1. The present request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 49 TFEU, the principles of equal treatment and effectiveness and Article 47 of Directive 2004/18/EC. (2) It forms part of the long series of references to the Court for a preliminary ruling involving various aspects of the Italian legislation in the betting and gaming sector, (3) and, in particular, the conditions imposed on tenderers in the tendering procedure launched in 2012 (4) (also referred to as 'the Monti contract notice') at issue in the cases giving rise to the judgments of 22 January 2015, Stanley International Betting and Stanleybet Malta (C-463/13, EU:C:2015:25), and of 28 January 2016, Laezza (C-375/14, EU:C:2016:60).

2. In accordance with what is now a familiar pattern in contentious matters, that request was submitted in the context of criminal proceedings against the applicant in the main proceedings, Mr Politanò, for failure to comply with the Italian legislation governing the collection of bets on sporting or other events. Mr Dominico Politanò, who is accused, first, of not having the necessary authorisation to exercise the activity of collecting and transmitting bets under national law and, second, of not being linked with an operator holding a concession, maintains, in essence, that the obligations imposed on the company applying for a concession to which he is linked, under the Administrative Rules annexed to the Monti contract notice, are contrary to a number of rules and principles of EU law.

3. The present case gives the Court the opportunity to specify the factors to be taken into account and the obligations placed on the national courts when they prepare a request for a preliminary ruling — in particular, in the description of the relevant factual and legal framework — so that the Court may be able to provide them with a helpful answer. It also provides the opportunity for the Court to redefine the terms of the debate in which we must engage here and to recall the need for the Court not to be led to rule on questions originating primarily in the attempt of certain operators to avoid certain criminal penalties and not in the desire to ensure the effectiveness of EU law.

I – Legal framework

A – EU law

4. In the words of Article 1(2)(a) and (d) of Directive 2004/18:

‘(a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(d) “Public service contracts” are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.’

5. Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18 provides:

> ‘“Service concession” is a contract of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in this right together with payment.’

6. Article 17 of that directive, entitled ‘Service concessions’, provides:

> ‘Without prejudice to the application of Article 3, this Directive shall not apply to service concessions as defined in Article 1(4).’

7. Article 47 of that directive, entitled ‘Economic and financial standing’, is worded as follows:

> ‘1. Proof of the economic operator’s economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) appropriate statements from banks or, where appropriate, evidence of relevant professional risk indemnity insurance;

(b) the presentation of balance sheets or extracts from balance sheets, where publication of the balance sheet is required under the law of the country in which the economic operator is established;

(c) a statement of the undertaking’s overall turnover and, where appropriate, of turnover in the area covered by the contract for a maximum of the last three financial years available, depending on the date on which the undertaking was set up or the economic operator started trading, in so far as information on such turnovers is available.

> 2. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.
> 3. Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 4 may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.
> 4. Contracting authorities shall specify, in the contract notice or in the invitation to tender, which reference or references mentioned in paragraph 1 they have chosen and which other references must be provided.
> 5. If, for any valid reason, the economic operator is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.’

B – Italian law

8. The Italian regulatory framework is now well known to the Court, which, as I mentioned in the introduction to this Opinion, has on a number of occasions been led to rule on the compatibility with EU law of the Italian regulatory provisions governing the collection of bets.

9. The Italian legislation essentially provides that participation in the organising of betting and gaming, including the collection of bets, is subject to possession of a licence and a police authorisation.

10. Under Article 88 of Royal Decree No 773 of 18 June 1931 approving a consolidated version of the laws on public security, (5) as amended by Article 37(4) of Law No 338 of 23 December 2000, (6) a police authorisation is granted only where a licence has been obtained from the Agenzia della Dogane e dei Monopoli di Stato (State Customs and Monopolies Agency, 'the ADM'). That police authorisation entitles holders to collect bets within a particular area. Failure to obtain a licence therefore precludes obtaining a police authorisation. Engaging in the activity of collecting bets in the absence of a licence or police authorisation is punishable as a criminal offence.

11. In 1999 the Italian authorities awarded under a public tendering procedure 1 000 licences for the management of sports betting operations. At the same time, 671 new licences were granted, also by public tender, for the management of bets on horse racing events and 329 existing licences were automatically renewed. Under the legislation in force at that date, operators in the form of capital companies whose shares were quoted on the regulated markets were excluded from participating in tendering procedures, since in their case the precise identification of individual shareholders was not possible on an ongoing basis. That exclusion was held to be unlawful under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC in the judgment in Placanica and Others, (7) in particular.

12. Decree-Law No 223 (8) reformed the betting and gaming sector in Italy with the aim of bringing it into line with the requirements arising under EU law. That decree provided for the award of some 16 300 new betting and gaming licences in addition to the other licences granted in 1999.

13. Following, in particular, the judgment in Costa and Cifone, (9) the betting and gaming sector was again reformed by Decree-Law No 16. (10)

14. So far as the organisation of calls for tender for the award of licences for the collection of bets is concerned, Article 10(9g) and (9h) of the 2012 Decree-Law provides:

> '9g As part of a reform of the legislation relating to public gambling, including that relating to the collection of bets on sporting events, including horse racing, and non-sporting events, the provisions of the present paragraph have the aim of promoting that reorganisation, through an initial alignment of the expiry dates of the licences for the collection of bets in question, while observing the requirement that the national rules on the selection of persons who, on behalf of the State, collect bets on sporting events, including horse racing, and non-sporting events, are adjusted to the principles laid down by the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union of 16 February 2012, [Costa and Cifone (C-72/10 and C-77/10, EU:C:2012:80)]. To that end, in view of the impending expiry of a group of licences for the collection of those bets, the [ADM] shall immediately, and in any event by 31 July 2012 at the latest, initiate a call for tenders for the selection of persons who are to collect such bets with due regard, at the very least, to the following criteria:

(a) the possibility of participation for persons already carrying out an activity related to the collection of bets in one of the States of the European Economic Area, as a result of having their legal and operational seat there, on the basis of a valid and effective authorisation issued under the provisions in force in the law of that State and who fulfil the requirements as to reputation, reliability and financial standing specified by the Independent Authority for the Administration of State Monopolies, account being taken of the provisions in this matter referred to in Law No 220 [(11)] … and in Decree-Law No 98 of 6 July 2011, converted, after amendment, into statute by Law No 111 of 15 July 2011;

(b) the award of a licence, expiring on 30 June 2016, for the collection, exclusively in a physical network, of bets on sporting events, including horse racing, and non-sporting events, from agencies, up to a maximum of 2 000, whose sole activity is the marketing of public gambling products, without restriction as to the minimum distances between those agencies or with respect to other collection points, which are already active, for identical bets;

(c) provision, as a price component, for a basic contract value of EUR 11 000 for each agency;

(d) the conclusion of a licence agreement whose content is consistent with any other principle laid down in the abovementioned judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union of 16 February 2012 and with the compatible national provisions in force regarding public gambling;

(e) the possibility of managing agencies in any municipality or province, without numerical limits on a territorial basis or more favourable conditions by comparison with licensees who are already authorised to collect identical bets or which may, in any event, be favourable to those licensees;

(f) the lodging of deposits consistent with the provisions of Article 24 of Decree-Law No 98 of 6 July 2011, converted, after amendment, into statute by Law No 111 of 15 July 2011.

> 9h The licensees who are to collect bets referred to in paragraph 9g, whose contracts expire on 30 June 2012, shall continue their collection activities until the date of the conclusion of the licence contracts awarded in accordance with the above paragraph. The following paragraphs are repealed: paragraphs 37 and 38 of Article 24 of Decree-Law No 98 of 6 July 2011, converted, after amendment, into statute by Law No 111 of 15 July 2011, subparagraph e of paragraph 287 of Article 1 of Law No 311 of 30 December 2004, and subparagraph e of paragraph 4 of Article 38 of [Decree-Law No 223 of 4 July 2006 laying down urgent measures for economic and social revival, for the control and rationalisation of public expenditure, and providing for initiatives in relation to tax revenue and the combating of tax evasion], converted, after amendment, into statute by Law No 248 of 4 August 2006.'

15. The provisions of that decree were implemented through tendering procedures held by the ADM during the course of 2012. Under Article 3.2 of the Administrative Rules annexed to the Monti contract notice, tenderers which had been formed for less than two years and whose overall revenues linked to the activity of gaming operator were below two million euros during the two most recent business years were required to submit appropriate statements issued by at least two banks, in order to prove their economic and financial standing.

16. Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Italian law by Legislative Decree No 163/2006 of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), which codifies the rules governing public procurement.

17. In accordance with Article 41 of that decree-law, the conditions to be satisfied in order to prove the economic and financial standing to carry out the service are to be specified by the contracting authority. However, according to that article, a candidate who, for valid reasons, is unable to submit the requisite bank or accounting references may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.

II – The facts of the main proceedings, the questions referred for a preliminary ruling and the procedure before the Court

18. On 6 February 2015, following checks carried out by a team of administrative police from the Questura (police headquarters) of Reggio Calabria (Italy) in the business premises called 'Betuniq' in Polistena (Italy) managed by Mr Politanò and affiliated to the Maltese company UniqGroup Ltd, the competent authorities established that the activity of collecting bets was being carried out there without a concession, authorisation or a licence.

19. By decision of 13 February 2015, the Giudice delle indagini preliminari (judge responsible for preliminary investigations) of the Tribunale di Palmi (District Court, Palmi, Italy) made an order against Mr Politanò, ordering the preventive sequestration of the assets used for that activity.

20. Mr Politanò brought an action against that decision before the referring court, claiming that certain clauses of the Monti contract notice were incompatible with Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU.

21. Thus, according to the applicant in the main proceedings, his conduct does not constitute an offence, since the collecting of bets on sporting events on behalf of UniqGroup must be considered to be lawful, in so far as the national legislation is contrary to Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU.

22. Mr Politanò maintains that UniqGroup was excluded from the 2012 call for tenders, even though it had duly submitted a request to participate, on the ground that it had not submitted two certificates of economic and financial standing issued by two different banks, as required by Article 3.2 of the Administrative Rules annexed to the Monti contract notice. He states that UniqGroup has challenged that contract notice before the Italian administrative courts in that that contract notice contained no arrangement for foreign undertakings which, for valid reasons, are unable to submit the financial guarantees required by that contract notice.

23. According to the referring court, a tendering procedure involving gaming operators established in different countries, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, was necessarily required to comply with the principle arising under Article 47 of Directive 2004/18, in particular the possibility of evaluating economic and financial standing 'by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate'.

24. The need for the administration to impose strict conditions for participation necessarily had to be reconciled with the principle of the widest possible participation in the tendering procedure, and any person concerned should be guaranteed the possibility of proving his economic and financial standing by any other document considered appropriate.

25. It follows that the competent authority was required to state expressly the other criteria deemed appropriate and effective for the purpose of demonstrating the requisite standing, so that each tenderer could in any event effectively prove that he had the requisite standing.

26. The referring court considers that, in this instance, the Administrative Rules annexed to the Monti contract notice did not allow UniqGroup to prove its economic and financial standing in any other way. It therefore does not appear that companies such as that involved in the main proceedings benefited from clear and evident opportunities to prove, due account being taken of the public interest at stake, their economic soundness and their creditworthiness.

27. In those circumstances, the Tribunale di Reggio Calabria (District Court, Reggio Calabria) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Must Article 49 TFEU, as well as the principles of equal treatment and effectiveness, be interpreted as precluding national legislation in the field of betting and gambling which provides for the organisation of a fresh call for tenders (as governed by Article [10(9g)] of Law No 44 of 26 April 2012) for the award of licences that includes clauses excluding from the tendering procedure undertakings which have failed to meet the condition relating to economic and financial standing as a result of the failure to provide for criteria other than the requirement of two bank references from two separate banks?

2. Must Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 … be interpreted as precluding national legislation in the field of betting and gambling which provides for the organisation of a fresh call for tenders (as governed by Article [10(9g)] of Law No 44 of 26 April 2012) for the award of licences [that includes clauses excluding from the tendering procedure undertakings which have failed to meet the condition] relating to economic and financial standing, as a result of the failure to provide for alternative documentation and options, as laid down under international legislation?'

28. Written observations have been submitted by the Italian, Belgian, German and Polish Governments and by the European Commission.

29. A hearing was held on 13 April 2016, in which Mr Politanò, the Italian and Belgian Governments and the Commission took part.

III – Analysis

30. As was already the position in the Laezza case (judgment of 28 January 2016, C-375/14, EU:C:2016:60), the present case does not concern the legality of the 2012 Decree-Law, but a different measure, situated downstream, contained in the Administrative Rules supplementing the Monti contract notice. (12)

31. Although the Court may usefully benefit from the information obtained from the judgment of 28 January 2016 in Laezza (C-375/14, EU:C:2016:60) as regards the analysis grid that should be employed, the present case relates to a different provision, concerning the obligation which the Monti contract notice places on new tenderers to provide evidence of their financial soundness by statements issued by at least two banks, if they are unable to prove a turnover of a minimum amount of two million euros over two years.

32. Before all else, I must address the issue of admissibility, which is questioned by certain interveners.

A – Admissibility

33. The Italian Government and, as regards the second question, the Commission submit that the request for a preliminary ruling should be declared inadmissible, since the order for reference does not describe the factual background in sufficient detail to enable the Court to give a useful answer.

34. I largely share the concerns expressed by the interveners.

35. The information supplied by the referring court seems to me to be incomplete in many respects and, to a certain degree, might be considered not to satisfy the requirements consistently stated by the Court. In that regard, it is well established that the decision for reference must give the precise reasons which prompted the national court to raise the question of the interpretation of EU law and to consider it necessary to refer a question to the Court for a preliminary ruling. (13)

36. As regards the first question, and following on from the questions which I raised in my Opinion in Laezza, (14) the question thus referred appears to be based on factual representations that are not directly supported by the documents in the main proceedings. (15)

37. First of all, it is not easy to determine on what grounds the measure at issue, namely the possibility for a tenderer in the Monti contract notice procedure to prove his economic and financial standing by 'producing appropriate statements issued by at least two banks' is directly challenged in the main proceedings. Unlike the situations at issue in the Costa and Cifone (16) and Stanley International Betting and Stanleybet Malta cases, (17) it is not the reorganisation of the system through a fresh call for tenders — in the present case the call for tenders arranged following intervention by the legislature in the form of the 2012 Decree-Law — in its entirety that is called in question. In that context, it is for the referring court alone to determine whether, in the light of the relevant rules of national law, the measure at issue may indeed have a bearing on the position of the applicant in the main proceedings under criminal law. (18)

38. Next, it is difficult to understand to what extent the rule at issue constituted for UniqGroup, to which the applicant in the main proceedings seems to be linked, a real barrier to its participation in the Monti contract notice procedure.

39. As is apparent from the case-file, and as stated at the hearing, the reason why UniqGroup, to which the applicant in the main proceedings is allegedly linked, was unable to provide a certificate from another bank is unexplained. On that point, the referring court merely observed that 'by email of 15 January 2013, the Banca di Valletta explained that it was unable to provide any statement other than those [already provided] … as it was required to comply with the standards applicable in Malta'. That observation, which states only the reasons why that bank could not supply more precise information, has no bearing on the reason why UniqGroup was unable to obtain a statement from another bank.

40. In addition, it seems to me — and it was confirmed at the hearing — that the applicant in the main proceedings, as conveyed on this point by the referring court, is more concerned with challenging the constraints faced by UniqGroup in Malta when obtaining the requisite certificates than with challenging the obligation for tenderers in the Monti contract notice procedure to supply those certificates.

41. Furthermore, it is apparent from the file that UniqGroup was excluded from the call for tenders not only because it had not produced the two requisite certificates but also because the content of the only certificate produced was insufficient. Thus, even on the assumption that the obligation for persons wishing to participate in the call for tenders at issue to produce statements from two banks must be condemned from the viewpoint of compliance with EU law, it would not assist the case put forward by the applicant in the main proceedings. I would point out, moreover, that the referring court has not mentioned, in that context, the other possible means whereby UniqGroup could, if necessary, have demonstrated its economic and financial capacity.

42. As regards the second question, it is even less easy to understand the reason why Directive 2004/18 constitutes a relevant provision in the present case. For my part, I find it difficult to understand the assertion in the order for reference that 'the applicant reasonably submits that, as this was [a] … tender, in which gambling operators from different countries were competing, it was necessary to comply with the principle arising from Article 47 of Directive 2004/18'. I shall return to this point in the observations below.

43. In such circumstances, the formal validity of the order for reference may seriously be in doubt and the question referred may, as a result, be regarded as inadmissible. Although it is for the national court alone to assess, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case, the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court, and the stage in the proceedings at which those questions should be referred, (19) the Court must also have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. (20) In particular, the referring court is required, at least, to explain the factual circumstances on which the questions for a preliminary ruling are based. (21)

44. However, the Court may, following the approach taken in the past, (22) decide, on the basis of a comprehensive assessment of the requirements placed on the national court, that the decision for referral sufficiently describes the legal and factual context of the main proceedings and that the information supplied by that court enables the scope of the questions referred to be determined. The Court might, in that regard, take the view that the referring court's questions are based therefore on the assumption that, for the purposes of imposing a criminal penalty, Mr Politanò cannot be faulted for not holding a licence — and hence a police authorisation — in the context of a call for tenders organised according to rules and conditions that are contrary to EU law. (23)

45. Thus I shall concentrate in the following observations on the answers which must in my view be given to the substance of the questions referred.

B – Substance

46. I shall examine first of all whether Directive 2004/18, in particular Article 47, may preclude the measure at issue, and then address the question whether that measure is consistent with freedom of establishment and the principles of effectiveness and equivalence.

1. First aspect (second question): the applicability of Directive 2004/18

47. I shall not linger over this aspect of the order for reference, which does not seem to me to raise any particular difficulty.

48. As I mentioned earlier, the referring court has called in question the compatibility of the measure at issue, namely the measure requiring a tenderer to prove his financial solvency by producing two bank certificates, with Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 without explaining the reasons that prompted it to do so.

49. To my mind, there is scarcely any doubt that that directive, in particular Article 47, does not apply in the main proceedings, which relate to a system of concessions which cannot be qualified as 'public contracts' within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 or as 'public works concessions' within the meaning of Article 1(3) of that directive.

50. It is important to bear in mind that Directive 2004/18 applies only to service contracts, that is to say, to contracts for pecuniary interest concluded between a contracting authority and an economic operator, having as their object the provision of the services referred to in Annex II to that directive (see Article 1(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18). Conversely, in accordance with Article 17, Directive 2004/18 is not to apply to service concessions, which are defined as contracts of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services referred to consists solely in the right to exploit the service in question, together with payment or without payment. (24)

51. It appears that the concession relating to the organisation of bets, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, is not a public contract for services within the meaning of Article 1(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18. Not only is the 'service' referred to here not provided on behalf of the contracting authority, but, in addition, the economic operator-tenderers receive no remuneration from public funds. Furthermore, the tenderer bears the entire risk associated with the activity of collecting and transmitting bets.

52. More generally, it should be borne in mind that, as EU law currently stands, service concession contracts are not governed by any of the directives designed to harmonise the field of public procurement. (25) Those contracts might, on the other hand, fall within the scope of Directive 2014/23/EU, (26) which entered into force on 23 June 2014 and was to be transposed into national law by 18 April 2016. Although that directive has not been relied on and in fact does not appear to have been applicable at the material time, it is interesting to note that, under Article 38(1) of that directive, 'contracting authorities and contracting entities shall verify the conditions for participation relating to the professional and technical ability and the financial and economic standing of the candidates or tenderers, on the basis of self-declarations, reference or references to be submitted as proof in accordance with the requirements specified in the concession notice' (emphasis added).

53. Ultimately, Directive 2004/18 is therefore not applicable in the present case and there is thus no need to consider whether the measure at issue is consistent with Article 47 of that directive.

2. Second aspect: the existence of a restriction incompatible with the freedom of establishment enshrined in Article 49 TFEU and with the principles of equal treatment and effectiveness

54. The first question, which is central to the case referred to the Court, asks the Court to determine whether the measure at issue, which provides that the tenderer must prove his economic and financial standing by producing appropriate statements issued by at least two banks, constitutes an unjustified and disproportionate restriction of freedom of establishment.

55. First of all, and although it is not the Court's place to call into question the referring court's interpretation of the relevant national law, I must say that I am perplexed by the way in which the obligations imposed on tenderers for the purpose of establishing their economic and financial standing are presented.

56. The referring court seems to proceed from the assumption that failure to comply with the requirement to submit two statements of ad hoc opening of credit from at least two banks justifies in itself the exclusion from participation in the Monti contract notice procedure of tenderers established for less than two years. Owing to that requirement, 'historic' operators are alleged to benefit from an advantage by comparison with operators who have not yet benefited from concessions, contrary to EU law.

57. However, if I confine myself to a simple reading of the provision at issue, provided for in point 3.2 of the Administrative Rules annexed to the contract notice, it appears that that requirement is laid down for only as an alternative to the obligation for the tenderer to show that the overall revenues linked with the activity of gaming operator have not been below two million euros during the last two business years completed before the date of submission of the application. (27)

58. That having been said, and in accordance with the analysis grid traditionally employed for the purpose of determining whether a restrictive measure is consistent with the freedoms provided for in the FEU Treaty, I shall examine the problem referred to the Court in three stages, by, first, identifying a restriction imposed in a discriminatory manner; second, evaluating the reasons put forward in support of the restriction; and, third, examining the proportionality of the measure at issue.

59. In the first place, it is appropriate to ascertain whether the provision at issue constitutes a potential restriction of the freedom of establishment enshrined in Article 49 TFEU and, if so, whether it was imposed in a discriminatory manner.

60. In view of the broad definition of what, according to the Court's case-law, constitutes 'a restriction', in particular in the betting and gaming sector where all measures which appear, directly or indirectly, to be disadvantageous to economic operators wishing to engage in the activity of collecting bets have been held to be restrictive, (28) I am of the view that that question should be answered in the affirmative.

61. Indeed, the measure at issue, which imposes on tenderers in the Monti contract notice procedure particular obligations in order to demonstrate their financial soundness, is likely to influence the possibilities of participating in that call for tenders and, thus, potentially constitutes a restriction on freedom of establishment. (29)

62. As the Commission has pointed out in its observations, because the potential tenderer concerned is required to adduce evidence of his financial soundness by means of statements issued by at least two banks, he is required to establish a banking credit relationship with two separate operators. That is a condition that not all new tenderers are able to satisfy, because compliance with that condition is not essential for the exercise of their activities in other contexts and because it may give rise to particular problems.

63. As to whether that restriction was imposed in a discriminatory manner, it must be stated that it has not been established — or, to my mind, even claimed — that the measure at issue was imposed only on operators taking part in the 2012 call for tenders who are established in other Member States. On the contrary, it seems clear from the evidence submitted to the Court that the measure at issue was imposed on all operators who wished to take part in the call for tenders launched in 2012, irrespective of their place of establishment.

64. Likewise, and in the absence of information to the contrary, it appears that the requirement to submit statements from two banks is applied in the same way to all participants in that call for tenders.

65. In the second place, it is necessary to ascertain whether the grounds on which the national authorities rely in order to justify the obligations imposed on tenderers in order to demonstrate their financial solvency are of such a kind as to justify that restriction.

66. In that regard, it is well established that restrictions on betting and gaming may be justified by overriding reasons in the public interest, such as consumer protection and the prevention of both fraud and incitement to squander money on gambling. As regards the Italian legislation on betting and gaming, the Court has held that the general objective of combating criminality linked to betting and gaming is capable of justifying restrictions under the applicable national legislation, (30) provided that those restrictions satisfy the principle of proportionality and in so far as the means put in place in that regard are examined in a global, consistent and systematic manner. (31)

67. It is incumbent, in particular, on the Member States concerned to ensure that the means put in place in the context of a system of concessions are appropriate for ensuring access to and the exercise of the economic activity in the sector concerned in equivalent conditions and in an effective manner.

68. In the present case, I would point out that it is not the system of concessions taken as a whole that is at issue, but the obligations imposed on tenderers, under point 3.2 of the Administrative Rules annexed to the Monti contract notice, to establish their economic and financial soundness.

69. To my mind, there is scarcely any doubt that those requirements, which are intended not only to channel the supply of betting and gaming — and, in fact, to limit organised crime and fraud linked with the clandestine organisation of gambling — but also to exercise a certain amount of control in the interest of gamblers, pursue a legitimate objective. I recall on that point that the Court has already referred to an Italian Government inquiry which shows that ‘the activities of clandestine betting and gaming, prohibited as such, are a considerable problem in Italy, which it may be possible to solve through the expansion of authorised and regulated activities’. (32)

70. Therefore, in the third and last place, the question arises whether the measure at issue was imposed in accordance with the principle of proportionality.

71. I shall address, first, the question of the appropriateness of the measure at issue, and then, second, the question of its proportionality.

72. As regards, first of all, the appropriateness of the obligation at issue, it seems quite clear to me that bank statements, such as those required by the provisions at issue, are capable of establishing the tenderer’s financial capacity to exercise the activity of collecting bets in the event that such activity should be entrusted to him.

73. Like the requirement, referred to in the Dickinger and Ömer case, (33) that the holder of a betting and gaming monopoly must have share capital of a certain amount, the obligation to provide statements from two banks is capable of ensuring that the economic operator has a financial capacity that will enable him to meet his obligations towards winning gamblers.

74. As the Belgian Government stated in its written submissions, any efficient and coherent rules in relation to betting and gaming necessarily contain provisions to ensure that tenderers have the necessary financial standing.

75. As regards, next, the proportionality of the measure at issue, it will be recalled that it is for the referring court, in principle, to determine whether, in the light of all the evidence before it, the measure at issue does not go further than is necessary in order to achieve the objective pursued. (34) That is all the more so when the decision for reference contains little information in that respect.

76. In order to provide the referring court with the most useful answer possible, the Court might however give the following information on the factors that must guide the analysis.

77. In the first place, it is for the national court to determine whether obtaining the requisite bank statements is liable to entail particular financial burdens or real organisational difficulties for undertakings which intend to participate in a tendering procedure with a view to obtaining a concession to operate in the betting and gaming sector.

78. In this instance, I would observe that there is no reason to conclude that the obligation to produce two statements issued by European banks is an insurmountable requirement for a reliable operator wishing to engage in the activity of collecting bets. On that aspect, I recall that the referring court merely indicated that the applicant in the main proceedings had been unable ‘for valid reasons’ to submit the two bank references required. However, it is possible to have doubts as to the nature of those reasons and to wonder whether the real reason for the applicant’s claimed inability to produce those references does not in reality lie in the fact that its financial credibility is lacking. It is apparent from the case file that the sole reference submitted by UniqGroup was not in any event capable of establishing its economic and financial standing.

79. In the second place, it is for the national court to examine whether, in the light of the obligations actually imposed on tenderers, it may be alleged that, having regard to the discretion which Member States must be recognised as enjoying when organising the betting and gaming sector, the requirement at issue goes further than is necessary.

80. On the latter point, it seems to me to be appropriate to point out that the particular nature of economic activities in the betting and gaming sector, which is consistently recognised by the Court and which, moreover, explains why that sector has not yet been the subject of harmonisation measures, must allow the Member States to put in place appropriate instruments of such a kind as to make the activity secure both from the point of view of consumer protection and in order to prevent fraud and the development of criminal activities.

81. In such a context, to my mind the contracting authorities cannot be criticised for not being satisfied with just any statements and certificates for the purposes of being sure of the economic and financial standing of applicants for concessions. Statements from banks, such as those required by the measure at issue, are in principle more reliable than those originating with the applicant for a concession in the betting and gaming sector.

IV – Conclusion

82. In the light of the foregoing developments, I propose that the Court should answer the questions submitted by the Tribunale di Reggio Calabria (District Court, Reggio Calabria, Italy) as follows:

> Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, in particular Article 47, does not apply to national legislation governing, in the betting and gaming sector, the tendering procedure for the grant of concessions, such as that referred to in the main proceedings.
> The freedom of establishment enshrined in Article 49 TFEU and the principles of equivalence and effectiveness must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude national legislation which, for the purpose of granting concessions in the betting and gaming sector, excludes from the tendering procedure operators who have been unable to provide statements from two separate banks, in so far as that condition satisfies the principle of proportionality. It is for the national court to ascertain whether such a requirement is, in the light of all of the circumstances of the case, justified and proportionate to the objective pursued.

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 45 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), and Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the consortium Ciclat Soc. coop. ('Ciclat'), on the one hand, and Consip SpA and the Autorità per la vigilanza sui contratti pubblici di lavori, servizi e forniture (Supervisory Authority for public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts), on the other hand, concerning a procedure for the award of contracts for cleaning and other services for maintaining the buildings, educational establishments and training centres of the public authorities.

Legal context

3 Recital 2 of Directive 2004/18 states:

'The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.'

4 Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 concerns the criteria for qualitative selection relating to the personal situation of the candidate or tenderer. Article 45(2) and (3) thereof provides:

'(2) Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(e) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.

(3) Contracting authorities shall accept the following as sufficient evidence that none of the cases specified in paragraphs 1 or 2(a), (b), (c), (e) or (f) applies to the economic operator:

(b) as regards paragraph 2(e) and (f), a certificate issued by the competent authority in the Member State concerned.

5 Under Article 51 of Directive 2004/18:

‘The contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50.’

6 Article 93 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65) states:

‘This Directive shall enter into force on the twentieth day following that of its publication in the Official Journal of the European Union.’

Italian law

7 The decreto legislative n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 establishing the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), as amended by Decree-Law No 70 of 13 May 2011 (GURI No 110 of 13 May 2011, p. 1), converted into law by Law No 106 of 12 July 2011 (GURI No 160 of 12 July 2011, p. 1) (‘Legislative Decree No 163/2006’), governs, in their entirety, the procedures in Italy for the award of public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts.

8 Legislative Decree No 163/2006 contains, in Part II thereof, Article 38, which lays down the general requirements for participation in procedures for the award of concessions and contracts for works, supplies and services. Article 38(1)(i) of that decree provides:

‘(1) Persons shall be excluded from participation in procedures for the award of concessions and contracts for works, supplies and services, cannot be awarded subcontracts and cannot enter into related contracts, if:

(i) they have committed serious infringements, definitively established, of the rules governing the payment of social security contributions, under Italian law or that of the State in which they are established’.

9 According to Article 38(2), (4) and (5) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006:

‘(2) The candidate or tenderer shall certify that he satisfies the relevant requirements by producing a sworn statement, in accordance with the conditions laid down in the consolidated statutory and regulatory provisions relating to administrative documents, as required by Decree No 445 of the President of the Republic of 28 December 2000, and shall set out in that statement all his previous convictions, including those which have not been entered in the judicial record.

… For the purposes of Article 38(1)(i) of the decree, failures are to be regarded as serious if they preclude the issue of a social security contributions payment certificate [documento unico di regolarità contributiva]] …

(4) For the purposes of checks relating to the grounds of exclusion referred to in the present article, the contracting authorities request, as the case may be, the candidates or tenderers not established in Italy to submit the supporting documents required and may, in addition, request the cooperation of the competent authorities.

(5) Where the Member State of the European Union concerned does not issue such documents or certificates, they may be replaced by a declaration on oath or, in Member States where there is no provision for declarations on oath, by a solemn declaration made by the person concerned before a judicial or administrative authority, a notary or a competent professional or trade body, in the country of origin or in the country whence that person comes'.

10 The infringements which preclude the issue of a social security contributions payment certificate (the 'DURC') are identified by the decreto del ministero del lavoro e della previdenza sociale — che disciplina il documento unico di regolarità contributiva (Decree of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security governing the social security contributions payment certificate) of 24 October 2007 (GURI No 279 of 30 November 2007, p. 11).

11 Article 8(3) of that ministerial decree provides:

'For the sole purposes of participation in the tender procedure, a non-serious difference between the sums owed and those paid with regard to each social security institution and each construction fund shall not preclude the issue of a DURC. A difference equal to or less than 5% between the sums owed and those paid in respect of each payment or contribution period or, in any event, a difference less than EUR 100, shall not be regarded as serious, without prejudice to the obligation to pay that amount within 30 days of the DURC being issued.'

12 The DURC which is issued to the undertaking is valid for a period of three months.

13 According to Article 7(3) of that ministerial decree, it is also laid down that, in the event of a failure to comply with the conditions for regularity with regard to social contributions, the relevant bodies 'request the party concerned to correct its situation within 15 days'. The national case-law has however made clear that the above request does not apply where the DURC is requested by the contracting authority.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

14 By notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 14 July 2012, Consip launched a tender procedure for the award of a contract for cleaning and other services for maintaining the decorative and technical elements of the buildings, all types and levels of educational establishments and training centres of the public authorities. It was possible to participate in the tender procedure for that contract, divided into 13 lots, by submitting independent tenders. It is apparent from the file sent to the Court that the deadline for submitting tenders was 26 September 2012.

15 The notice expressly required each tenderer to declare, on pain of exclusion, that it satisfied the general requirements for participation in the tender procedure laid down in Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006.

16 Ciclat, a consortium created by workers' production cooperatives, submitted a tender in relation to lot No 7, the basic amount of which for the tender procedure was EUR 91 200 000, and lot No 12, the basic amount of which for the tender procedure was EUR 89 800 000, by providing, in the first case, a provisional deposit of EUR 912 000 in relation to lot No 7 and of EUR 898 000 in relation to lot No 12.

17 Since Ciclat is a consortium, it indicated in its tender the cooperatives that would carry out the work if it were to be awarded the contract, and among them it referred in particular to Ancora Soc. coop. On 10 September 2012, the latter declared, referring to the relevant passage of Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, that it 'had not committed any serious infringements or definitively established infringements of the rules regarding social security and welfare contributions such as would prevent the issue of a DURC …'.

18 On completion of the tender procedure, Ciclat was placed top of the provisional list for lot No 7, and second for lot No 12.

19 On 12 June 2013, in response to Consip's request in the context of verifications, the Istituto nazionale per l'assicurazione contro gli infortuni sul lavoro (INAIL) issued a certificate in which it concluded that, at the time of its declaration on 10 September 2012, Ancora had failed to pay social security contributions, in relation to the payment of insurance premiums, that company having failed to pay the third instalment of those premiums in the context of the reverse charge scheme expiring on 16 August 2012, amounting to EUR 33 148.28. That third instalment was paid with the fourth and final instalment on 5 December 2012, that is to say before those verifications were carried out and before the result of the tender procedure was known.

20 Since Consip subsequently decided to exclude Ciclat from the tender procedure, the latter brought proceedings before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court of Lazio, Italy) against that exclusion and against the subsequent measures to enforce provisional deposits. That court dismissed the action.

21 Ciclat appealed against that decision before the referring court. It contended that the failure to pay, within the time-limit set, one of the tranches of a self-assessed premium cannot be classified as a 'serious and definitively established infringement', in the light, in particular, of the spontaneous payment of the contribution with the fourth and final tranche. It also stated that INAIL failed to fulfil its obligation to inform it of irregularities in accordance with Article 7 of the Ministerial Decree of 24 October 2007, in so far as that obligation applies also in the event of a request made by the DURC office on its own initiative during the verification decided by the contracting authority.

22 The Consiglio di Stato (State Council, Italy) has doubts concerning the validity of the Italian rules at issue. It considers that they could be contrary to EU law, in particular to Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 and Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

23 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (State Council) decided to stay its proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Do Article 45 of Directive 18/2004, read also in the light of the principle of reasonableness, and Articles 49 and 56 TFEU preclude national legislation which, in relation to a threshold-based procurement procedure, allows a request to be made by the contracting authority on its own initiative for the certificate issued by the social security institutions ('DURC') and obliges that authority to exclude the tenderer if the certificate discloses an earlier failure to pay contributions, in particular one existing at the time of participation but not known to that operator, which took part on the strength of a positive currently valid DURC, but that infringement in any case no longer exists at the time of the award or of the verification carried out on the contracting authority's own initiative?'

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

24 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 and Articles 49 and 56 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which obliges a contracting authority to consider an infringement relating to the payment of social security contributions, recorded in a certificate requested by a contracting authority on its own initiative and issued by the social security institutions to be a ground for exclusion, where that infringement existed on the date of the participation in a tender procedure, even if it no longer existed on the date of the award or of the verification carried out on the contracting authority's own initiative.

25 First of all, it should be noted that, as is apparent from the order for reference, Directive 2004/18 is applicable to the facts at issue in the main proceedings. In addition, it should be pointed out that the provisions of that directive must, in accordance with recital 2 thereof, be interpreted in accordance with the principles of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services as well as with those deriving therefrom. It is, therefore, not necessary to examine separately the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings in the light of Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

26 Moreover, it should be noted that Directive 2014/24, referred to in the order for reference, had still not entered into force at the time of the facts at issue in the main proceedings, as is apparent from Article 93 of that directive and it is therefore not applicable ratione temporis.

27 In the first place, it is necessary to examine whether Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 precludes national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which considers an infringement relating to the payment of social security contributions which existed on the date of the participation in a tender procedure to be a ground for exclusion, although the amount of the contributions was put in order before the award or the verification carried by the contracting authority on its own initiative.

28 In that regard, it should be noted, first, that Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 leaves it to the Member States to determine the period within which the persons concerned must comply with their obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions and may make subsequent regularisations, on condition that that period respects the principles of transparency and equal treatment (see, to that effect, judgment of 9 February 2006, La Cascina and Others, C-226/04 and C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94, paragraphs 31 and 32).

29 Secondly, although a contracting authority may request the correction or amplification of data relating to an offer, such corrections or additions may relate only to data which can be objectively shown to pre-date the deadline for applying to take part in the tendering procedure concerned and may not relate to information which must be communicated, failing which the tender will be excluded (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraphs 39 and 40).

30 Furthermore, Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, which provides that the contracting authority may invite operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50 of that directive, cannot be interpreted as permitting that authority to accept any rectification of omissions which, as expressly provided for in the contract documentation, must result in the exclusion of the tenderer (see, to that effect, judgment of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 46).

31 It follows that Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which holds an infringement relating to social security contributions which existed on the date of the participation in a tendering procedure to be a ground for exclusion, although the amount of the contributions was put in order before the award or the verification carried by the contracting authority on its own initiative.

32 It is necessary to determine whether that conclusion applies also where national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, provides that the question whether an economic operator is in compliance with its obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions on the date of its participation in a tendering procedure, is determined by a certificate issued by the social security institutions and requested by the contracting authority on its own initiative. The referring court notes, in that regard, that the social security institutions are not obliged, under Article 7(3) of the ministerial decree of 24 October 2007, to warn the economic operator concerned of the irregularity prior to issuing such a certificate.

33 It should be noted, first, that Article 45(2)(e) of Directive 2004/18 allows Member States to exclude any economic operator from participation in a public contract, where that operator fails to fulfil his obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions. Moreover, under Article 45(3) of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authorities accept as sufficient evidence that the economic operator is not in the situation referred to in Article 45(2)(e), a certificate issued by the competent authority in the Member State concerned and from which it is apparent that those requirements are satisfied. It in no way follows from the wording of those provisions that the competent authorities are prohibited from requesting the certificate required from the social security institutions on their own initiative.

34 Secondly, it is of little consequence if an economic operator has not been warned of such an irregularity as long as he has the possibility to verify, at any time, the regularity of his situation with the competent authorities. If that is indeed the case, which it is for the national court to determine, an economic operator may not rely on a certificate issued by the social security institutions obtained before his tender was submitted and certifying that he complied with his obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions during a period before that tender was submitted, while being aware, as the case may be, after making enquiries with the competent authorities, that he no longer complies with such obligations on the date his tender was submitted.

35 In the second place, it is necessary to examine whether Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 precludes national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which obliges the contracting authorities to consider an infringement relating to the payment of social security contributions, recorded in a certificate requested by a contracting authority on its own initiative and issued by the social security institutions, where that infringement existed on the date of the participation in a tender procedure, to be a ground for exclusion, thereby entirely excluding the contracting authorities' discretion.

36 It should be noted that Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 does not provide for uniform application at EU level of the grounds of exclusion it mentions, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds of exclusion at all or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level (judgment of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici, C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063, paragraph 36 and the case-law cited). That provision does not therefore oblige the Member States to grant the contracting authority freedom of appreciation in that regard.

37 It follows that Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which obliges the contracting authorities to consider an infringement relating to the payment of social security contributions, recorded in a certificate requested by a contracting authority on its own initiative and issued by the social security institutions, where that infringement existed on the date of the participation in a tender procedure, to be a ground for exclusion, thereby entirely excluding the contracting authorities' discretion.

38 In the third and last place, it is necessary to examine the referring court's questions concerning whether national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, introduces discrimination between undertakings established in Italy and those established in other Member States. In that context, the referring court notes that, for the latter, Article 38(4) and (5) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 provides that the contracting authority must request those undertakings to supply themselves the supporting documents required and that, if the Member State concerned fails to issue that type of document or certificate, a sworn declaration or a solemn declaration is regarded as sufficient proof.

39 In that regard, it should be noted that it is not apparent from the order for reference that undertakings established in other Member States submitted tenders in the main proceedings. It follows that the question whether national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, introduces discrimination between undertakings established in Italy and those established in other Member States is irrelevant to the outcome of the dispute in the main proceedings.

40 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which obliges a contracting authority to consider an infringement relating to the payment of social security contributions, recorded in a certificate requested by a contracting authority on its own initiative and issued by the social security institutions, to be a ground for exclusion, where that infringement existed on the date of the participation in a tender procedure, even if it no longer existed at the time of the award or of the verification carried out on the contracting authority's own initiative.

Costs

41 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 45 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which obliges a contracting authority to consider an infringement relating to the payment of social security contributions, recorded in a certificate requested by a contracting authority on its own initiative and issued by the social security institutions, to be a ground for exclusion, where that infringement existed on the date of the participation in a tender procedure, even if it no longer existed at the time of the award or of the verification carried out on the contracting authority's own initiative.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of the provisions of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) and the general principles of equal treatment and proportionality and the extent of judicial review of the powers of contracting authorities.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Connexxion Taxi Services BV ('Connexxion') and the Staat der Nederlanden — Ministerie van Volksgezondheid, Welzijn en Sport (Netherlands State — Ministry of Health, Welbeing and Sport, 'the Ministry') and the tender group constituted by Transvision BV, Rotterdamse Mobiliteit Centrale RMC BV and Zorgvervoercentrale Nederland BV ('the Tender Group') concerning the lawfulness of the Ministry's decision to award a public services contract to the Tender Group.

Legal context

3 Recital 2 of Directive 2004/18 states:

'The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.'

4 Article 2 of that directive, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts' provides:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

5 Under Title II, Section 2 of Chapter VII of that directive concerns 'Criteria for qualitative selection'. It includes Article 45, entitled 'Personal situation of the candidate or tenderer'. Article 45(1) lists the reasons for which a candidate or tenderer must be excluded from participating in a contract. Article 45(2) lists the reasons for which a candidate or tenderer may be excluded from participation in a contract and was worded as follows:

'Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate;

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.'

6 Annex VII A to that directive, entitled ' Information which must be included in public contract notices' refers, in point 17, to 'selection criteria regarding the personal situation of economic operators that may lead to their exclusion, and required information proving that they do not fall within the cases justifying exclusion …'.

7 Under the heading 'Scope and availability of review procedures', Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) provides in paragraph 1(3) thereof:

'Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the ground that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.'

8 Directive 2004/18 was replaced by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65). In accordance with Article 91 of Directive 2014/24, Directive 2004/18 was repealed with effect from 18 April 2016.

Netherlands law

9 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Netherlands law by the Besluit houdende regels betreffende de procedures voor het gunnen van overheidspdrachten voor werken, lveringen en diensten (Decree relating to the rules on the award of public contracts) of 16 July 2005 (Stb. 2005, p. 408 'the Decree').

10 Article 45(2)(d) of that directive was transposed into Netherlands law by Article 45(3)(d) of the Decree which states as follows:

'The contracting authority may exclude from participation in a public contract any economic operator:

(d) which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate.

11 The Explanatory Memorandum to the decree states, with regard to Article 45(3) thereof:

'The assessment of whether exclusion should actually take place and for how long that exclusion should last should, having regard to the general principles of Directive 2004/18, always be proportionate and non-discriminatory. "Proportionate" means that the exclusion and its length must be proportional to the gravity of the misconduct. In the same way, the exclusion and its length must be proportionate to the size of the public contract. Setting a mandatory period in which an undertaking which acted unlawfully is excluded from the outset from all public procurement procedures by the State is not, therefore, consistent with the principle of proportionality. That also means that the assessment is made on an individual basis, because the contracting authority must always verify on a case-by-case basis for each public contract whether, in a specific case, a particular undertaking must be excluded (in accordance with the nature and size of the contract, the nature and extent of the fraud and the measures that the undertaking has adopted in the meantime).'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 On 10 July 2012, the Ministry launched a contract award procedure for the supply of 'socio-recreational interregional transport services for persons with reduced mobility'. The service is intended to enable persons with reduced mobility to travel freely by giving them a transport budget each year expressed in taxi kilometres. The contract has a minimum duration of three years and nine months and is valued annually at approximately EUR 60 000 000.

13 The award procedure for that contract is described in detail, in a document called 'Descriptive document', the paragraph of which entitled 'Grounds for Exclusion and Suitability Requirements' states inter alia as follows in point 3.1:

'A Tender to which a Ground for Exclusion applies shall be set aside and shall not be eligible for further (substantive) assessment.'

14 As far as concerns the grounds for exclusion, the Descriptive document refers to a 'self-declaration' that tenderers must make and attach to their tender as an annex. The descriptive document states:

'The tenderer hereby declares … that no grounds for exclusion (see paragraphs 2 and 3 of the declaration) apply to him; this is confirmed by signature of the Uniform Self-declaration — Tenders.'

15 By that declaration, the tenderer declares, inter alia, that 'neither his company nor any manager has been guilty of grave professional misconduct'.

16 Connexxion and the Tender Group were among the companies that participated in the award procedure for that contract. By letter of 8 October 2012, the Ministry informed Connexxion that its bid was in second position, but that the Ministry intended to award the contract to the Tender Group.

17 On 20 November 2012, the Nederlandse Medeingingsautoriteit (Netherlands Competition Authority) imposed fines on two undertakings in the Tender Group and on the managers of those undertakings for infringement of Netherlands competition law. The infringements established concerned agreements concluded with other undertakings during the periods from 18 December 2007 to 27 August 2010 and from 17 April 2009 to 1 March 2011. The Ministry took the view that this constituted grave professional misconduct but maintained its decision to award the contract to the Tender Group, on the ground that the Tender Group's exclusion on the basis of such misconduct would be disproportionate.

18 In proceedings for interim measures, Connexxion sought an order prohibiting the Ministry from awarding the contract to the Tender Group. By decision of 17 April 2013, the voorieningenrechter te Den Haag (the court hearing the application for interim measures, The Hague) upheld Connexxion's request, taking the view that the Ministry, having established that the Tender Group had been guilty of grave professional misconduct, no longer had any latitude to carry out a review of proportionality.

19 By decision of 3 September 2013, the Gerechtshof Den Haag (Court of Appeal, The Hague, Netherlands) set aside the decision of the court hearing the application for interim relief and authorised the Ministry to award the contract at issue in the main proceedings to the Tender Group. It held, first, that EU law does not preclude a contracting authority from assessing, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, whether a tenderer to which an optional ground of exclusion applies must be excluded and, second, that by carrying out such an examination of proportionality, the Ministry has not acted in disregard of the principles of equal treatment and transparency.

20 Connexxion brought an appeal against that decision before the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court, Netherlands).

21 That court observes that the case in the main proceedings is characterised, first, by the fact that, in the tender conditions, the contracting authority stated that the tender to which a ground of exclusion applies is to be rejected without consideration of the substance and, second, that the decision to award the contract to a particular tenderer was nevertheless maintained after the contracting authority established that that tenderer had been guilty of grave professional misconduct for the purposes of the tender conditions.

22 The referring court states that Article 45(3) of the Decree reproduces in their entirety the optional grounds of exclusion laid down in Article 45(2), first subparagraph, of Directive 2004/18. As far as concerns the application of the grounds of exclusion, it is clear from the Explanatory Memorandum regarding that provision of the Decree that, taking account of the general principles of the directive, the question whether a tenderer is to be excluded must always be determined in a proportionate and non-discriminatory manner. Thus, contracting authorities should assess, on a case-by-case basis, whether an undertaking must be excluded from the relevant public procurement procedure, taking account of the nature and size of the contract, the nature and extent of the fraud, and the measures that the undertaking has taken in the meantime.

23 Accordingly, national law requires the contracting authority, after it has established that a tenderer has been guilty of grave professional misconduct, to decide, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, whether the perpetrator of that misconduct must in fact be excluded.

24 Therefore, the obligation to carry out an assessment of proportionality may be regarded as making the criteria for the application of the optional grounds of exclusion more flexible, as provided for by national law, within the meaning of the judgments of 9 February 2006, La Cascina and Others (C-226/04 and C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94, paragraph 21), and of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici (C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063, paragraphs 35 and 36). In accordance with Article 45(2), second subparagraph, of Directive 2004/18 such flexibility, provided for by national law, should comply with EU law and, in particular, with the principles of equal treatment and transparency. In the case in the main proceedings, the Ministry, as the contracting authority, after establishing that the tenderer had been guilty of grave professional misconduct, assessed, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, whether the professional honesty and reliability of the Tender Group could be guaranteed in the performance of the contract concerned. The Tender Group has taken measures to that effect.

25 The referring court points out that to date, the Court has not yet adjudicated on whether EU law, in particular Article 45(2) of that directive, precludes a contracting authority from being obliged to assess under national law, and in accordance with the principle of proportionality, whether a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct should be excluded from a contract. The Court has also not adjudicated on the importance to be attached, in that regard, to the fact that, in the tender conditions, the contracting authority has provided for the rejection, without any examination of the substance, of any tender to which a ground of exclusion applies. Furthermore, that directive does not contain any provision concerning the extent of judicial review of the decisions taken by the contracting authorities.

26 In those circumstances, the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court, Netherlands) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘1(a) Does EU law, in particular Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, preclude national law from obliging a contracting authority to assess, by application of the principle of proportionality, whether a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct must indeed be excluded?

1(b) Is it significant in this regard that a contracting authority has stated in the tender conditions that a tender to which a ground for exclusion applies must be set aside and is not to be eligible for further substantive assessment?

2. If the answer to Question 1(a) is in the negative: does EU law preclude a situation in which the national courts fail to carry out an unrestricted judicial review of an assessment conducted on the basis of the principle of proportionality, such as the assessment conducted by a contracting authority in the present case, but merely carry out a (“marginal”) review as to whether the contracting authority could reasonably have come to the decision not to exclude a tenderer notwithstanding the fact that that tenderer has been guilty of grave professional misconduct within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18?’

Consideration of the questions referred

27 As a preliminary point, it must be stated that the facts at issue in the main proceedings, as set out in paragraphs 12 to 17 above, arose before the expiry on 18 April 2016 of the period within which the Member States were to transpose Directive 2014/24. It follows that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling must be determined ratione temporis solely in the light of Directive 2004/18, as interpreted by the case-law of the Court.

Consideration of Question 1(a)

28 According to settled case-law, as regards public contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18, Article 45(2) thereof leaves the application of the seven grounds for excluding candidates from participation in a contract, relating to their professional honesty, solvency and reliability, to the determination of the Member States, as evidenced by the phrase ‘may be excluded from participation in a contract’, which appears at the beginning of that provision (see, as far as concerns Article 29 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), judgment of 9 February 2006, La Cascina and Others, C-226/04 and C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94, paragraph 21). Furthermore, pursuant to Article 45(2), second subparagraph, the Member States must specify the conditions for applying paragraph 2, in accordance with their national law and in compliance with EU law (judgment of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici, C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063, paragraph 35).

29 Therefore, Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 does not provide for uniform application at EU level of the grounds of exclusion it mentions, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds of exclusion at all or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level. In that context, the Member States have the power to make the criteria laid down in Article 45(2) less onerous or more flexible (judgment of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici, paragraph 36 and the case-law cited).

30 In the present case, it must be observed that, as far as concerns the option to exclude an economic operator which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct, the Kingdom of the Netherlands has not set out in its legislation the conditions of applicability in Article 45(2), second subparagraph, of that directive, but, by the Decree, has conferred the exercise of that option on the contracting authorities. The Netherlands legislation at issue in the main proceedings gives the contracting authorities the choice to declare the optional grounds of exclusion, laid down in Article 45(2) of that directive, to be applicable to an award procedure for a public contract.

31 As far as concerns the grounds for excluding a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct from a contract, it is clear from the order for reference that that legislation requires the contracting authority concerned, which establishes that the tenderer has been guilty of such misconduct, to determine, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, whether the tenderer should in fact be excluded.

32 Thus, it appears that that assessment of the proportionality of the exclusion makes the application of the ground of exclusion relating to grave professional misconduct laid down in Article 45(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18 more flexible, in accordance with the case-law cited in paragraph 29 of the present judgment. Furthermore, it follows from recital 2 thereof that the principle of proportionality applies in a general manner to public procurement procedures.

33 Therefore, the answer to Question 1(a) is that EU law, in particular Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, does not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which requires a contracting authority to assess, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, whether it is in fact appropriate to exclude from a public contract a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct.

Consideration of Question 1(b)

34 By Question 1(b), the referring court asks essentially whether the provisions of Directive 2004/18, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment, and the obligation of transparency deriving from it, must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude a contracting authority from deciding to award a public contract to a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct, on the ground that the exclusion of that tenderer from the award procedure would be contrary to the principle of proportionality, although, according to the conditions in the call for tenders for that contract, a tenderer who has been guilty of grave professional misconduct must necessarily be excluded without taking into account the proportionality of that sanction.

35 It is clear from the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings that the contracting authorities have a wide margin of discretion regarding the inclusion of the conditions of applicability in Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, providing for the optional ground of exclusion of an economic operator which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct, in the tendering documents and their application in practice.

36 It is conceivable that, when the contract documents are drafted, the contracting authority concerned may take the view, in accordance with the nature of that contract, the sensitive nature of the services which are its subject, and the requirements of professional honesty and reliability of the economic operators which arise from that, that the commission of grave professional misconduct must result in the automatic rejection of the tender and the exclusion of the tenderer at fault, provided that the principle of proportionality is observed when the seriousness of that misconduct is assessed.

37 Such a clause, inserted into the contract documents in unambiguous terms, as is the case with regard to the contract documents at issue in the main proceedings, enables all economic operators which are reasonably well informed exercising ordinary care to be apprised of the requirements of the contracting authority and the conditions of the contract so they may act accordingly.

38 As far as concerns whether, pursuant to the relevant national legislation, the contracting authority must or may assess, after the submission of the tenders or even after the selection of tenderers, whether an exclusion made in accordance with an exclusion clause on the ground of grave professional misconduct complies with the principle of proportionality, even though, according to the conditions of the call for tenders for that contract, a tenderer who has been guilty of grave professional misconduct must necessarily be excluded without taking account of the proportionality of that sanction, it must be recalled that the contracting authority must comply strictly with the criteria which it has itself laid down (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 40 and the case-law cited) in the light, in particular, of Annex VII A, paragraph 17, to Directive 2004/18.

39 Furthermore, the principle of equal treatment requires tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions (see, to that effect, judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 36).

40 Likewise, the obligation of transparency requires that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 36 and the case-law cited).

41 As regards the examination of the proportionality of the exclusion at issue in the main proceedings, it must be observed that some of the economic operators concerned, although aware of the exclusion clause in the contract documents and knowing that they have been guilty of professional misconduct likely to be considered to be grave, may be tempted to submit a tender in the hope of being exempt from the exclusion on the basis of a subsequent assessment of their situation in the application of the principle of proportionality, pursuant to the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings, while others, in a comparable situation, will not submit such a tender based on the terms of the exclusion clause which does not mention such an examination of proportionality.

42 The latter situation, in particular, is likely to concern the economic operators from other Member States who are less familiar with the terms and detailed rules of application of the relevant national legislation. That is particularly true in a situation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, in which the contracting authority's obligation to carry out such an assessment of proportionality of an exclusion for grave professional misconduct does not derive from the terms of Article 45(3) of the Decree, but only from the Explanatory Memorandum relating to that provision. According to the information provided by the Netherlands Government in the proceedings before the Court, the Explanatory Memorandum is not binding itself, but must only be taken into consideration for the interpretation of that provision.

43 Therefore, the assessment of the exclusion at issue in the light of the principle of proportionality, where the tender conditions of the contract concerned provide for the rejection of tenders which are covered by such an exclusion clause without any assessment of that principle, is liable to place the economic operators concerned in an uncertain position and adversely affect the principle of equal treatment and compliance with the obligation of transparency.

44 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to Question 1(b) is that the provisions of Directive 2004/18, in particular those of Article 2 of and Annex VII A, point 17, thereto, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency deriving from that, must be interpreted as precluding a contracting authority from deciding to award a public contract to a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct on the ground that the exclusion of that tenderer from the award procedure would be contrary to the principle of proportionality, even though, according to the tender conditions of that contract, a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct must necessarily be excluded, without consideration of the proportionality of that sanction.

The second question

45 Since the answer to Question 1(b) provides the information necessary for the national court to decide the dispute before it, there is no need to answer the second question.

Costs

46 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. EU law, in particular Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, does not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which requires a contracting authority to assess, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, whether it is in fact appropriate to exclude from a public contract a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct.

2. The provisions of Directive 2004/18, in particular those of Article 2 of and Annex VII A, point 17, thereto, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency which derives from that, must be interpreted as precluding a contracting authority from deciding to award a public contract to a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct on the ground that the exclusion of that tenderer from the award procedure would be contrary to the principle of proportionality, even though, according to the tender conditions of that contract, a tenderer which has been guilty of grave professional misconduct must necessarily be excluded, without consideration of the proportionality of that sanction.

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court of the Netherlands)

(Public procurement — Selection procedure — Criteria for qualitative selection — Optional grounds for exclusion — Grave professional misconduct — Principle of proportionality — Discretion which is not provided for in the descriptive document — Scope of judicial review)

The question referred for a preliminary ruling from the

1. Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court of the Netherlands) is concerned, first, with one of the most common problems in the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC, (2) that is, the powers of Member States to exclude certain tenderers from public contracts. The referring court also enquires as to the scope of the judicial review in the context of the review procedures brought under Directive 89/665/EEC. (3)

2. In this case, one of the tenderers had been guilty of grave professional misconduct, conduct referred to in the 'descriptive document' (4) for the tender as a ground for (automatic?) exclusion. The contracting authority, however, not only allowed it to participate, but ultimately also awarded the contract to it.

3. Directive 2004/18 (specifically, Article 45(2)(d)) authorises Member States to incorporate, on an optional basis, that clause in the national rules governing public procurement. The Hoge Raad (Supreme Court) seeks to ascertain whether the contracting authority is empowered, notwithstanding the terms of the descriptive document, to assess the tenderer's misconduct in the light of the principle of proportionality and even to determine that such behaviour does not have an exclusionary effect.

4. If the contracting authority is found to have that power, the referring court enquires next as to the intensity of the judicial review of the decision taken. More specifically, it asks whether it is compatible with EU law for the court to carry out, in those circumstances, a review limited to assessing only the 'reasonableness' of the administrative decision.

I – Legislative framework

Directive 2004/18

5. According to Article 45:

‘2. Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate;

…’

6. According to the final subparagraph of Article 45(2):

‘Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.’

7. The third subparagraph of Article 1(1) provides:

‘Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.’

8. Article 2(1) provides:

‘Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.’

B – National law

Besluit aanbestedingsregels voor overheidsopdrachten (5)

9. Article 45(3) reproduces the optional grounds for exclusion contained in Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18.

10. In accordance with the ‘Nota van toelichting’ (explanatory note) (6) attached to the BAO, the assessment of whether a tenderer must actually be excluded, having regard to the general principles of Directive 2004/18, must always be proportional and be carried out in a non-discriminatory manner. The contracting authorities must examine in each particular case, on the basis of the nature and size of the public contract, the type and scope of the misconduct and the measures taken in the meantime by the undertaking, whether that undertaking should be excluded from the invitation to tender.

II – Facts in the main proceedings and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11. On 10 July 2012 the Ministerie van Volksgezondheid, Welzijn en Sport ('the Ministry') launched a European call for tenders for the award of 'socio-recreational interregional transport services for persons with reduced mobility' ('the contract'). The contract had a duration of over three years and its annual value was approximately EUR 60 000 000.

12. According to paragraph 3.1 ('Grounds for exclusion and suitability requirements') of the descriptive document, 'A tender to which a ground for exclusion applies shall be set aside and shall not be eligible for further (substantive) assessment'.

13. The descriptive document refers to the annex 'Uniform self-declaration — Tenders' (which must be added as a mandatory annex to the tender) the requirements imposed on tenderers.

14. According to the descriptive document, 'the tenderer … declares … that no grounds for exclusion … apply to him; this is confirmed by signature of the Uniform self-declaration — Tenders'.

15. The Uniform self-declaration refers, in turn, to Article 45 of the BAO and specifies which optional grounds for exclusion apply. The tenderer is required, inter alia, to declare that 'neither his company nor any manager has been guilty of grave professional misconduct'.

16. Among those taking part in the procurement procedure were Connexxion Taxi Services BV ('Connexxion') and the Tender Group, comprising Transvision, RMC and ZCN ('the Tender Group').

17. By letter of 8 October 2012, the Ministry informed Connexxion that its tender had been placed in second position and that the intention was to award the contract to the Tender Group.

18. On 20 November 2012, the Nederlandse Mededingingsautoriteit (Netherlands Competition Authority) imposed a number of penalties on RMC and the BIOS Group, of which ZCN formed part, pursuant to the Mededingingswet (Law on Competition), in relation to acts which took place between 17 April 2009 and 1 March 2011 relating to taxi services in the Rotterdam region.

19. By letter of 18 February 2013, the Ministry informed Connexxion that it stood by its decision to award the contract to the Tender Group, because, although the latter had been guilty of 'grave professional misconduct', its exclusion would be disproportionate.

20. Connexxion brought legal proceedings against the decision of the Ministry, seeking an order prohibiting the State from awarding the contract to the Tender Group, which opposed that claim.

21. The Voorzieningenrechter te Den Haag (the court hearing the application for interim measures, The Hague) upheld Connexxion's claim, taking the view that the Ministry, having established that the Tender Group had been guilty of grave professional misconduct, no longer had any latitude to carry out a review of proportionality.

22. An appeal having been brought before it, the Gerechtshof Den Haag (Court of Appeal, The Hague) set aside the decision of the court hearing the application for interim measures and ordered the State, if it still wished to do so, to award the contract to the Tender Group.

23. The Gerechtshof (Court of Appeal) held that Directive 2004/18 gives the Member States the latitude to act as the Netherlands legislature did, that is to say to transpose in full Article 45(2) of that directive into Article 45(3) of the BAO and then to delegate to the contracting authorities the power to define in more detail the grounds for exclusion.

24. The Gerechtshof (Court of Appeal) ruled that, regardless of whether EU law concerning the award of public contracts requires a review of proportionality, EU law does not prohibit one. Furthermore, it follows from the Netherlands legislation that exclusion must not be automatic and that a contracting authority must assess whether it would be proportionate.

25. The Gerechtshof (Court of Appeal) added that the decision of the Ministry had to be evaluated with caution, a fortiori as the grave professional misconduct at issue had not (yet) been irrevocably established. The essential question is whether the Ministry could reasonably have reached the conclusion that excluding the Tender Group was disproportionate. It held that it was not relevant that the descriptive document includes as a reason for eliminating a tenderer the existence of a ground for exclusion and stated that the decision of the Ministry could withstand the 'marginal' (7) review of the court.

26. The Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court of the Netherlands), hearing an appeal against the judgment of the appellate court, notes certain tensions between: (a) on the one hand, the obligation imposed by law on the contracting authority to make the optional grounds for exclusion subject to an assessment of proportionality in order to determine whether they must have an exclusionary effect; and, (b) on the other hand, the descriptive document for the contract, under which tenders to which a ground for exclusion applies must be rejected.

27. The referring court has doubts as to whether application of the proportionality test observes the principles of equality, transparency and public access, when that test has not been expressly incorporated in the descriptive document.

28. Furthermore, according to the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court of the Netherlands), although the court must adjudicate on the content of the decision of the administrative body, Netherlands law limits the powers of the court to a 'marginal' review of the decision of the contracting authority, which is confined to determining whether that contracting authority could reasonably have come its decision.

29. Against that background, the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court of the Netherlands) referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) (a) Does EU law, in particular Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004] on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, preclude national law from obliging a contracting authority to assess, by application of the principle of proportionality, whether a tenderer which is guilty of grave professional misconduct must indeed be excluded?

(b) Is it significant in this regard that a contracting authority has stated in the tender conditions that a tender to which a ground for exclusion applies must be set aside and is not to be eligible for further substantive assessment?

(2) If the answer to Question 1(a) is in the negative: does EU law preclude a situation in which the national courts fail to carry out an 'unrestricted' judicial review of an assessment conducted on the basis of the principle of proportionality, such as the assessment conducted by a contracting authority in the present case, but merely carry out a ('marginal') review as to whether the contracting authority could reasonably have come to the decision not to exclude a tenderer notwithstanding the fact that that tenderer was guilty of grave professional misconduct within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC?'

III – Summary of the arguments of the parties

A – The first question referred for a preliminary ruling

30. According to Connexxion, the contracting authority is not in a position to make an assessment of proportionality having found that the tenderer has been guilty of grave professional misconduct. That assessment has already been carried out by inclusion of the misconduct as a ground for exclusion in the descriptive document. Given the wording of the latter, it would be contrary to the principles of public access, transparency and equality in matters of administrative procurement for the contracting authority to have the power to assess the proportionality of the ground for exclusion.

31. All the other parties take the contrary view. Whether or not to incorporate the optional grounds for exclusion is a matter for the Member States, which enjoy discretion in that regard. Within that discretion, Directive 2004/18 does not preclude making the exclusion of tenderers to which one of the optional grounds for exclusion applies subject to a prior assessment of proportionality. As to the fact that the descriptive document considers grave professional misconduct as sufficient grounds for rejecting the perpetrator, this does not prevent the contracting authority from applying the general rule, namely, to make application of that ground for exclusion subject to an assessment of proportionality.

B – The second question referred for a preliminary ruling

32. Connexxion is in favour of allowing the court to carry out a full review of the administrative decision.

33. The Netherlands Government and the Tender Group argue, however, that the judicial review should be limited to a marginal examination of the reasonableness of the decision of the contracting authority.

34. According to the Commission, the court's review must be wider in scope, allowing the court to examine the accuracy of the facts and the absence of manifest error of assessment, as well as to ensure that the facts supporting the decision of the contracting authority are accurate, complete and reliable.

35. According to the Italian Government, it is for the national legislature to establish the appropriate form of review, as EU law does not require that the assessment by the referring court should fully reproduce the substantive examination by the contracting authority.

IV – Assessment

A – Part (a) of the first question referred for a preliminary ruling

36. Is it consistent with Directive 2004/18 for a Member State to require contracting authorities to make the possible exclusion of tenderers who have been guilty of grave professional misconduct subject to an assessment of proportionality?

37. Before answering that question two clarifications should be made. According to the information contained in the order for reference, on both the date on which the tenders were submitted and the date of the decision of the contracting authority (8 October 2012), the Tender Group had not been penalised as the perpetrator of any grave misconduct. It was at a later date (on 20 November 2012) that the Netherlands competition authority imposed a number of penalties on some of its members, for concerted practices which occurred years earlier. It is for the referring court to decide whether those penalties, subsequent to the date of submission of the tenders and the initial award decision, can be regarded as a valid ground for excluding a perpetrator which had already submitted its tender (obviously, without referring in it to any grave misconduct, which had not until then been established by law).

38. If the referring court considers, nonetheless, that the penalty imposed on the tenderer justifies the latter being classified (8) as the perpetrator of 'grave professional misconduct', there arises the question of the application of that ground for exclusion, that is whether it should apply with automatic effect or only following a review of its proportionality.

39. The second clarification concerns the interpretation of the national rules, which falls exclusively to the referring court. In the order for reference, the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court of the Netherlands) states that 'national law obliges a contracting authority, in the case where one of the optional grounds for exclusion in Article 45(3) of the BAO is applicable, to determine on the basis of the principle of proportionality whether exclusion of the tenderer concerned must in fact follow'. As regards the preliminary ruling procedure, and in so far as national law is concerned, this resolves the dispute as to the adequacy of the legal basis of the 'obligation' to assess proportionality (and indirectly, as to the effect of the explanatory note to the BAO).

40. Following those clarifications, the answer to the question referred may be inferred without major difficulties from the case-law of the Court both prior and subsequent to Directive 2004/18. (9)

41. Under Directive 92/50/EEC (10) (Article 29 of which is worded in a similar way to Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18), the Court held in the judgment in La Cascina and Others (11) that application of the cases of optional exclusion are to be left to the assessment of the Member States, as shown by the phrase 'may be excluded from participation in a contract', which appears at the beginning of Article 29. The Member States cannot add grounds of exclusion to those referred to in the provision, (12) but Article 29 of Directive 92/50 does not provide for uniform application of those grounds for exclusion. (13)

42. When Directive 2004/18 came in force, the Court followed the same approach in the judgment in Consorcio Stabile Libor Lavori Publicci, (14) paragraph 35 of which reproduces the arguments contained in the judgment in La Cascina and Others. (15) It reiterated that the Member States must specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard to EU law, the implementing conditions for Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18. The Court therefore again endorsed the power of the Member States to apply the exclusion criteria and, should they so wish, make them more flexible.

43. If it is for Member States to define which grounds for exclusion – among those laid down as optional in Directive 2004/18 – are to apply in their own legal systems, it is logical that they are also entitled to specify the conditions or requirements for their application. They may, therefore, define those grounds more or less strictly, so that if they prefer to subject each, or only some, of them to a case-by-case review or comparison of proportionality, nothing in Directive 2004/18 prevents this.

44. It follows from the judgment in Consorcio Stabile Libor Lavori Publicci (16) that the exercise of that power by Member States is not, however, unconditional. First, the European Union attaches great importance to freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, which serves as a reason for it to facilitate opening up procurement procedures as far as possible, an aim which could be hindered by application of the optional grounds for exclusion. Secondly, it is legitimate to justify the grounds for exclusion in terms of general interest objectives, such as guarantees of the tenderer's reliability, diligence, professional honesty and seriousness. In order to balance those interests, the Court applies the principle of proportionality.

45. The corollary of that case-law is that a national law under allowing a contracting authority to reject tenderers guilty of grave professional misconduct only if their exclusion, for that reason, is deemed to be consistent with the principle of proportionality does not infringe Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 or EU law.

B – Part (b) of the first question referred for a preliminary ruling

46. The descriptive document for the contract does not make exclusion of a tenderer who is guilty of grave professional misconduct subject to an assessment of proportionality. Hence the uncertainty of the referring court: is the actual wording of that descriptive document relevant in the present case?

47. The answer to that question must be based on the foregoing. A case-by-case assessment of proportionality relating to the optional grounds for exclusion is required by the Netherlands rules applicable to public procurement (specifically, the BAO) and is also not contrary to EU law. Nevertheless, should the legal provision laying down that rule in general terms take precedence or, on the contrary, is the contracting authority bound by a particular clause in a descriptive document which, in this specific invitation to tender, excludes a tenderer who has committed a serious infringement?

48. The Court, I repeat, cannot take the place of the referring court in the interpretation of national law. However, strictly from the perspective of national law, I think it is possible to make the clause in the descriptive document consistent with the general rule. Otherwise, it would be tantamount to allowing, in a particular case, derogation from certain inviolable provisions applicable to public procurement by means of a specific measure which fails to comply with them.

49. The clause in the descriptive document can be interpreted in a manner consistent with the BAO, without excessive interpretative difficulties, if the starting point is an overall assessment of the entirety of the rules applicable to public procurement. The optional grounds for exclusion operate not in a vacuum but within a predetermined legal framework, with which they must comply. They are effective, therefore, only where the legally established requirements for their application are fulfilled. One such requirement is that conduct must be assessed in the light of the principle of proportionality, in so far as infringements by tenderers are concerned.

50. Where the contracting authority acts in accordance with that criterion, it does so in a manner entirely consistent with the general rules governing public procurement in the Netherlands, as set out in the BAO and its explanatory note. Hence, even if the descriptive document does not expressly provide that the contracting authority has the power to assess the infringement committed by the tenderer in the light of the principle of proportionality, that power must be understood to be implicit.

51. The requirement included in paragraph 3.1 of the descriptive document ('a tender to which a ground for exclusion applies must be set aside'), precisely because of its quasi-regulatory nature, must, in my view, be read in the light of the interpretative rules applicable to all subordinate legal rules, which cannot disregard the more general rules which govern them. If the BAO provides that exclusion on the ground of grave professional misconduct requires that the contracting authority examine each particular case 'on the basis of the nature and size of the public contract, the type and scope of the misconduct and the measures taken in the meantime by the undertaking', the fact that the descriptive document is silent as to that necessary and individual application of the principle of proportionality cannot result in that principle being disregarded.

52. That approach is confirmed from the perspective of EU law. The case-law of the Court on the optional grounds for exclusion, rejecting their automatic application, confirms the need for that consistent interpretation. It follows from the judgment in Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (17) that automatic exclusion (of a tenderer guilty of grave misconduct) could go beyond the discretion conferred on Member States by Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18.

53. According to that judgment, at the outset, it is necessary to carry out 'a specific and individual assessment of the conduct of the economic operator concerned'. (18) Because it failed to comply with that criterion, the Court declared incompatible with EU law a national law which 'require[s] the contracting authority … to exclude an economic operator from a … procedure for the award of a contract …, without allowing the contracting authority the power to assess, on a case-by-case basis, the gravity of the allegedly wrongful conduct of that operator'. Although the circumstances of the case which gave rise to the judgment in Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (19) differ from those in this case, the line of argument then adopted by the Court is applicable to this case as an interpretative criterion.

54. In summary, in addition to reasons relating to the internal legal system (the fact that the BAO takes precedence, as the general law governing Netherlands public contracts), which it is for the referring court to assess, it is also necessary to consider the case-law of the Court which is contrary, in principle, to automatic exclusion when that ground for exclusion is assessed.

55. I suggest, therefore, as an answer to the question referred, that the clause in the descriptive document cannot be used to avoid the case-by-case assessment of proportionality concerning the tenderer's misconduct, for the purpose of determining whether or not to exclude it from the contract.

56. The objections to that approach, based on the principles of public access, equal treatment and transparency (to which both the referring court and Conexxion refer, citing the judgment in Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta (20)), though of some weight, do not convince me. In accordance with the case-law of the Court recalled in that judgment, (21) all tenderers must be governed by the same requirements, without distinction. However, in the case before the Court, application of the principle of proportionality, as well as being supported by the general rules applicable to public procurement in the Netherlands, would have been extended equally to all the tenderers to which that ground for exclusion applied. There could have been discrimination if one of them, guilty of a similar serious infringement, had, unlike the Tender Group, been automatically excluded from the tender, that is without the prior assessment of proportionality. However, that did not happen.

57. The line of case-law which includes the judgment in Commission v CAS Succhi de Frutta (22) does not, in my opinion, rule out the answer which I propose. Application of the principles of equality, public access and transparency regarding certain clauses in the descriptive document, which must be interpreted in the light of the general rules applicable to public procurement, does not preclude the contracting authority from assessing whether, in a particular case, the tenderer's misconduct, evaluated in accordance with the criterion of proportionality, prevents it from being awarded the contract which it seeks and with a view to the award of which it has submitted a better proposal than the other tenderers.

58. In the invitation to tender at issue, the conditions and the selection procedure, the same for all applicants, were not modified. The contracting authority checked that their tenders satisfied the criteria applicable to the contract (23) and applied no ground for exclusion which was not provided for in the descriptive document. (24) The fact that, in order to assess one of those grounds for exclusion expressly included in that document it applied the criterion of proportionality, which was not expressly referred to in the descriptive document but is required by the general Netherlands rules on public procurement (as well as by the case-law of the Court), is, in my view, consistent with the principle of equal treatment and its corollary, the obligation to act transparently.

59. It is plausible that the Court should insist (most recently in the judgment in Pizzo (25)) on respect for the contract documents or similar documents as a guarantee of equal treatment of tenderers. However, like all rules, that rule has its limits and cannot magnify the significance of the contract documents (or similar documents) to the point of simply dispensing with the requirements of public contracts laid down in the legislation of each Member State. It should be noted that, in that manner, certain contracting authorities could be tempted to omit from contract documents certain requirements, lawfully established by the national legislature, with which they may not agree or simply prefer to avoid (including ones of benefit to a potential applicant), and will have the assurance that the contract documents so drawn up will be, in practice, unchallengeable. Although it is important to maintain equality of tenderers, it is no less important that they, and the contracting authority itself, should not be exempt from the rules and general criteria which, in each Member State, govern this area, including, in particular, the criterion of proportionality, which is applicable to the ground for exclusion at issue in this dispute.

C – The second question referred for a preliminary ruling

60. Although the referring court does not expressly refer to it, I take the view that the Court is asked to interpret Directive 89/665, which coordinates national rules for the review procedures concerning the award of public contracts.

61. With regard to the decisions of contracting authorities (in so far as they concern, obviously, contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18), Member States must ensure that the persons concerned have available review mechanisms suitable for determining, quickly and effectively, whether they have infringed EU law on public procurement or national rules transposing EU law into their respective legal systems. That is, ultimately, the purpose of Directive 89/665.

62. The analysis which I propose to carry out will address, first, whether Directive 89/665 and the case-law which has interpreted it provide guidelines for determining the level or intensity with which review bodies must assess the decisions of contracting authorities. If such guidelines exist, they must then be compared with those in force under Netherlands law, which the referring court mentions.

63. Next, it will be ascertained whether the intensity of the judicial review must be the same in the two types of procedures referred to in Article 2 of Directive 89/665, that is: (a) interlocutory procedures which allow interim measures to be taken in the stage prior to the conclusion of the contract; and (b) other review procedures, aimed at obtaining annulment of the administrative award measure and compensation for damages. In this case, (26) Connexxion challenged the Ministry's decision to award the contract to the Tender Group, requesting that the Voorzieningenrechter te Den Haag (the court hearing the application for interim measures, The Hague) revoke it. Connexxion's action therefore fell within the scope of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 89/665.

64. Finally, I shall consider whether, given the circumstances of the dispute in the main proceedings, it is possible to assert, as the Netherlands Government maintains, that the judicial review carried out by the respective courts, at first instance and on appeal, met the standard of review laid down by Directive 89/665.

1. The intensity of the judicial review of decisions of contracting authorities

65. In matters of public procurement, the same trend which is observable in other areas of European public law is clearly discernible: although the Court was initially content to refer to the procedural autonomy of the Member States and to use, as a corrective, the principles of equivalence and effectiveness as minimum requirements of the national systems of judicial review in disputes involving EU law, gradually, requirements specific to 'judicial protection' or supervision have gained ground, so as to increase, at the same time, the intensity of that review. (27)

66. The trend is, as is logical, more pronounced where the EU legislature has adopted harmonising provisions, specifically in relation to the judicial review of certain decisions of national authorities. This applies, in particular, in the field of public procurement, since Directive 89/665 and subsequent reforms to it have been based on an awareness that Community legislation would become worthless without review mechanisms which, as well as being harmonised, are effective and ensure compliance with the applicable rules. Those mechanisms have the purpose not only of protecting tenderers' rights, but also of improving the entire system of public procurement, whose economic importance for the internal market cannot be overemphasised.

67. It is not surprising, therefore, that both the order for reference and the observations of the parties repeatedly cite the judgments in HI (28) and Croce Amica One Italia, (29) in which the Court ruled on the scope of the powers of courts and tribunals to review the activities of contracting authorities.

68. In the first of those judgments, the Court held that Directive 89/665 precludes national legislation from limiting review 'of the legality of the withdrawal of an invitation to tender to mere examination of whether it was arbitrary'. (30) In the judgment in Croce Amica One Italia, (31) the Court picked up that line of argument where it had been left in the judgment in HI; the Court recalled that the review of legality cannot be confined to an examination of whether the decisions of contracting authorities are arbitrary and went further, stating that the legislature may grant its country's national courts and tribunals the power to review whether a measure was expedient.

69. In the same vein, this reference for a preliminary ruling gives the Court the opportunity to clarify whether a review which is merely 'marginal' (that is the term used by the referring court) fulfils the requirements of Directive 89/665. The referring court is not overly explicit in describing the features of the system of 'marginal' review, and it is possible to infer from the order for reference only that the Netherlands court limits its assessment solely to determining the 'reasonableness' of the decision taken by the contracting authority.

70. At first sight, almost intuitively, it might be thought that if this is the general system of judicial review of administrative measures in force in the Netherlands (and not only with regard to public procurement, but also in other areas of public law), the procedural autonomy of that State should prevail, unless a harmonising provision requires a 'comprehensive' and not merely 'marginal' review by the courts.

71. Notwithstanding what I shall subsequently assert in connection with the interim stage of the review, I nonetheless take the view that a judicial review which, in that regard, is restricted to an evaluation of the 'reasonableness' of the decision awarding the contract is not compatible with Article 2 of Directive 89/665. As stated in the judgment in Alcatel Austria and Others, (32) the arrangements for challenging such decisions must ensure effective application of EU provisions on public contracts, 'in particular at the stage where infringements can still be rectified'. The review must ensure that, if the relevant conditions are met, an applicant may obtain the setting aside of 'the contracting authority's decision prior to the conclusion of the contract as to the bidder in a tender procedure with which it will conclude the contract'. A mere test of reasonableness does not ensure that that decision complied strictly with the procurement rules themselves.

72. A contracting authority may adopt, in principle, several equally 'reasonable' solutions, which would not cease to be so because ultimately just one of them is the best solution, namely the one which is most consistent with the terms of the invitation to tender. An examination by a court which is limited to verifying the 'reasonableness' of a measure is not, in the final analysis, qualitatively very different from an examination as to whether that measure is arbitrary. It would be a standard of review close to that rejected in the judgment in HI, (33) which limited the assessment solely to determining whether or not the contested decision was arbitrary.

73. For my part, I consider that the judicial review imposed by Directive 89/665 requires something more to deserve that name. The assessment by the court cannot end with a mere assessment of the 'reasonableness' of the contested decisions, especially as those decisions must comply with detailed rules covering formal and substantive matters. A court hearing an application in this field will have to assess whether the disputed award observed the rules of the invitation to tender and whether the successful tenderer's application can withstand the critical analysis which its competitors present in the action. That assessment will require, in many cases, verification of the decisive facts (which the administration may have determined incorrectly), as well as evidence concerning the relative merits of the various applications. It will also involve gauging whether the administrative action is duly reasoned and whether it is in line or at variance with the objectives which underlie it (in other words, whether there is evidence of misuse of powers) and the other legal provisions which govern it. Examination of all that evidence goes beyond, I repeat, a mere assessment of the 'reasonableness' of the contested measure and involves matters of fact and law of a more 'technical' and usually more complex nature, which every court having jurisdiction to review administrative acts usually carries out.

74. Accordingly, my view is that, if it is understood in the sense set out above, a merely 'marginal' review of the decisions of the contracting authority, which is limited to assessing their 'reasonableness', as described by the referring court, is not consistent with the requirement for judicial review laid down in Directive 89/665. However, do those considerations apply at the interim stage of reviews brought against those decisions?

2. Judicial review at the interim stage

75. As I have already indicated, the proceedings at first instance were concerned with the measure by which the Ministry selected the tenderer, but the action brought before the Voorzieningenrechter te Den Haag (the court hearing the application for interim measures, The Hague) was initiated in the context of interlocutory proceedings. (34) Accordingly, this dispute is specifically concerned with the interim protection provided for in Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 89/665. In the Netherlands system (35) there is a division of jurisdiction according to whether an interim action is brought or whether substantive proceedings are initiated to challenge the administrative decision. (36)

76. The presence of this interim or provisional element could be relevant to the answer to the second question referred: the intensity of the judicial review of decisions of contracting authorities need not be the same at the interim stage as when giving final judgment on the substance of the dispute. At the first stage, the court's knowledge of the case is usually limited, (37) to the extent that its interim decision often does not have the force of res judicata and may subsequently be amended in the substantive proceedings.

77. The particular position of the court hearing the application for interim measures, from the perspective of Directive 89/665, means, therefore, that the measures which it adopts are temporary in nature, pending definitive resolution of the dispute, and that those measures 'do … not finally determine the legal situation'. (38) Accordingly, and because the interpretation of Directive 2004/18 undertaken at the interim stage may, subsequently, be 'classified as erroneous by the court hearing the substance of the case', (39)it follows that interim proceedings, as such, are regarded in the case-law of the Court as a mere preliminary to the subsequent proceedings and that only the latter proceedings must end with a decision on the substance, so that, once the dispute has been presented in its entirety, the legal relationship at issue can be fully defined.

78. The level of judicial review to which I referred earlier would need to be undertaken in full only during the subsequent proceedings and not at the preliminary stage. The court hearing the application for interim measures could therefore assess the administrative measure with less intensity than the court which must give judgment on the substance. It would be permissible, in particular, to apply a simple test of the reasonableness of the opposing claims and of the award measure, similar to that which governs other forms of interim relief (assessment of whether there is a prima facie case or a risk of harm in the event of delay and the balancing of the conflicting interests).

79. Such a line of argument, which I consider valid, in principle, for the purpose of providing a response to the referring court, could be called into question, however, by a set of factual circumstances which cannot be disregarded. The fact is that, according to data obtained in relation to Netherlands practice, (40) the overwhelming majority of reviews concerning public contracts (some 92% between 2004 and 2009) are resolved at the interim stage, when applicants seek interim measures to prevent the contract from being concluded. The interim decision is usually, in Netherlands procedural practice, 'the sole and final ruling on a procurement dispute'. (41)

80. If that is the true situation concerning review procedures in the Netherlands, the Netherlands court hearing the application for interim measures is almost the sole, and final, guarantor within the judicial system for addressing to challenges to acts of the contracting authority brought under Directive 89/665. Accordingly, there has been a blurring of the distinction which exists, in the abstract, between the interim and final stages of those review procedures.

81. In those circumstances, full review by the courts of decisions of contracting authorities would be weakened and replaced by a merely ‘marginal’ assessment of those decisions by courts hearing applications for interim measures. The review mechanisms would probably gain in efficiency and speed, while, simultaneously, losing their responsiveness to all kinds of possible irregularities in the decisions of the contracting authority, which would be freed from the necessary scrutiny to which those decisions should be subject under Directive 89/665. In other words, that directive would not be complied with in full.

3. The judicial review carried out in the main proceedings

82. The considerations set out above have served to answer the second question referred in rather abstract terms, in line with the wording used by the referring court in that question. A detailed analysis of the events in the main proceedings reveals, however, that both the review by the court hearing the application for interim measures and the review by the Gerechtshof Den Haag (Court of Appeal, the Hague) exceeded, in my opinion, a ‘marginal’ level of judicial review, if that word is to be understood in the sense previously discussed.

83. Indeed, the court hearing the application for interim measures not only considered the reasonableness of the decision of the Ministry, but also assessed it in the light of the ‘positive’ rules applicable to the invitation to tender (in particular the descriptive document, which it regarded as prevailing) when ruling that the selected tenderer should be excluded. Moreover, as regards the Court of Appeal, I agree with the assessment of the Netherlands Government (42) when it maintains that the review conducted by that court was ‘exhaustive’, that is that it ‘took into consideration all the aspects on the basis of which the Ministry had decided not to exclude definitively’ the Tender Group, after interpreting, in a manner contrary to the court hearing the application for interim measures, the applicable body of legislation.

84. If that is so, as I believe, the second question referred may well be classed as purely hypothetical (since it asks whether it is possible to carry out a ‘marginal’ review which did not in fact take place during either of the preceding procedural stages) or call for a negative response, which is what I suggest, qualified by specific reference to the circumstances of the proceedings before the Netherlands courts. It cannot be inferred from the information available in the present case that the judicial review carried out by the courts involved in the main proceedings was limited to such an assessment.

V – Conclusion

85. In the light of the foregoing reasoning, I propose that the Court reply to the questions raised by the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court of the Netherlands) as follows:

(1) Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts does not preclude a national measure, such as that at issue in this case, under which the contracting authority must apply the principle of proportionality for the purpose of excluding a tenderer who has been guilty of grave professional misconduct, even when that option is not expressly referred to in the descriptive document for the contract.

(2) Articles 1 and 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts are not compatible with legislation, or the usual practice, of a Member State which limits the scope of the review procedures to a review merely of the reasonableness of the decisions of contracting authorities.

5 Decree relating to the rules on the award of public contracts; 'the BAO'. At the time of the contract award which is the subject matter of the dispute, the Wet van 1 november 2012, houdende nieuwe regels omtrent aanbestedingen (Law on public procurement of 1 November 2012) had not yet entered into force.

6 In response to a question put to it by the Court, the Netherlands Government stated that the note does not form part of the text of the BAO, although it is published together with it in the same official gazette. The note reflects, by way of a preamble, the reasons for the approved text. Although not legally binding, it has 'an important and relevant significance, from a legal standpoint, for interpreting the provision'.

7 The translation into Spanish contains the adjective 'sumario', while in the original Dutch the word 'marginal' (marginale) is used. I shall use the latter term, which is that used in the question referred.

8 In my view, until the penalty is imposed, an economic operator enjoys the presumption of innocence and cannot be classified as a perpetrator of grave misconduct, even if the acts constituting the infringement (but not yet established as such) occurred prior to the date of the invitation to tender.

9 The order for reference and the observations of the parties cite as an additional interpretative criterion recital 101 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65). According thereto, in applying the facultative grounds for exclusion, contracting authorities should pay particular attention to the principle of proportionality. Although, ratione temporis, Directive 2014/24 cannot have effect in this dispute, its preamble reflects the case-law of the Court on this matter.

21 Judgment of 29 April 2004, Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta(C-496/99 P, EU:C:2004:236, paragraphs 108 to 111). According to the Court, ‘under the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers … [there is] an obligation of transparency in order to permit verification that it has been complied with [and] all tenderers must be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the tenders of all competitors must be subject to the same conditions’.

22 Judgment of 29 April 2004, C-496/99 P (EU:C:2004:236). In that case, the Court was adjudicating on a situation in which the contracting authority changed the general tender system, unilaterally modifying one of its terms, which was regarded as essential, because, if it had appeared in the contract notice, it would have allowed the candidates to submit a substantially different tender. However, none of this is true of the case now before the Court.

30 Judgment of 18 June 2002, HI(C-92/00, EU:C:2002:379, paragraph 64). In the Court's view, having regard to the aim of strengthening remedies pursued by Directive 89/665, and in the absence of indications to the contrary, the scope of the judicial review to be exercised in the context of the review procedures referred to therein cannot be interpreted restrictively.

35 In the judgment of 9 December 2010, Combinatie Spijker Infrabouw-De Jonge Konstruktie and Others(C-568/08, EU:C:2010:751, paragraph 45), and in the Opinion of Advocate General Cruz Villalón which preceded it (C-568/08, EU:C:2010:515), the Netherlands law applicable at that time was analysed. According to paragraph 11 of that judgment, 'the award of public contracts is a matter for private law, the award of a public contract constitutes an act of private law, and decisions preliminary to the award of a public contract taken by administrative bodies are regarded as preparatory acts of private law. The civil courts have jurisdiction to hear disputes on the award of public contracts as regards both the adoption of protective measures and the procedure on the substance. The administrative courts do not have jurisdiction, unless a law provides otherwise.' The Netherlands Government acknowledged at the hearing that the subsequent approval of the Wet van 28 januari 2010 tot implementatie van de rechtsbeschermingsrichtlijnen aanbesteden (Law transposing the directive on review procedures of 28 January 2010) has not, in essence, amended that legislative framework

37 In the judgment of 9 December 2010, Combinatie Spijker Infrabouw-De Jonge Konstruktie and Others(C-568/08, EU:C:2010:751, paragraph 77), the Court held: 'the possibility cannot be excluded that the court hearing an application for interim measures and the court dealing with the substance, called upon successively to deal with the same dispute, might give a divergent interpretation of the relevant EU legal rules. On the one hand, the court hearing an application for interim measures is called upon to give a decision in the context of an urgent procedure in which both the gathering of evidence and the examination of the pleas of the parties is necessarily more cursory than in the context of the proceedings on the substance. On the other hand, the intervention of the court hearing an application for interim measures is not designed, like that of the court hearing the substance, to rule definitively on the claims presented to it but to protect provisionally the interests at stake, possibly by balancing them.'

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum in OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Remondis GmbH & Co. KG Region Nord ('Remondis') and the Region Hannover (Region of Hannover, Germany) regarding the lawfulness of the transfer by the Region of Hannover of waste treatment tasks that were its responsibility to a public body, the Zweckverband Abfallwirtschaft Region Hannover (a special-purpose association for waste management created by local authorities in the Region of Hannover; 'the RH Special-Purpose Association').

3 Under Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18, applicable to the main proceedings for the purposes of that directive, '"public contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive'.

4 Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65) repealed Directive 2004/18 with effect from 18 April 2016.

5 Recital 4 in the preamble to Directive 2014/24 states:

'The increasingly diverse forms of public action have made it necessary to define more clearly the notion of procurement itself; that clarification should not however broaden the scope of this Directive compared to that of Directive 2004/18/EC. The Union rules on public procurement are not intended to cover all forms of disbursement of public funds, but only those aimed at the acquisition of works, supplies or services for consideration by means of a public contract. …'

6 Article 1(6) of that directive provides as follows:

'Agreements, decisions or other legal instruments that organise the transfer of powers and responsibilities for the performance of public tasks between contracting authorities or groupings of contracting authorities and do not provide for remuneration to be given for contractual performance, are considered to be a matter of internal organisation of the Member State concerned and, as such, are not affected in any way by this Directive.'

German law

7 Under the federal legislation on waste and the Niedersächsische Abfallgesetz (Lower Saxony Law on waste), both in the version which was in force on the date the RH Special-Purpose Association, intervener in the main proceedings, was formed, and in the version currently in force, waste treatment is the responsibility of the regional authorities designated thereby or of the special-purpose associations formed by those districts.

8 The Niedersächsisches Zweckverbandsgesetz (Lower Saxony Law on special-purpose associations), in the version which was in force on the date the RH Special-Purpose Association was formed, provided in Paragraph 1 that municipalities could, with a view to the joint performance of certain tasks which they were entitled or required to carry out, form voluntary special-purpose associations or be formed into compulsory special-purpose associations. In that case, under Paragraph 2(1) of that law, the rights and obligations to perform those duties are transferred to the association.

9 Under Paragraph 4 of that law, special-purpose associations are public authorities which are self-managed under their own responsibility.

10 Paragraph 29(1) of that law requires regional authorities that are members of a special-purpose association to pay annually determined contributions in so far as the association's other revenue is not sufficient to cover the costs associated with its duties.

11 The Niedersächsisches Gesetz über die kommunale Zusammenarbeit (Lower Saxony Law on inter-municipal cooperation), currently in force, contains comparable provisions, including provision that authorities that transfer duties to an association are, to the extent that they do so, released from the obligation to perform them.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 Under the federal legislation and the legislation of the Land Niedersachsen (Land of Lower Saxony), the Region of Hannover and the Stadt Hannover (City of Hannover) were entrusted with waste disposal and treatment tasks in the former Landkreis Hannover (District of Hannover) and the City of Hannover respectively.

13 In view of a reorganisation planned by those two authorities, initially, on 29 November 2002, the City of Hannover transferred its responsibility for waste disposal tasks to the Region of Hannover. In a second stage, on 19 December 2002, those authorities jointly adopted the Verbandsordnung des Zweckverbandes Abfallwirtschaft Region Hannover (articles of association for the special-purpose association for waste management created by local authorities in the Region of Hannover; 'the articles of association of the RH Special-Purpose Association), by which they organised the operation of the association, a public-law corporation that the two founding authorities vested with various tasks, some of which were initially common to both authorities and others allocated to each of them, and which in particular took the place of the Region of Hannover for waste disposal. That entity was formed on 1 January 2003.

14 In order to enable the RH Special-Purpose Association to carry out the tasks with which it was entrusted, under Article 5 of the articles of association of the RH Special-Purpose Association, the Region of Hannover and the City of Hannover transferred to the RH Special-Purpose Association, at no cost, their respective bodies responsible for waste disposal, street cleaning and winter road maintenance tasks and 94.9% of the shares in Abfallentsorgungsgesellschaft Region Hannover mbH (Region of Hannover limited company for waste treatment), a company providing waste treatment services for the Region of Hannover which was up to then wholly owned by the Region of Hannover.

15 To the same end, Article 4(5) of the articles of association of the RH Special-Purpose Association also allow it to have recourse to the services of third parties for the performance of its tasks and to that end acquire holdings in undertakings and entities, as allowed under paragraph 22 of the Kreislaufwirtschaftsgesetz (Law on closed cycle management).

16 Article 4(4) of those articles of association provides that the RH Special-Purpose Association is to dispose of waste for recovery and, for that purpose, may enter into dual system contracts ('Duale Systeme') for the collection of packaging, which tasks may be transferred to the Abfallentsorgungsgesellschaft Region Hannover.

17 Under Article 4(6) of those articles of association, the RH Special-Purpose Association is empowered to adopt statutes and regulations on inter alia the imposition of fees.

18 Under Article 7 of the articles of association of the RH Special-Purpose Association the general meeting of the RH Special-Purpose Association involves the chief administrative officers of the Region of Hannover and of the City of Hannover, who are bound by the instructions given by the authority they represent. Those officers are entitled to vote in the general meeting on tasks transferred by the authority they represent.

19 Article 8 of the articles of association provides that the general meeting has the power inter alia to amend the articles of association and to appoint the RH Special-Purpose Associations managing director (Geschäftsführerin/führer)

20 Under Article 16 of the articles of association, the RH Special-Purpose Association must, in the long term, at least ensure that its expenditure is covered by its revenue. However, in so far as its revenue is not sufficient to cover the costs of its tasks, the two constituent authorities are required to pay contributions to be determined annually.

21 The order for reference indicates that the transfer of tasks to the RH Special-Purpose Association releases the transferring member authorities from the obligation to carry out the tasks concerned.

22 In 2011, the ninth year in which the RH Special-Purpose Association was in operation, the RH Special-Purpose Association and Abfallentsorgungsgesellschaft Region Hannover jointly generated a turnover of EUR 189 020 912, of which EUR 11 232 173.89 (approximately 6%) came from commercial transactions with third-party entities and, according to forecasts for 2013, those amounts would be EUR 188 670 370.92 and EUR 13 085 190.85 respectively.

23 Remondis, a commercial company active in the waste sector, made an application for review of the award of the public contract, which is currently pending before the referring court.

24 Remondis asserts that the overall operation, consisting in the formation of the RH Special-Purpose Association and the concomitant transfer of tasks to it by the regional authorities, constitutes a public contract within the meaning of, inter alia, Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 even though initially it did not come within the scope of the rules governing public contracts because it fell within the exception established in the judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 50). The two conditions for EU rules on public procurement not to apply were met at the time, it being a situation where a public entity exercises over the entity which provides it supplies or services a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, the latter entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public entity or entities. However, Remondis claims that, given the significant turnover achieved by the RH Special-Purpose Association since 2013 with third-party entities, it no longer carries out the essential part of its activities with the authorities that formed it. It infers therefrom that the overall operation should now be regarded as an unlawful award and therefore invalid. Consequently, the Region of Hannover, which is the public-law entity responsible for waste disposal, should organise a tendering procedure in so far as it does not intend itself to provide those services.

25 The Region of Hannover and the RH Special-Purpose Association assert that the creation of the RH Special-Purpose Association and the transfer of tasks to it do not fall within the scope of public procurement law.

26 The creation and the transfer were, in their submission, based on a statutory decision and not on an administrative contract or agreement. They refer to Directive 2014/24, in particular Article 1(6), relating to mechanisms for transferring powers and responsibilities for the performance of public tasks.

27 The referring court states that the outcome of the main proceedings turns firstly on the question whether the creation by the Region of Hannover and the City of Hannover of the RH Special-Purpose Association and the transfer of certain public tasks to it constituted a public contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18. It does not question that the transfer was effected for pecuniary interest given, on the one hand, the transfer, free of charge, of resources previously used by those two regional authorities to perform the public tasks transferred to the association and, on the other hand, the undertaking of those authorities to cover any cost overruns the association might incur in relation to its revenues.

28 The referring court states that such an operation might nevertheless be held not to be the award of a public contract. There is in fact no contract and no undertaking is involved. It is, moreover, a measure of internal State organisation that is constitutionally guaranteed as a matter of municipal autonomy, consisting in a reallocation of powers amongst regional authorities, as a result of which the authorities initially responsible for the tasks in question are completely relieved of those tasks.

29 The referring court has doubts, however, as to the relevance of that view in the light of the Court's case-law, including the judgment of 13 June 2013, Piepenbrock (C-386/11, EU:C:2013:385), under which the very existence of a delegation of tasks, entailing release of the authority initially responsible, has no bearing on categorisation as a public contract.

30 It can also be inferred from that judgment that only two exceptions to the application of the rules governing public contracts must be taken into consideration, being the one identified in the judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562), and the so-called inter-municipal 'horizontal' agreements. Consequently, it could be argued that, as the creation of a special-purpose association accompanied by a transfer of tasks to that association does not fall under either of those exceptions, public procurement law is applicable to that type of operation.

31 Conversely, however, the referring court observes, firstly, that such an operation is strictly the result of a horizontal agreement between a number of public entities and not of an agreement concluded between those entities and the RH Special-Purpose Association.

32 Secondly, not only may the decision to create a special-purpose association be taken freely by those regional authorities, it may also be imposed on those authorities by their supervisory authority. In such a scenario, there is no contract, with the result that it is difficult to see how there could be a public contract. The question arises as to whether an operation of that nature, being a transfer of tasks to a public special-purpose association, could be treated differently, depending on whether the transfer is voluntary or imposed.

33 The referring court then asks about the potential consequences of a finding that an overall operation such as that at issue in the main proceedings constitutes a public contract, in particular whether such a contract should be considered from the angle of the exception identified in the judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562), or rather viewed as a form of cooperation between regional authorities for the performance of tasks incumbent on them.

34 In those circumstances, the Oberlandesgericht Celle (Higher Regional Court of Celle, Germany) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Does an agreement between two regional authorities — on the basis of which the regional authorities form, by constituent statutes, a common special-purpose association with separate legal personality, which from that point on carries out, under its own responsibility, certain duties which hitherto were incumbent on the regional authorities concerned — constitute a "public contract" within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of [Directive 2004/18] in the case where that transfer of duties concerns services within the meaning of that directive and is effected for consideration, the special-purpose association carries out activities going beyond the ambit of the exercise of duties previously incumbent on the regional authorities concerned and the transfer of duties does not belong to "the two types of contracts" which, although entered into by public entities, do not, according to the case-law of the Court of Justice (most recently, judgment of 13 June 2013, Piepenbrock, C-386/11, EU:C:2013:385, paragraph 33 et seq.), come within the scope of European Union public procurement law?

2. If the answer to Question 1 is in the affirmative: does the question whether the creation of a special-purpose association and the related transfer of duties to that association exceptionally does not come within the scope of European Union public procurement law depend on the principles which the Court of Justice has developed with regard to contracts concluded by a public entity with a person legally distinct from that entity — principles in accordance with which an application of European Union public procurement law is excluded — in the case where, at the same time, that entity exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and where that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the entity or with the entities which control it (see, to that effect, inter alia, judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal, C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 50), or, by contrast, do the principles which the Court of Justice has developed concerning contracts which establish cooperation between public entities with the aim of ensuring that a public task that they all have to perform is carried out apply (in that respect, judgment of 19 December 2012, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 34 et seq.) …?'

Consideration of the questions referred

35 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that an agreement concluded by two regional authorities, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, on the basis of which they adopt constituent statutes forming a special-purpose association with legal personality governed by public law and transfer to that new public entity certain competences previously held by those authorities and henceforth belonging to that special-purpose association constitutes a 'public contract'.

36 Article 1(2)(a) defines 'public contracts' as 'contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of [Directive 2004/18]'.

37 For possible categorisation of a multi-stage operation as a public contract under that definition, the operation must be examined as a whole, taking account of its purpose (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 November 2005, Commission v Austria, C-29/04, EU:C:2005:670, paragraph 41).

38 In the present case, therefore, it is necessary to take into account, as a whole, the various stages of the operation at issue in the main proceedings. It is apparent from the order for reference that the Region of Hannover and the City of Hannover decided together to create, by regulatory act, a new entity governed by public law in order to confer on it certain competences, some of them common to those authorities and some of them belonging to each of them individually. At the same time, they conferred on that new entity certain powers in order to enable it to perform the tasks for which it was now competent. In effect they gave it the means they had hitherto had when so competent and undertook to cover any budgetary shortfalls of that entity, which was also given the power to charge and collect fees and the right to engage in certain activities not strictly within the remit of the competences transferred to it but being of the same type as certain activities performed as part of the tasks entrusted to it. Lastly, the new entity is characterised by autonomy in the performance of its tasks but must abide by the decisions of a general meeting of representatives of its two founding authorities, which is a body of the association and is responsible, inter alia, for appointing its managing director.

39 In that context, it should be noted, as a preliminary point, that the referring court's indication that the activities at issue in the main proceedings constitute 'services' within the meaning of Directive 2004/18 is aimed solely at clarifying that the application of that directive cannot be dismissed in that regard. On the other hand, the fact that an activity coming within a public authority's competence constitutes a service covered by that directive is not in itself sufficient to make that directive applicable, as public authorities are free to decide whether or not to have recourse to the contract mechanism in the accomplishment of their public interest tasks (see, to that effect, judgment of 9 June 2009, Commission v Germany, C-480/06, EU:C:2009:357, paragraph 45 and the case-law cited).

40 Moreover, it should be borne in mind, first of all, that the division of competences within a Member State benefits from the protection conferred by Article 4(2) TEU, according to which the Union must respect national identities, inherent in their fundamental structures, political and constitutional, including local and regional self-government (see, to that effect, judgment of 12 June 2014, Digibet and Albers, C-156/13, EU:C:2014:1756, paragraph 34).

41 Moreover, as that division of competences is not fixed, the protection conferred by Article 4(2) TEU also concerns internal reorganisations of powers within a Member State, as observed by the Advocate

General in points 41 and 42 of his Opinion. Such reorganisations, which may take the form of reallocations of competences from one public authority to another imposed by a higher-ranking authority or voluntary transfers of competences between public authorities, have the consequence that a previously competent authority is released from or relinquishes the obligation or power to perform a given public task, whereas another authority is henceforth entrusted with that obligation or power.

42 Secondly, such a reallocation or transfer of competence does not meet all of the conditions required to come within the definition of public contract.

43 Only a contract concluded for pecuniary interest may constitute a public contract coming within the scope of Directive 2004/18, the pecuniary nature of the contract meaning that the contracting authority which has concluded a public contract receives a service which must be of direct economic benefit to that contracting authority (see, to that effect, judgment of 25 March 2010, Helmut Müller, C-451/08, EU:C:2010:168, paragraphs 47 to 49). The synallagmatic nature of the contract is thus an essential element of a public contract, as observed by the Advocate General in point 36 of his Opinion.

44 Moreover, irrespective of the fact that a decision on the allocation of public competences does not fall within the sphere of economic transactions, the very fact that a public authority is released from a competence with which it was previously entrusted by that self-same fact eliminates any economic interest in the accomplishment of the tasks associated with that competence.

45 Consequently, the reassignment of resources used to perform the tasks associated with the competence, which are transferred by the authority that ceases to be competent to the authority that acquires competence, cannot be analysed as a payment of a price, but on the contrary is the logical — and even necessary — consequence of the voluntary transfer or imposed reallocation of that competence from the first authority to the second.

46 Similarly, nor does the fact that the authority that takes the initiative to transfer a competence or decides on the reassignment of a competence undertakes to cover potential cost overruns in relation to revenues that may arise as a result of the exercise of that competence constitute remuneration. That is a guarantee intended for third parties, the necessity of which follows, in the present case, from the principle that a public authority cannot be sued in insolvency proceedings. The existence of such a principle itself follows from the internal organisation of a Member State.

47 It must be emphasised, however, as a third point, that in order to be considered an internal organisation measure and, accordingly, come under the freedom of Member States guaranteed by Article 4(2) TEU, a transfer of competence between public authorities must meet certain conditions.

48 In that regard, a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings is not identical to the scenario referred to in the judgment of 20 October 2005, Commission v France (C-264/03, EU:C:2005:620). That case involved a determination of whether the type of mandate concerned constituted a specific transfer by a public authority to an entity for the completion of a project in principle coming within the competence of another entity and not a transfer of that competence itself. Nevertheless, those various types of transfers are identical in nature, although of different magnitudes, with the result that the essential point of that judgment on this point can be extrapolated for the purposes of the present case.

49 As observed by the Advocate General in point 53 of his Opinion, in order to be considered as such, a transfer of competence must concern not only the responsibilities associated with the transferred competence, including the obligation to perform the tasks that competence entails, but also those powers that are the corollary thereof. This requires that the public authority on which competence has been conferred has the power to organise the performance of the tasks coming within that competence and to draw up the regulatory framework for those tasks, and that it has financial autonomy allowing it to ensure the financing of those tasks. That is not the case, however, where the authority initially competent retains primary responsibility over those tasks, retains financial control over them or must give prior approval for decisions envisaged by the entity on which it has conferred powers.

50 In that regard, a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings is readily distinguishable from that at the heart of the case which gave rise to the judgment of 13 June 2013, Piepenbrock (C-386/11, EU:C:2013:385), in which a regional authority merely entrusted another regional entity with the performance of certain material tasks, in return for financial compensation, whilst reserving the power to supervise the proper execution thereof, as held by the Court in paragraph 41 of that judgment.

51 There can thus be no transfer of competence if the newly competent public authority does not act autonomously and under its own responsibility in the performance of its tasks.

52 As observed by the Advocate General in point 56 of his Opinion, such autonomy of action does not mean that the newly competent entity must be shielded from any influence whatsoever by another public entity. An entity that transfers competence may retain a certain degree of influence over the tasks associated with the public service. That influence does, however, in principle, preclude any involvement in the actual performance of the tasks coming within the transferred competence. In a situation such as that in the main proceedings, that influence may be brought to bear through a body, such as the general meeting, made up of representatives of the previously competent regional authorities.

53 Nor does autonomy of action mean that an imposed reassignment or voluntary transfer of competence must be irreversible. As observed in paragraph 41 above, the division of competences within a Member State cannot be regarded as fixed, so successive reorganisations are entirely possible. Moreover, the situations at issue in the judgment of 20 October 2005, Commission v France (C-264/03, EU:C:2005:620), were not permanent in nature, involving as they did specific transfers of public authority to an entity for the purposes of a project that, in principle, fell within the competence of another entity that retained its general competence. Those situations should have been held to fall outside the sphere of public procurement law had they not borne the hallmarks highlighted by the Court in paragraph 54 of that judgment, which led it to conclude that there was no genuine transfer in that case. Consequently, as observed by the Advocate General in point 54 of his Opinion, there is nothing precluding a competence transferred or reassigned as part of a reorganisation of public services from being subsequently retransferred or reassigned again under a later reorganisation.

54 Lastly, in order to address all of the aspects referred to by the referring court, it must be remembered that the authorisation or prohibition for public entities of Member States or certain categories thereof to engage in an activity on the market lying outside their general interest sphere of action is a matter that comes under the domestic rules of the Member States, to whom it falls to determine whether or not such an activity is compatible with their objectives as an institution and those laid down in their statutes (see, to that effect, judgment of 23 December 2009, CoNISMa, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 48). Thus, the fact that the public entities concerned by a transfer of competence may or may not pursue certain activities on the market also comes within the internal organisation of the Member States and is, moreover, of no import for the nature of such a transfer once the conditions set out in paragraphs 47 to 51 of this judgment are satisfied.

55 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that:

– Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that an agreement concluded by two regional authorities, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, on the basis of which they adopt constituent statutes forming a special-purpose association with legal personality governed by public law and transfer to that new public entity certain competences previously held by those authorities and henceforth belonging to that special-purpose association, does not constitute a ‘public contract’.

– However, such a transfer of competences concerning the performance of public tasks exists only if it concerns both the responsibilities associated with the transferred competence and the powers that are the corollary thereof, so that the newly competent public authority has decision-making and financial autonomy, which it is for the referring court to verify.

The second question

56 In the light of the answer given to the first question, there is no need to answer the second question.

Costs

57 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that an agreement concluded by two regional authorities, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, on the basis of which they adopt constituent statutes forming a special-purpose association with legal personality governed by public law and transfer to that new public entity certain competences previously held by those authorities and henceforth belonging to that special-purpose association, does not constitute a 'public contract'.

However, such a transfer of competences concerning the performance of public tasks exists only if it concerns both the responsibilities associated with the transferred competence and the powers that are the corollary thereof, so that the newly competent public authority has decision-making and financial autonomy, which it is for the à the referring court to verify.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

MENGOZZI

delivered on 30 June 2016 (1)

Case C-51/15

Remondis GmbH & Co. KG Region Nord

Region Hannover

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Oberlandesgericht Celle (Higher Regional Court of Celle, Germany))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Article 4(2) TEU — Respect for the national identity of Member States inherent in their fundamental structures, political and constitutional, inclusive of regional and local self-government — Internal organisation of the Member States — Regional authorities — Legal instrument creating a new public-law entity and organising the transfer of powers and responsibilities for the performance of public tasks — Public procurement — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 1(2)(a) — Concept of 'public contract')

In the present case, which concerns a request for a preliminary ruling made by the

1. Oberlandesgericht Celle (Higher Regional Court of Celle, Germany), the Court will have the opportunity to examine the delicate matter of the interaction between the Member States' power of reorganisation and EU rules on public procurement. More specifically, the Court will have to clarify whether, and possibly under what conditions, acts effecting transfers of powers between administrative authorities may constitute a public contract and thus be subject to the relevant EU rules. This is a matter of significant practical importance which has attracted interest in legal literature, particularly in Germany, and which the Court has not yet had an opportunity to examine directly.

2. The questions raised by the referring court in this case arise in a dispute between an undertaking which provides waste disposal services, Remondis GmbH & Co. KG Region Nord ('Remondis'), and Region Hannover (the Region of Hannover, Germany) regarding the lawfulness of the transfer by the Region of Hannover of waste treatment tasks that were its responsibility to a public body, the Zweckverband Abfallwirtschaft Region Hannover (a special-purpose association for waste management created by local authorities in the Region of Hannover; 'the Special-Purpose Association'), which it formed for that purpose with the Landeshauptstadt Hannover (capital of the Land of Hannover, Germany; 'the City of Hannover').

3. The referring court asks the Court, in essence, whether such an operation constitutes a public contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC (2) and, if so, whether such an operation may fall outside the scope of EU public procurement law by virtue of the 'in house' exception set out in Teckal (3) or the exception for contracts which establish cooperation between public entities set out in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others. (4)

I – Legislative framework

A – EU law

4. Article 4(2) TEU provides:

> ‘The Union shall respect the equality of Member States before the Treaties as well as their national identities, inherent in their fundamental structures, political and constitutional, inclusive of regional and local self-government. It shall respect their essential State functions, including ensuring the territorial integrity of the State, maintaining law and order and safeguarding national security. …’

5. Under Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18, public contracts are, for the purposes of that directive, contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of the directive.

6. Directive 2004/18 was repealed by Directive 2014/24, (5) which, in accordance with Article 90(1) thereof, must be transposed by the Member States by 18 April 2016 at the latest.

7. Recital 4 of Directive 2014/24 provides that ‘[t]he increasingly diverse forms of public action have made it necessary to define more clearly the notion of procurement itself; that clarification should not, however, broaden the scope of this Directive compared to that of Directive 2004/18/EC. The Union rules on public procurement are not intended to cover all forms of disbursement of public funds, but only those aimed at the acquisition of works, supplies or services for consideration by means of a public contract’.

8. Article 1(6) of Directive 2014/24 provides that ‘[a]greements, decisions or other legal instruments that organise the transfer of powers and responsibilities for the performance of public tasks between contracting authorities or groupings of contracting authorities and do not provide for remuneration to be given for contractual performance, are considered to be a matter of internal organisation of the Member State concerned and, as such, are not affected in any way by this Directive’.

B – National law

9. In Germany, federal rules impose waste disposal obligations on the public-law corporations on which those obligations are incumbent under the law of the Länder. (6) For the Land of Lower Saxony, the Lower Saxony Law on waste designates rural districts and urban districts as the public authorities responsible for waste treatment and provides that they are to be supplemented by special-purpose associations formed by those authorities for purposes of waste treatment where the special-purpose association’s articles of association so provide. (7)

10. Under the Lower Saxony Law on special-purpose associations, as it was in force on the date the Special-Purpose Association was formed, (8) municipalities are able, with a view to the joint performance of certain tasks which they are entitled or required to carry out, to form voluntary special-purpose associations or may be formed into compulsory special-purpose associations. Special-purpose associations are public authorities which are self-managed under their own responsibility. Where a special-purpose association is formed, the right and the obligation conferred on municipalities participating in a special-purpose association to perform the duty entrusted to the association are transferred to that association. In addition, the statutes of the special-purpose association must regulate coverage of needs in connection with the task such that, in so far as other revenue of the special-purpose association is not sufficient to cover the cost of its tasks, the members of the association are required to pay contributions, which are to be determined annually.

11. The Lower Saxony Law on inter-municipal cooperation, as it was in force when the order for reference was made, (9) provides, inter alia, that the transfer of a public task to a special-purpose association is to be accompanied by the transfer of all rights and obligations connected with the performance of the task and that the special-purpose association is to collect a contribution from its members in so far as other revenue is not sufficient to cover its financial needs.

II – Facts, national procedure and questions referred

A – The formation of the Special-Purpose Association and its articles of association

12. Before the Special-Purpose Association was formed, under the legislation on waste of the Federal Republic of Germany and of the Land of Lower Saxony, the Region of Hannover and the City of Hannover were entrusted with waste disposal and treatment tasks in the district of Hannover and the City of Hannover respectively.

13. Following certain legislative amendments concerning the Region of Hannover and in view of a reorganisation of that task, on 29 November 2002 the Region of Hannover and the City of Hannover concluded an agreement by which the latter transferred to the Region of Hannover the tasks incumbent on it as the public-law entity responsible for waste disposal.

14. Shortly after, on 19 December 2002, the Region of Hannover and the City of Hannover jointly adopted the Verbandsordnung des Zweckverbandes Abfallwirtschaft Region Hannover (articles of association for the special-purpose association for waste management created by local authorities in the Region of Hannover; 'the articles of association of the Special-Purpose Association'). (10) By those articles of association, they formed the Special-Purpose Association, organised its operation and assigned various tasks to it.

15. Under the articles of association, the Special-Purpose Association is a public-law corporation (Article 2(3)), which takes the place of the Region of Hannover as the public-law entity responsible for waste disposal under the relevant legislation (Article 4(1)). Aside from waste disposal (type B task), the Special-Purpose Association is also assigned other functions, some of which relate only to the City of Hannover (type C tasks), while others are common to both its members (type A tasks). (11)

16. Under the articles of association, the Special-Purpose Association also disposes of waste for recovery and, for that purpose, may enter into dual system contracts ('Duale Systeme', Article 4(4)). It may have recourse to the services of third parties for the performance of its tasks and to that end acquire holdings in undertakings and entities (Article 4(5)). In addition, the Special-Purpose Association is to adopt statutes and regulations on the use of its public infrastructures and on the imposition of fees, contributions and cost reimbursements (Article 4(6)).

17. Under Article 5 of the articles of association of the Special-Purpose Association, the Region of Hannover and the City of Hannover are to transfer to the Special-Purpose Association, at no cost, their respective bodies which previously performed waste disposal, street cleaning and winter road maintenance tasks and 94.9% of the shares in Abfallentsorgungsgesellschaft Region Hannover mbH (Region of Hannover limited company for waste treatment; 'ARH'), a company providing waste treatment services for the Region of Hannover which was up to then wholly owned by the Region of Hannover.

18. The general meeting of the Special-Purpose Association involves the chief administrative officers of the Region of Hannover and of the City of Hannover, who are bound by the instructions given by the member territorial entity which they represent (Article 7(1) and (3)). In votes on type A tasks, representatives of the two Special-Purpose Association members are entitled to vote in the general meeting. On the other hand, in votes on type B or C tasks, either representatives of the Region of Hannover (for type B tasks) or representatives of the City of Hannover (for type C tasks) are entitled to vote (Article 7(2)). Under Article 8 of the articles of association, the general meeting has the power inter alia to amend the articles of association and to appoint the Special-Purpose Association's managing director (Geschäftsführerin/führer). (12)

19. Last, Article 16(1) of the articles of association of the Special-Purpose Association provides that the Special-Purpose Association must, in the long term, at least ensure that its expenditure is covered by its revenue. However, under Article 16(2), in so far as its revenue is not sufficient to cover the costs of its tasks, the two constituent entities are required to pay contributions to be determined annually.

20. It is apparent from the documents before the Court that in 2011 the Special-Purpose Association and ARH jointly generated a turnover of EUR 189 020 912, of which EUR 11 232 173 (approximately 6%) came from commercial transactions with third-party entities and that, according to forecasts for 2013, those amounts would be EUR 188 670 370.92 and EUR 13 085 190.85 respectively.

B – National procedure and questions referred

21. Given the size of the turnover now derived by the Special-Purpose Association from activities involving third parties distinct from its two members, Remondis made an application for review (Nachprüfungsantrag) to the Vergabekammer (Public Procurement Board). In its application, Remondis claims that the conditions which permit a call for tenders not to be made on the basis of an 'in house' award in accordance with the judgment in Teckal (13) are no longer met. Remondis asserts that the formation of the Special-Purpose Association and the concomitant transfer of tasks to the Special-Purpose Association should now therefore be regarded as a 'de facto unlawful award' and that, because of that invalidity, the role of public-law entity responsible for waste disposal reverted to the Region of Hannover. It follows, according to Remondis, that in so far as the Region of Hannover does not intend itself to provide the corresponding services for which it is responsible, it is required to organise a tendering procedure.

22. After the application was dismissed by the Public Procurement Board, (14) Remondis brought the matter to the referring court and sought the annulment of the decision dismissing its application. Before that court, Remondis claimed, inter alia, that the formation of the Special-Purpose Association and the concomitant transfer of tasks to it constitute a public contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18. The Region of Hannover and the Special-Purpose Association assert that the creation of the Special-Purpose Association and the transfer of tasks to it do not fall within the scope of public procurement law, as the creation and the transfer were based on a statutory decision and not on an administrative contract or agreement.

23. The referring court states that the outcome of the dispute before it hinges on the response to Remondis' argument mentioned in the preceding point. It states that, according to the strongly predominant view in German legal literature, the formation of special-purpose associations and the transfer of tasks to them are exempt from the requirement to call for tenders, since such operations do not constitute a public contract, but give rise only to a reallocation of powers which constitutes a measure of internal State organisation that is constitutionally guaranteed. However, the referring court has doubts that this view is consistent with the Court's case-law, according to which agreements concluded by several public bodies to perform a public task within the context of inter-municipal cooperation also come, in principle, within the scope of public procurement law, unless specified exceptions obtain.

24. In the present case, the formation of the Special-Purpose Association and the concomitant transfer of tasks to it were based on the agreement of its members pursuant to a contract governed by public law. If it transpired that that formation and that transfer constitute a public contract within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, that directive would be applicable in so far as all the other conditions required for its application are met. In particular, on account of the provisions contained in Articles 5 and 16 of the articles of association, the referring court considers that the public contract is one 'for pecuniary interest'.

25. The referring court also considers that in the event that the operation at issue constitutes a public contract within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, it must be determined whether the principles of 'in house award' in accordance with the judgment in Teckal (15) should be applied to that contract or those of cooperation between public entities in accordance with the judgment in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others. (16)

26. In these circumstances, by order of 17 December 2014, the referring court deemed it necessary to stay the proceedings pending before it and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Does an agreement between two regional authorities — on the basis of which the regional authorities form, by constituting statutes, a common special-purpose association with separate legal personality, which from that point on carries out, under its own responsibility, certain tasks which hitherto were incumbent on the regional authorities concerned — constitute a "public contract" within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 … in the case where that transfer of tasks concerns services within the meaning of that directive and is effected for consideration, the special-purpose association carries out activities going beyond the ambit of the exercise of tasks previously incumbent on the regional authorities concerned and the transfer of tasks does not belong to "the two types of contracts" which, although entered into by public entities, do not, according to the case-law of the Court of Justice …, come within the scope of European Union public procurement law?

(2) If the answer to Question 1 is in the affirmative: Does the question whether the creation of a special-purpose association and the related transfer of tasks to that association exceptionally do not come within the scope of European Union public procurement law depend on the principles which the Court of Justice has developed with regard to contracts concluded by a public entity with a person legally distinct from that entity — principles in accordance with which the application of European Union public procurement law is excluded — in the case where, at the same time, that entity exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and where that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the entity or with the entities which control it (see, to that effect, inter alia, judgment in Teckal, C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 50), or, by contrast, do the principles which the Court of Justice has developed concerning contracts which establish cooperation between public entities with the aim of ensuring that a task in the public interest that they all have to perform is carried out apply (in that respect, see judgment in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11 EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 34 and following)?'

III – Procedure before the Court

27. The order for reference was received at the Court Registry on 6 February 2015. Observations were submitted by Remondis, the Region of Hannover, the Special-Purpose Association, the French and Austrian Governments and the European Commission. Remondis, the Region of Hannover, the Special-Purpose Association and the Commission took part in the hearing, which was held on 20 April 2016.

IV – Legal assessment

A – The first question

28. By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether an agreement, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, between two regional authorities on the basis of which they created, by constituting statutes, a common special-purpose association with separate legal personality, which carries out, under its own responsibility, certain tasks which hitherto were incumbent on the regional authorities concerned, constitutes a public contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 and, as such, is subject to the provisions of that directive.

29. In its question, the referring court also highlights four aspects which, in its view, characterise the operation in question: first, the transfer of tasks concerns services within the meaning of Directive 2004/18; second, that transfer is effected for consideration; third, the special-purpose association carries out activities going beyond the ambit of the exercise of tasks previously incumbent on the regional authorities concerned; fourth, the transfer of tasks does not belong to 'the two types of contracts' which, although entered into by public entities, do not, according to the Court's case-law, come within the scope of EU public procurement law.

30. The first question thus seeks to enable the national court to assess whether the operation challenged before it by Remondis, namely the creation of the Special-Purpose Association by the Region of Hannover and the City of Hannover and the concomitant transfer to it of the tasks initially assigned to them must be classified as a public contract within the meaning of Directive 2004/18.

31. The parties which submitted observations to the Court take opposing stances in this regard. On the one hand, the Region of Hannover, the Special-Purpose Association and the French and Austrian Governments take the view that a transfer of powers such as that which took place in the operation at issue is not, in principle, a matter of public procurement. On the other, the Commission and Remondis adopt the opposite view, that a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 2004/18.

32. The Court has not yet had the opportunity to examine specifically whether, and possibly under what conditions, a transfer of powers between public authorities may constitute a public contract. Nevertheless, the existence of a transfer of powers has been mentioned in several judgments, in particular in Commission v France (17) and Piepenbrock, (18) which provide useful points of analysis. Reference will therefore be made to that guidance in answering the first question asked by the referring court.

1. The relationship between the concept of a public contract and transfers of powers between public authorities

33. Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 defines a public contract as a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between an economic operator and a contracting authority and having as its object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of the directive itself.

34. Of the various principles developed by the Court with regard to the definition of public contract, it must first be borne in mind, for the purposes of the present case, that, according to case-law, the legal classification of an operation as a public contract falls under EU law and any classification given to an operation under national law is not decisive for that purpose. (19) It follows that, in this case, even if the operation at issue is not classified as a public contract in German law, that fact does not preclude such classification in EU law.

35. It is also clear from the case-law that where a public contract was awarded within the framework of a legal arrangement comprising a number of operations, in order to safeguard the effectiveness of the EU rules on public procurement, the award of the contract must be examined taking into account all those stages as well as their purpose. (20) Accordingly, an operation such as that in the main proceedings which is conducted in several stages and involves, among other things, the creation of a legal entity, must be assessed globally in order to determine whether or not it gives rise to the award of a public contract which falls under EU rules.

36. In addition, it is clear from the very wording of the abovementioned definition of public contract in Directive 2004/18, which refers to ‘a contract for pecuniary interest’, that an essential element of that concept is the creation of legally binding reciprocal obligations. A public contract is characterised by an exchange of services between the contracting authority, which pays a price, and the contractor, who, in exchange for that price, undertakes to execute a work or works or to provide services. (21) The concept of public contract therefore presupposes and applies to operations involving the acquisition by the contracting authority of works, supplies or services for consideration. (22)

37. With specific regard to whether there is pecuniary interest, as is rightly stated by the referring court, according to the case-law a contract cannot fall outside the concept of a public contract merely because there is remuneration which is limited to reimbursement of the expenditure incurred to provide the agreed service. (23)

38. It is nevertheless clear from the case-law that the internal organisation of the State does not fall under EU law. The Court has recognised on several occasions that each Member State is free to delegate powers internally as it sees fit (24) and that the question of how the exercise of public powers is organised within the State is solely a matter for the constitutional system of each Member State. (25)

39. Moreover, that case-law is consistent, first, with the second sentence of Article 4(2) TEU, under which the Union must respect essential State functions, which undoubtedly include what might be defined as the State’s internal self-organisation. Second, it is consistent with the principle of conferral of powers laid down in Article 5(1) and (2) TEU, no provision having conferred on the Union the power to intervene in the internal organisation of its Member States.

40. In that regard, in a case which, like this one, concerned the Federal Republic of Germany, the Court expressly stated that EU law cannot call into question the division of competences between regional authorities, since it benefits from the protection conferred by Article 4(2) TEU, according to which the Union must respect the national identity of Member States, inherent in their fundamental structures, political and constitutional, inclusive of regional and local self-government. (26)

41. As acts of secondary legislation, such as Directive 2004/18 in this case, must be in conformity with primary law, such acts cannot be interpreted as permitting interference in the institutional structure of the Member States. Accordingly, acts of internal reorganisation of the powers of the State remain outside the scope of EU law and, more specifically, EU rules on public procurement.

42. An act by which a public authority, unilaterally in the context of its institutional powers, or several public authorities, in the context of an agreement governed by public law, make a transfer of certain public powers from one public entity to another public entity constitutes an act of internal reorganisation of the Member State. Such an act therefore, in principle, falls outside the scope of EU law and, more specifically, the EU rules on public procurement. (27)

43. Furthermore, it is clear from the very wording of the abovementioned definition of public contract that that concept does not relate to acts by which public authorities transfer powers, in particular for the performance of public service tasks in the context of a reorganisation of those tasks. Such transfers of powers do not concern ‘acquisitions for pecuniary interest’ of goods or services, but go beyond that, giving rise to a transfer of the obligations and rights to perform the tasks in question, including official authority to establish the regulatory framework for the performance of those tasks. Such acts do not therefore come under the principal objective of the rules of EU law on public procurement, that is, the opening-up of undistorted competition in all the Member States with regard to the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services. (28)

44. That interpretation is now expressly confirmed by Article 1(6) of Directive 2014/24, which excludes from the scope of that directive, as acts which are a matter of internal organisation of the Member State, legal instruments that organise, without remuneration given for contractual performance, the transfer of powers and responsibilities for the performance of public tasks between contracting authorities.

45. It should be noted that it certainly cannot be inferred from the fact that Directive 2014/24 is not applicable ratione temporis in the present case and that Directive 2004/18 did not contain any similar provision that the principle set forth in Article 1(6) of Directive 2014/24 was not applicable to the concept of public contract within the meaning of Directive 2004/18.

46. Not only is it consistent with the Court's interpretation of primary law in its case-law prior to the adoption of Directive 2014/24, as has been explained, that acts of internal organisation of Member States making transfers of powers should fall outside the scope of the EU rules on public procurement, but it is also clear from recital 4 of Directive 2014/24 that the clarification given by that directive of the concept of public contract does not broaden the scope compared to that of Directive 2004/18. It follows that Article 1(6) of Directive 2014/24 merely clarifies the concept of a public contract without altering its scope compared to that which existed under Directive 2004/18.

47. Although it is clear from the foregoing that acts of internal organisation of the Member States do not fall within the scope of EU rules on public procurement, this does not alter the fact that, as is evident from the Court's settled case-law, public authorities may not contrive to circumvent the rules on public procurement in order to avoid the obligations stemming from those rules. (29) Accordingly, operations which relate in essence to the acquisition of goods or services for consideration by one or more contracting authorities fall under the EU rules on public procurement because the conditions governing the application of those rules are met, even if they might have been formally classified as an act of internal reorganisation, (30) such an approach also being consistent with the case-law mentioned in point 34 of this Opinion.

2. The essential features of transfers of powers

48. Although the concept of a legal instrument that organises the transfer of powers is now explicitly mentioned in Article 1(6) of Directive 2014/24/, it is not circumscribed by any rule of EU law. The reason is that, since it is for each Member State to determine the internal organisation of the State, the definition of the conditions and procedures for transfers of powers is a matter for national law. In these circumstances, I am not sure that the concept of a legal instrument that organises a transfer of power should be circumscribed as an autonomous concept in EU law. Nevertheless, the essential features of transfers of powers should be outlined in order to be able to identify the circumstances in which a legal instrument gives rise to such a transfer and ought therefore to be considered to fall outside the scope of the rules of EU law, in particular the rules on public procurement.

49. Legal instruments that organise transfers of powers between public authorities can take very different forms, varying according to the specific characteristics of each Member State and/or authority concerned. Such instruments may include, for example, legislative or regulatory acts, decisions by an authority, or agreements governed by public law concluded between several authorities. A transfer of powers may be 'vertical', where it relates to a transfer from the State to a regional authority at a lower level. It may also be 'horizontal', where several regional authorities create a common structure on which are conferred powers previously exercised by those regional authorities. In addition, a horizontal transfer of powers may take place 'voluntarily', on the basis of a joint decision of the regional authorities concerned, or can be 'compulsory', that is to say, imposed by an authority at a higher level. (31)

50. In Commission v France (32) the Court provided some useful guidance for identifying the essential features of transfers of powers. In that case an action was brought by the Commission seeking a declaration by the Court that the French Republic had failed to fulfil some of its obligations under the EU rules on public procurement in force at the time. In its judgment, in response to an argument put forward by the Member

State to justify the national legislation at issue, the Court held that the legislation did not give rise to a transfer of public powers. (33)

51. In reaching that conclusion, the Court relied on three considerations. (34) First, the public authority that was originally competent could not relinquish its power, as the relevant national rules did not permit it to do so. Second, the entity on which the power was conferred could act only after the authority that was originally competent had given its approval, so that it did not have autonomy in the execution of the tasks connected with that power. Third, the performance of the task was financed by the public authority that was originally competent, and consequently the entity on which the power was conferred had no discretion in that regard.

52. An analysis of the statements made by the Court in that judgment allow certain elements to be identified which characterise transfers of powers, in particular horizontal transfers, the category that may be relevant in the present case.

53. First, it is clear, from the requirement highlighted by the Court that the transferring authority must relinquish its power, that if a transfer of powers is to be genuine, it must be comprehensive. (35) The entity to which powers are transferred must thus hold all the powers and responsibilities necessary to perform fully and autonomously the public task for which the powers have been conferred on it. It must, inter alia, have the power to determine the regulatory framework and procedures for the performance of that task. Following the transfer, the transferring authority must, in contrast, completely relinquish the powers relating to the public service task in question.

54. In this regard, however, I do not think that for a genuine transfer of powers to have taken place, it is necessary to provide for the irreversibility of the transfer. Nevertheless, a restoration of powers to the transferring authority cannot depend on the exercise of a unilateral power of termination conferred on that authority in the event of improper implementation of the task. Such a possibility is a feature of contractual arrangements that seems to me to be alien to transfers of powers. On the other hand, a restoration of powers may result from a further reorganisation of the public tasks in question.

55. Second, it is clear, from the requirement highlighted by the Court that the entity to which powers are transferred is not to act after the transferring authority has given its approval, that, if the transfer is to be genuine, that entity must be able to carry out the task for the performance of which powers have been conferred on it in full autonomy. The transferring authority no longer having any power in the field in question, it must no longer be able to interfere in the performance of the task for which the entity to which powers are transferred is now fully competent.

56. However, in the case of a transfer of powers relating to the performance of a public service task, that requirement does not necessarily mean that a regional authority which transfers such powers to a new entity should not have any relationship with that entity. Because of the regional authority's political responsibility to citizens for the performance of the public service remit in its area, it seems to me that it should be able to retain a degree of influence over the new entity, which could be described as 'political' control. (36) For the transfer of power to be genuine, however, the transferring authority must not retain powers in connection with the actual performance of the public task.

57. Third, the Court highlighted the requirement that the entity to which powers are transferred has financial autonomy in the performance of the public task for which powers are transferred to it. It thus must not depend financially on the transferring authority in the performance of that task. That authority, or any other authority involved in the internal reorganisation of the public powers in question, must provide it with the necessary resources to perform the task. Such provision constitutes the necessary corollary of the transfer of powers. On the other hand, it must not correspond to the remuneration to be given for contractual performance in the context of a relationship entailing reciprocal obligations. (37)

58. It will be necessary to determine, on the basis of an overall assessment of the structure of the operation and taking into account the above considerations, whether an operation such as that at issue in the main proceedings gave rise to a genuine transfer of powers which, as such, does not fall under the rules on public procurement or whether, instead, it gave rise to a relationship entailing reciprocal obligations involving the acquisition of services by the regional authorities concerned.

59. In that regard, whilst the national court, which has exclusive jurisdiction to assess the facts of the dispute in the main proceedings, must ultimately assess whether the operation at issue falls within the concept of a public contract or gave rise to a genuine transfer of powers, the Court of Justice, which is called on to provide answers that may be of use to the national court, may provide guidance in order to enable it to give judgment. (38) With this in mind, on the basis of the information in the file, I will simply make the following points.

3. Classification of an operation like that at issue in the main proceedings as a public contract or as a transfer of powers

60. As regards the classification of an operation like that challenged by Remondis in the main proceedings, it should be stated, first, that it is clear from the order for reference that in this case the creation of the Special-Purpose Association gave rise to a genuine transfer of powers which resulted in the Region of Hannover relinquishing its powers and responsibilities in relation to waste disposal.

61. This assessment follows from the wording of the question referred itself, which states that the Special-Purpose Association acts ‘under its own responsibility’, and is expressly confirmed by the referring court in the order for reference. It also follows from the wording of Article 4(1) of the articles of association of the Special-Purpose Association, mentioned in point 15 of this Opinion, and the relevant provisions of national law mentioned in points 10 and 11 of this Opinion.

62. The Special-Purpose Association thus performs the waste disposal task under its own responsibility. It is vested, under Article 4(6) of the articles of association of the Special-Purpose Association, with the power to enact statutes necessary to perform that task and under Article 4(5) of the articles of association it may have recourse to the services of third parties, in which case it acts as the contracting authority.

63. Second, with regard specifically to whether the operation at issue is for pecuniary interest, the national court, referring to the case-law mentioned in point 37 of this Opinion, considers that it is able to make inferences from Articles 5 and 16(2) of the articles of association of the Special-Purpose Association. However, for reasons I will explain in the following points, I do not think that those provisions can form the basis for a finding that the operation is for pecuniary interest in the sense that it involves remuneration being given for contractual performance.

64. As regards the transfer, at no cost, to the Special-Purpose Association of the bodies which previously performed the tasks covered by the transfer of powers — as provided for by Article 5 — it is clear that, such a transfer is consistent with the requirement, referred to in point 57 of this Opinion, that, in a transfer of powers, the new competent entity should be provided with the material and human resources necessary to perform the task for which powers are conferred on it. Furthermore, such a transfer constitutes proof that the two regional entities concerned wholly relinquished the public tasks in question.

65. The obligation to pay contributions under Article 16 of the articles of association of the Special-Purpose Association constitutes a statutory financial guarantee of the solvency of the Special-Purpose Association. (39) It would seem that the contribution could be defined as ‘subsidiary’ and is made only if the Special-Purpose Association is unable to cover the costs of the public service performed by it from its revenue. (40) Such a contribution cannot call into question the financial autonomy of the Special-Purpose Association, which, on the contrary, under Article 4(6) of the articles of association, has the power to adopt statutes and regulations on fees, contributions and cost reimbursements connected with the tasks performed by it. Moreover, the Court has ruled that the mere fact that funding arrangements exist as between two public bodies in respect of the exercise of a public service task performed under specific powers does not imply that the services provided by one of those entities must be regarded as having been performed pursuant to a public contract. (41)

66. In any event, the transfer and the guarantee under the two provisions mentioned by the referring court (Article 5 and Article 16 of the articles of association of the Special-Purpose Association) cannot, in my view, be construed in any manner as remuneration for the Special-Purpose Association for the services it provides to its members.

67. In fact, the operation at issue, as presented to the Court, does not seem at all to involve the acquisition of services by the two members of the Special-Purpose Association in return for remuneration. The reciprocal aspect, which, as I mentioned in point 36 of this Opinion, characterises the concept of a public contract appears to be absent in this case.

68. Third, it would appear prima facie from the information available in the file that the Special-Purpose Association has not only financial autonomy, but also full autonomy in the performance of the public tasks entrusted to it, in particular in waste disposal activities. It is true, as was highlighted by Remondis and by the Commission, that under Article 7 of the articles of association of the Special-Purpose Association the Region of Hannover is represented in the general meeting of the Special-Purpose Association and, in votes on tasks relating solely to waste disposal activities, only representatives of that Region are entitled to vote. However, Article 8 of the articles of association of the Special-Purpose Association seems to indicate that the powers of the general meeting do not apply to the actual performance of public services, but are limited to institutional matters or matters connected with legal compliance. Such influence seems to be more a question of the 'political' control mentioned in point 56 of this Opinion than of exerting influence over strategic objectives or significant decisions of the Special-Purpose Association in the performance of the public services tasks falling within its competence. (42) The referring court must nevertheless determine whether this is the case and whether the Special-Purpose Association actually has full autonomy in the performance of the public services at issue, without requiring the approval of the Region of Hannover.

69. The above considerations demonstrate the substantial differences between the present case and Piepenbrock (43) mentioned by the referring court. In that case, the Court had made clear that the public authority (the Kreis Düren, that is, the district of Düren) which had assigned to another regional authority (the Stadt Düren, the city of Düren) the task of cleaning certain of its buildings had reserved the right to supervise the proper execution of that task and unilaterally to terminate the contract governed by public law at issue in the event of improper performance. Although the contract was described as a delegating agreement, in essence that contractual relationship between the two local entities did not constitute a genuine transfer of powers, but a reciprocal relationship consisting in the simple provision of services for the Kreis Düren in return for financial compensation. It is thus wrong, in my view, to interpret that judgment, as has been done by some of the German legal literature mentioned in the order for reference and as Remondis claims, to the effect that the Court confirmed that transfers of powers were subject to the EU rules on public procurement. (44)

70. In the light of all the above considerations, the factual accuracy of which must be verified by the referring court, it would seem that, in this case, the operation at issue in the main proceedings gave rise to a genuine transfer of powers between public authorities which, as an act of internal organisation of the Member State, falls outside the scope of the EU rules on public procurement.

71. In this connection, I think that some remarks are needed on the fact that, in this case, the conditions required for the existence of a public contract are not met. First, I do not believe that, as the Commission claims, the concept of a contract in written form should be extended to include an operation such as that undertaken in this case. The Commission seems to have proposed such an extension based on a fear of circumvention of the competitive tendering obligation imposed by the EU rules on public procurement. Although, as is clear from point 47 of this Opinion, such fears may prove to be perfectly relevant in some circumstances, it should nevertheless be stated that there is nothing in the documents before the Court to justify such fears in this case. Accordingly, there does not seem to be any justification in the present case for extending the concept of an agreement in written form as proposed by the Commission when there is no such agreement between the Region of Hannover and the Special-Purpose Association.

72. Second, whilst it is true, as the referring court and the Commission note, that waste disposal services do not come under the prerogatives of a public authority and may constitute services in category 16 of Annex II A of Directive 2004/18, it must be stated that the object of the operation at issue is not the mere provision of services but concerns the genuine transfer of the power to perform the public service task that consists in waste disposal.

73. Third, the fact that the Special-Purpose Association carries out activities going beyond the ambit of the tasks previously incumbent on the regional authorities concerned does not seem to me to be relevant to the classification of the operation at issue as a public contract.

74. In the light of the above, I consider that the first question referred should be answered to the effect that an agreement between two regional authorities on the basis of which they create, by constituting statutes, a public-law entity with separate legal personality, to which they transfer the powers for the performance of service tasks which hitherto were incumbent on the regional authorities concerned, without providing for remuneration to be given for contractual services, does not constitute a public contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18, but constitutes an act which is a matter of internal organisation of the Member State concerned, which, as such, falls outside the scope of the EU rules on public procurement.

B – The second question

75. Since the referring court puts its second question to the Court only in the event that the Court answers the first question in the affirmative and in view of my suggested answer to that first question, I consider that there is no need to answer that second question.

