56. The Italian Government cites the existence of a concession as grounds for calling into question the reliance on Directive 89/665. It argues that, since Article 1(1) thereof defines its scope by reference to Directive 2004/18, Directive 89/665 is not applicable to such concessions.

57. The Commission, on the other hand, submits that, in Italy, Article 30(7) of the Public Procurement Code extends the application of Directive 89/665 to public service concessions. There is, therefore, in its contention, a Community link between the national legislation and EU law such as to sustain the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice to give a preliminary ruling, in accordance with settled case-law. (27)

58. This might open the way for the applicability of Directive 89/665. However, 'consideration of the limits which the national legislature may have placed on the application of Community law to purely internal situations, to which it is applicable only through the operation of the national legislation, is a matter for domestic law and hence falls within the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of the Member State'. (28)

59. Furthermore, the specific provisions on public passenger transport services by land which are laid down in Regulation No 1370/2007 make the award of the corresponding concessions subject to the rules contained in Article 5(2) to (6) of that regulation, which goes on to say, in paragraph 7, that decisions taken in accordance with those paragraphs must be capable of being 'reviewed effectively and rapidly, at the request of any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law or national rules implementing that law'.

60. It is therefore apparent that the provisions of Regulation No 1370/2007 and those of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 are essentially the same in this regard. Indeed, recital 21 of that regulation states that ‘effective legal protection should be guaranteed, not only for awards falling within the scope of [Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18] but also for other contracts awarded under this Regulation. An effective review procedure is needed and should be comparable, where appropriate, to the relevant procedures set out in … Directive 89/665/EEC … and … Directive 92/13/EEC …’.

61. In short, the outcome arrived at, albeit via a different route, is the same, that is to say an obligation to establish effective review procedures. On that basis, the dispute lies in determining to what extent those review procedures must be made available to undertakings which did not take part in the tendering procedure.

(b) Transport service contract

62. The second scenario is that the legal transaction at issue fell within the category of transport service contracts. Indeed, the ‘periodic indicative notice’ of 22 February 2014 refers exclusively to Directive 2004/17 (29) and lays down as the award criterion the economically most advantageous offer. Similarly, point 2 of the contract notice of 29 May 2015 refers to consideration payable to the successful tenderer that is to be definitively specified in the letters of invitation to submit the financial offer mentioned in point 6 thereof.

63. It could therefore be argued that, in the light of those features, the contract at issue is not a transport service concession as defined in Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17, (30) but a transport service contract. If that were the case, Article 5(1) of Regulation No 1370/2007 would pave the way for the application of Directive 2004/17 and, therefore, for the review regime provided for in Articles 1 and 2 of Directive 92/13, which is analogous to the corresponding regime under Directive 89/665, with which the referring court’s question is concerned.

2. Answer to the question referred

64. Although the nub of the debate centres on standing to seek review of the tendering procedure and, therefore, on the right of access to the review system, the order for reference extends that debate to other areas by the somewhat generic reference to Article 1(1), (2) and (3) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665.

65. The Corte Costituzionale (Constitutional Court) relies on the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) in order, in judgment No 245/2016, to lay down a premiss which I find difficult to refute: anyone who has voluntarily and freely refrained from participating in a procurement procedure has no standing, in principle, to seek the annulment of that procedure. This view is consistent with that expressed by the Court of Justice in the judgment in Grossmann when interpreting Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665. (31)

66. The supreme Italian courts accept, however, that review procedures may also be open to persons who did not take part in the tendering procedure, in certain exceptional circumstances. These include, in the words of judgment No 245/2016, situations in which the challenge is directed against the fact that no call for tenders has been issued or its scheduling, or the specifications in the contract notice that are immediately exclusive or, finally, against specifications which impose burdens that are manifestly incomprehensible or totally disproportionate or that make it impossible to submit a bid’.

67. Once again, the recognition of standing to seek review seems to me to be consistent with the standing recognised by the Court of Justice in cases where the specifications in the invitation to tender or in the contract documents were, in and of themselves, discriminatory to such an extent as to preclude the participation of one or more undertakings. (32) If ‘[the aforementioned undertakings’] chances of being awarded the contract are non-existent by reason of the existence of those [discriminatory] specifications’, (33) they must be recognised as having standing to seek review without having to have participated in the tendering procedure beforehand. (34)

68. I do not therefore see any discrepancies between the interpretation of Directive 89/665 which has been adopted by the Court of Justice, on the one hand, and the supreme Italian courts’ interpretation of their domestic legislation, on the other, so far as concerns the standing of persons who, although not having participated in the tendering procedure, seek to challenge discriminatory specifications that close off all access to that procedure.

69. If the question referred for a preliminary ruling is confined to resolving the hypothetical opposition between Directive 89/665 and the national legislation in the abstract, the foregoing is sufficient to demonstrate that no such incompatibility exists. The referring court frames that question in terms that do not truly reflect all the nuances of the position adopted by the Italian supreme courts, as this emerges from national case-law. (35)

70. If the answer to that question is extended to the specific features of the dispute in the main proceedings, in which the judgment on AMT's lack of standing has become final, it must be noted that it is, to say the least, debatable (36) whether the fact that the land transport services were put out to tender at regional level (instead of being subdivided into lots at a provincial or lower level) was, in and of itself, discriminatory. The fact that small undertakings lacked the means to take part in such a tendering procedure, which tends to be an inherent feature of large-scale invitations to tender, is a different matter.

71. In any event, the view taken by the Corte Costituzionale (Constitutional Court) was that, in the material circumstances, the call for tenders made it highly unlikely that AMT would be awarded the contract, but not absolutely impossible. (37) It thus dismissed the proposition that there was 'a real and actual impediment to participation in the call for tenders'. Inasmuch as they constitute a now final adjudication upon the substance of the specifications concerned, those findings cannot but be binding on the referring court and must also be adhered to by the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling.

72. The Commission relies on the judgment in Grossmann in order to argue that there is no requirement of absolute certainty as to exclusion from a call for tenders, the mere possibility of exclusion being sufficient to enable the undertaking concerned to challenge that call for tenders without needing to have participated in it.

73. My reading of the judgment in Grossmann does not in any way tally with the Commission's. I consider it dangerous to make the calculation of probabilities the only decisive factor in the resolution of this dispute. If that were the only decisive factor, any undertaking could claim that the specifications in a call for tenders (even if not discriminatory) would probably have the effect of excluding it from the procedure, which would open the door for potentially frivolous challenges from operators having elected not to participate in the award procedure.

74. In any event, however, I would reiterate that it is not for the Court of Justice to determine whether the Corte Costituzionale (Constitutional Court) was wrong to find that AMT did not have standing in this particular case. What matters — and I would emphasise that the referring court's question is concerned with the compatibility of the national legislation with Directive 89/665 — is whether the general position which the supreme Italian courts have adopted on the standing of economic operators which have not participated in a call for tenders to seek review of that procedure (which is that they do not have it in principle but may be afforded it in certain cases) is consistent with EU law, as I think it is.

VI. Conclusion

75. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court of Justice:

(1) Declare the question referred for a preliminary ruling by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Liguria (Regional Administrative Court, Liguria, Italy) to be inadmissible;

(2) In the alternative, declare that Article 1(1), (2) and (3) and Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts do not preclude national legislation, as interpreted by the highest courts of the State concerned, under which:

– anyone who has voluntarily and freely refrained from participating in a contract award procedure does not, in principle, have standing to seek the annulment of that procedure;

– situations in which the challenge is directed against the fact that no call for tenders has been issued or that one has been issued, against specifications in the contract notice that are immediately exclusive or, finally, against specifications which impose burdens that are manifestly incomprehensible or totally disproportionate or that make it impossible to submit a bid are exempt from that rule.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Order of 14 October 2010 (C-336/08, not published, ‘order in Reinke’, EU:C:2010:604).

---

3 Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) and Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14).

---

4 Wording taken from Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665/EEC and 92/13/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31). I have inserted between square brackets the differences between the text of Directive 92/13 and the corresponding wording of Directive 89/665.

---

5 Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2007 on public passenger transport services by rail and by road and repealing Council Regulations 1191/69 and 1107/70) (OJ 2007 L 315, p. 1).

---

6 Gazzetta Ufficiale No 188 of 13 August 2011, ratified, with amendments, by Law No 148 of 14 September 2011.

---

7 Bollettino Ufficiale No 17 of 8 November 2013; ‘Liguria Regional Law No 33/2013’.

---

8 These articles were revoked by Regional Law No 19 of 9 August 2016 introducing ‘amendments to Regional Law No 33 of 7 November 2013 (Reform of the regional and local public transport system) and other legislative amendments in matters of local public transport’ (Gazzetta Ufficiale No 11 of 18 March 2017; ‘Liguria Regional Law No 19/2016’).

---

9 Legislative Decree No 104 of 2 July 2010 (Gazzetta Ufficiale No 156 of 7 July 2010).

---

10 Regio Decreto No 1443 of 28 October 1940 (Gazzetta Ufficiale No 253 of 28 October 1940).

---

11 OJ 2015/S 105-191825. That notice was preceded by another ‘indicative notice’ of 18 February 2014 (2014/S 038-063550), which made reference to Directive 2004/17.

---

12 ‘TAR, Liguria’.

---

13 See footnote 8.

---

14 Decreto legislativo 12 aprile 2006, n. 163. Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 (Gazzetta Ufficiale No 100 of 2 May 2006; 'Legislative Decree No 2006' or 'Public Procurement Code').

15 Judgment of 12 February 2004 (C-230/02, 'judgment in Grossmann', EU:C:2004:93).

16 Paragraph 16.

17 It could of course be argued that the circumstances in Reinke were not identical to those in this case. I take the view, however, that, notwithstanding a number of incidental differences, the analogy between the two is indisputable.

18 Article 10a of Council Directive 85/337/EEC of 27 June 1985 on the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment (OJ 1985 L 175, p. 40) and Article 15a of Council Directive 96/61/EC of 24 September 1996 concerning integrated pollution prevention and control (OJ 1996 L 257, p. 26).

19 Article 14 of Directive 2004/48/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the enforcement of intellectual property rights (OJ 2004 L 157, p. 45); and Article 6(3) of Directive 2011/7/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 2011 on combating late payment in commercial transactions (OJ 2011 L 48, p. 1).

