB Pénzügyi Lízing, and also Kühne & Heitz, Kapferer and Impresa Pizzarotti), to be interpreted as meaning that national legislation, or an application thereof, in accordance with which, although a judgment of the [Court of Justice] delivered in a preliminary ruling procedure before judgment in the proceedings at second instance establishes a relevant interpretation of the rules of EU law, the court hearing the case rejects it on the grounds that it is out of time and subsequently the court hearing the application for review does not consider the review admissible, is compatible with the abovementioned directives and with the requirements of effective judicial protection and with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness?

(6) If, under national law, review must be granted in order to re-establish constitutionality by means of a new decision of the Constitutional Court, should review not be granted, in accordance with the principle of equivalence and the principle laid down in the judgment in Transportes Urbanos, if it has not been possible to take into account a judgment of the [Court of Justice] in the main proceedings owing to the provisions of national law concerning procedural time limits?

(7) Are [Directive 89/665], in particular Article 1(1) and (3) thereof, and [Directive 92/13], in particular Articles 1 and 2 thereof, in the light of the judgment of the [Court of Justice] in Willy

Kempter, C-2/06, EU:C:2008:78, according to which an individual need not rely specifically upon the case-law of the Court of Justice, to be interpreted as meaning that the review procedures concerning the award of public contracts governed by the abovementioned directives may be initiated only by an action containing an express description of the infringement concerning the award of public contracts invoked and, furthermore, clearly indicates the procurement rule infringed (the specific article and paragraph), that is to say, that in a review procedure concerning the award of public contracts only those infringements that the appellant has indicated by reference to the procurement provision infringed (the specific article and paragraph), whereas in any other administrative and civil procedure it is sufficient for the individual to present the facts and the evidence supporting them, and for the competent authority or court to give a ruling in accordance with their content?

(8) Is the requirement of a sufficiently serious infringement laid down in the judgments in Köbler and Traghetti to be interpreted as meaning that there is no such infringement if the court ruling at final instance, in clear contravention of the established case-law, cited in the greatest detail, of the [Court of Justice], supported by various legal opinions as well, refuses an individual's request for a question to be referred for a preliminary ruling as to whether review ought to be granted, on the absurd grounds that EU law, in this case, in particular, [Directives 89/665 and 92/13], contains no rules governing review, in spite of the fact that, for that purpose, reference has also been made in the greatest detail to the relevant case-law of the [Court of Justice], including also the judgment in Impresa Pizzarotti, which specifically states the need of review in relation to the public procurement procedure? In the light of the judgment of the [Court of Justice] in CILFIT, 283/81, EU:C:1982:335, with what degree of detail must the national court that does not grant review justify its decision to depart from the authoritative legal interpretation given by the Court of Justice?

(9) Are the principles of effective judicial protection and of equivalence in Article 19 TEU and Article 4(3) TEU, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services laid down in Article 49 TFEU, and Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, and also [Directives 89/665, 92/13 and 2007/66], to be interpreted as not precluding the competent authorities and courts from dismissing one after another, in manifest disregard of the applicable EU law, the appeals brought by the appellant because it was unable to participate in a public procurement procedure, appeals for which it is necessary to prepare, depending on the circumstances, numerous documents with considerable investment of time and money or to participate at hearings, and, although it is true that, in theory, liability may be declared for damage caused in the exercise of judicial functions, the relevant legislation prevents the appellant claiming from the court compensation for harm suffered as a consequence of the unlawful measures?

(10) Are the principles laid down in the judgments in Köbler, Traghetti and Saint Giorgio to be interpreted as meaning that compensation may not be paid for damage caused by the fact that, in infringement of the established case-law of the Court of Justice, the court of the Member State ruling at final instance has not granted the review requested in good time by the individual, in which he could have claimed compensation for the costs incurred?'

27. Written submissions were lodged by Hochtief Hungary, the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court), the Greek, Hungarian and Polish Governments and the European Commission. With the exception of the Greek and Polish Governments, they all presented oral argument at the hearing held on 21 November 2018.

IV. Assessment

28. This Opinion is structured as follows. I will start with a number of necessary clarifications (A). I will then address in turn the 3 sets of issues that permeate the 10 questions posed by the referring court: first, the extent of the duty of national courts to implement preliminary rulings, notably in the context of various procedural provisions the operation of which may hamper the full implementation of those preliminary rulings at various stages of the national judicial proceedings (B); second, the (non-)existence, in the circumstances of a case such as the present one, of a right to a retrial as a matter of EU law, when a judgment given previously by the Court, following a request for a preliminary ruling within the same proceedings, has allegedly not been correctly complied with by the national courts hearing the case on the merits (C); third, several elements of Member State liability for alleged failures of the national courts to correctly apply EU law (D).

A. Introductory remarks

1. Admissibility of the questions posed by the referring court

29. According to the defendant, the questions posed by the referring court are inadmissible. The order for reference does not state the reasons why interpretation of EU law is required in the present case. Nor does it mention the link between the relevant EU law provisions and the national legislation at issue.

30. It is established case-law that questions on the interpretation of EU law referred by a national court in a factual and legislative context, which that court is responsible for defining and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court to determine, enjoy a presumption of relevance. Consequently, where the questions submitted concern the interpretation of a rule of EU law, the Court is in principle bound to give a ruling. (8) In so doing, the Court must provide the national court with an answer which will be of use and enable the latter to determine the case at issue. (9)

31. Admittedly, the present case puts those principles to quite a test on a number of accounts. In contrast to the defendant, however, I would suggest that, after reformulation, the questions of the referring court are admissible, with the exception of Questions 7 and 9.

32. First, it is indeed true that the questions posed by the referring court are drafted in a complex and somewhat convoluted style. However, after rephrasing, it would appear that those questions touch upon the following three sets of issues.

33. Questions 4 and 5 essentially relate to the compatibility with EU law of various national limits pertaining to the conduct of various stages of national judicial proceedings. It would appear that the operation of those procedural rules could limit the full implementation of preliminary rulings issued previously in the course of the main proceedings.

34. Questions 3 and 6 enquire, in substance, whether it is compatible with the requirements of equivalence and effectiveness not to consider a preliminary ruling of the Court given previously in the main proceedings that was allegedly not implemented in those proceedings as a possible ground for a retrial.

35. Questions 1, 2, 8 and 10 pertain to various elements of Member State liability for the alleged failure of the national courts, in particular the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court).

36. Second, while regrouping and reformulating the questions, it is also necessary to underline that, restated in this way, the questions pertain exclusively to the interpretation of EU law. The questions as formulated by the referring court contain a number of preconceived factual or circumstantial evaluations and inferences. By answering questions posed in that way, the Court would thus effectively be invited to evaluate a certain reading of the facts or of national law, or even to endorse the suggestions about certain practices at national level. That is, however, not the role of the Court in the preliminary ruling procedure. It is solely for the referring court to assess the facts. (10) Thus, I wish to clearly underline that the answers to be given here pertain only to EU-law elements raised by the referring court by the three sets of issues identified above. They in no way approve or endorse the factual statements and evaluations contained in the questions as originally phrased.

37. Third, another potential admissibility issue concerns the relevance of some of the questions for the main proceedings. It is settled case-law that the Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. (11)

38. In the present case, as was confirmed at the hearing, the subject matter before the referring court is, strictly speaking, the damage allegedly caused by the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest High Court), acting as the (last-instance) court adjudicating on the reopening of the case, both by its refusal to reopen the case and by its failure to submit a new request for a preliminary ruling before doing so. It could thus be suggested that the questions that are not directly connected with the liability action pending before the referring court should be held inadmissible, since they do not directly relate to the specific subject matter of the dispute before the referring court.

39. I find such strict logic difficult to embrace. At the structural level, it would be at odds with the rather generous approach of this Court to the relevance of questions asked by national courts. (12) The 'spirit of cooperation' and 'presumption of relevance' would thus effectively be replaced by this Court interpreting for the national court its own scope of case and procedure and, on that interpretation (of national law and facts), deciding which questions that court is allowed to ask.

40. Furthermore, at the level of the case at hand, such an approach would also hardly do justice to the specific context of the present case. The questions posed by the referring court are indeed part of an interconnected and complex judicial story. It is no easy task, solely on the basis of the order for reference, to navigate through and disentangle all the intricacies of the national procedural background in this case, notably with regard to the progression of the proceedings themselves. A fortiori, it may then be even more difficult to state categorically which of those procedural stages is or is not relevant for a potential liability claim.

41. As already alluded to in the introduction to this Opinion, there were actually three 'rounds' (13)of litigation. The first round encompassed a number of decisions on the merits. It consisted in the (administrative) review before the Arbitration Committee, followed by the first- and second-instance judgments and, subsequently, by the appeal on points of law before the Kúria (Supreme Court) and the constitutional complaint. The second round encompassed the request for a retrial, together with the appeal procedure in that respect. The third round includes the action in the main proceedings, namely Member State liability for the alleged failures of the national courts.

42. All three rounds are connected through a common thread: the alleged failure by the national courts, throughout those different rounds, to comply with a preliminary ruling issued by the Court in the course of the first round. Admittedly, there would be no second round, or a fortiori any third round, without the alleged infringement that occurred within the first one. Thus, addressing the — currently pending — third round and, more broadly, the consequences that flow from the alleged failure to implement the preliminary ruling in the first round, necessarily requires looking at the national proceedings in their entirety. It would indeed be difficult to artificially split the proceedings since potential irregularities committed within the first round spill over into the second round and those in the second round into the third. Or, put in reverse order, if there is no duty to conduct a retrial as a matter of EU law, then the purpose of the third round of litigation effectively falls away. Going even further, if there was potentially no failure in the first round, then the other two rounds become futile and the answer relating to the obligations of national courts in that first round pre-empts the need for any further interpretation of EU law.

43. Furthermore, it is also difficult to look at the court of second instance (upon receiving the preliminary ruling) without also having regard to the administrative review by the Arbitration Committee since the main reason for not fully applying the Court's preliminary ruling seems to lie in the procedural rule that limits the scope of the judicial dispute to the claims initially raised before that committee. (14) According to that rule, all claims relating to an alleged incompatibility of the tendering procedure with EU law must have already been raised before the Arbitration Committee. No new claim can subsequently be put forward before the courts examining that latter's decision such as, in the present case, the first- and second-instance courts.

44. In such circumstances, I would find it difficult to categorically state that questions relating to the first or second round of the national litigation are inadmissible because they bear no relation whatsoever to the proceedings pending before the referring court. They clearly do.

45. That being said, it can only be repeated that it is certainly not for this Court to determine whether the national courts correctly applied EU law — and even less national law — in each of the rounds. It is also not for this Court to evaluate whether or not the procedural route chosen by Hochtief Hungary was correct or whether it should have filed a liability action against the Kúria (Supreme Court) directly, after the first round, as suggested by the Hungarian Government at the hearing.

46. In my view, therefore, on the application of the Court's standard case-law, (15) in line with the reformulation and understanding of the questions outlined above, (16) the questions posed by the referring court are admissible, save for Questions 7 and 9.

47. Question 7 specifically concerns the degree of precision that requests for (administrative) review before the Arbitration Committee must feature. By this question, the referring court seeks to determine whether such requests must contain an express description of the infringement and precisely indicate the specific provision infringed whereas, in any other administrative and civil procedure, it would be sufficient to present the facts and the evidence supporting them.

48. Even with all the allowances made, I fail to see how Question 7 would be of any relevance for settling the present dispute. No party has suggested, including Hochtief Hungary, that the rule at issue was so strict that it would make it impossible or excessively difficult to apply EU law, notably in the form of a previously issued Court judgment, and to ensure effective judicial protection in public procurement matters. There is simply no further information on how that rule would be relevant for the purposes of the present case.

49. Question 9 concerns for its part the issue of whether EU law allows national authorities and courts to consistently dismiss the actions brought by Hochtief Hungary in a context where those actions are costly and time-consuming and where the relevant national legislation allegedly prevents applicants from seeking damages for the harm caused by national courts in the exercise of their judicial function.

50. By that question, the national court is not really posing a question, but rather seeks the endorsement of a number of (rather far-reaching and radical) factual assumptions.

2. A terminological note

51. In the English (as well as some other) versions of the questions as published in the Official Journal, (17) the word 'review' has been used to refer to the different types of remedies discussed in the present case. The problem with the indiscriminate use of such a generic concept is that it lacks precision as to which type of judicial remedy it refers to (and to which round), in particular in distinguishing between the first round of litigation (judicial review on the merits in the proper sense) and the second round (reopening or retrial). The following terminology will therefore be used throughout this Opinion.

52. 'Administrative review' refers to the procedure before the Arbitration Committee, which was apparently the first body that assessed the lawfulness of the economic requirement.

53. 'Judicial review' refers to judicial scrutiny of the administrative decision issued by the Arbitration Committee before the national courts, within the first 'round', when deciding the merits of the case. That obviously includes the first and second instances. It also includes appeals on points of law, as an extraordinary remedy. Despite its specific nature, that latter is indeed still concerned with the (primary) subject matter of the case, namely the legality of the decision taken by the Arbitration Committee.

54. 'Retrial' will be used to refer to the extraordinary remedy that is the core of the second 'round'. It normally consists in reopening and revisiting a case when it subsequently appears that certain elements have not been taken into consideration, despite the existence of a final decision having the force of res judicata issued within the first 'round' on the merits. In the context of the present case, retrial refers to the procedure provided for under Section 260 of the Hungarian Code of Civil Procedure.

B. Executing a preliminary ruling of the Court in ongoing national judicial proceedings

55. Questions 4 and 5 essentially relate to the compatibility with EU law of various procedural limits laid down by national law that could prevent the full and correct execution of a preliminary ruling of the Court issued in the case at hand. With some degree of reconstruction, I would understand Question 4 to enquire about the compatibility with EU law of national rules of procedure that allegedly prevent the taking into account of new facts at a certain level of review. Thus, if guidance in the form of a judgment of the Court is issued at the request of a national court at the level of appeal where no new facts can normally be ascertained, by the operation of that national procedural rule, such type of assessment would no longer be possible. Question 5 then focuses more on new points of law that could be rejected as being brought too late, either before a higher jurisdiction or within the judicial review itself, if the same arguments or legal points had not already been made during the administrative review.

56. In other words, both elements relate, in one way or another, to the distribution of tasks within the judicial (and/or administrative) system and the economy of proceedings. It is natural, in both national as well as EU systems of legal protection, that not any and every fact or legal argument can be brought at whatever stage of proceedings. There are general rules relating to, for example, the permissible scope of review or concentration of pleadings, certainly as a case advances through the judicial system.

57. However, what is rather unusual is to invoke such rules to justify potentially refusing to implement the guidance issued by this Court in a preliminary ruling only by virtue of the fact that such guidance came at a certain level of national judicial review in the main proceedings. In this section, I shall explain why, in general, (18) such reliance on those rules is very much mistaken and cannot be maintained if guidance issued by this Court is to be correctly implemented.

58. In doing so, I shall first recall the scope of the obligation incumbent on national courts to execute a decision issued by this Court on a preliminary ruling and to apply the guidance contained therein (1). I will subsequently turn to the national procedural rule that appears to be the main reason why the Court's preliminary ruling was allegedly not fully applied in the first round (2). Finally, I will examine whether, in circumstances such as those of the present case, such a procedural rule is to be set aside on the grounds that it stands in the way of correct implementation of the Court's judgment (3).

1. The national courts' duties following a preliminary ruling

59. It is settled case-law that a preliminary ruling of the Court is binding on the national court, as regards the interpretation or the validity of the acts of the European Union institutions in question, for the purposes of the decision to be given in the main proceedings. (19) Article 267 TFEU requires the referring court to give full effect to the interpretation of EU law provided by the Court. (20)

60. Beyond that type of binding effect of a preliminary ruling, which could be classified as inter partes, the case-law of the Court only ever explicitly confirmed the erga omnes binding force of declarations of invalidity of EU-law provisions. (21)

61. However, the same inter partes logic also fully extends to any subsequent judicial stages within the same main proceedings. Thus, if the guidance from this Court was requested by, for example, a first-instance court, then a court of appeal or a supreme court being seised later of the same case would also be bound by the guidance issued by the Court in that case. To my mind, that is an extension of the inter partes binding effect, because what is being resolved is still the same case with the same facts and legal questions posed. It is not the (by its nature 'looser') erga omnes effect in other cases concerning other facts and parties but interpreting the same legal provisions of EU law. (22)

62. That notably means, in practice, that if the interpretative statement contained in a preliminary ruling requires the national court to complete a certain type of assessment, that assessment must then be carried out in order to ensure the correct implementation of that judgment and, thereby, the proper application of EU law. (23) That is a fortiori the case when the Court explicitly leaves it, in the operative part of the judgment, to the referring court to verify certain elements in order to establish the compatibility of national law with EU law.

2. National procedural autonomy and effectiveness

63. In its submissions, the Hungarian Government relies extensively on the principle of national procedural autonomy to stress that it is for each Member State to shape procedural rules and remedies. It further maintains that in previous cases, including a decision relating to Hochtief AG, (24) the Court accepted various procedural limitations on judicial review as to the time when an action may be brought and under what conditions.

64. It is indeed established case-law that, in the absence of EU legislation in this area, it is for each Member State, in accordance with the principle of procedural autonomy, to designate the courts and tribunals having jurisdiction and to lay down the detailed procedural rules governing actions at law for safeguarding the rights which individuals derive from EU law. However, it is also settled case-law that, in accordance with the principle of sincere cooperation enshrined in Article 4(3) TEU, the detailed procedural rules governing actions for safeguarding an individual's rights under EU law must be no less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (the requirement of equivalence) and must not render impossible in practice or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by EU law (the requirement of effectiveness). (25)

65. In addition, any provision of a national legal system and any legislative, administrative or judicial practice which might impair the effectiveness of EU law by withholding from the national court having jurisdiction to apply such law the power to do everything necessary at the moment of its application to set aside national legislative provisions which might prevent EU rules from having full force and effect are incompatible with those requirements which are the very essence of the European Union. (26) In particular, national rules of procedure cannot affect the powers and obligations conferred on a national court under Article 267 TFEU. (27)

66. Applied to the issue of the structuring of national systems of appeals and remedies, the case-law of the Court very much respects the different national legal traditions and the diversity of the Member States' administrative and judicial systems. Thus, a national judicial system can be more inquisitorial or more adversarial and decide to what extent it applies the iura novit curia maxim. Equally, the ambit of judicial review can normally be limited to the pleas that were raised by the parties at the stage of the administrative review.

67. As stated by the Court, EU law does not require national courts to raise of their own motion an issue concerning the breach of provisions of EU law where examination of that issue would oblige them to abandon the passive role assigned to them by going beyond the ambit of the dispute defined by the parties themselves and relying on facts and circumstances other than those on which the party with an interest in application of those provisions bases his claim. (28) In particular, 'the principle of effectiveness does not ... impose a duty on national courts to raise a plea based on a Community provision of their own motion, irrespective of the importance of that provision to the Community legal order, where the parties are given a genuine opportunity to raise a plea based on Community law before a national court'. (29)

68. Hence, in the context of judicial review in public procurement matters, the Court recently confirmed that Member States are entitled to lay down procedural rules limiting judicial review in time or in scope to guarantee the effectiveness and swiftness of that review as long as, in doing so, they do not render practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of the right to bring an action. (30) Thus, according to the Court, EU law does not preclude, in the context of an action for damages, a national procedural rule which restricts the judicial review of arbitral decisions issued by the Arbitration Committee responsible at first instance for the review of decisions taken by contracting authorities in public procurement procedures to examining only the pleas raised before that committee. (31)

69. It follows that a similar procedural limitation should also be in general possible, mutatis mutandis, in the context of an action for annulment, such as that filed in the first round of this case: under EU law, the national courts responsible for reviewing decisions of an arbitration committee called upon to examine actions for annulment against decisions adopted by contracting authorities in public procurement procedures may dismiss as inadmissible any new plea in law which was not raised before that committee.

3. Implementing a preliminary ruling

70. Thus, in general and in cases not involving a preliminary ruling of the Court, that is, when a case progresses normally through the national administrative and judicial system, procedural limitations of such kind are, under the conditions outlined in preceding section, indeed possible. That picture, however, changes rather markedly if, within such a procedure, guidance is issued by the Court in the form of a preliminary ruling.

71. Contrary to the suggestions of the Hungarian Government, such a case ceases to be one primarily involving procedural limitations within the sphere of national procedural autonomy, to which the case-law discussed in the preceding section could mechanically be applied. Instead, it becomes a case involving the implementation of a judgment of the Court.

72. What would such a different context then mean in a case like the present one? What would it mean, in particular, for the issues raised by the referring court, such as national rules preventing the taking into account of new facts at a certain level of review (Question 4) and/or the impossibility of pleading new points of law at a later stage of review if they have not been brought forward before the administrative authority (Question 5)?

73. I wish to note at the outset that, as far as Question 5 is concerned, in the context of the present situation, the parties appear to have duly raised before the Arbitration Committee the argument as to the unsuitability of the economic requirement, which is the bone of contention. (32)

74. However, even if that was not established as a matter of fact, which is of course for the national court to ascertain, in my view, the principled answer to both of the questions raised by the referring court is relatively straightforward: such national limitation rules can naturally be maintained, as long as it is ensured that a national court will implement and fully apply the guidance issued by the Court in the case in which the preliminary ruling was requested.

75. This may happen in a number of ways. If the national court that requested the preliminary ruling from this Court has the necessary competence for that type of review under national law (such as to examine the suitability of the economic requirement), then it must carry out that examination itself and demonstrate in its reasoning that it has done so. Should that court have no jurisdiction to that effect, because it is, for example, an appellate court or the supreme court whose review is limited and/or cannot assess any new evidence, and any such assessment is still relevant for the case at hand, then several options might be open to such a national court. First, it might annul the decision in question and send the case back to the appropriate administrative or judicial authority that has the competence under national law to examine the suitability of the economic requirement in accordance with the preliminary ruling (that is, the first-instance court, if it is competent to assess questions of fact, or the Arbitration Committee). Alternatively, the national court in question must set aside the national procedural rules limiting its jurisdiction and carry out such assessment itself. The choice between those different options remains that of each Member State, provided that a national authority, whether administrative or judicial, ultimately ensures the correct application of the Court's preliminary ruling. (33)

76. However, what certainly cannot be allowed to happen is that, by the mechanical operation of national rules of limitation, the implementation of the judgment of this Court at national level turns into a proverbial catch-22, in which nobody accepts responsibility for ensuring the effective execution of a preliminary ruling of the Court.

4. Interim conclusion

77. It follows that Article 4(3) TEU and Article 267 TFEU require that a national court, implementing a preliminary ruling previously requested from the Court, must fully implement the guidance contained therein. If executing the Court's guidance requires a certain type or scope of appraisal to be carried out, which is not normally carried out by the referring court in question, that court is obliged either to set aside the national procedural rules limiting its competence in that regard or to annul and remit the case to the appropriate judicial, or even administrative, level where such an assessment can be carried out in full.

C. The (duty of) retrial

78. Moving on to the issues relating to the second round of national litigation, Questions 3 and 6 enquire whether it is compatible with the principle of effective judicial protection not to consider as a possible ground for a retrial an allegation that a judgment of the Court given in the first round (on a request for a preliminary ruling from the appellate court) was not duly taken into account in that round. In particular, Question 3 is to be understood as enquiring as to the existence of a possible duty, deriving from EU law, of Member States to allow for a retrial, as an extraordinary remedy provided for by national law, in a case such as the one in the main proceedings. By Question 6, the referring court seeks to know whether the requirement of equivalence calls for a retrial to be allowed when a preliminary ruling of the Court has allegedly not been taken into account correctly in the main proceedings on the merits, but when, at the same time, national law apparently allows for a retrial in the similar case of a (new) judgment of the Constitutional Court.

79. Thus, the question posed to the Court is in fact whether EU law, in particular the principle of effective judicial protection, requires the 'reopening' of a final judicial decision in order to take into account a previous judgment of the Court that was (allegedly) not fully taken into consideration in the litigation on the merits.

80. In my view, the answer to that question is no.

1. The scope of the duty to reopen final judicial decisions

81. As outlined in the previous section of this Opinion, national courts have an obligation to implement the answer given to a request for a preliminary ruling that they themselves submit to the Court (the binding force inter partes). Furthermore, they must equally respect the case-law of the Court on the matter of interpretation or validity of EU law of which they are seised in the case at hand (the binding effects erga omnes). The common denominator in both of these cases is that the decisions of the Court that are to be taken into account exist at the moment when the national court takes a decision.

82. By contrast, there is, in principle, no obligation under EU law to reopen final national judicial decisions that were given prior to a decision of the Court on a preliminary ruling, even if reopening the case would make it possible to remedy a domestic situation which is incompatible with EU law.

83. Indeed, it is settled case-law that the principle of legal certainty and its emanation, the principle of res judicata, (34) are paramount both in the legal order of the European Union and in national legal systems. (35) In view of those principles, the Court has ruled that EU law does not require a judicial body automatically to go back on a judgment having the authority of res judicata in order to take into account the interpretation of a relevant provision of EU law adopted by the Court after delivery of that judgment. (36) There is thus, in general, no duty to reopen final judicial decisions incompatible with a subsequent judgment of the Court.

84. It is true that the Court has recognised two exceptions to the principle that final decisions need not be reopened in order to comply with EU law.

85. The first exceptional situation, which follows from Kühne & Heitz, is the obligation, imposed on administrative bodies, to review final administrative decisions in order to take account of an interpretation subsequently given by the Court, where certain conditions are met. (37) However, that exception only entails an obligation to reopen final administrative decisions, but not judicial decisions. (38)

86. The second exceptional situation was set out by the Court in Lucchini, where it held that EU law precluded the application of a provision of national law which sought to lay down the principle of res judicata in so far as the application of that provision prevented the recovery of State aid granted in breach of EU law. (39) The underlying rationale of that exception was that, since the national decision had been adopted in breach of the division of powers between the Member States and the European Union, it could not even acquire the force of res judicata. The Court subsequently stressed the exceptional character of Lucchini, noting that it had been decided in a highly specific situation having to do with the aforementioned division of powers. (40)

87. Neither of these exceptions appears to be immediately relevant to the present case. Thus, as a starting point, the present case defaults back to the general rule: there is no general obligation to reopen final judicial decisions in order to render them compatible with a subsequent decision of the Court. (41)

88. However, while EU law does not impose an obligation on Member States to create new remedies, (42) if national law does provide for such a possibility, then that legislation must comply not only with the requirement of equivalence, but also with the requirement of effectiveness. (43) It is thus necessary to turn to the remedy of a retrial under national law.

2. Retrial under national law

89. Under Hungarian law, retrial appears to be governed by Section 260(1)(a) and (2) of the Civil Procedural Code. According to the Hungarian Government, the rules on retrial are not applicable in cases such as the present one since that remedy only aims at taking into account new factual elements, as opposed to new legal elements. By contrast, Hochtief Hungary claims that a retrial may serve to implement a preliminary ruling that was issued by the Court during the main proceedings, but was not taken into account for procedural reasons. For its part, the Commission leaves it to the referring court to determine whether Section 260(1) of the Civil Procedural Code authorises a retrial where national courts have not properly taken into account a preliminary ruling of the Court.

90. I largely share the Commission's stance. It is for the referring court, as the sole authoritative interpreter of national law, to determine whether, under those rules, a retrial could be possible in a case where a preliminary ruling that already existed when the final decision on the merits was issued was allegedly not properly taken into account.

91. I would just venture two remarks. In my understanding of what the (extraordinary) remedy of a retrial generally entails, it tends to be limited to cases where, after the national decision becomes final, it emerges that certain facts were not or could not have been taken into account by the national court when it gave that decision.

92. It would be somewhat surprising to apply that logic to an interpretative judgment of the Court that existed and was known at the moment when the previous decision on the merits was given. First, such a decision is hardly a new fact. Second, that decision undoubtedly existed and was known at the moment of the original decision on the merits, thus could hardly be classified as something new that came to light only later on.

93. Thus, prima facie and on a general understanding of what a retrial tends to entail, it is difficult to see how that extraordinary remedy should be used to remedy alleged shortcomings in the proper application of interpretative legal guidance that clearly existed and was known when the original national decision was issued.

3. Equivalence to constitutional complaints?

94. However, an additional argument has to be addressed in this context: suggested equivalence with regard to constitutional complaints. According to Hochtief Hungary, a retrial should have been authorised in the circumstances of the present case, on the grounds that a preliminary ruling of the Court was not taken into account, because national law provides for a retrial where the Alkotmánybíróság (Constitutional Court) subsequently declares unconstitutional a norm that was applied by an ordinary court in its final judicial decision. It is in this context that the national court refers, in Question 6, to the judgment of the Court in Transportes Urbanos y Servicios Generales.

95. Transportes Urbanos y Servicios Generales admittedly bears some similarities to the present case. In that decision, the Court held that EU law, and in particular the principle of equivalence, precluded the application of a rule according to which actions for damages against the State, alleging a breach of EU law established by a judgment of the Court, were subject to a condition requiring prior exhaustion of remedies against a harmful administrative measure, when those actions were not subject to such a condition where they alleged a breach of the Constitution established by the Constitutional Court. (44) However, it should be noted that the Court reached that conclusion after having observed that the only difference between those two actions was the fact that the breaches of law on which they were based were established, respectively, by the Court and by the Constitutional Court. The Court concluded that that fact alone, in the absence of any other difference between both actions, could not suffice to establish a distinction between them in the light of the principle of equivalence. (45)

96. Recently, in XC and Others, the Court insisted on the importance of a clear similarity between the actions at issue, in terms of their purpose, cause of action and essential characteristics, in order for the principle of equivalence to be triggered. (46) The Court then examined, in the light of those elements, whether an action permitting the retrial of criminal proceedings, closed by a decision that acquired the force of res judicata, on the basis of a subsequent finding of an infringement of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms or one of the protocols thereto, on the one hand, and an action for protecting rights which individuals derive from EU law, on the other hand, could be regarded as similar actions.

97. The Court concluded that the differences between those actions were such they could not be regarded as similar. It noted in particular that the former action was essentially created in order to permit the reopening of decisions having the force of res judicata. By contrast, the constitutional framework of the European Union guarantees everyone the opportunity to obtain the effective protection of rights conferred by the EU legal order before a national decision with the force of res judicata even comes into existence. (47)

98. Similarly to XC and Others, the national provision invoked in the present case allowing for the reopening of a final national judgment as a result of a new decision of the Constitutional Court, is a consequence of the mechanism of constitutional review, as stated in Section 361(a) of the Civil Procedural Code. Indeed, that provision, which sets out an exceptional remedy permitting a decision of the Constitutional Court to be taken into account, can only be used in respect of the specific judgment that, once becoming final, gave rise to the constitutional complaint. Put differently, in cases in which such (abstract) constitutional review is possible only following a final judicial decision, the only way of reflecting that constitutional review and potentially removing the unconstitutionality in the individual case is by reopening it.

99. The mechanism and logic of that requirement to reopen a judgment is very different from the preliminary ruling mechanism, which by definition operates while the national procedure is still pending and before any final national decision can be taken. Thus, there is no need to reopen a final decision in order for the guidance of the Court to be taken into account.

100. For these reasons, as I recently argued in further detail in Călin, the execution and inter partes binding effects of a preliminary ruling of this Court on the one hand, and of a judgment of a national constitutional court on a constitutional review on the other (or, for that matter, of a decision of the European Court of Human Rights in the case at national level giving rise to a complaint) are structurally different remedies. (48) Their purpose, cause of action and essential characteristics are simply different.

101. It may be added that the situation could be different if national law were to allow for a preliminary review of constitutionality upon a reference by a national court to the Alkotmánybíróság (Constitutional Court). In this respect, if I understand the argument correctly, the Hungarian Government appeared to suggest at the hearing that a retrial was also authorised if the decision of the Alkotmánybíróság (Constitutional Court) was not delivered subsequent to the final judicial decision in the main proceedings but before it, within those proceedings on the merits. (49)

102. I must confess to being somewhat lost on that point. If that were the case, and indeed a number of national constitutional systems (also) recognise a preliminary review of constitutionality, typically triggered by a reference from a national (ordinary) judge, I have difficulty seeing how the rules on retrial would be relevant in such cases. One would rather assume that, following such a preliminary reference on constitutionality, the ordinary judge awaits the decision of the constitutional court and then, once that decision is given, determines the original dispute while implementing the judgment of the national constitutional court. If that is the case, then such a preliminary review of constitutionality could indeed be functionally equivalent to a request for a preliminary ruling to this Court. However, there would then be little need for any specific rules on retrial for that kind of procedure.

103. Be that as it may, if the referring court were to find that (i) the national rules on retrial do also include decisions of the Alkotmánybíróság (Constitutional Court) given during the main proceedings, that is, before the final decision on the merits is taken by an ordinary court, and that (ii) on the application of the criteria concerning the requirement of equivalence outlined in this section, such a type of review is indeed equivalent to implementing a prior decision of the Court given on a request for a preliminary ruling, then the requirement of equivalence would require that a retrial is also authorised in the latter type of situation.

4. A direct or indirect application of Kühne & Heitz?

104. A last point to be addressed in connection with retrial concerns Kühne & Heitz. (50)That decision has indeed been abundantly quoted by the referring court, as well as by the parties in the written and oral procedure before the Court.

105. That case established an obligation, under EU law, to re-examine final administrative decisions if (i) under national law, the administrative body has the power to reopen that decision; (ii) the administrative decision in question has become final as a result of a judgment of a national court ruling at final instance; (iii) that judgment is, in the light of a decision given by the Court subsequent to it, based on a misinterpretation of EU law which was adopted without a question being referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling; and (iv) the person concerned complained to the administrative body immediately after becoming aware of that decision of the Court. (51)

106. While Hochtief Hungary maintained that this line of case-law should also apply to final judicial decisions by analogy, the Commission suggested at the hearing that a direct application of that logic could perhaps be contemplated with regard to the (administrative) decision of the Arbitration Committee. I will examine both scenarios in this subsection.

107. First, as regards a potential application by analogy (or extension) of Kühne & Heitz to the present case, the conditions set out by the Court in that judgment clearly aim at a different and rather specific scenario, namely the reopening of a final administrative, not judicial, decision, following a subsequent preliminary ruling of the Court.

108. Even if it were assumed that the same logic could apply to final judicial decisions, (52) at least the first and third conditions laid down by the Court in that judgment would still not be fulfilled: under national law, retrial is certainly an available remedy, yet it is apparently not designed to cover the type of situation at issue in the present case; furthermore, the decision given by the Court was not subsequent to the final judicial decision, but was issued prior to it.