76. So far as is relevant, I would simply state that in the case of a genuine transfer of power there is neither an in house award of a contract, as the legal instrument that organises the transfer of powers does not provide for the performance of services for consideration, nor cooperation between public entities in accordance with Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others case-law, (45) given that that instrument effects a transfer of public powers and does not involve cooperation between authorities.

V – Conclusion

77. On the basis of the foregoing, I propose that the Court answer the questions referred by the Oberlandesgericht Celle (Higher Regional Court of Celle, Germany) as follows:

> An agreement between two regional authorities on the basis of which they form, by constituting statutes, a public-law entity with separate legal personality, to which they transfer the powers for the performance of service tasks which hitherto were incumbent on the regional authorities concerned, without providing for remuneration to be given for contractual services, does not constitute a public contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts but constitutes an act which is a matter of internal organisation of the Member State concerned, which, as such, falls outside the scope of the EU rules on public procurement.

27 It should be noted in this regard that the Commission has already closed infringement proceedings brought against the Federal Republic of Germany, taking the view that the complete transfer of a public task from one public entity to another, to be performed by the transferee in full independence and under its own responsibility, constitutes an act of internal organisation of the public administration of the Member State in question and as such is not subject to the application of EU law. 34 In the Working Paper of 4 October 2011 (SEC(2011) 1169 final) concerning the application of EU public procurement law to relations between contracting authorities ('public-public cooperation'), the Commission gives an interpretation of that judgment (see point 4.1, p 19).

36 In the document mentioned in footnote 34, the Commission similarly considers that this possibility of influence may, for example, take the form of officials of the body which transfers the competence being members of the executive or management bodies of the authority to which the competence is transferred or the transferring authority retaining the right to receive certain information (see page 20).

39 See Paragraph 29 of the Lower Saxony Law on special-purpose associations mentioned in point 10 of this Opinion and Paragraph 16 of the Lower Saxony Law on inter-municipal cooperation mentioned in point 11 of this Opinion. In addition, according to the observations submitted to the Court, under the Niedersächsisches Gesetz über die Insolvenzunfähigkeit juristischer Personen des öffentlichen Rechts (Lower Saxony Law on exemption from insolvency of public-law corporations) 'insolvency proceedings may not be brought in respect of the assets of public-law corporations over which the Land exercises control'.

41 Judgment of 18 December 2007 in Commission v Ireland, C-532/03, EU:C:2007:801, paragraph 37.

42 This fact distinguishes the present case from Coditel Brabant (C-324/07, EU:C:2008:621, see, inter alia, paragraph 34), to which the national court refers. It should also be noted in this regard that in Coditel Brabant the regional authority concerned had not envisaged any transfer of powers. That case concerned the conclusion of a standard service concession contract and the factual background was completely different from that of the present case.

43 Judgment of 13 June 2013 in Piepenbrock, C-386/11, EU:C:2013:385.

44 In my view, Piepenbrock is, implicitly, in the line of the case-law mentioned in point 47 of this Opinion prohibiting public authorities from contriving to circumvent the rules on public procurement (in this case by a classification) in order to avoid the obligations stemming from those rules. In this regard, see the doubts expressed by the referring court itself in paragraph 24 of that judgment.

coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Ambisig — Ambiente e Sistemas de Informação Geográfica SA (‘Ambisig’) and AICP — Associação de Industriais do Concelho de Pombal (‘AICP’) concerning AICP’s decision to exclude Ambisig’s application from a tendering procedure with a view to the award of a public service contract.

Legal context

3 Recitals 1, 2, 4, 32 and 46 of Directive 2004/18 state:

‘(1) On the occasion of new amendments being made to Council Directives 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 1999, p. 1) and 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), which are necessary to meet requests for simplification and modernisation made by contracting authorities and economic operators alike in their responses to the Green Paper adopted by the Commission on 27 November 1996, the Directives should, in the interests of clarity, be recast. ...

(2) The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. ...

(4) Member States should ensure that the participation of a body governed by public law as a tenderer in a procedure for the award of a public contract does not cause any distortion of competition in relation to private tenderers.

...

(32) In order to encourage the involvement of small and medium-sized undertakings in the public contracts procurement market, it is advisable to include provisions on subcontracting.

(46) Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in conditions of effective competition. ...’

4 Article 1(9) of that directive provides:

‘“Contracting authorities” means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

A “body governed by public law” means any body:

(a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) having legal personality; and

(c) financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

Non-exhaustive lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in (a), (b) and (c) of the second subparagraph are set out in Annex III. Member States shall periodically notify the Commission of any changes to their lists of bodies and categories of bodies.'

5 Article 48 of that directive, entitled 'Technical and/or professional ability', provides:

'1. The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.

2. Evidence of the economic operators' technical abilities may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services:

(a) (i) ...

ii) a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, whether public or private, involved. Evidence of delivery and services provided shall be given:

– ...

– where the recipient was a private purchaser, by the purchaser's certification or, failing this, simply by a declaration by the economic operator;

Portuguese law

6 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Portuguese law by the Código dos Contratos Públicos (the Public Procurement Code), approved by Decree-Law No 18/2008 of 29 January 2008, as amended and republished as an annex to Decree-Law No 287/2009 of 2 October 2009 (Diário da República, 1st series, No 192, 2 October 2009).

7 Article 165 of that code is worded as follows:

'1 -The minimum requirements concerning technical ability referred to in point (h) of paragraph 1 of the preceding article must be adapted to the nature of the services forming the subject-matter of the contract to be concluded and must describe the circumstances, qualities, characteristics or other factual elements relating to, in particular:

(a) the professional experience of the candidates;

(b) the human, technological, equipment-based or other resources used, in any way, by the candidates;

(c) the organisational model and capacity of the candidates, particularly as regards the management and integration of specialist knowledge, IT support systems and quality control systems;

(d) the ability of candidates to take environmental management measures in the context of performance of the contract to be concluded;

(e) the information appearing in the database of the Instituto da Construção e do Imobiliário, I. P. concerning the traders, where the award of a works contract or a public works concession is involved.

5 — The minimum requirements concerning technical ability referred to in paragraph 1 and the “f” factor referred to in point (i) of paragraph 1 of the preceding article may not be established in a discriminatory manner.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

8 According to the documents in the case-file submitted to the Court, on 10 December 2013, AICIP, in its capacity as the contracting authority, launched a tendering procedure restricted by prior qualification intended to award a service contract for the ‘Implementation of Systems for Environmental Management, Quality and Technology Platform in 13 undertakings’.

9 Article 12(1)(c) and (f) of the contract notice provided as follows:

‘In order to be selected, the candidates must submit the following application documents:

...

(c) a declaration by the client on headed, stamped paper confirming implementation of the environmental and/or quality management system by the candidate, in accordance with the model declaration in Annex VIII to this contract notice. The declaration must bear a signature certified by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity, specifying the capacity of the person signing;

...

(f) a declaration by the client on headed, stamped paper confirming the implementation of management systems, of development and the bringing into use of an online technology platform, of management software and of coordination measures by the candidate, indicating the relevant amount, in accordance with the model declaration in Annex IX to this contract notice. The declaration must bear a signature certified by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity, specifying the capacity of the person signing; ...’

10 By decision of 27 March 2014, AICP approved the final report drawn up by the selection board selecting, for the bidding stage, Índice ICT & Management Lda. and excluding, in particular, Ambisig’s application on the ground that, first, Ambisig had failed to demonstrate, by means of a private purchaser’s declaration certified in accordance with Article 12 of the contract notice, that the requirements for technical abilities had been met and, secondly, it had failed to demonstrate or argue that it was impossible or very difficult for it to produce such a declaration.

11 In the action brought by Ambisig against that decision, by judgment of 11 June 2014 the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Leiria (Leiria Administrative and Tax Court, Portugal) upheld in part the pleas in law relied on by Ambisig, annulled AICIP’s decision and ordered AICIP to approve a new contract notice within 20 days.

12 Ambisig challenged that judgment before the collegiate formation of that court on the ground that it had wrongly rejected the pleas in law alleging, in particular, that the rules laid down by the contracting authority relating to the evidence of the candidates’ technical abilities were incompatible with the requirements laid down in that regard in Article 48 of Directive 2004/18.

13 Since the collegiate formation of the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Leiria (Leiria Administrative and Tax Court) rejected that complaint by judgment of 6 August 2014, Ambisig brought an action before the referring court, on the ground that that judgment had not acknowledged that the rules set by the contracting authority as regards the method of adducing evidence of the candidates’ technical abilities were unlawful in the light of Article 48 of Directive 2004/18.

14 In those circumstances the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (Administrative Court of Appeal, South, Portugal) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Since Portuguese legislation does not regulate the matters covered by Article 48(2)(a)(ii), second indent, of Directive 2004/18 …, is that provision directly applicable in the Portuguese legal order in the sense that it confers on individuals a right that they may assert against contracting authorities?

(2) Must Article 48(2)(a)(ii), second indent, of Directive 2004/18 be interpreted to the effect that it precludes the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority which do not allow an economic operator to provide evidence of the provision of services by a declaration signed by that operator, unless the latter proves that it is impossible or very difficult to obtain a certification from the private purchaser?

(3) Must Article 48(2)(a)(ii), second indent, of Directive 2004/18 be interpreted to the effect that it precludes the application of rules laid down by the contracting authority, which, on pain of exclusion, require the private purchaser’s certification to contain authentication of the signature by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity?’

Consideration of the questions referred

15 By its first question, the referring court essentially asks whether the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 is to be interpreted as meaning that, even if not transposed into domestic law, it satisfies the conditions for conferring rights on individuals that they may assert against a contracting authority before the national courts.

16 First of all, it should be recalled that, according to settled case-law of the Court, where the State has failed to implement a directive in domestic law by the end of the period prescribed or where it has failed to implement the directive correctly, only the provisions of that directive which appear, so far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise may be relied on by individuals before national courts against the State (see, to that effect, judgments of 12 December 2013 in Portgás, C-425/12, EU:C:2013:829, paragraph 18 and the case-law cited; 14 January 2014 in Association de médiation sociale, C-176/12, EU:C:2014:2, paragraph 31; and 15 May 2014 in Almos Agrárkülkereskedelmi, C-337/13, EU:C:2014:328, paragraph 31).

17 It must be found, as the Advocate General observed in point 25 of his Opinion, that the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 satisfies those criteria, since, first, it lays down an obligation which is not coupled with any additional requirement or subject to the adoption of an act of the EU institutions or the Member States and, secondly, it states fully and clearly the evidence which may be required from the economic operators in order to prove their technical abilities in public tendering procedures.

18 The Court has indeed also ruled to that effect as regards Directive 92/50, which was repealed and replaced by Directive 2004/18.

19 Consequently, in paragraphs 46 and 47 of the judgment of 24 September 1998 in Tögel (C-76/97, EU:C:1998:432), the Court held that the provisions of Title VI of Directive 92/50 — which included inter alia Article 32(2) of that directive, the content of which was reproduced in the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 in almost identical terms — were capable of having direct effect.

20 However, it must also be clarified, for the purposes of providing a useful answer to the first question, whether the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 may be relied upon against any entity classified as a ‘contracting authority’, within the meaning of Article 1(9) of that directive.

21 In that regard, it must be borne in mind that, according to settled case-law of the Court, although a directive cannot of itself impose obligations on an individual and cannot therefore be relied on as such against an individual (see, in particular, judgments of 24 January 2012 in Dominguez, C-282/10, EU:C:2012:33, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited, and 15 January 2015 in Ryanair, C-30/14, EU:C:2015:10, paragraph 30), where a person is able to rely on a directive not as against an individual but as against the State he may do so regardless of the capacity in which the latter is acting. It is necessary to prevent the State from taking advantage of its own failure to comply with EU law (see, to that effect, judgments of 24 January 2012 in Dominguez, C-282/10, EU:C:2012:33, paragraph 38 and the case-law cited, and 12 December 2013 in Portgás, C-425/12, EU:C:2013:829, paragraph 23).

22 Consequently, the entities against which reliance may be placed on the provisions of a directive that are capable of having direct effect include not only a public entity but also a body, whatever its legal form, which has been given responsibility, pursuant to a measure adopted by the State, for providing a public-interest service under the control of the State and which has, for that purpose, special powers beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals (judgment of 12 December 2013 in Portgás, C-425/12, EU:C:2013:829, paragraph 24 and the case-law cited).

23 In the present case, as regards AICP's situation, it seems to follow from the clarifications from the Portuguese Government at the hearing before the Court that that entity, while coming within the concept of 'contracting authority' within the meaning of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, constitutes a private-law association of undertakings, which does not meet the abovementioned conditions in order for the provisions of that directive to be capable of being relied on against it, because it does not provide a public-interest service under the control of the State and does not have special powers beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals; it is, however, for the referring court to ascertain whether that is the case.

24 In such a situation, it will nonetheless be for that court to interpret domestic law, so far as possible, in the light of the wording and the purpose of Directive 2004/18 in order to achieve the result sought in the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of that directive and consequently comply with the third paragraph of Article 288 TFEU (see, to that effect, judgments of 24 January 2012 in Dominguez, C-282/10, EU:C:2012:33, paragraph 24 and the case-law cited, and 19 April 2016 in DI, C-441/14, EU:C:2016:278, paragraph 31).

25 In that regard, it must be noted that the obligation on a national court to refer to the content of a directive when interpreting and applying the relevant rules of domestic law is, however, limited by general principles of law and it cannot serve as the basis for an interpretation of national law contra legem (see, to that effect, judgments of 24 January 2012 in Dominguez, C-282/10, EU:C:2012:33, paragraph 25 and the case-law cited, and 19 April 2016 in DI, C-441/14, EU:C:2016:278, paragraph 32).

26 Consequently, where national law cannot be interpreted consistently with Directive 2004/18, the party adversely affected by the incompatibility of national law with EU law may rely upon the case-law deriving from the judgment of 19 November 1991 in Francovich and Others (C-6/90 and C-9/90, EU:C:1991:428) in order to obtain, if appropriate, compensation for any damage suffered (see, to that effect, judgment of 26 March 2015 in Fenoll, C-316/13, EU:C:2015:200, paragraph 48 and the case-law cited).

27 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, even if not transposed into domestic law, it satisfies the conditions for conferring rights on individuals that they may assert against a contracting authority before national courts, provided that that authority is a public entity or has been given responsibility, pursuant to a measure adopted by the State, for providing a public-interest service under the control of the State and which has, for that purpose, special powers beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals.

28 By its second question, the referring court asks essentially whether the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 precludes the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority which do not allow an economic operator to provide evidence of his technical abilities by means of a unilateral declaration, unless he proves that it is impossible or very difficult to obtain a certification from the private purchaser.

29 In that regard, it must be borne in mind, first of all, that Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 provides that evidence of the economic operators' technical abilities may be furnished by a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided in the three years preceding the publication of the contract notice.

30 Where the recipient of those deliveries or services is a private purchaser, the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) lays down that proof of those deliveries or services may be furnished by two different means, namely 'by the purchaser's certification or, failing this, simply by a declaration by the economic operator'.

31 The question raised by the referring court relates precisely to the relationship between those two means of evidence, in that it seeks to determine whether they are on an equal footing, so that the operator is equally at liberty to prove his technical abilities either by a private purchaser's certification or a simple declaration drafted by himself or whether, on the contrary, the EU legislature established a hierarchy between those means of evidence, so that an operator may have recourse to such a unilateral declaration only in those cases where he is unable to obtain that certification.

32 In that regard, it must be noted that the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) is formulated in terms which, in accordance with their usual meaning in everyday language, leave no room for any reasonable doubt.

33 Indeed, as the Advocate General underlined in point 43 of his Opinion, the term 'failing this' used in that provision refers, in accordance with its common meaning, to a relationship not of equivalence but rather one of subsidiarity between the means of evidence concerned.

34 It follows that, in accordance with a literal interpretation, the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 must be understood as meaning that an economic operator may be authorised by the contracting authorities to provide evidence of his technical abilities by means of a unilateral declaration only if he cannot obtain the private purchaser's certification.

35 Such an interpretation is indeed borne out by the context in which the terms of that article occur and the purposes of Directive 2004/18 (see, to that effect, judgment of 22 March 2012 in GENESIS, C-190/10, EU:C:2012:157, paragraph 41 and the case-law cited).

36 As regards, first, the context of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18, it is apparent from the case-law of the Court that that provision establishes a closed system which limits the methods of assessment and verification available of technical capacity to the contracting authorities (see, to that effect, judgment of 18 October 2012 in Édukövízig and Hochtief Construction, C-218/11, EU:C:2012:643, paragraph 28). It follows that although new means of evidence may not be established in the matter by those authorities, nor can those authorities limit the scope of the evidence already provided for.

37 The literal interpretation of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18, as is apparent from paragraph 34 above, is the only one consistent with that context. It is not disputed that an alternative reading of that provision, according to which the contracting authorities should allow any economic operator to choose freely between either one of the means of evidence concerned would undermine effectiveness and, therefore, the very scope of the means of evidence based on the certification from the private purchaser, since each operator would probably be content in all cases with producing a unilateral declaration in order to comply with that provision.

38 As regards, secondly, the aims of Directive 2004/18, it is important to note that the system established by it is intended, in particular, as apparent from recitals 2, 4 and 46 thereof, to avoid distortion of competition between private tenderers and ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment.

39 As it is, a literal interpretation of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18, as is apparent from paragraph 34 above, intended to favour the means of evidence based on a certification from the private purchaser of the economic operator concerned, also proves consistent with the pursuit of the objectives referred to in the preceding paragraph, in that, first, it guarantees more transparency and legal certainty as regards the reality of that operator's technical abilities and, secondly, it anticipates the ex post facto checking of the declarations provided by each economic operator which the contracting authority is required to carry out, pursuant to Article 44(1) and 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18.

40 In accordance with the principle of proportionality, which constitutes a general principle of EU law, the contracting authorities' rules related to the application of the two means of evidence referred to in the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the intended objectives of that directive (see, to that effect, judgment of 22 October 2015 in Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

41 It follows that, as the Advocate General observed in point 50 of his Opinion and the Commission noted in its written observations, rules in a contract notice allowing an economic operator to produce a unilateral declaration in order to prove his technical abilities only if he proves that it is absolutely impossible to obtain a private purchaser's certification would prove disproportionate. Such rules would place an excessive burden on him in relation to what is necessary in order to avoid distortion of competition and ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment in the sphere of public contracts.

42 By contrast, rules in a contract notice according to which an economic operator is justified in relying upon such a unilateral declaration also where he proves, by means of objective evidence to be checked on a case-by-case basis, that there is a serious difficulty preventing him from obtaining such a certification, due for example to the bad faith of the private purchaser concerned, are consistent with the principle of proportionality, since they do not place an excessive burden of proof on the operator in question in relation to the pursuit of those objectives.

43 That appears to be the case, subject to verification by the referring court, of the rules in the contract notice drawn up by AICP which are challenged in the main proceedings.

44 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second question is that the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which do not allow an economic operator to provide evidence of his technical abilities by a unilateral declaration, unless he proves that it is impossible or very difficult to obtain a certification from the private purchaser.

The third question

45 By its third question, the referring court asks essentially whether the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 precludes the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority which, on pain of exclusion of the tenderer's application, require that the private purchaser's certification contains authentication of the signature by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity.

46 In that regard, it must be noted that, in its Portuguese-language version, the expression 'purchaser's certification', in the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18, is worded 'declaração reconhecida do adquirente' ('certified declaration of the purchaser'), which suggests that, in order to be valid, the private purchaser's declaration must contain an authenticated signature.

47 However, as all the parties who have submitted written observations state, the wording of most of the other language versions of that provision is expressed differently, which seems to result in a less restrictive interpretation of the scope of such a means of evidence. It is apparent in particular from the German-language version ('vom Erwerber ausgestellte Bescheinigung'), Spanish-language version ('certificado del comprador'), Italian-language version ('attestazione dell'acquirente') and English-language version ('purchaser's certification') that the expression 'purchaser's certification' must be understood as meaning that an economic operator is allowed to provide evidence of his technical abilities by means of a simple document drafted without any specific formalities by one or more of his private purchasers, attesting to the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided in the past three years and stating the amounts and dates involved.

48 It should be noted, with regard to that linguistic divergence, that, according to settled case-law of the Court, the wording used in one language versions of a provision of EU law cannot serve as the sole basis for the interpretation of that provision, or be made to override the other language versions in that regard. The provisions of EU law must be interpreted and applied in a uniform manner, in the light of the versions established in all the languages of the European Union. Where there is a divergence between the various language versions of a provision of EU law, the provision in question must be interpreted by reference to the general scheme and the purpose of the rules of which it forms part (judgment of 15 October 2015 in Grupo Itevelesa and Others, C-168/14, EU:C:2015:685, paragraph 42 and the case-law cited).

49 As regards the general scheme of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18, as noted in paragraph 36 above, that provision establishes a closed system which limits the possibility for contracting authorities of providing for new means of evidence or formulating additional requirements introducing a substantive change to the nature or the conditions for the production of evidence already provided for.

50 It must be found that requiring the signature on the private purchaser's certification to be authenticated would introduce a formality amounting to such a substantive change to the first of the two means of evidence referred to in the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18, making more burdensome the steps which must be taken by an economic operator in order to discharge his burden of proof, which would be contrary to the general scheme of that article.

51 As regards the purpose of Directive 2004/18, it must be borne in mind that, as is apparent from recitals 1 and 2 thereof, that directive lays down coordinating rules intended, in particular, to simplify and modernise the national procedures for the award of public contracts, in order to facilitate the freedom of movement of goods, freedom of establishment, the freedom to provide services and the opening-up of such contracts to competition.

52 In particular, as is apparent from the case-law of the Court, that directive seeks to facilitate the involvement of small- and medium-sized undertakings in the public contracts procurement market, as stated in recital 32 of that directive (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 October 2013 in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 34, and 7 April 2016 in Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 34).

53 However, as the Advocate General observed in points 80 and 81 of his Opinion, making the evidential value of the private purchaser's certification conditional on its signature being authenticated by a third party would introduce a formality likely not to open up public contracts to the broadest competition possible, but to restrict and limit the involvement of economic operators, in particular foreigners, in such contracts.

54 Because of the short time limits normally set for the submission of applications in contract notices and the divergences between the various national laws as to the authentication of the signature of documents, it cannot be excluded that many operators, above all foreigners, may be dissuaded from submitting their tenders in view of the practical difficulty of producing, in the Member State concerned by the procurement, a certification bearing a duly authenticated signature.

55 Consequently, the general scheme and purpose of Directive 2004/18 endorse the interpretation that the private purchaser's 'certification', like the 'certified declaration' in the Portuguese-language version of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of that directive, requires only that a certificate drafted by that purchaser is produced and cannot be made subject to any other formality by the contracting authorities, such as the authentication of the purchaser's signature by a competent entity.

56 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the third question is that the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that it precludes the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which, on pain of exclusion of the tenderer's application, require the private purchaser's certification to contain authentication of the signature by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity.

Costs

57 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. The second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that, even if not transposed into national law, it satisfies the conditions for conferring on individuals rights that they may assert against a contracting authority before national courts, provided that that authority is a public entity or has been given responsibility, pursuant to a measure adopted by the State, for providing a public-interest service under the control of the State and which has, for that purpose, special powers beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals.

2. The second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which do not allow an economic operator to provide evidence of his technical abilities by a unilateral declaration, unless he proves that it is impossible or very difficult to obtain a certification from the private purchaser.

3. The second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that it precludes the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which, on pain of exclusion of the tenderer's application, require the private purchaser's certification to contain authentication of the signature by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

WATHELET

delivered on 3 March 2016 (1)

Case C-46/15

Ambisig — Ambiente e Sistemas de Informação Geográfica SA

AICP — Associação de Industriais do Concelho de Pombal

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (Central Administrative Court, Southern Division, Portugal))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 48(2)(a)(ii) — Direct effect — Award procedures — Economic operators — Technical and/or professional abilities — Evidence)

I – Introduction

1. This request for a preliminary ruling has arisen in an action between Ambisig — Ambiente e Sistemas de Informação Geográfica, SA ('Ambisig') and AICP — Associação de Industriais do Concelho de Pombal ('AICP').

2. It concerns the interpretation of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. (2)

3. This provision deals with evidence of the technical and/or professional abilities of operators interested in the contract at issue. By the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (Central Administrative Court — Southern Division, Portugal) asks the Court about the possible direct effect of the provision and the structuring of the detailed evidential rules laid down therein.

II – Legal framework

A – EU law

4. Title II of Directive 2004/18 lays down the rules applicable to public contracts. The criteria for qualitative selection are fleshed out in Section 2 of Chapter VII which includes, inter alia, Articles 45 and 48.

5. Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18 provides that any economic operator who 'is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section or has not supplied such information' may be excluded from participation in the contract in question.

6. Article 48 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Technical and/or professional ability' is worded as follows:

> '1. The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.

2. Evidence of the economic operators' technical abilities may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services:

(ii) a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, whether public or private, involved. Evidence of delivery and services provided shall be given:

– where the recipient was a contracting authority, in the form of certificates issued or countersigned by the competent authority, – where the recipient was a private purchaser, by the purchaser's certification or, failing this, simply by a declaration by the economic operator;

B – Portuguese law

1. The Public Procurement Code

7. Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Portuguese law by the Public Procurement Code (Código dos Contratos Públicos), approved by Decree-Law No 18/2008 of 29 January 2008, as amended and republished as an annex to Decree-Law No 278/2009 of 2 October 2009 (Diário da República, 1re série, No 192 of 2 October 2009; 'the Public Procurement Code').

8. Article 165 of the Public Procurement Code is worded as follows:

'1. The minimum requirements concerning technical ability referred to in point (h) of paragraph 1 of the preceding article must be adapted to the nature of the services forming the subject matter of the contract to be concluded and must describe the circumstances, qualities, characteristics or other factual elements relating to, in particular:

(a) the professional experience of the candidates;

(b) the human, technological, equipment-based or other resources used, in any way, by the candidates;

(c) the organisational model and capacity of the candidates, particularly as regards the management and integration of specialist knowledge, IT support systems and quality control systems;

(d) the ability of candidates to take environmental management measures in the context of performance of the contract to be concluded;

(e) the information appearing in the database of the Instituto da Construção e do Imobiliário, I. P. concerning the traders, where the award of a works contract or a public works concession is involved.

5. The minimum requirements concerning technical ability referred to in paragraph 1 and the "f" factor referred to in point (i) of paragraph 1 of the preceding article may not be established in a discriminatory manner.'

2. The contract notice

9. Article 12 of the contract notice provides:

'In order to be selected, the candidates must submit the following application documents:

(c) a declaration by the client on headed, stamped paper confirming implementation of the environmental and/or quality management system [required by Article 8 of the contract notice] by the candidate, in accordance with the model declaration in Annex VIII to this contract notice. The declaration must bear a signature certified by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity, specifying the capacity of the person signing.

(f) a declaration by the client on headed, stamped paper confirming the implementation of management systems, of development and the bringing into use of an online technology platform, of management software and of coordination measures [required by Article 8 of the contract notice] by the candidate, indicating the relevant amount, in accordance with the model declaration in Annex IX to this contract notice. The declaration must bear a signature certified by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity, specifying the capacity of the person signing; …'

III – Factual background to the dispute in the main proceedings

10. According to the order for reference, on 23 April 2013 AICP decided to launch a tendering procedure restricted by prior qualification intended to award a service contract for the implementation of environmental and quality management systems and a technology platform.

11. Under Article 8(1)(a) to (c) of the contract notice, candidates had to satisfy several cumulative conditions relating to their technical ability.

12. Article 12(1)(c) and (f) of the contract notice stated that, in order to be selected, candidates had to demonstrate that they met these conditions by providing declarations by clients on headed, stamped paper. The declarations also had to bear a signature certified by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity, specifying the capacity of the person signing.

13. In the context of this tendering procedure, on 30 August 2013 AICP approved the final selection report drawn up by the selection board. The report selected 'Índice ICT & Management, Lda.' and excluded the two other applications, including that submitted by Ambisig.

14. For reasons not mentioned in the order for reference, this decision was annulled on 14 November 2013 by judgment of the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (Central Administrative Court — Southern Division). The judgment also ordered AICP to adopt, within 20 days, a new decision on the choice of procedure; to issue a new contract notice, with the illegalities that had been held to exist deleted; and to take all associated steps and measures.

15. In accordance with this judgment, on 10 December 2013 AICP decided to launch a new tendering procedure restricted by prior qualification intended to award a service contract for the implementation of environmental and quality management systems and a technology platform in 13 undertakings.

16. At the end of the new selection procedure, on 27 March 2014 AICP's management decided to approve the final selection report drawn up by the selection board which selected 'Índice ICT & Management, Lda.' and excluded Ambisig's application.

17. Ambisig brought an action against that decision before the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Leiria (Leiria Administrative and Tax Court, Portugal), resulting in the decision being annulled on 11 June 2014. However, Ambisig challenged the ruling before the collegiate formation of the court on the ground that it had wrongly rejected the pleas in law alleging, in particular, that Article 12(1)(c) and (f) of the contract notice was incompatible with the evidential requirements laid down in Article 48 of Directive 2004/18 as well as with the principles of competition, impartiality and proportionality flowing from the Public Procurement Code.

18. By judgment of 6 August 2014, the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Leiria (Leiria Administrative and Tax Court) rejected Ambisig's complaint and, consequently, confirmed its decision of 11 June 2014. Ambisig decided to challenge the judgment before the Tribunal Administrativo Central Sul (Central Administrative Court — Southern Division).

19. It is in the context of that action that the present request for a preliminary ruling has arisen. The Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (Central Administrative Court — Southern Division) has some concerns as regards the scope of the evidential requirements laid down in Article 48 of Directive 2004/18 and the conformity of the requirements of the contract notice with this article.

IV – The request for a preliminary ruling and the procedure before the Court

20. By decision of 29 January 2015, received at the Court on 5 February 2015, the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (Central Administrative Court — Southern Division) therefore decided to stay proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Since Portuguese legislation does not regulate the matters covered by Article 48(2)(a)(ii), second indent, of Directive 2004/18 …, is that provision directly applicable in the Portuguese legal order in the sense that it confers on individuals a right that they may assert against contracting authorities?

(2) Must Article 48(2)(a)(ii), second indent, of Directive 2004/18 be interpreted to the effect that it precludes the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority which do not allow an economic operator to provide evidence of the provision of services by a declaration signed by that operator, unless the latter proves that it is impossible or very difficult to obtain a certification from the private purchaser?

(3) Must Article 48(2)(a)(ii), second indent, of Directive 2004/18 be interpreted to the effect that it precludes the application of rules laid down by the contracting authority, which, on pain of exclusion, require the private purchaser’s certification to contain authentication of the signature by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity?’

21. Written observations were submitted by Ambisig, the Portuguese Government and the European Commission. The Portuguese Government and the Commission also presented oral arguments at the hearing which took place on 28 January 2016.

V – Analysis

A – The first question referred

22. By its first question, the referring court essentially asks whether the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 is to be interpreted as meaning that, in the absence of transposition into domestic law, that provision is capable of conferring rights on individuals which they may assert against contracting authorities in the context of proceedings brought before the national courts. It is therefore necessary to determine whether this provision has direct effect.

1. Whether the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 has direct effect

23. The conditions for and limits on recognising the direct effect of provisions of a directive are well known. According to the settled case-law of the Court, whenever the provisions of a directive are, so far as their content is concerned, unconditional and sufficiently precise, they may be relied on before the national courts by individuals against the State where the State has failed to transpose the directive into national law within the time-limit or has transposed it incorrectly. (3)

24. A provision of EU law is considered to be unconditional where it sets forth an obligation which is not qualified by any condition, or subject, in its implementation or effects, to the taking of any measure by the institutions of the European Union or by the Member States. (4)

25. In my view, the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 satisfies the abovementioned requirements of being unconditional and precise. This provision does not require any additional measure for its implementation in that, first, it provides that evidence of economic operators’ technical abilities may be furnished by a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided in the past three years indicating the sums, dates and public or private recipients involved, and, second, states that where the recipient was a private purchaser, evidence of the service provided is to be given by the purchaser’s certification or, failing this, simply by a declaration by the economic operator.

26. The Court has, furthermore, already had occasion to hold that Article 26 of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (5) could be relied on by an individual before the national courts, 'since no specific implementing measure is necessary for compliance with [the] requirements [set out therein]'. (6) Even though Article 26 of Directive 71/305 only concerned works contracts and not service contracts, the rules on evidence of technical abilities laid down in this provision may be regarded as similar, in so far as they are unconditional and precise, to those of Article 48 of Directive 2004/18.

27. Lastly, I note that the Court has also held, in general terms, that the provisions of Title VI of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (7) could be relied on by an individual before a national court 'if it is clear from an individual examination of their wording that they are unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise' (Judgment in Tögel (C-76/97, EU:C:1998:432, paragraph 47)).These provisions included Article 32, which even then stated, in paragraph 2 thereof, that evidence of the service provider's technical ability could be furnished by 'a list of the principal services provided in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, public or private, of the services provided [and that] where provided to private purchasers, delivery [was] to be certified by the purchaser or, failing this, simply declared by the service provider to have been effected'.

28. It must be stated that Article 48(2) of Directive 2004/18 reproduces this provision almost word for word. I therefore consider it to be unconditional and sufficiently precise so that it can be relied on before the national courts.

2. The necessity for the contracting authority to be classified as a 'State'

29. However, in order for Ambisig to be able to rely on the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 before the national court, it is for the referring court to satisfy itself that the contracting authority in question in the main proceedings is not an 'individual'.

30. According to settled case-law, a directive may not of itself impose obligations on an individual. It cannot therefore be relied upon as such against an individual before a national court. (8)

31. However, although the provisions of a directive having direct effect may, consequently, be relied on only against a State, the capacity in which the State acts is irrelevant. (9)

32. Thus, according to settled case-law, 'the entities against which reliance may be placed on the provisions of a directive that are capable of having direct effect include a body, whatever its legal form, which has been given responsibility, pursuant to a measure adopted by the State, for providing a public-interest service under the control of the State and which has, for that purpose, special powers beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals'. (10)

33. It appears from the name of the contracting authority in question in the main proceedings that it is a purely private association of undertakings which does not provide any public-interest services and does not have, in any case, special powers to perform its tasks.

34. In response to the questions put by the Court during the hearing held on 28 January 2016, the representative of the Portuguese Government confirmed that AICP was an association governed by private law which did not exercise and had not been entrusted with any tasks in the public interest. He explained that public procurement legislation would only apply if AICP's activities were financed, for the most part, out of the public purse. (11)

35. That being said, it is for the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (Central Administrative Court — Southern Division) to establish whether, at the time of the facts at issue in the main proceedings, AICP was a body which had been given responsibility for providing, under the control of a public authority, a public-interest service and whether this association of undertakings had, for that purpose, special powers. (12)

36. If the answer is in the negative, the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 cannot be relied upon against AICP. In that event, it would nevertheless be for the referring court to apply the principle of interpreting national law in conformity with EU law and to interpret all relevant rules of national law, so far as possible, in the light of the wording and the purpose of Directive 2004/18 in order to achieve the result sought by it and, consequently, comply with the third paragraph of Article 288 TFEU. (13)

B – The second question referred

37. By its second question, the referring court asks whether the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 precludes the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority which do not allow an economic operator to provide evidence of his technical abilities by a declaration signed by that operator, unless the latter proves that it is impossible or very difficult to obtain a certification from the private purchaser.

38. The referring court therefore asks the Court about the possible order of precedence of the forms of evidence permitted under the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18.

39. Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 provides that evidence of economic operators' technical abilities may be furnished by a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided in the past three years. If the recipient was a private purchaser, the second indent of this provision provides for two forms of evidence to demonstrate that the transactions (deliveries or services) actually occurred, that is, 'the purchaser's certification or, failing this, simply … a declaration by the economic operator'. (14)

40. The Court has repeatedly held that when interpreting a provision of EU law, it is necessary to consider not only its wording but also the context in which it occurs and the objectives pursued by the rules of which it is part. (15)

41. That said, as Advocate General Trstenjak pointed out in point 37 of her Opinion in Agrana Zucker (C-33/08, EU:C:2009:99), 'the wording of a provision … is invariably the starting point and at the same time the limit of any interpretation'. (16) I also agree with the clarification provided by Advocate General Léger to the effect that methods of interpretation other than those relating to the wording of a provision are not necessary where the text in question is absolutely clear and unambiguous. 'In that case, the provisions of [EU] law are sufficient in themselves'. (17)

42. In the present case, it must be stated that Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 has the required level of clarity and unambiguity in all language versions.

43. The term 'failing this' used in this provision means 'in the absence of', (18) 'in place of' or even 'for lack of something'. (19) Therefore, the only way in which it can be interpreted is in the sense of establishing an order of precedence. Specifically, the form of evidence which follows the words 'failing this' — namely the declaration by the economic operator — is thus necessarily subsidiary to the preceding form of evidence, namely the purchaser's certification.

44. Some language versions are even more explicit in that they do not simply use wording analogues to 'failing this', but permit the straightforward declaration by the operator expressly in the absence of the purchaser's certification, referred to before. (20)

45. Furthermore, if the economic operator were free to choose the form of evidence from those permitted under the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18, the words 'failing this' would be meaningless. Indeed, it would always be easier for the economic operator to draw up a declaration himself rather than request a certification from a third party.

46. The economic operator's declaration is therefore a subsidiary form of evidence, to be used where it has not been possible to obtain the purchaser's certification. In those circumstances, it is for the economic operator to show that he was unable to obtain such a certification.

47. Since Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18 permits the exclusion of an economic operator from a contract if he 'is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section or has not supplied such information', the contracting authority must be in a position to check the veracity of this information or of the reason for its absence.

48. This possibility for the contracting authority to carry out a check is particularly necessary because the Court has already held that, in accordance with the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency flowing from it, to which the contracting authorities are subject under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, those authorities must 'comply strictly with the criteria which [they have themselves] established, so that [they are] required to exclude from the contract an economic operator who has failed to provide a document or information which he was required to produce under the terms laid down in the contract documentation, on pain of exclusion'. (21)

49. However, as the Commission points out in its written submissions, this additional requirement must comply with the principle of proportionality.

50. This means that recourse to a declaration by the economic operator cannot be restricted to cases where it is absolutely impossible to obtain a certification from the purchaser (such as in the case of bankruptcy, for example). An impediment to securing such certification, such as a straightforward refusal by the purchaser without giving reasons or a demand by the purchaser for payment in return, could suffice. It also means than the evidence of this impossibility must be assessed in the light of the specific circumstances of each case. Thus, whilst submission of an official document may be required in the case of bankruptcy, a straightforward exchange of letters or a failure to reply (evidenced by one or more reminders, for instance) could be sufficient to demonstrate bad faith on the part of the purchaser.

51. To conclude, I consider that the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority which allow an economic operator to provide evidence of his technical abilities by a declaration signed by that operator only if he proves that it is impossible or very difficult to obtain a certification from the private purchaser.

C – The third question referred

52. By its third question, the referring court asks whether the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 precludes the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority which, on pain of exclusion, require the private purchaser's certification to bear a signature certified by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity.

53. The referring court's uncertainty derives from the wording of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 in Portuguese. That provision refers to a 'declaração reconhecida do adquirente', (22) that is to say a 'recognised' or 'certified' declaration. No such adjective appears in the other language versions of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of that directive.

54. According to the settled case-law of the Court, the wording used in one language version of a provision of EU law cannot serve as the sole basis for the interpretation of that provision, or be made to override the other language versions in that regard. Provisions of EU law must be interpreted and applied uniformly in the light of the versions existing in all EU languages. Where there is divergence between the various language versions of an EU legislative text, the provision in question must be interpreted by reference to the purpose and general scheme of the rules of which it forms part. (23)

55. This principle of linguistic equality or equivalence does not however go so far as to prevent the Court from disapplying the language version of a provision which is inconsistent with the ordinary meaning shared by the other language versions, on the basis of a contextual and/or teleological interpretation of the provision. (24)

56. In the present case, the ordinary meaning of the wording used in the other language versions clearly does not, in itself, enable a firm reply to be given to the question referred for a preliminary ruling. However, the context of which Article 48 of Directive 2004/18 forms part and its development, as well as its teleological interpretation, lead me to adopt the interpretation that the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 does not require the production of a certification from the private purchaser bearing a signature certified by a notary, lawyer or any other competent entity.

1. The wording of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18

57. If we compare the different language versions of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18, we see that although the qualifier ‘reconhecida’ (‘recognised’ or ‘certified’) only appears in the Portuguese version, this is also the only version which uses the same word for both forms of evidence envisaged.

58. In the other language versions, the word ‘declaration’ is used in the second situation (the declaration by the economic operator) whilst the first situation refers to the purchaser’s ‘certification’ of deliveries or services. Thus, in the Spanish, German, English and French versions, we find the words ‘certificado’ and ‘declaración’, ‘Bescheinigung’ and ‘Erklärung’, ‘certification’ and ‘declaration’, and ‘certification’ and ‘déclaration’. (25)

59. The use of a different word for each of the two situations referred to in the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 could reflect the EU legislature’s intention to distinguish between the burden of proof applying to them. The distinction between ‘certification’ and ‘declaration’ would thus connote the idea of a higher level of formality in the first situation. This interpretation would be confirmed by the wording of the provision in Portuguese, which uses the word ‘declaration’ in both situations but with the addition of the adjective ‘recognised’ or ‘certified’ only in the first.

60. However, I cannot completely disregard the fact that the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 permits evidence of the services which the economic operator claims to have provided to be given by the purchaser’s certification, without reference to any official document or the involvement of a third party. In the absence of such a detail, the ordinary meaning of the word ‘certification’ is nothing more than the act of giving a written assurance of something . (26)

61. I must therefore conclude that a literal analysis of the provision in question does not, in itself, enable it to be interpreted with the required level of certainty.

2. Systematic interpretation of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18

62. First of all, the Court has consistently held that Article 48 of Directive 2004/18 establishes a closed system which limits the methods of assessment and verification available to contracting authorities and, therefore, limits their opportunities to lay down requirements. (27)

63. The Court has also stated that even within the framework of an open system (such as that laid down in Article 47(4) of Directive 2004/18 as regards the economic and financial standing of candidates), contracting authorities’ freedom is not unlimited and the aspects chosen must be ‘objectively such as to provide information on such standing … without, however, going beyond what is reasonably necessary for that purpose’. (28)

64. The same considerations apply, a fortiori, to the requirements laid down in the closed evidential system under Article 48 of Directive 2004/18. In my opinion, requiring authentication of the signature of a private purchaser attesting to a delivery effected or a service provided by an economic operator who has applied for a contract goes beyond what is necessary to prove the technical ability of the operator in question and is excessively formalistic when compared to the straightforward declaration by the economic operator, which is the subsidiary form of evidence permitted under the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18.

65. If the contracting authority has concerns about the veracity of the document submitted to it, it may also, in my view, request additional information to demonstrate the authenticity of the certification provided. Indeed, as part of the contextual analysis, it must be recalled that Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18 makes it possible to exclude from the contract any operator who ‘is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required’.

66. Secondly, the development of the applicable legislation also militates in favour of a non-formalistic interpretation of the necessary certification.

67. The idea underpinning the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 was already present in Directive 92/50, although the wording used was slightly different. Under the second indent of

Article 32(2)(b) of Directive 92/50, the delivery on which the economic operator relied to prove his technical ability had to be 'certified by the purchaser'. (29)

68. Whilst the idea of 'certification' is found in the verb 'to certify', the absence of any involvement of institutional third parties was, by contrast, even clearer, as the emphasis was patently on the actions of the purchaser, the delivery having to be certified by him.

69. It can also be noted that the Portuguese version of Directive 92/50 used the word 'declaração' even then for both evidential situations, but without the addition of any adjective in the first situation.

70. The wording of Article 32(2) of Directive 92/50 was not, initially, the subject of any amendments in the proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on the coordination of procedures for the award of public supply contracts, public service contracts and public works contracts (COM/2000/0275 final) (30) resulting in Article 48(2) of Directive 2004/18.

71. It was only after the inclusion of the Parliament's amendments regarding economic operators tendering as a group and concerns relating to the environment and workers' health and safety that the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) took on its current form. (31)

72. It is therefore not possible to base any argument on the amendments to the wording of the disputed provision, as the considerations which resulted in those changes are unrelated to any intention on the part of the legislature to increase the evidential formalities associated with the certification, by the purchaser, of the services provided by the economic operator.

73. On the contrary, Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/ (32) goes even further in the sense of reducing evidential formalities by removing all references to certification by the purchaser.

74. From now on, Article 60(4) of that directive — which replaces Article 48(2) of Directive 2004/18 — simply provides that 'evidence of the economic operators' technical abilities may be provided by one or more of the means listed in Annex XII Part II, in accordance with the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services'.

75. Under Annex XII Part II(a)(ii) of Directive 2014/24, the means of evidence attesting to economic operators' technical abilities are 'a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided over at the most the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, whether public or private, involved. Where necessary in order to ensure an adequate level of competition, contracting authorities may indicate that evidence of relevant supplies or services delivered or performed more than three years before will be taken into account'. The need for this list to be accompanied by a certification from the purchaser has therefore disappeared.

76. Even though Directive 2014/24 does not apply to the dispute in the main proceedings, this new directive, which repeals Directive 2004/18, is relevant in that it expresses the current intention of the EU legislature. It may therefore be of assistance in ascertaining the current meaning of an earlier, similar provision, provided, however, that such interpretation is not contra legem.

77. In the present case, it seems to me that Directives 92/50 and 2014/24 confirm the EU legislature's continuing intention not to make evidence of the technical ability of an economic operator subject to any specific formality and do so in a way that does not conflict with the wording of the applicable provision.

78. In other words, viewed in its context and from a historical perspective, the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 imposes no other requirement than the assurance or confirmation, by the purchaser, that the service on which the economic operator relies with a view to securing the contract was actually provided.

3. Teleological interpretation of the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18

79. This interpretation is also consistent with the purpose of Directive 2004/18, which is to facilitate freedom of movement of goods, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services as well as, more generally, the opening-up of public procurement to competition. (33)

80. Making the acceptance of a purchaser's certification conditional on its authentication by a notary, lawyer or any other competent entity is, to my mind, likely to run counter to that objective.

81. Such a requirement would be liable to deter some potential candidates who, when faced with the practical difficulty (due to the time-limits set in the contract notice, for example) of satisfying this additional condition, would forgo submitting a tender.

4. Conclusion on the third question referred for a preliminary ruling

82. To conclude, I find that the contextual and teleological interpretations of the second indent of Article 48(2(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 confirm the ordinary meaning of the term 'certification' appearing therein and it is not appropriate to draw specific inferences from the addition of the word 'reconhecida' in the Portuguese version.

83. The context of which the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 forms part and its development, as well as its teleological interpretation, lead me to adopt the interpretation that the word 'certification' or the term 'certified declaration' used in the Portuguese version do not require any particular formality.

84. Consequently, I consider that the second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 precludes the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority which, on pain of exclusion, require the private purchaser's certification to bear a signature certified by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity.

VI – Conclusion

85. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court give the following replies to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (Central Administrative Court — Southern Division):

(1) The second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that, in the absence of transposition into domestic law, that provision is capable of conferring rights on individuals which they may assert against contracting authorities in the context of proceedings brought before the national courts, provided that the contracting authority in question falls within the notion of State within the meaning of the case-law of the Court.

(2) The second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority which allow an economic operator to provide evidence of his technical abilities by a declaration signed by that operator only if he proves that it is impossible or very difficult to obtain a certification from the private purchaser.

(3) The second indent of Article 48(2)(a)(ii) of Directive 2004/18 precludes the application of rules laid down by a contracting authority which, on pain of exclusion, require the private purchaser's certification to bear a signature certified by a notary, lawyer or other competent entity.

13 – See, to that effect, judgment in Dominguez (C-282/10, EU:C:2012:33, paragraph 24 and the case-law cited). In its judgment in Fenoll (C-316/13, EU:C:2015:200), the Court expressly confirmed the existence of an order of precedence as regards the courses of action available in disputes between individuals: ‘if national law cannot be interpreted in conformity with the directive [in question] — which it is for the referring court to ascertain — [the relevant article] of that directive may not be invoked in a dispute between individuals … in order to ensure the full effect of [the] right [it confers] and to render inapplicable any conflicting provision of national law. Moreover, in such a situation the party adversely affected by the incompatibility of national law with EU law may nevertheless rely upon the case-law [on the non-contractual liability of the Member States for infringements of EU law] deriving from the judgment in Francovich and Others (C-6/90 and C-9/90, EU:C:1991:428) in order to obtain, if appropriate, compensation for any damage suffered (see judgment in Dominguez, C-282/10, EU:C:2012:33, paragraph 43)’ (paragraph 48). In other words, if, in a dispute between individuals, the national court does not succeed in interpreting national law in conformity with the applicable directive, it will not be able to apply this directive but neither will it be able to disapply the conflicting national law. In those circumstances, the only palliative available to the injured party is to seek to establish the liability of the Member State for infringing EU law.

The Italian version also uses the wording ‘in mancaza di tale attestazione’. Lastly, in the German version, the EU legislature refers to the situation where ‘falls eine derartige Bescheinigung nicht erhältlich ist’. The Greek version is even more explicit in that it refers to the ‘impossibility’ of obtaining a certification from the purchaser: ‘εάν ο αποδέκτης είναι ιδιωτικός φορέας, με βεβαίωση του αγοραστή ή, εάν τούτο δεν είναι δυνατόν [where this is not possible], με απλή δήλωση του οικονομικού φορέα’ (my emphasis).

Legal context

3 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

4 Article 47(2) of that directive provides:

5 Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 provides:

'An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.'

6 Article 63(1), first and third subparagraphs, and Article 63(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, pp. 65 to 242), which are referred to by the referring court, state:

'1. With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. … Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

Where an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities with regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing, the contracting authority may require that the economic operator and those entities be jointly liable for the execution of the contract.

2. In the case of works contracts, service contracts and siting or installation operations in the context of a supply contract, contracting authorities may require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself or, where the tender is submitted by a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 19(2), by a participant in that group.'

Italian law

7 Article 49 of decreto legislativo No 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 on the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts in implementation of Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), as amended by decreto legislativo No 152 (Legislative Decree No 152) of 11 September 2008 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 231 of 2 October 2008) ('Legislative Decree No 163/2006'), entitled 'Reliance on the capacities of third parties', transposes Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18 into Italian law.

8 Article 49(1) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 provides:

'The tenderer, whether an individual or a member of a consortium or group within the meaning of Article 34, in a specific tendering procedure for a public works, services or supply contract, may fulfil the requirements relating to the economic, financial, technical and organisational criteria, that is to say, obtain an SOA certificate, by relying on the capacities of another entity or the SOA certificate of another entity.'

9 Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 provides:

'Reliance on several auxiliary undertakings shall be permitted, subject to the prohibition on the divided use by the tenderer of the individual economic-financial and technical-organisational criteria referred to in Article 40(3)(b), on the basis of which the certificate for that category was issued.'

10 Under the first subparagraph of Article 1(67) of the Legge finanziaria 2006 (2006 Finance Law No 266, Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 211 of 29 December 2005) of 23 December 2005 ('Law No 266/2005'):

'… [t]he Supervisory Authority on Public Works … shall determine, on an annual basis, the amount of the fees payable to it by the public and private persons which are subject to its supervision and the fee collection procedures, including the obligation of economic operators to pay the fee as a condition for tenders to be admissible to procedures for the carrying out of public works.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11 In November 2012, the Autorità Portuale di Messina (Port Authority of Messina, Italy) launched an open tendering procedure, of EU interest, for the award of a four-year public service contract for the management of waste and cargo residues, produced on board ships calling at ports within the Port Authority of Messina's territorial jurisdiction. That service was previously run by CRGT.

12 On 16 May 2013, the tender assessment committee of the Port Authority of Messina took note that four tenders had been submitted.

13 On 4 June 2013, CRGT, which had signed with RIAL Srl a contract of reliance upon RIAL Srl's capacities, and two other tenderers learned that they had been excluded from that tendering procedure on account of the fact that they had not paid to the Autorità per la vigilanza sui contratti pubblici (the Supervisory Authority on Public Procurement) ('the AVCP') the fee required by Law No 266/2005.

14 The contract was therefore awarded to Pizzo, the sole remaining tenderer in the tendering procedure.

15 CRGT brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court for Sicily, Italy) seeking the annulment of that decision to exclude it from the procedure and compensation for the damage suffered as a result of that exclusion.

16 Pizzo filed a counterclaim in which it submitted that CRGT should also have been excluded from that tendering procedure for having failed to submit two separate bank references in order to prove its economic and financial standing.

17 The Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court for Sicily), by judgment No 1781/2014, held that CRGT's action was admissible and well founded and that that company had been wrongly excluded from the tendering procedure at issue. It held in that regard that the documents relating to that procedure did not provide for the tendering undertakings to pay a mandatory fee to the AVCP because the payment of such a fee, which is provided for by Law No 266/2005, applies expressly to public works contracts but not to service contracts. Furthermore, that court stated that the imposition of the payment of that fee on undertakings tendering for the award of a service contract is the result of a broad interpretation, first, of Law No 266/2005 by the AVCP, and, secondly, of the administrative case-law, according to which the necessity of that payment condition implies, by operation of the mechanism by which provisions are automatically incorporated in administrative measures, that all undertakings tendering for the award of public contracts should be required to pay that fee.

18 In addition, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court for Sicily) dismissed the counterclaim filed by Pizzo, on the ground that CRGT could, as it had done, rely on the economic and financial standing of a third-party undertaking with which it had concluded a contract to that effect.

19 Pizzo brought an appeal before the referring court.

20 In those circumstances the Consiglio di giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily, Italy) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Must Articles 47 and 48 of Directive [2004/18] be interpreted as precluding national legislation, like [that] described [in the order for reference], which allows divided reliance upon the capacities of other entities, on the terms set out above, in respect of services?

(2) Do the principles of EU law, and, in particular, those of protection of legitimate expectations, legal certainty and proportionality, preclude a legal rule of a Member State which permits the exclusion from a public tendering procedure of an undertaking which did not understand, because this was not expressly provided in the tender documents, that it was obliged, on pain of exclusion from that procedure, to fulfil the obligation to pay a sum in order to participate in that procedure, even though the existence of that obligation cannot be clearly deduced from the wording of the law in force in the Member State, but can nevertheless be inferred, by means of a twofold legal operation, which involves, first, interpreting extensively certain provisions of that Member State's positive law and, then, incorporating — in accordance with the outcome of that broad interpretation — the mandatory provisions in the tendering documents?'

21 By its first question the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18 are to be interpreted as precluding national legislation which allows an economic operator to rely on the capacities of one or more third-party entities for the purpose of satisfying the minimum requirements for participating in a tendering procedure which are only partially satisfied by that operator.

22 Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 expressly provide, in almost identical terms, that 'an economic operator may … rely on the capacities of other entities' in order to establish that it satisfies the requirements with regard to economic and financial standing and technical and professional ability required by the contract in question.

23 The Court has held that EU law does not require that, in order to be classified as an economic operator qualifying for tendering, a person wishing to enter into a contract with a contracting authority must be capable of direct performance using his own resources (see, to that effect, judgment of 23 December 2009 in CoNISMa, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 41).

24 The Court has held, in that respect, that Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 does not lay down any general prohibition regarding a candidate or tenderer's reliance on the capacities of one or more third-party entities in addition to its own capacities in order to fulfil the criteria set by a contracting authority (see judgment of 10 October 2013 in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 30).

25 According to that same case-law, those provisions recognise the right of every economic operator to rely, for a particular contract, upon the capacities of other entities, 'regardless of the nature of the links which it has with them', provided that it proves to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the performance of the contract (see judgment of 14 January 2016 in Ostas celtnieks, C-234/14, EU:C:2016:6, paragraph 23).

26 It must therefore be held that Directive 2004/18 permits the combining of the capacities of more than one economic operator for the purpose of satisfying the minimum capacity requirements set by the contracting authority, provided that the candidate or tenderer relying on the capacities of one or more other entities proves to that authority that it will actually have at its disposal the resources of those entities necessary for the execution of the contract (see judgment of 10 October 2013 in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 33).

27 Such an interpretation is consistent with the objective pursued by the directives in this area of attaining the widest possible opening-up of public contracts to competition to the benefit not only of economic operators but also contracting authorities (see, to that effect, judgment of 23 December 2009 in CoNISMa, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited). In addition, that interpretation also facilitates the involvement of small- and medium-sized undertakings in the contracts procurement market, an aim also pursued by Directive 2004/18, as stated in recital 32 thereof (see judgment of 10 October 2013 in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 34).

28 The Court has, however, pointed out that there may be works the special requirements of which necessitate a certain capacity which cannot be obtained by combining the capacities of more than one operator, which, individually, would be inadequate. It has thus acknowledged that, in such circumstances, the contracting authority would be justified in requiring that the minimum capacity level concerned be achieved by a single economic operator or by relying on a limited number of economic operators as long as that requirement is related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue. The Court has, however, stated that since those circumstances represent an exception, the requirements in question cannot be made general rules under national law (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 October 2013 in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraphs 35 and 36).

29 It is apparent from the order for reference that, according to Pizzo, CRGT could not rely on the capacities of another operator in order to fulfil the criteria for the award of the contract as issue in the main proceedings. However, it is apparent from Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 that they expressly provide for the possibility for a tenderer to rely on the capacities of other entities. It is, however, for the referring court to ascertain whether the call for tenders and the contract documents in respect of the contract at issue expressly stipulated that, in the light of the special requirements of the services forming the subject matter of that contract, a minimum capacity level should have been achieved by a single economic operator.

30 As regards Pizzo's argument that CRGT should have proved its economic and financial standing by the provision of references from at least two banking institutions, it must be pointed out that to preclude the possibility for an undertaking which relies on the capacities of a third-party undertaking to use the bank reference of that undertaking would manifestly result in rendering ineffective the possibility afforded by Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 of relying on the capacities of third parties. Those provisions must therefore be interpreted as meaning that economic operators may, with regard to a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, and that includes the use of their bank references.

31 The referring court also raises the question of whether Article 63(1), third subparagraph, and Article 63(2) of Directive 2014/24 introduce limits on the possibility of relying on the capacity of other undertakings. It must, however, be stated that, under Article 90 of that directive, Member States had to comply with the provisions of that directive by 18 April 2016. Consequently, the provisions of that directive are not applicable ratione temporis to the case in the main proceedings.

32 Although the case-law of the Court requires Member States to refrain, during the period prescribed for transposition of a directive, from taking any measures liable seriously to compromise the result prescribed by that directive (see judgment of 18 December 1997 in Inter-Environnement Wallonie, C-129/96, EU:C:1997:628, paragraph 45), that case-law does not make it possible to impose on a tenderer, before that period has expired, constraints which do not derive from EU law as interpreted by the case-law of the Court.

33 Furthermore, it must be pointed out that the specific provisions referred to by the referring court provide that it is possible for the contracting authority to require that the entity which is relied on to satisfy the conditions laid down with regard to economic and financial standing is to be jointly liable (Article 63(1), third subparagraph, of Directive 2014/24) or to require that, with regard to certain types of contracts, certain critical tasks are to be performed directly by the tenderer (Article 63(2) of that directive). Those provisions do not therefore impose specific limits on the possibility of divided reliance on the capacities of third-party undertakings and, in any event, such limits should have been expressly set out for in the call for tenders in respect of the contract at issue, which is not the case in the main proceedings.

34 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first question is that Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which allows an economic operator to rely on the capacities of one or more third-party entities for the purpose of satisfying the minimum requirements for participating in a tendering procedure which are only partially satisfied by that operator.

35 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency are to be interpreted as precluding an economic operator from being excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract as a result of that economic operator's non-compliance with an obligation which does not expressly arise from the documents relating to that procedure or out of the national law in force, but from an interpretation of that law and from the incorporation of provisions into those documents by the national authorities or administrative courts.

36 In that regard, it must be borne in mind, first, that the principle of equal treatment requires tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the tenders of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions. Second, the obligation of transparency, which is its corollary, is intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. That obligation implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgment of 6 November 2014 in Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 44 and the case-law cited).

37 The Court has also held that the principles of transparency and equal treatment which govern all procedures for the award of public contracts require the substantive and procedural conditions concerning participation in a contract to be clearly defined in advance and made public, in particular the obligations of tenderers, in order that those tenderers may know exactly the procedural requirements and be sure that the same requirements apply to all candidates (see, to that effect, judgment of 9 February 2006 in La Cascina and Others, C-226/04 and C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94, paragraph 32).

38 Furthermore, it is apparent from point 17 of the section relating to 'Contract notices' in Annex VII A to Directive 2004/18, relating to information which must be included in public contract notices, that '[s]election criteria regarding the personal situation of economic operators that may lead to their exclusion' from the procedure for the award of the contract in question must be set out in the contract notice.

39 Consequently, in accordance with the settled case-law of the Court, pursuant to Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, a contracting authority must comply strictly with the criteria which it has itself established (see, inter alia, judgment of 10 October 2013 in Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 40, and judgment of 6 November 2014 in Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraphs 42 and 43).

40 It is apparent from the file submitted to the Court that the documents relating to the procedure for the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings did not expressly require tenderers, on pain of exclusion from that procedure, to pay a fee to the AVCP.

41 As the referring court points out, the existence of that obligation is inferred from the AVCP's broad interpretation of Law No 266/2005 and from the national administrative case-law. It states that the AVCP takes the view that failure to pay that fee results in the exclusion of the tenderer from the public procurement procedure, regardless of the type of contract which forms the subject matter of the call for tenders. That court also states that it is apparent from the national administrative case-law that an undertaking may be excluded from a public tendering procedure if it does not prove that it satisfies a condition which is not expressly required by the tendering procedure rules, if the necessity of that condition may be inferred from the 'mechanism by which mandatory provisions are automatically inserted into administrative measures'.

42 As has been pointed out in paragraph 39 of the present judgment, a contracting authority must comply strictly with the criteria which it has itself established. That consideration applies a fortiori where an exclusion from the procedure is concerned.

43 It must be pointed out that, although Article 27(1) of Directive 2004/18 does not require the contract documents to specify in detail all the obligations relating to taxes, to environmental protection, to the employment protection provisions and to the working conditions which are in force in the Member State, those obligations, unlike the fee at issue in the case in the main proceedings, do not automatically result in exclusion from the procedure with regard to the admissibility of the tender.

44 In view of the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency, which is its corollary, to which contracting authorities are subject pursuant to Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, Article 27 of that directive cannot be interpreted as meaning that it allows those contracting authorities to derogate from the strict obligation to comply with the criteria which they have themselves established.

45 However, in the case in the main proceedings, the alleged obligation to pay a fee to the AVCP can be identified only by the interaction between the 2006 Finance Law, the AVCP's decision-making practice and the judicial practice of the Italian administrative courts in applying and interpreting Law No 266/2005.

46 As the Advocate General points out, in essence, at point 65 of his Opinion, a condition governing the right to participate in a public procurement procedure which arises out of the interpretation of national law and the practice of an authority, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, would be particularly disadvantageous for tenderers established in other Member States, inasmuch as their level of knowledge of national law and the interpretation thereof and of the practice of the national authorities cannot be compared to that of national tenderers.

47 As regards the argument that CRGT had previously already provided the services forming the subject matter of the call for tenders and could therefore be aware of the existence of the fee at issue in the main proceedings, it is sufficient to state that the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency, which is its corollary, would clearly not be complied with if such an operator were subject to criteria which are not established by the call for tenders and would not be applicable to new operators.

48 Furthermore, it is apparent from the order for reference that there is no possibility of rectifying non-compliance with that condition that a fee must be paid.

49 According to paragraph 46 of the judgment of the Court of 6 November 2014 in Cartiera dell'Adda (C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345), the contracting authority may not accept any rectification of omissions which, as expressly provided for in the contract documentation, must result in the exclusion of the bid. The Court stated, in paragraph 48 of that judgment, that the obligation concerned was clearly laid down in the contract documentation, on pain of exclusion.

50 However, in a situation where, as in the case in the main proceedings, a condition for participating in a procedure for the award of a contract, on pain of exclusion from that procedure, is not expressly laid down in the contract documentation and that condition can be identified only by a judicial interpretation of national law, the contracting authority may grant the excluded tenderer a sufficient period of time in order to rectify its omission.

51 In the light of all of those considerations, the answer to the second question is that the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency must be interpreted as precluding an economic operator from being excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract as a result of that economic operator's non-compliance with an obligation which does not expressly arise from the documents relating to that procedure or out of the national law in force, but from an interpretation of that law and those documents and from the incorporation of provisions into those documents by the national authorities or administrative courts. Accordingly, the principles of equal treatment and of proportionality must be interpreted as not precluding an economic operator from being allowed to regularise its position and comply with that obligation within a period of time set by the contracting authority.

Costs

52 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Sixth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which allows an economic operator to rely on the capacities of one or more third-party entities for the purpose of satisfying the minimum requirements for participating in a tendering procedure which are only partially satisfied by that operator.

2. The principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency must be interpreted as precluding an economic operator from being excluded from a procedure for the award of a public contract as a result of that economic operator's non-compliance with an obligation which does not expressly arise from the documents relating to that procedure or out of the national law in force, but from an interpretation of that law and those documents and from the incorporation of provisions into those documents by the national authorities or administrative courts. Accordingly, the principles of equal treatment and of proportionality must be interpreted as not precluding an economic operator from being allowed to regularise its position and comply with that obligation within a period of time set by the contracting authority.

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 21 January 2016 (1)

Case C-27/15

Pippo Pizzo and Others

CRGT srl

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Consiglio di Giustizia Amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Italy))

(Public contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Participation in a tendering procedure — Whether the capacities of other undertakings may be relied upon in order to satisfy the necessary conditions — Failure to pay a fee not explicitly provided for — Exclusion of tenderer)

1. The present reference for a preliminary ruling provides the Court with a fresh opportunity of developing its case-law on procedures for the award of public contracts, in particular, its case-law on Directive 2004/18/EC. (2)

2. On the one hand, this case raises again the question whether a tenderer may rely upon the capacities of third parties in order to satisfy the conditions for participation in a procurement procedure, an issue which can relatively simply be resolved in the light of the Court's case-law.

3. On the other hand, and this is a more complex issue, the referring court asks whether it is permissible for certain conditions of admissibility governing participation in a tendering procedure not to be expressly included in the tender notice or the contract documents, but instead to be inferred from generally applicable national provisions.

4. In relation to that second issue, I shall propose to the Court a nuanced reading of its case-law on the need for the contract documents to set out explicitly all the conditions of the tender. I shall do so by relying upon the logic I consider to be inherent in the notion of a 'reasonably informed tenderer exercising ordinary care' as a criterion determining the spirit of that case-law.

I – Legislative framework

A – EU law

1. Directive 2004/18

5. Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 provides that '[c]ontracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

6. Article 47 of the directive states:

‘1. Proof of the economic operator’s economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) appropriate statements from banks or, where appropriate, evidence of professional risk indemnity insurance;

(b) the presentation of balance-sheets or extracts from the balance-sheets, where publication of the balance-sheet is required under the law of the country in which the economic operator is established;

(c) a statement of the undertaking’s overall turnover and, where appropriate, of turnover in the area covered by the contract …

2. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.

7. According to Article 48 of Directive 2004/18:

‘1. The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.

3. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.

…’

2. Directive 2014/24/EU (3)

8. Pursuant to Article 63 of Directive 2014/24:

‘1. With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing … and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability … an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. … Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

Where an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities with regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing, the contracting authority may require that the economic operator and those entities be jointly liable for the execution of the contract.

2. In the case of works contracts, service contracts and siting or installation operations in the context of a supply contract, contracting authorities may require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself or, where the tender is submitted by a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 19(2), by a participant in that group.’

1. Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 (4)

9. Article 49 of Legislative Decree No 163 provides:

> ‘1. The tenderer, ‘acting alone or as a member of a consortium or of a group within the meaning of Article 34, in a specific tendering procedure for a public works, services or supply contract, may fulfil the economic, financial, technical and organisational conditions, in other words, obtain an SOA [SOA: Società Organismi di Attestazione, or attestation organisations] certificate …, by relying upon the capacity of another entity or upon the SOA certificate of another entity.
> 6. For works contracts, the tenderer may rely upon the capacities of only one auxiliary undertaking for every qualification category. The invitation to tender may permit reliance upon the capacity of more than one auxiliary undertaking having regard to the value of the contract or the special nature of the services to be provided …’

2. Law No 266 of 23 December 2005 (5)

10. Under Article 1(67), first subparagraph, of Law No 266, ‘[t]he Supervisory Authority on Public Procurement … shall determine annually the amount of the fees payable to it by the public and private persons subject to its supervision and the fee collection procedures, including the obligation of economic operators to pay the fee as a condition for tenders to be admissible to procedures for the carrying out of public works’.

II – Facts

11. In November 2012, the Port Authority of Messina (Italy) launched an open tendering procedure, of EU interest, for the award of a four-year public service contract for the management of waste and residues from ships calling at ports within its territorial jurisdiction. The service had previously been run by CRGT srl (‘CRGT’).

12. The service was awarded to the temporary joint venture Pippo Pizzo and Onofaro Antonino (‘Pizzo’), after it was noted that other companies bidding for the contract, including CRGT, had not paid the Supervisory Authority on Public Procurement (Autorità di vigilanza dei contratti pubblici) (‘AVCP’) the fee provided for in Law No 266/2005 as a condition of the admissibility of their tenders; those companies were therefore excluded from the tendering procedure.

13. CRGT brought an action contesting its exclusion before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court of Sicily, ‘the TAR’) (Catania Division, Fourth Chamber). Pizzo raised a preliminary objection, arguing that CRGT also ought to have been excluded for providing only one of the two declarations by a bank required in the invitation to tender in order to certify its economic and financial standing.

14. The TAR upheld the action brought by CRGT, holding that the latter’s exclusion from the tendering procedure was unlawful on the grounds that: a) the documents relating to the call for tenders did not provide for payment of the fee referred to in Law No 266/2005; b) that fee applies explicitly to public works contracts but not to service contracts; and c) that fee may be applied to service contracts only by means of a broad interpretation of Law No 266/2005, which, in accordance with the principle that the grounds for exclusion must be exhaustive, may not place at a disadvantage those tenderers who, through no fault of their own, believed that the fee at issue was not applicable in the circumstances.

15. In addition, the lower court dismissed the preliminary objection raised by Pizzo, declaring that CRGT might, as indeed it had, rely upon the economic and financial standing of an auxiliary undertaking with which it had concluded a contract for that purpose.

16. Pizzo lodged an appeal with the Consiglio di Giustizia Amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily); that appeal was contested by CRGT which again put forward other pleas raised at first instance that are not relevant to these proceedings.

17. In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Giustizia Amministrativa per la Regione siciliana decided to seek a preliminary ruling.

III – The questions referred

18. The questions in the reference for a preliminary ruling, which was received at the Court Registry on 22 January 2015, are worded as follows:

‘(1) Must Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts be interpreted as precluding national legislation, like the Italian legislation described above, which allows divided reliance upon the capacities of other entities, on the terms set out above, in respect of services?

(2) Do the principles of EU law, and, in particular, those of protection of legitimate expectations, legal certainty and proportionality, preclude a legal rule of a Member State which permits the exclusion from a public tendering procedure of an undertaking which did not understand, because this was not expressly provided in the tender documents, that it was obliged, on pain of exclusion from that procedure, to fulfil the obligation to pay a sum in order to participate in that procedure, even though the existence of that obligation cannot be clearly deduced from the wording of the law in force in the Member State, but can nevertheless be inferred, by means of a twofold legal operation, which involves, first, interpreting extensively certain provisions of that Member State’s positive law and, then, incorporating — in accordance with the outcome of that broad interpretation — the mandatory provisions in the tendering documents?’

19. As far as the first question is concerned, the referring court takes the view that Directive 2014/24 could have fixed limits to the right to rely upon the capacities of a third party in order to meet the criteria of the invitation to tender.

20. As regards the second question, the Consiglio di Giustizia asks also whether the principles of the protection of legitimate expectations, proportionality, legal certainty and favor participationis should lead to the company concerned being granted a short period in which to remedy the failure to comply with the obligation to pay.

IV – The procedure before the Court of Justice. The submissions of the parties

21. Written observations were lodged by the Italian Government and the Commission.

A – First question

22. The Italian Government maintains that the admissibility of the first question raised by the referring court is arguable, for that court has not set out the factual case on which the question is based and has not, therefore, provided the Court of Justice or the parties with the tools necessary for taking a position on the issue raised.

23. The Italian Government submits that the reference to Directive 2014/24 is out of place, because that directive is not applicable to the case and in view of the fact that the period laid down for its transposition has not yet expired. In any case, the Italian Government maintains that that directive is no less favourable than Directive 2004/18 to reliance upon the capacities of third parties.

24. As to the substance, the Italian Government contends that the issue can be resolved in the light of the principles laid down in the judgment in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, (6) which concerned a situation not, in legal terms, significantly different from that at issue in the present case.

25. The Italian Government maintains, therefore, that the rules of national law in Article 49 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 are not incompatible with Directive 2004/18.

26. The Commission concurs with the Italian Government that the answer to the first question may be inferred from the case-law laid down in Swm Costruzioni. The Court has accepted that an economic operator may, in addition to his own capacities, rely upon the capacities of one or more third parties in order to satisfy the minimum conditions required and not satisfied by him in their entirety.

27. The Commission also concurs with the Italian Government in observing that Directive 2014/24 is not applicable ratione temporis to this case.

28. Accordingly, the Commission asserts that Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude a national provision like that invoked by the referring court.

B – Second question

29. As regards the second question, the Italian Government does not believe that any of the principles set out in the order for reference has been infringed. The Italian Government observes that, in addition to the grounds laid down in the legislative decree itself and in the notice of invitation to tender, Article 46(1a) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 recognises as grounds for exclusion the grounds laid down 'in other legal provisions in force'. It follows, in the Italian Government's submission, that the fact that the lex specialis did not mention, as a ground for exclusion, failure to pay the fee to the AVCP is not a factor justifying non-compliance by the tenderer. The tenderer must be aware of all the rules constituting the whole body of mandatory grounds for exclusion, which precisely fill any gaps in that regard in the invitation to tender.

30. The Italian Government likewise contends that tenderers may not remedy shortcomings in their bids after the period prescribed for the submission of those bids has expired, and that only corrections or amplifications made on a limited and specific basis, within the meaning of the judgment in Manova, (7) are permissible. The contracting authority may allow tenderers to rectify certain omissions regarding the subjective conditions for participation, but not to remedy a failure to pay a fee. Otherwise, the contracting authority would be permitting late fulfilment of a condition of admissibility had not been satisfied at the appropriate time, thereby compromising the principles of equal treatment, impartiality and transparency.

31. For the Italian Government, it is only in the case of merely formal failure to satisfy a condition (use of a different method of payment from that legally required or failure to certify that payment was made at the time and in the manner prescribed) that the tenderer could be given the opportunity of certifying that he had in fact satisfied the condition concerned.

32. Accordingly, the Italian Government proposes, in answer to the second question, that the principles invoked by the referring court do not preclude national legislation that permits the exclusion of a tenderer who has failed to fulfil an obligation which, while not expressly laid down in law for the type of public contract at issue, can be inferred from the settled interpretation of certain legal provisions by the administrative authorities of the State concerned.

33. The Commission, for its part, submits that the second question is specifically concerned with the interpretation of the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency. In the Commission's submission, those principles mean that the contracting authority must state clearly the conditions of the tendering procedure, so that a reasonably informed tenderer exercising ordinary care may be aware of those conditions. The Commission further states that Directive 2004/18 provides that the grounds for exclusion must be set out in the contract notice.

34. The Commission maintains that those requirements are not satisfied when an obligation (in the present case, the payment of a fee to an administrative authority), in respect of which the penalty for non-compliance is exclusion, is not explicitly provided for in the tender documents and cannot be inferred from national statutory law, but can be deduced only from a broad interpretation of that law making it possible to fill the lacuna that would otherwise appear in those documents. The Commission contends that that is a situation particularly prejudicial not only to national economic operators but also to operators established in other Member States, who are thus at risk of finding themselves at a disadvantage.

35. The Commission further submits that the principles of equal treatment and proportionality must be interpreted as not precluding a contracting authority from giving an economic operator the opportunity of fulfilling, within a period fixed by the former, the obligation to pay at issue.

V – Assessment

A – First question

36. Although the Italian Government casts doubt on the admissibility of the question, it does not go so far as to propose that the question should be ruled inadmissible. Certainly, there are no grounds for dismissing at the outset the question referred by the Consiglio di Giustizia Amministrativa per la Regione siciliana concerning the compatibility with Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18 of the national provision which, in the context of a procedure for the award of a public services contract, permits divided reliance by an economic operator upon the capacities of another operator in order to satisfy the criteria for participation in the procurement procedure.

37. However, I agree with the Italian Government and the Commission regarding the application to the instant case of the case-law of the Court in Smw Costruzzioni, because the two cases are, as far as the legal details at issue are concerned, essentially identical.

38. In Smw Costruzzioni, the Court observed that Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 'do not prohibit, in principle, candidates or tenderers from relying on the capacities of more than one third-party entity in order to prove that they meet a minimum capacity level. A fortiori, those provisions do not lay down any general prohibition regarding a candidate or tenderer's reliance on the capacities of one or more third-party entities in addition to its own capacities in order to fulfil the criteria set by a contracting authority'. (8)

39. According to the Court, that possibility is not unconditional, but rather is dependent on 'the candidate or tenderer relying on the capacities of one or more other entities [proving] to [the contracting authority] that it will actually have at its disposal the resources of those entities necessary for the [performance] of the contract'. (9)

40. Admittedly, the Court found that it was true that there could be 'works with special requirements necessitating a certain capacity which cannot be obtained by combining the capacities of more than one operator, which, individually, would be inadequate', (10) circumstances in which it is possible to '[require] that the minimum capacity level concerned be achieved by a single economic operator or, where appropriate, by relying on a limited number of economic operators, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, as long as that requirement is related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue.' (11) However, the Court held that 'those circumstances constitute an exception' (12) and observed that, consequently, 'Directive 2004/18 precludes that requirement being made a general rule under national law, which is the effect of a provision such as Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006'. (13)

41. In the light of the foregoing, the question referred by the Consiglio di Giustizia Amministrativa per la Regione siciliana can be answered in the same terms as the ruling of the Court in Smw Costruzioni. It must also be observed, as the Commission does, (14) that in this case the exceptional circumstances which, in accordance with paragraph 35 of that judgment, make it possible to '[require] that the minimum capacity level concerned be achieved by a single economic operator' are not present in this case, since the capacity at issue is of a purely economic nature.

42. The referring court argues that, beyond what may be inferred from Directive 2004/18, Directive 2014/24 could have imposed stricter limits on the right to rely on the capacities of third parties to fulfil the award criteria. For their part, the Italian Government and the Commission agree that the latter directive is not applicable to the situation at issue. I fully concur with that view.

43. The referring court admits that the period prescribed for transposition of Directive 2014/24 has not yet expired, sufficient reason to set aside the application of that directive in this case, but the referring court invokes 'the obligation for national courts to select and prefer, among all the possible interpretations of the domestic law, only an interpretation in conformity with the EU rules to be transposed'. (15)

44. The Court's case-law obliges Member States to 'refrain from taking any measures liable seriously to compromise the result prescribed' by the directive during the period prescribed for transposition, (16) but does not go so far as to require national courts to interpret their own domestic law in terms that fully comply with a directive for which the period fixed for transposition has not yet ended.

45. Moreover, the assertion of the Consiglio di Giustizia Amministrativa per la Regione siciliana, to the effect that Directive 2014/24 is more restrictive than Directive 2004/18 as regards the right to rely upon the capacities of third parties, is debatable; however, that is a subject of which I do not believe any substantive clarification is necessary, given its irrelevance to the case.

46. Accordingly, it is my view that Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18 do not preclude national legislation that, in the circumstances of the case at issue in the main proceedings, permits divided reliance upon the capacities of other entities in order to fulfil the selection criteria.

47. To my mind, the second question from the referring court is trickier. The different positions adopted by the Italian Government and the Commission bear testimony to the difficulty of the question. Whereas the Italian Government maintains that the excluded operator could not have been unaware of the applicability of the disputed condition (prior payment of the fee to the AVCP), the Commission submits that that condition could be applied only if it were expressly included in the tender documents or could be clearly inferred from the statutory law in force.

48. My view is that, in fact, those two positions are closer than might be imagined. In that connection, the Italian Government has focused on the criterion of the requirement of knowledge of the disputed condition, while the Commission has focused on the criterion of publication of that condition. In short, the two perspectives are complementary, for publication of the condition leads to knowledge of the condition and that is feasible (and may be required) only if the condition has been properly published.

49. The case-law of the Court insists that it is necessary that ‘all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure [should] be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the bids submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question’. (17)

50. The obligation of ‘clear, precise and unequivocal’ publication is imposed, first, by the principle of equal treatment, which ‘requires tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their bids, which therefore implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions’, (18) and, second, by the principle of transparency, the aim of which is ‘to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority’. (19) Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 refers to the principle of equal treatment and the obligation to act transparently as ‘[p]rinciples of awarding contracts’ that must be observed by contracting authorities.

51. There is no doubt, therefore, that tenderers must be in a position to be informed of all the conditions of the tender, a requirement that satisfies the basic principles of equality and transparency. However, greater doubt surrounds the extent to which all the requirements for participation in the tendering procedure must be explicitly stated in the contract notice or specifications, or whether, on the other hand, certain general requirements may be deemed to be well known, even if they are not explicitly set out in those documents.

52. In my opinion, given the aim of the obligation to publish the conditions, which is to ensure that the content and significance of those conditions are understood by ‘all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care’, it would be illogical for all contracting authorities to be obliged also to specify those conditions the fulfilment of which is required by generally applicable legislative provisions of which a reasonably informed tenderer exercising ordinary care cannot be unaware. I am thinking, for example, of the basic conditions which, in the context of civil and commercial law, affect the legal capacity of individuals and companies, conditions of which no economic operator may be ignorant or require the explicit, detailed inclusion in documents relating to a public procurement procedure.

53. It is true that uncertainty may arise in relation to other less ‘obvious’, or, to put it another way, less ‘logical’ or ‘natural’, conditions which, never the less, reasonably informed tenderers exercising minimum care are required to be aware of. To my mind, the levels of care and information that may be reasonably required of a tenderer constitute the decisive criteria for the purposes of a proper understanding of the intended spirit of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 and the way the Court interprets the principles of equality and transparency in that context. (20)

54. The Italian Government argues in its written observations (21) that Article 46(1a) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 defines as exclusion clauses, in addition to those provided for in the legislative decree itself and in the contract notice, those clauses laid down by ‘other legal provisions in force’. Those ‘other legal provisions’ may include provisions relating to tax obligations common to all tenderers, in respect of which tenderers must make payment or risk exclusion from the tendering procedure.

55. Article 27(1) of Directive 2004/18 does not specifically require tender specifications to specify in detail all ‘the obligations relating to taxes, to environmental protection, to the employment protection provisions and to the working conditions which are in force in the Member State’. Tenderers or candidates continue to be bound by those obligations — failure to fulfil which may lead to their exclusion — even if the obligations are not set out in the tender documents.

56. It is for Italian law, as interpreted by the Italian courts, to determine whether payment of the fee to the AVCP may, on account of its characteristics, be classified as an obligation relating to taxes in the broad sense. It is likewise for the Italian courts (confirming or rejecting the interpretation of the public authority to which payment of the fee must be made) to determine the subjective and objective scopes of Articles 65 and 67 of Law No 266/2005, governing the fee failure to pay which led to the exclusion of CRGT from the tendering procedure.

57. The Court ought not to take part in the debate — which it would regard as purely an internal matter — concerning whether the Italian administrative and judicial authorities have given a broader, or less broad, interpretation of the provisions of Law No 266/2005. If, according to what may be deduced from the order for reference, the AVCP has consistently interpreted Law No 266/2005 as meaning that the requirement to pay the fee is applicable to service contracts, and that view has been endorsed by the Consiglio di Stato as the court of last instance in matters of national law, that interpretation must be respected.

58. Those same considerations are applicable to the exclusionary effect of failure to pay the fee. Again — according to the information available in the case-file — both the AVCP and the courts which have supported its view have held that failure to fulfil the obligation to pay that fee, laid down in the mandatory provision but not in the tender specifications, leads unavoidably to exclusion from the tendering procedure.

59. All the indications are that the interpretation of the legality underpinning the application of Articles 65 and 67 of Law No 266/2005 to service contracts is derived from a statement of the law laid down by the competent administrative authority, the AVCP, at least as long ago as 2008. That interpretation appears to have been endorsed by the highest national administrative court in a line of case-law beginning on a date which has not been specified in these proceedings. In any case, it might logically be concluded that the case-law concerned is regularly applied by the AVCP in all procurement procedures for the award of service contracts (in fact, the Italian Government refers to a number of decisions adopted in consecutive years by the AVCP in that regard). Finally, it must be presumed that the excluded economic operator in the main proceedings (CRGT), which previously ran the service covered by the invitation to tender, knew or was in a position to have known about it.

60. Subject to those reservations, the exclusion clause is therefore one which, if not explicitly included in the contract notice or tender specifications, is formulated as a result of the settled, judicially authorised interpretation of a legislative provision. The interpretation adopted by the AVCP and endorsed by the courts favours the inadmissibility of bids submitted without payment of the fee.

61. I accept that, theoretically, the condition concerned could be categorised as one that is difficult to identify, meaning that, in principle, its application is not compatible with the relevant case-law of the Court. However, I believe that it may be regarded differently if we confine ourselves to the criterion of the reasonably informed tenderer exercising minimum care, although, as I shall explain below, the Court may perhaps not be in the best position to observe this.

62. Only the referring court is in a position to determine whether, in the specific circumstances of the case, the tenderer excluded could have been unaware of the interpretation of Law No 266/2005 or the practice followed in the type of tendering procedure concerned, consolidated by settled administrative application and pursuant to which the fee must also be paid to the AVCP in relation to service contracts. For the purposes of the referring court’s determination, it may be helpful to ascertain whether the excluded tenderer has participated in tendering procedures with the same features, in which the clause at issue was considered to be applicable on the basis of the interpretation of Law No 266/2005 adopted by the AVCP.

63. In short, it is for the referring court to determine whether undertakings tendering for public contracts are sufficiently familiar with the statement of the law adopted by the AVCP and the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato to suggest that a reasonably informed tenderer exercising normal care could not have been ignorant of it.

64. That assertion leads to another, which I believe is relevant from the point of view of the principle of equal treatment. That is, if it were to be concluded that, in practice, tenderers in general are aware of the interpretation of the law adopted by the AVCP and, therefore, duly pay the disputed fee, it would constitute discrimination to waive compliance with that obligation in relation to a particular tenderer.

65. Admittedly, as the Commission has pointed out, (22) the application of a clause of the kind at issue in this case may be particularly disadvantageous for tenderers established in other Member States, whose level of knowledge of national law and the valid interpretation thereof may not be comparable to that of national tenderers. However, the criterion of the reasonably informed tenderer exercising ordinary care, which is crucial to the solution I propose, makes it possible to overcome that difficulty, for the level of information and care must in each case be adapted to the features of the tenderer concerned, so that, in the instant case, ignorance that would be inexcusable in CRGT could perhaps be excused in a foreign tenderer.

66. All that remains is the uncertainty whether failure to fulfil the obligation to pay the fee laid down in Law No 266/2005 may be remedied. In that connection, I, like the Commission, take the view that, if the referring court accepts that a reasonably informed tenderer exercising ordinary care was unaware of the existence of that obligation, the contracting authority must grant the tenderer a sufficient period in which to remedy the defect. That is a consequence which follows, a contrario, from the case-law of the Court, according to which a contracting authority is not required to accept ‘any rectification of omissions which, as expressly provided for in the contract documentation, must result in the exclusion of the bid.’ (23) That would be the case of an infringement of an obligation that cannot be inferred from that which is ‘expressly provided for in the contract documentation’.

67. In summary, EU law does not preclude national legislation that permits the exclusion from a public procurement procedure of a tenderer having failed to fulfil an obligation of a tax nature which, even though it is not expressly set out in the contract notice or the tender specifications, is imposed as a result of the settled, judicially sanctioned, administrative interpretation of the applicable national legislation, provided that that obligation is not one of which a reasonably informed tenderer exercising ordinary care could have been unaware, a matter which it is for the national court to determine. If it is established that knowledge of that obligation may not be required, the contracting authority must grant the excluded tenderer a sufficient period in which to remedy its omission.

VI – Conclusion

68. In the light of the considerations set out, I propose that the Court should reply as follows to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation that, in the circumstances of the case at issue in the main proceedings, permits divided reliance upon the capacities of other entities, on the terms set out above, in the sphere of services.

(2) The principles of EU law, in particular the principles of equal treatment and transparency, do not preclude national legislation that permits the exclusion from a public procurement procedure of a tenderer having failed to fulfil an obligation of a tax nature which, even though it is not expressly set out in the contract notice or the tender specifications, is imposed as a result of the settled, judicially sanctioned, administrative interpretation of the applicable national legislation, provided that that obligation is not one of which a reasonably informed tenderer exercising ordinary care could have been unaware, a matter which it is for the national court to determine. If it is established that knowledge of that obligation may not be required, the contracting authority must grant the excluded tenderer a sufficient period in which to remedy its omission.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), read in the light of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers and of the ensuing obligation of transparency.

2 That request was made in the context of a dispute between TNS Dimarso NV (‘Dimarso’) and the Vlaams Gewest (Flemish Region) concerning the lawfulness of the method used to evaluate bids submitted by tenderers in a procedure for the award of a public service contract organised by the Flemish Region.

Legal context

3 Recital 46 of Directive 2004/18 states:

‘Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in conditions of effective competition. As a result, it is appropriate to allow the application of two award criteria only: “the lowest price” and “the most economically advantageous tender”.

To ensure compliance with the principle of equal treatment in the award of contracts, it is appropriate to lay down an obligation — established by case-law — to ensure the necessary transparency to enable all tenderers to be reasonably informed of the criteria and arrangements which will be applied to identify the most economically advantageous tender. It is therefore the responsibility of contracting authorities to indicate the criteria for the award of the contract and the relative weighting given to each of those criteria in sufficient time for tenderers to be aware of them when preparing their tenders. Contracting authorities may derogate from indicating the weighting of the criteria for the award in duly justified cases for which they must be able to give reasons, where the weighting cannot be established in advance, in particular on account of the complexity of the contract. In such cases, they must indicate the descending order of importance of the criteria.

Where the contracting authorities choose to award a contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they shall assess the tenders in order to determine which one offers the best value for money. In order to do this, they shall determine the economic and quality criteria which, taken as a whole, must make it possible to determine the most economically advantageous tender for the contracting authority. The determination of these criteria depends on the object of the contract since they must allow the level of performance offered by each tender to be assessed in the light of the object of the contract, as defined in the technical specifications, and the value for money of each tender to be measured.

4 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

5 Article 53 of that directive, entitled ‘Contract award criteria’, provides:

‘1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions concerning the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of public contracts shall be either:

(a) when the award is made to the tender most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority, various criteria linked to the subject matter of the public contract in question, for example, quality, price, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, cost-effectiveness, after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery date and delivery period or period of completion;

(b) the lowest price only.

2. Without prejudice to the provisions of the third subparagraph, in the case referred to in paragraph 1(a) the contracting authority shall specify in the contract notice or in the contract documents or, in the case of a competitive dialogue, in the descriptive document, the relative weighting which it gives to each of the criteria chosen to determine the most economically advantageous tender.

Those weightings can be expressed by providing for a range with an appropriate maximum spread.

Where, in the opinion of the contracting authority, weighting is not possible for demonstrable reasons, the contracting authority shall indicate in the contract notice or contract documents or, in the case of a competitive dialogue, in the descriptive document, the criteria in descending order of importance.'

Belgian law

6 Article 16 of the Law of 24 December 1993 on public procurement and certain contracts for works, supplies and services, in the version in force at the material time, provides:

'In a restricted or public call for tenders, the contract must be awarded to the tenderer which submitted the lawful tender presenting the best value for money, taking into account the award criteria which have to be set out in the special tender specifications or, if appropriate, in the contract notice. The contract must be awarded to the tenderer who submitted the most advantageous lawful tender, taking account of the award criteria set out in the tender specifications or, if appropriate, in the contract notice. The award criteria must relate to the subject matter of the contract, for example, the quality of the goods or services, price, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, social and ethical considerations, running costs, cost-effectiveness, after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery date and delivery period or period of completion. …'

7 Article 115 of the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996 on public works, supply and service contracts and on public works concessions, in the version in force at the material time, provides:

'The contracting authority shall choose the lawful tender which it deems to present the best value for money, on the basis of various criteria depending on the contract. … Without prejudice to the laws, regulations or administrative provisions on the remuneration of certain services, the contracting authority shall set out in the special tender specifications and, where necessary, in the contract notice, all the award criteria, if possible in descending order of the importance attributed to them, which shall in that case be made clear in the special tender specifications. Otherwise, the award criteria shall be of equal value.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

8 By a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union of 31 January 2012, the Flemish Region launched a tendering procedure for the conclusion of a service contract, entitled 'Woonsurvey 2012: survey naar de woning en de woonconsument in Vlaanderen', for the performance of a large-scale survey of housing and housing consumers in Flanders (Belgium). The estimated value of that contract was EUR 1 400 000, including value added tax (VAT).

9 The call for tenders relating to that procedure referred to the following two award criteria:

'1 Quality of the tender (50/100)

Quality of the preparation, organisation and execution of the work on the ground, and of the encryption and initial data processing. The services proposed must be described in as much detail as possible. It must be clear from the tender that the tenderer is capable of taking on the whole contract (minimum 7 000 samples / maximum 10 000 samples) within the prescribed 12-month delivery deadline.

2 Price (50/100)

Cost of delivering the contract in relation to the basic sample (7 000 samples) and cost per additional batch of 500 addresses supplied (amounts inclusive of VAT).'

10 Four tenderers submitted tenders, which, according to the report on the qualitative selection, met the minimum requirements in regard to technical competence. The method used to evaluate the tenders was set out as follows in the award report of 23 March 2012:

‘The committee then evaluated the tenders.

The four tenders were evaluated and compared with each other on the basis of the criteria set out above. First, the tenders were examined and evaluated on the basis of the “quality” criterion. For this, each tender was unanimously assigned a given score (high — satisfactory — low). Then, the price criterion was applied.

On the basis of those scores, a final ranking was then established.’

11 It is apparent from the award report that, as regards the first criterion, namely the quality of the tenders, Dimarso and two other tenderers were awarded a ‘high’ score, while the fourth tenderer was assessed as ‘low’. With respect to the second criterion, namely price, the award report contains the following indications:

‘Overview:

The following overview replicates prices for, on the one hand, the implementation of the basic contract (7 000 samples) and, on the other, the carrying out of interviews in batches of 500 (price including VAT):

Tender	Criterion 2(a) — Price (including VAT) base sample (N= 7 000)	Criterion 2(b) — Price (including VAT) batch of 500 additional samples
[Dimarso]	[EUR] 987 360.00	[EUR] 69 575.00
Ipsos Belgium NV	[EUR] 913 570.00	[EUR] 55 457.00
New Information & Data NV	[EUR] 842 607.70	[EUR] 53 240.00
Significant GfK NV	[EUR] 975 520.15	[EUR] 57 765.40

12 Pursuant to those two criteria, the final ranking of the tenderers in the award report was as follows:

Ranking	Tender	Criterion 1	Criterion 2(a)	Criterion 2(b)
1	Ipsos Belgium NV	high	[EUR] 913,570.00	[EUR] 55,457.00
2	Significant GfK NV	high	[EUR] 975 520.15	[EUR] 57 765.40
3	[Dimarso]	high	[EUR] 987 360.00	[EUR] 69 575.00
4	New Information & Data NV	low	[EUR] 842 607.70	[EUR] 53 240.00

13 By decision of the Flemish Region of 11 April 2012, the contract was awarded, by the Flemish Minister for Energy, Housing, Urban Policy and the Social Economy, to Ipsos Belgium. Dimarso’s action, brought on 14 June 2012, seeks the annulment of that decision. According to the applicant, the contested decision appears to have assessed the tenders on the basis of the weighting ‘high — satisfactory — low’ not mentioned in the call for tenders with respect to the criterion of the quality of the tenders, and on the basis of the ‘price’ components stated with respect to the price criterion, without conducting a sufficient examination, comparison and final assessment of the tenders taking account of the award criteria as set out in the tender specification, including the weighting of ‘50/100’ for each of the award criteria as specified in the tender specifications.

14 The Raad van State (Council of State, Belgium) notes that both recital 46 and Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 refer only to the ‘criteria’ and the ‘relative weighting’ given to each of them, and that the method of evaluation and weighting rules are not expressly mentioned anywhere. The referring court states that the choice of method of evaluation is not neutral and may, on the contrary, play a decisive role in the outcome of the evaluation of the tenders on the basis of the award criteria. It refers, in that regard, to the example of the price award criterion, under which the contracting authority may opt, for example, either to apply the principle of proportionality, or to award the maximum score to the lowest-priced tender or a zero score to the highest-priced tender and apply a linear interpolation to intermediate tenders, or to look most favourably on the tender with the median price.

15 According to the referring court, in the judgment of 24 January 2008 in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, paragraphs 38, 44 and 45), the Court held that Article 36(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), which provision is essentially similar to Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18, precludes the contracting authority from setting, subsequently to the publication of the tender specifications or the contract notice, the weighting rules and factors and sub-criteria for the award criteria set out in either of those documents, where those weighting rules and factors and sub-criteria were not previously notified to the tenderers. The Court thus held that it is the ex post determination not only of the ‘weighting factors’, but also of the ‘sub-criteria’ which is incompatible with EU law.

16 The Raad van State (Council of State) observes that the question in the present case is whether the Court, by that additional reference to ‘sub-criteria’, was also referring to the manner in which the award criteria were assessed, which would be akin to weighting rules. Consequently, it is not easy to dismiss the argument that the Court, by using the term ‘sub-criteria’, was also referring to the method of evaluation. However, it is not clear that it follows from the judgment of 24 January 2008 in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) that the assessment method itself should also be notified to the tenderers, and still less that that method should always be established in advance. In any event, it is possible to conclude that the question which was raised in the case giving rise to that judgment did not specifically concern the establishment a posteriori of a method of evaluation and that therefore it did not have the same scope as the question that arises in the present case.

17 According to the referring court, the Court did not explicitly address that point in its judgment of 21 July 2011 in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EMSA (C-252/10 P, not published, EU:C:2011:512), in which, referring to the judgment of 24 January 2008 in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40), the Court stressed that the lawfulness of the use of sub-criteria and their corresponding weighting should always be considered in the light of the principle of equal treatment and the consequent obligation of transparency. Accordingly, in the referring court’s opinion, those judgments do not provide an answer, or at least no decisive answer, to the question which arises in the case in the main proceedings, namely whether the method of evaluation of the tenders, namely the actual method which will be used by the contracting authority to assess those tenders, must also be notified in advance to the tenderers.

18 In the light of those considerations, the Raad van State (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Must Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 …, both in isolation and in conjunction with the scope of the principles laid down by European law concerning equality and transparency in the field of public procurement, be interpreted as meaning that, if the contract is awarded to the tenderer who submits the most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting authority, the contracting authority is always required to establish in advance, and indicate in the contract notice or contract documents, the method of assessment or the weighting rules, irrespective of their scope, predictability or commonness, in the light of which the tenders will be assessed in accordance with the award criteria or sub-criteria, or,

if no such general obligation exists, that there are circumstances, such as, inter alia, the scope, unpredictability or uncommonness of these weighting rules, in which this obligation does apply?'

Consideration of the question referred

19 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment and of the consequent obligation of transparency, must be interpreted as meaning that, in the case of a public service contract to be awarded pursuant to the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender in the opinion of the contracting authority, that authority is always required to bring to the attention of potential tenderers, in the contract notice or the tender specifications relating to the contract at issue, the method of evaluation or the weighting rules on the basis of which tenders will be assessed in the light of the award criteria published in those documents or, where no such general obligation exists, if the specific circumstances of the relevant contract may impose such an obligation.

20 In order to answer that question, it should be noted that where the contracting authority decides to award a contract to the most economically advantageous tender, under Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18, it must specify in the contract notice or the tender specification the relative weighting it gives to each of the award criteria chosen in order to determine the most economically advantageous tender. That weighting may be expressed by providing for a range with an appropriate maximum spread. Where, in the opinion of the contracting authority, weighting is not possible for demonstrable reasons, the contracting authority shall indicate in the contract notice or tender specifications or, in the case of a competitive dialogue, in the descriptive document, the criteria in descending order of importance.

21 As stated in recital 46 of Directive 2004/18, the purpose of those requirements is to enable all tenderers to be reasonably informed of the criteria and arrangements which will be applied to identify the most economically advantageous tender. In addition, they reflect the duty of the contracting authorities under Article 2 of the directive to treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and to act in a transparent way.

22 According to settled case-law, the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency entail, in particular, that tenderers must be in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the contracting authority (see, to that effect, judgments of 24 November 2005 in ATI EAC e Viaggi di Maio and Others, C-331/04, EU:C:2005:718, paragraph 22, and 24 May 2016 in MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited).

23 Thus, the Court has held that the subject matter of each contract and the criteria governing its award must be clearly defined from the beginning of the award procedure (judgment of 10 May 2012 in Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraph 56) and that a contracting authority cannot apply, by way of award criteria, sub-criteria which it has not previously brought to the tenderers' attention (judgment of 21 July 2011 in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EMSA, C-252/10 P, not published, EU:C:2011:512, paragraph 31). Similarly, the contracting authority must interpret the award criteria in the same way throughout the procedure (judgment of 18 October 2001 in SIAC Construction, C-19/00, EU:C:2001:553, paragraph 43 and the case-law cited).

24 Those requirements apply, in principle, mutatis mutandis to contracting authorities' obligation to indicate, in the contract notice or the tender specifications, the 'relative weighting' of each of the award criteria. Thus, the Court has held that a contracting authority may not, in principle, apply weighting rules which it has not previously brought to the tenderers' attention (see, to that effect, judgment of 24 January 2008 in Lianakis and Others, C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, paragraphs 38 and 42).

25 In particular, the relative weighting of each of the award criteria must, subject to the third subparagraph of Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18, be clearly defined from the beginning of the award procedure, thus enabling tenderers to establish objectively the actual importance given to an award criterion relative to another during their subsequent evaluation by the contracting authority. Similarly, the relative weighting of each of the award criteria cannot be changed throughout the procedure.

26 Nonetheless, the Court has accepted that it is possible for a contracting authority to determine, after expiry of the time limit for submitting tenders, weighting factors for the sub-criteria which correspond in essence to the criteria previously brought to the tenderers' attention, provided that three conditions are met, namely that that subsequent determination, first, does not alter the criteria for the award of the contract set out in the tender specifications or contract notice; secondly, does not contain elements which, if they had been known at the time the tenders were prepared, could have affected their preparation; and, thirdly, was not adopted on the basis of matters likely to give rise to discrimination against one of the tenderers (see judgment of 21 July 2011 in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EMSA, C-252/10 P, not published, EU:C:2011:512, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

27 However, neither Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 nor any other provision thereof lays down an obligation on the contracting authority to bring to the attention of potential tenderers, by publication in the contract notice or in the tender specifications, the method of evaluation applied by the contracting authority in order to effectively evaluate and assess the tenders in the light of the award criteria of the contract and of their relative weighting established in advance in the documentation relating to the contract in question.

28 Nor is such a general obligation apparent from the case-law of the Court.

29 The Court has held that an evaluation committee must be able to have some leeway in carrying out its task and, thus, it may, without amending the contract award criteria set out in the tender specifications or the contract notice, structure its own work of examining and analysing the submitted tenders (see judgment of 21 July 2011 in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EMSA, C-252/10 P, not published, EU:C:2011:512, paragraph 35).

30 That leeway is also justified by practical considerations. The contracting authority must be able to adapt the method of evaluation that it will apply in order to assess and rank the tenders in accordance with the circumstances of the case.

31 In accordance with the principles governing the award of contracts provided for in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 and in order to avoid any risk of favouritism, the method of evaluation applied by the contracting authority in order to specifically evaluate and rank the tenders cannot, in principle, be determined after the opening of the tenders by the contracting authority. However, in the event that the determination of that method is not possible for demonstrable reasons before the opening of the tenders, as noted by the Belgian Government, the contracting authority cannot be criticised for having established it only after that authority, or its evaluation committee, reviewed the content of the tenders.

32 In any event, pursuant to the principles governing the award of contracts and what has been found in paragraphs 24 and 25 of the present judgment, the determination by the contracting authority of the method of evaluation after the publication of the contract notice or the tender specifications cannot have the effect of altering the award criteria or their relative weighting.

33 In the present case, the question arises whether the award procedure at issue complied with the obligations under Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18, given that, on the one hand, the contracting authority only indicated, in the call for tenders, two award criteria, namely quality and price, with the indication '(50/100)' in respect of each criteria and that, on the other, the evaluation committee used a scale ranging from 'high' to 'low' through 'satisfactory' for the evaluation of the criterion of the quality of the tenders without a scale for the price award criterion.

34 In that regard, it should be noted that the two '(50/100)' indications mean, according to the statements of the referring court, that the two award criteria are of equal importance.

35 It appears that that procedure did not make it possible to reflect, when ranking the tenderers in order to identify the most economically advantageous tender, differences in the quality of their tenders relative to their price, while taking account of the relative weighting of the award criteria resulting from the indication '(50/100)'. In particular, it appears that that procedure was capable of affecting the price criterion by giving it decisive weight relative to the tenders ranked in the scale of quality referred to in paragraph 33 of the present judgment. It is for the referring court to ascertain whether the relative weighting of each of the award criteria published in the contract notice was in fact complied with by the contracting authority during the evaluation of the tenders.

36 While the contracting authority may use a scale for the evaluation of one of the award criteria without it being published in the call for tenders or the tender specifications, that scale may not, however, as was noted in paragraph 32 of the present judgment, have the effect of altering the relative weighting of the award criteria published in those documents.

37 Consequently, in the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling is that Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment and of the consequent obligation of transparency, must be interpreted as meaning that, in the case of a public service contract to be awarded pursuant to the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender in the opinion of the contracting authority, that authority is not required to bring to the attention of potential tenderers, in the contract notice or the tender specifications relating to the contract at issue, the method of evaluation used by the contracting authority in order to specifically evaluate and rank the tenders. However, that method may not have the effect of altering the award criteria and their relative weighting.

Costs

38 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment and of the consequent obligation of transparency, must be interpreted as meaning that, in the case of a public service contract to be awarded pursuant to the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender in the opinion of the contracting authority, that authority is not required to bring to the attention of potential tenderers, in the contract notice or the tender specifications relating to the contract at issue, the method of evaluation used by the contracting authority in order to specifically evaluate and rank the tenders. However, that method may not have the effect of altering the award criteria and their relative weighting.

Case C-6/15

TNS Dimarso NV

Vlaams Gewest

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Raad van State van België (Belgian Council of State))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 53 — Criteria for the award of contracts — Tenderers — Equal treatment — Most economically advantageous tender — Evaluation of tenders)

I – Introduction

1. By the present reference for a preliminary ruling, the Raad van State van België (Belgian Council of State) seeks, in essence, to ascertain whether Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, (3) read in the light of the principles of equal treatment and transparency, requires that a contracting authority should always, or, if not, in certain circumstances, make known in advance, in the contract notice or the contract documents, the method of evaluation or weighting rules used to assess tenderers' bids.

2. That request was made in the context of a dispute between TNS Dimarso NV ('Dimarso') and Vlaams Gewest (Flemish Government Housing Agency, 'the Housing Agency') concerning the lawfulness of the method used to evaluate bids submitted by tenderers in a procedure for the award of a public service contract organised by the Housing Agency.

3. In summary, it is clear from the order for reference that, through a call for tenders published in the Official Journal of the European Union of 31 January 2012, the Housing Agency launched a procedure for the award of a service contract for the performance of a large-scale survey of housing and housing consumers in Flanders. The estimated value of that contract was EUR 1 400 000, including VAT.

4. The contract documents relating to that procedure referred to the following two award criteria:

'1 Quality of the tender (50/100)

Quality of the preparation, organisation and execution of the work on the ground, and of the encryption and initial data processing. The services proposed must be described in as much detail as possible. It must be clear from the tender that the tenderer is capable of taking on the whole contract (minimum 7 000 samples / maximum 10 000 samples) within the prescribed 12-month delivery deadline.

2 Price (50/100)

Cost of delivering the contract in relation to the basic sample (7 000 samples) and cost per additional batch of 500 addresses supplied (amounts inclusive of VAT).'

5. Four tenderers submitted tenders, which, according to the evaluation committee's report on the qualitative selection, met the minimum requirements in regard to technical competence. The method used to evaluate the tenders was set out as follows in the evaluation committee's award report of 23 March 2012:

'The committee then evaluated the tenders.

The four tenders were evaluated and compared with each other on the basis of the criteria set out above. First, the tenders were examined and evaluated on the basis of the "quality" criterion. For this, each tender was unanimously assigned a given score (high — satisfactory — low). Then, the price criterion was applied.

On the basis of those scores, a final ranking was established.'

6. It is clear from the award report that, as regards the first criterion, namely the quality of the tenders, Dimarso and two other tenderers were rated 'high', while the fourth tenderer was assessed as 'low'. As regards the second criterion, namely price, while the fourth tenderer's offer was lowest, Dimarso's was highest.

7. On 11 April 2012, the contract was finally awarded to one of the tenderers which had been rated 'high' and whose price offer was lower than Dimarso's.

8. In support of its action for annulment of the contract award decision, Dimarso submits before the referring court that the evaluation committee appears to have evaluated the tenders on the basis of the 'high — satisfactory — low' scale, not referred to in the contract documents, in relation to the tender quality criterion, whereas, according to Dimarso, it is clear from the contract documents that a score of 0 to 50 points should have been allocated to each tender. As regards the price criterion, the evaluation committee also failed to carry out an adequate examination, comparison and final assessment of the tenders taking into account the award criteria as set out in the contract documents, including the "50/100" weighting given to each of the award criteria in the call for tenders.

9. The referring court notes first of all, in rejecting the first part of the action brought before it by Dimarso, that it is not unreasonable to interpret the '50/100' weighting, given to each of the award criteria in the contract documents, as meaning that it seeks only to indicate that each of the two criteria must be regarded as having the same value and that each of them will therefore determine half of the ranking of the tenders.

10. It notes next that both recital 46 and Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 refer only to the 'criteria' and the 'relative weighting' given to each of them, the method of evaluation and weighting rules not being expressly mentioned anywhere. The national court states that the method of evaluation is not neutral but may, on the contrary, play a decisive role in the outcome of the evaluation of the tenders on the basis of the award criteria. It cites the example of the price award criterion, in connection with which the contracting authority may, inter alia, opt to apply the principle of proportionality, award the maximum score to the lowest-priced tender or a zero score to the highest-priced, applying a linear interpolation to the intermediate tenders, or look most favourably on the tender with the median price.

11. The national court points out, lastly, that neither the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, paragraphs 38, 44 and 45), which was concerned with the interpretation of Article 36(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, (4) the content of which is, in essence, the same as that of Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18, nor the judgment in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EMSA (C-252/10 P, EU:C:2011:512), provide an answer, or at least not a decisive answer, to the question arising in the case in the main proceedings, that is to say whether the method of evaluation, that is to say the specific method to be used by the contracting authority to score the tenders, must be made known to tenderers in advance, like the award criteria and sub-criteria and the 'weighting factors'.

12. In the light of those considerations, the Raad van State van België (Belgian Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Must Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC …, both in isolation and in conjunction with the scope of the principles laid down by European law concerning equality and transparency in the field of public procurement, be interpreted as meaning that, if the contract is awarded to the tenderer who submits the most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting authority, the contracting authority is always required to establish in advance, and indicate in the contract notice or contract documents, the method of assessment or the weighting rules, irrespective of their scope, predictability or commonness, in the light of which the tenders will be assessed in accordance with the award criteria or sub-criteria, or, if no such general obligation exists, that there are circumstances, such as, inter alia, the scope, unpredictability or uncommonness of these weighting rules, in which this obligation does apply?'

13. That question was the subject of written observations submitted by Dimarso, the Belgian and Italian Governments and the European Commission. Those parties also presented oral argument at the hearing on 13 January 2016, with the exception of the Italian Government, which was not represented.

II – Analysis

14. By the question referred to it in the present case, the Court is asked to define the scope of Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18. More specifically, the Court is asked whether, in the light of the principles of equal treatment and transparency, that provision requires the contracting authority, when awarding a service contract to the most economically advantageous tender, to inform tenderers, in the contract notice or the contract documents, of the method of evaluation used to assess tenderers' bids.

15. As a preliminary point, it is important to say that it is common ground that the service contract at issue in the case in the main proceedings falls squarely within the scope of Directive 2004/18 and that, in particular, Article 53 of that directive is fully applicable to that contract.

16. First, under Article 20 of Directive 2004/18, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II A to that directive, which include, in Category 10, contracts relating to 'Market research and public opinion polling services', are awarded in accordance with the provisions of Articles 23 to 55 of that directive. Secondly, the service contract in the case in the main proceedings significantly exceeded the threshold of EUR 200 000, referred to in Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18, applicable at the time when the contract notice was published by the Housing Agency.

17. In accordance with Article 53 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Contract award criteria', public contracts are awarded either to the tender which proposes 'the lowest price', or to the 'tender most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority', that is to say, as the third sentence of recital 46 of that directive states, and as the Court has further noted, the tender which 'offers the best value for money' from the point of view of the contracting authority. (5)

18. Where the latter option is selected, as it was in the case of the service contract at issue in the case in the main proceedings, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 establishes a non-exhaustive list of criteria linked to the subject matter of the public contract in question which the contracting authority is entitled to take into account. (6) Those criteria include quality and price, which, as the contract documents in the case in the main proceedings indicate, are the only two criteria that were taken into account by the Housing Agency when awarding the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

19. In the aforementioned situation of a contract awarded to the most economically advantageous tender, the first subparagraph of Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 provides that the contracting authority is to specify in the contract notice or the contract documents 'the relative weighting which it gives to each of the criteria chosen to determine [that] tender'. The second subparagraph of the same provision states that that weighting can be expressed by providing for a range with an appropriate maximum spread. According to the third subparagraph of that provision, where, in the opinion of the contracting authority, weighting is not possible for demonstrable reasons, the latter is to indicate in the contract notice or contract documents the criteria in descending order of importance.

20. It should be observed here and now that the obligation to indicate not only the award criteria but also, since the adoption of Directive 2004/18, the relative weighting given to each of those criteria, except where there are good reasons why weighting is not possible, at the time of publication of the contract notice or contract documents, as laid down in Article 53(2) of that directive, serves to fulfil the requirement of compliance with the principle of equal treatment and the associated obligation of transparency. (7)

21. As regards the need to disclose the weightings given to the award criteria, it is important to note that Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 marks a notable change from the former legal regime applicable to the award of public service contracts.

22. After all, under the legal regime in place before the entry into force of that act, Article 36(2) of Council Directive 92/50 required the contracting authorities only to indicate, in the contract documents or the contract notice, the award criteria which they intended to apply, 'where possible in descending order of importance'.

23. Now, however, the contracting authorities have an obligation to indicate the weightings of the award criteria in the contract notice or the contract documents. It is only in the event that this proves impossible, for demonstrable reasons, that those entities may opt to prioritise those criteria, which prioritisation must in any event be adequately disclosed in the contract notice or the contract documents.

24. As I shall say when I come back to this point later, that change has some bearing on the resolution of the case in the main proceedings.

25. At this stage, it should be observed that, in the case in the main proceedings, it is common ground that the contract documents referred to '50/100' in connection with each of the two criteria used by the contracting authority. The referring court held that that reference could reasonably be interpreted as meaning that each of the two criteria was to be regarded as having the same value and each therefore determined half of the ranking of the tenders.

26. It is important to note that that assessment is final. It is after all unambiguously clear from the request for a preliminary ruling, and was confirmed by Dimarso at the hearing before the Court, that the referring court rejected the first part of the action brought before it by Dimarso, to the effect, in essence, that the '50/100' reference should have been interpreted as meaning that the 'quality' criterion should have been evaluated by awarding each tender a score from 0 to 50 points. The referring court therefore accepted, in essence, that the weighted value of each of those two contract award criteria, as given in the contract documents, was identical, namely 50%, a fact which reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers were able to interpret in the same way. (8)

27. It is therefore common ground that the award criteria for the public contract in question and the relative weighting given to each of those criteria were communicated to the tenderers in the contract documents and, therefore, in advance of the award of the contract, in accordance, prima facie, with Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18.

28. The referring court wishes to ascertain, however, whether the latter provision, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency, requires the contracting authority, either systematically or, at the very least, in certain circumstances, to inform tenderers in advance of the method to be used to evaluate tenders against the award criteria, in particular, so far as concerns the case in the main proceedings, the method used to assess compliance with the 'quality' criterion published by the Housing Agency, that is to say a ranking scale of three ratings or scores ('low — medium — high').

29. That question must be understood in the context of Dimarso's argument that, in essence, the method of evaluation used ('low — medium — high') was so vague that it prompted the contracting authority to downgrade the assessment of the 'quality' criterion relative to that of the 'price' criterion, since the second criterion alone was actually capable of eliminating three of the four tenders submitted. In reality, therefore, Dimarso contends, the price criterion benefited from a higher relative weighting than the 50% previously announced in the contract documents. In other words, Dimarso submits that, if the method of evaluation had been made known to tenderers in advance, at the stage when the contract documents were published, it would inevitably have had an effect on the preparation of the tenders.

30. I am by no means insensitive to that argument. It is important, however, to think it through in stages.

31. First of all, as I have already pointed out, Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 requires the contracting authority to make known to tenderers, either in the contract notice or the contract documents, the award criteria it intends to use and the relative weightings attached to them.

32. However, there would be no point in scouring the wording of Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 for a general obligation requiring the contracting authority to set out in the contract notice or the contract documents the method to be used to evaluate tenders in the light of the award criteria and their relative weightings, that is to say all of the rules and processes in accordance with which a contracting authority or a pared-down version of one, such as an evaluation committee, will attribute a given score or rating to the various tenders depending on the extent to which those tenders meet one of the criteria (and/or, where appropriate, sub-criteria) for the award of a public contract.

33. Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 does not therefore require that the use of such a method, by an evaluation committee, for analysing tenders in the light of the criteria for the award of a public contract and their relative weightings should, in principle, be communicated to tenderers in advance in the contract notice or the contract documents.

34. The Court's case-law also confirms that principle.

35. First, it should be recalled that the Court has on several occasions recognised as lawful the conduct of a contracting authority which had weighted the subheadings of an award criterion after tenders were submitted but before they were opened, which necessarily implies that the contracting authority is not systematically required to make known in advance the weightings thus given to the award sub-criteria in the contract notice or the contract documents. (9)

36. That assessment may, a fortiori, be extended to the adoption of a method for evaluating tenders in the light of award criteria and their relative weightings.

37. Secondly, in the judgment in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EMSA (C-252/10 P, EU:C:2011:512, paragraph 35), the Court accepted — in the context of applying the rules for the award of public service contracts by the institutions of the European Union, (10) very similar to the context of applying the provisions of Directive 2004/18, and in the course of considering which information need not be communicated in advance by the contracting authority to tenderers — that an evaluation committee must be able to have some leeway in carrying out its task and to structure its own work of examining and analysing the submitted tenders. (11)

38. In all of those cases, the Court nonetheless stated that the leeway enjoyed by the contracting authority is subject to compliance with certain conditions.

39. Those conditions do not, however, appear to be entirely uniform.

40. Thus, in cases where a contracting authority has determined weighting factors for award sub-criteria after tenders have been submitted, the Court has held, as the referring court rightly pointed out, that such ex post determination is lawful provided that it meets three conditions, namely:

– that it does not alter the criteria for the award of the contract set out in the contract documents or the contract notice, – that it does not contain elements which, if they had been known at the time the tenders were prepared, could have affected that preparation, and – that it was not adopted taking into account matters likely to give rise to discrimination against one of the tenderers. (12)

41. If one of those conditions is not met, that case-law supports the inference that determining the weighting of sub-criteria after publication of the contract notice or the contract documents renders the procedure for awarding the contract unlawful. In other words, the contracting authority should have determined the weighting of the sub-criteria relating to the contract award criteria in advance and should have ensured that that weighting had been communicated to tenderers in the contract notice or the contract documents.

42. Furthermore, as regards an evaluation committee's leeway in structuring its own work of analysing and examining the submitted tenders, the Court stated, in paragraph 35 of the judgment in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EMSA (C-252/10 P, EU:C:2011:512), that such leeway must not prompt the contracting authority to 'amend[…] the contract award criteria set out in the contract documents or the contract notice'.

43. By confining itself to referring only to compliance with one (the first) of the three conditions listed in point 40 of this Opinion, the Court appears to wish to confer a broader discretion on the contracting authority in the ex post determination of a method for analysing or evaluating tenders only in cases where the contracting authority decides to determine weighting factors for the sub-criteria corresponding to award criteria that were made known to tenderers in advance.

44. Although the case in the main proceedings called for the strict application of the clarification made in paragraph 35 of the judgment in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EMSA (C-252/10 P, EU:C:2011:512), there is nothing in the information provided at this stage by the referring court that would support the view that the method of evaluation adopted by the evaluation committee to assess the 'quality' criterion could have altered that criterion or, a fortiori, the second award criterion, both of which had been made known to tenderers in advance in the contract notice.

45. I doubt, however, that, by the clarification it gave in paragraph 35 of the judgment in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EMSA (C-252/10 P, EU:C:2011:512), in the form, moreover, of an obiter dictum, the Court meant to confine that restriction to the leeway enjoyed by the contracting authority in determining a method for evaluating the tenders submitted. After all, other than in the event of any particularly serious errors, it is difficult to imagine how such a method of evaluation would be capable of altering the criteria for awarding a public contract themselves or how an unsuccessful tenderer would be able to furnish so much as indicia, let alone actual proof, of such an effect on the award criteria.

46. This is one of the reasons why I am more inclined to share the view of the interested parties which submitted, in particular at the hearing, that it is not inconceivable that a method of evaluation may have an effect not so much on the award criteria themselves as on the weighting of those criteria and, as such, may contain elements which would have been capable of influencing the preparation of tenders if that method had been made known to tenderers in advance, within the meaning of the second condition laid down by the Court's case-law as reproduced in point 40 of this Opinion. In that event, the ex post determination of such a method for evaluating tenders by a contracting authority would be unlawful and should, therefore, have been disclosed in advance in the contract notice or the contract documents.

47. I am therefore largely in agreement with the line of argument, put forward in particular by the Commission, that the lawfulness of a method for evaluating tenders which is determined by a contracting authority ex post depends on whether the three conditions established by the Court's case-law and reproduced in point 40 above are met. It would then fall to the referring court to verify whether those conditions have been met in the case in the main proceedings.

48. To my mind, however, the present case also offers the Court an opportunity to refine that case-law, particularly in relation to the scope of the first condition.

49. After all, as I emphasised earlier, since the entry into force of Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18, both the award criteria and their relative weightings (or, where they cannot be weighted, their prioritisation) must be adequately disclosed in the contract notice or the contract documents.

50. The ex post alteration of either, no matter the means by which it is achieved, must therefore, in my view, be penalised in the same way.

51. Just as there is no reason to accept the proposition that a method for evaluating tenders is capable of altering a posteriori award criteria that were communicated to tenderers in advance, the proposition that such a method is capable of altering the weighting of those criteria is equally intolerable. If this is the consequence of the ex post determination of a method for evaluating tenders, that method should have been communicated to tenderers in advance and the tendering procedure at issue is unlawful.

52. Consequently, I suggest that the first condition listed in point 40 of this Opinion, derived from the Court's case-law relating to the legal regime governing the award of public contracts that was in place prior to the adoption of Directive 2004/18, be worded in such a way as also to include the weighting of the award criteria, so as to take into account the change in that regime following the entry into force of Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18.

53. It will then be for the referring court to examine, in the case in the main proceedings, whether the method for evaluating tenders in the light of the 'quality' criterion, set out in the documents relating to the contested contract, altered ex post the weightings attached to the award criteria for that contract. If it did, that method should have been made known to potential tenderers in advance in the contract notice or the contract documents.

54. I suspect, however, that, in the light of the circumstances and information communicated by the referring court, this may have been the case.

55. Since three of the four tenders, including Dimarso's, were rated 'high' for compliance with the 'quality' criterion, but did not receive scores which would have made it possible to differentiate and rank the tenders according to their inherent qualities, the 'price' criterion was therefore decisive in the award of the contested contract, as all the interested parties agreed at the hearing. In so far as the method chosen by the evaluation committee effectively downgraded the assessment of the 'quality' criterion relative to that of the 'price' criterion, that latter criterion seems therefore to have benefited from a higher relative weighting in the choice of tenderer than the 50% weighting announced in the contract documents might reasonably have suggested. It is therefore plausible that, if the tenderers had been informed in advance that that was the chosen method for evaluating tenders for compliance with the 'quality' criterion, they would have focused more effort on the price of their services.

56. To illustrate my point more specifically, let us imagine that, of the tenders submitted, one was far superior, in terms of quality, to the other three, including those that were rated 'high'. In other words, one of those tenders could have been ranked 'excellent' in the assessment of the 'quality' criterion. The price proposed by that tenderer would then have reflected the excellence of the quality of the services proposed by it and would therefore in all probability have been higher than the prices offered by the other tenderers. However, since 'excellent' did not feature on the range of scores (low — satisfactory — high) chosen by the evaluation committee, that tender of excellent quality could not but be rated 'high', at the very most, in relation to the 'quality' criterion. Since the price proposed by the tenderer of that bid was higher than those proposed by the others, possibly even by some tens or hundreds of euros, that bid had to be rejected.

57. In short, in that situation, which is not necessarily Dimarso's situation but might just as well have been, the contracting authority might have been deprived of the tender representing the best value for money, contrary to the spirit in which the selection of tenderers on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender takes place. (13)

58. Thus, the method of evaluation which the contracting authority chose ex post is, in my view, capable of having altered the weightings attached to the award criteria by lending greater weight to one criterion than to another, whereas the information available to tenderers at the time when they submitted their tenders clearly indicated that those criteria were to be assessed on the basis of the same relative weightings, namely 50% each.

59. Consequently, I consider that, if a method of evaluation adopted after tenders have been submitted is capable of leading to such a result, that method should have been made known to tenderers at the time when the contracting authority published the contract notice or communicated the contract documents.

60. In any event, although the Court held that the first judicial condition referred to in point 40 of this Opinion should not be extended to the weighting of award criteria, the likelihood is, in my opinion, that, if the method for evaluating tenders in the light of the 'quality' criterion, as established by the contracting authority, had been known in advance by the potential tenderers, it would have been capable of affecting the preparation of their tenders within the meaning of the second condition listed in point 40 of this Opinion.

61. After all, as I have already said, if the tenderers had realised, before submitting their tenders, that the second award criterion, namely the 'price' criterion, might be decisive, as all the interested parties conceded at the hearing, in the choice of the economically most advantageous tender, they would certainly have prepared their tenders differently in order to respond more effectively to the guidance thus given by the contracting authority.

62. In general, it is true that such a limit on the leeway enjoyed by the contracting authority in determining a method of evaluation after tenders have been submitted seems to have the ultimate effect of compelling it to identify the method or methods for evaluating award criteria which it intends to choose at a very early stage in all cases, in order to guard against the possibility that those methods will be capable of having an impact on the preparation of the bids of potential tenderers. It will otherwise be bound to conclude that those methods need to be published either in the contract notice or in the contract documents.

63. In short, therefore, that requirement appears to mean that the contracting authority (to which it will fall to ensure that the tendering procedure benefits from maximum legal certainty and to protect itself against actions for the annulment of that procedure) must determine the method or methods to be used to evaluate tenders in the light of the award criteria as early as possible. It would be reasonable to suggest, then, that, if that is the case, there does not appear to be any overriding reason such as to justify a refusal by the contracting authority to make known to potential tenderers the methods of evaluation in question, which it will in any event already have had to determine before the call for tenders.

64. Such an approach appears, in practice, to be a reversal of the theoretical 'exception-to-the-rule' principle that stems from the application of the Court's case-law to the effect that the contracting authority is not, in principle, under any obligation to communicate the method to be used to evaluate tenders in advance to potential tenderers, unless, or provided that, that method contains no elements which, had the method been known in advance, could have affected the preparation of tenders.

65. It seems to me, however, that that risk can largely be mitigated if the contracting authorities opt to disclose not only the award criteria and their relative weightings, as required by Directive 2004/18, but also the sub-criteria relating to those criteria and the relative weightings of those sub-criteria, an approach which the Court's case-law is strongly inclined to favour.

66. In other words, the making available to tenderers in the contract notice or the contract documents of clear, comprehensible and detailed information on all the matters mentioned above diminishes the risk, in my view, that the method for analysing tenders chosen by the evaluation committee may be capable of altering the award criteria or sub-criteria and their weightings, or of causing tenderers to be treated unequally. To my mind, avoiding that risk is part and parcel of the 'active role' which Directive 2004/18, as interpreted by the Court, assigns to the contracting authorities in the application of the essential principles governing the award of public contracts, that is to say observance of the transparency of the procedure and equal treatment as between tenderers. (14)

67. The further point must be made that, in such circumstances, the tenderers will all have had an opportunity to know in advance the relative weightings of all of the matters taken into consideration by the contracting authority. As a rule, this serves to ensure that the specific method of analysing tenders adopted by the contracting authority does not contain any elements which, had they been known at the time when the tenders were prepared, could have affected their preparation.

68. However, where, as in the case in the main proceedings, the award criteria are weighted equally in the contract documents, any sub-criteria listed in those documents are not weighted and the method of evaluation adopted, after tenders were submitted, for the purposes of assessing whether either of the two award criteria has been met is highly generic and does not allow a sufficiently precise distinction to be drawn between the quality of one tender submitted and another, there is a significantly greater risk that the method of evaluation would have been capable of affecting the preparation of the tenderers' bids if it had been made known to them in the contract notice or the contract documents.

69. It is true that the second condition referred to in point 40 of the present Opinion seems to be particularly flexible and easily met, since there would always appear to be scope for arguing that each element taken into account by the contracting authority would have been capable of having an effect or impact on the preparation of tenders if it had been communicated to tenderers in advance.

70. It was perhaps its awareness of that flexibility which prompted the Court, in the judgment in Commission v Ireland (C-226/09, EU:C:2010:697, paragraph 48), to make the existence of such an effect on the preparation of tenders subject to its being 'significant', a condition which enabled it to dismiss in part the action for annulment brought by the Commission.

71. Although paragraph 48 of the judgment in Commission v Ireland (C-226/09, EU:C:2010:697) claims to be of a piece with the Court's earlier case-law, inasmuch as it refers explicitly to paragraph 32 of the judgment in ATI EAC e Viaggi di Maio and Others (C-331/04, EU:C:2005:718), that judgment, like the other later judgments already cited, does not specify that the effect on the preparation of tenders should have been 'significant'. That said, the criterion introduced by the Court in paragraph 48 of the judgment in Commission v Ireland (C-226/09, EU:C:2010:697) may nonetheless stem, in my view, from the fact that the public service contract in question was not fully governed by the provisions of Directive 2004/18, in particular Article 53(2).

72. If that is indeed the sense to be ascribed to paragraph 48 of the judgment in Commission v Ireland (C-226/09, EU:C:2010:697), there is, as I see it, no particular reason, in the present case, to adopt the criterion of the 'significance' of the effect on the preparation of tenders contained in that paragraph of the aforementioned judgment, or, therefore, to alter the scope of the second condition laid down in the Court's case-law, referred to in point 40 of this Opinion.

73. In any event, it is my view that the flexibility of that second condition may be greatly mitigated by the obligation incumbent on the unsuccessful tenderer, which bears the burden of proof, to demonstrate, by reference to specific examples in its legal action, the differences (substantive as well as purely formal) which its tender would have exhibited if the elements of the method of evaluation in question or the method itself, which the contracting authority neglected to communicate, had been adequately disclosed before the tenders were prepared.

74. Before concluding, I would add that all of the foregoing considerations are based on the assumption, which follows implicitly from the order for reference, that the method of evaluating tenders in relation to the 'quality' criterion which was used by the evaluation committee in the case in the main proceedings was determined after the time limit for the submission of tenders expired but before those tenders were opened.

75. In the aforementioned case-law concerning the determination of the weighting of sub-criteria relating to the award criteria, the Court held, in essence, that determining the weighting of such sub-criteria after the opening of tenders or expressions of interest, as the case may be, was contrary in particular to the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency. (15) Furthermore, the Court censured the alteration which an evaluation committee had made to the weighted values of the award criteria after an initial review of the tenders in a case where Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 did not apply to the public service contract in question, and did so, moreover, without requiring that the discriminatory effect of that practice on one of the tenderers should be demonstrated, pointing out further in this regard that it is sufficient that it cannot be ruled out that, at the time the alteration was made, it might have had such an effect. (16)

76. After all, if the contracting authority took note of the identity of the tenderers and of the content of the tenders when altering the weightings of the award criteria and/or sub-criteria, it runs a genuine risk of giving the impression that that alteration seeks to favour one of the tenderers and therefore to breach the equal treatment afforded to them.

77. In such a situation, any alteration made in this way is quite simply unlawful, not least on the ground of being presumed to constitute favouritism. It seems clear that the weighting which was actually applied and which rendered the tendering procedure unlawful should have been made known to the tenderers in the contract documentation. Such a finding, however, is not essential to the resolution of the dispute.

78. In its observations, the Belgian Government mentioned that there are some situations, although it did not say which, where the method of evaluating tenders may be determined only after the tenders have been opened. Consequently, that government submits in essence that the Court's case-law censuring the ex post determination of the weighting of award criteria and determination of the weightings applied to the sub-criteria relating to those award criteria after the tenders have been opened should not be extended to the situation in which an evaluation committee adopts a method of evaluating tenders after these have been opened.

79. The question referred by the national court does not relate stricto sensu to that situation.

80. However, the information provided by the referring court does not entirely rule out the possibility that the method of evaluation at issue in the case in the main proceedings was established after the tenders were opened.

81. That possibility raises the further question, in my view, of whether the referring court still needs to verify that the three conditions laid down by case-law and listed in point 40 of the present Opinion are satisfied in order to be able to conclude that the contracting authority should have made that method of evaluation known to the tenderers or whether it could simply find that such a practice can to some extent be presumed to constitute favouritism towards one or more tenderers and, as such, render the tendering procedure unlawful.

82. Without taking a general view on the situations alluded to but not specified by the Belgian Government, I doubt that, in the case in the main proceedings, the method for evaluating the 'quality' criterion, given its very basic and highly generic — not to say imprecise — nature, could be determined only after the tenders submitted had been opened.

83. I can see no reason, not least of a technical or financial order, why a contracting authority should not be able either to make known to tenderers a method which simply states that the 'quality' of the tenders will be assessed on the basis of a ranking scale of 'low — satisfactory — high', or to establish that method, at the latest, before the tenders are opened, provided that it complies with the conditions which I have already examined, that is to say, in particular, without altering the contract award criteria or their weightings.

84. I therefore take the view that, if the method of evaluation at issue in the case in the main proceedings was adopted after the tenders were opened, which it would fall to the national court to verify, it would have to be presumed that that method was determined in the light of matters capable of having a discriminatory effect on one or more of the unsuccessful tenderers, which presumption, if appropriate, would have to be rebutted by the contracting authority.

III – Conclusion

85. In the light of all of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court's answer to the question referred by the Raad van State van België (Belgian Council of State) should be as follows:

Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency, must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority is not required to make known to potential tenderers, in the contract notice or the contract documents, the method to be used to evaluate tenders with a view to assessing whether the award criteria published in advance in the contract notice or the contract documents have been met, provided that such a method, adopted after the time limit for the submission of tenders has expired but before those tenders are opened, (a) does not alter the contract award criteria and the relative weightings of those criteria as set out in the contract notice or the contract documents, (b) contains no elements which, had they been known at the time when the tenders were prepared, could have affected their preparation, and (c) was not adopted in the light of matters capable of having a discriminatory effect on one of the tenderers. It is for the national court to verify whether those conditions are met in the case in the main proceedings.

III. Facts

3.1. The defending party prescribes a government contract services with the subject “Housing Survey 2012: survey of the home and the residential consumer in Flanders”. The purpose of the assignment is to carry out a large-scale survey of housing and residential consumers in Flanders.

The general award method is chosen request for quotation.

3.2. The assignment will be announced in the Bulletin der Tenders and also in the Official Journal of the European Union.

3.3. The applicable specification AWB/VS/501-5-112 specifies the following award criteria:

> “1. Quality of the offer (50/100)
> The quality of the preparation, organisation and execution of the fieldwork, the coding and the first data processing. The expected performances must be described in as much detail as possible. The offer must clearly show that the contractor is able to execute the entire assignment (minimum 7,000 sample units/maximum 10,000 sample units) within the foreseen execution period of 12 months.
> 2. Price (50/100)
> The cost price for carrying out the basic sample assignment (7,000 sample units) and the cost price per tranche of 500 additional addresses made available (amounts including VAT)”.

3.4. Four bids are submitted, specifically by the requesting party, Ipsos Belgium NV, New Information & Data NV and nv Significant GfK.

3.5. In the report on the qualitative selection of 22 March 2012 it is determined that all necessary documents were delivered and that is met the minimum requirements regarding technical competence.

It is decided that the four offers can thus be substantively examined in a subsequent phase. are being assessed.

3.6. In the award report – according to the inventory of the administrative strative file – dated 23 March 2012, the method of assessment by the assessment committee explained as follows:

> "The committee then proceeded to assess the tenders.
> The 4 offers were evaluated and compared with each other on the basis of the above-mentioned criteria. Initially, the offers were discussed and assessed on the basis of the criterion 'quality'. Each offer was unanimously given a specific score (high - sufficient - low). The price criterion followed in the second instance.
>
> Based on these scores a final ranking was drawn up.
>
> The substantive assessment of the tenders in the award report is as follows:
> 'Criterion
> 1: quality of the tender (50/100)
> The offer from TNS Dimarso fully complies with the provisions of the specifications. The preparation phase is well-developed. It is clearly explained how the programming will proceed. The interaction with the client is strongly emphasized. The organization and follow-up of the fieldwork is well-structured (including the availability of a secure web environment). Extensive quality control is provided (including 100% non-response). The offer discusses the aspect of reporting in detail. The offer scores HIGH on the quality criterion.
>
> The offer from Ipsos Belgium also fully complies with the specifications. The various aspects in the context of the preparation and organisation phase are well elaborated. The follow-up of the fieldwork is carried out in a structured and clear manner (the offer also refers to a complaints handling procedure). The offer also complies with the specifications regarding implementation. It is indicated in detail how the quality control of the fieldwork will proceed (including a large number of on-site checks). The offer is quoted HIGH.
>
> The offer from New Information & Data contains several points of attention and is therefore considered inadequate. The proposed performances meet the specifications but are not described in detail. This remark applies to various aspects of both the preparation phase and the organisation and implementation phase.
> The programming aspect is not sufficiently explained. There is no provision for a helpdesk function. Question marks are also placed on the feasibility of involving energy experts. The quotation is therefore quoted LOW.

The offer from Significant GFK fully complies with the provisions of the specifications. The preparation phase (cf. pilot phase) is well developed. The programming is clearly explained. The organisational and follow-up aspects are also clearly described. The offer focuses strongly on cooperation with the client. The offer is given a HIGH score for this criterion.

3. Conclusion

In view of the findings of the assessment committee and the above final ranking, the Housing Policy Department — as the commissioning authority — proposes to carry out the assignment 'Housing Survey 2012:

survey of housing and residential consumers in Flanders' (specification no. AWB/VS/501-5-112) to be awarded to Ipsos Belgium nv'"

3.7. On April 11, 2012, the Flemish Minister of Energy decided, Housing, Cities and Social Economy to award the contract to Ipsos NV Belgium. It is expressly pointed out that the award report forms an integral part of the decision and that the reasoning and decision thereof are fully endorsed.

This is the contested decision.

3.8. By registered letter – according to the inventory of the administrative file – dated 13 April 2012, the defending party informs the requesting party that its offer was not selected. Attached is a copy of the award decision and the award report attached.

3.9. By registered letter dated April 28, 2012 TNS Dimarso NV demands suspension in case of extreme urgency of the execution of the contested decision.

By judgment No 219.515 of 29 May 2012, the Council of State this claim.

3.10 In its judgment no. 229.723 of 6 January 2015, the Council of State on the admissibility of the appeal and finds the first part of the sole remedy is unfounded. The objection raised by the defendant exception of lack of interest in the second ground of appeal is raised by the Council of State rejected in the aforementioned judgment.

In the context of the assessment of the merits of the the second part of the sole remedy the Council of State submits to the Court of Justice of the European Union the following preliminary question:

Machine Translated by Google

“1/ Should Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 ‘on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts’, taken in isolation and in conjunction with the scope of the principles of European law on equality and transparency in public procurement, be interpreted as meaning that, if the contract is awarded to the tenderer who, from the point of view of the contracting authority, has the most economically advantageous tender, the contracting authority is always obliged to determine in advance and include in the notice or the specifications the assessment methodology or balancing rules, regardless of their foreseeability, common practice or scope, on the basis of which the tenders will be assessed in accordance with the award criteria or sub-award criteria, 2/ or, if there is no such general obligation, that there are circumstances, such as, inter alia, the scope, lack of foreseeability or lack of common practice of these balancing rules in which this obligation does apply?”

3.11. The Court answered this preliminary question in its judgment C-6/15 of 14 July 2016:

“Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, read in the light of the principle of equality and the obligation of transparency arising from it, must be interpreted as meaning that, where a service contract is to be awarded on the basis of the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of that authority, the contracting authority is not required to inform potential tenderers, in the notice of the contract in question or in the corresponding specifications, of the method by which it will assess and rank the tenders in concrete terms. However, that method may not have the effect of altering the award criteria and their relative weighting.”

IV. Examination of the merits of the second part of the sole plea

A. Second part

4. For the explanation of the positions of the parties of before the judgment of the Court of Justice on the second part of the single means, reference is made to judgment no. 229.723 of 6 January 2015.

This second ground of appeal was already dealt with in the aforementioned judgment found admissible, so it suffices to refer to it.

Also with regard to the assessment of the merits of the second part of the sole remedy refers to what has already been said on this matter noted in the judgment of the Council of State no. 229.723 of 6 January 2015.

Position of the parties following the judgment of the Court of Justice C-6/15 of 14 July 2016

5. In its supplementary memorandum, the applicant first states her interpretation of the judgment of the Court of Justice and the conclusion of the Advocate General again.

According to her, it is irrefutably established that the method used the assessment method “low-sufficient-high” was not known to the applicants during the preparation of their tenders and therefore before the opening of the term for submitting the tenders.

Having regard to the judgment of the Court of Justice and the preceding conclusion of the Advocate General, according to the applicant, there are two crucial elements that still need to be investigated, namely, on the one hand, the exact time at which the assessment method for the award criterion “quality” was determined precisely and completely and, on the other hand, the impact of this assessment method based on the relative weight of the award criteria.

As regards the first element, she emphasises that the possibility- the right of the contracting authority to grant a contract not included in the tender documents announced assessment method to be determined afterwards, but is open until the opening of the tenders. The burden of proof thereof lies with the contracting authority. She points out that the Advocate General in his conclusion of 10 March 2016 correctly noted that, given the data of the file and given the very elementary and extremely general and even the vague nature of the scale used, it is highly doubtful that this assessment method is clear, unambiguous and not for in a contestable manner before the opening of the tenders.

The Belgian government's argument before the Court of Justice that there are situations in which the method for assessing the quotations can only be determined after the quotations have been opened, without, however, to specify which “situations” this would concern, is convincing according to the the requesting party does not. Such a claim does not alter the fact that there is a irrevocable impression of favoritism is created when a assessment method is only determined after the tender has been opened.

The contracting authority must therefore provide proof of the exact time at which the assessment method with scale “low - sufficient - high” was finalized and finally established, which was based on the the administrative file is not available. Consequently, it must be based on an irrevocable suspicion of favoritism.

To the extent that the Council were to consider that the contracting authority sufficiently demonstrates that the contested assessment method was established before the opening of the tenders, then according to the requesting party to be determined that the threefold condition has not been met, namely that this subsequent determination (1°) does not change the specifications or criteria laid down in the contract notice for the award of the contract (2°) does not contain any elements which, if they were preparation of the quotations had been known, this preparation had can influence, and (3°) has not been carried out on the basis of elements that may have a discriminatory effect against one of the applicants.

With regard to the first condition, she says account must be taken of the conclusion of the Advocate General in which it is explicitly stated that there are indications that there is indeed a change in the weighting has taken place. She refers to the recitals 53 to 58 of the Opinion.