20 Judgment of 11 April 2013, Edwards, (C-260/11, EU:C:2013:221, paragraphs 37 and 38).

21 The referring court does not provide any insight into the disagreement between the parties with respect to the award and amount of the (future) costs of the proceedings. What is more, the parties to those proceedings all declined to take part in the preliminary ruling proceedings, a fact which, to my mind, does not indicate much of an interest in their outcome.

22 The order for reference states that the legislation and the previous case-law of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) on the standing to seek review enjoyed by a person who has not participated in the call for tenders used to be 'in line with Community case-law'. That situation changed, according to the referring court, as a result of constitutional judgment No 245/2016, a 'supremely binding' precedent which has been followed by subsequent judgments of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State).

23 See the Opinion of Advocate General Sharpston in Hörmann Reisen (C-292/15, EU:C:2016:480, point 26); and the Opinion of Advocate General Cruz Villalón in Norma-A and Dekom (C-348/10, EU:C:2011:468, point 39 et seq.).

24 The service provider must also take on the risk of operating the service. See the judgment of 10 November 2011, Norma-A and Dekom (C-348/10, EU:C:2011:721, paragraph 44).

25 'Public service contracts shall be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down in this Regulation. However, service contracts or public service contracts as defined in Directives 2004/17/EC or 2004/18/EC for public passenger transport services by bus or tram shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures provided for under those Directives where such contracts do not take the form of service concessions contracts as defined in those Directives.'

26 According to that article, ‘the provisions of the Public Procurement Code shall not apply to service concessions other than in the circumstances provided for in this article’. Paragraph 3 of that article provides for the possibility of employing an ‘informal procedure whereby tenders are invited from at least five competitors’ as a means of procuring a supplier for the service, which is the procedure that the contracting authority planned to use in this case.

---

27 ‘Thus, an interpretation, by the Court, of provisions of EU law in situations outside its scope is justified where those provisions have been made applicable to such situations by national law directly and unconditionally, in order to ensure that those internal situations and situations governed by national law are treated in the same way’ [judgment of 19 October 2017, Solar Electric Martinique (C-303/16, EU:C:2017:773, paragraph 27 and case-law cited)].

---

28 Judgment of 18 October 1990, Dzodzi (C-297/88 and C-197/89, EU:C:1990:360, paragraphs 41 and 42).

---

29 Such notices are dealt with in Article 41 of that directive.

---

30 ‘A “service concession” is a contract of the same type as a service contract except for the fact that the concession for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right together with payment.’

---

31 Judgment in Grossmann, paragraph 27: ‘participation in a contract award procedure may, in principle, … validly constitute a condition which must be fulfilled before the person concerned can show an interest in obtaining the contract at issue or that he risks suffering harm as a result of the allegedly unlawful nature of the decision to award the contract. If he has not submitted a tender, it will be difficult for such a person to show that he has an interest in challenging that decision or that he has been harmed or risks being harmed as a result of that award decision.’

---

32 Ibidem, paragraph 28: ‘where an undertaking has not submitted a tender because there were allegedly discriminatory specifications in the documentation relating to the invitation to tender or in the contract documents, which have specifically prevented it from being in a position to provide all the services requested’, that undertaking ‘would be entitled to seek review of those specifications directly, even before the procedure for awarding the contract concerned is terminated’ (my emphasis).

---

33 Ibidem, paragraph 29 (my emphasis).

---

34 Ibidem, paragraph 30: ‘[i]t must, therefore, be possible for an undertaking to seek review of such discriminatory specifications directly, without waiting for the contract award procedure to be terminated.’

---

35 See the account given of that position in point 18 of this Opinion.

---

36 Reasons of efficiency or economies of scale may dictate that public road transport services be provided at a certain level (regional, for example), instead of being broken down into lots at lower levels. The choice between those two options falls to the competent authorities, which must also consider whether opting for a single lot would create disproportionate barriers to entry for smaller economic operators. In this case, the Competition and Markets Authority, on 25 June 2015, asked the Liguria Regional Agency for Local Public Transport to set up ‘a number of lots so as to ensure the broadest possible participation in the competitive procedure’.

---

37 In its action before the TAR, Liguria, AMT stated that the contract notice ‘significantly restricted the scope for participation … by small and medium-sized operators such as local public transport undertakings, compelling these to look for joint ventures with larger operators at any cost’ (page 51 of the application) (my emphasis).

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Third Chamber)

7 August 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Review procedures — Directive 89/665/EC — Action for damages — Article 2(6) — National rules making the admissibility of any action for damages subject to a prior and definitive determination of the illegality of the decision of the contracting authority giving rise to the damage alleged — Actions for annulment — Prior action before an arbitration committee — Judicial review of arbitral decisions — National rules excluding pleas not raised before the arbitration committee — Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union — Article 47 — Right to effective judicial protection — Principles of effectiveness and equivalence)

In Case C-300/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Kúria (Supreme Court, Hungary), made by decision of 11 May 2017, received at the Court on 24 May 2017, in the proceedings

Hochtief AG

v

Budapest Főváros Önkormányzata,

THE COURT (Third Chamber),

composed of L. Bay Larsen, President of the Chamber, J. Malenovský, M. Safjan, D. Šváby and M. Vilaras (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: M. Wathelet,

Registrar: R. Șereș, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing of 30 April 2018,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of

– Hochtief AG, by A. László, ügyvéd, and I. Varga, konzulens,

– the Hungarian Government, by M.Z. Fehér and G. Koós, acting as Agents,

– the Greek Government, by M. Tassopoulou, D. Tsagkaraki, E. Tsaousi and K. Georgiadis, acting as Agents,

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

– the Polish Government, by B. Majczyna, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by P. Ondrůšek and A. Tokár, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 7 June 2018,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1; 'Directive 89/665').

2 The request has been made in the course of proceedings between Hochtief AG and Budapest Főváros Önkormányzata (Local Government for Budapest, Hungary; 'the contracting authority') in the context of a claim for compensation for damage which Hochtief suffered as a result of an infringement of public procurement rules.

Legal context

European Union law

3 The fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

'Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24/EU [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65)] or Directive [2014/23], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.'

4 Article 1(3) of that directive provides:

'Member States shall ensure that review procedures are available, under detailed rules which Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

5 Article 2(1), (2) and (6) of Directive 89/665 provides:

'1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

…

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

2. The powers specified in paragraph 1 and Articles 2d and 2e may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

…

6. The Member States may provide that where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.'

Hungarian law

6 Article 108(3) of the közbeszerzésekről szóló 2003. évi CXXIX. törvény (Law No CXXIX of 2003 on public procurement, Magyar Közlöny 2003/157; 'the Law on public contracts') provides:

‘Candidate tenderers may revise their request to participate until the time limit for submitting the request has expired.’

7 Article 350 of that Law provides:

‘The possibility of asserting any civil claim based on an infringement of provisions relating to public contracts or to the procedure for awarding them shall be subject to the requirement that the public procurement arbitration committee or a court (hearing an appeal against a decision of the public procurement arbitration committee) has made a final declaration that a provision has been infringed.’

8 Article 351 of that Law is worded as follows:

‘If a tenderer’s claim for damages from the contracting authority is limited to recovering the expenses incurred in connection with the preparation of the tender and with participation in the contract award procedure, it shall be sufficient for the tenderer to prove, for the purposes of asserting the claim for compensation:

(a) that the contracting authority infringed any provision of the law on public contracts or the procedure for awarding them;

(b) that the tenderer had a real chance of being awarded the contract; and

(c) that the infringement reduced its chances of being awarded the contract.’

9 Article 339/A of the Polgári perrendtartásról szóló 1952. évi III. törvény (Law No III of 1952 instituting the Code of civil procedure; ‘the Code of civil procedure’) provides:

‘Except as otherwise provided for by law, the court shall review the administrative decision on the basis of the legislation in force and the factual situation existing at the time of its adoption.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10 On 5 February 2005 the contracting authority published an invitation to participate in a procedure for the award of a public works contract for an amount exceeding the threshold laid down by EU law, following the negotiated procedure with prior publication of a contract notice. Five applications were received by the deadline, including that of the ‘HOLI’ consortium (‘the consortium’), led by Hochtief.

11 On 19 July 2005, the contracting authority informed the consortium that its application was invalid owing to a conflict of interest and that it had been rejected. The reason for that decision was the fact that the consortium had designated as project leader an expert who had participated in the preparation of the call for tenders with the contracting authority.

12 By decision of 12 September 2005 the Közbeszerzési Döntőbizottság (Public Procurement Arbitration Committee, Hungary) (‘the arbitration committee’) dismissed the action brought by the consortium against that decision. That committee took the view that the designation of the expert in the application to participate could not be regarded as an administrative error as Hochtief claimed. Although it took the view that, if Hochtief were allowed to correct this error, that would entail an amendment of the application to participate, which is excluded by Article 108(3) of the Law on public contracts. The arbitration committee also took the view that the contracting authority had not acted unlawfully by continuing the procedure with only two candidates, since, under Article 130(7) of that Law, if there were, among the candidates, a sufficient number of participants who had submitted an appropriate application within the range set, they must be invited to submit a tender.

13 By judgment of 28 April 2006, the Fővárosi Bíróság (Budapest Municipal Court, Hungary) dismissed the action brought by the consortium against the decision of 12 September 2005.

14 By decision of 13 February 2008, the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal, Hungary), hearing the appeal proceedings brought by the consortium against the judgment of 28 April 2006, referred to the Court a request for a preliminary ruling which gave rise to the judgment of 15 October 2009, Hochtief and Linde-Kca-Dresden (C-138/08, EU:C:2009:627).

15 In the course of 2008, the Commission found, in the examination of the procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings, that the contracting authority had breached the public procurement rules, on the one hand, by publishing a notice of negotiated procedure and, on the other, by excluding one of the candidates during the pre-selection procedure, without having given it an opportunity, in accordance with the judgment of 3 March 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127) to show that the participation of the expert designated as project manager was not such as to distort competition.