109. Moreover, although not expressly stated as one of the conditions, the obligation to reopen national administrative decisions set out in Kühne & Heitz has always had the flavour of an indirect sanction for the failure of the national court having reviewed that decision to comply with the duty to make a request for a preliminary ruling. By contrast, in the present case the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal) did make such a request.

110. Finally and on a subsidiary note, if Kühne & Heitz is read in the light of the more recent approach of the Court as regards the reopening of judicial decisions in XC and Others, then the former case indeed ought to remain the exception applicable to administrative authorities only. Indeed, the direction taken in XC and Others confirms that in the interplay between, on the one hand, the effective enforcement of EU law and, on the other hand, respect for the principles of legal certainty and finality of (judicial) decisions, the balance clearly tilts in favour of the latter.

111. I thus consider that any further extension of Kühne & Heitz (or its application by analogy to final judicial decisions) is not called for.

112. Second, as regards the Commission's suggestion of a direct application of Kühne & Heitz in the context of the present case by reopening the final administrative decision, namely that of the Arbitration Committee, (53) I am not convinced either. Apart from the fact that it is not at all at issue, and in view of the lack of information regarding potential national law rules providing for the reopening of administrative decisions, it appears that the facts of the present case differ substantially from the facts of Kühne & Heitz.

113. In Kühne & Heitz, the issue of the existence of an eventual duty to take a judgment of the Court into consideration was raised at a moment when both the administrative procedure and the subsequent judicial procedure were closed. All the decisions made in the course of those procedures were therefore final. By contrast, in the present case, the preliminary ruling of the Court came at a moment when only the administrative procedure was closed and hence the administrative decision was final. The judicial procedure, however, was still pending. For that reason, but also having regard to the factual circumstances of that case, as confirmed by the very detailed conditions set out by the Court in Kühne & Heitz in order to justify the duty to reopen the administrative decision, it appears that those conditions are not fulfilled.

5. Interim conclusion

114. In view of these considerations, I conclude that the principle of effective judicial protection does not require authorising a retrial, as an extraordinary remedy, in the circumstances of the present case, in order to implement a preliminary ruling of the Court issued in the main proceedings that was allegedly not fully taken into account within those proceedings on the merits. However, should a national system provide for a remedy allowing for the possibility or even the duty to reopen final decisions given in similar cases at national level, the requirement of equivalence would require that such a possibility also be open for infringements relating to preliminary rulings of the Court previously issued in the same case.

D. Member State liability

115. Finally, by Questions 1, 2, 8, and 10, the referring court seeks guidance on a number of issues pertaining to the third round of the national litigation, concerning potential Member State liability.

116. Under Question 1, the referring court enquires into the general aspects of Member State liability on the grounds of national courts' judgments: is Member State liability to be determined on the basis of EU law only or also on the basis of national law, in particular as regards the assessment of the conditions to incur liability? Under Question 2, the referring court seeks to determine whether, in the case of a national court's judgment being incompatible with EU law, Member State liability can be incurred despite the res judicata attached to that judgment.

117. The answers to these two questions can be inferred from the case-law with relative ease.

118. It is settled case-law that individuals relying on EU law must have the possibility of obtaining redress in the national courts for the damage caused by the infringement of those rights owing to a decision of a court adjudicating at last instance. (54)

119. As to the conditions to be satisfied, the Court has held that they are threefold: the rule of law infringed must be intended to confer rights on individuals; the breach must be sufficiently serious; and there must be a direct causal link between the breach of the obligation incumbent on the State and the loss or damage sustained by the injured parties. (55)

120. Those three conditions are necessary and sufficient to establish, as a matter of EU law, a right in favour of individuals to obtain redress. However, Member States may provide for less strict conditions for State liability to be triggered. Subject to the existence of a right to obtain reparation which is founded directly on EU law where the conditions mentioned above are met, it is on the basis of the rules of national law on liability that the State must make reparation for the consequences of the loss and damage caused, with the proviso that the conditions for reparation of loss and damage laid down by the national legislation must not be less favourable than those relating to similar domestic claims and must not be so framed as to make it in practice impossible or excessively difficult to obtain reparation. (56)

121. In addition, it is equally clear from the case-law that the principle of res judicata does not preclude recognition of the principle of State liability for a decision of a court adjudicating at last instance. (57)

122. Thus, in answer to Question 1, Member State liability can only be determined on the basis of the conditions set out by EU law, although national law may lay down less strict conditions. As regards Question 2, the principle of res judicata does not preclude recognition of the principle of State liability for a decision of a court adjudicating at last instance.

123. By Question 10, the referring court enquires whether, under the principles of State liability in EU law, damages (in the form of reimbursement of the legal costs incurred) can be claimed for the harm caused by the fact that the court of last instance has refused to reopen the case. In other words, is there any limitation as to the type of damages that may be claimed for the alleged breach of EU law by a last-instance court?

124. The uncertainty as to the exact source of the limitations alluded to in Question 10 was dispelled at the hearing, where both Hochtief Hungary and the Hungarian Government confirmed that those limitations resulted from the national case-law.

125. Having clarified the source of the limitations as to the type of damages recoverable, it appears rather clear to me that such limitations would be incompatible with EU law. It is indeed impossible to limit the damages that can be sought. According to the Court, the rules on the assessment of damage caused by a breach of EU law are determined by the national law of each Member State, it being understood that the national regulations fixing those rules must respect the requirements of equivalence and effectiveness. (58)

Thus, so long as the three conditions for Member State liability, as laid down under EU law, are met, then any and all damages must be recoverable, including legal costs.

126. That being said, while the type of damages claimed cannot be used to establish a 'block exclusion' of a certain type of damage per se, the exact type of damage sought by an applicant will of course be relevant on a different level, namely, for ascertaining a direct causal link between that damage and the 'sufficiently serious infringement' of EU law reproached.

127. By Question 8, the referring court seeks to know whether, in the circumstances of the present case, the refusal by a court of last instance (the defendant) to request a preliminary ruling, upon a party's request, as to whether a retrial should have been granted is constitutive of a 'sufficiently serious infringement of EU law' that can trigger Member State liability. In the second part of the question, the referring court further asks to what extent a national court must state reasons for its decision not to refer in the light of the judgment in CILFIT. (59)

128. The answer to that question is somewhat more complex.

129. It must be recalled at the outset that it is not the role of the Court to decide on the potential liability of a Member State in a specific case. However, the Court can give guidance regarding the application of the liability criteria, notably that of a 'sufficiently serious infringement' of EU law.

130. Furthermore, it may also be useful to recall that whether or not a reference to this Court is made is the exclusive privilege and responsibility of a national judge. The parties to the main proceedings may of course make a suggestion in this regard, but they have no right to request a preliminary ruling from the Court. (60)

131. With those preliminary clarifications made, and again regardless of a number of factual statements that the referring court embedded in its question, which are not for this Court to comment upon, the question of the referring court mentions two further variables: the 'Köbler standard' of 'sufficiently serious infringement' and the 'CILFIT standard' for the courts of last instance to be allowed to dispense with making a request for a preliminary ruling under the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU.

132. The 'Köbler standard' adapts the condition of 'sufficiently serious breach' to potential judicial misapplication of EU law. According to the Court, in order to determine whether there is a sufficiently serious breach of EU law, it is necessary to take account of all the factors which characterise the situation brought before the national court. Among the factors which can be taken into consideration in that regard are, in particular, the degree of clarity and precision of the rule infringed, the scope of the room for assessment that the infringed rule allows for national authorities, whether the infringement and the damage caused were intentional or involuntary, whether any error of law was excusable or inexcusable, and the fact that the position taken by an EU institution may have contributed to the adoption or maintenance of national measures or practices contrary to EU law, and non-compliance by the court in question with its obligation to make a request for a preliminary ruling under the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU. In any event, an infringement of EU law is deemed sufficiently serious where it was made in manifest breach of the case-law of the Court in the matter. (61)

133. The 'CILFIT standard' focuses specifically on courts of last instance and their potential disregard for the duty to refer. According to the Court, under the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU, a court or tribunal against whose decisions there is no judicial remedy under national law is required, where a question of EU law is raised before it, to comply with its obligation to bring the matter before the Court, unless it has established that the question raised is irrelevant or that the EU provision in question has already been interpreted by the Court or that the correct application of EU law is so obvious as to leave no scope for any reasonable doubt. The existence of such a possibility must be assessed in the light of the specific characteristics of EU law, the particular difficulties to which its interpretation gives rise and the risk of divergences in judicial decisions within the European Union. (62) Accordingly, every provision of EU law, including the case-law of the Court in the relevant area, must be placed in its context and interpreted in the light of the provisions of EU law as a whole, regard being had to the objectives thereof and to its state of evolution at the date on which the provision in question is to be applied. (63)

134. Much could be written about the need for (i) re-interpreting CILFIT in order to make it relevant again (if, in fact, it ever was (64)); (ii) being clear about the exact relationship between the Köbler conditions and the CILFIT conditions, and ideally integrating them into one coherent whole; (65) (iii) while also integrating and taking into account the standard to be applied to potential failures of last-instance courts if pursued via infringement proceedings under Article 258 TFEU. (66)

135. This is, however, hardly the right case for such endeavours. For the purposes of the referring court in the present case, it suffices to recall that the standard by which any such potential matter of state liability is to be assessed is that of the Köbler criteria, outlined above in point 132 of this Opinion. For that purpose, it is not the CILFIT standard, but simply 'manifest breach of the case-law of the Court in the matter' (67) that will amount to a sufficiently serious infringement of EU law. Whether or not the failure of the national court in question was indeed so manifest as to amount to blatant disregard for the case-law of the Court, by either omitting to engage with EU law at all or interpreting it in an obviously untenable way, will again be for the referring court to ascertain.

V. Conclusion

136. In the light of the aforementioned considerations, I propose that the Court answer the questions posed by the Székesfehérvári Törvényszék (Székesfehérvár High Court, Hungary) as follows:

– Article 4(3) TEU and Article 267 TFEU require that a national court, when implementing a preliminary ruling previously requested from the Court, must fully implement the guidance contained therein. If executing the Court's guidance in a preliminary ruling requires a certain type or scope of appraisal to be carried out, which is not normally carried out at the level of the referring court in question, that court is obliged either to set aside the national procedural rules limiting its competence in that regard or to annul and remit the case to the appropriate judicial, or even administrative, level to conduct that appraisal;

– The principle of effective judicial protection does not require authorising a retrial, as an extraordinary remedy, in order to implement a preliminary ruling of the Court that was allegedly not fully taken into account in the previous proceedings on the merits in the course of which the preliminary ruling was issued. However, should national law provide for a remedy allowing for the possibility or the duty to reopen final decisions given in similar cases at national level, the requirement of equivalence would require that such a possibility or duty also be extended to decisions of the Court previously issued in the same case;

– The EU rules and principles on Member State liability must be interpreted as meaning that:

  – a declaration of liability on account of a breach of EU law by a (last-instance) national court is to be based on the criteria laid down by EU law;

  – the principle of res judicata attached to a decision of a court adjudicating at last instance that infringed EU law does not preclude recognition of State liability for that infringement;

  – national law cannot exclude the possibility of certain types of damages being claimed, if it were established that such damages are the direct consequence of a sufficiently serious infringement of EU law;

  – an infringement of EU law by a court of last instance refusing to make a reference contrary to the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU will be sufficiently serious where it was made in manifest breach of the case-law of the Court in the matter before that court.

13 I wish to stress that the term ‘round’ is just my shorthand for the three distinct phases of litigation in the context of the present case.

14 It is to be noted that that stage might also be relevant for another reason in the present context since the Commission suggested at the hearing that there could perhaps be a duty, on the basis of the Kühne & Heitz line of case-law, to reopen the administrative review before the Arbitration Committee (see below, Section C of this Opinion).

15 Outlined above, points 30 and 37 of this Opinion.

16 Above, points 31 to 36.

18 Again, as already outlined in general above, in point 36, assessing the general compatibility of the rules, while not endorsing or confirming that any such failure has actually happened in the individual case. Any such assessment is for the referring court to make.

19 See, for example, judgments of 5 October 2010, Elchinov (C-173/09, EU:C:2010:581, paragraph 29), and of 16 June 2015, Gauweiler and Others (C-62/14, EU:C:2015:400, paragraph 16).

20 See, for example, judgment of 5 July 2016, Ognyanov (C-614/14, EU:C:2016:514, paragraph 28).

21 See, for example, regarding the effects of a preliminary ruling declaring the act of an institution to be void, judgments of 13 May 1981, International Chemical Corporation (66/80, EU:C:1981:102, paragraphs 12 to 13), and of 27 February 1985, Société des produits de maïs (112/83, EU:C:1985:86, paragraph 16).

22 See, for example, judgments of 27 March 1963, Da Costa and Others (28/62 to 30/62, EU:C:1963:6), and of 4 November 1997, Parfums Christian Dior (C-337/95, EU:C:1997:517, paragraph 29).

23 That of course does not preclude the referring court, or any other national court deciding in the same proceedings, from requesting another decision from the Court, should they be of the opinion that such a request is for whatever reason necessary — see, for example, judgments of 24 June 1969, Milch-, Fett- und Eierkontor (29/68, EU:C:1969:27, paragraph 3), and of 11 June 1987, X (14/86, EU:C:1987:275, paragraph 12). As stated in Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice: ‘It shall be for the national courts or tribunals to assess whether they consider that sufficient guidance is given by a preliminary ruling, or whether it appears to them that a further reference to the Court is required.’ Put more bluntly, following a decision of the Court, the options left to the referring court are either to apply the guidance or to refer again in the case of disagreement. Ignoring the guidance issued is not an option.

32 Point 11 of this Opinion.

33 That is, clearly not allowing for a ‘negative competence conflict’, in which no body or court will eventually accept responsibility — see, in a similar vein, my Opinion in Link Logistik N&N (C-384/17, EU:C:2018:494, points 111 to 112).

40 Judgment of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti (C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraph 61).

41 That, to my knowledge, is indeed a general principle of law common to the Member States, since in the national legal systems that I am aware of, a subsequent change in (clarification of or departure from) the case-law of a higher/supreme court is not normally considered to be a sufficient ground for reopening previous final decisions in which the previous legal opinion was applied.

42 Judgment of 24 October 2018, XC and Others (C-234/17, EU:C:2018:853, paragraph 51).

48 See my Opinion in Călin (C-676/17, EU:C:2019:94, points 66 to 79).

49 It shall be noted in this respect that Section 260(1)(a) of the Civil Procedural Code indeed does not only refer to new facts but also to 'any final court or administrative decision' as conditions to submit a request for a retrial. What exactly that turn of the phrase involves is again a matter for the national court.

50 Judgment of 13 January 2004 (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17).

51 See judgment of 13 January 2004, Kühne & Heitz (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17, paragraph 28).

52 Which would already be quite a leap: as outlined above (points 82 to 87 of this Opinion), in contrast to the potential administrative (mis)application of EU law, the approach of the Court has always been much more cautious as regards the balance between legal certainty (and res judicata) and the requirement of effective enforcement of EU law applied to judicial decisions, leaning much more towards the former.

53 It is to be noted that the Arbitration Committee carries out the administrative review and has thus quasi-judicial functions. It is therefore uncertain whether it can be characterised as an administrative body within the meaning of Kühne & Heitz. But if the administrative body were to be the contracting authority that actually ran the tendering procedure, the same logic could be said to apply, just one level lower.

54 See, for example, judgments of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 36); of 13 June 2006, Traghetti del Mediterraneo (C-173/03, EU:C:2006:391, paragraph 31); and of 28 July 2016, Tomášová (C-168/15, EU:C:2016:602, paragraph 20).

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

18 September 2019 (*)

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Article 258 TFEU – Directive 2004/18/EC – Coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts – Public works concession contracts – Extension of the duration of an existing concession for the construction and operation of a motorway without publication of a contract notice)

In Case C-526/17,

ACTION under Article 258 TFEU for failure to fulfil obligations, brought on 4 September 2017,

European Commission, represented by G. Gattinara, P. Ondrůšek and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, applicant,

v

Italian Republic, represented by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and V. Nunziata, E. De Bonis and P. Pucciariello, avvocati dello Stato, defendant,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber), composed of E. Regan, President of the Chamber, C. Lycourgos, E. Juhász (Rapporteur), M. Ilešič and I. Jarukaitis, Judges, Advocate General: E. Sharpston,

Registrar: R. Schiano, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 12 December 2018, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 21 March 2019,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By its application, the European Commission requests that the Court declare that, by extending the concession for the A12 Livorno-Civitavecchia motorway (Italy) from 31 October 2028 to 31 December 2046 without publishing a contract notice, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1422/2007 of 4 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 317, p. 34; ‘Directive 2004/18’).

Legal context

2 Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18 defines ‘public works contracts’ as ‘public contracts having as their object either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority'. Under that provision, a 'work' is 'the outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole which is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic or technical function'.

3 Annex I to that directive, entitled 'List of the activities referred to in Article 1(2)(b)', includes the construction of highways, roads, airfields and sports facilities (Class 45.23 according to the Statistical Classification of Economic Activities in the European Community (NACE)), which includes, as a class, the construction of highways.

4 Article 1(3) of that directive defines 'public works concession' as 'a contract of the same type as a public works contract except for the fact that the consideration for the works to be carried out consists either solely in the right to exploit the work or in this right together with payment'.

5 Under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts':

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

6 Under Article 56 of that directive, the rules governing public works concessions are to apply to all public works concession contracts concluded by the contracting authorities where the value of the contracts is equal to or greater than EUR 5 150 000.

7 Article 58 of the directive, entitled 'Publication of the notice concerning public works concessions', provides:

'1. Contracting authorities which wish to award a public works concession contract shall make known their intention by means of a notice.

2. Notices of public works concessions shall contain the information referred to in Annex VII C and, where appropriate, any other information deemed useful by the contracting authority, in accordance with the standard forms adopted by the Commission pursuant to the procedure in Article 77(2).

3. Notices shall be published in accordance with Article 36(2) to (8).

4. Article 37 on the publication of notices shall also apply to public works concessions.'

8 Under Article 80(1) of Directive 2004/18, the Member States were to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with that directive no later than 31 January 2006.

Background to the dispute

The 1969 concession contract

9 On 23 October 1969, a public works concession contract ('the 1969 concession contract') was entered into between Azienda Nazionale Autonoma delle Strade SpA ('ANAS'), the contracting authority responsible for motorway concessions, and Società Autostrada Tirrenica SpA ('SAT'), an economic operator. Article 1 of that contract provides that the objective thereof is the construction and operation of the motorway from Livorno to Civitavecchia, with a total length of approximately 237 km.

10 Article 5 of the 1969 concession contract provides in particular, in paragraph 1, that the construction of sections by the concessionaire must comply with the time limits set out in the general works implementation plan and, in paragraph 2, that that concessionaire has the option of bringing forward the construction of the sections without, however, having the right to bring forward the corresponding consideration. Under Article 5(3), following approval of the implementation plans, the concessionaire must commence the works for the construction of the tranches on the dates set in the general works implementation plan and deliver the complete works within the time limits provided for in the respective special specifications. Under Article 5(4), at the request of the concessionaire, and for reasons not attributable to it, ANAS can extend the time limits for the presentation of each project, as regards both the start and the end of the works relating to that project. Article 5(5) provides that, in the latter case, the date of expiry of the concession can be postponed for a period not exceeding the extension granted in accordance with the preceding paragraph, and Article 5(6) provides that the management of the works is to be governed by the provisions relating to State works and by the general specifications.

11 Article 7 of the 1969 concession contract provides that the concession is to terminate at the end of the 30th year following the point at which operation of the entire motorway commences. However, without prejudice to the provisions set out in Article 5(5) and (6) of that contract, the period cannot exceed the 30th year from the date on which the works described in the general works implementation plan referred to in Article 5(1) and (2) of that contract are completed.

12 The concession awarded by the 1969 concession contract was approved and made enforceable on 7 November 1969.

The 1987 addendum

13 On 14 October 1987, ANAS and SAT signed an addendum to the 1969 concession contract ('the 1987 addendum').

14 Article 14 of that addendum provides that 'the duration of the present concession is set at 30 years from the date on which the entire motorway is open to traffic'.

The 1999 contract

15 On 7 October 1999, ANAS and SAT concluded a contract ('the 1999 contract'), Article 2 of which is entitled 'Subject matter'.

16 Under Article 2(1) thereof, that contract is to govern as between the concession-granting authority and the concessionaire the operation of the 36.6 km section between Livorno and Cecina, open to traffic on 3 July 1993 and forming an integral part of the A12 Livorno -Civitavecchia motorway, the concession for the construction and operation of which had been granted to SAT.

17 Under Article 2(2) of that contract, the activities and tasks necessary for operation of the motorway are entrusted to the concessionaire, in accordance with the terms and conditions set out in the contract and with Article 14 of Legge n. 531, Piano decennale per la viabilità di grande comunicazione e misure di riassetto del settore autostradale (Law No 531 introducing a ten-year plan for the viability of major roads and restructuring measures in the highway sector) of 12 August 1982 (GURI No 223 of 14 August 1982).

18 Article 2(3) of that contract provides that 'when the legal and factual conditions for the continuation of the construction programme in respect of which a concession has been granted are met, an addendum shall be concluded to establish a contractual framework for the construction and operation of the two further sections: Cecina-Grosseto and Grosseto-Civitavecchia'.

19 Article 23 of the 1999 contract, entitled 'Duration of the concession', provides, in paragraph 1, that 'the concession shall expire on 31 October 2028'.

The 2009 single agreement

20 On 11 March 2009, ANAS and SAT signed a standard agreement ('the 2009 single agreement'), Article 1(4) of which provides that 'the parties agree that they have no right, interest or claim, actual or prospective, in respect of [the 1999 contract] or any act or measure adopted prior to the conclusion of the present agreement'.

21 Article 2 of that single agreement, entitled 'Subject matter', provides, in paragraph 1, that 'the present single agreement shall govern fully and exclusively the relationship between the concession-granting authority and the concessionaire as regards the design, construction and operation of all the works previously allocated under the concession contract concluded with ANAS on 7 October 1999:

(a) A12 Livorno-Cecina (Rosignano), 36.6 km

(open to traffic on 3 July 1993);

(b) Cecina (Rosignano)-Grosseto, 110.5 km;

(c) Grosseto-Civitavecchia, 95.5 km, totalling 242.6 km’.

22 Article 4 of that single agreement, entitled ‘Duration of the concession’, provides, in paragraph 1, that ‘taking account of the periods when the execution of the works was suspended, as referred to in the preamble and Article 143 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, the concession for the completion of the Cecina (Rosignano)-Civitavecchia motorway shall terminate on 31 December 2046. …’.

The pre-litigation procedure

23 In 2009, a complaint was sent to the Commission regarding the extension, from 31 October 2028 to 31 December 2046 provided for by the 2009 single agreement, of the duration of the concession relating to the A12 motorway from Livorno to Civitavecchia.

24 The Commission and the Italian authorities communicated with each other in that respect, although no solution was reached.

25 Following fruitless contact on several occasions with the Italian authorities, the Commission sent, on 22 April 2014, a letter of formal notice to the Italian Republic pursuant to Article 258 TFEU, requesting that that Member State submit its observations as regards that extension, which, it claimed, may have infringed Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18.

26 Since the Commission did not consider the replies to that letter of formal notice to be satisfactory, it sent a reasoned opinion to the Italian Republic on 17 October 2014.

27 After that reasoned opinion was sent, discussions took place between the Commission and the Italian Republic, having as their objective a possible reduction of the duration of the concession at issue and the possibility of launching a competitive tendering procedure with respect to the works to be carried out under that concession.

28 By letter sent to the Italian Republic on 8 March 2016, the Commission called on that Member State to take all the measures necessary to comply with the reasoned opinion by ending that concession on 31 October 2028, as provided for in the 1999 contract.

29 Considering that the measures necessary to comply with the obligations arising from Directive 2004/18 had not been adopted by the Italian Republic and that the alleged infringement of Articles 2 and 58 of that directive had not been brought to an end, the Commission brought the present action.

The action

Arguments of the parties

Arguments of the Commission

30 By its action, the Commission claims that the Italian Republic has infringed Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18, as a result of extending, by means of the 2009 single agreement, by over 18 years, namely until 31 December 2046, without publishing a contract notice, the duration of the concession relating to the A12 motorway from Livorno to Civitavecchia, the termination date of which had been set at 31 October 2028 in the 1999 contract.

31 The Commission maintains that the present case concerns a public works concession within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 2004/18, since the concessionaire is remunerated through the operation of the infrastructure which it undertakes to build and that, as the value of that works concession is EUR 66 631 366.93, the threshold laid down in Article 56 of that directive is exceeded. The Commission claims that, in accordance with Article 58(1) of Directive 2004/18, a contract notice should have been published in respect of that works concession. However, no notice was published, either in 1969, when the contract relating to the original concession was concluded, or in 1999, when that concession was extended until 2028.

32 In particular, the Commission, which refers to the judgment of 7 September 2016, Finn Frogne (C-549/14, EU:C:2016:634, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited), argues, in the first place, that the deferral of the termination date of the concession at issue from 31 October 2028 to 31 December 2046, which is equivalent to the award of a new concession, as it leads to a material change to an existing works concession, should have been the subject of a contract notice and a competitive tendering procedure, in accordance with Article 58 of Directive 2004/18. According to the Commission, such a material change required the launch of a new competitive tendering procedure, since, if it had been known about in advance, other tenderers would have participated in the call for tenders. Further, according to the judgment of 5 April 2017, Borta (C-298/15, EU:C:2017:266, paragraph 70 and the case-law cited), the fact that no competitive tendering procedure was organised for the award of the original concession means, a fortiori, that a competitive tendering procedure must be launched in the event of a material change to that concession.

33 The Commission adds that, in the present case, the renegotiation of the duration of the concession at issue constitutes, in itself, proof of the material nature of the change and that the parties have clearly expressed their intention to amend the essential terms of that concession, in accordance with paragraph 37 of the judgment of 13 April 2010, Wall (C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182). Further, the Commission asserts that, in so far as the concessionaire is remunerated by operating the infrastructure that it has built, an extension of the concession by 18 years allows for an increase in remuneration, which changes the economic balance considerably in favour of the concessionaire.

34 In the second place, the Commission claims that change in essential aspects of a concession without the publication of a contract notice, such as the extension of the concession at issue by 18 years, constitutes an infringement of the principles of equal treatment and transparency under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18. Referring to the judgment of 22 April 2010, Commission v Spain (C-423/07, EU:C:2010:211, paragraph 56), it notes that, with specific regard to a works concession relating to the construction and operation of a motorway, the publication obligation requiring contracting authorities to make known their intention to award the concession ensures a level of competition considered satisfactory by EU legislature in the field of public works concessions.

35 As regards the Italian Republic’s arguments, the Commission disputes, first, the continuity alleged by that Member State between the 1969 concession contract and the 2009 single agreement, on the ground that the latter constitutes an independent set of rules. According to the Commission, the provisions of the 2009 single agreement must not be interpreted in the light of the 1969 concession contract. The extension introduced by that single agreement concerns the ‘existing concession’ at the time that agreement was concluded, that is to say, the concession governed by the 1999 contract.

36 Further, according to the Commission, even though the original concession was concluded at a time when EU law did not lay down any rules on the matter, any amendment or revision of that original concession should be assessed in the light of the provisions of EU law which have entered into force in the meantime (judgment of 27 October 2005, Commission v Italy, C-187/04 and C-188/04, not published, EU:C:2005:652).

37 Secondly, the Commission disputes the relevance of the alleged difficulties resulting from the performance of the original concession and the various amendments to national legislation, and states that if the need arose to carry out important construction works not provided for by the 1999 contract, that also called for a competitive tendering procedure by means of the publication of a contract notice. Moreover, according to the Commission, it is not logical to rely on the existence of material changes to the concession at issue, resulting from the increase in the investments to be made, a rise in tariffs of 51.42% and the need to increase the duration of the concession, while at the same time claiming that the subject matter of that concession has remained unchanged since 1969. Further, the assertion that the 30-year period set out in the original concession was a ‘floating’ period, which was to start to run only after the completion of the works, is at odds with the principle of transparency and the effectiveness of Directive 2004/18.

38 Thirdly, according to the Commission, the Italian Republic misinterprets the scope of the judgment of 19 June 2008, pressetext Nachrichtenagentur (C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351), by disregarding the obligation incumbent on it in the present case to hold a competitive tendering procedure, on the ground that the new provisions of the 2009 single agreement are intended to balance the contractual relationship in the light of the original concession.

39 Fourthly, the Commission maintains that there is no need, in the present case, to balance a reciprocally binding relationship, since, under a concession, where the concessionaire is remunerated by operating the infrastructure and assumes the risk associated with the operation, maintaining the contractual balance would remove that risk completely and alter the subject matter of the concession contract. Moreover, as regards the possible justification for the lack of a competitive tendering procedure at the time when the 2009 single agreement was concluded by the ‘need to guarantee contractual balance’, the Commission claims that the judgment of 14 July 2016, Promoimpresa and Others (C-458/14 and C-67/15, EU:C:2016:558), relied on by the Italian Republic, is not relevant to the present case, since it concerns whether it is possible to subject to principles deriving from the TFEU concessions which, until the entry into force of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1), were not covered by any directive, whereas Directive 2004/18 was in force at the time the 2009 single agreement was concluded. Referring to the judgment of 4 June 2009, Commission v Greece (C-250/07, EU:C:2009:338, paragraph 38), the Commission argues that Directive 2004/18 does not contain derogations from the principle of equal treatment based on an alleged need to ‘guarantee contractual balance’, but that it lays down other exceptions to that principle, which must be interpreted strictly. Further, the Commission asserts that it is apparent from the judgment of 14 November 2013, Belgacom (C-221/12, EU:C:2013:736, paragraph 40) that the principle of legal certainty cannot be relied on in order to justify an extension to an agreement which is contrary to the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency deriving therefrom.

Arguments of the Italian Republic

40 The Italian Republic describes the chronology of the relevant facts in detail. It explains, in particular, that for a period of 13 years, SAT was unable to begin the planned works, since legislative acts provided that the award of concessions for the construction of motorways was to be suspended and for the general suspension of the construction of new motorways or motorway sections, so that it was only in 1982 that SAT was authorised to proceed with the works relating to the A12 motorway, within the limits of the appropriations allocated and on condition that the public holding in the capital of the concessionaire company was changed. That Member State adds that it was in that context that ANAS and SAT signed the 1987 addendum, which confirmed that the duration of the concession was fixed at 30 years from the date on which the entire motorway opened to traffic. Thus, that addendum enabled the section from Livorno to Cecina, which represents only approximately 15% of the total length of the A12 motorway, to be completed.

41 The Italian Republic asserts that the objective of the 2009 single agreement is to replace the 1969 concession contract and the acts which amended it, by updating and revising the contractual terms in force in 2009 and by providing for the full completion of the A12 motorway.

42 As regards the substance, the Italian Republic submits that the Commission’s action is based on an incorrect factual premiss, in so far as that institution is of the opinion that the 1999 contract related to the works and the operation of the entire length of the A12 motorway between Livorno and Civitavecchia.

43 The Italian Republic maintains that Article 23(1) of the 1999 contract fixed the date of expiry of the concession at 31 October 2028 only in respect of the section from Livorno to Cecina. By virtue of Article 2(1) thereof, that contract governed only the operation of that 36.6 km section, which was open to traffic on 3 July 1993, and not that of the other sections of the A12 motorway, the completion of which had been suspended.

44 As regards the remaining part of the A12 motorway, according to the Italian Republic, Article 2(3) of the 1999 contract clearly provided that, when the legal and factual conditions for the continuation of the construction programme were met, a special addendum was to be concluded in order to establish the contractual framework for the construction and operation of the Cecina-Grosseto and Grosseto-Civitavecchia sections.

45 According to the Italian Republic, the 2009 single agreement was concluded on the basis of that latter provision, when the conditions for completion of the entire A12 motorway were satisfied.

46 In addition to relying on that alleged incorrect factual premiss, the Italian Republic puts forward several arguments to show that the Commission's action is unfounded.

47 In the first place, it claims that, in the present case, no 'extension' of the concession by 18 years has been decided on.

48 The Italian Republic submits that the 'floating' termination date 30 years from the 'the point at which operation of the entire motorway commences', as defined in Article 7 of the 1969 concession contract, has never been reached. Moreover, the 2009 single agreement concerns works all of which were already anticipated in the original 1969 concession and contains only a necessary revision of the provisions of the 1969 concession contract for the purpose of the full completion of the A12 motorway and in order to guarantee the original contractual balance.

49 The Italian Republic submits that the 2009 single agreement governs the entire concession as regards the design, implementation and operation of all the works already awarded in the previous contracts. It claims that that single agreement provides for the completion of the motorway in question, unlike the 1999 contract, which included only a reservation in that regard. Further, the judgment of 27 October 2005, Commission v Italy (C-187/04 and C-188/04, not published, EU:C:2005:652) cannot be transposed to the present case because the case which gave rise to that judgment concerned a new agreement regarding the execution of new works, whereas the present case concerns the same works as those referred to in the 1969 concession contract.

50 According to the Italian Republic, the Commission is wrong to conclude that there is 'a material change to the existing concession' in the present case. According to that Member State, the subject matter of that concession has not changed as compared to that originally defined and the conclusion of the 2009 single agreement resulted from an obligation, introduced in 2006 by regulatory and legislative acts, to include all the contractual terms of each motorway concession in a single legal document, which summarises, revises and represents a novation of the previous contracts. The Italian Republic specifies that it is Decreto-legge n. 262 – Disposizioni urgenti in materia tributaria e finanziaria (Decree-Law No 262 introducing urgent provisions regarding tax and financial matters) of 3 October 2006 (GURI No 230 of 3 October 2006), converted into law, with amendments, by Legge n. 286 (Law No 286) of 24 November 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 277 of 28 November 2006) and subsequently amended by Article 1(1030) of Legge n. 296 – Disposizioni per la formazione del bilancio annuale e pluriennale dello Stato (finanziaria 2007) (Law No 296 relating to provisions as regards the annual and pluriannual budget of the State (Finance Law for 2007)) of 27 December 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 299 of 27 December 2006) which laid down new provisions in the field of motorway concessions.

51 Consequently, the Italian Republic submits that the Commission is wrong to rely on the provision in the 2009 single agreement under which the parties may not assert any 'right, claim, interest or expectation' on the basis of acts or measures predating the conclusion of that agreement in order to show the lack of continuity with the original concession and that legal relationships prior to 2009 must not be taken into account.

52 The Italian Republic asserts that the 2009 single agreement does not confer any unjustified or additional advantage on the concessionaire. It adds that the tariffs provided for during the period for completion of the investment project had reached a level beyond which the tariff paid by the users would have become socially unsustainable and the infrastructure in question would have had to be abandoned. Consequently, the balance provided for by the 1969 concession contract requires that the termination date of the concession be fixed at the year 2046, which can also be explained by the failure, not attributable to the parties, to complete the project in due time.