According to the requesting party, it is not possible to avoid the determination that three out of four offers are in line with the “quality” criterion received exactly the same rating, namely the scale “high”. It follows from this, as the Advocate General quite rightly stated indicates that the price has become a decisive factor in the ranking of the applicants, which is also evident from the table in the award report.

She points out that all interested parties who appeared at the hearing of the Court of Justice, acknowledged that the second award criterion of the price when choosing the economic most advantageous tender could be decisive.

The Court of Justice – recital no. 35 – also agrees with the the applicant shares the same view, as it expressly finds that “this method [...] could have an impact on the price criterion in particular by to give this decisive weight in relation to the ranking of the tenders according to the [...] quality scale mentioned”.

As regards the second condition, the applicant notes that the Advocate General has rightly noted that it is likely that if the potential bidders had been informed in advance of the assessment method chosen by the contracting authority for the criterion "quality", which could have influenced the preparation of their tenders the sentence of the second of the in the case-law of the Court of Justice developed conditions.

The applicant emphasises that if it had known that the price criterion would ultimately have been decisive, she submitted her offer would have prepared a different way and would have made a different offer submitted.

She concludes that the requirements set out in the case law have not been met the conditions developed by the Court of Justice and that the contracting authority government-used assessment method with a scale of "low – sufficient – high" should then have been made known to the applicants at the latest before the opening of the tenders.

6. According to the defendant, the Court of Justice states in its judgment clearly states that a contracting authority is not obliged to assessment methodology on the basis of which the quotations will be assessed in concrete terms are assessed and ranked, to be indicated in the announcement of the assignment or in the specifications.

Nor does the defendant argue that there is an obligation to establish the assessment methodology before the opening of the tenders. The According to her, the Court of Justice clarified in the judgment of 14 July 2016 that the contracting authority must have the necessary freedom to determine its own activities for the investigation and assessment of the submitted tenders to structure so that the assessment method can also be used after the tenders have been opened may be determined. The determination of the assessment method after the

However, according to her, the opening of the tenders should not lead to the award criteria or their relative weight, as included in the specifications, are changed.

The defending party notes in advance that the the applicant party in its supplementary memorandum mainly relies on the advice of Advocate General Mengozzi to dismiss her second ground of appeal substantiate and ignore the fact that there is no basis for that advice binding force. Only the answer given in the judgment of the Court of Justice may bind the Council in the further assessment of the request for annulment of the applicant.

The applicant's position that the assessment method prior to the opening of tenders must be established, according to the defending party contrary to the wording of the judgment of 14 July 2016. According to the defendant, the judgment expressly states that a contracting authority the government has no obligation to include the assessment methodology in the announcement of the order or to be included in the specifications. The Court clarifies according to furthermore, that Article 2 of the European Directive 2004/18, which establishes the principle of equality and non-discrimination, does not oppose a assessment method may be determined after the tenders have been opened.

The defendant points out that in this case it was not before the opening of the tenders could have known that the assessment method had to be specified in a rating on the scale “low-sufficient-high” to correct and representative assessment and comparison of the quotations let. The method in which each quotation is given a distinct numerical score on points, it turned out that after the tenders were opened, the tender was too refined assessment method, given the great similarities between the offers with regard to the quality of the services offered. From the According to her, the award report shows that three of the four tenders were receive a “high” rating for the “quality” award criterion. She notes that she therefore chose to follow the ARGUS method to use an ordinal scale “low-sufficient-high”.

The defendant further argues that this ARGUS method was introduced to her in the period 2001-2002 and was frequently used used in the assessment of tenders for service contracts. The ARGUS software fell into disuse after a few years, but the logic of ordinal scales to be used. This was also the case for the award of the government contract “Housing Survey 2005”, this is the predecessor of the government mandate which is the subject of the current procedure before the Council. This “Housing Survey 2005” was awarded to the requesting party at the time. In this
The ordinal scale “low-sufficient-” was also used in the assignment high”, without this assessment method being announced in the specifications. In According to her, it is remarkable that the requesting party uses this method now disputed.

The defendant acknowledges that the judgment of the Court of Justice of 14 July 2016 hereby sets the restriction that the determination of the assessment methodology after the announcement of the announcement of the the order or the specifications may not result in the award criteria or the relative weight thereof are changed. Such a change takes place in this case according to the defendant, however, this did not take place. The award criteria are not adjusted and remain unchanged “quality” – first award criterion – and “price” – second award criterion. Nor is the relative weight of the award criteria have been adjusted according to her. After all, it is clear that the award criteria “price” and “quality” are equivalent and they have an equal have a relative value, namely half each. She points out that the Council has as already stated in the interlocutory judgment of 6 January 2015. The Court of Justice also confirms this relative value according to the defendant.

According to the defendant, the second ground of appeal must therefore be rejected as unfounded.

7. In the last memorandum after the supplementary report of the investigation of the case by the auditor charged with the matter, in which the auditor reaches the conclusion that the second part of the sole ground of appeal is well-founded, The defendant further makes the following observations. First, it argues if the assessment method is not available for demonstrable reasons before the opening of the offers could be determined. Secondly, that the application of the assessment method “low-moderate-high” has not led to a change in the relative weight of the award criteria “price” and “quality”.

Beforehand she reiterates that only the answer given in the judgment of the Court of Justice No 6/15 of 14 July 2016 is binding and that of the Opinion of an Advocate General at the Court of Justice has no binding force goes out. The defending party therefore states that it only takes into account the arrest.

7.1. According to the defendant, the first conclusion of the auditor's report, namely that the method of ordinal scales by the the defendant was only established after the opening of the tenders without there are demonstrable reasons why this determination could not have been made before the opening, which is contrary to the principle of transparency, for the following reasons.

From the combination of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 and recitals 27 to 31 of the judgment of the Court of Justice of 18 November 2010, Commission v Ireland, Case C-226/09, may, according to the the defendant cannot be inferred that the statement in the judgment that “each risk of favoritism” associated with the adoption of an assessment method after the opening of the tenders, implies that “the discriminatory effect thereof on the subscribers” must not be demonstrated. If not, there will be after all, a presumption that any determination of an assessment method after the opening of the submitted tenders was discriminatory and therefore unacceptable intervention is. Such an interpretation detracts from the clear consideration of the aforementioned judgment, which considers that the assessment methodology not be stated in advance in the announcement of the order or the specifications announced.

It is furthermore not clear to the defendant how Recital 63 of the aforementioned judgment of 18 November 2010 C-226/09 shows that that the establishment of an assessment method after the opening of the tenders in any case entails a discriminatory effect. The aforementioned consideration deals only with the discriminatory effect caused by the relative weight as specified in the contract notice or in the order documents, is changed. In this case, there is no such change talk.

Nor can the judgment of 14 July 2016, according to the defending party it can be inferred that there must be “unforeseeable” reasons are specified so that it can be accepted that the contracting authority may establish an assessment method after the opening of the tenders. The the defendant had to choose between the tenders submitted before opening them an almost unlimited range of assessment methods – a numerical rating expressed in points or percentages, the use of an ordinal scale where the scales used can vary from “low-moderate-high” to a more detailed scale “very low - medium low - moderate - high - very high - excellent, etc.” Given this differentiation, it was therefore for her impossible to assess the tenders submitted before opening them method to determine precisely and decide to use the scale “low-moderate-high”. From the judgment of the Court of Justice of 14 July 2016, it may be the defending party believes that it can only be inferred that the determination of a assessment method after the opening of the tenders may not lead to the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency. According to her, there is no question of favoritism in this case . She reiterates that the decision to use the ordinal scale “low-moderate-high” to be used, results from the equality of the offers in terms of the award criterion “quality”; this method is the same for the four bidders application and to the benefit of each of them as their offers are qualitative were equivalent. Using a numerical assessment method, would, according to her, have led to her artificially searching must go into the submitted offers for differences (plus points or minus points) to justify a minuscule difference in points. In this In the event it could very well have been the case that all the registrants had received the same score, so the criticism would have been just as great that only the price criterion is decisive.

7.2. Furthermore, the defendant disputes the second conclusion of the auditor's report, namely that there would be some change in the relative weight of the award criteria because, through the method of the to apply ordinal scales to the award criterion "quality", the price criterion became decisive. A mere hypothetical possibility that the relative weight could be changed, is sufficient according to the the defending party does not. It believes that if the award criterion is also "quality" would have been assigned a point score instead of an ordinal classification, the general comparison and ranking of the offers de facto would not have looked any different. Even then it would have been apparent that the quotes from the requesting party, of the nv Ipsos Belgium and the nv Significant GfK would have achieved the same score for the award criterion "quality" and that New Information & Data has the same award criterion "quality" would have achieved a lower score.

Judgement

8. In the judgment of 14 July 2016, TNS Dimarso nv against the Flemish Region, case C-6/15, clarifies the Court of Justice in Recital 27 that "neither Article 53(2) of Directive 2004/18 nor any other provision thereof […] imposes an obligation on the contracting authority to the method by which he will assess the quotations in concrete terms and rank based on the criteria for awarding the contract and the relative weight thereof, which are predetermined in the relevant tender documents, by means of a notice in the announcement of the to bring the order or specifications to the attention of potential tenderers". "A such a general obligation" follows according to the Court of Justice – recital 28 – "nor from the case-law of the Court".

However, in paragraph 31 the Court points out that "[a]ccording to the principles laid down in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 concerning the award of assignments […] the method used by the contracting authority to prepare the tenders to be assessed and ranked in concrete terms in principle not after the opening of the quotes by this service [could] be determined, this to avoid any risk of to exclude favoritism. However, if this method is not suitable for demonstrable reasons cannot be determined before this opening, […] the contracting authority may not be accused of having established this only after he, or his assessment committee, has taken note of the content of the tenders".

"In any event", according to the Court – paragraph 32 – "it may fact that the contracting authority uses the assessment method after the announcement of the notice of the contract or the specifications, taking into account the principles relating to the award of contracts and to the provisions set out in points 24 and 25 of the […] judgment has been established, does not have the effect of affecting the award criteria or their relative weight are changed".

9. In the light of the aforementioned considerations of the judgment of
In the present case, the Court of Justice must, in the context of the second ground of appeal, component must therefore still be examined whether the assessment method used "high-sufficient-low" before the opening of the quotations were determined and if this were not the case, or the whether or not the defending party makes it plausible that this method demonstrable reasons could not be established before this opening.

Machine Translated by Google

Contrary to what the defendant argues in its supplementary memorandum and in its final memorandum, it is apparent from recital 31 of the judgment of the Court of Justice has made it clear that the Court considers that the assessment method in principle not after the opening of the tenders by the contracting authority may be determined, in order to avoid any risk of favouritism to exclude. Recital 27 of the aforementioned judgment, which states that that the assessment methodology was not included in the announcement of the order or the specifications must be made known, does not affect this in any way detriment. In its final memorandum, the defending party loses the distinction from the eye between, on the one hand, the publication of the assessment method and, on the other hand, its determination. The Court of Justice provides for the determination which must in principle be made before the opening of tenders, also in recital 31 of the judgment, only in one exception, more determined when the method is not used before this opening for “demonstrable reasons” can be determined.

In paragraph 29 of the judgment, the Court of Justice refers although according to its case law an assessment committee must be able to have a certain freedom to perform its task and thus, without to make a change to the criteria for the award of the contract that are established in the specifications or the notice of the order, its own activities for the investigation and assessment of the submitted tenders may structure. The defending party states in its supplementary memorandum and in her last memorandum appears that the aforementioned authority for the assessment committee would simply mean that it would assess the method may in principle also be determined after the opening of the tenders, unless “its discriminatory effect on the tenderers” would be demonstrated. However, this argument goes against the clear wording already quoted above things of recital 31 that “[a]ccording to Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 principles laid down for the award of contracts […] the method by which the contracting authority uses to assess and approve the tenders in concrete terms in principle do not rank after the opening of the tenders by this service [can] be determined, in order to exclude any risk of favoritism”.

Consequently, the only conclusion that can be drawn from those words is that,
“in order to exclude any risk of favoritism”, it is in principle prohibited to to determine the assessment method after the opening of the tenders, without it must be demonstrated that this determination was made after the opening of the tenders has had a discriminatory effect on one of the applicants. However, it does accept the Court the possibility that there may be “demonstrable reasons” why the method could not be determined before opening.

10. In this regard, the administrative file does not show anywhere that the assessment method for the award criterion quality based on a
The “high-sufficient-low” scale was established before the opening of tenders.
Even after an explicit request to do so from the auditor-reporter by letter of September 19, 2016, no request is made by the defendant to this effect supporting documents submitted. She submits only a general additional document explanation of the ARGUS method, dating from October 2000. It appears However, this document does not assume that the contracting authority is in the current case, let alone that this document seems to contain a decision on the matter to be use assessment method in the context of the current assignment.

In her supplementary memorandum and in her final memorandum, the defendant itself also expressly points out that it is for her it was impossible to obtain the tender before the tenders were opened to determine the assessment method precisely and to decide on the scale “Low-sufficient-high” to be used. She indicates that she only decided to do so after it became apparent that there were “great similarities between the quotes with regarding the quality of the services offered”. Thus, the the defendant itself stated that it only opted for this assessment method after the opening of the tenders.

Machine Translated by Google

However, the defending party does not make it plausible that this method “for demonstrable reasons”, as required by the Court, not before this opening could be determined.

The argument put forward by the defending party in its additional memorandum explaining why such a general assessment method is appropriate after the opening of the tenders could be determined, namely "to ensure a correct and to allow a representative assessment and comparison of the offers”, does not convince as a “demonstrable reason”. The finding that there is a great deal of similarities between the quotes with regard to quality had previously should give reason to choose a more “refined” method in order to prevent qualitative differences between the offers leveled out and the price criterion de facto becomes decisive, regardless of the any quality difference between the quotes.

The argument in the last memorandum that a numerical assessment would not have made a difference, cannot be supported either. The application of a “more refined” method, which obviously entails that the defending party should award the points more precisely – in more detail – should have been accounted for on the basis of – possibly limited – “differences (plus points or minus points)” do not in any way amount to a “artificial” operation. The mere assertion that “it very well [could] be the case could have been that all applicants would have received the same score,” without prejudice to the finding that the application of the used The “high-sufficient-low” assessment method allows less selection of offers to rank their substantive properties than the application of “a numerical assessment expressed in points or percentages” or the use of “a more detailed scale “very low - medium low - moderate - high - very high – excellent”. If this more detailed scale had been used, one of the three “highly” ranked offers when assessing the criterion “quality” can be defined as “very high” or “excellent” for example ranked. However, since these qualifications are not included in the defendant's party chosen scoring scale, such a quote could necessarily for the criterion “quality” a maximum score of “high” obtain just as two other quotes have obtained. The application of a numerical assessment would then again have to be taken into account in the current case brought about that the applicant's offer on the award criterion quality should have scored only 3.74 out of 50 points more to match the selected bidder to be ranked on an equal footing. The Council of State nor the defending party can anticipate an adjusted comparison of the quotations according to such more refined methods nor on the arrangement that would have resulted from it.

Finally, the fact that the defendant party confirms this ARGUS method has already been applied before, before the application of this method could be established before the opening of the tenders, then this shows that it was impossible to determine the assessment method before the opening of tenders.

It must therefore be decided that the defending party does not makes it plausible that this method is not suitable for demonstrable reasons opening of the tenders could be determined, so that the requested transparency principle has been violated.

11. Furthermore, in its judgment on the second considered place – no. 32 – that “the fact that the contracting authority assessment method after the announcement of the contract notice or the specifications determine […] may not result in the award criteria or its relative weight be changed”.

In the context of this section, the Council must therefore It must still be investigated whether the aforementioned condition has been met and sufficient-low” when assessing the award criterion “quality of the “offer” has not changed the award criteria and their relative weight.

There are no indications in this regard that the chosen assessment method for the criterion “quality of the offer” this criterion, let alone the award criterion "price", has changed. Both criteria were also already announced in the specifications.

The question remains whether the defendant's choice of the “high-sufficient-low” assessment method when assessing the award criterion “quality of the tender” the relative weight of the has changed the award criteria.

12. In its assessment of the first this question has not yet been answered in the judgment no. 229.723 of January 6, 2015.

In the first part of the plea, the applicant submitted that essence that the defendant has made an unauthorized change carried out by the relative weighting of the award criteria during the assessment of the award criterion 'quality' a scale of "high-sufficient-low" and not to use any numerical data as announced in the specifications expressed score from 0 to 50 points.

According to the applicant, the reference was 50/100 in the specifications not only the mutual relationship between the award criteria indicated – each being equal – but also the degree of nuance that the bidders could expect when their bid was assessed per award criterion. By an ordinal scale with classes “low-sufficient-high” the defendant would have acted in violation of the cutlery which, according to the applicant, provided for the award of a numerical score from 0 to 50 points.

This interpretation of the specifications by the requesting party
However, the Council of State did not follow this approach when assessing the first part of the appeal in judgment no. 229.723 of 6 January 2015. The Council stated in the aforementioned judgment already established with the auditorate that it limits the limits of a reason-the assessment does not exceed the mention of “50/100” in the specifications to be interpreted in each of the award criteria in the sense that only intended to indicate that each of the two criteria is considered to be of equal value considered and will therefore each determine half of the ranking.

The Council subsequently held that the applicant had not demonstrates that the assessment methodology used deviates from the specifications, even if can the requesting party agree to the application of a rating with a point scale of 0 to 50 points is a more common assessment methodology is then the use of an assessment methodology where only three scales are used for an award criterion that represents a weighting of 50 out of 100.

In view of the interpretation given by the Council of State in the the aforementioned judgment in its assessment of the first ground of appeal has already given to the contested specification provision, when assessing the second ground of appeal it should still be examined whether the assessment method “high-sufficient-low” when assessing the award criterion “quality of the tender” has changed the relative weight of the award criteria as announced in the specifications in the sense that each of the two criteria as are considered equal and will therefore each be decisive for half for the ranking.

13. In its judgment the Court of Justice finds that in this case, on the one hand, the contracting authority only includes two award criteria in the specifications has mentioned, namely the quality and the price, each time stating “(50/100)”, and that, on the other hand, the assessment committee used a scale of “high-used “sufficient-low” for the assessment of the “quality” criterion of the tenders", without a scale being used for the award criterion "price".

The Court further notes that the Council of State has already held that the two entries "(50/100)" mean that the two award criteria have the same weight.

However, according to the Court, this method did not offer the possibility, when ranking the applicants with a view to the determination of the most economically advantageous tender, differences in the to express the quality of the quotes compared to their price comply with the requirements set out in the "(50/100)" indication relative weight of the award criteria. This method could in particular have an impact on the price criterion, which would therefore have a decisive weight receive in relation to the ranking of the offers according to the applied raw quality scale. According to the Court, it is also up to the referring judge to determine whether the contracting authority has complied with the notice of the assignment announced relative weight of each of the award criteria actually taken into account when assessing the tenders.

14. The Council of State notes in this regard that three of the four offers, including the offer of the requesting party, for the criterion "quality" have been given the score "high", and no scores have been given to to distinguish the quotations from each other and their content to rank properties, the "price" criterion when awarding the assignment was decisive. This changed the scope of the criterion "quality" flattened with respect to the "price" criterion, so that the latter criterion for choosing the person to whom the contract was awarded a relatively has had a higher weight than the 50% weight stated in the specifications could reasonably have expected. It is plausible that, if the tenderers had been informed in advance about the choice of this method for the assessment of the offers against the criterion "quality", they focus more on the price would have directed their services.

15. The defending party refers in its supplementary memorandum to the interpretation of the specifications by the Council of State in its judgment of January 6, 2015 in the sense that the mention of “50/100” implies that they each be charged for half. By that mere reference the the defendant party does not, however, indicate that it has complied with the specifications relative weight of each of the award criteria, each for 50%, also actually taken into account when assessing the tenders. The mere mention of “50/100” in the award criteria in the award report and the fact that the assessments of both award criteria in the award report are included next to that they are included in each other do not demonstrate this either.

In its statement of defence, the defending party further states: that the applicant party has not stated anywhere in its application, for example, that a numerical calculation, shows that the defending party has the indicated award criteria were not taken into account on a half-way basis. In this regard, the Council of State notes that it is rather the defending party appears to be the one who has failed to provide clear and complete information in the award report to clearly demonstrate that this is the case by the methods it uses method whereby, on the one hand, it has only two award criteria in the specifications mentioned, namely the quality and the price, each time with the mention “(50/100)”, and, on the other hand, the assessment committee a scale “high- used “sufficient-low” for the assessment of the “quality” criterion of the tenders”, without a scale being used for the award criterion “price” and without a total score being made for the two criteria together.

Based on the motivation in the award report, only it is being investigated why the defendant has compromised the quality of the quotations rated three bidders as “high”, being the maximum score within the ordinal scale used.

The fact that there are great similarities between these three quotations exist with regard to their quality, does not rule out that there are also – they the possibly limited – qualitative differences. In any case, the the defending party never denied this in tempora non suspecto . This is also evident also from the motivation as included in the award report. The mere claim of the defendant in the last memorandum that “if there is also for the award criterion 'quality' would have been awarded a points score instead of an ordinal classification, the general comparison and ranking of the quotes would not have looked any different in fact ” and that “even then it would have been it turned out that [these quotes] would have achieved the same score for the award criterion 'quality'” is not convincing. As already noted, it cannot be are anticipated on the result of a comparison and ranking at the application of a more differentiated assessment method that the defending party itself recognizes as more “refined”.

The chosen general assessment method with only three scores also appear to have resulted in the three quotations with evaluation “high” were not classified further according to their substantive properties, so that, as far as these three offers are concerned, the criterion of “price” is unmistakably has been decisive. Even a minuscule price advantage of 1 euro, given the assessment method subsequently chosen by the defendant for the award criterion “quality” is sufficient to be the first in the world ranked once a certain level of quality was reached. Conversely, could, in terms of the quality criterion, have a minimal difference of a few points at 50 are sufficient, given the minimal difference in points for the prize, to influence the ranking.

In its supplementary memorandum, the defending party notes moreover, that they are used as an assessment method for the award criterion “quality” has chosen to use a “high-sufficient-low” scale given on the great similarities between the quotes with regard to the quality of the services offered. In doing so, it implicitly indicates that, given the large similarities in quality, she wishes to give priority to the award criterion "price". As a result, the criterion "price" appears to have a heavier impact weighed up more than was previously announced in the specifications, which only mentioned was 50%.

The assessment method subsequently chosen by the defending party method appears to have changed the weighting of the award criteria.
Consequently, it is unlawful for this method to be used for the assessment of the quotes by the defendant party was subsequently determined and this method had must be made known in advance in the announcement of the order or the specifications made.

16. The second part of the sole remedy is in the discussed to any extent whatsoever.

B. Third part

17. In the third ground of appeal, the applicant submits, in extremely subordinate order, to. Since the second part of the remedy in the discussed extent has been found to be well-founded, the third ground of appeal should not be further discussed to be assessed.

V. Kosten

18.1. In its final memorandum, the applicant requests that the the defendant would be ordered to pay an increased legal costs of 2,800 euros.

18.2. Article 30/1 of the coordinated laws, as inserted by Article 11 of the Act of 20 January 2014 'reforming the competence, procedural arrangements and organisation of the Council of State', entered into force pursuant to Article 9 of the Royal Decree of 28 March 2014 'concerning the legal costs referred to in Article 30/1 of the coordinated laws on the Council of State of 12 January 1973' entered into force on 2 April 2014, date of publication in the Belgian Official Gazette, and applies “to every application for suspension or interim measures filed on grounds of extreme urgency, from that date, and which does not constitute an ancillary application to an action for annulment filed before that date, as well as to any application, difficulty and appeal referred to in Articles 11, 12, 13, 14 and 16, 1° to 8°, of the coordinated laws, filed from that date, and to any additional applications filed simultaneously or subsequently claims".

It follows that, given the temporal scope of application of the aforementioned Royal Decree of 28 March 2014, the invoked Article 30/1 these, more specifically on an appeal such as the present one, lodged on 14 June 2012, i.e. before 2 April 2014, is not applicable. The Council of State may therefore not to make a ruling on the requested legal costs.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum, OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Finn Frogne A/S ('Frogne') and Rigspolitiet ved Center for Beredskabskommunikation (Centre for Emergency Communication of the National Police, Denmark; 'CFB') concerning the propriety of a settlement agreement concluded by CFB, in its capacity as the contracting authority, and Terma A/S, the successful tenderer for a public contract, in connection with the performance of that contract.

Legal context

3 According to recital 2 of Directive 2004/18:

'The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.'

4 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts', provides:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

5 Article 28 of that directive provides:

'In awarding their public contracts, contracting authorities shall apply the national procedures adjusted for the purposes of this Directive.

They shall award these public contracts by applying the open or restricted procedure. … In the specific cases and circumstances referred to expressly in Articles 30 and 31, they may apply a negotiated procedure, with or without publication of the contract notice.'

6 Article 31 of Directive 2004/18 is worded as follows:

'Contracting authorities may award public contracts by a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(1) for public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts:

(c) insofar as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities in question, the time limit for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures with publication of a contract notice as referred to in Article 30 cannot be complied with. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authority;

(4) for public works contracts and public service contracts:

(a) for additional works or services not included in the project initially considered or in the original contract but which have, through unforeseen circumstances, become necessary for the performance of the works or services described therein, on condition that the award is made to the economic operator performing such works or services:

– when such additional works or services cannot be technically or economically separated from the original contract without major inconvenience to the contracting authorities,

or

– when such works or services, although separable from the performance of the original contract, are strictly necessary for its completion.

However, the aggregate value of contracts awarded for additional works or services may not exceed 50% of the amount of the original contract;

7 Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) (‘Directive 89/665’), includes an Article 2d, entitled ‘Ineffectiveness’. According to that article:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

(a) if the contracting authority has awarded a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union without this being permissible in accordance with Directive 2004/18/EC;

4. The Member States shall provide that paragraph 1(a) of this Article does not apply where:

– the contracting authority considers that the award of a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union is permissible in accordance with Directive 2004/18/EC,

– the contracting authority has published in the Official Journal of the European Union a notice as described in Article 3a of this Directive expressing its intention to conclude the contract, and,

– the contract has not been concluded before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the publication of this notice.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

8 In 2007, the Danish State initiated a procedure for the award of a public contract, in the form of a competitive dialogue, for the supply of a global communications system common to all emergency response services and for the maintenance of that system for several years. CFB subsequently became the competent public authority for that contract.

9 That contract was awarded to Terma. The contract with Terma, concluded on 4 February 2008, involved a total amount of 527 million Danish kroner (DKK) (approximately EUR 70 629 800), DKK 299 854 699 (approximately EUR 40 187 000) of which related to a minimum solution which was described in the tender specifications, with the remainder relating to options and services which would not necessarily be subject to a request for performance.

10 In the course of the performance of that contract, difficulties arose in meeting delivery deadlines, with CFB and Terma both disagreeing as to which party was responsible for making it impossible to perform the contract as stipulated.

11 Following negotiations, the parties agreed to a settlement under which the scope of the contract was to be reduced to the supply of a radio communications system for regional police forces, worth approximately DKK 35 million (approximately EUR 4.69 million), while CFB would acquire two central server farms, worth approximately DKK 50 million (approximately EUR 6.7 million), which Terma had itself acquired with a view to leasing them to CFB in performance of the original contract. As part of that settlement, each party intended to waive all rights arising from the original contract other than those resulting from the settlement.

12 Before finalising that settlement, CFB published on 19 October 2010, in the Official Journal of the European Union, a notice for voluntary ex ante transparency regarding the settlement agreement which it intended to conclude with Terma, pursuant to Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665.

13 Frogne, which had not applied for pre-selection to participate in the tendering procedure for the original contract, brought an action before the Klagenævnet for Udbud (Complaints Board for Public Procurement, Denmark) (the 'Complaints Board'). Before ruling on the merits, the latter, by decision of 10 December 2010, refused to allow that action to have suspensive effect.

14 The settlement was concluded on 17 December 2010.

15 Frogne's action before the Complaints Board was dismissed by decision of 3 November 2011.

16 The legal action brought by Frogne following this decision was also dismissed by a decision of the Østre Landsret (Eastern Regional Court, Denmark) of 20 December 2013.

17 In the first place, the Østre Landsret (Eastern Regional Court) held that the amendment of the original contract as put in place by the settlement concluded between CFB and Terma constituted a material amendment to that contract, as defined in the case-law of the Court of Justice.

18 In the second place, the Østre Landsret (Eastern Regional Court) took the view, however, first, that that settlement had not been the result of an intention on the part of Terma and CFB to renegotiate the material terms of the original contract in order to optimise their subsequent collaborative effort under materially altered terms, but had rather been a settlement of the dispute between the parties in place of a termination of that contract in circumstances where the performance of that contract appeared impossible, a settlement in which each party agreed to significant waivers with a view to achieving an acceptable solution, of an order of magnitude significantly smaller in comparison with that contract, while allowing each of them to avoid the risk of what were likely to be disproportionate losses. Second, there was no basis on which to assume that the intention of CFB or Terma had been to circumvent the public procurement rules.

19 In those circumstances, the Østre Landsret (Eastern Regional Court) took the view that the principles of equal treatment and transparency did not preclude the conclusion of this settlement provided that there was a close link between the original contract and the services provided in connection with it. This was the case with regard to the provision of a radio communications system for regional police forces, but not with regard to the sale of the two central server farms. In respect of the latter aspect, that court held that CFB's decision to resort to the settlement agreement at issue and the conclusion of that agreement were contrary to the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency. The fact that the conclusion of that agreement allowed the contracting authority to address risks related to a situation of conflict was deemed irrelevant to the legality of that conclusion.

20 However, the Østre Landsret (Eastern Regional Court) ruled that CFB's assessment to the effect that the conclusion of the settlement agreement with Terma was permitted without prior publication of a notice of contract under the EU rules was not manifestly wrong. Taking into consideration the notice for voluntary ex ante transparency which the contracting authority had published in the Official Journal of the European Union regarding the settlement the conclusion of which was envisaged under Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, and the fact that, before concluding it, it had waited not only for the expiry of the 10-day period provided for in that provision, but also for the Complaints Board's ruling on the possible suspensive effect of Frogne's action before it, the Østre Landsret (Eastern Regional Court) found that that agreement could not be declared invalid, with the result that the action before it should not be upheld.

21 Before the Højesteret (Supreme Court, Denmark), to which it has appealed, Frogne argues that the question as to whether a public contract intended as part of a settlement relating to an original public contract must be the subject of a tendering procedure depends solely on whether or not such an amendment to the original contract is material. In the present case, it submits, the change is material, whether it relates to the subject matter of the contract as amended or to the contract's significantly reduced value, since the amended contract was likely to interest smaller undertakings. Furthermore, it submits, neither economic considerations nor the protection of the situation of the successful tenderer may be relied on to justify an infringement of the principle of equal treatment and of the obligation of transparency.

22 CFB considers the two aspects of the settlement. With respect, first, to the limitation of the contract's scope to the supply of a radio communications system for the regional police forces alone, it draws attention to the importance of the fact that the amendment consisted in a significant reduction in the services to be supplied, a situation which, it claims, is not governed by EU law. As regards, second, the acquisition of the central server farms, only the lease of which was provided for in the original contract, it considers, in essence, that the fact that such equipment was sold rather than leased did not constitute a material change in that contract.

23 More generally, CFB believes that where the performance of a contract gives rise to difficulties — which, it submits, is not unusual in certain types of contracts, such as those relating to the development of IT systems — the contracting authority must be allowed a broad discretion to enable it to reach a reasonable solution in the event of difficulties in performance. Otherwise, the contracting authority would be obliged either to refrain from making reasonable adjustments or to terminate the contract, with the risks and losses which this would entail. Interpreting Directive 2004/18 as meaning that a new tendering procedure is required in such a case would, in practice, prevent a settlement from being concluded, thus amounting to an interference with the law of obligations which is not permitted by the Treaties.

24 The Højesteret (Supreme Court) is unsure as to the scope of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, in particular as to whether the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency imply that a contracting authority cannot consider entering into a settlement to resolve the difficulties arising from the performance of a public contract without this automatically giving rise to the obligation to organise a new tendering procedure relating to the terms of that settlement.

25 According to the Højesteret (Supreme Court), the new element in comparison with the situations previously examined by the Court lies in those difficulties in performing the contract, the attribution of fault for which to one or other of the parties being disputed, and, ultimately, the relevant question is whether it is possible to have recourse to a settlement in order to bring an end to those difficulties without having to organise a new tendering procedure.

26 In those circumstances, the Højesteret (Supreme Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Is Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with the judgments of the Court of Justice of the European Union of 19 June 2008, pressetext Nachrichtenagentur (C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351), and of 13 April 2010, Wall (C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182), to be interpreted as meaning that a settlement agreement which introduces limitations on and amendments to the services to be provided as originally agreed by the parties under a contract previously put out to tender and also mutual agreement to waive the application of remedies for breach in order to avoid subsequent litigation constitutes a contract which in itself requires a tendering procedure, in a situation where performance of the original contract has encountered difficulties?'

27 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, following the award of a public contract, a material amendment cannot be made to it without a new tendering procedure being initiated, even in the case where the amendment is, objectively, a type of settlement agreement, with both parties agreeing to mutual waivers, designed to bring an end to a dispute with an uncertain outcome, which arose from the difficulties encountered in the performance of that contract.

28 It follows from the Court's case-law that the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency resulting therefrom preclude, following the award of a public contract, the contracting authority and the successful tenderer from amending the provisions of that contract in such a way that those provisions differ materially in character from those of the original contract. Such will be the case if the proposed amendments would either extend the scope of the contract considerably to encompass elements not initially covered or to change the economic balance of the contract in favour of the successful tenderer, or if those changes are liable to call into question the award of the contract, in the sense that, had such amendments been incorporated in the documents which had governed the original contract award procedure, either another tender would have been accepted or other tenderers might have been admitted to that procedure (see, to that effect, inter alia, judgment of 19 June 2008, pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351, paragraphs 34 to 37).

29 As regards the latter case, it must be noted that an amendment of the elements of a contract consisting in a reduction in the scope of that contract's subject matter may result in it being brought within reach of a greater number of economic operators. Provided that the original scope of the contract meant that only certain undertakings were capable of presenting an application or submitting a tender, any reduction in the scope of that contract may result in that contract being of interest also to smaller economic operators. Moreover, since the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must, pursuant to the second subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract, a reduction in that contract's scope is capable of resulting in a proportional reduction of the level of the abilities required of the candidates or tenderers.

30 In principle, a substantial amendment of a contract after it has been awarded cannot be effected by direct agreement between the contracting authority and the successful tenderer, but must give rise to a new award procedure for the contract so amended (see, by analogy, judgment of 13 April 2010, Wall, C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182, paragraph 42). The position would be otherwise only if that amendment had been provided for by the terms of the original contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 June 2008, pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351, paragraphs 37, 40, 60, 68 and 69).

31 However, it follows from the order for reference that, according to the analysis of the Østre Landsret (Eastern Regional Court), to which the Højesteret (Supreme Court) refers, the particular aspect of the situation at issue in the main proceedings lies in the fact that the amendment of the contract, described as material, arose not out of the desire of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of the contract by which they were originally bound, as defined in the abovementioned case-law of the Court, but out of objective difficulties, with unpredictable consequences, encountered in the performance of that contract, difficulties which certain interested parties who submitted observations to the Court also state are unpredictable where complex contracts are concerned, such as contracts involving the development of IT systems, as is the case here.

32 However, it must be held that neither (i) the fact that a material amendment of the terms of a contract results not from the deliberate intention of the contracting authority and the successful tenderer to renegotiate the terms of that contract, but from their intention to reach a settlement in order to resolve objective difficulties encountered in the performance of the contract nor (ii) the objectively unpredictable nature of the performance of certain aspects of the contract can provide justification for the decision to carry out that amendment without respecting the principle of equal treatment from which all operators potentially interested in a public contract must benefit.

33 As regards, first, the reasons that may lead the contracting authority and the successful tenderer to contemplate a substantial amendment to that contract involving the initiation of a new award procedure, it must be noted, first, that the reference to the deliberate intention of the parties to renegotiate the terms of that contract is not a decisive factor. It is true that the Court refers to such an intention in paragraph 44 of the judgment of 5 October 2000, Commission v France (C-337/98, EU:C:2000:543), the first judgment in which the Court examined this issue. However, as is clear from paragraphs 42 to 44 of that judgment, that formulation related to the specific factual context of the case giving rise to that judgment. On the other hand, the question whether there has been a material amendment must be analysed from an objective point of view, on the basis of the criteria set out in paragraph 28 above.

34 Second, it follows from paragraph 40 of the judgment of 14 November 2013, Belgacom (C-221/12, EU:C:2013:736) that the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency which is to be inferred from those principles, arising from the FEU Treaty, cannot be disregarded where there is an intention to modify substantially a service concession contract or grant exclusive rights with the aim of providing for a reasonable solution designed to bring an end to a dispute which has arisen between public entities and an economic operator, for reasons outside their control, as to the scope of the agreement by which they are bound. Since those principles and that obligation form the basis of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, as is apparent from a reading of recital 2 of that directive, that standard also applies in the context of the application of that directive.

35 As regards, second, the objectively unpredictable nature of certain matters which may form the subject matter of a public contract, it must, admittedly, be recalled that, in accordance with Article 31 of Directive 2004/18, contracting authorities can opt for a direct award of a contract, that is to say, negotiating the terms of the contract with a selected economic operator without prior publication of a contract notice, in various cases, many of which are characterised by the unforeseeability of certain circumstances. However, as is clear from the wording of the last sentence of the second paragraph of Article 28 of that directive, Article 28 may be applied only in the specific cases and circumstances referred to expressly in Article 31, with the result that the list of exceptions concerned must be regarded as exhaustive. It does not, however, appear that the situation at issue in the main proceedings corresponds to one of those situations.

36 Furthermore, the very fact that, because of their subject matter, certain public contracts may immediately be categorised as being unpredictable in nature means that there is a foreseeable risk that difficulties may occur at the implementation stage. Accordingly, in respect of such a contract, it is for the contracting authority not only to use the most appropriate procurement procedures, but also to take care when defining the subject matter of that contract. Furthermore, as is clear from paragraph 30 above, the contracting authority may retain the possibility of making amendments, even material ones, to the contract, after it has been awarded, on condition that this is provided for in the documents which governed the award procedure.

37 Although the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency must be guaranteed even in regard to specific public contracts, this does not mean that the particular aspects of those contracts cannot be taken into account. That legal imperative and that practical necessity are reconciled, first, through strict compliance with the conditions of a contract as they were laid down in the contract documents up to the end of the implementation phase of that contract, but also, second, through the possibility of making express provision, in those documents, for the option for the contracting authority to adjust certain conditions, even material ones, of that contract after it has been awarded. By expressly providing for that option and setting the rules for the application thereof in those documents, the contracting authority ensures that all economic operators interested in participating in the procurement procedure are aware of that possibility from the outset and are therefore on an equal footing when formulating their respective tenders (see, by analogy, judgment of 29 April 2004, Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta, C-496/99 P, EU:C:2004:236, paragraphs 112, 115, 117 and 118).

38 By contrast, where such contingencies are not provided for in the contract documents, the requirement to apply, in respect of a given public contract, the same conditions to all economic operators makes it necessary, in the case of a material amendment to that contract, to initiate a new tendering procedure (see, by analogy, judgment of 29 April 2004, Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta, C-496/99 P, EU:C:2004:236, paragraph 127).

39 Lastly, it is necessary to make it clear that all of those developments are without prejudice to the potential consequences of the notice for voluntary ex ante transparency which has been published in connection with the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

40 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question is that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, following the award of a public contract, a material amendment cannot be made to that contract without a new tendering procedure being initiated even in the case where that amendment is, objectively, a type of settlement agreement, with both parties agreeing to mutual waivers, designed to bring an end to a dispute the outcome of which is uncertain, which arose from the difficulties encountered in the performance of that contract. The position would be different only if the contract documents provided for the possibility of adjusting certain conditions, even material ones, after the contract had been awarded and fixed the detailed rules for the application of that possibility.

Costs

41 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 2 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that, following the award of a public contract, a material amendment cannot be made to that contract without a new tendering procedure being initiated even in the case where that amendment is, objectively, a type of settlement agreement, with both parties agreeing to mutual waivers, designed to bring an end to a dispute the outcome of which is uncertain, which arose from the difficulties encountered in the performance of that contract. The position would be different only if the contract documents provided for the possibility of adjusting certain conditions, even material ones, after the contract had been awarded and fixed the detailed rules for the application of that possibility.

LA COUR (neuvième chambre), composée de M. C. Lycourgos, président de chambre, MM. E. Juhász (rapporteur) et C. Vajda, juges, avocat général: M. M. Bobek, greffier: M. A. Calot Escobar, vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée, conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation de l'article 1er de la directive 89/665/CEE du Conseil, du 21 décembre 1989, portant coordination des dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives relatives à l'application des procédures de recours en matière de passation des marchés publics de fournitures et de travaux (JO L 395, p. 33), telle que modifiée par la directive 2007/66/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 11 décembre 2007 (JO L 335, p. 31, ci-après la «directive 89/665»).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige opposant M. Tita, Mme Carlin ainsi que M. Costantini, avocats associés (ci-après le «cabinet d'avocats»), au Ministero della Giustizia

Le droit de l'Union

3 Aux termes du troisième considérant de la directive 89/665, l'ouverture des marchés publics à la concurrence de l'Union nécessite un accroissement substantiel des garanties de transparence et de non-discrimination et il importe, pour qu'elle soit suivie d'effets concrets, qu'il existe des moyens de recours efficaces et rapides en cas de violation du droit de l'Union en matière de marchés publics ou des règles nationales transposant ce droit.

4 L'article 1er de cette directive, intitulé «Champ d'application et accessibilité des procédures de recours», dispose:

Les marchés au sens de la présente directive incluent les marchés publics, les accords-cadres, les concessions de travaux publics et les systèmes d'acquisition dynamiques.

Les États membres prennent, en ce qui concerne les procédures de passation des marchés publics relevant du champ d'application de la directive 2004/18/CE, les mesures nécessaires pour garantir que les décisions prises par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent faire l'objet de recours efficaces et, en particulier, aussi rapides que possible, dans les conditions énoncées aux articles 2 à 2 septies de la présente directive, au motif que ces décisions ont violé le droit [de l'Union] en matière de marchés publics ou les règles nationales transposant ce droit.

3. Les États membres s'assurent que les procédures de recours sont accessibles, selon des modalités que les États membres peuvent déterminer, au moins à toute personne ayant ou ayant eu un intérêt à obtenir un marché déterminé et ayant été ou risquant d'être lésée par une violation alléguée.

[...]»

5 L'article 7 de la directive 2004/18, intitulé «Montant des seuils des marchés publics», fixe les seuils des valeurs estimées à partir desquels l'attribution d'un marché doit être effectuée conformément aux règles de cette directive. Ces seuils sont modifiés à des intervalles réguliers par des règlements de la Commission européenne et adaptés aux circonstances économiques.

Le droit italien

6 L'article 13, paragraphe 1, du décret du président de la République n° 115, du 30 mai 2002, tel que modifié (ci-après le «décret»), a établi un régime de taxation des actes judiciaires, constitué par une contribution unifiée, fixée en proportion de la valeur du litige.

7 En ce qui concerne les procédures juridictionnelles administratives, l'article 13, paragraphe 6 bis, du décret fixe le montant de la contribution unifiée indépendamment de la valeur du litige.

8 Selon ledit article 13, paragraphe 6 bis, en cas de recours introduits devant les tribunaux administratifs régionaux et devant le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État), le montant de la contribution unifiée s'élève, en règle générale, à 650 euros. Cependant, cette même disposition fixe, pour des matières particulières, des montants différents, qui peuvent être réduits ou majorés.

9 Ainsi, aux termes dudit article 13, paragraphe 6 bis, la contribution en matière de marchés publics s'élève à:

– 2 000 euros lorsque la valeur du marché est égale ou inférieure à 200 000 euros;

– 4 000 euros pour les litiges dont la valeur est comprise entre 200 000 et 1 000 000 euros, et

– 6 000 euros pour ceux d'une valeur supérieure à 1 000 000 euros.

10 Selon l'article 13, paragraphe 1 bis, du décret, pour les procédures d'appel en matière de passation de marchés publics, ces montants sont majorés de 50 %.

11 Il découle de l'article 14, paragraphe 3 ter, du décret que la valeur du litige correspond non pas à la marge bénéficiaire qui peut être tirée de l'exécution du marché établi par les entités adjudicatrices, mais au montant de la valeur de base de ce marché.

Le litige au principal et la question préjudicielle

12 Le cabinet d'avocats a saisi la juridiction de renvoi d'un recours ayant pour objet une procédure de passation d'un marché public relatif à des services de consultation juridique, à laquelle il a participé.

13 Le cabinet d'avocats a versé, au titre de la contribution unifiée, un montant de 650 euros, correspondant au coût d'introduction d'un recours administratif ordinaire.

14 Par décision du 6 mai 2014, le secrétaire général du tribunal administratif régional de Trente a invité ledit cabinet à compléter ce paiement, au motif que le litige avait trait à la passation de marchés publics et que la contribution unifiée à acquitter pour ce type de litiges s'élevait à 2 000 euros.

15 Par un nouveau recours, le cabinet d'avocats a, notamment, attaqué cette décision, en invoquant une violation des principes généraux de l'ordre juridique de l'Union, de l'article 47 de la charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne (ci-après la «Charte»), des articles 6 et 13 de la convention européenne de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales, signée à Rome le 4 novembre 1950, ainsi que des dispositions des directives 89/665 et 2007/66.

20 Ladite juridiction expose que, à son estime, le bénéfice perçu par l'adjudicataire d'un marché public atteint, généralement, à peine 10 % du montant du marché concerné et considère que le versement anticipé d'une contribution unifiée dépassant le montant d'un tel bénéfice peut amener l'adjudicataire à renoncer, en tant que justiciable, à certains mécanismes procéduraux.

23 La juridiction de renvoi est d'avis que le coût supporté par l'État aux fins du fonctionnement de la justice administrative en matière de marchés publics n'est pas sensiblement différent, distinct ou plus élevé que celui relatif aux procédures liées à d'autres types de contentieux. Elle fait référence à la doctrine selon laquelle le législateur national a certainement souhaité alléger le poids de l'arriéré judiciaire et faciliter tant la réalisation de travaux publics que l'acquisition publique de biens et de services.

24 Cette juridiction considère que les principes d'efficacité, de célérité, de non-discrimination et d'accessibilité, figurant à l'article 1er de la directive 89/665, sont applicables à l'affaire dont elle est saisie et que le décret enfreint ces principes ainsi que le droit à un recours effectif, réaffirmé à l'article 47 de la Charte.

25 Il découlerait, par ailleurs, du principe d'efficacité des moyens de recours que les frais d'accès au juge doivent être viables et proportionnés par rapport à l'intérêt que le requérant espère tirer de la procédure judiciaire.

26 Dans ces conditions, le Tribunale regionale di giustizia amministrativa di Trento (tribunal administratif régional de Trente) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour la question préjudicielle suivante:

Sur la question préjudicielle

27 En vertu de l'article 99 de son règlement de procédure, lorsque la réponse à une question posée à titre préjudiciel peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence, la Cour peut à tout moment, sur proposition du juge rapporteur, l'avocat général entendu, décider de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

28 Il convient de faire application de cet article dans la présente affaire.

29 À titre liminaire, il y a lieu d'indiquer, d'une part, que, bien qu'elle fasse référence à la directive 92/13, la demande de décision préjudicielle ne comporte aucun élément susceptible de démontrer la pertinence de celle-ci aux fins de la solution du litige au principal, litige qui a pour objet une procédure de passation de marchés publics relatifs aux services de consultation juridique et qui est initié par un cabinet d'avocats.

30 D'autre part, il convient de relever que la valeur du marché public en cause au principal ne figure pas dans la décision de renvoi. Or, la valeur estimée d'un marché constitue un élément décisif en vue de déterminer si ce marché est visé ou non par les directives 2004/18 et 89/665. Il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier si ledit marché relève du champ d'application de ces directives, en tenant compte du seuil d'application pertinent, énoncé à l'article 7 de la directive 2004/18, qui était en vigueur à l'époque des faits au principal.

31 Par sa question, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 1er de la directive 89/665 ainsi que les principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à une réglementation nationale, telle que celle en cause au principal, qui impose, lors de l'introduction de recours dans les procédures juridictionnelles administratives en matière de marchés publics, l'acquittement de frais de justice plus élevés que dans d'autres matières.

32 La Cour a déjà eu l'occasion, dans l'arrêt Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655), de se prononcer sur la compatibilité de la contribution unifiée en cause au principal avec cet article et lesdits principes.

36 En outre, dès lors que de tels frais de justice constituent des modalités procédurales de recours en justice destinés à assurer la sauvegarde des droits conférés par le droit de l'Union aux candidats et aux soumissionnaires lésés par des décisions des pouvoirs adjudicateurs, ils ne doivent pas porter atteinte à l'effet utile de la directive 89/665 (arrêt Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, point 47 et jurisprudence citée).

37 Le principe d'effectivité implique une exigence de protection juridictionnelle, consacrée à l'article 47 de la Charte, que le juge national est tenu de respecter (arrêt Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, point 48 et jurisprudence citée).

38 Ainsi, l'article 1er de la directive 89/665 doit nécessairement être interprété à la lumière des droits fondamentaux qui sont inscrits dans ladite Charte, en particulier le droit à un recours effectif devant un tribunal, prévu à son article 47 (arrêt Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, point 49 et jurisprudence citée).

39 Dans de telles conditions, à l'instar de ce que la Cour a considéré au point 50 de l'arrêt Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655), il convient de vérifier si, en l'occurrence, une réglementation telle que celle en cause au principal peut être considérée comme conforme aux principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité ainsi qu'à l'effet utile de la directive 89/665.

40 En ce qui concerne le principe d'effectivité, il y a lieu de rappeler que le régime des frais de justice en cause au principal comprend trois montants fixes de contribution unifiée s'élevant à 2 000 euros, à 4 000 euros et à 6 000 euros, pour les trois catégories de marchés publics, à savoir ceux d'une valeur égale ou inférieure à 200 000 euros, ceux dont la valeur se situe entre 200 000 et 1 000 000 euros, et ceux d'une valeur dépassant 1 000 000 euros.

41 La Cour a constaté, aux points 56 et 58 de l'arrêt Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655), que les frais de justice dus sur cette base sont proportionnels à la valeur des marchés publics relevant de ces trois catégories de marchés publics, qu'ils présentent un caractère dégressif et qu'ils ne sont pas susceptibles de rendre pratiquement impossible ou excessivement difficile l'exercice des droits conférés par l'ordre juridique de l'Union en matière des marchés publics.

42 À ce dernier égard, la Cour a également déjà constaté, aux points 60 et 61 de l'arrêt Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655), en ce qui concerne le fait que la contribution unifiée est fixée en fonction non pas du bénéfice que l'entreprise participant à l'appel d'offres est en droit d'attendre de ce marché, mais de la valeur du marché en cause au principal, que plusieurs États membres reconnaissaient la possibilité de calculer les frais de procédure à acquitter en se basant sur la valeur de l'objet sur lequel porte le litige et que, dans le domaine des marchés publics, une règle nécessitant des calculs spécifiques pour chaque appel d'offres et pour chaque entreprise, dont le résultat serait susceptible d'être contesté, s'avérerait compliquée et imprévisible.

45 Quant au principe d'équivalence, la Cour a jugé, au point 66 de ce même arrêt, que la circonstance selon laquelle, dans le domaine des procédures de passation de marchés publics, la contribution unifiée est plus importante que celle applicable, d'une part, aux litiges administratifs soumis à la procédure ordinaire et, d'autre part, aux procédures civiles ne saurait en soi démontrer une violation dudit principe.

46 En effet, le principe d'équivalence implique un traitement égal entre les recours fondés sur une violation du droit national et ceux, similaires, fondés sur une violation du droit de l'Union, et non l'équivalence des règles procédurales nationales applicables à des contentieux de nature différente, tels que le contentieux civil, d'un côté, et le contentieux administratif, de l'autre, ou à des contentieux relevant de deux branches de droit différentes (voir, en ce sens, arrêt Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, point 67 et jurisprudence citée).

48 Ainsi que la Cour l'a déjà constaté au point 69 de l'arrêt Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655), il convient d'en conclure que des frais de justice à acquitter lors de l'introduction d'un recours dans les procédures juridictionnelles administratives en matière de marchés publics, tels que la contribution unifiée en cause au principal, ne portent atteinte ni à l'effet utile de la directive 89/665 ni aux principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité.

49 En outre, s'agissant de la considération émise par la juridiction de renvoi selon laquelle les frais de justice en cause au principal sont susceptibles d'être considérés comme constituant des entraves à la liberté d'établissement ou à la libre prestation des services incompatibles avec le traité FUE, force est de constater que, à supposer même que tel soit le cas, de telles entraves seraient de nature à être justifiées au vu des éléments exposés aux points 41 à 44 de la présente ordonnance.

50 Dans ces conditions, il y a lieu de répondre à la question posée que l'article 1er de la directive 89/665 ainsi que les principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas à une réglementation nationale qui impose l'acquittement de frais de justice, tels que la contribution unifiée en cause au principal, lors de l'introduction, devant les juridictions administratives, d'un recours en matière de marchés publics.

Sur les dépens

Par ces motifs, la Cour (neuvième chambre) dit pour droit:

L'article 1er de la directive 89/665/CEE du Conseil, du 21 décembre 1989, portant coordination des dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives relatives à l'application des procédures de recours en matière de passation des marchés publics de fournitures et de travaux, telle que modifiée par la directive 2007/66/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 11 décembre 2007, ainsi que les principes d'équivalence et d'effectivité doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas à une réglementation nationale qui impose l'acquittement de frais de justice, tels que la contribution unifiée en cause au principal, lors de l'introduction, devant les juridictions administratives, d'un recours en matière de marchés publics.

Legal context

Directive 89/665

3 Paragraphs 1 to 3 of Article 1 of Directive 89/665, which is entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provide:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts [(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, public works concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming harm in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

4 Paragraphs 1 to 3 of Article 1 of Directive 92/13, which is also entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provide:

'1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors [(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1)], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Article 5(2), Articles 18 to 26, Articles 29 and 30 or Article 62 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include supply, works and service contracts, framework agreements and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/17/EC, decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings likely to make a claim in respect of harm in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

5 Recital 36 of Directive 2007/66 states:

'This Directive respects the fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised by the [Charter]. In particular, this Directive seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second subparagraphs of Article 47 of the [Charter].'

6 Article 16(b) of Directive 2004/17 provides:

‘Save where they are ruled out by the exclusions in Articles 19 to 26 or pursuant to Article 30, concerning the pursuit of the activity in question, this Directive shall apply to contracts which have a value excluding value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be no less than the following thresholds:

(b) EUR 5 186 000 in the case of works contracts.’

7 Article 7(b) and (c) of Directive 2004/18 provides as follows:

‘This Directive shall apply to public contracts which are not excluded in accordance with the exceptions provided for in Articles 10 and 11 and Articles 12 to 18 and which have a value exclusive of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than the following thresholds:

(b) EUR 207 000:

– for public supply and service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than those listed in Annex IV,

– for public supply contracts awarded by contracting authorities which are listed in Annex IV and operate in the field of defence, where these contracts involve products not covered by Annex V,

(c) EUR 5 186 000 for public works contracts.’

Romanian law

8 Articles 271a and 271b of the Ordonanţă de Urgenţă a Guvernului nr. 34/2006, privind atribuirea contractelor de achiziţie publică, a contractelor de concesiune de lucrări publice şi a contractelor de concesiune de servicii (Government Emergency Ordinance No 34/2006 on the procedures for the award of public supply, works and services contracts) as amended and supplemented by the Ordonanţă de Urgenţă a Guvernului nr. 51/2014 (Government Emergency Ordinance No 51/2014) (the ‘OUG’) provides:

‘Article 271a

(1) For the purpose of protecting the contracting authority against the risk of any improper conduct, the party challenging the decision shall be required to provide a good conduct guarantee covering the entire period from the date on which the challenge/application/action is lodged to the date on which the decision of the National Council for Dispute Resolution/the judgment of the competent judicial authority has become final.

(2) The challenge/application/action shall be dismissed if the party challenging the decision fails to furnish proof that the guarantee referred to in paragraph 1 has been provided.

(3) The good conduct guarantee shall be provided by means of bank transfer or a guarantee instrument issued in compliance with legal requirements by a banking institution or an insurance company; the original guarantee shall be lodged at the offices of the contracting authority and a copy with the National Council for Dispute Resolution or the judicial authorities at the same time as the challenge/application/action is lodged.

(4) The total amount of the good conduct guarantee shall be determined by reference to the estimated value of the contract to be awarded, in accordance with the following rules:

(a) 1% of the estimated value, if this is lower than the threshold amounts provided for in Article 55(2)(a) and (b);

(b) 1% of the estimated value, if this is lower than the threshold amounts provided for in Article 55(2)(c), but not greater than the equivalent in [Romanian lei (RON)] of EUR 10 000, according to the exchange rate of the Romanian National Bank applicable at the date on which the guarantee is provided;

(c) 1% of the estimated value, if this is equal to or greater than the threshold amounts set out in Article 55(2)(a) and (b), but not greater than the equivalent in RON of EUR 25 000 according to the exchange rate of the Romanian National Bank applicable at the date on which the guarantee is provided;

(d) 1% of the estimated value, if this is equal to or greater than the threshold amounts set out in Article 55(2)(c), but not greater than the equivalent in RON of EUR 100 000 according to the exchange rate of the Romanian National Bank applicable at the date on which the guarantee is provided.

(5) The good conduct guarantee must be valid for a period of at least 90 days, be irrevocable and provide for unconditional payment upon first request of the contracting authority where the challenge/application/action is rejected.

(6) If, on the day on which the good conduct guarantee is due to expire, the decision of the National Council for Dispute Resolution or the judgment of the judicial authority has not become final and the party challenging the decision has failed to extend the validity of the good conduct guarantee in accordance with the requirements laid down in paragraphs 1 to 5, the contracting authority shall retain the guarantee. The provisions set out in Article 271b(3) to (5) shall apply mutatis mutandis.

(7) The provisions set out in paragraphs 1 to 6 shall also apply mutatis mutandis where the action against the decision of the National Council for Dispute Resolution is brought by a person other than the contracting authority or the party challenging the decision, in accordance with Article 281.

Article 271b

(1) If the challenge is dismissed by the National Council for Dispute Resolution or by the judicial authority, where the party challenging the decision has brought proceedings directly before the latter, the contracting authority shall be required to retain the good conduct guarantee as from the time at which the decision of the National Council for Dispute Resolution/the judgment of the judicial authority becomes final. The requirement to retain the guarantee shall apply to the parts of the contract in respect of which the challenge has been dismissed.

(2) Paragraph 1 shall also apply where the party challenging the decision withdraws the challenge/application/action.

(3) The measure referred to in paragraph 1 shall not apply where the National Council for Dispute Resolution/the judicial authority dismisses the challenge as devoid of purpose or where the challenge/application/action is withdrawn following the adoption, by the contracting authority, of corrective measures necessary under Article 256c(1).

(4) Where the National Council for Dispute Resolution upholds the challenge, or the competent judicial authority upholds the action brought against the National Council for Dispute Resolution’s decision to dismiss the challenge, the contracting authority shall be required to return the good conduct guarantee to the party challenging the decision no later than five days following the date on which the decision/judgment has become final.

(5) Where the party challenging the decision has brought proceedings directly before the judicial authority and the latter upholds the action, paragraph 4 shall apply mutatis mutandis.

(6) The amounts received by the contracting authority under the good conduct guarantee shall be classified as income of that contracting authority.'

The disputes in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Case C-439/14

9 On 1 April 2014, the ICI, as the contracting authority, published in the Sistemul Electronic de Achiziţii Publice (Electronic Public Procurement System, 'the EPPS') a notice concerning the opening of a call for tenders for the award of a public contract for the acquisition of an information technology infrastructure and services relating to the preparation, management, development and completion of a cloud computing platform and the corresponding tender documents. The award criterion for that contract, with an estimated value of RON 61 287 713.71 (approximately EUR 13 700 000), net of value added tax (VAT) was that of 'the lowest price'.

10 Following requests from economic operators, the ICI published a number of explanatory notes regarding the stipulations in the tender documents in the EPPS.

11 On 30 June 2014, Star Storage challenged Explanatory Notes No 4 and No 5 of 24 June 2014 and No 7 of 26 June 2014 before the Consiliul Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor (National Council for Dispute Resolution, 'the CNSC').

12 By decision of 18 July 2014, the CNSC, based, inter alia, on Article 271a(2) of the OUG No 34/2006, dismissed that challenge as inadmissible, on the ground that Star Storage had not provided a good conduct guarantee.

13 On 5 August 2014, Star Storage brought an appeal before the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania), seeking, inter alia, the annulment of that decision, arguing that the obligation to provide a good conduct guarantee laid down by Romanian law was contrary to the Romanian Constitution and EU law.

14 The referring court considers, due to its amount and the rules governing it, that the good conduct guarantee is liable to seriously undermine the right of economic operators to effective review procedures against the acts of the contracting authorities.

15 In those circumstances, the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Are the provisions in the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of [Directive 89/665] to be interpreted as precluding a rule under which a "good conduct guarantee" must be lodged as a prerequisite for being granted access to procedures for reviewing the decisions of contracting authorities, such as the rule laid down in Article 271a and 271b of [the OUG] No 34/2006?'

16 On 21 January 2014, RA Aeroportul Oradea, in its capacity as the contracting authority, published a call for tenders in the EPPS for the award of a public contract for extension works and the modernisation of the infrastructures of Oradea Airport (Romania). The estimated amount of the contract is RON 101 232 054 (approximately EUR 22 800 000) net of value added tax, the award criterion adopted being 'most economically advantageous tender'.

17 According to the report drawn up after the tender assessment, the bid submitted by the consortium of SC Max Boegl România SRL, SC UTI Grup SA and Astaldi SpA, was held to be ineligible, while that submitted by the consortium of SC Construcţii Napoca SA, SC Aici Cluj SA and CS Icco Energ SRL was ranked second in accordance with the award criterion adopted.

18 Those two tendering consortia have each challenged that report before the CNSC. By its decision of 10 July 2014, those challenges were dismissed as being unfounded. As a consequence, those two consortia each brought an appeal against that decision before the Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea).

19 At the hearing, on 10 September 2014, that court drew the attention of the applicants in the main proceedings to the fact that, having regard to the entry into force on 1 July 2014 of Articles 271a and 271b of the OUG No 34/2006, they were required to provide a 'good conduct guarantee'. Max Boegl and others then requested that an objection of unconstitutionality of those provisions be heard by the Curtea Constituţională (Constitutional Court, Romania) and that a request for a preliminary ruling be made to the Court of Justice.

20 In those circumstances, the Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea, Romania) stayed those proceedings and requested a preliminary ruling on the following question:

'Must Article 1(1), (2) and (3) of [Directive 89/665] and Article 1(1), (2) and (3) of [Directive 92/13] be interpreted as precluding legislation which makes access to review procedures of decisions of contracting authorities subject to an obligation to deposit beforehand a "good conduct guarantee" such as that governed by Articles 271a and 271b of [the OUG No 34/2006]?'

Procedure before the Court

21 By orders of 13 November 2014 and 10 December 2014, the President of the Court rejected the requests from the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) and the Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea) that Cases C-439/14 and C-488/14 be determined by the expedited procedure laid down by Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice.

22 By order of the President of the Court of Justice of 13 November 2014, Cases C-439/14 and C-488/14 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedure and judgment.

23 By judgment No 5 of 15 January 2015, the Curtea Constituţională (Constitutional Court) partially upheld the objection of unconstitutionality of Articles 271a and 271b of the OUG No 34/2006 raised by Star Storage and Max Boegl and others respectively.

24 By letter of 21 July 2015, the Court, in accordance with Article 101 of its Rules of Procedure, sent the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) and the Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea) a request for clarifications, asking them to submit their observations on the judgment of the Curtea Constituţională (Constitutional Court) No 5 of 15 January 2015 and its possible impact on their respective requests for a preliminary ruling.

25 By letter of 11 August 2015, received at the Court on 26 August 2015, the Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea) stated essentially that the judgment of the Curtea Constituţională (Constitutional Court) No 5 of 15 January 2015 had upheld the objection of unconstitutionality relating to the provisions of Article 271b(1) and (2) of the OUG No 34/2006, but had rejected that relating to the provisions of Article 271a and Article 271b(3) to (6) of the OUG No 34/2006, so that its request for a preliminary ruling no longer concerned the latter provisions.

26 By letter of 14 September 2015, received at the Court on 23 September 2015, the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) also stated essentially that the judgment of the Curtea Constituţională (Constitutional Court) No 5 of 15 January 2015 had confirmed the constitutionality of the obligation to provide a good conduct guarantee as a condition of admissibility of any action and that, therefore, it was still necessary to examine whether the provisions of Articles 271a and 271b of the OUG No 34/2006, declared to be compatible with the Romanian Constitution, which make recourse to review procedures in award procedures for public contracts subject to the provision of a 'good conduct guarantee', may be regarded as compatible with the principle of effective judicial protection, as recognised by Article 1(1) to (3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(1) to (3) of Directive 92/13, read together with Article 47 of the Charter.

27 It also considers that the Romanian legislation requires an in-depth analysis of the fact that the good conduct guarantee must be provided in addition to the ‘tendering guarantee’ that the tenderer must also provide, in accordance with Article 43a of the OUG No 34/2006, which represents up to 2% of the estimated value of the contract, and the fact that it is not possible either to vary the amount of the good conduct guarantee which is, in accordance with Article 271a(4) of the OUG No 34/2006, fixed automatically at 1% of the estimated value of the contract to be concluded up to a maximum amount equivalent to EUR 100 000, or to give a reduction or to agree on payment by instalment, according to the specific circumstances of a particular case.

28 Therefore, the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) asks the Court to answer the following question:

‘Must Article 1(1), (2) and (3) of [Directive 89/665] and Article 1(1), (2) and (3) of [Directive 92/13], read together with Article 47 of the Charter, be interpreted as precluding legislation which makes access to review procedures of decisions of contracting authorities subject to an obligation to deposit beforehand a “good conduct guarantee” such as that governed by Articles 271a and 271b of [the OUG No 34/2006]?’

29 Finally, by judgment No 750 of 4 November 2015, the Curtea Constituţională (Constitutional Court) also declared incompatible with the Romanian Constitution Article 271a(5) of the OUG No 34/2006 which provided for the unconditional payment upon first request of the good conduct guarantee to the contracting authority where the challenge/application/action was rejected.

Preliminary observations

30 It must be held that, as the public contract at issue in Case C-439/14 concerns supplies and services, the value of which exceeds the threshold laid down by Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18, Directive 89/665 is applicable in the dispute in the main proceedings.

31 However, the Romanian Government and the European Commission disagree as to the nature of the public contract at issue in Case C-488/14, the former taking the view that that contract is covered by Directive 2004/18 and, therefore, Directive 89/665, the latter considering that that contract is covered by Directive 2004/17 and, therefore, by Directive 92/13.

32 In that connection, it must be noted that, as the referring court in Case C-488/14 provides very little information as to the public contract at issue in the main proceedings, it is not possible for the Court to determine whether it falls within Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18.

33 Nevertheless, although it is for the referring court to give a ruling on that issue, that uncertainty has no effect on the request for a preliminary ruling in Case C-488/14 because, as the Advocate General observed in point 25 of her Opinion, the value of the public contract at issue reaches the thresholds fixed for public works contracts by Article 7(c) of Directive 2004/18 and by Article 16(b) of Directive 2004/17.

34 The Court will therefore answer both the question referred in Case C-439/14 and that in Case C-488/14 simultaneously, since the provisions of Directives 89/665 and 92/13 whose interpretation is sought are, in any event, drafted in absolutely identical terms.

Consideration of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

35 It should be observed, first of all, as is clear from the explanations provided by the two referring courts in response to the request for clarifications from the Court of Justice and the observations submitted at the hearing, that the provisions of Article 271b(1) and (2) and those of Article 271a(5), last sentence, of the OUG No 34/2006 were declared to be contrary to the Romanian Constitution by the judgments of the Curtea Constituţională (Constitutional Court) No 5 of 15 January 2015 and No 750 of 4 November 2015 respectively.

36 The two referring courts have indicated that therefore they could no longer apply those provisions, which the Romanian Government confirmed at the hearing. However, they have expressly stated that they maintain their questions for a preliminary ruling as the other provisions of Romanian law at issue in the main proceedings were still applicable.

37 In those circumstances, while it is for the referring courts alone to draw conclusions from the judgments of the Curtea Constituţională (Constitutional Court) No 5 of 15 January 2015 and No 750 of 4 November 2015, for the resolution of the disputes before them, it must be held that the requests for a preliminary ruling concern solely the provisions of Romanian law relating to the good conduct guarantee held to be compatible with the Romanian Constitution.

38 It follows that, by their question, the referring courts ask essentially whether Article 1(1) to (3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(1) to (3) of Directive 92/13, read together with Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which makes the admissibility of all actions against the acts of a contracting authority subject to the obligation for the applicant to provide a good conduct guarantee to the contracting authority, which must be refunded to the applicant whatever the outcome of the action.

39 In that connection, it must be recalled that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(1) of Directive 92/13 require the Member States to adopt the measures necessary to ensure that the decisions taken by the contracting authorities in public contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18 may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible, on the ground that they have infringed EU law on public procurement or the national rules transposing that law.

40 Both Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 also lay down the obligation for the Member States to ensure, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, that the review procedures are available, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

41 Those provisions, which are intended to protect tenderers against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority, are thus designed to reinforce the existence, in all Member States, of effective remedies, so as to ensure the effective application of the EU rules on the award of public contracts, in particular where infringements can still be rectified (see, to that effect, judgments of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 71; of 11 September 2014, Fastweb, C-19/13, EU:C:2014:2194, paragraph 34, and of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 50).

42 However, neither Directive 89/665 nor Directive 92/13 contains any provisions specifically governing the conditions under which those review procedures may be used. Thus, the Court has already held that Directive 89/665 laid down only the minimum conditions to be satisfied by the review procedures established in domestic law to ensure compliance with the requirements of EU law concerning public procurement (see, in particular, judgments of 27 February 2003, Santex, C-327/00, EU:C:2003:109, paragraph 47; of 19 June 2003, GAT, C-315/01, EU:C:2003:360, paragraph 45; and of 30 September 2010, Strabag and Others, C-314/09, EU:C:2010:567, paragraph 33).

43 However, according to settled case-law, the detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, must not compromise the effectiveness of Directives 89/665 and 92/13, the objective of which is to ensure that decisions taken unlawfully by contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible (see, in particular, judgments of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 72; of 27 February 2003, Santex, C-327/00, EU:C:2003:109, paragraph 51; of 3 March 2005, Fabricom, C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127, paragraph 42; order of 4 October 2007, Consorzio Elisoccorso San Raffaele, C-492/06, EU:C:2007:583, paragraph 29; judgments of 12 March 2015, eVigilio, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 40; and of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 47).

44 In particular, care must be taken to ensure that the effectiveness of Directives 89/665 and 92/13 are not undermined (see judgments of 18 June 2002, HI, C-92/00, EU:C:2002:379, paragraphs 58 and 59, and of 11 December 2014*, Croce Amica One Italia*, C-440/14, EU:C:2014:2435, paragraph 40) or the rights conferred on individuals by EU law (judgments of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 72, and of 28 January 2010, Uniplex (UK), C-406/08, EU:C:2010:45, paragraph 49).

45 Furthermore, it must be recalled, as is clear from recital 36 of Directive 2007/66, and therefore Directives 89/665 and 92/13 that it amended and supplemented, that they seek to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter.

46 Accordingly, when they set out detailed procedural rules for legal actions intended to ensure the protection of rights conferred by Directives 89/665 and 92/13 on candidates and tenderers harmed by the decisions of contracting authorities, the Member States must ensure compliance with the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter.

47 In the present case, Article 271a(1) to (5) of the OUG No 34/2006 requires any person taking part in an award procedure for public contracts and intending to challenge a decision of the contracting authority, either before the CNSC or directly before a court, to provide a good conduct guarantee as the condition of admissibility of any action. That guarantee, of an amount corresponding to 1% of the estimated value of the public contract concerned, limited to EUR 25 000 for public supply and services contracts and EUR 100 000 for public works contracts, must be provided to the contracting authority either by bank transfer or by a guarantee instrument issued by a banking establishment or an insurance company for a period of at least 90 days.

48 However, that guarantee must be refunded if the appeal is upheld, at the latest five days after the date on which the decision become definitive, in accordance with Article 271b(4) and (5) of the OUG No 34/2006, and also if the appeal is withdrawn or dismissed, the retention of the guarantee by the contracting authority being henceforth without a legal basis, having regard to the judgments of the Curtea Constituţională (Constitutional Court) No 5 of 15 January 2015 and No 750 of 4 November 2015.

49 As the Advocate General pointed out in point 37 of her Opinion, the good conduct guarantee thereby constitutes, as a pre-condition for getting any challenge examined, a limitation on the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter which, in accordance with Article 52(1) of the Charter can therefore be justified only if it is provided for by law, if it respects the essence of that right and, subject to the principle of proportionality, if it is necessary and genuinely meets objectives of general interest recognised by the EU or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others (see judgment of 4 May 2016, Pillbox 38, C-477/14, EU:C:2016:324, paragraph 160).

50 It must be held that, in the cases in the main proceedings, the legal basis for the good conduct guarantee is clearly and precisely defined by the OUG No 34/2006, so that it must be regarded as being provided for by the national legislation (see judgments of 27 May 2014, Spasic, C-129/14 PPU, EU:C:2014:586; of 6 October 2015, Delvigne, C-650/13, EU:C:2015:648, paragraph 47; and of 17 December 2015, WebMindLicenses, C-419/14, EU:C:2015:832, paragraph 81). Furthermore, the fact that the good conduct guarantee may reach the substantial amount of EUR 25 000 or EUR 100 000 cannot lead to the conclusion that the obligation to give such a guarantee undermines the fundamental content of the right to an effective remedy since, in any event, that guarantee, cannot be kept by the contracting authority, whatever the outcome of the action.

51 Nonetheless, it must still be verified whether the good conduct guarantee corresponds to an objective in the general interest and whether, in the affirmative, it complies with the principle of proportionality within the meaning of Article 52(1) of the Charter.

52 Article 271a(1) of the OUG No 34/2006 states that the aim of the good conduct guarantee is to protect the contracting authority from the risk of inappropriate conduct. The Romanian Government indicated, in its written submissions and at the hearing, that the good conduct guarantee was mainly intended to facilitate the conduct of award procedures for public contracts by preventing the improper use of remedies and any delays to the conclusion of the contract.

53 In that connection, it must be held that combating the abuse of remedies is, as the Advocate General noted in point 44 of her Opinion, a legitimate objective which contributes not only to the attainment of the objectives pursued by Directives 89/665 and 92/13, but also, more widely, to the proper administration of justice.

54 A financial condition such as the good conduct guarantee at issue in the main proceedings is a measure liable to discourage frivolous challenges and ensure that all individuals have their actions dealt with as rapidly as possible, in the interest of the proper administration of justice, in accordance with Article 47, first and second paragraphs, of the Charter.

55 However, although the interest of the proper administration of justice may justify the imposition of a financial restriction on the access by a person to a remedy, that restriction must however retain a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the legitimate aim sought to be achieved (see, to that effect, judgment of 22 December 2010, DEB, C-279/09, EU:C:2010:811, paragraphs 47 and 60).

56 In that connection, it must be observed that, although the obligation to provide a good conduct guarantee is a less dissuasive measure in its current version than in its initial version, since it can no longer be automatically and unconditionally kept by the contracting authority in the case that the appeal is rejected or withdrawn, that obligation is still able to achieve the objective of combating frivolous actions pursued by the Romanian legislation.

57 First, as the Advocate General observed in point 55 of her Opinion, providing a good conduct guarantee involves a financial burden for the applicant, whether he makes a bank transfer or gives a bank guarantee.

58 The amount of the good conduct guarantee is fixed as a percentage of the price of the public contract considered which may reach EUR 25 000 for public supply and public service contracts and EUR 100 000 for public works contracts.

59 Mobilising a sum of that amount by bank transfer, like the requirement to take the steps necessary to constitute a bank guarantee and pay the fees relating to it are such as to encourage applicants to carefully consider bringing an action. Furthermore, in so far as it undermines the applicant’s resources or, at least, its ability to obtain credit until that guarantee is refunded, the good conduct guarantee is of such a nature that it encourages applicants to act prudently in the proceedings they bring, consistent with the requirement in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(1) of Directive 92/13 that the review procedures referred to therein are conducted as rapidly as possible. As the Romanian Government submitted at the hearing, it is conceivable that such a financial condition will encourage potential litigants to seriously evaluate their interest in bringing legal proceedings and their chance of winning and thereby dissuade them from bringing claims which are manifestly unfounded or which only seek to delay the award of a contract (see, by analogy, judgment of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 73).

60 Second, pursuant to the judgments of the Curtea Constituţională (Constitutional Court) No 5 of 15 January 2015 and No 750 of 4 November 2015, as the automatic and unconditional retention of the good conduct guarantee by the contracting authority and its payment upon the first request are no longer possible, it cannot be held that the obligation to constitute that guarantee in itself, as a condition for the admissibility of all actions, goes beyond what is necessary to achieve the objective of combating improper actions that it pursues.

61 The good conduct guarantee of 1% of the value of the public contract, limited in accordance with the type of contract remains modest (see judgment of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 58), in particular for tenderers which must normally demonstrate a certain financial capacity. That guarantee may, next, and in any event, be constituted in the form of a bank guarantee. Finally, it has to be constituted only for the period between the filing of the application and final judgment.

62 Lastly, in its answer to the request for clarifications sent by the Court, the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest) requested the Court to answer its question taking account of the guarantee of good conduct and the tendering guarantee that the tenderer must also constitute under Article 43a of the OUG No 34/2006. However, it has not provided any information in that regard either concerning the current tendering guarantee scheme or its relationship to the good conduct guarantee. In those circumstances, the Court is unable to express a view on that matter.

63 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to the questions referred is that Article 1(1) to (3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(1) to (3) of Directive 92/13, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which makes the admissibility of any action against an act of the contracting authority subject to the obligation for the applicant to constitute a good conduct guarantee that it provides to the contracting authority, if that guarantee must be refunded to the applicant whatever the outcome of the action.

Costs

64 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the actions before the national courts, the decisions on costs are a matter for those courts. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(1) to (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, and Article 1(1) to (3) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2007/66, and read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which makes the admissibility of any action against an act of the contracting authority subject to the obligation for the applicant to constitute a good conduct guarantee that it provides to the contracting authority, if that guarantee must be refunded to the applicant whatever the outcome of the action.

(Public procurement — Directives 89/665/EEC and 92/13/EEC –National law requiring a ‘good conduct guarantee’ to access review procedures — Procedural autonomy of the Member States — Principles of equivalence and effectiveness — Articles 47 and 52 of the Charter — Right to an effective remedy — Limitation — Proportionality)

1. In the present cases the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania) and the Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea, Romania) essentially seek guidance from the Court as to whether EU law precludes a Member State from requiring an applicant to lodge a ‘good conduct guarantee’ in order to access review procedures for public procurement decisions by contracting authorities. Under the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings, contracting authorities retain the good conduct guarantee where the body competent to review their decisions rejects the challenge or where the applicant abandons it.

2. The references therefore concern the scope of the right of access to an effective remedy in the context of public procurement, a right which is not only guaranteed under Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter') but also finds specific expression in EU directives governing public contract award procedures. How far can the Member States set up financial requirements for challenging contracting authorities' decisions in order to reduce the risk of frivolous challenges, that is to say, challenges that are inherently likely to be unsuccessful and whose purpose is merely to impede the public contract award procedure?

Legal background

3. The first subparagraph of Article 47 of the Charter provides that everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by EU law are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in that article. Under Article 52(1) of the Charter, any limitation on the exercise of a Charter right must be provided for by law and respect the essence of the right in question. Subject to the principle of proportionality, such limitation is possible only if it is necessary and genuinely meets objectives of general interest recognised by the EU or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.

4. According to the third recital of Council Directive 89/665/EEC, (2) opening up public procurement to EU competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination. Effective and rapid remedies should therefore be available in the case of infringements of EU law on public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

5. Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides:

> '1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC …, [(3)] unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.
>
> Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, public works concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.
>
> Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed [EU] law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.
>
> 2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming harm in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing [EU] law and other national rules.
>
> 3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

6. The fifth recital of Council Directive 92/13/EEC (4) states that opening up procurement in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors to EU competition implies that appropriate review procedures are available to suppliers or contractors in the event of infringement of the relevant EU law or national rules implementing that law.

7. The first three paragraphs of Article 1 of Directive 92/13, entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, correspond in essence to the first three paragraphs of Article 1 of Directive 89/665. (5)

Romanian law

8. Pursuant to Article 43a of Emergency Ordinance No 34/2006 concerning the award of public supply contracts, public works contracts and public services contracts (Ordonanţa de urgenţă a Guvernului nr. 34/2006; ‘the OUG No 34/2006’), any would-be tenderer must lodge a guarantee (‘the tendering guarantee’) in order to participate in the procedure in all cases in which the OUG No 34/2006 requires the contracting authority to publish an invitation to tender or a call for proposals. The tendering guarantee, which can represent up to 2% of the public contract’s estimated value, is intended to protect the contracting authority against the risk of improper conduct by the tenderer throughout the entire period preceding the conclusion of the contract.

9. Under Article 256(1) of the OUG No 34/2006, a party who considers that he has been adversely affected shall have the right to refer the matter to the National Council for Dispute Resolution (Consiliului Naţional de Soluţionare a Contestaţiilor, ‘the CNSC’). Pursuant to Article 281(1), decisions of the CNSC may be subject to an appeal before a judicial authority.

10. Article 278(1) of the OUG No 34/2006 states that the CNSC or the competent court is to adjudicate as a preliminary matter on any procedural or substantive objections. If it decides that these are well founded, it will not examine the substance of the dispute.

11. Article 278a of the OUG No 34/2006 provided that the contracting authority had to retain part of the tendering guarantee if the CNSC or the competent court dismissed a challenge initiated by the tenderer or the tenderer abandoned his challenge.

12. Emergency Ordinance No 51/2014 (Ordonanţa de urgenţă a Guvernului nr. 51/2014; ‘the OUG No 51/2014’) repealed Article 278a of the OUG No 34/2006 and introduced the following provisions into that legislation: (6)

> 1. For the purpose of protecting the contracting authority against the risk of any improper conduct, the applicant shall be required to provide a good conduct guarantee covering the entire period from the date on which the appeal/application/complaint is lodged to the date on which the decision of the [CNSC]/the judgment of the competent judicial authority has become final.
>
> 2. The [challenge] shall be [rejected] if the applicant fails to furnish proof that the guarantee referred to in paragraph 1 has been deposited.
>
> 3. The good conduct guarantee shall be provided by means of bank transfer or a guarantee instrument issued in compliance with legal requirements by a banking institution or an insurance company; the original guarantee shall be lodged at the offices of the contracting authority and a copy with the [CNSC] or the judicial authorities at the same time as the [challenge] is lodged.
>
> 4. The total amount of the good conduct guarantee shall be determined by reference to the estimated value of the contract to be awarded, in accordance with the following rules:
>
> (a) 1% of the estimated value, if this is lower than the threshold amounts provided for in Article 55(2)(a) and (b); [(7)]
>
> (b) 1% of the estimated value, if this is lower than the threshold amounts provided for in Article 55(2)(c), [(8)] but not greater than the equivalent in RON of EUR 10 000, according to the exchange rate … applicable at the date on which the guarantee is provided;
> (c) 1% of the estimated value, if this is equal to or greater than the threshold amounts set out in Article 55(2)(a) and (b), but not greater than the equivalent in RON of EUR 25 000 according to the exchange rate … applicable at the date on which the guarantee is provided;

(d) 1% of the estimated value, if this is equal to or greater than the threshold amounts set out in Article 55(2)(c), but not greater than the equivalent in RON of EUR 100 000 according to the exchange rate … applicable at the date on which the guarantee is provided.

5. The good conduct guarantee must be valid for a period of at least 90 days, be irrevocable and provide for unconditional payment upon first request of the contracting authority where the [challenge] is [rejected].

6. If, on the day on which the good conduct guarantee is due to expire, the decision of the [CNSC] or the judgment of the judicial authority has not become final and the party challenging the decision has failed to extend the validity of the good conduct guarantee in accordance with the requirements laid down in paragraphs 1 to 5, the contracting authority shall retain the guarantee. The provisions set out in Article 271b(3) to (5) shall apply mutatis mutandis.

Article 271b

1. If the challenge is dismissed by the [CNSC] or by the judicial authority, where the party challenging the decision has brought proceedings directly before the latter, the contracting authority shall be required to retain the good conduct guarantee as from the time at which the decision of the [CNSC]/the judgment of the judicial authority becomes final. The requirement to retain the guarantee shall apply to the parts of the contract in respect of which the challenge has been dismissed.

2. Paragraph 1 shall also apply where the party challenging the decision withdraws the [challenge].

3. The measure referred to in paragraph 1 shall not apply where the [CNSC]/judicial authority dismisses the challenge as devoid of purpose or where the [challenge] is withdrawn following the adoption, by the contracting authority, of corrective measures necessary under Article 256c(1).

4. Where the [CNSC] upholds the challenge, or the competent judicial authority upholds the action brought against the [CNSC's] decision to dismiss the challenge, the contracting authority shall be required to return the good conduct guarantee to the party challenging the decision no later than five days following the date on which the decision/judgment has become final.

5. Where the party challenging the decision has brought proceedings directly before the judicial authority and the latter upholds the action, paragraph 4 shall apply mutatis mutandis.

6. The amounts received by the contracting authority under the good conduct guarantee shall be classified as income of that contracting authority.'

13. In answer to a request for clarification from the Court, the referring courts confirmed that, in a judgment delivered on 15 January 2015, the Curtea Constituțională (Constitutional Court, Romania) had declared unconstitutional Article 271b(1) and (2) of the OUG No 34/2006. The Constitutional Court reached that conclusion essentially on the ground that those provisions required the contracting authority to retain the good conduct guarantee where the challenge was rejected or withdrawn, without giving the CNSC or the court deciding on the challenge any flexibility to take the applicant's behaviour into account. Only inappropriate behaviour would justify losing the good conduct guarantee. On 4 November 2015, the Constitutional Court declared unconstitutional, on essentially similar grounds, Article 271a(5) of the OUG No 34/2006 to the extent that that provision required the good conduct guarantee to provide for unconditional payment, if the challenge was rejected, upon the first request of the contracting authority.

14. At the hearing, the Romanian Government explained that Articles 271a and 271b of the OUG No 34/2006 are still in force to the extent that they were not declared unconstitutional. It confirmed that the remaining provisions (9) still require the applicant to lodge a good conduct guarantee, but that there is no longer a legal basis for the contracting authority to retain it. As a result, the contracting authority must now return the good conduct guarantee to the applicant at the end of the procedure, regardless of the challenge's outcome and, a fortiori, whether the application was frivolous or not.

Factual background, procedure and questions referred

15. The Institutul Naţional de Cercetare-Dezvoltare în Informatică (National Institute for Research and Development in Informatics, 'the INCDI') organised a procedure to award a public supply and services contract for the development and completion of a cloud computing platform. The estimated value of the contract, net of Value Added Tax (VAT), was RON 61 287 713.71 (approximately EUR 13 700 000). The INCDI prepared the relevant tender documents and published a call for tenders, on 1 April 2014, in the Sistemul Electronic de Achiziţii Publice (Electronic Public Procurement System). The award criterion was that of 'the lowest price'.

16. Several economic operators asked the INCDI to clarify the rules set out in the tender documents. The INCDI responded by publishing several explanatory notes in the Electronic Public Procurement System.

17. On 30 June 2014, SC Star Storage SA ('Star Storage') challenged three of those explanatory notes before the CNSC. On 18 July 2014, the CNSC dismissed that application as inadmissible as Star Storage had not provided a good conduct guarantee. (10) Star Storage appealed against that decision to the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest), which has stayed the proceedings and requested a preliminary ruling on the following question:

> 'Are the provisions in the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of [Directive 89/665] to be interpreted as precluding a rule under which a "good conduct guarantee" must be lodged as a prerequisite for being granted access to procedures for reviewing the decisions of contracting authorities, such as the rule laid down in Article 271a and 271b of [the OUG No 34/2006]?'

18. On 21 January 2014, RA Aeroportul Oradea ('Oradea Airport') published a contract notice in the Electronic Public Procurement System for the award of a public contract to extend and modernise that airport. The estimated value of the contract, net of VAT, was RON 101 232 054 (approximately EUR 22 800 000). The award criterion was that of 'the most economically advantageous tender'.

19. Four economic operators submitted tenders. According to the tender assessment report of 28 March 2014, the tender submitted by the consortium of SC Max Boegl România SRL ('Max Boegl'), SC UTI Grup SA and Astaldi SpA was declared ineligible. The same report indicated that the tender submitted by the consortium of SC Construcţii Napoca SA ('Construcţii Napoca'), SC Aici Cluj SA and CS Icco Energ SRL was ranked second.

20. On 10 July 2014, the CNSC rejected as unfounded the challenges which those two consortia lodged against the tender assessment report.

21. The consortium of which Max Boegl is a member and Construcţii Napoca appealed against those decisions to the Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea). At the hearing on 10 September 2014, the Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea) drew the appellants' attention to the requirement to lodge a good conduct guarantee following the entry into force, on 30 June 2014, of Articles 271a and 271b of the OUG No 34/2006. (11) The Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea) stayed those proceedings and requested a preliminary ruling on the following question:

> 'Must Article 1(1), (2) and (3) of [Directive 89/665] and Article 1(1), (2) and (3) of [Directive 92/13] be interpreted as precluding legislation which makes access to review procedures of decisions of contracting authorities subject to an obligation to deposit beforehand a "good conduct guarantee" such as that governed by Articles 271a and 271b of [the OUG No 34/2006]?'

22. On 13 November 2014, the President of the Court joined the two cases for the purposes of both the written and oral proceedings and the judgment. Star Storage, the Greek and Romanian Governments and the European Commission have submitted written observations. Max Boegl, the Romanian Government and the European Commission presented oral argument at the hearing on 14 January 2016.

Analysis

Preliminary remarks

23. The value of the public contract in issue in Case C-439/14 is higher than the relevant threshold amount set out in Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18 for public supply and service contracts. Directive 89/665 therefore applies to those proceedings. (12) Likewise, the value of the public contract in issue in Case C-488/14 reaches the thresholds for public works contracts in both Article 7(c) of Directive 2004/18 and Article 16(b) of Directive 2004/17.

24. However, the Romanian Government and the Commission disagree on the legal background relevant to the main proceedings in Case C-488/14. The Romanian Government submits that they are governed only by Directive 2004/18 and, by extension, Directive 89/665. The Commission argues that because the contract award procedure at issue concerned extending and improving airport facilities, it falls within the scope of Directive 2004/17 (13) and is therefore governed by Directive 92/13. (14)

25. In my view, the Court lacks sufficient information about that contract to determine whether Directive 89/665 or Directive 92/13 applies to the procedure for its award. That creates no difficulty here, however. On the one hand, it is clear from the facts in the main proceedings in Case C-488/14 that the question which the Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea) submits to the Court is not hypothetical in so far as it concerns Directive 92/13. On the other hand, the first three paragraphs of Article 1 of that directive essentially correspond to the first three paragraphs of Article 1 of Directive 89/665. The two questions raised by the referring courts are therefore in essence the same and should be addressed jointly.

26. Next, the impact on the main proceedings of the judgments of the Curtea Constituțională (Constitutional Court) delivered on 15 January and 4 November 2015 is unclear. At the hearing, the Romanian Government submitted that the referring courts will now have to apply the transitional regime. The Commission, on the other hand, sought to draw a distinction between the two cases. In Case C-488/14, the requirement for the good conduct guarantee arose for the first time before the referring court. That court will thus have to apply the transitional regime. By contrast, in Case C-439/14, the requirement initially arose in the proceedings before the CNSC — that is, prior to the Constitutional Court's judgments. The Commission therefore submits that the referring court in that case will have to apply the original regime after receiving the Court's answer.

27. According to settled case-law, it is not for the Court to rule on the applicability of provisions of national law which are relevant to the outcome of the main proceedings. Rather, the Court must take account, under the division of jurisdiction between the EU Courts and the national courts, of the legislative context, as described in the order for reference, in which the question put to it is set. (15) The Court is, however, competent to give the national court full guidance on how to interpret EU law in order to enable that court to determine the issue of compatibility of national law with EU law in the case before it. (16) Since it is uncertain whether the original regime or the transitional regime applies to the main proceedings in Case C-439/14, I shall examine both in this Opinion.

28. Last, the information available to the Court indicates that, pursuant to the OUG No 34/2006, a challenge can be initiated either before the CNSC (whose decisions can then be appealed before a court of appeal) or directly before a court. Since a good conduct guarantee is required in every case, that does not affect the reasoning which follows. (17)

Methodology of the analysis

29. The first and second recitals of Directive 89/665 and the first, second and third recitals of Directive 92/13 make it clear that those directives are intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms, both at national and EU levels, in order to ensure that directives relating to public procurement apply effectively, in particular at a stage when it is still possible to remedy infringements. (18) To that effect, Article 1(1) of each directive requires Member States to guarantee that unlawful decisions of contracting authorities can be subjected to effective review which is as swift as possible. (19) They must ensure that such review is widely available to any person who has or has had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement. (20)

30. However, those directives lay down only the minimum conditions which the review procedures under domestic law must satisfy in order to comply with EU public procurement law. (21) If no specific provision governs the matter, it is for each Member State to lay down the detailed rules of administrative and judicial procedures governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from EU public procurement law. Those detailed rules must not be less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and must not render practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of those rights (principle of effectiveness). (22) The latter requirement is essential to achieving EU public procurement law's main objective of opening up public procurement to undistorted competition in all the Member States. (23)

31. As the Commission points out, neither Directive 89/665 nor Directive 92/13 contains rules on financial requirements which economic operators may have to fulfil in order to obtain access to review procedures against decisions of contracting authorities. National provisions such as those at issue in the main proceedings therefore fall within the procedural autonomy of the Member States, subject to the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. I shall examine the questions referred in the light of those principles. (24)

32. Each of those directives nonetheless gives specific expression, in the particular sphere of public procurement, to the general principle of EU law enshrining the right to an effective remedy. (25) This raises two closely related issues concerning the scope of the principle of effectiveness.

33. First, can that principle be limited to verifying that a national procedural requirement such as that at issue in the main proceedings renders practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of the right to review procedures set out in Articles 1 of Directive 89/665 and Directive 92/13? Or is it broader in that it requires any national rule which undermines those provisions to be set aside?

34. The Court has on several occasions examined whether national procedural rules governing remedies intended to protect rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities compromised the effectiveness of Directive 89/665. (26) However, there is no uniform approach in the case-law on how that test of effectiveness relates to the procedural autonomy of the Member States and the principle of effectiveness which limits it. (27) In some cases, the analysis was focused exclusively on the effectiveness of Directive 89/665, without referring to procedural autonomy and the limits to it. (28) Other cases suggest that the effectiveness test supplements the procedural autonomy test where there is no specific provision governing the matter in Directive 89/665. (29) Sometimes, the wording used indicates that the effectiveness test forms part of (and gives special content to) the procedural autonomy test. (30)

35. In my view, what matters ultimately is to ensure that the rights which EU law confers on individuals receive more, rather than less, protection. Article 1 of Directive 89/665 and Article 1 of Directive 92/13 give specific expression to the right to an effective remedy. It is therefore not possible to limit the analysis of the principle of effectiveness to whether a procedural requirement such as that in issue in the main proceedings is liable to render practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of that right. Rather, in that specific context, the effectiveness test must surely involve examining whether such a requirement is liable to undermine the right to effective review procedures which those provisions guarantee.

36. Second, what impact does the fundamental right to an effective remedy under Article 47 of the Charter have on the principle of effectiveness as a limit to the procedural autonomy of the Member States?

37. Procedural rules such as those at issue in the main proceedings clearly come within the scope of Article 1 of Directive 89/665 and Article 1 of Directive 92/13. Moreover, the fundamental right to an effective remedy to which those provisions give specific expression covers such rules. (31) Consequently, Article 47 of the Charter applies in the main proceedings. (32) Providing the good conduct guarantee is a pre-condition for getting any challenge examined. (33) That requirement therefore constitutes a limitation on the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal within the meaning of Article 47. (34) Such a limitation can therefore be justified only if it is provided for by law, if it respects the essence of that right and, subject to the principle of proportionality, if it is necessary and genuinely meets objectives of general interest recognised by the EU or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others. (35) That test is similar to the test that the Strasbourg Court applies when it examines whether financial restrictions on access to courts are compatible with Article 6(1) of the ECHR. (36)

38. Again, this Court's case-law does not offer clear guidance in that regard. (37) As I see it, in cases such as the present, the assessment set out in Article 52(1) of the Charter is required in order to satisfy the level of protection which Article 47 of the Charter confers on individuals. Applying a different methodology would have the surprising (and in my view unacceptable) effect that Member States would be able to escape that test solely because they were acting, within the scope of their procedural autonomy, in a domain where the EU legislature has given specific expression to the right to an effective remedy.

39. In what follows, I shall therefore examine whether national rules such as those in issue in the main proceedings, which fall under the procedural autonomy of the Member States, comply with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. However, given that Article 1(1) and (3) of both Directive 89/665 and Directive 92/13 govern such rules and that those provisions express, in the particular sphere of public procurement, the fundamental right to an effective remedy guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter, I shall do so on the basis that the principle of effectiveness requires exploring whether those national rules, which limit that right, satisfy the proportionality test set out in Article 52(1) of the Charter. If they do not, they undermine the effectiveness of Article 1(1) and (3) of each directive.

The original regime

40. Article 1(2) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(2) of Directive 92/13 give specific expression to the principle of equivalence. That principle requires that the national rule in question applies, without distinction, to actions based on infringement of EU law and those based on infringement of national law having a similar purpose and cause of action. (38)

41. I do not agree with Star Storage when it contends that national rules such as those in issue in the main proceedings are incompatible with that principle. Whilst it is true that they create a specific financial burden for initiating review procedures relating to public procurement, the principle of equivalence does not require equal treatment of national procedural rules applicable to proceedings of a different nature (such as civil proceedings, on the one hand, and administrative proceedings, on the other), or applicable to proceedings falling within two different branches of law. (39) At the hearing, moreover, the Romanian Government confirmed that the national provisions in issue in the main proceedings apply to all review procedures initiated against decisions of contracting authorities, whether or not EU public procurement rules govern the contract award procedure.

42. What of the principle of effectiveness and the proportionality test set out in Article 52(1) of the Charter?

43. It is not in dispute that the limitation resulting from Articles 271a and 271b of the OUG No 34/2006 is provided by law.

44. The second condition of the proportionality test is that the measure has to pursue a legitimate objective (that is, an objective of general interest recognised by the EU or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others). It is common ground that the good conduct guarantee is a source of income for the contracting authority where the latter retains it. That guarantee does not therefore serve to finance the judicial system. (40) Rather, the national provisions establishing the good conduct guarantee are intended in essence to protect contracting authorities, the CNSC and courts from frivolous challenges which economic operators (including those who are not tenderers) might initiate for purposes other than those for which the review procedures were established. (41) Such an objective is undeniably legitimate. (42) In particular, discouraging frivolous challenges enables the bodies in charge of reviewing decisions of contracting authorities to concentrate on 'genuine' challenges. That is likely to contribute to satisfying the requirement that Member States must ensure that decisions of contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible where it is claimed that such decisions infringe EU public procurement law or national rules transposing that law. (43)

45. The next question is whether national provisions such as those in issue in the main proceedings are capable of achieving that objective.

46. As those proceedings illustrate, (44) such provisions can give rise to substantial costs for an economic operator who either loses his challenge or withdraws it. (45) These costs may reach the equivalent of EUR 25 000 for public supply and public service contracts and EUR 100 000 for public works contracts, in addition to the costs associated with lodging the guarantee. (46) At the hearing, the Romanian Government confirmed that, under the original regime, the applicant lost the whole amount of the good conduct guarantee because the contracting authority is required to retain it. The CNSC or the court deciding on the challenge is not empowered to order the contracting authority to retain only part of the good conduct guarantee, based on the specific circumstances of the case.

47. In my view, costs of that magnitude are such as to deter the lodging of frivolous challenges because the latter are, by their very nature, likely to be rejected and, therefore, to result automatically in loss of the entire good conduct guarantee and the associated costs. (47) The fact that, as the Court recalled in Orizzonte Salute, (48) undertakings wishing to participate in public contracts governed by EU public procurement rules are required to have an appropriate economic and financial capacity does not call that conclusion into question. First, the national provisions at issue in the main proceedings apply to all economic operators challenging contracting authorities' decisions and thus not only to tenderers. Next, the requirement that tenderers must have economic and financial capacity is not absolute. Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 provides that an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the nature of the links which it has with them, in order to establish that capacity. (49) Accordingly, a party may not be eliminated from a procedure for the award of a public contract solely because it proposes, in order to carry out the contract, to use resources which are not its own but belong to one or more other entities. (50) Finally, the Court's statement about economic and financial capacity in Orizzonte Salute was made in relation to far smaller financial limitations on access to review procedures than those in issue in the present cases. (51)

48. The final part of the proportionality test is that the measures at issue must not go further than is necessary to attain their objective. (52) When there is a choice between several appropriate measures, the Member State must have recourse to the least onerous one, and the disadvantages caused must not be disproportionate to the aims pursued. (53)

49. Under the original regime, the applicant automatically loses the good conduct guarantee where his challenge is rejected or where he withdraws it. That is also true where there are no elements present suggesting an abuse of the review procedure (for example because the challenge is manifestly ill founded, or was lodged with the sole purpose of delaying the contract award procedure). For reasons similar to those which I have set out above, (54) the original regime thus significantly impedes access to review procedures against decisions of contracting authorities for persons who (even if their challenge ultimately fails) have 'arguable claims'. (55) It is therefore liable to discourage a substantial proportion of potential litigants from lodging a challenge if they cannot be reasonably certain that it will be successful. Examples of such circumstances would, I suggest, include where there is no settled case-law on the point at issue or where the challenge seeks to call into question an assessment of the contracting authority for which the latter enjoys a wide margin of appreciation.

50. It seems to me that it would have been possible to avoid that adverse effect (and the significant interference with the right to an effective remedy) without undermining the objective of discouraging frivolous challenges. Where a challenge was rejected or withdrawn, the CNSC or the competent court might for example have been given latitude to ascertain whether that challenge was frivolous or not, taking into account all relevant circumstances, (56) and to decide in consequence whether retaining (all or part of) the good conduct guarantee was justified.

51. I therefore agree with Star Storage, Max Boegl and the Commission that the original regime involves a disproportionate limitation on the right to an effective remedy protected under Article 47 of the Charter and therefore undermines the effectiveness of Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 92/13. That regime also affects the essence of that right because it is liable in practice to deprive economic operators having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract from accessing a remedy against allegedly illegal decisions of contracting authorities.

52. For those reasons, I conclude that Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 92/13, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, preclude national legislation such as that in issue in the main proceedings, which requires an applicant to lodge a 'good conduct guarantee' in order to obtain access to review of a contracting authority's decisions relating to public procurement and under which the contracting authority must retain that guarantee if the challenge is rejected or withdrawn, regardless of whether or not the challenge is frivolous.

The transitional regime

53. I now turn to the transitional regime, which differs from the original regime in that the applicant gets back the good conduct guarantee irrespective of the challenge's outcome.

54. The reasoning on equivalence which I have set out above is equally applicable here. (57)

55. As regards effectiveness, it is clear that a procedural requirement such as that resulting from Article 271a(1) of the OUG No 34/2006 necessarily limits in itself the right of access to review procedures against contracting authorities' decisions. That requirement is a pre-condition for examining the merits of a challenge. (58) Moreover, although the applicant gets back the good conduct guarantee at the end of his challenge, lodging it necessarily involves a financial burden for him. Thus, the first sentence of Article 271a(3) of the OUG No 34/2006 describes two methods for providing the good conduct guarantee. If the applicant makes a bank transfer, he is deprived of the use of a potentially significant sum for the entire period from the date on which the challenge is initiated to the date on which the decision of the CNSC or the judgment of the competent court becomes final. The applicant thus incurs the opportunity cost of not being able to use those funds for other purposes. If the applicant opts instead for a guarantee instrument provided by a bank or an insurance company, he has to bear the costs related to that instrument. (59)

56. It seems clear to me, moreover, that such a procedural requirement does not protect contracting authorities adequately from frivolous challenges. Under the transitional regime, the contracting authority has to return the good conduct guarantee to the applicant within five days following the date on which the decision of the CNSC or the judgment has become final, even where the applicant manifestly abused his right to access review procedures. The costs which the transitional regime involves may therefore not be such as to discourage an economic operator from lodging a challenge that pursues an objective other than those for which the review procedures are established — for example, harming a competitor. They may nevertheless prove an obstacle to an economic operator with an arguable claim but limited means.

57. Finally, the transitional regime — like the original regime — draws no distinction between arguable claims and frivolous ones. For that reason, the limitation on access to review procedures which it involves clearly goes beyond what is necessary to achieve the objective of dissuading frivolous challenges.

58. I therefore conclude that Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 and Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 92/13, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, preclude national legislation such as the transitional regime, which requires an applicant to lodge a 'good conduct guarantee' in order to obtain access to review of a contracting authority's decisions and under which that applicant automatically gets back the guarantee at the end of the challenge, whatever its outcome.

Conclusion

59. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the Court should answer the questions referred by the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania) and the Curtea de Apel Oradea (Court of Appeal, Oradea, Romania) as follows:

– Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended and Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, preclude national legislation such as that in issue in the main proceedings, which requires an applicant to lodge a 'good conduct guarantee' in order to obtain access to review of a contracting authority's decisions relating to public procurement and under which the contracting authority must retain that guarantee if the challenge is rejected or withdrawn, regardless of whether or not the challenge is frivolous.

– The same provisions of EU law also preclude national legislation which requires an applicant to lodge a 'good conduct guarantee' in order to obtain access to review of a contracting authority's decisions and under which that applicant automatically gets back the guarantee at the end of the challenge, whatever its outcome.

1 – Original language: English.

2 – Of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31).

3 – Of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

4 – Of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14).

5 – Save that Article 1 of Directive 92/13 cross-refers to Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) rather than to Directive 2004/18.

6 – In what follows, I shall refer to those provisions as the ‘original regime’.

7 – Article 55(2)(a) and (b) of the OUG No 34/2006 concerns public supply and public service contracts.

8 – Article 55(2)(c) of the OUG No 34/2006 concerns public works contracts.

9 – The ‘remaining provisions’ (as I understand it) are in essence Article 271a except the requirement of unconditional payment in paragraph 5 thereof, and Article 271b(3) to (5) of the OUG No 34/2006. In this Opinion, I shall refer to these provisions as the ‘transitional regime’ and distinguish it from both the ‘original regime’ and the new regime which, as the Romanian Government indicated at the hearing, the Romanian legislature envisages adopting at some point in the future.

In judgment of 15 April 2008 in Impact (C-268/06, EU:C:2008:223, paragraphs 47 and 48), the Court held that the requirements of equivalence and effectiveness embodied the general obligation on the Member States to ensure judicial protection of an individual's rights under EU law. The same formula was repeated in the order of 24 April 2009 in Koukou (C-519/08, EU:C:2009:269, paragraph 98). The Court similarly merged the principle of effectiveness as a limit to procedural autonomy and the right to an effective remedy under Article 47 of the Charter in judgment of 6 October 2015 in East Sussex County Council (C-71/14, EU:C:2015:656, paragraph 52 and the case-law cited).

34 – See, by analogy, Opinion of Advocate General Jääskinen in Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:307, point 37. The European Court of Human Rights ('the Strasbourg court') regards a court fee or security for costs as interfering in principle with the right of access to a court protected by Article 6(1) of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed in Rome on 4 November 1950 ('the ECHR') if payment is a pre-condition for examining the case. See, inter alia, judgments of the Strasbourg Court of 13 July 1995 in Tolstoy Miloslavski v. the United Kingdom, CE:ECHR:1992:0220DEC00181399, §§ 59 to 67; 4 May 2006 in *Weissman and Others v. 36 — The Strasbourg Court has made it clear that, whereas Member States enjoy a certain margin of appreciation permitting them to impose such restrictions, those restrictions must not restrict or reduce access to a court in such a way that the very essence of the right is impaired, they must pursue a legitimate aim and there must be a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the aim pursued. See, to that effect, judgments of the Strasbourg Court of 13 July 1995 in Tolstoy Miloslavski v. the United Kingdom, CE:ECHR:1992:0220DEC00181399, §§ 59 to 67, and 19 June 2001 in Kreuz v. Poland, CE:ECHR:2001:0619JUD002824995, §§ 54 and 55 (cited in judgment of 22 December 2010 in DEB, C-279/09, EU:C:2010:811, paragraph 47). 37 – In Orizzonte Salute, the Court made clear that Article 1 of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted in the light of Article 47 of the Charter. However, it limited its analysis of the principle of effectiveness to verifying that the court fee system there at issue was not liable to render practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of the rights conferred by EU public procurement law (judgment of 6 October 2015 in Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraphs 49 and 72). The Court did not conduct a proportionality test under Article 52(1) of the Charter. By contrast, in other cases, the Court has applied the proportionality test to assess limitations on the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal under Article 47 of the Charter. See, inter alia, the judgments of 18 March 2010 in Alassini and Others, C-317/08 to C-320/08, EU:C:2010:146, paragraphs 61 to 66, and 26 September 2013 in Texdata Software, C-418/11, EU:C:2013:588, paragraphs 84 to 88.

40 – That distinguishes the good conduct guarantee from the court fees in issue in the judgment of 6 October 2015 in Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655.

41 – According to the introduction to the OUG No 51/2014, challenges which are manifestly unfounded or which seek only to delay proceedings have several harmful consequences. Thus, contracting authorities may lose external (including EU) funding due to abnormal delays in contract award procedures and be unable to carry out important projects of public interest. Furthermore, frivolous challenges overburden staff involved in defending contracting authorities before the CNSC or courts and more generally undermine the CNSC's efficiency.

42 – See, by analogy, judgment of 6 October 2015 in Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraphs 73 and 74. That is also the position of the Strasbourg court. See, inter alia, judgments of the Strasbourg Court of 12 July 2007 in Stankov v. Bulgaria, CE:ECHR:2007:0712JUD006849001, § 57, and 3 June 2014, *Harrison McKee v. ---

47 – That is all the more so for tenderers, who are required in addition to lodge a tendering guarantee of up to 2% of the estimated contract value (Article 43a of the OUG No 34/2006). Although the Romanian Government submitted at the hearing that the two guarantees serve different purposes, the fact remains that a tenderer may lose both of them in the course of a single contract award procedure.

55 – I borrow that expression from the Strasbourg court's case-law, under which the purpose of Article 13 ECHR is to guarantee an effective remedy for 'arguable claims'. See, inter alia, judgment of the Strasbourg Court of, 23 June 2011 in Diallo v. the Czech Republic, CE:ECHR:2011:0623JUD002049307, § 56.

56 – Those circumstances might include whether case-law is settled on a particular point of law, whether the challenge merely repeats a previous one or whether it is based on a plainly wrong reading of the challenged measure or on a manifestly wrong factual premiss.

57 – See points 40 and 41 above.

---

58 – Article 271a(2) of the OUG No 34/2006.

---

59 – It is unclear whether the applicant would be reimbursed for those costs by the contracting authority where the CNSC or the court upholds the challenge. Even if that is the case, the successful applicant would still have had to incur the costs initially in order to obtain access to the review procedure. Thus, the requirement to provide a guarantee will still have constituted an obstacle to access.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum in OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44).

2 The reference has been made in proceedings between Dr. Falk Pharma GmbH ('Falk') and DAK-Gesundheit ('DAK') a statutory health insurance fund, with Kohlpharma GmbH as a joined party, concerning a procedure carried out by DAK in order to conclude rebate contracts with undertakings marketing a medicinal product whose active ingredient is mesalazine and which led to such an agreement being reached with Kohlpharma.

Legal context

3 Recitals 2 and 3 of Directive 2004/18 state as follows:

'(2) The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.

(3) Such coordinating provisions should comply as far as possible with current procedures and practices in each of the Member States.'

4 Recital 11 of that directive states:

'A Community definition of framework agreements, together with specific rules on framework agreements concluded for contracts falling within the scope of this Directive, should be provided. Under these rules, when a contracting authority enters into a framework agreement in accordance with the provisions of this Directive relating, in particular, to advertising, time limits and conditions for the submission of tenders, it may enter into contracts based on such a framework agreement during its term of validity either by applying the terms set forth in the framework agreement or, if all terms have not been fixed in advance in the framework agreement, by reopening competition between the parties to the framework agreement in relation to those terms. ...'

5 Article 1(2)(a) of the Directive provides that 'Public contracts' are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of [that] Directive'.

6 Article 1(5) defines 'framework agreement' in the following terms:

‘A “framework agreement” is an agreement between one or more contracting authorities and one or more economic operators, the purpose of which is to establish the terms governing contracts to be awarded during a given period, in particular with regard to price and, where appropriate, the quantity envisaged.’

7 Article 2 of that directive is worded as follows:

8 Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

2. For the purpose of concluding a framework agreement, contracting authorities shall follow the rules of procedure referred to in this Directive for all phases up to the award of contracts based on that framework agreement. The parties to the framework agreement shall be chosen by applying the award criteria set in accordance with Article 53.

Contracts based on a framework agreement shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures laid down in paragraphs 3 and 4. Those procedures may be applied only between the contracting authorities and the economic operators originally party to the framework agreement.

4. Where a framework agreement is concluded with several economic operators, the latter must be at least three in number, insofar as there is a sufficient number of economic operators to satisfy the selection criteria and/or of admissible tenders which meet the award criteria.

Contracts based on framework agreements concluded with several economic operators may be awarded either:

– by application of the terms laid down in the framework agreement without reopening competition, or,

– where not all the terms are laid down in the framework agreement, when the parties are again in competition on the basis of the same and, if necessary, more precisely formulated terms, and, where appropriate, other terms referred to in the specifications of the framework agreement, in accordance with the following procedure:

9 Under the first paragraph of Article 43 of that directive:

‘For every contract, framework agreement, and every establishment of a dynamic purchasing system, the contracting authorities shall draw up a written report which shall include at least the following:

(e) the name of the successful tenderer and the reasons why his tender was selected and, if known, the share of the contract or framework agreement which the successful tenderer intends to subcontract to third parties;

10 Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), the implementing measures for which must, in accordance with Article 90(1) of that directive, come into force by 18 April 2016, defines procurement in the following terms in Article 1(2):

‘Procurement within the meaning of this Directive is the acquisition by means of a public contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the works, supplies or services are intended for a public purpose.’

National law

11 Under Paragraph 129(1) of the Sozialgesetzbuch, Fünftes Buch — Gesetzliche Krankenversicherung (Social Security Code, Fifth Book — Statutory Health Insurance) (‘SGB V’), in the case of the supply of a medicinal product which has been prescribed by indicating its active ingredient and whose replacement by a medicinal product with an equivalent active ingredient is not excluded by the prescribing doctor, pharmacists must replace the medicinal product prescribed with another medicinal product with an equivalent active ingredient in respect of which a rebate contract has been concluded, within the meaning of Paragraph 130a(8) of the SGB V.

12 In accordance with that provision, the health insurance funds or their associations may enter into two-year agreements with pharmaceutical undertakings discounting the sale price of medicinal products which are issued and chargeable by those funds.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

13 On 28 August 2013, DAK published in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union a notice concerning an ‘authorisation procedure’ for the conclusion of rebate contracts, in accordance with Paragraph 130a(8) of the SGB V, concerning medicinal products whose active ingredient is mesalazine. The rebate rate was fixed at 15% of the ‘ex-factory’ price and the period covered ran from 1 October 2013 to 30 September 2015.

14 That procedure provided for the authorisation of all interested undertakings meeting the authorisation criteria and for the conclusion with each of those undertakings of identical contracts whose terms were fixed and non-negotiable. Furthermore, any other undertaking fulfilling those criteria also had the opportunity of acceding on the same terms to the rebate contract scheme during the contract period.

15 The notice of 28 August 2013 indicated that that procedure was not subject to public procurement law.

16 Kohlpharma was the only undertaking which expressed its interest in response to that notice. A contract was concluded with that undertaking on 5 December 2013. The substitution mechanism provided for in Paragraph 129(1) of the SGB V was implemented from 1 January 2014 in the computer system used by pharmacies. The conclusion of that contract was the subject of a notice in the Official Journal on 22 February 2014.

17 On 17 January 2014, Falk brought proceedings before the Vergabekammer des Bundes (Federal Public Procurement Board, Germany) seeking a declaration that the authorisation procedure initiated by DAK and the only contract award which resulted from that procedure were incompatible with public procurement law. The Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany) is hearing that case on appeal.

18 In those proceedings, Falk maintains that public procurement law applies where a body classified as a contracting authority procures goods on the market and that law requires that there be a call for tenders, which implies the conclusion of exclusive contracts.

19 Conversely, DAK considers that in order to acquire the goods and services which it requires a contracting authority can have recourse not only to public procurement but also to other models and is, therefore, free to award the contract on an exclusive basis following a selection decision but also to conclude contracts with all the interested undertakings without a selection process. The existence of a selection decision is a constituent element of the concept of ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Directive 2004/18 and of EU law on the subject, with the result that, in the absence of selection, a contract, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, would not be a public contract.

20 Kohlpharma takes the view that a contracting authority's freedom of choice concerning the type of contract necessary to fulfil a public service obligation is contained in the Court's case-law concerning the award of service contracts.

21 The referring court states that the admissibility of the action brought by Falk depends on whether a standard rebate contract, within the meaning of Paragraph 130a(8) of the SGB V, concluded in an authorisation procedure with all interested economic operators, without a selection decision, constitutes a public contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18. In other words, the issue is whether a public contract is characterised by a selection made by the contracting authority which implies that the operator selected has exclusivity. If that were the case, an authorisation procedure for the conclusion of contracts with all interested economic operators would not constitute a procedure for the award of a public contract.

22 That court notes that the national case-law is divided on this question. For certain courts a public contract is a contract which gives the chosen operator exclusivity, so that a contract which is concluded with all the operators who wish to conclude such a contract does not constitute a public contract. Other courts take the view that all contracts concluded by a contracting authority are public contracts and that the choice of one of the tenderers, and therefore the grant of exclusivity, is an obligation of a contracting authority.

23 The referring court is inclined to the view that rebate contracts such as those at issue in the main proceedings are not public contracts. On account of the award of those contracts to all operators who fulfil the fixed terms and who ask to be included, there is no selection, no award of an economic advantage to an operator and, therefore, no risk of discrimination. As is apparent from recital 2 and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, the law of public procurement has as its specific objective the avoidance of the abuses linked to those sort of risks.

24 That court refers in support of those considerations, first, to the judgment of 10 September 2009 in Eurawasser (C-206/08, EU:C:2009:540) from which it infers that a contract must not necessarily be awarded in the form of a public service contract where there is a legal alternative, which, in the case in the main proceedings giving rise to that judgment, was recourse to the use of a service concession. Neither primary law nor secondary legislation seems to imply, to the national court, that any acquisition must be the subject of a public procurement contract. It considers that although a distinction exists between public contract and service concession because of the nature of the consideration provided for in the contract, nothing precludes the existence or not of a choice between the interested economic operators being based on another distinction. That court takes the view that the judgment of 15 July 2010 in Commission v Germany (C-271/08, EU:C:2010:426) could indirectly confirm that conclusion in that the Court held, in paragraph 73, that public procurement directives have the objective of excluding the risk that a preference might be given to national tenderers or candidates in any procurement carried out by contracting authorities.

25 Secondly, the national court refers to Directive 2014/24, especially the definition of the concept of 'public procurement' introduced in that directive, which expressly refers to the choice of economic operators and the second paragraph of recital 4 of that directive, which excludes from the concept of public contract cases in which all operators fulfilling certain conditions are entitled to perform a given task without any selectivity, one of the examples given appearing to refer to a scheme comparable to that at issue in the main proceedings. The national court considers that, although in this case Directive 2014/24 does not apply ratione temporis, the definition of the concept of 'public procurement' which it contains, where Directive 2004/18 does not define that concept, does not introduce any change. EU law on public contracts has always been characterised by an element of competition.

26 If selection is a characteristic of a public contract and, therefore, an authorisation procedure for a rebate contract scheme, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, is not, in principle, a public procurement procedure, the national court is of the view that it is necessary to specify the conditions governing such an authorisation procedure which must be met in order for a contracting authority to be able to forgo a procurement procedure implying the selection of one or more operators.

27 That court states that the principles of non-discrimination and equality of treatment and the requirement of transparency, which are to be inferred above all from primary law, impose procedural and substantive requirements which also apply to that authorisation procedure, so as to guarantee that that procedure is in fact exempt from all selectivity, not giving any competitive advantage to any operator. However, the way in which an authorisation procedure is organised may give rise to discrimination and unequal treatment.

28 The requirements of such a procedure could be EU-wide publication of the opening of that procedure and of the contracts concluded in that procedure, clarity of the rules governing authorisation, the fixing a priori of the standard-form rebate contracts and the possibility of acceding to the contract at any time.

29 That possibility of acceding at any time distinguishes an authorisation procedure, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, from a procedure for the award of a framework agreement governed by Article 32 of Directive 2004/18. The requirement imposed by Article 32(2), second subparagraph, that contracts based on a framework agreement can only be concluded between economic operators who are parties to that framework agreement, stems from the selective nature of that type of agreement. According to the referring court, to impose such a restriction on an authorisation procedure by fixing a time limit beyond which an operator can no longer accede to a rebate contract scheme would have a discriminatory effect since it would give a competitive advantage to operators who had acceded to that scheme.

30 That court takes the view that the mechanism for substituting a medicinal product laid down in Paragraph 129 of the SGB V does not give such a competitive advantage in the case of accession to a rebate contract scheme within the meaning of Paragraph 130a(8) of the SGB V. The situation is different where such a rebate contract is concluded in a procedure for the award of a public contract. In that situation, the exclusivity from which the successful tenderer benefits has the consequence that that tenderer enjoys a special competitive position, the award of the contract having a decisive effect on competition. By contrast, where such contracts are concluded with all interested operators, the substitution of a medicinal product takes place on the basis of a choice made not by the contracting authority but by the pharmacist or the patient depending on the sale conditions proposed by the operators who have acceded to the rebate contract scheme. Accordingly, it is possible that some of the contracting operators may see their product sold only rarely. It is the same if, as in the present case, a single operator has contracted. In granting the right to contract at any moment to any interested operator, the contracting authority refrains from exercising an influence on the competitive situation, which depends not on the possibility of substituting the contracting operator’s medicinal products but on the decision taken by each operator who is potentially interested in participating or not in the rebate contract scheme.

31 In those circumstances, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Does the concept of a “public contract” under Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC no longer apply if a contracting authority carries out an authorisation procedure in which it awards the contract without selecting one or more economic operators?

(2) If the answer to question 1 is that the selection of one or more economic operators is a characteristic of a public contract, ... must the characteristic of the selection of economic operators [which would imply in that situation the concept of “public contract”] within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC be interpreted, in the light of Article 2 of that directive, as meaning that contracting authorities may refrain from selecting one or more economic operators by way of an authorisation procedure only if the following conditions are satisfied:

– the carrying out of an authorisation procedure is published at European level, – clear rules concerning the conclusion of the contract and acceding to the contract are set,

– the terms of the contract are set in advance in such a way that no economic operator is able to influence the content of the contract, – economic operators are granted the right to accede to the contract at any time;

– the contracts concluded are published at European level?’

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

32 By its first question the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contract scheme, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, through which a public entity intends to acquire goods on the market by contracting throughout the period of validity of that scheme with any economic operator who undertakes to provide the goods concerned on fixed terms, without choosing between the interested operators, and allows those operators to accede to that scheme throughout its period of validity, must be classified as a public contract within the meaning of that directive.

33 Admittedly, as certain interested parties who presented their written observations to the Court note, such a scheme leads to the conclusion of contracts for a pecuniary interest between a public entity, which could be a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, and economic operators whose objective is to supply goods, which corresponds to the definition of ‘public contracts’ laid down in Article 1(2)(a) of that directive.

34 However, it should be noted, first, according to recital 2 of that directive, the coordinating provisions which it establishes must be interpreted in accordance with the principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services and the principles that derive therefrom, such as equality of treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency to which the award of public contracts in Member States are subject.

35 Secondly, the coordination at EU level of the procedures for the award of public service contracts being, therefore, to protect the interests of economic operators established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State, the purpose of Directive 2004/18 is to avoid the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities (see to that effect, concerning the directive relating to public service contracts previously in force, judgment of 10 November 1998 in BFI Holding, C-360/96, EU:C:1998:525, paragraphs 41 and 42 and the case-law cited).

36 Essentially, the risk of favouring national economic operators which that directive seeks to preclude is closely connected to the selection which the contracting authority intends to make from the admissible tenders and to the exclusivity which will result from the award of the contract concerned to the operator whose tender has been accepted or to the economic operators whose tenders have been accepted, in the case of a framework agreement, that constituting the objective of a public procurement procedure.

37 Consequently, where a public entity seeks to conclude supply contracts with all the economic operators wishing to supply the goods concerned in accordance with the conditions specified by that entity, the fact that the contracting authority does not designate an economic operator to whom contractual exclusivity is to be awarded means that there is no need to control, through the detailed rules of Directive 2004/18, the action of that contracting authority so as to prevent it from awarding a contract in favour of national operators.

38 It is therefore apparent that the choice of a tender and, thus, of a successful tenderer, is intrinsically linked to the regulation of public contracts by that directive and, consequently, to the concept of ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Article 1(2) of that directive.

39 That finding is supported by Article 43, first paragraph, (e) of Directive 2004/18, which provides that for every contract, framework agreement, and every establishment of a dynamic purchasing system, the contracting authorities are to draw up a written report which is to include the name of the successful tenderer and the reasons why his tender was selected.

40 It must, moreover, be pointed out that that principle is expressly set out in the definition of the concept of ‘procurement’, now set out in Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/24, in respect of which one aspect is the choice by the contracting authority of the economic operator from whom it will acquire by means of a public contract the works, supplies or services which are the subject matter of that contract.

41 Lastly, it should be noted that the special feature of a contractual scheme, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, namely its permanent availability for the duration of its validity to interested operators and, therefore, its not being limited to a preliminary period in the course of which undertakings are invited to express their interest to the public entity concerned, suffices to distinguish that scheme from a framework agreement. In accordance with Article 32(2), second subparagraph, of Directive 2004/18, contracts based on a framework agreement can only be awarded to economic operators who are originally parties to that framework agreement.

42 The answer to the first question, therefore, is that Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contract scheme, such as that in the main proceedings, through which a public entity intends to acquire goods on the market by contracting throughout the period of validity of that scheme with any economic operator who undertakes to provide the goods concerned in accordance with predetermined conditions, without choosing between the interested operators, and allows them to accede to that scheme throughout its validity, does not constitute a public contract within the meaning of that directive.

43 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, what conditions under EU law govern the validity of an authorisation procedure for a contract scheme, such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

44 It should be noted that such a procedure, in so far as its subject matter is of certain cross-border interest, is subject to the fundamental rules of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination between economic operators and the consequent obligation of transparency, that obligation requiring that there be adequate publicity. In that regard, Member States have some latitude in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings for the purpose of adopting measures intended to ensure observance of the principles of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency.

45 However, the requirement of transparency implies publicity which allows potentially interested economic operators to apprise themselves properly of the conduct and the essential characteristics of an authorisation procedure such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

46 It is for the referring court to assess whether the authorisation procedure at issue in the main proceedings satisfies those requirements.

47 The answer to the second question is therefore that in so far as the subject matter of an authorisation procedure, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, is of certain cross-border interest, that procedure must be conceived and organised in accordance with the fundamental rules of the FEU Treaty, in particular, the principles of non-discrimination and equal treatment between economic operators and the consequent obligation of transparency.

Costs

48 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber), hereby rules:

1. Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that a contract scheme, such as that in the main proceedings, through which a public entity intends to acquire goods on the market by contracting throughout the period of validity of that scheme with any economic operator who undertakes to provide the goods concerned in accordance with predetermined conditions, without choosing between the interested operators and, allows them to accede to that scheme throughout its validity, does not constitute a public contract within the meaning of that directive.

2. In so far as the subject matter of an authorisation procedure, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, is of certain cross-border interest, that procedure must be conceived and organised in accordance with the fundamental rules of the FEU Treaty, in particular, the principles of non-discrimination and equal treatment between economic operators and the consequent obligation of transparency.

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 25 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004

L 134, p. 114, corrigendum OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44), as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 2083/2005 of 19 December 2005 (OJ 2005 L 333, p. 28) ('Directive 2004/18'), and of Article 98 of Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 of 11 July 2006 laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund and repealing Regulation (EC) No 1260/1999 (OJ 2006 L 210, p. 25).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the Wrocław — Miasto na prawach powiatu (City of Wrocław, Poland) and the Minister Infrastruktury i Rozwoju (Minister for Infrastructure and Development) concerning a decision imposing on the former a financial correction as a result of the alleged infringement of Directive 2004/18 in the context of the award of a public works contract relating to works co-financed by European Union funds.

Legal context

Directive 2004/18

3 In accordance with Article 7(c) of Directive 2004/18, it was applicable, at the time of the facts at issue in the main proceedings, to public works contracts which are not excluded and which have a value exclusive of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than EUR 5 278 000.

4 The possibility for a tenderer to subcontract a share of the contract to third parties is envisaged, in particular, in Article 25 of that directive in the following terms:

'In the contract documents, the contracting authority may ask or may be required by a Member State to ask the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors.

This indication shall be without prejudice to the question of the principal economic operator's liability.'

5 Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Conditions for performance of contracts' provides:

'Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with Community law and are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications. The conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.'

6 That provision is explained by recital 33 to that directive, which states that the contract performance conditions are compatible with that directive 'provided that they are not directly or indirectly discriminatory and are indicated in the contract notice or in the contract documents. They may, in particular, be intended to favour on-site vocational training, the employment of people experiencing particular difficulty in achieving integration, the fight against unemployment or the protection of the environment. For instance, mention may be made, amongst other things, of the conditions — applicable during performance of the contract — to recruit long-term job-seekers or to implement training measures for the unemployed or young persons, to comply in substance with the provisions of the basic International Labour Organisation (ILO) Conventions, assuming that such provisions have not been implemented in national law, and to recruit more handicapped persons than are required under national legislation'.

7 Directive 2004/18 also sets out qualitative selection criteria which make it possible to determine the candidates admitted to participate in the procedure for the award of a public contract. Article 48 of that directive, relating to technical and professional abilities, is worded as follows:

(2) Evidence of the economic operators' technical abilities may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services:

(b) an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, whether or not belonging directly to the economic operator's undertaking, especially those responsible for quality control and, in the case of public works contracts, those upon whom the contractor can call in order to carry out the work;

(i) an indication of the proportion of the contract which the services provider intends possibly to subcontract;

(3) An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.

(5) In procedures for awarding public contracts having as their object supplies requiring siting or installation work, the provision of services and/or the execution of works, the ability of economic operators to provide the service or to execute the installation or the work may be evaluated in particular with regard to their skills, efficiency, experience and reliability.

(6) The contracting authority shall specify, in the notice or in the invitation to tender, which references under paragraph 2 it wishes to receive.'

8 Recital 66 to Regulation No 1083/2006 states:

'The obligations on the Member States as regards management and control systems, the certification of expenditure, and the prevention, detection and correction of irregularities and infringements of Community law should be specified to guarantee the efficient and correct implementation of operational programmes. …'

9 Article 1 of that regulation provides:

'This Regulation lays down the general rules governing the European Regional Development Fund (ERDF), the European Social Fund (ESF) (hereinafter referred to as the Structural Funds) and the Cohesion Fund …

To this end, this Regulation lays down the principles and rules on partnership, programming, evaluation, management, including financial management, monitoring and control on the basis of responsibilities shared between the Member States and the Commission.'

10 Article 2(7) of that regulation defines 'irregularity' as 'any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the general budget'.

11 In accordance with Article 9(5) of Regulation No 1083/2006, operations financed by the Structural Funds or the Cohesion Fund must be compatible in particular with the provisions of secondary legislation.

12 Article 98 of that regulation, entitled ‘Financial corrections by Member States’ provides:

‘(1) The Member States shall in the first instance bear the responsibility for investigating irregularities, acting upon evidence of any major change affecting the nature or the conditions for the implementation or control of operations or operational programmes and making the financial corrections required.

(2) The Member State shall make the financial corrections required in connection with the individual or systemic irregularities detected in operations or operational programmes. The corrections made by a Member State shall consist of cancelling all or part of the public contribution to the operational programme. The Member State shall take into account the nature and gravity of the irregularities and the financial loss to the Fund.

Polish law

13 It follows from the order for reference that Article 36(5) of the ustawa z dnia 29 stycznia 2004 r.– Prawo zamówień publicznych (Law on public contracts), of 29 January 2004 (‘the p.z.p.’), in the version applicable at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, was drafted as follows:

‘The contracting authority may specify in the tender specifications which share of the contract cannot be subcontracted.’

14 That provision was subsequently amended so that an economic operator may subcontract performance of a public contract which was awarded to him, other than where, on account of the specific nature of the object of the contract, the contracting authority stipulates in the tender specifications that that contract, in whole or in part, cannot be subcontracted.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

15 On 18 May 2007, the competent department of the City of Wrocław initiated a restricted procedure for the award of a public contract relating to the partial construction of a bypass. That project, the cost of which was approximately EUR 65 million, benefited from Union financial support in accordance with the operational programme of Community support for the Republic of Poland relating to infrastructure and the environment, in the context of the ‘Convergence’ objective, co-financed by the Cohesion Fund and the ERDF.

16 Out of the seven operators who applied to participate in that procedure, five were invited to submit a tender. The tender specifications sent to those five operators contained a stipulation worded as follows:

‘The economic operator is obliged to perform at least 25% of the works covered by the contract using its own resources.’

17 On 1 August 2008, the City of Wrocław concluded a public contract with the operator it had selected.

18 Following an administrative procedure subsequent to the performance of that contract, brought by the national authorities responsible for monitoring the lawfulness of certain actions co-financed by the Union, the City of Wrocław was subject to a claim for a financial correction of 8 600 473.38 Polish zlotys (PLN) (approximately, EUR 1 960 000) in principal, corresponding to 5% of the amount of costs borne by public funds, as a result of the alleged irregularity of that stipulation in the light of Directive 2004/18, applicable to the contract at issue given the value thereof.

19 According to the order for reference, at the final stage of that administrative procedure, the competent authority justified that financial correction, first, by the fact that the contested stipulation limited the use of subcontractors without respecting Article 36(5) of the p.z.p. The objective of that provision is to ensure that the parts of a contract requiring specific knowledge and skills, and the quality of performance of which depends therefore on the specific skills of the performer, are effectively carried out by the economic operator whose skills were evaluated in the context of the procurement procedure. That objective is particularly important since the provisions of national law applicable on the date of the facts in the main proceedings do not allow economic operators to rely on the capacities of third parties in order to show that they satisfy the capacity criteria so as to participate in the procedure for the award of a public contract.

20 According to that authority, the contracting authority pursuant to Article 36(5) of the p.z.p. was therefore required to state specifically which parts of the contract at issue must be performed personally by the contractor. A stipulation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which merely implicitly laid down a percentage of the works corresponding to a part thereof which must be performed by the contractor, does not allow it to be determined, in infringement of the objective of Article 36(5) of the p.z.p., whether the restriction on the use of subcontractors concerns works which require specific skills. That infringement of national law amounts also to an infringement of Article 25 of Directive 2004/18, that authority referring, in that regard, to the judgment of 18 March 2004 in Siemens and ARGE Telekom (C-314/01, EU:C:2004:159).

21 Secondly, despite the fact that the alleged infringement of EU law has no effect on the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, the limitation on the use of subcontractors has a detrimental effect on the general budget of the Union. That limitation created a potential disturbance of the competitive balance capable of resulting in an increase of the prices offered in the tenders, such a risk sufficing to constitute an irregularity within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006.

22 It is apparent from the elements of the file before the Court that the rate of the financial correction applied in this case was calculated by means of a scale used by the competent authority.

23 The City of Wrocław brought an action against the decision imposing the financial correction before the referring court, contesting the merits of the two grounds on which that decision is based. As regards the lawfulness of the contested stipulation of the tender specifications, it claims that Article 36(5) of the p.z.p., in the version in force at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, contained the principle that the contractor must perform the contract itself, the use of subcontractors constituting an exception, and it is on that basis that the contracting authority could authorise it to do so, but it is not required to do so. The referring court appears to agree with that interpretation of the provision at issue.

24 The latter considers that it is necessary for the determination of the dispute before it to receive from the Court the interpretation, first, of Article 25 of Directive 2004/18, in particular the terms ‘share of the contract’, in order to determine whether that provision precludes a contracting authority from fixing a maximum percentage of the share of the contract that the future contractor will be able to subcontract. That court also questions whether such a limitation could be affected by Article 26 of that directive, as a condition for performance within the meaning of that provision.

25 That court considers that it follows from the judgment of 18 March 2004 in Siemens and ARGE Telekom (C-314/01, EU:C:2004:159), that Directive 2004/18 allows the use of subcontractors for the performance of public contracts to be limited on condition that that did not prevent economic operators who wish to rely on the technical and economic capacities of subcontractors from participating in a tender procedure. However, that judgment does not address the question whether a contracting authority is authorised to express as a percentage the volume of works which the contractor must perform personally.

26 Moreover, the referring court questions whether a stipulation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, by restricting the possibility for small- and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) to participate in the performance of works in the context of a public contract, is not capable of infringing the principle of the opening of public contracts to undistorted competition, since that opening concerns all enterprises, whatever their size, it seeming that particular attention should be paid in that regard to SMEs. That court refers, in that regard, to the Court’s case-law, in particular to the judgment of 10 October 2013 in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino (C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 33).

27 Secondly, that court considers that it is also necessary to receive clarification regarding the concept of ‘irregularity’ within the meaning of Regulation No 1083/2006, so that it can determine whether, in the light of the circumstances of the case before it, the importance of the potential infringement of EU law which affected the procurement procedure at issue requires a financial correction.

28 In that regard, it questions whether all infringements of EU law in the field of public contracts constitute such an irregularity which must result in a financial correction or whether it is necessary to take into account the specific circumstances of each case, in particular the effects of a possible infringement of that law. As regards those specific circumstances, it notes, in this case, that the applicable law was interpreted as not excluding a stipulation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, that that stipulation nevertheless authorised the use of subcontractors for 75% of the works subject to the contract, that it was uncontested and that the call for tenders led to a high level of competition.

29 In that context, the Wojewódzki Sąd Administracyjny w Warszawie (Regional Administrative Court, Warsaw, Poland) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) In the light of Article 25 of Directive 2004/18 ... is the contracting authority allowed to stipulate in the tender specifications that the economic operator is required to perform at least 25% of the works covered by the contract using its own resources?

(2) If the answer to the first question is in the negative, does the application of the requirement described in that question in a procedure for the award of a public contract result in an infringement of provisions of EU law which justifies the need to make a financial correction pursuant to Article 98 of Regulation No 1083/2006?’

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

30 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority is authorised to require, by means of a stipulation in the contract documents for a public works contract, that the future successful tenderer for that contract perform using its own resources a certain percentage of the works under that contract.

31 Pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 25 of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authority may ask or may be required by a Member State to ask the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors.

32 As the Court stated in paragraph 31 of the judgment of 10 October 2013 in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino (C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646), by that article, Directive 2004/18 provides for the use of subcontractors without imposing any limit in that regard.

33 On the contrary, to the extent that Article 48(3) of that directive provides for the possibility, for tenderers, to prove that they meet the minimum levels of technical and professional capacities fixed by the contracting authority by relying on the capacities of third party entities, in so far as they establish that they indeed have the necessary means for the performance of the contract which they do not themselves own if that contract is awarded to them, establishes the possibility, for tenderers, to use subcontractors for the performance of a contract, and that in a way which is, in principle, unlimited.

34 Nevertheless, where the procurement documents require tenderers to indicate, in their tenders, the share of the contract they may intend to subcontract and the proposed subcontractors, in accordance with the first paragraph of Article 25 of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authority is entitled to prohibit use of subcontractors whose capacities could not be verified at the level of examination of tenders and selection of the contractor, for the performance of essential parts of the contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 18 March 2004 in Siemens and ARGE Telekom, C-314/01, EU:C:2004:159, paragraph 45).

35 Such is not however the effect of a stipulation such as that at issue in the main proceeding, which imposes limitations on the use of subcontractors for a share of the contract fixed in abstract terms as a certain percentage of that contract, and that irrespective of the possibility of verifying the capacities of potential subcontractors and without any mention of the essential character of the tasks which would be concerned. In all those respects, such a stipulation is incompatible with Directive 2004/18, which is relevant in the context of the main proceedings.

36 Moreover, as the Advocate General stated in point 41 of her Opinion, such a stipulation, assuming it constitutes a condition for the performance of the contract for the purposes of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, cannot be accepted under that article, by reason of the very terms thereof, since it is contrary to Article 48(3) of that directive, and thus is contrary to EU law.

37 Therefore, the answer to the first question is that Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority is not authorised to require, by a stipulation in the tender specifications of a public works contract, that the future contractor of that contract perform with its own resources a certain percentage of the works covered by that contract.

38 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 98 of Regulation No 1083/2006, read in conjunction with Article 2(7) of that regulation, must be interpreted as meaning that the fact that a contracting authority imposed a requirement, in the context of a public works contract relating to a project receiving EU financial aid, that the future contractor perform by means of its own resources at least 25% of those works, in infringement of Directive 2004/18, constitutes in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, an ‘irregularity’ within the meaning of Article 2(7) of that regulation, justifying the need to apply a financial correction under Article 98 thereof.

39 Concerning the specific circumstances of this case, the referring court notes that the applicable national law was interpreted as not precluding a stipulation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, that that stipulation nevertheless authorised the use of subcontracting for 75% of the works covered by the contract, that it did not elicit any challenge on the part of candidates who were invited to submit a tender, and who were the only parties to have knowledge of that fact, and that the call for tenders led to a high level of competition.

40 The question referred has therefore two aspects, the first relating to the concept of ‘irregularity’ within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 and, the second, to the financial correction mechanism to be implemented by the national authorities in the event of irregularity, in accordance with Article 98 of that regulation.

41 In the first place, that concept of ‘irregularity’ covers, in accordance with Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, any infringement of a provision of EU law resulting from an act or omission of an economic operator which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the budget.

42 It should be noted that it is the last part of that definition which gives rise to doubts on the part of the referring court, given that, in this case, the stipulation which must be considered to be contrary to EU law in the light of the answer to the first question appears to that court not to have had a material consequence.

43 In that regard, it should be noted that, admittedly, as the Advocate General stated in points 53 to 55 of her Opinion, referring in particular to Article 9(5) of Regulation No 1083/2006 and, by analogy, to the judgment of 21 December 2011 in Chambre de commerce et d’industrie de l’Indre (C-465/10, EU:C:2011:867, paragraphs 46 and 47), it is the role of the Union to finance, by the Structural Funds or the Cohesion Fund, only actions conducted in complete conformity with EU law.

44 However, it follows from the definition in Article 2(7) of that regulation that an infringement of EU law constitutes an irregularity within the meaning of that provision only if it has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to that budget. Therefore, such an infringement must be considered to be an irregularity in so far as it is capable, as such, to have a budgetary impact. By contrast, there is no requirement that the existence of a specific financial impact be shown (see, by analogy, judgment of 21 December 2011 in Chambre de commerce et d'industrie de l'Indre, C-465/10, EU:C:2011:867, paragraph 47).

45 Consequently, it should be considered that a failure to comply with the public procurement rules constitutes an irregularity within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 in so far as the possibility cannot be excluded that that failure will have an impact on the budget of the Funds.

46 In the second place, as regards the financial correction mechanism provided for in Article 98 of Regulation No 1083/2006, it should be noted that Article 98(1) and (2) of that regulation requires Member States to make a financial correction where an irregularity has been established.

47 However, the first paragraph of Article 98(2) thereof also requires the competent national authority to calculate the amount of the correction to apply by taking into account three criteria, namely the nature and gravity of the irregularities and the resulting financial loss to the Funds.

48 Where, as in the case at issue in the main proceedings, a specific, and not a systematic, irregularity is at issue, that requirement necessarily involves a case-by-case examination, taking all of the circumstances of each relevant case into account in the light of one of those three criteria.

49 Therefore, although, as the Advocate General pointed out in point 60 of her Opinion, that does not preclude a first approach from being carried out on the basis of a scale which respects the principle of proportionality, the fact remains that the calculation of the final amount of the correction to be applied must take account of all of the characteristics of the irregularity found in relation to the elements taken into consideration for the establishment of that scale, which can justify the application of an increased or, on the contrary, a reduced correction.