16 On 20 January 2010, following the judgment of 15 October 2009, Hochtief and Linde-Kca-Dresden (C-138/08, EU:C:2009:627), the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal) delivered a judgment confirming the judgment of 28 April 2006. It stated, inter alia, that it was not examining whether the contracting authority, in finding that the consortium's application was vitiated by a conflict of interest, was in breach by failing to give the consortium the opportunity to defend itself, since that complaint was not referred to in the application at first instance. It is only on appeal that Hochtief claimed, for the first time, that the prohibition raised against the consortium constituted a disproportionate restriction on its right to submit an application and tender, contrary to Article 220 EC, Article 6 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) and the case-law of the Court.

17 By judgment of 7 February 2011 the Legfelsőbb Bíróság (previous title of the Supreme Court, Hungary) upheld the judgment of the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal) of 20 January 2010.

18 On 11 August 2011, Hochtief, relying on the findings of the Commission, initiated a review procedure against that judgment of the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal).

19 On 6 June 2013, the Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (Administrative and Labour Court, Budapest, Hungary) adopted an order dismissing the appeal, confirmed by order of the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest Municipal Court, Hungary), ruling at final instance.

20 Continuing to rely on the Commission's findings, Hochtief then brought an action seeking an order against the contracting authority to pay compensation of Hungarian Forints (HUF) 24 043 685 (approximately EUR 74 000) corresponding to the expenses which it incurred in respect of its participation in the procedure for the award of the public contract.

21 That action having been dismissed at first instance and on appeal, Hochtief brought an appeal in cassation before the referring court, claiming, inter alia, an infringement of Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 and Article 2(1) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14).

22 The referring court states, in essence, that it follows from Directive 89/665 that actions for damages may be conditional on the prior annulment of the contested decision by an administrative authority or court (judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval, C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraph 35), with the result that Article 2 of that directive does not appear, in principle, to preclude a national legislative provision such as Article 350 of the Law on public contracts. However, the application of that provision, in conjunction with other provisions of the Law on public contracts and the Code of civil procedure, could have the effect of hindering the ability of a tenderer excluded from a negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract, such as Hochtief, to bring an action for damages because it is unable to rely on a decision definitively finding an infringement of the public procurement rules. It would, in those circumstances, be justified either to provide for the possibility of adducing evidence of such an infringement by other means, or to exclude the domestic rule for the sake of the principle of effectiveness, or, further, to interpret that rule in the light of EU law.

23 It is in those circumstances that the Kúria (Supreme Court, Hungary) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Does EU law preclude a procedural provision of a Member State which makes the possibility of asserting any civil right of action resulting from an infringement of a public procurement provision conditional on a final declaration by [an arbitration committee] or a court (hearing an appeal against a decision of the [arbitration committee]) that the provision has been infringed?

(2) Can a provision of national law providing, as a precondition for being able to assert a claim for compensation, that [an arbitration committee] or a court (hearing an appeal against a decision of the [arbitration committee]) must have made a final declaration that a provision has been infringed be replaced by another provision taking account of EU law or, in other words, can the injured party prove the infringement of the provision by other means?

(3) In an action seeking compensation, is a procedural provision of a Member State which allows judicial proceedings to be brought against an administrative decision only on the basis of the legal arguments submitted in proceedings before the public procurement arbitration committee — and the injured party can rely, as a ground for the alleged infringement, on the unlawfulness, in accordance with the case-law of the Court of Justice, of his exclusion on the basis of a conflict of interest only in a manner which, in accordance with the actual rules of the negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract, would result in his exclusion from the contract award procedure for another reason, as there has been a change in his application — contrary to EU law and, in particular, to the principles of effectiveness and equivalence, or capable of having an effect which runs counter to that law or those principles?’

The application to reopen the oral part of the procedure

24 By letters lodged at the Court Registry on 12 and 27 July 2018, Hochtief applied for an order that the oral part of the procedure be reopened, by application of Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court.

25 In support of its application, Hochtief relies first of all on the request for a preliminary ruling made by the Székesfehérvári Törvényszék (Székesfehérvár Local Court, Hungary), by decision of 6 December 2017, received by the Court on 5 June 2018 and registered under case number C-362/18. It argues, in essence, that the answer to the questions referred in the present case depends on the answer to the questions referred in Case C-362/18 and that, in order to guarantee uniformity of the case-law, it is appropriate to give the parties the opportunity of presenting their viewpoint on the latter case.

26 Next, Hochtief submits that, in order for the Court to be in a position to rule on the present request for a preliminary ruling, it is appropriate to take account of elements which were not debated between the parties. In particular, it wishes to submit observations on a statement, made by the agent of the Hungarian Government at the hearing, that the judgment of 15 October 2009, Hochtief and Linde-Kca-Dresden (C-138/08, EU:C:2009:627), delivered while the proceedings before the Hungarian courts were ongoing, was the subject of a decision by those courts. It is of the opinion that it is of decisive importance, in order to answer the first two questions referred in the present reference for a preliminary ruling, to ascertain the assessment made by those courts of that judgment.

27 In that regard, it must be borne in mind that, in accordance with Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure, the Court may at any time, after hearing the Advocate General, order the reopening of the oral part of the procedure, in particular if it considers that it lacks sufficient information or where a party has, after the close of that part of the procedure, submitted a new fact which is of such a nature as to be a decisive factor for the decision of the Court, or where the case must be decided on the basis of an argument which has not been debated between the parties or the interested persons referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

28 In the present case, the Court considers, after hearing the Advocate General, that it has all the information necessary to rule on the request for a preliminary ruling and that there is no need to respond to that request on the basis of an argument which was not debated before it.

29 Firstly, contrary to Hochtief’s submissions, the answer to be given to the questions referred in the present case do not depend on that to be given to the questions referred in Case C-362/18. In fact, although the disputes in the main proceedings in the present case and in Case C-362/18 arise in a similar context, the fact remains that the questions referred in Case C-362/18 which, as Hochtief itself notes in its application, relate principally to the liability of a Member State for a breach of EU law committed by a national court ruling at last instance, differ from those referred in the present case, which concern the conditions for admissibility of an action for damages against a contracting authority.

30 Secondly, it does not appear that the present request for a preliminary ruling must be examined in the light of an element which was not debated between the parties. In particular, the judgment of 15 October 2009, Hochtief and Linde-Kca-Dresden (C-138/08, EU:C:2009:627), relied on by Hochtief in support of its application for the reopening of the oral part of the procedure, was referred to by the referring court in its request for a preliminary ruling and the parties to the main proceedings, like the interested parties referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union, had the opportunity of presenting both written and oral observations in that regard.

31 Having regard to the foregoing conclusions, the Court considers that there is no need to order the reopening of the oral part of the procedure.

The first and second questions

32 By its first two questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding a national procedural rule, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which makes the possibility of asserting a claim under civil law in the event of an infringement of the rules governing public procurement and the award of public contracts subject to the condition that the infringement be definitively established by the Public Procurement Arbitration committee or, in the context of judicial review of a decision of that arbitration committee, by a court.

33 It is appropriate to recall, first of all, that, under Articles 2d to 2f of Directive 89/665, the Member States may provide that, where damages are claimed on the ground that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers to that effect.

34 In consequence, it follows from the very wording of that provision that the Member States are, in principle, able to adopt a national procedural provision such as Article 350 of the Law on public contracts, which makes the possibility of asserting a claim under civil law in the event of an infringement of the rules governing public procurement and the award of public contracts subject to the condition that the infringement be definitively established by an arbitration committee, such as that in the main proceedings, or, in the context of judicial review of the decision made by such an arbitration committee, by a court (see, by analogy, judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval, C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraph 36).

35 Secondly, it must be recalled that, as the Court has repeatedly held, Directive 89/665 lays down only the minimum conditions to be satisfied by the review procedures established in domestic law to ensure compliance with the requirements of EU law concerning public procurement (see, inter alia, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 42 and the case-law cited).

36 Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 thus merely provides the Member States with the option to make the introduction of an action for damages subject to the annulment of the contested decision by a body empowered to do so, without giving the slightest indication of any conditions or limits which may, as appropriate, be attached to the transposition and implementation of that provision.

37 It follows that, as the Advocate General has, in essence, observed in point 39 of his Opinion, the Member States remain free to determine the conditions under which the national rules transposing Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 must be applied in their legal order and the limits, exceptions or derogations that, as necessary, may be connected with that application.

38 Indeed, as the Court has held on many occasions, it is for the Member States, when defining the detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, to ensure that neither the effectiveness of Directives 89/665 nor the rights conferred on individuals by EU law are undermined (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraphs 43 and 44).

39 In that regard, the Court has held that the faculty granted to the Member States by Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 was not without limits and remained subject to the condition that the action for annulment prior to any action for damages must be effective (see, to that effect, judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval, C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraphs 36 to 44). They must, in particular, ensure full compliance with the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (‘the Charter’) (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 46).

40 In the present case, it must be held that the national procedural rule which makes the possibility of asserting a claim under civil law in the event of an infringement of the rules governing public procurement and the award of public contracts subject to the condition that the infringement be definitively established in advance does not deprive the tenderer concerned of the right to an effective remedy.

41 Consequently, the answer to the first two questions is that Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as not precluding a national procedural rule, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which makes the possibility of asserting a claim under civil law in the event of an infringement of the rules governing public procurement and the award of public contracts subject to the condition that the infringement be definitively established by an arbitration committee or, in the context of judicial review of the decision of that arbitration committee, by a court.

The third question

42 By its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether EU law must be interpreted as meaning that, in the context of an action for damages, it precludes a national procedural rule which limits judicial review of arbitral decisions issued by an arbitration committee responsible, at first instance, for the review of decisions adopted by contracting authorities in public procurement procedures, examining only the pleas raised before that committee.

43 In that regard, as regards the main proceedings, it must be noted first of all that, as is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling, the national courts responsible for reviewing decisions of an arbitration committee called upon to examine, at first instance, actions for annulment against decisions adopted by contracting authorities in public procurement procedures must, under Article 339/A of the Code of civil procedure, dismiss as inadmissible any new plea in law which was not raised before that committee.

44 It is pursuant to that provision that the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Regional Court of Appeal, Budapest) dismissed the appeal brought by the appellant in the main proceedings against the judgment of the Fővárosi Bíróság (Budapest Municipal Court) dismissing the appeal against the initial arbitral decision of the arbitration committee. It is also on the basis of that provision that the Legfelsőbb Bíróság (former title of the Supreme Court) dismissed the appeal in cassation brought by the appellant in the main proceedings against the judgment of the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Regional Court of Appeal, Budapest).