53 In the second place, the Italian Republic submits that, given the continuity of the contractual relations which commenced in 1969, Directive 2004/18 is not applicable in the present case.

54 In the third place, and in any event, the Italian Republic maintains that the deferral of the termination date of the concession at issue is justified by the principles of protection of legitimate expectations, respect for contractual obligations (pacta sunt servanda) and legal certainty. It submits that those principles require a proper assessment of the economic interest of SAT, a fortiori in a situation which was originally not contrary to EU law. It contends, referring to the judgment of 14 July 2016, Promoimpresa and Others (C-458/14 and C-67/15, EU:C:2016:558, paragraphs 71 to 73), that derogations from the principle of equal treatment may be justified by the need to guarantee contractual balance, in particular from an economic point of view. Further, the Italian Republic maintains that, as they relate to circumstances different from those in the present case, the judgments of 13 April 2010, Wall (C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182) and of 5 April 2017, Borta (C-298/15, EU:C:2017:266), cannot be transposed to the present case.

Findings of the Court

55 By its action, the Commission requests that the Court declare that the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18, on the ground that, by the 2009 single agreement, the concession for the A12 motorway was extended from 31 October 2028 to 31 December 2046, without publication of a contract notice.

56 It is necessary to ascertain whether Directive 2004/18 is applicable to the present case, which is disputed by the Italian Republic, and subsequently, if appropriate, to examine the alleged infringement of those provisions of Directive 2004/18.

Applicability of Directive 2004/18

57 According to the Italian Republic, Directive 2004/18 cannot be applicable to the relationship between the concession-granting authority and the concessionaire resulting from the concession contract concluded in 1969, that is to say, prior to the development of the Court’s case-law on public procurement and the adoption of secondary EU law in that area.

58 In that regard, it must be recalled that, according to the case-law of the Court, the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency deriving therefrom preclude, following the award of a public works concession contract, the concession-granting authority and the concessionaire from making amendments to the provisions of their concession contract in such a way that those provisions differ materially in character from those of the original contract. Such will be the case if the proposed amendments would either extend the scope of the public works concession considerably to encompass elements not initially covered or to change the economic balance of that contract in favour of the concessionaire, or if those changes are liable to call into question the award of the public works concession, in the sense that, had such amendments been incorporated in the documents which had governed the original award procedure, either another tender would have been accepted or other tenderers might have been admitted to that procedure (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2016, Finn Frogne, C-549/14, EU:C:2016:634, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited).

59 Thus, in principle, a substantial amendment of a public concession contract must give rise to a new award procedure for the contract so amended (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 September 2016, Finn Frogne, C-549/14, EU:C:2016:634, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

60 For that purpose, it must be noted that, in accordance with the Court's case-law, the applicable EU legislation is that in force at the date of that amendment (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 July 2013, Commission v Netherlands, C-576/10, EU:C:2013:510, paragraph 54). In that regard, the fact that the original concession contract was concluded prior to the adoption of EU rules on the matter is therefore without consequence.

61 In the present case, the Commission claims that the 2009 single agreement contains material changes as compared to the original public works concession at issue and that, accordingly, the failure to publish a contract notice for the purpose of concluding that single agreement constitutes an infringement of certain provisions of Directive 2004/18.

62 Therefore, since it is common ground between the parties that the public works concession at issue and the 2009 single agreement fall within the material scope of Directive 2004/18, the changes made by that single agreement to the contractual relationship between ANAS and SAT may, in principle, be assessed in the light of the provisions of that directive.

Alleged infringement of Directive 2004/18

63 According to the Commission's application, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18, on the ground that the concession for the A12 motorway from Livorno to Civitavecchia was extended by 18 years, until 31 December 2046, whereas under the 1999 contract that concession was due to expire on 31 October 2028.

64 In that regard, it must be noted that, even though the Commission refers, in its reply, to the 2009 single agreement as an 'independent set of rules' and states that it cannot be regarded as a mere updating or revision of a pre-existing concession, the fact remains that it considers that the fixing, in Article 4(1) of the 2009 single agreement, of the termination date of the concession at issue constitutes an 'extension' of the period previously set by the 1999 contract, that 1999 contract therefore being necessary for the interpretation of the 2009 single agreement.

65 As the Advocate General observed in point 46 of her Opinion, the Commission has not challenged the compliance of the 1999 contract with EU law but only that of the 2009 single agreement.

66 As regards the changes made to the contractual relationship between ANAS and SAT by the provisions of the 1999 contract, the Italian Republic submits that that contract distinguished between the section of motorway already open to traffic at the date of conclusion of that contract and the other sections of the A12 motorway, the construction of which had not yet commenced or been completed at that date.

67 That Member State claims that the 1999 contract governed only the operation of the section from Livorno to Cecina, with a length of 36.6 km, open to traffic in 1993 as part of the A12 motorway from Livorno to Civitavecchia, and that the setting of the termination date of the concession at 31 October 2028, by virtue of Article 23(1) of that contract, related to that section only.

68 That position is supported by the wording of Article 2(1) of the 1999 contract, which states that it 'shall govern as between the concession-granting authority and the concessionaire the operation of the 36.6 km section between Livorno and Cecina, open to traffic on 3 July 1993 and forming an integral part of the A12 Livorno-Civitavecchia motorway, the concession for the construction and operation of which was granted to SAT'.

69 That position is also confirmed by Article 2(3) of that contract, which states that 'when the legal and factual conditions for the continuation of the construction programme in respect of which a concession has been granted are met, an addendum shall be concluded to establish a contractual framework for the construction and operation of the two further sections: Cecina-Grosseto and Grosseto-Civitavecchia'.

70 Moreover, it must be added that, as regards those two other sections, it would be illogical to take the view that the parties to the 1999 contract intended to replace the period of validity of the concession, consisting of an indefinite period for construction and opening of the motorway, the duration of which, based on previous experience, was uncertain due to legislative interventions but could be very long, and of a fixed period of 30 years for the operation of the motorway in question, with a fixed concession period of 29 years up to 31 October 2028, encompassing the periods required for both the construction and opening of the motorway and the operation of the concession.

71 It must be noted that the Commission did not call into question, in its reply or at the hearing, the evidence submitted by the Italian Republic with a view to establishing that not only the section from Livorno to Cecina was affected by the extension provided for by the 2009 single agreement but also the sections from Cecina to Grosseto and Grosseto to Civitavecchia.

72 Consequently, the Commission's action must be dismissed in so far as it concerns the sections of the A12 motorway from Cecina to Grosseto and Grosseto to Civitavecchia, since it has not proved, to the requisite legal standard, that the public works concession as regards those sections was extended by 18 years.

73 However, the Commission challenges Article 4(1) of the 2009 single agreement, in the light of the provisions of Directive 2004/18, in so far as that provision fixes the termination date for the entire A12 motorway, therefore also including the section from Livorno to Cecina, at 31 December 2046.

74 The termination date for the concession, as regards that latter section, open to traffic on 3 July 1993 and involving separate management by the concessionaire, should have therefore remained fixed, in accordance with Article 23(1) of the 1999 contract, at 31 October 2028.

75 It is common ground that the change of the termination date of the concession, which was extended to 31 December 2046 by virtue of the 2009 single agreement, provides SAT with a significant additional period of time to operate the section from Livorno to Cecina and that, as that concessionaire receives its remuneration by operating that section, considerably increases its remuneration.

76 That extension of the original duration of that concession by 18 years and 2 months therefore constitutes, by virtue of the principles referred to in paragraph 58 of the present judgment, a material change to the conditions of the existing concession.

77 Therefore, in so far as it extends the concession in respect of the section of the A12 motorway from Livorno to Cecina from 31 October 2028 to 31 December 2046, Article 4(1) of the 2009 single agreement infringes the equal treatment obligation laid down in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 and the obligation to publish a contract notice laid down in Article 58 of that directive.

78 That finding cannot be called into question by the arguments put forward by the Italian Republic. Those arguments based on the need to maintain the economic balance of the original concession contract between the parties, in so far as they refer to the concession in its entirety, cannot, in any event, be accepted. Moreover, since the 1999 contract concluded between the concession-granting authority and the concessionaire fixed, as regards the section from Livorno to Cecina, the termination date of the concession at 31 October 2028, by virtue of Article 23(1) thereof, it cannot be maintained that for that section, the deferral of that termination date is necessary for the purposes of compliance with the principles of protection of legitimate expectations, respect for contractual obligations (pacta sunt servanda) and legal certainty.

79 In the light of all the above considerations, it must be held that, by extending the concession for the section of the Livorno-Civitavecchia A12 motorway between Livorno and Cecina from 31 October 2028 to 31 December 2046, without publishing a contract notice, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18.

80 The action is dismissed as to the remainder.

Costs

81 Under Article 138(1) of the Court's Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings.

82 In the present case, the Commission and the Italian Republic have applied, respectively, for the other party to be ordered to pay the costs.

83 Under Article 138(3) of the Rules of Procedure, if it appears justified in the circumstances of the case, the Court may order one party, in addition to bearing its own costs, to pay a proportion of the other party's costs. In the present case, since the Commission's action has been upheld only as regards the section of the Livorno-Civitavecchia A12 motorway from Livorno to Cecina, it is appropriate, in accordance with that provision, to order the Commission to bear, in addition to its own costs, three quarters of the costs of the Italian Republic and the latter to bear one quarter of its own costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by extending the concession for the section of the A12 Livorno-Civitavecchia motorway between Livorno and Cecina (Italy) from 31 October 2028 to 31 December 2046, without publishing a contract notice, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1422/2007 of 4 December 2007;

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders the European Commission to bear its own costs and to pay three quarters of the costs of the Italian Republic. The Italian Republic is ordered to bear one quarter of its own costs.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

SHARPSTON

delivered on 21 March 2019(1)

Case C-526/17

European Commission

v

Italian Republic

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations — Directive 2004/18/EC on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Public works concession — Extension of an existing concession for the construction and management of a motorway without publication of a tender notice)

1. In 1969 a public works concession contract was awarded without following a public procurement procedure for a motorway to be built between Livorno and Civitavecchia on the west coast of Italy. That contract was subsequently amended by further contracts in 1987, 1999 and 2009. On no occasion was the further contract preceded by public procurement proceedings.

2. The European Commission has now brought infringement proceedings under Article 258 TFEU against the Italian Republic. It considers that the contract concluded in 2009 constituted material change to the original contract and that a public procurement procedure should therefore have been undertaken in accordance with Directive 2004/18/EC. (2) The Italian Republic disputes that contention.

Legislative framework

EU law

3. Article 1(2) of Directive 2004/18 defines ‘public works contracts’ as ‘public contracts having as their object either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I [(3)] or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority’. Article 1(2) further provides that ‘a “work” means the outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole which is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic or technical function’. Article 1(3) defines ‘public works concession’ as ‘a contract of the same type as a public works contract except for the fact that the consideration for the works to be carried out consists either solely in the right to exploit the work or in this right together with payment’.

4. Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 provides that ‘contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way’.

5. Article 56 provides that the rules governing public works concessions ‘shall apply to all public works concession contracts concluded by the contracting authorities where the value of the contracts is equal to or greater than EUR 5 150 000’. (4)

6. Article 58 provides that:

‘(1) Contracting authorities which wish to award a public works concession contract shall make known their intention by means of a notice.

(2) Notices of public works concessions shall contain the information referred to in Annex VII C and, where appropriate, any other information deemed useful by the contracting authority, in accordance with the standard forms adopted by the Commission pursuant to the procedure in Article 77(2).

(3) Notices shall be published in accordance with Article 36(2) to (8).

(4) Article 37 on the publication of notices shall also apply to public works concessions.’

7. Article 61 provides that:

‘This Directive shall not apply to additional works not included in the concession project initially considered or in the initial contract but which have, through unforeseen circumstances, become necessary for the performance of the work described therein, which the contracting authority has awarded to the concessionaire, on condition that the award is made to the economic operator performing such work: — when such additional works cannot be technically or economically separated from the initial contract without major inconvenience to the contracting authorities, or — when such works, although separable from the performance of the initial contract, are strictly necessary for its completion. However, the aggregate value of contracts awarded for additional works may not exceed 50% of the amount of the original works concession contract.’

8. Article 80(1) provides that ‘the Member States shall bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with this directive no later than 31 January 2006’.

Factual and procedural background

The 1969 Contract

9. On 23 October 1969 a public works concession contract was entered into between the contracting authority Azienda Nazionale Autonoma delle Strade (‘ANAS’) and the economic operator Società Autostrada Tirrenica (‘SAT’) (5) (‘the 1969 Contract’).

10. Article 1, paragraph 1 of that contract described its objective as the construction and management of the A12 motorway from Livorno (Cecina) to Civitavecchia (‘the motorway’). (6) Article 1, paragraph 2 specified the total length of the motorway to be ‘approximately 237 km’.

11. Article 7 provided that ‘the concession will terminate at the end of the 30th year following the point at which operation of the entire motorway commences; in any event, without prejudice to the provisions set out in Article 5(5) and (6), the period shall not exceed the 30th year from the date on which the works described in the general works implementation plan referred to in Article 5(1) and (2) are completed’.

The 1987 Contract

12. On 14 October 1987, a further contract was entered into between the same parties (‘the 1987 Contract’). According to the Italian Government, that contract replaced Article 7 of the 1969 Contract with the following provision: ‘The duration of the present concession is set at 30 years from the date on which the entire motorway is open to traffic.’

The 1999 Contract

13. On 7 October 1999 a further contract was entered into between the same parties (‘the 1999 Contract’). Article 2(1) thereof provided that ‘the present agreement shall govern as between the concession-granting authority and the concessionaire the operation of the 36.6 km section between Livorno and Cecina, open to traffic on 3 July 1993 and forming an integral part of the A12 Livorno-Civitavecchia motorway, the concession for the construction and operation of which was granted to SAT'.

14. Article 2(3) further provided that 'when the legal and factual conditions for the continuation of the construction programme in respect of which a concession has been granted are met, an addendum shall be concluded to establish a contractual framework for the construction and operation of two further sections: Cecina-Grosseto and Grosseto-Civitavecchia'.

15. Article 23 was entitled 'Duration of the concession'. It provided that 'the concession shall expire on 31 October 2028'.

The 2009 Contract

16. On 11 March 2009, yet a further contract was entered into between the same parties ('the 2009 Contract'). The recitals to that contract provided, inter alia, that on 7 October 1999 the new agreement was concluded between ANAS and SAT, approved by Decree of 21 December 1999, registered with the Court of Auditors on 11 April 2000 which replaced the previous agreement of 23 October 1969 and the related addendum of 14 October 1987, and which, inter alia, provided that the concession is to terminate on 31 October 2028.

17. Article 1.4 provided that 'the parties agree that they have no right, interest or claim, actual or prospective, in respect of the agreement of 7 October 1999 or any act or measure adopted prior to the conclusion of the present agreement'.

18. Article 2.1 provided that 'the present single agreement shall govern fully and exclusively the relationship between the concession-granting authority and the concessionaire as regards the design, construction and operation of all the works previously allocated under the concession agreement concluded with ANAS on 7 October 1999: (a) A12 Livorno – Cecina (Rosignano) 36.6 km (open to traffic on 3 July 1993); (b) Cecina (Rosignano) – Grosseto, 110.5 km; (c) Grosseto – Civitavecchia, 95.5 km, totaling 242.6 km'.

19. The first part of Article 4.1 provided that 'taking account of the periods when the execution of the works was suspended, as referred to in the preamble and Article 143 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, the concession for the completion of the Cecina (Rosignano) – Civitavecchia motorway shall terminate on 31 December 2046'.

20. The second part of Article 4.1 provided that 'if the concession-granting authority has not approved the final project and the related economic and financial plan (EFP) for the execution of the Cecina – Civitavecchia section by 31 December 2012, the parties shall determine the economic and financial consequences thereof, including the investment costs incurred, by reference to the termination of the concession on the date originally stipulated, namely 31 October 2028'.

Progress of the construction work

21. The recitals of the 2009 Contract indicate that construction work on the motorway was suspended as a result of Article 11 of Law No 287 of 28 April 1971 (7) and of Article 18a of Decree-law No 376 of 13 August 1975, (8) subsequently converted into Law No 492 of 16 October 1975. (9) That suspension was subsequently lifted by Articles 9 and 14 of Law No 531/1982, adopted on 12 August 1982. (10)

22. It is common ground that the first stretch of the motorway, covering 36.6 kilometres from Livorno to Cecina (Rosignano), was opened to traffic on 3 July 1993. The second and third stretches of the motorway, respectively from Cecina (Rosignano) to Grosseto and from Grosseto to Civitavecchia, were not built at that time. Only minor sections have subsequently been completed. (11)

23. The recitals of the 2009 Contract further indicate that construction work on the motorway was suspended again by Article 55(12) of Law No 449 of 27 December 1997, (12) and that that suspension was lifted by Law No 443 of 21 December 2001. (13) According to the Italian Government, Law No 286 of 24 November 2006 and Law No 101 of 6 June 2008 further required that the existing concession contracts be consolidated. It was on that basis that the 2009 Contract was agreed.

24. Neither the Commission nor the Italian Government has provided information concerning any subsequent changes to the Italian legislation that might affect the validity of the concession contract. (14)

Pre-litigation procedure

25. In 2009, the Commission received a complaint regarding the extension (from 31 October 2028 to 31 December 2046) of the term for the works concession contract awarded to SAT. The Commission pursued that complaint, which it registered under number 2009/4154. The exchange of communications between the Commission and Italy indicates that Italy undertook to reduce the term by three years to 2043 and to submit the award of all of the construction works on the motorway to a public procurement procedure. On the basis of that undertaking, the Commission decided not to proceed with complaint No 2009/4154.

26. It seems that SAT assigned approximately 30% of the value of the works to companies under its control, in two tranches totalling respectively EUR 34 724 661 and EUR 117 323 225, on respectively 15 December 2009 and 30 March 2012.

27. On 22 April 2014 the Commission sent a letter to Italy stating its formal position that by extending the concession contract term through the 2009 Contract without engaging in a public procurement procedure, Italy had infringed Directive 2004/18, in particular Articles 2 and 58 thereof, and that Article 61 of that directive was not applicable to the circumstances.

28. In June 2014, Italy offered to put out to tender 70% of the works and reiterated its offer to reduce the term of the concession by three years.

29. On 17 October 2014, the Commission sent Italy a reasoned opinion. It refused to accept that 30% of the works would not be subject to a public procurement procedure. The Commission considered that extending the contract to 2046 had been the equivalent of awarding a new contract and that ‘as ANAS has concluded an agreement with SAT, which extended the end date of the concession for the A12 Civitavecchia – Livorno motorway from 31 October 2028 to 31 December 2046, without prior publication of a contract notice, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18/EC’.

30. Subsequent to the reasoned opinion, Italy proposed various commitments with the aim of resolving the dispute between it and the Commission. Thus:

– on 27 October 2014, Italy sent the Commission a draft contract with a three year reduction in term and a commitment to tender out 100% of the works to third parties;

– on 26 June 2015, Italy sent the Commission a draft contract with a six year reduction in term and a commitment to tender out 100% of the works;

– on 22 July 2015, Italy sent the Commission a draft contract proposing a reduction in the term from 2046 to 2040 and the award of 100% of the works via a public procurement procedure. Furthermore, SAT would be deprived of its contract if it did not award those works to third parties, and the end date of the term would be brought forward to 2028 if the draft contract was not approved by 28 February 2017;

– on 24 July 2015, Italy provided further explanations as to why it had been necessary to extend the term, indicating that the delays in the works had inter alia been caused by lack of public funds and concerns relating to public security.

31. On 8 March 2016, the Commission requested Italy to take all measures necessary to bring the public works concession contract to an end by 31 October 2028, as previously provided for by the 1999 Contract.

32. In reply, on 18 November 2016, Italy sent evidence to the Commission in the form of a notarial act to the effect that SAT had committed to tendering out all of the works. Italy also raised the possibility of bringing forward the end date of the concession term from 2046 to 2038.

Litigation procedure

33. The Commission considered Italy's responses to be inadequate. It therefore brought infringement proceedings under Article 258 TFEU on 4 September 2017, seeking a declaration that 'in deferring expiry of the works contract relating to the A12 Civitavecchia-Livorno motorway until 31 December 2046 without publishing any contract notice, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18/EC … as subsequently amended'. The Commission also requested that the Italian Republic should be ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings.

34. The Commission and the Italian Government have submitted written pleadings, and the Italian Government has filed a written response to a written question from the Court, on which the Commission has submitted its observations.

35. That question concerned the investments already made by SAT in the construction of the motorway and the investments expected up till 2028, together with the total investment on which, it was alleged, SAT would not receive an adequate return if the concession were terminated in 2028. In its reply of 3 October 2018 to the Court, the Italian Government explained that:

> (i) Between 2009 and 2017, SAT invested EUR 253.136 million in two stretches of motorway from Cecina (Rosignano) to San Pietro in Palazzi and from Tarquina Sud to Civitavecchia, both of which have since been opened to traffic.
> (ii) In the economic and financial plan from 2011, based on the 2009 Contract, it was projected that SAT would invest EUR 3 411.7 million to finalise the motorway by 2028, of which the EUR 253.136 million identified above covered work planned for the period 2009 to 2015. If the contract were terminated in 2028, SAT would not earn a projected EUR 1 135.7 million during the period 2028 to 2046.
> (iii) In the economic and financial plan from 2016, based on the commitments proposed by Italy to the Commission during the pre-litigation procedure, the overall investment to be made by SAT up to 2023 would be EUR 1 400 million. Since EUR 253.136 million had already been invested, that left EUR 1 146.86 million still to be invested. If the contract were terminated in 2028, SAT would not earn a projected EUR 505.185 million between 2028 and 2038 (that being one of the dates for the end of the concession that Italy had proposed during the pre-litigation procedure). (15)

36. In its observations of 25 October 2018 on that written answer, the Commission pointed out that the time frame for investments used by the Italian Government did not match the time frame specified in the question from the Court. The Commission also observed that, according to SAT's own website, the stretch of motorway from Cecina (Rosignano) to San Pietro in Palazzi had been opened in 2012, and that from Tarquina Sud to Civitavecchia in 2016. The Commission noted that the total stretch of motorway now completed was indicated to be 54.6 km. That represented an additional 18 km over and above the 36.6 km completed in 1993. Finally, the Commission observed that according to newspaper reports the Italian Government had given up further work on the planned motorway in 2017, preferring instead to renovate existing roads. (16)

37. A hearing was held on 12 December 2018 at which Italy and the Commission submitted further observations and responded to questions from the Court.

Preliminary observations

Applicability of Directive 2004/18

38. Italy contests the applicability of Directive 2004/18 to a contract originally entered into in 1969, prior to the development of any case-law or relevant secondary legislation on public procurement.

39. I do not share Italy's doubt. Whilst an initial contract may itself be outside the scope of public procurement rules, it does not follow that all amendments to the contract must likewise remain outside the scope of public procurement rules.

40. In Belgacom (17) the Court held that the 'principle of legal certainty, which is a general principle of European Union law, provides ample justification for observance of the legal effects of a contract, including — in so far as that principle requires — in the case of a contract concluded before the Court has ruled on the implications of the primary law on contracts of that kind and which, after the fact, turn out to be contrary to those implications'.

41. Accordingly, whilst the Court has also established that the fundamental principles of public procurement apply under certain circumstances to contracts formally excluded from the scope of EU legislation on public procurement, (18) such fundamental principles (here, in particular, the principles of equal treatment and transparency) cannot apply to a contract entered into before the principles in question were established by the Court.

42. The first EU legal instrument regulating the award of public works concessions was Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 amending Directive 71/305/EEC concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts. (19) That directive was to be transposed by 19 July 1990. (20) Self-evidently, therefore, it could not apply to the 1969 Contract.

43. However, the Court has also established that, where a contract was concluded prior to the adoption of EU legislation on public procurement, and that contract therefore remains outside the scope of that legislation both ratione materiae and temporis, any material change of the contract falls to be considered in light of the EU legislation in force at the time of change. In particular, where the intention of the parties is to renegotiate the essential terms of the contract, the application of the EU public procurement rules may be justified. In infringement proceedings (such as these) the burden of proof rests with the Commission. (21)

44. It is common ground that the contract at issue falls within the definition of a public works concession contract in Article 1(3) of Directive 2004/18. It also clearly exceeds the threshold value in Article 56 of the directive, as amended. Accordingly, the 2009 Contract also ratione materiae falls within the field of application of Directive 2004/18, as well as being covered ratione temporis.

45. It follows that any change imposed by the 2009 Contract falls to be evaluated under Directive 2004/18. As explained by the Court in pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, (22) the deciding issue is whether the change may be considered to be 'material'.

46. I note also that, whilst questions could be raised as to whether the 1987 and 1999 Contracts complied with EU legislation on public procurement, there is no basis for the Court to address such questions in the present case. The Commission has challenged only the compliance of the 2009 Contract with EU law. Accordingly, I shall refer to and, as necessary, interpret the preceding contracts in this Opinion only to the extent that they may contribute to an understanding of whether the 2009 Contract introduced material changes to the contractual relationship between ANAS and SAT.

Legal assessment

The Commission's case

47. The burden in these proceedings is on the Commission to prove each allegation it makes. (23) It is important, therefore, to clarify the case that the Commission makes against Italy.

48. The Commission claims that Italy has violated Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18 by failing to undertake a public procurement procedure in order to make a material change in a contract. (24) The factual basis for the allegation is relatively concise, namely that the 2009 Contract extended the term of the public works concession from 2028, the end date set in the 1999 Contract, to 2046. The Italian Government criticises the simplicity of that allegation. In its view, the 2028 date set by the 1999 Contract related only to one stretch of the motorway, whilst the remaining stretches were subject to a term to be specified at a later time. The Italian Government nevertheless accepts that the 2009 Contract now sets the term for the entire concession for the motorway at 2046.

49. I do not consider that that argument of the Italian Government affects the admissibility of the Commission's case. The Commission's position was clearly communicated, thus allowing the Italian

Government to establish its defence in relation to the 'Community legislation in force at the close of the period prescribed by the Commission for the Member State concerned to comply with its reasoned opinion'. (25)

50. The Court can only proceed to its legal analysis of the infringements allegations once it has a clear view of the contractual arrangements in place. It is therefore necessary to analyse the scope of the original 1969 Contract and, in particular, the termination date that it established, and then to consider the amendments introduced by the subsequent contracts.

Interpretation of the contracts

51. Article 7 of the 1969 Contract provided for what may be termed a floating term of up to 30 years for the concession, commencing on completion of the entire motorway from Livorno to Civitavecchia. That term was amended by the 1987 Contract so as to be a period of exactly 30 years, rather than up to 30 years.

52. Did the setting of a definitive termination date (2028) in the 1999 Contract apply to the entire contract (the 'wide' interpretation), or only to the first stretch of motorway from Livorno to Cecina (Rosignano), which opened to traffic in 1993, but which covered only 36.6 kilometres of the projected 240 kilometres for the entire motorway (the 'narrow' interpretation)? Whilst there should normally be no doubts as to the date of termination of a contract, there is doubt here as to what aspects of the 1969 Contract were covered by that new termination date.

53. The Italian Government prefers the narrow interpretation; the Commission the wide interpretation.

54. In favour of the narrow interpretation is the fact that Article 2(1) of the 1999 Contract expressly states that that contract only applies to the first stretch of motorway from Livorno to Cecina, whilst Article 2(3) states that the necessary conditions are to be agreed for the remaining two stretches of motorway once the legislation has been adopted to enable work on these stretches to continue. That interpretation therefore leads to the conclusion that the 1999 Contract applies only to that first stretch of motorway, not to the entire route.

55. In favour of a wider interpretation is the fact that Article 23 of the 1999 Contract provides that the concession ends in 2028 without apparently making any distinction between the different stretches of the motorway. That appears to be underpinned by the recitals to the 2009 Contract, which explain that the 1969 and 1987 Contracts, which applied to the entire motorway without distinction, were to be amended by the 1999 Contract so as to end the concession in 2028. (26)

56. The second part of Article 4.1 of the 2009 Contract explicitly states that the 'original' 2028 end date applies to the remaining stretches from Cecina (Rosignano) to Civitavecchia. (27) The first part of Article 4.1 of the 2009 Contract also provides for a new termination date in 2046, likewise without making any distinction between the different stretches of the motorway. (28)

57. Finally, the Italian Government's answer to the question from the Court and the Commission's observations thereon made it clear that work was undertaken on the remaining stretches of motorway prior to the adoption of the 2009 Contract. That fact militates against favouring the narrow interpretation.

58. I therefore prefer the wider interpretation of the 1999 Contract advanced by the Commission; and consider that Article 23 of the 2009 Contract changed the termination date for the concession for the whole of the motorway from 2028, as established by the 1999 Contract, to 2046.

59. However, even if the narrower interpretation were to be preferred, I note that the 2009 Contract changes the termination date also for the second and third stretches of the motorway. That could be seen to build upon Article 2(3) of the 1999 Contract, which provided that conditions for the second and third stretches of the motorway were to be established at a later date.

60. On that basis, the termination dates specified in the 1969 and 1987 Contracts thereafter no longer applied to any part of the motorway. The setting of a termination date in the 2009 Contract accordingly constituted a change also for the second and third stretches of the motorway.

61. Here I recall that the proposition that a pre-existing contract cannot be challenged under subsequent legislation, or under subsequently established principles of law, must be regarded as an exception, which in accordance with well-established case-law of the Court must be given a restrictive interpretation. (29) Thus, once the 1969 Contract was amended by the 1999 Contract, it could not subsequently be changed back to more generous terms in line with the original contract.

62. I would therefore consider that having modified the 1969 and 1987 Contracts in the 1999 Contract by providing that conditions were to be agreed at a later stage, the Italian Government is precluded from arguing that those conditions, defined by the 2009 Contract, correspond more or less to the original conditions in the 1969 and 1987 Contracts and for that reason should be excluded from public procurement obligations.

63. However, even if what might be termed a 'very narrow' approach is adopted, so that the arrangements in the 2009 Contract in relation to the second and third stretches of the motorway are compared only with the conditions laid down in the 1969 and 1987 Contracts, the fact remains that the termination date was changed from a floating 30 year period to a definitive 37 year period. Thus even taking that very narrow interpretation, the essence of the Commission's allegation remains intact. The conditions of the contract have been changed.

64. I merely add that, to the extent that there are difficulties and uncertainties regarding the proper wording in, and import of, the various contracts, ANAS and through it the Italian Government must take responsibility for the contractual texts that were agreed. Where there is doubt, an ambiguous text should not automatically be construed in their favour.

65. I turn now to the question of whether the changes made by the 2009 Contract can be characterised as material.

Material changes

66. The Court has established a non-exhaustive list of circumstances and conditions under which a change is to be viewed as material. Thus, the Court has held in pressetext Nachrichtenagentur that a change may be considered material when it:

– is materially different in character from the original contract and therefore such as to demonstrate the intention of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of that contract; or

– if introduced at the time of the initial award procedure, would have permitted other tenderers to have been admitted or accepted; or – extends the scope of the contract considerably to encompass services not initially covered; or – changes the economic balance of the contract in favour of the contractor in a way that was not provided for in the initial contract. (30)

67. In my view, two of the criteria for material change that the Court set out in pressetext Nachrichtenagentur are fulfilled here. The parties clearly intended to renegotiate essential terms of the contract. They did so in a manner that changed the economic balance in favour of the contractor.

68. I begin with whether the termination date of a contract may be considered an 'essential term of that contract' and one that 'changes the economic balance'. The contracts at issue are for a public works concession. The longer the concessionaire can exploit that concession, the more it can look to generate profit once the works are completed and it has recovered the costs of construction through the tolls charged for the use of the motorway.

69. The length of the term negotiated between the parties is, in my view, very obviously an essential aspect of any contract governing such a concession. The 29 year exploitation period in the 1999 Contract (until 2028) was extended by an additional 18 years in the 2009 Contract (until 2046). That must be regarded as constituting a change to essential terms and at the same time, a change in the economic balance of the contract in favour of the concessionaire.

70. It is true that if one adopts the very narrow approach, and the 37 year fixed exploitation period in the 2009 Contract is thus compared to the floating 30 year exploitation period in the 1969 Contract, it becomes less easy to assess which of the two is more economically beneficial for the concessionaire.

71. I have however, set out above the reasons why I consider that the very narrow interpretation is not readily supported by the texts. (31) Moreover, where — as here — there is a change that on any view fundamentally alters the contract, I consider that it is for the Italian Government to demonstrate that such a change should nevertheless not be regarded as a 'material change' in the sense of pressetext Nachrichtenagentur. (32) I do not find that the Italian Government has done so here.

72. Furthermore, were the Court to conclude that only the first stretch of the motorway (approximately 36 kilometres) was subject to material change, the Commission's allegation would still remain proven for that sector.

73. I do not regard it as significant that the first stretch of the motorway constituted only 15% of a larger contractual engagement to construct 240 kilometres of motorway. That cannot affect the finding that the public procurement obligations were not respected.

74. Accordingly, I conclude that the 2009 Contract constituted a material change to the pre-existing contractual arrangements and that it should therefore have been made subject to a public procurement procedure.

75. I turn now to the question of whether the Italian Government can rely on any grounds exempting it from that obligation.

Grounds for exemption

76. The Italian Government has referred to factual and legal elements that have intervened since 1969, specifically external developments outside the control of SAT which contributed to the delay in building the motorway and hence to being able to exploit the concession. The Italian Government argues that an extension of the exploitation period was required in order to 'guarantee the balance of the contract'. It claims that had the exploitation period not been extended, that balance would have been undermined.

77. I reject that argument for two reasons.

78. First, the Court has already made clear that 'neither (i) the fact that a material change of the terms of a contract results not from the deliberate intention of the contracting authority and the successful tenderer to renegotiate the terms of that contract, but from their intention to reach a settlement in order to resolve objective difficulties encountered in the performance of the contract nor (ii) the objectively unpredictable nature of the performance of certain aspects of the contract can provide justification for the decision to carry out that change without respecting the principle of equal treatment from which all operators potentially interested in a public contract must benefit'. (33)

79. Second, it is clear from the facts that I have summarised above (34) that the delays to the construction of the motorway were primarily attributable to certain legislative initiatives undertaken by the Italian Government itself. Whatever may have been the reasons for introducing the legislation in question, the fact remains that the Italian Government made an explicit choice by adopting legislation that directly affected SAT's ability to construct and exploit the motorway according to the schedule originally envisaged.