50 Therefore, circumstances such as the compliance of a stipulation such as that at issue in the main proceedings with national law, the obligation to perform using its own resources a limited share of the contract and the fact that only a risk, which is possibly weak, of a financial impact has been established are capable of influencing the final amount of the financial correction to be applied.

51 The answer to the second question must therefore be that Article 98 of Regulation No 1083/2006, read in conjunction with Article 2(7) of that regulation, must be interpreted as meaning that the fact that a contracting authority imposed a requirement, in the context of a public works contract relating to a project receiving EU financial aid, that the future contractor perform by means of its own resources at least 25% of those works, in infringement of Directive 2004/18, constitutes an 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 2(7) of that regulation, justifying the need to apply a financial correction under Article 98 thereof, in so far as it cannot be excluded that that infringement had an impact on the budget of the Fund at issue. The amount of that correction must be calculated by taking into account all of the specific circumstances which are relevant in the light of the criteria referred to in the first paragraph of Article 98(2) of that regulation, namely the nature and gravity of the irregularity and the resulting financial loss to the Fund concerned.

Costs

52 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 2083/2005 of 19 December 2005, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority is not authorised to require, by a stipulation in the tender specifications of a public works contract, that the future contractor of that contract perform with its own resources a certain percentage of the works covered by that contract.

2. Article 98 of Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 of 11 July 2006 laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund and repealing Regulation (EC) No 1260/1999, read in conjunction with Article 2(7) of that regulation, must be interpreted as meaning that the fact that a contracting authority imposed a requirement, in the context of a public works contract relating to a project receiving EU financial aid, that the future contractor perform by means of its own resources at least 25% of those works, in infringement of Directive 2004/18, constitutes an 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 2(7) of that regulation, justifying the need to apply a financial correction under Article 98 thereof, in so far as it cannot be excluded that that infringement had an impact on the budget of the Fund at issue. The amount of that correction must be calculated by taking into account all of the specific circumstances which are relevant in the light of the criteria referred to in the first paragraph of Article 98(2) of that regulation, namely the nature and gravity of the irregularity and the resulting financial loss to the Fund concerned.

Wrocław - Miasto na prawach powiatu

v

Minister Infrastruktury i Rozwoju

(Public procurement contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Tender specifications — Restriction on the use of subcontracting — Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 — 'Irregularity' giving rise to compulsory financial corrections by the competent national authorities — Infringement of the procedure for the award of a public works contract)

1. The present request for a preliminary ruling arises out of a procedure initiated in May 2007 for the award of a public contract for the construction of a ring road in Wrocław (Poland). The project benefited from EU financial assistance. The City of Wrocław stipulated in the tender specifications that the successful tenderer was to perform at least 25% of the works covered by the contract using its own resources. The public authority in Poland competent to verify proper use of the EU funding took the view that that stipulation infringed the principle of fair competition and therefore was inconsistent with Directive 2004/18/EC. (2) As a consequence, that authority imposed on the City of Wrocław a flat rate correction of 5% of the amount of eligible costs borne by public funds.

2. The City of Wrocław challenges the financial correction before the Wojewódzki Sąd Administracyjny w Warszawie (Regional Administrative Court, Warsaw; 'the referring court'). The referring court seeks guidance, first, on whether Directive 2004/18, which aims in particular to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition, precludes contracting authorities from restricting successful tenderers in their use of subcontracting. If a restriction on subcontracting such as that in issue in the main proceedings is inconsistent with that directive, the referring court also wonders whether Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 (3) requires the financial assistance awarded to that authority to be reduced even where it is not possible to determine precisely the loss suffered by the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund or the Cohesion Fund ('the Funds').

European Union law

Directive 2004/18

3. Directive 2004/18 coordinates at EU level national procedures for the award of public contracts above a certain value. (4) It aims to ensure the effects of the principles of freedom of movement of goods, freedom of establishment, and freedom to provide services and the principles deriving therefrom, including the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency. It also aims to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. (5)

4. Directive 2004/18 contains provisions on subcontracting in order to encourage the involvement of small and medium-sized undertakings in the public contracts procurement market. (6)

5. Article 1(2)(a) defines '[p]ublic contracts' as 'contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of [Directive 2004/18]'. Pursuant to Article 1(11)(b), '[r]estricted procedures' are 'those procedures in which any economic operator may request to participate and whereby only those economic operators invited by the contracting authority may submit a tender'.

6. Article 23(2) ('Technical specifications') provides: 'Technical specifications shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening-up of public procurement to competition.'

7. Pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 25 ('Subcontracting'), '[i]n the contract documents, the contracting authority may ask or may be required by a Member State to ask the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors'.

8. Under Article 26 ('Conditions for performance of contracts'), '[c]ontracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with [EU] law and are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications …'.

9. Article 44(2) ('Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts') states that contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels which are related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them, in order to demonstrate both its economic and financial standing (Article 47(2)) and its technical and/or professional ability (Article 48(3)). In that latter case, it must prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example by producing an undertaking by those entities. Evidence of the economic operators' technical abilities may be furnished, inter alia, by an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, whether or not belonging directly to the economic operator's undertaking, especially those upon whom the contractor can call in order to carry out the work in the case of public works contracts, or by an indication of the proportion of the contract which the services provider intends possibly to subcontract (Article 48(2)(b) and (i)).

Regulation No 2988/95

10. Article 1(1) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 (7) provides: 'For the purposes of protecting the [European Union's] financial interests, general rules are hereby adopted relating to homogenous checks and to administrative measures and penalties concerning irregularities with regard to [EU] law.' Article 1(2) defines 'irregularity' as 'any infringement of a provision of [EU] law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator, which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the [European Union] or budgets managed by [it], either by reducing or losing revenue accruing from own resources collected directly on behalf of the [European Union], or by an unjustified item of expenditure'.

11. Article 2 provides in particular:

> '1. Administrative checks, measures and penalties shall be introduced in so far as they are necessary to ensure the proper application of [EU] law. They shall be effective, proportionate and dissuasive so that they provide adequate protection for the [European Union's] financial interests.
>
> 2. No administrative penalty may be imposed unless [an EU act] prior to the irregularity has made provision for it. In the event of a subsequent amendment of the provisions which impose administrative penalties and are contained in [EU] rules, the less severe provisions shall apply retroactively.
>
> 3. [EU] law shall determine the nature and scope of the administrative measures and penalties necessary for the correct application of the rules in question, having regard to the nature and seriousness of the irregularity, the advantage granted or received and the degree of responsibility.

12. Regulation No 1083/2006 lays down general rules governing the Funds, including principles and rules on financial management, monitoring and control on the basis of responsibilities shared between the Member States and the European Commission (Article 1).

13. According to Article 3(1), action taken by the European Union under what is now Article 174 TFEU must be designed to strengthen the economic and social cohesion of the enlarged European Union in order to promote the harmonious, balanced and sustainable development of the Union. That action must be aimed at reducing the economic, social and territorial disparities which have arisen particularly in countries and regions whose development is lagging behind and in connection with economic and social restructuring and the ageing of the population. (8)

14. Article 2(7) defines ‘irregularity’ as ‘any infringement of a provision of [EU] law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the general budget’.

15. Article 9(2) states in particular that the Commission and the Member States must ensure that assistance from the Funds is consistent with the activities, policies and priorities of the European Union. According to Article 9(5), operations which the Funds finance must therefore comply with the Treaties and acts adopted under them. (9)

16. The first subparagraph of Article 14(1) states that the EU budget allocated to the Funds must be implemented within the framework of shared management between Member States and the Commission, in accordance with Article 53(1)(b) of the Financial Regulation. (10) According to the second subparagraph of Article 14(1), the principle of sound financial management is to be applied in accordance with Article 48(2) of the Financial Regulation. Under that latter provision, the Member States must cooperate with the Commission so that the appropriations are used in accordance with the principle of sound financial management.

17. Pursuant to Article 98(1), which is in Title VII (‘Financial management’), the Member States bear in the first instance responsibility for investigating irregularities, acting upon evidence of any major change affecting the nature or the conditions for the implementation or control of operations or operational programmes and making the financial corrections required. (11) Pursuant to Article 98(2), the Member State must make the financial corrections required in connection with the individual or systemic irregularities detected in operations or operational programmes. Those corrections consist of cancelling all or part of the public contribution to the operational programme, taking into account the nature and gravity of the irregularities and the financial loss to the Funds.

18. Article 99(1), which is also in Title VII, entitles the Commission to make financial corrections by cancelling all or part of the EU contribution to an operational programme in particular where, after carrying out the necessary examination, it concludes that a Member State has not complied with its obligations under Article 98 prior to the opening of the correction procedure.

Polish law

19. Pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Law on public contracts (Ustawa Prawo Zamówień Publicznych) of 29 January 2004, in the version relevant for the main proceedings, contracting authorities must prepare and conduct contract award procedures in a manner which preserves fair competition and equal treatment of economic operators.

20. According to Article 36(4) of the Law on public contracts, the contracting authority requests the operator to indicate in its tender what proportion of the contract he may intend to subcontract. The contracting authority may, pursuant to Article 36(5), stipulate in the tender specifications which part of the contract cannot be subcontracted.

Facts, procedure and questions referred

21. On 18 May 2007, the Roads and Maintenance Board of the City of Wrocław initiated a restricted procedure for the award of a public contract for the construction of the Northern City Centre Ring Road. That project benefited from EU financial assistance under the ‘Infrastructure and Environment’ operational programme (‘the operational programme’). (12)

22. Whilst seven economic operators requested to take part to that procedure, the City of Wrocław invited only five of them to tender. The tender specifications which were sent together with the invitation to tender contained the following stipulation: ‘The economic operator is required to perform at least 25% of the works covered by the contract using its own resources’ (‘the 25% requirement’). Three economic operators submitted a tender.

23. On 1 August 2008, the City of Wrocław concluded a public works contract with the operator it had selected to implement the first part of the project (‘the public works contract’ or ‘the contract’).

24. In 2010, the City of Wrocław concluded an agreement with the director of the Centre for EU Transport Projects (Centrum Unijnych Projektów Transportowych; the 'CUPT') and the director of the City of Wrocław's Office for the Management of EU Funds (Biuro Zarządzania Funduszami Europejskimi Urzędu Miasta Wrocławia) in order to benefit from EU funding. The CUPT was responsible for monitoring the use of financial assistance awarded to the City of Wrocław under the operational programme,

25. The CUPT took the view that the City of Wrocław had infringed the principle of fair competition by imposing the 25% requirement. According to the CUPT, neither EU law nor national law authorised such a limitation on subcontracting. The CUPT therefore informed the City of Wrocław, on 24 May 2012, that it would apply a financial correction of 5% of the amount of the eligible costs borne by public funds (that is to say PLN 8 600 473.38, plus interest). The material before the Court indicates that the CUPT applied the 'Taryfikator', a table setting out different levels of flat rate financial correction depending on the type of irregularity. (13) On 5 July 2012, the Minister for Transport, Construction and Maritime Affairs confirmed that correction.

26. The Minister for Regional Development rejected the City of Wrocław's appeal against the financial correction on 30 September 2013. According to the order for reference, she considered that contracting authorities were not authorised, under Article 36(5) of the Law on public contracts, to require the successful tenderer itself to carry out part of the contract specified in abstract terms as a percentage. The 25% requirement was also, in her view, at odds with Article 25 of Directive 2004/18. That irregularity justified making a financial correction under Regulation No 1083/2006.

27. The City of Wrocław's appeal against that decision is now pending before the referring court, which has stayed the proceedings and requested a preliminary ruling on the following questions:

'(1) In the light of Article 25 of Directive 2004/18 ... is the contracting authority allowed to stipulate in the tender specifications that the economic operator is required to perform at least 25% of the works covered by the contract using its own resources?

(2) If the answer to the first question is in the negative, does the application of the requirement described in that question in a procedure for the award of a public contract result in an infringement of provisions of EU law which justifies the need to make a financial correction pursuant to Article 98 of [Regulation No 1083/2006] ...?'

28. Written observations have been submitted by the City of Wrocław, the Austrian and Polish Governments and the Commission. No hearing has been requested and none has been held.

Analysis

Question 1: Restrictions on subcontracting under Directive 2004/18

29. It is common ground that the public works contract in issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 2004/18. The City of Wrocław indicates that the successful tenderer proposed a gross price of PLN 257 565 599.68 (14) for those works, which is above the threshold that applied at the material time. (15)

30. Directive 2004/18 is designed not only to avoid obstacles to freedom to provide services in the award of public service contracts or public works contracts but also to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. (16) Recital 32 in the preamble to that directive states that the possibility of subcontracting is liable to encourage small and medium-sized undertakings to get involved in the public contracts procurement market. Subcontracting enables such undertakings to participate in tendering procedures and to be awarded public contracts regardless of the size of those contracts. (17) Subcontracting thus contributes to achieving the directive's objectives by increasing the number of potential candidates for the award of public contracts.

31. Accordingly, Article 25 of Directive 2004/18 not only envisages that a tenderer may subcontract part of the contract but also sets no limit in that regard. (18) Indeed, Directive 2004/18 confirms explicitly that an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the economic, financial, technical and/or professional capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. (19) Consequently, a party may not be eliminated from a procedure for the award of a public service contract solely because it proposes, in order to carry out the contract, to use resources which are not its own but belong to one or more other entities. (20)

32. That said, contracting authorities do have a legitimate interest in ensuring that the contract will be effectively and properly carried out. Where an economic operator intends to rely on capacities of other economic operators in a tendering procedure, it must therefore establish that it actually will have at its disposal the resources of those operators which it does not itself own and whose participation is necessary to perform the contract. (21) A tenderer claiming to have at its disposal the technical and economic capacities of third parties on which it intends to rely if it obtains the contract may be excluded by the contracting authority only if it fails to meet that requirement. (22)

33. The contracting authority may not always be in a position to verify the technical and economic capacities of the subcontractors when examining the tenders and selecting the lowest tenderer. The Court has held that in such cases Directive 2004/18 does not preclude a prohibition or a restriction on subcontracting the performance of essential parts of the contract. (23) Such a prohibition or restriction is justified by the contracting authority's legitimate interest in ensuring that the public contract will be effectively and properly carried out. Directive 2004/18 does not require a contracting authority to accept performance of essential parts of the public contract by entities whose capacities and qualities it has been unable to assess during the contract award procedure. (24)

34. In my view, considering the essential role subcontracting plays in promoting the objectives of Directive 2004/18, (25) no other prohibition or restriction is permissible. It is true that, in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, the Court considered that there may be works with special requirements necessitating a certain capacity which cannot be obtained by combining the capacities of more than one operator which individually would be unable to perform that work. In those specific circumstances, the Court has held that the contracting authority is justified in requiring that the minimum capacity level concerned be achieved by a single economic operator or, where appropriate, by relying on a limited number of economic operators, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, as long as that requirement is related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract at issue. (26) However, that is not a specific ground for prohibiting or restricting subcontracting as such. Nothing precludes that 'single economic operator' or 'limited number of economic operators' from being a subcontractor or subcontractors of the successful tenderer(s).

35. It follows that a stipulation such as that in issue in the main proceedings is clearly not consistent with Directive 2004/18.

36. First, the 25% requirement formed part of the tender specifications which the City of Wrocław addressed to a limited number of economic operators together with the invitation to tender. It therefore restricted recourse to subcontracting at the level of examination of tenders and selection of the successful tenderer.

37. The City of Wrocław submits that it had a legitimate interest in ensuring that the successful tenderer itself enjoyed the technical capacities and human resources necessary to implement at least part of the public works contract because the Law on public contracts did not enable it to verify the technical capacity and financial situation of subcontractors when comparing tenders. That submission cannot be upheld. If that is an accurate description of Polish law applicable at the relevant time, (27) such a rule limited economic operators' ability in practice to rely on the capacities of other entities in procedures for the award of public contracts, which would have been inconsistent with Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18.

38. Second, the 25% requirement does not concern performance of well-defined tasks but merely a percentage of the overall contract value. That requirement was therefore not such as to enable the contracting authority to ensure effective and proper performance of the essence of that contract.

39. Although the present proceedings concern Directive 2004/18, it is interesting to observe that the same rationale appears in Article 63(2) of its successor, Directive 2014/24. According to that provision, contracting authorities may require certain critical tasks to be performed directly by the tenderer itself or, where the tender is submitted by a group of economic operators, by a participant in that group. Whilst that provision now expressly allows restrictions on subcontracting during the examination and selection phase, such restrictions are acceptable only in so far as they concern well-defined tasks regarded as 'critical' for implementing the contract.

40. The conclusion which I have drawn is not called into question either by the fact that the 25% requirement applied only to a limited number of economic operators, who had received an invitation to tender in the context of a restricted procedure, or by the circumstance that none of them either contested it or submitted a tender in which subcontracting exceeded the ceiling. Those circumstances do not alter the nature of the restriction in dispute. For the reasons I have explained, that restriction falls foul of Directive 2004/18.

41. It is likewise immaterial that the restriction on subcontracting in issue constitutes a special condition relating to the performance of the contract within the meaning of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18. Contracting authorities may impose such special conditions only if they are compatible with EU law. That is not the case here.

42. Lastly, I do not agree with the City of Wrocław's submission that that interpretation of Directive 2004/18 cannot be relied upon against it because Article 36(5) of the Law on public contracts, in the version applicable at the material time, authorised contracting authorities to decide freely which parts of the public contract could not be subcontracted. The City of Wrocław, as a local authority, is among the organs of the State against which the sufficiently clear, precise and unconditional provisions of a directive have direct effect. (28) In any event, it is settled case-law that, when applying domestic law and, in particular, legislative provisions specifically adopted for the purpose of implementing the requirements of a directive, national courts are bound to interpret that law, so far as possible, in the light of the wording and the purpose of the directive in order to achieve the result sought by the latter and thus to comply with the third paragraph of Article 288 TFEU. (29) Although applying national law in the main proceedings is a matter for the referring court, it does not seem to me impossible to construe Article 36(5) of the Law on public contracts in conformity with Directive 2004/18, as I have interpreted it above.

43. I therefore conclude that Directive 2004/18 precludes a contracting authority from stipulating in the tender specifications of a public works contract that the successful tenderer is required to perform part of the works covered by that contract, specified in abstract terms as a percentage, using its own resources.

Question 2: Financial correction under Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006

44. It is common ground that Regulation No 1083/2006 applies in the main proceedings, which concern a project that benefited from EU financial assistance through the operational programme.

45. By its second question, the referring court wishes to know whether an infringement of EU public procurement rules such as that identified above constitutes an 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, giving rise to an obligation on the part of the Member State concerned to impose a financial correction on the basis of Article 98(2) of that regulation.

46. The definition of 'irregularity' in Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 contains three elements: (i) there must be an act or an omission by an economic operator, (ii) which results in an infringement of a provision of EU law and (iii) which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the general budget.

47. The first two conditions are clearly fulfilled in the main proceedings. It is common ground that a contracting authority such as the City of Wrocław, notwithstanding its status as a legal person governed by public law, can be regarded as an 'economic operator' within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 when it conducts a procedure for the award of a public contract. (30) As is clear from the answer that I propose to Question 1, I consider that the second condition is also satisfied here.

48. The difficulty concerns the third requirement.

49. The City of Wrocław submits that, even if the restriction on subcontracting which it imposed was inconsistent with Directive 2004/18, there was no resulting distortion of competition in the main proceedings and therefore no prejudice to the EU general budget within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006. The 25% requirement appeared in the tender specifications addressed to the five economic operators invited to tender and none of them challenged it. Each of the three operators which submitted a tender proposed using subcontractors for significantly less than 75% of the total value of its bid. The Polish Government and the Commission submit in essence that a financial correction is justified even where there is only a risk of prejudice to the EU general budget.

50. As a preliminary point, I do not agree with the City of Wrocław that the restriction on subcontracting necessarily had no effect on the procedure for the award of the public works contract. In the absence of that restriction, the tenderers would have been able to propose subcontracting more than 75% of the contract. (31) As the Polish Government and the Commission rightly point out, that might have resulted in different offers (in terms of, for example, the price or the timeframe for completing the works). Moreover, it appears from the material before the Court that only three out of the five economic operators invited to tender actually submitted a tender. The 25% requirement may, potentially, have influenced the two remaining operators not to tender. A possible loss to the Funds cannot therefore be ruled out.

51. That said, I regard these matters as immaterial in my opinion when addressing the issue whether Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 requires a financial correction in a situation such as that in the main proceedings.

52. The Court's case-law interpreting the concept of 'irregularity' in Regulation No 2988/95 provides helpful guidance in this context. First, that regulation defines the concept of an 'irregularity' in a way similar to Regulation No 1083/2006. (32) Second, Regulation No 2988/95 lays down general principles relating to homogenous checks and to administrative measures and penalties concerning irregularities with regard to EU law, which are to be observed in all areas in which the European Union's financial interests are potentially threatened. (33)

53. Thus, Chambre de commerce et d'industrie de l'Indre (34) concerned recovery of EU subsidies awarded under the Structural Funds as a result of a failure to comply with EU public procurement rules. The Court emphasised in that judgment that the Structural Funds may not be used to finance operations carried out in breach of those rules. (35) Consequently, the fact that the recipient of a subsidy from the European Regional Development Fund, in its capacity as contracting authority, had violated procurement rules on public contracts when implementing a subsidised operation involved an unjustified item of expenditure and thus prejudiced the EU budget. (36) The Court observed that 'even irregularities having no specific financial impact may be seriously prejudicial to the financial interests of the [European Union]'. (37)

54. In my view, the same principles are relevant when interpreting the concept of 'irregularity' in Regulation No 1083/2006.

55. First, both recital 22 and Article 9(2) and (5) of that regulation confirm that the activities of the Funds and the operations which they help to finance should be fully consistent with EU law, including EU public procurement rules. Granting financial assistance to a project which does not comply in all respects with those rules therefore involves charging an (at least partly) unjustified item of expenditure to the EU budget. Second, applying a financial correction in those circumstances is consistent with the principle laid down in Article 2(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 that administrative measures adopted in order to ensure the proper application of EU law should be dissuasive. That is all the more important in a context where it may not prove easy or even possible to demonstrate and quantify the precise prejudice which the irregularity caused to the EU budget. Lastly, the reference to 'financial loss to the Funds' in Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 does not call that interpretation into question. Whether actual, quantifiable financial loss has occurred is only one of the factors which the Member States are required to take into account when they impose financial corrections on the basis of that provision.

56. In my view, an infringement of EU public procurement rules such as that in issue in the main proceedings therefore constitutes an 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 which requires the competent authority in the Member State concerned to impose a financial correction on grounds of Article 98(2) of that regulation even if the infringement did not result in any quantifiable financial loss to the Funds.

57. The City of Wrocław submits that the CUPT violated Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 when it calculated the financial correction mechanically on the basis of the 'Taryfikator', thus failing to take into account the negligible gravity of that irregularity and the absence of quantifiable loss to the Funds.

58. Can the competent national authorities apply pre-defined, flat-rate corrections when they identify irregularities in procedures for the award of public contracts?

59. Although the referring court does not expressly seek guidance on how any financial correction applicable should be calculated, the question is one that requires exploration.

60. Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 requires a Member State, when calculating a financial correction, to take into account the nature and gravity of the irregularities and the financial loss to the Funds. That provision leaves a wide margin to the Member State subject to compliance with the twin principles of equivalence and effectiveness and with the principle of proportionality. The proportionality requirement results in particular from Article 2(1) of Regulation No 2988/95, which requires administrative checks, measures and penalties to be introduced 'in so far as they are necessary to ensure the proper application of [EU] law' and to be 'effective, proportionate and dissuasive so that they provide adequate protection for the [European Union's] financial interests'. (38) Financial corrections should therefore not go beyond what is actually necessary given the nature and gravity of the infringements. (39)

61. The Court has made clear moreover in the context of measures aimed at protecting the European Union's financial interests that the Commission may consider using a flat-rate correction where it is not possible to determine precisely the losses suffered by the European Union. (40) I consider that the same principle should apply to the Member States when they act on the basis of Article 98 of Regulation No 1083/2006. It follows that the competent national authorities may apply flat-rate corrections when they identify an infringement to EU public procurement rules. This is a situation where it is often difficult if not impossible to determine precisely the ensuing losses for the Funds. The use of flat-rate corrections is likely both to facilitate the task of those authorities and to reinforce legal certainty by making such corrections easier to predict. Flat-rate corrections must of course reflect appropriately the nature and gravity of the various irregularities to which they apply and must not result in disproportionate corrections. (41) Circumstances may thus sometimes require adjusting the flat-rate correction applicable for a given irregularity. For example, if the contracting authority was acting in conformity with national rules that were not (fully) consistent with EU law, that would tend to affect the gravity of the irregularity and hence the appropriate level of financial correction.

Temporal effects of the judgment

62. The Polish Government submits that the judgment should produce effects only for the future if the Court concludes that Article 25 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude a contracting authority from imposing a restriction on subcontracting such as that in issue in the main proceedings. Contracting authorities might otherwise claim reimbursement of financial corrections imposed on them since 2008 on grounds similar to those advanced in these proceedings. Verifying financial corrections imposed on these grounds would involve recalculating the amounts of public spending already notified by the Polish authorities to the Commission. The Polish authorities might then not be able to claim from the Commission the amounts of financial assistance they have advanced.

63. If the Court agrees with the answer which I have suggested to the first question, it is not necessary to address that request. If the Court were to reach the opposite conclusion, however, I see no reason to limit the temporal effects of the judgment.

64. According to settled case-law, the interpretation which, in the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon it by Article 267 TFEU, the Court gives to a rule of EU law clarifies and defines where necessary the meaning and scope of that rule as it must be, or ought to have been, understood and applied from the time of its coming into force. As a result, the rule so interpreted may, and must, be applied by the courts even to legal relationships arising and established before the judgment ruling on the request for interpretation, provided that in other respects the conditions enabling an action relating to the application of that rule to be brought before the courts having jurisdiction are satisfied. (42)

65. Against that background, the Court only exceptionally grants requests such as that made by the Polish Government. The Court has taken such a step only in certain specific circumstances, where there was a risk of serious economic repercussions owing in particular to the large number of legal relationships entered into in good faith on the basis of the rules considered to be validly in force, and where it appeared that both individuals and national authorities had been led into adopting practices which did not comply with EU law by reason of objective, significant uncertainty regarding the implications of EU provisions, to which the conduct of other Member States or the Commission may have contributed. (43) In contrast, the financial consequences which might ensue for a Member State from a preliminary ruling do not in themselves justify limiting the temporal effect of the ruling. (44)

66. In the present case, the Polish Government argues in essence that a judgment interpreting Directive 2004/18 as set out at point 62 above might entail significant financial consequences for it. Considering the principles that I have just recalled, that argument cannot succeed. In any case, the Polish Government has not submitted any material which would enable the Court to consider whether the Republic of Poland actually risks incurring serious economic repercussions. In particular, the Polish Government has not indicated how many financial corrections imposed in that Member State on grounds analogous to those in issue in the main proceedings are liable to be called into question by such judgment. Nor does it provide any information about the total amount of those corrections.

Conclusion

67. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the Court should answer the questions referred by the Wojewódzki Sąd Administracyjny w Warszawie (Regional Administrative Court, Warsaw, Poland) as follows:

(1) Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts precludes a contracting authority from stipulating in the tender specifications of a public works contract that the successful tenderer is required to perform part of the works covered by that contract, specified in abstract terms as a percentage, using its own resources.

(2) If a contracting authority disregards that prohibition in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract benefiting from an operational programme governed by Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 of 11 July 2006 laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund and repealing Regulation (EC) No 1260/1999, it commits an ‘irregularity’ within the meaning of Article 2(7) of that regulation. In those circumstances, Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 requires the competent national authority to impose a financial correction on that contracting authority, even if the irregularity did not result in any quantifiable loss to the Funds.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 25 November 2015, gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of the principle of equal treatment of economic operators, stated in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004, L 134, p. 1), read together with Article 51 of that directive.

2 The request has been made in the context of proceedings between MT Højgaard A/S and Züblin A/S, on the one hand, and Banedanmark, the railway infrastructure operator in Denmark, on the other, on whether a public contract was correctly awarded by Banedanmark, as the contracting entity, to Per Aarsleff A/S.

Legal context

3 Recital 9 in the preamble of Directive 2004/17 states:

‘In order to guarantee the opening up to competition of public procurement contracts awarded by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, it is advisable to draw up provisions for Community coordination of contracts above a certain value. Such coordination is based on the requirements inferable from Articles 14, 28 and 49 of the EC Treaty and from Article 97 of the Euratom Treaty, namely the principle of equal treatment, of which the principle of non-discrimination is no more than a specific expression, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality, as well as the principle of transparency. In view of the nature of the sectors affected by such coordination, the latter should, while safeguarding the application of those principles, establish a framework for sound commercial practice and should allow maximum flexibility.

4 Article 10 of that directive, headed ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

‘Contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

5 Article 11(2) of that directive, that article being headed ‘Economic operators’, provides:

‘Groups of economic operators may submit tenders or put themselves forward as candidates. In order to submit a tender or a request to participate, these groups may not be required by the contracting entities to assume a specific legal form; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract, to the extent to which this change is necessary for the satisfactory performance of the contract.’

6 As part of Chapter VII of that directive, Article 51, headed ‘General provisions’, provides:

‘1. For the purpose of selecting participants in their award procedures:

(a) contracting entities having provided rules and criteria for the exclusion of tenderers or candidates in accordance with Article 54(1), (2) or (4) shall exclude economic operators which comply with such rules and meet such criteria;

(b) they shall select tenderers and candidates in accordance with the objective rules and criteria laid down pursuant to Article 54;

(c) in restricted procedures and in negotiated procedures with a call for competition, they shall where appropriate reduce in accordance with Article 54 the number of candidates selected pursuant to subparagraphs (a) and (b).

3. Contracting entities shall verify that the tenders submitted by the selected tenderers comply with the rules and requirements applicable to tenders and award the contract on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 55 and 57.’

7 Article 54 of Directive 2004/17, headed ‘Criteria for qualitative selection’, provides:

‘1. Contracting entities which establish selection criteria in an open procedure shall do so in accordance with objective rules and criteria which are available to interested economic operators.

2. Contracting entities which select candidates for restricted or negotiated procedures shall do so according to objective rules and criteria which they have established and which are available to interested economic operators.

3. In restricted or negotiated procedures, the criteria may be based on the objective need of the contracting entity to reduce the number of candidates to a level which is justified by the need to balance the particular characteristics of the procurement procedure with the resources required to conduct it. The number of candidates selected shall, however, take account of the need to ensure adequate competition.

Danish law

8 The first subparagraph of Article 2 of the lov om visse erhvervsdrivende virksomheder (Law on certain commercial activities), published by Consolidation Act No 1295 of 15 November 2013, contains the following definition, established pursuant to case-law and academic writing:

‘For the purposes of this law, ‘partnership’ means an undertaking in which all members are personally and jointly and severally liable, without limitation, for the debts and obligations of the undertaking.’

The main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

9 By means of a notice published in January 2013 Banedanmark commenced a negotiated procedure with a prior call for competition, within the meaning of Article 47 of Directive 2004/17, for the award of a public contract for the construction of a new railway line between Copenhagen and Ringsted, a project called ‘TP 4 Urban Tunnels’. For the purposes of the award of the contract, the criterion adopted was that of the tender offering the best value for money.

10 According to the contract notice, Banedanmark’s intention was to invite four to six candidates to submit tenders and to carry out, if the number of candidates was greater than six, a pre-selection. Further, it is apparent from the tendering specifications that under the procedure commenced it was envisaged that the tenderers would be invited to lodge three successive tenders in the course of the procedure. There would be negotiation after the lodging of the first two tenders, the third and last leading to the award of the contract.

11 Five economic operators sought an invitation to take part in the procedure in the pre-selection phase. Those five candidates included the group consisting of MT Højgaard and Züblin (‘the Højgaard and Züblin group’) and the group consisting of Per Aarsleff and E. Pihl og Søn A/S (‘the Aarsleff and Pihl group’). Banedanmark pre-selected all five candidates and invited them to submit tenders.

12 In June 2013 one of the undertakings withdrew from the procedure, and consequently only four pre-selected tenderers remained.

13 The contract constituting the Aarsleff and Pihl group was entered into by the two companies on 26 August 2013. On that same date, the court with jurisdiction delivered a judgment declaring E. Pihl og Søn to be insolvent. Banedanmark was informed of that judgment in the afternoon of the same day and immediately sought clarification from Per Aarsleff on the effect of that judgment on the ongoing procurement procedure. Notwithstanding that declaration of insolvency, the Aarsleff and Pihl group submitted on 27 August 2013 a first tender, signed by the two companies but not by the liquidator.

14 On 15 October 2013 Banedanmark informed all the tenderers of its decision to allow Per Aarsleff to continue to take part, alone, in the procedure. Banedanmark explained that decision by stating that Per Aarsleff, which was the leading contracting company in Denmark in terms of turnover for the financial years 2012 and 2013, satisfied the conditions required for participation in the negotiated procedure, even in the absence of the technical and financial capacities of E. Pihl og Søn. In addition, Per Aarsleff had taken over the contracts of more than 50 salaried staff of E. Pihl og Søn, including the individuals who were key to the implementation of the project concerned.

15 Per Aarsleff submitted a second tender, in its own name, stating that it was submitting that tender as the successor of the Aarsleff and Pihl group, that the liquidator had not indicated that he intended to maintain the joint venture contract and that, consequently, Per Aarsleff had terminated that contract. After the assessment of the second tenders received, Banedanmark decided, in accordance with the conditions of the contract notice, to choose three tenders with a view to determining which of them offered the best value for money and asked the three tenderers chosen to submit a third and final tender. The three tenderers included Per Aarsleff and the Højgaard and Züblin group. Those final tenders were lodged by the three tenderers on 12 December 2013.

16 On 20 December 2013 Banedanmark informed the three chosen tenderers that it had decided to award the contract to Per Aarsleff, whose tender was, in terms of quality and price, the tender offering the best value for money. That tender was for a sum of DKK 920 300 000 (Danish krone; approximately EUR 123 402 000).

17 Following that decision, MT Højgaard and Züblin brought proceedings before Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board, Denmark), claiming inter alia that, by allowing Per Aarsleff to participate in the procedure in the place of the Aarsleff and Pihl group, although Per Aarsleff had not itself been pre-selected, Banedanmark was in breach of the principles of equal treatment and transparency laid down in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17. MT Højgaard and Züblin therefore claimed that Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board) should annul the decision to award the contract to Per Aarsleff, and order the execution of that decision to be suspended.

18 Klagenævnet for Udbud (Public Procurement Complaints Board) first decided not to declare that the action had suspensive effect. The Board then held, in its order for reference, that on the basis of the information provided concerning Per Aarsleff, that company would have been pre-selected if it had sought an invitation to take part in its own name instead of doing so through the intermediary of the Aarsleff and Pihl group. Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board) also states that there is no provision of Danish law that prohibits an alteration being made, after the submission of tenders, to the composition of a group of undertakings that is participating in a public procurement procedure.

19 Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board) further observes that, in the contract notice, Banedanmark did not lay down minimum conditions as to quality with respect to the technical capacities of the tenderers and was to undertake a qualitative assessment of the applications only if their number was greater than six. Per Aarsleff could therefore have been pre-selected in its own name, without being part of the Aarsleff and Pihl group. The fact that Per Aarsleff took the place of that group had, moreover, no effect on the situation of tenderers, in so far as none of the candidates was excluded in the pre-selection phase and none would have been rejected if Per Aarsleff itself had applied for an invitation to take part. In addition, a distinction needs to be made between the situation where an alteration to a group is made before the award of the contract and the situation where that alteration is made after that award.

20 Nonetheless, Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board) has some reservations in relation to the compatibility of the procedure followed with the principle of equal treatment, while pointing out that, as regards public contracts in the activity sectors falling within the scope of Directive 2004/17, the EU legislature did not lay down rules with respect to the application of that principle that were as detailed as those in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004, L 134, p. 114).

21 In the light of the foregoing, Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer to the Court the following question for a preliminary ruling:

‘Is the principle of equal treatment in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17, read together with Article 51 thereof, to be interpreted as precluding, in a situation such as that in the main proceedings, a contracting authority from awarding a contract to a tenderer which had not applied for pre-selection and therefore was not pre-selected?’

The jurisdiction of the Court

22 In paragraph 15 of the judgment of 18 November 1999, Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S (C-275/98, EU:C:1999:567), the Court accepted that Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board) was a ‘court or tribunal’, within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU. The Danish Government states, however, that the Court, in the judgment of 9 October 2014, TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:2265), nonetheless found that Teleklagenævnet (the Telecommunications Complaints Board, Denmark) was not a ‘court or tribunal’, and consequently asks the Court to clarify further the relevant criteria and to confirm, if appropriate, that Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board) is a ‘court or tribunal’.

23 In that regard, it must be recalled that, in accordance with settled case-law, in order to assess whether a body making a reference is a ‘court or tribunal’, which is a question governed by EU law alone, the Court will take account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent (judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraph 17 and the case-law cited).

24 In the main proceedings, there is no indication in the file submitted to the Court that the referring body does not meet the criteria relating to whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, and whether it applies rules of law.

25 As regards the criterion of independence, a criterion which Teleklagenævnet (the Telecommunications Complaints Board) did not meet, as held by the Court in the judgment of 9 October 2014, TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:2265), to which the Danish Government draws attention, it is clear, first, that, unlike that other complaints board, Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board) is not a party in cases brought before the ordinary courts against its decisions. It follows that it acts as a third party in relation to the parties to the proceedings, in particular in relation to the authority that adopted the decision against which a complaint is brought before it.

26 It must further be observed that, as stated by the Advocate General in point 44 of his Opinion, it is apparent from the file that Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board) has no functional link with the Danish Ministry for Business and Growth. The fact that the secretariat of that body is attached to that ministry is not such as to call into question that finding. Moreover, that body carries out its functions in a wholly independent manner, does not occupy a hierarchical or subordinate position and does not take orders or instructions from any source whatsoever (see, to that effect, judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme, C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraph 19 and case-law cited).

27 As regards the independence of the members of the referring body, it must be stated that, under Article 1(4) of bekendtgørelse nr. 887 om Klagenævnet for Udbud med senere ændringer (Order No 887 on the Public Procurement Complaints Board, as amended), of 11 August 2011, the members are bound to perform their duties in an independent manner.

28 It is apparent from the file that the referring body is composed, in accordance with Article 9(1) of the lov nr. 492 om håndhævelse af udbudsreglerne med senere ændringer (Law No 492 on the implementation of the public procurement rules, as amended), of 12 May 2010 (‘Law No 492’), of a president and a number of vice-presidents, who form the presidency, and a number of expert members. The presidency is occupied, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 9(2) of Law No 492, by judges of the district courts and higher regional courts.

29 Klagenævnet for Udbud (Public Procurement Complaints Board) is composed of both lawyers and lay members. In its ordinary composition, it comprises one member of the presidency acting as president and one expert member. Further, under Article 10(5) of Law No 492, its decisions are adopted on a simple majority of votes, the president having the deciding vote in the event of a tie. Consequently, the members of that body who come from the ranks of Danish judges have in any circumstances the majority of votes and, accordingly, the greater weight in the decisions adopted by that body.

30 The members of the referring body who are members of the judiciary enjoy, in that capacity, the particular protection against dismissal laid down in Article 64 of the Danish Constitution, a protection which also extends to the performance of the tasks of a member of the presidency of the referring body.

31 Given that the votes of the members of the referring body, who, as members of the judiciary, enjoy that particular protection, have the greater weight, the fact that the expert members of that body do not enjoy the same protection cannot, in any event, call into question the independence of that body.

32 In the light of the foregoing, it can be confirmed that Klagenævnet for Udbud (Public Procurement Complaints Board) also meets the criterion of independence and must, therefore, be accorded the status of a ‘court of tribunal’, within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU.

33 Consequently, the Court has jurisdiction to answer the question referred.

Consideration of the question referred for a preliminary ruling

34 By its question, the referring court seeks, in essence, to ascertain whether the principle of equal treatment of economic operators, stated in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17, read together with Article 51 of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding a contracting entity from allowing an economic operator that is a member of a group of two undertakings which was pre-selected and which submitted the first tender in a negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract, to continue to take part in that procedure in its own name, after the dissolution of that group.

35 In order to answer that question, it must be observed that Directive 2004/17 does not lay down any rules specifically relating to alterations made to the composition of a group of economic operators that has been pre-selected as a tenderer for a public contract, and consequently rules about such a situation are a matter for the Member States (see, to that effect, judgment of 23 January 2003, Makedoniko Metro and Michaniki, C-57/01, EU:C:2003:47, paragraph 61).

36 Neither the Danish legislation nor the contract notice concerned in the main proceedings contains any specific rules on that subject. That being the case, the question of whether a contracting entity may allow such an alteration must be examined with regard to the general principles of EU law, in particular the principle of equal treatment and the duty of transparency that flows from it, and the objectives of that law in relation to public procurement.

37 In that regard, it must be recalled that the principle of equal treatment and the duty of transparency mean, in particular, that tenderers must be in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the contracting authority, and constitute the basis of the EU rules on procedures for the award of public contracts (see, to that effect, judgment of 16 December 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 45 and case-law cited).

38 The principle of equal treatment of tenderers, the aim of which is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure, requires that all tenderers must be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, and therefore implies that the tenders of all competitors must be subject to the same conditions (judgments of 29 April 2004, Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta, C-496/99 P, EU:C:2004:236, paragraph 110, and of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 33).

39 A strict application of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, as expressed in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17, read together with Article 51 of that directive, would lead to the conclusion that only those economic operators who have been pre-selected can in that capacity submit tenders and be awarded contracts.

40 That approach is based on Article 51(3) of Directive 2004/17, which states that the contracting entities are to 'verify that the tenders submitted by the selected tenderers comply [with the rules and requirements applicable to tenders] …', which presupposes, as stated by the Advocate General in point 63 of his Opinion, that the pre-selected economic operators and those who submit tenders are legally and substantively the same.

41 However, the requirement of legal and substantive identity referred to in the preceding paragraph of this judgment may be qualified in order to ensure, in a negotiated procedure, adequate competition, as required by Article 54(3) of Directive 2004/17.

42 In the main proceedings, as is apparent from paragraph 10 of this judgment, the contracting entity considered that there should be at least four candidates in order to ensure such competition.

43 If, however, an economic operator is to continue to participate in the negotiated procedure in its own name, following the dissolution of the group of which it formed part and which had been pre-selected by the contracting entity, that continued participation must take place in conditions which do not infringe the principle of equal treatment of the tenderers as a whole.

44 In that regard, a contracting entity is not in breach of that principle where it permits one of two economic operators, who formed part of a group of undertakings that had, as such, been invited to submit tenders by that contracting entity, to take the place of that group following the group's dissolution, and to take part, in its own name, in the negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract, provided that it is established, first, that that economic operator by itself meets the requirements laid down by the contracting entity and, second, that the continuation of its participation in that procedure does not mean that the other tenderers are placed at a competitive disadvantage.

45 In the main proceedings, it must, first, be stated that it is apparent from the order for reference that had Per Aarsleff, alone, made an application for an invitation to take part in the procedure, it would have been pre-selected (see paragraph 18 of this judgment).

46 That said, having regard to information in the file which indicates that, first, the contract constituting the Aarsleff and Pihl group was concluded on the very day when the judgment declaring E. Pihl og Søn insolvent was delivered, and, second, that group's first tender was lodged the following day without the signature of the liquidator of E. Pihl og Søn, it must further be stated that it is for the referring court to determine that the lodging of that first tender was not vitiated by an irregularity that was such as to preclude Per Aarsleff continuing to take part, in its own name, in the negotiated procedure concerned.

47 Last, as regards the fact that, after the dissolution of the Aarsleff and Pihl group, Per Aarsleff took on the contracts of 50 salaried staff of E. Pihl og Søn, including individuals who were key to the implementation of the construction project concerned, it is for the referring court to determine whether Per Aarsleff thereby acquired a competitive advantage at the expense of the other tenderers.

48 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred is that the principle of equal treatment of economic operators, stated in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17, read together with Article 51 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting entity is not in breach of that principle where it permits one of two economic operators who formed part of a group of undertakings that had, as such, been invited to submit tenders by that contracting entity, to take the place of that group following the group's dissolution and to take part, in its own name, in a negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract, provided that it is established, first, that that economic operator by itself meets the requirements laid down by the contracting entity and, second, that the continuation of its participation in that procedure does not mean that other tenderers are placed at a competitive disadvantage.

Costs

49 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby rules:

The principle of equal treatment of economic operators, stated in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, read together with Article 51 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting entity is not in breach of that principle where it permits one of two economic operators who formed part of a group of undertakings that had, as such, been invited to submit tenders by that contracting entity, to take the place of that group following the group's dissolution and to take part, in its own name, in a negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract, provided that it is established, first, that that economic operator by itself meets the requirements laid down by the contracting entity and, second, that the continuation of its participation in that procedure does not mean that other tenderers are placed at a competitive disadvantage.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

delivered on 24 November 2015 (1)

Case C-396/14

MT Højgaard A/S

Züblin A/S

v

Banedanmark

(Request for a preliminary ruling from Klagenævnet for Udbud (Denmark))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Article 267 TFEU — Jurisdiction of the Court — Status of the referring body as a court or tribunal — Independence — Directive 2004/17/EC — Public procurement — Negotiated procedure — Principle of equal treatment — Change to a group of economic operators in the course of a procurement procedure — Award of the contract to a company which had not been pre-selected)

1. Where a group of economic operators has been pre-selected and has submitted a tender in connection with a public procurement procedure and, subsequently, before the contract is awarded, that group is dissolved because of the insolvency of one of its two members, can the contracting authority, in the light of the principle of equal treatment, allow the remaining member, which did not submit an application as such and was therefore not pre-selected, to continue with the procedure and ultimately award it the contract?

2. That is, essentially, the novel question referred to the Court by Klagenævnet for Udbud (the Public Procurement Complaints Board, Denmark) in a dispute between MT Højgaard A/S and Züblin A/S (collectively 'MTHZ'), a group of economic operators which took part in a procurement procedure, and Banedanmark, the Danish rail infrastructure manager and contracting authority in that procedure. Before the referring court, MTHZ claims that, in allowing Per Aarsleff A/S ('Aarsleff'), the remaining member of a group that had been dissolved during the procedure, to take part in the tendering process in place of the group, even though Aarsleff had not been pre-selected, Banedanmark infringed the principle of equal treatment laid down in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17/EC. (2)

3. In the present case, the Court is first requested by the Danish Government to state the reasons why Klagenævnet for Udbud constitutes a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU. Then, as regards the response to the substance of the question raised by the referring court, the Court will be called upon to strike a fair balance between, on the one hand, the public interest of contracting authorities in ensuring that public procurement procedures are characterised by the widest possible opening-up to competition so that as many tenderers as possible participate in a tendering process, and, on the other hand, the interest — or rather, the right — of all tenderers taking part in a tendering process that when they participate in the procedure there is strict observance of equality of opportunity for all tenderers.

I – Legal framework

A – EU law

4. The contract at issue in the main proceedings concerns the construction of railway tracks and is therefore governed by the provisions of Directive 2004/17, commonly referred to as the ‘sectoral directive’.

5. Recital 9 of Directive 2004/17 states that ‘[i]n order to guarantee the opening up to competition of public procurement contracts awarded by entities operating in the … transport … sectors, it is advisable to draw up provisions for Community coordination of contracts above a certain value. Such coordination is based on the requirements inferable from Articles 14, 28 and 49 of the EC Treaty and from Article 97 of the Euratom Treaty, namely the principle of equal treatment, of which the principle of non-discrimination is no more than a specific expression … In view of the nature of the sectors affected by such coordination, the latter should, while safeguarding the application of those principles, establish a framework for sound commercial practice and should allow maximum flexibility. …’.

6. Article 10 of Directive 2004/17, entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides that ‘[c]ontracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way’.

7. Article 11(2) of the Directive provides that ‘[g]roups of economic operators may submit tenders or put themselves forward as candidates. In order to submit a tender or a request to participate, these groups may not be required by the contracting entities to assume a specific legal form; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract, to the extent to which this change is necessary for the satisfactory performance of the contract.’

8. Forming part of Chapter VII of Directive 2004/17, entitled ‘Conduct of the procedure’, Article 51 is entitled ‘General provisions’ and provides as follows:

>
> (a) contracting entities having provided rules and criteria for the exclusion of tenderers or candidates in accordance with Article 54(1), (2) or (4) shall exclude economic operators which comply with such rules and meet such criteria;
>
> (b) they shall select tenderers and candidates in accordance with the objective rules and criteria laid down pursuant to Article 54;
>
> (c) in restricted procedures and in negotiated procedures with a call for competition, they shall where appropriate reduce in accordance with Article 54 the number of candidates selected pursuant to subparagraphs (a) and (b).
>
> 3. Contracting entities shall verify that the tenders submitted by the selected tenderers comply with the rules and requirements applicable to tenders and award the contract on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 55 and 57.’

9. Article 54 of Directive 2004/17 lays down the rules governing the criteria for qualitative selection which are established by contracting entities, and provides, in the last sentence of paragraph 3, that in restricted or negotiated procedures the ‘number of candidates selected shall … take account of the need to ensure adequate competition’.

10. Directive 2004/17 is to be repealed, with effect from 18 April 2016, by Directive 2014/25/EU. (3)

B – National law

11. Klagenævnet for Udbud was established by Lov nr. 344 af 06/06/1991 om Klagenævnet for Udbud (Law No 344 of 6 June 1991 on the Public Procurement Complaints Board). Its organisation and activities are governed by Lov nr. 492 af 12. maj 2010 om håndhævelse af udbudsreglerne med senere ændringer (Law No 492 of 12 May 2010 on the implementation of procurement rules, as amended; ‘the Law on public procurement’) and by Bekendtgørelse nr. 887 af 8/11/2011 om Klagenævnet for Udbud med senere ændringer (Decree No 887 of 8 November 2011 on the Public Procurement Complaints Board, as amended; 'Decree No 887').

12. The first paragraph of Article 2 of the Lov om visse erhvervsdrivende virksomheder (Law on certain commercial undertakings), published by Consolidated Law No 1295 of 15 November 2011, defines the concept of 'interessentskab' (partnership, 'I/S') as 'an undertaking in which all participants are personally liable, jointly and severally and without limit, for the obligations of the partnership'. An I/S is an independent legal entity and a person with legal capacity.

II – Facts, national procedure and question referred

13. In January 2013 Banedanmark published, in accordance with Directive 2004/17, a negotiated procurement procedure notice for the construction of a project entitled 'TP 4 Urban Tunnels' in connection with the building of a new railway track between Copenhagen and Ringsted.

14. It is clear from the documents for that contract that the procedure required the submission of three tenders and that negotiation would take place after submission of the first two tenders, with the contract to be awarded on the basis of the third and final tender. The contract notice also stated that Banedanmark intended to invite four to six candidates to submit tenders, and if there were more than six candidates it would conduct a preliminary selection on the basis of references for similar works. There was no minimum requirement in order to be pre-selected.

15. Five economic operators submitted applications and Banedanmark pre-selected all five. However, in June 2013, one of the undertakings withdrew, leaving only four pre-selected tenderers.

16. Among those was a partnership composed of E. Pihl & Søn A/S ('Pihl') and Aarsleff, which had applied for pre-selection as a consortium in the form of an I/S called 'JV Pihl — Aarsleff — TP 4 Urban Tunnel I/S'. Pihl and Aarsleff were among the largest building and construction companies in Denmark. The contract constituting the I/S was concluded between Pihl and Aarsleff on 26 August 2013.

17. However, on that same date — 26 August 2013 — an insolvency order was delivered in respect of Pihl. Banedanmark learned of the insolvency order that afternoon and immediately asked Aarsleff about the significance of the insolvency for the ongoing procurement procedure.

18. Despite the insolvency order the previous day, the I/S submitted its first tender on 27 August 2013, signed by Aarsleff and Pihl, but not by the latter's liquidator.

19. After lengthy correspondence with Aarsleff about how to manage the consequences of Pihl's insolvency, on 15 October 2013 Banedanmark informed all tenderers of its decision to allow Aarsleff to continue to participate in the procurement procedure on its own, despite Pihl's insolvency.

20. In its notice, Banedanmark based its decision on the fact that Aarsleff fulfilled the requirements to participate in the tender without the economic and technical capacity of Pihl and that it had not been significant for the decision to invite the group to participate in the tender that Pihl was part of the group. In the notice, Banedanmark also put emphasis on the fact that Pihl would not be replaced by a new tenderer in the joint venture and that the selected tenderers would thus remain the same, as no new operator was permitted to participate in the tendering. Banedanmark also pointed out that Aarsleff had taken over the contracts of fifty salaried employees from Pihl after the insolvency proceedings began, including key persons for the completion of the project that was the subject of the call for tenders.

21. Aarsleff thereupon submitted a second tender in its own name and gave notice that it was submitting the tender as the continuing contractor from the group constituted with Pihl, that the insolvency estate had not given notice that it wished to continue the contract constituting the group, and that Aarsleff had therefore terminated that contract. On the basis of its assessment of the second tenders received, Banedanmark selected — in accordance with the tender specifications — the three economically most advantageous tenders and asked the three tenderers selected to submit a third and final tender. They included Aarsleff and the MTHZ partnership. The final tenders were submitted on 12 December 2013.

22. On 20 December 2013, Banedanmark notified the three selected tenderers that it had decided to award the contract to Aarsleff, whose tender was, as a whole, the most economically advantageous in terms of quality and price.

23. Following that decision, MTHZ filed a complaint with the referring court, asking it, inter alia, to find that Banedanmark had acted contrary to the principles of equal treatment and transparency provided for in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 by allowing Aarsleff, which had not been pre-selected, to take part in the tendering process in place of the group it had constituted with Pihl. It also requested that the decision to award the contract to Aarsleff be annulled.

24. It is evident from the order for reference that, in its decision of 28 January 2014, the referring court refused to attach suspensive effect to the complaint brought by MTHZ because the condition of urgency was not met. In that decision, the referring court did, however, consider that the fumus boni juris condition was met since, in its view, prima facie assessment of the complaint suggested that it was likely that MTHZ's request for annulment would ultimately be successful. In that regard, the referring court first of all pointed out that a distinction should be drawn between a situation in which a group changed before the contract was awarded and a situation where the change occurred after the award. Secondly, it considered that the fact that a contracting authority has pre-selected a group does not mean that the individual members of the group have each been pre-selected, irrespective of whether the contracting authority was able to understand, on the basis of the tender, that each of the members on their own satisfied the relevant requirements.

25. In its order for reference Klagenævnet for Udbud first points out that there is no provision of Danish law which prohibits a change in the composition of a group of contractors taking part in a public procurement procedure which occurs after submission of tenders. It goes on to observe that, in the contract notice, Banedanmark did not set any qualitative minimum requirements for tenderers' technical aptitude, and it was only required to conduct a qualitative assessment if there were more than six applications to participate. That being so, on the basis of the information available concerning Aarsleff, it should be regarded as established that Aarsleff would have been pre-selected if it had applied for pre-selection on its own instead of as part of the group it constituted with Pihl.

26. However, Klagenævnet for Udbud has doubts as to whether the procedure followed was compatible with the principle of equal treatment. In those circumstances, it decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

> 'Is the principle of equal treatment in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17, read in conjunction with Article 51 … to be interpreted as precluding, in a situation such as the one at issue here, a contracting authority from awarding the contract to a tenderer which had not applied for pre-selection and therefore was not pre-selected?'

III – Proceedings before the Court of Justice

27. The order for reference was received at the Court Registry on 20 August 2014. At the hearing on 8 September 2015, MTHZ, the Danish Government and the European Commission lodged observations and presented oral argument.

IV – Legal assessment

28. Before answering the question referred for a preliminary ruling by the referring court, the question raised by the Danish Government concerning the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice must be dealt with first.

A – The jurisdiction of the Court

29. In the view of the Danish Government, although the Court has already recognised, in the judgment in Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S, (4) that the referring body in the present case, Klagenævnet for Udbud, constitutes a 'court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU, in view of the factors taken into consideration by the Court in the recent judgment in TDC, (5) where the problem was whether the status as a court or tribunal of another Danish complaints board, Teleklagenævnet (the Complaints Board for Telecommunications), could be established, it appears necessary to clarify whether and on what grounds Klagenævnet for Udbud may be recognised as having that status.

30. In that regard, it should be recalled that, according to settled case-law, in order to determine whether a body making a reference is a 'court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU, which is a question governed by EU law alone, the Court takes account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent. (6)

31. As regards the criteria of whether the referring body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its procedure is inter partes and whether it applies rules of law, there is nothing in the documents to cast doubt on the nature of Klagenævnet for Udbud as a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU, as recognised by the Court in the judgment in Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S, (C-275/98, EU:C:1999:567) cited above. On the basis of the information supplied to the Court in the present proceedings, however, a more detailed examination is needed of the criteria relating to whether its jurisdiction is compulsory and whether it is independent, the latter criterion being the one on which the Court based its decision to deny Teleklagenævnet the status of a court or tribunal in the judgment in TDC, (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:2265) cited above.

32. As regards, first of all, whether the jurisdiction of Klagenævnet for Udbud is compulsory, I would merely observe that the fact that this body has exclusive jurisdiction only during a 'standstill' period (7) and that, at the end of that period, its jurisdiction becomes alternative to that of the courts does not appear to cast doubt on its status as a court or tribunal.

33. It is clear from the case-law that the existence of an alternative remedy to court proceedings does not necessarily mean that the body offering that alternative remedy cannot be regarded as a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, provided that the decision of the referring body is binding — which is not in doubt in the present case (8) — and the body in question is established by law and its jurisdiction is independent of the wishes of the parties. (9) Furthermore, since the main action was brought during the standstill period, the jurisdiction of Klagenævnet for Udbud was compulsory at that point.

34. As regards, secondly, the criterion of independence, it should be remembered that the concept of independence, which is inherent to the task of adjudication, implies above all that the body in question must act as a third party in relation to the authority which adopted the decision complained of. It is evident from the case-law that this concept includes an external aspect, requiring the body to be protected against external intervention or pressure liable to jeopardise the independent judgment of its members as regards proceedings before them, and an internal aspect, which is linked to impartiality and seeks to ensure a level playing field for the parties to the proceedings and their respective interests in relation to the subject-matter of those proceedings. Those guarantees of independence and impartiality require rules, particularly as regards the composition of the body and the appointment, length of service and the grounds for abstention, rejection and dismissal of its members, in order to dismiss any reasonable doubt in the minds of individuals as to the imperviousness of that body to external factors and its neutrality with respect to the interests before it. (10)

35. In the judgment in TDC, referred to by the Danish Government, the Court held that Teleklagenævnet did not constitute a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU, considering that the body did not meet the criterion of independence. The Court based its finding on two factors. First, as regards the external aspect of independence, the Court pointed out that, although Danish legislation made provision for specific guarantees for the dismissal of judges of the ordinary courts, the conditions for the dismissal of members of the Teleklagenævnet, on the other hand, were not subject to any specific rules, other than the general rules of administrative law and employment law which apply in the event of an unlawful dismissal. (11) Secondly, as regards the internal aspect of independence, the Court held that Teleklagenævnet was not acting as a third party in relation to the interests at stake, finding that, if an appeal against one of its decisions was made before the ordinary courts, Teleklagenævnet was involved in the proceedings as defendant. (12)

36. However, according to the information available to the Court, neither of the two factors taken into consideration by the Court in the judgment in TDC applies to Klagenævnet for Udbud.

37. As far as concerns, first, the internal aspect of independence, the Danish Government expressly stated both in its written observations and at the hearing that, unlike Teleklagenævnet, Klagenævnet for Udbud is not a party in cases brought before the ordinary courts against its decisions. There is therefore no reason to doubt that it acts as a third party in relation to the interests involved.

38. Secondly, as far as the external aspect of independence is concerned, it should be pointed out that it is clear from the documents available to the Court that there are appreciable differences between Teleklagenævnet and Klagenævnet for Udbud as regards their composition, guarantees against the dismissal of their members and their operation.

39. Thus, it is clear from the relevant provisions of the Law on public procurement that Klagenævnet for Udbud — which was set up in order, among other things, to implement Directive 89/665 (13) — is composed of a president and a number of vice-presidents (who form the presidency), as well as a number of expert members, all appointed by the Erhvervs- og vækstministeren (Minister for Enterprise and Growth) for a period of up to 4 years. (14)

40. However, unlike Teleklagenævnet, the presidency of Klagenævnet for Udbud must be composed of district court and higher regional court judges. (15) As the Court pointed out in the judgment in TDC, (16) those judges are specifically protected against dismissal. That protection, which is based on Article 64 of the Danish Constitution, appears to extend also, according to statements made at the hearing, to the presidency of the Complaints Boards.

41. Furthermore, it appears from an examination of the provisions of the Law that members of the presidency may play a considerably greater role than the expert members in the decision-making of Klagenævnet for Udbud. In its ordinary composition, Klagenævnet for Udbud comprises one member of the presidency, acting as president, and one expert member. In the event of a split vote in the adoption of a decision, the president has the deciding vote. (17) Moreover, members of the presidency may adopt certain decisions without the involvement of the expert members (18) and they have a majority say in the adoption of decisions in more complex cases or cases involving matters of principle. (19)

42. Admittedly, for some members of Klagenævnet for Udbud — the expert members — just as for the members of Teleklagenævnet, Danish law does not appear to lay down any specific rules concerning their dismissal, with only the general rules of administrative law and employment law applying in the event of an unlawful dismissal.

43. In that connection I would observe, however, that, while it is true that in certain decisions the Court has stated that, in order to consider the condition regarding the independence of the body making the reference as met, the case-law requires, inter alia, that dismissals of members of that body should be determined by express legislative provisions, (20) it must be said that in those cases, the finding that there were no such rules was just one — albeit very important — factor to be assessed as part of an overall examination (21) of the factors characterising the referring body in question. It was after considering all those factors as a whole that the Court decided, in those cases, that the bodies in question were not a court or tribunal. (22) In some cases, however, particularly as regards national bodies responsible for reviewing the award of public contracts under Directive 89/665, the Court recognised a referring body as a court or tribunal without questioning whether such rules existed. (23)

44. In the present case it should be stated that not only are a large proportion of members of Klagenævnet for Udbud, and, in particular, the members likely to play a more important role in decision-making, covered by a specific — constitutional — guarantee against dismissal, but it is clear from the documents before the Court that other factors enhance the independence of that body from any improper outside pressure and intervention. Thus, Klagenævnet for Udbud is acting as a third party in relation to the authority which adopted the decision challenged in the main proceedings. (24) In particular, there is no functional link with the Erhvervsstyrelsen (the Danish Business Authority), which provides the secretariat, or with the contracting authorities whose decisions are challenged before it. (25) Moreover, Klagenævnet for Udbud carries out its functions in a wholly independent manner, does not occupy a hierarchical or subordinate position in relation to any other body and does not take orders or instructions from any source whatsoever. (26) All its members are required to perform their duties independently. (27) Furthermore, in so far as Klagenævnet for Udbud can, among other things, establish the illegality of unlawful contract decisions or awards, as well as issuing directions in connection with contract awards, it is fundamentally exercising a judicial function. (28)

45. Finally, it should be recalled that the Court, in assessing the legal status of the national bodies mentioned in Directive 89/665, which are responsible for reviewing the award of public contracts, has already confirmed the status as a ‘court or tribunal’ for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU of a number of other national bodies that are in essence comparable to the referring body in the present case. (29)

46. In the light of all these considerations, there is no reason, in my view, to call into question the Court's finding in the judgment in Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S that Klagenævnet for Udbud has the status of 'court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU.

B – The question referred

47. In the question which it has referred, the referring court asks whether the principle of equal treatment in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17, in conjunction with Article 51, is to be interpreted as precluding, in a situation such as the one at issue here, a contracting authority from awarding the contract to a tenderer which had not applied for pre-selection and therefore was not pre-selected.

48. The factual context of the question is that a group of two undertakings, constituted in the form of a commercial company and having been pre-selected in a procurement procedure, was dissolved following the insolvency of one of its two members, and the contracting authority allowed the remaining member to continue to take part in the procedure in place of the group and ultimately awarded it the contract, despite the fact that that member as such had not been pre-selected. This is the 'situation such as the one at issue here' to which the referring court refers in its question.

49. The question referred thus essentially concerns whether it is possible, in the light of the principle of equal treatment, for a contracting authority to allow a member of a group of economic operators which has not been pre-selected on its own to take the group's place in the course of a procurement procedure.

1. Legal framework

50. It should be noted, first of all, that Directive 2004/17 does not contain any specific rule about changes to the composition of a group of economic operators.

51. The only provision of the directive which relates to groups of economic operators is Article 11(2), (30) but this does not concern changes to them in the course of a procurement procedure. Since the directive does not contain any provision governing such changes, therefore, it must be concluded that rules about them are a matter for the Member States. (31) That being so, it may be for the national legislature, on a general level, or for the contracting authority in a particular case to lay down rules on the subject. (32)

52. In this connection, it should also be pointed out that, in the judgment in Makedoniko Metro and Michaniki, (33) the Court held that Directive 93/37 concerning procedures for the award of public works contracts (34) did not preclude national rules which prohibit a change in the composition of a group of contractors taking part in a procedure for the award of a public works contract which occurs after submission of tenders.

53. In the present case, however, it is clear from the order for reference, first, that Danish legislation does not contain any specific rules about changes in the composition of groups of economic operators and, second, that the contracting authority also did not lay down any specific rules on the subject in the contract notice.

54. That being so, the permissibility of changes in the composition of groups of economic operators in the course of a procurement procedure will be subject to the general principles of law which form part of the EU legal order, including, in particular, the principle of equal treatment and transparency, provided for in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 and is circumscribed by the need to observe those principles.

2. The principle of equal treatment in public procurement procedures

55. According to settled case-law, the principle of equal treatment requires that comparable situations must not be treated differently and that different situations must not be treated in the same way unless such treatment is objectively justified. (35)

56. The Court has stated on a number of occasions that the principle of equal treatment for tenderers and the duty of contracting authorities to ensure that it is observed lie at the heart of the rules of EU law on public procurement. (36)

57. Under the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, the aim of which is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure, all tenderers must be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the tenders of all competitors must be subject to the same conditions. (37) That principle implies that tenderers must be in a position of equality throughout the procurement procedure, in particular both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the contracting authority. (38)

58. It is, admittedly, true that the Court has held that one of the objectives of those public procurement rules is to attain the widest possible opening-up to competition and that it is the concern of EU law to ensure the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders, (39) and that the widest possible opening-up to competition is contemplated not only from the point of view of the Union interest in the free movement of goods and services but also the interest of the contracting authority concerned itself, which will thus have greater choice as to the tender offering the best value for money which best meets the needs of the public authority in question. (40)

59. However, in public procurement, account must be taken both of the concern to guarantee effective competition and of respect for the principle of equality between tenderers. Thus, although the Court has stated that the application of the principle of equal treatment to public procurement procedures does not constitute an end in itself, but must be viewed in the light of the aims that it is intended to achieve, (41) the implementation and the attainment of the objective of promoting the widest possible competition can, however, be pursued only if the economic operators participating in the public contract are able to do so on an equal footing, without any discrimination whatsoever. (42). Given that the promotion of effective competition forms part of a wider objective of promoting competition which has to be healthy before it can be effective, its pursuit is necessarily circumscribed by the need to comply with the principle of equal treatment between tenderers. (43)

60. In that regard, it should also be noted that, as some of the interveners have pointed out, the principle of equal treatment for tenderers is likely to play a fundamental role before the contract is awarded, when the various tenderers are competing with each other. Once the contract has been awarded, however, interest is focused on the implementation of the contract. In such a context, events such as a change to the group which won the contract do not in principle raise issues of equal treatment between tenderers, but rather issues concerning a possible change to the essential terms of the contract in question (44) or the jeopardising of its satisfactory performance. (45)

61. It is in the light of those principles that the Court must examine the limits placed by the principle of equal treatment, in a situation such as the present case, on the option of a contracting authority, before the contract is awarded, to allow an economic operator which had not initially been pre-selected to succeed and take the place of another operator, in particular the pre-selected partnership of which it was a member.

3. The possibility of allowing an economic operator which has not been pre-selected to succeed and take the place of another operator in a procurement procedure

62. The interveners evidently agree that, as a general rule, in invitations to tender with pre-selection, only tenderers which have been pre-selected may submit tenders and may thus be awarded the contract.

63. I share that view, which, as MTHZ rightly pointed out, has an express legal basis in Article 51(3) of Directive 2004/17. In providing that contracting entities ‘shall verify that the tenders submitted by the selected tenderers comply …’, that provision assumes that the pre-selected operators and the operators submitting tenders are the same. (46) The principle, therefore, is that the pre-selected economic operator and the economic operator submitting the tender, to which the contract might be awarded, must be legally and substantively the same.

64. In that connection, it should be noted that, contrary to the Commission’s claims at the hearing, in my view there can be no doubt that, in the present case, the group constituted in the form of an I/S and Aarsleff are neither legally nor substantively the same. Although Aarsleff was one of the participants in the I/S, there is no doubt that it is a legal entity which is substantively and legally separate from the group of which it was a member.

65. Having clarified that point, the question arises whether, in the light of the principles referred to in points 55 to 59 of this Opinion, there may be exceptions to the principle that the pre-selected tenderer must correspond to the tenderer submitting the tender, particularly in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings.

66. In my view, that principle cannot be absolute and permit no exceptions. I consider that it is possible to contemplate cases, albeit limited ones, where a change in a tenderer's identity in the course of the procedure should be allowed, particularly with reference to the need to maintain the widest possible opening-up to competition in a procurement procedure.

67. However, as I pointed out in point 59 of this Opinion, as that need is circumscribed by the need to comply with the principle of equal treatment, a contracting authority may not discriminate between tenderers by claiming, as justification for doing so, that there is a need to open up the procurement procedure as much as possible to competition. Any exceptions to the principle that the pre-selected tenderer must correspond to the tenderer submitting the tender — which, moreover, as exceptions to a general principle, must be interpreted strictly (47) — is thus circumscribed without qualification by the requirement that the principle of equal treatment between tenderers must be observed.

68. With those principles established, the question arises as to which approach is best capable of reconciling the requirements — which in a case such as the present are apparently conflicting — flowing from strict observance of equality of opportunity between tenderers and the widest possible opening-up to competition?

69. The interveners each propose a different approach.

70. First of all, for the reasons which I have just explained in point 66 of this Opinion, I would tend to rule out the approach apparently advocated by MTHZ in which exceptions should never be made to the principle that the pre-selected operator should correspond to the operator submitting the tender.

71. As for the Commission, it essentially considers that if an operator which has not been pre-selected — particularly, in a situation such as here, the remaining member of a group — meets the tendering specifications, the principle of equal treatment does not prevent the contracting authority from allowing it to continue with the procedure. However, that approach cannot guarantee that the need for equality of opportunity between tenderers will be strictly observed.

72. The fact that a new operator meets the tendering specifications, (48) although a precondition for ensuring that there is no discrimination between tenderers, does not as such mean that, in being allowed to take part in the tendering process at a later point than the other tenderers, the new operator will not benefit, at the time when it joins in the procedure, from competitive advantages, such as information not available to the other tenderers (49) when they decided to participate in the procurement procedure. (50)

73. The Danish Government considers that, in a case such as the present, the principle of equal treatment does not prevent a contracting authority from being able to accept changes in a tenderer's identity between pre-selection and the award of the contract if two conditions are met. First, the remaining part of the tenderer whose identity has changed must itself meet the capability requirements laid down for pre-selection, and second, the change in the tenderer's identity must have no effect on the list of candidates pre-selected, in the sense that, even if the remaining part of the tenderer had taken part in the pre-selection phase from the beginning in its new form, the pre-selected candidates would still have been the same.

74. This approach is also not satisfactory, in my view. The first condition appears to me to correspond, essentially, to the requirement in the approach proposed by the Commission. As for the second condition, I do not think that requiring that the change of subject should have no effect on the list of pre-selected candidates is enough to guarantee strict observance of equality of opportunity between tenderers. For the same reasons set out in point 72 of this Opinion, I consider that the fact that no operator was either improperly excluded from the procedure or improperly allowed to take part in it, although this too is a precondition for avoiding discrimination, is not enough to guarantee compliance with the requirement that tenderers should have equality of opportunity.

75. In my view, in the absence of express rules laid down in advance by the legislature or the contracting authority, it is desirable that the contracting body should conduct a specific examination of each individual case, based on all the facts at its disposal, in order to ascertain whether the change of subject at issue results in a situation where the tenderers are not on an equal footing throughout the procurement procedure, particularly, but not only, in formulating their tenders. That examination should aim in particular to ascertain whether the change results in a competitive advantage for the new tenderer, thereby distorting the competitive process.

76. It is possible to envisage various alteration scenarios in the abstract, and these need not be examined in the present context. I would simply point out that, where a change of the subject's identity is purely formal, rather than substantive, since it only involves a change of form or internal reorganisation, for example, which has no substantial consequences, (51) it will be unlikely that such a change could create a situation resulting in inequality of opportunity.

77. However, in my view, a situation such as in the main proceedings, where a group constituted in the form of a legal entity separate from the economic operators in that group is dissolved and replaced in the procedure by the remaining member of the group, does not constitute a change of subjective identity which is purely formal, rather than substantive.

78. That being so, I consider that it is for the referring court to establish, on the basis of the facts available to it, whether, in the present case, Banedanmark's decision resulted in a breach of the principle of equal treatment between the various tenderers taking part in the procedure and, in particular, whether Aarsleff benefited from competitive advantages over the other tenderers at the point when it was allowed to replace the I/S in the procedure.

79. In that regard, on the basis of the information before the Court, I will confine myself to the following considerations.

80. First of all, the referring court underlines that it must be regarded as established that if Aarsleff had submitted an application on its own instead of through the dissolved partnership, it would still have been pre-selected. However, in my opinion, that fact does not mean that, in the present case, there might not have been a breach of the principle of equal treatment. The decisive question here is not (or not only) whether, in theory, Aarsleff might or might not have been pre-selected on its own, but whether it benefited from different treatment which gave it a competitive advantage at the point when it was allowed to take part in the procedure on its own, without having first been pre-selected.

81. Next, it appears that Aarsleff may have decided to participate in the tender on its own on the basis of information not available to the other tenderers when they decided to take part. (52) In particular, MTHZ claimed that when Aarsleff, following Pihl's insolvency and the consequent dissolution of the group created in order to take part in the procedure, was able to take that decision, it knew exactly how many undertakings participating in the procedure had submitted a tender and, even, that the tender submitted by the group of which Aarsleff was a member had been assessed as the second best tender. Furthermore, in addition to all these factors, Aarsleff had been able, after Pihl became insolvent, to take over the contracts of fifty salaried workers from Pihl, including key persons for the completion of the project that was the subject of the tendering process. (53)

82. A situation in which two economic operators decide, before the start of a procurement procedure, to create a group for the sole purpose of taking part in that procedure implies that the two operators, after assessing the opportunities and risks associated with the project, took the commercial decision to participate in the tendering process together and to share the benefits and risks. That being so, it must be examined whether the opportunity given to one of those two operators, at a later stage in the procedure when there are fewer uncertainties about the course that the procedure will follow, to amend that commercial decision by allowing it to take part in the procedure on its own, does not give rise to different treatment in respect of the other tenderers and result in a competitive advantage. It must be ascertained whether that subsequent commercial decision was actually taken on the basis of different information from that available to the other tenderers when they made a decision to take part in the procedure in a particular form or composition, without subsequently having the opportunity to change it.

V – Conclusion

83. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should answer the question raised by Klagenævnet for Udbud to the following effect:

> Article 51(3) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sector is to be interpreted as meaning that, as a general rule, an economic operator pre-selected in a procurement procedure with pre-selection must be legally and substantively the same as the economic operator submitting a tender in the same procedure.
> In a situation such as that in the main proceedings, where two economic operators have constituted a group in the form of a commercial company in order to take part in a public procurement procedure, and one of the two, after the group has been pre-selected but before the contract is awarded, has been the subject of insolvency proceedings so that the group has been dissolved, Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 is to be interpreted as meaning that it is for the contracting body to conduct a specific examination, based on all the facts at its disposal, to ascertain whether the permission given to the remaining member of the group, which had not been pre-selected, to continue to take part in the procedure in place of the group results in a situation where the tenderers are not on an equal footing throughout the procedure, particularly in formulating their tenders. That will specifically be the case where the remaining member of the group may have taken decisions in the context of the procurement procedure on the basis of information not available to the other tenderers at the point when they had to take the same decision, and where it had the opportunity, after the procedure was initiated, to acquire key elements for the completion of the project which were not available to it at the point when it should have been pre-selected.

It is clear from this provision, which is used in more complex cases or cases involving matters of principle, that in those types of particularly important cases too, the Klagenævnet for Udbud will have an equal number of presidency members and expert members, which means that, since the president has the deciding vote, the presidency members will have a majority say in the adoption of the decision.

45 In that regard, it should be noted that the new Directive 2014/25 lays down express rules, in Article 89(1)(d)(ii), governing cases where the contractor changes after the contract has been awarded. That provision provides that there is no need to conduct a new procurement procedure in particular where a new contractor replaces the one to which the contracting entity had initially awarded the contract 'as a consequence of universal or partial succession into the position of the initial contractor, following corporate restructuring, including takeover, merger, acquisition or insolvency, of another economic operator that fulfils the criteria for qualitative selection initially established provided that this does not entail other substantial modifications to the contract and is not aimed at circumventing the application of this Directive'.

46 In the legislation on negotiated procedures with prior call for competition, Article 47(2) of the new Directive 2014/25 is even clearer on this subject, since it provides that '[o]nly those economic operators invited by the contracting entity following its assessment of the information provided may participate in the negotiations'.

---

47 See, to that effect, the judgments in Honyvem Informazioni Commerciali (C-465/04, EU:C:2006:199, paragraph 24) and Pfeiffer and Others (C-397/01 to C-403/01, EU:C:2004:584, paragraph 52 and the case-law cited therein).

---

48 Moreover, it is not clear whether, under that proposal, the new operator should meet the specifications at the point when the change occurs, or whether it should have met them at the point when all the other tenderers were pre-selected.

---

49 For a case where the Court took account of the possible competitive advantages resulting from information which a tenderer could have obtained about the public contract in question, see the judgment in Fabricom (C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127, paragraph 29).

---

50 It should also be noted that the Commission itself accepts in its observations that the criterion which it proposes cannot guarantee in every case that there will be no risk of distortion of competition.

---

51 See, by analogy, the judgment in Pressetext Nachrichtenagentur (C-454/06, EU:C:2008:351, paragraphs 43 to 45).

---

52 In that regard, see footnote 49 of this Opinion.

---

53 In that regard, it is relevant to note that it is clear from the letter sent by Banedanmark to the other tenderers (referred to in point 20 of this Opinion) that it took that fact into account when it decided to allow Aarsleff to take the place of the now dissolved group.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

4 May 2017 (*)

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Esaprojekt sp. z o.o. and Województwo Łódzkie (Voïvode (district authority), Łódz, Poland, ‘the contracting authority’) concerning the conditions for selecting a tender submitted by the economic operator Konsultant Komputer sp. z o.o. in a procedure for the award of a public contract for the provision of IT systems for hospitals in Poland.

Legal context

3 Recital 46 of Directive 2004/18 states:

‘Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in conditions of effective competition. As a result, it is appropriate to allow the application of two award criteria only: “the lowest price” and “the most economically advantageous tender”.

To ensure compliance with the principle of equal treatment in the award of contracts, it is appropriate to lay down an obligation — established by case-law — to ensure the necessary transparency to enable all tenderers to be reasonably informed of the criteria and arrangements which will be applied to identify the most economically advantageous tender. …’

4 Article 1(2)(a) of the directive reads as follows:

‘“Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.’

5 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

6 Article 44 of Directive 2004/18 entitled ‘Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts’ states as follows:

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 53 and 55, taking into account Article 24, after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded under Articles 45 and 46 has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52, and, where appropriate, with the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in paragraph 3.

2. The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

These minimum levels shall be indicated in the contract notice.

7 Article 45 of that directive, headed ‘Personal situation of the candidate or tenderer’, provides in paragraph 2:

‘Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section, or has not supplied such information.

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.'

8 Article 48 of that directive, entitled 'Technical and/or professional ability', states as follows:

'1. The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.

2. Evidence of the economic operators' technical abilities may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services:

(a) …

(ii) a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, whether public or private, involved. …

3. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.'

4. Under the same conditions a group of economic operators as referred to Article 4 may rely on the abilities of participants in the group or in other entities.

9 Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, headed 'Additional documentation and information', is worded as follows:

'The contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50.'

Polish law

10 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into the Polish national legal system by the Ustawa Prawo zamówień publicznych (Law on public contracts, codified text Dz. U of 2013, headings 907, 984, 1047 and 1473, and Dz. U of 2014, heading 423, 'Law on public contracts').

11 Article 24(2)(3) and (4) of the Law on public contracts is worded as follows:

'The following shall also be excluded from procedures for the award of public contracts:

3. economic operators which have submitted incorrect information which affects, or may affect, the result of the ongoing procedure;

4. has not proved that it has satisfied the conditions for participating in that procedure.'

12 Article 26(2b) and (4) of that law provides:

'2b An economic operator may rely on the knowledge, experience, technical abilities and persons able to perform the contract or the financial capacities of other bodies, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, in particular by producing for that purpose a written undertaking by those entities that they will make available to it the necessary resources for the period during which they are used to perform the contract.

4. Within a time limit specified by it the contracting authority shall also request clarifications concerning declarations or documents referred to in Paragraph 25(1).'

13 Article 93(1)(7) of that law states:

'The contracting authority shall annul the procedure for the award of the contract where … the award procedure is vitiated by an irreparable defect which prevents the conclusion of a non-annullable public contract.'

14 Article 1(6) of the Rozporządzenie Prezesa Rady Ministrów z dnia 19 lutego 2013 r. w sprawie rodzajów dokumentów, jakich może żądać zamawiający od wykonawcy, oraz form, w jakich te dokumenty mogą być składane (Regulation of the President of the Council of Ministers of 19 February 2013 on the type of documents which may be required by the contracting authority from an economic operator and the method of production of those documents (Dz. U. of 2013, heading 231)), is worded as follows:

'If, in order to establish that it meets the conditions referred to in Article 22(1) of the [Law on public contracts], an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities pursuant to the provisions of Article 26(2b) of the [Law on public contracts], the contracting authority, in order to determine whether the economic operator will have capacities of other bodies to the extent necessary for the proper performance of the contract or whether the link between the economic operator and those entities does in fact ensure access to those capacities may require:

(1) with regard to the conditions referred to in Article 22(1)(4) of the [Law on public contracts], the documents listed in Article 22(1)(9) to (11), and the same for other documents relating to the economic and financial standing, as laid down in the tender notice or the tender specifications;

(2) documents relating in particular to:

(a) the extent of the resources of another entity which the economic operator is able to access;

(b) the rules governing the use by the economic operator of the resources of another entity in order to perform the contract;

(c) the nature of the link between an operator and another entity; and

(d) the extent and duration of the participation of another entity in the performance of the contract.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

15 It is apparent from the decision to refer that the contracting authority opened an award procedure for a public contract concerning the 'modernisation of the existing IT systems and the installation of new systems in hospitals run by the Voïvode (district authority) of Łódz (Poland) as part of the project entitled 'Services of a Regional Medical Information System (RMIS services)'. The call for tenders was published in the Official Journal of the European Union of 29 November 2013, under number 2013/S 232-402292.

16 For the purposes of the award of the contract, the contracting authority chose to conduct an open procedure and divided the subject matter of the contract in several lots covering different establishments. Thus, it enabled the economic operators interested to submit bids, not only for the whole contract, but also for a part of it.

17 The dispute in the main proceedings specifically concerns the award of lot No 3, relating to the purchase and supply of a hospital integrated system to serve the (grey) administrative sector and the (white) medical sector at the Nicolaus Copernicus Independent Provincial Hospital in Piotrków Tribunalski (Poland). The contract is for standard software that the economic operator is to deliver, install and configure in order to execute the contract.

18 As provided in Point 6.1 and subparagraph 6.1.2 of the tender specifications, in order to prove its experience, each candidate/tenderer submitting a bid for lot No 3 had to prove, inter alia, that it had performed at least two contracts, both consisting in the supply, installation, configuration and implementation of an integrated hospital system (HIS) in the white and grey departments of a hospital with a minimum of 200 beds and having a value of not less than 450 000 Polish zlotys (PLN) (approximately EUR 101 676.08) including value added tax (VAT).

19 For that purpose, each economic operator had to provide, inter alia, a list of the main supplies made in the three years preceding the expiry of the time limit for submitting bids or, if appropriate, a shorter period of activity, indicating the subject matter, value, date of performance and the entities for which those supplies were made and attaching proof that they were, or are being, duly provided.

20 The economic operator Konsultant Komputer submitted in its tender a list of supplies, including two headings concerning the delivery, installation, configuration and implementation of two integrated hospital systems and performed for the J. Korczak specialist regional hospital in Słupsk (Poland) and the J. Śniadecki specialist hospital in Nowy Sącz (Poland), by the consortium composed of Konsultant IT sp. z o.o. and Konsultant Komputer.

21 The contracting authority selected Konsultant Komputer’s bid, considering it to be the most economically advantageous for lot No 3.

22 As a candidate excluded from that procedure, Esaprojekt brought an action before the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber, Poland) against the decision of the contracting authority selecting Konsultant Komputer’s bid. In essence, Esaprojekt criticised the contracting authority for failing to establish that the bid in question was based on incorrect information and failed to meet the conditions laid down in subparagraph 6.1.2 of the tender specifications. Consequently, that bid should have been rejected in accordance with Article 24(2)(3) of the Law on public contracts.

23 By decision of 7 April 2014, the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber) ordered the contracting authority to annul its acceptance of the most advantageous bid for lot No 3 and to request Konsultant Komputer to provide further information about the scope of the contracts which it had mentioned in its bid, pursuant to Article 26(4) of the Law on public contracts. The contracting authority therefore annulled its decision and asked Konsultant Komputer to supplement the documents in order to prove that the condition relating to knowledge and experience required to be a candidate, laid down in subparagraph 6.1.2 of the tender specifications, had been met.

24 In response to that request, by letter of 29 April 2014, Konsultant Komputer indicated, first, that the contract it had relied on concerned the services that the contracting authority had defined as the grey sector and, second, that the list of supplies annexed to its tender concerned the execution of two contracts, namely, Contract No 51/2/2010 of 5 October 2010 and Contract No 62/2010 of 6 December 2010.

25 However, it was clear from the information provided by Konsultant Komputer that, in reality, the supplies of services relating to the J. Korczak specialist hospital in Słupsk had been performed within the framework of two separate contracts, one of which did not include the white sector, while the other did not include the grey sector.

26 In the light of those clarifications, the contracting authority took the view that the services supplied to the J. Korczak specialist regional hospital in Słupsk did not fulfil the conditions laid down in subparagraph 6.1.2 of the tender specifications, according to which each contract had to contain all the elements listed therein, specifically, supply, installation, configuration and implementation of an integrated hospital system (HIS) in the white and grey sectors. Therefore, the contracting authority requested Konsultant Komputer to supplement the documents in that regard.

27 For that purpose, Konsultant Komputer provided a new list of supplies in which it relied on the experience of another entity, Medinet Systemy Informatyczne sp. z o.o. concerning two supplies, the first for the Independent Public Healthcare Establishment in Janów Lubelski, and the second for the District Railway Hospital in Lublin (Poland). It also sent an undertaking from Medinet Systemy Informatyczne to provide, as an advisor and consultant, the resources necessary for the performance of the contract and, again listed the supply to the J. Śniadecki specialist hospital in Nowy Sącz.

28 Satisfied with that response, the contracting authority again selected Konsultant Komputer's bid, since it was the most economically advantageous for lot No 3.

29 Esaprojekt brought an action before the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber) seeking annulment of the contracting authority's decision, a fresh evaluation of the bids, and the exclusion of Konsultant Komputer on the ground that it had submitted false information and had failed to prove that it had fulfilled the conditions for participation in the procedure, in particular, those set out in subparagraph 6.1.2 of the tender specifications.

30 According to the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber), the case in the main proceedings, first, raises the question whether Articles 2 and 51 of Directive 2004/18 preclude an economic operator, when it supplements documents at the request of the contracting authority, from relying on supplies of services other than those it included in its initial bid or from being able to rely, in that regard, on supplies of services made by another entity on whose resources it did not rely in its initial bid.

31 Second, that court is unsure whether, in the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, the economic operator is able to rely on the right laid down in Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 to rely on the capacities of other entities where it does not itself fulfil the minimum conditions required in order to take part in the tender procedure for a service contract.

32 Moreover, the Krajowa Izba Odwolawcza (National Appeal Chamber) also asks in which circumstances an economic operator may be held liable for serious misconduct and, therefore, be excluded from taking part in a public contract for the purposes of Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18.

33 In those circumstances, the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Does Article 51 of [Directive 2004/18], in conjunction with the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 2 thereof, allow an economic operator, when clarifying or supplementing documents, to refer to the performance of contracts (that is to say, supplies provided) other than those which it referred to in the list of supplies attached to the tender, and in particular can it refer to the performance of contracts by another entity the use of whose resources it did not refer to in the tender?

(2) In the light of the judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova [(C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647)], according to which "the principle of equal treatment must be interpreted as not precluding a contracting authority from asking a candidate, after the deadline for applying to take part in a tendering procedure, to provide documents describing that candidate's situation — such as a copy of its published balance sheet — which can be objectively shown to predate that deadline, so long as it was not expressly laid down in the contract documents that, unless such documents were provided, the application would be rejected", must Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 be interpreted as meaning that the supplementing of documents is possible only when it involves documents which can be objectively shown to predate the deadline for submitting tenders or requests to participate in the procedure, or that the Court of Justice stated only one of the possibilities and the supplementing of documents is possible also in other cases, for example by attaching documents which did not predate the deadline but which objectively confirm fulfilment of a condition?

(3) If the answer to Question 2 is to the effect that the supplementing of documents other than as stated in the judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova [(C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647)] is possible, is it possible to supplement by adding documents drawn up by the economic operator, subcontractors or other entities on whose capacities the economic operator relies, if they were not submitted together with the tender?

(4) Does Article 44 of [Directive 2004/18], in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators set out in Article 2, allow reliance on the resources of another entity, as referred to in Article 48(3), by combining the knowledge and experience of two entities, which, individually, do not have the knowledge and experience required by the contracting authority, where that experience cannot be divided (that is to say, the condition for participation in the procedure must be fulfilled in its entirety by the economic operator) and performance of the contract cannot be divided (constitutes a single whole)?

(5) Does Article 44 of [Directive 2004/18], in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2, allow reliance on the experience of a group of economic operators in such a way that an economic operator which performed a contract as one of a group of economic operators can rely on the performance by that group, regardless of what its participation in the performance of that contract was, or can it rely only on the experience it itself has actually acquired in performing the relevant part of the contract which was assigned to it within that group?

(6) Can Article 45(2)(g) of [Directive 2004/18], which states that any economic operator which is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying or not supplying information can be excluded from the procedure, be interpreted as excluding from the procedure an economic operator which submitted incorrect information which affected, or could affect, the result of the procedure, in that the guilt for misrepresentation lies in the very supply to the contracting authority of the factually inaccurate information which affects the decision of the contracting authority concerning exclusion of the economic operator (and rejection of its tender), regardless of whether the economic operator did so knowingly and wilfully, or unknowingly, through recklessness, negligence or failure to exercise due diligence? Is it possible to regard as "guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required … or [not having] supplied such information" only an economic operator which has submitted incorrect (factually inaccurate) information, or also one which has submitted information which is correct, but has done so in such a way as to satisfy the contracting authority that it fulfils the requirements laid down by the contracting authority it, even though it does not?

(7) Does Article 44 of [Directive 2004/18], in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2, allow reliance by an economic operator on experience in such a way that it relies jointly on two or more contractual agreements as a single public contract, despite the fact that the contracting authority did not refer to such a possibility in the contract notice or the tender specifications?'

Consideration of the questions referred

Questions 1 to 3

34 By Questions 1 to 3, which must be examined together, the referring court asks essentially whether Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, must be interpreted as precluding an economic operator, in order to prove that it satisfies the conditions for participating in a public procurement procedure, from submitting to the contracting authority, after the expiry of the period prescribed for applications to take part in a public tender procedure, documents not included in its initial bid, such as a contract performed by another entity and the undertaking by the latter to place at the disposal of that operator the capacities and resources necessary for the performance of the relevant contract.

35 In order to answer those questions, it must be recalled that, in accordance with recital 46 and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authorities are required to afford economic operators equal, non-discriminatory and transparent treatment (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 60).

36 Thus, first, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination require tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their bids, which therefore implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions. Second, the principle of transparency is essentially intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. That obligation implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or tender specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 61 and the case-law cited).

37 Furthermore, as the Court has already held, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency preclude any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure, which means that, as a general rule, a tender cannot be amended after it has been submitted, whether at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderer concerned. It follows that, where the contracting authority regards a tender as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications, it cannot require the tenderer to provide clarification (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 62 and the case-law cited).

38 However, the Court has explained that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the correction or amplification of details of a tender, on a limited and specific basis, particularly when it is clear that they require mere clarification, or to correct obvious material errors (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 63 and the case-law cited).

39 To that end, the contracting authority must ensure, in particular, that the request for clarification does not lead to the submission, by a tenderer, of what would appear in reality to be a new tender (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 64 and the case-law cited).

40 Furthermore, when exercising its right to ask a tenderer to clarify its tender, the contracting authority must treat tenderers equally and fairly, in such a way that a request for clarification does not appear unduly to have favoured or disadvantaged the tenderer or tenderers to which the request was addressed, once the procedure for selection of tenders has been completed and in the light of its outcome (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 65 and the case-law cited).

41 In the present case, Konsultant Komputer submitted documents to the contracting authority which were not included in its initial bid after the expiry of the time limit laid down for submitting applications for the public tender concerned. In particular, as stated in paragraph 27 of the present judgment, it relied on a contract performed by another entity and the undertaking by the latter to place at the disposal of that operator the resources necessary for the performance of the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

42 Such further information, far from being merely a clarification made on a limited or specific basis or a correction of obvious material errors, within the meaning of the case-law set out in paragraph 38 of the present judgment, is in reality a substantive and significant amendment of the initial bid, which is more akin to the submission of a new tender.

43 As the Advocate General noted, in substance, in point 30 of his Opinion, such a communication directly affects the essential elements of the award procedure, namely the very identity of the economic operator which may be awarded the public contract concerned, and the verification of the capacities of that operator and, therefore, its ability to perform the contract concerned within the meaning of Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18.

44 In those circumstances, by allowing the presentation by the economic operator concerned of the documents in question in order to supplement its original tender, the contracting authority unduly favours that operator as compared with other candidates and, thereby, breaches the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination of economic operators and the obligation of transparency which derives from them, to which the contracting authorities are subject by virtue of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18.

45 It is clear from the foregoing that the answer to Questions 1 to 3 is that Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, must be interpreted as precluding an economic operator from submitting to the contracting authority, in order to prove that it satisfies the conditions for participating in a public tender procedure, documents which were not included in its initial bid, such as a contract performed by another entity and the undertaking of the latter to place at the disposal of that operator the capacities and resources necessary for the performance of the contract concerned after the expiry of the time limit laid down for submitting tenders for a public contract.

Question 4

46 By Question 4, the referring court asks essentially whether Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that it allows an economic operator to rely on the capacities of another entity, within the meaning of Article 48(3) thereof, by combining the knowledge and experience of the two entities, which separately do not have the capacities required to perform a particular contract, if the contracting authority takes the view that the contract concerned cannot be divided and must, therefore, be performed by a single operator.

47 In order to answer that question it should be recalled that, according to the Court's settled case-law, Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 recognise the right of every economic operator to rely, for a particular contract, upon the capacities of other entities, regardless of the nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it proves to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the performance of the contract (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

48 However, the Court has already held that the provisions of Directive 2004/18 do not preclude the exercise of the right established in Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) thereof from being limited in exceptional circumstances (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 39 and the case-law cited).

49 It is conceivable that there may be works with special requirements necessitating a certain capacity which cannot be obtained by combining the capacities of more than one operator which, on its own would be inadequate. In such circumstances, the contracting authority would be justified in requiring that the minimum capacity level concerned be achieved by a single economic operator or, where appropriate, by relying on a limited number of economic operators, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, as long as that requirement is related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 40 and the case-law cited).

50 In the present case, as stated in paragraph 18 of the present judgment, the specifications of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings required the tenderers to present at least two contracts performed in a specific sector.

51 Following the request of the contracting authority, in order to prove that it had the necessary skill to perform the public contract at issue in the main proceedings, Konsultant Komputer relied on the experience of another entity consisting in two supplies, as set out in paragraph 27 of the present judgment, performed by Medinet Systemy Informatyczne.

52 However, as the Advocate General noted, in point 46 of his Opinion, the question referred for a preliminary ruling is based on the premiss, confirmed by the referring court, that the public contract at issue in the main proceedings cannot be divided, so that the minimum level of capacity concerned must be attained by a single economic operator and not by relying on the capacities of several economic operators. Moreover, as is apparent from the decision to refer, the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber) considers that the exclusion of the possibility to rely on the experience of several economic operators is related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract concerned.

53 In those circumstances and having regard to the case-law set out in paragraphs 48 and 49 of the present judgment, the economic operator concerned cannot rely on the capacities of another entity in order to prove that it has the capacities necessary for the performance of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings.

54 Consequently, the answer to the fourth question referred is that Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2 thereof, must be interpreted as meaning that it does not allow an economic operator to rely on the capacities of another entity, within the meaning of Article 48(3) of that directive, by combining the knowledge and experience of two entities which, individually, do not have the capacities required for the performance of a particular contract, where the contracting authority considers that the contract concerned cannot be divided, in that it must be performed by a single operator, and that such exclusion of the possibility to rely on the experience of several economic operators is related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract which must be therefore performed by a single operator.

55 By Question 5, the referring court asks essentially whether Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that it enables an economic operator which participates individually in an award procedure for a public contract, to rely on the experience of a group of undertakings, of which it was part in connection with another public contract, irrespective of the nature of its participation in the performance of the latter.

56 That question relates to the fact, set out in paragraph 20 of the present judgment that, in the case in the main proceedings, the supply of hospital integrated systems for the hospitals concerned was carried out by a group composed of two undertakings, namely Konsultant Komputer and Konsultant IT.

57 In order to answer those questions it must be recalled, that, according to Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18, it is for the contracting authorities to check the suitability of the candidates or tenderers in accordance with the criteria referred to in Articles 47 to 52 thereof.

58 Furthermore, under Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, a contracting authority may require candidates or tenderers to meet minimum levels of economic and financial standing and technical and professional ability in accordance with Articles 47 and 48 thereof.

59 In particular, Article 48(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 provides that evidence of the technical and/or professional abilities of economic operators may be furnished, taking account in particular of the nature and importance of the supplies of services made, by the presentation of the list of works carried out during the last five years and by the presentation of a list of the principle deliveries effected or main services supplied in the last three years.

60 In accordance with the case-law set out in paragraph 47 of the present judgment, Article 48(3) of that directive allows an economic operator, for a particular contract, to rely on the capacities of other entities, such as a group of undertakings of which it is a member, so long as it proves to the contracting authority that that operator will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract.

61 In that connection, the experience acquired by an economic operator constitutes a particularly important criterion for the qualitative selection of that operator, as it enables the contracting authority to check the ability of the candidates or tenderers to execute a specific public contract, in accordance with Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18.

62 Therefore, where an economic operator relies on the experience of a group of undertakings in which it has participated, that experience must be assessed in relation to the effective participation of that operator and, therefore, to its actual contribution to the performance of an activity required of that group in the context of a specific public contract.

63 As the Polish Government rightly observed in its written submissions, in practice an economic operator acquires experience not by the mere fact of being a member of a group of undertakings without any regard for its contribution to that group, but only by directly participating in the performance of at least part of the contract, the whole of which is to be performed by that group.

64 It follows that an economic operator cannot rely on the supplies of services by other members of a group of undertakings in which it has not actually and directly participated as experience required by the contracting authority.

65 Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to Question 5 is that Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that it does not allow an economic operator, which has individually participated in an award procedure for a public contract, to rely on the experience of a group of undertakings of which it was a member, in connection with another public contract, if it has not actually and directly participated in the performance of the latter.

66 By Question 6, the referring court asks essentially whether Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18, which allows an economic operator to be excluded from participating in a public contract, inter alia, if it is guilty of serious misrepresentation when supplying information requested by the contracting authority, must be interpreted as meaning that that provision may be applied where the information is of such a nature as to affect the outcome of the call for tenders, irrespective of whether the economic operator acted intentionally or not.

67 In order to answer that question, it must be recalled that Article 45(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18 lays down a series of obligatory and optional grounds by which a tenderer may be excluded from participation in a public contract, which relate to its personal situation.

68 In particular, for the purposes of Article 45(2)(g) of that directive, an economic operator may be excluded from participating in a public contract if it is guilty of ‘serious misrepresentation’ in supplying the information required by the contracting authority, or has not supplied such information.

69 By its question, the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber) asks, for the purposes of the application of that provision, whether it is necessary that the candidate/tenderer acted intentionally, and whether it is necessary that the information submitted to the contracting authority has or could have affected the outcome of the call for tenders.

70 In that connection, it must be observed, as a preliminary point, that the wording of Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18 does not contain any reference to intentional behaviour by the economic operator. Therefore, the establishment of such conduct cannot be regarded as being an element necessary for the exclusion of such an operator from participating in a public contract.

71 To the contrary, in order to consider the candidate/tenderer as being guilty of ‘serious misrepresentation’ within the meaning of that provision in order to exclude it from a public contract, it is sufficient if the candidate/tenderer is guilty of some degree of negligence which may have a decisive effect on the decisions to exclude candidates from being selected or awarded as public contract.

72 Therefore, in order to sanction an economic operator which has submitted false declarations by excluding its participation in a public contract, the contracting authority is not required, contrary to the submissions, inter alia, of the Polish Government and the European Commission, to provide evidence of the existence of wilful misconduct on the part of that economic operator.

73 Second, it must be observed that, in accordance with Article 45(2), second subparagraph, of Directive 2004/18, the Member States must specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for that paragraph.

74 It follows that the concepts in Article 45(2), first paragraph, including ‘serious misrepresentation’, can be specified and explained in national law, provided that it has regard for EU law (see, to that effect, judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposat and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 26).

75 In the present case, Article 24(2)(3) of the Law on public contracts provides for the possibility to exclude from the award of a contract, any economic operator which has submitted false information which affects, or is of such a nature as to affect, the result of the ongoing tender procedure.

76 As is clear from the decision to refer, the declarations and information provided by the economic operator concerned did in fact affect the outcome of the award procedure for the contract at issue in the main proceedings. According to the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber), it is specifically on the basis of those declarations and that information that Konsultant Komputer was awarded the tender.

77 In those circumstances, it must be held that, by providing such declaration and information, the economic operator concerned was guilty of negligence which had a decisive effect on the decisions to exclude, select or award the public contract concerned, so that that operator may be regarded as being guilty of 'serious misrepresentation' for the purposes of Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18. Therefore, such an attitude is able to justify the decision of the contracting authority to exclude that operator from the public contract concerned.

78 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to Question 6 is that Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18, which allows the exclusion of an economic operator from participation in a public contract, in particular if it is guilty of 'serious misrepresentation' for making false declarations when submitting the information requested by the contracting authority, must be interpreted as meaning that it may be applied where the operator concerned is guilty of a certain degree of negligence, that is to say negligence of a nature which may have a decisive effect on decisions concerning exclusion, selection or award of a public contract, irrespective of whether there is a finding of wilful misconduct on the part of that operator.

79 By Question 7, the referring court asks essentially whether Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that it allows an economic operator to rely on experience by relying simultaneously on two or more contracts as a single contract, although the contracting authority has not expressly provided for such a possibility either in the contract notice or in the tender specifications.

80 In order to answer that question, it must be observed, as a preliminary point, as set out in paragraph 57 of the present judgment, pursuant to Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authority is required to check the suitability of candidates or tenderers to perform the contract concerned in accordance with the requirements laid down in Articles 47 to 52 of that directive.

81 The candidates or tenderers themselves must prove to the contracting authority that they have or will have the capacities necessary to ensure the proper performance of the public contract concerned.

82 In that connection, the contracting authority is justified in expressly setting out, in principle in the tender notice or the tender specifications, the requirement to provide evidence of specific capacities and practical arrangements by which the candidate/tenderer must demonstrate its suitability to be awarded and perform the contract concerned. Likewise, it is conceivable that, in specific circumstances, having regard to the nature of the works concerned and the subject matter and purpose of the contract, the contracting authority may lay down limits, in particular regarding the use of a limited number of economic operators, pursuant to Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 (see, to that effect, judgments of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraphs 39 to 41, and of 5 April 2017, Borta, C-298/15, EU:C:2017:266, paragraph 90 and the case-law cited).

83 However, if the contracting authority decides to make use of such a possibility, it must ensure that the rules it adopts are related and proportionate to the subject matter and objectives of that contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraphs 40 and 56).

84 In the present case, as is clear from the decision to refer, although it is true that the contracting authority has not expressly provided in the contract documents for the possibility for the candidate/tenderer to rely on two or more contracts as a single contract, the fact remains that such a possibility was not expressly excluded, either in the contract notice or in the tender specifications.

85 In those circumstances, it is conceivable prima facie that the experience necessary for the performance of the contract concerned, acquired by the economic operator in the performance of not one, but two or more different contracts, may be regarded as sufficient by the contracting authority and thereby enables that operator to win the public contract concerned.

86 As the Advocate General noted, in paragraph 62 of his Opinion, if the requirements of a specific contract can be fulfilled by bringing together capacities or experience split between different operators, a fortiori, it would simply be illogical to exclude, as a matter of principle, the possibility of bringing together capacities or experience gained by the same operator in relation to different contracts.

87 Therefore, as in the case in the main proceedings, in so far as the possibility to rely on experience acquired in relation to several contracts has not been excluded either in the contract notice or in the tender specifications, it is for the contracting authority, subject to review by the competent national courts, to check whether the experience gained from two or more contracts, having regard to the nature of the works concerned and the subject matter and purpose of the contract concerned, ensures the proper performance of that contract.

88 Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to Question 7 is that Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that it allows an economic operator to rely on experience derived from two or more contracts treated as a single contract, unless the contracting authority has excluded such a possibility pursuant to requirements which are related and proportionate to the subject matter and purpose of the public contract concerned.

Costs

89 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 51 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, must be interpreted as precluding an economic operator from submitting to the contracting authority, in order to prove that it satisfies the conditions for participating in a public tender procedure, documents which were not included in its initial bid, such as a contract performed by another entity and the undertaking of the latter to place at the disposal of that operator the capacities and resources necessary for the performance of the contract concerned after the expiry of the time limit laid down for submitting tenders for a public contract.

2. Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that it does not allow an economic operator to rely on the capacities of another entity, within the meaning of Article 48(3) of that directive, by combining the knowledge and experience of two entities which, individually, do not have the capacities required for the performance of a particular contract, where the contracting authority considers that the contract concerned cannot be divided, in that it must be performed by a single operator, and that such exclusion of the possibility to rely on the experience of several economic operators is related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract which must be performed by a single operator.

3. Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that it does not allow an economic operator, which has individually participated in an award procedure for a public contract, to rely on the experience of a group of undertakings of which it was a member, in connection with another public contract, if it has not actually and directly participated in the performance of the latter.

4. Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18, which allows the exclusion of an economic operator from participation in a public contract, in particular if it is guilty of 'serious misrepresentation' for making false declarations when submitting the information requested by the contracting authority, must be interpreted as meaning that it may be applied where the operator concerned is guilty of a certain degree of negligence, that is to say negligence of a nature which may have a decisive effect on decisions concerning exclusion, selection or award of a public contract, irrespective of whether there is a finding of wilful misconduct on the part of that operator.

5. Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2 of that directive, must be interpreted as meaning that it allows an economic operator to rely on experience derived from two or more contracts treated as a single contract, unless the contracting authority has excluded such a possibility pursuant to requirements which are related and proportionate to the subject matter and purpose of the public contract concerned.

BOBEK

delivered on 24 November 2016 (1)

Case C-387/14

Esaprojekt Sp. z o.o.

v

Województwo Łódzkie

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeals Chamber, Poland))

(Directive 2004/18/EC — Principles of non-discrimination and transparency — Submission by the tenderer of additional information concerning supplies not referred to in the initial offer — Possibility of combining the experience of two entities — Possibility to rely on experience obtained as member of a group of undertakings — Possibility to combine experience from multiple contracts — Serious misrepresentation)

I – Introduction

1. The present case concerns a public tender to supply hospital IT systems in Poland. The company Komputer Konsult Sp. z o.o. ('KK') was initially awarded that tender. Esaprojekt Sp. z o.o. ('Esaprojekt'), which had also submitted a bid, challenged that award before the national courts. The award was annulled because the experience relied on by KK was insufficient. KK was invited to clarify its list of experience. KK's amended list relied on new, third-party experience. KK was again awarded the contract. Esaprojekt again appealed, leading to the request for a preliminary ruling in this case.

2. The national court puts to the Court a series of questions that seek to determine, first, the conditions under which tenderers can modify their list of experience and rely on the experience of third parties. Second, the national court seeks clarification of the conditions under which information provided by a tenderer amounts to a 'misrepresentation' under Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18/EC. (2) Third, the national court asks whether experience obtained under separate contracts can be jointly relied on to meet a tender requirement, where such a possibility was not explicitly envisaged by the contracting authority.

II – Legal framework

A – EU law

3. Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 ('the Directive') lays down the principle of transparency and non-discrimination in tenders for public works, public supply and public service contracts.

4. Article 44(1) states that contracts shall be awarded, among others, in accordance with the criteria of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Article 48. Article 44(2) provides that any minimum capacity requirements imposed 'must be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract'.

5. Article 45(2)(g), which appears in the section entitled ‘Criteria for qualitative selection’, provides that an economic operator may be excluded from participation in a tender where it is ‘guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section or has not supplied such information’ and, in relation to Article 45(2) generally, that ‘Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph’.

6. Article 48(2) sets out ways in which experience may be evidenced, which includes at point (a) in particular, lists of works carried out, principal deliveries effected or main services provided.

7. Article 48(3) foresees that an economic operator ‘may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them’. In such cases, the operator must prove that it has ‘at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator’.

8. Article 51, entitled, ‘Additional documentation and information’ states that a contracting authority ‘may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50’.

B – National law

9. Article 2(13) of the Ustawa Prawo zamówień publicznych (Law on public contracts) (‘the Ustawa PZP’), defines the notion of ‘public contracts’ as ‘contracts for pecuniary interest concluded between a contracting authority and an economic operator whose subject is services, supplies or works’.

10. Article 24(2)(3) of the Ustawa PZP provides for the exclusion of economic operators which ‘… have submitted incorrect information which affects, or may affect, the result of the procedure carried out ...’.

11. Article 26 of the Ustawa PZP foresees the possibility for the contracting authority to request tenderers to supply missing information, correct errors or clarify declarations or documents.

III – Facts, procedure and questions referred

12. The present case concerns a public tender for a contract for public hospital IT systems in the Province of Łódź (Poland). The relevant part of the tender relates to the purchase and supply of a hospital integrated system (HIS) to serve the (grey) administrative sector and the (white) medical sector at the Samodzielny Szpital Wojewódzki im. Mikołaja Kopernika (Nicolaus Copernicus Independent Provincial Hospital).

13. According to the tender specifications, applications for the award of the contract could be made by economic operators that were able to demonstrate, among others, that they had performed at least two contracts covering (in respect of each of the contracts referred to): the supply, installation, configuration and implementation of a HIS in the white and grey sectors, for a healthcare establishment with at least 200 beds, and having a value of not less than PLN 450 000 gross.

14. In order to demonstrate that they fulfilled the above condition, economic operators had to submit a declaration and a list of ‘principal supplies’ of HISs in the white and grey sectors.

15. In its tender KK listed two entries for supplies of a HIS in the white and grey sectors to hospitals in (i) Słupsk (the ‘Słupsk Supply’) and (ii) Nowy Sącz (the ‘Nowy Sącz Supply’). Both supplies were carried out by a consortium of Konsultant IT Sp. z o.o. (‘KIT’) and KK.

16. KK won the tender for the purchase and supply of the HIS. Esaprojekt challenged that decision, essentially claiming that the contracts listed by KK did not fulfil the tender requirements in terms of HIS experience.

17. The appeal was successful. The contracting authority was ordered to request that KK submit, in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 26(4) of the Ustawa PZP, clarifications concerning the scope of the contracts specified in order to prove that the condition for participation in the procedure in terms of knowledge and experience was fulfilled.

18. Following the request for clarification, it transpired that the Słupsk Supply was made within the framework of two tender procedures and two separate contractual agreements. One of those agreements did not cover the white sector, and the other did not cover the grey sector. The contracting authority held that the Słupsk Supply did not respect the tender specifications mentioned above at point 13 of this Opinion, because the Słupsk Supply was not a single 'public contract', as defined in Article 2(13) of the Ustawa PZP. Instead, it involved two separate contracts. The contracting authority therefore asked KK to supplement the documents proving that it fulfilled the tender conditions.

19. In supplementing the documents, KK submitted a new list of supplies. That list included, as before, the Nowy Sącz Supply. In addition two new supplies were added, both of which were carried out by a third party, Medinet Systemy Informatyczne Sp. z o.o. ('Medinet') ('the Medinet Supplies'). KK also submitted an undertaking by Medinet to make available the resources necessary to perform the contract and to participate in the performance of the contract as an adviser and consultant.

20. The contracting authority accepted the modified tender submitted by KK. Esaprojekt again lodged an appeal against the Województwo Łódzkie before the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeals Chamber, Poland). In those circumstances, that court decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

'Question 1:

Does Article 51 of [Directive 2004/18], in conjunction with the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 2 thereof, allow an economic operator, when clarifying or supplementing documents, to refer to the performance of contracts (that is to say, supplies provided) other than those which it referred to in the list of supplies attached to the tender, and in particular can it refer to the performance of contracts by another entity the use of whose resources it did not refer to in the tender?

Question 2:

In the light of the judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova (C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647), according to which "the principle of equal treatment must be interpreted as not precluding a contracting authority from asking a candidate, after the deadline for applying to take part in a tendering procedure, to provide documents describing that candidate's situation —— such as a copy of its published balance sheet — which can be objectively shown to predate that deadline, so long as it was not expressly laid down in the contract documents that, unless such documents were provided, the application would be rejected", must Article 51 of [Directive 2004/18] be interpreted as meaning that the supplementing of documents is possible only when it involves documents which can be objectively shown to predate the deadline for submitting tenders or requests to participate in the procedure, or that the Court of Justice stated only one of the possibilities and the supplementing of documents is possible also in other cases, for example by attaching documents which did not predate the deadline but which objectively confirm fulfilment of a condition?

Question 3:

If the answer to Question 2 is to the effect that the supplementing of documents other than as stated in the judgment in Case C-336/12 Manova is possible, is it possible to supplement by adding documents drawn up by the economic operator, subcontractors or other entities on whose capacities the economic operator relies, if they were not submitted together with the tender?

Question 4:

Does Article 44 of [Directive 2004/18], in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators set out in Article 2, allow reliance on the resources of another entity, as referred to in Article 48(3), by combining the knowledge and experience of two entities, which, individually, do not have the knowledge and experience required by the contracting authority, where that experience cannot be divided (that is to say, the condition for participation in the procedure must be fulfilled in its entirety by the economic operator) and performance of the contract cannot be divided (constitutes a single whole)?

Question 5:

Does Article 44 of [Directive 2004/18], in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2, allow reliance on the experience of a group of economic operators in such a way that an economic operator which performed a contract as one of a group of economic operators can rely on the performance by that group, regardless of what its participation in the performance of that contract was, or can it rely only on the experience it itself has actually acquired in performing the relevant part of the contract which was assigned to it within that group?

Question 6:

Can Article 45(2)(g) of [Directive 2004/18], which states that any economic operator which is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying or not supplying information can be excluded from the procedure, be interpreted as excluding from the procedure an economic operator which submitted incorrect information which affected, or could affect, the result of the procedure, in that the guilt for misrepresentation lies in the very supply to the contracting authority of the factually inaccurate information which affects the decision of the contracting authority concerning exclusion of the economic operator (and rejection of its tender), regardless of whether the economic operator did so knowingly and wilfully, or unknowingly, through recklessness, negligence or failure to exercise due diligence? It is [sic] possible to regard as "guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required … or [not having] supplied such information" only an economic operator which has submitted incorrect (factually inaccurate) information, or also one which has submitted information which is correct, but has done so in such a way as to satisfy the contracting authority that it fulfils the requirements laid down by the contracting authority it, even though it does not?

Question 7:

Does Article 44 of [Directive 2004/18], in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) thereof and the principle of equal treatment of economic operators in Article 2, allow reliance by an economic operator on experience in such a way that it relies jointly on two or more contractual agreements as a single public contract, despite the fact that the contracting authority did not refer to such a possibility in the contract notice or the tender specifications?'

21. Written observations have been submitted by the Polish and Italian Governments and the Commission. The Polish Government, the Commission and the Województwo Łódzkie, defendant in the main proceedings, participated at the hearing held on 21 September 2016.

IV – Assessment

A – Question 1 (and questions 2 and 3)

22. The referring court's first question aims at determining whether, in the light of Articles 2 and 51 of the Directive, it is possible for a tenderer, after the tender's submission deadline, to make a reference to the experience of a third party, which was not referred to in the initial tender.

23. The second and third questions aim at determining whether, in the light of the judgment in Manova, (3) a tenderer can present documents that evidence its ability to rely on that third-party experience after the submission deadline (in the present case, the Medinet undertaking).

24. As regards the first question, I consider that the addition of such references is generally not possible for the reasons set out below. That answer renders any detailed consideration of the second and third questions redundant.

25. Article 51 of the Directive provides that contracting authorities may invite tenderers to 'supplement or clarify' the documents they have submitted. Those words, 'supplement or clarify', are arguably rather flexible. However, according to established case-law, (4) the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency preclude any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure. Therefore, as a general rule, where the contracting authority regards a tender as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications, it cannot require the tenderer to provide clarification, or even create the impression that it would allow a tender to be amended. (5)

26. Notwithstanding, the Directive 'does not preclude the correction or amplification of details of a tender, on a limited and specific basis, particularly when it is clear that they require mere clarification, or to correct obvious material errors' as long as they do not amount to a new tender. (6) Due diligence can be expected from tenderers, (7) but excessive formalism is to be avoided. (8) That is particularly important given the need to ensure that tenders remain open and competitive.

27. The possibility for submitting additional information after the deadline for submission is therefore considered exceptional, but not non-existent. The question then becomes where precisely to draw the line.

28. In my view, the approach of the Court could perhaps best be captured by a metaphor: the information and documentation submitted by a tenderer upon the lapse of the submission deadline represents a snapshot. Only the information and documentation already contained in that picture may be taken into account by the contracting authority. This does not prevent the contracting authority from zooming in on any details in the picture that were a bit blurry and requesting an increase in the picture's resolution in order to see the detail clearly. But the basic information must already have been, albeit in low resolution, in the original snapshot.

29. Following that logic, I consider that a tenderer, in principle, cannot be permitted to demonstrate that it fulfils the technical and professional requirements of a tender by relying on the experience of third parties not referred to prior to the submission deadline. That information was simply not contained in the original picture.

30. Therefore, such reliance on a third party does not amount to a mere clarification or formality. It constitutes in fact a significant change to the tender. The very identity of the entities carrying out the work, or at least whose experience is being called upon to do so, is being altered. That is a material change affecting a key element of the procedure. (9) Moreover, as pointed out by the Commission, such a change may lead to extra verifications being required by the contracting authority and could even affect the choice of candidates being invited to present an offer.

31. More generally, to allow such modifications can certainly have an influence on the competitive process. A tenderer's decision to rely on its own experience or to call on that of a third party must be made at a certain moment in time and on the basis of information in its possession at that time. Giving a tenderer a second chance to take that business decision, when time has moved on, could certainly procure it an advantage that would be at odds with the requirement of equal treatment. For example, knowledge of the number or identity of competitors in the race or a downturn in the market may encourage the tenderer to seek to co-opt a partner with greater experience, to help increase its chances. (10)

32. Further support for this conclusion can be found by analogy with cases involving the modification of the composition of bidding consortia after the submission deadline. In the recent Højgaard case, a consortium of two companies was preselected and submitted a bid for a public tender, but was subsequently dissolved before the contract was awarded. One of the companies, Aarsleff, then sought to replace the consortium as a preselected bidder in the procedure. That change was accepted and Aarsleff went on to win the contract. The award was challenged before the national courts and a question referred to this Court on the compatibility with the principle of equal treatment of a change in consortia composition.

33. In its judgment the Court stated that rules about changes in the composition of consortia during tender procedures are generally a matter for the Member States. (11) However, in order to ensure respect of the principle of equal treatment, Aarsleff must have been in a position to meet the preselection criteria on its own merits. (12)

34. Similarly, where a contracting authority requires a tenderer to remove items from its list of experience, it can of course continue to rely on the remaining items. However, it cannot add to the list new, third-party experience. (13)

35. I therefore propose to reply to the national court's first question in the sense that an economic operator cannot rely on third-party experience for the first time after the submission deadline. Given that response, the national court's second and third questions (relating to the conditions under which evidence of such third-party experience can be submitted) largely fall away. Indeed, where an operator cannot rely on a third party at all, it would make no sense for it to present undertakings by that third party, or evidence of the third party's experience.

36. In the light of the foregoing, I propose to provide the following answer to the national court's first three questions:

> Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 2 thereof, do not allow an economic operator, when clarifying or supplementing documents, to refer to the performance of contracts by third parties, which it did not refer to in the list of supplies attached to the tender, or to submit an undertaking by such third party to put its resources at the disposal of the tenderer.

B – Question 4

37. The fourth question relates to the fact that, in the main case, the tender specifications require tenderers to have performed 'at least two contracts' each covering the white and grey sectors, as set out above, in point 13 of this Opinion. Following the contracting authorities' request for clarification, KK listed the two Medinet Supplies and the Nowy Sącz Supply.

38. Against that backdrop, the national court in essence seeks to determine whether the experience resulting from the Medinet Supplies and the Nowy Sącz Supply can be relied on to fulfil the requirement of 'at least two contracts' having been performed, in compliance with Articles 44 and 48(2)(a) of the Directive and the principle of equal treatment in Article 2 of the Directive.

39. The text of the Directive makes it clear that, in the context of public tenders, economic operators may as a general rule rely on the capacities of other entities. (14) That general rule is also consistent with the objective of opening up public contracts to competition (15) and has been iteratively confirmed by the Court. (16) Capacities relied on by an operator can therefore be 'fragmented' or 'split' among different actors, provided of course that the operator will in practice have at its disposal the necessary resources of those other entities. (17)

40. Nonetheless, in order to ensure 'minimum capacity requirements' or 'minimum levels of ability', (18) reliance on third parties may exceptionally be limited. That is so in the case of 'works with special requirements necessitating a certain capacity which cannot be obtained by combining the capacities of more than one operator, which, individually, would be inadequate'. Such requirements must be 'related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue'. (19)

41. In the present case, the tender specifications require 'at least two contracts' covering a specific field (HIS). It follows from the points discussed above that that requirement can be imposed as a minimum, and exclude reliance on third parties, provided that it is 'related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue'.

42. Whether or not that is the case is a question of fact for the national court to decide.

43. Nonetheless, the national court implies that there is a qualitative difference between tender specifications that require, on the one hand, accumulated, repeat experience in one area and, on the other, experience in a series of discrete fields.

44. I agree that there is, intuitively, such a difference. Combining experience from different sectors is not always possible — cross-sectoral experience or full experience of integrated systems may be irreplaceable. However, such interdisciplinary combinations are arguably less problematic than simply adding up years of experience or single contracts. A company executing a second contract in the same field will do so against the backdrop of its previous experience, potentially with new and different insights. (20)

45. Ultimately, however, the legal rule remains the same in both cases. The extent to which experience of one operator having performed two contracts is substitutable by two operators having performed one contract each is a question of fact for the national court to determine.

46. In its question, the national court states explicitly that the relevant experience and performance of the contract ‘cannot be divided’. That implies that the national court has already concluded that (a) the possibility of joint reliance on experience has been excluded and (b) that exclusion is ‘related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue’. To the extent that that is indeed the case, the provisions of the Directive cited by the national court allow the contracting authority to exclude reliance on the resources of another entity by combining the knowledge and experience of two entities.

47. In the light of the above, I propose to reply to the national court’s fourth question as follows:

> Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2)(a) and the principle of equal treatment in Article 2 thereof, do not allow an economic operator to rely, in the sense of Article 48(3) of that directive, on the knowledge and experience of another entity, where such reliance has been expressly excluded by the contracting authority. However, any such exclusion must be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue.

C – Question 5

48. By its fifth question, the national court requests clarification of the conditions under which an economic operator may rely on prior experience obtained by a group of companies of which it was a member. That question relates to the fact that, in the main case, the Nowy Sącz Supply and the Słupsk Supply were both carried out by a consortium of two companies, KK and KIT. I understand then that the national court is seeking to determine whether KK can rely on that experience unconditionally to support its bid, or whether the role KK played in the supply is material. (21)

49. I consider that the specific role and associated experience of a consortium member is indeed crucial.

50. Articles 44 and 48(2)(a) of the Directive foresee the assessment of bids on the basis of, among others, experience, as evidenced by lists of works and supplies carried out in recent years. Having the experience necessary to execute a contract is obviously not the same as knowing someone who does. Similarly, experience cannot be acquired simply by being formally a party to a contract or of a consortium.

51. The referring court aptly illustrates that point with the example of a consortium of three companies constructing a motorway: a bank (financing the operation), a construction company (doing the actual building) and a service provider (providing legal, administrative and accounting support). Clearly financing such an operation does not provide the bank with the experience necessary to build a motorway.

52. Ultimately, however, each company’s precise role and the experience it obtains depend on specific circumstances. It is possible, for example, that the bank took the lead on financing, but that the service provider was closely associated with that part of the operation, thus gaining some level of experience in that field. Such a level of experience might be entirely appropriate and sufficient in the context of another tender procedure for a different project. Or it might not be. These are questions of fact.

53. Similarly, the precise role played by KK in the Nowy Sącz Supply (and the Słupsk Supply) (22) and whether that corresponds to the requirement of experience in the tender notice is a question of fact for the national court.

54. Finally, the above observations relate to a situation where an economic operator presents previous supplies carried out by a group of operators specifically as its own experience. Those observations are without prejudice to the possibility for an economic operator to rely on the capacities of third parties, as provided for, for example, in Article 48(3) of the Directive and discussed in more detail above at point 39.

55. In the light of the foregoing, I propose to respond to the national court’s fifth question as follows:

> Articles 44 and 48(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted in such a way that an economic operator, which has performed a contract as one of a group of economic operators, can rely as its own experience only on the experience it has acquired itself in the performance of that contract. That conclusion is without prejudice to the possibility for the economic operator to rely on the capacities of third parties, under the conditions provided for in the Directive.

D – Question 7

56. The seventh question relates to the fact that, in the main case, the Słupsk Supply consisted of two separate contracts conferring complementary experience (in the white and grey sectors), whereas the contract notice and tender documents refer to contracts involving both the white and grey areas together. (23)

57. Against that background, the national court requests clarification of the conditions under which experience acquired in the context of two separate contracts can be presented jointly, in order to satisfy a requirement that was not explicitly presented as being divisible.

58. For reasons developed further below, I consider that the answer to this question is that operators should generally be able to draw together 'fragmented' experience in this way. Complete exclusion of such a possibility by the contracting authority should be exceptional.

59. It follows, among others, from the responses proposed to questions 4 and 5 above that the Directive does not dictate precisely how or by whom relevant experience must have been garnered. Thus, subject to certain conditions, it is for example generally possible for an operator to rely on experience acquired: (a) in the context of contracts signed by it alone; (b) in the context of contracts signed by a group of operators of which it forms part; or (c) by third-parties.

60. What is critical is whether the overall experience that the economic operator can genuinely rely on, being either its own or of a third party, is sufficient to carry out the contract.

61. Consequently, the fact that experience has been obtained technically through two or more separate contracts and not a single contractual agreement should normally be immaterial. If the combined experience is sufficient to carry out the contract, that ought to suffice.

62. Indeed, the requirements of a tender can be fulfilled by bringing together capacities or experience split between different operators. A fortiori, it would simply be illogical to exclude, as a matter of principle, the possibility of bringing together capacities or experience gained by the same operator in relation to different contracts.

63. Limitations to the combining of experience of different operators can be imposed where they are 'related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue'. (24) In my view, that reasoning and those limitations can be applied by analogy to the fragmentation of experience over different contracts executed by the same operator. Thus, for example, a contracting authority may, in principle, state that certain requirements of experience can only be satisfied by relying on individual contracts which each involve experience from different areas. However, such a requirement must also be necessary, proportionate and related to the subject matter of the contract.

64. It is up to the referring court to determine whether the experience being requested in the specific tender at issue fulfils those conditions. However, the following general points are worth highlighting.

65. First, tenders should, in principle, be open to competition. (25) Reflecting that purpose, exclusion of reliance on third-party experience is the exception. Exclusion of 'fragmented' experience should be too. As a result, in the absence of any such exclusion in the contract notice or specifications, that exclusion cannot simply be assumed. It must be clearly stated.

66. Second, the national court specifically refers to Article 2 of the Directive that sets out also the principle of equal treatment. In my opinion, the latter should not raise any concerns in respect of the joint reliance on experience gained in separate contracts to the extent that either (a) any economic operator submitting a tender is, in principle, allowed jointly to rely on such contracts; or (b) no economic operators can do so (where such a possibility has been excluded by the contracting authority).

67. Third, to the extent that joint reliance has not been excluded, it falls to the contracting authority, subject to review by the national courts, to determine whether the combined experience of two or more contracts is, in a concrete case, sufficient to satisfy the requirements laid down in the tender specifications. Indeed, even where two or more contracts can in principle be combined, it may be that in a specific case the overall experience is simply inadequate. In making this assessment, all relevant elements should be taken into account, including, for example, the relationship between the various contracts (26) and the specific requirements. (27)

68. In the light of the above, I propose to reply to the national court's seventh question as follows:

> Articles 44 and 48(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with the principle of equal treatment in Article 2 of that directive, allow reliance by an economic operator on experience in such a way that it relies jointly on two or more contractual agreements as a single public contract, unless such joint reliance has been expressly excluded by the contracting authority. Any such exclusion must be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue.

E – Question 6

69. By its sixth question, the national court asks whether a tenderer can be excluded as being 'guilty of serious misrepresentation' (by supplying or failing to supply information) under Article 45(2)(g) of the Directive, irrespective of state of mind. It also asks whether the provision enables exclusion of the tender if the tenderer does not actually meet the tender conditions but has creatively presented information that is technically correct to give the impression of meeting the conditions.

70. The wording of Article 45(2)(g) creates a possibility (28) for a Member State to exclude tenderers in certain cases of misrepresentation. Such misrepresentation can occur where information 'required', for example to evidence its abilities, is supplied or is omitted.

71. On the natural meaning of the words, Article 45(2)(g) is therefore concerned with situations where an operator omits or includes certain information that leads the contracting authority to have an incorrect understanding of its abilities.

72. Not every misrepresentation constitutes grounds for exclusion. Use of the words 'serious' or 'seriously' implies that the mere provision of incorrect information is insufficient to trigger Article 45(2)(g) and that a certain threshold of seriousness must be met.

73. However, it is unclear how to establish seriousness. Comparison of different language versions only increases ambiguity in this regard. In some language versions the word connoting gravity or seriousness attaches to the term 'guilty', (29) which could arguably be read as requiring a certain state of mind or degree of negligence. In other language versions, the word connoting gravity or seriousness attaches to the misrepresentation, implying that the focus is on the act itself and/or its consequences. (30)

74. The final paragraph of Article 45(2) of the Directive may provide some assistance. It requires Member States to specify under national law the 'implementing conditions' of Article 45(2). Thus, Article 45(2)(g) may be read as laying down minimum conditions to establish misrepresentation that is serious enough to allow Member States to exclude a tenderer. It does not, however, seek to fully harmonise the notion. (31) This reading also corresponds with a narrow reading of the grounds for exclusion and the need to evaluate each operator's case on an individual basis.

75. What does that minimum degree of seriousness correspond to? For the following reasons, I consider that 'seriousness' should relate to the (objective) consequences of the provision or omission of information, irrespective of the (subjective) state of mind or intent of the person providing them.

76. In my view, only acts or omissions that result in a competitive advantage that keeps an operator in the tender procedure, when it would otherwise not stay in it, can fall under Article 45(2)(g). (32) In other words, where a misrepresentation (by provision or omission of information) is incapable of having an effect on the outcome, it cannot constitute a valid justification to exclude the operator. I refer to this hereafter as the 'Outcome Condition'.

77. That reading is supported by language versions that emphasise the seriousness of the misrepresentation. It can be seen as compatible with versions that emphasise seriousness of 'guilt'. It also reflects the objective of openness to competition and is in line with a narrow reading of the grounds for exclusion. If a tenderer is the best placed to execute the contract, whether on the basis of best price or most advantageous offer, (33) then excluding it would go against the purpose of the Directive to ensure contracts are awarded on the basis of objective criteria, obtaining the best value for money. (34)

78. It follows that the Outcome Condition is a condition sine qua non for any exclusion on the basis of misrepresentation.

79. Moreover, I consider that Article 45(2)(g) can in theory be triggered in every case where the Outcome Condition is met. Indeed, if the provision or omission of certain information can affect the outcome, it is already serious in itself. In that regard, it may be that in particular circumstances an 'obvious' or 'minor' mistake or 'mere clerical error' could have the unexpected consequence of materially changing the outcome of a tender. Such errors may be entirely unintentional. However, they are clearly not minor or trivial mistakes in the eyes of a competitor that loses a tender or is put at a significant disadvantage as a result.

80. I therefore consider that fulfilment of the Outcome Condition alone is sufficient to allow exclusion for misrepresentation, without the need for further conditions to be met. This reading of the notion of misrepresentation, namely, freed of any subjective elements of intent on the part of the tenderer, under Article 45(2)(g), is supported by three further arguments.

81. First, Article 45(2)(g) of the Directive does not even refer to state of mind generally, or intention, recklessness or negligence specifically, let alone attempt to flesh out those notions. Under such conditions, it is inappropriate to attempt to define the scope of Article 45(2)(g) on the basis of such complex notions that would effectively have to be pulled out of thin air. That fact alone pleads for an objective reading of the provision, such as the one I have suggested here. Moreover, Article 45(2) only sets out the basic conditions under which EU law creates a possibility to exclude tenderers. In doing so, it explicitly refers to national law to specify the conditions of implementation, which might involve, for example, notions of negligence or intention in national law.

82. Second, this relates to a practical point: could it really reasonably be expected that an administrative authority in the context of a public procurement procedure, often acting under significant time pressure and potentially faced with a number of voluminous submissions, should be asked to inquire into and to establish corporate intent? It is quite clear that such a proposition is not a workable one.

83. Third, even if an administrative authority were able to ascertain corporate intent, how useful would it in fact be? Operators participating in tenders are generally expected to exercise due diligence. (35) A professional is simply presumed to know and act with due care. This implies that in addition to intent, other forms of negligence would also likely be considered. Should that indeed be the case, then state of mind would in fact not constitute any genuine distinguishing criterion.

84. The Outcome Condition is therefore a condition sine qua non and is also sufficient on its own to trigger Article 45(2)(g). However, that only opens up the possibility for Member States to exclude an operator. In accordance with the final paragraph of Article 45(2), it is at the national level that the detailed conditions under which operators should in practice be excluded is determined.

85. By way of a final remark in relation to Article 45(2)(g) of the Directive, the national court has explicitly raised the question of whether that provision can be triggered by correct information that is presented in a tendentious way. In other words, in a way that makes it look like the requirements of the tender are satisfied, when in reality they are not. The national court's question in this regard envisages a situation where an operator does not fulfil the tender requirements.

86. In such a situation the operator would normally be excluded, simply because it does not fulfil the tender requirements. Such a tenderer should only continue in the procedure if its tender is modified in such a way that it does fulfil the requirements. It is also only in such a scenario that exclusion on the basis of Article 45(2)(g) of the Directive would need to be considered at all.

87. As set out in my assessment of question 1, there are clearly limits to acceptable post-deadline tender modifications. Such limits may very well be exceeded where modifications make a major difference such as the one at hand (that is, the difference between non-fulfilment of the tender requirements before the modification, and fulfilment of those requirements after the modification).

88. However, assuming that such modifications are possible in theory could the relevant operator nonetheless be excluded for misrepresentation in its initial bid?

89. I consider that the answer to that question is yes, such an operator could potentially be excluded. That is because (a) it initially failed to provide information that is required under Article 48(2)(a) (which is one of the types of misrepresentation referred to in Article 45(2)(g) of the Directive) and (b) that omission was material in the sense that it could have an effect on the outcome of the tender (Outcome Condition).

90. The issue is therefore less that the operator arguably engaged in some 'borderline marketing' of its actual experience. Rather it is that, no matter how its experience was dressed up, the operator initially omitted to provide the 'required' information under Article 48(2)(a), and subsequent provision of that information changed the outcome of the tender.

91. In the light of the foregoing, I propose to reply to the national court's sixth question as follows:

> An economic operator can be found guilty of serious misrepresentation under Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18 only in cases where the alleged misrepresentation can affect the decision of the contracting authority by keeping it in the procedure when it would otherwise not be. Application of that provision is conditional upon the supply or failure to supply information required under Chapter VII, Section 2 of Directive 2004/18. Application of Article 45(2)(g) of that directive is not conditional on the supply of factually incorrect information or any specific state of mind of the economic operator.

V – Conclusion

92. I propose that the Court answers the questions referred to it by the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeals Chamber) as follows:

> Questions 1-3:

Question 7:

Articles 44 and 48(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with the principle of equal treatment in Article 2 of that directive, allow reliance by an economic operator on experience in such a way that it relies jointly on two or more contractual agreements as a single public contract, unless such joint reliance has been expressly excluded by the contracting authority. Any such exclusion must be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Partner Apelski Dariusz (‘Partner’) and Zarząd Oczyszczania Miasta (Warsaw municipal cleansing authority) concerning its exclusion from the procedure for the award of a public contract for the comprehensive mechanical cleansing of roadways of the city of Warsaw (Poland) in the years from 2014 to 2017.

Legal context

EU law

Directive 2004/18

3 Recital 46 of the contested directive reads as follows:

‘Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in conditions of effective competition. As a result, it is appropriate to allow the application of two award criteria only: “the lowest price” and “the most economically advantageous tender”.

To ensure compliance with the principle of equal treatment in the award of contracts, it is appropriate to lay down an obligation — established by case-law — to ensure the necessary transparency to enable all tenderers to be reasonably informed of the criteria and arrangements which will be applied to identify the most economically advantageous tender. …’

4 Article 2 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

5 Article 44 of that directive, entitled ‘Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts’, provides:

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 53 and 55, taking into account Article 24, after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded under Articles 45 and 46 has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52, and, where appropriate, with the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in paragraph 3.

2. The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

These minimum levels shall be indicated in the contract notice.

6 Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 entitled ‘Economic and financial standing’, provides:

7 Article 48 of Directive 2004/18 entitled ‘[t]echnical and/or professional ability’ states:

‘1. The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.

2. Evidence of the economic operators’ technical abilities may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services:

(a) …

(ii) a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, whether public or private, involved. …

3. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.

…’

8 Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, headed ‘Additional documentation and information’, is worded as follows:

‘The contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50.’

9 Article 54 of Directive 2004/18 entitled ‘Use of electronic auctions’ states:

‘1. Member States may provide that contracting authorities may use electronic auctions.

4. Before proceeding with an electronic auction, contracting authorities shall make a full initial evaluation of the tenders in accordance with the award criterion/criteria set and with the weighting fixed for them.

All tenderers who have submitted admissible tenders shall be invited simultaneously by electronic means to submit new prices and/or new values; …

8. After closing an electronic auction contracting authorities shall award the contract in accordance with Article 53 on the basis of the results of the electronic auction.

Contracting authorities may not have improper recourse to electronic auctions nor may they use them in such a way as to prevent, restrict or distort competition or to change the subject matter of the contract, as put up for tender in the published contract notice and defined in the specification.’

Directive 2014/24/EU

10 Recital 2 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65) reads as follows:

‘… the public procurement rules adopted pursuant to Directive 2004/17/EC … should be revised and modernised in order to increase the efficiency of public spending, facilitating in particular the participation of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in public procurement … There is also a need to clarify basic notions and concepts to ensure legal certainty and to incorporate certain aspects of related well-established case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union.’

11 Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Reliance on the capacities of other entities’, states as follows:

‘1. With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. With regard to criteria relating to the educational and professional qualifications as set out in point (f) of Annex XII Part II, or to the relevant professional experience, economic operators may however only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required. Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

2. In the case of works contracts, service contracts and siting or installation operations in the context of a supply contract, contracting authorities may require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself …’

12 Under Article 90(1) of that directive:

‘Member States shall bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with this Directive by 18 April 2016. …’

Polish law

13 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into the Polish national legal system by the Law on public contracts (codified text DZ. U of 2013, headings 907, 984, 1047 and 1473, and Dz. U of 2014, heading 423, ‘Law on public contracts’).

14 Article 26(2b) of the Law on public contracts provides:

‘The economic operator may rely on the knowledge and experience, technical capacity, staff able to perform the contract or financial capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. In that case the economic operator is required to prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary to perform the contract, inter alia by producing for that purpose a written undertaking by those entities that they will make available to it the necessary resources for the period during which they are used to perform the contract. …’

15 Article 83(2) and (3) of the Law on public contracts states:

‘2. The contracting authority may permit the submission of tenders for lots, where the subject matter of the contract can be divided.

3. In the case referred to in paragraph 2 the economic operator may submit tenders for one or more lots, unless the contracting authority has specified a maximum number of lots for which one economic operator may submit tenders.’

16 Article 91b(1) of the Law on public contracts provides:

‘The contracting authority shall invite electronically all the economic operators which have submitted non-rejected tenders to take part in an electronic auction.’

17 According to Article 93(1)(7) of the Law on public contracts:

‘The contracting authority shall annul the procedure for the award of the contract where … the award procedure is vitiated by an irreparable defect which prevents the conclusion of a non-annullable public contract.’

18 Article 1(6) of the Regulation of the president of the Council of Ministers of 19 February 2013 on the type of documents which may be required by the a contracting authority from an economic operator and the method of production of those documents (Dz. U. of 2013, heading 231) is worded as follows:

‘If, in order to establish that it meets the conditions referred to in Article 22(1) of the [Law on public contracts], an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities pursuant to the provisions of Article 26(2b) of the [Law on public contracts], the contracting authority, in order to determine whether the economic operator will have capacities of other bodies to the extent necessary for the proper performance of the contract or whether the link between the economic operator and those entities does in fact ensure access to those capacities may require:

(1) with regard to the conditions referred to in Article 22(1)(4) of the [Law on public contracts], the documents listed in Article 22(1)(9) to (11), and the same for other documents relating to the economic and financial standing, as laid down in the tender notice or the tender specifications;

(2) documents relating in particular to:

(a) the extent of the resources of another entity which the economic operator is able to access;

(b) the rules governing the use by the economic operator of the resources of another entity in order to perform the contract;

(c) the nature of the link between an operator and another entity; and

(d) the extent and duration of the participation of another entity in the performance of the contract.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

19 It is apparent from the order for reference that, in December 2013, the Warsaw municipal cleansing authority initiated a procedure for the award of a public contract for the comprehensive mechanical cleansing of roadways in Warsaw in the winter and summer seasons of 2014 to 2017. The winter cleansing, which is the subject of that contract consists essentially in preventing and removing ice by salting and using snow-ploughs on certain categories of municipal roadways. Summer cleansing involves sweeping and wet cleaning of roadways.

20 The Warsaw municipal cleansing authority chose to conduct a tendering procedure which was to close with an electronic auction. The subject matter of the contract was divided into eight lots, corresponding to different districts of Warsaw, thereby allowing each tenderer either to submit a tender for the whole of that contract or a partial tender.

21 As provided for in the tender specifications, in order to demonstrate its technical abilities, each tenderer was required to submit a list of winter maintenance services for roadways with pre-wetting technology provided in the three years prior to the expiry of the deadline for submitting the tender. The total value of those services had to be at least PLN 1 000 000 (approximately EUR 224 442) for each of the eight lots of the contract at issue. Therefore, in order to submit a tender for the whole contract, a tenderer had to prove that it had provided services with a value of at least PLN 8 000 000 (approximately EUR 1 795 537).