45 According to the referring court, a combined application of Article 339/A of the Code of civil procedure and Article 350 of the Public Procurement Code could, however, have an effect contrary to EU law.

46 It points out, in that regard, referring to paragraph 39 of the judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779), that the degree of necessity for legal certainty concerning the conditions for the admissibility of actions is not identical for actions for damages and actions seeking to have a contract declared ineffective. Indeed, in the light of the requirements of the legal certainty which contractual relations must be able to enjoy, the legal remedies intended to declare ineffective contracts concluded between contracting authorities and successful tenderers for public contracts must be formulated restrictively (primary legal protection). However, in so far as actions for damages (secondary legal protection), do not, in principle, have any bearing on the effectiveness of contracts which have already been concluded, there is no justification for submitting those actions to procedures as stringent as those applicable to actions concerning the very existence or the performance of such contracts.

47 It is appropriate to recall, in that regard, that the Court did indeed hold, in paragraphs 41 to 44 of the judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779), that the principle of effectiveness precludes, in certain circumstances, national procedural rules making the admissibility of actions for damages in the context of public procurement procedures subject to a prior finding of illegality of the contract award procedure concerned.

48 It must, however, be pointed out that the Court reached that conclusion in a very specific context, characterised by the fact that the action concerning the prior finding of the unlawfulness of the contract award procedure, alleging that there was no prior publication of any contract notice, was subject to a limitation period of six months which began to run from the day after the date of the award of the public contract in question, irrespective of whether the injured party was in a position to know of the illegality affecting that award decision or not. In such a context, a period of six months was likely not to allow the injured party to gather the necessary information with a view to challenging the lawfulness of the contract award procedure concerned, which therefore prevented the introduction of that action and was, therefore, liable to render practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of the right to bring an action for damages.

49 However, the situation at issue in the main proceedings clearly differs from that at issue in the case which gave rise to the judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779).

50 It is appropriate to point out that, unlike the limitation rule at issue in the case which gave rise to the judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779), the procedural rule laid down in Article 339/A of the Code of civil procedure does not undermine, as the Advocate General noted in points 47 to 49 of his Opinion, the right to an effective remedy and of access to an impartial court, guaranteed by the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter (see, by analogy, judgment of 26 September 2013, Texdata Software, C-418/11, EU:C:2013:588, paragraph 87).

51 Although, furthermore, it is true that that national procedural rule lays down a requirement that the pleas raised before the arbitration committee and those raised before the courts responsible for reviewing the decisions of that committee must be strictly the same, therefore making it impossible for a person involved to raise a new plea during that procedure, the fact remains that it contributes, as the Advocate General noted in point 49 of his Opinion, to maintaining the effectiveness of Directive 89/665, the objective of which is, as the Court has already held, to ensure that decisions taken unlawfully by contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 43 and the case-law cited).

52 In that regard, it is appropriate to recall that the Court has held that the principle that it is for the parties to proceedings to take the initiative, which means that the court is bound by the obligation to keep to the subject matter of the dispute and to base its decision on the facts put before it and to refrain from acting of its own motion, except in exceptional cases to safeguard the public interest, the rights of the defence and ensure the proper conduct of proceedings by, in particular, protecting them from the delays inherent in examination of new pleas (see, to that effect, judgments of 14 December 1995, van Schijndel and van Veen, C-430/93 and C-431/93, EU:C:1995:441, paragraphs 20 and 21, and of 7 June 2007, van der Weerd and Others, C-222/05 to C-225/05, EU:C:2007:318, paragraphs 34 and 35).

53 In the present case, as is apparent from the file submitted to the Court, Hochtief has not been unable to bring an action for annulment against the decision of the contracting authority removing it from the procedure, either before the arbitration committee, or, subsequently, before the national courts responsible for the judicial review of the decision made by that committee.

54 Nor can the view be taken that Hochtief was unable to raise, in due time, the plea alleging, in essence, that it had not had the opportunity of adducing evidence that, in the present case, the participation of the expert whom it had designated as project manager and who had worked with the contracting authority was not such as to distort competition, in line with paragraphs 33 to 36 of the judgment of 3 March 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127).

55 In accordance with the settled case-law of the Court, an interpretation which, in the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred on it by Article 267 TFEU, the Court gives of a rule of EU law, clarifies and defines, where necessary, the meaning and scope of that rule as it must be or ought to have been understood and applied from the time of its coming into force (see, inter alia, judgments of 27 March 1980, Denkavit italiana, 61/79, EU:C:1980:100, paragraph 16, and of 13 January 2004, Kühne & Heitz, C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17, paragraph 21).

56 It follows that, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, a tenderer, such as Hochtief, was able to raise the complaint alleging that it had not had the opportunity of establishing that the fact that it had designated as project leader an expert who had participated in the preparation of the call for tenders with the contracting authority was not such as to distort competition, even in the absence of any relevant case-law of the Court in that regard.

57 Furthermore, although it is true that the judgment of 3 March 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), was not available in the Hungarian language until after Hochtief brought its action before the arbitration committee and even its action against the committee's decision before the national court of first instance, that cannot, however, by itself, allow the conclusion that it was absolutely impossible for Hochtief to raise such a complaint.

58 It follows from the foregoing that EU law, and in particular Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter, must be interpreted as meaning that, in the context of an action for damages, it does not preclude a national procedural rule, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which restricts the judicial review of arbitral decisions issued by an arbitration committee responsible at first instance for the review of decisions taken by contracting authorities in public procurement procedures to examine only the pleas raised before that committee.

Costs

59 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 2(6) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts, must be interpreted as not precluding a national procedural rule, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which makes the possibility of asserting a claim under civil law in the event of an infringement of the rules governing public procurement and the award of public contracts subject to the condition that the infringement be definitively established by an arbitration committee or, in the context of judicial review of an decision of that arbitration committee, by a court.

2. European Union law, and in particular Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2014/23, read in the light of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, must be interpreted as meaning that, in the context of an action for damages, it does not preclude a national procedural rule, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which restricts the judicial review of arbitral decisions issued by an arbitration committee responsible at first instance for the review of decisions taken by contracting authorities in public procurement procedures to examine only the pleas raised before that committee.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Hungarian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

WATHELET

delivered on 7 June 2018 (1)

Case C-300/17

Hochtief AG

v

Budapest Főváros Önkormányzata (Local Government for Budapest, Hungary)

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Kúria (Supreme Court, Hungary))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Directive 89/665/EEC — Procedures for the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts — Review procedures — Article 2(6) — Claim for damages — Precondition that the decision by the contracting authority be declared unlawful — Exclusion of legal arguments not submitted before an arbitration committee — Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union — Right to effective judicial protection — Principles of effectiveness and equivalence)

I. Introduction

1. This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, (2) as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts. (3)

2. The request has been made in proceedings between Hochtief AG and Budapest Főváros Önkormányzata (Local Government for Budapest, Hungary, 'the BFÖ') concerning a claim for damages for infringement of public procurement rules.

3. By its request for a preliminary ruling the Kúria (Supreme Court, Hungary) enquires what effect a combination of national procedural rules may have on the right to an effective remedy even though those rules do not necessarily present any difficulties when viewed separately.

II. Legal context

A. EU law

4. The fourth paragraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

'Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24/EU or Directive 2014/23/EU, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Union law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.'

5. Under Article 2(1), (2), (6) and (9) of Directive 89/665:

'1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

…

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

2. The powers specified in paragraph 1 and Articles 2d and 2e may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

…

6. The Member States may provide that where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.

…

9. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article [267 TFEU] and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.'

B. Hungarian law

1. Law No CXXIX of 2003 on the award of public contracts

6. The facts at issue in the main proceedings occurred in 2005. They were at that time governed by the közbeszerzésekről szóló 2003. évi CXXIX. törvény (Law No CXXIX of 2003 on the award of public contracts, 'the Law on public contracts').

7. Under Article 108(3) of the Law on public contracts, 'candidate tenderers may revise their request to participate until the time limit for submitting the request has expired'.

8. Article 350 of the Law on public contracts provides:

'The possibility of asserting any civil claim based on an infringement of provisions relating to public contracts or to the procedure for awarding them shall be subject to the requirement that the public procurement arbitration committee or a court(hearing an appeal against a decision of the public procurement arbitration committee) has made a final declaration that a provision has been infringed.'

9. However, under Article 351 of the same law:

'If a tenderer's claim for damages from the contracting authority is limited to recovering the expenses incurred in connection with the preparation of the tender and with participation in the contract award procedure, it shall be sufficient for the tenderer to prove, for the purposes of asserting the claim for compensation:

(a) that the contracting authority infringed any provision of the law on public contracts or the procedure for awarding them;

(b) that the tenderer had a real chance of being awarded the contract; and

(c) that the infringement reduced its chances of being awarded the contract.'

2. Law III of 1952 on civil procedure

10. Article 339/A of the Polgári perrendtartásról szóló 1952. évi III. törvény (Law No III of 1952 on civil procedure, 'the Law on civil procedure') provides:

'Except as otherwise provided for, the court shall review the administrative decision on the basis of the legislation in force and the factual situation existing at the time of its adoption.'

III. The facts in the main proceedings

11. On 5 February 2005, the BFÖ launched a negotiated procedure with the publication of a contract notice for works with a value exceeding the maximum limit under EU law. Five applications were received within the period laid down for that purpose, one of them submitted by the HOLI consortium ('the consortium'), managed by Hochtief.

12. On 19 July 2005, the BFÖ informed the consortium that its application could not be accepted as there was a conflict of interest and that it had been excluded from the procedure. The BFÖ justified that decision on the ground that the consortium had appointed as head of the project one of the experts who had participated in preparing the call for tenders alongside the contracting authority.

13. The consortium challenged that decision before the Közbeszerzési Döntőbizottság (Public procurement arbitration committee, Hungary; 'the arbitration committee'). The committee dismissed the application by an award of 12 September 2005. The committee found that the appointment of the expert in the request to participate could not be regarded as an administrative error, as Hochtief asserted, since not taking that expert into account would have meant changing the request to participate, which was not permissible under Article 108(3) of the Law on public contracts. The committee also held that the contracting authority had not acted unlawfully by continuing the procedure with only two candidates, in so far as Article 130(7) of the Law on public contracts provided that, if there were a number within the prescribed range of candidates who had correctly submitted an application, they must be invited to submit a tender.