80. It follows from well-established case-law of the Court that 'a Member State may not plead practical or administrative difficulties in order to justify non-compliance with the obligations and time limits laid down by a directive. The same holds true of financial difficulties, which it is for the Member States to overcome by adopting appropriate measures'. (35) Accordingly, although the Italian Government may have had perfectly valid reasons to take measures that affected the public works concession previously granted, and although the Italian Government may have wished to mitigate the impact of that legislation on SAT by extending the exploitation period, it could not do so in disregard of EU public procurement law.

81. The Italian Government further argues that the absence of a public procurement procedure in 2009 (thus derogating from the principle of equality of treatment) may be justified by reference to SAT's right to rely on the principles of legal certainty and legitimate expectations.

82. In so arguing, the Italian Government appears to rely on an a contrario argument derived from the Court's ruling in Promoimpresa and Others, where the Court held that 'the concessions at issue in the main proceedings were awarded when it had already been established that contracts with certain cross-border interest were subject to a duty of transparency, so that the principle of legal certainty cannot be relied on in order to justify a difference in treatment prohibited on the basis of Article 49 TFEU'. (36)

83. As I understand it, the Italian Government here relies on the (undisputed) fact that the 1969 Contract was concluded before EU public procurement rules and principles became applicable, so as to claim that it should thereafter remain exempt from scrutiny under EU law. However, the question is not whether the 1969 Contract complies with the relevant EU rules. It is whether the 2009 Contract does. (37)

84. Furthermore, as the Commission has correctly pointed out, the principle of legal certainty cannot 'be relied on to give an agreement an extended scope which is contrary to the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency deriving therefrom. It is of no import in that regard that that extended scope may offer a suitable solution for putting an end to a dispute which has arisen between the parties concerned, for reasons outside their control, as to the scope of the agreement by which they are bound'. (38) As I see it, there is no reason not to apply that dictum to the 1969 Contract.

85. The very nature of a concession is that the majority of risk must pass over to the concessionaire. (39) Thus, in contrast with other types of contract, the concessionaire (here SAT) must accept the inherent element of future risk when entering into the initial contract. Ordinary commercial prudence will ensure that the need to factor in such risk will affect the bid that is put forward and/or the detailed negotiations for the contract itself.

86. It should be noted that the Court has indeed held that provisions within the original contract documents of a public procurement procedure may expressly allow for material changes to be made subsequently. (40)

87. Against that background, the Italian Government might have sought to argue that Article 2(3) of the 1999 Contract, according to which the contractual conditions attaching to the second and third stretches of the motorway were to be concluded at a later stage 'when the legal and factual conditions for continuation of the construction programme in respect of which a concession has been granted are met' should be treated as a reservation analogous to a reservation in the contract documents.

88. In my opinion, that cannot be the case for two reasons.

89. First, there were no original 'contract documents' resulting from a public procurement procedure, since none of the contracts in question were made subject to such a procedure.

90. Second, the right to use such a reservation as a basis for later material change must be regarded as an exception to the general principle that all the necessary elements resulting from a public procurement procedure should be reflected in the contract documents drawn up by the contracting public authority. In accordance with well-established case-law, exceptions are to be given a restrictive interpretation. It would be unacceptable if a contract, which was originally exempted from public procurement obligations, could later be 'complemented' by inserting a reservation that introduced a material change at a time when such a contract would otherwise be subject to public procurement obligations under EU law.

91. Thus, even if one construes the 1999 Contract as containing a reservation for future changes, that reservation cannot serve as the basis for exonerating the 2009 Contract from the requirement to comply with Directive 2004/18.

92. Finally, I do not consider that Italy can rely on Article 61 of Directive 2004/18 which allows changes to be made with regard to 'additional works'. The material change between 1999 and 2009 was not to the scope of the original works that were to be undertaken by the concessionaire, but to the time given for SAT to derive profit from them after their completion. Such a change does not fall within the scope of Article 61 ratione materiae.

93. In my view the change to the duration of the concession introduced by Article 4.1 of the 2009 Contract constituted a material change, as defined in pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, (41) irrespective of whether it is considered in relation to the 1999 Contract (as the Commission argues) or in relation to the 1969 Contract (the approach proposed by the Italian Government). The conclusion of the 2009 Contract without following a public procurement procedure thus constituted a violation of the equal treatment obligation in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 and the obligation to publish a contract notice laid down by Article 58 thereof.

Costs

94. Under Article 138(1) of the Court's Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since I consider that the Court should grant the form of order sought by the European Commission, the Italian Republic should pay the costs.

Conclusion

95. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I therefore propose that the Court should:

(1) Declare that the extension, from 2028 to 2046, to the term of the public works concession for the construction and management of the A12 motorway introduced in 2009 was a change to a material aspect of the 1999 Contract between the contracting authority (Azienda Nazionale Autonoma delle Strade) and the concessionaire (Società Autostrada Tirrenica); and that, by failing to subject that change to a public procurement procedure, the Italian Republic has infringed its obligations under Articles 2 and 58 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended;

(2) order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

– the European Commission, by A.C. Becker and by P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 14 November 2018,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Falck Rettungsdienste GmbH and Falck A/S, on the one hand, and Stadt Soligen (City of Solingen, Germany), on the other hand, concerning the direct award of the contract for 'Emergency Services in Solingen — Project No V16737/128', lots 1 and 2 ('the contract at issue'), without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union.

Legal context

3 Recitals 28, 117 and 118 of Directive 2014/24 read as follows:

'(28) This Directive should not apply to certain emergency services where they are performed by non-profit organisations or associations, since the particular nature of those organisations would be difficult to preserve if the service providers had to be chosen in accordance with the procedures set out in this Directive. However, the exclusion should not be extended beyond that strictly necessary. It should therefore be set out explicitly that patient transport ambulance services should not be excluded. In that context it is furthermore necessary to clarify that CPV [Common Procurement Vocabulary] Group 601 "Land Transport Services" does not cover ambulance services, to be found in CPV class 8514. It should therefore be clarified that services, which are covered by CPV code 85143000-3, consisting exclusively of patient transport ambulance services should be subject to the special regime set out for social and other specific services (the "light regime"). Consequently, mixed contracts for the provision of ambulance services in general would also be subject to the light regime if the value of the patient transport ambulance services were greater than the value of other ambulance services.

(117) Experience has shown that a series of other services, such as rescue services, firefighting services and prison services are normally only of cross-border interest as of such time as they acquire sufficient critical mass through their relatively high value. In so far as they are not excluded from the scope of this Directive, they should be included under the light regime. To the extent that their provision is actually based on contracts, other categories of services, such as government services or the provision of services to the community, they would normally only be likely to present a cross-border interest as from a threshold [EUR] 750 000 and should consequently only then be subject to the light regime.

(118) In order to ensure the continuity of public services, this Directive should allow that participation in procurement procedures for certain services in the fields of health, social and cultural services could be reserved for organisations which are based on employee ownership or active employee participation in their governance, and for existing organisations such as cooperatives to participate in delivering these services to end users. This provision is limited in scope exclusively to certain health, social and related services, certain education and training services, library, archive, museum and other cultural services, sporting services, and services for private households, and is not intended to cover any of the exclusions otherwise provided for by this Directive. Those services should only be covered by the "light regime".'

4 Under the heading, 'Specific exclusions for service contracts', Article 10(h) of the directive provides:

'This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts for:

(h) civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, and which are covered by CPV codes 75250000-3 [firefighting and rescue services], 75251000-0 [fire services], 75251100-1 [firefighting services], 75251110-4 [fire prevention services], 75251120-7 [forest fire-fighting services], 75252000-7 [emergency/rescue services], 75222000-8 [civil protection services], 98113100-9 [nuclear safety services] and 85143000-3 [ambulance services] except patient transport ambulance services;

…'

5 Chapter I on 'Social and other specific services' under Title III, headed 'Particular procurement regimes', of the directive comprises Articles 74 to 77.

6 Article 77 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Reserved contracts for certain services':

'1. Member States may provide that contracting authorities may reserve the right for organisations to participate in procedures for the award of public contracts exclusively for those health, social and cultural services referred to in Article 74, which are covered by CPV codes 75121000-0, 75122000-7, 75123000-4, 79622000-0, 79624000-4, 79625000-1, 80110000-8, 80300000-7, 80420000-4, 80430000-7, 80511000-9, 80520000-5, 80590000-6, from 85000000-9 to 85323000-9, 92500000-6, 92600000-7, 98133000-4, 98133110-8.

2. An organisation referred to in paragraph 1 shall fulfil all of the following conditions:

(a) its objective is the pursuit of a public service mission linked to the delivery of the services referred to in paragraph 1;

(b) profits are reinvested with a view to achieving the organisation's objective. Where profits are distributed or redistributed, this should be based on participatory considerations;

(c) the structures of management or ownership of the organisation performing the contract are based on employee ownership or participatory principles, or require the active participation of employees, users or stakeholders; and

(d) the organisation has not been awarded a contract for the services concerned by the contracting authority concerned pursuant to this Article within the past three years.

German law

7 Paragraph 107(1)(4) of the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law against Restrictions of Competition) of 26 June 2013, (BGB1. I, p. 1750), in the version applicable to the case in the main proceedings ('the GWB'), provides:

'General exclusions

1. This [fourth] part shall not apply to public procurement or the grant of concessions relating to:

(4) civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, and which are covered by CPV codes 75250000-3, 75251000-0, 75251100-1, 75251110-4, 75251120-7, 75252000-7, 75222000-8. 98113100-9 and 85143000-3, except for patient transport ambulance services. Non-profit organisations or associations within the meaning of this provision include, in particular, public aid associations which are recognised under federal or regional law as associations involved in civil and disaster protection.'

8 In accordance with Article 2(1) of the Gesetz über den Rettungsdienst sowie die Notfallrettung und den Krankentransport durch Unternehmer (Rettungsgesetz NRW — RettG NRW) (Law of the Land of North Rhine-Westphalia on emergency services as well as emergency rescue and patient transport by contractors) of 24 November 1992, emergency services cover emergency interventions, transport by ambulance and the care of a large numbers of sick or injured persons in the event of major disasters. According to the first sentence of Paragraph 2(2) of that law, emergency rescue interventions have the aim of carrying out measures in situ to save the lives of patients in an emergency situation, making them fit for transport, maintaining their fitness for transport, and preventing further harm, including transporting them in an emergency doctor's vehicle or by ambulance to an appropriate hospital where further care can be provided. According to Paragraph 2(3), the transport by ambulance is designed to provide appropriate care to sick or injured persons or other persons needing help who are not covered by Paragraph 2(2) of the same law, including transporting them, inter alia, by ambulance under supervision by qualified personnel.

9 Paragraph 26(1), second sentence, of the Zivilschutz- und Katastrophenhilfegesetz (Law on civil protection and disaster response), of 25 March 1997 (BGB1. I, p. 726), in the version applicable in the case in the main proceedings, ('the Law on civil protection'), provides that the Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund (Workers' Samaritan Federation), the Deutsche Lebensrettungsgesellschaft (German Life Saving Association), the Deutsche Rote Kreuz (German Red Cross), the Johanniter-Unfall-Hilfe (St. John's Accident Assistance) and the Malteser-Hilfsdienst (Maltese Aid Service) are particularly suitable for collaboration in fulfilling the tasks under that legislation.

10 The first sentence of Paragraph 18(1) and Paragraph 18(2) of the Gesetz über den Brandschutz, die Hilfeleistung und den Katastrophenschutz (Law on protection from fire, aid and civil defence) of 17 December 2015 ('the Law on fire protection') reads as follows:

'(1) Private associations for public aid help with accidents and public emergencies, major operations and disasters, if they have declared to the highest supervisory authority their readiness to cooperate and that authority has determined their general suitability for cooperation and there is a need for such cooperation (recognised aid associations). …

2. For the organisations listed in the second sentence of Paragraph 26(1) of the [Law on civil protection] no declaration of willingness to cooperate or general suitability is required.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11 The City of Solingen decided, in March 2016, to renew the award of the contract for emergency services for a period of five years. The planned contract concerned in particular the use of municipal ambulances, first, for emergency rescue, with the care and treatment of emergency patients by emergency worker assisted by a paramedic as the primary task, and, second, the transport by ambulance, the primary task being the care of patients by a paramedic assisted by medical assistant.

12 The City of Solingen did not publish a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union. Instead, on 11 May 2016, it invited four public aid associations, including the three parties intervening before the referring court, to submit a tender.

13 After tenders were received, Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund Regionalverband Bergisch Land eV and Malteser Hilfsdienst eV were each awarded one of the two lots comprising the contract at issue.

14 Falck Rettungsdienste, a provider of emergency and health services, and the Falck A/S Group, to which Falck Rettungsdienste belongs (together ‘Falck and Others’) criticise the City of Solingen for having awarded the contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union. Falck and Others therefore lodged, before the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Public Procurement Tribunal for the Rhineland, Germany), an action seeking a declaration that the de facto award breached their rights and that the City of Solingen was required, if it maintained its intention to award the contract at issue, to award it upon conclusion of a public procurement procedure that complied with EU law.

15 By decision of 19 August 2016, that tribunal rejected the action as inadmissible.

16 Falck and Others brought an appeal against the decision of the Public Procurement Tribunal for the Rhineland before the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany). They reproach the tribunal for having failed to interpret the first sentence of Paragraph 107(1)(4) of the GWB, the wording of all points of which is consonant with Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, consistently with that directive.

17 Before the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf), Falck and Others submit that the rescue services at issue in the main proceedings do not constitute services of danger prevention. The concept of ‘danger prevention’ refers only to prevention of danger to large groups of people in extreme situations with the result that it does not have an independent meaning and that it does not cover the protection against danger to life and health of individuals. It follows, according to Falck and Others, that transport by qualified ambulance, which includes, in addition to the provision of transport, care by a paramedic assisted by an medical assistant (‘transport by qualified ambulance’), is not covered by the exclusion laid down in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 because it constitutes merely a patient transport ambulance service.

18 Furthermore, according to Falck and Others, the national legislature was not entitled to decide that the three intervening parties before the referring court are non-profit organisations or associations merely because they are recognised in national law as public aid associations, in accordance with the second sentence of Paragraph 107(1)(4) of the GWB. The conditions under EU law for classification as a ‘non-profit organisation’ are stricter, having regard to the judgments of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 ‘Spezzino’ and Others (C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440) and of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others (C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56) or, at the very least, Article 77(1) of Directive 2014/24.

19 The referring court considers that the appeal brought by Falck and Others could be upheld if at least one of the conditions required for the exclusion laid down in Paragraph 107(1)(4) of the GWB was not satisfied. It was therefore necessary to determine, first, whether the contract at issue covers danger prevention services, secondly, from what date the conditions for the status of non-profit organisation or association are deemed to be satisfied and, thirdly, the nature of the services covered by the phrase ‘patient transport ambulance services’ used in that provision.

20 According to the referring court, while civil defence covers unforeseeable large-scale emergencies during peacetime, the concept of civil protection relates to the protection of the civilian population during wartime. The concept of ‘danger prevention services’ could however include services for the prevention of danger to the health and life of individuals, where those services are mobilised against an imminent danger from normal risks such as fire, illness or accidents. That interpretation of the concept of ‘danger prevention’ is more attractive than the restrictive notion contended for by Falck and Others which does not confer any independent regulatory content upon it, since it may be confused with the concept of ‘civil defence’ and also ‘civil protection’.

21 Furthermore, the objective of the exclusion laid down in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, as the first sentence of recital 28 of the directive clarifies, is to enable non-profit organisations to continue to work in the emergency services sector for the well-being of citizens without the risk of being excluded from the market because the competition from commercial companies is too great. However, since non-profit organisations or associations act essentially in the area of daily emergency services for individuals, that exclusion would not achieve its aim if it applied only to services for the prevention of major disasters.

22 The referring court also wonders whether the rule laid down in the second sentence of Paragraph 107(1)(4) of the GWB is compatible with the concept of non-profit organisations or associations contained in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 to the extent that the legal recognition, in national law, of the status of an organisation for civil protection and civil defence does not necessarily depend on whether the organisation is a non-profit one.

23 In that regard, the referring court has doubts as to the submission made by Falck and Others that the non-profit organisation must satisfy other conditions set out in Article 77(2) of Directive 2014/24, or even in the judgments of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others (C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440) and of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others (C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56).

24 The referring court also observes that danger prevention services, covered by CPV code 85143000-3 (ambulance services), are covered by the exclusion laid down in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 ('the exclusion'), with the exception of 'patient transport ambulance services' ('the exception to the exclusion'). In that regard, the question arises as to whether this exception to the exclusion covers only the transport of a patient in an ambulance without any medical care, or whether it also covers transport by qualified ambulance, where the patient receives medical assistance.

25 In those circumstances, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Do the care and treatment of emergency patients in an ambulance by an emergency worker/paramedic, on the one hand, and the care and treatment of patients in a patient transport ambulance by a paramedic/medical assistant, on the other hand, constitute "civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services" within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive [2014/24] which come under CPV codes 75252000-7 (rescue services) and 85143000-3 (ambulance services)?

(2) Can Article 10(h) of Directive [2014/24] be understood as meaning that "non-profit organisations or associations" include, in particular, aid organisations that are recognised under national law as civil defence and civil protection organisations?

(3) Are "non-profit organisations or associations" within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive [2014/24] those whose mission is fulfilled in the achievement of tasks in the public good, which do not operate with a view to making a profit and which reinvest any profits in order to realise the mission of the organisation?

(4) Is the transport of a patient in an ambulance while care is provided by a paramedic/medical assistant (so-called transport by qualified ambulance) a "patient transport ambulance service" within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive [2014/24], which is not covered by the exclusion and to which Directive [2014/24] applies?'

Consideration of the questions referred

The first and fourth questions

26 As a preliminary matter, it is appropriate to underline, as the referring court observes, that the care of patients in an emergency situation in a rescue vehicle by an emergency worker/paramedic and the transport by qualified ambulance do not constitute either 'civil defence services' or 'civil protection services'.

27 Therefore, the referring court must be regarded as asking, by its first and fourth questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, in essence, whether Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that, first, the care of patients in an emergency situation in a rescue vehicle by an emergency worker/paramedic and, second, transport by qualified ambulance fall within the concept of 'danger prevention services' and the CPV codes 75252000-7 (emergency/rescue services) and 85143000-3 (ambulance services) respectively and, therefore, that they are excluded from the field of application of that directive, or whether those services are ‘patient transport ambulance services’, which are subject, on that basis, to a special regime established for social and other specific services.

28 It must be observed that Directive 2014/24 does not define the concept of ‘danger prevention’ and that, according to established case-law, it follows from the need for the uniform application of EU law and from the principle of equality that the terms of a provision of EU law which makes no express reference to the law of the Member States for the purpose of determining its meaning and scope must normally be given an autonomous and uniform interpretation throughout the European Union, having regard to the context of the provision and the objective pursued by the legislation in question (see, inter alia, judgments of 18 January 1984, Ekro, 327/82, EU:C:1984:11, paragraph 11, and of 19 September 2000, Linster, C-287/98, EU:C:2000:468, paragraph 43).

29 While it is true that the concepts of ‘civil protection’ and ‘civil defence’ refer to situations in which it is necessary to respond to mass harm, such as, for example, an earthquake, a tsunami or even a war, it does not necessarily follow that the concept of ‘danger prevention’, which is also referred to in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, must have such a collective dimension.

30 It follows from both a literal and contextual interpretation of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 that ‘danger prevention’ covers both collective and individual risks.

31 First, the wording of that provision refers to various CPV codes referring to dangers irrespective of whether they are collective or individual. That is the case, inter alia, as regards CPV codes 75250000-3 (firefighting and rescue services), 75251000-0 (fire services), 75251100-1 (firefighting services), 75251110-4 (fire prevention services) and, more specifically, having regard to the subject matter of the case in the main proceedings, codes 75252000-7 (emergency/rescue services) and 85143000-3 (ambulance services).

32 Secondly, to require danger prevention to have a collective dimension would prevent that concept having any independent content, since it would be systematically confused with either civil protection or civil defence. Where a provision of EU law is open to several interpretations, preference must be given to that interpretation which ensures that the provision retains its effectiveness (judgment of 24 February 2000, Commission v France, C-434/97, EU:C:2000:98, paragraph 21).

33 Thirdly, having regard to the context, that interpretation of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 is confirmed by recital 28 thereof. The first sentence of that recital states that ‘this directive should not apply to certain emergency services where they are performed by non-profit organisations or associations, since the particular nature of those organisations would be difficult to preserve if the service providers had to be chosen in accordance with the procedures set out in this directive’. In that regard, it must be emphasised that the exclusion of the application of that directive is not restricted only to emergency services that are provided when collective danger arises. Furthermore, it must be observed, as the order for reference states, that the primary activity carried out by the public aid associations in question in the main proceedings relate to emergency services which, as a general rule, deal with individual and daily interventions. It is precisely as a result of the experience thus acquired by performing those day-to-day emergency services that those non-profit organisations or associations are in the position, according to the referring court, of being operational when they are required to provide ‘civil protection’ and ‘civil defence’ services.

34 Fourthly, and as the German Government submitted in its written observations, if danger prevention and, hence, the general exclusion referred to in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, was limited to emergency interventions in extreme situations, the EU legislature would not have cited solely transport by ambulance in the exception from the exclusion. In that regard, as the Advocate General noted in point 48 of his Opinion, it must be observed that if the EU legislature judged it useful to make reference to ‘patient transport ambulance services’, it was because those services would otherwise have been construed as being covered by the exclusion laid down in that provision.

35 It follows that the objective referred to in recital 28 of Directive 2014/24 would not be achieved if the concept of ‘danger prevention’ must be understood as covering only the prevention of collective danger.

36 Having regard to all the foregoing considerations, it must be concluded that, both the care of patients in an emergency situation in a rescue vehicle by an emergency worker/paramedic and transport by qualified ambulance fall within the concept of ‘danger prevention’, for the purposes of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24.

37 It remains to be determined whether both of those services are covered by one of the CPV codes listed in that provision.

38 As a preliminary matter, it is necessary to refer to the structure of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 which contains an exclusion and an exception to the exclusion. That provision excludes from the scope of the usual rules on public procurement, public contracts for services relating to civil defence, civil protection and danger prevention, subject to two conditions, namely that those services correspond to the CPV codes referred to in that provision and that they are provided by non-profit organisations or associations. That exclusion from the application of the rules on public procurement contains an exception, however, in that it does not apply to patient transport ambulance services, which are covered by the simplified regime for public procurement laid down in Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24.

39 The objective of the exclusion is, as is clear from recital 28 of the directive, to preserve the particular nature of non-profit organisations or associations by avoiding applying the procedures set out in the directive to them. That said, the same recital states that that exclusion must not be extended beyond what is strictly necessary.

40 In that context, and as the Advocate General indicated, in essence, in point 64 of his Opinion, there is no doubt that the care of patients in an emergency situation, carried out moreover in a rescue vehicle by an emergency worker/paramedic is covered by CPV code 75252000-7 (rescue services).

41 It is therefore necessary to assess whether transport by qualified ambulance is also capable of being covered by the same code or by CPV code 85143000-3 (ambulance services).

42 In that regard, from the formulation of the first question referred it seems that transport by qualified ambulance does not correspond to the transport of patients in emergency situations. As the Advocate General observes in point 33 of his Opinion, the referring court has distinguished between the care of patients in emergency situations by a rescue vehicle, and the care of patients in an ambulance by a paramedic/medical assistant. It must therefore be held that the latter service, which the referring court classifies as transport by qualified ambulance, is not carried out by means of a rescue vehicle, with all the specialised medical equipment that that implies, but by means of an ambulance which may only be a mere transport vehicle.

43 It is clear from Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, read in the light of recital 28 thereof, that the exclusion from the public procurement rules laid down in that provision in favour of danger prevention services only benefits certain emergency services provided by non-profit organisations or associations and that it must not go beyond what is strictly necessary.

44 It follows that the inapplicability of the public procurement rules laid down in Article 10(h) of that directive is inextricably linked to the existence of an emergency service.

45 It follows that the presence of qualified personnel on board an ambulance cannot suffice to establish, in itself, the existence of an ambulance service covered by CPV code 85143000-3.

46 An emergency may, despite everything, be shown to exist, at least potentially, where it is necessary to transport a patient whose state of health is at risk of deterioration during that transport. It is only in those circumstances that transport by qualified ambulance could fall within the scope of the exclusion from the application of the public procurement rules laid down in Article 10(h) of directive 2014/24.

47 In that regard, it must be emphasised that, at the hearing before the Court, both the City of Solingen and the German Government explained, in essence, that transport by qualified ambulance is characterised by the fact that, due to the state of the patient’s health, an emergency situation could arise at any time in the transport vehicle.

48 It is therefore on the ground that there is a risk of deterioration in the state of the patient's health during his transport that personnel properly trained in first aid must be on board that vehicle in order to be able to care for the patient and, if necessary, provide the urgent medical care that he may require.

49 It is necessary, in addition, to clarify that it must be possible for the risk of deterioration in the patient's state of health to be, in principle, objectively assessed.

50 It follows that transport by qualified ambulance is only capable of constituting an 'ambulance service' covered by CPV code 85143000-3, within Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, where, first, it is in fact undertaken by personnel properly trained in first aid and, second, it is provided to a patient whose state of health is at risk of deterioration during that transport.

51 Therefore, the answer to the first and fourth questions is that Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that the exclusion from the application of the public procurement rules that it lays down, covers the care of patients in an emergency situation in a rescue vehicle by an emergency worker/paramedic, covered by CPV code 75252000-7 (rescue services) and transport by qualified ambulance covered by CPV code 85143000-3 (ambulance services), provided that, as regards transport by qualified ambulance, it is in fact undertaken by personnel properly trained in first aid and, second, it is provided to a patient whose state of health is at risk of deterioration during that transport.

The second and third questions

52 By its second and third questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning, first, that it precludes public aid associations recognised in national law as civil protection and defence organisations from being regarded as 'non-profit organisations or associations', within the meaning of that provision, in so far as, under national law, recognition as having public aid association status is not subject to not having a profit-making purpose and, second, the organisations and associations whose purpose is to undertake social tasks, which have no commercial purpose and which reinvest any profits in order to achieve the objective of that organisation or association constitute 'non-profit organisations or associations' within the meaning of that provision.

53 In the first place, it suffices to observe that it is clear from the order for reference itself that the legal recognition in German law, on the basis of the first sentence of Paragraph 107(1)(4), second sentence, of the GWB, of the status of a civil protection and defence organisation does not necessarily depend upon whether the organisation concerned is a non-profit organisation.

54 Paragraph 26(1), second sentence, of the Law on civil protection merely affirms that the Workers' Samaritan Federation, the German Life Saving Association, the German Red Cross, St. John's Accident Assistance and the Maltese Aid Service are particularly suitable for collaboration in fulfilling the tasks under that legislation. The certificate of suitability thus issued to those five associations, in accordance with Paragraph 18(2) of the Law on fire protection, recognises their general suitability to participate in rescue operations or assist in the event of public accidents or emergencies, mass interventions or disasters.

55 It appears, moreover, that neither Paragraph 26(1), second sentence, of the Law on civil protection, nor Paragraph 18(2) of the Law on fire protection indicates whether, and to what extent, the not-for-profit aim of the service is to be taken into account or whether it is a condition for the recognition of status as a public aid association.

56 In those circumstances, the attribution under German law of the status of 'civil protection and civil defence organisation' cannot guarantee with certainty that the beneficiary entities of that status do not pursue a profit-making purpose.

57 It should however be noted that, in its written observations, Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund Regionalverband Bergisch-Land (the Bergisch-Land Regional Workers' Samaritan Federation) submitted that, on pain of having its status as a non-profit organisation withdrawn, a person must, pursuant to Paragraph 52 of the Abgabenordnung (Tax Code), constantly carry out an activity intended to bring about, in a disinterested way, material, spiritual or moral benefits for the community.

58 In that regard, it is for the referring court to determine whether Paragraph 107(1)(4), second sentence, of the GWB, read in conjunction with Paragraph 52 of the Tax Code, may be interpreted consistently with the requirements flowing from Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24.

59 In the second place, organisations and associations whose purpose is to undertake social tasks, which have no commercial purpose and which reinvest any profits in order to achieve the objective of that organisation or association constitute ‘non-profit organisations or associations’, within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24.

60 In that regard, it must be held, as the Advocate General observed in points 74 to 77 of his Opinion, that non-profit organisations or associations referred to in recital 28 of Directive 2014/24 are not required also to satisfy the conditions laid down in Article 77(2) of that directive. There is no equivalence between, on the one hand, those organisations and associations referred to in recital 28 and, on the other hand, the ‘organisations which are based on employee ownership or active employee participation in their governance’ and ‘existing organisations such as cooperatives’, which are referred to in recital 118 of the same directive. Therefore, there also cannot be equivalence between Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, which excludes certain activities of non-profit organisations or associations from the scope of that directive, and Article 77 of the directive, which subjects certain activities of organisations based on employee ownership or employee participation in the organisation’s governance and existing organisations, such as cooperatives, to the light regime laid down in Articles 74 to 77 of Directive 2014/24.

61 Consequently, the answer to the second and third questions is that Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning, first, that it precludes public aid associations recognised in national law as civil protection and defence associations from being regarded as ‘non-profit organisations or associations’, within the meaning of that provision, in so far as, under national law, recognition as having public aid association status is not subject to not having a profit-making purpose and, second, that organisations or associations whose purpose is to undertake social tasks, which have no commercial purpose and which reinvest any profits in order to achieve the objective of that organisation or association constitute ‘non-profit organisations or associations’ within the meaning of that provision.

Costs

62 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 10(h) of Directive 2004/24/EU, of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, must be interpreted as meaning that the exclusion from the application of the public procurement rules that it lays down, covers the care of patients in an emergency situation in a rescue vehicle by an emergency worker/paramedic, covered by CPV [Common Procurement Vocabulary] code 75252000-7 (rescue services) and transport by qualified ambulance, which comprises, in addition to the provision of transport, the care of patients in an ambulance by a paramedic assisted by a medical assistant, covered by CPV code 85143000-3 (ambulance services), provided that, as regards transport by qualified ambulance, it is in fact undertaken by personnel properly trained in first aid and, second, it is provided to a patient whose state of health is at risk of deterioration during that transport.

2. Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning, first, that it precludes public aid associations recognised in national law as civil protection and defence associations from being regarded as ‘non-profit organisations or associations’, within the meaning of that provision, in so far as, under national law, recognition as having public aid association status is not subject to not having a profit-making purpose and, second, that organisations or associations whose purpose is to undertake social tasks, which have no commercial purpose and which reinvest any profits in order to achieve the objective of that organisation or association constitute 'non-profit organisations or associations' within the meaning of that provision.

Case C-465/17

Falck Rettungsdienste GmbH,

Falck A/S

v

Stadt Solingen,

Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund Regionalverband Bergisch Land e.V.,

Malteser Hilfsdienst e.V.,

Deutsches Rotes Kreuz, Kreisverband Solingen

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2014/24/EU — Specific exclusions relating to service contracts — Civil defence, civil protection and danger prevention services — Non-profit organisations or associations — Ambulance services)

1. According to Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24/EU, (2) that directive is not to apply to public contracts for certain civil defence, civil protection and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations.

2. This reference for a preliminary ruling seeks to ascertain whether that exclusion includes ‘ambulance services’ and what interpretation is to be given to the concept of ‘non-profit organisations or associations’. The issue arises as to whether the laws of the Member States are to be taken into account in defining the meaning of that expression.

I. Legislative framework

A. EU law

1. Directive 2014/24

3. Recitals 28 and 118 of that directive read as follows:

‘(28) This Directive should not apply to certain emergency services where they are performed by non-profit organisations or associations, since the particular nature of those organisations would be difficult to preserve if the service providers had to be chosen in accordance with the procedures set out in this Directive. However, that exclusion should not be extended beyond that strictly necessary. It should therefore be set out explicitly that patient transport ambulance services should not be excluded. In that context it is furthermore necessary to clarify that CPV [Common Procurement Vocabulary] Group 601 “Land Transport Services” does not cover ambulance services, to be found in CPV class 8514. It should therefore be clarified that services, which are covered by CPV code 85143000-3, consisting exclusively of patient transport ambulance services, should be subject to the special regime set out for social and other specific services (the “light regime”). Consequently, mixed contracts for the provision of ambulance services in general would also be subject to the light regime if the value of the patient transport ambulance services were greater than the value of other ambulance services.

(118) In order to ensure the continuity of public services, this Directive should allow that participation in procurement procedures for certain services in the fields of health, social and cultural services could be reserved for organisations which are based on employee ownership or active employee participation in their governance, and for existing organisations such as cooperatives to participate in delivering these services to end users. This provision is limited in scope exclusively to certain health, social and related services, certain education and training services, library, archive, museum and other cultural services, sporting services, and services for private households, and is not intended to cover any of the exclusions otherwise provided for by this Directive. Those services should only be covered by the light regime.’

4. In accordance with Article 10, Directive 2014/24 is not to apply to public service contracts for:

(h) civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services (3) that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, and which are covered by CPV codes 75250000-3, 75251000-0, 75251100-1, 75251110-4, 75251120-7, 75252000-7, 75222000-8, 98113100-9 and 85143000-3, except patient transport ambulance services;

…’

5. Article 76 provides:

‘1. Member States shall put in place national rules for the award of contracts subject to this Chapter in order to ensure contracting authorities comply with the principles of transparency and equal treatment of economic operators. Member States are free to determine the procedural rules applicable as long as such rules allow contracting authorities to take into account the specificities of the services in question.

2. Member States shall ensure that contracting authorities may take into account the need to ensure quality, continuity, accessibility, affordability, availability and comprehensiveness of the services, the specific needs of different categories of users, including disadvantaged and vulnerable groups, the involvement and empowerment of users and innovation. Member States may also provide that the choice of the service provider shall be made on the basis of the tender presenting the best price-quality ratio, taking into account quality and sustainability criteria for social services.’

6. Article 77 provides:

‘1. Member States may provide that contracting authorities may reserve the right for organisations to participate in procedures for the award of public contracts exclusively for those health, social and cultural services referred to in Article 74, which are covered by CPV codes 75121000-0, 75122000-7, 75123000-4, 79622000-0, 79624000-4, 79625000-1, 80110000-8, 80300000-7, 80420000-4, 80430000-7, 80511000-9, 80520000-5, 80590000-6, from 85000000-9 to 85323000-9, 92500000-6, 92600000-7, 98133000-4 and 98133110-8.

2. An organisation referred to in paragraph 1 shall fulfil all of the following conditions:

(a) its objective is the pursuit of a public service mission linked to the delivery of the services referred to in paragraph 1;

(b) profits are reinvested with a view to achieving the organisation's objective. Where profits are distributed or redistributed, this should be based on participatory considerations;

(c) the structures of management or ownership of the organisation performing the contract are based on employee ownership or participatory principles, or require the active participation of employees, users or stakeholders; and

(d) the organisation has not been awarded a contract for the services concerned by the contracting authority concerned pursuant to this Article within the past three years.