22 Following the publication in the Official Journal of the European Union of the tender notice, Partner put itself forward as a candidate for the whole contract, stating that in the previous 3 years it had supplied 14 services, including 12 based on its own experience and 2 based on the experience of PUM z o.o. ('PUM'), which is established in Grudziądz (Poland), a town situated approximately 230 km from Warsaw.

23 In addition, it attached to its tender an undertaking by PUM, by which the latter made its capacities available to Partner, in particular, its consulting services including, among others, training for Partner's employees and help to resolve any problems which might arise at the performance stage of the contract. Partner also stated that, for the purposes of the performance of the contract that cooperation was to be governed by a contract between the two undertakings.

24 On 26 February 2014, the Warsaw municipal cleansing authority invited Partner to provide further details of the activities that PUM carried out and the effect that those activities might have on the quality and efficiency of the services provided in Warsaw, taking account, in particular, of the distance between Grudziądz and Warsaw.

25 Since it was not satisfied by Partner's answer, and it took the view that PUM's knowledge and experience could not be made available without the personal, actual participation of that company in the performance of the contract at issue, by letter of 11 March 2014, the Warsaw municipal cleansing authority requested Partner to supplement the documents in that respect.

26 In its answer of 18 March 2014, Partner challenged the approach adopted by the Warsaw municipal cleansing authority, and requested that its tender be taken into consideration when awarding each of the eight lots of that contract in a certain order of priority.

27 The Warsaw municipal cleansing authority nonetheless rejected Partner's tender in its entirety and closed the procurement procedure at issue after holding an electronic auction.

28 Therefore, Partner brought an action before the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber) in order to obtain the annulment of the decision by which it has been excluded from the procurement procedure at issue and that which adopted the most advantageous offers for the various lots of that contract. Furthermore, it requested that the tenders submitted in that procurement procedure be re-examined and that it be allowed to take part in a new electronic auction.

29 In those circumstances, Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber), decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Can Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, be interpreted, where it states that "where appropriate" an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities, as covering any situation where a particular economic operator does not have the skills required by the contracting authority and wishes to rely on the capacities of other entities? Or must the indication that an economic operator may rely on the resources of other entities only "where appropriate" be regarded as a restriction indicating that such reliance may be had only exceptionally and not as a rule when providing evidence of the skills of economic operators in procedures for the award of public contracts?

(2) Can Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that reliance by an economic operator on the capacities of other entities in terms of their knowledge and experience "regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them" and "having at its disposal the resources" of those entities denote that during performance of the contract an economic operator need not have links with those entities or can have very loose and vague links, that is to say, it can perform the contract independently (without the involvement of another entity) or such participation can consist of "advice", "consultation", "training" and the like? Or must Article 48(3) be interpreted as meaning that the entity on whose capacities the economic operator relies must actually and personally perform the contract in so far as its capacities were declared?

(3) Can Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that an economic operator which has its own experience but to a lesser degree than it would like to indicate to the contracting authority (for example, insufficient experience to submit a tender for the whole contract) may rely additionally on the capacities of other entities to improve its situation in the procedure?

(4) Can Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that in the contract notice or the tendering specifications the contracting authority can (or even must) lay down the rules under which the economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities, for example in what way the economic operators must participate in the performance of the contract, in what way the capacity of the economic operator and another entity can be combined, and whether the other entity will bear joint and several liability with the economic operator for the due performance of the contract in so far as the economic operator has relied on its capacities?

(5) Does the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 allow reliance on the capacities of another entity under Article 48(3) where the capacities of two or more entities which do not have the capacities in terms of knowledge and experience required by the contracting authority are combined?

(6) Therefore, does the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 allow an interpretation of Articles 44 and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 to the effect that the conditions for participation in the procedure that are laid down by the contracting authority may be fulfilled just formally for the purposes of participating in the procedure and regardless of the actual skills of the economic operator?

(7) Where it is permitted to submit a tender for lots, does the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 allow an economic operator, after the submission of tenders, to state — for example in the context of the supplementing or explaining of documents — to which lot the resources specified by it in order to prove that the conditions for participation in the procedure have been fulfilled are to be assigned?

(8) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 allow an auction which has been carried out to be annulled and an electronic auction to be repeated where it was carried out improperly in an essential respect, for example where not all economic operators which submitted admissible tenders were invited to participate?

(9) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 allow a contract to be awarded to an economic operator whose tender was selected as a result of such an auction without it being repeated, where it is not possible to determine whether or not the participation of the economic operator which was not taken into consideration would have altered the result of the auction?

(10) In interpreting the provisions of Directive 2004/18, is it permitted to use as a guide to interpretation the content of the provisions of Directive 2014/24 and of the preamble thereto, even though the period for implementing it has not expired, in so far as it explains certain assumptions and intentions of the EU legislature and is not contrary to Directive 2004/18?’

Consideration of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Questions 1 to 3, 5 and 6

30 By questions 1 to 3, 5 and 6, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks the Court of Justice essentially to determine the conditions which must be met in order for an economic operator to rely on the capacities of other entities, within the meaning of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, and to clarify the detailed rules according to which the necessary resources of those entities are to be made available and, therefore, their possible participation in the performance of the contract concerned.

31 In order to answer those questions it must be recalled, as a preliminary point, that, according to Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18, it is for the contracting authorities to check the suitability of the candidates or tenderers in accordance with the criteria referred to in Articles 47 to 52 thereof.

32 Furthermore, under Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 a contracting authority may require candidates or tenderers to meet minimum levels of economic and financial standing and technical and professional ability in accordance with Articles 47 and 48 of that directive.

33 According to the Court's settled case-law, Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 recognise the right of every economic operator to rely, for a particular contract, upon the capacities of other entities, regardless of the nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it proves to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the performance of the contract (see, to that effect, judgment in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraphs 29 and 33).

34 Such an interpretation is consistent with the aim of the widest possible opening-up of public contracts to competition pursued by the relevant directives to the benefit not only of economic operators but also of contracting authorities. In addition that interpretation also facilitates the involvement of small- and medium-sized undertakings in the contracts procurement market, an aim also pursued by Directive 2004/18, as stated in recital 32 thereof. (judgment in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited).

35 It follows that, taking account of its importance in the EU legislation on public procurement, the right established in Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of that directive constitutes a general rule which the contracting authorities must take into account when they exercise their powers of verification of the suitability of the tenderer to perform a specific contract.

36 In those circumstances, the fact that, under Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, an economic operator may rely on the resources of other entities 'where appropriate' cannot be interpreted as the referring court, in particular, appears to suggest, as meaning that it is only exceptionally that such an operator may rely on the resources of third party entities.

37 That being said, it must be stated, first, that, although it is free to establish links with the entities on whose resources it relies, and to choose the legal nature of those links, the tenderer is nonetheless required to produce evidence that it actually has available to it the resources of those entities or undertakings, which it does not itself own, and which are necessary for the performance of the contract (see to that effect, judgment in Holst Italia, C-176/98, EU:C:1999:593, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

38 Thus, in accordance with Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, a tenderer may not rely on the resources of other entities in order to satisfy in a purely formal manner the conditions required by the contracting authority.

39 Second, as the Court has already held, the provisions of Directive 2004/18 do not preclude the exercise of the right established in Articles 47(2) and 48(3) thereof from being limited in exceptional circumstances (see, to that effect, judgment in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 36).

40 It is conceivable that there may be works with special requirements necessitating a certain capacity which cannot be obtained by combining the capacities of more than one operator, which, individually, would be inadequate. In such circumstances, the contracting authority would be justified in requiring that the minimum capacity level concerned be achieved by a single economic operator or, where appropriate, by relying on a limited number of economic operators, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, as long as that requirement is related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract at issue (judgment in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 35).

41 Likewise, it is conceivable that, in specific circumstances, having regard to the nature and objectives of a particular contract, the capacities of a third party entity, which are necessary for the performance of a particular contract, cannot be transferred to the tenderer. Accordingly, in such circumstances, the tenderer may rely on those capacities only if the third party entity directly and personally participates in the performance of the contract concerned.

42 In the present case, the referring court expresses doubts as to whether PUM's capacities may genuinely be transferred to Partner so that the resources necessary for the performance of the contract at issue in the main proceedings may be placed at Partner's disposal in accordance with the terms of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, given the fact that the resources in that case are made available simply by providing consultation and training services, without any direct participation by PUM in the performance of that contract.

43 In that connection, it must be observed that the public contract at issue in the main proceedings, described in paragraph 19 of the present judgment, is for the comprehensive mechanical cleansing of the roadways of Warsaw in winter and summer for four consecutive years.

44 In particular, as regards winter cleansing, it is apparent from the order for reference that that service requires specific skills and a detailed knowledge of the topography of the city of Warsaw and, above all, the ability to react immediately in order to attain specific maintenance standards for the roadways within a specific period.

45 Furthermore, that service is based on the use of specific technology requiring a level of experience and a high degree of skill in using it, which alone enables the contract at issue in the main proceedings to be performed properly while avoiding dangerous consequences for road traffic.

46 In those circumstances, the actual performance of such a contract requires the involvement of experienced staff who, inter alia, by directly observing the state of the surface of the roadways and carrying out on-the-spot tests are able to anticipate or, in any event, respond appropriately to the specific needs of that contract.

47 Taking account of the subject matter of the contract at issue in the main proceedings and its objectives, it is conceivable that PUM's proposed involvement, consisting simply in the provision of consultation and training services, cannot be regarded as sufficient in order to guarantee that Partner would have at its disposal the resources necessary for the performance of that contract within the meaning of the case-law set out in paragraph 33 of the present judgment. That is further justified by the fact that, as is apparent from the order for reference, PUM's registered office is situated in the city of Gurdziądz, approximately 230 km from Warsaw.

48 In those circumstances, it is for the referring court, taking account of all the specific facts of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, to determine whether resources would be made available to the tenderer in such a way as to meet the requirements laid down by that case-law.

49 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to questions 1 to 3, 5 and 6 is that Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, read together with Article 44(2) thereof, must be interpreted as meaning that:

– they recognise the right of all economic operators, as regards a specific contract, to rely on the capacities of other entities, whatever the nature of the links existing between it and those entities, provided that it is proved to the contracting authority that the candidate or tenderer will have at its disposal the resources of those entities necessary for the performance of that contract, and

– it is conceivable that the exercise of that right may be limited, in specific circumstances, having regard to the subject matter of the contract concerned and its objectives. Such is the case, in particular, where the capacities that a third party entity has, which are necessary for the performance of that contract, cannot be transferred to the candidate or the tenderer, so that the latter may rely on those capacities only if that third party entity directly and personally participates in the performance of that contract.

The fourth question

50 By its fourth question, the referring court asks essentially whether Article 48(2) and (3) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority has the possibility to expressly set out, in the tender notice or the tender specifications, the precise rules under which an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities.

51 In order to answer that question, it must be recalled, as stated in paragraphs 33 and 49 of the present judgment, that Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 recognise the right of all economic operators to rely on the capacities of other entities, provided that it is proved to the contracting authority that the candidate or tenderer will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the performance of the contract concerned.

52 For that purpose, although the tenderer must prove that it will actually have at its disposal the resources of the other entity, which it does not itself own and which are necessary for the performance of the contract, it is nonetheless free to choose the legal nature of the links it intends to establish with the other entities on whose capacities it relies in order to perform a particular contract and, on the other, the type of proof of the existence of those links (judgment in Ostas celtnieks, C-234/14, EU:C:2016:6, paragraph 28).

53 Therefore, the contracting authority cannot, in principle, impose express conditions which may impede the exercise of the right of all economic operators to rely on the capacities of other entities, in particular, by indicating in advance the detailed rules according to which the capacities of those other entities may be relied on. That finding applies especially since, in practice, as the European Commission rightly observes, it appears difficult or even impossible for an economic operator to foresee, a priori, all the possible scenarios in which the capacities of other entities may be used.

54 That being said, as acknowledged in answer to questions 1 to 3, 5 and 6, having regard to the subject matter of the contract concerned and its objectives, the exercise of such a right may be limited in specific circumstances such as those set out in paragraphs 39 to 41 of the present judgment.

55 In such circumstances, it cannot be excluded from the outset that the contracting authority may, for the purposes of the proper performance of the contract concerned, expressly set out, in the tender notice or the tender specifications, the specific rules authorising an economic operator to rely on the capacities of other entities.

56 However, if the contracting authority decides to make use of such a possibility, it must ensure that the rules it adopts are related and proportionate to the subject matter and objectives of that contract.

57 Furthermore, such a requirement also helps to ensure compliance with the principle of transparency as regards the rules adopted by the contracting authority, while allowing economic operators the possibility to propose to the contracting authority alternative ways of relying on the capacities of other entities which ensure that those capacities are in fact made available.

58 Accordingly, the answer to question 4 is that Article 48(2) and (3) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, having regard to the subject matter of a particular contract and its objectives, the contracting authority may, in specific circumstances, for the purpose of the proper performance of that contract, expressly set out in the tender notice or the tender specifications the specific rules in accordance with which an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities, provided that those rules are related and proportionate to the subject matter and objectives of that contract.

The seventh question

59 By question 7, the referring court asks essentially whether the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination of economic operators, laid down in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude a contracting authority, after the opening of the tenders submitted in a public procurement procedure, from allowing the request of an economic operator, which has submitted a tender for the whole of the contract concerned, to consider its tender solely for the award of certain lots of that contract.

60 In order to answer that question, it must be recalled that, in accordance with recital 46 and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authorities are required to afford economic operators equal, non-discriminatory and transparent treatment.

61 Thus, first, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination require tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their bids, which therefore implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions. Second, the principle of transparency is essentially intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. That obligation implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the notice or contract documents so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, secondly, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the relevant contract (see, to that effect, judgment in Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 44 and the case-law cited).

62 Furthermore, as the Court has already held, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency preclude any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure, which means that, as a general rule, a tender cannot be amended after it has been submitted, whether at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderer concerned. It follows that, where the contracting authority regards a tender as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications, it cannot require the tenderer to provide clarification (judgment in Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited).

63 However, the Court has explained that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the correction or amplification of details of a tender, on a limited and specific basis, particularly when it is clear that they require mere clarification, or to correct obvious material errors (judgment in Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

64 To that end, the contracting authority must ensure, in particular, that the request for clarification does not lead to the submission, by a tenderer, of what would appear in reality to be a new tender (see, to that effect, judgment in Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 36).

65 Furthermore, when exercising its right to ask a tenderer to clarify its tender, the contracting authority must treat tenderers equally and fairly, in such a way that a request for clarification does not appear unduly to have favoured or disadvantaged the tenderer or tenderers to which the request was addressed, once the procedure for selection of tenders has been completed and in the light of its outcome (judgment in Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 37).

66 In the present case, as is apparent from the order for reference, the Warsaw municipal cleansing authority, having doubts as to whether Partner had the resources necessary for the performance of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, requested that company, after it had submitted its tender, to specify the nature of PUM's participation in the performance of the contract.

67 In answer to that request for clarification, Partner asked the Warsaw municipal cleansing authority, in the event that it considered the experience shown to be insufficient, to allocate the resources Partner relied on to each of the eight lots of the contract at issue in the main proceedings in a certain order of priority, so that a possible rejection would not concern the whole contract, but only the lots in respect of which it did not meet the conditions required.

68 It is common ground that such communication, by which an economic operator indicates to the contracting authority, after the opening of the tenders, the order of priority of the lots of the contract concerned according to which its tender should be assessed, far from being merely a clarification made on a limited or specific basis or a correction of obvious material errors, within the meaning of the case-law set out in paragraph 63 of the present judgment, constitutes, in reality, a substantive amendment which is more akin to the submission of a new tender.

69 It follows that the contracting authority cannot allow an economic operator to clarify its initial offer in such a way without infringing the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination of economic operators and the obligation of transparency deriving from that, to which the contracting authority is subject under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 (see, to that effect, judgment in Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 43).

70 It follows from the foregoing that the answer to question 7 is that the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination of economic operators, set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, must be interpreted as meaning that, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, they preclude a contracting authority, after the opening of the tenders submitted in a public procurement procedure, from acceding to the request of an economic operator which has submitted a tender for the whole of the contract concerned, to take its offer into consideration for the purpose of awarding only certain lots of that contract.

Questions 8 and 9

71 By questions 8 and 9, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks essentially whether the principle of equal treatment and non-discrimination of economic operators, set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, must be interpreted as meaning that they require the annulment and repetition of an electronic auction in respect of which an economic operator which submitted an admissible tender was not invited to participate, even if it cannot be established that the participation of the excluded operator would have changed the outcome of the auction.

72 In accordance with recital 14 and Article 1(7) of Directive 2004/18, recourse to electronic auctions enables contracting authorities, after an initial full evaluation of the tenders, to ask tenderers to submit new prices, revised downwards, and when the contract is awarded to the most economically advantageous tender, also to improve elements of the tenders other than prices.

73 In such a procedure, as that recital provides, Directive 2004/18 requires that electronic auctions operate in full accordance with the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency.

74 For that purpose, first, Article 54(4) of Directive 2004/18 provides for the right of all tenderers which have submitted an admissible tender to be invited to participate in the electronic auction in order to submit new prices and/or new values.

75 Second, Article 54(8), second subparagraph, of that directive explicitly requires the contracting authorities, where they decide to organise an electronic auction, not to have recourse to such a procedure so as to prevent, restrict or distort competition or to change the subject matter of the contract as put up for tender in the published contract notice and defined in the specification.

76 It follows that, when a tenderer submits an admissible tender and thereby satisfies the criteria set out in the tender notice, the contracting authority must, in accordance with Article 54(4) of Directive 2004/18, ensure the tenderer is able to exercise its right to take part where appropriate, in the electronic auction.

77 Therefore, where such a tenderer is not invited to take part in that auction, as the Advocate General observed in paragraph 52 of his Opinion, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination, laid down in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, require the contracting authority to annul and repeat the electronic auction.

78 In that connection, it must be stated that that applies independently of whether its participation would have altered the outcome of the auction or not.

79 The exercise of the tenderer's right to take part in an electronic auction cannot be subject in any way to the result proposed by it and thus, cannot be excluded from the outset by reason of hypothetical considerations expressed by the contracting authority.

80 In other words, as the Krajowa Izba Odwolawcza (National Chamber of Appeal) also pointed out in its order for reference, it is possible that an economic operator which has not been allowed to take part in an electronic auction may have submitted the most advantageous tender, so that the error committed by the contracting authority necessarily requires the annulment and repetition of the auction.

81 Therefore, the answer to questions 8 and 9 is that the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination of economic operators laid down in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that they require the annulment and repetition of an electronic auction in which an economic operator having submitted an admissible tender has not been invited to take part, even if it cannot be established that the participation of that operator would have altered the outcome of the auction.

82 By question 10, the referring court asks essentially whether the provisions of Directive 2004/18 can be interpreted in the light of those of Directive 2014/24, even though the period within which to transpose the latter has not yet expired and provided that its provisions are not contrary to those of Directive 2004/18.

83 In order to answer that question, it must be recalled, as a preliminary point, that, according to settled case-law, the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract. Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time (judgment in Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU;C:2014:2067, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited).

84 In the case in the main proceedings, the procurement procedure in question was published on 24 December 2013 while Directive 2014/24 was adopted only on 26 February 2014 and, in any event, the period prescribed for its transposition will expire, in accordance with Article 90 thereof, on 18 April 2016.

85 In those circumstances, Directive 2014/24 is not applicable, ratione temporis, in the main proceedings.

86 Furthermore, to apply Directive 2014/24 which, as appears from its title, repeals Directive 2004/18, before the expiry of its period prescribed for transposition would prevent the Member States, as well as contracting authorities and economic operators from benefitting from a sufficient period in which to adapt to the new provisions introduced by it.

87 That being said, it must be observed, as is clear from the order for reference that, by its question, the referring court asks, inter alia, whether Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, which recognises the right of all economic operators to rely on the capacities of other entities for a particular contract, must be interpreted as taking into consideration the content of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24, which is the provision corresponding to Article 48.

88 In that connection, it must be observed, as the referring court noted, that Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 is formulated in general terms and does not expressly set out the detailed rules according to which an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities in a public procurement procedure.

89 However, Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 now provides that economic operators may ‘only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required’.

90 Although it is true, as stated, inter alia, by recital 2 of Directive 2014/24, Directive 2014/24 aims to clarify basic notions and concepts to ensure legal certainty and to incorporate certain aspects of related well-established case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union, the fact remains that Article 63 of that directive introduces substantial amendments as regards the right of an economic operator to rely on the capacities of other entities in the context of public contracts.

91 Far from preserving the continuity of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, and clarifying its scope, Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 introduces new conditions which were not provided for under the previous legislation.

92 In those circumstances, that provision of Directive 2014/24 cannot be used as a criterion for the interpretation of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 since there is no question in the present case of dispelling a problem of interpretation concerning the content of the latter provision.

93 Another approach might in some way incorrectly anticipate the application of the new legislation which differs from that laid down by Directive 2004/18, and would be manifestly contrary to the principle of the legal certainty for economic operators, which, as is clear inter alia from recital 2 thereof, is a principle that Directive 2014/24 expressly intends to ensure is observed.

94 In view of the foregoing, the answer to question 10 is that, in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, the provisions of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 cannot be interpreted in the light of those of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24.

Costs

95 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, read together with Article 44(2) thereof, must be interpreted as meaning that:

– they recognise the right of all economic operators, as regards a specific contract, to rely on the capacities of other entities, whatever the nature of the links existing between it and those entities, provided that it is proved to the contracting authority that the candidate or tenderer will have at its disposal the resources of those entities necessary for the performance of that contract, and

– it is conceivable that the exercise of that right may be limited, in specific circumstances, having regard to the subject matter of the contract concerned and its objectives. Such is the case, in particular, where the capacities that a third party entity has, which are necessary for the performance of that contract, cannot be transferred to the candidate or the tenderer, so that the latter may rely on those capacities only if that third party entity directly and personally participates in the performance of that contract.

2. Article 48(2) and (3) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, having regard to the subject matter of a particular contract and its objectives, the contracting authority may, in specific circumstances, for the purpose of the proper performance of that contract, expressly set out in the tender notice or the tender specifications the specific rules in accordance with which an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities, provided that those rules are related and proportionate to the subject matter and objectives of that contract.

3. The principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination of economic operators, set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, must be interpreted as meaning that, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, they preclude a contracting authority, after the opening of the tenders submitted in a public procurement procedure, from acceding to the request of an economic operator which has submitted a tender for the whole of the contract concerned, to take its offer into consideration for the purpose of awarding only certain lots of that contract.

4. The principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination of economic operators laid down in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that they require the annulment and repetition of an electronic auction in which an economic operator having submitted an admissible tender has not been invited to take part, even if it cannot be established that the participation of that operator would have altered the outcome of the auction.

5. In circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, the provisions of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 cannot be interpreted in the light of those of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

JÄÄSKINEN

delivered on 8 September 2015 (1)

Case C-324/14

Partner Apelski Dariusz

v

Zarząd Oczyszczania Miasta

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (Poland))

(Public procurement — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 48(3) — Technological and professional capacity of an economic operator — Reliance by tenderers 'where appropriate' on the capacities of other entities — Character of the links between the tenderer and these other entities — Form and degree of the use of the capacities of other entities — Details required in the contract notice — Pertinence of Directive 2014/24/EU to the interpretation of Directive 2004/18)

I – Introduction

1. This request for a preliminary ruling from the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber) concerns two legal issues that are relevant to the field of public procurement law, and a third that concerns the broader issue of the extent to which a directive that has not yet entered into force in the relevant period ratione temporis, and the implementation period of which has not expired, can be used as an aid to interpretation of a directive that it will ultimately replace.

2. In substance, the Zarząd Oczyszczania Miasta (the municipal cleansing authority; 'the contracting authority'), an organisational unit of the capital city of Warsaw, excluded Partner Dariusz Apelski (hereafter 'Partner') from the procedure for the award of a public contract for mechanical cleaning of the roads of Warsaw. It did so because it was not persuaded that Partner would duly perform the contract, given that part of its tender included services to be provided by a third party located in another and relatively remote Polish town.

3. In the first group of questions referred by the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza the Court is asked essentially, if not exclusively, about the proof required from an economic operator when it relies on 'the capacities of other entities' for a particular contract pursuant to Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. (2) These questions include queries about the content of the contract notice and clarification of the tender. The second group of questions asks about the circumstances in which an electronic auction already completed by a contracting authority is to be annulled for irregularities in the tendering process.

4. Finally, by the last question, the Court is asked whether Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (3) can be used as a guide to interpretation of Directive 2004/18 in order to solve the problems to hand, even though Directive 2014/24 had not yet entered into force at the date the contract award procedure was published.

II – Legal framework

A – Directive 2004/18

5. Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 entitled ‘[p]rinciples of awarding contracts’ states that ‘[c]ontracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

6. Article 44 of Directive 2004/18 entitled ‘[v]erification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts’ states as follows:

> ‘1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 53 and 55, taking into account Article 24, after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded under Articles 45 and 46 has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52, and, where appropriate, with the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in paragraph 3.
>
> 2. The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.
>
> The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.
>
> These minimum levels shall be indicated in the contract notice.

7. Article 48 of Directive 2004/18 entitled ‘[t]echnical and/or professional ability’ states that:

> ‘1. The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.
>
> 2. Evidence of the economic operators’ technical abilities may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services:
>
> (a) (i) …
>
> (ii) a list of the principal deliveries effected or the main services provided in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, whether public or private, involved
>
>
> 3. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.

8. Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 entitled ‘[a]dditional documentation and information’ states that the ‘contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50’.

9. Article 54 of Directive 2004/18 entitled ‘use of electronic auctions’ states:

> ‘1. Member States may provide that contracting authorities may use electronic auctions.

4. Before proceeding with an electronic auction, contracting authorities shall make a full initial evaluation of the tenders in accordance with the award criterion/criteria set and with the weighting fixed for them.

All tenderers who have submitted admissible tenders shall be invited simultaneously by electronic means to submit new prices and/or new values; …

8. After closing an electronic auction contracting authorities shall award the contract in accordance with Article 53 on the basis of the results of the electronic auction.

Contracting authorities may not have improper recourse to electronic auctions nor may they use them in such a way as to prevent, restrict or distort competition or to change the subject-matter of the contract, as put up for tender in the published contract notice and defined in the specification.'

B – Directive 2014/24

10. Article 63 of Directive 2014/24 is entitled 'reliance on the capacities of other entities', and states as follows:

'1. With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. With regard to criteria relating to the educational and professional qualifications as set out in point (f) of Annex XII Part II, or to the relevant professional experience, economic operators may however only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required. Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

2. In the case of works contracts, service contracts and siting or installation operations in the context of a supply contract, contracting authorities may require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself …'

11. Article 90(1) of Directive 2014/24 entitled '[t]ransposition and transitional provisions' states that 'Member States shall bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with this Directive by 18 April 2016. They shall forthwith communicate to the Commission the text of those measures.' Pursuant to Article 93 Directive 2014/24 entered into force on the twentieth day following that of its publication in the Official Journal, which took place on 28 March 2014.

III – Facts, procedure and questions referred

12. The contracting authority conducted a procedure for the award of a public contract for 'comprehensive mechanical cleansing of roadways of the capital city of Warsaw in the winter and summer season in the years 2014-17 — Stage I'. The procedure was published in the Official Journal of the European Union of 24 December 2013, since the value exceeded EU thresholds. The contracting authority divided the contract into eight lots covering the separate districts of Warsaw and allowed tenders for lots without limiting the number of lots for which an economic operator could tender. It conducted an open procedure (open tendering), which provided for the holding of an electronic auction.

13. Winter cleansing consists in preventing and removing icy conditions by salting and ploughing national, regional, district and municipal roadways used by urban public transport. Summer cleansing involves sweeping and wet cleaning of roadways. According to the tendering specifications, economic operators had to demonstrate that in the three years prior to the time-limit for submitting tenders, or, where the period during which the activity was carried on was shorter, in that period, they had performed, or were performing, a service or services consisting in the winter maintenance of roadways having a total value of at least PLN 1 000 000.

14. The contracting authority indicated that in evaluating whether that condition had been fulfilled it would take account solely of services using pre-wetting technology to prevent or remove icy conditions. (4) The contracting authority also indicated that where tenders for more than one lot were submitted, the economic operator had to carry out work with a correspondingly higher value, that is to say PLN 1 000 000 multiplied by the number of lots for which it tendered. Therefore, an economic operator which tendered for eight lots must have proven services with a value of at least PLN 8 000 000. (5)

15. In the list of services attached to the tender Partner referred to 14 services, 12 of which were based on its own experience, and two on the experience of PUM Sp. z o.o. ('PUM'), an undertaking established in Grudziądz (some 227 kilometres from Warsaw) as another entity on whose resources Partner relied. Partner attached to the tender an undertaking by PUM to 'make available the necessary resources'. The undertaking set out the way in which the resources made available would be used, namely advisory services covering, inter alia, training of the economic operator's workers, and providing the economic operator with consultation, including help to resolve any problems which might arise at the performance stage of the contract.

16. After the contracting authority had informed Partner on 11 March 2014 that it considered the economic operator as not having the necessary means for executing the contract Partner replied on 18 March 2014 that, if the contracting authority considered that the experience demonstrated was insufficient, its other experience should have been attributed in the following order: lots V, I, II, III, VIII, IV, VII, VI. In that respect it argued that where an economic operator submits a tender for several lots, the tender can be treated separately in relation to each of them. Therefore, any exclusion of an economic operator and rejection of its tender may not relate to the entire contract but only to the individual lots thereof in relation to which the economic operator failed to fulfil the conditions.

17. The contracting authority did not take account of the partial experience of Partner, and excluded it from the procedure in respect of each lot pursuant to Article 24(2)(4) of the Law on Public Contracts (Ustawa PZP) (6) on the ground that it had failed to prove that it had fulfilled the conditions for participation in the procedure. The contracting authority considered that, having regard to the specific nature of the work, the familiarity with the topography of the city, and the time requirements for attaining the specific winter maintenance standards etc., it would not be possible to reliably satisfy the obligation arising from the procedure carried out without the personal participation of PUM in the performance of the contract requirements. Thereafter the contracting authority organised an electronic auction to which Partner was not invited to participate.

18. In the appeal lodged with the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza Partner alleged that the contracting authority had carried out a defective examination and evaluation of the tenders. It argued that the contracting authority had not pointed out in the tendering specifications that fulfilment of the condition relating to relevant knowledge and experience is contingent on the personal participation in the performance of the contract of the entity which made knowledge and experience available to Partner, or that the experience must relate to specific topographic knowledge.

19. The Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza referred the following questions to the Court under Article 267 TFEU.

'(1) Can Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 … in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, be interpreted, where it states that "where appropriate" an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities, as covering any situation where a particular economic operator does not have the skills required by the contracting authority and wishes to rely on the capacities of other entities? Or must the indication that an economic operator may rely on the resources of other entities only "where appropriate" be regarded as a restriction indicating that such reliance may be had only exceptionally and not as a rule when providing evidence of the skills of economic operators in procedures for the award of public contracts?

(2) Can Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that reliance by an economic operator on the capacities of other entities in terms of their knowledge and experience "regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them" and "having at its disposal the resources" of those entities denote that during performance of the contract an economic operator need not have links with those entities or can have very loose and vague links, that is to say, it can perform the contract independently (without the involvement of another entity) or such participation can consist of “advice”, “consultation”, “training” and the like? Or must Article 48(3) be interpreted as meaning that the entity on whose capacities the economic operator relies must actually and personally perform the contract in so far as its capacities were declared?

(3) Can Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that an economic operator which has its own experience but to a lesser degree than it would like to indicate to the contracting authority (for example, insufficient experience to submit a tender for the whole contract) may rely additionally on the capacities of other entities to improve its situation in the procedure?

(4) Can Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that in the contract notice or the tendering specifications the contracting authority can (or even must) lay down the rules under which the economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities, for example in what way the economic operators must participate in the performance of the contract, in what way the capacity of the economic operator and another entity can be combined, and whether the other entity will bear joint and several liability with the economic operator for the due performance of the contract in so far as the economic operator has relied on its capacities?

(5) Does the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 allow reliance on the capacities of another entity under Article 48(3) where the capacities of two or more entities which do not have the capacities in terms of knowledge and experience required by the contracting authority are combined?

(6) Therefore, does the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 allow an interpretation of Articles 44 and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 to the effect that the conditions for participation in the procedure that are laid down by the contracting authority may be fulfilled just formally for the purposes of participating in the procedure and regardless of the actual skills of the economic operator?

(7) Where it is permitted to submit a tender for lots, does the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 allow an economic operator, after the submission of tenders, to state — for example in the context of the supplementing or explaining of documents — to which lot the resources specified by it in order to prove that the conditions for participation in the procedure have been fulfilled are to be assigned?

(8) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 allow an auction which has been carried out to be annulled and an electronic auction to be repeated where it was carried out improperly in an essential respect, for example where not all economic operators which submitted admissible tenders were invited to participate?

(9) Do the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators and the principle of transparency set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 allow a contract to be awarded to an economic operator whose tender was selected as a result of such an auction without it being repeated, where it is not possible to determine whether or not the participation of the economic operator which was not taken into consideration would have altered the result of the auction?

(10) In interpreting the provisions of Directive 2004/18, is it permitted to use as a guide to interpretation the content of the provisions of Directive 2014/24 … and of the preamble thereto, even though the period for implementing it has not expired, in so far as it explains certain assumptions and intentions of the EU legislature and is not contrary to Directive 2004/18?’

20. Written observations were received from Partner, Remondis sp.z o.o. and Mr Road Service sp. Z o.o., intervening in the main proceedings, the Governments of Spain, Latvia and Poland, along with the Commission. All of them, aside from the Government of Latvia, participated in the hearing that took place on 7 May 2015, as did the contracting authority, although it had not filed written observations.

IV – Analysis

A – Questions concerning reliance on another economic operator's technical and professional capacities (Questions 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6)

21. Pursuant to these questions, which I will consider together, the national referring court is essentially asking for guidance on the circumstances in which a tenderer may, for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities with regard to technological and/or professional ability when tendering for a given contract. This facility is provided for under Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18. In my opinion these questions cover basically three problems. They are (1) a tenderer's entitlement to rely on external capacities to fulfil contract requirements with respect to technical and/or professional ability; (2) the reality of reliance on third party capacities, and; (3) whether such capacities are transferable in the sense they may be relied on in the light of the nature and objective of the contract concerned. It goes without saying that Article 2, which embodies the general principle of non-discrimination and transparency, is pertinent to answering all the questions.

22. At the outset it is useful to underscore the difference between reliance on the capacities of other entities under Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, and subcontracting as provided in Article 25 thereof. As pointed out in the written observations of Spain, these legal arrangements are different in two respects. With respect to reliance on third party capacities, these are integrated with those of the tenderer prior to the award of the contract, while subcontracting is concluded at the point of the contract's execution. Secondly, subcontracting is subject to limitations that do not apply to reliance on the capacities of third parties. (7)

1. An economic operator's entitlement to rely on external capacities

23. As far as the words 'where appropriate' in Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 are concerned, they impose no substantive limitation on the circumstances in which an economic operator can call on the resources of a third party when tendering for a public contract.

24. I pointed out in my Opinion in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino (C-94/12, EU:C:2013:130) that the wording of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 is suggestive of a right of economic operators to choose this method of fulfilling the selection criteria, provided they can prove they actually have at their disposal the resources of the other entities concerned that are necessary to carry out the contract in question. (8) This interpretation is most in conformity with the goal of opening up public contracts to the widest possible competition, and the encouragement of access thereto of small and medium sized undertakings.

25. Furthermore, it was found by the Court in Holst Italia (C-176/98, EU:C:1999:593), and later confirmed in Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, that the nature of the legal links between the economic operator and the third entity or entities on which it seeks to rely is irrelevant. (9)

26. Hence, in the light of the Court's case-law, there can in principle be no objection to a tenderer relying additionally on the capacities of other entities to improve its situation in the contract procedure. This is subject, however, to the limitations I shall discuss below. As pointed out in the written observations of the Commission, what counts is that the tenderer actually has at its disposal the capacities of other entities in order to properly execute the contract. This 'disposition' needs to take no particular legal form.

2. The reality of third party capacities relied on by the tenderer

27. Notwithstanding what has been said in the preceding paragraphs, the onus rests on tenderers who rely on the capacities of others entities to prove to the contracting authority that they in fact are available to them. (10) From this perspective, Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 might best be viewed as one imposing an evidential requirement, and one in which the assessment of that proof is left to the contracting authority. Pursuant to Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18, it is for the contracting authorities to check the suitability of candidates or tenderers in accordance with the criteria referred to in Articles 47 to 52 of Directive 2004/18. (11) In other words, as emphasised by the contracting authority and Poland at the hearing, a contracting authority is bound by an obligation to ensure that the successful tenderer is actually able to properly execute the contract.

28. The goal of the provisions of Directive 2004/18 concerning the participation of third parties in the execution of public contracts is to avoid the situation in which an undertaking would be entitled to have access to a contract award even though it doesn't have the necessary means to execute the contract. Hence, Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 precludes a contracting authority from taking a purely formal approach to the proof supplied by a tenderer, due to the duties by which it is bound. In other words, it is not acceptable that tenderers refer to third party capacities if it is done only for the purpose of formally fulfilling the minimum capacity condition set out in the contract notice.

3. Transferability of technological and/or professional abilities

29. In Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino (C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646) the Court interpreted Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, as precluding a general rule prohibiting economic operators participating in a tendering procedure for a public works contract from relying on the capacities of more than one undertaking for the same qualification category. However, the Court also observed that 'there may be works with special requirements necessitating a certain capacity which cannot be obtained by combining the capacities of more than one operator' and that 'in such circumstances, the contracting authority would be justified in requiring that the minimum capacity level concerned be achieved by a single economic operator'. (12)

30. That said, the problem in issue is, however, whether the capacities relating to technological and professional ability specified in the contract award notice are transferable. If they are not, Partner would not qualify as a tenderer.

31. Transferability of technological capacities relates to the question of whether technology or know-how can meaningfully be transferred from one economic operator to another, for example by means of consultations and the provision of advice. In the written observations there are also points which rather relate to the issue of whether such capacities of different entities can be added on in general, which in my opinion is the approach taken by the EU legislature in Article 48 of Directive 2004/14. However, in the main proceedings the real dispute concerns the issue whether the technological ability of PUM was transferable to Partner without the first mentioned economic operator itself participating directly in the execution of the contract. The dispute is not about simply adding similar capacities to those that Partner already has.

32. Much depends on the facts and the nature and object of the contract. Capacities exist that are transferrable. Let us imagine a contract award by a public health service provider concerning screening for a form of cancer using a standard technology, and which is to be provided to a defined group of people. Let us further imagine that the terms of the contract award state that in unclear cases the findings must be confirmed by a specialist having certain and superior professional qualifications. In such circumstances there should be no reason why a tenderer could not rely on a third party who is to provide the necessary consultation. However, if the contract concerned screening by means of a new and non-standard methodology, the contracting authority could reasonably require that the tenderer itself possesses relevant capacity. Here we are faced with a question of the factual circumstances of the contract award.

33. Thus, as I have already mentioned, account must be taken of the nature of each contract and the need to be fulfilled. This is a question to be assessed by the national court.

34. Whether or not a contracting authority may require the participation of a third party entity in the execution of the contract, as the sole means of proving that the relevant capacities are at the disposal of the tenderer concerned, this is also a question to be assessed on a case-by-case basis. It will all depend on the nature and objective of the contract. In my opinion it is easy to envisage scenarios in which the commitment concerned is of such a degree of technical difficulty that it must be executed by the third party possessing the relevant expertise if its capacity is relied upon, rather than on the basis of advice and counselling on the part of such an entity, with the relevant commitment being executed by the tenderer itself.

4. Intermediary conclusion

35. On the basis of the observations above, Questions 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6 can be answered as follows: Articles 44 and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, are to be interpreted in the sense that the term 'where appropriate' imposes no substantive limitation on the circumstances in which an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities in order to prove to a contracting authority that it will have the technological and/or professional ability necessary for the execution of a given public contract. The nature of the legal links between the economic operator and the third party entity is irrelevant, but the economic operator must be able to prove to the contracting authority that it in fact has at its disposal all the means to execute the terms of the contract. A tenderer may rely on the capacities of other entities to prove its technological and/or professional ability, subject to the limitations flowing from the nature and objective of the contract, the execution of which is required.

B – Contract notice, tendering specifications and joint and several liability (Question 4)

36. Question 4 essentially asks whether the contracting authority can, (or even must), in the contract notice or tendering specifications lay down the rules under which tenderers may or may not rely on the capacities of other entities. To be more specific, can the contracting authority stipulate the way in which the tenderer is bound to participate in the performance of the contract, the manner in which the capacities of the tenderer concerned and other entities can be combined, and whether the other entity will bear joint and several liability with the tenderer for the due performance of the contract in so far as the tenderer has relied on its capacities?

37. Spain states in its written observations that the contract notice or tender specifications should stipulate the rules pursuant to which a tenderer can rely on the capacities of other entities, provided that these requirements are proportionate and are directly connected to the object of the contract concerned. The written observations of Poland also argue in this sense.

38. However, in my opinion the correct position is the one defended by the Commission. It points out in its written observations that because tenderers are entitled to rely on the capacities of third party entities, contracting authorities are precluded from imposing any express conditions that may impede that right. The tenderer is entitled to determine how it will access these capacities. The Commission rightly adds that, for practical reasons, it might be nearly impossible for the contracting authority to fix, in advance, specifications on the ways in which the capacities of others can be relied upon; it cannot predict in advance all possible scenarios for the use of capacities of others. This is, of course, subject to the absence of criteria set out in the Swm 2 costruzione case-law concerning situations where such reliance is excluded.

39. The general principles developed by the Court concerning the contract notice and tendering specifications and the principle of transparency are relevant to this question. I recall that the obligation of transparency is intended to preclude any risk of arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority, (13) and that the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency prohibit the contracting authority from rejecting a tender which satisfies the requirements of the invitation to tender on grounds which are not set out in the tender specifications. (14) I also note that Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18 states that technical specifications ‘shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition’ while pursuant to Article 23(3)(c), technical requirements can include performance requirements.

40. In my opinion, if the particular conditions set out in the judgment in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino (C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 35) arise, and the contracting authority imposes, as a condition of the contract award procedure, that the minimum capacity level concerned be achieved by a single economic operator, then it is required to state this beforehand in the contract notice and/or tendering specifications. In such circumstances, the facility for reliance on third party capacity in Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 is excluded. This would seem to be the only means of complying with the obligation of transparency in the examination of the suitability of the candidates because otherwise potential tenderers would not be informed of all obligatory and unconditional requirements relating to minimum capacities. (15)

41. This is, however, a different question than the appreciation of whether a tenderer relying on third party capacities in fact satisfies the conditions of technological and/or professional ability required in the tender notice. This matter can only be examined on the basis of the tenders when compared to the suitability requirements stated in the tender notice and tendering specifications, in light of the criteria described above in the context of Questions 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6.

42. Finally, with respect to joint and several liability, the written observations of the Commission have sought to rely on Article 63(1), third line, of Directive 2014/24 in order to support an argument in its favour. Partner and Spain, on the other hand, argue that the imposition of joint and several liability is not possible, given that it is only the tenderer who has participated in the tendering procedure that is responsible for the contract’s execution, and not any third entity on whose capacities it has relied.

43. For the reasons that I shall set out in my answer to Question 10, no unconditional rules can be derived from Directive 2014/24 in applying Directive 2004/18, when they are either absent from Directive 2004/18 or impose more detailed norms or requirements than the corresponding provisions thereof. Therefore, imposition of joint and several liability should be excluded before the period for implementing Directive 2014/24 expires.

44. For these reasons the Court should respond to Question 4 in the sense that Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, must be interpreted as meaning that, in the contract notice or the tendering specifications, the contracting authority is required to specify any condition entailing the preclusion of recourse to Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 for demonstrating fulfillment of requirements relating to minimum capacities. The contracting authority is otherwise precluded from laying down in the contract notice or the tendering specifications express conditions or rules concerning if and how tenderers may rely on the capacities of other entities.

C – Clarification of the tender (Question 7)

45. Question 7 essentially asks about the extent to which dialogue can be entered into between the contracting authority and the tenderer, for example in the context of supplementing or explaining documents after the submission of tenders, when it is possible to tender in lots. I recall in this respect that according to Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 the contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50 thereof.

46. In my opinion the Court can supply a short answer to this question. The Court has already excluded any negotiation between the contracting authority and one or other of the tenderers. Contracting authorities may not request clarification of tenders which it regards as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specification before such tenders are rejected. (16)

47. Once a tender is made, it cannot be modified, either at the initiative of the tenderer or the contracting authority. (17) The latter can exceptionally request amplification of details, such as mere clarification or corrections of obvious material errors, without requesting or accepting any amendment to the tender. (18)

48. In my opinion providing information concerning the order of priority of lots covered by a tender after the submission of the tenders is not a mere precision but a material change to the tender. Accepting it would amount to a breach of the principles of fair competition. This does not fall within the exceptional set of circumstances in which clarifications of tenders is permissible.

49. Thus, in my opinion Question 7 should be answered in the sense that, where it is permitted to submit a tender for lots, the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 does not allow an economic operator, after the submission of tenders, to state to which lot the resources specified by it in order to prove that the conditions for participation in the procedure have been fulfilled are to be attributed.

D – Irregularities in electronic auction (Questions 8 and 9)

50. Questions 8 and 9 concern the consequences that follow, in the terms of the award of a contract, when all suitable tenderers have not been allowed to participate in an electronic auction.

51. Here I recall at the outset that in accordance with Article 54(4), second subparagraph, of Directive 2004/18 ‘[a]ll tenderers who have submitted admissible tenders shall be invited simultaneously by electronic means to submit new prices and/or new values’. Article 54(8) of Directive 2004/18 precludes recourse to electronic auctions to, inter alia, prevent or distort competition. I observe further that the national court is not querying the remedies available to the economic operators in relation to an irregular electronic auction, (19) but the obligations of the contracting authority under Directive 2004/18 in such a situation.

52. In my opinion, if a suitable tenderer fulfilling the criteria set out in the contract notice and technological specifications should have been invited to take part in the electronic auction, pursuant to Article 54(4) of Directive 2004/18, but was not, then it follows from the requirement of equal and non-discriminatory treatment as set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 that the auction should be repeated. This applies independently of whether its participation would have altered the outcome of the auction or not. (20)

This means that the contract cannot be awarded on the basis of illegal or irregular electronic auctions of this kind.

53. I therefore propose that Questions 8 and 9 are answered in the sense that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 requires the annulment and repetition of an electronic auction if a candidate fulfilling the criteria of participation in the contract award was not invited to the electronic auction.

E – Can Directive 2014/24 be taken into account in the interpretation of Directive 2004/18? (Question 10)

54. The referring national court queries in Question 10 whether, in interpreting the provisions of Directive 2004/18, it is permitted to use as a guide to interpretation the content of the provisions of Directive 2014/24, and of the preamble thereto, even though the period for implementing it has not expired, in so far as it explains certain assumptions and intentions of the EU legislature and is not contrary to Directive 2004/18.

55. This issue is related to the fact that Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 is entitled 'reliance on the capacities of other entities' and provides rules applicable to this situation that are more detailed than those which appear in Directive 2004/18. Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24, like Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, provides that the 'legal nature' of the links between the entities is immaterial. However, Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 adds that when the operator concerned is dependent on 'educational and professional qualifications', or 'professional experience', it may only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required. Moreover, Article 63(2) of Directive 2014/24 states that the contracting authorities may require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself.

56. I note at the outset that the problem the national court is faced with concerns the interaction between two EU legislative acts. Therefore the case-law concerning Member States' obligations during the period prescribed for transposition of a directive (21) on interpretation of national law during that period (22) is not pertinent.

57. Furthermore, I recall that the Court has recently held that in circumstances in which Directive 2014/24/EU entered into force after the facts in the main proceedings in issue, it could not be applicable to that dispute. (23) This is consistent with its previous findings in the context of the transition period between Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (24) and Directive 2004/18. In a case in which a bid was excluded from the procedure for the award of a contract before the date on which the period for transposition of Directive 2004/18 had expired, the Court held that it would 'be contrary to the principle of legal certainty to determine the law applicable to the case in the main proceedings by reference to the date of the award of the contract'. (25) It therefore held that 'Directive 2004/18 is not applicable to a decision taken by a contracting authority when awarding a public works contract before the period for transposition of that directive has expired'. (26) However, the national court in the case to hand is not asking in detail about the relationship between the particular provisions of the older and new directives, and seeks only general guidance.

58. This said, the Court has on at least one occasion relied on both a recital and provision of Directive 2014/24 in interpreting Directive 2004/18. However, it did not explain the reasons for so doing. (27)

59. In my opinion the relationship between two successive EU legislative acts in terms of interpretation must be addressed with due regard to the legislative intent. However, the formulation of Question 10 is not helpful in this respect because it is not clear whether the reference to 'certain assumptions and intentions of the EU legislature' refers to those in the context of Directive 2014/24 or Directive 2004/18.

60. For me it is evident that Directive 2014/24 cannot explain the legislative intent of Directive 2004/18. However, it may stem from the preamble and provisions of Directive 2014/24 that the legislative intent relating to certain of its provisions was to codify the existing case-law in which Directive 2004/18 has been applied. In such situations there is no obstacle to taking into account the later directive in the interpretation of the former. On the other hand, if the legislative intent is to depart from the provisions of Directive 2004/18, or the existing case-law, then the new directive cannot serve as a guide to interpretation of the previous one.

61. At the other end of the scale, the national referring court mentions a proviso. Question 10 implies that the taking into account of Directive 2014/24/EU will be precluded if it is 'contrary to Directive 2004/18'.

This stems, of course, from the principle of legal certainty which prohibits retroactive application of an instrument which is not applicable ratione temporis. (28)

62. At the heart of the question are, however, the provisions of Directive 2014/24 which add detail to Directive 2004/18 or case-law where it is applied where there is no logical contradiction between the acts, Directive 2004/18 being silent or imprecise on the matter concerned.

63. In my opinion, it follows from the principle of legal certainty that unconditional rules or conditions based on Directive 2014/24 cannot be applied as 'interpretations' of Directive 2004/18 to the detriment of economic operators participating in contract award procedures. However, if the legislative intent behind the relevant provisions of Directive 2014/24 is rather to further develop harmonisation of the existing legislation and case-law, and not to rupture it, then there is no obstacle to using them as a guide in interpretation of Directive 2004/18.

64. For these reasons I propose that Question 10 be answered in the sense that in interpreting the provisions of Directive 2004/18 it is permitted to use as a guide to interpretation the content of the provisions of Directive 2014/24, and of the preamble thereto, even though the period for implementing it has not expired, in so far as it codifies case-law applying Directive 2004/18, or adds detail thereto, but is neither contrary to Directive 2004/18 nor sets out unconditional rules or conditions to the detriment of economic operators.

V – Conclusion

65. On the basis of the preceding reasons, I propose that the Court give the following answers to the questions referred by the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza:

Questions 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6

Articles 44 and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, read in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, are to be interpreted in the sense that the term 'where appropriate' imposes no substantive limitation on the circumstances in which an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities in order to prove to a contracting authority that it will have the technological and/or professional ability necessary for the execution of a given public contract. The nature of the legal links between the economic operator and the third party entity is irrelevant, but the economic operator must be able to prove to the contracting authority that it in fact has at its disposal all the means to execute the terms of the contract. A tenderer may rely on capacities of other entities to prove its technological and/or professional ability, subject to the limitations following from the nature and objective of the contract, the execution of which is required.

Question 4

Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof, must be interpreted as meaning that, in the contract notice or the tendering specifications, the contracting authority is required to specify any condition entailing the preclusion of recourse to Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 for demonstrating fulfilment of requirements relating to minimum capacities. The contracting authority is otherwise precluded from laying down in the contract notice, or the tendering specifications, express conditions or rules concerning if and how tenderers may rely on the capacities of other entities.

Question 7

Where it is permitted to submit a tender for lots, the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 does not allow an economic operator, after the submission of tenders, to state to which lot the resources specified by it in order to prove that the conditions for participation in the procedure have been fulfilled are to be attributed.

Questions 8 and 9

Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 requires the annulment and repetition of an electronic auction if a candidate fulfilling the criteria of participation in the contract award was not invited to the electronic auction.

Question 10

Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC can be used as guide to interpreting Directive 2004/18, even though the period for implementing Directive 2014/24 is yet to expire, but only in so far as it codifies case-law in which Directive 2004/18 has been applied, or adds detail thereto, and that the relevant provisions of Directive 2014/24 are neither contrary to Directive 2004/18 nor set out obligatory rules or conditions to the detriment of economic operators.

14 – Ibid., paragraph 28.

15 – See by analogy the case law on award criteria, for example judgment in Commission v France (C-299/08, EU:C:2009:769), paragraph 41, where the Court held that 'both the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency which flows from it require the subject-matter of each contract and the criteria governing its award to be clearly defined' (my emphasis). See also judgment in ATI EAC e Viaggi di Maio and Others (C-331/04, EU:C:2005:718), which established, at paragraph 32, limits on attaching specific weight to the subheadings of award criteria, and judgment in Universale-Bau and Others (C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746), paragraph 100, in which the contracting authority was required to state, in the contract notice or tender documents, rules for weighting the criteria for selecting candidates who would be invited to tender.

16 – Judgment in SAG ELV Slovensko and Others (C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191), paragraphs 36 and 37. I recall that there is provision in Directive 2004/18 for competitive dialogue with respect to particularly complex contracts (Article 29) and negotiated procedures (Article 30). These provisions are, however, irrelevant to the case to hand.

17 – See judgment in Manova (C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647) where the Court held at paragraph 31 that 'the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency preclude any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure, which means that, as a general rule, a tender cannot be amended after it has been submitted, whether at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderer concerned. It follows that, where the contracting authority regards a tender as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications, it cannot require the tenderer to provide clarification'.

I also note that Advocate General Kokott in her Opinion in Auroux and Others (C-220/05, EU:C:2006:410), point 50 referred to a provision of Directive 2004/18 to confirm an interpretation of Directive 93/37, even though the former was not yet relevant ratione temporis. The Court, however, observed at paragraph 61 of its judgment in Auroux and Others (C-220/05, EU:C:2007:31) that the provision in question of Directive 2004/18 was 'not applicable ratione temporis to the facts in the main proceedings'. See also an observation in the Opinion of Advocate General Wahl in Opinion of Advocate General Wahl in Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others (C-113/13, EU:C:2014:291) point 40, and the exclusion by the Court of the pertinence of Directive 2014/24 at paragraph 8 of the judgment in judgment in Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others (C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440).

28 – Here I recall the classic formulation of the Court in its judgment in Fédesa and Others (C-331/88, EU:C:1990:391), paragraph 45, where it was held that 'in general the principle of legal certainty precludes a Community measure from taking effect from a point in time before its publication, it may exceptionally be otherwise where the purpose to be achieved so demands and where the legitimate expectations of those concerned are duly respected'. Those necessary conditions for retroactivity do not arise in this case.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

16 April 2015 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Supply — Technical specifications — Principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination — Obligation of transparency — Reference to a product of a particular brand — Assessment of the equivalence of the product offered by a tenderer — Reference product no longer in production)

In Case C-278/14,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Curtea de Apel Alba Iulia (Romania), made by decision of 21 March 2014, received at the Court on 6 June 2014, in the proceedings

SC Enterprise Focused Solutions SRL

Spitalul Județean de Urgență Alba Iulia,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber), composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, C. Vajda, A. Rosas, E. Juhász and D. Šváby (Rapporteur), Judges, Advocate General: M. Szpunar,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent, – the European Commission, by L. Nicolae and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44), as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011 (OJ 2011 L 319, p. 43; ‘Directive 2004/18’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between SC Enterprise Focused Solutions SRL (‘EFS’) and Spitalul Județean de Urgență Alba Iulia (Alba Iulia District Emergency Hospital) concerning the latter’s decision rejecting the tender submitted by EFS in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract.

3 Recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 is worded as follows:

‘The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.’

4 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

5 In accordance with the first indent of Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18, the directive is, inter alia, applicable to public supply contracts which have a value, exclusive of value added tax (‘VAT’), equal to or greater than EUR 200 000 in the case of contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than the central government authorities listed in Annex IV to that directive.

6 ‘Technical specifications’ are defined as follows in point 1(b) of Annex VI to Directive 2004/18:

‘“technical specification”, in the case of public supply or service contracts, means a specification in a document defining the required characteristics of a product or a service, such as quality levels, environmental performance levels, design for all requirements (including accessibility for disabled persons) and conformity assessment, performance, use of the product, safety or dimensions, including requirements relevant to the product as regards the name under which the product is sold, terminology, symbols, testing and test methods, packaging, marking and labelling, user instructions, production processes and methods and conformity assessment procedures.’

7 According to Article 23 of that directive:

2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.

3. Without prejudice to mandatory national technical rules, to the extent that they are compatible with Community law, the technical specifications shall be formulated:

(a) either by reference to technical specifications defined in Annex VI and, in order of preference, to national standards transposing European standards, European technical approvals, common technical specifications, international standards, other technical reference systems established by the European standardisation bodies or — when these do not exist — to national standards, national technical approvals or national technical specifications relating to the design, calculation and execution of the works and use of the products. Each reference shall be accompanied by the words “or equivalent”;

(b) or in terms of performance or functional requirements; the latter may include environmental characteristics. However, such parameters must be sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject-matter of the contract and to allow contracting authorities to award the contract;

(c) or in terms of performance or functional requirements as mentioned in subparagraph (b), with reference to the specifications mentioned in subparagraph (a) as a means of presuming conformity with such performance or functional requirements;

(d) or by referring to the specifications mentioned in subparagraph (a) for certain characteristics, and by referring to the performance or functional requirements mentioned in subparagraph (b) for other characteristics.

8. Unless justified by the subject-matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject-matter of the contract pursuant to paragraphs 3 and 4 is not possible; such reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent".'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

8 On 20 November 2013, Spitalul Județean de Urgență Alba Iulia launched an online call for tenders for the conclusion of a contract for the supply of computing systems and equipment. The estimated value of the contract was RON 259 750, excluding VAT. That figure corresponds to approximately EUR 58 600.

9 As regards the central unit of the computing system, the tender documentation stated that the processor was required to correspond 'at least' to an 'Intel Core i5 3.2 GHz or equivalent' processor.

10 The tender submitted by EFS included a Quad Core A8-5600k type processor of the AMD brand with six cores, a standard speed of 3.6 GHz and a 'turbo' frequency of 3.9 GHz.

11 That tender was rejected on the ground that it did not comply with the technical specifications of the contract. The contracting authority reached that conclusion after establishing, having consulted the Intel website, that first and second-generation Core i5 processors with a speed of 3.2 GHz (Core i5-650) were no longer in production or supported by that manufacturer, albeit still commercially available, and that the same type of processor now being produced by that manufacturer and having a speed of at least 3.2 GHz was the third-generation processor. It was by reference to that third-generation processor, whose performance is superior to that of the processor offered by EFS, that EFS was declared not to have complied with the technical specifications of the contract.

12 EFS filed a complaint before the Consiliul Național de Soluționare a Contestațiilor (National Council for the Settlement of Complaints) against the decision rejecting its tender, claiming that the performance of the processor offered in that tender is superior to that of the processor specified in the technical specifications of the contract, the Intel Core i5-650 3.2 GHz. It is common ground that the processor offered by EFS is indeed superior to the Core i5-650 type processor of the Intel brand. Since the complaint was rejected by decision of 11 February 2014, the applicant in the main proceedings lodged an appeal against that decision with the Curtea de Apel Alba Iulia (Alba Iulia Court of Appeal).

13 In those circumstances, the Curtea de Apel Alba Iulia decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'May Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18… be interpreted as meaning that, when a contracting authority defines the technical specifications of the product which is the subject of a procurement contract by reference to a particular brand, the characteristics of the "equivalent" product offered [by a tenderer and presented as such] must be established solely by reference to the [characteristics] of products [of the manufacturer whose product served as a reference for the technical specification concerned that are] still in production, or may they be established by reference to products [of that manufacturer] which are on the market but no longer in production?'

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

14 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that the referring court is proceeding on the basis that Directive 2004/18 is applicable in the context of the dispute in the main proceedings, without, however, providing information from which the applicability of that act of secondary legislation might be inferred.

15 It must be noted that the strict special procedures prescribed by the EU directives coordinating public procurement procedures apply only to contracts whose value exceeds a threshold expressly laid down in each of those directives. Accordingly, the rules in those directives do not apply to contracts with a value below the threshold set by those directives (judgment in SECAP and Santorso, C-147/06 and C-148/06, EU:C:2008:277, paragraph 19 and the case-law cited). Consequently, Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18, which the Court has been asked to interpret, is not applicable in the context of the dispute in the main proceedings. The value, exclusive of VAT, of the public contract concerned is in the order of EUR 58 600, whereas the relevant threshold for the application of that directive set by Article 7(b) thereof is EUR 200 000.

16 It should be noted, however, that the award of contracts which, in view of their value, do not fall within the scope of that directive is none the less subject to the fundamental rules and the general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and the consequent obligation of transparency, provided that those contracts have a certain cross-border interest in the light of certain objective criteria (see, to that effect, judgment in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited).

17 Although the referring court does not refer directly to the fundamental rules and general principles of EU law in the order for reference, it is settled case-law that in order to provide a useful answer to a national court which has referred a question to it, the Court may deem it necessary to consider rules of EU law to which the national court has not referred in its request for a preliminary ruling (see, to that effect, judgment in Medipac — Kazantzidis, C-6/05, EU:C:2007:337, paragraph 34).

18 It should be noted in that regard that the referring court has not established the findings necessary for the Court to ascertain whether, in the case in the main proceedings, there is certain cross-border interest. It must be borne in mind that, as is clear from Article 94 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, the Court must be able to find in a request for a preliminary ruling a summary of the facts on which the questions are based and the connection, inter alia, between those facts and the questions. Therefore, the findings necessary to verify the existence of certain cross-border interest, and more generally all the findings to be made by the national courts and on which the applicability of an act of secondary and primary legislation of the European Union depends, must be made before the questions are referred to the Court (see judgment in Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 47).

19 However, because of the spirit of cooperation in relations between the national courts and the Court of Justice in the context of the preliminary ruling procedure, the lack of such preliminary findings by the referring court relating to the existence of certain cross-border interest does not necessarily lead to the request being inadmissible if the Court, having regard to the information available from the file, considers that it is in a position to give a useful answer to the referring court. That is the case, in particular, where the order for reference contains sufficient relevant information for the existence of such an interest to be determined. Nevertheless, the Court's answer is given subject to the proviso that, on the basis of a detailed assessment of all the relevant facts in the case in the main proceedings, certain cross-border interest in the case in the main proceedings is established by the referring court (see, to that effect, judgment in Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 48 and the case-law cited).

20 As regards the objective criteria that may indicate the existence of certain cross-border interest, the Court has already held that such criteria may be, in particular, that the contract in question is for a significant amount, in conjunction with the place where the work is to be carried out or the technical characteristics of the contract. The referring court may, in its overall assessment of the existence of certain cross-border interest also take account of the existence of complaints brought by operators situated in other Member States, provided that it is determined that those complaints are real and not fictitious (see judgment in Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 49 and the case-law cited).

21 In the present case, despite the low value of the contract and the lack of any explanation by the referring court, it must be held that the contract at issue in the main proceedings could have certain cross-border interest in the light of the facts of the case in the main proceedings, particularly the fact that that case concerns the supply of computing systems and equipment with the reference processor being that of an international brand.

22 It is therefore for the referring court to make a detailed assessment, taking into account all the relevant information characterising the context of the case brought before it, as to whether the contract at issue in the main proceedings does indeed have certain cross-border interest. The following considerations are subject to that reservation.

23 The question referred must accordingly be understood as relating — in the context of a contract that is not subject to Directive 2004/18 but which has certain cross-border interest — to the implications of the fundamental rules and general principles of the Treaty and, in particular, of the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination and of the consequent obligation of transparency.

24 It should also be pointed out that, in the case in the main proceedings, the fact that the product is no longer in production but continues to be available on the market applies not to the product put forward by a tenderer but to the product referred to in the technical specification at issue. Consequently, the relevant question is not whether, in addition to any detailed information in that respect in the tender documentation at issue in the main proceedings, the contracting authority can require that the product offered by a tenderer be one that is still in production, but whether a contracting authority which has defined a technical specification by reference to a product of a particular brand may, where that product is no longer in production, modify that specification by referring to a comparable product of the same brand which is now in production but which has different characteristics.

25 As regards the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency, the Member States must be recognised as having a certain amount of discretion for the purpose of adopting measures intended to ensure compliance with those principles, which are binding on contracting authorities in any procedure for the award of a public contract (see judgment in Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraphs 31 and 32).

26 The obligation of transparency is in particular intended to preclude any risk of arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority (see, with regard to Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, judgment in SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 25 and the case-law cited).

27 That objective would not be achieved if the contracting authority were able to disregard the conditions it had itself imposed. Accordingly, it is prohibited from amending the award criteria during the award procedure. The principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency have the same effect in that respect with regard to the technical specifications.

28 Consequently, the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency prohibit the contracting authority from rejecting a tender which satisfies the requirements of the invitation to tender on grounds which are not set out in the tender specifications (judgment in Medipac — Kazantzidis, C-6/05, EU:C:2007:337, paragraph 54).

29 The contracting authority cannot, therefore, after publication of a contract notice, amend the technical specification in respect of an element of the contract in breach of the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency. It is irrelevant, in that regard, whether or not the element to which that specification refers is still in production or available on the market.

30 The answer to the question referred is, therefore, that Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18 is not applicable to a public contract with a value below the threshold for application laid down by that directive. In the context of a public contract not subject to that directive but which has certain cross-border interest, which it is for the referring court to ascertain, the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination and the consequent obligation of transparency, must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority cannot reject a tender which satisfies the requirements of the contract notice on grounds which are not set out in that notice.

Costs

31 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011, is not applicable to a public contract with a value below the threshold for application laid down by that directive. In the context of a public contract not subject to that directive but which has certain cross-border interest, which it is for the referring court to ascertain, the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination and the consequent obligation of transparency, must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority cannot reject a tender which satisfies the requirements of the contract notice on grounds which are not set out in that notice.

Arrêt

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation de l'article 1^er^, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO L 134, p. 114).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige concernant le Kansaneläkelaitos (organisme national de sécurité sociale) et Suomen Palvelutaksit ry ainsi que Oulun Taksipalvelut Oy, sociétés de taxis, au sujet de la mise en œuvre sans appel d'offres d'un ensemble contractuel relatif à une procédure électronique de compensation directe des frais de transport en taxi liés aux traitements médicaux.

Le cadre juridique

Le droit de l'Union

3 L'article 1er de la directive 2004/18, intitulé «Définitions», prévoit, à ses paragraphes 2, sous a), et 4:

«2. a) Les 'marchés publics' sont des contrats à titre onéreux conclus par écrit entre un ou plusieurs opérateurs économiques et un ou plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs et ayant pour objet l'exécution de travaux, la fourniture de produits ou la prestation de services au sens de la présente directive.

4. La 'concession de services' est un contrat présentant les mêmes caractéristiques qu'un marché public de services, à l'exception du fait que la contrepartie de la prestation des services consiste soit uniquement dans le droit d'exploiter le service, soit dans ce droit assorti d'un prix.»

Le droit finlandais

4 La loi sur les marchés publics [hankintalaki (348/2007)] a transposé la directive 2004/18 en droit finlandais. L'article 5 de celle-ci, intitulé «Définitions», prévoit, à ses paragraphes 1 et 6:

«Dans cette loi, on entend par

1) 'marché public' un contrat écrit passé entre un ou plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs et un ou plusieurs opérateurs et ayant pour objet l'exécution de travaux, la fourniture de produits ou la prestation de services, en échange d'une contrepartie économique;

6) 'concession de services' un contrat présentant les mêmes caractéristiques qu'un marché public de services, mais dont la contrepartie de la prestation des services consiste soit uniquement dans le droit d'exploiter le service, soit dans ce droit assorti d'un prix.»

5 Sous le titre 2 de la loi sur l'assurance maladie [sairausvakuutuslaki (1224/2004)], l'article 1er, paragraphe 1, de celle-ci prévoit que «sont remboursés à l'assuré en tant que dépenses médicales, dans les conditions définies ci-après, […] les frais de transport liés au traitement médical».

6 Sous le titre 4 de cette loi, intitulé «Remboursements des frais de transports», l'article 7 de celle-ci dispose que «[l]es frais de transport d'un assuré sont remboursés en totalité pour ce qui est de la partie du montant dépassant 14,25 euros pour un trajet simple (montant correspondant à la franchise à la charge de l'assuré). Le remboursement est cependant tout au plus égal au montant fixé comme base de remboursement pour les frais de transport».

7 Le titre 15 de ladite loi, relatif à la procédure de compensation directe, comporte l'article 9 de celle-ci, aux termes duquel, si «[…] un prestataire de services de transport a facturé à l'assuré le prix du voyage à hauteur de la franchise à la charge de l'assuré conformément au titre 4, article 7, le remboursement peut être versé […] au prestataire de services sur la base du décompte effectué par ce dernier et selon des modalités spécifiques convenues».

8 L'article 15 de la loi sur les prestations de rééducation et les prestations financières y afférentes servies par le Kansaneläkelaitos [laki Kansaneläkelaitoksen kuntoutusetuuksista ja kuntoutus-rahaetuuksista (566/2005)], intitulé «Frais de transport», dispose:

«Les patients bénéficiant de mesures de réadaptation ainsi que les membres de la famille ou autres proches bénéficiant de ces mesures conformément aux articles 9 et 12 sont remboursés en ce qui concerne les frais de transport nécessaires et raisonnables dans le cadre de cette réadaptation, dans les conditions prévues au titre 4 de la loi sur l'assurance maladie. […]»

Le litige au principal et les questions préjudicielles

9 Le Kansaneläkelaitos est un pouvoir adjudicateur au sens de la loi sur les marchés publics. Conformément à la réglementation finlandaise, celui-ci rembourse aux assurés la partie des frais de transport en taxi liés aux traitements médicaux qui excède la franchise restant à la charge desdits assurés. L'organisation de ces transports ne relève pas de la responsabilité du Kansaneläkelaitos.

10 Le Kansaneläkelaitos et la Suomen Taksiliitto ry (Union des taxis de Finlande), au nom et sur mandat des sociétés de taxis relevant de cette union, ont signé, le 4 février 2010, une convention-cadre, qui prévoit que le remboursement des frais de transport en taxi liés aux traitements médicaux pour les personnes assurées en Finlande, accordé conformément aux dispositions de la loi sur l'assurance maladie et de la loi sur les prestations de rééducation et les prestations financières y afférentes servies par le Kansaneläkelaitos, est versé directement au chauffeur de taxi, selon une procédure électronique de compensation.

13 Si un assuré ne réserve pas un taxi par l'intermédiaire du centre de réservations désigné, il paie l'intégralité du prix de la course et doit demander ensuite directement au Kansaneläkelaitos le remboursement de la somme qui dépasse la franchise restant à sa charge.

14 Aux termes de la convention-cadre, l'objectif de la procédure de compensation directe est d'améliorer le service rendu aux usagers, en facilitant le système de remboursement, et de réaliser des économies en regroupant les réservations de taxis. En effet, la société de taxis qui a conclu un contrat de compensation directe avec la délégation locale du Kansaneläkelaitos s'engage à regrouper les réservations des assurés qui vont au même moment dans la même direction.

15 Selon la convention-cadre, chacun des cocontractants assume ses propres frais liés à la mise en œuvre et au fonctionnement de la procédure électronique de compensation directe. À cet égard, la société de taxis locale désignée en tant que centre de réservations a le droit de prélever auprès des chauffeurs de taxis adhérant au système une compensation raisonnable, afin de lui permettre de remplir les obligations qui lui sont imposées par le contrat de compensation directe. Ces centres de réservations perçoivent également une redevance, à la charge des assurés, sur les réservations téléphoniques.

18 Suomen Palvelutaksit ry, Oulun Taksipalvelut Oy et Turun Seudun Invataksit ry ont introduit devant le markkinaoikeus (tribunal des affaires économiques) des recours contre l'ensemble contractuel relatif à la procédure électronique de compensation directe.

19 Le markkinaoikeus a considéré que la convention-cadre conclue entre le Kansaneläkelaitos et la Suomen Taksiliitto ry ainsi que les contrats de compensation directe conclus sur la base de cette convention constituaient un seul ensemble contractuel, qui devait être qualifié de «concession de services», au sens de l'article 5, paragraphe 6, de la loi sur les marchés publics. Selon cette juridiction, une telle qualification s'imposait en raison du fait que les conditions relatives à l'existence d'une contrepartie et au transfert du risque d'exploitation économique étaient remplies.

20 Le Kansaneläkelaitos a alors formé un pourvoi contre la décision du markkinaoikeus devant le Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Cour administrative suprême). Ce dernier nourrit des doutes quant à la qualification juridique de l'ensemble contractuel en cause au principal.

21 Dans ces conditions, le Korkein hallinto-oikeus a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour les questions préjudicielles suivantes:

«1) Convient-il d'interpréter la jurisprudence de la Cour de justice relative aux concessions de services en ce sens que ce régime ne s'applique pas à un arrangement global comportant, d'une part, le paiement de compensations, qui relève de la responsabilité de l'autorité, au moyen d'un arrangement de compensation directe, et, d'autre part, un arrangement relatif à la réservation de moyens de transport, ce qui ne relève pas de la responsabilité de cette autorité?

2) Quelle importance faut-il attribuer à la conséquence, découlant indirectement de cet arrangement global, que le but de l'arrangement relatif aux réservations est de réduire le coût des transports que le Kansaneläkelaitos doit payer sur les fonds publics?»

Sur les questions préjudicielles

22 Par ses questions, qu'il convient de traiter ensemble, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 1er, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2004/18 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'un ensemble contractuel, tel que celui en cause au principal, constitue une «concession de services», au sens de cette disposition.

23 Il ressort des éléments du dossier transmis à la Cour par la juridiction de renvoi que cet ensemble contractuel est constitué, d'une part, par la convention-cadre signée entre le Kansaneläkelaitos et la Suomen Taksiliitto ry, au nom et sur mandat des sociétés de taxis relevant de cette union, ainsi que, d'autre part, par les contrats portant sur la procédure électronique de compensation directe que les délégations locales du Kansaneläkelaitos ont conclus avec les sociétés de taxis membres de ladite union qui ont été désignées comme centres de réservations.

24 La juridiction de renvoi indique, à cet égard, que, si le Kansaneläkelaitos a l'obligation légale de rembourser aux assurés les frais de transport en taxi liés aux traitements médicaux, hormis une franchise qui reste à la charge desdits assurés, il ne lui incombe cependant pas d'organiser ces transports.

25 Il y a lieu de relever, à titre liminaire, qu'il n'appartient pas à la Cour de qualifier concrètement l'opération en cause au principal, une telle qualification relevant de la seule compétence du juge national. Le rôle de la Cour se cantonne à fournir à ce dernier une interprétation du droit de l'Union utile pour la décision qu'il lui revient de prendre dans le litige dont il est saisi (voir, notamment, arrêts Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, C-274/09, EU:C:2011:130, point 36, ainsi que Norma-A et Dekom, C-348/10, EU:C:2011:721, point 57).

26 Conformément à l'article 1er, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2004/18, la «concession de services» est un contrat présentant les mêmes caractéristiques qu'un marché public de services, à l'exception du fait que la contrepartie de la prestation de services consiste soit uniquement dans le droit d'exploiter le service, soit dans ce droit assorti d'un prix.

27 Il convient de constater, en premier lieu, que la circonstance que le Kansaneläkelaitos ne soit pas responsable de l'organisation des transports en taxi n'implique pas que, au regard des caractéristiques propres de l'ensemble contractuel en cause au principal, ce pouvoir adjudicateur n'ait pas confié la prestation d'un service à ses cocontractants dans le cadre dudit ensemble contractuel. En effet, il résulte des contrats relatifs à la procédure électronique de compensation directe et conclus sur la base de la convention-cadre que les sociétés de taxis désignées en tant que centres de réservations fournissent un ensemble de services nécessaires à la mise en œuvre de cette procédure, tels que, notamment, la centralisation des réservations et le regroupement des transports en taxi, l'enregistrement sur un serveur des données et des paiements relatifs aux réservations ainsi que le versement des compensations aux chauffeurs de taxi participant à cette procédure. L'ensemble contractuel en cause au principal permet ainsi au Kansaneläkelaitos de réaliser des économies et de remplir d'une manière plus efficace sa mission légale de remboursement des frais de transport en taxi liés aux traitements médicaux des assurés.

28 En ce qui concerne la contrepartie de la prestation des services, il y a lieu de relever, en deuxième lieu, que la Cour a déjà jugé que le fait que le prestataire de services est rémunéré par des paiements provenant de tiers au contrat, en l'occurrence les usagers du service concerné, est l'une des formes que peut prendre l'exercice du droit, reconnu au prestataire, d'exploiter le service. Ainsi, dans le cadre d'un contrat portant sur des services, la circonstance que le cocontractant n'est pas directement rémunéré par le pouvoir adjudicateur, mais qu'il est en droit de percevoir une rémunération auprès de tiers, répond à l'exigence de contrepartie, prévue à l'article 1er, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2004/18 (voir, en ce sens, arrêt Eurawasser, C-206/08, EU:C:2009:540, points 53 et 57).

29 Dans le cadre de leurs prestations de services, telles que rappelées au point 27 du présent arrêt, les sociétés de taxis désignées en tant que centres de réservations sont directement rémunérées non pas par le pouvoir adjudicateur, mais par une contribution raisonnable des chauffeurs de taxi ayant adhéré au système de compensation directe ainsi que par une redevance téléphonique à la charge des assurés pour l'utilisation des services de réservations.

30 Il apparaît, par conséquent, que l'ensemble contractuel en cause au principal remplit l'exigence de contrepartie, prévue à l'article 1er, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2004/18.

31 Afin que ledit ensemble contractuel puisse être qualifié de concession de services, encore faut-il, en troisième lieu, et conformément à une jurisprudence constante, que le concessionnaire du service prenne en charge le risque lié à l'exploitation des services en question (voir, en ce sens, arrêt Eurawasser, C-206/08, EU:C:2009:540, point 59).

32 Il en va ainsi même si ce risque est très limité, pourvu que le pouvoir adjudicateur ait transféré au concessionnaire l'intégralité ou, tout au moins, une part significative du risque d'exploitation qu'il encourt (voir, en ce sens, arrêts Eurawasser, C-206/08, EU:C:2009:540, point 77, ainsi que Norma-A et Dekom, C-348/10, EU:C:2011:721, point 45).

33 Un tel risque doit être compris comme étant le risque d'exposition aux aléas du marché, lequel peut notamment se traduire par le risque de concurrence de la part d'autres opérateurs, le risque d'une inadéquation entre l'offre et la demande de services, le risque d'insolvabilité des débiteurs du prix des services fournis, le risque d'absence de couverture des dépenses d'exploitation par les recettes ou encore le risque de responsabilité d'un préjudice lié à un manquement dans le service (arrêt Norma-A et Dekom, C-348/10, EU:C:2011:721, point 48).

34 S'il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier l'existence d'un transfert de l'intégralité ou d'une part significative du risque lié à l'exploitation du service (arrêt Eurawasser, C-206/08, EU:C:2009:540, point 78), il apparaît que le pouvoir adjudicateur, dans l'affaire au principal, par l'intermédiaire de ses délégations locales, a transféré aux sociétés de taxis ayant été désignées en tant que centres de réservations une partie de l'exécution technique, administrative et financière relative à la procédure électronique de compensation directe desdits frais, dont il avait la charge, conformément à l'article 9 du titre 15 de la loi sur l'assurance maladie.

35 Dans une telle situation, il semble ressortir des éléments dont dispose la Cour que, dans le cadre de la fourniture des services associés à la mise en œuvre de cette procédure, lesdites sociétés de taxis soient susceptibles d'être exposées aux aléas du marché et que, partant, elles aient pris en charge le risque lié à l'exploitation de ces services, au sens de la jurisprudence citée aux points 32 et 33 du présent arrêt.

40 Eu égard à tout ce qui précède, il convient de relever qu'il ne ressort d'aucun des éléments du dossier soumis à la Cour que le pouvoir adjudicateur n'ait pas transféré le risque d'exploitation économique aux sociétés qui fournissent les services nécessaires à la mise en œuvre de la procédure électronique de compensation directe.

41 Par conséquent, il résulte des considérations qui précèdent que l'article 1er, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2004/18 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'un ensemble contractuel, tel que celui en cause au principal, peut être considéré comme constituant une «concession de services», au sens de cette disposition, à la condition que le pouvoir adjudicateur ait transféré l'intégralité ou une part significative du risque d'exploitation économique qu'il encourt, ce qu'il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier en tenant compte de toutes les caractéristiques inhérentes aux opérations visées par cet ensemble contractuel.

Sur les dépens

42 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens. Les frais exposés pour soumettre des observations à la Cour, autres que ceux desdites parties, ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un remboursement.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (septième chambre) dit pour droit:

L'article 1er, paragraphe 4, de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, doit être interprété en ce sens qu'un ensemble contractuel, tel que celui en cause au principal, peut être considéré comme constituant une «concession de services», au sens de cette disposition, à la condition que le pouvoir adjudicateur ait transféré l'intégralité ou une part significative du risque d'exploitation économique qu'il encourt, ce qu'il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier en tenant compte de toutes les caractéristiques inhérentes aux opérations visées par cet ensemble contractuel.

Judgment

1 These requests for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Article 1(2) and (4) and Article 5(c) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 of 18 December 1995 on the protection of the European Communities' financial interests (OJ 1995 L 312, p. 1) and Article 2(7) and Article 98 of Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 of 11 July 2006 laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund and repealing Regulation (EC) No 1260/1999 (OJ 2006 L 210, p. 25).

2 The requests have been made in two sets of proceedings between the Judeţul Neamţ (County of Neamţ) and the Judeţul Bacău (County of Bacău), respectively, and the Ministerul Dezvoltării Regionale şi Administraţiei Publice (Ministry for Regional Development and Public Administration) concerning the validity of two administrative measures addressed to them by that ministry requiring them, in their capacity as contracting authorities which had organised public procurement procedures relating to operations eligible for grants, to repay part of the grants they had received.

Legal context

3 Article 1 of Regulation No 2988/95 provides as follows:

'1. For the purposes of protecting the European Communities' financial interests, general rules are hereby adopted relating to homogenous checks and to administrative measures and penalties concerning irregularities with regard to Community law.

2. "Irregularity" shall mean any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator, which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the Communities or budgets managed by them, either by reducing or losing revenue accruing from own resources collected directly on behalf of the Communities, or by an unjustified item of expenditure.'

4 Article 2 of Regulation No 2988/95 states as follows:

'1. Administrative checks, measures and penalties shall be introduced in so far as they are necessary to ensure the proper application of Community law. They shall be effective, proportionate and dissuasive so that they provide adequate protection for the Communities' financial interests.

2. No administrative penalty may be imposed unless a Community act prior to the irregularity has made provision for it. In the event of a subsequent amendment of the provisions which impose administrative penalties and are contained in Community rules, the less severe provisions shall apply retroactively.

3. Community law shall determine the nature and scope of the administrative measures and penalties necessary for the correct application of the rules in question, having regard to the nature and seriousness of the irregularity, the advantage granted or received and the degree of responsibility.

4. Subject to the Community law applicable, the procedures for the application of Community checks, measures and penalties shall be governed by the laws of the Member States.'

5 Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95 is worded as follows:

'1. As a general rule, any irregularity shall involve withdrawal of the wrongly obtained advantage:

– by an obligation to pay or repay the amounts due or wrongly received,

– by the total or partial loss of the security provided in support of the request for an advantage granted or at the time of the receipt of an advance.

2. Application of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 shall be limited to the withdrawal of the advantage obtained plus, where so provided for, interest which may be determined on a flat-rate basis.

3. Acts which are established to have as their purpose the obtaining of an advantage contrary to the objectives of the Community law applicable in the case by artificially creating the conditions required for obtaining that advantage shall result, as the case shall be, either in failure to obtain the advantage or in its withdrawal.

4. The measures provided for in this Article shall not be regarded as penalties.'

6 Article 5 of Regulation No 2988/95 provides as follows:

'1. Intentional irregularities or those caused by negligence may lead to the following administrative penalties:

(a) payment of an administrative fine;

(b) payment of an amount greater than the amounts wrongly received or evaded, plus interest where appropriate; this additional sum shall be determined in accordance with a percentage to be set in the specific rules, and may not exceed the level strictly necessary to constitute a deterrent;

(c) total or partial removal of an advantage granted by Community rules, even if the operator wrongly benefited from only a part of that advantage;

7 The last paragraph of Article 1 of Regulation No 1083/2006 states as follows:

'… this Regulation lays down the principles and rules on partnership, programming, evaluation, management, including financial management, monitoring and control on the basis of responsibilities shared between the Member States and the Commission.'

8 Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 provides as follows:

'For the purposes of this Regulation, the following terms shall have the meanings assigned to them here:

(7) "irregularity": any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the general budget.'

9 Article 98 of Regulation No 1083/2006 is worded as follows:

'1. The Member States shall in the first instance bear the responsibility for investigating irregularities, acting upon evidence of any major change affecting the nature or the conditions for the implementation or control of operations or operational programmes and making the financial corrections required.

2. The Member State shall make the financial corrections required in connection with the individual or systemic irregularities detected in operations or operational programmes. The corrections made by a Member State shall consist of cancelling all or part of the public contribution to the operational programme. Member States shall take into account the nature and gravity of the irregularities and the financial loss to the Fund.

The resources from the Funds released in this way may be reused by the Member State until 31 December 2015 for the operational programme concerned in accordance with the provisions referred to in paragraph 3.

3. The contribution cancelled in accordance with paragraph 2 may not be reused for the operation or operations that were the subject of the correction, nor, where a financial correction is made for a systemic irregularity, for existing operations within the whole or part of the priority axis where the systemic irregularity occurred.

10 Regulation (EU) No 1303/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 December 2013 laying down common provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund, the Cohesion Fund, the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development and the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund and laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund, the Cohesion Fund and the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund and repealing Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 (OJ 2013 L 347, p. 320) replaced Regulation No 1083/2006 with effect from 1 January 2014.

11 Article 2(36) of Regulation No 1303/2013 reads as follows:

‘For the purposes of this Regulation, the following definitions apply:

(36) “irregularity” means any breach of Union law, or of national law relating to its application, resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator involved in the implementation of the (European Structural and Investment) Funds, which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the budget of the Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the budget of the Union.’

12 Recital 2 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1422/2007 of 4 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 317, p. 34) (‘Directive 2004/18’), states as follows:

‘The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the above-mentioned rules and principles and with other rules of the Treaty.’

13 Article 7 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Threshold amounts for public contracts’, provides as follows:

‘This Directive shall apply to public contracts which are not excluded in accordance with the exceptions provided for in Articles 10 and 11 and Articles 12 to 18 and which have a value exclusive of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than the following thresholds:

(a) EUR 133 000 for public supply and service contracts other than those covered by point (b), third indent, awarded by contracting authorities which are listed as central government authorities in Annex IV; …

(b) EUR 206 000

– for public supply and service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than those listed in Annex IV,

– for public supply contracts awarded by contracting authorities which are listed in Annex IV and operate in the field of defence, where these contracts involve products not covered by

Annex V,

– for public service contracts awarded by any contracting authority in respect of the services listed in Category 8 of Annex IIA, Category 5 telecommunications services the positions of which in the [Common Procurement Vocabulary] are equivalent to reference Nos 7524, 7525 and 7526 and/or the services listed in Annex IIB;

(c) EUR 5 150 000 for public works contracts.'

14 Article 1 of Ordonanţă Guvernului nr. 79/2003 privind controlul şi recuperarea fondurilor comunitare, precum şi a fondurilor de cofinanţare aferente utilizate necorespunzător (Government Ordinance No 79/2003 on the control and recovery of Community funds and associated co-financing funds that have been misused) (Monitorul Oficial al României, Part I, No 622, 30 August 2003), in the version at the time of the funding agreements and the procurement procedures organised for the performance of the actions eligible for grants at issue in the main proceedings ('OG No 79/2003') states as follows:

'This ordinance regulates the establishment and recovery of sums wrongly paid from the financial contribution allocated to Romania on an unsecured basis by the European Community and/or related co-financing funds, as a result of irregularities.'

15 Article 2 of OG No 79/2003 provides as follows:

'For the purposes of this ordinance, the following definitions shall apply:

(a) "irregularity" means any breach of legality, regularity and compliance, in relation to the provisions of national and/or Community law, and of the terms of agreements or contracts, or of any other legal commitment entered into on the basis of such provisions which, as a result of the charging of an unjustified item of expenditure, has an adverse effect on the general budget of the European Communities and/or the budgets managed by or on behalf of the Communities, and the budgets from which the related co-funding derives;

(d) "credit entries resulting from irregularities" means sums to be restored to the general budget of the European Communities and/or the budgets managed by the European Communities or on their behalf, or the budgets from which the related co-financing derives, as a consequence of the improper use of Community funds and the related co-financing amounts and/or as a consequence of the fact that sums have been received which were not due under measures forming part of the system for financing such funds in whole or in part;

…'

16 Article 4 of OG No 79/2003 states as follows:

'1. Amounts unduly paid from Community funds and/or associated co-financing, banking costs, including incidental charges, and other amounts imposed on the debtor by law shall be the subject of recovery of credit entries deriving from irregularities.

…'

17 At the time of the checks carried out by the competent authorities of the actions eligible for grants in question, Ordonanţă de urgenţă a Guvernului nr. 66/2011 privind prevenirea, constatarea şi sancţionarea neregulilor apărute în obţinerea şi utilizarea fondurilor europene şi/sau a fondurilor publice naţionale aferente acestora (Government Emergency Ordinance No 66/2011 regarding prevention, ascertainment and penalisation of irregularities associated with the collection and use of European funds and/or national public funds relating thereto) (Monitorul Oficial al României, Part I, No 461, 30 June 2011) ('OUG No 66/2011') had replaced OG No 79/2003.

18 Article 2 of OUG No 66/2011 provides as follows:

‘For the purposes of this emergency ordinance, the following definitions shall apply:

(a) “irregularity” means any breach of legality, regularity and compliance, in relation to the provisions of national and/or European law, and of the terms of agreements or contracts, or of any other legal commitment entered into on the basis of those provisions resulting from an action or an omission on the part of the beneficiary or of the authority competent to manage the European funds which, as a result of the charging of an unjustified item of expenditure, has had or may have an adverse effect on the general budget of the European Union, the budgets of public international contributors and/or related national public funds;

(h) “activity of ascertaining irregularities” means activities of control/investigation undertaken by the competent authorities in accordance with the provisions of the present ordinance, in order to ascertain the existence of any irregularity;

(i) “activity of determining credit entries deriving from irregularities” means the activity by means of which the obligation to pay resulting from the irregularities ascertained is established and described in detail, with the issue of a credit instrument;

(o) “application of financial corrections” means administrative measures adopted by the competent authorities, in conformity with the provisions of the present ordinance, which consist of excluding from financing out of European funds and/or national public funds relating thereto expenditure in relation to which an irregularity has been established;

…’

19 Article 27(1) of OUG No 66/2011 is worded as follows:

‘If irregularities are ascertained in the application by beneficiaries of the provisions concerning public procurement procedures, either with regard to the national rules in force regarding public contracts or with regard to specific contract procedures applicable to private beneficiaries, a note shall be issued recording the irregularities and determining financial corrections, in accordance with the provisions of Articles 20 and 21.’

20 Article 28 of OUG No 66/2011 provides as follows:

‘The value of the credit entry established on the basis of Article 27 shall be calculated by determining the financial corrections in accordance with the provisions in the Annex.’

21 In the table in the Annex to OUG No 66/2011 relating to contracts which have a value below the threshold established by national public procurement legislation for the purpose of determining whether it is necessary to publish a notice in the Official Journal of the European Union, point 2.3 provides, in respect of breaches consisting in applying unlawful criteria for qualification and selection or unlawful assessment factors, for the application of corrections/reductions of 10% of the value of the contract in question or of a 5% reduction in line with the seriousness of the non-compliance.

The actions in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

22 As part of Regional Operational Programme 2007-2013, two neighbouring Romanian local authorities, Judeţul Neamţ (County of Neamţ) (Case C-260/14) and Judeţul Bacău (County of Bacău) (Case C-261/14), received funding from the European Regional Development Fund (ERDF). The funding was granted by means of a funding agreement between the Ministerul Dezvoltarii Regionale şi Turismului (Ministry for Regional Development and Tourism), as authority responsible for managing Regional Operational Programme 2007-2013, and the two respective local authorities.

23 In Case C-260/14, the funding agreement relates to the refurbishment, extension and modernisation of a school centre in Roman (Romania), a town situated about 40 kilometers north of Bacău (Romania). Bacău is approximately 300 km to the north of Bucharest (Romania), 370 km from the border with Bulgaria, beyond the eastern Carpathians, and close to the borders with Moldavia to the east and Ukraine to the north. The County of Neamț, which received the funds in its capacity as contracting authority, organised a tendering procedure for the award of a public audit services contract with an estimated value of EUR 20 264.18, as a result of which a contract for the provision of audit services with a value of EUR 19 410.12 was concluded.

24 In Case C-261/14, the funding agreement concerns the refurbishment of a municipal road. The County of Bacău organised an open tendering procedure for the award of a public works contract with a value of EUR 2 820 515, as a result of which a works contract was concluded on 17 September 2009.

25 It is apparent from the information provided to the Court that, in both those tendering procedures, the Ministry for Regional Development and Public Administration considered that the conditions imposed by both the County of Neamț and the County of Bacău were unlawful under national public procurement law. In those circumstances, the Ministry applied a financial correction representing 5% of the respective amounts of the contracts in question.

26 The County of Neamț and the County of Bacău subsequently lodged appeals against the decisions applying the respective financial corrections. As the Ministry for Regional Development and Public Administration rejected the appeals, the applicants in the main proceedings brought actions before the referring court seeking the annulment of those decisions.

27 In those proceedings, the referring court is required to rule, inter alia, on whether there is an ‘irregularity’ within the meaning of Regulation No 2988/95 or Regulation No 1083/2006 and, if appropriate, on the nature of the financial corrections applied by the ministry in question.

28 In those circumstances, the Curtea de Apel Bacău (Appeal Court, Bacău, Romania) decided to stay proceedings and to refer to the Court for a preliminary ruling the following questions, the first of which relates to Case C-260/14 alone, and the second to fourth of which are, for all essential purposes, the same in Case C-260/14 and C-261/14.

‘(1) Does the failure of a contracting authority, the beneficiary of a Structural Fund grant, to comply with rules concerning the award of a public contract of an estimated value lower than the threshold provided for by Article 7(a) of Directive 2004/18 in connection with the award of a contract for the performance of the action eligible for the grant, constitute an “irregularity” within the meaning of Article 1 of Regulation No 2988/95 or an “irregularity” within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006?

(2) Must the second sentence of the first subparagraph of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 be interpreted as meaning that financial corrections by Member States, if applied to co-financed expenditure under Structural Funds for failure to comply with rules concerning public contracts, are administrative measures within the meaning of Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95 or administrative penalties within the meaning of Article 5(c) of that regulation?

(3) If the answer to the second question is to the effect that financial corrections by Member States are administrative penalties, should the principle of retroactive application of the less severe penalty referred to in the second sentence of Article 2(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 be applied?

(4) In circumstances in which financial corrections have been applied to co-financed expenditure under Structural Funds for failure to comply with rules on public contracts, does Article 2(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 in conjunction with the second sentence of the first subparagraph of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006, having regard also to the principles of legal certainty and protection of legitimate expectations, prevent a Member State from applying financial corrections governed by an internal legislative measure which entered into force after the alleged infringement of the rules on public contracts occurred?’

29 By decision of the President of the Court of 16 July 2014, Cases C-260/14 and C-261/14 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedure and judgment.

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question in Case C-260/14

30 By its first question in Case C-260/14, the referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, whether Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 and Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 are to be interpreted as meaning that failure to comply with national provisions by a contracting authority, the beneficiary of a Structural Fund grant, in connection with the award of a public contract of an estimated value below the threshold laid down in Articled 7(a) of Directive 2004/18 may constitute, at the time the contract is awarded, an 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 or Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006.

31 It should be noted, as a preliminary point, that as the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is below the threshold set in Article 7(a) and (c) of Directive 2004/18, that contract falls outside the scope of the procedures laid down by the directive.

32 It must be noted that Regulation No 2988/95 merely lays down general rules for supervision and penalties for the purpose of safeguarding the European Union's financial interests. Misused funds must be recovered on the basis of other provisions, that is to say, where appropriate, on the basis of sector-specific provisions (see judgment of 18 December 2014 in Somvao, C-599/13, EU:C:2014:2462, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited).

33 Those sector-specific provisions are covered, as the Advocate General observed at point 46 of his Opinion, by Regulation No 1083/2006.

34 However, as Regulation Nos 2988/95 and 1083/2006 form part of the same mechanism designed to ensure the proper management of EU funds and the safeguarding of the European Union's financial interests, the term 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 and Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 must be interpreted in a uniform manner.

35 That said, it should be borne in mind that, according to the Court's settled case-law, in interpreting a provision of EU law, it is necessary to consider not only its wording but also the context in which it occurs and the objectives pursued by the rules of which it forms part (see, to that effect, judgment of 3 September 2015 in Sodiaal International, C-383/14, EU:C:2015:541, paragraph 20 and the case-law cited).

36 Accordingly, while it is apparent from the wording of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 and of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 that a breach of EU law constitutes an irregularity, the possibility cannot be ruled out that such an irregularity may also arise as a result of a breach of national law.

37 In that regard, as the operations concerned in the main proceedings benefited from EU funding, those operations are subject to the application of EU law. It follows that the term 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 and Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 must be interpreted as covering not only any breach of EU law but also any breach of the provisions of national law which contribute to ensuring that EU law relating to the management of projects financed by EU funds is properly applied.

38 Such an interpretation of the term 'irregularity' is confirmed by an examination of the legislative context of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 and by the objective of that regulation.

39 As regards, first, the legislative context of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, the objective of that regulation, as set out in Article 1, is, inter alia, to lay down the principles on management, monitoring and control of operations receiving funding from the ERDF on the basis of responsibilities shared between the Member States and the Commission.

40 Those management, monitoring and control tasks are specified in Title VI of Regulation No 1083/2006, whereas tasks relating to financial management are covered by the provision of Title VII of the regulation, Chapter 2 of which deals specifically with financial corrections. It is clear from this that it is incumbent on the Member State in the first instance to make the necessary financial corrections, if appropriate, and, therefore, to ensure that the operations in question comply with all the rules applicable at both EU and national level.

41 As regards, second, the objective of Regulation No 1083/2006, the purpose of the rules laid down in that regulation is, inter alia, as noted in paragraph 34 above, to ensure that Structural Funds are used properly and effectively in order to safeguard the financial interests of the European Union.

42 Given that it cannot be ruled out that breaches of the provisions of national law may jeopardise the effective intervention of the funds concerned, an interpretation to the effect that such breaches cannot amount to an ‘irregularity’ within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 would fail to guarantee the full attainment of the objective pursued by the EU legislature in this area.

43 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the term ‘irregularity’ as defined in Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 and Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 must be interpreted as also referring to breaches of provisions of national law applicable to operations funded under the Structural Funds.

44 That interpretation is also confirmed by the definition of ‘irregularity’ in Article 2(36) of Regulation No 1303/2013, which repealed Regulation No 1083/2006 with effect from 1 January 2014.

45 That definition, which is set out in paragraph 11 above, now refers expressly to any breach of EU law or national law relating to its application. Read in the light of the foregoing considerations, that elucidation concerning breaches of national law clarifies the scope of the term ‘irregularity’ in Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 (see, to that effect, a contrario, judgment of 7 April 2016 in PARTNER Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraphs 90 and 91).

46 Accordingly, the answer to the first question in Case C-260/14 is that Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 and Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 must be interpreted as meaning that failure to comply with national provisions by a contracting authority, the beneficiary of Structural Funds, in connection with the award of a public contract of an estimated value below the threshold laid down in Article 7(a) of Directive 2004/18 may constitute, at the time the contract is awarded, an ‘irregularity’ within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 or Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, if that breach has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure.

The second question in Case C-260/14 and the first question in Case C-261/14

47 By its second question in Cases C-260/14 and its first question in C-261/14, the referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, whether the second sentence of the first subparagraph of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 is to be interpreted as meaning that financial corrections by Member States, if applied to co-financed expenditure under Structural Funds for failure to comply with rules concerning the award of public contract, are administrative measures within the meaning of Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95 or, on the other hand, administrative penalties within the meaning of Article 5(c) of that regulation.

48 It should be noted, first of all, that the first subparagraph of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 provides that the financial corrections which Member States must make if they detect irregularities in operations or operational programmes consist of cancelling all or part of the public contribution to the operational programme concerned. Furthermore, according to the second subparagraph of Article 98(2) of the regulation, the resources from the Funds released in this way may, under certain conditions, be reused by the Member State concerned.

49 Next, it is clear from the very wording of that provision, read in conjunction with the first indent of Article 4(1) of Regulation No 2988/95, that the purpose of the financial corrections which Member States are required to make if they detect irregularities in operations or operational programmes is to secure the withdrawal of an advantage improperly received by the economic operator concerned, inter alia by obliging the operator to repay the sums wrongly paid.

50 Lastly, as the Advocate General observed in point 105 of his Opinion, the Court has previously held on many occasions that the obligation to give back an advantage improperly received by means of an irregularity is not a penalty, but simply the consequence of a finding that the conditions required to obtain the advantage derived from EU rules have not been observed, so that that advantage becomes an advantage wrongly received (see, to that effect, judgments of 4 June 2009 in Pometon, C-158/08, EU:C:2009:349, paragraph 28; 17 September 2014 in Cruz & Companhia, C-341/13, EU:C:2014:2230, paragraph 45 and the case-law cited, and 18 December 2014 in Somvao, C-599/13, EU:C:2014:2462, paragraph 36). The fact pointed out by the referring court that the full amount to be repaid may, in any individual case, not coincide exactly with the loss actually incurred by the Structural Funds cannot alter that conclusion.

51 It is therefore apparent from the foregoing that the answer to the second question in Case C-260/14 and the first question in Case C-261/14 is that the second sentence of the first subparagraph of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 is to be interpreted as meaning that financial corrections by Member States, if applied to co-financed expenditure under Structural Funds for failure to comply with rules concerning the award of public contract, are administrative measures within the meaning of Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95.

The third question in Case C-260/14 and the second question in Case C-261/14

52 In the light of the answer given to the referring court in paragraph 51 above, there is no need to answer the third question in Case C-260/14 or the second question in C-261/14.

The fourth question in Case C-260/14

53 By its fourth question in Case C-260/14, the referring court asks, in essence, whether, in the circumstances of the main proceedings, the principles of legal certainty and protection of legitimate expectations must be interpreted as precluding a Member State from applying financial corrections governed by an internal legislative measure which entered into force after the alleged breach of rules governing public contracts occurred.

54 In that regard, it is established case-law that where Member States adopt measures by which they implement EU law, they are required to respect the general principles of that law, which include, inter alia, the principles of legal certainty and protection of legitimate expectations (see, inter alia, judgment of 3 September 2015 in A2A, C-89/14, EU:C:2015:537, paragraphs 35 and 36 and the case-law cited).

55 Moreover, it should also be borne in mind that, according to that same line of case-law, whilst the principle of legal certainty precludes a regulation from being applied retroactively, namely to a situation which arose prior to the entry into force of that regulation, and irrespective of whether such application might produce favourable or unfavourable effects for the person concerned, the same principle requires that any factual situation should normally, in the absence of any express contrary provision, be examined in the light of the legal rules existing at the time when the situation obtained. However, if the new law is thus valid only for the future, it also applies, save for derogation, to the future effects of situations which came about during the period of validity of the old law (see, inter alia, judgment of 3 September 2015 in A2A, C-89/14, EU:C:2015:537, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited).

56 Likewise, as is apparent from that same line of case-law, the scope of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations cannot be extended to the point of generally preventing new rules from applying to the future effects of situations which arose under the earlier rules (see, inter alia, judgment of 3 September 2015 in A2A, C-89/14, EU:C:2015:537, paragraph 38 and the case-law cited).

57 It follows from the foregoing that the answer to the fourth question in Case C-260/14 is that the principles of legal certainty and protection of legitimate expectations must be interpreted as not precluding a Member State from applying financial corrections governed by an internal legislative measure which entered into force after an alleged breach of the rules governing public contracts occurred, provided that it is a question of the application of new rules to the future effects of situations which arose under the earlier rules, which is a matter to be determined by the national court, taking into account all the relevant circumstances of the proceedings before it.

Costs

58 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 1(2) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 of 18 December 1995 on the protection of the European Communities' financial interests and Article 2(7) of Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 of 11 July 2006 laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund and repealing Regulation (EC) No 1260/1999 must be interpreted as meaning that failure to comply with national provisions by a contracting authority, the beneficiary of Structural Funds, in connection with the award of a public contract of an estimated value below the threshold laid down in Article 7(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1422/2007 of 4 December 2007, may constitute, at the time the contract is awarded, an 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 or Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, if that breach has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure.

2. The second sentence of the first subparagraph of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 is to be interpreted as meaning that financial corrections by Member States, if applied to co-financed expenditure under Structural Funds for failure to comply with rules concerning the award of public contract, are administrative measures within the meaning of Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95.

3. The principles of legal certainty and protection of legitimate expectations must be interpreted as not precluding a Member State from applying financial corrections governed by an internal legislative measure which entered into force after an alleged breach of the rules governing public contracts occurred, provided that it is a question of the application of new rules to the future effects of situations which arose under the earlier rules, which is a matter to be determined by the national court, taking into account all the relevant circumstances of the proceedings before it.

BOT

delivered on 14 January 2016 (1)

Joined Cases C-260/14 and C-261/14

Județul Neamț (C-260/14),

Județul Bacău (C-261/14)

v

Ministerul Dezvoltării Regionale și Administrației Publice

(Requests for a preliminary ruling from the Curtea de Apel Bacău (Court of Appeal, Bacău, Romania))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Protection of the EU's financial interests — Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 — European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) — Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 — Award of a contract, by the beneficiary of funds acting as a contracting authority, for the performance of the action covered by the grant — Term 'irregularity' — Meaning of the criterion of 'infringement of EU law' — Selection criteria contrary to national law in the tendering procedure — Nature of the financial corrections adopted by Member States — Administrative measures or penalties)

1. Does failure by a contracting authority, the beneficiary of a Structural Fund grant, to comply with national rules concerning the award of public contracts in connection with the award of a contract for the performance of the action covered by the grant, constitute an 'irregularity' within the meaning of Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 (2) or Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006? (3)

2. If appropriate, do the financial corrections effected by Member States in order to withdraw the advantage unduly obtained constitute administrative measures or penalties within the meaning of those regulations?

3. Those, in essence, are the questions referred by the Curtea de Apel Bacău (Court of Appeal, Bacău) in the present cases.

4. The questions were raised in proceedings between the Județul Neamț (the District of Neamț) (Case C-260/14) and the Județul Bacău (District of Bacău) (Case C-261/14), respectively, which are beneficiaries of a grant from the European Regional Development Fund (ERDF), and the Ministerul Dezvoltării Regionale și Administrației Publice (the Ministry for Regional Development and Public Administration), which is the authority responsible for managing and controlling the use of that grant at regional level. That ministry took the view that the District of Neamț and the District of Bacău had failed to comply with the national rules on public procurement in the awarding of public contracts in connection with the performance of the operations covered by the grant and consequently decided to withdraw and recover 5% of the financial assistance granted. The District of Neamț and the District of Bacău therefore challenged the lawfulness of those financial corrections, pointing out that, under Regulations Nos 2988/95 and 1083/2006, an 'irregularity' means, inter alia, infringement of a provision of EU law.

5. In the cases in the main proceedings the referring court seeks to ascertain whether, in view of the provisions of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 and those of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, the failure of a beneficiary of a Structural Fund grant acting as a contracting authority to comply with national rules alone may be classified as an irregularity entailing the adoption of financial corrections.

6. In this Opinion I shall set out the reasons why irregularity of an operation co-financed by the Structural Funds cannot, in my view, be limited to infringement of EU law sensu stricto.

7. Protecting the financial interests of the European Union and ensuring the effectiveness of operational programmes (4) through the legal and regular use of the Structural Funds are objectives which can be attained effectively only if the grants awarded relate to acts and expenditure the legality of which cannot be challenged either under EU law or under national law.

8. I shall therefore propose that the Court should rule that the failure of a contracting authority, the beneficiary of a Structural Fund grant, to comply with national rules relating to the award of public contracts in connection with the award of a contract for the performance of the action covered by the grant, constitutes an 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 in so far as that act has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to it.

9. I shall state in that regard that such an interpretation merely anticipates the amendments introduced in the context of the new Structural Fund regulations.

10. As regards the nature of the financial corrections which Member States are required to adopt under Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006, I shall refer to the settled case-law of the Court according to which the obligation to return an advantage improperly received by means of an irregular practice is not a penalty.

I – EU law

A – Protection of the financial interests of the European Union

11. The second to the fifth recitals of Regulation No 2988/95 read as follows:

> 'Whereas more than half of Community expenditure is paid to beneficiaries through the intermediary of the Member States;
>
> Whereas detailed rules governing [the] decentralised [financial] administration and the monitoring of their use are the subject of differing detailed provisions according to the Community policies concerned; whereas acts detrimental to the Communities' financial interests must, however, be countered in all areas;
>
> Whereas the effectiveness of the combating of fraud against the Communities' financial interests calls for a common set of legal rules to be enacted for all areas covered by Community policies;
>
> Whereas irregular conduct, and the administrative measures and penalties relating thereto, are provided for in sectoral rules in accordance with this Regulation.'

12. Under Title I, entitled 'General principles', Article 1 of that regulation provides:

> '1. For the purposes of protecting the European Communities' financial interests, general rules are hereby adopted relating to homogenous checks and to administrative measures and penalties concerning irregularities with regard to Community law.
> 2. "Irregularity" shall mean any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator, which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the Communities or budgets managed by them, either by reducing or losing revenue accruing from own resources collected directly on behalf of the Communities, or by an unjustified item of expenditure.'

13. Article 2 of that regulation sets out the rules applying to adoption of administrative measures and penalties. It reads as follows:

‘1. Administrative checks, measures and penalties shall be introduced in so far as they are necessary to ensure the proper application of Community law. They shall be effective, proportionate and dissuasive so that they provide adequate protection for the Communities’ financial interests.

2. No administrative penalty may be imposed unless a Community act prior to the irregularity has made provision for it. In the event of a subsequent amendment of the provisions which impose administrative penalties and are contained in Community rules, the less severe provisions shall apply retroactively.

3. Community law shall determine the nature and scope of the administrative measures and penalties necessary for the correct application of the rules in question, having regard to the nature and seriousness of the irregularity, the advantage granted or received and the degree of responsibility.

14. Under Title II, entitled ‘Administrative measures and penalties’, Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95 sets out the rules applying to administrative measures as follows:

‘1. As a general rule, any irregularity shall involve withdrawal of the wrongly obtained advantage:

– by an obligation to pay or repay the amounts due or wrongly received,

– by the total or partial loss of the security provided in support of the request for an advantage granted or at the time of the receipt of an advance.

2. Application of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 shall be limited to the withdrawal of the advantage obtained plus, where so provided for, interest which may be determined on a flat-rate basis.

3. Acts which are established to have as their purpose the obtaining of an advantage contrary to the objectives of the Community law applicable in the case by artificially creating the conditions required for obtaining that advantage shall result, as the case shall be, either in failure to obtain the advantage or in its withdrawal.

4. The measures provided for in this Article shall not be regarded as penalties.’

15. Article 5 of that regulation, which lays down the rules applying to administrative penalties, provides as follows:

‘1. Intentional irregularities or those caused by negligence may lead to the following administrative penalties:

(a) payment of an administrative fine;

(b) payment of an amount greater than the amounts wrongly received or evaded, plus interest where appropriate ...

(c) total or partial removal of an advantage granted by Community rules, ...

B – The rules applicable to operations co-financed by the Structural Funds

16. The ERDF is one of the Structural Funds set up by the European Commission to strengthen economic, social and territorial cohesion in the European Union, in accordance with the objective referred to in Article 174 TFEU. That Fund contributes essentially to reducing economic, social and territorial disparities which have arisen, particularly in regions whose development is lagging behind and in those undergoing economic conversion and those facing structural difficulties, by co-financing, inter alia, national investment in firms and infrastructure linked to research and innovation, the environment, energy, transport and to health and education services.

17. Like its predecessor — Regulation (EC) No 1260/1999 (5) — Regulation No 1083/2006 lays down a set of rules and procedures applicable to assistance by the ERDF, the European Social Fund (ESF) and the Cohesion Fund.

18. The Structural Funds coming under shared management, the Member States and the Commission are responsible for the management and control of funding. Nonetheless, it is in the first place the Member States that have primary responsibility for putting in hand and controlling operations carried out in the context of operational programmes, and for pursuing and correcting irregularities.

19. In Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, the EU legislature defines ‘irregularity’ as ‘any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the general budget’.

20. In Articles 60 and 61 of that regulation, the EU legislature lays down the principles applicable to national management and control systems.

21. It then, in Article 98 of that regulation, lays down the rules applicable to financial corrections adopted by Member States. The first subparagraph of Article 98(2) reads as follows:

> ‘The Member State shall make the financial corrections required in connection with the individual or systemic irregularities detected in operations or operational programmes. The corrections made by a Member State shall consist of cancelling all or part of the public contribution to the operational programme. Member States shall take into account the nature and gravity of the irregularities and the financial loss to the Fund.’

22. The detailed rules for the application of Regulation No 1083/2006 are laid down in Regulation (EC) No 1828/2006. (6)

23. Regulation No 1083/2006 was repealed, with effect from 1 January 2014, by Regulation (EU) No 1303/2013, (7) which I shall consider briefly before concluding my analysis.

II – The cases in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

24. On 12 July 2007, the Commission approved, for the period 2007-2013, the Regional Operational Programme for Romania under the ERDF. The total budget for that programme is close to EUR 4.38 billion and Community aid amounts to EUR 3.7 billion. (8)

25. It is clear from the documents on the national file (9) that the ERDF’s co-financing rate in the regional operational programme is 84% (EUR 3 726 021 762). In the present cases, the financing in question is to contribute to achievement of Priority Axis No 3 of that programme (EUR 657 530 000), which is designed, inter alia, to improve health and education infrastructure in order to increase access by the population to essential services.

26. The District of Neamț (Case C-260/14) and the District of Bacău (Case C-261/14) concluded with the Ministry for Regional Development and Tourism (Ministerul Dezvoltarii Regionale şi Turismului), as the authority managing the regional operational programme, a financing contract to carry out two operations.

27. In the context of Case C-260/14, the financing contract covers the refurbishment, extension and modernisation of a school centre. The District of Neamț, a beneficiary of funds acting as a contracting authority, held a tendering procedure for the award of a public audit services contract, the amount of which was in the region of EUR 20 264.18, following which an audit services contract was concluded amounting to EUR 19 410.12.

28. It is clear from the material put before the Court that, in the context of that procedure, the District of Neamț imposed conditions relating to the professional competence of the tenderers, held unlawful under national law by the Ministry for Regional Development and Public Administration.

29. The award of the contract in question was made conditional, first, on submission by the tenderer of a contract concluded in the previous three years having the same subject-matter as the contract covered by the award procedure at issue and, secondly, the presence of a building quality management systems administrator.

30. The Ministry for Regional Development and Public Administration held that the first condition was contrary to the principle of free competition, taking the view that every economic operator must be allowed, within the specific area of the contract, to take part in the award procedure, without the contracting authority, as the beneficiary of the funding in question, using the source of funding as an eligibility criterion. As for the second condition, it held that, having regard to the nature of the public contract, it was not relevant. In those circumstances, the Ministry for Regional Development and Public Administration adopted a financial correction representing 5% of the amount of the contract in question.

31. In Case C-261/14, the financing contract relates to the repairing of a main road. The District of Bacău held an open tendering procedure for the award of a public works contract valued at EUR 2 820 515, following which a contract for the execution of works was concluded on 17 September 2009.

32. It is clear from the material put before the Court that in connection with that procedure the District of Bacău used inappropriate technical specifications, which also were held to infringe national law. In those circumstances, the Ministry for Regional Development and Public Administration also adopted a financial correction representing 5% of the amount of the contract in question.

33. The District of Neamț and the District of Bacău then brought an action against those decisions applying financial corrections. In those proceedings the referring court is called upon in particular to rule on whether there is an 'irregularity', within the meaning of Regulation No 2988/95 or Regulation No 1083/2006, and, if appropriate, on the nature of the financial corrections adopted by the managing authority.

34. Faced with certain doubts as to how those regulations should be interpreted, the Curtea de Apel Bacău (Appeal Court, Bacău) decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling: (10)

'(1) Does the failure of a contracting authority, the beneficiary of a Structural Fund grant, to comply with rules concerning the award of a public contract of an estimated value lower than the threshold provided for by Article 7(a) of Directive [2004/18/EC] [(11)] in connection with the award of a contract for the performance of the action covered by the grant, constitute an "irregularity" within the meaning of Article 1 of Regulation No 2988/95 or an 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006?

(2) In the event of an affirmative answer to the first question, must the second sentence of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 be interpreted as meaning that financial corrections by Member States, if applied to co-financed expenditure under Structural Funds for failure to comply with rules concerning public contracts, are "administrative measures" within the meaning of Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95 or whether they are administrative penalties within the meaning of Article 5(1)(c) of that regulation?

(3) If the answer to the second question is to the effect that financial corrections by Member States are administrative penalties, is the principle of retroactive application of the less severe penalty referred to in the second sentence of Article 2(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 applicable?

(4) [If the answer to the second question is to the effect that financial corrections by Member States are administrative penalties], (12) in circumstances in which financial corrections have been applied to co-financed expenditure under Structural Funds for failure to comply with rules on public contracts, does Article 2(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 in conjunction with the second sentence of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006, having regard also to the principles of legal certainty and protection of legitimate expectations, prevent a Member State from applying financial corrections governed by an internal legislative measure which entered into force after the alleged infringement of the rules on public contracts took place?'

35. Written observations were submitted by the parties in the main proceedings, the Romanian, Hungarian and Netherlands Governments and the European Commission.

III – My analysis

A – The first question: whether the infringements in question are to be classified as 'irregularities'

36. By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the failure of a beneficiary of funds acting as a contracting authority, to comply with national law in the context of the award of a public contract for the performance of an operation co-financed by the Structural Funds, constitutes an 'irregularity', within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 or of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006.

37. It should be borne in mind that Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 provides that 'irregularity' means 'any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator, which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the Communities or budgets managed by them, either by reducing or losing revenue accruing from own resources collected directly on behalf of the Communities, or by an unjustified item of expenditure'.

38. The definition of 'irregularity' adopted for Regulation No 1083/2006 is that taken from Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95. The words are to some extent the same, since, according to Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, 'irregularity' means 'any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the general budget'.

39. In order to answer the question put to the Court by the referring court, it is necessary, first of all, to determine which of those two regulations is applicable, inasmuch as the definition of irregularity adopted by the EU legislature forms part of a set of rules and principles relating to the subject-matter covered by the regulation.

1. The regulation applicable

40. Must the acts in question be considered from the point of view of the rules on the protection of the financial interests of the European Union or of those containing general provisions governing the Structural Funds?

41. The case-law of the Court is well established on this point.

42. The acts in question must be assessed in the light of the provisions of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, which, unlike Regulation No 2988/95, constitute sectoral rules.

43. In its judgment in Somvao (13) the Court took care to refer to Article 1(1) and the third, fourth and fifth recitals of Regulation No 2988/95, when it held that that regulation lays down general rules relating to checks and penalties in order to protect the European Union's financial interests from irregularities, enacting a common set of legal rules for all areas covered by Community policies. (14)

44. Regulation No 2988/95 thus contains a set of principles that must be observed in connection with the enactment of sectoral rules. As is clear from Article 2(3) and the third, fifth and eighth recitals of that regulation, it is actually in the context of the sectoral rules, laid down by the EU legislature according to the Community policies concerned, that detailed rules governing the decentralised administration of the budget, the rules and principles applicable to national systems of administration and monitoring, irregular conduct and administrative measures and penalties are laid down.

45. The competent national authorities must therefore make reference to the sectoral provisions in order to determine whether conduct constitutes an 'irregularity' and it is on the basis of those provisions that they must, where appropriate, recover funds incorrectly used. (15)

46. That is the purpose of Regulation No 1083/2006.

47. As is clear from the fourth paragraph of Article 1 of that regulation, the latter sets out the principles applicable to use of the Structural Funds, by laying down, inter alia, rules on partnership, programming and evaluation, stipulating the obligations incumbent on Member States with regard to control of operations and setting out the principles applicable to the detection and correction of irregularities.

48. The definition of ‘irregularity’ taken from Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 was adapted for reasons of consistency and legal clarity with regard to the functioning and the specific principles of structural policies. (16)

49. In view of those factors, and in particular the settled case-law of the Court, it is in the light of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, which, unlike Regulation No 2988/95 constitutes a sectoral rule, that it is to be assessed whether the practices at issue in the cases in the main proceedings constitute irregularities.

50. Any other interpretation would, in my view, have the effect of rendering Regulation No 1083/2006 ineffective and would be detrimental to the proper use of the Structural Funds.

51. It is now appropriate to determine whether those practices constitute ‘irregularities’, within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006.

2. Meaning of the term ‘irregularity’, within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006

52. I would recall that Article 2(7) of Regulation 1083/2006 defines ‘irregularity’ as any infringement of a provision of EU law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the general budget.

53. The EU legislature therefore defines in those terms the circumstances in which an infringement of the relevant law may lead Member States or the Commission to make the financial corrections referred to, inter alia, in Articles 98 to 100 of Regulation No 1083/2006.

54. In the present cases, the question is whether the acts in question, which do not fall within the scope of Directive 2004/18, may nonetheless be linked to infringement of EU law.

55. It is common ground that measures financed from the European Union budget must be carried out in full compliance with EU law.

56. The principle of the compatibility with EU law of an operation financed by the Structural Funds is a fundamental principle governing the eligibility of the operation for European funding.

57. That principle is laid down in Article 9(5) of Regulation No 1083/2006, which comes under Title I of that regulation, entitled ‘Objectives and general rules on assistance’. That provision states that ‘operations financed by the [Structural] Funds shall comply with the provisions of the Treaty and of acts adopted under it’.

58. That principle also appears in recital 22 of that regulation. It is restated in Article 11 of the ERDF standard agreement for grants (17) and, in so far as it constitutes a key element of a grant application, in all information handbooks for project organisers, (18) and in all funding agreements concluded with the beneficiaries of the funds too.

59. In the context of the cases in the main proceedings, the principle of the compatibility with EU law of an operation financed by the Structural Funds appears in the guide drawn up by the Ministry for Development, Public Works and Housing (Ministerul Dezvoltarii, Lucrărilor Publice şi Locuinţelor) concerning implementation of Priority Axis No 3 of regional operational programme 2007-2013 and is clear, inter alia, from the eligibility criteria for funding. (19)

60. According to that principle, every operation financed by the Structural Funds, and in consequence every item of expenditure relating to it, must be consistent with EU law and be compatible with the policies and actions undertaken by the EU legislature.

61. Thus, if, when carrying out an operation co-financed by the Structural Funds, the beneficiary of the funds, acting as a contracting authority, fails to comply with the rules on public procurement laid down in Directive 2004/18 as it is required to do, that act is liable to constitute an ‘irregularity’, within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, in that it infringes a rule of EU law.

62. However, what is the case when, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, the value of the contracts is lower than the thresholds laid down in Article 7 of Directive 2004/18, (20) so that the award of those contracts is not subject to the rules and principles laid down in that instrument?

63. Do negligence, breach of obligations or wrongful acts committed by a beneficiary of Structural Funds escape being classified as ‘irregularities’, within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, on the grounds that such acts do not constitute infringement of a provision of EU law?

64. I think not. It must be possible for such infringements to be covered by the concept of ‘irregularity’.

65. First, although in the cases in the main proceedings the beneficiaries of the grant, in their capacity as contracting authorities, were not bound to comply with the rules laid down in Directive 2004/18 owing to the value of the contracts, nonetheless, the award of those contracts, like any State measure laying down the conditions to which the provision of economic activities is subject, must observe the principles laid down in the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union and is subject to the requirements deriving from it, as set out in the case-law of the Court.

66. The EU legislature, in recital 2 of Directive 2004/18, thus took care to specify that, whatever the value of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law, the award procedure is subject to observance of the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, in particular, of the principles of freedom of movement of goods, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, and of the principles deriving therefrom, such as those of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency.

67. As the Court further noted in its judgment in Impresa Edilux and SICEF, (21) that obligation applies to the award of public contracts which have a ‘certain cross-border interest’, (22) that is to say, which might potentially be of interest to economic operators situated in other Member States.

68. The existence of a certain cross-border interest is determined in the light of certain objective criteria, such as the financial value of the contract, the place where it is to be performed or its technical characteristics. (23)

69. In the present cases, it will therefore be for the referring court to carry out a detailed assessment of all the relevant facts at its disposal in order to determine whether the contracts in question had such an interest. (24)

70. In my view, in the light of the limited evidence at my disposal, it is unlikely that the contract awarded by the District of Neamț (Case C-260/14) would have been of interest to undertakings established in other Member States, given the limited financial value of the contract and the place where it was to be performed. The town of Piatra Neamţ (Romania) is located 433 km from the Bulgarian border and the amount of the contract was EUR 19 410.

71. However, I take a more qualified view of the contract awarded by the District of Bacău (Case C-261/14). Although the town of Bacău is located approximately 370 km from the Bulgarian border, the amount of the contract was EUR 2 820 515. That is by no means an insignificant amount. It cannot therefore be excluded that undertakings established in Bulgaria, in particular, might have shown an interest in it.

72. If the referring court were to take the view that one or other of those contracts might have been of interest to undertakings established in other Member States, the infringements in question might then constitute an ‘irregularity’, within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, in so far as they constitute a breach of the principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union. It would nonetheless be for the referring court to determine whether those acts did actually prejudice the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to it.

73. Secondly, it is important not to lose sight of the fact that, irrespective of the nature of the infringement, the unlawful act takes place in the context of an operation benefiting from European funding. That funding necessarily brings the operation and all the rules of national law applicable to it within the scope of EU law.

74. Consequently, I think that the criterion based on infringement of EU law must be interpreted broadly, as covering infringements of EU law sensu stricto and infringements of national law relating to the application of EU law.

75. The objectives and scheme of Regulation No 1083/2006 moreover support that interpretation.

76. The ERDF, in so far as it commits funds of the European Union, is based, in the first place, on the principle of sound financial management, which requires budgetary appropriations to be used in accordance with the principles of economy, efficiency and effectiveness.

77. That principle, which applies to all areas of the budget which employ shared management, is laid down in Article 317 TFEU (25) and is recognised consistently in case law. (26) It is one of the basic principles underlying Regulation No 2988/95 and its scope was defined in Chapter 7 of Title II of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities, (27) and in particular Article 27 thereof.

78. According to the principle of sound financial management, the objective of the rules laid down within the framework of Regulation No 1083/2006 is to ensure that Member States are using the Structural Funds in a legal and regular manner, in order, first, to protect the financial interests of the European Union and, secondly, to ensure the efficient implementation of operational programmes. (28)

79. That objective can be attained only if grants awarded by the Structural Funds relate to acts and expenditure the legality of which cannot be challenged either under EU law or under national law. It is only on that condition that the efficiency of action by the Structural Funds can be guaranteed, by making sure that those Funds do not provide financing for fraudulent operations, involving on occasion acts of favouritism or corruption.

80. Thus, in the context of the tendering procedures in question, it cannot be excluded that, in using such restrictive selection criteria in breach of national public procurement rules, the beneficiaries of the grant, acting as a contracting authority, did not intend to exclude certain tenderers from the contract or, on the other hand, to favour a particular tenderer. Those criteria certainly prevented, or at least deterred, certain economic operators from tendering for the contracts in question and therefore reduced significantly the number of economic operators qualifying to perform the contracts. In such situations, which are particularly frequent in the case of the award of public contracts, (29) the selection criteria in question may confer an undue advantage on one undertaking, contrary to the very purpose of European funding. In those circumstances, failure to comply with national law constitutes an act that may adversely affect the financial interests of the European Union, in the same way as an act infringing the rules of EU law. In paragraph 45 of its judgment in Baltlanta, (30) the Court took care to note that the general budget of the European Union must be protected against ‘any act or omission which could be detrimental to it’. The only difference will perhaps lie in the gravity of the infringement, the significance of the consequent financial implications and the extent of the financial correction to be adopted.

81. At all events, and according to the principle fraus omnia corrumpit, infringement of national law will make the operation ineligible for European funding.

82. In order to protect the financial interests of the European Union from any fraud and to ensure full attainment of the objectives pursued by the EU legislature in the context of assistance from the Structural Funds, infringements of national law in connection with a co-financed operation must be penalised in the same way as infringement of the rules of EU law would be penalised, and it must therefore be possible to classify them as ‘irregularities’ within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006.

83. It is moreover in the light of those objectives that the Court held in paragraph 48 of the judgment in Baltlanta (C-410/13, EU:C:2014:2134), that the concept of ‘irregularity’ refers to the ‘unlawful use of European Union funds’. The unlawful use of European Union funds can result not only from infringement of the rules of EU law, but also from infringement of the rules of national law.

84. A broad, dynamic interpretation of the criterion based on infringement of a provision of EU law is called for also in the light of the scheme of Regulation No 1083/2006, and in particular of the national systems of management and control which it puts in place.

85. In order to ensure that the Structural Funds are used efficiently and properly, Member States are required, in accordance with the principle of sound financial management, (31) to put in place good management and control systems to ensure that a beneficiary of funds has carried out the obligations entitling it to allocation of the proposed financial assistance in accordance with EU law and the relevant national law. (32)

86. Article 60(a) and (b) of Regulation No 1083/2006 thus states that the managing authority is to be responsible, in accordance with the principle of sound financial management, both for ensuring that operations 'comply with applicable Community and national rules for the whole of their implementation period' and for verifying that the expenditure declared by the beneficiaries 'complies with Community and national rules'.

87. Similarly, Article 61(b)(ii) of that regulation states that the certifying authority of an operational programme is required to certify that 'the expenditure declared complies with applicable Community and national rules and has been incurred in respect of operations selected for funding in accordance with the criteria applicable to the programme and complying with Community and national rules'.

88. The same obligations are incumbent on the audit authority under Article 62(1) of that regulation, read in conjunction with Article 16(2) of Regulation No 1828/2006.

89. Member States are thus required to discontinue all or part of the European funding where they find shortcomings in the application of EU regulations or of national law, the compatibility of the operation with applicable Community and national provisions being a condition for the operation's eligibility for funding.

90. The financial corrections Member States are required to adopt under Article 98 of Regulation No 1083/2006 are intended, moreover, 'to restore a situation where all of the expenditure declared for co-financing from the Structural Funds is legal and regular, in line with the applicable national and Union rules and regulations'. (33)

91. As I see it, the purpose of the controls incumbent on Member States is therefore to ensure the lawfulness and regularity of all operations (34) in the light, not only of EU law, but also of national law, and as regards all aspects of those operations, whether administrative, financial, technical or physical. (35)

92. In that context, it would seem to me to be contradictory to limit the scope of the concept of 'irregularity' merely to infringements of 'EU law' sensu stricto and it might, moreover, render the control procedures established under Regulation No 1083/2006 ineffective.

93. Furthermore, that interpretation appears to me to be artificial. All the factors I have just mentioned go to show that co-financing is part of a single, indivisible operation the lawfulness of which can only be viewed as a whole, that is to say from the point of view of the rules of EU law 'and' of applicable national law. If the operation was conducted or the expenditure incurred in breach of the rules of national law, it is no longer eligible for funding from the ERDF. Compliance with Community and national rules is part of the same objective. There would be no point in distinguishing as to whether the infringement falls within the scope of EU law or national law.

94. Those factors derived from the actual scheme of Regulation No 1083/2006 support a broad interpretation of the criterion based on infringement of EU law as referring to infringement not only of EU law but also of the provisions of national law falling within the scope of EU law.

95. Moreover, that interpretation merely anticipates the amendments introduced by the EU legislature in Regulation No 1303/2013, in particular in connection with defining the term 'irregularity'.

96. That regulation, it will be recalled, repealed Regulation No 1083/2006 with effect from 1 January 2014.

97. The term ‘irregularity’ now covers, in Article 2, point 36, of Regulation No 1303/2013, ‘any breach of Union law, or of national law relating to its application’. (36)

98. The principle of compatibility of the operation, laid down in Article 6 of that regulation, entitled ‘Compliance with Union and national law’, now provides that operations supported by the Structural Funds must ‘comply with applicable Union law and the national law relating to its application’. (37)

99. Furthermore, under Article 125(4)(a) of that regulation, managing and certifying authorities are now responsible for verifying that the co-financed products and services have been delivered and that the associated expenditure complies with applicable EU law and with the national law relating to its application.

100. The ‘national law relating to [the] application [of EU law]’ is comprised of all the rules of the domestic legal order for the application and implementation of the law of the European Union. That form of words refers not only to the national law resulting from the transposition of EU law, but also to all the rules for implementing EU law at national level, such as the national rules governing the eligibility of expenditure for European funding.

101. In view of all those factors, I think therefore that the failure of a contracting authority, a beneficiary of a Structural Fund grant, to comply with national rules relating to the award of public contracts in connection with the award of a contract for the performance of the action covered by the grant, is liable to constitute an ‘irregularity’ within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, in so far as that act has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to it.

B – Second question: the nature of the financial corrections

102. By its second question, the referring court asks about the nature of the financial corrections which Member States are required to adopt under the first subparagraph of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006.

103. According to that provision, ‘the Member State shall make the financial corrections required in connection with the individual or systemic irregularities detected in operations or operational programmes. The corrections made by a Member State shall consist of cancelling all or part of the public contribution to the operational programme. Member States shall take into account the nature and gravity of the irregularities and the financial loss to the Fund’.

104. The referring court seeks to ascertain, in particular, whether those corrections are ‘administrative measures’ within the meaning of Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95 or whether they are ‘administrative penalties’ within the meaning of Article 5(c) of that regulation.

105. The Court has previously held on numerous occasions that ‘the obligation [to make restitution for an advantage improperly received by means of an irregular practice] is not a penalty, but simply the consequence of a finding that the conditions required to obtain the advantage derived from the EU rules had not been observed, so that that advantage becomes an advantage wrongly received’. (38)

106. I see no reason to depart from that case-law.

107. I therefore propose that the Court should rule that the first subparagraph of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 must be interpreted as meaning that the financial corrections that Member States are required to adopt due to an irregularity affecting the co-financed operation are ‘administrative measures’ within the meaning of Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95.

108. In view of the answer I propose to give, there is no need to examine the third and fourth questions raised by the referring court. As is clear from the wording of those questions and from the grounds of the orders for reference, the Curtea de Apel Bacău (Appeal Court, Bacău) put those questions in case the Court were to take the view that financial corrections adopted by Member States under the first subparagraph of Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 were ‘administrative penalties’, within the meaning of Article 2(2) of Regulation No 2988/95.

IV – Conclusion

109. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court should answer the questions referred by the Curtea de Apel Bacău (Appeal Court, Bacău) as follows:

(1) The failure of a contracting authority, a beneficiary of a Structural Fund grant, to comply with national rules relating to the award of public contracts in connection with the award of a contract for the performance of the action covered by the grant, is liable to constitute an 'irregularity' within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 of 11 July 2006 laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund and repealing Regulation (EC) No 1260/1999, in so far as that act has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to it.

(2) Article 98(2) of Regulation No 1083/2006 must be interpreted as meaning that the financial corrections that Member States are required to adopt due to an irregularity affecting the co-financed operation are 'administrative measures' within the meaning of Article 4 of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 of 18 December 1995 on the protection of the European Communities financial interests.

That Article 4 stated very clearly that management and control systems relating to the implementation of an operational programme were to include procedures to ensure that the services co-financed complied with applicable national and Community rules on, in particular, the eligibility of expenditure for support from the Structural Funds under the assistance concerned and the rules on public procurement. Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between ‘Ostas celtnieks’ SIA (‘Ostas celtnieks’) and the Talsu novada pašvaldība (Municipality of Talsi) and the Iepirkumu uzraudzības birojs (Office for the Supervision of Public Contracts) concerning the requirements set out in the tender specifications relating to a procurement procedure for a public works contract.

The legal framework

EU law

3 Recital 32 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 is worded as follows:

‘In order to encourage the involvement of small and medium-sized undertakings in the public contracts procurement market, it is advisable to include provisions on subcontracting.’

4 Article 7 of that directive sets the threshold amounts from which the measures for coordinating procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts which it lays down apply. For public works contracts, Article 7(c) of that directive sets the threshold at EUR 5 186 000.

5 Article 44 of the directive provides:

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded ... after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded ... has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52 ...

2. The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.

6 Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Technical and/or professional ability’:

‘An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.’

7 Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Technical and/or professional ability’:

‘An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.’

Latvian law

8 It is clear from the request for a preliminary ruling that Articles 41(3) (‘Economic and financial standing’) and 42(3) (‘Technical and professional ability’) in the Law on Public Procurement (Publisko iepirkumu likums, Latvijas Vestnesis, 2006, No 65), which transposes Directive 2004/18 into Latvian law, provide that the tenderer may, if this is necessary for the performance of a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other contractors, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. In such a case, the tenderer must prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the necessary resources, by producing those contractors’ attestations or agreements.

9 The basic rules for cooperation agreements are laid down in Chapter 16 of the Civil Code, while the conditions imposed on economic operators for the establishment and operation of partnerships are set out in Title IX of the Commercial Code.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

10 As is apparent from the documents submitted to the Court, in November 2011, the Municipality of Talsi launched a procedure for the award of a public works contract for the improvement of the road infrastructure in the City of Talsi in order to promote accessibility (‘the contract at issue’).

11 Paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications for that procedure provided:

‘... in the event of the tenderer relying on the capacities of other contractors, it must mention all those contractors and provide evidence that it has the necessary resources at its disposal. If that tenderer is to be awarded the contract, it must have concluded a cooperation agreement with the contractors concerned before the award and forwarded this to the contracting authority. [That agreement] must include the following:

(1) a clause stipulating that each party is to be jointly and severally liable for the performance of the contract;

(2) the indication of the main operator authorised to sign the public contract and to direct its performance;

(3) a description of the part of the works to be completed by each of the participants;

(4) the volume of the works which each participant is to carry out, expressed as a percentage.

The conclusion of a cooperation agreement may be replaced by the setting up of a partnership.’

12 Before the Office for the Supervision of Public Contracts, Ostas celtnieks challenged, inter alia, Paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications. However, by decision of 13 February 2012, the latter rejected the arguments raised by Ostas celtnieks in support of its complaint, holding that, under that paragraph, the contracting authority had legitimately set out the detailed rules according to which the tenderer had to demonstrate that it had the necessary resources at its disposal to perform the contract at issue.

13 Ostas celtnieks brought an appeal against that decision before the Administratīvā rajona tiesa (Local Administrative Court) which upheld that appeal by judgment of 7 May 2013. In its judgment, that court observed, inter alia that, as regards Paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications, it did not follow from the Law on public contracts or from Directive 2004/18 that the contracting authority may impose on a tenderer the obligation to produce an undertaking to conclude a cooperation agreement with other entities on whose capacities it relies for the execution of the contract at issue and require the tenderer to enter into such an agreement or set up a partnership with those entities.

14 That decision was the subject of appeals in cassation brought by the Municipality of Talsi and the Office for the Supervision of Public Contracts before the Augstākās tiesa (Supreme Court). In support of their appeals, those authorities argue, in particular, that the requirements laid down in Paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications are justified by the need to reduce the risk of non-performance of the contract at issue.

15 The referring court considers in essence that, for the purposes of awarding a public contract, the contracting authority must be able to verify the ability of the tenderer to perform the contract at issue. However, it asks whether, to that end, Directive 2004/18 authorises the contracting authority to require tenderers to conclude a cooperation agreement or partnership agreement with the other contractors on whose capacities they rely in support of their own tender, or whether those tenderers are free to choose the manner in which they will engage the participation of those other contractors in the performance of the contract.

16 In those circumstances, the Augstākās tiesas (Supreme Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Must the provisions of Directive 2004/18/EC be interpreted as meaning that, in order to reduce the risk of non-performance of the contract, they authorise the insertion in the tender specifications of the condition that, in the event of the contract being awarded to a tenderer which relies on the capacities of other contractors, that tenderer must, before the contract is awarded, conclude with those entities a cooperation agreement (which includes the particular items set out in the specifications), or set up a partnership with them?’

The question referred

Preliminary observations

17 It must be observed from the outset that, while starting from the premiss that Directive 2004/18 is applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings, the order for reference contains no information making it possible to verify whether the market value of the contract at issue reaches the threshold for the application of Article 7(c) of that directive.

18 In answer to a question put by the Court at the hearing, the Latvian Government indicated, however, that the contract at issue was a works contract with a value of approximately EUR 3 million.

19 Furthermore, according to the Latvian Government, the provisions of the Law on public contracts are also applicable to public works contracts, such as the contract at issue, of an amount less than the threshold laid down by Directive 2004/18.

20 It is true that the Court has previously held that the interpretation of provisions of an act of the Union in situations outside that act’s scope is justified where those provisions have been made applicable to such situations by national law directly and unconditionally in order to ensure that internal situations and situations governed by EU law are treated in the same way (judgment in Generali-Providencia Biztosító, C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited).

21 It is clear from the foregoing that, subject to the verifications to be made by the referring court, and in order to provide the latter with an answer useful for the resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings, the question referred for a preliminary ruling must be examined.

The question referred

22 By its question, the referring court asks essentially whether Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude a contracting authority in awarding a public contract from being able to impose on a tenderer which relies on the capacities of other entities the obligation, before the contract is awarded, to conclude with those entities a partnership agreement or to set up a partnership with them.

23 In order to answer that question it should be recalled that according to the Court’s settled case-law, Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 recognise the right of every economic operator to rely, for a particular contract, upon the capacities of other entities, ‘regardless of the nature of the links which it has with them’, provided that it proves to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the performance of the contract (see, to that effect, judgment in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraphs 29 and 33).

24 Such an interpretation, as the Court has already held, is consistent with the aim of the widest possible opening-up of public contracts to competition pursued by the relevant directives to the benefit not only of economic operators but also of contracting authorities. In addition, that interpretation also facilitates the involvement of small- and medium-sized undertakings in the contracts procurement market, an aim also pursued by Directive 2004/18, as stated in recital 32 thereof (judgment in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited).

25 Thus, where, in order to prove its financial, economic, technical and/or professional standing with a view to being admitted to participate in a tendering procedure, a company relies on the resources of entities or undertakings with which it is directly or indirectly linked, whatever the legal nature of those links may be, it must establish that it actually has available to it the resources of those entities or undertakings which it does not itself own and which are necessary for the performance of the contract (see, to that effect, judgment in Holst Italia, C-176/98, EU:C:1999:593, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

26 In that connection, it must be observed that, in accordance with Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18, it is for the contracting authority to verify the suitability of the service providers in accordance with the criteria laid down. That verification is intended, in particular, to enable the contracting authority to ensure that the successful tenderer will be able to use whatever resources it relies on throughout the period covered by the contract. (see, by analogy, judgment in Holst Italia, C-176/98, EU:C:1999:593, paragraph 28).

27 In the context of that assessment, Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 do not make it possible either to assume that a tenderer has or has not the means necessary to perform the contract or, a fortiori, to exclude a priori certain types of proof (see, by analogy, Holst Italia, C-176/98, EU:C:1999:593, paragraph 30).

28 It follows that the tenderer is free to choose, on the other hand, the legal nature of the links it intends to establish with the other entities on whose capacities it relies in order to perform a particular contract and, on the other, the type of proof of the existence of those links.

29 Furthermore, as the Advocate General observes, in paragraph 43 of his Opinion, Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 expressly provide that it is only by way of example that the production of an undertaking by other entities to make available to the tenderer the resources necessary for the performance of the contract is acceptable proof of the fact that it actually has those resources. Therefore, those provisions by no means preclude the tenderer from establishing in another way the existence of the links between it and other entities on whose capacities it relies for the proper performance of the contract.

30 In the present case, the Municipality of Talsi, as the contracting authority requires a tenderer, namely Ostas celtnieks, which relies on the capacities of other entities for the performance of the contract concerned, to establish links of a precise legal nature with those entities, so that only those particular links are capable, in the eyes of the contracting authority, of proving that the contract does in fact have the resources necessary to perform that contract.

31 In accordance with Paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications, the contracting authority requires the tenderer, before the award of the public contract, to conclude a cooperation agreement with those entities or to set up a partnership with them.

32 Paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications therefore provides for only two methods by which the tenderer may demonstrate that it has the resources necessary for the execution of the relevant contract, to the exclusion of any other type of evidence of legal relationships existing between the tenderer and the entities on whose capacities it relies.