14. The consortium brought proceedings against the decision of the arbitration committee. The Fővárosi Bíróság (former name of the Fővárosi Törvényszék, Budapest Municipal Court, Hungary) dismissed its application by a judgment of 28 April 2006. Hearing an appeal against that judgment, the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal, Hungary), stayed the proceedings and requested a preliminary ruling, giving rise to the judgment of 15 October 2009, Hochtief and Linde-Kca-Dresden (C-138/08, EU:C:2009:627).

15. As a result of that judgment, the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal) confirmed the judgment of 28 April 2006 by a judgment of 20 January 2010.

16. Before that court, the appellant had claimed, inter alia, relying on the judgment of 3 March 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), that it had been unable to make any observations on the circumstances of the case or to prove that having recourse to the expert could not distort fair and transparent competition.

17. That judgment, which predated the BFÖ's decision, was therefore in existence when Hochtief made its application to the arbitration committee. However, it was 'made available' in the Hungarian version only after that date. (4) In its judgment, the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal) nevertheless stated that it did not examine that plea because it was not included in the application at first instance. According to the referring court, the issue of whether the contracting authority had committed an infringement by declaring the existence of a conflict of interest without affording the appellant in the main proceedings an opportunity to defend itself was not included in the application. The referring court added that it was only on appeal that the appellant, for the first time, claimed that the prohibition to which it was subject was a disproportionate limitation of its right to submit an application or to submit a tender, contrary to Article 220 EC, Article 6 of Directive 93/37/EEC (5) and the case-law of the Court of Justice.

18. By judgment of 7 February 2011, the Legfelsőbb Bíróság (former name of the Kúria (Supreme Court)) confirmed the judgment of 20 January 2010 of the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal).

19. At the same time as those proceedings, during 2008, the European Commission Directorate-General responsible for regional policy carried out an audit of the contested procurement procedure. It found that the contracting authority had infringed the public procurement rules by, on the one hand, launching a negotiated procedure and, on the other, excluding one of the candidates at the pre-selection stage without giving it an opportunity, in accordance with the judgment of 3 March 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), to submit evidence to the contrary, that is to say, to prove that the involvement of the expert appointed as head of the project was not such as to distort competition.

20. On 11 August 2011, on the basis of the Commission's findings, Hochtief brought an appeal on a point of law against the judgment of the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal). By order of 6 June 2013, the Fővárosi Közigazgatási és Munkaügyi Bíróság (Budapest Administrative and Labour Court, Hungary) delivered a decision dismissing the appeal on a point of law, and that decision was confirmed by order of the Fővárosi Törvényszék (Budapest Municipal Court), ruling at final resort.

21. Relying on the Commission's findings, Hochtief brought fresh proceedings seeking an award of compensation from the contracting authority, corresponding to the expenses it incurred in connection with its participation in the public procurement procedure.

22. Those proceedings having been dismissed at first instance and on appeal, Hochtief brought an appeal on a point of law to the referring court, claiming, inter alia, infringement of Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665.

23. The referring court states, in essence, that it is clear from Directive 89/665 that the bringing of actions for damages may be subject to the prior setting aside of the contested decision by an administrative authority or court (judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval, C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraph 35), and therefore Article 2 of that directive does not, in principle, appear to preclude a national legislative provision such as Article 350 of the Law on public contracts. However, application of that provision, in conjunction with other provisions of the Law on public contracts and the Law on civil procedure, may prevent an unsuccessful tenderer in a negotiated public procurement procedure, such as the appellant in the main proceedings, from bringing an action for damages because it is unable to adduce a final declaration that the public procurement rules were infringed. In those circumstances, it may be justified either to allow other means of proving such an infringement, to disregard the national provision in the interests of the principle of effectiveness, or to interpret that provision in the light of EU law.

24. The Kúria (Supreme Court) accordingly decided to stay the proceedings and to make a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

IV. The request for a preliminary ruling and the procedure before the Court of Justice

25. By decision of 11 May 2017, received at the Court of Justice on 24 May 2017, the Kúria (Supreme Court) therefore decided to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Does EU law preclude a procedural provision of a Member State which makes the possibility of asserting any civil right of action resulting from an infringement of a public procurement provision conditional on a final declaration by a public procurement arbitration committee or a court (hearing an appeal against a decision of the public procurement arbitration committee) that the provision has been infringed?

(2) Can a provision of national law providing, as a precondition for being able to assert a claim for compensation, that a public procurement arbitration committee or a court (hearing an appeal against a decision of the public procurement arbitration committee) must have made a final declaration that a provision has been infringed be replaced by another provision taking account of EU law or, in other words, can the injured party prove the infringement of the provision by other means?

(3) In an action seeking compensation, is a procedural provision of a Member State which allows judicial proceedings to be brought against an administrative decision only on the basis of the legal arguments submitted in proceedings before the public procurement arbitration committee — and the injured party can rely, as a ground for the alleged infringement, on the unlawfulness, in accordance with the case-law of the Court of Justice, of his exclusion on the basis of a conflict of interest only in a manner which, in accordance with the actual rules of the negotiated procedure, would result in his exclusion from the contract award procedure for another reason, as there has been a change in his application — contrary to EU law and, in particular, to the principles of effectiveness and equivalence, or capable of having an effect which runs counter to that law or those principles?'

26. The appellant in the main proceedings, the Hungarian, Greek, Austrian and Polish Governments and the Commission submitted written observations. The appellant in the main proceedings, the Hungarian Government and the Commission also made submissions at the hearing on 30 April 2018.

V. Analysis

A. Preliminary remarks on methodology

27. The request for a preliminary ruling made by the Kúria (Supreme Court) in the main proceedings raises two preliminary methodological issues: on the one hand, how the referring court's question should be approached and, on the other, under which provision the issues should be examined.

1. How the questions referred for a preliminary ruling are to be understood

28. The request for a preliminary ruling comprises three separate questions. However, it soon emerges that examining each of those questions individually does not necessarily reveal any difficulties in terms of the right to an effective remedy. The combination of the procedural rules in question, however, is more problematic.

29. It therefore seems appropriate, even necessary, to look at the three questions referred together even if, ultimately, they can be answered separately.

30. At the outset, I would also clarify that to my mind the clarification made in the second part of the third question referred is irrelevant. The fact that the party which suffered damage can only advance a plea alleging unlawfulness which would, in any event, lead to it being excluded from the procurement procedure does not affect the legal reasoning which needs to be conducted in order to answer that third question. How a ground for exclusion affects the outcome of the main proceedings is a matter that can arise only at a later stage and is for the referring court alone to determine. (6) I will therefore disregard that issue.

31. My analysis will therefore be in three stages. First of all, I will examine whether proceedings for damages can be conditional on the allegedly unlawful decision having first been set aside (and therefore, a fortiori, on a declaration that it is unlawful). I will then address the issue that the review of lawfulness was limited to the legal and factual framework defined by the appellant in its application instigating proceedings. Lastly, I will analyse the consequences of importing those two procedural limitations from the action to set aside into the action for damages in terms of effective judicial protection.

2. The provisions governing the review

32. It is also necessary to determine the provision under which the issues should be examined. In its third question, the referring court mentions the principles of equivalence and effectiveness which traditionally circumscribe the Member States' procedural autonomy. However, as the grounds for its reference for a preliminary ruling, it relies on Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter') which enshrines in EU law the right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial. (7)

33. To my mind, that latter approach is preferable. Indeed, it is now established that, on the one hand, the obligation on Member States in Article 19(1) TEU to provide remedies sufficient to ensure effective legal protection in the fields covered by EU law corresponds to Article 47 of the Charter (8) and, on the other, it follows that, when the Member States set out the procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by a provision of EU law such as Directive 89/665, they must ensure compliance with the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter. The characteristics of a remedy such as that under Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must therefore be determined in a manner consistent with Article 47 of the Charter. (9)

34. That is moreover the approach that the Court of Justice has already followed in interpreting Directive 89/665, Article 1 of which, the Court has on several occasions held, 'must be interpreted in the light of the fundamental rights set out in [the] Charter, in particular the right to an effective remedy before a court or tribunal, laid down in Article 47 thereof'. (10) That means in practice that, when the Member States lay down detailed procedural rules for legal actions intended to ensure that rights conferred by Directive 89/665 on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities are protected, the Member States must ensure compliance with the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter. (11)

35. I will therefore examine the referring court's questions referred for a preliminary ruling in the light of the requirements of Article 47 of the Charter.

B. Whether proceedings for damages can be conditional on the allegedly unlawful decision having first been set aside

36. Under the fourth subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, Member States must take the measures necessary to ensure that the decisions taken by the contracting authorities in contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24/EU (12) or Directive 2014/23 may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible.

37. Under Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665, it must be possible for three kinds of measure to be taken concerning those review procedures: firstly, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned; secondly, the setting aside of unlawful decisions and, thirdly, the award of damages to persons harmed by an infringement of the applicable rules.

38. In relation to that last kind of measure, Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 states that the Member States may require that in order for a claim for damages to be made, the allegedly unlawful decision be first set aside. However, that article does not specify the conditions for such actions to be admissible. The Court of Justice inferred from this that 'in principle, … Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 [did] not preclude a provision of national law … under which a claim for damages is admissible only if there has been a prior finding of an infringement of procurement law'. (13) I will call that the principle that actions concerning lawfulness have precedence over actions for reparation.

39. Since it is merely an option — in so far as Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 uses the word 'may' instead of 'must' — Member States who avail themselves of that possibility are free to alter it. (14) They can therefore establish situations in which the fact that no decision has first been set aside does not render the action for damages inadmissible. (15)

40. In any event, application of the principle that actions concerning lawfulness have precedence over actions for reparation cannot have the effect, in conjunction with another procedural rule, of depriving the person harmed not only of the possibility of having the contracting authority's decision set aside, but also of the other remedies provided for in Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665. Such a 'regime' would indeed be contrary to the principle of effectiveness. (16) That principle is seen as one of the 'requirements [that] embody the general obligation on the Member States to ensure judicial protection of an individual's rights under EU law', (17) enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter.