B. National law

7. In accordance with Paragraph 107(1), point 4, first part, of the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen, (4) that Law is not to apply to the award of contracts for civil defence, civil protection and danger prevention services that are provided by non-profit organisations or associations and that are covered by CPV codes 7520000-3, 75251000-0, 75251100-1, 75251110-4, 75251120-7, 75252000-7, 75222000-8, 98113100-9 and 85143000-3, except patient transport ambulance services.

8. By that provision, the German legislature transposed into its national law Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, but it added a second part worded as follows:

'[N]on-profit organisations or associations within the meaning of this point shall be, in particular, aid organisations recognised as civil defence and civil protection organisations under federal or Land law'.

9. According to Paragraph 2(1) of the Gesetz über den Rettungsdienst sowie die Notfallrettung und den Krankentransport durch Unternehmer, (5) emergency medical services include emergency response, patient transport and the provision of care to large numbers of sick and injured in the event of exceptional disasters.

10. The first sentence of Paragraph 2(2) of the RettG NRW states that the emergency response service has the task of performing life-saving measures on emergency patients at the site of an emergency and, while making and keeping them fit to be transported and preventing any further harm to them, transporting them by emergency doctor's vehicle or ambulance to a hospital suitable for the provision of further care.

11. Pursuant to Paragraph 2(3) of the RettG NRW, the patient transport service has the task of providing professional help to the sick and injured or other persons in need of help who are not covered by subparagraph 2 and transporting them by ambulance under the care of medically qualified personnel.

12. The second sentence of Paragraph 26(1) of the Zivilschutz- und Katastrophenhilfegesetz (6) states that organisations eligible to work alongside their public-sector counterparts in performing the tasks provided for in that Law include in particular the Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund, the Deutsche Lebensrettungsgesellschaft, the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz (German Red Cross), the Johanniter-Unfall-Hilfe and the Malteser-Hilfsdienst.

13. Paragraph 18(1), first sentence, and (2) of the Gesetz über den Brandschutz, die Hilfeleistung und den Katastrophenschutz (7) provides:

'1. Private aid organisations shall lend assistance in the event of accidents and public emergencies, major relief operations and disasters, if they have registered their willingness to work with the public services with the highest supervisory authority and the latter has recognised both their eligibility to do so and the need for their assistance (recognised aid organisations). …

2. In the case of the organisations referred to in the second sentence of Paragraph 26(1) of the [ZSKG] …, a registration of willingness to work alongside the public services and a general recognition of eligibility to do so shall not be required.'

II. Facts and questions referred

14. In March 2016, the City of Solingen (Germany) decided to award a new five-year contract for the provision of municipal emergency services. (8) Instead of publishing the contract notice, the municipal body invited tenders from four aid organisations. Finally, it awarded two of the tenderers (Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund and Malteser Hilfdienst) one each of the two lots into which the contract was divided.

15. Falck Rettungsdienste and Falck, undertakings providing emergency response and patient care services, submitted before the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Public Procurement Tribunal for the Rhineland, Germany) an objection to the effect that the aforementioned award should have complied with the public procurement procedures under EU law.

16. The Tribunal dismissed the challenge on 19 August 2016, on the ground that Paragraph 107(1), point 4, of the GWB was applicable.

17. That decision was appealed to the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany), which has referred to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling the following questions:

‘(1) Do the care and treatment of emergency patients in an ambulance by an emergency worker/paramedic and the care and treatment of patients in a patient transport ambulance by a paramedic/medical assistant constitute “civil defence, civil protection, and danger prevention services” within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 which come under CPV codes 75252000-7 (rescue services) and 85143000-3 (ambulance services)?

(2) Can Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 be understood as meaning that “non-profit organisations or associations” include, in particular, aid organisations that are recognised under national law as civil defence and civil protection organisations?

(3) Are “non-profit organisations or associations” within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 those whose mission is fulfilled in the achievement of tasks in the public good, which do not operate with a view to making a profit and which reinvest any profits in order to realise the mission of the organisation?

(4) Is the transport of a patient in an ambulance while care is provided by a paramedic/medical assistant (so-called qualified patient transport) a “patient transport ambulance service” within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, which is not covered by the exclusion and to which Directive 2014/24 applies?’

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice and positions of the parties

18. The reference for a preliminary ruling was registered at the Court of Justice on 2 August 2017. Written observations have been lodged by Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund, Falck Rettungsdienste, Malteser Hilfsdienst, the German Red Cross, the City of Solingen, the German, Norwegian and Romanian Governments and the Commission. With the exception of the Norwegian and Romanian Governments, all the parties attended the public hearing held on 5 September 2018.

19. Falck Rettungsdienste submits as a preliminary point that Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 is contrary to primary law, inasmuch as it establishes an exclusion based on a personal rather than a material criterion. That provision must therefore be interpreted in such a way as to bring it into line with the rules of EU law, and so as to clarify the conditions which primary law attaches to the direct award of contracts to non-profit associations.

20. In the view of Falck Rettungsdienste:

— The first question must be answered in the negative. It advocates a restrictive interpretation of the exclusion on the basis of which danger prevention would be confined to the largest and most serious emergencies.

— The second question must also be answered in the negative, since, under German law, recognition of the status of civil protection and civil defence organisations is not subject to their being non-profit-making.

— The third question also warrants an answer in the negative, since the conditions which the national legislation attaches to the definition of an organisation as non-profit-making are not consistent with the case-law of the Court of Justice.

— The fourth question must be answered in the affirmative, as is clear from the wording of Article 10(h) and recital 28 of Directive 2014/24.

21. The City of Solingen:

— Argues, in relation to the first question, that ‘danger prevention’ should be interpreted as including any act aimed at preventing an individual from being exposed to risk and/or harm, which would include transport by qualified ambulance.

— Submits, in connection with the second question, that the German legislature’s reference to public aid associations is simply an ‘instance’ which does not prevent other bodies from asserting their status as ‘non-profit organisations’ within the meaning of Directive 2014/24.

— Construes that term, in response now to the third question, as requiring only the disinterested performance of public-service tasks.

— Contends that the answer to the fourth question should be that the exception to the exclusion in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 does not include transport by qualified ambulance. In particular, emergency response and qualified transport form an organisational unit that calls for uniform treatment.

22. Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund shares, in essence, the position adopted by the City of Solingen with respect to the first, third and fourth questions. As regards the second question, it submits that the national legislature used the discretion available to it in transposing the concept of non-profit organisation. The same arguments are advanced by Malteser Hilfdienst.

23. The German Red Cross, which begins by expressing its disagreement with the preliminary observations made by Falck Rettungsdienste, adopts a position similar to that of City of Solingen in relation to the first and third questions. On the second question, it, like Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund, contends that the Member States have some discretion in defining non-profit organisations. In connection with the fourth question, it submits that qualified patient transport is a crucial component not only of civil defence and civil protection but also of danger prevention. In its view, such transport falls within the scope ratione materiae of the exclusion at issue.

24. In the view of the German Government:

— As regards the first question, danger prevention should be interpreted extensively so as to include assistance to patients involved in individual accidents and emergencies, as compared with situations of large-scale damage that are more typical of civil defence and civil protection.

— On the second question, it shares the position of the City of Solingen, and points out the fact that the concept of non-profit organisation must be understood in the light of recital 28 of Directive 2014/24. The ‘particular nature’ of such organisations can be determined only within the legal and material framework of the Member State in which they perform their tasks.

— As for the third question, it submits that the national legislature has defined the non-profit nature of organisations as lying, on the one hand, in the fact that they act, in the interests of the well-being and security of citizens, in the areas of non-police damage prevention, civil defence and civil protection, and, on the other hand, in the fact that many of their tasks are entrusted to volunteers; the consequences of this approach, it submits, are no different from those that would follow from applying different or additional criteria.

— The fourth question warrants an answer in the negative, on account of the difference between basic patient transport and transport by qualified ambulance.

25. The Norwegian Government:

— Submits that damage prevention services are not confined to those provided in the event of major disasters but include situations such as that described by the referring court in the first question, which, it argues, in answer to the fourth question, does not constitute a ‘patient transport ambulance service’.

— On the second and third questions, it contends that the concept of non-profit organisation warrants an independent interpretation and is capable of including an organisation recognised as such by national law, in so far as the latter is consistent with that interpretation. Nonetheless, the assessment as to whether an organisation is non-profit-making varies according to the divergent traditions of the Member States, to which it is appropriate in principle to entrust such an assessment, rather than to impose on them a definition which goes beyond that which would follow from a ‘natural interpretation’ of the directive. On a natural interpretation, non-profit organisations perform public-service tasks, have no commercial purpose and reinvest any profits they generate in pursuit of the objectives they serve.

26. The Romanian Government has commented only on the first and fourth questions, which it has examined jointly. In its opinion, civil defence, civil protection and danger prevention services encompass assistance both to groups of individuals in extreme situations and to individuals under threat to life or health from common dangers. An interpretation of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 in the light of recital 28 thereof calls for emphasis to be placed on the concept of exclusive transport rather than on the type of response personnel or on the care received during transport.

27. From that point of view, ambulance services include both emergency medical response and non-emergency unassisted patient transport. In the first category, there is no difference between transport by ambulance in the charge of an emergency doctor and paramedic and transport by ambulance in the care of a paramedic and a medical assistant, since both services exhibit features of emergency medical response and are exclusively concerned with the end objective of preventing danger. The second category, on the other hand, consists of services which, being provided by ambulances that are not equipped for emergency medical intervention and are driver-only operated, such that they do not fall within the scope of civil defence, civil protection or danger prevention.

28. According to the Commission:

— In relation to the first question, danger prevention is not confined to exceptional emergencies or dangers affecting large groups of people.

— The second and third questions warrant a joint examination that supports the inference of answers in the negative and affirmative respectively. Non-profit organisations cannot be regarded as having to be ones recognised by national law as having public service status, but are, rather, those which exhibit the characteristics listed in the third question raised by the referring court.

— On the fourth question, the difference between the exclusion and the exception to that exclusion in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 lies in whether the contract provides only for patient transport or also for other services such as medical assistance during transport. The distinction must be drawn at the time of selecting the procurement procedure rather than in the context of an emergency or in the course of transporting the patient.

IV. Analysis

29. The questions referred by the national court seek, in essence, to ascertain what conditions an ambulance service must fulfil in order to be included in or excluded from the scope of Directive 2014/24. Those conditions concern: (a) the nature of that service itself, viewed objectively; and (b) a specific personal or subjective feature of the provider of the service, which must be a non-profit organisation or association.

30. The first and fourth questions raised by the referring court have to do with the objective activity of the ambulance service. In principle, such a service will be excluded from the scope of Directive 2014/24 only if, being amenable to classification in the category of 'civil defence, civil protection and danger prevention services', it is not simply a 'patient transport ambulance service'. The latter services make up the exception to the exclusion and, as such, are subject to the general public procurement rules.

31. The second and third questions relate to the subjective status of the ambulance service provider, which has to be a 'non-profit organisation or association'. This issue, in particular, is whether this is an independent concept of EU law.

A. The ambulance service in the context of Directive 2014/24 (first and fourth questions)

32. The referring court wishes to ascertain whether the following two specific services fall within the category of 'civil defence, civil protection and danger prevention services':

— Emergency care and treatment of patients who have been involved in an accident or similar event ('Notfallpatienten'), which is provided in an emergency ambulance ('Rettungswagen') 'by an emergency worker/paramedic'.

— Patient care and treatment provided in a patient transport ambulance ('Krankentransportwagen') by a paramedic/medical assistant'.

33. Although both services provide care and treatment to patients, they differ in relation to the criterion of 'emergency', which, from the point of view of both the characteristics of the vehicle and the situation of the person being attended to, is met only in the context of the former. In the case of the former service, therefore, the ambulance is [literally] a 'rescue vehicle', while, in the case of the latter, it is only a 'transport' vehicle.

34. The referring court is clear that the aforementioned services 'are neither civil defence nor civil protection' services. (9) In its view, which is shared by those who have participated in the proceedings, those services might, 'at most', (10) come under the heading of 'danger prevention'.

35. Directive 2014/24 does not define 'danger prevention', nor does it expressly refer to the right of Member States to determine its meaning. The view must therefore be taken, in accordance with the case-law of the Court of Justice, that that concept calls for an independent interpretation that is uniform throughout the European Union. (11)

36. In order to find the independent meaning that must be given to danger prevention, it is appropriate to start with the literal wording of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24. In this regard, mention must almost inevitably be made of Article 196 TFEU, which, as Falck Rettungsdienste has submitted, uses the term 'risk prevention' in the context of 'civil protection' to refer to 'natural or man-made disasters'. (12) This would support the idea that that term cannot accommodate emergency services provided in situations involving danger to individuals.

37. It is my view, however, that, just as, in Article 196 TFEU, danger prevention is associated with civil protection, (13) Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 employs that term in reference to an activity with connotations of its own which are not necessarily identifiable with civil protection.

38. After all, in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, danger prevention appears to be different from civil protection and civil defence and therefore falls to be interpreted as an independent activity. As the referring court points out, if this were not the case, danger prevention services would always be civil defence or civil protection services. (14)

39. In fact, the conceptual autonomy of danger prevention would stand in opposition to civil protection and civil defence as activities geared towards the management of disasters affecting large numbers of people. In contrast to such situations of collective impact, the danger prevention to which Directive 2014/24 relates would be that in which individuals are in a situation of personal danger.

40. There is, however, a problem with the interpretation thus advocated by the referring court. The term 'prevention' in its most common sense, as Falck Rettungsdienste has emphasised, (15) denotes the anticipation of a risk or danger. It therefore implies protection which is preventive rather than reactive to a risk which has been realised by, and damage which has been caused by, the materialisation of a danger.

41. If that semantic issue were to prevail, the ambulance service at issue in these proceedings would be excluded, almost in principle, from the scope of 'danger prevention'. Only by way of a highly contrived interpretation could it be said that transporting the sick or injured by ambulance is an act of preventing the risk of a deterioration in their state of health that would exist if that transport were not available.

42. The misgivings prompted by a literal interpretation can, however, be overcome by a schematic interpretation of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24. That provision does not as a matter of general and abstract principle exclude from the scope of Directive 2014/24 all 'civil defence, civil protection and danger prevention' services, but only those included in certain CPV codes.

43. Among the services covered by those codes are some which fall within the concept of prevention in a technical or strict sense (16) and others which, being essentially reactive rather than preventive (for example, 'rescue services'), (17) may be provided both in disaster situations and in cases of harm or danger to individuals.

44. If, as Falck Rettungsdienste submits, (18) the concepts of 'civil protection, civil defence and danger prevention' were 'material criteria' for identifying, from among all the services covered by the CPV codes mentioned in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, those provided in disaster situations, the only 'rescue services' under CPV code 75252000-7 to be excluded from the scope of the directive would, in consequence, be those delivered to large numbers of people, not those provided in an emergency response for the benefit of a single individual.

45. Now, the CPV codes listed in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 specifically include code 85143000-3, which designates 'ambulance services'. There would appear to be no reason not to apply in this case the 'material criterion' advocated by Falck Rettungsdienste and to conclude that the exclusion provided for in that provision relates only to ambulance services in disaster situations.

46. However, Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 defines ambulance services in such a way that that term is not only inconsistent with that 'material criterion' but actually contradicts it.

47. In providing that 'civil defence, civil protection and danger prevention services … which are covered by CPV code … 85143000-3 (ambulance services) … except patient transport ambulance services (19) fall outside the scope of Directive 2014/24, Article 10(h) of that directive specifies an exclusion which, if that provision were subject to the criterion that it relates only to disaster situations, would be unnecessary, as the German Government submits. (20)

48. If the legislature thought it relevant to refer to 'patient transport ambulance services', it was because those services would otherwise have to be construed as being covered by the exclusion provided for in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 (CPV 85143000-3). It is clear, moreover, that the mere transport of patients is incongruous with a disaster situation, those affected by which, rather than as patients, are more appropriately described as injured persons or victims requiring urgent transfer to hospital under optimum medical care, not transport alone.

49. That conclusion is confirmed by a teleological interpretation of that provision. From this point of view, particular relevance attaches to recital 28 of Directive 2014/24, which states that the latter 'should not apply to certain emergency services where they are provided by non-profit organisations or associations, since the particular nature of those organisations would be difficult to preserve if the service providers had to be chosen in accordance with the procedures set out in this directive'.

50. Two aspects of that statement strike me as significant. First, the fact that the legislature refers to 'certain emergency services'. And, secondly, the fact that those services are identified in relation to 'non-profit organisations or associations' the 'particular nature' of which the legislature wishes to preserve. The exclusion is thus defined by reference to the provider of the service rather than by reference to the scale of the situation in which that provider must act.

51. In other words, whether the situation in question is an emergency involving a single individual or one of large-scale damage, what matters is that it should be an emergency of the kind usually responded to by non-profit organisations or associations. The purpose of that provision of Directive 2014/24 is to preserve those organisations, the continued existence of which could be threatened if they had to submit to the procurement procedures laid down in that directive.

52. In short, what matters is not so much to determine whether an emergency has arisen from a catastrophic event or from a situation involving danger to an individual (road traffic accident, house fire), as to identify the types of emergency that are the principal focus of non-profit organisations traditionally working in the field of healthcare and even humanitarian relief.

53. Thus, as the referring court points out, 'non-profit organisations and associations not only provide services in the areas of civil defence and civil protection [but] are also and primarily active in the area of providing daily emergency response services to individuals'. (21)

54. To the extent that the intention set out in recital 28 is given normative expression in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, it is my view that the 'civil defence, civil protection and danger prevention services' mentioned in that article are to be regarded as being equivalent to the 'emergency services' referred to in that recital, and must therefore be identified by reference to 'non-profit organisations or associations'.

55. In effect, recital 28 foreshadows the exclusion which, for our purposes here, Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 creates for ambulance services provided by non-profit organisations or associations when responding to the types of emergency that represent the customary focus of their work.

56. That recital states that the exclusion of emergency services provided by non-profit organisations 'should not be extended beyond that strictly necessary', there being a need to 'set out explicitly that patient transport ambulance services should not be excluded'.

57. The issue, then, is how to distinguish between an ambulance service provided in response to an emergency and the mere transport of patients by ambulance. It is this issue which the fourth question addresses when asking whether the transport of a patient in an ambulance while care is provided by a paramedic/medical assistant (so-called 'transport by qualified ambulance') may be regarded as a 'patient transport ambulance service' within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24.

58. The legislature's intention was to confine the exclusion (that is to say, the exemption from the ordinary rules of Directive 2014/24) to emergency services. (22) Symmetrically, in referring to 'patient transport ambulance services' as an exception to the exclusion, the legislature makes those services subject to (simplified) public procurement procedures in cases where their purpose is not to respond to an emergency but only to facilitate the transport of a patient by ambulance.

59. Read in this way, Directive 2014/24 will not apply to general ambulance services which, as well as performing a mere transport function, deliver medical or healthcare assistance appropriate to the proper attendance of patients in emergency situations; appropriate, that is to say, to the provision of a service which no other alternative means of transport could provide.

60. After stating that Directive 2014/24 is not applicable to 'patient transport ambulance services', recital 28 is at pains to point out that those services 'should be subject to the special regime set out for social and other specific services (the "light regime")'. In order to give effect to the application of that light regime, the same recital states that patient transport ambulance services do not form part of the '[road] transport services' group, (23) which is subject to the general regime under the directive.

61. There are thus two co-existent categories of service:

— general 'ambulance services' (covered by code 851430000-3), which are exempt from the discipline of Directive 2014/24; and — 'passenger transport ambulance services', which come under a specific heading in that directive, known as the light regime. (24) They would otherwise appear, by virtue of their nature, under the heading 'road transport'.

62. In other words, if ‘transport’ is removed as an inherent component of the ambulance service, the component that remains in CPV code 85143000-3 (that is to say, the service excluded from the application of Directive 2014/24/EU) is characterised predominantly by healthcare. Whether it is administered by a doctor, a healthcare technician or a paramedic, what matters, in my opinion, is that the necessary assistance provided should be essential to enabling the patient to be (urgently) transferred to hospital in such a way as to ensure that he receives the medical care necessary to save his life and preserve his health or well-being in as short a time as possible; essential, in other words, to being able to respond to an emergency situation, the exclusion from Directive 2014/24 being applicable, in accordance with recital 28 thereof, only to ‘emergency services’, as I have said before.

63. The two particular scenarios described by the referring court can be assessed on those premisses.

64. The first concerns transport and emergency care and treatment of patients who have been involved in an accident or similar incident (‘Notfallpatienten’), which is provided in an emergency ambulance (‘Rettungswagen’) ‘by an emergency worker/paramedic’. I don’t think there is any issue in assigning these services to CPV code 85143000-3 (ambulance services) and in stating, therefore, that Directive 2014/24 does not apply to them, provided that they are delivered by non-profit organisation or association.

65. The second scenario (fourth question) concerns care and treatment of patients which is provided in a patient transport ambulance (‘Krankentransportwagen’) ‘by a paramedic/medical assistant’. This, therefore, is a ‘patient transport ambulance service’ even where it is provided with the assistance of the aforementioned healthcare professionals. In my opinion, there is no emergency properly so-called here: patients can ask someone to travel with them in the transport vehicle, but they do not require emergency medical care. (25) The exception to the exclusion, provided for in Article 10(h), in fine, of Directive 2014/24/EU, is therefore applicable.

B. The concept of a non-profit organisation in the context of Directive 2014/24 (second and third questions)

66. As with ‘danger prevention’, (26) once we have determined the meaning of ‘non-profit organisations or associations’ as referred to in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, we must adopt an independent definition of that expression that is uniform across the European Union.

67. The German Government submits that the decisive factor is not so much the concept of ‘non-profit organisations or associations’ as the ‘particular nature’ of those bodies, which, it contends, Directive 2014/24 seeks to ‘preserve’ by excluding them from its scope (recital 28).

68. According to the German Government, in order to identify the particular nature of such organisations, regard must perforce be had to the legislative and substantive framework of the State in which they operate, since it is the Member States which are best placed to assess which organisations fit that description. (27) In its submission, the proposition that observance of national law is key to assessing whether an organisation is non-profit-making is borne out by two judgments of the Court of Justice. (28)

69. However, neither of those judgments recognised the Member States as having any discretion to prescribe the definition of non-profit organisations, recognising only their discretion ‘to decide the level of protection of public health and to organise [their] social security system[s]’, and to state, on the basis of that information, ‘that recourse to voluntary associations is consistent with the social purpose of a medical transport service and may help to control costs relating to that service’. (29)

70. In truth, the concept of ‘non-profit organisations or associations’ is precise enough not to necessitate the grant of a margin of discretion. The fact that an organisational structure is based on voluntary activity may indicate that it is not profit-making, but not necessarily. What matters for our purposes here is that the bodies providing the services at issue are non-profit-making. A literal interpretation of the formulation ‘non-profit …’ is therefore sufficient.

71. The referring court proposes a definition which seems reasonable to me. (30) Non-profit organisations, it states, are ones which carry on an activity by which ‘they do not seek to make a profit’ but which they pursue ‘for the benefit of the community without thereby obtaining any financial gain’. (31)

72. Strictly speaking, the notions of ‘benefit [to] the community’ and ‘achievement of tasks in the public good’, to use the expression contained in the third question, are redundant. After all, recital 28 of Directive 2014/24 speaks of non-profit organisations or associations which perform emergency services, that is to say, services which fulfil a purpose in the general public interest in their own right.

73. The decisive factor, I would reiterate, is that organisations or associations which provide the services referred to in recital 28 and Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 should not seek to make a profit from the pursuit of such emergency activities. (32)

74. This feature aside, the aforementioned organisations do not, in my opinion, also have to satisfy the conditions laid down in Article 77(2) of Directive 2014/24.

75. According to paragraph 1 of that article, Member States’ contracting authorities may reserve to certain organisations the right to participate in procedures for the award of contracts exclusively for certain health, social and cultural services, (33) if they fulfil the conditions listed in paragraph 2.

76. None of those conditions includes the non-existence of a profit-making aim. In fact, one of them is based on the contrary assumption. This is true of the condition relating to the distribution of profits, which requires the organisations referred to in paragraph 1 to distribute profits on the basis of participatory considerations. (34)

77. It is my view, therefore, that the distinctive feature of a non-profit organisation or association is precisely that it should not seek to make a profit and, if it generates profits inadvertently (that is to say, without having set out to do so), that it should use these to pursue its social activities; in this instance, to provide emergency healthcare services.

78. The national legislation provides that ‘non-profit organisations or associations [within the meaning of the exclusion provided for in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24] shall be, in particular, aid organisations recognised as civil protection and civil defence organisations under federal or Land law’. (35)

79. In the view of the German Government, that provision does not lay down a numerus clausus with respect to the organisations to which the exclusion provided for in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 applies. Recognition as an ‘aid association’ is not therefore an essential condition which a non-profit body must fulfil in order to benefit from the aforementioned exclusion. (36)

80. What matters here, however, is not so much that the national legislation does not prohibit the recognition as non-profit-making of bodies that satisfy the definition of ‘non-profit organisations or associations’ within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, (37) as the fact that it attributes that status to organisations which do not fit the definition of that term.

81. After all, as the referring court states, ‘statutory recognition as civil protection and civil defence organisations under national law does not necessarily depend … on whether the organisation is non-profit-making’. (38)

82. If that were the case, which it falls to the national court to determine, recognition as an aid organisation under national law would not be sufficient to support the view that an organisation or association is non-profit-making within the meaning of Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24. The latter status is subject to proof that the organisation or association looking to acquire it does not seek to make a profit and, if it does generate profits inadvertently, it uses them to pursue its social mission.

V. Conclusion

83. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court of Justice reply to the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Dusseldorf, Germany) as follows:

> Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as meaning that:

— The urgent transport of patients in an emergency ambulance in which care and treatment are provided by an emergency worker/paramedic must be classified as an ‘ambulance service’ (CPV code 85143000-3) the public procurement of which may not be made subject to the procedures laid down in Directive 2014/24, provided that that service is delivered by a non-profit organisation or association.

— The non-urgent transport of patients in a patient transport ambulance by a paramedic/medical with a paramedic/medical assistant must be classified as a ‘patient transport ambulance service’ which does not fall within the scope of the exclusion applicable to ‘ambulance services’ in general.

— ‘Non-profit organisations or associations’ are those which do not seek to make a profit and, if they do generate profits inadvertently, use these to pursue their social activities. An organisation may not be granted that status on the sole basis of its recognition as an aid association under national law.

12 The terminological equivalence as between Article 196 TFEU and Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24 [which exists in Spanish, but not in English, where 'danger prevention' is used in Article 10(h) of Directive 2014/24, but 'risk prevention' is used in Article 196 TFEU] is, however, only partial, since the former refers to 'civil protection' ('Katastrophenschutz', 'protection civile') and ('risk prevention') ('Risikoprävention', 'prévention des risques'), but not also to 'civil defence', as the latter does.

13 Under the heading to Title XXIII of Part III of the TFEU of 'Civil protection', Article 196(1) defines civil protection services as 'systems for preventing and protecting against natural or man-made disasters'. Encouragement from the European Union in that context comes in the form of support for the measures adopted by the Member States 'in risk prevention, in preparing their civil-protection personnel and in responding to … disasters' (Article 196(1)(a)). Danger prevention, staff training and response thus make up the sequence of physical processes comprising a comprehensive disaster management service.

distinguished between those two types of ambulance service. As the Court of Justice held in its judgment of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n.º 5 'Spezzino' and Others (C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraphs 33 and 34), Directive 2004/18 applies to public service contracts, which Article 1(2)(d) thereof defines as public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II thereto, which is divided into two parts (A and B). Urgent and emergency ambulance services are covered by Category 2 in Annex II A as regards the transport aspects of those services, and Category 25 in Annex II B as regards the medical aspects thereof.

Now, whereas, according to Article 22 of Directive 2004/18, contracts which also have as their object services which appear in those two annexes are to be awarded in accordance with the common procedure (where the value of the services listed in Annex II is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex II B) or (otherwise) in accordance with a light procedure, recital 28 of Directive 2014/24 provides that 'mixed contracts for the provision of ambulance services in general would also be subject to the light regime if the value of the patient transport ambulance services were greater than the value of other ambulance services'. For the reasons I shall explain at length, those 'other ambulance services' can only be healthcare services provided otherwise than in emergency situations.

25 This would be the scenario, for example, in the case of patients transported to hospital for dialysis, check-ups, whether regular or otherwise, diagnostic tests, clinical analyses or any other type of medical examination. At the hearing, there was general agreement that transport of this kind could not be caught by the exception to the exclusion. The City of Solingen stated, moreover, that such transport was not included in the contract at issue.

28 Judgments of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n.º5 'Spezzino' and Others (C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440), paragraph 61, and of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others (C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56), paragraph 64. Both judgments confirm that, from the point of view of EU primary law, there are no grounds for challenging the validity of this type of direct award. In the operative part of the former, the Court held that 'Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides that the provision of urgent and emergency ambulance services must be entrusted on a preferential basis and awarded directly, without any advertising, to the voluntary associations covered by the agreements, in so far as the legal and contractual framework in which the activity of those associations is carried out actually contributes to the social purpose and the pursuit of the objectives of the good of the community and budgetary efficiency on which that legislation is based'. That ruling is reiterated, with very slight variations, in the latter judgment.

32 Such organisations or associations could operate via agencies trading in the legal form, for example, of limited liability companies, provided that the latter are non-profit-making. The referring court will, if necessary, have to ascertain whether this is the case here.

33 The relationship between Article 10(h) and recital 28 of Directive 2014/24 is reproduced in the case of Article 77(1) and recital 118 of the same directive. While recital 28 refers to ‘non-profit organisations or associations’ as entities whose emergency services are excluded from the scope of Directive 2014/24 by virtue of Article 10(h) of that directive, recital 118 refers to ‘organisations which are based on employee ownership or active employee participation in their governance’ and ‘existing organisations such as cooperatives [which] participate in delivering [certain health, social and cultural] services to end users’; these organisations must fulfil the conditions set out in Article 77(2) of Directive 2014/24 in order for the Member States to be able to reserve the right for them to participate in procedures for the award of public contracts. There is no equivalence, therefore, between the organisations mentioned in recital 28 and those mentioned in recital 118. There is, in consequence, no such equivalence between Article 10(h) (which excludes certain activities pursued by the former organisations from the scope of Directive 2014/24) and Article 77 (which allows certain activities pursed by the latter organisations to have that directive applied to them in a particular way).

---

34 Article 77(2)(b) of Directive 2014/24. It is true that this provision requires that ‘profits [be] reinvested with a view to achieving the organisation’s objective’; it does not, however, rule out their existence or, in particular, prohibit their distribution, albeit on the basis of ‘participatory considerations’.

---

35 Paragraph 107(1), point 4, second part, of the GWB.

---

36 Paragraph 40 of the German Government’s observations. At the hearing, there was some debate as to whether that limit on numbers, which the national legislation itself does not lay down (by virtue of the use of the expression ‘in particular’), exists in fact.

---

37 That is the situation in this case, according to the City of Solingen in paragraphs 37 and 38 of its written observations.

38 Paragraph 15 of the order for reference.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Ninth Chamber)

25 October 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public supply contract for medical diagnostic equipment and materials — Directive 2014/24/EU — Article 42 — Award — Margin of appreciation of the contracting authority — Detailed formulation of the technical specifications)

In Case C-413/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court, Lithuania), made by decision of 30 June 2017, received at the Court on 10 July 2017, in the proceedings brought by

‘Roche Lietuva’ UAB

in the presence of:

Kauno Dainavos poliklinika VšĮ,

THE COURT (Ninth Chamber), composed of K. Jürimäe, President of the Chamber, E. Juhász (Rapporteur) and C. Vajda, Judges, Advocate General: J. Kokott,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– ‘Roche Lietuva’ UAB, by G. Balčiūnas and K. Karpickis, advokatai,

– Kauno Dainavos poliklinika VšĮ, by K. Laurynaitė and J. Judickienė, advokatai, – the Lithuanian Government, by D. Kriaučiūnas and K. Dieninis, and by D. Stepanienė, acting as Agents, – the Greek Government, by M. Tassopoulou and A. Magrippi, and by K. Georgiadis, acting as Agents, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, assisted by S. Fiorentino, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by A. Steiblytė and P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 2 and 23 and of Annex VI to Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings brought by ‘Roche Lietuva’ UAB, an unsuccessful tenderer in a procedure for the award of a public procurement contract organised by Kauno Dainavos poliklinika VšĮ, a public polyclinic established in Kaunas (Lithuania) (‘the Polyclinic for the Dainava District of Kaunas’), regarding the technical specifications of that contract.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Directive 2004/18 was repealed, with effect from 18 April 2016, by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), in accordance with Article 91(1) of the latter directive.

4 Recital 74 of Directive 2014/24 states:

‘(74) The technical specifications drawn up by public purchasers need to allow public procurement to be open to competition as well as to achieve objectives of sustainability. To that end, it should be possible to submit tenders that reflect the diversity of technical solutions standards and technical specifications in the marketplace, including those drawn up on the basis of performance criteria linked to the life cycle and the sustainability of the production process of the works, supplies and services.

Consequently, technical specifications should be drafted in such a way as to avoid artificially narrowing down competition through requirements that favour a specific economic operator by mirroring key characteristics of the supplies, services or works habitually offered by that economic operator. Drawing up the technical specifications in terms of functional and performance requirements generally allows that objective to be achieved in the best way possible. Functional and performance-related requirements are also appropriate means to favour innovation in public procurement and should be used as widely as possible. Where reference is made to a European standard or, in the absence thereof, to a national standard, tenders based on equivalent arrangements should be considered by contracting authorities. It should be the responsibility of the economic operator to prove equivalence with the requested label.

5 Article 18(1) of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

6 Article 42 of the directive, entitled ‘Technical specifications’, provides:

‘1. The technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex VII shall be set out in the procurement documents. The technical specifications shall lay down the characteristics required of a works, service or supply.

Those characteristics may also refer to the specific process or method of production or provision of the requested works, supplies or services or to a specific process for another stage of its life cycle even where such factors do not form part of their material substance, provided that they are linked to the subject-matter of the contract and proportionate to its value and its objectives.

2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access of economic operators to the procurement procedure and shall not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.