33 In those circumstances, a rule such as that set out in Paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications manifestly deprives the provisions of Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/28 of their effectiveness.

34 Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to the question referred is that Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude a contracting authority, in the tender specifications relating to the award of a public contract, from imposing on a tenderer which relies on the capacities of other entities the obligation, before the contract is awarded, to conclude a cooperation agreement with those entities or to form a partnership with them.

Costs

35 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude a contracting authority, in the tender specifications relating to the award of a public contract, from imposing on a tenderer which relies on the capacities of other entities the obligation, before the contract is awarded, to conclude a cooperation agreement with those entities or to form a partnership with them.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
WATHELET
delivered on 4 June 2015 (1)

Case C-234/14

Ostas celtnieks SIA
v
Talsu novada pašvaldība,
Iepirkumu uzraudzības birojs

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Augstākā tiesa (Latvia))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Articles 47(2) and 48(3) — Economic operator relying on the capacities of other entities — Obligation to conclude a cooperation agreement or form a partnership with those other entities — Clause on the joint and several liability of the tenderer and other entities)

I – Introduction

1. The request for a preliminary ruling, lodged at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 12 May 2014, has been made in proceedings between Ostas celtnieks SIA ('Ostas celtnieks'), on the one hand, and Talsu novada pašvaldība (the municipality of Talsi, 'the Authority') and Iepirkumu uzraudzības birojs (Office for the Supervision of Public Contracts ('the Office'), on the other hand.

2. The Authority launched a public procurement procedure for the improvement of road infrastructures in order to facilitate access to Talsi. The specifications of the call for tenders issued by the Authority provided in particular that, in the event of a tenderer relying on the capacities of other entities, it must, before concluding the contract, conclude a cooperation agreement with those entities or form a partnership. The cooperation agreement must provide in particular for the joint and several liability of the tenderer and the other entities.

3. Ostas celtnieks contests the legality of those tender specification conditions.

4. This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. (2) The referring court raises the question, in particular, of whether or not that directive precludes the insertion into tender specifications of conditions such as those provided for in the main proceedings.

II – Legal framework

A – EU law

5. Recital 45 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 states:

‘This Directive allows Member States to establish official lists of contractors, suppliers or service providers or a system of certification by public or private bodies, and makes provision for the effects of such registration or such certification in a contract award procedure in another Member State. As regards official lists of approved economic operators, it is important to take into account Court of Justice case-law in cases where an economic operator belonging to a group claims the economic, financial or technical capabilities of other companies in the group in support of its application for registration. In this case, it is for the economic operator to prove that those resources will actually be available to it throughout the period of validity of the registration. For the purposes of that registration, a Member State may therefore determine the level of requirements to be met and in particular, for example where the operator lays claim to the financial standing of another company in the group, it may require that that company be held liable, if necessary jointly and severally.’

6. Article 4(2) of Directive 2004/18 provides as follows:

‘Groups of economic operators may submit tenders or put themselves forward as candidates. In order to submit a tender or a request to participate, these groups may not be required by the contracting authorities to assume a specific legal form; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract, to the extent that this change is necessary for the satisfactory performance of the contract.’

7. According to Article 25 of that directive:

‘In the contract documents, the contracting authority may ask or may be required by a Member State to ask the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors.

This indication shall be without prejudice to the question of the principal economic operator’s liability.’

8. According to Article 26 of that directive:

‘Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with [Union] law and are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications. The conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.’

9. Article 44 of that directive provides:

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded ... after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded ... has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52 ... .

2. The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.

10. Article 47(2) and (3) of Directive 2014/18 provides:

3. Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 4 may rely on the abilities of participants in the group or of other entities.’

11. Article 48(3) and (4) of that directive provides:

‘3. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.

4. Under the same conditions a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 4 may rely on the abilities of participants in the group or in other entities.’

B – National law

12. The Law on public contracts [Publisko iepirkumu likums, Latvijas Vēstnesis, 2006, No 65 (3433)] transposes Directive 2004/18 into Latvian law.

13. It is clear from the request for a preliminary ruling that that law provides, in Article 41 (‘Economic and financial standing’), paragraph 3, and Article 42 (‘Technical and/or professional ability’), paragraph 3, that a successful tenderer may rely on the capacities of other contractors, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them, where this is necessary for the performance of a particular contract. In such a case, the successful tenderer must prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the necessary resources, by producing those contractors’ attestations or agreements. (3)

14. The basic rules for cooperation agreements are laid down in the Latvian Civil Code, and the conditions imposed on economic operators for the establishment and operation of partnerships are set out in Title IX of that code.

III – The facts in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

15. The Authority launched a public procurement procedure for the improvement of road infrastructures.

16. Paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications, approved on 29 November 2011, is worded as follows:

‘… in the event of the tenderer relying on the capacities of other contractors, it must indicate all the contractors involved and provide evidence that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary. If it is decided that the contract is to be awarded to that tenderer, it must, prior to the award of the contract, conclude a cooperation agreement with the contractors concerned and forward that agreement to the contracting authority.’

17. According to the referring court, the cooperation agreement must include:

‘(1) a clause stipulating that each party is to be jointly and severally liable for the performance of the contract;

(2) [an indication of] the main economic operator, which shall have all the necessary powers to sign the contract and to direct its performance;

(3) a description of the part of the works to be completed by each of the participants;

(4) the volume of the works which each participant is to carry out, expressed as a percentage.

The conclusion of a cooperation agreement may be replaced by the formation of a partnership.’

18. Ostas celtnieks challenged before the Office several conditions in the tender specifications and, in particular, paragraph 9.5.

19. By decision of 13 February 2012, the Office upheld the Ostas celtnieks’ objections to some of the paragraphs, but dismissed those relating to paragraph 9.5 of the specifications. The Office stated that, by that paragraph, the contracting authority in fact lays down the manner in which the successful tenderer may demonstrate to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal for the duration of the contract the necessary resources which it is relying on.

20. Ostas celtnieks lodged an administrative appeal before the Administratīvā rajona tiesa (District Administrative Court) seeking a declaration that the Office's decision was unlawful in certain respects and, in particular, with reference to paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications.

21. By judgment of 7 May 2013, the Administratīvā rajona tiesa declared that paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications was in part unlawful.

22. According to that court, it is not clear either from the Latvian Law on public contracts or from Directive 2004/18 that the contracting authority may impose on a tenderer an obligation to produce an undertaking that it will conclude a cooperation agreement with other entities on whose capacities it is relying or require the tenderer to conclude such an agreement or form a partnership with those entities. The Administratīvā rajona tiesa considers that an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities for a particular contract, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them.

23. The Authority and the Office brought appeals on a point of law against that decision before the referring court. They claim in those appeals that paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications is justified in order to reduce the risk of non-performance of the contract, since, without the requirement to conclude an agreement, the adjudicating authority cannot verify that the contract will be performed in accordance with the tender submitted and that the contractors on whose capacities the tenderer is relying will abide by their undertakings.

24. The Authority and the Office consider that the wording 'regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them', (4) refers generally to the links existing between a tenderer and the contractor whose capacities it is relying on. They take the view that the Latvian Law on public contracts does not state in what manner the tenderer may prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the necessary resources and that this matter is therefore left to the discretion of the contracting authority.

25. They consider, in addition, that, since the Latvian Law on public contracts transposed the provisions of Directive 2004/18, it is also necessary to take into account the interpretation of the provisions of that directive in the Court's case-law. They also point out that, in the judgments in Ballast Nedam Groep (C-389/92, EU:C:1994:133) and Ballast Nedam Groep (C-5/97, EU:C:1997:636), the Court held that, in order to minimise the risks run by the contracting authority, that authority should verify that the tenderers actually have the relevant resources at their disposal.

26. The referring court states that it is clear from a number of judgments of the Court that the contracting authority should also check the subcontractors' capacity to perform the contract. (5)

27. It notes, in particular, that, in paragraph 33 of the judgment in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino (C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646), the Court held 'that Directive 2004/18 permits the combining of the capacities of more than one economic operator for the purpose of satisfying the minimum capacity requirements set by the contracting authority, provided that the candidate or tenderer relying on the capacities of one or more other entities proves to that authority that it will actually have at its disposal the resources of those entities necessary for the performance of the contract'.

28. In the referring court's view, the contracting authority not only may but must verify the tenderer's capacity to perform the contract. However, it considers that it has not been clearly settled whether the contracting authority may decide that the only permissible procedures for obtaining extra capacity are the formation of a certain type of company or the conclusion of a cooperation agreement or whether, on the contrary, the tenderer is free to choose the manner in which it will obtain the extra capacity.

29. In those circumstances, the Augstākā tiesa has decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Must the provisions of Directive 2004/18/EC be interpreted as meaning that, in order to reduce the risk of non-performance of the contract, they do not preclude the specifications from containing the condition that, in the event of the contract being awarded to a tenderer which relies on the capacities of other contractors, that tenderer must, before the contract is awarded, conclude with those entities a cooperation agreement (which includes the particular items set out in the specifications), or set up a partnership with them?’

IV – Procedure before the Court

30. Written observations have been submitted by the Latvian and Greek Governments and by the European Commission. At the hearing held on 16 April 2015, Ostas celtnieks, the Latvian Government and the Commission presented oral argument.

V – Analysis

A – Preliminary observations

31. It should be noted that, although the question addressed to the Court of Justice by the referring court does not specify any particular provision of Directive 2004/18, the request for a preliminary ruling refers to Article 25 (‘Subcontracting’), Article 26 (‘Conditions for performance of contracts’), Article 47 (‘Economic and financial standing’) and Article 48 (‘Technical and/or professional ability’) thereof and to recital 45 in the preamble thereto.

32. It is also clear from the order for reference that the dispute in the main proceedings concerns only paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications at issue, which provides that, in the event of the tenderer relying on the capacities of other entities, it must indicate all the entities involved and provide evidence to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal all the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, by producing an undertaking from those entities to conclude a cooperation agreement (6) or form a partnership with the tenderer before the contract is awarded.

33. I therefore consider that the question referred to the Court by the referring court is aimed at determining whether Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 (on the economic and financial standing of economic operators participating in an award procedure) and Article 48(3) thereof (on the technical and/or professional ability of those operators) preclude a tender specification clause which imposes on a tenderer relying on the capacities of other entities an obligation to conclude a cooperation agreement or form a partnership with them before the contract is awarded.

34. However, in the Commission’s view, the wording of that paragraph of the tender specifications suggests that the specific provision on the conclusion of a cooperation agreement or the formation of a partnership concerns only the stage following selection and prior to the award of the contract and relates only to the successful tenderer to which the contracting authority intends to award the contract. Therefore, that specific provision is consistent with the conditions relating to the performance of a contract as laid down in Article 26 of Directive 2004/18.

35. I consider, subject to verification by the referring court, that the requirements laid down by paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications relate to the minimum levels, first, of economic and financial standing and, secondly, of technical and/or professional ability required by the contracting authority, for the purposes of Articles 44(2), 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18, which a tenderer must satisfy for its tender to be taken into consideration (7) and not to the conditions for performance of contracts, for the purposes of Article 26 of that directive. Although, pursuant to that Article 26, the contracting authorities may lay down special conditions on performance in the contract notice or tender specifications, it appears that, in view of the examples which it gives of performance conditions, namely that they ‘may, in particular concern social and environmental considerations’, (8) that article does not concern the economic and financial standing or the technical and/or professional ability of the tenderer to perform the contract, requirements which are covered by Articles 44(2), 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18.

36. Moreover, the obligations of a tenderer relying on the capacities of other entities, first, to prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal all the resources necessary for the execution of the contract by producing an undertaking from those entities to conclude a cooperation agreement and, secondly, to conclude a cooperation agreement or form a partnership with those entities before the contract is awarded are closely linked and must not be artificially separated.

37. Those obligations concern the tenderer's economic and financial standing and its technical and professional ability and, in particular, the manner in which, under Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18, the tenderer must prove that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, if, inter alia, it uses subcontractors. Non-compliance with those obligations is a reason for its exclusion from the contract award procedure.

B – Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18

38. The EU rules do not require that a person who enters into a contract with a contracting authority must be capable of direct performance using his own resources. The person in question need only be able to arrange for execution of the works in question and to furnish the necessary guarantees in that connection. It follows from both EU rules and the Court's case-law that any person or entity which, in the light of the conditions laid down in a contract notice, believes that it is capable of carrying out the contract, either directly or by using subcontractors, is eligible to submit a tender or put itself forward as a candidate for a public contract. Whether such an entity is actually able to satisfy the conditions laid down in the contract notice must be assessed at a later stage in the procedure, by applying the criteria set out in Articles 44 to 52 of Directive 2004/18. (9)

39. 'Under the first subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, a contracting authority may require candidates or tenderers to meet minimum levels of economic and financial standing and technical and professional ability in accordance with Articles 47 and 48 of that directive. For that purpose, the contracting authority must take account of the right conferred on every economic operator by Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 to rely on, for a particular contract, the capacities of other entities, regardless of the nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it proves to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract'. (10)

40. I note, in that regard, that, although every economic operator has the right to rely on, for a particular contract, the capacities of other entities, it must establish that it actually has at its disposal the means and resources of those entities or undertakings which it does not itself own and which are necessary for the performance of the contract. (11)

41. As Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18 states, the contracting authority must verify the tenderer's ability to provide it with an assurance that it will indeed be able to use whatever resources it relies on throughout the period covered by the contract. (12)

42. In the context of that verification, Directive 2004/18 does not permit the exclusion, without due analysis, of specific types of proof or the assumption that the tenderer has available to it the resources needed to perform the contract. (13)

43. Although Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 state that, 'for example', producing an undertaking by other entities that they will make the necessary resources available to the tenderer is an acceptable form of proof, those provisions in no way exclude other forms of proof. (14)

C – Paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications

44. By obliging a tenderer to conclude a cooperation agreement with the entities on whose capacities it wishes to rely or to form a company with them before the contract is awarded, paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications leaves the tenderer only one way of proving that it has at its disposal the resources of other entities.

45. That obligation seems to me to be contrary to the very wording of Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, which cites, by way of example, a form of proof which can be used by an economic operator relying, for a specific contract, on the capacities of other entities, which, by definition, not only does not impose that form of proof but does not exclude any other form.

46. Moreover, by imposing that obligation, paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications prohibits the use of the form of proof cited in Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18.

47. I also consider that, by imposing on the tenderer just one way of proving that it is qualified and that it has at its disposal the resources of other entities, paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications infringes the principle of proportionality. (15)

48. Although the objective of ensuring performance of the contract is a legitimate objective in the public interest, the obligation imposed by paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications clearly goes beyond what is necessary to achieve that objective. By imposing between the tenderer and the other entities to which it has recourse a limitation based on the legal form of their relationship which is not provided for in Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications has the effect of substantially and unjustifiably limiting a tenderer's right to rely on the capacities of those entities and, consequently, the widest possible participation by tenderers (16) in public procurement procedures, whereas it is the concern of the European Union, in relation to the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, to ensure the widest possible opening-up of a call for tenders to competition. (17)

49. Moreover, the tenderer's obligations to conclude a cooperation agreement or form a partnership with the entities on whose technical and/or professional ability, for example, it relies before the contract is awarded and to include in the cooperation agreement a clause stipulating that the tenderer and the other entities are jointly and severally liable for the performance of the contract, regardless of the share of the contract that it intends to subcontract, clearly have a deterrent effect on that form of economic cooperation. (18) One might even question the effectiveness of the measure for achieving the objective of ensuring the performance of the contract, as it is difficult to imagine that the undertaking with the technical and professional ability relied upon will accept joint financial liability even though only a minimal share of the contract will be subcontracted to it.

50. Finally, paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications, by infringing, for example, a tenderer's right under Article 25 of Directive 2004/18 to subcontract part of the performance of the contract in question, limits the involvement of small- and medium-sized undertakings in the contracts procurement market. (19)

D – Subcontracting or group of economic operators

51. The Latvian Government considers that operators, as well as any subcontractors on whose capacities the tenderer relies, constitute, from the contracting authority's viewpoint, a group of economic operators which is potentially the undertaking performing the contract. It points out that, under Article 4(2) of Directive 2004/18, 'these groups may not be required by the contracting authorities to assume a specific legal form; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract, to the extent that that change is necessary for the satisfactory performance of the contract'. The Latvian Government states that it is clear from that provision that, in order to ensure that the contract is performed, the contracting authority is entitled to ask the group of operators to assume a specific legal form. In other words, on that basis, it is lawful, in practice, for paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications at issue to impose on economic operators intending to rely on subcontractors (20) the obligation to form a group of economic operators with those subcontractors.

52. I note, first of all, that, as laid down in Article 4(2) of Directive 2004/18, the obligation of groups of economic operators to assume a specific legal form after the contract has been awarded 'to the extent that this change is necessary for the satisfactory performance of the contract' (21) is, in my view, an exceptional requirement which is imposed only where it is objectively necessary and in accordance with the principle of proportionality. Neither of these factors is relied on in the present case.

53. More fundamentally, although contracting authorities may, in certain cases, require a specific legal form after awarding the contract to a group of economic operators, they cannot impose the formation of such a group by a tenderer and the subcontractors on which it relies, as Directive 2004/18 leaves it to the tenderer to decide whether to subcontract a share of the contract to third parties (Article 25) or to form with other entities a group of economic operators and to tender jointly for a specific contract (Article 4(2)).

54. Paragraph 9.5 of the tender specifications links those two possibilities which are clearly distinct (22) and, at the very least, according to the Latvian Government's argument, would oblige a tenderer which relies on subcontractors to change that form of cooperation into a group of economic operators.

55. Finally, under Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, a tenderer participating in the selection procedure has the right to choose the form of cooperation with other entities for the purpose of meeting the economic and financial standing requirements in question.

56. It follows that paragraph 9.5 deprives Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 of any practical effect and inappropriately applies the provisions of Article 4(2) of that directive.

VI – Conclusion

57. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court of Justice should reply to the question referred for a preliminary ruling by the Augstākā tiesa (Latvia) as follows:

Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude a condition in the tender specifications imposing on a tenderer which relies on the capacities of other entities the obligation to conclude a cooperation agreement or form a partnership with them before the contract is awarded.

3 It should be noted that the dispute in the main proceedings does not concern the conformity of the provisions of national law with EU law. Ostas celtnieks only disputes the legality of some of the tender specification conditions for the contract in question. See points 16 to 18 of this Opinion. Moreover, in response to a question put by President Tizzano at the hearing, the Latvian Government informed the Court that the contract in question in the main proceedings was a works contract with a value of around EUR 3 million, which is lower than the threshold laid down by the directive for that type of contract (see Article 7(c) of Directive 2004/18). However, the Latvian Government stated that the Latvian legislation made Directive 2004/18 applicable to a works contract for an amount such as that of the contract in question.

6 The Latvian Government states that '"[a] partnership is a union of two or more persons on the basis of a partnership agreement aimed at achieving common objectives using common means or resources". Article 2257 of the Latvian Civil Code regulates the liability of participants in a partnership to the effect that commitments entered into by a partnership are jointly and severally binding on all of its members with respect to third persons'.

7 See, by analogy, judgment in Commission v Netherlands (C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraphs 103 and 104). It seems, subject to verification by the referring court, that paragraph 9.5 refers, in particular, to the requirements of Annex 1 to the tender specifications entitled ‘Financial tender’ and to Annex 2 thereto entitled ‘Qualification’.

It follows that the burden of proof falls on the tenderer relying on the capacities of third persons. In paragraph 35 of the judgment in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino (C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646), the Court held that ‘it is true that there may be works with special requirements necessitating a certain capacity which cannot be obtained by combining the capacities of more than one operator. In such circumstances, the contracting authority would be justified in requiring that the minimum capacity level concerned be achieved by a single economic operator or, where appropriate, by relying on a limited number of economic operators, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, as long as that requirement is related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract at issue.’ It follows that the Court accepts that there may be exceptional circumstances where, in view of the very nature of the contract at issue, a tenderer’s reliance on the capacities of other entities may be limited. The request for a preliminary ruling makes no reference to the existence of such exceptional circumstances in the main proceedings.

14 ‘Both Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 provide in almost identical terms that “an economic operator may … rely on the capacities of other entities”. The wording suggests the recognition of a right of economic operators to choose this method of fulfilling the selection criteria, provided that they can prove that they actually have at their disposal the resources of the other entities necessary for executing the contract.’ See Opinion of Advocate General Jääskinen in Case Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino (C-94/12, EU:C:2013:130, point 24).

have greater choice as to the most advantageous tender'. See Opinion of Advocate General Jääskinen in Case Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino (C-94/12, EU:C:2013:130, point 32).

18 It should be noted that Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65) provides that '[w]here an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities with regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing, the contracting authority may require that the economic operator and those entities be jointly liable for the execution of the contract'. Emphasis added. However, I note, first, that that provision, which must be transposed by the Member States by 18 April 2016 pursuant to Article 90 of Directive 2014/24, is not applicable ratione temporis to the dispute in the main proceedings and, secondly, that the provision only concerns circumstances in which the tenderer relies on the capacities of other entities in respect of criteria relating to economic and financial standing and not those relating to technical and/or professional ability. Moreover, that provision requires only that the tenderer and the other entities be jointly liable for the performance of the contract without imposing, as in the main proceedings, a particular legal form of cooperation between them. It is also logical that only reliance on 'economic and financial standing' should be linked to joint liability.

– the Spanish Government, by M. Sampol Pucurull, acting as Agent, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, assisted by S. Varone, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by A. Tokár and D. Loma-Osorio Lerena, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 7 July 2015, gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 1(8) and 52 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the Consorci Sanitari del Maresme (Maresme Health Consortium) and the Corporació de Salut del Maresme i la Selva (the Health Services Corporation for the districts of Maresme and la Selva) concerning a decision refusing to admit that consortium to a tendering procedure relating to nuclear magnetic resonance services for healthcare centres managed by the Corporació de Salut del Maresme i la Selva.

Legal context

EU law

3 Recital 4 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 states:

‘Member States should ensure that the participation of a body governed by public law as a tenderer in a procedure for the award of a public contract does not cause any distortion of competition in relation to private tenderers.’

4 Article 1(8) of that directive provides as follows:

‘The terms “contractor”, “supplier” and “service provider” mean any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or bodies which offers on the market, respectively, the execution of works and/or a work, products or services.

The term “economic operator” shall cover equally the concepts of contractor, supplier and service provider. It is used merely in the interest of simplification.

5 Under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, which is entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

6 Article 52(1) of Directive 2004/18, which is entitled ‘Official lists of approved economic operators and certification by bodies established under public or private law’, provides:

‘1. Member States may introduce either official lists of approved contractors, suppliers or service providers or certification by certification bodies established [under] public or private law.

Member States shall adapt the conditions for registration on these lists and for the issue of certificates by certification bodies to the provisions of Article 45(1), Article 45(2)(a) to (d) and (g), Article 46, Article 47(1), (4) and (5), Article 48(1), (2), (5) and (6), Article 49 and, where appropriate, Article 50.

5. For any registration of economic operators of other Member States in an official list or for their certification by the bodies referred to in paragraph 1, no further proof or statements can be required other than those requested of national economic operators and, in any event, only those provided for under Articles 45 to 49 and, where appropriate, Article 50.

However, economic operators from other Member States may not be obliged to undergo such registration or certification in order to participate in a public contract. The contracting authorities shall recognise equivalent certificates from bodies established in other Member States. They shall also accept other equivalent means of proof.

6. Economic operators may ask at any time to be registered in an official list or for a certificate to be issued. They must be informed within a reasonably short period of time of the decision of the authority drawing up the list or of the competent certification body.

7 Article 2(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31; 'Directive 89/665'), provides:

'1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

2. The powers specified in paragraph 1 and Articles 2d and 2e may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

9. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article [267 TFEU] and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

The members of such an independent body shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office, and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.'

Spanish law

8 Under Article 40(1) and (6) of Royal Legislative Decree 3/2011 of 14 November 2014 adopting the consolidated text of the Law on Public Sector Contracts (Real Decreto Legislativo 3/2011, de 14 de noviembre, por el que se aprueba el texto refundido de la Ley de Contratos del Sector Público) ('Legislative Decree 3/2011'), the special appeal provided for in matters relating to public procurement, prior to commencement of an administrative-law action, is optional.

9 Article 62 of Legislative Decree 3/2011, which is entitled 'Suitability requirement', provides:

'1. In order to conclude contracts with the public sector, contractors must demonstrate that they have satisfied the minimum conditions regarding economic, financial and professional or technical suitability, as determined by the contracting authority. This requirement shall be replaced by the classification requirement where classification is prescribed by this Law.

2. The minimum conditions regarding suitability which must be met by the contractor and the documents that are required in order to demonstrate that suitability shall be stated in the contract notice and set out in greater detail in the contract documents. Those conditions must be related to the subject-matter of the contract and proportionate to it.'

10 Article 65 of Legislative Decree 3/2011, which is entitled ‘Requirement for classification’, provides:

‘1. In order to conclude contracts with public authorities for the performance of works contracts the estimated value of which is EUR 350 000 or more, or service contracts whose estimated value is EUR 120 000 or more, the contractor must, without fail, be duly classified. …

5. Public sector entities that are not public authorities may require that tenderers have a particular classification in order to define the conditions regarding suitability that must be met in order to conclude the contract concerned.’

11 Article 8 of Decree 221/2013 of the Generalitat de Catalunya, of 3 September 2013, concerning the establishment, organisation and functioning of the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic (Catalan Public Sector Contracts Board) (Diari Oficial de la Generalitat de Catalunya No 6454, of 5 September 2013), which is entitled ‘Personal status’, provides:

‘The personal status of the members of the Tribunal shall be as follows:

1. The members of the Tribunal shall be subject to the same rules on disqualification as senior civil servants of the Generalitat.

...

4. The members of the Tribunal shall be appointed on a permanent basis, although they may be dismissed or cease to hold office if any of the following occur:

– death;

– expiry of the term of office without renewal;

– resignation ...

– loss of the status of civil servant;

– serious breach of duty;

– inability to carry out duties …

– loss of nationality.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 The Maresme Health Consortium sought to participate in a tendering procedure for the award of nuclear magnetic resonance services for healthcare centres managed by the Corporació de Salut del Maresme i la Selva. The contract documents relating to the call for tenders required the tenderers to establish their capacity to contract by producing a certificate referred to as a ‘classification’ certificate.

13 When the evaluation committee opened the tenders, it found that the Maresme Health Consortium had not submitted the required certificate and asked the consortium to produce it. The consortium failed to produce the certificate but did provide a declaration whereby it undertook to allocate for the purposes of the relevant contract the resources of a commercial entity and also provided a declaration attesting to its status as a public entity. In those circumstances, the contracting authority, on 28 November 2013, notified the Maresme Health Consortium that it would not be admitted to the procedure as it had not remedied, in the manner required and within the time allowed, the defects in the documentation submitted.

14 On 10 December 2013 the Maresme Health Consortium brought the special appeal provided for in respect of public procurement matters, challenging the contracting authority's decision before the referring body. The consortium argued that, because of its status as a public authority, the requirement for a business classification does not apply to it. It has requested (i) that it be admitted to the tendering procedure in question and (ii) that that procedure be suspended.

15 In those circumstances, the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) For the purposes of Directive 2004/18, must public authorities be regarded as public entities?

(2) If so, for the purposes of Directive 2004/18, must public authorities be regarded as economic operators, and therefore as being permitted to participate in public tenders?

(3) If so, for the purposes of Directive 2004/18, may and must public authorities be included in the official lists of approved contractors, suppliers or service providers or be certified by certification bodies established under public or private law, known under Spanish law as a business classification system?

(4) For the purposes of Directive 2004/18, has Legislative Decree 3/2011 incorrectly transposed that directive into Spanish law, and if this is the case, has the Spanish legislature, through Articles 62 and 65 of that decree, limited the access of public authorities to the business classification registers?

(5) If public authorities may participate in tendering procedures but may not be accepted for business classification — in accordance with Directive 2004/18/EC — by what means may they establish their suitability to contract?'

Consideration of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

The Court's jurisdiction

16 Before addressing the questions raised, consideration must be given to whether the Court has jurisdiction to answer them.

17 As regards, first, the assessment of whether a body making a reference is a 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, which is a question governed by EU law alone, the Court will take account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent (see, inter alia, judgments in Vaassen-Göbbels, 61/65, EU:C:1966:39, and Umweltanwalt von Kärnten, C-205/08, EU:C:2009:767, paragraph 35 and the case-law cited). Thus, even though, as the order for reference indicates, the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic is regarded under Spanish law as an administrative body, that fact is not, in itself, conclusive for the purpose of the Court's assessment.

18 With regard (i) to the criteria concerning whether the body making the reference is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its procedure is inter partes and whether it applies rules of law, the documents before the Court contain nothing which suggests that the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic is not a 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU.

19 So far as (ii) the criterion of independence is concerned, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic acts as a third party in relation to the authority which adopted the decision challenged in the main proceedings (see judgments in Corbiau, C-24/92, EU:C:1993:118, paragraph 15, and Wilson, C-506/04, EU:C:2006:587, paragraph 49). In that regard, it would appear that the Tribunal carries out its functions in a wholly independent manner, not occupying a hierarchical or subordinate position in relation to any other body and not taking orders or instructions from any source whatsoever (see judgment in Torresi, C-58/13 and C-59/13, EU:C:2014:2088, paragraph 22); it is thus protected against external intervention or pressure liable to jeopardise the independent judgment of its members (judgments in Wilson, C-506/04, EU:C:2006:587, paragraph 51, and TDC, C-222/13, EU:2014:2265, paragraph 30).

20 Nor is it disputed that the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic complies, when performing its duties, with the requirement for objectivity and impartiality vis-à-vis the parties to the proceedings and their respective interests with regard to the subject-matter of those proceedings. Furthermore, under Article 8(4) of Decree 221/2013 of the Generalitat de Catalunya, the members of the Tribunal are appointed on a permanent basis and cease to hold office only in the circumstances expressly set out in Article 8 (see judgments in Wilson, C-506/04, EU:C:2006:587, paragraphs 52 and 53, and TDC, C-222/13, EU:2014:2265, paragraphs 31 and 32).

21 The referring body therefore satisfies the criterion of independence.

22 As regards (iii) whether the jurisdiction of the body making the reference is compulsory within the meaning of the Court's case-law on Article 267 TFEU, it is true that, under Article 40(6) of Legislative Decree 3/2011, the referring body's jurisdiction is optional. Thus, a person bringing proceedings in a public procurement case may choose between a special appeal to the referring body and an administrative-law action.

23 In this regard, it must nevertheless be observed that the decisions of the referring body, whose jurisdiction does not depend on the parties' agreement, are binding on the parties (see order in Merck Canada, C-555/13, EU:C:2014:92, paragraph 18 and the case-law cited; and judgment in Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta, C-377/13, EU:C:2014:1754, paragraph 28).

24 Moreover, the Spanish Government explained at the hearing that, in practice, tenderers in public procurement procedures do not generally avail themselves of the possibility of directly initiating an administrative-law action, without having first brought a special appeal of the kind in the main proceedings before the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic. Essentially, the administrative courts are thus, as a general rule, involved at second instance, with the result that, in the Autonomous Community of Catalonia, primary responsibility for ensuring that EU public procurement law is observed lies with the referring body.

25 In those circumstances, the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic also satisfies the criterion of compulsory jurisdiction.

26 Finally, it should be recalled that the Court, in assessing the legal status of the national bodies mentioned in Article 2(9) of Directive 89/665, which are responsible for reviewing the award of public contracts, has already confirmed the status as a 'court or tribunal' of a number of other national bodies that are in essence comparable to the referring body in the present case (see, inter alia, Dorsch Consult, C-54/96, EU:C:1997:413, paragraphs 22 to 38; Köllensperger and Atzwanger, C-103/97, EU:C:1999:52, paragraphs 16 to 25; and Bundesdruckerei, C-549/13, EU:C:2014:2235, paragraph 22 and the case-law cited).

27 The Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic therefore has the status of a 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU.

28 Secondly, the Spanish Government submits that the requirement for classification laid down by Spanish law does not apply to undertakings established in Member States other than the Kingdom of Spain. It argues that the questions referred are thus a purely internal matter and that it is not necessary either to apply or to interpret EU law in order to resolve them.

29 So far as this point is concerned, it must be recalled that the Court does not, in principle, have jurisdiction to reply to a question referred for a preliminary ruling where it is obvious that the rule of EU law referred to it for interpretation is incapable of applying (judgments in Caixa d'Estalvis i Pensions de Barcelona, C-139/12, EU:C:2014:174, paragraph 41, and Wojciechowski, C-408/14, EU:C:2015:591, paragraph 26; see, also, orders in Parva Investitsionna Banka and Others, C-488/13, EU:C:2014:2191, paragraph 26, and De Bellis and Others, C-246/14, EU:C:2014:2291, paragraph 14).

30 However, the fact that the requirement for classification at issue in the main proceedings does not apply to undertakings established in Member States other than the Kingdom of Spain does not affect the Court's jurisdiction. The Court has already held that nothing in Directives 89/665 and 2004/18 permits the inference that their applicability is dependent on the existence of an actual link with free movement between Member States. Those directives do not make the applicability of their provisions to procedures for the award of public contracts contingent on any condition relating to the nationality or the place of establishment of the tenderers (see, to that effect, judgment in Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 29).

31 Accordingly, the Court has jurisdiction to answer the questions referred.

The first and second questions

32 By its first and second questions, which it is appropriate to consider together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(8) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that the term 'economic operator' in the second subparagraph of that provision, encompasses public authorities and whether the latter may, on that account, participate in public tenders.

33 In that regard, it follows both from recital 4 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18, which explicitly mentions the possibility of a 'body governed by public law' participating as a tenderer in a procedure for the award of a public contract, and from Article 1(8) of the directive, which specifically acknowledges that any 'public entity' may have the status of 'economic operator', that Directive 2004/18 does not prevent public authorities from participating in tendering procedures.

34 Moreover, the Court has held that any person or entity which, in the light of the conditions laid down in a contract notice, believes that it is capable of carrying out the contract, either directly or by using subcontractors, is eligible to submit a tender or put itself forward as a candidate, regardless of whether it is governed by public law or private law, whether it is consistently active on the market or only on an occasional basis and whether or not it is subsidised by public funds (see judgments in CoNISMa, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 42, and, to that effect, Data Medical Service, C-568/13, EU:C:2014:2466, paragraph 35).

35 If and to the extent that certain entities are authorised to offer services in return for remuneration on the market, even occasionally, the Member States may not prevent those entities from participating in tendering procedures for the award of public contracts relating to the provision of those services (see, to that effect, judgments in CoNISMa, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807, paragraphs 47 to 49; Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 27; see also, to that effect, with regard to the corresponding provisions of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), judgment in Data Medical Service, C-568/13, EU:C:2014:2466, paragraph 36).

36 Consequently, the answer to the first and second questions is that Article 1(8) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that the term 'economic operator' in the second subparagraph of that provision encompasses public authorities, which may therefore participate in public tendering procedures if and to the extent that they are authorised to offer certain services in return for remuneration on a market.

The third question

37 By its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 52 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that national public authorities may be included in official lists of approved contractors, suppliers or service providers or certified by certification bodies established under public or private law.

38 As regards Member States which have chosen either to establish official lists of approved contractors, suppliers or service providers or to establish certification by certification bodies established under public or private law, it should be stated that although paragraphs 1 and 5 of Article 52 of Directive 2004/18 include certain requirements concerning the determination of the conditions for registration on those lists and for that certification, the directive does not establish (i) whether public entities may be registered on the official lists concerned or be certified or (ii) whether or not the registration or certification in question is compulsory.

39 However, as follows, in essence, from paragraph 36 of this judgment, public entities which, under national law, are authorised to offer the works, products or services covered by the contract notice concerned are also entitled to participate in public tendering procedures.

40 National rules which would bar public authorities that are authorised, as economic operators, to offer the works, products or services covered by the contract notice concerned from registration on the lists or from the certification in question, whilst reserving the right to participate in a tendering procedure to other economic operators which are registered on those lists or which benefit from certification, would negate the right of those public entities to participate in the tendering procedure concerned and therefore cannot be regarded as compatible with EU law.

41 Accordingly, the answer to the third question is that Article 52 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted to the effect that — although it includes certain requirements with regard to the determination of the conditions for registration of economic operators on the national official lists and for certification — it does not exhaustively define either (i) the conditions for registration of those economic operators on the national official lists or the conditions for their certification or (ii) the rights and obligations of public entities in that respect. In all events, Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding national rules under which, on the one hand, national public authorities that are authorised to offer the works, products or services covered by the contract notice concerned may not be registered on those lists, or may not obtain certification, while, on the other hand, the right to participate in the tendering procedure concerned is afforded only to operators which are included on those lists or which have obtained certification.

The fourth question

42 By its fourth question, the referring court asks whether Legislative Decree 3/2011 correctly transposed Directive 2004/18 into Spanish law and whether the Spanish legislature, through Articles 62 and 65 of that decree, limited the access of public authorities to the business classification registers.

43 In that regard, it must be recalled that, according to settled case-law, it is not for the Court, in preliminary ruling proceedings, to rule upon the compatibility of provisions of national law with EU law or to interpret national legislation or regulations (see, inter alia, Ascafor and Asidac, C-484/10, EU:C:2012:113, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

44 Consequently, the Court does not have jurisdiction to answer the fourth question.

The fifth question

45 By its fifth question, the referring court asks, in essence, by what means public authorities may — in the event that they are entitled to participate in public tendering procedures, but may not be registered on an official list of approved economic operators or certified by a certification body — establish their suitability to enter into a given contract under Directive 2004/18.

46 By that question, the referring court merely seeks, in the event of Spanish law having to be interpreted in conformity with EU law, an interpretation of Directive 2004/18 in general, without specifying whether, in its view, Spanish law cannot be interpreted in a manner consistent with EU law and, if not, why not. Nor does the referring court mention any specific provisions of that directive whose interpretation by the Court of Justice is necessary in order to enable it to give a decision in the case before it.

47 Consequently, this question does not fulfil the conditions laid down in Article 94(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, pursuant to which a request for a preliminary ruling must contain a statement of the reasons which prompted the referring court or tribunal to inquire about the interpretation of certain provisions of EU law, and the relationship between those provisions and the national legislation applicable to the main proceedings.

48 In those circumstances, the fifth question must be declared inadmissible.

Costs

49 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 1(8) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that the term 'economic operator' in the second subparagraph of that provision encompasses public authorities, which may therefore participate in public tendering procedures if and to the extent that they are authorised to offer certain services in return for remuneration on a market.

2. Article 52 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted to the effect that — although it includes certain requirements with regard to the determination of the conditions for registration of economic operators on the national official lists and for certification — it does not exhaustively define (i) the conditions for registration of those economic operators on the national official lists or the conditions for their certification or (ii) the rights and obligations of public entities in that respect. In all events, Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding national rules under which, on the one hand, national public authorities that are authorised to offer the works, products or services covered by the contract notice concerned may not be registered on those lists, or may not obtain certification, while, on the other hand, the right to participate in the tendering procedure concerned is afforded only to operators which are included on those lists or which have obtained certification.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
JÄÄSKINEN delivered on 7 July 2015 (1)

Case C-203/14

Consorci Sanitari del Maresme
v
Corporació de Salut del Maresme i la Selva

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic (Spain))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Jurisdiction of the Court — Concept of 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU — Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic — Compulsory jurisdiction of the referring body — Directive 89/665/EEC — Effect on the interpretation of Article 267 TFEU)

I – Introduction

1. The present case arises from a request for a preliminary ruling made by the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic (Spain) (Catalan Public Sector Contracts Board) in the context of a special administrative appeal relating to public procurement.

2. In the course of the proceedings before the Court of Justice, doubts arose concerning the Court's jurisdiction in light of the characteristics of the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic. Of the criteria established in the Court's case-law for deciding whether a body making a reference is a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, the criterion of the 'compulsory jurisdiction' of the referring body aroused the Court's concern in particular.

3. The Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic is in fact a specialised collegiate administrative body with jurisdiction to hear special appeals relating to public procurement matters. Being a specialised body, it is not a court stricto sensu under national law, although its decisions are final in so far as concerns administrative remedies. Moreover, bringing an appeal before that body is optional, which raises the question of whether it may be regarded as a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU. That question requires the Court to interpret, in particular, its complex case-law relating to the 'compulsory jurisdiction' of the referring body.

4. In accordance with the request made by the Court following its decision to open the oral procedure and the reallocation of the case, this Opinion will specifically address this criterion of the 'compulsory jurisdiction' of the referring body, which the Court wishes to consider in particular, and briefly examine the remaining criteria. I shall therefore not deal with the substantive questions asked by the referring body.

II – Facts and procedure before the Court

5. The Consorci Sanitari del Maresme wished to participate in the tendering procedure relating to nuclear magnetic resonance services organised by the Corporació de Salut del Maresme i la Selva. On 10 December 2013, it brought a special appeal before the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic challenging the decision of the assessment board of the contracting authority, so that it might be admitted to the tendering procedure. (2)

6. In the context of that special appeal, the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic decided to refer five questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling. (3)

7. By decision of 13 January 2015, the Court referred the case to the Sixth Chamber and decided, pursuant to Article 76(2) of its Rules of Procedure, not to hold a hearing. The Court also decided that the case would be determined without the Opinion of an Advocate General.

8. However, the judicial status of the body making the request for a preliminary ruling gave rise to uncertainty regarding the Court's jurisdiction.

9. Accordingly, on 9 February 2015, the Court requested clarification from the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic, which replied by letter of 12 February 2015, received at the Court on 17 February 2015.

10. The Court took the view that it was necessary for it to hear detailed argument on whether the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic could be regarded as a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU and reallocated the case to the Grand Chamber. The Court decided that it was necessary to organise a hearing in order to permit the parties to express their views, if any, on the admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling made by the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic and consequently ordered the reopening of the oral procedure for the purpose of examining its jurisdiction in this case.

11. The hearing was held on 12 May 2015 in the presence of the Spanish Government and the European Commission. The Italian Government, which had submitted written observations on the substantive questions, was not represented at the hearing.

III – The Court's jurisdiction to give a ruling on the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

A – Observations on the legal framework

12. According to the settled case-law of the Court, in order to determine whether a body making a reference is a 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, the Court takes account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent. (4) Moreover, a national court may refer a question to the Court only if there is a case pending before it and if it is called upon to give judgment in proceedings intended to lead to a decision of a judicial nature. (5)

13. It must be emphasised in this connection that the fact that a national body is not described as a court or tribunal stricto sensu under national law is not in itself conclusive, since the notion of a 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU is an autonomous concept of EU law. Indeed, the Court has held that that concept may also include bodies that are not courts or tribunals under national law (6) and are not part of the judicial system of a Member State. (7) Thus, the Court attaches importance not to the formal designation of the body in question, but rather to its substantive characteristics, (8) and this calls for an assessment of the structural and functional characteristics of the referring body.

14. At the hearing, the Spanish Government confirmed that the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic is a 'review body' within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 2(9) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, (9) which may, according to that provision, be non-judicial in character. (10) It is also clear from the information provided to the Court that decisions of the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic conclude the 'administrative proceedings'.

15. In my view, those aspects derived from national law are not conclusive if the characteristics of the referring body demonstrate that it fulfils the criteria established in the case-law of the Court in order to be regarded as a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, that is to say, the criteria which I mentioned in point 12 of this Opinion.

16. In so far as concerns the particular legal framework for public procurement, in view of the importance of this area for the internal market, and in particular for the observance of the fundamental freedoms of movement, the EU legislature has harmonised national law in this field to a large extent. Exceptionally, the judicial protection afforded to individuals has also been substantially harmonised by the provisions of Directive 89/665 and consequently that is no longer a matter solely for the procedural autonomy of the Member States, as limited by the principles of effectiveness and equivalence. (11)

17. Accordingly, the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides that the Member States are to take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of Directive 89/665 where such decisions have infringed EU law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law. Such remedies may include actions before national courts as well as applications to quasi-judicial bodies as referred to in the first subparagraph of Article 2(9) of Directive 89/665.

18. Given that, the question arises of whether account must be taken, when interpreting the concept of a 'court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU, of the fact that the body in question has been established in order to enable the Member State to fulfil its obligations under Directive 89/665. In fact, it is often such bodies of a quasi-judicial nature that are called upon to interpret EU public procurement law, often almost exclusively so, where their decisions are not in practice appealed before an ordinary court.

19. It should be noted that, in its case-law on the interpretation of Article 267 TFEU, which has been established in judgments for the most part handed down after the adoption of Directive 89/665, the Court has already applied the criteria for defining a 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU in a flexible fashion. (12) This has enabled a variety of review bodies, including bodies created by the Member States in the public procurement sector, to refer questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling. (13) Adopting this flexible approach to its requirements for considering a body to be a 'court or tribunal', the Court has also held to be a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU administrative bodies that act at last instance in various fields of EU law. (14)

20. Since the Court has, it seems to me, already adopted in this area an interpretation of Article 267 TFEU that is sufficiently flexible to ensure that provisions of EU law are interpreted uniformly at national level, I take the view that the provisions of Directive 89/665 and the fact that the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic has express jurisdiction in public procurement matters have no particular bearing on the application of Article 267 TFEU to the present case.

B – The recognised criteria, other than the 'compulsory jurisdiction' of the referring body, for determining whether a referring body is a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU

1. The establishment by law and the permanence of the body

21. As regards the question whether the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic was established by law, it is clear both from the reply which that body gave to the Court's request for information and from the submissions made by the Spanish Government at the hearing that the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic was created by the Autonomous Community of Catalonia in the exercise of the special legislative competence provided for under Spanish law. (15)

22. The Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic was originally established as a single-member body named the 'Órgano Administrativo de Recursos Contractuales de Cataluña' (the Administrative Body for Contractual Appeals of Catalonia) by the fourth additional provision of Law 7/2011 of 27 July 2011 on fiscal and financial measures. (16) Because of the increasing volume and special nature of the cases falling within the competence of the Órgano Administrativo de Recursos Contractuales de Cataluña, it was transformed into a collegiate body, named the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic, by Decree 221/2013 of 3 September 2013. (17) That decree contains provisions concerning, in particular, the establishment, jurisdiction and composition of the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic. Thus, the criterion of the body's establishment by law is clearly satisfied.

23. Moreover, as a component in the system for judicial resolution of disputes in the area of public procurement, the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic satisfies the requirement for permanence. (18) Indeed, although the members of that body are appointed for a renewable term of five years, (19) it is nevertheless permanent as a body governed by public law and therefore not an ad hoc body convened for the purposes of an individual dispute.

2. Inter partes procedure and the application of rules of law

24. As regards, first of all, the inter partes nature of the procedure initiated by special application to the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic, it must be recalled at the outset that the requirement that the procedure be inter partes is not an absolute requirement. (20) However, in accordance with Article 46 of Royal Legislative Decree 3/2011, the parties do have the opportunity to make submissions and present evidence to the body having jurisdiction to settle the dispute. In so far as the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic is concerned, in accordance with Article 14 of Decree 221/2013, the procedure applicable to special appeals in public procurement matters is governed by the basic rules of the legislation relating to public procurement, by the rules implementing that legislation, by the procedural rules set out in Decree 221/2013 and by the legal rules governing public authorities and general administrative procedure.

25. Moreover, since in special appeals in public procurement matters the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic clearly has before it cases involving a contracting authority as respondent and a tenderer as appellant, I consider that the requirement that the procedure be inter partes is satisfied in this case.

26. Secondly according to the information provided by the referring body itself, it carries out reviews of the legality of decisions in public procurement matters. It must be borne in mind that bodies such as the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic have been established in Spain in order to fulfil the obligations arising under Directive 89/665, in particular the obligation to ensure that decisions taken by contracting authorities in procedures for the award of public contracts are amenable to effective review on the ground of infringement of EU public procurement law or national rules transposing that law. Thus, the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic, as a body having jurisdiction to hear such actions, clearly applies rules of law.

3. Independence

27. In accordance with the case-law of the Court, the concept of independence, which is inherent in the task of adjudication, implies above all that the body in question acts as a third party in relation to the authority which adopted the contested decision. (21) There are two aspects to that concept. The first aspect, which is external, entails the body being protected against external intervention or pressure liable to jeopardise the independent judgment of its members as regards proceedings before them. The second aspect, which is internal, is linked to impartiality and seeks to ensure a level playing field for the parties to the proceedings and their respective interests with regard to the subject-matter of those proceedings. That aspect requires objectivity and the absence of any interest in the outcome of the proceedings apart from the strict application of the rule of law. (22)

28. Those guarantees of independence and impartiality require rules — particularly as regards the composition of the body and the appointment and length of service of its members and the grounds for the withdrawal, rejection and removal of its members — in order to dismiss any reasonable doubt in the minds of individuals as regards the imperviousness of that body to external factors and its neutrality with respect to the interests before it. (23) The condition regarding the independence of the body making the reference is regarded, in case-law, as being met only if the grounds for the removal of members of that body are determined by express legislative provisions. (24)

29. It seems to me that the requirements for the independence of the referring body are satisfied in this case. Indeed, Article 2 of Decree 221/2013, which is entitled 'Legal nature' and concerns the establishment of the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic, provides that '[t]he Tribunal is a specialised collegiate administrative body. In exercising its powers it shall act in a wholly independent manner and with complete objectivity and impartiality. It shall have no hierarchical superiors and shall not receive instructions from any relevant public authorities'.

30. As regards the composition of the referring body, Article 5 of Decree 221/2013 provides that it is to be composed of a chairman and two persons sitting as assessors, who are appointed by the person responsible for the competent service for establishing the criteria for, and directing and monitoring the award of public contracts. The requirements which must be satisfied in order to be a member are listed in Article 6 of Decree 221/2013. I would point out that members are appointed for a renewable term of five years, (25) during which period the officials appointed as members of the Tribunal remain on secondment, that is to say, they devote themselves entirely to their duties within the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic. (26) Under Article 8(4) of Decree 221/2013, the members of the Tribunal are appointed on a permanent basis. However, they may be dismissed or have their appointment revoked on certain grounds expressly set out in Article 8. (27) Article 11 of Decree 221/2013 contains the specific rules governing the reasons for the withdrawal or rejection of members.

31. Although there is a connection between the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic and 'the competent service for establishing the criteria for, and directing and monitoring the award of public contracts', it has no hierarchical superiors and does not receive instructions from any relevant public authorities. (28) When reaching decisions, the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic acts as a third party in relation to the interests at stake and possesses the necessary impartiality. (29)

32. Lastly, it must be observed that the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic does not have the status of defendant in the event that its decisions are challenged. (30) Admittedly, the decisions and acts of the Tribunal may form the subject-matter of an administrative-law action, but that is a case of judicial protection at second instance and does not deprive the decisions of that body of their judicial nature for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU. The decisions of the referring body cannot be the subject of administrative review. (31)

33. In my view, the referring body thus fulfils the criterion of independence as established in the case-law of the Court.

C – The 'compulsory jurisdiction' of the referring body

34. It was the issue of the 'compulsory jurisdiction' of the referring body, within the meaning of the case-law on Article 267 TFEU, that first aroused the Court's concern regarding the status of the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic as a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU. I would point out that the essential question in this regard is whether the fact that an appeal to the referring body is not the only available remedy means that, notwithstanding the legally binding force of its decisions, that body cannot be regarded as a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU.

35. It is in fact clear from the information before the Court that an appeal to the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic is an alternative remedy. According to that body, an applicant may choose (32) between bringing a special appeal before the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic and commencing an administrative-law action. That decision will bind the authority, which has no power to override it. (33) On the other hand, in the particular sectors governed by Law 31/2007 of 30 October 2007 on procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, (34) the option of directly initiating an administrative-law action does not exist. In those sectors, therefore, the special appeal is not an alternative, since it is necessary for a dispute to be brought before a review body, such as the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic, before proceedings may be commenced before the ordinary administrative court having jurisdiction.

36. In the present case, the dispute in the main proceedings does not relate to one of the particular sectors governed by Law 31/2007, which I mentioned in point 35 of this Opinion, and it therefore seems to me that the normal regime must apply.

37. It is important to bear in mind that the question whether a body is entitled to refer a question to the Court of Justice is determined on the basis of criteria relating both to the constitution of that body and to its function. In that connection, a national body may be classified as 'a court or tribunal of a Member State', within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, when it is performing judicial functions, but when it is exercising other functions, of an administrative nature, for example, it cannot be recognised as such. (35) It follows that, in order to establish whether a national body that is entrusted by law with functions of a different nature is to be regarded as a 'court or tribunal of a Member State', within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, it is necessary to determine in what specific capacity it is acting within the particular legal context in which it seeks a ruling from the Court. (36)

38. Like the other criteria for determining whether a body is a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, the criterion of the 'compulsory jurisdiction' of the body has been developed in the Court's case-law. However, it must be observed that the use of this concept in the Court's case-law has not always been very consistent. Frequently, the Court has not referred to the criterion expressly and, in the French language at least, the use of this concept is not without its difficulties. I believe that the 'compulsory jurisdiction' of the referring body was used for the first time, as a concept, in the judgment in Dorsch Consult, (37) although similar expressions had been used prior to that in order to support the finding that the referring body was indeed a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU. (38)

39. In its judgment in Dorsch Consult, (39) the Court identified two aspects of the 'compulsory' nature of the body's jurisdiction: first, the body dealing with the case in fact offered the only remedy available and, secondly, its determinations were binding. (40) In that case, however, it was unnecessary for the Court to give a clear and precise definition of the criterion or to give preference to one or other meaning, since the jurisdiction of the body in question was 'compulsory' in both senses. (41)

40. Like Advocates General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer, Kokott and Szpunar, I believe that the word 'compulsory' refers more to the fact that the decisions of the referring body have binding force rather than to the fact that the body in question offers the only legal remedy available. (42)

41. Indeed, in its judgment in Emanuel, (43)the Court regarded as a court or tribunal of a Member State, within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, the person appointed to hear appeals against trade mark registration decisions, who shared that jurisdiction with an ordinary court and to whom an appeal was referred at the appellant's discretion, in that he was entitled to choose the jurisdiction before which he brought his appeal. The decisions of the appointed person had binding force. (44)

42. Similarly, in its judgment in Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta, (45) the Court regarded as 'compulsory' the jurisdiction of the Tribunal Arbitral Tributário (Portugal), which offered an alternative means of resolving tax disputes and whose decisions were binding on the parties. In taxation matters, as in the case which gave rise to that judgment, the taxable person could decide either to bring proceedings before an administrative court or to request the constitution of a tax arbitration tribunal, and the tax authorities had to comply with that decision. Therefore, tax arbitration was not an additional legal remedy in the hands of the taxable person, but a genuine alternative to the traditional courts. (46)

43. It is therefore clear from the abovementioned judgments that, according to the Court, the existence of an alternative remedy to court proceedings stricto sensu does not necessarily mean that the body offering that alternative remedy cannot be regarded as a 'court or tribunal of a Member State' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU. (47) The alternative remedy may be different in nature from traditional remedies, just as arbitration in tax matters is different from an action before an administrative court. While the existence of a single remedy has been mentioned in a number of the Court's judgments, where the remedy at issue was effectively the only remedy available, the Court has never taken the view that a referring body could not be regarded as a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU solely on the ground that, as regards the matter at issue, various remedies were available. (48)

44. Moreover, it seems to me that, since the beginning, the Court has relied on this criterion in order to exclude private arbitration tribunals in the usual sense, even if it did not refer to the criterion of ‘compulsory jurisdiction’ as such. (49) According to the case-law, an arbitration tribunal constituted pursuant to an agreement between the parties is not a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU since the parties are under no obligation, in law or in fact, to refer their disputes to arbitration and the public authorities of the Member State concerned are neither involved in the decision to opt for arbitration nor required to intervene of their own accord in the proceedings before the arbitrator. (50) However, the Court has held admissible questions referred to it for a preliminary ruling by an arbitration tribunal where that tribunal had been established by law, its decisions were binding on the parties and its jurisdiction did not depend on their agreement. (51)

45. Consequently, the fact that the decisions of the referring body have binding force is indeed a necessary requirement in order for that body to be regarded as a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU. However, that fact alone does not render the jurisdiction of the referring body ‘compulsory’ within the meaning of the case-law on Article 267 TFEU. For that, it is also necessary for the body in question to be a body established by law whose jurisdiction is independent of the wishes of the parties. (52) I would reiterate that, in my view, it is not necessary, however, for an action or appeal before such a body to be the only available remedy.

46. If the converse view were taken, then, in theory, a question could arise as to the ‘compulsory jurisdiction’ of the Spanish administrative courts in the context of administrative-law actions relating to public procurement brought directly before them, as ordinary administrative courts. It seems to me that, in such a situation, it would not then be possible to regard the jurisdiction of an administrative court as ‘compulsory’ because an administrative-law action would not be the only remedy available. (53)

47. For my part, it seems that the advantages of interpreting Article 267 TFEU in such a way that a referring body such as the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic may be regarded as a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State’, despite the availability of alternative remedies, outweigh the possible disadvantages. Indeed, the ability to choose between several legal remedies enables individuals to choose the remedy that seems to them to be the most appropriate in the circumstances. (54) The bodies responsible for specialised appeals, as is the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic in public procurement matters, may have considerable expertise, allowing them to settle disputes brought before them rapidly and expertly. It is possible, however, even in public procurement matters, that certain cases centre upon questions of general administrative law. In such cases an obligation to refer the matter to a specialised body would be unhelpful if the ordinary administrative courts were better qualified to settle the dispute. (55)

48. It should be noted that the decisions of the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic are binding on the parties and enforceable. (56) They therefore have the same effects as decisions handed down by administrative courts of first instance, even though proceedings are brought before a corresponding higher administrative court. It seems to me that, where no action is brought before an administrative court, a decision of the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic will constitute a final and binding solution of a dispute between a contracting authority and a tenderer. (57) Its decisions therefore have an authority comparable to the effect of the principle of res judicata.

49. It follows from all the foregoing that the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic, a specialised collegiate administrative body created by national legislation, whose statutory jurisdiction is independent of the wishes of the parties and whose decisions are binding, fulfils the criteria laid down in the case-law in order to be regarded as a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU. A case is pending before it and it is called upon to rule in proceedings intended to lead to a decision of a judicial nature. Therefore, the Court has jurisdiction to answer the questions referred to it by that body for a preliminary ruling and the request for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

IV – Conclusion

50. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the Court of Justice declare that it has jurisdiction to answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic.

15 – It is clear from the information provided by the referring body that, in Spain, the bodies specialising in matters concerning public procurement were created by Royal Legislative Decree 3/2011 of 14 November 2011 adopting the consolidated text of the Law on Public Sector Contracts (Boletín Oficial del Estado, No 276 of 16 November 2011, p. 117729, hereinafter 'Royal Legislative Decree 3/2011'). Royal Legislative Decree 3/2011 created the Tribunal Administrativo Central de Recursos Contractuales (the central body) and conferred power on the Autonomous Communities to create corresponding review bodies in the Autonomous Communities.

17 – Decree 221/2013 on the establishment, organisation and functioning of the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic (Diari Oficial de la Generalitat de Catalunya No 6454 of 5 September 2013). According to the Spanish Government, these rules govern the organisation and functioning of the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic in exactly the same way as the rules which govern the Tribunal Administrativo Central de Recursos Contractuales, laid down in Royal Legislative Decree 3/2011.

18 – Regarding this criterion of permanance, see, in particular, the judgment in Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:1754, paragraphs 25 and 26) and the Opinion of Advocate General Léger in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (C-44/96, EU:C:1997:402, paragraph 38).

21 – Judgments in Corbiau (C-24/92, EU:C:1993:118, paragraph 15); Wilson (C-506/04, EU:C:2006:587, paragraph 49); RTL Belgium (C-517/09, EU:C:2010:821, paragraph 38); and TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:2265, paragraph 29).

22 – Judgments in Wilson (C-506/04, EU:C:2006:587, paragraphs 51 and 52 and the case-law cited); RTL Belgium (C-517/09, EU:C:2010:821, paragraphs 39 and 40); and TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:2265, paragraphs 30 and 31).

23 – Judgments in Wilson (C-506/04, EU:C:2006:587, paragraph 53 and the case-law cited), and TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:2265, paragraph 32).

24 – Judgment in TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:2265, paragraph 32), and order in Pilato (C-109/07, EU:C:2008:274, paragraph 24). However, it should be noted that, in its judgment in Köllensperger and Atzwanger (C-103/97, EU:C:1999:52, paragraphs 20 to 25), the Court abandoned that requirement and held the body making the reference to be a court or tribunal of a Member State despite the lack of specific provisions on challenges to or withdrawals by members.

25 – See point 23 of this Opinion.

26 – It should be noted that, in its judgment in Dorsch Consult (C-54/96, EU:C:1997:413), the Court regarded as a court or tribunal of a Member State a Federal Supervisory Board whose ‘civil servant’ members were also members of the national administrative authority responsible for competition matters and simultaneously performed both functions (see the Opinion of Advocate General Tesauro in Dorsch Consult (C-54/96, EU:C:1997:245, points 33 and 34)).

27 – It also seems to me that the guarantees that the ‘civil servant’ members in the case in Dorsch Consult (C-54/96, EU:C:1997:413) could not be removed from office were weaker than those in the present case, which are set out in Article 8(4) of Decree 221/2013.

28 – See Articles 1 and 2 of Decree 221/2013.

29 – Judgments in RTL Belgium (C-517/09, EU:C:2010:821, paragraph 47); Epitropos tou Elegktikou Synedriou (C-363/11, EU:C:2012:825, paragraph 21); and TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:2265, paragraph 37).

30 – See judgments in Corbiau (C-24/92, EU:C:1993:118, paragraphs 16 and 17); Belov (C-394/11, EU:C:2013:48, paragraphs 49 and 51); and TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:2265, paragraph 37); and order in MF 7 (C-49/13, EU:C:2013:767, paragraph 19).

31 – See Article 29 of Decree 221/2013. See also, in this connection, the judgment in Westbahn Management (C-136/11, EU:C:2012:740, paragraph 30), in which the Court regarded as a court or tribunal of a Member State within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU the Schienen-Control Kommission (Austrian Rail Supervisory Commission), which is governed by the ordinary law of administrative procedure and whose decision cannot be set aside by administrative decisions but may be the subject of proceedings before the Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Higher Administrative Court). The Court adopted a similar approach, inter alia, in its judgment in Österreichischer Rundfunk (C-195/06, EU:C:2007:613, paragraphs 20 to 22). See, on this point, the Opinion of Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer in Österreichischer Rundfunk (C-195/06, EU:C:2007:303, points 32 and 34).

32 – According to the Spanish Government, a draft law, which has already been made public, removes this option. If the draft law is approved, it will become necessary first to bring a special appeal before a review body, such as the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic.

33 – According to the Spanish Government, this option is thus available only to the tenderer and never to the contracting authority, which cannot override the tenderer's decision. However, that factor is not conclusive, inasmuch as the fact that a defendant (the contracting authority) is obliged to accept the applicant's (the tenderer's) choice of forum is an inherent part of jurisdiction (see, to that effect, the Opinion of Advocate General Szpunar in Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:246, point 39 and the case-law cited)). On the other hand, it appears to me that the contractor's entitlement to choose between bringing a special appeal before the referring body and initiating an administrative-law action means that the contractor itself will be bound by that decision as well as the authority, since the special appeal will become compulsory for the parties. It therefore seems to me that the special appeal is a procedure to which lis pendens may apply, even though that has not been expressly stated in the information furnished to the Court. The principle of lis pendens is a general procedural principle according to which proceedings are not admissible if the same matter is also sub judice elsewhere (judgments in France v Parliament (358/85 and 51/86, EU:C:1988:431, paragraph 12); Italy v Commission (C-138/03, C-324/03 and C-431/03, EU:C:2005:714, paragraph 64); and Diputación Foral de Vizcaya and Others v Commission (C-465/09 P to C-470/09 P, EU:C:2011:372, paragraph 58); and the Opinion of Advocate General Kokott in Belov (C-394/11, EU:C:2012:585, point 43)).

In the judgment in Vaassen-Göbbels (61/65, EU:C:1966:39), the persons in question were 'bound to take any disputes ... to the [referring body] as the proper judicial body'. In Advocate General Gand's Opinion in Vaassen-Göbbels (61/65, EU:C:1966:25), the expression 'sole tribunal' was used. See also, in this connection, the Opinion of Advocate General Léger in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (C-44/96, EU:C:1997:402, points 36, 37 and 40), and also footnote 40 to this Opinion.

39 – C-54/96, EU:C:1997:413.

40 – The Opinion of Advocate General Léger in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (C-44/96, EU:C:1997:402, point 36) offers a similar interpretation of the criterion prior to the judgment in Dorsch Consult (C-54/96, EU:C:1997:413). According to that Opinion, among the criteria to be considered were the existence of a ‘compulsory reference to the body in the event of a dispute’ and of ‘competence to resolve disputes by adopting a binding decision’. In its judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (C-44/96, EU:C:1998:4), the Court did not address the question of admissibility, but, on examining the questions referred, implicitly regarded the referring body as a ‘court or tribunal of a Member State’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU.

41 – Judgment in Dorsch Consult (C-54/96, EU:C:1997:413, paragraphs 28 and 29). In its judgment in Gabalfrisa and Others (C-110/98 to C-147/98, EU:C:2000:145, paragraphs 35 and 36), the Court again gave consideration to these two aspects of compulsory jurisdiction, both of which were present. Similarly, in its judgment in Torresi (C-58/13 and C-59/13, EU:C:2014:2088, paragraph 20), the Court found to be ‘compulsory’ the jurisdiction of a body whose jurisdiction was laid down by statute and was not optional and whose decisions were enforceable. Once again, the two aspects were present. See also, in this connection, the judgment in Almelo (C-393/92, EU:C:1994:171, paragraph 21), and the Opinion of Advocate General Darmon in Almelo (C-393/92, EU:C:1994:42, points 30 and 32); the Opinion of Advocate General Kokott in Belov (C-394/11, EU:C:2012:585, point 47), and the Opinion of Advocate General Bot in TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:1979, point 31).

---

42 – See the Opinion of Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer in Emanuel (C-259/04, EU:C:2006:50, point 29); the Opinion of Advocate General Kokott in Belov (C-394/11, EU:C:2012:585, points 48 and 49); and the Opinion of Advocate General Szpunar in Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:246, point 40). The Court regarded as a court or tribunal of a Member State, within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, the bodies in question in its judgment in Emanuel (C-259/04, EU:C:2006:215), and Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:1754). In its judgment in Belov (C-394/11, EU:C:2013:48, paragraph 54), the question of the ‘compulsory jurisdiction’ of the referring body was not examined because its decision were not judicial in nature.

---

---

44 – In addition, the decisions of the appointed person were, in principle, final, subject exceptionally to an application for judicial review (judgment in Emanuel, C-259/04, EU:C:2006:215, paragraphs 21 to 25).

---

45 – C-377/13, EU:C:2014:1754.

---

46 – Judgment in Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:1754, paragraph 29). See also the Opinion of Advocate General Szpunar in Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:246, points 38 to 40). Also, in its judgment in Broekmeulen (246/80, EU:C:1981:218), the Court allowed a question referred for a preliminary ruling from a professional body even though the applicant had the alternative possibility of bringing the case before an ordinary court. However, it should be noted that that alternative had never been used in practice (see paragraphs 15 and 17 of that judgment). Moreover, in the case which gave rise to the judgment in TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:2265), the economic operator was, in theory, free either to appeal to the Teleklagenævnet, a permanent public dispute resolution body, or to bring an action directly before the courts exercising general jurisdiction. According to Advocate General Bot, the existence of that choice did not preclude the Teleklagenævnet from being recognised as exercising compulsory jurisdiction (Opinion of Advocate General Bot in TDC (C-222/13, EU:C:2014:1979, points 33 and 38)). However, the Court did not examine whether the Teleklagenævnet’s jurisdiction was compulsory because it did not meet the criterion of independence (paragraph 38 of the judgment).

47 – Admittedly, in its recent order in Emmeci (C-427/13, EU:C:2014:2121, paragraphs 28 to 31), the Court took into account the optional nature of the remedy and held that the referring body could not be regarded as a court or tribunal of a Member State within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU. However, it must be emphasised that, in that case, the decisions of the referring body were not binding and consequently its jurisdiction was in no way compulsory in the sense ascribed to that term in the judgment in Dorsch Consult (C-54/96, EU:C:1997:413). The same situation pertained in the case which gave rise to the order in Cafom and Samsung (C-161/03, EU:C:2003:413, paragraphs 14 and 15).

48 – See, in this connection, footnotes 41 and 47 of this Opinion. Nevertheless, at the hearing, the Commission asserted that interpreting this case-law a contrario could result in the conclusion that it is necessary for the legal remedy in question to be the only reasonable remedy. According to the Commission, account would nevertheless have to be taken of the particular legal context in which the referring body sought a ruling from the Court of Justice (judgment in Belov (C-394/11, EU:C:2013:48, paragraph 41)) in order to avoid such an interpretation. In any event, I do not think that an interpretation a contrario of this point is possible, since the Court has never stated that the list of criteria established in the case-law is exhaustive. It has, on the other hand, already held that the inter partes nature of the procedure is not an absolute requirement (see point 24 of this Opinion).

---

49 – However, in its judgment in Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:1754, paragraph 27), the Court confirmed that this criterion was relied on in its case-law relating to arbitration tribunals appointed by contract.

---

50 – Judgments in Nordsee (102/81, EU:C:1982:107, paragraphs 10 to 12); Denuit and Cordenier (C-125/04, EU:C:2005:69, paragraphs 13 and 16 and the case-law cited); and Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:1754, paragraph 27). See also the order in Merck Canada (C-555/13, EU:C:2014:92, paragraph 17).

---

51 – Judgments in Handels- og Kontorfunktionærernes Forbund i Danmark (109/88, EU:C:1989:383, paragraphs 7 to 9) and Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:1754, paragraphs 28 and 29). See also the order in Merck Canada (C-555/13, EU:C:2014:92, paragraphs 18 and 19).

---

52 – See, to that effect, the judgment in Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:1754, paragraph 29).

---

53 – See, to that effect, the Opinion of Advocate General Kokott in Belov (C-394/11, EU:C:2012:585, point 48). On the other hand, if an administrative-law action were brought only after a decision had been given by a special body, such as the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic, the problem would not arise because, at that stage, the action before the ordinary administrative courts would unquestionably be compulsory. Nevertheless, it should be noted that, according to the Spanish Government, the decisions of review bodies such as the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic are rarely appealed before the administrative courts and thus the decisions of such review bodies are often final.

---

54 – It should not be forgotten that, in civil matters, alternative jurisdictions may exist. See, for examples, Articles 7 and 8 of Regulation (EU) No 1215/2012 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 12 December 2012 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (OJ 2012 L 351, p.1), which list a number of alternative fora in civil matters.

---

55 – On the specialisation of courts, see the Opinion of Advocate General Szpunar in Ascendi Beiras Litoral e Alta, Auto Estradas das Beiras Litoral e Alta (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:246, point 50).

---

56 – In accordance with Article 26 of Decree 221/2013, the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic may find that a determination made by a contracting authority is unlawful and, where appropriate, annul it and also order the contracting authority to pay compensation to the party concerned for damage suffered. It also has substantive jurisdiction to decide on the adoption of provisional measures before a special appeal in a public procurement matter is lodged and to resolve questions relating to invalidity that are based on specific cases in which contracts are null and void.

---

57 – I would reiterate that, according to the Spanish Government, such decisions are rarely appealed (see point 53 of this Opinion).

ORDER OF THE COURT (Grand Chamber)

24 April 2015 (*)

(Opening of the oral procedure — Holding of a hearing)

In Case C-203/14,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic (Spain), made by decision of 25 March 2014, received at the Court on 23 April 2014, in the proceedings

v

Corporació de Salut del Maresme i la Selva,

THE COURT (Grand Chamber), composed of V. Skouris, President, K. Lenaerts, Vice-President, A. Tizzano, R. Silva de Lapuerta, T. von Danwitz, A. Ó Caoimh, J.-C. Bonichot, C. Vajda, S. Rodin, Presidents of Chambers, A. Arabadjiev, M. Berger (Rapporteur), E. Jarašiūnas, C.G. Fernlund, J.L. da Cruz Vilaça and F. Biltgen, Judges, Advocate General: N. Jääskinen,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

after hearing the Advocate General, makes the following

Order

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(8) and 52 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made following a special application in procurement proceedings lodged by the Consorci Sanitari del Maresme (Maresme Health Consortium) seeking, firstly, annulment of the decision of the procurement board of the Corporació de Salut del Maresme i la Selva (Maresme i la Selva Health Corporation) by which it refused to admit the Consorci Sanitari del Maresme to the procurement procedure for the award of contracts concerning nuclear magnetic resonance services for healthcare centres managed by the Corporació de Salut del Maresme i la Selva and, secondly, the admission of that consortium to the procurement procedure.

3 By a decision of 13 January 2015, the Court referred the case to the Sixth Chamber and decided, by application of Article 76(2) of its Rules of Procedure, not to hold a hearing. Furthermore, it decided that the case would be determined without an Opinion of the Advocate General.

4 Since doubts arose as to the jurisdiction of the Court, on 9 February 2015, it sent a request for clarification to the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic (Catalan Public Sector Contracts Court). That court answered that request by letter of 12 February 2015, received at the Court on 17 February 2015.

5 Having regard to the clarifications provided by the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic, the Court considers that it is necessary for it to hear detailed argument. It decided to reallocate this case to the Grand Chamber, which will rule after the Advocate General has presented his Opinion.

6 It is apparent from those clarifications that the special application in procurement proceedings, the subject-matter of the main proceedings, is optional in nature, that the decision by which a ruling is given on that application brings the administrative proceedings to an end and that, subsequently, that decision may be subject to appeal in ordinary contentious administrative proceedings (‘contencioso-administrativo’).

7 The question arises whether the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic satisfies the criteria laid down by the case-law of the Court in order to be regarded as a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU.

8 The Court considers, accordingly, that it is necessary to organise a hearing in order to permit the interested persons and bodies referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union to express their views, if any, on the question set out in paragraph 7 of this order.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby orders:

1. The oral procedure in Case C-203/14 shall be opened.

2. The date of the hearing shall be fixed by a separate document.

3. The interested persons and bodies referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union shall be invited to express their views, if any, on whether the Tribunal Català de Contractes del Sector Públic (Spain) satisfies the criteria laid down in the case-law of the Court in order to be regarded as a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU.

4. The costs are reserved.

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts

(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), and of Article 13(1) of Council Directive 2006/112/EC of 28 November 2006 on the common system of value added tax (OJ 2006 L 347, p. 1).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Saudaçor — Sociedade Gestora de Recursos e Equipamentos da Saúde dos Açores SA ('Saudaçor') and the Fazenda Pública (Public Treasury) concerning that company's liability to value added tax (VAT) in respect of its activities concerning the planning and management of the health service of the Autonomous Region of the Azores ('the RAA').

Legal context

EU law

3 Directive 2006/112 repealed and replaced, with effect from 1 January 2007, the existing Community VAT legislation, in particular the Sixth Council Directive 77/388/EEC of 17 May 1977 on the harmonisation of the laws of the Member States relating to turnover taxes — Common system of value added tax: uniform basis of assessment (OJ 1977 L 145, p. 1; 'the Sixth Directive').

4 According to the first and third recitals in the preamble to Directive 2006/112, the recasting of the Sixth Directive was necessary in order to present all the applicable provisions in a clear and rational manner and in an improved structure and drafting which would not, in principle, bring about material change.

5 Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 2006/112 states:

'The following transactions shall be subject to VAT:

...

(c) the supply of services for consideration within the territory of a Member State by a taxable person acting as such.'

6 Under Article 9(1) of that directive:

'"Taxable person" shall mean any person who, independently, carries out in any place any economic activity, whatever the purpose or results of that activity.

Any activity of producers, traders or persons supplying services, including mining and agricultural activities and activities of the professions, shall be regarded as "economic activity". The exploitation of tangible or intangible property for the purposes of obtaining income therefrom on a continuing basis shall in particular be regarded as an economic activity.'

7 Article 13 of that directive provides:

'1. States, regional and local government authorities and other bodies governed by public law shall not be regarded as taxable persons in respect of the activities or transactions in which they engage as public authorities, even where they collect dues, fees, contributions or payments in connection with those activities or transactions.

However, when they engage in such activities or transactions, they shall be regarded as taxable persons in respect of those activities or transactions where their treatment as non-taxable persons would lead to significant distortions of competition.

In any event, bodies governed by public law shall be regarded as taxable persons in respect of the activities listed in Annex I, provided that those activities are not carried out on such a small scale as to be negligible.

2. Member States may regard activities, exempt under Articles 132 ..., engaged in by bodies governed by public law as activities in which those bodies engage as public authorities.'

8 Pursuant to Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18:

‘“Contracting authorities” means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

A “body governed by public law” means any body:

(a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) having legal personality; and

(c) financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

Non-exhaustive lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in (a), (b) and (c) of the second subparagraph are set out in Annex III. ...’

Portuguese Law

Legislation in respect of VAT

9 Article 2(2) of the VAT Code (Código do IVA) provides that the State and other legal persons governed by public law are not taxable persons for VAT purposes where they engage in transactions in the exercise of their powers conferred by public law, even where they collect fees or other consideration in that connection, in so far as their treatment as non-taxable persons does not cause distortions of competition.

10 Article 2(3) of that code provides that the State and other legal persons governed by public law are in any event taxable persons for VAT purposes where they engage in certain activities and for the ensuing taxable transactions, unless it is shown that those activities are negligible.

The legal regime for Saudaçor

11 Saudaçor was created by Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A of the RAA transforming the Institute of Financial Management of the Health Service of the Autonomous Region of the Azores into a limited company with exclusively public capital called SAUDAÇOR — Sociedade Gestora de Recursos e Equipamentos da Saúde dos Açores SA, and amending Regional Legislative Decree No 28/99/A of 31 July (Decreto Legislativo Regional n.° 41/2003/A, Transforma o Instituto de Gestão Financeira da Saúde da Região Autónoma dos Açores em sociedade anónima de capitais exclusivamente públicos, passando a designar-se SAUDAÇOR — Sociedade Gestora de Recursos e Equipamentos da Saúde dos Açores, SA, e altera o Decreto Legislativo Regional n.° 28/99/A, de 31 de Julho), of 17 October 2003 (Diário da República I, Series A No 257, 6 November 2003, p. 7430), that company being wholly owned by that region.

12 Under Article 2(1) of that regional legislative decree, Saudaçor has the task of providing services of general economic interest in the field of health. The object of that task is the planning and management of the regional health system and associated information systems, infrastructure and facilities and the completion of construction, conservation, rehabilitation and reconstruction work on health establishments and services, in particular in areas covered by natural disasters and in areas regarded as risk areas.

13 Under Article 3 of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A:

‘In the context of its task of providing services of general economic interest, Saudaçor shall have the following functions:

(a) providing centralised supplies to the regional health service;

(b) providing goods and services to member entities of the regional health service;

(c) granting financing to health establishments in accordance with the health-care objectives to which each establishment has contractually committed;

(d) defining rules and guidelines for budget management of health establishments and monitoring its implementation;

(e) evaluating the economic and financial management of institutions and services forming part of the regional health service or financed by it and drawing up periodic reports on its financial situation and on the management of its human and material resources;

(f) encouraging the development of information systems for institutions under the aegis of the regional health service;

(g) carrying out works on the regional health service which are desirable in the public interest;

(h) providing support to the services and establishments of the regional health service in areas where this proves necessary.'

14 Article 4(1) of that regional legislative decree provides that Saudaçor is governed by that instrument, by the articles of association annexed thereto, by the legal regime for public undertakings as provided for by Decree-Law No 558/99 (Decreto-Lei n.° 558/99) of 17 December 1999 (Diário da República I, Series A No 292, 17 December 1999, p. 9012), and by private law. Under Article 4(2) of the same regional legislative decree, in its activities Saudaçor must respect the rules governing the organisation and operation of the regional health service of the RAA.

15 Article 10 of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A provides that, in the performance of its functions, Saudaçor holds the same powers conferred by public law as the RAA and then lists, by way of example, some of those powers, including the power to carry out expropriations.

16 Under Article 7(3) of Decree-Law No 558/99, as amended, public undertakings are taxed, directly and indirectly, in accordance with the common regime. An identical provision is found in Article 9(2) of Regional Legislative Decree No 7/2008/A governing public sector undertakings of the Autonomous Region of the Azores (Decreto Legislativo Regional n.º 7/2008/A, Regime do sector público empresarial da Região Autónoma dos Açores) of 5 March 2008 (Diário da República I, Series A No 58, 24 March 2008, p. 1649), in respect of regional public undertakings.

17 Saudaçor performs its activities within the framework of programme agreements concluded, in accordance with Article 21(1) of its articles of association, with the Government of the RAA, which define, inter alia, the services which it must provide for the planning and management of the regional health service and the compensation, called the 'financial contribution', to be paid by that region in consideration for those services and designed to cover the operating costs of Saudaçor.

18 Thus, a first programme agreement was concluded on 23 July 2004, covering the period 2004–2008, which provided for total compensation of EUR 15 905 000, including a sum of EUR 3 990 000 for 2007 and a sum of EUR 4 050 000 for 2008. Clause 5 of that agreement provided that that total amount could be revised by a joint order issued by the members of the government responsible for finance and health if, on account of a change in circumstances, that amount was manifestly insufficient to allow performance of that agreement. A second programme agreement was concluded on 1 January 2009, covering the period 2009–2012, which provided for annual compensation of EUR 8 500 000 and a revision clause similar to that stipulated in the previous agreement. By joint order of 8 March 2010 issued by the members of the Government of the RAA responsible for finance and health, that amount was reduced to EUR 6 599 147 for 2009.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

19 On 2 March 2011, the Public Treasury drew up a draft inspection report proposing corrections concerning the VAT payable by Saudaçor in respect of the financial years 2007 to 2010 totalling EUR 4 750 586.24.

20 On 6 April 2011, the inspection report was adopted, after Saudaçor had been heard.

21 In that report, the Public Treasury held, inter alia, that, in view of its legal regime, Saudaçor could not rely on the rule under which bodies governed by public law are not regarded as taxable persons for VAT purposes, laid down in Article 2(2) of the VAT Code, a provision which seeks to transpose the first subparagraph of Article 4(5) of the Sixth Directive, the content of which is the same as that of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112.

22 According to the Public Treasury, the services provided by Saudaçor in respect of the planning and management of the regional health service under the programme agreements concern areas of activity involving private initiative, which means that treatment as a non-taxable person for VAT purposes might lead to distortions of competition. That is the case, for example, with the management and maintenance of the computer system for the region's health sector. There is, in actual fact, in the Public Treasury's view, an activity of an economic nature, with the result that the contributions laid down in the programme agreements and paid by the regional authorities in consideration for those services are subject to VAT. Furthermore, Saudaçor had accepted that it was subject to VAT in so far as it claimed a total sum of EUR 2 300 273.17 as VAT deductions on its purchases of goods and services.

23 Saudaçor brought an action before the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Ponta Delgada (Ponta Delgada Administrative and Tax Court) against the notices requiring payment of VAT and compensatory interest concerning the financial years 2007 to 2010, which demanded that it pay a total of EUR 5 157 249.72.

24 By its judgment, that court dismissed that action on the ground, inter alia, that, for the purpose of interpreting the rule laid down in the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112, under which bodies governed by public law are not regarded as taxable persons for VAT purposes, there is no need to refer to the concept of 'body governed by public law' defined, in the context of public procurement law, in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 since the latter concept is understood in a broad sense, whereas the concept of 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 must be interpreted strictly when applying the rule of treatment as a non-taxable person for VAT purposes because that rule constitutes an exception to the general rule of taxation of any economic activity.

25 According to that court, that rule of treatment as a non-taxable person for VAT purposes does not cover an entity like Saudaçor which, although created by the RAA, is a limited company which is distinct from the region and subject to the rules of private law and which pursues its functions and objectives independently.

26 The Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Ponta Delgada (Ponta Delgada Administrative and Tax Court) also considered that the services provided by Saudaçor in connection with the programme agreements constitute an activity of an economic nature, since they are provided for consideration. According to that court, the contributions paid by the RAA represent consideration for the services provided by Saudaçor and cannot be regarded as constituting budgetary transfers between public entities.

27 Hearing an appeal against that judgment, the referring court considers that the central issue in the case in the main proceedings is whether an entity such as Saudaçor can rely on the rule laid down in Article 2(2) of the VAT Code, the content of which corresponds to that of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112, under which bodies governed by public law are not regarded as taxable persons for VAT purposes, and whether the amounts to which the notices of payment of VAT relate constitute budgetary transfers between public entities.

28 It considers that, whilst it is clearly established in the Court's case-law that only the activities of bodies governed by public law acting as public authorities are excluded from liability to VAT, it cannot be determined on the basis of that case-law whether an entity such as Saudaçor, having regard to its legal status as a limited company originating from the transformation of a State entity, comes within that concept of body governed by public law. The question arises in particular whether the scope of that concept tallies with the scope of the concept of 'body governed by public law' in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 in the context of the definitions of the various categories of 'contracting authorities'.

29 In those circumstances the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Must the concept of body governed by public law within the meaning of the first paragraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 be interpreted ... by reference to the concept of "body governed by public law" [as defined in] Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18?

(2) Is an entity established as a limited company, with exclusively public capital and 100% owned by the RAA, and whose object is the exercise of consultancy and management activities in matters relating to the regional health service, with the purpose of developing and reorganising it through the performance of programme agreements concluded with that region, which holds by delegation the public-authority powers conferred in those matters on the region which was originally responsible for providing the public health service, covered by the concept of a "body governed by public law" acting as a public authority for the purpose of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112?

(3) In the light of the provisions of that directive, may the consideration received by that company, which consists in the making available of the financial resources necessary for the performance of those programme agreements, be regarded as payment for the services provided, for the purposes of liability to VAT?

(4) If so, does that company satisfy the requirements necessary in order to be entitled to rely upon the rule governing not being regarded as a taxable person laid down in Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112?'

Consideration of the questions referred

The third question

30 By its third question, which it is appropriate to examine first, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 9(1) of Directive 2006/112 must be interpreted as meaning that an activity such as that at issue in the main proceedings, whereby a company provides a region with services in respect of the planning and management of the regional health service under the programme agreements concluded between that company and that region, constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of that provision.

31 The Court has already ruled that it is clear from the scheme and purpose of that directive, as well as from the place of Article 13 of that directive in the common system of VAT established by the Sixth Directive, that any activity of an economic nature is, in principle, to be taxable. As a general rule and in accordance with Article 2(1) of Directive 2006/112, the supply of services for consideration, including those provided by bodies governed by public law, is to be subject to VAT. Articles 9 and 13 of that directive thus give a very wide scope to VAT (judgment in Commission v Netherlands, C-79/09, EU:C:2010:171, paragraph 76 and the case-law cited).

32 The possibility of classifying a supply of services as a transaction for consideration requires only that there be a direct link between that supply and the consideration actually received by the taxable person. Such a direct link is established if there is a legal relationship between the provider of the service and the recipient pursuant to which there is reciprocal performance, the remuneration received by the provider of the service constituting the actual consideration for the service supplied to the recipient (see, inter alia, judgment in Serebryannay vek, C-283/12, EU:C:2013:599, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited).

33 In view of the nature of the analysis to be carried out and as the Court has already held, it is for the national court to classify the activities at issue in the main proceedings in the light of the criteria adopted by the Court (judgment in Fazenda Pública, C-446/98, EU:C:2000:691, paragraph 23, and order in Gmina Wrocław, C-72/13, EU:C:2014:197, paragraph 18).

34 In the present case, it is for the referring court to establish whether it is apparent from the documents in the court file and in particular from the programme agreements concluded between Saudaçor and the RAA that the activities of that company are effected for consideration and, therefore, are of an economic nature. None the less, the Court may provide the referring court, in the light of the information in the order for reference, with the points of interpretation which are likely to enable the referring court to give its ruling.

35 In that regard, it is apparent from the order for reference that, in the actual wording of those agreements, the RAA is required to pay to Saudaçor, 'as consideration' for the services in respect of the planning and management of the regional health service to be provided by it, compensation, called the 'financial contribution', the amount of which is stated in those agreements.

36 In the light of the permanent and continuous nature of the planning and management services provided by Saudaçor, the fact that that compensation is determined not on the basis of individualised services but on a flat-rate and annual basis to cover the operating costs of that company is not in itself such as to affect the direct link between the supply of services made and the consideration received, the amount of which is determined in advance on the basis of well-established criteria (see, to that effect, judgment in Le Rayon d'Or, C-151/13, EU:C:2014:185, paragraphs 36 and 37).

37 The existence of that direct link also does not appear to be called into question by the fact that the programme agreements concluded between Saudaçor and the RAA contain clauses which stipulate that the amount of compensation payable to Saudaçor may be adjusted where, because of a change of circumstances, that amount is manifestly insufficient to allow for the performance of those agreements.

38 In so far as those clauses seek to determine in advance the level of that compensation on the basis of well-established criteria which ensure that that level is sufficient to cover the operating costs of Saudaçor, it may be held that those clauses are designed to adapt the amount of the flat-rate consideration for the services provided on a continuous and permanent basis by that company. In addition, whilst, as is apparent from the order for reference, for 2009, the annual compensation initially provided for was reduced by the RAA, the Portuguese Government explained at the hearing, without being contradicted by Saudaçor, that the sole purpose of that reduction was to correct a manifest calculation error.

39 The direct link between the supply of services and the consideration received also does not appear to be called into question by the fact that, as Saudaçor maintains, its activity is intended to fulfil a constitutional obligation exclusively and directly incumbent upon the State under the Portuguese constitution, namely the obligation to implement a national health service which is universal and potentially free, to be financed, in essence, by public resources.

40 Under Article 9(1) of Directive 2006/112, a taxable person means any person who, independently, carries out any economic activity, whatever the purpose or results of that activity.

41 Moreover, whilst the objective of the implementation of a national health service which is universal and potentially free, which has to be financed, in essence, by public resources, is taken into account in the common system of VAT, in so far as, under Article 132(1) of that directive, certain provisions of medical care undertaken, in particular, by bodies governed by public law must be exempted from VAT, it is common ground that the activity of planning and managing the regional health service at issue in the main proceedings does not fall within one of those exemptions.

42 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to the third question is that Article 9(1) of Directive 2006/112 must be interpreted as meaning that an activity such as that at issue in the main proceedings, whereby a company provides a region with services in respect of the planning and management of the regional health service under the programme agreements concluded between that company and that region, constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of that provision.

The first, second and fourth questions

43 By its first, second and fourth questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 must be interpreted as meaning that an activity such as that at issue in the main proceedings, whereby a company provides a region with services in respect of the planning and management of the regional health service under the programme agreements concluded between that company and that region, falls under the rule of treatment as a non-taxable person for VAT purposes, laid down by that provision, in a situation where that activity constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of Article 9(1) of that directive.

44 In that context, the referring court asks whether, as maintained by Saudaçor, the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' within the meaning of Article 13(1) of that directive must be interpreted by reference to the definition of the concept of 'body governed by public law' in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

45 Such an interpretation of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 cannot be accepted.

46 By defining in broad terms the concept of 'body governed by public law' and, as a result, the concept of 'contracting authorities', Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 seeks to define the scope of that directive in a sufficiently extensive manner so as to ensure that the rules on, in particular, transparency and non-discrimination which are required in connection with the award of public contracts apply to all State entities which do not form part of the public administration but which are nevertheless controlled by the State, in particular by means of their financing or their management.

47 However, the context of the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' referred to in Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 is fundamentally different.

48 That concept is not intended to define the scope of VAT but, on the contrary, makes an exception to the general rule on which the common system of that tax is based, namely the rule that the scope of that tax is defined very broadly as covering all supplies of services for consideration, including those provided by bodies governed by public law (see, to that effect, judgment in Commission v Netherlands, C-79/09, EU:C:2010:171, paragraphs 76 and 77).

49 As an exception to the general rule that any activity of an economic nature be subjected to VAT, Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 is to be interpreted strictly (see, inter alia, judgment in Isle of Wight Council and Others, C-288/07, EU:C:2008:505, paragraph 60, and order in Gmina Wrocław, C-72/13, EU:C:2014:197, paragraph 19).

50 It follows that, in the absence of any guidance in the wording of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112, it is necessary to take into account the scheme and purpose of that directive, as well as the place of that provision in the common system of VAT established by it (see, by analogy, judgment in Isle of Wight Council and Others, C-288/07, EU:C:2008:505, paragraph 25).

51 As the Court has consistently held, it is clear from Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112, when examined in the light of the aims of the directive, that two conditions must both be fulfilled for the rule of treatment as a non-taxable person to apply: the activities must be carried out by a body governed by public law and they must be carried out by that body acting as a public authority (see to that effect, inter alia, order in Mihal, C-456/07, EU:C:2008:293, paragraph 16 and the case-law cited, and judgment in Commission v Netherlands, C-79/09, EU:C:2010:171, paragraph 79).

52 In addition, the Court has also consistently held that it follows both from the need for uniform application of EU law and from the principle of equality that the terms of a provision of EU law which makes no express reference to the law of the Member States for the purpose of determining its meaning and scope must normally be given an autonomous and uniform interpretation throughout the European Union, which must take into account the context of that provision and the objective pursued by the legislation in question (see, inter alia, judgment in Fish Legal and Shirley, C-279/12, EU:C:2013:853, paragraph 42).

53 It must be noted that Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 makes no express reference to the law of the Member States.

54 It follows that the concepts referred to in that provision, including that of ‘other bodies governed by public law’, must be given an autonomous and uniform interpretation throughout the European Union.

55 Moreover, since, as has been noted in paragraph 49 of the present judgment, Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 must, as an exception, be interpreted strictly, it must be held that the list in that provision is exhaustive, the concept of ‘other bodies governed by public law’ constituting a residual category of bodies falling within the public authority other than those specifically mentioned in that provision.

56 As regards, specifically, the first of the two conditions laid down in Article 13(1) of that directive, namely the condition that the body be governed by public law, the Court has already held that a person which, not being part of the public administration, independently performs acts falling within the powers of the public authority cannot be classified as a body governed by public law within the meaning of that provision (see to that effect, inter alia, order in Mihal, C-456/07, EU:C:2008:293, paragraph 18 and the case-law cited).

57 The Court has also made it clear that the status as a ‘body governed by public law’ cannot stem from the mere fact that the activity at issue consists in the performance of acts falling within powers conferred by public law (see to that effect, inter alia, order in Mihal, C-456/07, EU:C:2008:293, paragraph 17 and the case-law cited).

58 Nevertheless, whilst the fact that the body in question has, under the applicable national law, powers conferred by public law is not decisive for the purposes of that classification, it does constitute, in so far as it is an essential characteristic specific to any public authority, a factor of definite importance in determining that the body must be classified as a body governed by public law.

59 Article 10 of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A provides that, in the performance of its functions, Saudaçor holds the same powers conferred by public law as the RAA and then lists, by way of example, some of those powers, including the power to carry out expropriations.

60 In addition, in the light of the Court’s case-law cited in paragraph 56 of the present judgment and having regard to the applicable national law, it does not seem, subject to verification by the referring court, that it can be ruled out that Saudaçor is to be considered to be part of the public administration of the RAA.

61 In that regard, as is apparent from the documents submitted to the Court, in so far as it was established by the State as a limited company following a process of transformation by decentralising the functions of an existing State body, Saudaçor resembles in some respects a legal person governed by private law and enjoys a degree of autonomy vis-à-vis the State in its operation and day-to-day management.

62 However, and still subject to verification by the referring court, some of the characteristics of Saudaçor seem to support its classification as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112.

63 Genuine autonomy on the part of Saudaçor seems limited because of the fact that its capital, which is not open to equity investments by individuals, is 100% owned by the RAA, which, with the exception of services provided to third parties in connection with so-called ‘ancillary’ activities, which, it is undisputed, are of marginal importance, is in addition its only ‘client’. Those considerations are capable of showing that the RAA is in a position to exercise decisive influence over the activities of Saudaçor.

64 This is also confirmed by the fact that, in accordance with Clause 3(a) of the first of the programme agreements concluded between Saudaçor and the RAA and Clause 3(1)(a) of the second of those agreements, Saudaçor is to accomplish its task in accordance with the guidelines set by the RAA and that, pursuant to Clause 3(h) of the first of those agreements and Clause 3(1)(g) of the second of those agreements, Saudaçor is subject to supervision by the RAA.

65 Moreover, Article 4(1) of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A provides that Saudaçor is governed by that instrument, by the articles of association annexed thereto, by the legal regime for public undertakings as provided for by Decree-Law No 558/99 and by private law. It is apparent that, within that framework, private law is secondary in relation to the rules establishing the legal regime for Saudaçor as a public undertaking.

66 Furthermore, whilst the detailed arrangements for the supply of services in respect of the planning and management of the regional health service must be covered by programme agreements, in particular regarding the compensation payable in respect of those services, which might suggest that Saudaçor operates on the market in question in competition with other private operators, the fact remains that, in the RAA, those services are performed exclusively by Saudaçor in accordance with its task provided for in Article 2(1) of Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A and that they are not awarded to private operators by means of, for example, a tender procedure.

67 In addition, an organisational link seems to exist between Saudaçor and the RAA, if only due to the fact that that company was established by a legislative act adopted by the legislature of the RAA for the purpose of providing that region with ‘services of general economic interest in the field of health’, as is apparent from Article 2(1) of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A.

68 Subject to the verification of that information by the referring court, it cannot therefore be ruled out that, in the light of an overall assessment taking account of the provisions of national law applicable to Saudaçor, that court will conclude that Saudaçor may be classified as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112.

69 However, as has been noted in paragraph 51 of the present judgment, if the rule of treatment as a non-taxable person for VAT purposes laid down in that provision is to apply, a second condition laid down in that provision must also be satisfied, namely the condition that only activities carried out by a body governed by public law acting as a public authority are to be exempted from VAT.

70 The Court has consistently held that such activities are activities carried out by those bodies under the special legal regime applicable to them and do not include activities pursued by them under the same legal conditions as those that apply to private economic operators.
The Court has also made it clear that the subject-matter or purpose of the activity is in that regard irrelevant and that the fact that the pursuit of the activity at issue in the main proceedings involves the use of powers conferred by public law shows that that activity is subject to a public law regime (see to that effect, inter alia, judgment in Fazenda Pública, C-446/98, EU:C:2000:691, paragraphs 17, 19 and 22).

71 In that context, the Court has stated that the exemption provided for in the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 covers principally activities engaged in by bodies governed by public law acting as public authorities, which, while fully economic in nature, are closely linked to the exercise of powers conferred by public law (judgment in Isle of Wight Council and Others, C-288/07, EU:C:2008:505, paragraph 31).

72 However, that second condition laid down in the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of that directive would not be satisfied if, as the Portuguese Government submitted and subject to verification by the referring court, the powers conferred by public law available to Saudaçor under Article 10 of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A did not amount to an instrument that could be used by Saudaçor in order to carry out the activities at issue in the main proceedings, namely the activities concerning the planning and management of the regional health service, the liability of which to VAT is disputed, since they are used for carrying out other activities.

73 Moreover, even if it were to be concluded that Saudaçor is a body governed by public law and it were held that it exercises the economic activity at issue in the main proceedings as a public authority, it follows from the second subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 that an entity such as Saudaçor would not, however, be exempted from VAT if it were to be found that its treatment as a non-taxable person would lead to significant distortions of competition.

74 In that regard, the Court has stated that the significant distortions of competition to which treatment as non-taxable persons of bodies governed by public law acting as public authorities would lead must be evaluated by reference to the activity in question, as such, without such evaluation relating to any local market in particular, and by reference not only to actual competition, but also to potential competition, provided that the possibility of a private operator entering the relevant market is real, and not purely hypothetical (judgment in Commission v Netherlands, C-79/09, EU:C:2010:171, paragraph 91).

75 In the light of all of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first, second and fourth questions is that Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 must be interpreted as meaning that an activity such as that at issue in the main proceedings, whereby a company provides a region with services in respect of the planning and management of the regional health service under the programme agreements concluded between that company and that region, falls under the rule of treatment as a non-taxable person for VAT purposes, laid down by that provision, in a situation where that activity constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of Article 9(1) of that directive, if, which it is for the referring court to ascertain, it can be considered that that company must be classified as a body governed by public law and that it carries out that activity as a public authority, in so far as the referring court finds that the exemption of that activity is not such as to lead to significant distortions of competition.

In that context, the concept of ‘other bodies governed by public law’ within the meaning of Article 13(1) of that directive must not be interpreted by reference to the definition of ‘body governed by public law’ in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

Costs

76 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 9(1) of Council Directive 2006/112/EC of 28 November 2006 on the common system of value added tax must be interpreted as meaning that an activity such as that at issue in the main proceedings, whereby a company provides a region with services in respect of the planning and management of the regional health service under the programme agreements concluded between that company and that region, constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of that provision.

2. Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 must be interpreted as meaning that an activity such as that at issue in the main proceedings, whereby a company provides a region with services in respect of the planning and management of the regional health service under the programme agreements concluded between that company and that region, falls under the rule of treatment as a non-taxable person for value added tax purposes, laid down by that provision, in a situation where that activity constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of Article 9(1) of that directive, if, which it is for the referring court to ascertain, it can be considered that that company must be classified as a body governed by public law and that it carries out that activity as a public authority, in so far as the referring court finds that the exemption of that activity is not such as to lead to significant distortions of competition.

In that context, the concept of ‘other bodies governed by public law’ within the meaning of Article 13(1) of that directive must not be interpreted by reference to the definition of ‘body governed by public law’ in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts.

Saudaçor — Sociedade Gestora de Recursos e Equipamentos de Saúde dos Açores SA
v
Fazenda Pública

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Portugal))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — VAT — Directive 2006/112/EC — Article 13(1) — Treatment as a non-taxable person — Concept of 'other bodies governed by public law'– Autonomous Region of the Azores — Entity created by the region in the form of a wholly-owned limited company which is responsible for providing the region with services of general economic interest relating to the management of the region's health service — Determination of the detailed arrangements for those services, including their remuneration, in programme agreements concluded between the entity and the region)

I – Introduction

1. The present case concerns the interpretation of Article 13(1) of Council Directive 2006/112/EC of 28 November 2006 on the common system of value added tax (2) and, more specifically, the interpretation of the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law'. That article provides that certain transactions engaged in by bodies governed by public law are exempt from VAT.

2. The applicant in the main proceedings, Saudaçor — Sociedade Gestora de Recursos e Equipamentos de Saúde dos Açores SA ('Saudaçor'), is a limited company with exclusively public capital, being 100% owned by the Autonomous Region of the Azores (RAA). Its specific regime, which has both public and private characteristics, has led the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court, Portugal) to have doubts as to its classification as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112.

3. The Court's case-law concerning that provision (previously Article 4(5) of Sixth Council Directive 77/388/EEC of 17 May 1977 on the harmonisation of the laws of the Member States relating to turnover taxes — Common system of value added tax: uniform basis of assessment (3)) is plentiful, but it mainly relates to the second cumulative criterion set out by that article, in particular the condition concerning activities and transactions engaged in by bodies governed by public law 'as public authorities'. By contrast, the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' as such has been examined less often.

II – Legislative framework

A – Union law

1. Directive 2004/18

4. Under Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. (4)

‘“Contracting authorities” means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

A “body governed by public law” means any body:

(a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) having legal personality; and

(c) financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

Non-exhaustive lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in (a), (b) and (c) of the second subparagraph are set out in Annex III. ...’

2. Directive 2006/112

5. Directive 2006/112 repealed and replaced, with effect from 1 January 2007, the existing Community VAT legislation, in particular the Sixth Directive. (5)

6. Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 2006/112 provides:

‘The following transactions shall be subject to VAT:

...

(c) the supply of services for consideration within the territory of a Member State by a taxable person acting as such’.

7. Under Article 9(1) of that directive:

‘“Taxable person” shall mean any person who, independently, carries out in any place any economic activity, whatever the purpose or results of that activity.

Any activity of producers, traders or persons supplying services, including mining and agricultural activities and activities of the professions, shall be regarded as “economic activity”. The exploitation of tangible or intangible property for the purposes of obtaining income therefrom on a continuing basis shall in particular be regarded as an economic activity.’

8. Article 13(1) of that directive provides:

‘States, regional and local government authorities and other bodies governed by public law shall not be regarded as taxable persons in respect of the activities or transactions in which they engage as public authorities, even where they collect dues, fees, contributions or payments in connection with those activities or transactions.

However, when they engage in such activities or transactions, they shall be regarded as taxable persons in respect of those activities or transactions where their treatment as non-taxable persons would lead to significant distortions of competition.

In any event, bodies governed by public law shall be regarded as taxable persons in respect of the activities listed in Annex I, provided that those activities are not carried out on such a small scale as to be negligible.'

B – Portuguese law

1. VAT legislation

9. Article 2(2) of the VAT Code provides that the State and other legal persons governed by public law are not taxable persons for VAT purposes where they engage in transactions in the exercise of their public-authority powers, even where they collect fees or other consideration in that connection, in so far as their treatment as non-taxable persons does not cause distortions of competition.

10. Article 2(3) of the VAT Code provides that the State and other legal persons governed by public law are in any event taxable persons for VAT purposes where they engage in certain activities and for the ensuing taxable transactions, unless it is shown that those activities are negligible.

2. The legal regime for Saudaçor

11. Saudaçor was created by Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A of the RAA of 17 October 2003 (6) as a limited company with exclusively public capital, being wholly owned by the RAA. Saudaçor was created to transform the Instituto de Gestão Financeira da Saúde da Região Autonoma dos Açores (Institute of Financial Management of the Health Service of the RAA) into a limited company.

12. Under Article 2(1) of Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A, Saudaçor has the task of providing services of general economic interest in the field of health. The object of that task is the planning and management of the regional health system and associated information systems, infrastructure and facilities and the completion of construction, conservation, rehabilitation and reconstruction work on health establishments and services, in particular in regions affected by natural disasters and in areas regarded as risk areas.

13. Under Article 3 of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A:

'In the context of its task of providing services of general economic interest, Saudaçor shall have the following functions:

(a) providing centralised supplies to the regional health sector;

(b) providing goods and services to member entities of the regional health system [SRS];

(c) granting financing to health establishments in accordance with the health-care objectives to which each establishment has committed under the agreements signed by them;

(d) defining rules and guidelines for budget management of health establishments and monitoring its implementation;

(e) evaluating the economic and financial management of institutions and services forming part of the SRS or financed by it and drawing up periodic reports on its financial situation and on the management of its human and material resources;

(f) encouraging the development of information systems for institutions under the aegis of the SRS;

(g) carrying out works on the SRS which are desirable in the public interest;

(h) providing support to SRS services and establishments in areas where this proves necessary.'

14. Article 4(1) of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A provides that Saudaçor is governed 'by the provisions of the present instrument, by the articles of association annexed hereto, by the legal regime for the State-owned undertakings sector as enshrined in Decree-Law No 558/99 of 17 December 1999, (7) and by private law'. Under paragraph 2 of that article, in its activities Saudaçor must respect the rules governing the organisation and operation of the regional health service of the RAA.

15. Article 10 of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A provides that in the performance of its functions Saudaçor holds the same public-authority powers as the RAA and then specifies, by way of example, some of those powers, including expropriation.

16. Under Article 4(1) of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A, which concerns the creation of Saudaçor, that entity is governed by the legal regime for State-owned undertakings as provided for by Decree-Law No 558/99. Under Article 3 of Decree-Law No 558/99, (8) public undertakings are companies incorporated in accordance with the Commercial Code in which the State or other State-owned public entities individually or jointly exert a controlling influence, directly or indirectly, and entities in the form of undertakings provided for in Chapter III of the regime, known as public business entities.

17. Under Article 7 of Decree-Law No 558/99, without prejudice to the provisions of the legislation applicable to regional, (9) intercommunal and municipal public undertakings, public undertakings are governed by private law, except as provided in the present Decree-Law and in the legislation adopting the articles of association of those undertakings. Public undertakings are taxed, directly and indirectly, in accordance with the common regime. (10)

18. Saudaçor performs its activities within the framework of programme agreements concluded with the RAA, in accordance with Article 20(1) of its articles of association, which define, inter alia, the services to be provided by Saudaçor for the planning and management of the regional health service and the compensation, called the 'financial contribution', to be paid by that region 'in consideration for the services covered by the agreement' and 'considered sufficient to cover the operating costs of Saudaçor'.

19. Thus, a first programme agreement was concluded on 23 July 2004, covering the period 2004–2008, which provided for total compensation of EUR 15 905 000, with a sum of EUR 3 990 000 for 2007 and a sum of EUR 4 050 000 for 2008. A second programme agreement was concluded with effect from 1 January 2009, (11) covering the period 2009–2012, which provided for annual compensation of EUR 8 500 000, reduced by Joint Order of 8 March 2010 (12) to EUR 6 599 147 for 2009. Under Clause 5 of these two programme agreements, those amounts may be revised where, on account of a change of circumstances, that amount is manifestly insufficient to allow performance of the programme agreement.

20. The programme agreements set out Saudaçor's contractual obligations in Clause 3 and the services of general interest provided by Saudaçor in Annex III. Those services of general interest include three kinds of services, namely support for the Regional Health Service Plan, assistance and funding for the regional health service and implementation, management and maintenance of the information and computer system supporting the health sector of the RAA.

III – The dispute in the main proceedings, the questions referred for a preliminary ruling and the procedure before the Court

21. On 2 March 2011, the Portuguese tax authority drew up a draft inspection report proposing corrections concerning the VAT payable by Saudaçor in respect of its activities for the period from 2007 to 2010 in a total amount of EUR 4 750 586.24.

22. On 6 April 2011, that inspection report was adopted, after Saudaçor had been heard.

23. According to the report, cited in the decision referring the case, in the tax years examined, Saudaçor recorded the consideration received from the RAA as grants exempt from VAT. However, during the proceedings, Saudaçor abandoned the 'grant' classification and wished to be designated as a ‘legal person governed by public law’ within the meaning of Article 2(2) of the VAT Code, a provision which seeks to transpose the first subparagraph of Article 4(5) of the Sixth Directive, the content of which is the same as that of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112.

24. In that inspection report, the tax authority stated, among other things, that in view of its legal regime Saudaçor came under the normal VAT regime and could not rely on the rule laid down in Article 2(2) of the VAT Code under which bodies governed by public law are not regarded as taxable persons. Furthermore, Saudaçor had accepted that it was subject to VAT because it claimed a total sum of EUR 2 300 273.17 as VAT deductions on purchases of goods and services without, however, paying VAT on the amounts received from the RAA.

25. The tax authority referred to Binding Opinion No 1271 of 21 March 2006, (13) according to which Article 2(2) of the VAT Code limits exclusion from VAT, subject to the conditions laid down therein, to the State and to legal persons governed by public law. Other entities may not benefit from exclusion even if they are public undertakings for the purposes of the legal regime for the State-owned undertakings sector, as is the case here with a limited company with exclusively public capital, and even though it has been entrusted with certain operations falling within the exercise of delegated public-authority powers which do not create a distortion of competition.

26. In addition, according to the tax authority, the services provided by Saudaçor in respect of planning and management of the regional health service under the programme agreements concern areas of activity involving private initiative, which also means that treatment as a non-taxable person might lead to distortions of competition. That would be the case, for example, with the implementation, management and maintenance of the computer system for a region’s health sector.

27. Saudaçor was then served recovery notices. On 27 July 2011, it was called to appear in the tax execution procedure for the recovery of VAT and compensatory interest.

28. Saudaçor brought an action at the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Ponta Delgada (Administrative and Tax Court, Ponta Delgada) against the recovery notices for VAT and compensatory interest concerning the tax years 2007 to 2010, which claimed that it should pay a total amount of EUR 5 157 249.72.

29. That court dismissed the action at first instance on the ground, inter alia, that the rule laid down in the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112, under which bodies governed by public law are not regarded as taxable persons, does not cover an entity like Saudaçor which, although created by the RAA, is a limited company which is distinct from the region and subject to the rules of private law and which pursues its functions and objectives independently.

30. Hearing an appeal against that judgment, the referring court considers that the central issue in the present case is whether an entity like Saudaçor can rely on the rule laid down in Article 2(2) of the VAT Code, the content of which corresponds to Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112, under which bodies governed by public law are not regarded as taxable persons, and whether the amounts to which the contested VAT recovery notices relate constitute budget transfers between public entities.

31. It considers that whilst it is clearly established in the Court’s case-law that only the activities of bodies governed by public law acting as public authorities are excluded from liability to VAT, it cannot be determined on the basis of that case-law whether an entity like Saudaçor, having regard to its legal status as a limited company originating from the transformation of a State entity, comes within that concept of body governed by public law and whether, in that context, the scope of that concept tallies with the scope of the concept of body governed by public law as defined in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, as is claimed by Saudaçor.

32. Since it has doubts as to the interpretation of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112, by decision of 12 March 2014, the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo decided to stay the main proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must the concept of “body governed by public law” within the meaning of the first paragraph of Article 13(1) of [Directive 2006/112] be interpreted by reference to the concept of “body governed by public law” in Article 1(9) of [Directive 2004/18]?

(2) Is an entity established as a limited company, with exclusively public capital and 100% owned by the Autonomous Region of the Azores, and whose object is the exercise of consultancy and management activities in matters relating to the regional health service, with the purpose of developing and reorganising it through the performance of programme agreements concluded with the Autonomous Region of the Azores, which holds by delegation the public-authority powers conferred in those matters on the Autonomous Region which was originally responsible for providing the public health service, covered by the concept of a “body governed by public law” acting as a public authority for the purpose of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of [Directive 2006/112]?

(3) In the light of the provisions of that directive, may the consideration received by that company, which consists in the making available of the financial resources necessary for the performance of those programme agreements, be regarded as payment for the services provided, for the purposes of liability to VAT?

(4) If so, does that company satisfy the requirements necessary in order to be entitled to rely upon the rule governing not being regarded as a taxable person laid down in Article 13(1) of [Directive 2006/112]?’

33. Written observations were submitted by Saudaçor, the Portuguese and United Kingdom Governments and the European Commission, which were all represented at the hearing held on 19 March 2015.

IV – Analysis

A – Preliminary remarks

34. Before beginning to examine the questions referred, I will consider the order in which they should be dealt with. Saudaçor has suggested first examining the third question, which asks whether the consideration paid by the RAA is payment for the services provided. According to Saudaçor, this is a question concerning the nature of its activities, which are not ‘economic’ within the meaning of Article 9(1) of Directive 2006/112.

35. Articles 9 and 13 of Directive 2006/112 are part of Title III of that directive, entitled ‘Taxable persons’. Title III contains rules concerning treatment as a taxable person in general and specific cases, such as the VAT grouping and rules concerning the public authorities.

36. I note in this regard that Article 9 of Directive 2006/112 lays down the general rule, while Article 13 is an exemption. (14) According to the Court’s case-law, the application of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 implies a prior finding that the activity considered is of an economic nature. (15)

37. The notion of economic activity in Article 9(1) of Directive 2006/112 is linked to Article 2 of that directive as, for an activity to be classified as economic, it must be effected for consideration. Where a person’s activity consists exclusively in providing services for no direct consideration, there is no basis of assessment and the services are therefore not subject to VAT. The economic activities of taxable persons are necessarily activities which are carried on with the object of obtaining payment of consideration or which are likely to be rewarded by the payment of consideration. (16)

38. Consequently, in my view, the Court has to resolve just two legal questions in order to be able to give helpful answers to the national court.

39. The outcome of the dispute in the main proceedings hinges, first, on the question whether an entity like Saudaçor should be regarded as a taxable person, and the answer to that question hinges in turn on whether or not its activities are economic within the meaning of Article 9(1) of Directive 2006/112. In order to answer that question, it must be examined whether the remuneration paid by the RAA constitutes the consideration received for the services provided by Saudaçor.

40. Second, if Saudaçor must be regarded as a taxable person, it must be examined whether it was nevertheless exempt from VAT pursuant to Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 as a body governed by public law engaging in the transactions in question as a public authority.

41. That is the order in which I therefore propose that the questions asked by the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo be dealt with.

42. Furthermore, I note that the Portuguese Government supported its claim that Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 is not relevant to the main proceedings by arguing that because Saudaçor performed transactions which, by its own admission, allowed it to deduct VAT in respect of its acquisitions, it can no longer rely on the right not to make those same transactions subject to VAT. In this regard, the Portuguese Government made reference to Cantor Fitzgerald International (17) and MDDP. (18) However, it seems to me that the information contained in those judgments cannot be applied directly to the present case and is not even relevant to the outcome of the dispute in the main proceedings.

43. In my view, the notion of economic activities within the meaning of Article 9(1) of Directive 2006/112 and the concept of other bodies governed by public law within the meaning of Article 13(1) of that directive are concepts based on objective elements. The conduct of a person, whether a taxable person or not, cannot alter the meaning and scope of those articles. (19)

B – The economic nature of Saudaçor's activities and its treatment as a taxable person for the purposes of VAT

44. The referring court's doubts over the nature of the services provided by Saudaçor, as expressed in its third question, stem from Saudaçor's claim that the remuneration paid to it by the RAA corresponds to a budget appropriation of revenue between two legal persons governed by public law which is intended to permit Saudaçor to provide non-market services relating to the implementation and management of the regional health service.

45. On the other hand, according to the other parties which submitted observations, the amounts paid by the RAA to Saudaçor have a direct link with the services that Saudaçor is required to provide to the RAA.

46. It should be recalled that Saudaçor has the task of providing services of general economic interest in the field of health, the object of which is the planning and management of the regional health system and associated information systems, infrastructure and facilities and the completion of construction, conservation, rehabilitation and reconstruction work on health establishments and services. (20)

47. The Portuguese Government has pointed out that the case in the main proceedings concerns only the payments referred to in Clauses 2(a) and 5(1) and Annex I of the programme agreements for the 2004–2008 and 2009–2012 periods in relation to the services which Saudaçor undertook to provide to the RAA, because the VAT recovery notices contested in the main proceedings relate only to those payments. (21) In addition, according to the Portuguese Government, the services in question are only technical and administrative support services, often known as 'back office' services.

48. With regard to the reduction of the financial contribution for 2009 by order of 8 March 2010, the Portuguese Government explained that this was a correction of a material error vitiating the programme agreement for 2009–2012 (22) and not the unilateral fixing by the RAA of the remuneration to be paid to Saudaçor, which has its own autonomous board of directors and full powers of negotiation and contractual powers.

49. It should be noted, first of all, that under the second subparagraph of Article 9(1) of Directive 2006/112, any activity of producers, traders or persons supplying services is to be regarded as 'economic activity' and, in particular, the exploitation of tangible or intangible property for the purposes of obtaining income therefrom on a continuing basis. According to case-law, an analysis of those definitions shows that the scope of the term 'economic activities' is very wide and that the term is objective in character, in the sense that the activity is considered per se and without regard to its purpose or results. An activity is thus, as a general rule, categorised as economic where it is permanent and is carried out in return for remuneration which is received by the person carrying out the activity. (23)

50. According to settled case-law, the possibility of classifying a transaction as a transaction for consideration requires only that there be a direct link between the supply of goods or the provision of services and the consideration actually received by the taxable person. Consequently, a supply of services is effected for consideration, and hence is taxable, only if there is a legal relationship between the provider of the service and the recipient pursuant to which there is reciprocal performance, the remuneration received by the provider of the service constituting the actual consideration for the service supplied to the recipient. (24)

51. The fact that the activity of an operator consists in the performance of duties which are conferred and regulated by law in the public interest is irrelevant. (25) Thus, a payment made by a public authority in the general interest can constitute consideration for a supply of services for the purposes of Directive 2006/112. The concept of a supply of services does not depend on the use made of a service by the person who pays for it. Only the nature of the undertaking given is to be taken into consideration, with the result that for such an undertaking to be covered by the common system of VAT it must imply consumption. (26)

52. In addition, it is not even a requirement that, for a supply of services to be effected for consideration within the meaning of Directive 2006/112, the consideration for that supply must be obtained directly from the person to whom those services are supplied, since it may be obtained from a third party. (27) However, that is not the case in the main proceedings because the person to whom the services are provided by Saudaçor is the RAA, the public entity responsible for the Azores' regional health system, which makes the payment and is the recipient of those services.

53. Finally, it is clear from the Court's case-law that where the supply of services in question is characterised, in particular, by the permanent availability of the service provider to supply, at the appropriate time, the services required, it is not necessary, in order to recognise that there is a direct link between that service and the consideration received, to establish that a payment relates to a particular supply of services at a specific time. (28)

54. In my view, it is readily apparent from the programme agreements, which expressly provide for compensation 'in consideration for the services covered by the agreement', that there is a direct link between the payments made by the RAA and the services of general interest provided by Saudaçor. I note that the fact that a payment is made by a public authority in the general interest does not mean that it cannot constitute consideration for a supply of services for the purposes of Directive 2006/112. (29)

55. In addition, according to the Court's case-law, consideration of economic and commercial realities is a fundamental criterion for the application of the common system of VAT. In order to satisfy the requirements of legal certainty, since the contractual position reflects, in principle, the economic and commercial reality of the transactions, the relevant contractual terms normally constitute a factor to be taken into consideration unless it becomes apparent that those contractual terms constitute a purely artificial arrangement which does not correspond with the economic and commercial reality of the transactions. (30) This does not appear to be the case in the main proceedings. The contractual terms are therefore a factor to be taken into consideration.

56. There is also nothing in the present case to indicate that the contribution received by Saudaçor does not manifestly correspond to the actual value of the service provided. (31) On the other hand, under the programme agreements, the amount of the contribution may be revised where it is insufficient to allow performance of the programme agreement. It appears that such revisions increasing the amount were not made in the period from 2007 to 2010. However, the revision of the financial contribution for 2009, in the form of a reduction of that contribution, was made in circumstances where the amounts already charged by Saudaçor, when the programme agreement for the year in question was signed, were almost EUR 2 million less than the amount stipulated in the programme agreement signed in 2010.

57. Saudaçor's activities, consisting in planning, management and consultancy services, are permanent and Saudaçor receives remuneration in consideration for its services. Consequently, Saudaçor's contested activities are of an economic nature and constitute the supply of services for consideration. In addition, it should be stressed that Saudaçor does not provide any public health services for the residents of the Azores. Such services are provided by the member entities of the regional health system.

58. As the services at issue in the main proceedings supplied by Saudaçor must be considered to be of an economic nature, Saudaçor must be regarded as a taxable person for VAT purposes under Article 9(1) of Directive 2006/112. Accordingly, the concept of body governed by public law in the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 must be interpreted in order to be able to examine whether Saudaçor may nevertheless be exempt from VAT as a body governed by public law acting as a public authority.

C – The possibility of applying the exemption provided for in Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 to Saudaçor's economic activities

1. The irrelevance of the concept of 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of Directive 2004/18 for the interpretation of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112

59. In the main proceedings, Saudaçor proposed, for reasons relating to the internal coherence of the system, that the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 be interpreted by reference to the concept of 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18. According to Saudaçor, the concept of body governed by public law is a concept that applies across EU law. By its first question, the referring court is seeking to ascertain whether such an interpretation is conceivable.

60. Like the Portuguese and United Kingdom Governments and the Commission, I take the view that such an interpretation cannot be accepted for the reasons set out below.

61. Articles 9 and 13 of Directive 2006/112 give a very wide scope to VAT. The Court has ruled on several occasions that it is clear from the scheme and purpose of Directive 2006/112, as well as from the place of Article 13 thereof in the common system of VAT established by the Sixth Directive, that any activity of an economic nature is, in principle, to be taxable. (32)

62. The Union legislature intended to limit the scope of the treatment of bodies governed by public law as non-taxable persons, so that the general rule is observed. (33) The objective of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 is thus to exempt from VAT only the exercise of economic activities engaged in by bodies governed by public law as public authorities, to the exclusion of situations where exemption would cause 'significant distortions of competition'. (34)

63. Article 13 has been regarded in the Court's case-law as an exemption which should be placed in the general context of the common system of VAT. (35) Thus, as a derogation from the principle that any activity of an economic nature must be subjected to VAT, the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 must be interpreted strictly. (36) Obviously, this also holds for the interpretation of the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' in the first subparagraph of Article 13(1).

64. By contrast, in the light of the objectives pursued by the provisions of Union law on the coordination of the procedures for the award of public contracts, and in particular the dual objective of opening up competition and transparency, the concept of 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 should be given a broad and functional interpretation. (37)

65. It should be stated that the meanings of, on the one hand, 'body governed by public law' for the purposes of Directive 2004/18 and, on the other, 'other bodies governed by public law' for the purposes of Directive 2006/112 cannot be the same, as those two directives have very different objectives. As the Portuguese Government has stressed, the objectives of the common system of VAT would be undermined if, for the purposes of VAT, it were possible to adopt a broad interpretation of the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' like that which has been adopted for 'body governed by public law' in Directive 2004/18 for functional reasons relating to observance of the rules on the award of public contracts. Such a parallel would effectively lead to an unjustified exemption from VAT of economic activities engaged in by the public and private persons mentioned in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

66. It should be added that, as was rightly pointed out by the United Kingdom Government, the Union legislature made the deliberate choice not to make reference in Directive 2006/112 to the concept of 'body governed by public law' which appears in Directive 2004/18. In other contexts, where it considered that a link should be made between two instruments of EU law, the Union legislature chose to adopt the definition used in Directive 2004/18 by means of a cross-reference. (38)

67. Consequently, the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' in the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 should be interpreted solely by reference to the scheme and purpose of that directive, as well as the place of that provision in the common system of VAT established by the Sixth Directive. (39)

2. The interpretation of the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' and the legal classification of Saudaçor in this regard

68. With regard to the second and fourth questions, the main issue for the purposes of the interpretation of the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 is whether it is an autonomous concept of EU law, as the United Kingdom Government claims, or an implicit reference to the domestic laws of the Member States.

69. I would point out, first of all, that the Union legislature opted not to define that concept in Directive 2006/112 and not to make a reference to the concept of body governed by public law which appears, inter alia, in Directive 2004/18, as I have already explained in point 66 of this Opinion.

70. The concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' already appeared in the first subparagraph of Article 4(5) of the Sixth Directive, which has the same wording as the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112. That previous article, in its French version, mentioned 'les États, les régions, les départements, les communes et les autres organismes de droit public'.

71. Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 and the first subparagraph of Article 4(5) of the Sixth Directive also retained the same wording in this regard in the German and English versions. In German, the list is as follows: 'Staaten, Länder, Gemeinden und sonstige Einrichtungen des öffentlichen Rechts', whilst the English version reads as follows: 'states, regional and local government authorities and other bodies governed by public law'.

72. It should be noted, however, that the various language versions are not completely the same, as the French version lists, in addition to 'autres organismes de droit public', four levels of bodies governed by public law, whereas the German and English versions list only three. As far as the other original language versions of the article are concerned, the Danish and Italian versions list four categories of bodies, like the French version, whilst the Dutch version lists five: 'de Staat, de regio's, de gewesten, de provincies, de gemeenten en de andere publiekrechtelijke lichamen'.

73. The approach taken in drawing up that list was not clarified in the explanatory memorandum for the proposal for the Sixth Directive (40) but several language versions (41) of the initial proposal for the Sixth Directive were amended prior to the adoption of that directive to add the word 'other'. (42)

74. In view of the linguistic differences and the presence of the word 'other' in the list, it seems clear that the purpose of that list is to set out non-exhaustively the bodies which may be exempt from VAT under the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112. Accordingly, states and regional and local government authorities are merely examples of bodies which are capable of being exempt.

75. I therefore consider that the only function of the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' in the provision in question is to demonstrate the illustrative nature of that provision. The existence of linguistic differences regarding the number and the designation of the bodies or entities capable of being exempt confirms that view.

76. Consequently, it seems that the list in the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 implicitly makes reference to the laws of the Member States as regards the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law'.

77. During the hearing the United Kingdom Government argued that the concept of body governed by public law is an autonomous concept of EU law. According to the United Kingdom Government, if that concept depended solely on the laws of the Member States, this could give it too broad a scope. The classification of an entity as a body governed by public law under national legislation is not irrelevant, but it is not crucial.

78. It is true that, at first sight, the Court's case-law would seem to support this view taken by the United Kingdom Government. According to the Court, although the designation of a body by the administrative law of a Member State as a body governed by public law is certainly relevant in determining its treatment for VAT purposes, it cannot be considered to be crucial where the actual nature and the substance of the activity engaged in by that body show that the strict conditions for the application of that rule on treatment as a non-taxable person are not met. (43)

79. However, Commission v Spain concerned a situation where the designation of a body by national legislation as a body governed by public law did not correspond to its nature or the activities actually engaged in by that body, as the operators in question were not part of the public administration and carried on their activities in the exercise of a profession comparable to a liberal profession. Thus, the interpretation adopted in that specific case was necessary to ensure a strict interpretation of any exemption, like that in Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112. (44)

80. By contrast, it seems hard to imagine that a body governed by private law in accordance with national legislation could be classified as a body governed by public law for the purposes of EU law. As there is no definition of 'public law' in EU law, reference has to be made to the rules of public law of each Member State.

81. As I have already stated in point 63 of this Opinion, as a derogation from the principle that any activity of an economic nature must be subjected to VAT, the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 must be interpreted strictly. Thus, that provision, together with the cumulative criterion of engaging in activities as a public authority, may limit but not extend classification as a body governed by public law in national law, where this would lead to exemption from VAT which is not in keeping with the spirit of Directive 2006/112 or the objectives of Article 13 thereof.

82. Accordingly, in my view, the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 cannot be interpreted as meaning that a private body for the purposes of national legislation could be classified as a body governed by public law under EU law. The Member States must be entitled to define 'other bodies governed by public law' strictly, without EU law being able to extend that definition to other bodies which are private under the applicable provisions of national law. I consider that the position taken by the Court in Commission v Spain (45) does not call that conclusion into question.

83. Furthermore, in the light of all the foregoing considerations, it seems that a national definition of a body governed by public law which did not reflect the actual nature and the substance of the activities of such a body could also be limited by way of the second cumulative condition required to apply the rule of treatment as a non-taxable person, namely the condition that the body in question must be acting 'as a public authority'. Engagement in activities 'as public authorities' within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 is an autonomous concept of EU law. According to Commission v Spain, for that rule of treatment as a non-taxable person to apply to a body, account should be taken of, in addition to the designation of that body in national law, 'the actual nature and the substance of the activity engaged in by that body'. (46) In my view, the 'substance of the activity' may be understood as a direct reference to the condition concerning engagement in activities 'as a public authority'.

84. With regard to the cumulative criterion of engagement in activities as a public authority, it is clear from settled case-law that activities pursued as public authorities within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 are those engaged in by bodies governed by public law under the special legal regime applicable to them and do not include activities pursued by them under the same legal conditions as those that apply to private traders. It is for the national court to classify the activity at issue in the main proceedings in the light of that criterion. (47)

85. In this regard, according to case-law, it is the manner in which the activities are carried out that determines the scope of the treatment of public bodies as non-taxable persons. In so far as the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 makes such treatment of bodies governed by public law conditional upon their acting 'as public authorities', it excludes therefrom activities engaged in by them as bodies governed not by public law but by private law. Consequently, the only criterion making it possible to distinguish with certainty between those two categories of activity is the legal regime applicable under national law. (48) Thus, the classification of a transaction as an 'activity as a public authority' also depends, to a certain extent, on the applicable national law.

86. It should be borne in mind that case-law clearly lays down the principle that traders governed by private law cannot be exempt from VAT under the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 even if their activities consist in the performance of acts falling within the powers of the public authority. (49) Thus, if a certain trader is not part of the public administration, its activity is pursued not as a body governed by public law, but in the form of an activity carried out in the exercise of a profession comparable to a liberal profession. (50) Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 cannot therefore be applied to a private company even if its shares are being held 100% by a body governed by public law. (51)

87. I would observe that under Article 4(1) of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A Saudaçor is governed, inter alia, by the legal regime for the State-owned undertakings sector and by private law. In addition, under Article 7 of Decree-Law No 558/99, which regulates the legal regime for State-owned undertakings, public undertakings are governed by private law.

88. Thus, in so far as Saudaçor, as a limited company with exclusively public capital which is not part of the public administration, is governed by private law under the applicable domestic legislation, which must in any event be determined by the referring court, and is taxed in accordance with the common regime, it is clearly a trader governed by private law.

89. Consequently, such a limited company cannot be classified as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 and, accordingly, its activities at issue cannot be exempt from VAT under that article. The fact that Saudaçor holds the same public-authority powers as the RAA in performing some of its tasks has no bearing on that finding.

90. I note that, in order for the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Directive 2006/112 to apply, two conditions must both be fulfilled, namely the activities must be carried out by a body governed by public law and they must be carried out by that body acting as a public authority. (52) As the first condition is not fulfilled in the present case, it is not necessary to examine Saudaçor's activities in relation to the second condition.

V – Conclusion

91. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the Court answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo as follows:

With regard to the third question, in a situation like that at issue in the dispute in the main proceedings, 'financial contributions' paid under a programme agreement 'in consideration for the services covered by the agreement' by a public entity to a limited company governed by private law 100% of whose shares it holds constitute consideration for the services provided by that limited company to that public entity.

With regard to the first question, the concept of 'other bodies governed by public law' within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of Council Directive 2006/112/EC of 28 November 2006 on the common system of value added tax may not be interpreted by reference to the concept of 'body governed by public law' as defined in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts.

With regard to the second and fourth questions, pursuant to Directive 2006/112, a limited company with exclusively public capital which is not part of the public administration and which is governed by private law and taxed in accordance with the common regime under the applicable domestic legislation cannot be classified as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 13(1) of that directive.

9 According to the observations submitted by the Portuguese Government, this reservation does not apply to undertakings created on the initiative of autonomous regions, but to undertakings formed at the initiative of administrative regions, which, at the time of the main proceedings, were not created.

10 In addition to this regime for State-owned undertakings, which is applicable to Saudaçor under Article 4(1) of Regional Legislative Decree No 41/2003/A, the European Commission made reference to the legal regime for public undertakings of the RAA, established by Regional Legislative Decree No 7/2008/A (Diário da República 1, Series A, No 58, 24 March 2008, p. 1649). Article 9 of that Regional Legislative Decree contains provisions which are, in essence, identical to those of Article 7 of Decree-Law No 558/99.

13 The information in this regard contained in the decision referring the case is not very clear, but it seems that this is a binding opinion drawn up by the tax authority in proceedings A200 2005045 on whether the exercise of Saudaçor's activity was considered to fall within the scope of the public-authority powers under Article 2(2) of the VAT Code or, if not, under what its activity and its undertaking was classified for VAT purposes. During the hearing the Portuguese Government stated that Saudaçor had itself requested this binding opinion.

---

17 According to that judgment (C-108/99, EU:C:2001:526, paragraph 33), a taxable person who, for the purposes of achieving a particular economic goal, has a choice between exempt transactions and taxable transactions must, in his own interest, duly take his decision while bearing in mind the neutral system of VAT. The principle of the neutrality of VAT does not mean that a taxable person with a choice between two transactions may choose one of them and avail himself of the effects of the other.

---

18 In that judgment (C-319/12, EU:C:2013:778, paragraph 56 and operative part), the Court ruled that a taxable person may not claim a right to deduct input value added tax where, as a result of an exemption provided for by national law in infringement of provisions of Union law, the output services supplied are not subject to value added tax.

19 It should also be noted that it is, in any event, a matter for the national court to refuse to allow an operator's right to deduct VAT where it is established, on the basis of objective evidence, that that right is being relied on for fraudulent or abusive ends (see, to this effect, judgment in Fini H, C-32/03, EU:C:2005:128, paragraphs 33 and 34).

21 According to the Portuguese Government, Saudaçor can also receive other amounts from the RAA under Clauses 2, 5 and 7 of the programme agreements, in particular the grants paid by the RAA to Saudaçor in order to pursue certain specific objectives in the public interest.

22 As that programme agreement was not signed until 5 March 2010, the amount of the contribution in question indicated in the agreement did not correspond to the actual amount already charged monthly and paid for the services actually provided by Saudaçor in 2009.

Exemptions from VAT should be strictly interpreted but should not be whittled away by interpretation. Limitations on VAT exemptions should not be interpreted narrowly, but nor should they be construed so as to go beyond their terms. Both the exemptions and any limitations on them must be interpreted in such a way that the exemption applies to that to which it was intended to apply and no more (see, in this regard, Opinion of Advocate General Jacobs in Zoological Society (C-267/00, EU:C:2001:698, point 19)).

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 56 TFEU, read in conjunction with Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 December 1996 concerning the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services (OJ 1997 L 18, p. 1), and of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44), as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011 (OJ 2011 L 319, p. 43) (‘Directive 2004/18’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between RegioPost GmbH & Co. KG (‘RegioPost’) and Stadt Landau in der Pfalz (municipality of Landau in the Palatinate, Germany, ‘municipality of Landau’) concerning the obligation, imposed on tenderers and their subcontractors in the context of the award of a public contract for postal services in that municipality, to undertake to pay a minimum wage to staff performing the services covered by that public contract.

Legal context

EU law

Directive 96/71

3 Article 1 of Directive 96/71, entitled ‘Scope’, provides:

‘1. This Directive shall apply to undertakings established in a Member State which, in the framework of the transnational provision of services, post workers, in accordance with paragraph 3, to the territory of a Member State.

3. This Directive shall apply to the extent that the undertakings referred to in paragraph 1 take one of the following transnational measures:

(a) post workers to the territory of a Member State on their account and under their direction, under a contract concluded between the undertaking making the posting and the party for whom the services are intended, operating in that Member State, provided there is an employment relationship between the undertaking making the posting and the worker during the period of posting; or

(b) post workers to an establishment or to an undertaking owned by the group in the territory of a Member State, provided there is an employment relationship between the undertaking making the posting and the worker during the period of posting; or

(c) being a temporary employment undertaking or placement agency, hire out a worker to a user undertaking established or operating in the territory of a Member State, provided there is an employment relationship between the temporary employment undertaking or placement agency and the worker during the period of posting.

4 Article 3 of Directive 96/71, entitled ‘Terms and conditions of employment’, provides as follows in paragraphs 1 and 8:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that, whatever the law applicable to the employment relationship, the undertakings referred to in Article 1(1) guarantee workers posted to their territory the terms and conditions of employment covering the following matters which, in the Member State where the work is carried out, are laid down:

– by law, regulation or administrative provision, and/or – by collective agreements or arbitration awards which have been declared universally applicable within the meaning of paragraph 8, insofar as they concern the activities referred to in the Annex:

(c) the minimum rates of pay, including overtime rates; this point does not apply to supplementary occupational retirement pension schemes;

For the purposes of this Directive, the concept of minimum rates of pay referred to in paragraph 1(c) is defined by the national law and/or practice of the Member State to whose territory the worker is posted.

8. “Collective agreements or arbitration awards which have been declared universally applicable” means collective agreements or arbitration awards which must be observed by all undertakings in the geographical area and in the profession or industry concerned.

…’

5 Recitals 2, 33 and 34 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 state:

‘(2) The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.

(33) Contract performance conditions are compatible with this Directive provided that they are not directly or indirectly discriminatory and are indicated in the contract notice or in the contract documents. They may, in particular, be intended to favour on-site vocational training, the employment of people experiencing particular difficulty in achieving integration, the fight against unemployment or the protection of the environment. …

(34) The laws, regulations and collective agreements, at both national and Community level, which are in force in the areas of employment conditions and safety at work apply during performance of a public contract, providing that such rules, and their application, comply with Community law. In cross-border situations, where workers from one Member State provide services in another Member State for the purpose of performing a public contract, Directive [96/71] lays down the minimum conditions which must be observed by the host country in respect of such posted workers. If national law contains provisions to this effect, non-compliance with those obligations may be considered to be grave misconduct or an offence concerning the professional conduct of the economic operator concerned, liable to lead to the exclusion of that economic operator from the procedure for the award of a public contract.'

6 Under the first indent of Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18, the directive is, inter alia, applicable to public service contracts the estimated value of which, exclusive of value added tax, is equal to or greater than EUR 200 000 awarded by contracting authorities other than the central government authorities listed in Annex IV to that directive.

7 Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Conditions for performance of contracts' provides:

'Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with Community law and are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications. The conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.'

8 Article 27 of that directive, entitled 'Obligations relating to taxes, environmental protection, employment protection provisions and working conditions', provides:

'1. A contracting authority may state in the contract documents, or be obliged by a Member State so to state, the body or bodies from which a candidate or tenderer may obtain the appropriate information on the obligations relating to … the working conditions which are in force in the Member State, region or locality in which the works are to be carried out or services are to be provided and which shall be applicable to the works carried out on site or to the services provided during the performance of the contract.

2. A contracting authority which supplies the information referred to in paragraph 1 shall request the tenderers or candidates in the contract award procedure to indicate that they have taken account, when drawing up their tender, of the obligations relating to employment protection provisions and the working conditions which are in force in the place where the works are to be carried out or the service is to be provided.

German law

Federal law

9 Paragraph 97(4) of the Law against restrictions of competition (Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen), in its version of 26 June 2013 (BGBl. 2013 I, p. 1750), as last amended by Paragraph 5 of the Law of 21 July 2014 (BGBl. 2014 I, p. 1066), provides:

'Contracts shall be awarded to skilled, efficient, reliable and law-abiding undertakings. Contractors may be expected to meet other or further requirements involving social, environmental or innovative aspects if these have a direct relation to the subject matter of the contract and are stated in the description of the service to be rendered. Contractors may be expected to meet other or further requirements only if federal law or the laws of a Land provide for this.'

10 Pursuant to the Law on mandatory working conditions concerning cross-border services — Posted workers law (Gesetz über zwingende Arbeitsbedingungen bei grenzüberschreitenden Dienstleistungen — Arbeitnehmer-Entsendegesetz) of 26 February 1996 (BGBl. 1996 I, p. 227, 'the AEntG'), a collective agreement setting a mandatory minimum wage for the postal services sector was concluded on 29 November 2007 and was declared universally applicable to all undertakings in that sector by a regulation of 28 December 2007. However, by a judgment of the Bundesverwaltungsgericht

(Federal Administrative Court) of 28 January 2010, that regulation was annulled, so that, at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, there was no mandatory minimum wage for the postal services sector.

11 The Law regulating a general minimum wage (Gesetz zur Regelung eines allgemeinen Mindestlohns) of 11 August 2014 (BGBl. 2014 I, p. 1348) provides, in principle, that all workers, from 1 January 2015, are entitled to a minimum wage of EUR 8.50 gross per hour.

Law of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate

12 Paragraph 1(1) of the Law of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate on guaranteeing compliance with collective agreements and minimum wages in public contract awards (Landesgesetz zur Gewährleistung von Tariftreue und Mindestentgelt bei öffentlichen Auftragsvergaben) of 1 December 2010 ('the LTTG') provides:

'The present Law combats distortions of competition that arise in the award of public contracts because of the use of cheap labour and alleviates the burdens resulting therefrom for social protection systems. To that end, it provides that contracting authorities … may award public contracts, in accordance with the present Law, only to undertakings which pay their employees the minimum wage laid down in the present Law and which comply with collective agreements'.

13 Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG, entitled 'Minimum wage', provides:

'To the extent that compliance with collective agreements may not be required under Paragraph 4, public contracts may be awarded only to undertakings which, at the time of submitting their tender, undertake in writing to pay their staff, for performing the service, wages of at least EUR 8.50 gross per hour (minimum wage) and to implement, for the benefit of employees, any changes to the minimum wage arising during the period of performance … . … If the declaration relating to the minimum wage is not presented at the time the tender is submitted and is likewise not presented even after it has been requested, the tender shall be excluded from the evaluation. If the [competent] department has published model … declarations relating to minimum remuneration, these may be used'.

14 Following the adoption of the regulation of the Government of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate of 11 December 2012, the minimum hourly wage referred to in Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG is now EUR 8.70 gross per hour.

15 Under Paragraph 4 of the LTTG, entitled 'Obligation to comply with collective agreements':

'(1) Public contracts which fall within the scope of the Law on mandatory terms of employment for workers posted cross-border and workers regularly working within the national territory [(Gesetz über zwingende Arbeitsbedingungen für grenzüberschreitend entsandte und für regelmäßig im Inland beschäftigte Arbeitnehmer und Arbeitnehmerinnen of 20 April 2009 (BGBl. 2009 I, p. 799))], in the applicable version, may be awarded only to undertakings which undertake in writing, at the time of submitting their tender, to pay their staff, for performing the service, a remuneration which, in its amount and form, corresponds at least to the provisions of the collective agreement by which the undertaking is bound under [that Law].

(6) If the declaration relating to compliance with collective agreements is not presented at the time the tender is submitted and is likewise not presented even after it has been requested, the tender shall be excluded from the evaluation. If the [competent] department has published model … declarations relating to compliance with collective agreements, these may be used.'