41. In the present case, it is the combined application of Article 350 of the Law on public contracts and Article 339/A of the Law on civil procedure which may be likely to pose a problem in relation to Article 47 of the Charter.

C. The fact that the review of lawfulness was confined to the legal and factual framework defined by the appellant

42. Article 339/A of the Law on civil procedure provides that a court can review an administrative decision only on the basis of the legislation in force and the factual situation existing at the time of its adoption.

43. Specifically, in relation to disputes concerning public procurement decisions, that means that the national courts called upon to review decisions of the arbitration committee are supposedly not entitled to examine any new plea that was not raised before that committee.

44. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions of the contracting authorities that are incompatible with EU law are reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible.

45. So that they can do so, Article 2(2) of Directive 89/665 authorises the Member States to confer powers to set aside decisions and grant reparation to separate bodies that are not necessarily courts. (18) In other respects, Directive 89/665 contains no provisions specifically governing the conditions on which those remedies can be sought. (19) Directive 89/665 therefore leaves Member States a discretion in the choice of the procedural guarantees for which it provides, and the formalities relating thereto. (20)

46. Consistent case-law has held that it is for each Member State, in accordance with the principle of procedural autonomy, to lay down the detailed rules of administrative and judicial procedures to ensure that rights which individuals derive from EU law are safeguarded. However, those detailed procedural rules must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665. (21)

47. Against that background, it does not seem to me that a rule such as Article 339/A of the Law on civil procedure, of itself, is contrary to EU law when it is applied in the context of the review by the arbitration committee and, subsequently, the courts, of the lawfulness of the decision.

48. Indeed, it can be seen from the third recital of Directive 89/665 that one of its priority objectives is to make ‘effective and rapid remedies’ available. (22)The legislature itself emphasised the importance of that latter quality in so far as, in the fourth paragraph of Article 1(1) of that directive, it expressly requires Member States to take ‘measures to ensure that decisions taken by contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible’. (23)

49. Confining the judicial review to the pleas raised before the arbitration committee on the basis of the legislation in force and the factual situation existing at the time the decision was adopted contributes to the achievement of that objective of speed without thereby substantially compromising the right to an effective remedy. (24)

50. On the one hand, that rule prevents the procedure from being delayed by ensuring that no new exchange of arguments — which would necessarily have to be inter partes and disposed of on conclusion of a reasoned decision — is commenced before the reviewing court. It thereby contributes to the proper administration of justice for the benefit of individuals (25) and consolidates the requirement for legal certainty which must prevail in an action seeking to have a contract declared ineffective. (26) On the other hand, that rule does not deprive the individual of access to justice. It confines that access within the limits that the individual itself has established, for which it is solely responsible.

51. In that regard, asked about the consequences of a procedural rule that limits a court’s action to the arguments relied upon by the parties, the Court of Justice has held that the principle of effectiveness did not impose a duty on national courts to raise, of their own motion, a plea based on a provision of EU law, irrespective of the importance of that provision to the EU legal order, where the parties were given a genuine opportunity to raise a plea based on EU law before a national court. (27)

52. That being so, whilst it is true that a procedural rule which has the effect of confining the dispute solely to the pleas advanced before the arbitration committee limits the right to an effective remedy before a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter, it is justified within the meaning of Article 52(1) of the Charter, provided it is established by legislation, respects the essence of the right to an effective remedy and complies with the objective of Directive 89/665 of a swift remedy, which contributes to the proper administration of justice and the requirement for legal certainty.

D. Importing the procedural limits relating to the action concerning lawfulness into the action for reparation

53. It is clear from the foregoing considerations that the right to an effective remedy precludes neither a provision establishing that actions concerning lawfulness have precedence over actions for reparation, nor a provision which prevents a new plea in law from being raised after proceedings have been brought, where those provisions are considered separately.

54. However, the application of Article 350 of the Law on public contracts in conjunction with Article 339/A of the Law on civil procedure has the effect of making an action for damages inadmissible unless a decision has first been obtained declaring the contract in question to be unlawful, independently of whether, in practice, the applicant for damages had a genuine opportunity to raise the relevant plea of unlawfulness in the proceedings relating to lawfulness.

55. Such a consequence is, in my view, contrary to Article 47 of the Charter, in so far as it infringes the right to an effective remedy which that article guarantees, by making an action for damages impossible in practice, but it is not justified by an objective in the general interest, contrary to the requirements of Article 52(1) of the Charter.

1. Infringement of the right to an effective remedy

56. The requirement for judicial protection implies that it must be possible to obtain reparation for loss suffered where EU law is infringed. Indeed, where a measure whose validity is in dispute has been applied, annulment of that measure cannot always ensure full reparation of the damage suffered. (28) Whilst rendering the measure inapplicable paralyses its effects in the situation brought before the court, awarding damages compensates for any loss it may have caused. Fully protecting the individual therefore requires both. (29)

57. Under those circumstances, although the principle, authorised by Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, that actions concerning lawfulness have precedence over actions for reparation can be explained and justified by reasons of economy of procedure and, ultimately, legal certainty, (30) the rule embodying that principle must be precluded where it is shown that it was not possible to have the contested decision declared unlawful on a legitimate ground unrelated to the appellant's behaviour.

58. The individual would otherwise be deprived of any judicial protection whatsoever because, in those particular circumstances, an action in damages is 'the last line of defence for individuals when … other legal remedies have not provided them with effective protection'. (31)

59. That peculiar feature of actions for reparation informs all the Court of Justice's case-law on the interrelation between remedies and their impact on effective judicial protection, whether in response to the strict admissibility requirements for actions to set aside in proceedings concerning the legality of EU acts, (32) to mitigate the fact that directives do not have direct horizontal effect (33) or when redress is no longer available where a final judicial decision has infringed rights under EU law.

60. In the latter situation, although EU law does not require a judicial body automatically to go back on a judgment having the force of res judicata in order to take into account the interpretation of a relevant provision of EU law adopted by the Court after that judgment was delivered, 'individuals cannot be deprived of the possibility of rendering the State liable in order to obtain legal protection of their rights'. (34)

61. That logic was applied to find that courts of last instance are liable where EU law is infringed. Accordingly, 'in the light of the essential role played by the judiciary in the protection of the rights derived by individuals from rules [of EU law], the full effectiveness of those rules would be called in question and the protection of those rights would be weakened if individuals were precluded from being able, under certain conditions, to obtain reparation when their rights are affected by an infringement of [EU] law attributable to a decision of a court of a Member State adjudicating at last instance'. (35)

62. In order to achieve full effectiveness of EU law and protection of the rights under that law, which underpin that case-law, that approach must also be adopted where a combination of procedural rules has the effect of 'immunising' a contracting authority against any liability notwithstanding an infringement of EU law committed by it. The intention of the EU legislature to ensure adequate procedures to permit the compensation of persons harmed by an infringement of public procurement rules (36) corroborates that interpretation.

63. That interpretation also helps guarantee the primacy of EU law, in so far as the Court of Justice has held that, if the findings made by a national court appear to be contrary to EU law, EU law requires that a different national court, even if it is, according to domestic law, unconditionally bound by the first court's interpretation of EU law, must, of its own motion, refuse to apply the domestic law rule under which it is required to comply with the interpretation of EU law made by that first court. (37)

64. In the problematic relationship between procedural rules that concerns us, it seems that if the applicant for reparation did not have a genuine opportunity, in the proceedings relating to lawfulness, to raise the plea that it wished to rely upon in support of its action for damages, it will not be possible to remedy the incorrect application of EU law. In order to ensure the primacy of EU law, the national court must, within the limits of its jurisdiction, take all measures necessary to ensure that it is possible to do so. (38) It follows from the foregoing that, where it has been shown that it was not possible to have the contracting authority's decision declared unlawful on a ground unrelated to the applicant's behaviour, the national court having jurisdiction must disapply the rule embodying the principle that actions concerning lawfulness have precedence over actions for reparation.

2. The lack of justification

65. When I examined whether a rule, which prevents a plea in law from being relied upon unless it was raised in the application instigating proceedings, was compliant with EU law, I found that the objective of speed pursued by Directive 89/665 did justify that rule being applicable in proceedings to review the lawfulness of public procurement decisions, because it is in the interests of the proper administration of justice and consolidates the requirement for legal certainty which must prevail in an action seeking to have a contract declared ineffective.

66. That said, as the Court of Justice observed, 'the degree of necessity for legal certainty concerning the conditions for the admissibility of actions is not identical for actions for damages and actions seeking to have a contract declared ineffective. Rendering a contract concluded following a public procurement procedure ineffective puts an end to the existence and possibly the performance of that contract, which constitutes a significant intervention by the administrative or judicial authority in the contractual relations between individuals and State bodies. Such a decision can thus cause considerable upset and financial losses not only to the successful tenderer for the public contract in question, but also to the awarding authority and, consequently, to the public, the end beneficiary of the supply of work or services under the public contract in question. As is apparent from recitals 25 and 27 in the preamble to Directive [2007/66/EC] (39) the EU legislature placed greater importance on the requirement for legal certainty as regards actions for a declaration that a contract is ineffective than as regards actions for damages.' (40)

67. Moreover, a combination of procedures such as that at issue in the main proceedings is not such as to delay conclusion of the contract award procedure or undermine legal certainty. Indeed, the exclusion decision whose unlawfulness gave rise to the damage claimed became final following the final dismissals of appeals against the arbitration committee's decision and of the appeal on a point of law against the judgment of the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal) delivered in the same proceedings.

68. Authorising the court that is hearing the claim for damages to declare the decision causing the alleged damage to be unlawful, on the basis of a plea which was not examined in the proceedings to set aside, cannot, to my mind, have the effect of depriving the contested decision of effect.

69. Furthermore, the fact that it can do so does not equate to the court hearing the action for damages questioning res judicata,since the action for damages does not have the same subject matter as the proceedings to set aside and because those latter proceedings did not concern the same question of law. On the contrary, the Court of Justice has already held in similar circumstances that the principle of legal certainty could not justify a national rule which prevented the national court from drawing all the consequences of a breach of a provision of the Treaty because of a decision of a national court, which was res judicata. (41)

3. Application to this case

70. Awarding damages to persons harmed by an infringement of the public procurement rules constitutes one of the remedies guaranteed under EU law (42). To paraphrase the wording used by the Court in paragraph 43 of its judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779), the combination of procedural rules applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings could cause the person harmed to be deprived not only of the possibility of having the awarding authority's decision annulled, but also of all the remedies provided for in Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665.