3. Without prejudice to mandatory national technical rules, to the extent that they are compatible with Union law, the technical specifications shall be formulated in one of the following ways:

(a) in terms of performance or functional requirements, including environmental characteristics, provided that the parameters are sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject-matter of the contract and to allow contracting authorities to award the contract;

(b) by reference to technical specifications and, in order of preference, to national standards transposing European standards, European Technical Assessments, common technical specifications, international standards, other technical reference systems established by the European standardisation bodies or — when any of those do not exist — national standards, national technical approvals or national technical specifications relating to the design, calculation and execution of the works and use of the supplies; each reference shall be accompanied by the words “or equivalent”;

(c) in terms of performance or functional requirements referred to in point (a), with reference to the technical specifications referred to in point (b) as a means of presuming conformity with such performance or functional requirements;

(d) by reference to the technical specifications referred to in point (b) for certain characteristics, and by reference to the performance or functional requirements referred to in point (a) for other characteristics.

4. Unless justified by the subject-matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or a particular process which characterises the products or services provided by a specific economic operator, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject-matter of the contract pursuant to paragraph 3 is not possible. Such reference shall be accompanied by the words “or equivalent”.

…’

7 Annex VII to Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Definition of certain technical specifications’, provides in its first paragraph:

‘For the purpose of this Directive:

1. “technical specification” means one of the following:

(a) ...

(b) in the case of public supply or service contracts a specification in a document defining the required characteristics of a product or a service, such as quality levels, environmental and climate performance levels, design for all requirements (including accessibility for disabled persons) and conformity assessment, performance, use of the product, safety or dimensions, including requirements relevant to the product as regards the name under which the product is sold, terminology, symbols, testing and test methods, packaging, marking and labelling, user instructions, production processes and methods at any stage of the life cycle of the supply or service and conformity assessment procedures.’

Lithuanian law

8 Articles 2 and 23 of, and Annex VI to, Directive 2004/18 have been transposed into Lithuanian law by Articles 3 and 25 of, and Appendix 3 to, the Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law on Public Procurement of the Republic of Lithuania). As regards Directive 2014/24, it was transposed by law XIII-327 of 2 May 2017. That law entered into force on 1 July 2017.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

9 It appears from the file before the Court that on 22 June 2016, the Polyclinic for the Dainava District of Kaunas published public procurement procedure entitled ‘Procurement of services concerning the rental of laboratory diagnostic equipment for human health care and procurement of materials and services to ensure the operation of such equipment’. That procurement was divided into 13 lots. The value of the part of the lot at issue amounts to EUR 250 000.

10 On 4 July 2016, Roche Lietuva argued, in the context of a complaint, that the technical specifications set out in Annex 1 to the contract documents unreasonably restricted competition among suppliers due to their high specificity and in reality corresponded to the products of specific manufacturers of blood analysers. The Polyclinic for the Dainava District of Kaunas, by a decision of 14 July 2016, amended certain provisions of the technical specifications.

11 On 28 July 2016, unsatisfied with the amendments brought to the tender specifications following its complaint, Roche Lietuva brought an application before the national courts.

12 The first-instance court as well as the appellate court dismissed Roche Lietuva’s application, on 6 October and 14 December 2016 respectively, namely on the grounds that the Polyclinic for the Dainava District of Kaunas had correctly exercised its discretion in laying down the detailed technical specifications in the light of its requirements based on the quality of testing and the value of health care, and that the applicant in the main proceedings had failed to prove that the tender specifications at issue corresponded to specific devices or manufacturers.

13 On 28 December 2016, the Polyclinic for the Dainava District of Kaunas terminated the procurement procedure concerned following a request to that effect by the Viešųjų pirkimų tarnyba (Public Procurement Office, Lithuania) that authority having found the infringement of applicable provisions other than the ones indicated in the request for a preliminary ruling.

14 On 17 January, 2017, Roche Lietuva filed an appeal in cassation before the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court, Lithuania), which examined that case on 17 May 2017. By order of 19 June 2017, that court decided ex officio to re-open the case. It informed the parties of its intention to go beyond the ambit of the appeal in cassation and invited them, as well as the Public Procurement Office, to submit their observations on the provisions of the procurement specifications defining not the requirements applicable to the services (medical analyses), but to the requirements concerning the materials necessary for the provision of those services.

15 The referring court raises the question of the limits to the margin of appreciation of a contracting authority, such as the defendant in the main proceedings, regarding the laying down, in the procurement documents, of specific characteristics of supplies of medical equipment to be acquired not for the independent purpose of having them at one’s disposal but for the purpose of carrying out medical tests. In that regard, the referring court asks whether that contracting authority would comply with the legal requirements if the functioning of the equipment was defined as a functional requirement, regarding not the isolated functioning of the equipment or its characteristics, but rather the result of that functioning, namely as regards the speed or reliability of the tests and of the methods used.

16 In those circumstances, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Should Articles 2 and 23 of, and Annex VI to, Directive 2004/18 (whether together or separately, but without limitation to those provisions), be interpreted and understood as meaning that, in the case where a contracting authority — a human health care institution — intends to acquire supplies (medical diagnostic equipment and materials) or specific rights thereto by way of a public procurement procedure in order to be able to carry out tests by itself, its discretion includes the right to lay down in the technical specifications only such requirements for those supplies as do not describe in isolation the individual operational (technical) and use-related (functional) characteristics of the equipment and/or materials but instead define the qualitative parameters of the tests to be carried out as well as the performance of the testing laboratory, the content of which must be separately described in the specifications of the public procurement procedure in question?'

Preliminary observations

17 The referring court refers to certain provisions of Directive 2004/18 in its question. As regards the ratione temporis applicability of that directive, it should be noted that the notice of procurement at issue in the main proceedings was published on 22 June 2016, that is after the date that the repeal of that directive took effect, that date having been fixed on 18 April 2016, in accordance with Article 91(1) of Directive 2014/24.

18 According to established case-law, the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for tenders to be issued for the award of a public procurement contract (judgment of 14 September 2017, Casertana Costruzioni, C-223/16, EU:C:2017:685, paragraph 21 and the case-law cited).

19 It should be added that Articles 2 and 23 of Directive 2004/18 were substantially reproduced in, respectively, Article 18(1) and in Articles 42 to 44 of Directive 2014/24. The content of Annex VI to Directive 2004/18 was substantially reproduced in Annex VII to Directive 2014/24. The conditions applicable to the technical specifications defining the required characteristics of the works, services or supplies that are the object of a contract are more specifically governed by Article 42 of that latter directive.

20 It follows that the relevant provisions of Directive 2014/24 should be interpreted in order to provide a useful answer to the referring court.

Consideration of the question referred 21 In light of the above, it must be noted that, by its question, the referring court asks, in essence, to what extent, under Articles 18 and 42 of Directive 2014/24, and according to the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, a contracting authority must attach importance to the individual characteristics of the devices or to the result of the functioning of those devices when establishing technical specifications in a procurement procedure regarding the acquisition of medical supplies.

22 As a preliminary point, the European Commission wonders whether that question is admissible in the light of the fact that the tender procedure, which was the object of the dispute in the main proceedings, was terminated, so that the question is rendered hypothetical.

23 In that regard, it is necessary to state that in accordance with the settled case-law of the Court, in proceedings under Article 267 TFEU, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case, both the need for a preliminary ruling and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where the questions referred by national courts concern the interpretation of a provision of European Union law, the Court is, in principle, bound to give a ruling. In the context of the procedure for cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts that is established by Article 267 TFEU, questions concerning EU law enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to give a ruling on a question referred by a national court under Article 267 TFEU only where, for instance, the requirements concerning the content of a request for a preliminary ruling set out in Article 94 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice are not satisfied, or where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of a provision on EU law, or the assessment of its validity, which is sought by the national court, bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or to its purpose, or where the problem is hypothetical (judgment of 25 July 2018, Confédération paysanne and Others, C-528/16, EU:C:2018:583, paragraphs 72 and 73, and the case-law cited).

24 In the present case, the referring court provided in its request for a preliminary ruling several grounds indicating the reasons why, despite the termination of the procurement procedure, there remains, according to national law, a legal interest in the resolution of the dispute. In those circumstances, it should be declared that the question referred is not of hypothetical nature and must, consequently, be considered admissible.

25 On the substance, in accordance with Article 42(1) of Directive 2014/24, the technical specifications defined in paragraph 1 of Annex VII to that directive are set out in the procurement documents, and lay down the required characteristics of the works, services or supplies.

26 Under Article 42(3) of that directive, the technical specifications can be formulated in several ways, either in terms of performance or functional requirements, or by reference to technical specifications, and, in order of preference, to national standards transposing European standards, European Technical Assessments, common technical specifications, international standards, other technical reference systems established by the European standardisation bodies or — when any of those do not exist — national standards, national technical approvals or national technical specifications relating to the design, calculation and execution of the works and use of the supplies, or a combination of both ways.

27 In this regard, it should be noted that Article 42(3), which provides that the technical specifications shall be formulated in terms of performance or functional requirements that are sufficiently precise or by reference to technical specifications and to various standards, does not exclude the specification, in a procurement procedure regarding medical supplies intended to carry out medical examinations, of the individual operational and use-related characteristics of the materials.

28 Furthermore, the wording of Article 42(3) of Directive 2014/24 does not establish a hierarchy among the methods of formulation of technical specifications and does not prioritise either of those methods.

29 Moreover, it appears from that provision that the Union legislation relating to technical specifications allows broad discretion for the contracting authority in the formulation of the technical specifications of a procurement contract.

30 That margin of appreciation is justified by the fact that the contracting authorities are better placed to know which supplies they need and to determine the requirements necessary to achieve the desired results.

31 Nonetheless, Directive 2014/24 sets certain limits that the contracting authority must comply with.

32 In particular, Article 42(2) of Directive 2014/24 requires that the technical specifications afford equal access of economic operators to the procurement procedure and do not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.

33 That requirement implements the principle of equality of treatment set out in the first subparagraph of Article 18(1) of that directive for the purpose of the formulation of technical specifications. According to this provision, contracting authorities are to treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and are to act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

34 As the Court has previously held, the principles of equality of treatment, non-discrimination and transparency are of crucial importance so far as concerns technical specifications, in the light of the risks of discrimination related either to the choice of specifications or their formulation (see, as regards Directive 2004/18, judgment of 10 May 2012, Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraph 62).

35 It is, in addition, stated in the second subparagraph of Article 18(1) of Directive 2014/24 that the design of a procurement is not to be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of that directive or of artificially narrowing competition, and that competition is to be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.

36 Similarly, recital 74 of Directive 2014/24 specifies that technical specifications should be ‘drafted in such a way as to avoid artificially narrowing down competition through requirements that favour a specific economic operator by mirroring key characteristics of the supplies, services or works habitually offered by that economic operator’. Also according to that recital, ‘it should be possible to submit tenders that reflect the diversity of technical solutions standards and technical specifications in the marketplace’.

37 Complying with those requirements is all the more important when, as in the present case, the technical specifications listed in the procurement documents are formulated in a particularly detailed manner. Indeed, the more detailed the technical specifications, the higher the risk of favouring the products of a given manufacturer will be.

38 As follows from Article 42(4) of Directive 2014/24, it is possible, on an exceptional basis and where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter pursuant to Article 42(3) of that directive is not possible, to refer to a specific make or source, or a particular process, which characterises the products of services provided by a specific economic operator, or to trade marks or patents, to the extent that it is justified by the subject matter and that the conditions laid out in Directive 2014/24 are complied with, in particular that such reference is accompanied, in the contract documents, by the words ‘or equivalent’. Nonetheless, since that provision constitutes a derogation, the conditions in which the contracting authority may make use of such a possibility must be strictly interpreted.

39 According to previous case-law on public supply contracts, the failure to add the words ‘or equivalent’ after the designation, in the contract documents, of a particular product, may not only deter economic operators using systems similar to that product from taking part in the procurement procedure, but may also impede the flow of imports in intra-Union trade, by reserving the contract exclusively to suppliers intending to use the product specifically indicated (see, to that effect, order of 3 December 2001, Vestergaard, C-59/00, EU:C:2001:654, paragraph 22 and the case-law cited).

40 In the light of the above factors, it is for the referring court to determine if, taking into account the contracting authority’s margin of appreciation in laying down the technical specifications according to the qualitative requirements related to the subject matter of the procurement contract at issue, the particularly detailed character of the technical specifications at issue does not indirectly favour a tenderer.

41 It is also necessary that the level of detail of the technical specifications complies with the principle of proportionality, which implies, in particular, an examination of the question establishing whether that level of detail is necessary to achieve the desired objectives.

42 That being said, it should be noted that the principle of proportionality is applied in a particular manner in the sensitive area of public health. The Court has consistently held that, in order to assess whether a Member State has observed the principle of proportionality in the area of public health, account must be taken of the fact that the health and life of humans rank foremost among the assets and interests protected by the Treaty FEU and that it is for the Member States to determine the degree of protection which they wish to afford to public health and the way in which that degree of protection is to be achieved. Since that level may vary from one Member State to another, Member States should be allowed a measure of discretion (see judgment of 8 June 2017, Medisanus, C-296/15, EU:C:2017:431, paragraph 82 and the case-law cited).

43 It should also be noted in this context that, as recalled in paragraph 11 of the recommendations to national courts and tribunals in relation to the initiation of preliminary ruling processings (OJ 2018 C 257, p. 1) although, in order to deliver its decision, the Court necessarily takes into account the legal and factual context of the dispute in the main proceedings, as defined by the referring court or tribunal in its request for a preliminary ruling, it does not itself apply EU law to that dispute. When ruling on the interpretation or validity of EU law, the Court makes every effort to give a reply which will be of assistance in resolving the dispute in the main proceedings, but it is for the referring court or tribunal to draw concrete conclusions. For those reasons, the interpretation provided by the Court is usually expressed in abstracto.

44 Here, it is for the referring court, in the light of the elements of interpretation stated above, to concretely assess the conformity of the technical specifications at issue in the main proceedings with the principles of equality of treatment and proportionality.

45 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Articles 18 and 42 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not imposing on the contracting authority, in establishing technical specifications in a procurement procedure concerning the acquisition of medical supplies, by principle, prioritising either the importance of the individual characteristics of the medical supplies or the importance of the result of their functioning, but requiring that the technical specifications, as a whole, comply with the principles of equality of treatment and proportionality. It is for the national court to assess whether, in the dispute before it, the technical specifications at issue comply with those requirements.

Costs

46 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

Articles 18 and 42 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as not imposing on the contracting authority, in establishing technical specifications in a procurement procedure concerning the acquisition of medical supplies, by principle, prioritising either the importance of the individual characteristics of the medical supplies or the importance of the result of their functioning, but requiring that the technical specifications, as a whole, comply with the principles of equality of treatment and proportionality. It is for the national court to assess whether, in the dispute before it, the technical specifications at issue comply with those requirements.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Ninth Chamber)

28 February 2019 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement procedures in the transport sector — Directive 2004/17/EC — Scope — Article 5 — Activities relating to the provision or operation of networks to provide a service to the public in the field of transport by railways — Award, by a public national railway undertaking providing transport services, of cleaning service contracts for trains belonging to that undertaking — No prior publication)

In Case C-388/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court, Sweden), made by decision of 21 June 2017, received at the Court on 29 June 2017, in the proceedings

Konkurrensverket

v

SJ AB,

THE COURT (Ninth Chamber), composed of C. Lycourgos (Rapporteur), President of the Tenth Chamber, acting as President of the Ninth Chamber, E. Juhász and C. Vajda, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: V. Giacobbo-Peyronnel, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 13 June 2018,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– the Konkurrensverket, by N. Otte Widgren, P. Karlsson and K. Sällfors, acting as Agents, – for SJ AB, by A. Ulfsdotter Forsell, advokat and M. Bogg, lawyer,

– the European Commission, by E. Ljung Rasmussen, G. Tolstoy, P. Ondrůšek and K. Simonsson, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 19 September 2018,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the Konkurrensverket (Competition Authority, Sweden) and SJ AB concerning the alleged disregard by that company of the rules on public procurement procedures when awarding contracts for cleaning services.

European Union law

Directive 2004/17

3 Article 2 of Directive 2004/17, entitled, ‘Contracting entities’, provides in paragraph 2:

‘This directive shall apply to contracting entities:

(a) which are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7;

(b) which, when they are not contracting authorities or public undertakings, have as one of their activities any of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7, or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State.’

4 Article 5 of Directive 2004/17, entitled ‘Transport services’, provides:

‘1. This directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.

2. This directive shall not apply to entities providing bus transport services to the public which were excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38/EEC [of the Council of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84)] pursuant to Article 2(4) thereof.’

Directive 2012/34/EU

5 Directive 2012/34/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 November 2012 establishing a single European railway area (OJ 2012 L 343, p. 32), brings together in one instrument several directives on rail transport which were recast. Those directives include Directive 2001/14/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2001 on the allocation of railway infrastructure capacity and the levying of charges for the use of railway infrastructure (OJ 2001 L 75, p. 29), as amended by Directive 2007/58/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2007 (OJ 2007 L 315, p. 44). Directive 2012/34 entered into force on 15 December 2012 in accordance with Article 66 of that directive.

6 Article 3 of that directive, headed ‘Definitions’, provides:

‘For the purposes of this directive, the following definitions apply:

(1) “railway undertaking” means any public or private undertaking licensed according to this directive, the principal business of which is to provide services for the transport of goods and/or passengers by rail with a requirement that the undertaking ensure traction; this also includes undertakings which provide traction only;

(2) “infrastructure manager” means any body or firm responsible in particular for establishing, managing and maintaining railway infrastructure, including traffic management and control-command and signalling; the functions of the infrastructure manager on a network or part of a network may be allocated to different bodies or firms;

(18) “allocation” means the allocation of railway infrastructure capacity by an infrastructure manager;

(20) “congested infrastructure” means an element of infrastructure for which demand for infrastructure capacity cannot be fully satisfied during certain periods even after coordination of the different requests for capacity;

(22) “coordination” means the process through which the infrastructure manager and applicants will attempt to resolve situations in which there are conflicting applications for infrastructure capacity;

(25) “network” means the entire railway infrastructure managed by an infrastructure manager;

(26) “network statement” means the statement which sets out in detail the general rules, deadlines, procedures and criteria for charging and capacity-allocation schemes, including such other information as is required to enable applications for infrastructure capacity;

(27) “train path” means the infrastructure capacity needed to run a train between two places over a given period;

7 Under Article 27 of Directive 2012/34, entitled ‘Network statement’, which reproduces, in essence, the provisions of Article 3 of Directive 2001/14, as amended by Directive 2007/58:

‘1. The infrastructure manager shall, after consultation with the interested parties, develop and publish a network statement which shall be obtainable against payment of a fee which shall not exceed the cost of publication of that statement. The network statement shall be published in at least two official languages of the Union. The content of the network statement shall be made available free of charge in electronic format on the web portal of the infrastructure manager and accessible through a common web portal. That web portal shall be set up by the infrastructure managers in the framework of their cooperation in accordance with Articles 37 and 40.

2. The network statement shall set out the nature of the infrastructure which is available to railway undertakings, and contain information setting out the conditions for access to the relevant railway infrastructure. The network statement shall also contain information setting out the conditions for access to service facilities connected to the network of the infrastructure manager and for supply of services in these facilities or indicate a website where such information is made available free of charge in electronic format. The content of the network statement is laid down in Annex IV.

3. The network statement shall be kept up to date and amended as necessary.

4. The network statement shall be published no less than four months in advance of the deadline for requests for infrastructure capacity.’

8 Article 44 of Directive 2012/34, entitled ‘Applications’, provides in paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof:

‘1. Applicants may apply under public or private law to the infrastructure manager to request an agreement granting rights to use railway infrastructure against a charge as provided for in Section 2 of Chapter IV.

2. Requests relating to the regular working timetable shall comply with the deadlines set out in Annex VII.’

9 Article 45 of that directive, entitled ‘Scheduling’, provides in paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof:

‘1. The infrastructure manager shall, as far as possible, meet all requests for infrastructure capacity including requests for train paths crossing more than one network, and shall, as far as possible, take account of all constraints on applicants, including the economic effect on their business.

2. The infrastructure manager may give priority to specific services within the scheduling and coordination process but only as set out in Articles 47 and 49.’

10 Article 46 of the directive, ‘Coordination process’, provides:

‘1. During the scheduling process referred to in Article 45, where the infrastructure manager encounters conflicts between different requests, it shall attempt, through coordination of the requests, to ensure the best possible matching of all requirements.

2. Where a situation requiring coordination arises, the infrastructure manager shall have the right, within reasonable limits, to propose infrastructure capacity that differs from that which was requested.

3. The infrastructure manager shall attempt, through consultation with the appropriate applicants, to resolve any conflicts. Such consultation shall be based on the disclosure of the following information within a reasonable time, free of charge and in written or electronic form:

11 In accordance with Article 47 of that directive, entitled ‘Congested infrastructure’:

‘1. Where, after coordination of the requested train paths and consultation with applicants, it is not possible to satisfy requests for infrastructure capacity adequately, the infrastructure manager shall immediately declare that section of infrastructure on which this has occurred to be congested. This shall also be done for infrastructure which can be expected to suffer from insufficient capacity in the near future.

2. Where infrastructure has been declared to be congested, the infrastructure manager shall carry out a capacity analysis as provided for in Article 50, unless a capacity-enhancement plan, as provided for in Article 51, is already being implemented.

4. The prioritising criteria are to take account of the importance of a service to society relative to any other service which will consequently be excluded.

In order to guarantee the development of adequate transport services within this framework, in particular to comply with public-service requirements or to promote the development of national and international rail freight, Member States may take any measures necessary, under non-discriminatory conditions, to ensure that such services are given priority when infrastructure capacity is allocated.

Member States may, where appropriate, grant the infrastructure manager compensation corresponding to any loss of revenue related to the need to allocate a given capacity to certain services pursuant to the second subparagraph.

Those measures and that compensation shall include taking account of the effect of this exclusion in other Member States.

12 Annex IV to that directive, headed ‘Content of the network statement’, provides:

‘The network statement referred to in Article 27 shall contain the following information:

(1) A section setting out the nature of the infrastructure which is available to railway undertakings and the conditions of access to it. The information in this section shall be made consistent, on an annual basis, with, or shall refer to, the rail infrastructure registers to be published in accordance with Article 35 of Directive 2008/57/EC.

(2) A section on charging principles and tariffs. This shall contain appropriate details of the charging scheme as well as sufficient information on charges as well as other relevant information on access applying to the services listed in Annex II which are provided by only one supplier. It shall detail the methodology, rules and, where applicable, scales used for the application of Articles 31 to 36, as regards both costs and charges. It shall contain information on changes in charges already decided upon or foreseen in the next five years, if available.

(3) A section on the principles and criteria for capacity allocation. This shall set out the general capacity characteristics of the infrastructure which is available to railway undertakings and any restrictions relating to its use, including likely capacity requirements for maintenance. It shall also specify the procedures and deadlines which relate to the capacity-allocation process. It shall contain specific criteria which are employed during that process, in particular:

(a) the procedures according to which applicants may request capacity from the infrastructure manager;

(b) the requirements governing applicants;

(c) the schedule for the application and allocation processes and the procedures which shall be followed to request information on the scheduling and the procedures for scheduling planned and unforeseen maintenance work;

(d) the principles governing the coordination process and the dispute resolution system made available as part of this process;

(e) the procedures which shall be followed and criteria used where infrastructure is congested;

(f) details of restrictions on the use of infrastructure;

(g) conditions by which account is taken of previous levels of utilisation of capacity in determining priorities for the allocation process.

Swedish law

13 Lagen (2007:1092) om upphandling inom områdena vatten, energi, transporter och posttjänster (Law (2007:1092) on procurement in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors; ‘the Law on procurement’) transposes the provisions of Directive 2004/17 in Swedish law.

14 The first subparagraph of Chapter 1, Paragraph 8, of the Law on procurement provides that the provision or operation of public networks in the form of transport by, inter alia, railway is covered by the law. It follows from the second subparagraph of Chapter 1, Paragraph 8, that a network intended to provide a public service in the field of transport services is deemed to exist if the service is provided in accordance with conditions which are laid down by a competent authority and which relate to the routes to be served, the transport capacity to be made available, the frequency of the service and similar conditions.

15 Chapter 7, Paragraph 1, of the Law on procurement provides that the contracting entity intending to award a contract or conclude a framework agreement must, without exception, publish the contract notice.

16 Under Chapter 17, Paragraphs 1 and 2, of the Law on procurement, the supervisory authority may apply to the Administrative Court for an order that a contracting entity pay a special fine if the entity has concluded a contract with a supplier without prior publication of the contract notice.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

17 SJ is a limited company, wholly owned by the Swedish State, which pursues the activity of rail transport. In January 2012, SJ concluded two contracts of 56 and 60 million Swedish Crowns (SEK) respectively (approximately EUR 5 502 306 and EUR 5 895 328), by which it awarded cleaning contracts for the trains operated by it, without having initiated a tendering procedure for the award of those contracts.

18 In January 2013, the Konkurrensverket brought an action before the Förvaltningsrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court, Stockholm, Sweden) for an order imposing a fine on SJ on the ground that that undertaking was bound to comply with publication requirements when awarding public contracts since it was active in the provision or operation of public transport networks within the meaning of Chapter 1, Paragraph 8, of the Law on procurement. SJ, taking the view that its activity does not fall within the scope of Paragraph 8 thereof, contested the findings of the Konkurrensverket. The court upheld the arguments of SJ.

19 The appeal brought by the Konkurrensverket before the Kammarrätten i Stockholm (Stockholm Administrative Court of Appeal, Sweden) was also dismissed.

20 That court held, as did the court of first instance, that, since the Trafikverket (Transport Administration, Sweden), as the infrastructure manager, granted the train paths required for the activity of rail transport as such, with limited ability actively to influence how SJ provides its transport services, that administration could not be regarded as being an authority imposing conditions on that company for the performance of its activities. Accordingly, the appeal court took the view that the services provided by SJ could not be regarded as being provided under conditions determined by a competent authority within the meaning of Chapter 1, Paragraph 8, of the Law on procurement. It concluded therefrom that that company was not therefore required to comply with the Law on procurement when concluding the contracts in question.

21 The Konkurrensverket brought an appeal in cassation against that judgment before the Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court, Sweden), requesting that court to refer the matter to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

22 In those circumstances, the Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 be interpreted as meaning that there is a network in the field of transport services when transport services on a State-administered rail network for national and international rail traffic are provided in accordance with provisions in national legislation which implement Directive 2012/34, which involve the allocation of railway infrastructure capacity on the basis of requests from railway companies and a requirement that all requests are to be met so far as possible?

(2) Must the first subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 be interpreted as meaning that an activity which is carried out by a railway company such as is referred to in Directive 2012/34 and which entails the provision of transport services to the public on a rail network constitutes the provision or operation of a network as referred to in that provision of the directive?’

The request for the oral procedure to be reopened

23 Following the delivery of the Opinion of the Advocate General, by a document lodged at the Registry of the Court on 3 October 2017, SJ requested the Court to reopen the oral part of the procedure on the ground that points 81 and 82 of the Opinion were based on certain aspects that had not been addressed in the written and oral phases of the present preliminary ruling proceedings, in particular Article 30 of Directive 2004/17.

24 In that regard, Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court permits the Court, after hearing the Advocate General, to order at any time the reopening of the oral part of the procedure, in particular if it considers that it lacks sufficient information or where the case must be decided on the basis of a legal argument which has not been debated between the parties.

25 In the present case, the Court considers that it has all the information necessary to rule on the request for a preliminary ruling before it and that the case does not have to be decided on the basis of the argument submitted in the application for reopening of the oral procedure on the potential application of Article 30 of Directive 2004/17.

26 Accordingly, there is no need to order that the oral part of the procedure be reopened.

Consideration of the questions referred

Preliminary observations

27 By its questions, the referring court seeks, in essence, to determine whether SJ was required to initiate a tendering procedure for the award of service contracts for the cleaning of trains operated by it.

28 In that regard, as the Advocate General recalls in point 46 of his Opinion, it is not in dispute that SJ, as a company wholly owned by the State, is a public undertaking within the meaning of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 2004/17. If the view can be taken that SJ carries out one of the activities referred to in Article 5 of that directive, it can be regarded as being a contracting entity within the meaning of Article 2(2)(a) of that directive.

29 SJ maintains that it does not carry out such activities. First, it argues that it does not operate on a ‘network’ within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of that Directive. Second, it submits that its activities relating to the provision of transport services do not constitute activities of ‘provision’ or ‘operation’ of the network within the meaning of that article.

The first question

30 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as meaning that there is a network of rail transport services, within the meaning of that provision, where transport services are provided, in application of national legislation transposing Directive 2012/34, on a railway infrastructure managed by a national authority which allocates that infrastructure capacity and is required to meet the requests of railway undertakings provided that the limits of that capacity are not reached.

31 In accordance with the second indent of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17, ‘as regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service’.

32 In order to assess whether such conditions exist in the case before it, the referring court asks what is the effect of the obligation on the Trafikverket, as the competent authority within the meaning of Article 5 of Directive 2004/17, to satisfy all requests for allocation of transport capacity submitted by railway undertakings provided that the limits of that capacity are not reached.

33 SJ notes that it provides rail transport services in full competition on the market and does not receive any State funding, that it obtains its revenue from the sale of tickets, that it has no priority as regards railway capacity when requesting train paths and that all the transport which it operates results from its own decisions.

34 However, those elements alone, even if established, cannot exclude that the conditions under which a railway undertaking, such as SJ, provides its services were determined by a competent authority.

35 In fact, examination of the legislation applicable shows this to be the case.

36 It must be pointed out that Article 27(1) and (2) of Directive 2012/34 provides that the infrastructure manager, in the present case the Trafikverket, is to draw up and publish a network statement setting out the characteristics of the infrastructure and containing information setting out the conditions for access to the railway infrastructure. The content of the network statement is defined in Annex IV to that directive.

37 In accordance with Annex IV, that document contains the principles and criteria for capacity allocation, including the requirements which candidates must meet, the procedures to be followed and the criteria to be used where infrastructure is congested or details of restrictions on the use of infrastructure.

38 Thus, any request for infrastructure capacity must, under Directive 2012/34, be submitted to the infrastructure manager by a railway undertaking in accordance with the network statement drawn up by it and must comply with the principles and criteria set out in that document. It follows from those factors that the award of rights to use the railway infrastructure is subject to compliance by the applicant undertakings with requirements relating to both their capacity to submit an application and the conditions under which they will use that infrastructure. Consequently, such requirements significantly reduce the commercial freedom of applicant undertakings.

39 Regarding the procedure for the examination of applications as such, although the railway infrastructure manager must, pursuant to Article 45 of Directive 2012/34, endeavour as far as possible to meet all requests for infrastructure capacity, it is required, in accordance with Article 46 of that directive, in the case of competing requests, to coordinate those requests in order to ensure the best match between them. It may thus, within reasonable limits, propose capacity that differs from that which was requested or may be unable to respond favourably to certain applications.

40 Article 47 of Directive 2012/34 lays down provisions for the event that the railway infrastructure is congested, in the context of which the infrastructure manager may establish prioritising criteria.

41 In those circumstances, while accepting that the railway undertaking has a certain freedom to determine the conditions for the exercise of its transport activity, it must be held, having regard to the obligations and restrictions on it, taken as a whole, in particular the obligation of obtaining train paths and the conditions attached thereto, that the conditions under which it provides the transport service are laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, in this case the Trafikverket in the main proceedings, acting as the infrastructure manager.

42 That assessment is also corroborated by the analysis of the legislative history of the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17.

43 Indeed, as the European Commission points out, Article 2(2)(c) of Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1), which, in essence, Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 reproduces, was introduced to make the procurement of bus transport services subject to the provisions of Directive 90/531 and clarified that a transport network exists not only if it consists of a physical infrastructure such as railways, but also by a coordinated system of lines under specific conditions, such as in the field of transport by bus. By contrast, the EU legislature did not intend to limit, by that provision, the scope of public procurement procedures in the field of transport carried out on a physical network.

44 Consequently, the answer to the first question is that the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as meaning that there is a network of rail transport services, within the meaning of that provision, where transport services are provided, in application of national legislation transposing Directive 2012/34, on a railway infrastructure managed by a national authority which allocates infrastructure capacity even if that authority is required to meet the requests of railway undertakings provided that the limits of that capacity are not reached.

The second question

45 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the first subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as meaning that the activity pursued by a railway undertaking, consisting of providing public transport services using the rail network, constitutes a ‘provision’ or ‘operation of networks’ for the purposes of that directive.

46 In accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17, that directive is to apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

47 Consequently, that provision covers two types of activities, namely, on the one hand, the provision of networks and, on the other, the operation of networks.

48 According to settled case-law, the meaning and scope of terms for which EU law provides no definition must be determined according to their meaning in everyday language whilst considering the context in which they occur and the purposes of the rules of which they form part (judgment of 12 June 2018, Louboutin and Christian Louboutin, C-163/16, EU:C:2018:423, paragraph 20).

49 In that regard, the term ‘operation’ must be understood, in accordance with its usual meaning, as referring to the use of an object or the exercise of a right to earn income. Thus, the operation of networks by a railway undertaking consists of its exercise of the right to use the railway infrastructure to earn income.

50 Such a definition differs from that which it is appropriate to give to the ‘provision of networks’.

51 Indeed, as observed by the Advocate General in point 65 of his Opinion, the ‘provision of networks’ is a prerogative of the infrastructure manager and not of the railway undertaking.

52 As the Commission has pointed out, the ‘provision of networks’ was not included in the directives which preceded Directive 2004/17, namely Directive 90/531 and Directive 93/38, since that term was introduced in Directive 2004/17 to ensure that the procurement procedures for which it provides also apply to the management of physical networks, such as railways, railway facilities, tunnels, bridges and level crossings.

53 In the light of the foregoing, it must be held that the activity of the ‘operation of networks’ refers to the exercise of the right of use of the railway network for the provision of transport services, while the activity of ‘provision of networks’ refers to the management of the network.

54 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second question is that the first subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as meaning that the activity pursued by a railway undertaking, which consists of providing transport services to the public in exercising a right of use of the railway network, is an ‘operation of networks’ for the purposes of that directive.

Costs

55 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. The second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors must be interpreted as meaning that there is a network of rail transport services, within the meaning of that provision, where transport services are provided, in application of national legislation transposing Directive 2012/34/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 21 November 2012 establishing a single European railway area, on a railway infrastructure managed by a national authority which allocates infrastructure capacity even if that authority is required to meet the requests of railway undertakings provided that the limits of that capacity are not reached.