16 Paragraph 5(2) of the LTTG, entitled 'Subcontractors', provides:

'Where contractual services are to be performed by subcontractors, the undertaking shall ensure that those subcontractors comply with the obligations referred to in Paragraphs 3 and 4 and shall provide the contracting authority with the subcontractors' declarations regarding the minimum wage and compliance with collective agreements. …'

17 Paragraph 6 of the LTTG, entitled 'Proof and monitoring', imposes certain obligations on the successful tenderer and subcontractors, relating, inter alia, to record-keeping and to the making available of documents and data, in order to enable the contracting authority to monitor compliance with the obligations imposed under the LTTG.

18 Paragraph 7 of the LTTG, entitled 'Penalties', provides:

'(1) In order to ensure compliance with the obligations set out in Paragraphs 3 to 6, the contracting authorities shall agree with the successful tenderer, for each case of culpable failure to fulfil obligations, a contractual penalty of 1% of the value of the contract; in the case of multiple failures to fulfil obligations, the total amount of penalties cannot exceed 10% of the value of the contract. The successful tenderer shall also be obliged to pay the contractual penalty mentioned in the first sentence where the failure to fulfil obligations is attributable to one of the successful tenderer's subcontractors and the successful tenderer was aware or ought to have been aware of that failure. If the contractual penalty is disproportionately high, it may be reduced to an appropriate amount by the contracting authority, at the request of the successful tenderer. …

(2) The contracting authorities shall agree with the successful tenderer that a failure to fulfil obligations that constitutes at least gross and serious negligence by the successful tenderer with regard to the requirements of Paragraphs 3 to 6 shall entitle the contracting authority to terminate the contract without notice on serious grounds.

(3) If the successful tenderer or a subcontractor has failed to fulfil its obligations under the present Law at least as a result of gross negligence or on a repeated basis, the contracting authorities may exclude that tenderer or that subcontractor from the award of public contracts for a period of up to three years.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

19 The order for reference states that, on 23 April 2013, the municipality of Landau issued a European Union-wide call for tender, under an open procedure, in respect of a public contract — divided into two lots — relating to postal services in that municipality, in particular, for the conclusion of a framework contract for the collection, carriage and delivery of letters, parcels and packages. The planned duration of the contract was two years, the contracting authority being entitled to extend it twice at most, for a period of one year each time.

20 Under point 4 of section III 2.2 of the contract notice, under the heading 'Economic and financial standing', 'the successful tenderer shall comply with the provisions of [the LTTG]'.

21 At the time of the facts in the main proceedings, there was no collective agreement setting a minimum wage and binding the undertakings in the postal services sector under the AEntG. Nor were the undertakings subject, at that time, to the obligation to pay the general minimum wage established by the Law of 11 August 2014 regulating a general minimum wage.

22 Annex E6 to the specifications for the contract at issue in the main proceedings was entitled 'Model declaration under Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG'. That annex was intended to enable tenderers to present, at the time of submitting their tender, their own declaration relating to the minimum wage and those of their subcontractors.

23 The model declaration was worded as follows:

'I/We hereby undertake:

1. to pay employees for the performance of the contract at least the (gross) hourly remuneration payable under the regulation of the Land in force for the purposes of setting the minimum wage referred to in the third sentence of Paragraph 3(2) of [the LTTG], unless the services are provided by trainees;

2. to select subcontractors carefully and in particular to check whether their offers could have been calculated on the basis of the minimum wage to be paid;

3. where the contract is performed by subcontractors or by employees of a temporary employment agency or by employees of a temporary employment agency engaged by the subcontractor, to ensure fulfilment of the obligations under Paragraph 4(1) of the LTTG or Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG, and to provide the contracting authority with the declarations by which those subcontractors and temporary employment agencies undertake to comply with the minimum remuneration and collective agreements;

4. to have available complete and verifiable documents concerning the employees assigned to the performance of the contract, to present those documents to the contracting authority at its request and to inform employees of the possibility of the contracting authority carrying out checks.'

24 By letter of 16 May 2013, RegioPost complained that the declarations relating to the minimum wage referred to in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG were contrary to public procurement law. It enclosed with its tender, which was submitted within the prescribed period, declarations by its subcontractors, which it had itself drawn up. It did not, however, submit a minimum wage compliance declaration for itself.

25 By e-mail of 25 June 2013, the municipality of Landau gave RegioPost the opportunity to provide, within a period of 14 days, the declarations relating to the minimum wage referred to in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG, while indicating that it would exclude RegioPost's tender if it failed to comply with that request.

26 By letter of 27 June 2013, RegioPost merely reiterated its complaints and stated that, if its tender were excluded, it would seek a review.

27 By letter of 11 July 2013, the municipality of Landau informed RegioPost that because of the failure to provide the declarations relating to the minimum wage referred to Paragraph 3 of the LTTG, its tender could not be assessed. In that same letter, it stated that the first lot of the contract would be awarded to PostCon Deutschland GmbH and the second lot to Deutsche Post AG.

28 By decision of 23 October 2013, the Vergabekammer Rheinland-Pfalz (Public Procurement Board of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate) dismissed the application for review filed by RegioPost on 15 July 2013, on the grounds, inter alia, that the latter's tender had rightly been excluded because of the failure to provide the declarations relating to the minimum wage, which had legitimately been required by the contracting authority.

29 Hearing the dispute on appeal, the referring court considers that the outcome of the proceedings turns on whether it is required to disapply Paragraph 3 of the LTTG on the grounds that that provision is incompatible with EU law.

30 It considers that Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG contains a special condition relating to the performance of the contract which, under Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, is lawful only if it is compatible with EU law.

31 The referring court considers that it is not in a position to determine that compatibility, even in the light of the case-law of the Court and, in particular, the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189).

32 The referring court considers that the fact that RegioPost is an undertaking established in Germany and that the other tenderers also have their seat in Germany does not preclude a request for a preliminary ruling, since the question whether a provision of national law must be disapplied because it may be incompatible with EU law is a question of law that arises regardless of the nationality of the parties to the contract award or review procedure.

33 As regards the compatibility with the first paragraph of Article 56 TFEU of the national measure at issue in the main proceedings, the referring court observes that the obligation for undertakings established in Member States other than the Federal Republic of Germany to adjust the wages paid to their employees to the higher level of remuneration applicable in the place where the contract is to be performed in Germany deprives those undertakings of the competitive advantage they derive from their lower wage costs, whereas that advantage is often necessary in order to offset the structural advantages enjoyed by national undertakings and to have access to the contract in question. The obligation to pay the minimum wage laid down in Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG therefore constitutes an obstacle for undertakings established in those other Member States that is, in principle, prohibited by the first paragraph of Article 56 TFEU.

34 However, the referring court considers that EU law does not preclude the application of Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG to those undertakings if the conditions for the application of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71 are satisfied. Nevertheless, according to the referring court, doubts might arise in that regard.

35 On the one hand, that court observes that, although Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG is indeed a legislative provision which lays down the minimum rate of pay, that provision does not guarantee workers the payment by their employer of the minimum wage. That national provision merely prohibits contracting authorities from awarding a public contract to tenderers that have not undertaken to pay the minimum wage laid down in it to workers assigned to the performance of the public contract in question.

36 On the other hand, the referring court notes that the obligation relating to the minimum wage laid down in Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG concerns only those workers of the successful tenderer who are assigned to the performance of the public contract concerned. However, a worker assigned to the performance of a private contract is no less deserving of social protection than a worker who is assigned to the performance of a public contract.

37 As regards the lesson to be drawn from the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189), the referring court observes that, in German academic writings, it has been argued, inter alia, that that judgment must be understood as meaning that Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71 does not preclude a provision such as Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG, which lays down, in a legislative provision, a minimum rate of pay, even if it has to be complied with in the performance of public contracts only, since the requirement as to universal application does not concern legislative provisions, but only collective agreements.

38 The referring court states, none the less, that is has serious doubts as to whether that proposition is correct. In the case of a restriction on a fundamental freedom such as the freedom to provide services, it considers that it would be illogical to interpret Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71 as meaning that it requires collective agreements setting a minimum wage to be of universal application, including all workers in the sector concerned, whether they be employed in the performance of public contracts or private contracts, while the scope of legislative provisions laying down a minimum wage may be limited to only those workers assigned to the performance of public contracts.

39 The referring court considers that, if it were to be concluded that a national provision such as Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG, requiring tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake to pay a minimum wage to staff performing the services covered by a public contract, is compatible with Article 56 TFEU, it would be necessary to consider whether the penalty provided for by that national provision should that obligation be infringed, namely, the tenderer’s exclusion from participation in the contract award procedure, is compatible with Article 26 of Directive 2004/18.

40 The referring court considers that that compatibility is doubtful since, although Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG constitutes a special condition relating to the performance of a contract within the meaning of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, that directive does not provide for grounds for exclusion from participation in a contract for infringement of such a special condition. Moreover, such grounds for exclusion would be difficult to understand since the question of a tenderer’s compliance with the special conditions with which it has undertaken to comply arises only after the award of the contract to that operator. It is not therefore a qualitative selection criterion that might justify the exclusion of a tenderer.

41 That court considers that the penalty of exclusion of the tender in the event of non-compliance with Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG is not based on valid grounds, since the undertakings required under that provision are of a declaratory nature only.

42 Moreover, the referring court considers that that penalty is nugatory since, in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings, the obligation relating to the payment of the minimum wage laid down in Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG forms part of the obligations set out both in the contract notice and in the specifications by which the successful tenderer is contractually bound following the award of the contract and in respect of which the contractual penalty imposed in Paragraph 7(1) of the LTTG is intended to ensure compliance.

43 In those circumstances, the Oberlandesgericht Koblenz (Higher Regional Court, Koblenz) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Is the first paragraph of Article 56 TFEU, read in conjunction with Article 3(1) of Directive [96/71] to be interpreted as precluding a national provision which makes it mandatory for a contracting authority to award contracts only to undertakings which undertake, and whose subcontractors undertake, in writing, at the time of submitting the tender, to pay their employees who perform the contract a minimum wage fixed by the State for public contracts only but not for private ones, where there is neither a general statutory minimum wage nor a universally binding collective agreement that binds potential contractors and possible subcontractors?

(2) If the first question is answered in the negative:

Is EU law in the area of public procurement, in particular Article 26 of Directive [2004/18] to be interpreted as precluding a national provision such as the third sentence of Paragraph 3(1) of the [LTTG] which provides for the mandatory exclusion of a tender if an economic operator does not, at the time of submitting the tender, undertake in a separate declaration to do something which he would be contractually obliged to do if awarded the contract even without making that declaration?’

Consideration of the questions referred

Admissibility

44 The municipality of Landau and the German and Italian Governments submit that the first question is inadmissible, relying on the lack — confirmed by the referring court — of any cross-border element in the dispute in the main proceedings, in so far as all the undertakings which participated in the procedure for the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings are established in the territory of the Member State of the contracting authority, namely, the Federal Republic of Germany. They submit that, failing a cross-border element, the Court of Justice does not have jurisdiction to rule on the compatibility of the measure at issue in the main proceedings with Directive 96/71 and/or Article 56 TFEU. The Italian Government also disputes the admissibility of the second question, for similar reasons.

45 Those objections must be rejected.

46 As a preliminary point, it must be recalled that the fact that a national court has, formally speaking, worded a question referred for a preliminary ruling with reference to certain provisions of EU law does not preclude the Court from providing the national court with all the elements of interpretation that may be of assistance in adjudicating on the case pending before it, whether or not that court has referred to them in its questions. It is, in this context, for the Court to extract from all the information provided by the national court, in particular from the grounds in the order for reference, the points of EU law that require interpretation, regard being had to the subject-matter of the dispute (see, inter alia, judgment in Vicoplus and Others, C-307/09 to C-309/09, EU:C:2011:64, paragraph 22).

47 In order to give a useful answer to the referring court, the first question must in the first place be examined in the light of the provision of EU law that specifically governs it, namely, Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, a provision to which the referring court, moreover, expressly refers in its second question (see, by analogy, judgment in Rüffert, C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189, paragraph 18).

48 It is clear from the documents before the Court, in particular, from the decision of the Vergabekammer Rheinland-Pfalz (Public Procurement Board of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate) to which reference is made in paragraph 28 above, that that directive is applicable to the case in the main proceedings, since the value of the public contract in question far exceeds the relevant threshold for the application of that directive, which, at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, was set at EUR 200 000.

49 Since, in this case, Directive 2004/18 is applicable, a point which has not, moreover, been disputed by any of the parties who submitted written observations or were present at the hearing before the Court, a question of interpretation relating to one of its provisions, in this instance, Article 26 thereof, is admissible, even though it is raised, as in the present case, in the context of a dispute all the elements of which are confined within a single Member State.

50 Moreover, even though, in the present case, all the elements of that dispute are confined within a single Member State, the Court has jurisdiction to give a ruling on Article 56 TFEU, to the extent that the degree of harmonisation envisaged in that directive so permits.

51 Thus, the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings clearly exceeding the relevant threshold for the application of Directive 2004/18, that contract must be regarded as having a certain cross-border interest. It is, therefore, by no means inconceivable that undertakings established in Member States other than the Federal Republic of Germany were interested in participating in that contract following the publication of the contract notice, even though they decided ultimately not to participate for reasons of their own, but which might have included — for some of those undertakings established in Member States in which the cost of living and the minimum rate of pay in force are significantly lower than those prevailing in Land of Rhineland-Palatinate — the obligation expressly laid down to comply with the minimum wage imposed in that Land.

52 It follows that the first question, reformulated as in the first place concerning the interpretation of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, is admissible, as is the second question.

Substance

The first question

53 In the light of the foregoing considerations as to the admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling, the view must be taken that, by its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a regional entity of a Member State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which requires tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay staff who are called upon to perform the services covered by the public contract in question a minimum wage laid down in that legislation.

54 A national provision such as Paragraph 3 of the LTTG, in so far as it requires all tenderers and subcontractors to undertake to the contracting authority to pay staff called upon to perform the public contract concerned a minimum wage established by law, must be regarded as a ‘special condition relating to the performance of a contract’ concerning ‘social considerations’, within the meaning of Article 26 of that directive.

55 In this case, that special condition was set out in the contract notice and in the specifications, so that the procedural condition as to transparency, laid down in Article 26 of that directive, is satisfied.

56 Moreover, it is clear from recital 33 to that directive that a special condition relating to the performance of a contract is compatible with EU law only in so far as it is not directly or indirectly discriminatory. It is not disputed that a national provision such as that at issue in the main proceedings satisfies that condition.

57 Furthermore, in accordance with the settled case-law of the Court, where a national measure falls within a field that has been exhaustively harmonised at EU level, that measure must be assessed in the light of the provisions of that harmonising measure and not in the light of the primary law of the European Union (see, to that effect, inter alia, judgments in DaimlerChrysler, C-324/99, EU:C:2001:682, paragraph 32; Brzeziński, C-313/05, EU:C:2007:33, paragraph 44; and Commission v Hungary, C-115/13, EU:C:2014:253, paragraph 38).

58 Under Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, special conditions relating to the performance of a contract may be laid down 'provided that these are compatible with Community law'.

59 It follows that that directive does not lay down exhaustive rules in respect of special conditions relating to the performance of contracts, so that the legislation at issue in the main proceedings may be assessed in the light of the primary law of the European Union.

60 That being so, in accordance with recital 34 to Directive 2004/18, in examining whether the national measure at issue in the main proceedings is compatible with EU law, it is necessary to determine whether, in cross-border situations in which workers from one Member State provide services in another Member State for the purpose of performing a public contract, the minimum conditions laid down in Directive 96/71 are observed in the host member State in respect of posted workers.

61 In this case, the referring court raises the question of the effects of the national measure at issue in the main proceedings on undertakings established outside Germany that may have been interested in participating in the procedure for the award of the public contract in question and envisaged posting their workers to that territory, on the ground that those undertakings may have decided not to participate because of the obligation placed on them in respect of the minimum wage imposed by the LTTG. Therefore, it is necessary to examine that national measure in the light of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71.

62 In this connection, it must be stated that a provision such as Paragraph 3 of the LTTG must be regarded as a 'law', for the purposes of the first indent of the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71, laying down a 'minimum rate of pay', within the meaning of point (c) of the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) thereof. First, contrary to the Law of the Land Niedersachsen on the award of public contracts at issue in the case that gave rise to the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189), a provision such as Paragraph 3 of the LTTG itself lays down the minimum rate of pay. Secondly, at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, the AEntG did not impose, nor did other national legislation impose, a lower wage for the postal services sector.

63 That categorisation cannot be called in question on the basis that the national measure in question applies to public contracts and not to private contracts, since the condition as to universal application defined in the first subparagraph of Article 3(8) of Directive 96/71 applies only to the collective agreements or arbitration awards referred to in the second indent of the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of that directive.

64 Moreover, since the national measure at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, which permits, subject to certain conditions, the imposition of a minimum wage in public contracts, that measure cannot be required to extend beyond that specific field by applying generally to all contracts, including private contracts.

65 The limitation of the scope of the national measure to public contracts is the simple consequence of the fact that there are rules of EU law specific to that field, in this case, those laid down in Directive 2004/18.

66 It follows that Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Directive 96/71, permits the host Member State to lay down, in the context of the award of a public contract, a mandatory rule for minimum protection referred to in point (c) of the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of that directive, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which requires undertakings established in other Member States to comply with an obligation in respect of a minimum rate of pay for the benefit of their workers posted to the territory of the host Member State in order to perform that public contract. Such a rule is part of the level of protection which must be guaranteed to those workers (see, to that effect, judgment in Laval un Partneri, C-341/05, EU:C:2007:809, paragraphs 74, 80 and 81).

67 That interpretation of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 is confirmed, furthermore, by a reading of that provision in the light of Article 56 TFEU, since that directive seeks in particular to bring about the freedom to provide services, which is one of the fundamental freedoms guaranteed by the Treaty (see, by analogy, judgment in Rüffert, C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189, paragraph 36).

68 It is clear, moreover, from recital 2 to Directive 2004/18, that the coordinating provisions contained in that directive in respect of public contracts above a certain value must be interpreted in accordance with the rules and principles of the Treaty, including those relating to the freedom to provide services.

69 In this regard, according to the case-law of the Court, the imposition, under national legislation, of a minimum wage on tenderers and their subcontractors, if any, established in a Member State other than that of the contracting authority and in which minimum rates of pay are lower constitutes an additional economic burden that may prohibit, impede or render less attractive the provision of their services in the host Member State. Consequently, a measure such as that at issue in the main proceedings is capable of constituting a restriction within the meaning of Article 56 TFEU (see to that effect, inter alia, judgment in Bundesdruckerei, C-549/13, EU:C:2014:2235, paragraph 30).

70 Such a national measure may, in principle, be justified by the objective of protecting workers (see, to that effect, judgment in Bundesdruckerei, C-549/13, EU:C:2014:2235, paragraph 31).

71 However, as the referring court has observed, the question arises whether it follows from paragraphs 38 to 40 of the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189) that such a justification cannot be accepted on the grounds that the minimum wage imposed by Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG applies to public contracts only, and not to private contracts.

72 That question calls for a negative answer.

73 It is clear from paragraphs 38 to 40 of the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189) that although the Court concluded, in the context of the examination of the national measure at issue in the case that gave rise to that judgment in the light of Article 56 TFEU, that that measure could not be justified by the objective of the protection of workers, it based that conclusion on certain characteristics specific to that measure, which clearly distinguish that measure from the national measure at issue in the main proceedings.

74 Thus, in the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189), the Court based its conclusion on the finding that what was at issue in the case that gave rise to that judgment was a collective agreement applying solely to the construction sector, which did not cover private contracts and had not been declared universally applicable. Furthermore, the Court observed that the rate of pay set by that collective agreement exceeded the minimum rate of pay applicable to that sector under the AEntG.

75 The minimum rate of pay imposed by the measure at issue in the main proceedings is laid down in a legislative provision, which, as a mandatory rule for minimum protection, in principle applies generally to the award of any public contract in the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate, irrespective of the sector concerned.

76 Furthermore, that legislative provision confers a minimum social protection since, at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, the AEntG did not impose, nor did other national legislation impose, a lower minimum wage for the postal services sector.

77 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a regional entity of a Member State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which requires tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay staff who are called upon to perform the services covered by the public contract in question a minimum wage laid down in that legislation.

78 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a regional entity of a Member State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides for the exclusion from participation in a procedure for the award of a public contract of tenderers and their subcontractors who refuse to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay staff who are called upon to perform the services covered by the public contract in question a minimum wage laid down in that legislation.

79 It follows from the answer given to the first question that Article 26 must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a regional entity of a Member State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which requires tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay staff who are called upon to perform the services covered by the public contract in question a minimum wage laid down in that legislation.

80 Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG also provides that if no such declaration has been made at the time the tender is submitted and is likewise not presented even after it has been requested, the tender is to be excluded from the evaluation.

81 Furthermore, Paragraph 7 of the LTTG provides for a system of penalties that applies to various situations in which such a written undertaking was enclosed with the tender, but was not complied with in the course of the performance of the public contract. That system is not relevant to the main proceedings, which concern the exclusion of a tenderer that has refused to enclose that undertaking with its tender.

82 In this case, RegioPost was excluded from participation in the procedure for the award of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings after refusing to put its tender in order by appending its written undertaking to comply with the obligation to pay the minimum wage laid down in Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG.

83 Exclusion from participation in that contract cannot be regarded as a penalty. It is merely the consequence of the failure, characterised by the failure to enclose with the tender the written undertakings required under Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG, to meet a requirement formulated in a particularly transparent manner in the contract notice and intended to emphasise, from the outset, the importance of compliance with a mandatory rule for minimum protection expressly authorised by Article 26 of Directive 2004/18.

84 Consequently, just as that provision does not preclude a written undertaking as to compliance with that rule being required, Article 26 permits such exclusion.

85 The importance of compliance with that mandatory rule for minimum protection is moreover expressly made clear in recital 34 to Directive 2004/18 in so far as it states that, in the event of non-compliance with the obligations imposed by national law concerning, inter alia, conditions of employment, the Member States may classify such non-compliance as grave misconduct or an offence concerning the professional conduct of the economic operator that is liable to lead to the exclusion of that economic operator from the procedure for the award of a public contract.

86 Moreover, the burden — on tenderers and their subcontractors, if any — represented by the obligation to include an undertaking to pay a minimum wage, such as that laid down in Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG, is negligible, particularly since they can simply complete standard forms.

87 The appropriateness and proportionality of the exclusion of an operator from participation in a procedure for the award of a public contract, such as the exclusion provided for in Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG, are also clear from the fact that that provision expressly provides that such exclusion can be applied only where, after having been invited to supplement its tender by adding the undertaking, the operator concerned refuses to comply, as in the main proceedings.

88 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that the answer to the second question is that Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a regional entity of a Member

State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides for the exclusion from participation in a procedure for the award of a public contract of tenderers and their subcontractors who refuse to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay staff who are called upon to perform the services covered by the public contract in question a minimum wage laid down in that legislation.

Costs

89 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 26 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011, must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a regional entity of a Member State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which requires tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay staff who are called upon to perform the services covered by the public contract in question a minimum wage laid down in that legislation.

2. Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, as amended by Regulation No 1251/2011, must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a regional entity of a Member State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which provides for the exclusion from participation in a procedure for the award of a public contract of tenderers and their subcontractors who refuse to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay staff who are called upon to perform the services covered by the public contract in question a minimum wage laid down in that legislation.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
PAOLO MENGOZZI
delivered on 9 September 2015 (1)

Case C-115/14

RegioPost GmbH & Co. KG
v
Stadt Landau

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Oberlandesgericht Koblenz (Germany))

(Purely internal situation — National identity — Article 4(2) TEU — Freedom to provide services — Article 56 TFEU — Directive 96/71/EC — Article 3(1) — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 26 — Public procurement — Postal services — National legislation requiring tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake to pay a minimum wage to the staff performing the services forming the subject-matter of the public procurement contract)

I – Introduction

1. In a procedure for the award of a public procurement contract, does a contracting authority of a Member State have the power, under the provisions of EU law, to require tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake to pay the statutory minimum hourly wage to the personnel who will be responsible for performing the work forming the subject-matter of that contract?

2. That, in essence, is the subject-matter of the questions referred by the Oberlandesgericht Koblenz (Higher Regional Court, Koblenz) (Germany) in the course of proceedings between RegioPost GmbH & Co. KG ('RegioPost'), a postal services provider, and the Stadt Landau in der Pfalz (Town of Landau in der Pfalz), a municipality situated in the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate.

3. That issue, with which the Court has previously been faced in the cases giving rise to the judgments in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189) and Bundesdruckerei (C-549/13, EU:C:2014:2235), albeit in different legal and factual circumstances, calls, in essence, for an interpretation of the provisions of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (2) and Article 56 TFEU in the context of the freedom to provide services.

4. The order for reference states that, on 23 April 2013, the Stadt Landau in der Pfalz launched an EU-wide call for tenders for a public procurement contract for postal services in that town, divided into two lots.

5. It is common ground that, at the time of the facts of the main proceedings, there was neither a general minimum wage in Germany, the latter having been introduced, at an hourly rate of EUR 8.50 (gross), only from 1 January 2015, nor a binding, universally applicable, collective agreement covering employment conditions in the postal services sector.

6. None the less, the contract notice issued by the Stadt Landau in der Pfalz stated, in connection with the ‘economic and financial standing’ of the successful tenderer, that the latter must comply with the provisions of the Law of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate concerning the guarantee of compliance with collective agreements and the minimum wage in the context of the award of public contracts (Landesgesetz zur Gewährleistung von Tariftreue und Mindestentgelt bei öffentlichen Auftragsvergaben (Landestariftreuegesetz) (‘the LTTG’) of 1 December 2010.

7. Paragraph 1 of the LTTG states that that law is intended to combat distortions of competition in the award of public contracts that result from the use of low-paid personnel, and to alleviate the burden on the social security systems. The contracting authority may thus award public contracts only to undertakings that pay their employees the minimum wage provided for in that law.

8. Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG states that public contracts may be awarded only to undertakings that, at the time of submitting their tender, undertake in writing to pay their staff, for the performance of the services, wages of at least EUR 8.50 (gross) per hour (minimum wage) and to put into effect, for the benefit of employees, any changes to the minimum wage during the period of performance. At the time of the facts of the case in the main proceedings, the minimum hourly wage referred to in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG had been increased to EUR 8.70 (gross) by regulation of the Government of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate, in accordance with the procedure laid down in Paragraph 3(2) of the LTTG. Furthermore, Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG also states that, if the declaration relating to the minimum wage is lacking at the time when the tender is submitted and is not forthcoming even after it has been requested, the tender is to be excluded from the evaluation.

9. The specifications for the public contract in question contained a ‘model declaration’ as provided for in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG and asked tenderers to present, at the time of submitting their tender, their own declaration that they undertook to pay the minimum wage and declarations on behalf of their subcontractors.

10. On 16 May 2013, RegioPost complained that the minimum wage declarations referred to in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG were contrary to public procurement law. It enclosed with its tender, which was submitted within the prescribed deadline, declarations by the subcontractors which it had drawn up on their behalf, but did not submit one for itself.

11. On 25 June 2013, the Stadt Landau in der Pfalz gave RegioPost the opportunity of producing the minimum wage declarations referred to in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG retrospectively, within a period of a fortnight, while at the same time pointing out that it would exclude RegioPost’s tender if RegioPost failed to comply with that request.

12. On 27 June 2013, RegioPost, which had not produced the declarations sought by the contracting authority, reiterated its complaints and stated that, if its tender were excluded, it would bring an action.

13. On 11 July 2013, the contracting authority informed RegioPost that, for want of the declarations requested, its tender could not be evaluated. At the same time, it stated that the two lots of the contract in question would be awarded to PostCon Deutschland GmbH and Deutsche Post AG respectively.

14. On 23 October 2013, the Vergabekammer Rheinland-Pfalz (Public Procurement Board of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate) dismissed the application for review made by RegioPost on the grounds, in particular, that the latter’s tender had rightly been excluded because the declarations concerning the minimum wage legitimately requested by the contracting authority had not been produced.

15. Hearing the case on appeal, the referring court takes the view that the resolution of the case turns on whether Paragraph 3 of the LTTG is compatible with EU law.

16. More specifically, it considers that Paragraph 3 of the LTTG contains a ‘special condition relating to the performance of a contract’ which concerns ‘social considerations’ within the meaning of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, and would be lawful only if compatible with the provisions of EU law concerning the freedom to provide services.

17. The referring court considers itself unable to determine the compatibility of that condition with EU law, even in the light of the Court's case-law, in particular the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189).

18. As regards the compatibility of Paragraph 3 of the LTTG with the first paragraph of Article 56 TFEU, the referring court observes that the obligation incumbent on undertakings established in other Member States to adjust the wages paid to their employees to the — usually higher — level of remuneration applicable at the place of performance of the contract in Germany deprives those undertakings of a competitive advantage. Consequently, the obligation laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG constitutes an obstacle prohibited, in principle, by the first paragraph of Article 56 TFEU.

19. The referring court takes the view, however, that EU law would not preclude the application of Paragraph 3 of the LTTG to those undertakings if it were to be found that the conditions governing the application of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 December 1996 concerning the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services (3) had been satisfied.

20. It none the less has doubts in this regard.

21. The referring court points out that, although Paragraph 3 of the LTTG is indeed a legislative provision which itself fixes the minimum rate of pay, that provision does not guarantee all the staff employed by the successful tenderers the payment of such wages. It simply prohibits contracting authorities from awarding a public contract to tenderers who do not undertake to pay the minimum wage to the workers assigned to perform that contract exclusively.

22. The referring court further states that the obligation laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG applies only to public contracts and not to the performance of private contracts. However, a worker assigned to perform such a contract is no less worthy of social protection than a worker performing a public contract. The referring court points out in this regard that the application of the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189) in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings is a matter of debate in Germany. It also expresses serious doubts about the proposition to the effect that the requirement that a minimum rate of pay must be applied generally to all the kinds of contract at issue is confined exclusively to the situation, which gave rise to the judgment in Rüffert, in which that rate is fixed by means of collective agreements and not by legislative provisions.

23. Finally, if it were to be concluded that the requirement laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG is compatible with Article 56 TFEU, the referring court takes the view that it would then be necessary to consider whether the penalty provided for in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG, that is to say, the tenderer's exclusion from participation in the procurement procedure, is compatible with Article 26 of Directive 2004/18. In particular, the referring court expresses doubts about whether the condition laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG may be classified as a qualitative selection criterion, any failure to meet which could justify a tenderer's exclusion. Moreover, it considers that the penalty laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG is redundant, for the successful tenderer is contractually bound to pay the statutory minimum wage once the contract has been concluded and any failure to comply with that obligation attracts a penalty as laid down in Paragraph 7 of the LTTG.

24. In those circumstances, the referring court decided to stay proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is the first paragraph of Article 56 TFEU in conjunction with Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71 to be interpreted as precluding a national provision which makes it mandatory for a contracting authority to award contracts only to undertakings which undertake and whose subcontractors undertake in writing, at the time of submitting the tender, to pay their employees who perform the contract a minimum wage fixed by the State for public contracts only but not for private ones, where there is neither a general statutory minimum wage nor a universally binding collective agreement that binds potential contractors and possible subcontractors?

(2) If the first question is answered in the negative:

Is EU law in the area of public procurement, in particular Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 to be interpreted as precluding a national provision such as the third sentence of Paragraph 3(1) of the [LTTG] which provides for the mandatory exclusion of a tender if an economic operator does not, already when submitting the tender, undertake in a separate declaration to do something which he would be contractually obliged to do if awarded the contract even without making that declaration?'

25. Written observations on those questions were submitted by the Stadt Landau in der Pfalz, Deutsche Post AG, the German, Danish, Italian, Austrian and Norwegian Governments and the European Commission. With the exception of the Italian and Austrian Governments, those parties, together with RegioPost, presented oral argument at the hearing of 29 April 2015.

II – Analysis

A – The first question referred for a preliminary ruling

26. By its first question, the referring court asks the Court whether legislation adopted by a federal entity of a Member State which requires tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay the staff who will be called upon to perform the work forming the subject-matter of a public contract minimum hourly wages of EUR 8.70 (gross), as fixed by that legislation, is compatible with Article 56 TFEU and Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71.

1. The jurisdiction of the Court

27. The Stadt Landau in der Pfalz and the German and Italian Governments submit that, in so far as all the facts of the case in the main proceedings are confined within the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany, there is no need to answer this question, since the provisions of EU law relating to the freedom to provide services are not applicable to such a situation.

28. In my view, that argument cannot succeed.

29. It is true, as the order for reference makes clear, that all the undertakings which took part in the procedure for the award of the public contract in question are established in Germany, that that contract is to be performed in German territory, and that there is in addition nothing in the documents before the Court to indicate that subcontracting undertakings established in the territory of other Member States have been called upon to participate in the performance of the contract.

30. It is also true that the Treaty provisions relating to the freedom to provide services do not apply to situations in which all the relevant facts are confined within a single Member State. (4)

31. The Court considers, none the less, that it has jurisdiction to answer questions relating in particular to the interpretation of the Treaty provisions on the fundamental freedoms in contexts in which all the facts are confined within a single Member State in three cases: where it is 'far from inconceivable' that nationals of other Member States may, in similar situations, be faced with the contested national measures adopted by the Member State at issue when exercising one of those freedoms, (5) or where the domestic law prohibits 'reverse' discrimination (6) and/or where, in order to settle a purely internal dispute, domestic law makes a renvoi, in principle 'directly and unconditionally', to the rules of EU law. (7)

32. In the context of the first stream of case-law which has just been mentioned, the Court made it clear, in its judgments in Venturini and Others (C-159/12 to C-161/12, EU:C:2013:791, paragraph 26) and Sokoll-Seebacher (C-367/12, EU:C:2014:68, paragraph 11), that it had jurisdiction to answer questions referred for a preliminary ruling which, despite the purely internal nature of the situations giving rise to those questions, concerned the compatibility with the freedom of establishment guaranteed by the Treaty of national legislation which was capable of producing effects which are not confined to a single Member State. In such circumstances, it was 'far from inconceivable' that nationals of other Member States had been or were interested in exercising the fundamental freedom in question in those cases. (8)

33. Beyond the situation specific to the case in the main proceedings, the Court thus seems to be at pains to establish whether, by virtue of its purpose or its very nature, the national measure at issue is capable of producing cross-border effects. If that is the case, the Court will agree to answer the questions referred to it.

34. That case-law can be applied to the present case.

35. The purpose of the LTTG is to require the successful tenders for the award of public contracts organised by the contracting authorities of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate to pay the minimum wage fixed by that Land for the performance of those contracts. Paragraph 3 of the LTTG requires every tenderer and any subcontractors it may engage, irrespective of their nationality or their place of residence, to give an undertaking in writing, at the time when the tender is submitted, to pay that minimum wage if in the end awarded the contract. As such, the LTTG may therefore produce effects beyond German territory, for the requirements which that legislation lays down apply without distinction to all calls for tenders, including those on an EU-wide scale, launched by the contracting authorities of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate.

36. That was, furthermore, the situation at the time of the call for tenders giving rise to the case in the main proceedings. As is clear from the documents communicated by the referring court and as confirmed at the hearing by the Stadt Landau in der Pfalz, the public contract in question was launched on an EU-wide scale and its estimated value far exceeds the threshold of EUR 200 000 provided for in Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18 that was applicable to public service contracts at the time of the facts of the case in the main proceedings. (9)

37. It is therefore by no means inconceivable that, when it was published in the Official Journal of the European Union, that call for tenders was of interest to a certain number of undertakings established in Member States other than Germany, but that those undertakings did not in the end participate in the procurement procedure for reasons which could be linked to the requirements laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG.

38. It is, however, primarily the connection between the case in the main proceedings and the provisions of Directive 2004/18, the applicability of which is not in doubt, which supports my conviction that the objection as to lack of jurisdiction or inadmissibility raised by the Stadt Landau in der Pfalz and the German and Italian Governments must be dismissed. (10)

39. As the referring court has rightly pointed out, Article 26 of that directive grants contracting authorities the right to ‘lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract’ which may concern ‘social considerations’, provided that they are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications and ‘are compatible with [EU] law’.

40. The renvoi so made by Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 to the provisions of EU law means that the conditions relating to the obligation to pay a minimum rate of pay laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG, which are linked to the performance of the public contract, must be compatible with those provisions, including, therefore, with the freedom to provide services guaranteed by the Treaty.

41. Furthermore, as the Court has previously held, the duty to observe the principle of equal treatment lies at the very heart of the public procurement directives, which are intended in particular to promote the development of effective competition and lay down criteria for the award of contracts that are intended to ensure such competition. (11)

42. Because the referring court, like the contracting authority, has a duty to ensure equal treatment for tenderers participating in a call for tenders relating to a contract falling within the ambit of Directive 2004/18, the latter therefore requires the referring court, when adjudicating on purely internal situations, to adopt the same solutions as those adopted in EU law in order, in particular, to avoid any discrimination between economic operators or any distortion of competition. (12)

43. That, at all events, is why I am of the opinion that, in so far as the contract notice in the case in the main proceedings falls within the ambit of the provisions of Directive 2004/18, it is primarily the conditions governing the application of Article 26 of that directive which form the true subject-matter of the interpretation requested by the referring court in its first question. Consequently, if the first question referred by the national court is reworded in such a way as to relate to the interpretation of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, the Court necessarily has jurisdiction to interpret that article. The applicability of the provisions of Directive 2004/18 does not depend on the existence of an actual link to the freedom of movement between the Member States; those provisions become relevant as soon as the amount of the contract at issue in the main proceedings exceeds the thresholds for the application of that directive, (13) which, in the case in the main proceedings, it does.

44. In those circumstances, I take the view that the Court has jurisdiction to answer the first question referred for a preliminary ruling by the national court. As I have said, in my opinion, its jurisdiction to do so is clear if that question is reworded in such a way as to seek an interpretation of the effect of the conditions laid down in Article 26 of Directive 2004/18.

2. Substance

45. In the light of the foregoing observations concerning the rewording of the question referred by the national court, I consider that that court seeks, in essence, to ascertain whether Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 is to be interpreted as meaning that it precludes the legislation of a regional entity of a Member State that requires tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay the staff who will be called upon to perform the work forming the subject-matter of a public procurement contract a minimum hourly wage of EUR 8.70 (gross), as fixed by that legislation.

46. Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 authorises contracting authorities to make the performance of the public contract subject to ‘special conditions’ which may concern ‘social considerations’, provided that those conditions are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications and are ‘compatible with [EU] law’.

47. In this instance, the requirement for the successful tenderer to comply with the provisions of the LTTG, in particular Paragraph 3 thereof, was clearly indicated both in the contract notice and in the specifications in the case in the main proceedings. Moreover, there is no doubt, in my opinion, that the ‘social considerations’ referred to in Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 include the obligation for a successful tenderer and any subcontractors it engages, when performing a public contract, to pay a minimum rate of pay fixed by law for the benefit of the workers assigned to that task.

48. Recital 34 in the preamble to that directive confirms that ‘[t]he laws, regulations …, at … national … level, which are in force in the areas of employment conditions … apply during performance of a public contract, providing that such rules, and their application, comply with [EU] law’. (14) Compliance with a minimum rate of pay is eminently capable of falling within the category of employment conditions. (15)

49. In accordance with Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, read in the light of recital 34 of that directive, the possibility of requiring observance of such a minimum rate of pay must none the less be compatible with EU law.

50. It is therefore necessary to establish whether a requirement in respect of a minimum rate of pay for the purposes of the performance of a public procurement contract, such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings, is compatible with the relevant provisions of EU law.

51. In that regard, the referring court and the interested parties take the view that such an examination must be undertaken primarily, if not exclusively, in the light of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71, in so far as that provision governs the terms and conditions of employment which Member States may require of undertakings that temporarily post workers for the purpose of providing services.

52. I am unpersuaded by that approach.

53. The reason for this is that it is common ground that the case in the main proceedings does not fall within the ambit of any of the measures involving the posting of workers referred to in Article 1(3) of Directive 96/71. In particular, for the purposes of performing the public contract for which it tendered, RegioPost, which is established in Germany, did not intend either to rely on an establishment or undertaking within its group which would have posted workers to German territory, or even to use the services of a temporary employment undertaking or placement agency which hires out workers from another Member State in order to have such workers posted to Germany.

54. From the point of view of the application of Directive 96/71, the situation giving to rise the present case is not substantially different from that which gave rise to the judgment in Bundesdruckerei (C-549/13, EU:C:2014:2235), in which the Court held that it could not examine the compatibility between the provisions of that directive and the legislation of a German Land requiring undertakings which had successfully tendered for a public contract to observe a minimum rate of pay fixed by that same legislation, on the ground that the situation at issue in the main proceedings was not covered by one of the three transnational measures referred to in Article 1(3) of Directive 96/71. (16)

55. It was apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling in that case that the undertaking Bundesdruckerei intended to perform the public contract in question (which concerned the digitalisation of documents and the conversion of data for the benefit of a German municipality) not by posting workers to German territory but by entrusting the contract to workers employed by one of its subsidiaries established in the territory of another Member State, namely Poland. (17)

56. In other words, according to the Court's reasoning, even though the situation in question was transnational, it did not involve the temporary posting of workers to German territory for the purpose of providing the services at issue.

57. It is also important to note that, in excluding the application of Directive 96/71, the Court drew attention, not to the situation as it stood when the contracting authority issued its contract notice at EU level, at which time the posting of workers to German territory was still a possibility, but to the specific situation in which Bundesdruckerei found itself and which had given rise to the reference for a preliminary ruling.

58. The Court thus inferred from those circumstances that the interpretation of Article 56 TFEU alone was relevant in Bundesdruckerei (C-549/13, EU:C:2014:2235, paragraph 29).

59. In my opinion, that is the approach that must be adopted in the present case too.

60. Consequently, in a situation such as that in the case in the main proceedings, I take the view that the renvoi made to EU law by Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 relates exclusively to Article 56 TFEU.

61. In order to ascertain whether a rule of national law such as Paragraph 3 of the LTTG is compatible with Article 56 TFEU, it is necessary, in essence, to determine whether the minimum rate of pay provided for in the legislation of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate constitutes a restriction of the freedom to provide services, that could be justified by the objectives of combating distortions of competition or protecting workers, as both the Stadt Landau in der Pfalz and the German Government have submitted.

62. First of all, in the light of the case-law of the Court, there is no doubt that, in requiring suppliers which have successfully tendered for public contracts and any subcontractors they may engage to observe a minimum hourly rate of pay of EUR 8.70 (gross), legislation such as that of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate may impose on service providers established in Member States other than Germany in which the minimum rates of pay are lower an additional economic burden that may prohibit, impede or render less attractive the provision of their services in Germany. Consequently, such a national measure is capable of constituting a restriction within the meaning of Article 56 TFEU. (18)

63. Next, it must be ascertained whether such a national measure may be justified, inter alia, in the light of the objective of protecting workers.

64. In that connection, both RegioPost and the Commission submit, with reference in particular to paragraphs 29 and 39 of the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189), that this is not the case, since the protection afforded by Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG does not extend to workers assigned to perform private contracts.

65. I do not share that view.

66. In Rüffert, the Court was asked about the compatibility with Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71 and with Article 56 TFEU of the legislation of a German Land requiring suppliers which had successfully tendered for public construction contracts and local public transport contracts to observe, when performing those contracts, the rate of pay provided for under a collective agreement referred to by the Land legislation in question.

67. In the light of the interpretation of Directive 96/71, which, according to the Court's reasoning in the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189), is also relevant to the interpretation of Article 56 TFEU, the question thus arose as to whether the collective agreement at issue in that case had been declared universally applicable within the meaning of Article 3(1) of that directive. The Court held that that was not the case and that, consequently, the procedures for fixing the minimum rate of pay provided for by Directive 96/71 had not been observed.

68. Going somewhat beyond that issue (19) and examining the universal and binding effect of a collective agreement such as that at issue in that case, the Court held, in paragraph 29 of the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189), that such an effect could not be held to exist where, in particular, the 'legislation' of the Land in question, which referred to observance of the rate of pay provided for in that agreement, 'applie[d] only to public contracts and not to private contracts'.

69. In paragraph 39 of the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189), which forms part of the Court's 'confirmatory' reasoning relating to Article 56 TFEU, the Court reiterated word for word the assessment cited above, contained in paragraph 29 of the judgment.

70. None the less, the implications of the assessment contained in paragraphs 29 and 39 of the judgment in Rüffert must now be reconsidered in the light of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, an entirely new provision in EU public procurement law which was not applicable at the time of the facts giving rise to that judgment. (20)

71. As I have already stated, Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 authorises Member States to require suppliers which have successfully tendered for public contracts to comply with special conditions, including employment conditions, when performing those contracts. If that authorisation is to continue to be of practical effect, the Member States must, in my view, be empowered to adopt laws, regulations or administrative provisions which, in the specific context of public contracts, lay down employment conditions, including a minimum rate of pay, for the benefit of the workers who provide services in performance of those contracts.

72. It is clear that, in exercising that power, the Member States and the contracting authorities must ensure that the principles of transparency and non-discrimination, as provided for in Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 in reference to EU law, are observed.

73. However, the exercise of that power cannot, in my view, be made subject to the requirement that the employment conditions in question, such as in this instance the minimum rate of pay, must also apply to workers performing private contracts. If that were the case, those conditions would cease to be 'special conditions' within the meaning of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18. Furthermore, a requirement to extend employment conditions to the performance of private contracts in this way would ultimately have the effect of compelling the Member States to introduce a universal minimum rate of pay applicable in some or all parts of their respective territories, which they are currently in no way obliged to do under EU law. (21)

74. In fact, in a context such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings, such an extension, the reason for which would be concern to ensure the consistency of the Land legislation, even seems to me to be potentially prejudicial to the powers of the Länder.

75. As several interested parties have emphasised, while the Länder have the power under German law to lay down rules governing minimum rates of pay when issuing calls for tenders for public contracts, they have no such powers when it comes to fixing minimum rates of pay for workers as a whole.

76. The outcome of upholding the proposition advanced by RegioPost and the Commission would be that, in a case such as that in the main proceedings, a Land would be unable to apply its legislation transposing the authorisation granted by Directive 2004/18 because the scope of such legislation would have to extend beyond the specific public procurement sector in respect of which the Land has exercised its powers.

77. As a result, the Land would have no option but to refrain from applying that legislation until such time as the Federal State decided to introduce a universally applicable minimum rate of pay.

78. At Federal State level, that approach, which, if the line of argument put forward by RegioPost and the Commission is carried through to its logical conclusion, would have to be adopted in order to comply with the requirement to extend to private contracts the treatment previously reserved for public contracts, would effectively transform the option made available to Member States to introduce a minimum wage in their respective territories into an actual obligation, which, as I have already said, is by no means provided for by EU law as it currently stands.

79. At Land level, the introduction of a minimum rate of pay by the Federal State would render superfluous the legislative provisions adopted by the Land for the specific purpose of ensuring that successful tenderers fulfilled the obligation to pay a minimum wage to workers performing a public contract in its territory.

80. In such circumstances, the Land's powers in this sphere would be significantly reduced, if not non-existent.

81. It might be argued, it is true, that, in the situation envisaged in the foregoing points of this Opinion, the Länder would still be authorised to adopt a (minimum) rate of pay higher than that fixed at Federal level in order, in particular, to take into account local costs of living. However, there would still be the question of whether such a rate would retain the status of a minimum rate of pay and, in particular, whether it would not itself have to be extended to workers assigned to the performance of private contracts. Ultimately, the Länder would quite simply have to waive their powers in the public procurement sector and apply the minimum rate of pay adopted at Federal level in that sector.

82. It should be recalled that, under Article 4(2) TEU, the Union is required to respect the national identity of the Member States, inherent in their fundamental structures, political and constitutional, inclusive of regional and local self-government.

83. It is true that Member States with a federal structure, such as the Federal Republic of Germany, may not rely on the internal allocation of competences between the authorities at regional and local level and the Federal authorities with a view to evading compliance with their obligations under EU law. (22) In order to ensure compliance with those obligations, those various authorities are bound to coordinate the exercise of their respective competences. (23)

84. That requirement presupposes, however, that the powers of those authorities can actually be exercised. To my mind, it is clear from Article 4(2) TEU that EU law cannot prevent a regional or local entity from actually exercising the powers vested in it within the Member State concerned. As the preceding submissions serve to demonstrate, however, that would be the ultimate consequence of RegioPost's and the Commission's argument that, in order to be compatible with Article 56 TFEU, the rule laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG for the benefit of workers performing a public contract would have to be extended to workers assigned to the performance of private contracts.

85. It therefore seems to me to be perfectly consistent with the powers exercised by the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate that the scope of Paragraph 3 of the LTTG should be confined to workers performing public contracts.

86. As I see it, that approach is also consistent with the Court's case-law in the context of the special environmental considerations, applicable without distinction, which contracting authorities may require to be taken into account. Thus, that case-law recognises in particular that such considerations may be taken into account in the examination of criteria governing the award of public contracts for the provision of urban transport services and be compatible with the principle of non-discrimination, without need for those considerations to be further extended to urban transport undertakings where these perform private contracts. (24) It is important to make the point that Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 refers to environmental considerations in the same way as to the social considerations examined in the present case. To my mind, the analogy which the German Government draws between those two types of considerations makes readily apparent the need to allow the Member States to adopt measures specific to the economic sector of public procurement.

87. Furthermore, a national measure such as Paragraph 3 of the LTTG seems to me to be entirely proportionate. It requires successful tenderers and any subcontractors they may engage to pay the minimum wage fixed by the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate only for the benefit of those of their workers who are assigned to the performance of public contracts, not for the benefit of all their employees.

88. Consequently, it is my view that Paragraph 3 of the LTTG may be justified by the objective of protecting workers and, therefore, that Article 56 TFEU does not preclude the application of a provision of that kind in a situation such as that in the case in the main proceedings, there being no need for the scope of that provision to be extended to private contracts.

89. In the light of all those considerations, I propose that the first question referred for a preliminary ruling by the national court be answered as follows: Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 is to be interpreted as not precluding the legislation of a regional entity of a Member State which requires tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay the staff who will be called upon to perform the work forming the subject-matter of a public procurement contract a minimum hourly wage of EUR 8.70 (gross), fixed by that legislation.

B – The second question referred for a preliminary ruling

90. By its second question referred for a preliminary ruling, the national court wishes to ascertain, in essence, whether Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 must nevertheless be interpreted as precluding a provision adopted by a regional entity of a Member State, such as Paragraph 3(1) of the LTTG, which provides that a tender must compulsorily be excluded if the tenderer fails, when submitting its tender, to give an undertaking, in a separate declaration, in respect of the minimum rate of pay laid down by that provision, and which it would be contractually bound to pay in any case if it were awarded the contract.

91. That question calls for an examination, first, of the means by which the Member States are authorised to verify that the conditions laid down in Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 have been satisfied, and secondly, supposing that those conditions are not met, of the issue of whether a penalty, such as exclusion from participating in the public procurement procedure, is appropriate.

92. With the exception of RegioPost, all the parties which have submitted observations on this question contend that the Member States are authorised to review compliance with the conditions laid down in Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, in particular by means of a system whereby the tenderer makes a declaration of its undertaking at the time when it submits its tender, and that, if such a declaration is not produced, the contracting authority is authorised to exclude the tenderer from the procurement procedure.

93. I concur with the position adopted by the latter parties.

94. As regards the first point, it is, to my mind, clear that if, as I consider, the Member States are authorised under EU law to adopt laws or regulations aimed at imposing on successful tenderers special employment conditions such as payment of a minimum rate of pay in the performance of public contracts, that authorisation necessarily implies that the Member States may adopt measures enabling the contracting authority to ensure that the tenderers and their subcontractors are prepared to fulfil those conditions in the event that the contract is awarded to them.

95. In the present case, the measure at issue takes the form of a written declaration of commitment which the tenderer must provide both for itself and, if appropriate, for its subcontractors.

96. Contrary to what appears to have been stated in the contract notice in the case in the main proceedings, that declaration does not appear to be a document relating to the minimum level of economic and financial standing that may be required of the tenderer under Article 47 of Directive 2004/18, which may be demonstrated by one or more of the references listed in that article or by any document deemed appropriate by the contracting authority, in particular the economic operator's balance-sheet or a statement of its overall or sector-specific turnover.

97. It is above all else a declaration of an undertaking to observe the law, that is to say, more specifically, the employment conditions required by the legislation of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate, when performing the work forming the subject-matter of the public contract.

98. It could, it is true, be argued, as the Commission did at the hearing before the Court, that proof that the tenderer or its subcontractors are able to pay the minimum wage fixed by the legislation of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate to the employees assigned to perform the public procurement contract requires a certain financial capacity.

99. Even if the Court were to take the view that the declaration of an undertaking to pay a minimum wage has to do with the tenderer's financial standing, the requirement to submit such a declaration would not be prohibited by Article 47 of Directive 2004/18. The Court has already made it clear that the list of criteria for assessing the minimum level of economic and financial standing required is not exhaustive. (25)

100. At all events, such a declaration of an undertaking to pay the minimum wage fixed by the legislation of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate is not in itself capable of placing on the tenderer an additional burden so intolerable as to render the procurement procedure more onerous than it would be without the requirement to produce that declaration. In asking for that declaration, the contracting authority seeks only to verify that the tenderer undertakes to comply with the condition for the performance of the contract laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG. As the Commission submits, moreover, such a declaration is a proven means of verifying that tenderers and their subcontractors satisfy the conditions governing the performance of public contracts. Requiring the submission of such a declaration also lends transparency to the special conditions set out in the contract notice and/or specifications by alerting tenderers to the importance which the contracting authority attaches to those conditions.

101. As regards the second point, that is to say, exclusion from the procurement procedure if the tenderer refuses to give such a declaration of commitment, I would endorse the Commission's argument that such a refusal supports the assumption that the tenderer does not intend to submit to the condition laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG.

102. Pursuing a procurement procedure with such an economic operator and, if appropriate, awarding the contract to that operator, only to have to impose contractual penalties on it later on account of its failure to observe the condition laid down in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG, would be paradoxical and incompatible with the rational use of public finances.

103. It is important to point out, moreover, that recital 34 of Directive 2004/18 provides in particular that, in the event of non-compliance with the obligations connected with observance of the laws and regulations in force in the sphere, in particular, of conditions of employment, the Member States may classify such non-compliance as grave misconduct or an offence concerning the professional conduct of the economic operator concerned that is liable to lead to the exclusion of that operator from the public procurement procedure.

104. While, in my view, the refusal to submit a declaration of commitment to pay the minimum wage cannot, as such, be regarded as grave misconduct, the idea underlying recital 34 of Directive 2004/18 is indeed that it is recognised that the Member States are entitled to exclude an economic operator who has no intention of complying with the employment conditions applicable in the place of performance of the public contract. In my opinion, the Member States cannot be required to employ such a measure only in situations in which their authorities find that there has been an infringement of the obligations linked to compliance with those employment conditions by the supplier which has tendered for the public procurement contract.

105. Excluding the tenderer from the procurement procedure on the ground that it refuses to submit a declaration of commitment as referred to in Paragraph 3 of the LTTG is therefore, in my opinion, an appropriate means of ensuring that the contracting authority is not prompted to select a candidate which has no intention of satisfying the requirements laid down by that contracting authority with respect to payment of the minimum wage.

106. Finally, as is clear from the facts of the case in the main proceedings, it is important to make the point that the exclusion of a tenderer which has failed to enclose a declaration of commitment to pay the minimum wage when submitting its tender is not automatic. Under Paragraph 3 of the LTTG, the contracting authority is not authorised to exclude such a tender until it has made a further request for the production of the declaration of commitment within a certain period of time. This serves as a remedial measure in cases of forgetfulness or error on the part of the tenderer at the time of submitting the tender. Such an obligation for the contracting authority appears to be a wholly proportionate measure.

107. In the light of those considerations, I propose that the second question referred for a preliminary ruling be answered as follows: Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 is to be interpreted as not precluding the legislation of a regional entity of a Member State which provides for the mandatory exclusion of a tender where a supplier tendering for a public contract fails to give an undertaking, on its own and its subcontractors' behalf, in a separate declaration made at the time of submitting its tender or after having received a further request to that effect from the contracting authority, that it would pay the minimum wage fixed by that legislation if it were to be awarded the task of performing the work forming the subject-matter of the public procurement contract in question.

III – Conclusion

108. In the light of all the foregoing considerations, I propose that the questions referred by the Oberlandesgericht Koblenz be answered as follows:

(1) Article 26 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts is to be interpreted as not precluding the legislation of a regional entity of a Member State which requires tenderers and their subcontractors to undertake, by means of a written declaration to be enclosed with their tender, to pay the staff who will be called upon to perform the work forming the subject-matter of a public procurement contract a minimum hourly wage of EUR 8.70 (gross), fixed by that legislation.

(2) Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 is to be interpreted as not precluding the legislation of a regional entity of a Member State which provides for the mandatory exclusion of a tender where a supplier tendering for a public contract fails to give an undertaking, on its own and its subcontractors' behalf, in a separate declaration made at the time of submitting its tender or after having received a further request to that effect from the contracting authority, that it would pay the minimum wage fixed by that legislation, if it were to be awarded the task of performing the work forming the subject-matter of the public procurement contract in question.

That directive was last amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011 amending Directives 2004/17/EC, 2004/18 and 2009/81/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council in respect of their application thresholds for the procedures for the awards of contracts (OJ 2011 L 319, p. 43). It was replaced by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65). However, the latter directive was not applicable at the time of the facts giving rise to the dispute in the main proceedings.

10 – Although those interested parties submit that the first question is inadmissible, the consequence of a finding that the situation at issue is purely internal would have to prompt the Court to declare, in principle, that it has no jurisdiction to answer the question. That situation is in fact one which, in principle, involves no factor connecting it to EU law and cannot therefore be remedied by the sending of a new request for a preliminary ruling.

19 – The Court looked at whether the collective agreement in question satisfied the material conditions laid down in Article 3(8) of Directive 96/71, which provision, as the Court itself confirmed in paragraph 27 of the judgment in Rüffert (C-346/06, EU:C:2008:189), applies only to Member States which have no system for declaring collective agreements to be of universal application (as was the case with the Kingdom of Sweden in Laval un Partneri, C-341/05, EU:C:2007:809). However, since the Federal Republic of Germany did have such a system, there was no need to examine whether the conditions under Article 3(8) of Directive 96/71 were met.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) ('Directive 89/665').

2 This request has been made in proceedings between, on the one hand, Orizzonte Salute — Studio Infermieristico Associato (‘Orizzonte Salute’) and, on the other, the Azienda Pubblica di Servizi alla persona San Valentino — Città di Levico Terme (the San Valentino public personal assistance agency of the city of Levico Terme; the ‘Azienda’), the Ministero della Giustizia (Ministry of Justice), the Ministero dell’Economia e delle Finanze (Ministry of Economic and Financial Affairs), the Presidenza del Consiglio dei Ministri (Presidency of the Council of Ministers) and the Segretario Generale del Tribunale regionale di giustizia amministrativa di Trento (Secretary General of the Regional Administrative Court of Trento), concerning (i) the extension of a contract for the provision of nursing services and a call for tenders issued at a later stage and (ii) court fees for bringing administrative judicial challenges relating to public procurement.

Legal context

EU Law

3 Pursuant to recital 3 in the preamble to Directive 89/665, the opening-up of public procurement to EU competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination and, for that to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of EU law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

4 Article 1 of that directive, entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provides:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts [OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, public works concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed [EU] law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming harm in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing [EU] law and other national rules.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

5 Article 7 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Threshold amounts for public contracts’, establishes the thresholds for the estimated values beyond which the award of a contract must be made in accordance with the rules in that directive.

6 Those thresholds are changed at regular intervals by European Commission regulations and are adapted to the economic circumstances. At the date of the facts in the main proceedings, the threshold concerning service contracts awarded by awarding authorities other than central governmental authorities was set at EUR 193 000 by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1177/2009 of 30 November 2009 amending Directives 2004/17/EC, 2004/18/EC and 2009/81/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council in respect of their application thresholds for the procedures for the award of contracts (OJ 2009 L 314, p. 64).

Italian law

7 Article 13(1) of Decree of the President of the Republic No 115, of 30 May 2002, as amended by Law No 228 of 24 December 2012 ('the decree'), established a fee regime for judicial acts, made up of a standard fee, determined in proportion to the sum involved in the dispute.

8 In contrast with the provisions regarding civil proceedings, Article 13(6a) of the decree fixes the standard fee for administrative proceedings irrespective of the sum involved in the dispute.

9 Pursuant to that article, where an action is brought before a regional administrative court or the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), the standard fee generally amounts to EUR 650. None the less, in relation to particular subject-matters that article sets the standard fee at different amounts which can be increased or reduced.

10 Article 13(6a)(d) of the decree provides that the standard fee in relation to public procurement litigation amounts to:

– EUR 2 000 where the value of the contract is EUR 200 000 or less;

– EUR 4 000 in cases where the value of the contract is between EUR 200 000 and EUR 1 000 000;

– and EUR 6 000 in cases where it is over EUR 1 000 000.

11 Under Article 13(1a) of the decree, those amounts must be increased by 50% in appeal proceedings relating to the award of public contracts.

12 Pursuant to Article 13(1c) of the decree, where the appeal, even a cross-appeal, is dismissed in its entirety, declared inadmissible or cannot be taken into consideration, the appellant is obliged to pay, in respect of the standard fee, an additional sum of the same amount as that initially paid for the same appeal, whether it be a main appeal or cross-appeal.

13 The order for reference indicates that, under the applicable legislation, the standard fee is payable for the lodging, not only of the application instituting proceedings, but also of a cross-claim or of supplementary pleas introducing new claims.

14 Article 14(3) of the decree provides that the sum involved in the dispute does not correspond to the profit margin which may result from performance of the contract, as determined by the contracting authorities, but rather to the basic value of the contract.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

15 Orizzonte Salute is an association providing public and private bodies with nursing services. By its action, supplemented by additional pleas on a number of occasions, Orizzonte Salute is challenging, before the referring court, the Azienda's successive awards of the management of nursing services to the Associazione infermieristica D & F Care as well as other decisions taken by the Azienda.

16 The management of those services was awarded, first, by extension of the contract entered into with the Associazione infermieristica D & F Care for an earlier period and, subsequently, following a call for tenders inviting applications from only certain associations accredited by the Infermieri Professionali Assistenti Sanitari Vigilatrici d'Infanzia (IPASVI) (Professional Association of Nurses Specialising in the Care of Infants), with which Orizzonte Salute was not registered.

17 In respect of court fees, Orizzonte Salute paid a standard court fee of EUR 650, the cost of instituting ordinary administrative proceedings.

18 By decision of 5 June 2013, the Segretario Generale del Tribunale regionale di giustizia amministrativa di Trento asked Orizzonte Salute to make an additional payment since, on account of its supplementary pleas, the dispute now related to public procurement and it was therefore necessary to meet the standard fee for such cases, which amounted to EUR 2 000.

19 By a new action introduced on 2 July 2013, Orizzonte Salute challenged that decision claiming infringement of Article 13(6a) of the decree and the unconstitutionality of that provision.

20 With regard to that action, the State authorities brought an action on the ground that the Tribunale regionale di giustizia amministrativa di Trento (Regional Administrative Court of Trento) lacked jurisdiction, since, in their view, the standard fee constitutes tax revenue and a dispute about tax revenue falls within the competence of the tax court. They also disputed the merits of that application.

21 While accepting that the standard fee is a tax, the referring court states that, in the case pending before it, at issue is a measure adopted by its Segretario Generale, which is an administrative decision. Thus, in its view, the decision of 5 June 2013 must be subject to review by the administrative court. In addition, the referring court takes the view that Orizzonte Salute has an interest in the annulment of the application for payment of the increased court fees.

22 That court notes that, contrary to what is laid down for civil proceedings, in administrative proceedings the amount of the standard fee is not linked to the sum involved in the dispute and, for particular areas of administrative law, specific amounts are set.

23 The referring court observes that, in procedures for the award of public contracts, the standard fee to be paid is considerably larger than the amounts to be paid for administrative disputes in ordinary proceedings.

24 The referring court considers that the taxation of actions before the administrative court, especially so far as concerns the award of public contracts, may dissuade undertakings from pursuing their legal action and therefore poses problems of compliance with the criteria and principles of the EU legal order. The referring court presumes that the undertaking's profit margin amounts, in general, to approximately 10% of the value of the contract and considers that the advance payment of a standard fee exceeding the amount of such a profit may lead individuals to abandon certain procedural mechanisms.

25 Thus, according to the referring court, the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings limits the right to bring legal proceedings, restricts the effectiveness of judicial review, discriminates against operators with weak financial capacity as opposed to operators with significant financial capacity and treats them unfavourably by comparison with operators who, within the context of their activities, bring actions before the civil and commercial courts. The referring court takes the view that the cost borne by the State for the operation of administrative justice so far as concerns public procurement is not significantly different, separate or higher than the cost of proceedings linked to other types of disputes.

26 The referring court makes reference to the theory that the national legislature certainly intended to reduce the weight of the backlog of court cases and facilitate both the carrying out of public works and the public acquisition of goods and services. In that regard, the referring court notes that public procurement litigation significantly decreased as from 2012.

27 The referring court states that the value of the public contract, calculated overall, is higher than the threshold laid down in Directive 2004/18. That court therefore considers that the principles of effectiveness, expediency, non-discrimination and availability set out in Article 1 of Directive 89/665 are applicable to the main proceedings. In its view, the national legislation at issue infringes those principles and the right to an effective remedy, reaffirmed by Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter').

28 In those circumstances, the Tribunale regionale di giustizia amministrativa di Trento decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Do the principles laid down in … Directive 89/665 … preclude a provision of national law … which lays down high amounts for the standard fee for access to administrative proceedings relating to public contracts?'

Admissibility of the written observations submitted to the Court by the interveners in the main proceedings

29 The Coordinamento delle associazioni e dei comitati di tutela dell'ambiente e dei diritti degli utenti e dei consumatori (Codacons) (Coordination of the Associations and Committees for the Protection of the Environment and the Rights of Users and Consumers), the Camera Amministrativa Roma (Administrative Chamber of Rome), the Associazione dei Consumatori Cittadini Europei (Association of European Consumers), the Ordine degli Avvocati di Roma (Rome Bar Association), the Associazione dei giovani amministrativisti (Administrative Youth Association) and the Società italiana degli avvocati amministrativisti (Italian Society of Administrative Law Lawyers) (collectively, 'the interveners in the main proceedings') intervened in the main proceedings in order to support Orizzonte Salute and submitted written observations to the Court.

30 The Italian Government contends that the written observations submitted by the interveners after the delivery of the order for reference and the suspension of the main proceedings are inadmissible. According to the Italian Government, that inadmissibility follows from Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union and the national court does not have the power, after stay of the proceedings, to assess the admissibility of an intervention made subsequent to the reference. That Government takes the view that the written observations submitted by natural and legal persons other than those in issue on the date when the request for a preliminary ruling was made must be removed from the file in order to prevent the proceedings turning into an actio popularis.

31 In that regard, it should be observed that, so far as concerns participation in preliminary ruling proceedings, in accordance with Article 96(1) of the Rules of Procedure read in conjunction with Article 23 of the Statute of the Court, the parties to the main proceedings, the Member States, the Commission and, where relevant, the institution, body, office or agency of the European Union which adopted the act the validity or interpretation of which is in dispute, the States, other than the Member States, which are parties to the Agreement on the European Economic Area, and the EFTA Surveillance Authority and the non-Member States concerned are authorised to submit observations to the Court. Since the list contained in those provisions is exhaustive, that right cannot be extended to natural or legal persons not expressly provided for.

32 According to Article 97(1) of the Rules of Procedure, the 'parties to the main proceedings' are determined as such by the referring court or tribunal in accordance with national rules of procedure. Consequently, it is for the referring court to determine, in accordance with national rules of procedure, the parties to the main proceedings pending before it.

33 It is not for the Court to determine whether a decision of the referring court accepting an intervention before it has been taken in accordance with those rules. The Court must abide by such a decision in so far as it has not been overturned in any appeal procedures provided for by national law (see, by analogy, judgments in Radlberger Getränkegesellschaft and S. Spitz, C-309/02, EU:C:2004:799, paragraph 26, and Burtscher, C-213/04, EU:C:2005:731, paragraph 32).

34 It is not claimed in the present case that the decision relating to the admission of the interveners in the main proceedings was not consistent with the rules governing the proceedings pending before the referring court or that an appeal has been lodged against that decision.

35 The capacity of 'party to the main proceedings' within the meaning of Article 96(1) of the Rules of Procedure read in conjunction with Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice cannot be accorded to a person and that person cannot be admitted in proceedings before the Court referred to in Article 267 TFEU where that person submits to a national court an application to intervene not in order to play an active role in the continuation of the proceedings before the national authority, but for the sole purpose of participating in the proceedings before the Court (see, to that effect, order in Football Association Premier League and Others, C-403/08 and C-429/08, EU:C:2009:789, paragraph 9).

36 However, there is nothing in the file to demonstrate that the interveners in the main proceedings do not intend to play an active role in the proceedings before the referring court and seek to express their views exclusively within the context of the proceedings before the Court.

37 Lastly, it would be incompatible with the principle of the sound administration of justice and the requirement that requests for a preliminary ruling be dealt with within a reasonable period of time if, on account of the successive admission of interveners and the period of two months laid down in the second paragraph of Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice for the submission of the written observations of those interveners, the written procedure before the Court could not be closed or the procedure had to be reopened.

38 In those circumstances, Article 97(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court provides that, where a referring court or tribunal informs the Court that a new party has been admitted to the main proceedings, when the proceedings before the Court are already pending, that party must accept the case as he finds it at the time when the Court was so informed.

39 Accordingly, the Court may find it necessary to allow an intervener admitted to the main proceedings to submit written observations only within the time-limit applicable to the interested parties, for the purpose of Article 23 of the Statute of the Court, to which the request for a preliminary ruling was initially notified.

40 It must be stated that, within the context of the present proceedings, the submission of the written observations of the interveners admitted to the main proceedings by the referring court did not amount to a risk to the sound administration of justice or to dealing with the case within a reasonable period of time. The Court has therefore considered that there was no need to make use of the option mentioned in the preceding paragraph of this judgment.

41 In the light of the above, the Court rejects the arguments of the Italian Government seeking to have the written observations submitted by the interveners in the main proceedings declared inadmissible. Those written observations submitted to the Court are admissible.

Consideration of the question referred

42 By its question the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1 of Directive 89/665 and the principles of effectiveness and equivalence must be interpreted as precluding a provision of national law, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which requires, when actions are brought in administrative judicial proceedings relating to public procurement, the payment of higher court fees than in other matters.

43 Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to take the measures necessary to guarantee reviews which are effective and as rapid as possible against decisions of the contracting authorities which are incompatible with EU law and ensure wide availability of reviews with respect to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

44 That directive leaves Member States a discretion in the choice of the procedural guarantees for which it provides, and the formalities relating thereto (see judgment in Combinatie Spijker Infrabouw-De Jonge Konstruktie and Others, C-568/08, EU:C:2010:751, paragraph 57).

45 In particular, Directive 89/665 does not contain any provision relating specifically to the court fees to be paid by individuals when they bring, in accordance with Article 2(1)(b) of that directive, an action for annulment against an allegedly unlawful decision concerning a procedure for the award of public contracts.

46 The Court has consistently held that, in the absence of EU rules governing the matter, it is for each Member State, in accordance with the principle of the procedural autonomy of the Member States, to lay down the detailed rules of administrative and judicial procedures governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from EU law. Those detailed procedural rules must, however, be no less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and must not render practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by EU law (principle of effectiveness) (judgments in Club Hotel Loutraki and Others, C-145/08 and C-149/08, EU:C:2010:247, paragraph 74, and eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 39).

47 In addition, since such court fees amount to detailed procedural rules governing actions for safeguarding rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, they must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 (see, to that effect, judgments in Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 72, and eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 40).

48 As regards the principle of effectiveness, the Court has already held that it implies a requirement of judicial protection, guaranteed by Article 47 of the Charter, that is binding on the national court (see, to that effect, judgment in Sánchez Morcillo and Abril García, C-169/14, EU:C:2014:2099, paragraph 35 and the case-law cited).

49 Accordingly, Article 1 of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted in the light of the fundamental rights set out in the Charter, in particular the right to an effective remedy before a court or tribunal, laid down in Article 47 thereof (see, to that effect, judgment in Ryneš, C-212/13, EU:C:2014:2428, paragraph 29).

50 It is therefore necessary to examine whether legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings may be considered to be consistent with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness and consistent with the effectiveness of Directive 89/665.

51 The two parts of that investigation concern (i) the amounts of the standard fee to be paid for bringing an action in administrative judicial proceedings relating to public procurement and (ii) cases of a cumulation of such fees paid within the same administrative judicial proceedings relating to public procurement.

The standard fee to be paid for bringing an action in administrative judicial proceedings relating to public procurement

52 At the outset, it is important to recall, as the Austrian Government has observed, that, pursuant to Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, that directive applies to the contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18, except for cases in which such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of the latter directive.

53 However, according to Article 7, in Chapter II of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Scope’, that directive applies only to public contracts which have a value, exclusive of value-added tax, estimated to be equal or greater than the thresholds provided for in that provision.

54 It follows that public service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than central governmental authorities with a value less than EUR 193 000 are not covered by Directive 2004/18 and, as a result, are also not covered by Directive 89/665.

55 As regards the principle of effectiveness, it should be recalled that the court fee regime at issue in the main proceedings includes three fixed amounts of standard fee amounting to EUR 2 000, EUR 4 000 and EUR 6 000 for the three categories of public contracts, namely those with a value equal to or less than EUR 200 000, those with a value between EUR 200 000 and EUR 1 000 000, and those with a value exceeding EUR 1 000 000.

56 It is apparent from the file placed before the Court that the system of fixed amounts of standard fee is proportional to the value of the public contracts falling within those three different categories and is, as a whole, degressive in nature.

57 In fact, the standard fee to be paid, expressed as a percentage of the ‘limit’ values of the three categories of public contracts, varies from 1.0% to 1.036% of the value of the contract if it is between EUR 193 000 and EUR 200 000, from 0.4% to 2.0% if that value is between EUR 200 000 and EUR 1 000 000, and corresponds to 0.6% of the value of the contract or less if that value exceeds EUR 1 000 000.

58 The court fees to be paid for bringing an action in administrative proceedings relating to public procurement, which do not exceed 2% of the value of the contract concerned, are not liable to render practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by EU public procurement law.

59 None of the factors raised by the referring court or by the interested parties which submitted observations to the Court calls that finding into question.

60 In particular, so far as concerns the fixing of the standard fee depending on the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, and not depending on the profit which the undertaking participating in the call for tenders is entitled to expect from that contract, it should be stated, first, that several Member States recognise the possibility of calculating procedural costs on the basis of the value of the subject-matter to which a dispute relates.

61 Secondly, as the Advocate General stated at point 40 of his Opinion, in the field of public procurement, a rule requiring specific calculations for each call for tenders and for each undertaking, the result of which could be challenged, would prove to be complicated and unpredictable.

62 As for the application of the Italian standard fee to the detriment of economic operators with weak financial capacity, it should be observed, first, as has the Commission, that that fee is imposed without distinction, as to its form and its amount, with regard to all individuals intending to bring an action against a decision adopted by contracting authorities.

63 It must be held that such a system does not give rise to discrimination between operators practising in the same sector of activity.

64 Moreover, it is apparent from the provisions of the EU directives on public procurement, such as Article 47 of Directive 2004/18, that the participation of an undertaking in a public contract presupposes an appropriate economic and financial capacity.

65 Lastly, even though an applicant is obliged to pay the standard fee when bringing a court action against a decision relating to public procurement, the unsuccessful party is, as a rule, required to reimburse the court fees paid by the successful party.

66 With regard to the principle of equivalence, the fact that, in the context of procedures for the award of public contracts, the standard fee to be paid is larger than (i) the amounts to be paid for administrative disputes subject to ordinary proceedings and (ii) the court fees charged in civil proceedings cannot in itself demonstrate an infringement of that principle.

67 As has been noted in paragraph 46 of this judgment, the principle of equivalence requires that actions based on an infringement of national law and similar actions based on an infringement of EU law be treated equally and not that there be equal treatment of national procedural rules applicable to proceedings of a different nature such as civil proceedings, on the one hand, and administrative proceedings, on the other, or applicable to proceedings falling within two different branches of law (see judgment in ÖBB Personenverkehr, C-417/13, EU:C:2015:38, paragraph 74).

68 In the present case, no factor raised before the Court is capable of substantiating the argument that the Italian standard fee system applies differently to actions based on rights which individuals derive from EU public procurement law than it does to actions based on infringement of national law having the same subject-matter.

69 It must be concluded that court fees to be paid when an action is brought in administrative judicial proceedings relating to public procurement, such as the standard fee at issue in the main proceedings, do not adversely affect the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 or the principles of equivalence and effectiveness.

The cumulation of the standard fees paid within the same administrative judicial proceedings relating to public procurement

70 According to the national legislation, the standard fee is to be paid not only upon registration of the application initiating proceedings against a decision taken by a contracting authority so far as concerns the award of public contracts, but the same amount must be paid also for cross-claims and supplementary pleas introducing new claims in the course of proceedings.

71 It is apparent from the order for reference that, as set out in a circular of the Segretario Generale della Giustizia Amministrativa of 18 October 2001, only the introduction of procedural steps which are independent of the application initiating proceedings and which are designed to considerably extend the subject-matter of the dispute gives rise to the payment of additional fees.

72 The levying of multiple and cumulative court fees within the same administrative judicial proceedings is not, in principle, contrary to Article 1 of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, or to the principles of equivalence and effectiveness.

73 As a rule, such levying contributes to the proper functioning of the judicial system, since it amounts to a source of financing for the judicial activity of the Member States and discourages the submission of claims which are manifestly unfounded or which seek only to delay the proceedings.

74 Those objectives justify the multiple application of court fees such as those at issue in the main proceedings only where the subject-matter of the actions or supplementary pleas are in fact separate and amount to a significant enlargement of the subject-matter of the dispute that is already pending.

75 By contrast, if that is not the case, an obligation of additional payment of such court fees because of the submission of such actions or pleas is contrary to the availability of legal remedies ensured by Directive 89/665 and to the principle of effectiveness.

76 Where a person brings several actions before a court or submits several supplementary pleas within the same court proceedings, the mere fact that the ultimate objective of that person is to obtain a given contract does not necessarily mean that the subject-matter of his actions or his pleas are identical.

77 In the event of objections being raised by a party concerned, it is for the national court to examine the subject-matter of the actions submitted by an individual or the pleas raised by that individual within the same proceedings. If the national court finds that their subject-matter is not in fact separate or does not amount to a significant enlargement of the subject-matter of the dispute that is already pending, it is required to relieve that individual of the obligation to pay cumulative court fees.

78 In addition, no factor has been raised before the Court which is capable of calling into question the conformity of the cumulation of standard fees with the principle of equivalence.

79 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred must be as follows:

– Article 1 of Directive 89/665 and the principles of equivalence and effectiveness must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which requires the payment of court fees such as the standard fee at issue in the main proceedings when an action relating to public procurement is brought before administrative courts.

– Article 1 of Directive 89/665 and the principles of equivalence and effectiveness do not preclude the charging of multiple court fees to an individual who brings several court actions concerning the same award of a public contract or that individual from having to pay additional court fees in order to be able to raise supplementary pleas concerning the same award of a public contract within ongoing judicial proceedings. However, in the event of objections being raised by a party concerned, it is for the national court to examine the subject-matter of the actions submitted by an individual or the pleas raised by that individual within the same proceedings. If the national court finds that the subject-matter of those actions is not in fact separate or does not amount to a significant enlargement of the subject-matter of the dispute that is already pending, it is required to relieve that individual of the obligation to pay cumulative court fees.

Costs

80 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, and the principles of equivalence and effectiveness must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which requires the payment of court fees such as the standard fee at issue in the main proceedings when an action relating to public procurement is brought before administrative courts.

2. Article 1 of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2007/66, and the principles of equivalence and effectiveness do not preclude the charging of multiple court fees to an individual who brings several court actions concerning the same award of a public contract or that individual from having to pay additional court fees in order to be able to raise supplementary pleas concerning the same award of a public contract within ongoing judicial proceedings. However, in the event of objections being raised by a party concerned, it is for the national court to examine the subject-matter of the actions submitted by an individual or the pleas raised by that individual within the same proceedings. If the national court finds that the subject-matter of those actions is not in fact separate or does not amount to a significant enlargement of the subject-matter of the dispute that is already pending, it is required to relieve that individual of the obligation to pay cumulative court fees.

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunale Regionale di Giustizia Amministrativa di Trento (Italy))

(Public procurement — Directive 89/665/EEC — Legislation providing for elevated fees for access to justice in the field of public procurement — Cumulative court fees chargeable upon presentation of new applications on additional grounds within the context of judicial challenge pertaining to a single contract award procedure — Right to an effective remedy under Article 47 of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights — Dissuasive fees — Access to a court — Principles of effectiveness and equivalence)

I – Introduction

1. The 19th century judge Sir James Matthew is reputed to have said that 'in England, justice is open to all, like the Ritz hotel'. The case to hand provides an opportunity for the Court to consider whether the same applies to judicial proceedings relating to award of public contracts in Italy that are governed by EU public procurement law.

2. Italian law provides that court fees applicable in judicial review proceedings relating to public procurement are considerably higher than those generally applicable in administrative proceedings. Moreover, these fees are cumulatively chargeable for every new procedural step that constitutes, under Italian law, a new plea or application on additional grounds.

3. This raises the question of whether the relevant Italian rules are compatible with the objectives of Council Directive 89/665/EEC on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts. (2) The directive is to be interpreted in the light of principles of effectiveness and equivalence, and Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('Charter') and its guarantee of access to justice.

II – Legal framework

A – EU law

4. The third recital of Directive 89/665 states as follows;

‘… the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination; … for it to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law’.

5. Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled ‘[s]cope and availability of review procedures’, as amended, states:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, [(3)] unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, public works concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming harm in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.’

6. Article 2 of Directive 89/665, entitled ‘[r]equirements for review procedures’, states:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting-aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.’

B – National law

7. Article 13(1) of Decree of the President of the Republic No 115/2002, as most recently amended by Law No 228 of 24 December 2012, (4) introduced a court fee regime made up of a standard fee. According to subparagraph 6a of Article 13, in the context of administrative proceedings, the amount of standard fee is linked to the subject-matter of the administrative proceedings. In respect of actions before the administrative courts, the normal standard fee amounts to EUR 650. Different amounts are set for particular subject-matters. (5) As regards the subject-matter of public contracts, the standard fee ranges as of 1 January 2013 from EUR 2 000 to EUR 6 000, depending on the value of the contract. (6) According to Article 13(6a) 1 the standard fee is payable, for the lodging not only of the application instituting proceedings, but also of a procedural plea or application on additional grounds which introduce new claims.

8. With regard to determination of the amount involved in cases relating to public procurement, under Article 14(3b) of Decree of the President of the Republic No 115/2002, it is to be equal to the basic value of the contract identified by the contracting authorities in the tender documents.

III – Facts in the main proceedings, the question referred and the proceedings before the Court

9. The applicant, Orizzonte Salute — Studio Infermieristico Associato ('Orizzonte Salute') is an association providing public and private bodies with nursing services. It instituted proceedings before the Tribunale Regionale di Giustizia Amministrativa di Trento by an application ('original application'), supplemented by three subsequent applications on additional grounds, contesting certain measures adopted in the period from 21 December 2012 to 23 May 2013 by the defendant, the Azienda Pubblica di Servizi alla Persona 'San Valentino' — Città di Levico Terme ('APSP').

10. The contested measures concerned the extension of a contract for the provision of nursing services for the benefit of another association, and the call for tenders subsequently published by the APSP inviting applications from only certain associations accredited by the IPASVI (Infermieri Professionali Assistenti Sanitari Vigilatrici d'Infanzia) (Professional Association of Nurses Specialising in the Care of Infants), of which Orizzonte Salute was not a member.

11. Orizzonte Salute initially paid a standard court fee of EUR 650 for instituting ordinary administrative proceedings. However, on 5 June 2013 the national referring court asked Orizzonte Salute to make a supplementary payment to meet a standard fee of EUR 2 000, given that its original application fell within the domain of public procurement.

12. By a new application, being the fourth supplementary application on new grounds, introduced on 2 July 2013, Orizzonte Salute challenged this decision. The national referring court decided, for reasons of procedural economy, to rule on this challenge first.

13. The national referring court doubts the compatibility of the Member State court fee scheme with several rules and principles of EU law. It therefore sent the following question for a preliminary ruling.

'Do the principles laid down in Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992, as subsequently amended and added to, preclude a provision of national law, such as that set out in Article 13(1a), (1c) and (6a) and in Article 14(3b) of Decree of the President of the Republic No 115 of 30 May 2002 (as progressively amended by subsequent legislative interventions) which laid down high amounts of the standard fee for access to administrative proceedings relating to public contracts?'

14. Written observations were submitted by Orizzonte Salute, Camera Amministrativa Romana, Associazione dei Consumatori Cittadini europei, Coordinamento delle associazioni per la tutela dell'ambiente e dei diritti degli utenti e consumatori (Codacons), Associazione dei Giovani Amministrativisti (AGAmm), Ordine degli Avvocati di Roma, Società Italiana degli Avvocati Amministrativisti (SIAA), (7) along with the Italian, Greek, Austrian and Polish Governments, and the Commission. Of the Member States that deposited written observations only Italy participated at the hearing that was held on 11 February 2015. All of the other above mentioned parties participated at the same hearing, including the Commission, along with Medical Systems SpA, which made oral submissions only.

IV – Admissibility

15. At the outset, I note that both the national referring Court and Orizzonte Salute have drawn the Court's attention to the charges that are levied under Italian law with respect to public procurement proceedings that go beyond the facts arising in this case, such as, for example, increased standard fees in the case of appeals. The Austrian Government considers the preliminary question to be admissible only in so far as it addresses the fourth application made by Orizzonte Salute directed at the levying of a standard fee of EUR 2 000. Otherwise the Austrian Government takes the view that the question is hypothetical.

16. Further, I note that the question referred by the national court is of a broad and general nature. As pointed out in the written observations of the Commission, the referring court does not explain why an answer to it is necessary for the resolution of the dispute.

17. It is not the function of the Court to formulate consultative opinions on questions that are of a general or hypothetical nature. (8) The reference must be necessary for the effective resolution of a dispute. (9) The proceedings to hand are not in the nature of a direct action brought by the Commission against Italy questioning, in abstracto, whether the legal regime in place for the levying of court fees in public procurement cases comply with EU law but preliminary rulings proceedings inextricably linked to the legal issues pertinent to the main proceedings.

18. That said, at this stage the main proceedings are primarily concerned with a narrow issue, namely the fourth additional application by Orizzonte Salute introducing a new ground contesting the legality of the level of the court fee levied for the original application. In relation to this legal question, which the national referring court has decided to examine first, the preliminary question is not hypothetical. Moreover, given that the challenged measure is the fifth court fee levied in the main proceedings, in my opinion the issue of cumulative fees also needs an answer from the Court. If the Court found the Italian system to be incompatible with EU law, the national Court would need to draw appropriate conclusions from that finding with regard to the court fee levied for the original application. Thus, within these parameters, the reference for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

V – Analysis

A – Preliminary observation — the approach to solving the problem to hand

19. Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665, as amended, requires the Member States to provide judicial powers for the effective protection of the interested enterprises in the context of public procurement. First, interim measures have to be available to enable early challenge to alleged infringements, and prevention of further damages (point a). Secondly, there is an obligation for the Member States to provide powers for the setting-aside of any unlawful decision relating to the contract award procedure (point b). Thirdly, reparative justice in the form of the award of damages to persons harmed by an infringement must be provided (point c). In factual terms, the main proceedings belong to the second of these categories, given that Orizzonte Salute is challenging the extension of an existing contract for the provision of nursing services for the benefit of another association, and the subsequent call for tenders inviting applications from only certain associations accredited by an organisation, of which Orizzonte Salute was not a member.

20. I recall that Directive 89/665 aims at guaranteeing the existence, in all Member States, of effective remedies for infringement of EU law in the field of public procurement or of the national rules implementing these laws, so as to ensure the effective application of the directives on the coordination of public procurement procedures. (10) Member States are required to take measures to ensure that decisions taken by contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible. (11) Finally, Member State procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665. (12)

21. EU legal acts in the field of public procurement strive to foster access to public sector markets under the conditions of non-discrimination and transparency. Directive 89/665 ensures that private judicial enforcement of these EU law rules is both available and effective. The EU legislature has thus conceived effective judicial protection of the interested economic operators as a means of promoting the effet utile of the EU public procurement regime and in consequence, the objectives of the internal market.

22. Therefore, in my opinion, answering the preliminary question boils down to an examination of the scope of the right to effective judicial protection as guaranteed by Directive 89/665 and Article 47 of the Charter. In the light of submissions put forward in the main proceedings, it is also necessary to consider the pertinence of the limitations placed on Member State procedural autonomy by the principles of effectiveness and equivalence to the question of the compatibility of the Italian court fees in issue with EU law.

23. The Court's case-law on Directive 89/665 provides no clear answer on whether the court fees in issue are compatible with remedial provisions of EU public procurement law. (13) Nevertheless, there is no question that the charging of court fees in national proceedings that fall within the scope of Directive 89/665 amounts to an implementation of EU law within the meaning of Article 51 of the Charter. (14)

24. That being so, I will now consider the court fees for their compliance with the fundamental right to an effective remedy under Article 47 of the Charter, and the Court's remedial case-law on the principles of effectiveness and equivalence. As I have said on another occasion, both these principles should be considered beneath the umbrella of Article 47 of the Charter. (15) I will commence with the principle of equivalence before moving on to the pertinent elements of the Court's case-law on 'effectiveness'.

B – The principle of equivalence

25. Compliance with the principle of equivalence requires that the national rule in question must apply, without distinction, to actions based on infringement of EU law and those based on infringement of national law having a similar purpose and cause of action. (16)

26. There is little scope for the operation of this principle in the context of public procurement because there are no truly comparable national and EU law situations. Directive 2004/18 applies to all public procurement when the threshold is met, with the exception of exempted contracts. Thus, the applicability of national rules is reserved to contract awards below the thresholds and situations exempted from the scope of the directive. This, to my mind, reflects an assessment of the EU legislature to the effect that these situations are not comparable with those falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18.

27. In any event, the court fees in issue appear to apply to public procurement litigation falling both inside and outside the scope of Directive 2004/18. There would therefore not appear to be any incidence of discrimination between situations under EU law and national law. (17)

28. Moreover, given that public procurement law represents a complex mix of legal relationships between the contracting authority and various public and private actors, I do not accept that court proceedings entailing challenge to decisions made in the course of awarding a public contract could be viewed as being analogous to ordinary public law proceedings before administrative courts, as has been contended by Orizzonte Salute and several others. (18)

29. The Commission claims in its written observations that there might be a problem of equivalence with respect to the point in the scale applicable under Italian law where the court fee increases from EUR 2 000 to EUR 4 000. This occurs when the value of the contract is more than EUR 200 000. According to the Commission this threshold would correspond "in substance" with the threshold in Article 7 of Directive 2004/18 which, subject to control by the national referring court, would entail that proceedings with respect to actions concerning violation of that directive or national rules implementing it would be subject to different and less favourable procedural modalities than purely national proceedings.

30. I disagree with this submission. It is true that the threshold of EUR 200 000, as set out in Article 2 of Regulation No 1251/2011 coincided with the national threshold for a higher court fee. However, the applicability of the court fee of EUR 4 000 or higher is not restricted to cases falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18 but there will obviously be many national cases (exempted contracts) where this higher court fee applies. More generally, the solution adopted by the Italian legislature to step-up the scale applicable in the determination of the court fees in question at two points is a reasonable means of alleviating the regressive effect of the scale.

31. Furthermore, to my mind EU law would have no objection, in the context of the principle of equivalence, to the fact that Italian law supplies different court fees or bases for court fees in different forms of judicial proceedings. The principle of equivalence requires equal treatment between comparable claims based on national law, on the one hand, and on EU law, on the other, not equivalence between different forms of procedure under national law. (19)

32. For these reasons no objections can be raised against the national rules in issue from the point of view of their compatibility with the principle of equivalence.

C – The charges in issue in the light of the principle of effectiveness and the right of access to a court

1. Identifying the relevant test

33. I start by noting that the legal rules applicable to the fundamental right to an effective judicial remedy in the sense of Article 47 of the Charter, or the right to 'judicial control', which have their origins in Articles 6 and 13 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ECHR), (20) are different from those that arise when the question to be determined is whether a Member State sanction or procedural rule is inconsistent with the principle of effectiveness, in the sense that the rule in question renders rights provided by EU law impossible in practice or excessively difficult to enforce. The latter, rather than being created within EU fundamental rights law, came into being as a function of the limitations placed by EU law on the procedural autonomy of the Member States.

34. However, in the case to hand these two approaches largely converge because the very purpose of Directive 89/665 is to guarantee access to justice for undertakings if substantive or procedural EU law rules on public procurement are violated. In other words, the effet utile of this legislative act coincides to a great extent with strict observance of the requirements stemming from Article 47 of the Charter in this field.

35. The principle of effectiveness, in the sense of the San Giorgio prohibition on Member State procedural rules rendering EU rights impossible in practice or excessively difficult to enforce, (21) entails no formal proportionality test. However, in determining whether the Member State procedural rule or remedy in question meets its parameters, the provision 'must be analysed by reference to the role of that provision in the procedure, its progress and its special features, viewed as a whole, before the various national instances. In the light of that analysis the basic principles of the domestic judicial system, such as protection of the rights of the defence, the principle of legal certainty and the proper conduct of procedure, must, where appropriate, be taken into consideration.' (22)

36. The right to 'judicial control' and access to justice under Article 47 of the Charter are not assessed in this manner. They are subject to a traditional limitation test, entailing analysis of whether measures restricting it are provided by law, and whether they satisfy requirements stemming from the principle of proportionality, namely pursuit of a legitimate purpose, necessity, aptness for purpose, and confinement to what is required to secure the legitimate purpose. (23) This is now reflected in Article 52(1) of the Charter.

37. It is well established that, depending on all of the circumstances, court fees can amount to a limitation on access to a court, as protected under Article 47 of the Charter. Thus, like restrictions on the availability of legal aid to secure the enforcement of EU rights, (24) the problem to hand is better assessed by reference to the test, described above, that is pertinent to the right to 'judicial control' rather than that applicable to remedies and procedural rules to determine whether they go beyond the limits of Member State procedural autonomy. I will now apply this test to the situation in the main proceedings.

2. Application to the litigation to hand

a) On the level of the standard court fee in administrative proceedings relating to public procurement

38. The question to be analysed is whether the court fees in issue constitute a hindrance to the right of access to a court. (25) As pointed out in the written observations of the Commission, the European Court of Human Rights considered this question in its ruling, for example, in Stankov v. Bulgaria. (26) There it was held that the requirement to pay fees in connection with civil cases cannot in and of itself be regarded as a restriction on the right of access to a court that is incompatible per se with Article 6(1) of the ECHR. (27) However, the amount of the fees assessed in the light of the particular circumstances of a given case is a material factor in determining whether or not a person enjoyed his right of access to a court. (28)

39. I shall first discuss the point raised by the national referring court that the standard court fee is based on the value of the litigation in terms of the theoretical value of the contract to be awarded, and not on the real benefit an enterprise participating in the award procedure is entitled to expect. According to the national referring court, this profit would correspond to 10 per cent of the value of the contract and would be in line with the rules applicable to court fees in Italian civil proceedings.

40. I do not see any merit in this argument. It is mathematically irrelevant whether a standard court fee is calculated using a 10 per cent profit margin of the value of the contract as starting point, and not the value of the contract as such, if the outcome is the same. On the other hand, a system in which the expected profit was assessed individually for every contract award procedure and/or enterprise participating therein, with the result of variable court fees, would be cumbersome and unpredictable.

41. Secondly, even if the level of the standard court fee seems to be relatively high, this finding must be balanced with the simple fact that public procurement is not social policy. It can be expected that enterprises participating in contract award procedures within the scope of Directive 2004/18 have sufficient economic and financial means to execute a contract of a value of EUR 200 000 or more. From this perspective a court fee of EUR 2 000, EUR 4 000 or EUR 6 000, as the case may be, cannot constitute a hindrance to access to a court, even taking into account the necessary lawyer's fees. Nor can it be considered to be unduly restrictive of competition to the detriment of smaller enterprises.

42. Thirdly, to my mind the fact that the proceedings can commence even if the court fee is not paid, (29) which is a factor that the Commission considered to be relevant in its written observations, is not pertinent. This is so because the Italian legislation is obviously built on the assumption that the applicant pays the court fees when they fall due. Also irrelevant, in my opinion, is the fact that the court fees are refunded if the applicant succeeds in his claims. For access to a court to be respected, there must be an avenue available to challenge decisions taken in contract award procedures, even it is not absolutely certain that the action will succeed. Hence, an excessive court fee can amount to a barrier to the right of access to a court as set out in Article 47 of the Charter, even if it could be recovered afterwards.

43. For these reasons I am not concerned by the amount of the EUR 2 000 standard fee that Orizzonte Salute has been charged for the original application. (30) It is true that the court fees in issue are high in comparison with fees charged in Italy in other types of administrative litigation or in civil proceedings. However, the standard court fee (i.e. without any increases) in relation to the value of the contracts within the scope of Directive 2004/18, and in consequence, of Directive 89/665, never exceeds two per cent. This hardly constitutes a barrier to access to a court.

44. Therefore, in my opinion the material factor in issue is the accumulation of court fees within the context of proceedings concerning the same contract award procedure, not their level as such.

b) On cumulative court fees

45. Having concluded that the amount of standard court fees applicable in Italian administrative proceedings on awards of contracts within the scope of Directives 2004/18 and 89/665 does not constitute, in and of itself, a restriction on the right of access to a court, it now falls to be determined whether there is any other reason to doubt their compliance with Article 47 of the Charter, particularly in the light of the accumulative nature of the fees imposed. If there is, a determination will need to be made as to whether the restriction found is prescribed by law, and is proportionate to the legitimate aim pursued. (31)

46. Here I observe first that the court fees, including cumulative ones, are clearly prescribed by law. As to the legitimacy of the aim pursued, the European Court of Human Rights has held that the 'aims pursued by the general rules on costs can be accepted as compatible with the general administration of justice, for example to fund the functioning of the judicial system and to act as a deterrent to frivolous claims. (32)

47. Within the Italian administrative court system, proceedings relating to public procurement seem to enjoy special treatment, in the sense that they are dealt with more quickly than other actions, and increased court fees contribute to the financing of these courts enabling them to function expeditiously. This is in conformity with both the requirements of Directive 89/665 and the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights.

48. However, at the hearing Orizzonte Salute emphasised that an enterprise which is excluded from the contract award procedure at the beginning of the process has to challenge, under Italian law, both the decision concerning selection of the participant in the contract award procedure, and the award of the contract itself. Moreover, in Italian contract award procedures there are often other decisions of the contracting authority relating, for example, to access to contract documents which need to be challenged separately during the course of the proceedings before the Italian administrative courts. As far as Italian law is concerned, all these amount to applications on new grounds that trigger the levying of a supplementary court fee of the same size as the fee charged for the original application.

49. Orizzonte Salute alleges that it was charged EUR 2 000 for the original application and three times EUR 2 000 for supplementary applications, in addition to the EUR 2 000 payable for the fourth supplementary application that forms the object of this preliminary reference. None of these figures have been contested by the Italian Government or the defendants.

50. The Italian system in issue may render recourse to judicial action futile from an economic point of view, even if they do pursue the legitimate aim of covering the cost of the administration of justice and discouraging frivolous claims. For example, a cumulative court fee of EUR 20 000, (33) when combined with lawyers' fees, may make it economically unviable to challenge contracts close to the threshold for the applicability of the directives in question. (34) In this sense the fees in issue could dissuade undertakings that might otherwise institute legal challenge in the field of public procurement.

51. In my opinion this may conflict with the fundamental right to 'judicial control' guaranteed in Article 47 of the Charter. As the European Court of Human Rights has held, procedural rules are to serve the aim of legal certainty and the proper administration of justice. They are not to 'form a sort of barrier preventing the litigant from having his or her case determined on the merits by the competent court'. (35)

52. In my opinion Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665, as amended, refers to the 'contract award procedure' as the basic unit for judicial protection. Indeed, an enterprise seeking to participate in a contract award procedure intends to secure the contract for itself. From this perspective it is irrelevant if it has failed at the beginning of the award procedure, i.e. in the selection of the participants, or at the end, in other words, when the contract is awarded to another participant, or somewhere in between.

53. It is within the domain of Member State judicial autonomy to determine how national law on administrative proceedings conceptualises challenges against an individual contract award procedure. For example, whether judicial challenges relating to the later steps of the contract award procedure are conceived as developing on the original application challenging the decision on selection of the participants, or whether they are to be considered as new pleas with additional grounds. However, procedural rules are to serve legal certainty and the proper administration of justice.

54. Therefore it may be incompatible with Article 47 of the Charter to levy several and cumulative courts fees in judicial proceedings, at least if these cumulative fees have a dissuasive effect and are disproportionate when compared with the original fee, given that Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665, as amended, envisages a single cause and objective, i.e. correcting any irregularity in the contract award procedure to the detriment of the enterprise.

55. It is for the national referring court to conduct the exercise described in paragraph 36 above, in the light of the relevant case-law of the Court (including the judgment in the case to hand) (36) in order to determine whether the restricition on the right to 'judicial control' provided in Article 47 of the Charter caused by cumulative court fees is justified in terms of the proportionality test set out in Article 52(1) of the Charter. (37)

VI – Conclusion

56. For these reasons I propose that the preliminary question of the Tribunale Regionale di Giustizia Amministrativa di Trento be answered as follows:

Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended, interpreted in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union and the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, does not preclude provisions of national law which set out a scale of standard court fees applicable only in administrative proceedings relating to public procurement provided that the level of the court fee does not constitute a barrier to the access to a court or render exercise of public procurement judicial review rights excessively difficult. It is not compatible with Directive 89/665, interpreted in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, to levy several and cumulative courts fees in judicial proceedings, in which an undertaking challenges the legality of a single contract award procedure in the sense of Article 2(1) (b) of Directive 89/665, unless this can be justified in terms of Article 52 (1) of the Charter, which is to be assessed by the national referring court.

I recall that in DEB (C-279/09, EU:C:2010:811) the national referring court had formulated its preliminary question in terms of the principle of effectiveness but the Court answered on the basis of Article 47 of the Charter. I also recall that I observed in my Opinion in Donau Chemie and Others (C-536/11, EU:C:2013:67) at paragraph 47 that 'due account needs to be taken of Article 19(1) TEU, and the extent to which it supplies a supplementary guarantee to the principle of effectiveness. Pursuant to Article 19(1), Member States are bound to provide remedies 'sufficient to ensure effective legal protection in the fields covered by Union law'. In other words, in the light of that Treaty provision, the standard of effective judicial protection for EU based rights seems to be more demanding than the classical formula referring to practical impossibility or excessive difficulty. In my opinion this means that national remedies must be accessible, prompt, and reasonably cost effective.'

In such circumstances, five court fees of EUR 4 000 would be charged, even though the standard court fee for contracts with a value between EUR 200 000 and EUR 1 000 000 is EUR 4 000.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) (‘Directive 89/665’), of Article 267 TFEU and of the principles of effectiveness and the primacy of EU law.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Puligienica Facility Esco SpA (PFE) (‘PFE’) and Airgest SpA (‘Airgest’) concerning the lawfulness of the award by Airgest of a public services contract to Gestione Servizi Ambientali Srl (GSA) (‘GSA’) and Zenith Services Group Srl.

Legal context

EU law

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provides as follows:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts [(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, public works concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of [Directive 2004/18], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that review procedures are available, under detailed rules which Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

…’

4 Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 is worded as follows:

‘Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully …

…’

Italian law

5 The Consiglio di giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily) was established by Legislative Decree No 654 laying down rules for the exercise in the Region of Sicily of the functions of the Council of State (decreto legislativo n. 654 — Norme per l’esercizio nella Regione siciliana delle funzioni spettanti al Consiglio di Stato) of 6 May 1948 (GURI No 135 of 12 June 1948). It performs in that region the same advisory and judicial functions as the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State).

6 Legislative Decree No 104 implementing Article 44 of the Law No 69 of 18 June 2009 delegating powers to the Government for the reorganisation of administrative procedure’ (decreto legislativo n. 104 — Attuazione dell’articolo 44 della legge 18 giugno 2009, n. 69, recante delega al governo per il riordino del processo amministrativo), of 2 July 2010 (‘Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 156, 7 July 2010) concerns the adoption of the Code of Administrative Procedure.

7 Article 6 of the Code of Administrative Procedure provides as follows:

‘1. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) is the administrative court of final instance.

6. Appeals against decisions of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court, Sicily) shall be lodged with the Consiglio di giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily) in accordance with the provisions of that region’s Special Statute and the relevant implementing provisions.’

8 Article 42(1) of the Administrative Code of Procedure states as follows:

‘Defendants and intervening parties may submit applications, where the object of such applications is related to the application in the main proceedings, by way of counterclaim.’

9 Article 99 of the Administrative Code of Procedure reads as follows:

‘1. Where the Chamber to which the appeal is assigned considers that the point of law submitted for its consideration has given rise, or might give rise, to divergences in judicial decisions, it may, by order made on application by one of the parties or of its own motion, refer the case to be heard by the court in plenary session. The plenary session may, if it deems appropriate, refer the matter back to the Chamber.

2. Before a decision is delivered, the President of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) may, on application by one of the parties or of his own motion, refer any appeal to the court in plenary session for a ruling on questions of principle of particular importance or with a view to resolving divergences in judicial decisions.

3. If the Chamber to which the appeal is assigned does not concur with a principle of law stated by the plenary session, it shall, by reasoned order, refer the decision on the appeal to the plenary session.

4. The plenary session shall rule on the dispute in its entirety unless it decides to state a principle of law and to refer the case, as to the remainder, back to the referring chamber.

5. If it considers the question to be of particular importance, the plenary session may in any event state the relevant principle of law in the interests of the law, even where it rules that the action is in any way inadmissible or unfounded or that the proceedings must be terminated. In such cases, the decision of the plenary session shall have no effect on the contested measure.'

10 Article 100 of the Code of Administrative Procedure provides as follows:

'Appeals against the decisions of regional administrative courts may be brought before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) without prejudice to the jurisdiction of the Consiglio di giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily) to hear appeals against decisions of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court, Sicily).'

11 Legislative Decree No 373 laying down rules for the implementation of the Special Statute of the Region of Sicily with regard to the exercise in that region of the functions assigned to the Consiglio di Stato (decreto legislativo n. 373 — Norme di attuazione dello Statuto speciale della Regione siciliana concernenti l'esercizio nella regione delle funzioni spettanti al Consiglio di Stato) of 24 December 2003 (GURI No 10 of 14 January 2004, p. 4) ('Legislative Decree No 373') provides, in Article 1(2) thereof, that the chambers of the Consiglio di giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily, Italy) are to function as local chambers of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) and, in Article 4(3) thereof, that in judicial matters, the Consiglio di giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily, Italy) has jurisdiction, as an appellate body, to hear appeals against decisions delivered by the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court, Sicily).

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 By notice published on 18 January 2012, Airgest, the company responsible for the management of Trapani Birgi civil airport (Italy), launched an open call for tenders for the award of a contract for the provision of cleaning and ground maintenance services at the airport for a period of three years. The contract price, net of value added tax, was EUR 1 995 496.35 and the contract was to be awarded to the most economically advantageous tender. The contract was awarded, by definitive award decision of 22 May 2012, to the temporary joint venture consisting of GSA and Zenith Services Group Srl (ZS).

13 PFE, which participated in the procedure and was ranked second, brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court, Sicily) seeking, inter alia, the annulment of the decision awarding the contract and, as a consequence, an order that the contract be awarded to PFE and the related contract concluded with it. The other tenderers did not challenge the decision awarding the contract.

14 GSA, group leader of the temporary joint venture to which the contract had been awarded, was joined to the proceedings and filed a counter-claim alleging that PFE, the applicant in the main proceedings, had no legal interest in bringing the proceedings as it did not fulfil the eligibility requirements for the tendering procedure and should therefore have been excluded from the procedure. The Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court, Sicily) examined the arguments of both parties and upheld both actions. Following that decision, Airgest, as contracting authority, excluded the two applicants as well as all the other tenderers who had initially been ranked because their respective bids did not conform to the tendering specifications. Those other tenderers did not appeal against the decision awarding the contract. A further call for tenders by way of negotiated procedure was launched for the award of the contract in question.

15 PFE lodged an appeal against the judgment of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court, Sicily) before the Consiglio di giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily). GSA, in turn, lodged a cross-appeal before that court on the ground, in particular, that, by examining the submissions in the main proceedings, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sicilia (Regional Administrative Court, Sicily) had failed to have regard to the rules governing the order in which actions are to be examined laid down by Judgment No 4 of 7 April 2011, delivered by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) sitting in plenary session. According to that judgment, if a counterclaim has been brought challenging the main action on the ground that it is inadmissible, the counterclaim must be given precedence and examined before the main action. Under the national legal system, such a counterclaim is classified as 'exclusive' or 'paralysing' on the basis that, where the counterclaim is deemed well founded, the court seised is required to dismiss the main action as inadmissible without assessing its merits.

16 The referring court observes that, in its judgment in Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), delivered after the judgment of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) sitting in plenary session referred to above, the Court of Justice held that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 is to be interpreted as precluding the rules laid down by the latter judgment set out in the preceding paragraph. The case which gave rise to the judgment in Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448) concerned two tenderers who had been selected by the contracting authority and invited to submit tenders. Following the action brought by the unsuccessful tenderer, the successful tenderer lodged a counterclaim, contending that the unsuccessful bid should have been excluded on the ground that it did not satisfy the minimum requirements laid down in the specifications.

17 The referring court is uncertain, first, whether the interpretation given by the Court of Justice in Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448) is equally applicable in the present case because, in the case which gave rise to that judgment, only two undertakings submitted tenders and both of them had conflicting interests in the main action for annulment brought by the undertaking whose bid had been unsuccessful and in the counterclaim brought by the successful tenderer, whereas, in the present case, more than two undertakings submitted bids, even though only two of them have brought proceedings.

18 Second, the referring court states that, in accordance with Article 1(2) of Legislative Decree No 373 of 24 December 2003 laying down rules for the implementation of the Special Statute of the Region of Sicily with regard to the exercise in that region of the functions assigned to the Consiglio di Stato, it constitutes a chamber of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) and, as such, it is a court against whose decisions there is no judicial remedy under national law, within the meaning of the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU. However, it is required, under the procedural rule laid down in Article 99(3) of the Code of Administrative Procedure, to apply the principles of law established by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) sitting in plenary session, even in respect of questions concerning the interpretation and application of EU law, subject to the option available to the chamber, where it wishes to depart from those principles, to refer the matter to the plenary session in order to seek a reversal of its decisions.

19 The referring court highlights the conflicts between judgment No 4 of the plenary session of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) of 7 April 2011 and the judgment in Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448) in order to point out that, if the procedural requirement described in the preceding paragraph were also to be applied to matters governed by EU law, that requirement would be incompatible with the principle that the Court of Justice has sole jurisdiction to interpret EU law and with the obligation all the courts of final instance of the Member States are under to submit a request to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling when questions arise concerning the interpretation of that law.

20 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily) decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Do the principles laid down by the Court of Justice in its judgment in Fastweb [Case C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448] concerning the specific set of circumstances forming the subject-matter of the request for a preliminary ruling in that case, in which only two undertakings participated in a public procurement procedure, also apply — given the considerable similarities between those circumstances and the facts in the present case — to the case currently before this Council, in which the undertakings participating in the tendering procedure, even though more than two undertakings were admitted, were all excluded by the contracting authority without those exclusion decisions being challenged by undertakings other than those involved in the present proceedings, with the result that, in the dispute currently before this Council, only two undertakings are concerned?

(2) In respect solely of issues which can be settled through the application of EU law, is it the case that, upon a proper construction of EU law and, in particular, of Article 267 TFEU, Article 99(3) of the Italian Code of Administrative Procedure is precluded to the extent that it makes all principles of law stated by the plenary session of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) binding upon all Chambers and Divisions of the Consiglio di Stato, even where it is clearly the case that the plenary session has stated, or may have stated, a principle that is contrary to or incompatible with EU law? Specifically:

– in the event that doubts arise as to whether a principle of law already stated by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) in plenary session is in conformity with or is compatible with EU law, is the Chamber or Division of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) to which the case is assigned under an obligation to make a reasoned order referring the decision on the appeal back to the plenary session, even before it is able to make a request to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling as to whether the principle of law in question is in conformity with or is compatible with EU law; or, instead, may — or, rather, must — the Chamber or Division of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), being a national court against whose decisions no appeal lies, independently refer — as an ordinary court applying EU law — a question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling so as to obtain the correct interpretation of EU law?

– In the event that the answer to the question asked in the preceding paragraph is that each Chamber and Division of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) is recognised as having the power or the obligation to refer questions directly to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling, or in every case in which the Court of Justice has taken a position — especially if it has done so at a time subsequent to the plenary session of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) — to the effect that the principle of law stated in the plenary session is not in conformity or not wholly in conformity with the correct interpretation of EU law, may or must each Chamber and each Division of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), being ordinary courts applying EU law and against whose decisions no appeal lies, immediately apply the correct interpretation of EU law as provided by the Court of Justice or, instead, are they under an obligation, even in such cases, to make a reasoned order referring the decision on the appeal back to the plenary session of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), thereby deferring to the authority of the plenary session of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) and to its discretion all assessment of the application of EU law already declared binding by the Court of Justice?

– Lastly, is it not the case that an interpretation of the administrative procedural rules of the Italian Republic as meaning that any potential decision relating to a request to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling — or even merely the resolution of the case whenever that flows directly from the application of EU legal principles already set out by the Court of Justice — is a matter exclusively for the plenary session of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) constitutes an obstacle, not only to the principles that proceedings are to be concluded within a reasonable period and that a review is to be available speedily in relation to procedures for the award of public contracts, but also to the requirement that EU law is to be promptly applied in full by all courts in all Member States, in a manner which must be consistent with its proper interpretation as provided by the Court of Justice, and moreover for the purposes of ensuring the broadest possible application of the principle of ‘effectiveness’ (effet utile) and the principle of the primacy (in terms not only of substance but also of procedure) of EU law over the national law of every single Member State (in the present case: over Article 99(3) of the Italian Code of Administrative Procedure)?’

21 By its first question, the referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, whether the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 are to be interpreted as meaning that a main action for review brought by a tenderer with an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or may be adversely affected by an alleged breach of EU public procurement law or rules transposing that law, with a view to excluding another tenderer, cannot be dismissed as inadmissible under national procedural rules which provide that the counterclaim lodged by the other tenderer must be examined first.

22 The referring court seeks to ascertain in particular whether the Court's interpretation of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 in its judgment in Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448) is applicable in a case in which, although more than two undertakings were originally admitted to the procurement procedure concerned, all the participating undertaking have all been excluded by the contracting authority and proceedings have not been brought by any undertaking other than the two involved in the main action.

23 It should be noted in that regard that, in accordance with the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, in order for the review of decisions taken by contracting authorities to be regarded as effective, review procedures must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

24 At paragraph 33 of the judgment in Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), the Court considered that a counterclaim filed by the successful tenderer cannot bring about the dismissal of an action for review brought by an unsuccessful tenderer where the validity of the bid submitted by each of the operators is challenged in the course of the same proceedings, given that, in such a situation, each competitor can claim a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bid submitted by the other, which may lead to a finding that the contracting authority is unable to select a lawful bid.

25 At paragraph 34 of that judgment, the Court therefore interpreted Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 as meaning that an action for review by a tenderer whose bid has been unsuccessful cannot be declared inadmissible as a consequence of the examination of the preliminary plea of inadmissibility raised in the counterclaim filed by the successful tenderer, in the absence of a ruling as to whether the contract specifications are met by both the bids submitted.

26 That judgment gives concrete expression to the requirements of the provisions of EU law referred to in paragraph 23 above in a situation in which, following a public procurement procedure, two tenderers bring an action for review, each seeking the exclusion of the other.

27 In such a situation, both of the tenderers have an interest in obtaining a particular contract. On the one hand, the exclusion of one tenderer may lead to the other being awarded the contract directly in the same procedure. On the other, if both tenderers are excluded and a new public procurement procedure is launched, each of those tenderers may participate in the new procedure and thus obtain the contract indirectly.

28 The interpretation given by the Court in Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), referred to in paragraphs 24 and 25 above, is applicable in a context such as that of the main proceedings. First, each of the parties to the proceedings has a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bids submitted by the other competitors. Second, as observed by the Advocate General at point 37 of his Opinion, it cannot be ruled out that one of the irregularities justifying the exclusion of both the successful tenderer's bid and that of the tenderer challenging the contracting authority's decision may also vitiate the other bids submitted in the tendering procedure, which may result in that authority having to launch a new procedure.

29 The number of participants in the public procurement procedure concerned as well as the number of participants who have instigated review procedures and the differing legal grounds relied on by those participants are irrelevant to the question of the applicability of the principle established by the Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448) case-law.

30 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 are to be interpreted as meaning that a main action for review brought by a tenderer with an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or may be adversely affected by an alleged breach of EU public procurement law or rules transposing that law, with a view to excluding another tenderer, cannot be dismissed as inadmissible under national procedural rules which provide that the counterclaim lodged by the other tenderer must be examined first.

First part of Question 2

31 By the first part of its second question, the referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, whether Article 267 TFEU is to be interpreted as precluding a provision of national law, in so far as that provision is interpreted to the effect that, where a question concerning the interpretation or validity of EU law arises, a chamber of a court of final instance must, if it does not concur with the position adopted by decision of that court sitting in plenary session, refer the question to the plenary session and is thus precluded from itself making a request to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

32 As the Court has repeatedly held, national courts have the widest discretion in referring questions to the Court involving interpretation of relevant provisions of EU law (see, to that effect, judgment in Rheinmühlen-Düsseldorf, 166/73, EU:C:1974:3, paragraph 3), that discretion being replaced by an obligation for courts of final instance, subject to certain exceptions recognised by the Court's case-law (see, to that effect, judgment in Cilfit and Others, 283/81, EU:C:1982:335, paragraph 21 and operative part). A rule of national law cannot prevent a national court, where appropriate, from using that discretion, (see to that effect, judgments in Rheinmühlen-Düsseldorf, 166/73, EU:C:1974:3, paragraph 4; Melki and Abdeli, C-188/10 and C-189/10, EU:C:2010:363, paragraph 42, and Elchinov, C-173/09, EU:C:2010:581, paragraph 27) or complying with that obligation.

33 Both that discretion and that obligation are an inherent part of the system of cooperation between the national courts and the Court of Justice established by Article 267 TFEU and of the functions of the court responsible for the application of EU law entrusted by that provision to the national courts.

34 As a consequence, where a national court before which a case is pending considers that a question concerning the interpretation or validity of EU law has arisen in that case, it has the discretion, or is under an obligation, to request a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice, and national rules imposed by legislation or case-law cannot interfere with that discretion or that obligation.

35 In the present case, a provision of national law cannot prevent a chamber of a court of final instance faced with a question concerning the interpretation of Directive 89/665 from referring the matter to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

36 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first part of the second question is that Article 267 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding a provision of national law, in so far as that provision is interpreted to the effect that, where a question concerning the interpretation or validity of EU law arises, a chamber of a court of final instance must, if it does not concur with the position adopted by decision of that court sitting in plenary session, refer the question to the plenary session and is thus precluded from itself making a request to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

Second and third parts of Question 2

37 By the second and third parts of its second question, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, whether Article 267 TFEU is to be interpreted as meaning that, after receiving the Court's answer to a question concerning the interpretation of EU law which it has submitted to the Court, or where the Court's case-law already provides a clear answer to that question, the referring court is itself required to do everything necessary to ensure that that interpretation of EU law is applied.

38 It should be noted in that regard that a judgment in which the Court gives a preliminary ruling is binding on the national court, as regards the interpretation or the validity of the acts of the EU institutions in question, for the purposes of the decision to be given in the main proceedings (see, to that effect, judgment in Elchinov, C-173/09, EU:C:2010:581, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited). Accordingly, the national court which, adjudicating as court of final instance, has complied with its obligation to make a reference to the Court for a preliminary ruling under the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU, is bound, for the purposes of the decision to be given in the main proceedings, by the interpretation of the provisions at issue given by the Court and must, if necessary, disregard any national case-law which it considers inconsistent with EU law (see, to that effect, judgment in Elchinov, C-173/09, EU:C:2010:581, paragraph 30).

39 It should also be noted that the effectiveness of Article 267 TFEU would be impaired if the national court were prevented from forthwith applying EU law in accordance with the decision or the case-law of the Court (see, to that effect, judgment in Simmenthal, 106/77, EU:C:1978:49, paragraph 20).

40 A national court which is called upon, within the exercise of its jurisdiction, to apply provisions of EU law is under a duty to give full effect to those provisions, if necessary refusing of its own motion to apply any conflicting provision of national legislation, even if adopted subsequently, and it is not necessary for the court to request or await the prior setting aside of such provision by legislative or other constitutional means (see, first, judgment in Simmenthal, 106/77, EU:C:1978:49, paragraphs 21 and 24, and, most recently, judgment in A, C-112/13, EU:C:2014:2195, paragraph 36 and the case-law cited).

41 Any provision of a national legal system and any legislative, administrative or judicial practice that might impair the effectiveness of EU law by withholding from the national court with jurisdiction to apply such law the power to do everything necessary at the moment of its application to set aside national legislative provisions that might prevent EU rules from having full force and effect are incompatible with those requirements, which are the very essence of EU law (see judgments in Simmenthal, 106/77, EU:C:1978:49, paragraph 22, and A, C-112/13, EU:C:2014:2195, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited).

42 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second and third parts of Question 2 is that Article 267 TFEU is to be interpreted as meaning that, after receiving the Court's answer to a question concerning the interpretation of EU law which it has submitted to the Court, or where the Court's case-law already provides a clear answer to that question, a chamber of a court of final instance is itself required to do everything necessary to ensure that that interpretation of EU law is applied.

Costs

43 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby rules:

1. The third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, are to be interpreted as meaning that a main action for review brought by a tenderer with an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or may be adversely affected by an alleged breach of EU public procurement law or rules transposing that law, with a view to excluding another tenderer, cannot be dismissed as inadmissible under national procedural rules which provide that the counterclaim lodged by the other tenderer must be examined first.

2. Article 267 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding a provision of national law, in so far as that provision is interpreted to the effect that, where a question concerning the interpretation or validity of EU law arises, a chamber of a court of final instance must, if it does not concur with the position adopted by decision of that court sitting in plenary session, refer the question to the plenary session and is thus precluded from itself making a request to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

3. Article 267 TFEU is to be interpreted as meaning that, after receiving the answer of the Court of Justice of the European Union to a question concerning the interpretation of EU law which it has submitted to the Court, or where the case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union already provides a clear answer to that question, a chamber of a court of final instance is itself required to do everything necessary to ensure that that interpretation of EU law is applied.

ADDITIONAL OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

delivered on 15 October 2015 (1)

Case C-689/13

Puligienica Facility Esco SpA (PFE)

v

Airgest SpA

(Request for a preliminary ruling

from the Consiglio di Giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily, Italy))

‘Reopening of the oral procedure — Article 267 TFEU — Concept of ‘court or tribunal’ — Organisational approach — Functional approach’

I – Introduction

1. This Opinion is the second to be delivered in PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2015:263). The request for a preliminary ruling concerns, first, the interpretation of Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, (2) as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (3) and, secondly, the interpretation of Article 267 TFEU and the principles of the primacy of EU law and of consistent interpretation.

2. By decision of 20 January 2015, the Court assigned the case to the Fifth Chamber. A hearing took place on 11 March 2015, at which Puligienica Facility Esco SpA (PFE), Gestione Servizi Ambientali Srl, the Italian Government and the European Commission had the opportunity to submit their observations. I delivered my first Opinion in that case on 23 April 2015. (4) On 10 June 2015, however, in the course of its deliberations, that chamber decided, pursuant to Article 60(3) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court, to refer the case to the Court, which reassigned it to the Grand Chamber.

3. By its order in PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2015:521), the Court thus ordered the reopening of the oral procedure and invited the interested persons referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union to express their views on the following question: ‘Do the concept of ‘court or tribunal’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU and the obligation to apply EU law as interpreted by the Court of Justice of the European Union apply, on the basis of a functional approach, to the chamber of a court or tribunal of a Member State that is seised of a dispute, or, on the basis of an organisational approach, only to that court or tribunal as a whole, of which that chamber is formally part?’

4. In the present Opinion I shall therefore concentrate on that question alone and merely raise points that are relevant to an examination of that question. I note, lastly, that only the Italian, Netherlands and Polish Governments, and the European Commission, replied to the question put by the Court following the reopening of the oral procedure. Only the Italian Government and the Commission took the opportunity to express their views at the hearing which took place on 15 September 2015.

II – Legal framework

5. Legislative Decree No 104 of 2 July 2010 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 156 of 7 July 2010) introduced the Code of Administrative Procedure.

6. According to Article 99(3) of that code, '[i]f the chamber to which an action is assigned does not concur with a principle of law stated by the plenary session, it shall, by reasoned order, refer the decision on the appeal to the plenary session'.

7. Article 99(4) of the code provides that '[t]he plenary session shall rule on the dispute in its entirety, unless it decides to state the principle of law and to refer the remainder of the case back to the referring chamber'.

III – Analysis

A – The interpretation suggested in my first Opinion

8. As a preliminary point, I note that the Italian Government and the two other governments which replied to the question put by the Court support the functional interpretation of the concept of 'court or tribunal'.

9. That is also the position which I adopted, implicitly but definitely, in my first Opinion. At the end of my analysis of the referring court's second question I concluded that 'Article 267 TFEU precludes a provision such as Article 99(3) of the Code of Administrative Procedure, interpreted as requiring the chamber of a court against whose decisions there is no judicial remedy, where it does not concur with a principle of law stated by the plenary session of that same court, to refer to the plenary session the decision under appeal, without first having the opportunity to make a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling'. (5)

10. Although I did not expressly put forward the idea of a 'functional' interpretation of 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, such in interpretation none the less accords with the approach that was advocated. It is also the one which I continue to support in this additional Opinion.

B – The Consiglio di Giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily) and the impact of Article 99(3) of the Code of Administrative Procedure on the finality of its decisions

11. The judicial nature of the Consiglio di Giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily), which is composed of two chambers constituting separate chambers of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), (6) for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU is therefore, in my view, not in doubt. According to Article 6(1) of the Code of Administrative Procedure, '[t]he Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) is the administrative court of final instance'.

12. The Italian Government confirmed at the hearing on 15 September 2015, first, that there was no judicial remedy available against decisions of the Consiglio di Giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily) and, secondly, nor was there any judicial remedy or procedural sanction available for failure to apply Article 99(3) of the Code of Administrative Procedure. (7)

13. As I pointed out in my first Opinion, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Court of Cassation) itself held in judgment No 2403, delivered in combined chambers on 4 February 2014, that 'within the Italian system of administrative courts it fell to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), its chambers and the plenary session, without distinction, to adjudicate as the court of final instance for the purposes of the third paragraph of Article 267 TFEU'. (8)

14. Moreover, it is not the first time that that court has referred a question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling, since the Court has already answered several requests for a preliminary ruling from the Consiglio di Giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily). (9)

15. To adopt an organisational approach to that court would mean therefore that a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU might lose that status as a result of the particular manner in which the courts of a Member State are organised.

C – The impact of a chamber of a court being relieved of its jurisdiction in favour of the same court with a different composition

16. It is apparent from the Court's now settled case-law that Article 267 TFEU precludes Member State legislation which establishes an interlocutory procedure for the review of the constitutionality of national laws, where the priority nature of that procedure prevents a national court from exercising its right or fulfilling its obligation to refer questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling both before the submission of a question on constitutionality to the national court responsible for reviewing the constitutionality of laws and, as the case may be, after the decision of that court on that question. (10) It follows from that case-law that the court seised of the dispute must always be in a position, at any given time, to refer a question to the Court for a preliminary ruling.

17. In the case at issue, Article 99(3) of the Code of Administrative Procedure does not require referral to another court but to the same court with a different composition. The key factor, in my view, is not that difference but the fact that if the Consiglio di Giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily) (or any other chamber of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State)) decides, on the basis of Article 99(3) of the Code of Administrative Procedure, to refer the case to the plenary session, it is no longer, in principle, seised of the dispute itself and accordingly can no longer refer a question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling, either at the same time or subsequently. (11)

18. However, there is nothing in Article 99(3) of the Code of Administrative Procedure that would appear to prevent a chamber of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) making use of Article 267 TFEU before relieving itself of jurisdiction. (12) It is appropriate to note that this is also the interpretation suggested by the Italian Government.

19. In such a situation, it is for that chamber to draw the appropriate conclusions from the judgment given by the Court of Justice or, if appropriate and only at that time, to refer the case to the plenary session of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State). It will then be for the plenary session to decide the case in line with the judgment of the Court of Justice or to refer another question to that court.

20. That interpretation, moreover, has the advantage of reducing the likelihood of failure to apply, or misapplication, of EU law.

21. I shall conclude these comments regarding divestment of jurisdiction with a thought prompted by the judgment in Syfait and Others (C-53/03, EU:C:2005:333). In my first Opinion I suggested there was a parallel with the approach adopted in the judgment in Parfums Christian Dior (C-337/95, EU:C:1997:517). (13) It also seems to me that a converse inference may be drawn from the judgment in Syfait and Others (C-53/03, EU:C:2005:333).

22. In that case, the Court declined jurisdiction, inter alia, because a competition authority could be relieved of the case by the Commission under Article 11(6) of Council Regulation (EC) No 1/2003 of 16 December 2002 on the implementation of the rules on competition laid down in Articles 81 [EC] and 82 [EC]. (14) However, unlike a measure concerning the organisation of the courts, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, in the field of competition the body referring the question for a preliminary ruling does not control either the transfer itself or the time when the case may be transferred. By contrast, in the present case, it is the chamber of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) which decides, after making a reference to the Court for a preliminary ruling, whether it will refer the case to the plenary session. In doing, so it retains its status as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU until it takes its own decision to decline jurisdiction.

23. In conclusion, it would seem to me that a court or tribunal should be viewed from a functional perspective, and that it cannot therefore lose that 'status' even though it may be relieved of its jurisdiction, in favour of the same court with a different composition, after the Court has given its ruling.

D – Additional considerations

24. For the sake of completeness, I should add that both the objective of cooperation inherent in Article 267 TFEU and the practical difficulty in applying the organisational approach should also lead the Court to reject such a view of a 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU.

1. The principle of cooperation between the Court of Justice and the courts of the Member States

25. First of all, an organisational approach to the concept of 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU would seem to me to conflict with the fact that, according to settled case-law, Article 267 TFEU establishes 'a procedure for direct cooperation between the Court and the courts of the Member States'. (15) That notion of cooperation is confirmed by the principle of the same name. As Advocate General Cruz Villalón aptly commented, the principle of sincere cooperation, as set out in Article 4(3) TEU, also applies to courts and tribunals, 'including the two courts concerned in these important proceedings'. (16) I am therefore sympathetic to the Commission's argument that, according to the principle of sincere cooperation, any provision concerning the organisation and procedure of the courts must be interpreted not only in line with Article 267 TFEU, but also in a way that promotes access to the preliminary ruling mechanism provided for in that article. (17)

26. Accordingly, where a court of final instance — which the referring court is under Italian national law (18) — expresses doubts regarding the interpretation of EU law and its application by another court of final instance within its own legal system, or even by its own plenary session, it would seem to me that it is for the Court of Justice to provide it with an answer.

27. As I stated in my first Opinion, to withhold from a chamber of a court against whose decisions there is no judicial remedy under domestic law the possibility of referring a matter to the Court of Justice solely because the plenary session of that same court is required to do so would seem to me to be at odds with the settled case-law of the Court, which has always given 'national courts the widest discretion in referring matters to the Court if they consider that a case pending before them raises questions involving interpretation of provisions of EU law, or consideration of their validity, which are necessary for the resolution of the case'. (19)

28. In this regard I agree with the position taken by the Polish Government that any gap in that system of cooperation between national courts and the Court of Justice may undermine the very effectiveness of the provisions of the Treaty and of secondary law with regard to which the national court has doubts. (20)

29. An organisational interpretation of the concept of 'court or tribunal' would increase the risk that case-law might come into existence in the Member State in question that is not in accordance with EU law. If a situation arose where the 'chamber' of a court ruling at final instance decided not to refer the case to the plenary session and took a decision that was not in accordance with EU law, no court of whatever composition would be able to set it aside. As I noted in my first Opinion, if national courts against whose decisions there is no judicial remedy under national law are required to make a reference to the Court when faced with a question concerning the interpretation of EU law, it is in order to 'prevent a body of national case-law that is not in accordance with the rules of [European Union] law from coming into existence in any Member State'. (21)

2. Practical difficulty in applying the organisational interpretation

30. Secondly, I consider that it would be difficult in practice for the Court to adopt an organisational interpretation of the concept of 'court or tribunal' in applying Article 267 TFEU.

31. As I stated previously, the Court has on several occasions answered questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Consiglio di Giustizia amministrativa per la Regione siciliana (Council of Administrative Justice for the Region of Sicily). (22)

32. Furthermore, it is apparent from the Italian Government's answer to the question put by the Court following the reopening of the oral procedure that the Italian Code of Civil Procedure contains a provision similar to Article 99 of the Code of Administrative Procedure for the Corte suprema di cassazione (Court of Cassation). According to Article 273(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 'where a single chamber [of the Corte suprema di cassazione] does not concur with a principle of law stated by the combined chambers, it shall, by reasoned order, refer the decision on the appeal to the combined chambers'. The Court has already responded to a number of references for a preliminary ruling from that court.

33. If the Court were to adopt an organisational approach to the concept of 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, that would mean that all the courts or tribunals of a Member State which has a similar procedural rule to that established by the Italian Code of Administrative Procedure or the Italian Code of Civil Procedure would be able to refer matters to the Court of Justice only on condition that they did not challenge a principle of law stated by the plenary session of that court or tribunal.

34. Such a definition of a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU would be impractical in that it would make it difficult for the Court of Justice to ascertain whether it had jurisdiction. It would be possible for that to be ascertained only where the referring court provided comprehensive information concerning its procedural law. The Court is not necessarily informed of all national procedural rules when a reference is made for a preliminary ruling. Moreover, for the Court to lack jurisdiction would require effective application of the procedural rules at issue in the particular case giving rise to the request for a preliminary ruling. To take the hypothesis of the Italian Code of Administrative Procedure, a chamber of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) does not necessarily refer a matter to the Court for a preliminary ruling because it considers that a principle of law stated by the plenary session is not in accordance with EU law. However, the Court would lack jurisdiction only in such a case.

35. Such an interpretation would, moreover, conflict with the consistent approach taken by the Court, which views a court as being one and the same entity, whatever its internal organisation. Evidence of that 'comprehensive' view of courts can be seen in the way in which the Court identifies national courts in its judgments. They are referred to exclusively by their 'overall' name, without any reference to their composition (chamber, plenary, etc.).

IV – Conclusion

36. In the light of the above considerations and of the analysis in points 63 to 89 of my first Opinion, delivered in the present case on 23 April 2015, I consider that the concept of 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU must be interpreted on the basis of a functional approach. That article refers, therefore, to the court or the chamber of a court of a Member State which is seised of the dispute.

Legal context

EU law

Directive 2004/18

3 Recital 46 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 states that contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in a transparent and objective manner under conditions of effective competition.

4 It is stated in the third paragraph of recital 46 in the preamble to that directive that:

‘Where the contracting authorities choose to award a contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they shall assess the tenders in order to determine which one offers the best value for money. In order to do this, they shall determine the economic and quality criteria which, taken as a whole, must make it possible to determine the most economically advantageous tender for the contracting authority. The determination of these criteria depends on the object of the contract since they must allow the level of performance offered by each tender to be assessed in the light of the object of the contract, as defined in the technical specifications, and the value for money of each tender to be measured.’

5 Article 44(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18 is worded as follows:

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 53 and 55, taking into account Article 24, after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded under Articles 45 and 46 has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52, and, where appropriate, with the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in paragraph 3.

2. The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.

These minimum levels shall be indicated in the contract notice.’

6 Article 48(1) of Directive 2004/18 provides that the technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators are to be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof. Article 48(2)(a)(ii) and (e) of that directive provides that evidence of the technical abilities may be furnished by means according to the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the services concerned, including by the presentation of the list of the main services provided in the past three years and by a statement of the educational and professional qualifications of the service provider or contractor and/or those of the undertaking’s managerial staff and, in particular, those of the person or persons responsible for providing the services.

7 Article 53 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

‘1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions concerning the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of public contracts shall be either:

(a) when the award is made to the tender most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority, various criteria linked to the subject-matter of the public contract in question, for example, quality, price, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, cost-effectiveness, after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery date and delivery period or period of completion, or;

(b) the lowest price only.

2. Without prejudice to the provisions of the third subparagraph, in the case referred to in paragraph 1(a) the contracting authority shall specify in the contract notice or in the contract documents or, in the case of a competitive dialogue, in the descriptive document, the relative weighting which it gives to each of the criteria chosen to determine the most economically advantageous tender.

Those weightings can be expressed by providing for a range with an appropriate maximum spread.

Where, in the opinion of the contracting authority, weighting is not possible for demonstrable reasons, the contracting authority shall indicate in the contract notice or contract documents or, in the case of a competitive dialogue, in the descriptive document, the criteria in descending order of importance.’

Portuguese law

8 Under Article 75(1) of the Public Procurement Code (Código dos Contratos Públicos) (‘the CCP’), ‘[t]he factors and any sub-factors corresponding to the criterion for award to the economically most advantageous tender must comprise all aspects, and only those aspects, pertaining to the performance of the contract to be concluded which is put out to tender, as laid down in the tendering specifications, and may not, directly or indirectly, bear upon the situations, qualities, characteristics or other factual aspects relating to the tenderers’.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

9 By notice published on 24 November 2011, Nersant opened a public tendering procedure for the purchase of training and consultancy services for the implementation of the project ‘MOVE PME, Médio Tejo area of quality, environment, safety and health at work, food safety — SME’.

10 Article 5 of the contract notice stated that the contract would be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender, determined on the basis of the following factors:

‘A. Evaluation of the team — 40%

(i) This factor will be arrived at by taking into account the composition of the team, its proven experience and an analysis of the academic and professional background of its members.

B. Quality and merits of the service proposed — 55%

(i) Overall assessment of the proposed structure including the work programme — 0 to 20%.

(ii) Description of the technical methods to be used and the implementing methodologies — 0 to 15%.

(iii) Description of the methods for checking and monitoring the quality of the work in the various spheres of activity — 0 to 20%.

C. Overall price — 5%

Preference will be given to the tender achieving the highest number of points.’

11 Ambisig submitted a tender under the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings. In its preliminary report, the selection board for the procedure ranked Iberscal in first place.

12 On 3 January 2012, Ambisig exercised its right to a prior hearing, challenging the fact that the contract notice in question included in its evaluation criteria the factor relating to evaluation of the team assigned to performance of the contract, provided for in Article 5(A) of that notice.

13 In an addendum of 14 February 2012 to its final report of 4 January 2012, the selection board dismissed the arguments put forward by Ambisig in support of its request for a prior hearing. The selection board stated that the purpose of the factor in Article 5(A) of the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings is to evaluate 'the specific technical team which the tenderer proposes assigning to the work to be carried out' and '[t]he experience of the proposed technical team is, in this specific case, an intrinsic characteristic of the tender and not a characteristic of the tenderer'.

14 By decision of 14 February 2012, on the basis of the board's final report, the Chairman of the Executive Committee of Nersant awarded the contract for services at issue in the main proceedings to Iberscal and approved the draft contract for the relevant provision of services. On 19 March 2012 that contract was concluded between Nersant and Iberscal.

15 Ambisig brought proceedings before the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Leiria (Administrative and Tax Court, Leiria) seeking the annulment of the decision of 14 February 2012 of the Chairman of the Executive Committee of Nersant awarding the service contract at issue in the main proceedings to Iberscal. In the course of the proceedings, Ambisig also sought and obtained the broadening of the subject-matter of the proceedings to include the annulment of the service contract concluded on 19 March 2012.

16 Since the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Leiria dismissed the action in its entirety, Ambisig lodged an appeal before the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (South Central Administrative Court).

17 In upholding the decision of the court at first instance, the appellate court considered that the factor contained in Article 5(A) of the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings was permissible under Article 75(1) of the CCP, inasmuch as it related to 'the team proposed for the performance of the contract for the provision of services put out to tender and not, directly or indirectly, to situations, qualities or characteristics or other factual aspects of the tenderers'.

18 Ambisig lodged an appeal against the judgment of the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul before the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court), claiming in essence that the factor laid down in Article 5(A) of the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings was unlawful under Article 75(1) of the CCP.

19 According to the order for reference from the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo, the point of law to be settled is whether criteria such as those contained in Article 5(A) of the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings are permissible as award criteria in public procurement procedures for the purchase of training and consultancy services for the purposes of Article 53 of Directive 2004/18.

20 In that regard the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo observes that the European Commission submitted a proposal for a directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement (COM(2011) 896 final), which constitutes a new factor in relation to the case-law of the Court in this area.

21 In those circumstances, the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'With regard to procurement contracts for the provision of services of an intellectual nature, training and consultancy, is it compatible with Directive 2004/18, …, to lay down, among the factors making up the award criterion in relation to tenders in a public tendering procedure, a factor enabling evaluation of the teams specifically put forward by the tenderers for the performance of the contract, taking into consideration the composition of the respective teams, their proven experience and an analysis of their academic and professional background?'

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

22 The request for a preliminary ruling concerns, in essence, the question whether, for the award of a procurement contract for the provision of services of an intellectual nature, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 precludes the contracting authority from using an award criterion enabling evaluation of the teams specifically put forward by the tenderers for the performance of the contract and which takes into consideration the composition of the team and the experience and academic and professional background of the team members.

23 The referring court found it necessary to refer the question due to a contradiction between, on the one hand, the Court of Justice's case-law on verification of the ability of economic operators for the performance of a contract and criteria for awarding contracts, as resulting from the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) and, on the other, the Commission's proposal aimed at reforming the legislation on public procurement procedures, and the fact that quality is one of the award criteria provided for by Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, a criterion which may be linked to the composition, experience and academic and professional background of the team entrusted with performance of the contract.

24 As a preliminary point, Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), which entered into force subsequently to the facts in the main proceedings, is not applicable to the present case.

25 It should also be noted that the case-law highlighted in the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), which was repealed by Directive 2004/18, and that that judgment does not rule out the possibility that the contracting authority may, in certain circumstances, fix and apply a criterion such as the one contained in the question referred at the stage of awarding the contract.

26 That judgment concerns the staff and experience of the tenderers in general and not, as in present case, the staff and experience of the persons making up a particular team which must actually perform the contract.

27 It should be noted, in relation to the interpretation of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 which is the subject of the referring court's question, that that directive introduced new elements into the Union legislation on public procurement in relation to Directive 92/50.

28 First of all, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 provides that 'the tender most economically advantageous' is to be identified 'from the point of view of the contracting authority', thereby giving the contracting authority greater discretion in its decision-making.

29 Secondly, the third paragraph of recital 46 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 states that, where the contracting authorities choose to award a contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they are to assess the tenders in order to determine which one 'offers the best value for money', which tends to reinforce the importance of quality in the award criteria for public contracts.

30 Furthermore, Article 53(1) of Directive 2004/18 does not set out an exhaustive list of the criteria which may be used by the contracting authorities in determining the economically most advantageous tender, and therefore leaves it open to the authorities awarding contracts to select the criteria on which they propose to base their award of the contract. Their choice is nevertheless limited to criteria aimed at identifying the tender which is economically the most advantageous (see, to that effect, Lianakis and Others, C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, paragraphs 28 and 29 and the case-law cited). To that end, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 specifically requires that the award criteria be linked to the subject-matter of the contract (see judgment in Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraph 86).

31 The quality of performance of a public contract may depend decisively on the 'professional merit' of the people entrusted with its performance, which is made up of their professional experience and background.

32 This is particularly true where the performance of the contract is intellectual in nature and, as in the main proceedings in the present case, concerns training and consultancy services.

33 Where a contract of this nature is to be performed by a team, it is the abilities and experience of its members which are decisive for the evaluation of the professional quality of the team. That quality may be an intrinsic characteristic of the tender and linked to the subject-matter of the contract for the purposes of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18.

34 Consequently, that quality may be included as an award criterion in the contract notice or in the relevant tendering specifications.

35 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred is that, with regard to procurement contracts for the provision of services of an intellectual nature, training and consultancy, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the contracting authority from using a criterion enabling evaluation of the teams specifically put forward by the tenderers for the performance of the contract and which takes into consideration the composition of the team and the experience and academic and professional background of the team members.