71. A similar finding is therefore necessary in this case. The right to an effective remedy, enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter, precludes a regime, such as that in the case in the main proceedings, which infringes that right by making it impossible to bring an action for damages because of a prohibition on taking into account a plea in law of which the individual, without any fault of or negligence by it, could not have been aware before bringing its application to set aside, or, in the words of the judgment of 7 June 2007, van der Weerd and Others (C-222/05 to C-225/05, EU:C:2007:318), which the individual had no genuine opportunity to raise before a national court.

72. In the present case, the infringement of EU law which Hochtief adduced for the first time before the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Regional Court of Appeal) is based on the judgment of 3 March 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), the Hungarian version of which was apparently only made 'available' after the proceedings before the arbitration committee had been commenced. (43)

73. It remains to be seen whether an undertaking such as Hochtief, a German company having its registered office in Germany, truly was unable to have access to a judgment of the Court of Justice before it was translated into Hungarian. The fact that the Court Registry gave the information about the availability in Hungarian of the judgment of 3 March 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), in German, following a request in German from the German head office of Hochtief, is certainly a factor to take into consideration. Nevertheless, since that is a question of fact, it is for the referring court to determine whether Hochtief had a genuine opportunity to raise that plea before the arbitration committee (or before the appeal court if the arbitration committee should not be classed as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU (44)). If it did not, its action for damages should be admitted even though the contracting authority's decision had not been set aside.

VI. Conclusion

74. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court should answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Kúria (Supreme Court, Hungary) as follows:

(1) EU law does not preclude a national procedural provision which makes the bringing of an action for damages conditional on a prior final declaration by a body having the necessary powers within the meaning of Article 2(6) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts that the decision of a contracting authority is unlawful.

(2) Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 does not preclude the Member States from making provision for situations in which the fact that the decision has not first been set aside is not grounds for the inadmissibility of an action for damages based on the irregularity of a contracting authority's decision.

(3) Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union does preclude national legislation which makes bringing an action for damages based on the infringement of a rule of public procurement law subject to a prior finding that the public procurement procedure for the contract in question was unlawful where the applicant for reparation did not have a genuine opportunity to raise before a national court the plea that it wishes to rely upon in support of its action for damages.

---

1 Original language: French.

---

2 OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33.

---

3 OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1.

---

4 According to a letter that the Registry of the Court of Justice sent to Hochtief on 22 September 2010, the Court Registry received the Hungarian translation of the judgment of 3 March 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), on 2 October 2006. The Court Registry stated, however, that it was impossible to determine exactly the date it went online on the Court's website.

---

5 Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54).

---

6 With all the more reason in so far as Hochtief (paragraph 34 of its written observations) and the Hungarian Government (paragraphs 13 to 15 of its written observations) dispute the thesis that the appellant in the main proceedings can rely on the 'new' plea only by amending its application, which would supposedly be a ground for excluding it from the procedure.

---

7 Paragraph 22 of the order for reference.

---

8 See, to that effect, the judgments of 16 May 2017, Berlioz Investment Fund (C-682/15, EU:C:2017:373, paragraph 44); of 26 July 2017, Sacko (C-348/16, EU:C:2017:591, paragraph 30), and of 27 September 2017, Puškár (C-73/16, EU:C:2017:725, paragraph 58).

---

9 See, to that effect, in relation to Directive 2013/32/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 June 2013 on common procedures for granting and withdrawing international protection (OJ 2013 L 180, p. 60), the judgment of 26 July 2017, Sacko (C-348/16, EU:C:2017:591, paragraph 31) and, in relation to Directive 95/46/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 24 October 1995 on the protection of individuals with regard to the processing of personal data and on the free movement of such data (OJ 1995 L 281, p. 31), the judgment of 27 September 2017, Puškár (C-73/16, EU:C:2017:725, paragraphs 59 and 60).

---

10 Judgment of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 49); emphasis added.

---

11 See, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others (C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 46).

---

12 Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

---

13 Judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraph 36); emphasis added.

14 See, to that effect, judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraph 35).

15 Conversely, that option to derogate from the general rule cannot, in my view, be turned into an obligation since it would otherwise render the principle that actions concerning lawfulness have precedence over actions for reparation authorised by Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 substantially less meaningful.

16 The Court of Justice accordingly held that 'EU law, in particular the principle of effectiveness, precludes national legislation which makes bringing an action for damages in respect of the infringement of a rule of public procurement law subject to a prior finding that the public procurement procedure for the contract in question was unlawful because of the lack of prior publication of a contract notice, where the action for a declaration of unlawfulness is subject to a six-month limitation period which starts to run on the day after the date of the award of the public contract in question, irrespective of whether or not the applicant in that action was in a position to know of the unlawfulness affecting the decision of the awarding authority' (judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval, C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraph 46 and operative part).

17 Judgment of 15 April 2008, Impact (C-268/06, EU:C:2008:223, paragraph 47), emphasis added. See, also, judgments of 18 March 2010, Alassini and Others (C-317/08 to C-320/08, EU:C:2010:146, paragraph 49), and of 14 September 2016, Martínez Andrés and Castrejana López (C-184/15 and C-197/15, EU:C:2016:680, paragraph 59).

18 In such a case, Article 2(9) of Directive 89/665 nevertheless requires that any illegal measure taken by those non-judicial 'review bodies' or any alleged defect in the exercise of their powers can be the subject of judicial review (or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU and independent of the contracting authority and the review body in question).

19 See, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others (C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 42).

20 See, to that effect, judgment of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 44).

21 See, to that effect, judgments of 12 March 2015, eVigilo (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 40); of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 47); of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others (C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 43); and of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others (C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 33).

22 Emphasis added.

23 Emphasis added.

24 See, to that effect, point 90 of the Opinion of Advocate General Mengozzi in Texdata Software (C-418/11, EU:C:2013:50) according to which 'the barring of new arguments on appeal … is a prohibition common to the legal systems of various Member States, and … does not compromise the effectiveness of the appeal either'. The Court of Justice confirmed that view and that such a rule is theoretically lawful. Indeed, in paragraph 87 of its judgment of 26 September 2013, Texdata Software (C-418/11, EU:C:2013:588), the Court held, in response to the allegation relating to the barring of new pleas at the appeal stage, that there was 'no evidence before the Court that raises any doubts as to the conformity of the system of penalties at issue with the principles of effective judicial protection and respect for the rights of the defence'.

---

25 The Court of Justice thus held that a financial condition could be 'a measure liable to discourage frivolous challenges and ensure that all individuals have their actions dealt with as rapidly as possible, in the interest of the proper administration of justice, in accordance with Article 47, first and second paragraphs, of the Charter' (judgment of 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 54).

---

26 See, to that effect, judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraph 40).

---

27 See, to that effect, judgment of 7 June 2007, van der Weerd and Others (C-222/05 to C-225/05, EU:C:2007:318, paragraph 41).

---

28 See, to that effect, judgment of 30 May 2017, Safa Nicu Sepahan v Council (C-45/15 P, EU:C:2017:402, paragraph 49).

---

29 See, to that effect, in relation to legislative provisions, Dubouis, L., 'La responsabilité de l'État législateur pour les dommages causés aux particuliers par la violation du droit communautaire and son incidence sur la responsabilité de la Communauté', Revue française de droit administratif, No 3, 1996, pp. 583 to 601.

---

30 Indeed, that principle is intended to ensure that it is specialised review bodies that review public procurement rules. It is a matter of ensuring that any question of law concerning the infringement of public procurement law arising in other proceedings has been finally decided by the specialised body designated for that purpose.

---

31 On actions for non-contractual liability, Berrod, Fr., La systématique des voies de droit communautaire, Paris, Dalloz, 2003, no 946.

---

32 See, to that effect, judgment of 12 September 2006, Reynolds Tobacco and Others v Commission (C-131/03 P, EU:C:2006:541, paragraph 82).

---

33 See, to that effect, amongst others, judgments of 24 January 2012, Dominguez (C-282/10, EU:C:2012:33, paragraphs 42 and 43), and of 26 March 2015, Fenoll (C-316/13, EU:C:2015:200, paragraph 48).

---

34 Judgment of 6 October 2015, Târşia (C-69/14, EU:C:2015:662, paragraph 40).

---

35 Judgment of 30 September 2003, Köbler (C-224/01, EU:C:2003:513, paragraph 33). See, also, judgment of 13 June 2006, Traghetti del Mediterraneo (C-173/03, EU:C:2006:391, paragraph 31).

---

36 See, to that effect, sixth recital of Directive 89/665.

---

37 See, to that effect, order of 15 October 2015, Naderhirn (C-581/14, not published, EU:C:2015:707, paragraph 35).

---

38 See, to that effect, order of 15 October 2015, Naderhirn (C-581/14, not published, EU:C:2015:707, paragraph 37).

---

39 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665/EEC and 92/13/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31).

---

40 Judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraphs 39 and 40).

---

41 See, to that effect, judgment of 11 November 2015, Klausner Holz Niedersachsen (C-505/14, EU:C:2015:742, paragraph 45).

---

42 Judgment of 26 November 2015, MedEval (C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraph 43).

---

43 Contrary to Hochtief's assertions at the hearing on 30 April, the argument based on the judgment of 3 March 2005, Fabricom (C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127), is, to my mind, very different from that raised initially in the application instigating proceedings. The legal issue raised in that judgment relates not to the issue of a conflict of interest affecting the tender as such, but to the rights of the defence.

---

44 Whether a body is a 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU depends on a number of factors, such as whether the body in question is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent (see, inter alia, judgment of 17 September 1997, Dorsch Consult, C-54/96, EU:C:1997:413, paragraph 23, and, for a recent application, judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme, C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraph 17). The Court of Justice has already had the opportunity on several occasions of finding that bodies such as the arbitration committee should be categorised as 'courts or tribunals' within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, provided that they satisfy those requirements. In that respect, see, in addition to the two judgments cited above, judgments of 4 February 1999, Köllensperger and Atzwanger (C-103/97, EU:C:1999:52); of 18 November 1999, Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S (C-275/98, EU:C:1999:567); of 18 June 2002, HI (C-92/00, EU:C:2002:379); of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801); of 18 September 2014, Bundesdruckerei (C-549/13, EU:C:2014:2235); of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin (C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347); of 27 October 2016, Hörmann Reisen (C-292/15, EU:C:2016:817); and of 8 June 2017, Medisanus (C-296/15, EU:C:2017:431).