2. The first subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as meaning that the activity pursued by a railway undertaking, which consists of providing transport services to the public in exercising a right of use of the railway network, is an 'operation of networks' for the purposes of that directive.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

M. CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 19 September 2018(1)

Case C-388/17

Konkurrensverket

SJ AB

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court, Sweden))

(Preliminary ruling — Public contracts in the rail transport sector — Activities relating to the provision or operation of networks — Definition of network — Award of a train-cleaning contract by a railway undertaking wholly owned by the State — No prior call for tenders)

1. SJ AB ('SJ') is a public limited company which provides rail passenger services and which is wholly owned by the Swedish State. In 2012, SJ concluded two contracts for the cleaning of its trains without having first issued a public call for tenders in respect of those contracts; that conduct is considered by the Konkurrensverket (Competition Authority, Sweden) to be contrary to Directive 2004/17/EC. (2)

2. The dispute between the public undertaking and the Konkurrensverket concerns the interpretation of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17. In particular, the referring court, which has to adjudicate on that dispute, seeks clarification of terms used in that article, the interpretation of which will enable it to determine whether a public undertaking providing rail transport services falls within the scope of that directive.

3. In that connection, there are two matters at issue:

— First, the definition of rail transport 'network' for the purposes of that provision.

— Second, in cases where a network exists, the meaning of the phrase 'the provision or operation of networks' used in that provision.

I. Legislative framework

A. EU law

1. Directive 2004/17

4. In accordance with Article 2:

'1. For the purposes of this directive'

(b) a “public undertaking” is any undertaking over which the contracting authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it.

A dominant influence on the part of the contracting authorities shall be presumed when these authorities, directly or indirectly, in relation to an undertaking:

– hold the majority of the undertaking’s subscribed capital, or

2. This directive shall apply to contracting entities:

(a) which are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7;

…’

5. Article 5 states:

‘1. This directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.

6. Article 30 reads:

‘1. Contracts intended to enable an activity mentioned in Articles 3 to 7 to be carried out shall not be subject to this directive if, in the Member State in which it is performed, the activity is directly exposed to competition on markets to which access is not restricted.

5. When the legislation of the Member State concerned provides for it, the contracting entities may ask the Commission to establish the applicability of paragraph 1 to a given activity by a Decision in conformity with paragraph 6 …

…’

2. Directive 2012/34/EU (3)

7. Pursuant to Article 1:

‘1. This directive lays down:

(a) the rules applicable to the management of railway infrastructure and to rail transport activities of the railway undertakings established or to be established in a Member State as set out in Chapter II;

(b) the criteria applicable to the issuing, renewal or amendment of licences by a Member State intended for railway undertakings which are or will be established in the Union as set out in Chapter III;

(c) the principles and procedures applicable to the setting and collecting of railway infrastructure charges and the allocation of railway infrastructure capacity as set out in Chapter IV.

2. This directive applies to the use of railway infrastructure for domestic and international rail services.'

8. Article 3 provides:

'For the purpose of this directive, the following definitions apply:

(1) "railway undertaking" means any public or private undertaking licensed according to this directive, the principal business of which is to provide services for the transport of goods and/or passengers by rail with a requirement that the undertaking ensure traction; this also includes undertakings which provide traction only;

(2) "infrastructure manager" means any body or firm responsible in particular for establishing, managing and maintaining railway infrastructure, including traffic management and control-command and signalling; the functions of the infrastructure manager on a network or part of a network may be allocated to different bodies or firms;

(3) "railway infrastructure" means the items listed in Annex I;

(24) "infrastructure capacity" means the potential to schedule train paths requested for an element of infrastructure for a certain period;

(25) "network" means the entire railway infrastructure managed by an infrastructure manager;

(27) "train path" means the infrastructure capacity needed to run a train between two places over a given period;

(28) "working timetable" means the data defining all planned train and rolling-stock movements which will take place on the relevant infrastructure during the period for which it is in force;

9. Article 10 stipulates:

'1. Railway undertakings shall be granted, under equitable, non-discriminatory and transparent conditions, the right to access to the railway infrastructure in all Member States for the purpose of operating all types of rail freight services. That right shall include access to infrastructure connecting maritime and inland ports and other service facilities referred to in point 2 of Annex II, and to infrastructure serving or potentially serving more than one final customer.

10. Under Article 27:

'1. The infrastructure manager shall, after consultation with the interested parties, develop and publish a network statement …

2. The network statement shall set out the nature of the infrastructure which is available to railway undertakings, and contain information setting out the conditions for access to the relevant railway infrastructure. The network statement shall also contain information setting out the conditions for access to service facilities connected to the network of the infrastructure manager and for supply of services in these facilities or indicate a website where such information is made available free of charge in electronic format. The content of the network statement is laid down in Annex IV.

11. Article 44 provides:

‘1. Applicants may apply under public or private law to the infrastructure manager to request an agreement granting rights to use railway infrastructure against a charge as provided for in Section 2 of Chapter IV.

…’

12. Article 45 reads:

‘1. The infrastructure manager shall, as far as possible, meet all requests for infrastructure capacity …

2. The infrastructure manager may give priority to specific services within the scheduling and coordination process but only as set out in Articles 47 and 49.

3. The infrastructure manager shall consult interested parties about the draft working timetable and allow them at least one month to present their views. Interested parties shall include all those who have requested infrastructure capacity and other parties who wish to have the opportunity to comment on how the working timetable may affect their ability to procure rail services during the working timetable period.

13. Article 46 stipulates:

‘1. During the scheduling process referred to in Article 45, where the infrastructure manager encounters conflicts between different requests, it shall attempt, through coordination of the requests, to ensure the best possible matching of all requirements.

2. Where a situation requiring coordination arises, the infrastructure manager shall have the right, within reasonable limits, to propose infrastructure capacity that differs from that which was requested.

B. National law

1. Lagen (2007:1092) om upphandling inom områdena vatten, energi, transporter och posttjänster (4)

14. Under Chapter 2, Paragraph 20, contracting entities include, inter alia, any undertaking over which a contracting authority may exercise a dominant influence. Dominant influence is to be presumed where a contracting authority, directly or indirectly, with regard to an undertaking, holds more than half of the shares in the undertaking, or controls a majority of the votes because of its shareholding or similar, or may nominate more than half of the members of the company’s supervisory board or corresponding governing body.

15. The first subparagraph of Chapter 1, Paragraph 8, provides that an activity is covered by the law if it constitutes the provision or operation of public networks in the form of transport by, inter alia, railway.

16. Under the second subparagraph of Chapter 1, Paragraph 8, a network in the field of transport services is deemed to exist if the service is provided in accordance with conditions which are laid down by a competent authority and which relate to the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available, the frequency of the service and similar conditions.

2. Järnvägslagen (2004:519) (5)

17. Under Chapter 5, Paragraph 2, a railway undertaking with its head office in a State within the EEA or in Switzerland is entitled to operate and organise services on the Swedish rail network.

18. Chapter 6, Paragraph 7, states that any entity which is entitled to operate or organise services on the Swedish rail network may request from an infrastructure manager an allocation of infrastructure capacity as regards train paths in accordance with the description of the rail network.

19. Chapter 6, Paragraphs 1 and 7, and Chapter 6, Paragraph 9, deal with requests for information about infrastructure capacity and also with the handling and determination of the allocation of infrastructure in response to requests for such capacity.

20. Chapter 6, Paragraph 9, provides that the infrastructure manager must prepare a draft working timetable on the basis of the requests which have been received.

21. It follows from Chapter 6, Paragraph 10, that the infrastructure manager is to attempt, by coordination, to resolve any conflicts of interest which arise in the allocation of capacity. Where that is impossible, the infrastructure manager is to provide an expedited dispute resolution procedure (Chapter 6, Paragraph 12).

22. Chapter 6, Paragraphs 14 and 15, concern the priority criteria stated in the description of the rail network.

II. Facts of the dispute and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

23. In January 2012, SJ concluded two contracts for the provision of cleaning services on its trains (the values of which were SEK 56 million and SEK 60 million respectively) without holding a public procurement procedure in respect of those contracts.

24. In January 2013, the Konkurrensverket lodged an application with the Förvaltningsrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court, Stockholm, Sweden) for an order that SJ pay a penalty fine on the grounds that that undertaking carried out an activity covered by Chapter 1, Paragraph 8, of the Law on procurement. SJ contested the form of order sought by the applicant, which was dismissed.

25. The Konkurrensverket lodged an appeal against the first-instance judgment with the Kammarrätten i Stockholm (Administrative Court of Appeal, Stockholm, Sweden), which was also dismissed.

26. The Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court, Sweden), which is seised of an appeal against the judgment of the appellate court, has referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 be interpreted as meaning that there is a network in the field of transport services when transport services on a State-administered rail network for national and international rail traffic are provided in accordance with provisions in national legislation which implement Directive 2012/34, which involve the allocation of rail infrastructure capacity on the basis of requests from railway companies and a requirement that all requests are to be met so far as possible?

(2) Must the first subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 be interpreted as meaning that an activity which is carried out by a railway company such as is referred to in Directive 2012/34 and which entails the provision of transport services to the public on a rail network constitutes the provision or operation of a network as referred to in that provision of the directive?’

III. Summary of the parties’ observations

A. The first question referred

27. The Konkurrensverket submits that, as Directive 2004/17 does not define what is to be understood by transport service ‘network’ or by ‘provision or operation of networks’, the meaning and scope of those terms reflect their usual meaning in everyday language, in accordance with the context in which they are used and the aims pursued.

28. The Konkurrensverket draws attention to the risk that public contracting entities, influenced by States, may tend to favour national undertakings in breach of the provisions of the FEU Treaty governing free movement and competition. The procurement procedures provided for in Directive 2004/17 are intended to neutralise that risk. Without such provisions, the reduction in competition which results from the limits inherent in network capacity would enable contracting entities to overlook financial considerations when awarding a contract and to focus on criteria of national preference.

29. The Konkurrensverket contends that Directive 2012/34 governs access by railway undertakings (like SJ) to a technical network of limited capacity. When the infrastructure manager allocates train paths on that network, it stipulates the conditions concerning, inter alia, the routes to be served, the transport capacity to be made available and the frequency of the service. The fact that the network manager must endeavour to meet requests made by railway undertakings does not alter the limited capacity of that network.

30. The Konkurrensverket acknowledges that, in accordance with Article 30 of Directive 2004/17, activities which fall within the scope of the directive are not subject thereto where those activities are directly exposed to competition on markets to which access is not restricted. However, that possibility requires a Commission Decision, after the relevant procedure has been held, which has not occurred in this instance.

31. SJ observes that, unlike other States, in which rail transport is still subject to a monopoly, rail transport in Sweden is completely deregulated and operates under an equal competition regime.

32. SJ states that, despite being a company which is wholly owned by the Swedish State, it does not receive any funding or any other State advantages. Its revenue comes from the sale of tickets and it does not benefit from any preferential treatment when it comes to the allocation of train paths.

33. SJ submits that the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted strictly, as is clear from the Court's case-law. (6) It is not sufficient that an entity is subject to a dominant influence of the kind referred to in Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 2004/17. The conditions set out in the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) must be laid down unilaterally by the competent authority of the Member State; those conditions are of immediate and essential concern to potential users in that they directly and specifically affect the manner in which the train service is provided by the railway undertaking.

34. SJ adds that both it and the other railway undertakings operating in Sweden determine themselves, on the basis of commercial criteria, the train paths, the trains they use, the timetables, the number of departures, the stops and the ticket prices. The infrastructure manager does not have any powers beyond those granted by Directive 2012/34 and its tasks are confined to ensuring access to the railway infrastructure on an equal basis but not to stipulating the specific conditions applicable to transport services provided by railway undertakings.

35. In the Commission's submission, the wording of the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 was intended to convey a broad definition of 'network'. A network can exist not only where there is physical infrastructure (as is the case of railway tracks and tram tracks) but also where there is no physical infrastructure, provided that there is a network of connected lines used by vehicles in accordance with the conditions laid down by the authorities. (7)

36. The Commission cites Directive 2012/34 as the instrument which, in addition to defining the actors involved in rail traffic, makes it possible to ensure that railway undertakings have transparent and non-discriminatory access to railway infrastructure. The Commission draws particular attention to Chapter IV, Section 3, which deals with the allocation of infrastructure capacity and describes the manner in which conditions like those laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 should be stipulated.

37. The Commission asserts that, since the Trafikverket (Transport Authority, Sweden) approves the network statement, decides on the allocation of train paths and determines the working timetable, it sets the conditions relating to the use of the railway infrastructure. The fact that that authority must, so far as possible, meet the requests of interested parties in no way precludes that assertion.

B. The second question referred

38. The Konkurrensverket submits that a transport services network exists for the purposes of the second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 where the movement of trains requires access to a technical network of limited capacity. The term ‘operation’ refers to the implementation in the strict sense of traffic on the railway network. (8)

39. SJ maintains that it is not in charge of railway infrastructure and that its activity is confined to providing transport services to the public who travel on that infrastructure. Accordingly, it is not involved in the provision or operation of the Swedish railway network, meaning that its activities do not fall within the scope of Directive 2004/17.

40. The Commission observes that the first subparagraph of Article 5(1) differentiates between the provision and operation of networks. Neither the first Procurement Directive (Directive 90/531/EEC) (9) nor Directive 93/38/EEC (10) used the term ‘provision’. It was Directive 2004/17 which included that term in order to cover the management of the physical network and distinguish between the two activities, which are normally assigned to different operators, thereby ensuring that both activities fall within the scope of the directive.

41. The Commission submits that the ‘operation of networks’ covers the actual provision of rail transport, whereas the ‘provision’ of networks refers to the possibility of access to the network so that it can be used by a third party.

IV. Procedure before the Court of Justice

42. The order for reference was received by the Registry of the Court on 29 June 2017.

43. Written observations were lodged by the Konkurrensverket, SJ and the European Commission; all those parties attended the hearing held on 13 June 2018.

V. Assessment

44. The parties to the proceedings and the referring court rely on Directive 2012/34 to delimit the dispute and understand the meaning of the terms used in Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17.

45. I believe that that approach is correct. However, Directive 2012/34 of 21 November 2012 cannot, as such, apply ratione temporis to contracts such as those at issue in these proceedings, which were signed in January 2012. That argument is overturned by the fact that Directive 2012/34 ‘recast and merged into a single act in the interest of clarity’ (11) other earlier directives which were in force when those contracts were concluded.

46. Moreover, it is common ground that SJ is a railway undertaking in accordance with the definition in Article 3(1) of Directive 2012/34, and that, as a company wholly owned by the State, it can be a contracting entity (specifically, a public undertaking, within the meaning of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 2004/17).

47. However, the national court is unsure whether SJ’s activity is covered by the description in Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17. Only if the answer to that question is in the affirmative will Directive 2004/17 be applicable to SJ, since Article 2(2)(a) of the directive requires that contracting entities must pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7 thereof.

A. The first question referred

48. Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 creates a connection between the concept of transport network (‘a network shall be considered to exist’) and the provision of a service ‘under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service’.

49. By its first question, the referring court seeks to clarify whether, by exercising its powers, the railway infrastructure manager, which is responsible for the allocation of train paths, in fact imposes conditions on railway undertakings which may affect matters such as routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.

50. The question relates to a situation in which railway undertakings, whether public or private, provide a transport service in a commercial manner (12) but are not themselves rail network managers. It is necessary, therefore, to examine first of all the definition of 'network', before going on to consider its effect on these proceedings. (13)

1. Management of the network and allocation of infrastructure capacity

51. Directive 2012/34 contains provisions applicable to the management of railway infrastructure, on the one hand, and the activities of railway undertakings, on the other. The latter provisions include those laying down the legal rules for obtaining licences and the allocation of infrastructure capacity to railway undertakings, which are required to pay infrastructure charges.

52. Naturally, rail infrastructure has a limited capacity (14) because it is a 'natural monopoly' (15) the deployment of which it would make no sense to increase. Rather than defining railway infrastructure, Directive 2012/34 prefers to describe the elements of which it is composed, and those are set out in Annex I thereto. (16) The concept of network is linked to railway infrastructure: the rail network is 'the entire railway infrastructure managed by an infrastructure manager'. (17)

53. Railway infrastructure (which is linked to the concept of train path) (18) is managed by the infrastructure manager, which is responsible for its operation, maintenance and renewal. Undertakings which have first obtained a licence designating them as railway undertakings must apply to the infrastructure manager for the right to use a certain infrastructure capacity.

54. The procedure for allocating railway infrastructure capacity is preceded by what is known as the 'network statement', in which the infrastructure manager sets out the general rules, time-limits, procedures and criteria governing the allocation of capacity. Directive 2012/34 leaves the specification of a wide range of matters in that connection to the discretion of the infrastructure manager. (19)

55. The basic principle is that the infrastructure manager must, as far as possible, meet all the requests for infrastructure capacity it receives. If that is not possible, it must apply other allocation criteria. (20) It must also prepare the draft working timetable and send it to the interested parties so that they may present their views.

56. The entirety of the decisions taken (21) on the award of infrastructure capacity enables the working timetable to be finalised through the planning of train and rolling stock movements on the infrastructure during the period that timetable is in force. Annex VII, paragraph 2, of Directive 2012/34 provides for the situation where the working timetable is changed or adjusted, which gives an idea of its flexibility and adaptability to changing circumstances.

2. Application to the instant case

57. As I have observed, SJ maintains that, in Sweden, railway undertakings determine the routes on which their trains will travel, their timetables, the number of departures and the stopping places. SJ argues that if that capacity is limited, it is simply because that is dictated by the limited physical capacity of the infrastructure but not because the infrastructure manager is vested with the power to determine unilaterally the manner in which the service provided by railway undertakings is managed.

58. I do not find SJ's line of reasoning persuasive. The infrastructure manager operates on the basis of a situation which offers limited options (in terms of space and time) for meeting the requests of undertakings. Given that routes are restricted to where the railway tracks are laid and are dependent on the performance of service facilities, the infrastructure manager must of necessity coordinate the transport services provided by all railway undertakings. That also occurs on the Swedish State network.

59. The freedom of railway undertakings, like SJ, to offer the public the routes which they prefer and the train timetables which best suit them is compatible with the fact that those offers are subject to the coordination decisions of the infrastructure manager. It is the infrastructure manager, therefore, which ultimately ‘lays down’ (even when it is meeting requests from undertakings) the so-called ‘operating conditions’ of the service.

60. Directive 2012/34 includes many cases in which the infrastructure manager is granted powers in relation to those conditions. The definitions laid down in Article 3, relating to ‘alternative route’, ‘viable alternative’ and ‘congested infrastructure’, are echoed later in the rules pursuant to which the infrastructure manager may — and must — be involved in setting the conditions for use of the rail network where these concern the ‘capacity to be made available’, the ‘routes to be served’ and the ‘frequency of the service’, in order to prevent duplication and congestion. (22)

61. The network statement, which has to be published by the infrastructure manager, also enables the infrastructure manager to modify aspects which cannot be determined a priori. The infrastructure manager may also allocate capacity which differs from that requested, which shows that the degree of latitude of undertakings providing rail transport services is restricted by finite possibilities, inherent in the scarcity of available resources, which the infrastructure manager must manage.

62. Lastly, it is acceptable to impose public-service obligations on rail transport, and those may further affect the conditions governing access to the infrastructure. Directive 2012/34 provides for open access services and services under public service contracts to co-exist on the rail networks of the Member States, with the option for prioritised criteria to be set in cases where infrastructure is congested. (23)

63. In short, the need to manage and allocate limited rail resources means that the infrastructure manager must have the power to impose on undertakings which use those resources conditions governing the provision of their services, as regards the capacity to be made available, the routes to be served and the frequency of services. That is specifically what Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 requires in order for a transport network to be considered to exist.

B. The second question referred

64. The referring court seeks to ascertain the meaning of the expression ‘the provision or operation of networks’ used in Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17. In particular, the referring court asks whether, because rail undertakings provide rail transport services, their activities are covered by one of those terms.

65. The uncertainties relate to the ‘operation of networks’. It appears to be common ground that the ‘provision of networks’ is a prerogative of the infrastructure manager, not the transport undertakings. I shall therefore focus on the interpretation of the term ‘operation’.

66. The Commission’s suggestion is thought-provoking in its clarity: the ‘provision’ of networks refers to the duties of the infrastructure manager, whereas the ‘operation of networks’ is an activity of railway undertakings. That is confirmed by the legislative evolution which led to the wording of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17: unlike the related articles of the earlier directives on the award of contracts in specific sectors, (24) which referred exclusively to the ‘operation of networks’, in 2004 the word ‘provision [of those networks]’ was added.

67. The Commission submits that the word ‘provision’ was inserted to cover the management of the physical network and to distinguish between two different activities: the ‘operation of networks’ covers the actual provision of rail transport services, which is performed by undertakings, whereas the ‘provision’ of networks refers to the possibility of accessing the network so that it can be used by a third party.

68. However, the Commission’s argument encounters an obstacle: Directive 2012/34 clearly differentiates between ‘the provision of transport services’, on the one hand, and ‘the operation of infrastructure’, on the other. (25) The latter is the responsibility of the infrastructure manager, whereas the provision of transport services is performed by undertakings which are granted a licence for that purpose.

69. Directive 2012/34 refers more than once to the notion of ‘operating rail transport services’, which it identifies with the activities of entities which are licensed as railway undertakings and provide those services to the public. However, according to the terminology of that directive, the ‘operation of the service’ is not the same as the ‘operation of infrastructure’.

70. Under Directive 2012/34, the ‘operation of infrastructure’ is exclusively the task of the infrastructure manager, which not only makes that infrastructure available to undertakings providing rail transport services but also maintains (26) and manages it, using the network to carry out the functions assigned to infrastructure managers under Article 7 of that directive.

71. That bipartite scheme was already apparent in the definitions contained in the original version of Directive 2012/34. The definition of ‘network’ in that directive (27) suggested that its operation was the responsibility of the infrastructure manager. Subsequent provisions have advanced on the same lines:

— First, Implementing Regulation 2015/909, applicable to the calculation of the operating costs defrayed through the infrastructure charge, (28) creates a link between railway undertakings and the operation of rail services (recital 18), as opposed to the infrastructure manager-operation of the network relationship referred to in recital 2 (‘Infrastructure managers are under the obligation to operate networks’).

— Second, the amendment of Directive 2012/34 in 2016 added new wording to Article 3(2), in accordance with which ‘“operation of the railway infrastructure” means train path allocation, traffic management and infrastructure charging’. (29) Those tasks are assigned to the infrastructure manager and not to transport undertakings.

72. In those circumstances, there are two options as regards interpretation. The first is to interpret Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 in the light of later legislation which specifically governs the single railway area (in particular, Directive 2012/34 and the amendments thereof).

73. If that approach is taken, it will be necessary to bring the term ‘operation of [rail] networks’, used in Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17, into line with the term ‘operation of [railway] infrastructure’ used in Directive 2012/34. Operation of the rail service is not covered by that term if regard is had to the definition (now) provided by Article 3(2b) of Directive 2012/34, as amended by Directive 2016/2370. In other words, operation of the network does not encompass operation of the rail service, which relates to the provision of transport services by railway undertakings.

74. The second option favours an autonomous interpretation of the term ‘operation of networks’ in Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17, which is unaffected by the legislative vicissitudes to which I referred above. (30) In line with that interpretation, there is nothing to preclude railway undertakings from also ‘operating’ the network, in the sense that they enjoy the benefit of it, take advantage of it or use it to provide rail transport.

75. A number of arguments tend to support that second option. First, there is the argument put forward by the Commission regarding the origins of Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17, which, by introducing the ‘provision of the network’ as a separate concept distinct from the operation of the network, appears to extend the semantic scope of the latter expression.

76. Second, from a literal point of view, the different meanings of the word ‘operation’ include that which identifies it with the action of deriving benefit from something by using it. Undertakings providing rail services to travellers ‘operate’ the network on which their trains travel; that is, they use it or take advantage of it to obtain from it the benefit inherent in their public service activity.

77. Third, taking a systematic approach, it would make little sense if Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 were to exclude generally from its scope undertakings providing transport services, on the basis that that activity does not constitute operation of the network, only then to go on (Article 5(2)) to state straightaway that the directive is not to apply ‘to entities providing bus transport services to the public which were excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38/EEC pursuant to Article 2(4) thereof.’ The reason that explicit statement is needed is because other undertakings which provide transport services are, in principle, covered by Directive 2004/17.

78. Fourth and finally, Directive 2004/17 includes ‘the non-exhaustive lists of contracting entities within the meaning of this Directive [which] are contained in Annexes I to X.’ (31) Thus, Annex IV, which concerns contracting entities in the field of rail services, lists the public undertakings in the different Member States which provide those services. In particular, as regards Sweden, such undertakings include ‘public entities operating railway services in accordance with the järnvägslagen (2004:519) and järnvägsförordningen (2004:526).' (32)

79. The inclusion of that class of entity (to which SJ belongs) in Annex IV to Directive 2004/17 reveals that the EU legislature considers that the activities of undertakings which provide transport services to the public using the rail network come within the concept of the operation of that network, for the purposes of Article 5(1) of that directive, meaning that, where the other conditions are satisfied, the procurement procedures laid down in Directive 2004/17 must be used. (33)

80. In short, while recognising that there is a certain lack of consistency between the terms used in the provisions relating to the single European railway area (Directive 2012/34 and concordant provisions) and those used in Directive 2004/17, the interpretation of the phrase 'operation of networks' in Article 5(1) of the latter directive is not dependent on the terms defined in the former.

81. Finally, SJ has stressed that it is an undertaking which operates for strictly commercial ends, in competition with other rail operators, which, it submits, precludes it from being regarded as a contracting entity covered by the provisions of Directive 2004/17.

82. Directive 2004/17 provides for that situation in Article 30 ('Procedure for establishing whether a given activity is directly exposed to competition'). Suffice it to state that, in this case, there is no evidence that that procedure has been used, from which it follows that the application of that directive cannot be excluded.

VI. Conclusion

83. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court of Justice reply as follows to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Högsta förvaltningsdomstolen (Supreme Administrative Court, Sweden):

> Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors must be interpreted as meaning that:
> – there is a 'network' when State-administered rail infrastructure is made available to undertakings providing transport services, under operating conditions laid down by the competent authority of that State, even if that authority is required to meet, so far as possible, all requests for the allocation of capacity submitted by those undertakings.
> – the activity carried out by a public undertaking, consisting of the provision of public transport services using the rail network, constitutes the 'operation of networks' for the purposes of Directive 2004/17/EC.

---

13 Although SJ mentions that there are more than 320 railway infrastructure managers in Sweden, it must be noted that the network at issue in these proceedings is a State network. That follows from Paragraph 2, point 9, of the förordningen (2010:185) med instruktion för Trafikverket (Ordinance (2010:185) laying down instructions for the Trafikverket [Swedish Transport Authority]), in accordance with which, if no other decision is adopted, the infrastructure manager for the rail network belonging to the Swedish State is the Trafikverket. 18 Infrastructure capacity means ‘the potential to schedule train paths requested for an element of infrastructure for a certain period’ (Article 3(24) and (27)).

---

19 For example, the laying down of rules for the determination of charges (Article 29(3)), the setting of requirements to be met by applicants (Article 41(2)), the establishment of the principles governing the coordination process and the dispute resolution system (Article 46(4) and (6)), and, finally, in relation to congested infrastructure, the procedures to be followed and the criteria to be used and the setting of the minimum use quota (Article 47(6) and Article 52(2)).

---

20 When the infrastructure manager identifies conflicts between different requests, it must attempt, through coordination of the requests, to ensure the best possible matching of all requirements and it has the right, within reasonable limits, to propose infrastructure capacity that differs from that which was requested.

21 Although the directive does not refer explicitly to decisions on the allocation of infrastructure capacity, the adoption of such decisions is implied. Article 46(6) provides for a dispute resolution system (without prejudice to the relevant appeal procedure under Article 56).

22 Directive (EU) 2016/2370 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 14 December 2016 amending Directive 2012/34/EU as regards the opening of the market for domestic passenger transport services by rail and the governance of the railway infrastructure (OJ 2016 L 352, p. 1) confirms that approach. Recital 28 of that directive states that ‘Member States may attach specific conditions to the right of access to the infrastructure in order to allow for the implementation of an integrated timetable scheme for domestic passenger services by rail.’

23 The second subparagraph of Article 47(4) of Directive 2012/34 refers to public-service requirements. 33 Although in the judgment of 5 October 2017, LitSpecMet, C-567/15, EU:C:2017:736, it did not address the issue raised in these proceedings, with which the reference for a preliminary ruling in that case was not concerned, the Court held that, in the circumstances of the case and subject to certain exceptions, the activity of a subsidiary wholly owned by the Lithuanian rail company, to which it provided the rail equipment necessary for it to carry on its rail transport activity, intended to meet needs in the general interest, was covered by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114). In my Opinion in that case (C-567/15, EU:C:2017:319), I argued, in response to the submission of one of the parties which claimed that Directive 2004/17 was applicable, that, ‘since Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 and the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 contain identical definitions of “bodies governed by public law”, … the questions raised by the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius) can be answered without making a prior determination on the applicability of either directive.’

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Third Chamber)

28 November 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Review procedures — Directive 89/665/EEC — Article 1(3) — Directive 92/13/EEC –Article 1(3) — Right to bring proceedings subject to the condition that a tender was submitted in a procurement procedure)

In Case C-328/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Liguria (Regional Administrative Court, Liguria, Italy), made by decision of 8 February 2017, received at the Court on 31 May 2017, in the proceedings

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 26 April 2018,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and C. Colelli, avvocato dello Stato,

– the Czech Government, by M. Smolek, J. Vláčil and T. Müller, acting as Agents, – the Spanish Government, by M.J. García-Valdecasas Dorrego, acting as Agent, – the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 5 July 2018,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(1) to (3) and Article 2(1) (b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) ('Directive 89/665').

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Amt Azienda Trasporti e Mobilità SpA, Atc Esercizio SpA, Atp Esercizio Srl, Riviera Trasporti SpA and Tpl Linea Srl ('Amt and Others') and Atpl Liguria Agenzia regionale per il trasporto pubblico locale SpA (Regional Agency for Local Public Transport, Italy, 'the Agency') concerning the decision of the latter to launch an informal tender procedure for the award of public transport services in the Regione per la Liguria (Region of Liguria, Italy, the 'Region of Liguria').

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 89/665

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides:

'1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts [(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2004/18], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed [EU] law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming harm in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing [EU] law and other national rules.

3. Member States shall ensure that review procedures are available, under detailed rules which Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

4 Article 2(1) of that directive which concerns '[r]equirements for review procedures' states:

'The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

…'

5 Entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, Article 1(3) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14) as amended by Directive 2007/66 (‘Directive 92/13’), provides:

‘Member States shall ensure that review procedures are available, under detailed rules which Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.’

Directive 2004/17

6 Article 1 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), on ‘basic terms’, provided in paragraph 3(b) thereof:

‘A “service concession” is a contract of the same type as a service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right together with payment.’

7 Article 5 of that directive, entitled ‘Transport services’, provided in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.’

8 Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Works and service concessions’, was worded as follows:

‘This Directive shall not apply to works and service concessions which are awarded by contracting entities carrying out one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7, where those concessions are awarded for carrying out those activities.’

Regulation No 1370/2007

9 Article 5 of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2007 on public passenger transport services by rail and by road and repealing Council Regulations (EEC) Nos 1191/69 and 1107/70 (OJ 2007 L 315, p. 1), entitled ‘Award of public service contracts’, is worded as follows:

‘1. Public service contracts shall be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down in this Regulation. However, service contracts or public service contracts as defined in Directives [2004/17] or [2004/18] for public passenger transport services by bus or tram shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures provided for under those Directives where such contracts do not take the form of service concessions contracts as defined in those Directives. Where contracts are to be awarded in accordance with Directives 2004/17/EC or 2004/18/EC, the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 6 of this Article shall not apply.

7. Member States shall take the necessary measures to ensure that decisions taken in accordance with paragraphs 2 to 6 may be reviewed effectively and rapidly, at the request of any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed [EU] law or national rules implementing that law.

…’

10 Article 100 of the codice di procedura civile (Italian Code of Civil Procedure), in the version applicable at the material time, provides that ‘in order to bring or oppose a claim, a party must have sufficient legal interest in that claim’.

11 Article 39(1) of Annex 1 to decreto legge n. 104/2010 — Codice del processo amministrativo (Decree Law No 104 on the Administrative Procedure Code) of 2 July 2010 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 156 of 7 July 2010) provides: ‘For any matter that is not regulated by this Code the provisions of the Italian Code of Civil Procedure should be applied as far as they are compatible or express general principles.’

12 Article 3a of decreto legge n. 138 (Decree Law No 138) of 13 August 2011 (GURI No 188 of 13 August 2011) amended and converted into law by Law No 148 of 14 September 2011 (‘Decree Law No 138/2011’) states that, in principle, local public services must be operated at provincial level.

13 Under Article 9(1) and Article 14(1) of the Legge regionale n. 33 (Riforma del Sistema del trasporto pubblio regionale e locale) (Regional law No 33 (Reform of the system of regional and local public transport) of 7 November 2013 (‘Regional law No 33/2013’), public transport services in the Region of Liguria had to be award in one single lot relating to the entire region with the possibility of extension also to rail transport.

14 Taking effect on 12 August 2016, the legge regionale n. 19 Modifiche alla [legge regionale n. 33] (Regional Law No 19 amending Regional Law No 33) of 9 August 2016 (‘Regional Law No 19/2016’) amended Articles 9 and 14 of Regional law No 33/2013. That law provides that henceforward land and sea transport services are no longer required to be awarded in a single lot covering all the territory of the Region of Liguria, but may be awarded in four lots concerning four homogenous territorial areas.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

15 Amt and Others brought an action before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Liguria (Regional Administrative Court, Liguria, Italy) seeking the annulment of various acts by which the Agency launched the informal tender procedure for public transport services in the Region of Liguria.

16 Those companies, which were until then operators of local public transport services at provincial or sub-provincial levels, challenge, as a matter of principle, the detailed rules for the launch and conduct of the tendering procedure. Their action is aimed specifically at the notice for the selection of economic operators. The Agency specified therein that regional public transport services would from then on be awarded in one single lot covering the whole territory of the Region of Liguria.

17 Taking the view that it would be impossible for any of the plaintiffs to provide public transport services individually at regional level, Amt and Others did not submit tenders. However, they brought an action before the referring court challenging the decision of the Agency, in its capacity of contracting authority, to award the contract at issue in the main proceedings as one single lot covering the whole territory of the Region of Liguria. In their view, that decision is contrary to Article 3a of Decree-Law No 138/2011, under which local public services must, in principle, be operated at provincial level, but also various articles of the Italian Constitution and Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

18 In support of their action, Amt and Others argue that an economic operator which challenges, as a matter of principle, the terms of a tendering procedure in which it has not participated has a right to a remedy under Article 1(3) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 if, in the light of the legislation relating to the tendering procedure, it is certain or highly likely that it will be impossible for that operator to be awarded the contract.

19 According to the referring court, if the territorial framework had been set at provincial level, Amt and Others would have had a good chance of winning the contract at issue, as they provided regional public transport services when, prior to the launch of the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings, it was organised at provincial level. However, by specifying that that procedure was to consist of one single lot covering the whole of the territory of the region, the tender notice reduced the chances that one of the plaintiffs in the main proceedings would be awarded the contract to almost zero.