Costs

36 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

With regard to procurement contracts for the provision of services of an intellectual nature, training and consultancy, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts does not preclude the contracting authority from using a criterion enabling evaluation of the teams specifically put forward by the tenderers for the performance of the contract and which takes into consideration the composition of the team and the experience and academic and professional background of the team members.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
WATHELET
delivered on 18 December 2014 (1)

Case C-601/13

Ambisig — Ambiente e Sistemas de Informação Geográfica SA
v
Nersant — Associação Empresarial da Região de Santarém

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Portugal))

(Request for a preliminary ruling — Directive 2004/18/EC — Contract for services — Award of contract — Most economically advantageous tender — Contract award criteria — Evaluation of the team assigned to performance of the contract)

1. This case, which was received at the Court on 25 November 2013, concerns the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. (2) The request for a preliminary ruling was submitted in connection with a pre-contractual administrative appeal lodged by Ambisig — Ambiente e Sistemas de Informação Geográfica SA ('Ambisig') against the decision of 14 February 2012 of the Chairman of the Executive Committee of Nersant — Associação Empresarial de Região de Santarém ('Nersant') to award to Iberscal a contract for the purchase of training and consultancy services for the execution of the project 'Move PME, Médio Tejo area of quality, environment, safety and health at work, food safety — SME'.

I – The facts of the dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

2. On 24 November 2011, (3) the contracting authority Nersant published an invitation to tender for the purchase of training and consultancy services for the execution of the project 'MOVE PME, Médio Tejo area of quality, environment, safety and health at work, food safety — SME'.

3. Article 5 of the contract notice stated that the contract would be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender, determined on the basis of the following factors:

'A. Evaluation of the team – 40%

(i) This factor will be arrived at by taking into account the composition of the team, its proven experience and an analysis of the academic and professional background of its members.

B. Quality and merits of the service proposed – 55%

(i) Overall assessment of the proposed structure including the work programme – 0 to 20%

(ii) Description of the technical methods to be used and the implementing methodologies – 0 to 15%

(iii) Description of the methods for checking and monitoring the quality of the work in the various spheres of activity – 0 to 20%

C. Overall price – 5%

Preference will be given to the tender achieving the highest number of points.'

4. In its preliminary report, the selection board ranked Iberscal in first place.

5. On 3 January 2012, Ambisig, which had submitted a tender, exercised its right to a prior hearing, claiming that Factor A, which formed part of the award criteria, namely evaluation of the team, was unlawful.

6. The board added an addendum dated 14 February 2012 to its final report adopted on 4 January 2012, in which it rejected the arguments put forward by Ambisig at the prior hearing. In the board's opinion, what is assessed by Factor A is 'the specific technical team which the tenderer proposes assigning to the work to be carried out. The experience of the proposed technical team is, in this specific case, an intrinsic characteristic of the tender and not a characteristic of the tenderer'.

7. By decision of 14 February 2012, on the basis of the board's conclusions, the Chairman of the Executive Committee of Nersant awarded the contract for services to Iberscal and approved the draft contract for the provision of services.

8. Ambisig lodged a pre-contractual administrative appeal before the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Leiria (Administrative and Tax Court, Leiria) (Portugal) seeking both the annulment of the decision awarding the contract and the broadening of the subject-matter of the proceedings to include the annulment of that contract.

9. Since the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Leiria dismissed the appeal in its entirety, Ambisig lodged an appeal before the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (South Central Administrative Court).

10. In upholding the judgment delivered by the court of first instance, the appeal court held that the factor contained in Article 5(A) of the contract notice, which had been challenged as an award criterion, was permissible under Article 75(1) of the Código dos Contratos Públicos (Public Procurement Code, 'the CCP') inasmuch as it related to 'the team proposed for the performance of the contract for the provision of services put out to tender and not directly or indirectly to situations, qualities or characteristics or other factual aspects of the tenderers'.

11. Ambisig lodged an appeal against that judgment before the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court), claiming in essence that the contested award criterion was not only unlawful under Article 75(1) of the CCP but also incompatible with the provisions of Directive 2004/18.

12. According to the order for reference from the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo, the point of law to be settled is whether criteria such as those contained in Article 5(A) of the contract notice at issue are permissible as award criteria in public procurement procedures for the purchase of services and consultancy.

13. The Supremo Tribunal Administrativo notes that a new factor has arisen in relation to the case-law of the Court involving the directives on public procurement, in that the Commission has submitted a proposal for a directive which might alter the light in which that question would be examined. (4)

14. It was in those circumstances that the national court decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'With regard to procurement contracts for the provision of services of an intellectual nature, training and consultancy, is it compatible with Directive 2004/18 …, as amended, to lay down, among the factors making up the award criterion in relation to tenders in a public tendering procedure, a factor enabling evaluation of the teams specifically put forward by the tenderers for the performance of the contract, taking into consideration the composition of the respective teams, their proven experience and an analysis of their academic and professional background?'

II – Analysis

15. First of all, it is worth noting that, Nersant, all the Member States that submitted observations in this case, namely the Portuguese, Greek and Polish Governments, and also the Commission, in essence propose that the question referred for a preliminary ruling should be answered in the affirmative. Ambisig for its part has not submitted written observations, but presented oral argument at the hearing held on 6 November 2014.

A – Preliminary observations

16. First, my reasoning will be based solely on the provisions of Directive 2004/18, which are the only ones that are relevant ratione temporis, since the new directive is in no way applicable to the present case. (5)

17. Second, with regard to the principles at issue, it is important to differentiate between selection criteria and award criteria. Whilst selection of a tenderer concerns its personal situation and its ability to engage in the professional activity in question, the contract is awarded to the tenderer which submitted the tender that is most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority (Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18) or which offers the lowest price (paragraph 1(b) of that same article).

18. In other words, it is logical that, when it comes to awarding the contract, it is not (or it is no longer) the tenderer that is evaluated but the tender that it has submitted.

19. Furthermore, according to the case-law of the Court on public procurement procedures, the examination of the suitability of contractors to perform the contracts to be awarded and the awarding of those contracts are two different operations. Even though the relevant directives do not rule out the possibility that examination of the tenderers' suitability and the award of the contract may take place simultaneously, the two procedures are governed by different rules (6) and pursue different aims.

20. In that context, Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18 provides that contracts will be awarded after the suitability of the economic operators has been checked in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of professional and technical knowledge or ability.

21. Although it is true that Directive 2004/18 leaves it open to the authorities awarding contracts to choose the criteria on which they propose to base their award of the contract, nevertheless their choice is limited to criteria aimed at identifying the offer which is economically the most advantageous, (7) and therefore that which offers the best value for money.

B – The case-law

22. In connection with Directive 92/50/EEC, (8) the Court has ruled previously on whether, in a procedure for the award of a contract, that directive precludes the contracting authority from taking account of tenderers' experience, manpower and equipment and also their ability to perform the contract by the anticipated deadline, not as qualitative selection criteria but as award criteria.

23. In the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) (9) the Court held:

'30 … "award criteria" do not include criteria that are not aimed at identifying the tender which is economically the most advantageous, but are instead essentially linked to the evaluation of the tenderers' ability to perform the contract in question.

31 In the case in the main proceedings, however, the criteria selected as "award criteria" by the contracting authority relate principally to the experience, qualifications and means of ensuring proper performance of the contract in question. Those are criteria which concern the tenderers' suitability to perform the contract and which therefore do not have the status of "award criteria" for the purposes of Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50.

32 Consequently, the conclusion must be that, in a tendering procedure, a contracting authority is precluded by Articles 23(1), 32 and 36(1) of Directive 92/50 from taking into account as "award criteria" rather than as "qualitative selection criteria" the tenderers' experience, manpower and equipment, or their ability to perform the contract by the anticipated deadline.'

24. In so holding, the Court confirmed its case-law (10) according to which, in public procurement procedures, evaluation of tenderers' suitability to carry out the works to be awarded and the award of the contract are two different operations and are governed by different rules.

25. Moreover, the absence of any distinction between the qualitative selection criteria and the award criteria led the Court to a finding of failure to fulfil obligations in Commission v Greece (C-199/07, EU:C:2009:693). (11)

26. In that context, it is worth noting that the wording of Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50, entitled 'Criteria for the award of contracts', is in essence identical to the wording of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 (apart from the fact that that directive introduces three new criteria relating to environmental characteristics, running costs and cost effectiveness). (12)

27. However, compared with Directive 92/50, Directive 2004/18 seems to attach greater importance to the qualitative criteria, inasmuch as the third paragraph of recital 46 in the preamble thereto states that '[w]here the contracting authorities choose to award a contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they shall assess the tenders in order to determine which one offers the best value for money. In order to do this, they shall determine the economic and quality criteria which, taken as a whole, must make it possible to determine the most economically advantageous tender for the contracting authority. The determination of these criteria depends on the object of the contract, since they must allow the level of performance offered by each tender to be assessed in the light of the object of the contract, as defined in the technical specifications, and the value for money of each tender to be measured.' (13)

28. Moreover, (like the Commission) I think that the fact that Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 makes no express mention of the academic or professional qualifications of the members of the proposed team or of the relevance of their experience to the performance of the contract cannot be considered decisive, since the award criteria contained in that provision are listed simply as examples. Consequently, it is clear that Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 (14) leaves it open to the contracting authority to choose the criteria on which it intends to base its award of the contract, provided that they are aimed at identifying the most economically advantageous offer. In addition, it follows from the case-law, and also from the wording of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, that only award criteria linked to the subject-matter of the contract (15) may be used as a basis for awarding the contract in question.

29. The examples cited in Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, where 'the award is made to the tender most economically advantageous' are: quality, price, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, cost-effectiveness, after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery date and delivery period or period of completion.

30. In that context, in my opinion, the technical team proposed by tenderers in an invitation to tender for the supply of services of an intellectual nature such as, in the present case, training and consultancy services, is an aspect intrinsically linked to the subject-matter of the contract, in particular its quality, inasmuch as that evaluation is not in any way intended to assess the abstract capacity or ability of the tenderers to perform the contract, but rather the tender, namely the resources (in this case human resources) actually assigned to the performance of the contract.

31. This is all the more relevant in the case of complex services where there is a close connection between inter alia the professional qualifications of the personnel and the economic value of the tenders.

32. In fact, (like the Commission) I think that, in certain cases, the contracting authority could state in the tender notice that the qualifications and experience of the personnel assigned to the performance of the contract may play a decisive role in the evaluation of the economic value of the tenders submitted.

33. That criterion concerning the technical and professional qualifications of the members of the team assigned to the performance of the contract could be applied where, first, the very nature of the contract justifies this and, secondly, the team assigned to perform the contract could be decisive in terms of the economic value that the contracting authority assigns to each tender. The qualifications and experience of the personnel in question would then be taken into account in evaluating the tenders and determining that which offers the best value for money.

34. This is what is indicated by the third paragraph of recital 46 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18, which permits the use of award criteria '[depending] on the object of the contract since they must allow the level of performance offered by each tender to be assessed in the light of the object of the contract, [(16)] as defined in the technical specifications, and the value for money of each tender to be measured'.

35. This means that, in so far as the characteristics and specific qualities of the personnel are a decisive factor in determining the economic value of the tender, the unauthorised replacement of any member of the proposed team during the performance of the contract would be likely to reduce that value from the point of view of the contracting authority. I would also point out that the European Union legislature added those words ('from the point of view of the contracting authority') in Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 compared with Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50, thus clearly emphasising the degree of discretion allowed to contracting authorities when choosing criteria.

36. In fact, as the Portuguese, Greek and Polish Governments have rightly pointed out, in the case of contracts for intellectual services, the professional experience of the personnel who will be performing the contract has a direct influence on the quality of the services provided by those personnel.

37. There can be no doubt that, in contracts for intellectual services, it is not only the tenderer's capacity that is being examined, but also the capacity (or professional experience) of the personnel who will be charged with providing those services, namely the 'key personnel' identified in the tender.

38. The skills, experience and general effectiveness of the project team are therefore intrinsic characteristics of a tender for services such as those at issue in the main proceedings, in so far as they form part of the evaluation of the quality of the tender and not of the tenderer's economic, technical and professional ability to ensure the proper performance of the contract.

39. Consequently, I agree with the statements of the Portuguese, Greek and Polish Governments to the effect that the professional experience of the personnel effectively providing services of this kind may form part of the criteria used to select the most economically advantageous tender referred to in Article 53 of Directive 2004/18.

40. It is worth noting here that this problem was addressed in the request for a preliminary ruling in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40), (17) again in the context of an award criterion and its evaluation. The referring court stated that '[f]urthermore, although the contract notice does require, on pain of disqualification, that a declaration be filed as to the type of contract of employment with staff, the fact that certain members of the project team are listed as permanent associates of the consultancy firm Planitiki does not constitute a shortcoming leading to disqualification, since such a statement adequately defines the relationship of the said members vis-à-vis the consultancy firm; the question of whether or not it is legal to include the experience of mere associates who are not partners or employees of the consultancy firm or who are not assisting in the project being undertaken for the purpose of evaluating the experience of the consultancy firm is a different matter …'.

41. In the present case, it would appear from the documents before the Court that what was evaluated by Factor A 'Evaluation of the team proposed' was in effect the specific technical team that each of the tenderers proposed to assign to the performance of the contract — and the board analysed its composition and experience and the profile and scientific and technical competence of each member of that team — and that, consequently, the experience of the proposed technical team was, in the present case, an intrinsic characteristic of the tender and not a characteristic of the tenderer.

42. As Nersant explains, the quality of the services provided depended to a large extent on the persons charged with providing those services. In fact, I would point out that here, in the overall score used to determine the most economically advantageous tender, price accounted for only 5% compared with 40% for evaluation of the team and 55% for the qualities and merits of the service proposed (see point 3 of this Opinion). It is clear that quality was a very important criterion in the present case. Consequently, a distinction must be drawn between an abstract analysis of an undertaking's personnel, which may be considered as relating to a characteristic of the tenderer (which would be prohibited when evaluating tenders), and a specific analysis of the experience and skills of the personnel to be assigned to performing the contract in question, which would not be a characteristic of the tenderer, but rather a characteristic of the tender (which, in my opinion, would be perfectly acceptable when evaluating tenders).

43. I even think that this distinction between an abstract and a specific analysis of manpower is not incompatible with the judgments in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) and Commission v Greece (C-199/07, EU:C:2009:693).

44. In fact, already in the judgment in Beentjes (31/87, EU:C:1988:422), the Court did not rule out the possibility that it was appropriate, at the selection stage, to evaluate the tenderer's capacity and, at the award stage, to evaluate the specific competences of the members of the project team. In paragraph 30 of the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40), the Court stated that it was inappropriate to treat as an award criterion 'the evaluation of the tenderers' ability to perform the contract in question' (paragraph 30) (emphasis added). (18)

45. In any event, it can be argued that the factual circumstances giving rise to the judgments in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) and Commission v Greece (C-199/07, EU:C:2009:693) are different from those underlying the present case.

46. In fact, in the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40), the contracting authority had laid down 'experience' as an award criterion, using as a reference the value of projects completed by the tenderer over the previous three years and also 'the firm's manpower and equipment', taking account of the consultancy firm's manpower. (19)

47. Those criteria were very general and related to the tenderer, without reference to the projects actually carried out, unlike the criterion used here, which is much more specific and relates to the technical team to be charged with performing the contract: '(A) Evaluation of the team – 40%. (i) This factor will be arrived at by taking into account the composition of the team, its proven experience and an analysis of the academic and professional background of its members' (paragraph 2.2.1. of the request for a preliminary ruling) (emphasis added).

48. On the contrary, regarding experience as an award criterion, in the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) the contracting authority 'stipulated [that it] should be evaluated by reference to the value of completed projects. Thus, for experience on projects worth up to EUR 500 000, a tenderer would be awarded 0 points; between EUR 500 000 and EUR 1 000 000, 6 points; between EUR 1 000 000 and EUR 1 500 000, 12 points; and so on up to a maximum score of 60 points on projects worth over EUR 12 000 000' (paragraph 14 of that judgment). Only the total value of projects completed was decisive.

49. Regarding the second award criterion, namely the firm's manpower and equipment, the latter 'were to be assessed by reference to the size of the project team. A tenderer would therefore be awarded 2 points for a team of 1 to 5 persons, 4 points for a team of 6 to 10 persons, and so on up to a maximum score of 20 points for a team of more than 45 persons' (paragraph 15 of the judgment in Lianakis and Others, C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40). Once again, only the size (whatever its specific composition or experience) was decisive.

50. Lastly, regarding the third award criterion (the firm's ability to complete the project by the anticipated deadline), it 'should be assessed by reference to the value of the firm's commitments.

Accordingly, a tenderer would be awarded the maximum score of 20 points for work worth less than EUR 15 000; 18 points for work worth between EUR 15 000 and EUR 60 000; 16 points for work worth between EUR 60 000 and EUR 100 000; and so on down to a minimum score of 0 points for work worth more than EUR 1 500 000' (paragraph 16 of that judgment). Once again, no specific qualitative factors were to be taken into account.

51. It is therefore clear that, unlike in the present case, in the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) the evaluation concerned the tenderer (and its general experience) and not the technical team to be assigned to the contract (and its specific experience).

52. Similarly, in the judgment in Commission v Greece (C-199/07, EU:C:2009:693), the award criterion was based on evaluation of the tenderer's general and specific experience, in particular design work on similar projects, and also on its ability to perform the contract by the anticipated deadline.

53. Like Nersant, I consider that, in both cases, the criteria defined concerned tenderers' abstract ability or capacity to perform the contract and not the ability or capacity of the specific technical teams to be assigned to perform it.

54. Thus, it is my understanding that it does not follow from the judgments in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) and Commission v Greece (C-199/07, EU:C:2009:693) that the specific technical team to be assigned to a contract cannot be evaluated as part of the evaluation of tenders, but only that award of the contract cannot be based on a criterion concerned with the tenderer's ability to perform a contract (established on the basis of its capacity defined in abstract terms).

55. Likewise, the evaluation that the contracting authority must make of the team assigned by an economic operator to perform the contract in question, which relates to the provision of services of an intellectual nature, is intended to assess the quality offered by the economic operator of the services to be provided. It therefore relates to a criterion aimed at selecting the tender offering the best value for money.

56. As Hölzl and Friton (20) point out, the permissibility of an award criterion depends on whether it is concerned with evaluating the tenderer's ability to perform the contract in question or whether it is aimed at identifying the most economically advantageous tender. In the latter case, the experience of the team or the personnel assigned to the services that are the subject of the contract in question may in fact be taken into account.

57. The judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) does not preclude such an interpretation. (21) In fact, in that judgment, the Court held that criteria that are 'essentially linked' to or 'relate principally' to evaluation of the tenderers' ability to perform the contract in question must be excluded as award criteria. This therefore makes it possible to use criteria which, although also concerned with assessing the tenderer's ability to perform the contract, are principally aimed at identifying the most economically advantageous tender.

58. It could also be helpful to cite other judgments of the Court and, first of all, the judgment in GAT (C-315/01, EU:C:2003:360), delivered prior to the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40). In that case, an Austrian contracting authority had issued an invitation to tender for the supply of a special motor vehicle (a road sweeper) for the Motorway Authority. The invitation to tender stipulated that 'in order to evaluate the tenders so as to determine which offer was the most economically advantageous, the contracting authority had to take account of the number of references relating to the product offered by the tenderers to other customers', the Court making the important point here that this was 'without considering whether the [customers'] experiences of the products purchased had been good or bad' (paragraph 57).

59. In paragraph 64 of that judgment, the Court held that, although Article 26(1) of Directive 93/36/EEC (22) left it to the contracting authority to choose the criteria on which it intended to base its award of the contract, that choice might relate only to criteria aimed at identifying the offer which was the most economically advantageous. However, 'the fact remains that the submission of a list of the principal deliveries effected in the past three years, stating the sums, dates and recipients, public or private, involved is expressly included amongst the references or evidence which, under Article 23(1)(a) of Directive 93/36, may be required to establish the suppliers' technical capacity' (paragraph 65).

60. Furthermore, 'a simple list of references, such as that called for in the invitation to tender at issue in the main proceedings, which contains only the names and number of the supplier's previous customers without other details relating to the deliveries effected to those customers cannot provide any information to identify the offer which is the most economically advantageous within the meaning of Article 26(1)(b) of Directive 93/36, and cannot therefore in any event constitute an award criterion within the meaning of that provision' (paragraph 66).

61. Consequently, the Court concluded that 'Directive 93/36 precludes the contracting authority, in a procedure to award a public supply contract, from taking account of the number of references relating to the products offered by the tenderers to other customers not as a criterion for establishing their suitability for carrying out the contract but as a criterion for awarding the contract' (paragraph 67).

62. In my opinion, it follows from the above that the Court did not in principle rule out the use of lists of references as an award criterion, but only in so far as they provide an indication regarding quality (for example indicating whether the customers' experiences with the products were good or bad (see paragraph 57 of that judgment)), in other words, an indication making it possible to identify the most economically advantageous offer. (23)

63. Furthermore, in its judgment in Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith (C-324/93, EU:C:1995:84), the Court did not require the selection criteria and the award criteria to be mutually exclusive and allowed a criterion focussed on the tenderer (namely its ability to guarantee reliability and continuity of supplies) to be taken into account in the award process.

64. Lastly, it is also worth noting that, although reliability is specifically mentioned in the public procurement directives as a selection criterion, in the judgment in EVN and Wienstrom (C-448/01, EU:C:2003:651, paragraph 70) the Court notes that 'reliability of supplies can, in principle, number amongst the award criteria used to determine the most economically advantageous tender'.

65. I would also mention the case-law of the General Court of the European Union in cases relating to public contracts awarded by EU institutions, which is of interest here because those contracts were awarded on the basis of provisions worded in exactly the same way as those of Directive 2004/18 which are applicable to the present case.

66. The judgment in Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission (T-589/08, EU:T:2011:73) (examined after the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40); the appeal against the judgment of the General Court was dismissed by the Court in the order in Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission (C-235/11 P, EU:C:2011:791)) was concerned with the number of days proposed for the performance of the works in connection with an invitation to tender. The General Court noted that '[i]n its report, the evaluation committee observed that "[t]he suggested number of days to execute the work of the tasks seem[ed] unrealistically low" and that "this raise[d] serious doubts as to whether the objectives [could] be delivered appropriately"' (paragraph 40).

67. In that regard, the General Court recalled that 'in its tender, the applicant had suggested 45 person-days for the management of the project, while the estimate in the tender specifications was 60 person-days. As the evaluation committee noted in its report, the number of person-days suggested by the applicant is therefore 25% lower than the indicative estimate provided in the invitation to tender at issue. The Court considers, and the applicant admitted at the hearing, that such a discrepancy requires a convincing explanation' (paragraph 41). In the General Court's view, the indication of the number of person-days provided for was 'relevant, principally in order to assess the reliability of the applicant's offer' (paragraph 42).

68. What is of interest to us here is that the General Court rightly noted in paragraph 43 that 'the alleged experience of the applicant's experts is also unable to explain that discrepancy. In that regard however, the Court does not share the Commission's view that the applicant's experience is irrelevant for the assessment of the award criteria. Although it is true, in general, that that factor is taken into account in order to assess whether the bid is able to satisfy the selection criteria and not in the assessment of the award criteria, it must be observed that the applicant does not rely on its experience as an award criterion in itself, but only in order to justify the reduced number of person-days provided for. In that context, more experience would, in principle, be able to explain such a difference between their estimates' (emphasis added).

69. As the General Court points out (paragraph 44), in the present case, the applicant had not established that its team had more experience. In those circumstances, the Commission was entitled to take the view that the experience relied on did not enable the team's capacity to perform the required services in 45 days to be ascertained (paragraph 45). (24)

70. In another judgment subsequent to the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40), namely the judgment in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EFSA (T-457/07, EU:T:2012:671), in connection with a dispute concerning the award of public contracts by a European Union body and in relation to an invitation to tender for the supply of services of a highly technical nature on the basis of a framework contract, the General Court rightly held that it could not be concluded either from the applicable legislation or from the case-law in Beentjes (31/87, EU:C:1988:422) and Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) that the use of CVs for evaluation purposes, both at the selection stage and at the award stage, should be ruled out in principle (see paragraph 80 et seq.).

71. In the opinion of the General Court, the use of those documents during the award stage could be justified if it served to identify the most economically advantageous tender and not the tenderers' ability to perform the contract (paragraphs 81 and 82).

72. The General Court particularly highlights the fact the use of a criterion consisting in evaluating the training strategy of a team proposed for the performance of a contract relating to complex services may serve to identify the tender offering the best value for money in so far as it clearly concerns services for which the quality of the tender and that of the team proposed are indisputably linked (paragraph 82).

73. In the judgment in AWWW v Eurofound (T-211/07, EU:T:2008:240, paragraphs 58 to 63), which is also subsequent to the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40), the General Court again rightly took the view that it was lawful to take account of previous experience as an award criterion in order evaluate the quality of the services to be provided, inasmuch as it held that CVs from the selection procedure could be used and experience could be taken into account in evaluating the quality of the tenderer's ability to perform the specific areas of work covered by the contract. In the same vein, I would once again refer to the judgment in Evropaïki Dynamiki v EMCDDA (T-63/06, EU:T:2010:368).

74. Even before the judgment in Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40), in the judgment in Renco v Council (T-4/01, EU:T:2003:37), the General Court had already accepted that an undertaking's experience could be used as an award criterion. (25)

C – The legal literature

75. A large number of articles in the legal literature also support the view that evaluation of the technical team to be assigned to performing a contract may constitute an aspect of the tender and not a characteristic of the tenderer and that, therefore, that evaluation may be a factor to be taken into account when choosing the most economically advantageous tender. (26)

76. For example, Lee (27) has rightly pointed out that '[e]valuating an entity's ability to perform the contract on the one hand and comparing the strengths of different teams proposed by tenderers are not the same thing. For example, an awarding authority seeking management consultancy services is likely to find that the global consultancy firms have the capacity and manpower to carry out almost any given management consultancy project. However, it is self-evident that the success of the project will depend not on the capacity of the firm but on the specific resources made available by that firm for the project'.

77. Next, as Rubach-Larsen (28) has rightly pointed out, 'the ECJ has opened up for the lawful choice of bidder-related criteria as award criteria, provided that these are not essentially linked to the selection of qualified tenderers, but instead to the evaluation of the offers, and not principally related to the tenderer's experience, qualifications or means, but to the quality of the works, supplies or services they have offered' (emphasis added).

78. As Arrowsmith (29) has also rightly pointed out, 'Lianakis does not preclude considering either the abilities of the tenderer or the qualities of the individuals or team that will be working on the contract, to the extent that these are actually relevant to the quality of the work that will be done under the contract i.e. to determining which offer is the most economically advantageous. In this respect, it can be argued that on the facts of Lianakis the experience and manpower of the tenderer was not actually used to assess the quality of the services but in an arbitrary fashion that had no relevance to that question — tenderers were given higher scores for different types and extent of experience without actually considering the relevance of this to the services to be performed (which were actually of relatively low value)' (emphasis added).

79. Lastly, Treumer (30) pertinently cites a decision by the Danish Complaints Board for Public Procurement (31) where '[t]he Board quoted a passage from [an] earlier ruling to the effect that according to the EC public procurement rules it is not excluded that an element can be considered both in the selection and in the award stage. However, according to the Board the condition is that the element according to its content is suited to function as the basis for selection but also — owing to the character of the supply in question — is suited to assess the economically most advantageous tender. The Board found that this condition was fulfilled in the concrete case, which concerned a service where an experienced service provider would be of particular value. The Board emphasised in this context that the reliability of supply was of special importance for the task in question, namely out of consideration for maritime safety. The Board therefore found it justified to consider the extent of the experience in the award phase while it at the same time stressed that this normally is to be considered as a selection criterion' (emphasis added).

D – Conclusion

80. Although the distinction between the selection stage and the award stage precludes the use of an economic operator's previous general experience as an award criterion, it is nonetheless true that the specific experience of the particular technical team proposed by that operator may for certain contracts be taken into account for the purpose of evaluating the tender at the award stage.

81. As the Polish Government has rightly pointed out, Article 53 of Directive 2004/18 expressly refers to the quality of the goods or services to be supplied as one of the criteria which the contracting authority may apply. In that regard, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 refers to the tender most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority and not the most advantageous tender based on abstract and objective criteria. In order to select the most economically advantageous tender, the contracting authority must therefore have the option of deciding on the factors that need to be taken into account which, if fulfilled, will enable it to choose the most advantageous tender in the light of its specific needs.

82. I also agree with the Portuguese Government where it emphasises that the option or even the necessity of assessing the technical value and the quality of the proposal in itself in order to award contracts for training and consultancy services of an intellectual nature, as in the present case, must be given concrete expression in the form of objective elements linked to the content of the tender. Moreover, one of those essential elements is precisely an indication of the specific human resources that the tenderers will assign to performance of the contract, such indication obviously constituting a quality or a characteristic not of the tenderers but of the tender itself.

83. It seems to me that that interpretation best conforms to the letter and the spirit of the provisions at issue and to the scheme of Directive 2004/18 (which, we should not forget, is intended to accord greater importance to qualitative criteria) (32) in the case of contracts for the provision of training and consultancy services of an intellectual nature.

84. In the light of Directive 2004/18, the criterion for the award of a public contract may therefore include an evaluation of the technical teams objectively and specifically proposed by the tenderers for the performance of a contract for the supply of services of an intellectual nature, such as training and consultancy services.

85. Lastly, as the Polish Government has rightly pointed out, it would appear from the documents before the Court that, in the present case, the contracting authority met the other requirements laid down by Directive 2004/18 concerning the need to respect the principles of transparency and non-discrimination in the public procurement procedure in question.

86. The answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling should therefore be that, with regard to procurement contracts for the provision of services of an intellectual nature, training and consultancy, under certain circumstances Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the contracting authorities from using, among the factors making up the criterion for awarding a public contract, a factor which enables evaluation of the teams specifically put forward by the tenderers for the performance of the contract, taking into consideration the composition of the teams, their proven experience and an analysis of their academic and other professional qualifications. However, the exercise of that option will be compatible with the objectives of Directive 2004/18 only where the characteristics and specific qualities of the members of the team are a decisive factor in determining the economic value of the tender submitted for evaluation to the contracting authority.

E – Post scriptum: the new Directive 2014/24

87. Even though the new Directive 2014/24 is not applicable to the present case ratione temporis, (33) I will mention it here for the sake of completeness.

88. It is apparent from Article 67(2)(b) of Directive 2014/24 that the EU legislature considered it necessary to clarify the rules discussed in this Opinion. According to that provision, the contract award criteria that the contracting authority may take into account in order to determine the most economically advantageous tender include: ‘organisation, qualification and experience of staff assigned to performing the contract, where the quality of the staff assigned can have a significant impact on the level of performance of the contract’.

89. That provision is clarified by recital 94 in the preamble to that directive, which is worded as follows:

‘Wherever the quality of the staff employed is relevant to the level of performance of the contract, contracting authorities should also be allowed to use as an award criterion the organisation, qualification and experience of the staff assigned to performing the contract in question, as this can affect the quality of contract performance and, as a result, the economic value of the tender. This might be the case, for example, in contracts for intellectual services such as consultancy or architectural services. Contracting authorities which make use of this possibility should ensure, by appropriate contractual means, that the staff assigned to contract performance effectively fulfil the specified quality standards and that such staff can only be replaced with the consent of the contracting authority which verifies that the replacement staff affords an equivalent level of quality’.

90. The intention to clarify the rules at issue in this case was already present in the Proposal for a directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement (COM(2011) 896 final). In fact, the Explanatory Memorandum states that ‘… [t]he distinction between selection of tenderers and award of the contract which is often a source of errors and misunderstandings has been made more flexible, allowing it for contracting authorities to decide on the most practical sequencing by examining award criteria before selection criteria and to take into account the organisation and quality of the staff assigned to performing the contract as an award criterion’.

III – Conclusion

91. Consequently, I propose that the Court answer the question referred by the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo for a preliminary ruling as follows:

With regard to procurement contracts for the provision of services of an intellectual nature, training and consultancy, under certain circumstances Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts does not preclude the contracting authorities from using, among the factors making up the criterion for awarding a public contract, a factor which enables evaluation of the teams specifically put forward by the tenderers for the performance of the contract, taking into consideration the composition of the teams, their proven experience and an analysis of their academic and other professional qualifications. However, the exercise of that option will be compatible with the objectives of Directive 2004/18 only where the characteristics and specific qualities of the members of the team are a decisive factor in determining the economic value of the tender submitted for evaluation to the contracting authority.

11 – In that context, see also the judgment in Spain v Commission (C-641/13 P, EU:C:2014:2264).

12 – In that context, some authors have, however, emphasised that, in other articles, the two directives differ somewhat regarding this matter. See, for example, M. Burgi and B. Brandmeier, 'Quality as an interacting award criterion under current and future EU law', European Procurement & Public Private Partnership Law Review, 2014, vol. 9, No 1, p. 23: 'Taking a close look at the background of these judgments [Beentjes (31/87, EU:C:1988:422), Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) and Commission v Greece (C-199/07, EU:C:2009:693)], … the wording of the previous provisions in Directive 92/50/EC, on which the court based its decision, provided for a much stricter differentiation between the selection and the award stage. … Article 20 stated that selection criteria had to be evaluated before entering the award phase. Apart from the fact that this chronological order never was interpreted in a strict way …, the legal base for such an assumption was replaced. A provision according to Article 20 of Directive 92/50 no longer exists under current EU law.'

---

13 – M. Burgi and B. Brandmeier, op. cit., in the same article emphasise that 'among the non-exhaustive list of possible award criteria in Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC, the aspect of "delivery date and delivery period or period of completion" was introduced as concreti[s]ation of quality in this regard. … Apart from this, it is striking that the court gave no further justification, in any of these rulings, for the necessity of such a strict differentiation, nor did it take into account the practical need of public entities to make certain tenderer-related aspects part of their awarding decision.'

---

14 – Which covers cases where 'the award is made to the tender most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority', whilst paragraph (1)(b) covers cases where the contracting authorities award the contract on the basis of 'the lowest price only'.

---

15 – See, to that effect, judgments in Concordia Bus Finland (C-513/99, EU:C:2002:495, paragraph 59) and Lianakis and Others (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, paragraph 29).

---

16 – See P. Lee, 'Implications of the Lianakis decision', Public Procurement Law Review, 2010, p. 52: 'The recitals in the old directives were silent regarding award criteria. This change clarifies that where criteria are relevant to assess the "performance offered" by each tenderer, it is an appropriate and valid award criteria. This provision changes the emphasis that might have existed in the old directives, and clarifies that criteria, where they assess the "level of performance", must be valid criteria regardless of whether it was also a selection criterion. How else is the anticipated level of performance in a services contract to be evaluated? Does not the experience of the specific personnel offered become a necessary evaluation criterion? Perhaps the anticipated level of performance and the mere ability to perform are different. A League One soccer player has the ability to "perform" in a soccer match, but the anticipated level of performance would be significantly different from that of a premiership player' (emphasis added).

---

18 – For the same interpretation, see inter alia P. Lee, op. cit. As Lee rightly points out: (i) 'the facts of the case [in Lianakis and Others] go some way to undermine the contention that the municipality genuinely examined the project team rather than the firm's size'; (ii) 'there is nothing explicit or implicit in the wording of the directives that leads to the conclusion that the experience of the project team cannot be, or should not be, evaluated at the award stage', and (iii) 'more unfortunately neither in Beentjes nor in Lianakis [and Others] is there any rationale offered to explain the harm that could arise if "experience" were considered at both stages, in particular where at selection "experience" is of the entity and at award is of the project team'.

19 – 'The contract notice referred to the award criteria in order of priority: (1) the proven experience of the expert on projects carried out over the last three years; (2) the firm's manpower and equipment; and (3) the ability to complete the project by the anticipated deadline, together with the firm's commitments and its professional potential' (paragraph 10 of that judgment) (emphasis added).

21 – See M. Orthmann, 'The experience of the bidder as award criterion in EU public procurement law', Humboldt Forum Recht, 2014, No 1, p. 4. He points out that 'throughout the EU, contracting authorities already seem to have adopted a flexible interpretation of the rule and to follow a pragmatic approach in dealing with the criterion “experience” … In general, contracting authorities indeed encounter the problem of experience as an award criterion mostly in cases concerning services of a more complex nature … National courts seem to have adopted a soft interpretation of the rule … allowing the contracting authorities to take into account experience where it is linked to the subject-matter of the contract … and has not been established as a selection criterion (Oberlandesgericht München, decision of February 10, 2011, File No Verg 24/10; Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf, decision of May 5, 2008, File No Verg 5/08; Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf, decision of April 28, File No Verg 1/08)’.

23 – See also point 51 of the Opinion of Advocate General Geelhoed in GAT (C-315/01, EU:C:2002:573): ‘The list of references here in question may say something about the tenderer’s experience and technical expertise, but a list of this kind is not suitable for determining the most advantageous offer. Such a list of references does not, after all, give any indication at all of the services provided, the running costs or other criteria capable of determining which tender will ultimately prove to be economically the most advantageous for the contracting authority’.

---

24 – See Petersen, Refining the rules on the distinction between selection and award criteria — Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission (T-589/08), Public Procurement Law Review, 2011, p. NA246: ‘The present ruling … interprets [the] case law [of the Court] in a flexible way, as it clearly approved the consideration of the experience and qualifications of the proposed team members when evaluating the relative advantages of the proposed project management within the third award criterion. For the purpose of that evaluation it expressly applied the test whether the applicant’s tender had shown the ability of its proposed team to properly deliver the objectives of the contract … So it seems that the General Court considers the experience and qualifications of the team members offered to perform the specific contract to be admissible considerations for the award decision. The experience and qualifications of the team offered in the tender is, according to the General Court, relevant to establish the tenderer’s ability to properly deliver the contract, which clearly is a quality criterion relevant to identifying the most economically advantageous tender’.

Agreed in conference at the Administrative Litigation Section of the Supreme Administrative Court:

I – Report

1. A....., SA (A.....), duly identified in the case file, brought the present pre-contractual litigation action before the Administrative and Fiscal Court of Leiria (TAF/Leiria) against B..... – Business Association of the Region of ..... (B.....) and the counter-interested parties C....., Lda; D....., Lda; E....., Lda; F....., Lda; G....., SA; H....., Lda; I....., Lda; J....., SA; L....., SA; M....., Lda; and N....., Lda, also identified in the case file.

In summary, it requests the following (pages 19-20):

(i) The annulment of the award order of the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the defendant entity;

(ii) An order that the defendant entity, through the Jury of the procedure, approve a new evaluation report of the tenders, applying the award criterion purged of the illegal factor, ordering A.'s tender first;

(iii) An order that the defendant entity, through the Chairman of the Executive Committee, issue a new award act in its favour;

(iv) or, if this is not understood, the condemnation of the respondent entity in the approval of a new procedure programme, setting an award criterion in accordance with article 75 of the PPC, and in the practice of all subsequent acts and diligences of the public tender.

During the course of the action, the Plaintiff extended the request to challenge the contract, which had been entered into in the meantime, a request that was granted by the order of fl. 101.

2. The TAF/Leiria, by judgment of 13.09.12 (fls 168-80), complemented by a decision of 12.10.12 (fls 289-96), dismissed the action in its entirety.

3. A. A....., dissatisfied, appealed to the TCAS (fls 326 et seq.), which, by judgment of 07.02.13 (fls 240-47), declared the contract null and void, but rejected the request for annulment of the award order. This is the content of the decision:

"a) To grant the judicial appeal;
b) To declare null and void the judgment appealed for failure to pronounce and, in place of the appealed court, c) To declare null and void the contract entered into for breach of the provisions of article 96/1/b) of the PPC;
d) reject the request for annulment of the award order issued on 14/2/2012, by the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the respondent entity, for not having violated the provisions of article 75/1 of the PPC".

4. Dissatisfied, this time with the judgment of the TCAS, A. A....., appealed to this Supreme Court, invoking for this purpose paragraph 1 of article 150 of the Code of Procedure in the Administrative Courts (CPTA).

4.1. The appellant presented its arguments, concluding, nthe essential, as follows (fls 340 et seq.):

"1. The judgment under appeal makes a manifest error in the assessment of the issue underlying the case which, by its evidence, justifies the intervention of the STA, since it is essential to ensure a better application of the law.

2. In addition, the same lower court, in the immediately preceding session, on 24-01-2013, handed down two judgments, in cases no. 09423/12 and no. 09446/12, in which the parties are the same, focusing precisely on the same issue – the conformity of the same 'Proposed Team' factor of the award criterion with article 75, paragraph 1 of the PPC – and in both of them it issued a decision diametrically opposed to the one appealed herein.

3. In those cases, the same South Central Administrative Court not only decided that that factor was illegal, but also considered that such illegality was easy and evident to be verified.

4. This circumstance, capable of shaking the confidence of the citizens who are the recipients of the decisions of the judicial system, is also demonstrative of the imperative of the STA's intervention in order to harmonize the case law so shockingly divergent from the TCA Sul, and as such the conditions provided for in article 150 of the CPTA for the admission of the appeal are met.

5. Contrary to what was decided in the judgment under appeal, the administrative act of award carried out by the respondent entity on 14-2-2012 suffers from serious illegality.

6. Firstly, by determining the award according to the order of the tenders contained in the final report, the contested act proceeds to the material application of the rule of the Tender Programme that contained the award criterion – art. 5.

7. This rule by providing, in factor A), the valuation of the proposed team, proceeding to the assessment of the experience and curricula of the professionals to be assigned to the execution of the contract, is not in accordance with article 75, paragraph 1 of the PPC.

8. The distinction introduced by the judgment under appeal between the curriculum vitae and experience of the competing undertaking and the curriculum vitae and experience of the technicians to be assigned by the competing undertaking (as if the former concerned the capacity of the tenderer and the latter the performance of the contract) is totally artificial and has no substantive basis in law.

9. Since it is obvious that the experience and evaluation of the team concerns who will execute the contract and not any specific aspect of its execution.

10. Moreover, a distinction is as absurd as it would be, from the outset, inapplicable in the event that a natural person presents itself as a competitor, which is perfectly permissible in the light of the PPC and Community law.

11. On the other hand, as the legislator expressly recognises in article 165(1)(a) and (b) of the PPC, applicable to procedures restricted by prior qualification, that the experience and profile of the staff who will be assigned to the execution of the contract are requirements of a subjective nature, which relate to the technical capacity of the tenderers and not to specific aspects of the performance of the contract to be concluded thatand the Tender Specifications has been submitted to the competition.

12. In other words, they concern the tenderers and not the tender, so they are clearly prohibited in the context of the public tender, by the aforementioned article 75, paragraph 1 of the PPC.

13. By considering the opposite, judging Factor A) of the award criterion to be in accordance with the law, the judgment under appeal blatantly violates this legal precept (Article 75(1) of the PPC), as it ignores the effects of the aforementioned Article 165(1)(a). a) and b) of the same code, which we mentioned above.

14. The action must therefore be upheld and the contested act of award annulled.

15. Consequently, the decision on the request to challenge the contract should also be partially amended, which should be issued again taking into account the derived invalidity resulting from the illegality of the award, by virtue of the provisions of article 283 and not only the invalidity already decreed by the lower court.

16. On the other hand, since the knowledge of the condemnatory request brought in the IP was considered prejudiced by the decision given by the judgment under appeal to the challenge request, it should now be judged, and considered valid, by this Court of Review, under the powers conferred on it by article 150, paragraph 3 of the CPTA and by article 726 of the CPC ex vi of article 140 of the CPTA, and the content of pages 17 to 20 and of defences 8 to 10 of the Allegations presented in the first instance under the terms of article 91 paragraph 4 of the CPTA is hereby reproduced".

It ends by arguing for the granting of the present appeal and the revocation of the judgment under appeal, and, consequently, the action must be upheld in its entirety.

5. Duly notified, R.B..... came to produce counter-allegations, concluding, in essence, and with regard to the merits of the case, as follows (fls 375 et seq.):

"1. The ground invoked by the Appellant to support the invalidity of the award act is related to the alleged illegality of one of the factors of the award criterion in the light of article 75(1) of the PPC, and what is at issue in this appeal is whether it is unlawful to define a factor in the award criterion of the most economically advantageous tender that evaluates the team to be allocated to the execution of the contract.

2. The purpose of the factor in question was to evaluate the resources that the tenderers undertook to allocate to the execution of the contract (technical team to be assigned to the contract) and not to assess the technical capacity or abstract experience of the tenderers.

3. The technical team proposed for the execution of the contract that is the subject of the tender is not a characteristic, situation or quality of the tenderer.

4. If only the evaluation of the resources actually committed to the execution of the contract (the technical team that will provide the services) is at stake, it must be understood that what is being evaluated is an aspect of the execution of the contract to be concluded (aspect of the proposal) and not a situationquality, or characteristic of the competitor.

5. In this sense, a Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement (which will repeal and replace Directive 2004/18/EC) is under discussion, which dispels any doubts that could arise about the admissibility of the assessment of the technical team proposed for the execution of the contract in the evaluation of tenders, expressly admitting it.

6. Article 66(2) of the Proposal for a Directive, as amended by the Council to the text initially submitted by the Commission, entitled "Award Criteria", provides that: "In addition to price or costs, these criteria shall include other criteria linked to the subject matter of the public contract in question, namely quality, namely technical value, aesthetic and functional characteristics, accessibility, design for all users, environmental characteristics and innovative character, after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery date and delivery or execution time. Where the quality of the professionals assigned to the contract is likely to have a significant impact on the level of performance of the contract, the organisation, qualifications and experience of the staff assigned to the performance of the contract in question may be taken into consideration' (...).

7. Since the award criterion is lawful, there is no original illegality in the procedure in question, and consequently there is no defect in the act of award or in the contract concluded.

8. Thus, there is no error of judgment committed by the lower court, in having understood, in the judgment under appeal, that the act of award was not unlawful in the light of the award criterion set".

It ends by arguing for the dismissal of the appeal, and the judgment handed down by the lower court should be maintained, with the other legal consequences.

6. By the judgment of the preliminary panel of this Supreme Court (Article 150(5) of the CPTA), dated 23.05.13, the appeal on a point of law was admitted (pages 389 et seq.). There it was considered that, "One of the problems under discussion is that which concerns the legality of factor A) of the award criterion contained in the tender programme (article 5) in relation to the provisions of article 75(1) of the PPC, as it proceeds to the valuation of the team proposed to carry out the work, considering its constitution, the proven experience of its elements and also the curriculum analysis.

The appellant considers the interpretation made by the judgment under appeal, which held it to be lawful, to be manifestly erroneous.
Regardless of the goodness of that judgment, naturally countered by the defendant's assessment, the truth is, as it also maintains, the assessment of that same problem has raised controversy. An immediate illustration of this controversy is the dissenting opinion drawn up by one of the deputies of the judgment under appeal, referring to the position taken in the case of the same Court no. 9423, on 24.1.2013. And as the appellant also indicates, in that same and in the same Court another judgment was issued, on the same problem, in case 09446/12.
If the issue was of mere divergence, but without substantive importance, it was not relevant for the admission of the journal. However, it conflicts with the important sector of public procurement; and the difficulties it has raised go beyond purely internal differences. In fact, according to the defendant's counter-claims, the matter is to be 'clarified at the level of Community law'. Naturally, it can be clarified, as the defendant argues, in the sense of what was decided in the present case. But this very need for clarification also indicates the fundamental importance of the issue".

7. The Honorable Magistrate of the Public Prosecution Service attached to this Supreme Court, notified under the terms and for the purposes of Articles 146(2) and 147(2), both of the CPTA, did not issue any opinion.

8. By virtue of the request for a preliminary ruling made to the CJEU, a reference decided by judgment of 24.10.13, the suspension of the present proceedings was ordered until the decision on that request (p. 433), which came to be done by means of the judgment of that Court, of 26.03.14, handed down in case no. C-601/13 (cf. p. 552 et seq.).

9. Without visas, given the provisions of Article 36(1)(b) and (2) of the CPTA, the case files come to the conference to decide.

II – Grounds

1. In fact:

1.1. In the judgment under appeal, the following facts were proven:

(i) By order of 21.11.11, the Chairman of the Executive Committee of B..... – Business Association of the Region of ..... decided to open a 'Public tender for the acquisition of training and consultancy services for the execution of the MOVE SME project, Area of quality, environment, safety and health at work, food safety Médio Tejo – PME'.

(ii) The notice of the above-mentioned public tender was published in part L of the Diário da República, 2nd Series, no. 226, of 24.11.11.

(iii) Article 5 of the Tender Programme establishes, in addition, that "The award criterion shall be that of the most economically advantageous tender.
Factors:

A) Team evaluation – 40%
i) This factor will be obtained taking into account the team composition, proven experience and curriculum analysis.
B) Quality and merit of the proposed service – 55%
i) Overall assessment of the structure including the work programme – 0 to 20%
ii) Description of the techniques to be used and the methodologies of action – 0 to 15%
iii) Description of the methods of verification and control of the quality of the work, within the scope of the various areas of intervention – 0 to 20%
C) Overall price – 5%

The proposal with the highest score will be considered more valuable».

(iv) On 27.12.11, the Jury of the procedure prepared the preliminary report, in which, in addition, it is indicated that C..... She graduated 1st in the public competition in question.

(v) On 03.01.12, the Plaintiff exercised the right to a prior hearing arguing for the illegality of the award criterion.

(vi) On 04.01.12, the Jury of the procedure prepared the final report, in which there is nothing about the prior hearing held by the Plaintiff.

(vii) On 14.02.12, an addendum to the above-mentioned final report was prepared with the purpose of responding to the prior hearing held by the appellant, in which the following is stated:

"This Jury understands that this competitor is not right.
It is true that Article 75(1) of the PPC clearly distinguishes the activity of qualifying tenderers from the activity of evaluating tenders, preventing any aspect relating to the tenderer (situation, quality, characteristics) from being taken into account in the evaluation of the tender.

The qualification criteria (or, in accordance with Directive 2004/28/EC, qualitative selection criteria) relate to the economic and financial capacity and the technical capacity of the tenderers. The scope of these criteria is essentially to ensure to the contracting authority that the undertaking or group of undertakings with which it is to contract has the necessary means (financial and technical) to ensure the performance of the contract – or, at least, that someone has undertaken to make those resources available to that undertaking or group. It is, strictly speaking, a matter of the competitor's capacity (which can only be considered in procedures where there is a qualification phase, which does not happen in a public tender). The criteria of technical and financial capacity cannot be used as factors for the evaluation of proposals – this is what article 75(1) of the PPC determines.
The award criteria, on the other hand, concern the intrinsic characteristics of the tender, regardless of the ability of the person who submitted them.
However, the specific way in which the factor A) evaluation of the proposed team – 40% – is configured determines its admissibility in the light of the PPC, Directive 2004/18/EC and the understanding adopted by Jurisprudence and Doctrine.
Indeed, what is relevant for the purposes of evaluating the tender in this procedure is not the technical capacity or experience of the tenderer. It is not intended to know whether or not the competitor has the necessary means and experience to the full compliance with the services it proposes to provide. What is intended, through the factor in question, is to know which of the competitors offers the best services in particular – this is, in fact, the reason for the existence of a tender: to choose the best proposal among those who are capable.
What is evaluated in this factor is the specific technical team that the competitor proposes to allocate to the work to be provided. The experience of the proposed technical team is, in the present case, an intrinsic characteristic of the tender and not a characteristic of the tenderer. In these terms, competitor A is not right..... in its pronouncement at a preliminary hearing".

(viii) On 14.02.12, the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Respondent Entity, approving the final report of the Jury, awarded the contract to the interested party C.....

(ix) On 19.03.12, it was signed between the Respondent Entity and C..... the service contract no. 0058/FP, relating to the public tender indicated in (i).

(x) The draft of the contract for the provision of services referred to in the case file was approved by order of the Chairman of the Executive Council of B....., dated 14.02.12.

2. By law:

2.1. Como decorre das conclusões das alegações da recorrente A……, é objecto do presente recurso de revista excepcional o alegado erro de julgamento que a mesma imputa ao acórdão recorrido, na parte em que não considerou ilegais o factor e subfactores enunciados na alínea A) do artigo 5.º do Programa do Concurso, aí tidos como elementos densificadores do critério de adjudicação da proposta economicamente mais vantajosa.

2.2. A questão jurídica central que importa apreciar e decidir é, pois, a de saber se no concurso público em causa, destinado à aquisição de serviços de formação e consultoria, os factor e subfactores da alínea A) do artigo 5.º do Programa do Concurso, relacionados com a "Avaliação da equipa", são, ou não, admissíveis enquanto 'critérios de adjudicação'.

2.3. A resolução desta questão prende-se, antes de mais, e em grande medida, com a correcta interpretação do artigo 75.º do Código dos Contratos Públicos (CCP - DL n.º 18/2008, de 29.01), cuja redacção não sofreu até ao momento alterações. Importa, por isso, ter em atenção o disposto neste preceito.

Artigo 75.º (Factores e subfactores)

"1 – The factors and any sub-factors that make up the criterion for awarding the most economically advantageous tender must cover all, and only, the aspects of the performance of the contract to be concluded that are subject to competition by the tender specifications, and may not relate, directly or indirectly, to situations, qualities, characteristics or other factual elements relating to the tenderers.
2 – Only the factors and sub-factors located at the most elementary level of the densification of the award criterion, called elementary factors or sub-factors, may be adopted for the evaluation of the tenders.
3 – The provisions of the final part of paragraph 1 shall not apply in the case of a procedure for the formation of a contract whose object does not cover services typical of public works contracts, public works concessions, public service concessions, lease or acquisition of movable property or the acquisition of services.
4 – Where, by virtue of the provisions of the preceding paragraph, factors and any sub-factors that densify the award criterion refer to facts relating to the tenderers, the rules of this Code relating to the aspects of the performance of the contract to be concluded submitted to competition by the tender specifications shall apply to them, mutatis mutandis".

2.4. The TCAS, in this part, did not depart from the court of first instance (see page 179), considered that the award factor provided for in Article 5(A) of the Tender Programme does not offend the provisions contained in Article 75 of the PPC, as it interprets them (see pages 295v and 296).

2.4.1. Appellant A..... disagrees with this understanding, arguing, and this is a fundamental aspect of its argumentation, that in the TCAS there is a jurisprudential orientation different from that at issue in the context of the present case, which interprets domestic law in a divergent way, deciding that the criterion in question is inadmissible, insofar as it does not comply with Article 75(1) of the PPC (examples of this other orientation are the judgments of 06.10.11, of 24.01.12, and of 24.01.13, cases no. 07868/11, 09423/12 and 09446/12, respectively), this approach being the one that, in his opinion, is in line with the case-law of the CJEU (Lianakis judgment, proc. 532/06), and is the only one compatible with the rules of European law.
Such a line of case-law is based on the assumption that Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18/EC provides that: (i) the verification of the suitability of tenderers and the award of tenders are separate operations governed by different rules; (ii) the verification of the suitability of tenderers is carried out by the contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic, financial and technical standing (so-called "selection criteria") referred to in Articles 45 to 48 of that Directive; (iii) on the other hand, the award is based on the criteria listed in Article 53 of the same Directive, whereas, by virtue of the separation between the operations of checking the suitability of tenderers and the award, the choice cannot be guided by criteria which are not intended to identify the tenderer's suitability.It is economically more advantageous, but is essentially linked to the assessment of the tenderers' ability to perform the contract in question.
Consequently, Directive 2004/18/EC does not allow the contracting authority to establish, as "award criteria", elements such as those contained in Article 5(A) of the Tender Programme – i.e. the composition of the team, proven experience and curriculum analysis – since they are criteria that refer to the suitability of the tenderers, they cannot be considered as "award criteria" within the meaning of Article 53(1) of the above-mentioned Directive.

2.4.2. In turn, the defendant considers, in essence, that: (i) factor A) of the award criteria of article 5 of the Tender Programme "translates into the evaluation of the proposed technical team, in which the experience, profile and technical-scientific competence of the professionals to be effectively allocated by each of the tenderers to the execution of the contract are valued"; (ii) "it is not, therefore, a matter of assessing the experience, profile or technical competence of the competing company, but rather that of the professionals that it undertakes to assign to the execution of the contract. Thus, it is emphasized that the evaluation of the teams to be assigned to the execution of the contract is not to be confused with the evaluation of the competitors"; (iii) therefore, they constitute criteria that, under European law, are admissible as 'award criteria.

2.5. As already mentioned, by judgment of 24.10.13 it was decided to suspend the proceedings and refer the question of the alleged illegality of the award factors and sub-factors provided for in Article 5(A) of the Tender Programme to the CJEU (paragraphs 432 et seq.). Let us see in what terms:

"2.2.4. In this context, since the case-law of the second instance is divided as to the legality of the criteria that, in the present case, were adopted as "award criteria" in Article 5(A) of the Tender Programme, it is up to this Supreme Court to assess the issue, which is decisive for the decision of the present special administrative action, and in the name of the principle of the primacy of European Union Law, it is responsible for ensuring that the solution which it adopts is based on an interpretation of national law which is consistent with Directive 2004/18/EC. Thus, because, in relation to the case-law of the Lianakis judgment and the other judgments cited therein, a new element is invoked – the alleged content of Commission Proposal 2011/0438, on this point – and because, under Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 EC, the 'quality of the» is one of the award criteria and it is not unequivocal that, in a contract for the provision of consultancy training services, the specific constitution of the team, the experience and the curricula of those who will actually execute the contract are factors completely disconnected from the criterion of the «quality» of the tender, we understand, under Article 267 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, to refer to the Court of Justice of the European Union, thePreliminary ruling, the assessment of the following question:

'For the procurement of the provision of intellectual services, training and consultancy, it is compatible with Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March, as amended, to establish, among the factors which make up the criterion for the award of tenders in a public contract, A factor that evaluates the teams specifically proposed by the tenderers for the execution of the contract, taking into account their respective constitutions, proven experience and curriculum analysis?»"

To this question the CJEU (Fifth Chamber) replied, in its judgment of 26.03.15, proc. No C-601/13, as follows (p. 560):

"For the conclusion of a contract for the provision of intellectual, training and consultancy services, Article 53(1) (a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, of public supply contracts and public service contracts, does not preclude the contracting authority from establishing a criterion which makes it possible to assess the quality of the teams actually proposed by the tenderers for the performance of that contract, a criterion which takes into account the composition of the team and the experience and curriculum vitae of its members'"

In reaching that conclusion, the CJEU made a series of considerations which should be noted:

"23 The referring court considered it necessary to refer this question, in view of the contradiction that appears to exist, on the one hand, between the Court's case-law on the verification of the suitability of economic operators to perform a contract and the criteria for the award of contracts, as is apparent from the judgment in Lianakis and Others. (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40), and, on the other hand, the Commission's proposal for the reform of the rules governing public procurement procedures and the fact that quality is one of the award criteria referred to in Article 53(1) (a) of Directive 2004/18, a criterion which may be linked to the composition of the team, the experience and curriculum vitae of the members entrusted with the performance of the contract.

24 It should be noted, as a preliminary point, that Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), which entered into force after the date of the facts in the main proceedings, is not applicable to the present case.

25 It should also be noted that the case-law arising from the judgment in Lianakis and Others. (C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40) concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), which was repealed by Directive 2004/18, and which that judgment does not excludel that a contracting authority may, under certain conditions, establish and apply a criterion such as that set out in the question referred for a preliminary ruling at the stage of the award of the contract.

26 That judgment does indeed concern the staff and experience of tenderers in general, and not, as in the present case, the staff and experience of the persons who make up a specific team which is specifically required to perform the contract'.

27 As regards the interpretation of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, about which the referring court is uncertain, it should be noted that that directive has introduced new elements into EU law on public procurement as compared with Directive 92/50.

28 In the first place, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 provides that the 'most economically advantageous tender' must be identified 'from the point of view of the contracting authority' and thus grants that contracting authority a greater margin of discretion.

29 In the second place, the third paragraph of recital 46 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 states that, in cases where the contract is to be awarded to the candidate who submitted the most economically advantageous tender, the tender which 'offers the best value for money' should be sought, which contributes to reinforcing the weight of quality in the criteria for the award of public contracts.

30 It should also be added that the criteria which may be defined by contracting authorities in order to determine the most economically advantageous tender are not exhaustively listed in Article 53(1) of Directive 2004/18. That provision therefore leaves it to the contracting authorities to choose the criteria for the award of the contract which they wish to define. However, such a choice may be made only from among the criteria intended to identify the most economically advantageous tender (see, to that effect, judgment in Lianakis and Others, C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, n.paragraphs 28 and 29 and the case-law cited). To that end, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 expressly requires that the award criteria be linked to the subject matter of the contract (see judgment in Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraph 86).

31 The quality of the performance of a public contract may depend decisively on the professional value of the persons responsible for performing it, which is constituted by their professional experience and training.

32. That is particularly the case where the service which is the subject of the contract is of an intellectual nature and concerns, as in the case in the main proceedings, training and consultancy services.

33 Where such a contract is to be performed by a team, the skill and experience of its members are decisive for the purpose of assessing the professional quality of that team. That quality may be an intrinsic feature of the tender and be linked to the subject matter of the contract within the meaning of Article 53(1)(a) of

Directive 2004/18.

<B1108>34 Consequently, that status may be included as an award criterion in the contract notice or contract documents in question.

35 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling is that, for the purpose of concluding a contract for the provision of intellectual services, training and consultancy, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC does not preclude the contracting authority from establishing a criterion for assessing the quality of the teams actually proposed by the tenderers for the performance of that contract, a criterion that takes into account the constitution of the team as well as the experience and curriculum of its members".

2.6. This decision of the CJEU is in line with what was already the understanding of an important part of the national doctrine, as we are told by the judgment of 22.04.15, case no. 835/13-11, recently handed down by this Supreme Court, in which the plaintiff and the defendant entity are the same (see also the judgment of the same date, Proc. No. 1248/13), and in which the issue on which it relates is also the same – that is, the conformity of the 'Proposed Team' factor of the award criterion with Article 75(1) of the PPC. In fact, some of the doctrine that has been looking into the issue has also considered, arguing Mário Esteves de Oliveira and Rodrigo Esteves de Oliveira that "it is legitimate to adopt such factors to assess the value of proposals that presuppose a judgment on the resources effectively committed to the execution of the contract" (...), also stressing that it may happen that a competitor, holder of large resources [equipment and technical staff] but all assigned to other works of his, leaves "the commitment he will assume with the presentation of the proposal based abstractly on unavailable means and the execution of the contract in charge of a really incapable competitor" (...), so that it would be legitimate to adopt factors of this type [relating to the performance of the contract] allowing a judgment and a balance, in the evaluation of the proposal, on the resources effectively committed to its implementation. Legitimacy that would be – for the same authors – well-founded "especially in those cases in which it is not possible (or very difficult) to assess the technical quality of the same – ['proposals" we add] – or the guarantees of their proper execution except on the basis of the means actually predisposed to the fulfilment of the contract. It seems very risky, in fact, to leave in addition – [note: this is certainly a material slip in writing since the word will be «completely»] – outside the evaluation of the tenders the assessment of the adequacy of these means for the execution of the contract, at least when the quality and punctuality of that execution is greatly linked to the instruments, the resources, available for this purpose, it is true, on the other hand, that the assessment of the technical capacity of the candidates in the qualification phase of a public procurement procedure is normally carried out in the abstract, in 'gross', (...) without involving any commitment to allocate the resources listed in the application for the performance of the contract' (...).

XXI. In the same sense, Miguel Nogueira de Brito maintains that " [i]n the question is situated in thethe boundary of objective criteria, it seems excessive to consider it as a pure qualitative selection criterion and not as an award criterion and not as an award criterion" (...), Miguel Assis Raimundo also referring in this regard that "the reason for this separation between the assessment of the tenderer and its tender is clear and does not seem to be able to be called into question, in the abstract: it is a matter of equalizing the participants in the procedure" but the "competitor-proposed separation is sometimes not easy in practice", and "[i]n example, the inclusion of a factor in the award criterion that concerns the assignment, by the competitor, of an experienced work team, this criterion being mediated by the team's curricula together, it may be regarded as an aspect relating to the technical capacity of the tenderer and as such incapable of constituting an assessment criterion (...); but looking at the issue from a distance, it would be at least as defensible as this classification if another considered that we are dealing with an essential element to know whether the competitor's proposal has quality, and therefore, with an element likely to enter the evaluation criterion» (...)".

2.7. In the same judgment of 22.04.15, case no. 835/13-11, several relevant considerations were set out and fully transposable to the present case, so that, without further ado, we reproduce them:

"XXII. In the case under analysis, the assessment of the human resources allocated to the execution of the contract cannot fail to be relevant, since it is a tender for the acquisition of training and consultancy services.

XXIII. The composition of the team [of trainers] that the competitor makes available to provide these services can be considered a criterion related to the execution of the contract and not to the quality of the competitors.

XXIV. In a contractual proposal for future training actions, the curricula of the trainers and their experience are, without a doubt, components of the proposal itself, along with the structuring of the actions, number of hours and trainers, etc.

XXV. Hence, it would not make sense, in our understanding, for the value of the quality of teaching associated with the skills of the teacher to be excluded from the value of the proposal, so that, in these situations, there is, in our view, no violation of the principle of objectivity of the proposal.

XXVI. What the law intends to avoid is that the evaluation of the proposal is distorted by the personal quality of the tenderer, so, in this sense, article 75(no) of the PPC imposes that the proposal is valid in itself [principle of objectivity of proposals], without taking into account the person who offers it, and that only its quality is evaluated. In short, it is forbidden that a bad proposal be benefited by a good bidder.

XXVII. But, in the present case, the skills of the trainers are an element of the proposal itself.

XXVIII. To that extent, it is therefore not absurd to distinguish between the person of the tenderer [a legal entity, moreover, distinct from the trainers] and the human resources placed in the execution of the tender.

XXIX. In our view, it would be incomprehensible to interpret Article 75(1) of the PPC which, in the evaluation of a training project, would prohibit the weighting of the curricula of trainers, namely in the area of their training.

XXX. However, the criterion of point 5.2) of the "PC" is limited to weighing the curricula and experience of the team of trainers who will carry out the training action, that is, to weighing an aspect about the content of the proposed provision, since there must necessarily be a clear relationship between the capacity of the trainers and the subject they will teach, with reflections on the value of the proposal, regardless of who offers it".

2.8. Taking into account the content of the CJEU's decision, and, likewise, relying on the recitals inserted in the paragraph of this STA just reproduced, which, as has been said, we fully endorse, it is impossible not to conclude that the alleged error of judgment imputed by the appellant to the judgment under appeal has not been verified.
Therefore, having attested the conformity of the award factors and sub-factors provided for in Article 5(A) of the Tender Programme with Article 75(1) of the PPC, and with Directive 2004/18/EC, it is necessary to conclude, without further consideration, that the present judicial appeal is dismissed, and the judgment of the TCAS must therefore be maintained.

III – Decision

In the terms and on the grounds set out, the Judges of the Administrative Litigation Section agree in conference to dismiss the appeal on a point of law brought by A....., with all the legal consequences, and, accordingly, to uphold the judgment under appeal.

Costs for the appellant.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 1(c) and 37 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) and of the first subparagraph of Article 1(8) and Article 55 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the Azienda Ospedaliero-Universitaria di Careggi-Firenze (university hospital, Careggi) ('the Azienda') and Data Medical Service Srl ('Data Medical Service'), concerning the lawfulness of exclusion of the first entity from a tendering procedure for the award of a public service contract.

Legal context

EU law

3 Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50 provided:

'[S]ervice provider shall mean any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services. …'

4 According to Article 37 of that directive:

'If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the service to be provided, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received.

The contracting authority may take into consideration explanations which are justified on objective grounds including the economy of the method by which the service is provided, or the technical solutions chosen, or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the provision of the service, or the originality of the service proposed by the tenderer.

If the documents relating to the contract provide for its award at the lowest price tendered, the contracting authority must communicate to the Commission the rejection of tenders which it considers to be too low.'

5 Recital 1 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 states that that directive, in the interests of clarity, recasts, in a single text, the previous directives applicable to public service, public supply and public works contracts, and is based on the Court's case-law.

6 Recital 4 in the preamble to that directive states:

'Member States should ensure that the participation of a body governed by public law as a tenderer in a procedure for the award of a public contract does not cause any distortion of competition in relation to private tenderers.'

7 The first and second subparagraphs of Article 1(8) of that regulation provide:

'The terms "contractor", "supplier" and "service provider" mean any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or bodies which offers on the market, respectively, the execution of works and/or a work, products or services.

The term "economic operator" shall cover equally the concepts of contractor, supplier and service provider. It is used merely in the interest of simplification.'

8 Article 55 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Abnormally low tenders', is worded as follows:

‘1. If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant.

Those details may relate in particular to:

(a) the economics of the construction method, manufacturing process or services provided;

(b) the technical solutions chosen and/or any exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the execution of the work, for the supply of the goods or services;

(c) the originality of the work, supplies or services proposed by the tenderer;

(d) compliance with the provisions relating to employment protection and working conditions in force at the place where the work, service or supply is to be performed;

(e) the possibility of the tenderer obtaining State aid.

2. The contracting authority shall verify those constituent elements by consulting the tenderer, taking account of the evidence supplied.

3. Where a contracting authority establishes that a tender is abnormally low because the tenderer has obtained State aid, the tender can be rejected on that ground alone only after consultation with the tenderer where the latter is unable to prove, within a sufficient time-limit fixed by the contracting authority, that the aid in question was granted legally. Where the contracting authority rejects a tender in these circumstances, it shall inform the Commission of that fact.’

Italian law

9 It follows from Article 3 of Legislative Decree No 502 relating to reforms in the area of health (decreto legislativo n. 502 Riordino della disciplina in materia sanitaria) of 30 December 1992 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 305 of 30 December 1992), as interpreted by the Corte costituzionale (Italian Constitutional Court), that health care establishments are public economic entities which ‘perform their essentially technical functions under the legal form of public entities with commercial autonomy, on the basis of general instructions contained in regional health plans and implementation instructions which are communicated to them by the Giunte regionali [(regional councils)]’.

10 Under Article 3(1a) of that decree:

‘For the purpose of the pursuit of their institutional objectives, local health units shall be constituted as public-law establishments with legal personality and commercial autonomy; their organisation and functioning shall be governed by an atto aziendale [act defining the responsibilities relating to the management of the entity, in particular concerning the budget] under private law, in compliance with the principles and criteria provided for by regional provisions. The atto aziendale shall define the operational structures which have management and technical-professional autonomy, and which shall be required to submit detailed accounts.’

11 Directive 92/50 was transposed into Italian law by Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 104 of 6 May 1995).

12 Under Article 2(1) of that decree:

‘The administrative bodies of the State, the regions, the autonomous provinces of Trentino and Bolzano, public territorial entities, other non-profit-making public entities, and entities governed by public law, irrespective of their designation, shall be considered to be contracting authorities.’

13 Article 5(2)(h) of that decree provides that it does not apply to:

‘public service contracts awarded to a public entity which is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 2, on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoys pursuant to legislative, regulatory or administrative provisions, on condition that those provisions are compatible with the Treaty.'

14 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Italian law by Legislative Decree No 163/2006 of 12 April 2006 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), which codifies the rules on public contracts.

15 Article 19(2) of that decree provides:

'The present Code shall not apply to public service contracts awarded by a contracting authority or a contracting public entity to another contracting authority or to an association of contracting authorities on the basis of an exclusive right which they enjoy pursuant to published legislative, regulatory or administrative provisions, on condition that those provisions are compatible with the Treaty.'

16 Article 34(1) of that decree designates the persons authorised to take part in tendering procedures for the award of public contracts and is worded as follows:

'The following persons shall be entitled to take part in tendering procedures for the award of public contracts, without prejudice to the restrictions expressly provided for:

(a) individual commercial operators, including artisans, commercial companies and partnerships and cooperatives;

(b) consortia of producers' and workers' cooperatives … and consortia of artisanal/handicraft businesses …;

(c) consortia, constituted as, inter alia, joint venture companies within the meaning of Article 2615b of the Civil Code, between individual contractors (including artisans), commercial companies or partnerships or production and labour cooperatives, in accordance with the provisions of Article 36;

(d) special-purpose groupings of competitors, consisting of the persons referred to in subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) …;

(e) ordinary consortia of competitors referred to in Article 2602 of the Civil Code, between persons referred to in subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) of the present paragraph, including in the form of a company within the meaning of Article 2615b of the Civil Code … ;

(e a) the groups of undertakings which are party to a network contract within the meaning of Article 3(4b) of Decree Law No 5 of 10 February 2009 … ;

(f) persons who have concluded a contract for the establishment of a European Economic Interest Grouping (EEIG) within the meaning of Legislative Decree No 240 of 23 July 1991 … ;

(f a) economic operators within the meaning of Article 3(22), established in other Member States and constituted in accordance with the legislation in force in their respective countries.'

17 Paragraph (f a) was included in Article 34(1) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 by the adoption of Legislative Decree No 152 of 11 September 2008 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 231 of 2 October 2008), following infringement proceedings brought against the Italian Republic by the Commission, which had stated that the directives on public contracts do not allow the possibility of participation in invitations to tender to be restricted to certain categories of economic operators.

18 Articles 86 to 88 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 provide for mechanisms to check for irregularities in tenders, on the basis of which the contracting authority may decide to exclude a tenderer from the procedure for the award of the contract at issue.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

19 By a notice published on 5 October 2005, the Regione Lombardia (the Region of Lombardy) issued an invitation to tender for the award, on the basis of the best-value-for-money tender, of the three-year service contract for processing data for external quality control in relation to medicinal products. The Azienda, which is established and carries out its activities in the Region of Tuscany, participated in that invitation to tender and was classified in first place, principally as a result of the price at which it offered its services, equivalent to 59% lower than that of the second placed tenderer, Data Medical Service. Following an investigation into the potentially abnormal character of that tender, the contract was awarded to the Azienda by decision of the Regione Lombardia of 26 May 2006.

20 Data Medical Service contested the decision to award the contract before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court of Lombardy), claiming that the successful tenderer should have been excluded on the ground that, in accordance with the applicable legislation, a public entity could not participate in an invitation to tender and that, in any event, its tender was abnormally low in view of the size of the discount offered.

21 By judgment of 24 November 2006, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia upheld the first ground pleaded. On the basis of a combined reading of Article 5(2)(h) of Legislative Decree No 157/1995 and of Articles 19 and 34 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, that court held that, even if those latter two provisions were, ratione temporis, not applicable to the present case, public entities such as the Azienda were formally prohibited from participating in tendering procedures for the award of public contracts, those entities being entitled only, under specified conditions, to be awarded contracts directly. As a public entity which has as its exclusive purpose the management of the public hospital in Florence, the Azienda could not operate under conditions of free competition with private persons.

22 The Azienda appealed against that judgment to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), the supreme administrative court in Italy.

23 The Consiglio di Stato points out first of all that, notwithstanding the fact that the contract at issue has in the meantime been performed in full, the Azienda retains an interest in securing recognition of its right to participate in tendering procedures for public contracts.

24 The Consiglio di Stato then goes on to point out that the first question raised in the present case concerns the precise definition of the concept of ‘economic operator’ for the purposes of EU law, and the possibility that this might include a public university hospital. Regarding the nature of those entities within the context of the ‘aziendalizzazione’ process, that is to say, the transition to a commercial model, the Consiglio di Stato points out that that process has resulted in the transformation of existing ‘local health units’, which were originally administrative authorities operating at municipal level, into entities with legal personality and commercial autonomy, namely organisational, financial, accounting and managerial autonomy, which has led some legal writers and national case-law to classify public health entities, including hospitals, as ‘public economic entities’. However, the public nature of those entities is not in question. Their activity is not carried out principally with a view to making a profit and they have administrative powers, in the strict sense, particularly in matters relating to inspections and penalties.

25 The Consiglio di Stato questions, in those circumstances, whether it may always be asserted, as the Tribunal amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia has done, that there exists in Italian law an absolute prohibition on participation by such entities, as public economic entities, in invitations to tender as a ‘straightforward competitor’. In this regard, it refers to the case-law of the Court, in particular to the judgments in ARGE, C-94/99, EU:C:2000:677; CoNISMa, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807; and Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817, from which it follows that any entity which considers itself capable of performing a public contract has the right to participate, regardless of its status, whether governed by private law or by public law.

26 That case-law, the Consiglio di Stato states, is followed by a majority of Italian courts, which also have stressed that the list set out in Article 34 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 cannot be regarded as exhaustive. The Consiglio di Stato takes the view that that case-law, both European Union and national, means that Article 5(2)(b) of Legislative Decree No 157/1995 and Article 34 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 cannot be interpreted as precluding, a priori, the participation of hospitals in tendering procedures. Such a prohibition in principle would no longer serve any purpose.

27 However, according to the Consiglio di Stato, that does not amount to unconditionally authorising such entities to participate in tendering procedures for the award of public contracts. According to that court, that case-law has identified two limitations in that regard, the first being that the activity to which the tendering procedure relates must further the attainment of the institutional objectives of the public entity concerned, and the second being that there must be no specific provision of national law which prohibits that activity, in particular on the ground that competition might thereby be distorted.

28 With regard to the first limitation, the Consiglio di Stato takes the view that public hospitals, a fortiori in the case where they are university hospitals, also play a significant role in teaching and research, institutional objectives which it may be claimed correspond to the service concerned by the invitation to tender at issue in the case brought before it, namely data processing. Regarding the second limitation, the Consiglio di Stato considers that the right of an entity in receipt of public funds to participate freely in an invitation to tender raises the issue of equal treatment between disparate competitors, on the one hand those which must be active on the market and, on the other hand, those which can also rely on public funding and are thereby able to submit tenders that no persons governed by private law would ever have been in a position to submit. Consequently, it is necessary to identify corrective mechanisms designed to even out the disparities existing between the various economic operators at the outset, mechanisms which must go further than procedures to check the potentially abnormal character of the tenders.

29 In the light of those considerations, the Consiglio di Stato decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Does Article 1 of Directive [92/50], read also in the light of the later Article 1(8) of Directive [2004/18], preclude national legislation which was interpreted as excluding [the Azienda], by dint of the fact that it is a commercially-run hospital characterisable as a public economic entity, from participating in tendering procedures?

(2) Does EU law on public procurement — in particular, the general principles of freedom of competition, non-discrimination and proportionality — preclude national legislation under which a body such as [the Azienda], which receives public funding on a permanent basis and is directly contracted to provide a public service, is able to derive from that situation a decisive competitive advantage over rival economic operators, as demonstrated by the size of the discount offered, in circumstances in which corrective measures have not been put in place at the same time in order to prevent that kind of distortion of competition?’

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

The first question

30 This question originates in the doubts expressed by the referring court as to whether the applicable Italian legislation, interpreted as containing a general prohibition precluding all public bodies, including, consequently, university hospitals such as the Azienda, from participating in tendering procedures for the award of public contracts, may be considered to be compatible with the relevant case-law of the Court in the field of public procurement.

31 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50 precludes national legislation which excludes a public hospital, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, from participating in tendering procedures for the award of public contracts as a result of its status as a public economic entity.

32 It should be pointed out first of all, that, although the question posed by the referring court refers both to Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50 and to the first subparagraph of Article 1(8) of Directive 2004/18, the contract at issue in the main proceedings is, however, governed, ratione temporis, by Directive 92/50. It is apparent from paragraph 19 of the present judgment that the Regione Lombardia launched the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings by means of a notice published on 5 October 2005. Under Articles 80 and 82 of Directive 2004/18, however, that directive repealed Directive 92/50 only with effect from 31 January 2006. Thus, the public procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings is governed by the legal rules which were in force on the date on which the notice of the invitation to tender was published.

33 Next, it should be noted that the possibility for public entities to participate in tendering procedures for public contracts, in parallel to the participation of private economic entities, is already evident from the wording of Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50, according to which 'service provider' is to mean any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services. Furthermore, such a possibility to participate was recognised by the Court in the judgment in Teckal, C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 51, and was repeated in the subsequent judgments in ARGE, EU:C:2000:677, paragraph 40; CoNISMa, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 38; and Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 26.

34 The Court has also pointed out in this regard that one of the objectives of the EU rules on public procurement is to attain the widest possible opening-up to competition (see, to that effect, the judgment in Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, C-337/06, EU:C:2007:786, paragraph 39), an opening-up which is also in the interest of the contracting authority concerned itself, which will thus have greater choice as to the tender which is most advantageous and most suited to the needs of the public authority in question. The effect of a restrictive interpretation of the concept of 'economic operator' would be that contracts concluded between contracting authorities and entities which are primarily non-profit-making would not be regarded as 'public contracts', could be awarded by mutual agreement and would not be covered by EU rules on equal treatment and transparency, something which would be at odds with the objective of those rules (see, to that effect, the judgment in CoNISMa, EU:C:2009:807, paragraphs 37 and 43).

35 The Court has therefore held that it follows from both the EU rules and the case-law that any person or entity which, in the light of the conditions laid down in a contract notice, believes that it is capable of carrying out the contract is eligible to submit a tender or to put itself forward as a candidate, regardless of whether it is governed by public law or private law, whether it is active as a matter of course on the market or only on an occasional basis (see, to that effect, the judgment in CoNISMa, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 42).

36 Moreover, as is apparent from the wording of Article 26(2) of Directive 92/50, the Member States do, admittedly, have a discretion as to whether or not to allow certain categories of economic operators to provide certain services. They can regulate the activities of entities, such as universities and research institutes, which are non-profit-making and whose primary object is teaching and research. They can, inter alia, determine whether or not such entities are authorised to operate on the market, according to whether the activity in question is compatible with their objectives as an institution and those laid down in their statutes. However, if and to the extent that such entities are entitled to offer certain services in return for remuneration on the market, even occasionally, the Member States may not prevent those entities from participating in tendering procedures for the award of public contracts relating to the provision of those services. Such a prohibition would not be compatible with Article 1(a) and (c) of Directive 92/50 (see, in relation to the corresponding provisions of Directive 2004/18, the judgments in CoNISMa, EU:C:2009:807, paragraphs 47 to 49, and Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 27).

37 As the representative of the Italian Government pointed out during the hearing before the Court, public university hospitals such as that at issue in the main proceedings, being 'public economic entities', as defined at national level, are authorised to operate on the market for profit, in sectors compatible with their statutory and institutional duties. In the main proceedings, it appears, moreover, that the services which are the subject of the public contract at issue are not incompatible with the institutional and statutory objectives of the Azienda. In those circumstances, which it is for the referring court to assess, the Azienda, according to the Court's case-law cited in paragraph 36 of the present judgment, cannot be prevented from participating in the tendering procedure for that contract.

38 Consequently, the answer to the first question is that Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50 precludes national legislation which excludes a public hospital, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, from participation in tendering procedures for the award of public contracts as a result of its status as a public economic entity, if and in so far as that entity is authorised to operate on the market in accordance with its institutional and statutory objectives.

The second question

39 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the provisions of Directive 92/50, and in particular the general principles of freedom of competition, non-discrimination and proportionality which underlie that directive, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which allows a public hospital, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, to participate in a tendering procedure and to submit a tender which cannot be matched by any competitors as a result of the public funding which it receives, in circumstances in which corrective measures have not been put in place in order to prevent possible resulting distortions of competition.

40 In the context of the grounds for that question, the Consiglio di Stato expresses doubts as to whether the procedure for examining abnormally low tenders, referred to in Article 37 of Directive 92/50, may be considered to be an adequate method for preventing such distortions of competition.

41 In that regard, even if the referring court considers that it is desirable to identify corrective mechanisms designed to even out the disparities existing between the various economic operators at the outset and which should go further than procedures to check the potentially abnormal character of the tenders, it must be noted that the EU legislature, while being aware of the differences between competitors participating in a public contract, did not make provision for mechanisms other than those designed to check and possibly reject abnormally low tenders.

42 It must also be borne in mind that contracting authorities must treat economic operators equally and in a non-discriminatory manner and must act in a transparent manner.

43 However, the provisions of Directive 92/50 and the Court's case-law do not allow, a priori and without further consideration, a tenderer to be excluded from participation in a procedure for the award of a public contract on the sole ground that, as a result of public subsidies which it receives, it is able to submit tenders at prices which are significantly lower than those of unsubsidised tenderers (see, to that effect, the judgments in ARGE, EU:C:2000:677, paragraphs 25 to 27, and CoNISMa, EU:C:2009:807, paragraphs 34 and 40).

44 In certain specific circumstances, however, the contracting authorities are required, or at the very least permitted, to take into account the existence of subsidies, and in particular aid incompatible with the Treaty, in order, where appropriate, to exclude tenderers in receipt of such aid (see, to that effect, the judgments in ARGE, EU:C:2000:677, paragraph 29, and CoNISMa, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 33).

45 In that regard, as the Commission stated during the hearing before the Court, the fact that the public entity concerned has separate accounts for its activities on the market and for its other activities may make it possible to establish whether a tender is abnormally low as a result of the effect of an element of State aid. However, the contracting authority may not conclude from the absence of such separate accounts that such a tender was made possible by the grant of a subsidy or State aid which is incompatible with the Treaty.

46 It should be pointed out also that it follows from the wording of the first and third paragraphs of Article 37 of Directive 92/50 that the possibility of rejecting an abnormally low tender is not limited solely to the case in which the low price proposed in that tender is explained by the grant of State aid which is unlawful or incompatible with the internal market. That possibility is more general in character.

47 First, it follows from the wording of that provision that the contracting authority is obliged, when examining tenders which are abnormally low, to request the tenderer to furnish the necessary explanations to prove that those tenders are genuine (see, to that effect, the judgment in SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 28).

48 Accordingly, the existence of a proper exchange of views, at an appropriate time in the procedure for examining tenders, between the contracting authority and the tenderer, to enable the latter to demonstrate that its tender is genuine, constitutes a fundamental requirement of Directive 92/50, in order to prevent the contracting authority from acting in an arbitrary manner and to ensure healthy competition between undertakings (see, to that effect, the judgment in SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 29).

49 Secondly, it should be noted that Article 37 of Directive 92/50 does not contain a definition of the concept of an ‘abnormally low tender’. It is thus for the Member States and, in particular, the contracting authorities to determine the method of calculating an anomaly threshold constituting an ‘abnormally low tender’ within the meaning of that article (see, to that effect, the judgment in Lombardini and Mantovani, C-285/99 and C-286/99, EU:C:2001:640, paragraph 67).

50 That being the case, the EU legislature made clear in that provision that the abnormally low character of a tender must be assessed ‘in relation to the service to be provided’. Thus, the contracting authority may, in the course of its examination of the abnormally low character of a tender, take into consideration, for the purpose of ensuring healthy competition, not only the situations set out in the second paragraph of Article 37 of Directive 92/50 but also all the factors that are relevant in the light of the service at issue (see, to that effect, the judgment in SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, EU:C:2012:191, paragraphs 29 and 30).

51 Consequently, the answer to the second question is that the provisions of Directive 92/50, and in particular the general principles of freedom of competition, non-discrimination and proportionality which underlie that directive, must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which allows a public hospital, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, participating in a tendering procedure to submit a tender which cannot be matched by any competitors as a result of the public funding which it receives. However, in the course of the examination of the abnormally low character of a tender on the basis of Article 37 of that directive, the contracting authority may take into consideration the existence of public funding which such an entity receives in the light of the option to reject that tender.

Costs

52 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 1(c) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts precludes national legislation which excludes a public hospital, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, from participation in tendering procedures for the award of public contracts as a result of its status as a public economic entity, if and in so far as that entity is authorised to operate on the market in accordance with its institutional and statutory objectives.

2. The provisions of Directive 92/50, and in particular the general principles of freedom of competition, non-discrimination and proportionality which underlie that directive, must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which allows a public hospital, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, participating in a tendering procedure to submit a tender which cannot be matched by any competitors as a result of the public funding which it receives. However, in the course of the examination of the abnormally low character of a tender on the basis of Article 37 of that directive, the contracting authority may take into consideration the existence of public funding which such an entity receives in the light of the option to reject that tender.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Grupo Hospitalario Quirón SA ('Grupo Hospitalario Quirón') and the Departamento de Sanidad del Gobierno Vasco (Department of Health of the Basque Government) and the Instituto de Religiosas Siervas de Jesús de la Caridad, concerning the validity of a condition inserted in two public procurement notices published by the Department of Health of the Basque Government.

Legal context

3 Recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 states:

'The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. …'

4 Article 1 of that directive, entitled 'Definitions', provides:

2. (a) "Public contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(d) "Public service contracts" are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.

4. "Service concession" is a contract of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in this right together with payment.

…'

5 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts', provides:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

6 Under Article 7 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Threshold amounts for public contracts', as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1177/2009 of 30 November 2009 (OJ 2009 L 314, p. 64), applicable ratione temporis to the main proceedings in the present case, that directive applies to public service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than central government authorities, the estimated value of which, exclusive of value-added tax (VAT), is equal to or greater than EUR 193 000.

7 Article 21 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Service contracts listed in Annex II B', is worded as follows:

'Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II B shall be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4).'

8 Under Annex II B to that directive, health services fall within Category 25 of that annex, entitled ‘Health and social services’.

9 Article 23 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Technical specifications’, provides at paragraph 2:

‘Technical specifications shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

10 It is apparent from the documents before the Court that, in the Basque Country (Spain), public health services are provided on the basis of a system of regional organisation and division into health-care districts. Under that system, patients covered by the public health service are served by a public hospital, known as the ‘hospital of reference’, located in the corresponding health-care district.

11 In order to relieve the pressure on public hospitals and to reduce waiting times for patients covered by those establishments who need medical treatment that the public health services cannot provide within a reasonable period, the competent authorities set up a mechanism for cooperation with private health-care establishments and hospitals, under which certain public medical care support services are outsourced and provided by those private establishments, on a contractual basis and following the award of a public service contract. Thus, those private establishments make available to the public health service their infrastructure and technical and human resources, namely, inter alia, nurses and assistants, with a view to contributing to the accomplishment of the tasks of the public health service system. However, the surgical procedures and other medical treatment are carried out by surgeons attached to the public health service, who travel to those private establishments for that purpose.

12 It is in that context that, on 15 December 2010, the Biscay Regional Director of the Department of Health of the Basque Government approved the specifications, expenditure and tender dossier for the contract for the management of public services concerning ‘surgical procedures in the fields of minor, general and digestive tract surgery, gynaecology, urology and traumatology and orthopaedic surgery’ for patients covered by the public hospitals of Basurto, situated in the municipality of Bilbao, and Galdakao, situated in the municipality of Galdakao. The contract was to be awarded on the basis of an open procedure and the notice calling for applications was published in the Boletín Oficial del País Vasco (Official Journal of the Basque Country) of 31 January 2011. The estimated maximum value of the contract, taking into account any extensions of time, was EUR 5 841 041.84 (‘contract No 21/2011’).

13 On 10 May 2011, the same public authority approved the specifications, expenditure and tender dossier for the contract for the management of public services concerning ‘surgical procedures in the field of ophthalmology’, for patients covered by the public hospital of Galdakao. The contract was to be awarded on the basis of an open procedure and the notice calling for applications was published in the Boletín Oficial del País Vasco of 14 June 2011. The estimated maximum value of the contract, taking into account any extensions of time, was EUR 6 273 219.53 (‘contract No 50/2011’).

14 Under both contract No 21/2011 and contract No 50/2011, the successful tenderer-service provider was to be remunerated directly by the Department of Health of the Basque Government, in its capacity as the contracting authority.

15 The technical specifications concerning those two contracts, in the section relating to minimum requirements entitled ‘Location’, specify:

‘Having regard to the need for those services to be provided with sufficient proximity to patients and their families, the availability of public transport and travelling time, and the need to minimise the necessary travel by the medical staff of the … hospitals, the health-care centres proposed must be situated in the municipality of Bilbao.’

16 Consequently, in accordance with the specifications of those contracts, the place of performance of the services covered by those contracts was to be the municipality of Bilbao exclusively.

17 Grupo Hospitalario Quirón, which owns a private general hospital situated in the municipality of Erandio, challenged the two public calls for tenders concerning contracts No 21/2011 and No 50/2011, initially through administrative channels and then through legal proceedings. It argued that the requirement as to performance of the services covered by those calls for tenders within the municipality of Bilbao was contrary to the principles of equal treatment, freedom of access to public procurement procedures and free competition.

18 The referring court observes that Grupo Hospitalario Quirón's hospital meets all the technical specifications referred to in the contract documents relating to those contracts, with the exception of that concerning location, since that establishment is situated not in the municipality of Bilbao, but in that of Erandio, which is adjacent to the former. However, the municipalities of Bilbao and Erandio, together with other municipalities, form what is known as 'Greater Bilbao' or the 'Metropolitan Area of Bilbao'. Moreover, none of the calls for tenders predating those at issue and relating to the same services, issued by the Department of Health of the Basque Government, contained the obligation to provide the health services concerned within a particular locality.

19 The referring court states that tenderers are not formally required to have available, nor to be the owners of, hospital facilities situated in the municipality of Bilbao, but they are required merely to be in a position to provide the health services that are the subject of contracts No 21/2011 and No 50/2011 in facilities situated in that municipality, irrespective of the legal title under which they have the use of those facilities. However, de facto, the truth is that, leaving aside the costs related to the use of such facilities, the only candidates who may participate in the calls for tenders would be those health-care operators who are established in Bilbao, since any other operators would not be in a position to have available the appropriate facilities and personnel within the periods between the dates of publication of the calls for tenders in respect of those contracts and those stipulated for the submission of tenders.

20 According to the referring court, the condition relating to location included in the specifications of those contracts constitutes a restriction on competition and a breach of the principle of free access by tenderers to public procurement procedures, which cannot be justified by any imperative need. Indeed, the adjacent municipalities of Erandio and Bilbao belonged to the same municipality between 1924 and 1982 and at present form, together with other municipalities, the Metropolitan Area of Bilbao. In addition, Grupo Hospitalario Quirón's hospital is easily accessible by public transport from the municipality of Bilbao.

21 Furthermore, again according to the referring court, the health services that are the subject of contract No 21/2011 are intended not only for patients covered by the public hospital of Basurto, situated in the municipality of Bilbao, but also for patients covered by the public hospital of Galdakao, situated in the municipality of Galdakao, which is separate from the municipality of Bilbao. So far as the services that are the subject of contract No 50/2011 are concerned, those services are intended solely for patients covered by the public hospital of Galdakao. Consequently, it would be highly likely that the patients for whom the services that are the subject of those two contracts are intended reside, in the main, in a municipality other than that of Bilbao, with the result that the argument based on the patients' place of residence is unfounded.

22 Therefore, the referring court reaches the conclusion that the condition at issue in the main proceedings cannot be regarded as being compatible with Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18.

23 Having regard to those considerations, the Juzgado de lo Contencioso-Administrativo No 6 de Bilbao (Administrative Court No 6, Bilbao), decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Is the requirement, included in public contracts for the management of public health-care services, that the provision of health services which is the subject-matter of such contracts be carried out only in a determined municipality, which is not necessarily the municipality in which the patients reside, compatible with EU law?'

Consideration of the question referred

24 In the first place, it should be observed that, as is apparent from the documents before the Court, the two contracts, No 21/2011 and No 50/2011, constitute public service contracts within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) and (d) of Directive 2004/18, the values of which exceed the threshold provided for in Article 7 thereof, and not service concessions within the meaning of Article 1(4) of that directive, since the remuneration of the successful tenderer is paid in its entirety by the contracting authority, which also bears the economic risk.

25 It must also be observed that, as is apparent from paragraphs 7 and 8 above, those contracts, relating to health services, are subject solely to the provisions of Articles 23 and 35(4) of Directive 2004/18.

26 In the second place, it must be noted, first, that Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18, a provision to which those contracts are subject and which constitutes an expression of the principle of equal treatment, states that technical specifications are to afford equal access for tenderers.

27 Secondly, as is apparent from paragraph 15 above, the technical specifications of the two contracts at issue in the main proceedings refer to the need to ensure the proximity and accessibility of the private support hospital establishment that is to be chosen, in the interests of patients, their families and the medical personnel who are required to travel to that establishment, criteria which are inherent in the nature of the services sought.

28 However, the requirement that such an establishment must imperatively be situated in a given municipality that is to be the place where the medical services concerned are exclusively to be provided, laid down in the special administrative tender specifications and the technical specifications of contracts No 21/2011 and No 50/2011, constitute, having regard to the geographic location in the main proceedings, a territorial constraint on performance, which by its nature is not such as to enable the objective set out in paragraph 27 above to be achieved, namely to ensure the proximity and accessibility of the private support hospital establishment, in the interests of patients, their families and the medical personnel who are required to travel to that establishment, while ensuring equal and non-discriminatory access to those contracts by all tenderers.

29 In the case of the geographic location in question in the main proceedings, a requirement as to geographic location, such as that set out in the special administrative tender specifications and technical specifications of contracts No 21/2011 and No 50/2011, has the effect of automatically excluding those tenderers who cannot provide the services in question in an establishment situated within a given municipality, despite the fact that they may satisfy the other conditions laid down in the contract documents and technical specifications of the contracts under consideration.

30 The referring court observes that the applicant in the main proceedings is in that very position; its establishment satisfies all of the requisite conditions, including those of proximity and accessibility, with the exception of the requirement as to location within the territory of the municipality of Bilbao since that establishment is situated in a municipality adjacent to the latter.

31 It must also be noted in this connection, that, as the referring court observes, many patients who ought to receive the services to be delivered in the successful tenderer’s private hospital establishment reside outside the municipality within the territory of which that establishment has to be situated under the location clause under consideration.

32 Consequently, that requirement does not ensure equal and non-discriminatory access to the two contracts at issue in the main proceedings by all tenderers who might be able to ensure the proximity and accessibility of the private support hospital establishment, since that requirement renders those contracts accessible only to those tenderers who can provide the services in question in an establishment situated within the municipality designated in the corresponding contract notices. That requirement is therefore contrary to Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18.

33 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18 precludes a requirement such as that at issue in the main proceedings, expressed as a technical specification in public procurement notices relating to the provision of health services, whereby the medical services that are the subject of the calls for tenders must be provided by private hospital establishments situated exclusively within a given municipality, which is not necessarily that in which the patients concerned by those services reside, where that requirement involves the automatic exclusion of tenderers who cannot provide those services in such an establishment situated within that municipality but who satisfy all the other conditions of those calls for tenders.

Costs

34 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts precludes a requirement, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, expressed as a technical specification in public procurement notices relating to the provision of health services, whereby the medical services that are the subject of the calls for tenders must be provided by private hospital establishments situated exclusively within a given municipality, which is not necessarily that in which the patients concerned by those services reside, where that requirement involves the automatic exclusion of tenderers who cannot provide those services in such an establishment situated within that municipality but who satisfy all the other conditions of those calls for tenders.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
SZPUNAR
delivered on 11 June 2015 (1)

Case C-552/13

Grupo Hospitalario Quirón SA
v
Departamento de Sanidad del Gobierno Vasco and
Instituto de Religiosas Siervas de Jesús de la Caridad (Request for a preliminary ruling from the Juzgado de lo Contencioso-Administrativo No 6 de Bilbao (Spain))

Request for a preliminary ruling — Procedures for the award of public contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 2 and Article 23(2) — Principle of equal treatment of tenderers — Health-care services — Requirement that the services be provided exclusively at facilities located within a particular municipality

I – Introduction

1. Can the technical specifications relating to a public contract for the provision of health-care services include a requirement that those services be provided exclusively at facilities located within a particular municipality? Can that requirement be justified on grounds of accessibility and quality of health care?

2. The foregoing questions illustrate the doubts which prompted the Juzgado de lo Contencioso-Administrativo No 6 de Bilbao (Administrative Court No 6, Bilbao (Spain)) to make a reference to the Court in a case involving two calls for tenders issued by the Basque authorities for the award of contracts for services connected with surgical procedures. The purpose of those contracts was to make operating theatre units located at private hospitals available for procedures carried out by doctors employed at public health service facilities in order to reduce waiting times for those procedures.

II – Legal framework

A – EU law

3. Article 2 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, (2) entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

4. Article 21 of that directive provides as follows:

‘Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II B shall be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4).’

5. Under Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18:

‘Technical specifications shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.’

6. Annex II B to Directive 2004/18 refers to ‘Health and social services’ (category 25).

B – Spanish law

7. Articles 2 and 23(2) of Directive 2004/18 were respectively transposed into Spanish law by Articles 101(2) and 123 of Law 30/2007 of 30 October 2007 on Public Sector Contracts (Ley 30/2007, de 30 de octubre, de Contratos del Sector Público). (3)

III – The main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

8. The main proceedings concern the award of two public procurement contracts relating to services provided by hospitals in connection with the performance of procedures in the fields of general surgery, digestive tract surgery, urology, gynaecology, orthopaedic surgery, traumatology, minor surgery and ophthalmology. The contracts in question do not include the actual services provided by the surgeon, who is employed by the public health service and travels to the private hospital selected following the contract award in order to perform the procedure.

9. On 15 December 2010, the Departamento de Sanidad del Gobierno Vasco (Department of Health of the Basque Government; ‘the Departamento de Sanidad’) approved the specifications for public contract No 21/2011 for the performance of public service surgical procedures in the Vizcaya health-care district (a district covered by public hospitals in Basurto and Galdakao). The estimated value of the contract was EUR 5 841 041.84.

10. On 10 May 2011, the Departamento de Sanidad approved the specifications for public contract No 50/2011 relating to the provision of public services in the field of ophthalmic surgery. Those services related to the district covered by the public hospital in Galdakao. The estimated value of the contract was EUR 6 273 219.53.

11. Both tender notices were published in the Boletín Oficial del País Vasco (Official Journal of the Basque Country) on 31 January and 14 June 2011 respectively. In section 2(d) of each notice, it was stated that the place of performance of the services was to be Bilbao.

12. In the case of both contracts, Part A of the technical specifications, entitled ‘Structure, equipment and scope of hospital services’, contains the following point 2 relating to minimum requirements and is entitled ‘Location’:

‘Having regard for the need for those services to be provided with sufficient proximity to patients and their families, the availability of public transport and travelling time, and the need to minimise the necessary travel by the medical staff of the hospitals [belonging to the public health service], the health-care centres proposed must be situated within the municipality of Bilbao.’

13. Grupo Hospitalario Quirón SA (‘Grupo Hospitalario Quirón’) is the owner of a general hospital located in the municipality of Erandio. It is apparent from the order for reference that that hospital meets the requirements contained in the technical specifications, except for the fact that it is not located within the municipality of Bilbao but in an adjacent municipality.

14. On 13 September 2011, Grupo Hospitalario Quirón contested the decisions taken by the Departamento de Sanidad in connection with the aforementioned two public calls for tenders, lodging an application with the Juzgado de lo Contencioso-Administrativo No 6, Bilbao. It submitted, inter alia, that that court should annul the aforementioned decisions and order the issue of new calls for tenders not including the requirement that the services must be provided within Bilbao.

15. The Instituto de Religiosas Siervas de Jesús de la Caridad, which owns a health-care facility in Bilbao, was joined as defendant in the two sets of proceedings, which had been joined by the referring court.

16. In its application, Grupo Hospitalario Quirón submits that the requirement that the services be provided exclusively in facilities located in Bilbao is contrary to the principle of equality, freedom of access to public procurement procedures and the principles of non-discrimination, equal treatment of tenderers and free competition. It points out that, in order to meet that requirement, it is essential to have a complex material infrastructure in Bilbao the establishment of which would require significant investment and time. Such investment would not be justified for the purpose of providing the services covered by the calls for tenders. The only tenderers capable of taking part in the calls for tenders are therefore, it submits, hospitals located within Bilbao.

17. Grupo Hospitalario Quirón submits that, even if account is taken of travel difficulties for patients and surgeons employed at public hospitals in Basurto and Galdakao, the aforementioned requirement is unjustified, particularly in the case of the applicant, which owns a hospital in a municipality adjacent to Bilbao.

18. In reply to the application, the Departamento de Sanidad submits that the contested requirement does not limit the right of any tenderer to participate in the calls for tenders, since it does not require them to have facilities available in Bilbao, but simply that they must be capable of providing services in facilities located within Bilbao if a contract is awarded. It also submits that the condition that the services must be provided in Bilbao is justified by potential travel-related inconvenience for patients. The radial nature of public transport in the metropolitan area of Bilbao, it submits, will therefore make travel easier for them.

19. The referring court points out that it cannot be excluded that the contested requirement may constitute an inadmissible restriction of free competition in the calls for tenders. That court notes that that requirement does not appear to be necessary from a practical point of view. The award of contracts for health services at facilities located in a municipality distinct from the patient's place of residence is a common practice of public health authorities in Spain. Moreover, there are several possible ways of travelling from Bilbao to the hospital owned by Grupo Hospitalario Quirón, by metro and bus, while a journey by private transport takes an average of 14 minutes.

20. The referring court considers that it is necessary to determine, first, whether, in this case, the requirement that the service be carried out exclusively within Bilbao is justified by the subject-matter of the contract and, secondly, whether that requirement constitutes an inadmissible restriction on competition, since it does not appear to be justified by the criterion of patient accessibility to the services. In particular, in that court's opinion, there are no objective grounds for not permitting an entity owning a hospital located in an adjacent municipality to participate in the calls for tenders, where the travel time from a patient's place of residence to the hospital is reasonable. The referring court also points out that the provision of services does not concern exclusively patients resident in the municipality of Bilbao. In its opinion, it cannot therefore be ruled out that the contested requirement contained in the technical specifications of the calls for tenders infringes Articles 2 and 23(2) of Directive 2004/18.

21. In those circumstances, the Juzgado de lo Contencioso-Administrativo No 6, Bilbao decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Is the requirement, included in public contracts for the management of public health-care services, that the provision of health services which is the subject-matter of such contracts be carried out only in a determined municipality, which is not necessarily the municipality in which the patients reside, compatible with EU law?'

IV – Procedure before the Court

22. The order for reference was received at the Court on 25 October 2013. The Court requested the referring court to provide clarification, which that court provided on 11 April 2014.

23. The defendants in the main proceedings, the Spanish Government and the Commission have submitted written observations. The Departamento de Sanidad and the Spanish Government requested a hearing. Grupo Hospitalario Quirón, the Departamento de Sanidad, the Spanish Government and the Commission took part in the hearing, which was held on 20 April 2015.

V – Analysis

A – Initial remarks

24. The main proceedings concern two public calls for tenders relating to public health-care services. It is apparent from the order for reference that those calls for tenders relate to services provided by a hospital in connection with surgical procedures, as part of a special mechanism for cooperation between the public health service and private hospitals designed to reduce patient waiting times in the public health service. The contracts in question do not cover the actual services provided by surgeons, since the procedures are to be performed by doctors employed at public hospitals, who would travel to the private hospital selected following the contract award.

25. It is not clear from the order for reference whether the calls for tenders in question concern public contracts for the supply of services or also contracts for the award of service concessions, which are excluded from the scope of Directive 2004/18. (4)

26. However, it is apparent from the additional clarification provided by the referring court, at the Court's request, and also by the parties at the hearing, that the main proceedings relate to public service contracts coming within the scope of the aforementioned directive.

27. It is apparent from those clarifications that the successful tenderer receives remuneration for the services provided directly from the contracting authority and also does not bear a fundamental part of the economic risk connected with the provision of the services. (5) In particular, as the Departamento de Sanidad pointed out at the hearing, the public health service remains liable for any harm suffered by the patient as a result of a procedure. Similarly, the Spanish Government points out in its written observations that the aforementioned contracts are also classified as contracts for the supply of services under the provisions of national law referred to in the tender notice.

28. It should also be pointed out that the estimated value of each of the contracts significantly exceeds the thresholds indicated in Article 7 of Directive 2004/18.

29. Those circumstances, which it is, of course, for the referring court to establish, indicate clearly that Directive 2004/18 is applicable.

30. However, I would like to point out that the principle of equal treatment of tenderers in the provision of services, which will be the subject of submissions set out below, would also be applicable in the case of contracts awarded as a service concession.

31. Despite the fact that, as European Union (EU) law currently stands, service concession contracts are not governed by Directive 2004/18, public authorities are nevertheless bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, including Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU, on condition that the contract concerned undoubtedly has a transnational dimension. (6) Furthermore, in the case at issue, as the Spanish Government itself points out in its written observations, it appears likely that, in view of their high estimated value and the geographical position of the Basque Country, the contracts will have a transnational dimension.

32. Services provided as part of a public health-care system, such as those which are the subject of the calls for tenders in the present case, are undoubtedly of fundamental social importance.

33. It should be borne in mind that it follows from both Article 168(7) TFEU and the case-law of the Court that EU law does not detract from the power of the Member States to organise their public health-care systems. (7)

34. In the exercise of that power, the Member States may not, however, introduce or maintain unjustified restrictions on the exercise of fundamental internal market freedoms. In the assessment of compliance with that prohibition, account must be taken of the fact that the health and life of humans rank foremost among the assets or interests protected by the Treaty and that it is for the Member States, which have a discretion in the matter, to decide on the degree of protection which they wish to afford to public health and on the way in which that degree of protection is to be achieved. (8)

35. Moreover, the way in which health-care systems are organised in individual Member States varies considerably and the transnational dimension of the services provided as part of those systems is of a limited nature.

36. Those circumstances were taken into account by the EU legislature in deciding to place 'health services' within the category of non-priority services listed in Annex II B to Directive 2004/18. (9)

37. The EU legislature has proceeded on the assumption that such services are not a priori of cross-border interest and, for that reason, were not fully covered by the material scope of the directive. (10)

38. According to Article 21 of Directive 2004/18, the services listed in Annex II B, including 'health and social services', are to be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4) of the directive.

39. In the light of the case-law of the Court, Article 21 of Directive 2004/18 does not, however, preclude application of the general and final provisions of that directive, including Article 2 thereof, referred to in the order for reference. (11)

B – Restriction of access by tenderers to public procurement procedures in the light of Article 2 and Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18

40. It should be noted that both Article 2 and Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18 express the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, which is also a general principle deriving from the fundamental internal market freedoms defined in, inter alia, Article 49 TFEU and Article 56 TFEU. In this regard, the case-law of the Court concerning the interpretation of the fundamental internal market freedoms is also important for the purposes of interpreting the aforementioned provisions of Directive 2004/18.

41. In the analysis of the case at issue in the light of the aforementioned case-law, it should, however, be borne in mind that Directive 2004/18 extends the application of the principle of equal and non-discriminatory treatment of tenderers to internal situations. Since the matter here at issue relates to an area harmonised by EU law, it is not necessary to seek a transnational dimension in order to apply that principle to contracts coming within the scope of the directive.

42. In the light of the general principle expressed in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, contracting authorities must treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and must act in a transparent way. These principles are of crucial importance with regard to the technical specifications, in the light of the risks of discrimination linked to the choice of those specifications or the manner in which they are formulated. (12)

43. In this regard, Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18, which defines the rules for drawing up technical specifications and the formulation of requirements by contracting authorities in those specifications, provides that technical specifications must afford equal access for tenderers and must not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening-up of public procurement to competition.

44. In the case here at issue, there can be no doubt that the obligation to have a health-care facility available in Bilbao, contained in the technical specifications of both disputed calls for tenders, is liable to hinder access to the public procurement market for potential tenderers which do not have such a facility available.

45. I wish to stress that that requirement does hinder such access, even though it was not used as a qualifying criterion for tenderers, and the availability of a facility is essential only at the stage of performance of the contract.

46. On this point, I disagree with the position of the Departamento de Sanidad, based on the judgment in Contse and Others, (13) to the effect that the requirement to have a facility available in the place of performance of the services does not restrict access to a call for tenders if it is formulated as a condition for the performance of the contract.

47. I would mention that the judgment in Contse and Others (14) concerned the requirement to have an office available in a particular province in order to participate in a call for tenders for the provision of respiratory treatment services. That requirement was a qualification criterion applicable at the time when tenders were submitted and would probably not have been problematic if it had had to be met only at the stage of performance of the services.

48. Nevertheless, it is clear from the judgment in Contse and Others that the requirement to have an office available in a particular province did not require significant investment and also that, in view of its nature, it could easily be met at any time. That is not true in the case here at issue since, as the referring court points out, the creation of hospital infrastructure in Bilbao would require significant investment requiring a great deal of time, which would probably not be cost-effective in view of the limited scope of the services covered by the calls for tenders.

49. As a result of the requirement being contested in the main proceedings, a tenderer must, in order to participate in the calls for tenders, assume the obligation to make the investments necessary to provide the services at facilities within Bilbao.

50. Furthermore, the requirement to have a facility available in the aforementioned municipality, despite the fact that it applies exclusively to the stage at which the contract is being performed, is liable to hinder or make less attractive the exercise of the freedom to provide services guaranteed by the Treaty.

51. In the light of the foregoing considerations, the contested requirement undoubtedly hinders tenderers' access to public procurement procedures within the meaning of Article 2 and Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18.

C – Justification by requirements in the general interest

52. Next, it is necessary to consider whether that requirement may be justified by imperative requirements in the general interest and whether it is compatible with the principle of proportionality.

53. I wish to point out that, if the contested requirement were to constitute a justified restriction, it would, in the light of the principles developed in the case-law of the Court concerning restrictions on the exercise of the fundamental internal market freedoms, also be necessary to consider whether it is compatible with Article 2 and Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18, since those provisions prohibit the creation of 'unjustified obstacles' to the opening-up of public procurement to competition.

54. It follows from the Court's case-law that the criteria applied when awarding public contracts must comply with the principle of non-discrimination as derived from the provisions of the Treaty relating to freedom to provide services. Moreover, restrictions on the freedom to provide services may be justified if they fulfil the conditions set out in the case-law concerning that freedom. (15)

55. In order to be considered compatible with Article 49 TFEU and Article 56 TFEU, national measures liable to hinder or make less attractive the exercise of fundamental freedoms must fulfil four conditions: they must be applied in a non-discriminatory manner; they must be justified by imperative requirements in the general interest; they must be suitable for securing the attainment of the objective which they pursue; and they must not go beyond what is necessary in order to attain that objective. (16)

56. The defendants in the main proceedings and the Spanish Government justify the contested requirement by citing the need to ensure high quality and reliability in the operation of the public health-care system.

57. The Spanish Government maintains that the objective of the contested procedures is to support public health services in the field of surgical procedures. Since these are essential social services provided for the public by the Basque Government, it does not seem surprising that, guided by requirements in the general interest, the latter decided to enter into a contract with a private entity owning a hospital in Bilbao, where a large proportion of the residents of the Province of Vizcaya live. Considerations relating to the quality and reliability of health services provided on behalf and at the expense of the public authorities should be sufficient to justify such a restriction of the freedoms guaranteed by the Treaty.

58. In order to justify the aforementioned requirement, the Departamento de Sanidad cites travel difficulties for surgeons and also for patients and their relatives, pointing out the radial nature of public transport within the metropolitan area of Bilbao and the existence of direct public transport links between Bilbao and other towns in the province. It also points out that the choice of the most suitable location for medical facilities from the patients' point of view is one of the duties devolving on the public health service.

59. Furthermore, the Departamento de Sanidad cites the territorial division established for the purpose of providing public health services. That division, it submits, must also be maintained where public services are supported by private health facilities selected following a call for tenders. As regards the technical specifications of such calls for tenders, the place of performance in a particular health district is an essential requirement applied to the provision of services to support the public services. The Departamento de Sanidad points out that the hospital belonging to the Grupo Hospitalario Quirón is located in Erandio and, therefore, in a municipality which is in a different health district from that of the hospitals in Basurto and Galdakao. The municipality of Erandio is in the district covered by the Cruces public hospital, which is not involved in the contested calls for tenders.

60. To my mind, those arguments are not convincing.

61. With regard to the Departamento de Sanidad's argument concerning the territorial division of the public health service, it should be noted that, according to the settled case-law of the Court, Member States may not justify the restriction of a fundamental freedom by citing considerations of an administrative nature. (17)

62. In the case here at issue, the territorial division of the public health service established by the administration does not therefore constitute a sufficient justification for restrictions on the place of performance of the services which are the subject of the calls for tenders. Such justification must be based on evidence of genuine practical difficulties which require the service in question to be provided at health-care facilities located in Bilbao.

63. Likewise, I am not convinced by the Departamento de Sanidad's argument to the effect that, if the calls for tenders were to be extended to facilities located in other municipalities, it might prove unnecessary to conclude contracts with private entities, since the procedures in question could be carried out at a public hospital belonging to another health district, in particular at the Cruces Hospital, which is not involved in the contested calls for tenders.

64. EU law does not preclude the Departamento de Sanidad from having recourse to a public hospital located in another municipality in the province. A public authority has the possibility of performing the public interest tasks conferred on it by using its own resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities and may do so in cooperation with other public authorities. (18)

65. However, since that authority decided that it was necessary to enter into a contract with a private entity by way of a call for tenders, it may not exclude a tenderer by reference exclusively to the administrative division of the territory for the purpose of operating public hospitals.

66. Moreover, with regard to the considerations relating to reliability and high quality in the operation of the health-care system, invoked by the Spanish Government, it should be noted that those considerations undoubtedly constitute a criterion capable of justifying a restriction on the freedom to provide services.

67. In the light of the settled case-law of the Court, the objective of maintaining a high-quality balanced medical and hospital service open to all may fall within the derogations under Article 52 TFEU in so far as it contributes to the attainment of a high level of health protection. (19)

68. The location of a health-care facility in relation to the patient's place of residence is undoubtedly an important factor in the provision of health services. The need to travel involves additional costs and, in emergencies, even a risk to the patient's health, difficulties for the patient's family and friends and, in the case here at issue, also inconvenience arising from the need for medical staff employed at public hospitals to travel to the private hospital at which the procedure is to be carried out.

69. In my opinion, those circumstances may undoubtedly constitute grounds for restricting the geographical scope of the health service provision covered by the calls for tenders.

70. Nevertheless, a restriction relating to the place of performance of the services must remain compatible with the principle of proportionality and must therefore be appropriate for securing the attainment of the objective pursued and must also not go beyond what is necessary for attaining that objective. (20)

71. In order for the restriction relating to the location of facilities to be capable of attaining the objective of ensuring accessible and high-quality health care, it cannot be based exclusively on the administrative division of the territory, since that division does not generally take account of specific factors arising from the location of health-care facilities and patients' place of residence.

72. In order to select the place of performance of services, an objective assessment must be made of the inconvenience arising as a result of the distance of the health-care facility from the place where patients live.

73. It should also be pointed out that the distance from the health-care facility may be more or less significant depending on the type of services. There is no doubt that distance is of fundamental importance in the case of urgent operations. Nevertheless, in the case of planned procedures, practical difficulties connected with travel times are a less important factor in the provision of health services.

74. In my opinion, the contested requirement is disproportionate, since it prescribes that services be provided within the boundaries of the city of Bilbao, which were established for administrative reasons. That requirement is not based on any objective assessment of difficulties in travelling to the facility, nor does it take account of the nature of the health-care services covered by the calls for tenders.

75. Evidence of the disproportionate nature of that requirement can also be found in the fact that the target patients, as the referring court points out, do not live exclusively in Bilbao but also in other adjacent municipalities and, in the case of one of the contracts, the public hospital which will be supported by the private facilities is Galdakao Hospital, which is located outside the municipality of Bilbao.

76. The Departamento de Sanidad and the Spanish Government maintain that the selection of Bilbao as the place of performance of the services is based on the assumption that that city is a public transport hub and that it is therefore easy to travel to Bilbao from other towns in the province.

77. In my view, that argument is not sufficient to justify the claim that the requirement at issue in the main proceedings is proportionate.

78. First, it cannot be ruled out that travelling from the centre of Bilbao to a private hospital located within the boundaries of the city may give rise to inconvenience similar to that involved in travelling to a hospital located in an adjacent municipality.

79. Secondly, it is apparent from the order for reference that the travel time from the centre of Bilbao to the hospital owned by the applicant, which is located in an adjacent municipality, does not involve a great deal of difficulty. From the replies given by the parties at the hearing, it is also apparent that the subject-matter of the contracts consists of health services connected with planned procedures.

80. In addition, the referring court points out that public contracts for the provision of health services awarded by the Departamento de Sanidad in the past did not contain any similar requirement concerning the location of facilities, and that the contracting authority's legal department issued an opinion suggesting that that requirement should be removed as it was difficult to reconcile with the principle of equal treatment of tenderers.

81. It should be pointed out that it is for the referring court to establish the factual circumstances and to assess proportionality on the basis of those circumstances.

82. Nevertheless, the facts described in the order for reference indicate that travelling to a hospital located in the municipality of Erandio would not cause excessive difficulties for patients or medical staff. Those facts therefore tend to point to the conclusion that the contested requirement is not proportionate.

83. As the Commission correctly notes in its written observations, it is also necessary to consider whether there are other means of attaining the objective in question which are less restrictive of the freedom to provide services.

84. In the case at issue, it cannot be ruled out that the general interest cited by the Departamento de Sanidad and the Spanish Government could be safeguarded by less restrictive means, for example by a requirement that the services be performed at health-care facilities to which travel by public transport would not cause undue inconvenience to patients and medical staff. A technical specification defined to that effect could also contain an approximate travel time from the centre of Bilbao that the contracting authority considers to be reasonable.

VI – Conclusion

85. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court reply as follows to the question referred by the Juzgado de lo Contencioso-Administrativo No 6, Bilbao (Spain):

Articles 2 and 23(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts preclude the inclusion, in the technical specifications of a public contract for the provision of public health-care services, of a requirement that the services be provided exclusively at health-care facilities located within a given municipality, where that requirement is not based on an objective assessment of travel difficulties for patients, regard being had to the nature of the health-care services which are the subject of the public contract.

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31), ('Directive 89/665') and by Article 2, Article 44(1) and Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between eVigilo Ltd ('eVigilo') and the Priešgaisrinės apsaugos ir gelbėjimo departamentas prie Vidaus reikalų ministerijos (General Department of Fire and Rescue at the Ministry of the Interior) ('the contracting authority') concerning the evaluation of tenders in a public procurement procedure.

Legal context

EU law

3 The third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

'Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.'

4 Recitals 2 and 46 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 state as follows:

'(2) The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.

(46) Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in conditions of effective competition. As a result, it is appropriate to allow the application of two award criteria only: "the lowest price" and "the most economically advantageous tender".

> To ensure compliance with the principle of equal treatment in the award of contracts, it is appropriate to lay down an obligation — established by case-law — to ensure the necessary transparency to enable all tenderers to be reasonably informed of the criteria and arrangements which will be applied to identify the most economically advantageous tender. It is therefore the responsibility of contracting authorities to indicate the criteria for the award of the contract and the relative weighting given to each of those criteria in sufficient time for tenderers to be aware of them when preparing their tenders. …
>
> Where the contracting authorities choose to award a contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they shall assess the tenders in order to determine which one offers the best value for money. In order to do this, they shall determine the economic and quality criteria which, taken as a whole, must make it possible to determine the most economically advantageous tender for the contracting authority. The determination of these criteria depends on the object of the contract since they must allow the level of performance offered by each tender to be assessed in the light of the object of the contract, as defined in the technical specifications, and the value for money of each tender to be measured.

5 Under Article 2 of Decision 2004/18:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

6 Article 44(1) of that directive provides:

‘Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 53 and 55, taking into account Article 24, after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded under Articles 45 and 46 has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52, and, where appropriate, with the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in paragraph 3.’

7 Article 53(1)(a) of that directive provides:

‘(1) Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions concerning the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of public contracts shall be either:

(a) when the award is made to the tender most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority, various criteria linked to the subject-matter of the public contract in question, for example, quality, price, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, cost-effectiveness, after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery date and delivery period or period of completion.’

Lithuanian law

8 Article 2(17) of Law No VIII-1210, of 13 August 1996, on public contracts (Žin., 1996, No 84-2000) (‘the law on public contracts’), provides:

‘“Declaration of impartiality”: a written declaration from a member of the Public Procurement Commission or an expert, showing that they are impartial vis-à-vis tenderers.’

9 Article 16(5) of that Law provides:

‘No member of the Public Procurement Commission and no expert may participate in the work of that Commission until he has signed a declaration of impartiality and a commitment to respect confidentiality.’

10 Article 3 of that law, entitled ‘Fundamental principles relating to the award of contracts and compliance therewith’, provides in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘(1) The contracting authority shall ensure that, during procedures relating to procurement and the award of contracts, the principles of equality of arms, non-discrimination, proportionality and transparency are observed.’

11 Article 90 of that Law provides:

‘On the basis of the results of the evaluation of the tenders carried out in accordance with the procedure referred to in Article 39(7) of the present law, the supplies, services or work shall be purchased from the tenderer who submitted the most economically advantageous tender or offered the lowest price. During procedures for awarding supply, service or works contracts, the tenders submitted may be evaluated on the basis of the criterion relating to the most economically advantageous tender or the lowest price, or on the basis of criteria relating to the purpose of the contract which are established in the procurement documents of the contracting authority and which may not restrict the access of tenderers to the contract either unlawfully or on the basis of bias or grant privileged access to certain tenderers, thereby infringing the conditions set out in Article 3(1) of the present law.’

12 Article 39(7) of the law on public contracts, in its version which was in force between 1 September 2009 and 2 March 2010, provides:

‘In order to take a decision relating to a successful tender, the contracting authority must:

(1) in accordance with the procedure and with the evaluation criteria established in the procurement documents, evaluate without delay the tenders submitted by the tenderers and establish a preliminary classification thereof (except where a single tenderer is requested to submit a tender, or where a single tenderer submits a tender). The preliminary classification of tenders shall be established in descending order of their economic advantage or in ascending order of their price. If the criterion for evaluating the most economically advantageous tender applies and the tenders submitted by several tenderers present an identical economic advantage, during the preliminary classification of the tenders priority shall be granted to the tenderer whose envelope containing the tenders was registered first or whose tender, made electronically, was submitted the earliest. In the event that the criterion for evaluating the tenders is the lowest price submitted and several tenders contain identical prices, during the preliminary classification, priority shall be granted to the tenderer whose envelope containing the tenders was registered first or whose tender, made electronically, was submitted earliest;

(2) notify without delay all the tenderers who submitted tenders of the preliminary classification of the tenders and all the tenderers whose tenders were not included in that classification, of the grounds for the rejection of their tenders, including the rejection of tenders on the ground of non-equivalence or failure to comply with the functional requirements and the requirements relating to the description of the planned performances, established by the contracting authority in accordance with Article 25 of the present law;

(3) not confirm the classification of the tenders or take a decision relating to the successful tender until it has examined, in accordance with the procedure referred to in the present law, the applications and the actions of the tenderers who submitted tenders (where such actions and applications have been made), and at least 10 days after sending the notification of the preliminary classification of the tenders to the tenderers.’

13 Article 39(7) of the law on public contracts, in the version in force since 2 March 2010, is worded as follows:

‘In order to take a decision on the award of a contract, the contracting authority must, in accordance with the procedure and with the evaluation criteria established in the procurement documents, evaluate without delay the tenders made by the tenderers, in the situation referred to in Article 32(8) of the present law, the conformity of the tenderer, whose tender may be successful on the basis of the results of the evaluation, with the minimum requirements relating to qualification, establish the classification of the tenders (except where a single tenderer is requested to submit a tender, or where a single tenderer submits a tender) and accept a tender. The preliminary classification of tenders shall be established in descending order of their economic advantage or in ascending order of their price. In the event that the criterion for evaluating the most economically advantageous tender applies and the tenders submitted by several tenderers present an identical economic advantage, during the classification of the tenders priority shall be granted to the tenderer whose envelope containing the tenders was registered first or whose tender, made electronically, was submitted earliest.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

14 On 22 January 2010, the contracting authority published an open invitation to tender entitled 'for the purchase of a system for warning and informing the public, using the infrastructure of the networks of providers of services relating to public mobile telephone connections', in the context of which eVigilo, together with 'ERP' UAB and 'Inta' UAB, and another consortium composed of 'NT Service' UAB and 'HNIT-Baltic' UAB, submitted their tenders.

15 According to the referring court, the value of the contract in the dispute pending before it being 14 998 972.45 Lithuanian litas (LLT) (approximately EUR 4 344 002), the invitation to tender at issue concerns a purchase coming within the ambit of Directives 2004/18 and 89/665.

16 It is apparent from the case-file submitted to the Court that, in paragraph 67 of the conditions of the invitation to tender there appear, as evaluation criteria, the overall price of that warning system, the number of operators taking part in the project with the tenderer and the general and functional requirements. The latter include the justification for the technical and architectural solution and the particulars of the functional elements and their conformity with the technical specifications and the requirements of the contracting authority; the integrity and compatibility of the system proposed with the technical and information-technology infrastructure used by the contracting authority; the extension of the functional scope of the system and the justification thereof; and the strategy for implementing the project, the effectiveness of the management plan, the description of quality control measures and of the project team.

17 The contracting authority's Public Procurement Commission, having examined the evaluation of the technical tenders carried out by six experts, upheld the results of that evaluation. On 4 November 2010, the contracting authority informed the tenderers of the results of that evaluation.

18 On 2 November 2010, eVigilo brought a first action relating to the lawfulness of the procurement procedures, arguing in particular that the conditions of the call for tenders lacked clarity.

19 Further details were added to the application on 20 December 2010, alleging failings in the experts' evaluation and that the results of that evaluation were groundless.

20 On 31 January 2011, by a second application, eVigilo contested the lawfulness of the actions of the contracting authority, claiming that the third parties' tender should be rejected, because its price exceeded the level of financing allocated to the project at issue.

21 On 8 March 2011, the contracting party and 'NT Service' UAB and 'HNIT-Baltic' UAB concluded the contract, even though the proceedings between eVigilo and the contracting authority were still pending.

22 On 19 March 2012, eVigilo added to its first application relating to the lawfulness of the evaluation of tenders, explaining its arguments concerning the erroneous definition of the criteria in the invitation to tender for evaluating an economic advantage.

23 On 10 April 2012, eVigilo again added to its first application and invoked new facts connected with the bias of the experts who evaluated the tenders, liable to show the existence of professional relations between the latter and the specialists referred to in the third parties' tender.

24 It claimed that the specialists referred to in the tender submitted by the successful tenderers were, at the Technical University of Kaunas (Kauno technologijos universitetas), colleagues of three of the six experts of the contracting authority who drew up the tender documents and evaluated the tenders.

25 eVigilo's applications were rejected by the courts of first instance and of appeal.

26 By its appeal on a point of law before the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas, eVigilo states that those courts incorrectly assessed the connections between the specialists referred to by the successful tenderers and the experts appointed by the contracting authority. It claims also that those courts thereby failed to take account of the experts' bias.

27 Furthermore, eVigilo claims that the contracting authority laid down very abstract criteria for the evaluation of the most economically advantageous tender, in particular the criterion of 'compatibility with the needs of the contracting authority', which had an effect on the tenders made by the tenderers, and on the evaluation of those tenders by the contracting authority. It claims that it was able to understand the award criteria of the most economically advantageous tender only after the contracting authority sent it exhaustive reasons for the refusal to award the contract. It was, therefore, only after that communication had been made that the period for bringing an action ought to have started to run.

28 According to the contracting authority and the successful tenderers, the courts of first instance and of appeal were correct in holding that eVigilo was required not only to show objective connections existing between the successful tenderers' specialists and the experts who evaluated the tenders, but also to prove the subjective fact that the experts were biased. They maintain too that eVigilo challenged out of time the lawfulness of the criteria for the evaluation of the most economically advantageous tender.

29 In addition, the contracting authority and the successful tenderers contest the claim that those criteria for the award of the public contract were inappropriately defined, given that, until the closing date for the submission of tenders, eVigilo had not contested them and had not requested that they be explained.

30 In those circumstances, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas decided to stay proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Are the public procurement rules of EU law — the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of [Directive 89/665, as amended by] Directive 2007/66, in which are laid down the principles of effectiveness and expeditiousness with regard to the defence of rights of tenderers which have been infringed, Article 2 of Directive [2004/18], which lays down the principles of equal treatment of tenderers and of transparency, and Articles 44(1) and 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, in which is set out the procedure governing the conclusion of a contract with the tenderer which has submitted the most economically advantageous tender — to be understood and interpreted together or separately (but without a limitation to the aforementioned provisions) as meaning that:

(a) in the case where a tenderer has become aware of a possible significant connection (link) which another tenderer has with the contracting authority's experts who evaluated the tenders, and (or) has become aware of the potentially exceptional position of that tenderer by reason of preparatory work previously performed in connection with the procurement procedure in dispute, and where, in regard to those circumstances, the contracting authority has not undertaken any actions, that information alone is sufficient to establish a claim that the review body should recognise as unlawful the actions of the contracting authority which failed to ensure transparency and objectivity in the procedures, the applicant, moreover, not being required to prove in concrete terms that the experts acted in a biased manner;

(b) the review body, having established that the grounds for the applicant's abovementioned claim are well founded, is not obliged, when ruling on the consequences which those grounds may have for the results of the tendering procedure, to have regard for the fact that the results of the evaluation of the tenders submitted by tenderers would essentially have been the same if there had not been any biased assessors among the experts who evaluated the tenders;

(c) the tenderer becomes (finally) aware of the content of the criteria relating to the most economically advantageous tender, which were formulated in accordance with the qualitative parameters and set out in abstract terms in the tendering conditions (criteria such as completeness and compatibility with the needs of the contracting authority), in respect of which the tenderer was essentially able to submit a tender, only at the time when, in accordance with those criteria, the contracting authority evaluated the tenders submitted by tenderers and provided interested parties with comprehensive information concerning the grounds for the decisions taken, and only from that moment could the limitation period governing the review procedure laid down in national law be applied to that tenderer?

(2) Must Article 53(1)(a) of Directive [2004/18], applied in conjunction with the principles governing the award of a contract set out in [Article] 2 of that directive, be understood and interpreted as meaning that contracting authorities are prohibited from establishing (and applying) a procedure for the evaluation of tenders submitted by tenderers under which the results of the evaluation of tenders depend on how comprehensively tenderers have demonstrated that their tenders satisfy the requirements of the tendering documents, that is to say, the more comprehensively (more extensively) the tenderer has described the conformity of its tender with the tendering conditions, the greater will be the number of marks awarded to its tender?'

Consideration of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Question 1(a) and (b)

31 By question 1(a) and (b), the referring court asks, in essence, whether the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 and Articles 2, 44(1) and 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding a finding that the evaluation of the tenders is unlawful solely because the tenderer has had significant connections with experts appointed by the contracting authority who evaluated the tenders, without other evidence in the proceedings being examined, including the fact that those experts may have been biased had no effect on the decision to award the contract and without the unsuccessful tenderer being required to provide tangible proof that those experts were biased.

32 According to Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts', '[c]ontracting authorities [are to] treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way'.

33 Under the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, the aim of which is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure, all tenderers must be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the tenders of all competitors must be subject to the same conditions (see, to that effect, judgments in Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta, C-496/99 P, EU:C:2004:236, paragraph 110, and Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 44).

34 The obligation of transparency, which is its corollary, is essentially intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority with respect to certain tenderers or certain tenders (see, to that effect, judgments in Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta, EU:C:2004:236, paragraph 111, and Cartiera dell'Adda, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 44).

35 A conflict of interests entails the risk that the contracting authority may choose to be guided by considerations unrelated to the contract in question and that on account of that fact alone preference may be given to a tenderer. Such a conflict of interests is thus liable to constitute an infringement of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18.

36 In that regard, the fact that the contracting authority appointed experts acting on its mandate in order to evaluate the tenders submitted does not relieve that authority of its responsibility to comply with the requirements of EU law (see, to that effect, judgment in SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 23).

37 The finding of bias on the part of an expert requires in particular the assessment of facts and evidence that comes within the competence of the contracting authorities and the administrative or judicial control authorities.

38 It should be pointed out that neither Directive 89/665 nor Directive 2004/18 contains specific provisions in that regard.

39 The Court has consistently held that, in the absence of EU rules governing the matter, it is for every Member State to lay down the detailed rules of administrative and judicial procedures for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from EU law. Those detailed procedural rules must, however, be no less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and must not render impossible in practice or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by EU law (principle of effectiveness) (see judgment in Club Hotel Loutraki and Others, C-145/08 et C-149/08, EU:C:2010:247, paragraph 74 and the case-law cited).

40 In particular, the detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 (see judgment in Uniplex (UK), C-406/08, EU:C:2010:45, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

41 It is not, as a general rule, contrary to those principles for an expert's bias to be established in a Member State solely on the basis of an objective situation in order to prevent any risk that the public contracting authority could be guided by considerations unrelated to the contract in question and liable, by virtue of that fact alone, to give preference to one tenderer.

42 Concerning the rules on evidence in that regard, it should be pointed out that, in accordance with Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authorities are to treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and to act in a transparent way. It follows that they are assigned an active role in the application of those principles of public procurement.

43 Since that duty relates to the very essence of the public procurement directives (see judgment in Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 45), it follows that the contracting authority is, at all events, required to determine whether any conflicts of interests exist and to take appropriate measures in order to prevent and detect conflicts of interests and remedy them. It would be incompatible with that active role for the applicant to bear the burden of proving, in the context of the appeal proceedings, that the experts appointed by the contracting authority were in fact biased. Such an outcome would also be contrary to the principle of effectiveness and the requirement of an effective remedy laid down in the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, in light, in particular, of the fact that a tenderer is not, in general, in a position to have access to information and evidence allowing him to prove such bias.

44 Thus, if the unsuccessful tenderer presents objective evidence calling into question the impartiality of one of the contracting authority's experts, it is for that contracting authority to examine all the relevant circumstances having led to the adoption of the decision relating to the award of the contract in order to prevent and detect conflicts of interests and remedy them, including, where appropriate, requesting the parties to provide certain information and evidence.

45 Evidence such as the claims in the main proceedings relating to the connections between the experts appointed by the contracting authority and the specialists of the undertakings awarded the contract, in particular, the fact that those persons work together in the same university, belong to the same research group or have relationships of employer and employee within that university, if proved to be true, constitutes such objective evidence as must lead to a thorough examination by the contracting authority or, as the case may be, by the administrative or judicial control authorities.

46 Subject to compliance with the obligations under EU law, and specifically with those referred to in paragraph 43 above, the concept of 'bias' and the criteria for it are to be defined by national law. The same applies to the rules relating to the legal effects of possible bias. Thus, it is for national law to determine whether, and if so to what extent, the competent administrative and judicial authorities must take into account the fact that possible bias on the part of the experts had no effect on the decision to award the contract.

47 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to question 1(a) and (b) is that the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 and Articles 2, 44(1) and 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as not precluding a finding that the evaluation of the tenders is unlawful on the sole ground that the tenderer has had significant connections with experts appointed by the contracting authority who evaluated the tenders. The contracting authority is, at all events, required to determine the existence of possible conflicts of interests and to take appropriate measures in order to prevent and detect conflicts of interests and remedy them. In the context of the examination of an action for annulment of an award decision on the ground that the experts were biased, the unsuccessful tenderer may not be required to provide tangible proof of the experts' bias. It is, in principle, a matter of national law to determine whether, and if so to what extent, the competent administrative and judicial control authorities must take account of the fact that possible bias on the part of experts had an effect on the decision to award the contract.

Question 1(c)

48 By question 1(c), the referring court asks, in essence, whether the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 and Articles 2, 44(1) and 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as requiring a right to bring an action relating to the lawfulness of the tender procedure to be open, after the expiry of the period prescribed by national law, to a tenderer who could understand the tender conditions only when the contracting authority, after evaluating the tenders, provided exhaustive information relating to the reasons for its decision.

49 That question refers to the period prescribed for bringing an action relating to the lawfulness of a call for tenders provided for by national law. That question starts from the premiss that a legal remedy is available to the tenderers concerned, at the stage of the call for tenders, allowing the lawfulness of the latter to be contested. It relates to the question whether an interested tenderer is prevented by being out of time from bringing an action relating to the lawfulness of a call for tenders which it brought before being informed about the award of the contract at issue.

50 In that regard, it should be noted that the provisions of Directive 89/665, intended to protect tenderers against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority, are designed to reinforce existing arrangements for ensuring the effective application of the EU rules on the award of public contracts, in particular where infringements can still be rectified (judgment in Fastweb, C-19/13, EU:C:2014:2194, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited). Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 requires effective remedies to be available 'under detailed rules which the Member States may establish', and in particular, as rapidly as possible, in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of that directive.

51 In accordance with the Court's case-law, the setting of reasonable limitation periods for bringing proceedings must be regarded as satisfying, in principle, the requirement of effectiveness under Directive 89/665, since it is an application of the fundamental principle of legal certainty. The full implementation of the objective sought by Directive 89/665 would be undermined if candidates and tenderers were allowed to invoke, at any stage of the award procedure, infringements of the rules of public procurement, thus obliging the contracting authority to restart the entire procedure in order to correct such infringements (judgments in Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraphs 75 and 76 and the case-law cited; Lämmerzahl, C-241/06, EU:C:2007:597, paragraphs 50 and 51; and Commission v Ireland, C-456/08, EU:C:2010:46, paragraphs 51 and 52).

52 According to the Court's case-law, the objective laid down in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 of guaranteeing effective procedures for review of infringements of the provisions applicable in the field of public procurement can be realised only if the periods laid down for bringing proceedings start to run only from the date on which the claimant knew, or ought to have known, of the alleged infringement of those provisions (see judgments in Uniplex (UK), EU:C:2010:45, paragraph 32, and Idrodinamica Spurgo Velox and Others, C-161/13, EU:C:2014:307, paragraph 37).

53 It should be noted that the award criteria for contracts must be stated in the contract notice or in the tender specifications and the fact that they are incomprehensible or lack clarity may constitute an infringement of Directive 2004/18.

54 In paragraph 42 of its judgment in SIAC Construction, C-19/00, EU:C:2001:553, the Court held that the award criteria must be formulated, in the contract documents or the contract notice, in such a way as to allow all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret them in the same way.

55 It follows that it is for the referring court to assess whether the tenderer concerned was in fact unable to understand the award criteria at issue or whether he should have understood them by applying the standard of a reasonably informed tenderer exercising ordinary care.

56 In the context of that assessment, it is necessary to take into account the fact that the tenderer concerned and the other tenderers were capable of submitting tenders and that the tenderer concerned, before submitting its tender, did not request clarification from the contracting authority.

57 Where it follows from that assessment that the tender conditions were in fact incomprehensible to the tenderer and that the latter was prevented from introducing an application within the period provided for by national law, that tenderer is entitled to bring an action until the period prescribed for bringing proceedings against the decision to award the contract has expired.

58 Consequently, the answer to question 1(c) is that the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 and Articles 2, 44(1) and 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as requiring a right to bring an action relating to the lawfulness of the tender procedure to be open, after the expiry of the period prescribed by national law, to reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers who could understand the tender conditions only when the contracting authority, after evaluating the tenders, provided exhaustive information relating to the reasons for its decision. Such a right to bring an action may be exercised until the period prescribed for bringing proceedings against the decision to award the contract has expired.

59 By question 2, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 2 and 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as allowing a contracting authority to use, as an evaluation criterion for tenders submitted by the tenderers for a public procurement contract, the degree to which those tenders are consistent with the requirements included in the tender documentation.

60 According to Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, the tender most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority is to be assessed according to various criteria linked to the subject-matter of the public contract in question, for example, quality, price, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, cost-effectiveness, after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery date and delivery period or period of completion.

61 According to the case-law, as follows from the use of the phrase ‘for example’, that list is non-exhaustive (see judgment in Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraph 84).

62 Thus, the contracting authority has the power to establish other award criteria, in so far as they are connected with the purpose of the contract and respect the principles set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18.

63 It is all the more important that the contracting authority must enjoy such freedom since the most economically advantageous tender is to be assessed ‘from the point of view of the contracting authority’.

64 Subject to the checking by the referring court, it appears that, in the main proceedings, the degree of conformity of the tender with the requirements of the tender documentation is connected with the purpose of the contract and there is nothing to suggest that that award criterion fails to respect the principles set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18.

65 Consequently, the answer to question 2 is that Articles 2 and 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as allowing, in principle, a contracting authority to use, as an evaluation criterion for tenders submitted by the tenderers for a public procurement contract, the degree to which those tenders are consistent with the requirements included in the tender documentation.

Costs

66 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. The third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, and Articles 2, 44(1) and 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, must be interpreted as not precluding a finding that the evaluation of the tenders is unlawful solely on the grounds that the tenderer has had significant connections with experts appointed by the contracting authority who evaluated the tenders. The contracting authority is, at all events, required to determine the existence of possible conflicts of interests and to take appropriate measures in order to prevent and detect conflicts of interests and remedy them. In the context of the examination of an action for annulment of an award decision on the ground that the experts were biased, the unsuccessful tenderer may not be required to provide tangible proof of the experts' bias. It is, in principle, a matter of national law to determine whether, and if so to what extent, the competent administrative and judicial control authorities must take account of the fact that possible bias on the part of experts has had an effect on the decision to award the contract.

   The third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2007/66, and Articles 2, 44(1) and 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, must be interpreted as requiring a right to bring an action relating to the lawfulness of the tender procedure to be open, after the expiry of the period prescribed by national law, to reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers who could understand the tender conditions only when the contracting authority, after evaluating the tenders, provided exhaustive information relating to the reasons for its decision. Such a right to bring an action may be exercised until the expiry of the period for bringing proceedings against the decision to award the contract.

2. Articles 2 and 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as allowing, in principle, a contracting authority to use, as an evaluation criterion of tenders submitted by the tenderers for a public contract, the degree to which they are consistent with the requirements in the tender documentation.