20 Therefore, taking the view that they should be granted a right to bring an action, the referring court, by Order No 95 of 21 January 2016, asked the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court, Italy) about the constitutionality of Article 9(1) and Article 14(1) of Regional Law No 33/2013.

21 However, before the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court) gave judgment, the Region of Liguria adopted Regional Law No 19/2016. That law amended the provisions whose constitutionality was challenged and provides that land and sea transport services are no longer required to be awarded in one single lot covering the whole of the territory of the Region of Liguria, but in four lots corresponding to four homogenous territorial areas. Furthermore, the lots to be awarded must be defined so as to ensure the widest possible participation in the call for tenders. According to the referring court, by the adoption of Law No 19/2016, the regional legislature has responded to the complaints expressed by Amt and Others.

22 In spite of the amendment to Articles 9 and 14 of Regional Law No 33/2013, the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court) examined the constitutionality of those articles in accordance with the principle tempus regit actum.

23 In its judgment No 245 of 22 November 2016, it judged the questions on constitutionality to be inadmissible after stating, inter alia, that 'according to settled case-law on administrative law, an undertaking which does not take part in a call for tenders cannot challenge a tender procedure nor the award of the contract to a third company, because its legal position is not sufficiently distinct and concerns a purely factual interest …'.

24 However, that rule may be derogated from if the plaintiff company challenges, inter alia, the clauses of the tender notice which directly exclude it or clauses imposing obligations which are clearly unreasonable, totally disproportionate, or which make it impossible to submit a tender.

25 In its judgment No 245, the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court) held that 'it is clear from the grounds of the order for reference that the case before this court is not one of those exceptional cases, as it is stated therein that the provisions challenged affect the plaintiffs' chances of being awarded the tender which "were reduced to almost zero" whereas if the contract was organised on a provincial basis and divided into lots, those companies "would have a very good chance of being awarded the contract, if only because of the advantage of having being the previous operators of that service". Such reasoning does not disclose any certain and present obstacle to participation in the procedure, but only a possibility of damage which may be relied on only by a party which has taken part in the procedure and only at the end of that procedure, as a result of the failure to award that contract to the applicant'.

26 The referring court points out that, according to the interpretation of the procedural requirement to have an interest in bringing proceedings, adopted in the judgment of the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court), an action brought by a company which has not taken part in a tender procedure is inadmissible if it is very likely, but not absolutely certain that, because of the way in which the contracting authority has presented and organised the tendering procedure, in particular by dividing the tender into lots or the rules which are applicable to it, that company cannot be awarded the contract concerned. It infers that access to legal protection would therefore be almost systematically subject to participation in the tender procedure, which would in itself generate significant expenses, even if the company intended to challenge the legality of the tender procedure itself on the ground that it excessively restricted competition.

27 Notwithstanding the Agency's decision not to proceed with the tender procedure after the adoption of Law No 19/2016, the referring court asks the Court whether Article 1(3) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted, in the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, as conferring a right to bring proceedings on an economic operator who did not submit a tender on the ground that it was certain or very likely that it could not win the contract at issue.

28 The answer of the Court will be decisive for the determination of the admissibility of the original action and, therefore, the allocation of costs in the main proceedings.

29 In that context, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Liguria (Regional Administrative Court, Liguria) decided to stay its proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Do Article 1(1), (2) and (3) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 … preclude a national law which recognises only economic operators that applied to take part in a tendering procedure as being able to challenge the documents relating to a tendering procedure, even when the action challenges the tendering procedure as a matter of principle because the rules of the tendering procedure make it highly unlikely that the economic operator would be awarded the contract?’

Consideration of the question referred

Admissibility

30 In their written submissions both the Italian and Spanish Governments and the European Commission argued that the request for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible on the ground that the question referred is hypothetical, as the dispute in the main proceedings has become devoid of purpose after the contracting authority indicated that the tender procedure would be discontinued. The Italian Government also submitted that the request for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible on the ground that doubts remain as to the nature of the contract that the Agency wished to conclude with the contracting party following the tender procedure.

The hypothetical nature of the question referred for a preliminary ruling

31 It must be recalled that, according to settled case-law, in the context of cooperation between the Court and national courts as provided for by Article 267 TFEU, it is solely for the national court, which alone has direct knowledge of the facts of the case and of the arguments put forward by the parties, and which must bear the responsibility for the subsequent decision, is in the best position to determine, in the light of the special features of each case and with full knowledge of the matter before it, both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court (see, in particular, to that effect, judgments of 22 June 2000, Marca Mode, C-425/98, EU:C:2000:339, paragraph 21, and of 1 April 2008, Gouvernement de la Communauté française and Gouvernement wallon, C-212/06, EU:C:2008:178, paragraph 28).

32 Consequently, where the questions concern the interpretation of EU law, the Court of Justice is, in principle, bound to give a ruling (judgment of 17 April 2007, AGM-COS.MET, C-470/03, EU:C:2007:213, paragraph 44).

33 It follows that the presumption that questions referred by national courts for a preliminary ruling are relevant may be rebutted only in exceptional cases, where it is quite obvious that the interpretation which is sought of the provisions of EU law referred to in the questions bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or to its purpose (see, in particular, judgments of 15 December 1995, Bosman, C-415/93, EU:C:1995:463, paragraph 61; of 7 September 1999, Beck and Bergdorf, Case C-355/97, EU:C:1999:391, paragraph 22, and of 1 April 2008, Gouvernement de la Communauté française and Gouvernement wallon, C-212/06, EU:C:2008:178, paragraph 29).

34 A reference by a national court can be rejected only if it appears that the procedure laid down by Article 267 TFEU has been misused and a ruling from the Court elicited by means of a contrived dispute, or it is obvious that EU law cannot apply, either directly or indirectly, to the circumstances of the case referred to the Court (see, to that effect, judgments of 18 October 1990, Dzodzi, C-297/88 and C-197/89, EU:C:1990:360, paragraph 40, and of 17 July 1997, Leur-Bloem, C-28/95, EU:C:1997:369, paragraph 26).

35 In the present case, there is no argument that the question whether the plaintiffs in the main proceedings had the right to bring an action against the call for tenders published by the Agency on the basis of EU law would be the condition for the admissibility of the action before the referring court. It is true, by reason of the Agency’s decision not to pursue the call for tenders after the adoption of Law No 19/2016, that the main subject matter of the dispute has disappeared.

36 However, unlike the circumstances of the case which gave rise to the order of the Court of 14 October 2010, Reinke (C-336/08, not published, EU:C:2010:604), the merits of the dispute in the main proceedings have not been adjudicated on.

37 Finally, although the examination of the question whether, in the circumstances of the dispute in the main proceedings, economic operators which consciously decided not to take part in a tender procedure had a right to bring proceedings under Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 or Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13, is only intended to enable the referring court to adjudicate on the allocation of costs in the dispute in the main proceedings, it is undeniably a question relating to the interpretation of EU law to which the Court must respond in order to maintain the uniformity of application of that law.

38 To that extent, it must be held that the request for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

Failure to identify the nature of the contract at issue in the main proceedings

39 It is true, as the Italian Government submits in its written observations, that it is unclear from the order for reference whether the call for tenders issued by the Agency covered the award of a concession for transport services or a public services contract. In the first case, whether the plaintiffs in the main proceedings had an interest in bringing proceedings would be determined with regard to Article 5(7) of Regulation No 1370/2007, whereas in the second case, it would be examined in the light of Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13.

40 However, without there being any need to try to determine the nature of that contract, which is a matter for the referring court, it suffices to state, as the Advocate General observed in point 63 of his Opinion, that Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 and Article 5(7) of Regulation No 1370/2007 establish systems of remedies analogous to the system in Directive 89/665, to which the question from the referring court relates.

41 In those circumstances, the right to legal protection which is equivalent protection in the three texts of secondary law in question in the preceding paragraph, the answer of the Court to the question referred cannot vary according to the classification of the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

42 Therefore, the request for a preliminary ruling must also be declared admissible to that extent.

Substance

43 By its question, the referring court asks essentially whether both Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which does not allow economic operators to bring an action against decisions of the contracting authority relating to a tender procedure in which they have decided not to participate on the ground that the legislation applicable to that procedure made it very unlikely that they would be awarded the public contract concerned.

44 In accordance with Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, the Member States are required to ensure that the review procedures provided for are available ‘at least’ to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement of the EU law on public procurement or national rules transposing that law (see, to that effect, judgments of 12 February 2004, Grossmann Air Service, C-230/02, EU:C:2004:93, paragraph 25, and of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 23).

45 Therefore, Member States are not obliged to make those review procedures available to any person wishing to obtain a public contract, but they may require that the person concerned has been or risks being harmed by the infringement he alleges (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 June 2003, Hackermüller, C-249/01, EU:C:2003:359, paragraph 18, and of 12 February 2004, Grossmann Air Service, C-230/02, EU:C:2004:93, paragraph 26).

46 Participation in a contract award procedure may, in principle, with regard to Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, validly constitute a condition which must be fulfilled before the person concerned can show an interest in obtaining the contract at issue or that he risks suffering harm as a result of the allegedly unlawful nature of the decision to award that contract. If he has not submitted a tender it will be difficult for such a person to show that he has an interest in challenging that decision or that he has been harmed or risks being harmed as a result of that award decision (judgment of 12 February 2004, Grossmann Air Service, C-230/02, EU:C:2004:93, paragraph 27).

47 However, where an undertaking has not submitted a tender because there were allegedly discriminatory specifications in the documents relating to the invitation to tender, or in the contract documents, which have specifically prevented it from being in a position to provide all the services requested, it would be too much to require an undertaking allegedly harmed by discriminatory clauses in the documents relating to the invitation to tender to submit a tender, before being able to avail itself of the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665 against such specifications, in the award procedure for the contract at issue, even though its chances of being awarded the contract are non-existent by reason of the existence of those specifications (judgment of 12 February 2004, Grossmann Air Service, C-230/02, EU:C:2004:93, paragraphs 28 and 29).

48 In the judgment of 12 February 2004, Grossmann Air Service (C-230/02, EU:C:2004:93), the finding that the chances of Grossman Air Service being awarded the contract were non-existent was related to the fact, set out in paragraph 17 of that judgment, that it did not have large aircraft available to it, so that it was not in a position to provide all the services requested by the contracting authority.

49 The findings derived from the judgment of 12 February 2004, Grossmann Air Service (C-230/02, EU:C:2004:93), are applicable mutatis mutandis in the present case.

50 It is clear both from the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) and judgment No 245/2016 of the Corte costituzionale (Constitutional Court) that exceptionally an economic operator which has not submitted a tender may be held to have an interest in bringing proceedings ‘in the case in which the complaints of the plaintiff company concern the absence of a call for tender, its scheduling, or clauses which were immediately exclusive or imposing obligations which are manifestly unreasonable to totally disproportionate or which make the submission of such a tender impossible’.

51 Therefore, it must be held that the requirements laid down in Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 are satisfied if an operator which has not submitted a tender has a right to bring proceedings, inter alia, where it considers that the specifications contained in the documents relating to the call for tenders makes it impossible to submit a tender.

52 It must be pointed out that, so as not to undermine the objectives of speed and effectiveness laid down by Directive 89/665 and Directive 92/13, such an action cannot be brought after notification of the decision awarding the contract has been adopted by the contracting authority (see, to that effect, judgment of 12 February 2004, Grossmann Air Service, C-230/02, EU:C:2004:93, paragraph 37).

53 Furthermore, since it is only in exceptional cases that a right to bring proceedings is given to an operator which has not submitted a tender, it cannot be regarded as excessive to require that operator to demonstrate that the clauses in the call for tenders make it impossible to submit a tender.

54 However, although the stringency of the evidential requirements is not in itself contrary to EU law on public procurement, it is possible that, having regard to the specific circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, its application may lead to an infringement of the right to bring proceedings that the plaintiffs in the main proceedings derive from Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13.

55 In that connection, it is for the referring court to make a detailed assessment, taking account of all the relevant information characterising the context of the case brought before it, of whether the application of the Italian legislation relating to the capacity to bring proceedings, as interpreted by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) and the Corte constituzionale (Constitutional Court) is in practice liable to affect the right of the plaintiffs in the main proceedings to effective judicial protection.

56 However, based on the information in the file, the Court may provide the referring court with valuable guidance for the assessment it is to carry out.

57 In that connection, first, account must be taken of the fact that Amt and Others provided regional transport services before the contracting authority launched the tendering procedure and then decided to discontinue it. Since, Regional Law No 33/2013 states that regional public transport services would be awarded henceforward in one single lot covering the whole territory of the Region of Liguria, even though Article 3a of Decree-Law No 138/2011 provides that, in principle, local public services must be operated at provincial level, the referring court is to examine whether the regional legislature set out the reasons for which it considered that it was preferable from that time on to organise transport services at regional level and no longer at provincial level. Lastly, taking account of the freedom of the contracting authority in the assessment of its needs, it is possible that the Region of Liguria's decision to organise transport services at regional level was legitimate in that, for example, it was based on economic considerations, such as the commitment to achieving economies of scale.

58 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that both Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which does not allow economic operators to bring an action against the decisions of a contracting authority relating to a tendering procedure in which they have decided not to participate on the ground that the legislation applicable to that procedure made the award to them of the contract concerned very unlikely.

However, it is for the competent national court to make a detailed assessment, taking account of all the relevant information characterising the context of the case brought before it, as to whether the application of that legislation in practice is liable to affect the right of the economic operators concerned to the right to effective judicial protection.

Costs

59 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Both Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, and Article 1(3) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2007/66, must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which does not allow economic operators to bring an action against the decisions of a contracting authority relating to a tendering procedure in which they have decided not to participate on the ground that the legislation applicable to that procedure made the award to them of the contract concerned very unlikely.

However, it is for the competent national court to make a detailed assessment, taking account of all the relevant information characterising the context of the case brought before it, as to whether the application of that legislation in practice is liable to affect the right of the economic operators concerned to the right to effective judicial protection.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 5 July 2018 (1)

Case C-328/17

Amt Azienda Trasporti e Mobilità SpA,

Atc Esercizio SpA,

Atp Esercizio Srl,

Riviera Trasporti SpA,

Tpl Linea Srl

v

Atpl Liguria — Agenzia regionale per il trasporto pubblico locale SpA,

Regione Liguria

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Liguria (Regional Administrative Court, Liguria, Italy))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Admissibility — Dispute having become devoid of purpose — Directive 89/665/EEC — Review procedures — Need to have participated in the call for tenders in order to be able to seek review — Tenderer's standing in the event of absolute certainty as to ineligibility)

1. In a case which no longer needs to be settled by way of judgment because it has become (legally) devoid of purpose in the absence of any further substantive dispute between the parties, may the judge who was to adjudicate in that case make a reference for a preliminary ruling confined exclusively to determining who should pay the costs of the proceedings?

2. The Court of Justice has two options:

– On the one hand, it can adhere to the precedent which it established in Reinke (2) and find that, in those circumstances, there is no longer any need to answer the question referred for a preliminary ruling, which is inadmissible.

– On the other hand, it can overcome that obstacle, in which case its reply to the referring court will have to provide an interpretation of the directives on review procedures in the award of public contracts. (3) That interpretation is sought from the Court of Justice so that the referring court can compare it with that supported by the highest courts in Italy (the Council of State and the Constitutional Court) in connection with the standing of an undertaking to challenge the documents relating to a tendering procedure in which it did not participate. According to the referring court, the award of costs in the dispute in the main proceedings will depend on the answer given to this question.

I. Legal framework

A. EU law

1. Directive 89/665 and Directive 92/13 (4)

3. Article 1 (‘Scope and availability of review procedures’) provides:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts [(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive [Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Article 5(2), Articles 18 to 26, Articles 29 and 30 or Article 62 of that Directive].

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts [supply, works and service contracts], framework agreements, public works concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC [Directive 2004/17/EC], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming harm in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

…’

4. Article 2 (‘Requirements for review procedures’) states:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure [in the notice of contract, the periodic indicative notice, the notice on the existence of a system of qualification, the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure in question].

…’

2. Regulation No 1370/2007 (5)

5. Article 5 (‘Award of public service contracts’) provides:

‘1. Public service contracts shall be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down in this Regulation. However, service contracts or public service contracts as defined in Directives 2004/17/EC or 2004/18/EC for public passenger transport services by bus or tram shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures provided for under those Directives where such contracts do not take the form of service concessions contracts as defined in those Directives. Where contracts are to be awarded in accordance with Directives 2004/17/EC or 2004/18/EC, the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 6 of this Article shall not apply.

7. Member States shall take the necessary measures to ensure that decisions taken in accordance with paragraphs 2 to 6 may be reviewed effectively and rapidly, at the request of any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law or national rules implementing that law.

…’

B. Italian law

1. Decree Law No 138 of 13 August 2011 (6)

6. Article 3a thereof provides that, as a general rule, the province is the territorial unit of reference for the provision of local public services.

2. Liguria Regional Law No 33 of 7 November 2103 (7)

7. According to Articles 9(1) and 14(1), service contracts are to be awarded by determining a single lot covering the entirety of the regional territory. (8)

3. Codice del processo amministrativo (Code of Administrative Procedure) (9)

8. Article 26 (‘Court costs’) provides:

‘1. When giving judgment, the judge shall also make a decision on procedural costs, in accordance with Articles 91, 92, 93, 94, 96 and 97 of the Code of Civil Procedure, taking into account also respect for the principles of clarity and concision referred to in Article 2(3). In any event, the court may also, of its own motion, order the unsuccessful party to pay the other party a sum determined in accordance with the principle of equity, up to a maximum of twice the amount of the costs paid, where the grounds therefor are manifestly unfounded.

9. Article 39(1) provides:

‘Any matters not regulated in this Code shall be subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, in so far as these are compatible or give expression to general principles.’

4. Codice di procedura civile (Code of Civil Procedure) (10)

10. Article 91 establishes the principle that the payment of costs is to be subject to the objective success or otherwise of the parties to the proceedings.

11. Article 92 states:

‘In a judgment given in accordance with the foregoing article, the court may rule out recovery of the costs which the successful party has incurred if it considers them to be excessive or unnecessary; …

Should the action be partially upheld, should the matter in issue be entirely new or should there be a change of case-law in relation to the matters forming the subject of the proceedings, the court may order that all or some of the costs be shared between the parties.

…'

12. Article 100 reads:

'A party bringing or opposing a claim must have an interest in that claim.'

II. Facts of the dispute and question referred

13. Regione Liguria (Region of Liguria), acting through the Agenzia regionale per il transporto pubblico locale (Regional Agency for Local Public Transport) published in the Official Journal of the European Union of 3 June 2015 (11) a 'notice for the identification of economic operators' to provide a public passenger transport services by land within its territory, in accordance with Liguria Regional Law No 33/2013 and Regulation No 1370/2007.

14. A number of undertakings (referred to collectively as 'AMT') that provided public passenger transport services by land in the region at provincial or sub-provincial level challenged the documents relating to the procurement procedure before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Liguria (Regional Administrative Court, Liguria, Italy). (12) In support of their claim, they argued that, since the region had been established as the sole territorial unit for the provision of such services, they stood practically no chance of being awarded the contract.

15. The applicants having called into question the compatibility of Liguria Regional Law No 33/2013 with the Italian Constitution, the TAR, Liguria, raised a 'question of constitutional legitimacy' before the Corte Costituzionale (Constitutional Court, Italy) on 21 January 2016.

16. While the constitutional legitimacy proceedings were pending, Regione Liguria adopted a new law (13) abolishing the definition of the region as the geographical unit for the provision of transport services by land. In the light of that abolition, the competent authority elected not to take forward the tendering procedure and cancelled it.

17. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Corte Costituzionale (Constitutional Court) delivered judgment No 245/2016 of 22 November 2016, in which it declared inadmissible the question raised by the TAR, Liguria, because AMT lacked standing to seek review of the documents relating to the tendering procedure, in which it had not taken part.

18. The Corte Costituzionale (Constitutional Court) gave the following as the grounds for its ruling:

'According to the submissions of the referring court, the applicants, undertakings which already held contracts for public transport services at provincial level, did not participate in the informal call for tenders issued by the regional administration in accordance with Article 30 of Legislative Decree No 163 of 2006, [(14)] but simply challenged the notice for the identification of economic operators inviting expressions of interest inasmuch as it states that the contract is to be awarded at regional level and in a single lot.

According to the settled case-law of the administrative courts, an undertaking which does not participate in a tendering procedure cannot challenge that procedure or the award of the contract to other undertakings, because its substantive legal position is not sufficiently differentiated, but is attributable only to a factual interest (judgment No 2507 of the Council of State, Third Section, of 10 June 2016; judgment No 491 of the Council of State, Third Section, of 2 February 2015; judgment No 6048 of the Council of State, Sixth Section, of 10 December 2014; judgment No 9 of the Council of State, sitting in Plenary, of 25 February 2014; and judgment No 4 of the Council of State, sitting in Plenary, of 7 April 2011).

There is also settled case-law to the effect that “calls for tender and competition and notices inviting expressions of interest are normally challenged together with the documents that give effect to them, since it is these documents which specifically identify the persons harmed by the procedure and which give actual and concrete form to the harm caused to the subjective position of the person concerned” (judgment No 1 of the Plenary of the Council of State of 29 January 2003).

Constituting an exception to those rules, which derive from the straightforward application to tendering procedures of the general principles of standing and the need to have an interest in bringing proceedings, are situations in which the challenge is directed against the fact that no call for tenders has been issued or its scheduling, or the specifications in the contract notice that are immediately exclusive or, finally, against specifications which impose burdens that are manifestly incomprehensible or totally disproportionate or that make it impossible to submit a bid (judgment No 2507 of the Council of State, Third Section, of 10 June 2016; judgment No 5862 of the Council of State, Fifth Section, of 30 December 2015; judgment No 5181 of the Council of State, Fifth Section, of 12 November 2015; judgment No 9 of the Council of State, sitting in Plenary, of 25 February 2014; and judgment No 4 of the Council of State, sitting in Plenary, of 7 April 2011).

In such cases, the request to participate in the procedure is irrelevant for the purposes of the challenge, either because no call for tenders has actually been issued or because the challenge to the call for tenders in principle or the impossibility of participating in it make apparent in and of themselves a differentiated legal position (on the part of an undertaking whose legal relationship is incompatible with the launch of the new procedure and a sectoral undertaking which has been prevented from participating, respectively) and the actual and concrete harm occasioned to such an undertaking (judgment No 4 of the Council of State, sitting in Plenary, of 7 April 2011).

The fact that the case before the national court does not fall within the scope of one of the aforementioned exceptional situations follows from the reasoning set out in the order for reference itself, which states that the contested specifications would affect the applicants’ chances of being awarded the contract, which “would virtually be reduced to zero”, whereas, in a call for tenders issued at provincial level and divided into lots, the applicants “would stand a very good chance of being awarded the contract for the service, if only because of the advantage of having managed that service previously”.

That reasoning points not towards a real and present impediment to participation in the call for tenders but towards the prospect of only potential harm, which those who have participated in the procedure may challenge, only at the end thereof, if the contract has not been awarded to them.’

19. The TAR, Liguria, is uncertain whether that interpretation of the Corte Costituzionale (Constitutional Court) is consistent with Directive 89/665. For that reason, notwithstanding that the call for tenders was cancelled, it considers it useful to obtain a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice for the purposes of making a decision on the costs of the proceedings.

20. The referring court envisages two potential situations:

– ‘if it is concluded that the action for annulment aimed at obtaining a review of the entirety of the tendering procedure is one of the exceptional situations in which an economic operator which has not participated in the procedure is considered to have standing to bring the action, the proceedings should culminate in a judgment declaring the dispute to have become devoid of purpose as a result of the adoption of Liguria Regional Law No 19/2016 … The costs of the proceedings and the standard fee … would be payable … by the defendant and, therefore, reimbursed to the applicants …’;

– ‘if, on the other hand, the proper interpretation were that given in judgment No 245/2016 of the Corte Costituzionale and the view were therefore taken that the applicant companies do not have standing to challenge the documents relating to the tendering procedure, the proceedings would have to conclude with a declaration that the claim is inadmissible because the applicants have no interest in bringing the action, and the costs would therefore be shared between the applicants.’

21. It was in the foregoing circumstances that the TAR, Liguria, referred the following question for a preliminary ruling:

> ‘Do Article 1(1), (2) and (3) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665/EEC on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, preclude a national law which recognises only economic operators that applied to take part in a tendering procedure as being able to challenge the documents relating to a tendering procedure, even where the action criticises the tendering procedure as a matter of principle because the rules of the tendering procedure make it highly unlikely that the economic operator would be awarded the contract?’

III. Summary of the observations of the parties

22. The Italian Government refutes the admissibility of the question referred for a preliminary ruling on the basis of the following arguments:

– First, because Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 defines its scope of application by reference to Directive 2004/18. Given that the tendering procedure at issue had as its purpose to award a concession for public transport services by land, Directive 2004/18 is not applicable, and neither is Directive 89/665.

– Secondly, even if Directive 89/665 were considered to be applicable, its application rests on an infringement of the substantive rules of Directive 2004/18. The national court has not indicated which provisions have been infringed, but refers vaguely to a possible excessive restriction of competition, without specifying the provisions of EU law breached.

23. As regards the merits of the case, the Italian Government submits that the general rule is that anyone who has freely and voluntarily refrained from taking part in a procurement procedure does not have standing to seek the annulment of that procedure. Exceptions do apply, however, in the case of challenges to: i) the issue of the call for tenders as a matter of principle; ii) the failure to issue a call for tenders, because the administration has awarded the contract directly; and iii) one or more of the specifications of the contract notice, on the ground that they are immediately exclusive. It considers this regime to be perfectly compatible with the case-law principles established in the judgment in Grossmann Air Service. (15)

24. The Italian Government concludes that, in this particular case, the Corte Costituzionale (Constitutional Court) took the view that, since ATM’s chances were not non-existent but only reduced, its eligibility could be determined only on conclusion of the procurement procedure, in which it should have taken part.

25. The Government of the Czech Republic, also relying on the judgment in Grossmann, argues that, if potential tenderers are in a discriminatory situation, they must be recognised as having standing to challenge the specifications giving rise to discrimination. A finding upholding their action would enable them to take part in the procedure for the award of the contract and to have the tender documents revised at the initial stage of the procedure, without having to wait for the latter to be definitively completed.

26. For the Spanish Government, Directive 89/665 establishes various minimum levels of access to review procedures, it being for the national legal systems to define these within the limits of the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. It focuses its analysis on the principle of effectiveness and rejects the proposition that this has been infringed, since Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 requires that the person concerned should have been harmed or be at risk of being harmed by an alleged infringement of Community law. This is not true of the applicant in relation to the documents concerning a tendering procedure in which it did not participate.

27. The Spanish Government points up the fact that the Italian legislation and the case-law interpreting it provide means of challenging a call for tenders without needing to take part in the tendering procedure, and that the applicant passed up the opportunity to seek review of the contract notice. There is therefore no reason why it should now take action against the documents relating to a tendering procedure in which it was not involved.

28. The Commission considers that the question referred for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible because hypothetical, inasmuch as the dispute in the main proceedings has become devoid of purpose.

29. As regards the substance of the case, the Commission analyses the judgment in Grossmann and reasons that the national rules governing the bringing of actions must respect the principle of effectiveness and must not run counter to the practical effect of Directive 89/665, which is strengthened by Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union.

30. According to the Commission, the position of the Corte Costituzionale (Constitutional Court) is contrary to that principle inasmuch as it requires absolute certainty of being excluded from the tendering procedure as a condition of invoking the exceptions to the standing of an applicant which has not taken part in that procedure. The Court of Justice did not require proof of absolute certainty of exclusion, but only of a likelihood thereof.

IV. Procedure before the Court of Justice

31. The reference for a preliminary ruling was received at the Court Registry on 31 May 2017.

32. Written observations have been lodged by the Italian, Spanish and Czech Governments and by the European Commission. Only the Italian Government and the Commission attended the hearing held on 26 April 2018.

V. Assessment

A. Admissibility of the question referred

33. The main focus of the question referred is the standing to bring proceedings by persons who, like AMT, did not submit a bid in a public call for tenders because they considered it highly likely that they would be unsuccessful.

34. As I have already explained, the dispute before the national court became devoid of purpose as a result of a legislative reform following which the contracting authority cancelled the call for tenders. The national court submits, however, that it still requires a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice in order to be able to make a decision on the costs of the proceedings.

35. According to the scheme of Article 267 TFEU, the purpose of the reference for a preliminary ruling is to provide the national court with the guidance it needs in order to be able to settle a dispute in which there is some uncertainty as to the interpretation of EU law.

36. I recalled at the outset of this Opinion that the Court of Justice has had occasion to adjudicate in a similar case in which the dispute in the main proceedings had become devoid of purpose and the preliminary ruling was useful only for the purposes of the decision as to costs.

37. Thus, the order in Reinke states that, in such circumstances, the decision on costs is subordinate to the resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings in the course of which the questions referred were raised. That dispute having been resolved, there was no longer any need to answer the questions raised solely in connection with the costs. (16)

38. In my view, the reasoning in the order in Reinke is flawless (17) and is consistent with other expressions of the same principle (Article 58 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, for example, provides that an appeal on points of law may not relate only to the amount of costs or the party ordered to pay them). If the proceedings in which the provision of EU law was to be applied later becomes devoid of purpose, the dispute between the parties is extinguished and the interpretation of a provision of EU law by the Court of Justice is simply no longer needed because it can have no bearing on the (non-existent) dispute.

39. The TAR, Liguria, nonetheless states that an assessment by the Court of Justice with respect to an applicant’s standing to challenge a call for tenders in which it has not participated would be relevant inasmuch as it would enable it to determine which party should be ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings which have been extinguished, and in what amount.

40. To my mind, however, that indirect link is not sufficient to support the view that there is an adequate connection with EU law. Technically, the matter at issue now falls within the sphere not of public procurement but of the rules governing the costs of judicial proceedings. Unless costs are subject to a particular provision of EU law (as is the case in certain subject areas, to which I shall refer immediately hereafter), the decision on costs will be based exclusively on national law, not EU law.

41. The idea underpinning the order in Reinke is linked to the function of the reference for a preliminary ruling: since the interpretation of EU law must be essential to enable the national court to resolve the dispute before it (paragraph 13 of the order), the disappearance of that dispute renders the answer to the question referred unnecessary (paragraph 16).

42. EU law does not contain harmonised rules on procedural costs, the management of which is exclusively within the competence of the Member States. It is only in certain spheres that the EU legislature has made clear its wish to intervene in such matters, be it in order to avoid excessively onerous costs that might impede access to justice in a particular area of EU law, (18) or in order to ensure, once again in certain specific subject areas, that anyone whose rights have been infringed receives payment for proportionate and reasonable procedural costs from the other party. (19)

43. Even in cases where EU law lays down rules governing the costs of the proceedings, the Court of Justice has held that, 'where EU law lacks precision, it is for the Member States, when they transpose a directive, to ensure that it is fully effective and they retain a broad discretion as to the choice of methods'. In relation to the situation at issue in those proceedings, which concerned environmental law, it stated that 'account must be taken of all the relevant provisions of national law and, in particular, of a national legal aid scheme as well as of a costs protection regime', as well as of 'significant differences between national laws in that area'. (20)

44. If that broad discretion, combined with recognition of the fact that each national scheme has its own unique features, exists in cases where EU law intervenes in the regulation of procedural costs, the freedom enjoyed by the Member States will be more extensive still in an area not governed by Community rules.

45. In this case, any dispute over costs (21) would be strictly confined to an interpretation of the domestic rules governing the distribution of costs between the parties, as well as of the court's powers to adjust those rules. In such a dispute relating only to the costs of the proceedings, the guidance necessary to settle the dispute will have to come from national law, not EU law, which, I would reiterate, does not lay down such guidance in this subject area.

46. It could be that, notwithstanding the absence of any Community harmonisation in relation to the costs applicable to disputes of this kind, the features of the dispute in the main proceedings are such as to jeopardise respect for the fundamental rules and fundamental principles of the FEU Treaty. For this to be the case, however, one of the basic freedoms would have to be under threat, and of this there is not so much as an intimation in the order for reference.

47. In short, without wishing to usurp the assessments that fall to be made by the national court or to interfere in its freedom to choose from the options available to it under its national law, I would make the point that the aforementioned rules of the Italian codes of civil and administrative procedure provide sufficient support to enable the national court, irrespective of any adjudication that might be made in respect of the applicant's standing, to settle the matter of the award of costs on a basis separate from that issue.

48. It is sufficient to recall here that Italian domestic law provides that, where 'the matter at issue in a dispute is completely new' or where 'there is a change in the case-law relating to the matters at issue', (22) the national court may order that the costs be shared in full or in part between the parties. It thus has full freedom of choice in this regard, irrespective of whether, in accordance with the judgment of the Corte Costituzionale (Constitutional Court), it finds that AMT does not have standing to seek review or finds that it does.

49. I therefore take the view that the question referred for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible, since an answer from the Court of Justice is not necessary and the latter lacks jurisdiction to rule on the application of the Italian system for the award of procedural costs, which is a purely domestic matter.

B. Substance

50. In the event that the Court agrees to dispose of the substance of the question referred for a preliminary ruling, I shall set out my view in the alternative. In so doing, I shall begin by attempting to define the legal regime applicable and then go on to propose a response to the issue raised.

1. Legal regime applicable

51. The purpose of the call for tenders at issue was to award a contract for the provision of public passenger transport services by land. This type of service falls within the specific scope of Regulation No 1370/2007, Article 5 of which governs the 'award of public service contracts' in the transport sector.

52. From the information contained in the order for reference, it is not possible to infer with any certainty whether the contract in question was a 'service concession contract' or a 'public service contract'. The two types of contract share similar features, (23) the difference between them lying in the consideration, which, in the case of concessions, consists in the right (either as such, or in conjunction with payment) to exploit the service and, in the case of service contracts, is paid by the contracting authority to the service provider. (24)

53. The decision as to which of those two categories the contract at issue falls into is a matter for the national court, which, unlike the Court of Justice, has at its disposal all the facts necessary to enable it to make that decision. The classification of that contract will be relevant in determining the legal regime applicable to it, given the wording of Article 5(1) of Regulation No 1370/2007. (25)

54. I shall therefore turn to the issue of standing to seek review in those two scenarios.

(a) Public transport service concession

55. The first scenario is that the contract at issue was for a service concession, as some of the written observations argue and as might be inferred from the contract notice, inasmuch as it makes reference to Article 30 of the Public Procurement Code, which specifically governs 'service concessions'. (26)