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

21 March 2019 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Transport — Public passenger transport services by rail and by road — Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 — Article 5(1) and (2) — Direct award – Contracts for public passenger transport services by bus and tram — Conditions — Directive 2004/17/EC — Directive 2004/18/EC)

In Joined Cases C-266/17 and C-267/17,

TWO REQUESTS for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany), made by decisions of 3 May 2017, received at the Court on 17 May 2017, in the proceedings

Rhein-Sieg-Kreis

v

Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker GmbH,

BVR Busverkehr Rheinland GmbH,

interveners:

Regionalverkehr Köln GmbH (C-266/17),

and

Rhenus Veniro GmbH & Co. KG

v

Kreis Heinsberg,

intervener:

WestVerkehr GmbH (C-267/17),

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Seventh Chamber, acting as President of the Fourth Chamber, K. Jürimäe, C. Lycourgos, E. Juhász (Rapporteur) and C. Vajda, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: L. Carrasco Marco, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 31 May 2018,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Rhein-Sieg-Kreis, by G. Landsberg and J. Struß, Rechtsanwälte, – Rhenus Veniro GmbH & Co. KG, by C. Antweiler, Rechtsanwalt,

– Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker GmbH, by C. Antweiler, Rechtsanwalt, – BVR Busverkehr Rheinland GmbH, by W. Tresselt, Rechtsanwalt,

– Kreis Heisberg, by S. Schaefer, M. Weber and D. Marszalek, Rechtsanwälte,

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by W. Mölls, P. Ondrůšek and J. Hottiaux, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 13 September 2018,

gives the following

Judgment

1 These requests for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Article 5(1) and (2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2007 on public passenger transport services by rail and by road and repealing Council Regulations (EEC) Nos 1191/69 and 1107/70 (OJ 2007 L 315, p. 1).

2 The requests have been made in two sets of proceedings between, first, Rhein-Sieg-Kreis (the Rhein-Sieg District, Germany), of the one part, and Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker GmbH and BVR Busverkehr Rheinland GmbH, of the other, and, between secondly, Rhenus Veniro GmbH & Co. KG (‘Rhenus Veniro’) and Kreis Heinsberg (Heinsberg District, Germany), concerning intended direct awards of public contracts for passenger transport services by bus.

Legal context

Regulation 1370/2007

3 Article 1 of Regulation No 1370/2007, entitled ‘Purpose and scope’, provides:

‘1. The purpose of this Regulation is to define how, in accordance with the rules of Community law, competent authorities may act in the field of public passenger transport to guarantee the provision of services of general interest which are among other things more numerous, safer, of a higher quality or provided at lower cost than those that market forces alone would have allowed.

To this end, this Regulation lays down the conditions under which competent authorities, when imposing or contracting for public service obligations, compensate public service operators for costs incurred and/or grant exclusive rights in return for the discharge of public service obligations.

2. This Regulation shall apply to the national and international operation of public passenger transport services by rail and other track-based modes and by road, except for services which are operated mainly for their historical interest or their tourist value. …

…’

4 Article 2 of that regulation, entitled ‘Definitions’, is worded as follows:

‘For the purpose of this Regulation:

(a) “public passenger transport” means passenger transport services of general economic interest provided to the public on a non-discriminatory and continuous basis;

(b) “competent authority” means any public authority or group of public authorities of a Member State or Member States which has the power to intervene in public passenger transport in a given geographical area or any body vested with such authority;

(c) “competent local authority” means any competent authority whose geographical area of competence is not national;

…

(h) “direct award” means the award of a public service contract to a given public service operator without any prior competitive tendering procedure;

(i) “public service contract” means one or more legally binding acts confirming the agreement between a competent authority and a public service operator to entrust to that public service operator the management and operation of public passenger transport services subject to public service obligations; depending on the law of the Member State, the contract may also consist of a decision adopted by the competent authority:

– taking the form of an individual legislative or regulatory act, or – containing conditions under which the competent authority itself provides the services or entrusts the provision of such services to an internal operator;

(j) “internal operator” means a legally distinct entity over which a competent local authority, or in the case of a group of authorities at least one competent local authority, exercises control similar to that exercised over its own departments;

…’

5 Article 5 of that regulation, entitled ‘Award of public service contracts’, provides:

‘1. Public service contracts shall be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down in this Regulation. However, service contracts or public service contracts as defined in Directive [2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1)] or [Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)] for public passenger transport services by bus or tram shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures provided for under those Directives where such contracts do not take the form of service concessions contracts as defined in those Directives. Where contracts are to be awarded in accordance with Directives [2004/17] or [2004/18], the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 6 of this Article shall not apply.

2. Unless prohibited by national law, any competent local authority, whether or not it is an individual authority or a group of authorities providing integrated public passenger transport services, may decide to provide public passenger transport services itself or to award public service contracts directly to a legally distinct entity over which the competent local authority, or in the case of a group of authorities at least one competent local authority, exercises control similar to that exercised over its own departments. Where a competent local authority takes such a decision, the following shall apply:

(a) for the purposes of determining whether the competent local authority exercises control, factors such as the degree of representation on administrative, management or supervisory bodies, specifications relating thereto in the articles of association, ownership, effective influence and control over strategic decisions and individual management decisions shall be taken into consideration. In accordance with Community law, 100% ownership by the competent public authority, in particular in the case of public-private partnerships, is not a mandatory requirement for establishing control within the meaning of this paragraph, provided that there is a dominant public influence and that control can be established on the basis of other criteria;

(b) the condition for applying this paragraph is that the internal operator and any entity over which this operator exerts even a minimal influence perform their public passenger transport activity within the territory of the competent local authority, notwithstanding any outgoing lines or other ancillary elements of that activity which enter the territory of neighbouring competent local authorities, and do not take part in competitive tenders concerning the provision of public passenger transport services organised outside the territory of the competent local authority;

(c) notwithstanding point (b), an internal operator may participate in fair competitive tenders as from two years before the end of its directly awarded public service contract under the condition that a final decision has been taken to submit the public passenger transport services covered by the internal operator contract to fair competitive tender and that the internal operator has not concluded any other directly awarded public service contract;

(d) in the absence of a competent local authority, points (a), (b) and (c) shall apply to a national authority for the benefit of a geographical area which is not national, provided that the internal operator does not take part in competitive tenders concerning the provision of public passenger transport services organised outside the area for which the public service contract has been granted;

(e) if subcontracting under Article 4(7) is being considered, the internal operator shall be required to perform the major part of the public passenger transport service itself.

3. Any competent authority which has recourse to a third party other than an internal operator, shall award public service contracts on the basis of a competitive tendering procedure, except in the cases specified in paragraphs 4, 5 and 6. The procedure adopted for competitive tendering shall be open to all operators, shall be fair and shall observe the principles of transparency and non-discrimination. Following the submission of tenders and any preselection, the procedure may involve negotiations in accordance with these principles in order to determine how best to meet specific or complex requirements.

…’

6 Article 7 of that regulation, entitled ‘Publication’, provides in paragraph 2:

‘Each competent authority shall take the necessary measures to ensure that, at least one year before the launch of the invitation to tender procedure or one year before the direct award, the following information at least is published in the Official Journal of the European Union:

(a) the name and address of the competent authority;

(b) the type of award envisaged;

(c) the services and areas potentially covered by the award.

Competent authorities may decide not to publish this information where a public service contract concerns an annual provision of less than 50 000 kilometres of public passenger transport services.

…’

Directive 2004/17

7 Article 1 of Directive 2004/17, entitled ‘Definitions’, provides:

‘1. For the purposes of this Directive, the definitions set out in this Article shall apply.

2. (a) “Supply, works and service contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more of the contracting entities referred to in Article 2(2), and one or more contractors, suppliers, or service providers;

…

(d) “Service contracts” are contracts other than works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex XVII.

…

3. ...

(b) A “service concession” is a contract of the same type as a service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right together with payment.

…’

8 Article 5 of that directive, entitled ‘Transport services’, provides, in paragraph 1:

‘This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.’

9 Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Works and service concessions’, states:

‘This Directive shall not apply to works and service concessions which are awarded by contracting entities carrying out one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7, where those concessions are awarded for carrying out those activities.’

10 Article 31 of that directive, entitled ‘Service contracts listed in Annex XVII A’, provides:

‘Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex XVII A shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 34 to 59.’

11 Article 32 of Directive 2004/17, entitled ‘Service contracts listed in Annex XVII B’, provides:

‘Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex XVII B shall be governed solely by Articles 34 and 43.’

12 Article 34 of that directive, entitled ‘Technical specifications’, establishes in particular the detailed rules in accordance with which the technical specifications must be formulated in the contract documentation.

13 Under Article 43 of that directive, entitled ‘Contract award notices’:

‘1. Contracting entities which have awarded a contract or a framework agreement shall, within two months of the award of the contract or framework agreement, send a contract award notice as referred to in Annex XVI under conditions to be laid down by the Commission in accordance with the procedure referred to in Article 68(2).

…

4. In the case of contracts awarded for services listed in Annex XVII B, the contracting entities shall indicate in the notice whether they agree to publication.

…’

14 Annexes XVII A and XVII B to Directive 2004/17, entitled ‘Services within the meaning of Article 31’ and ‘Services within the meaning of Article 32’ respectively, both contain a table which refers, with regard to each of the categories of service which it defines, to the United Nations Central Product Classification reference numbers (‘the CPC reference numbers’). As regards category 2 of Annex XVII A, which corresponds to ‘Land transport services’, the CPC reference numbers are 712 (except 71235), 7512 and 87304. As for category 18 of Annex XVII B, which corresponds to ‘Rail transport services’, the CPC reference number is 711. The CPC reference number 712 relates, in particular, to urban and suburban regular and special passenger transportation and to regular interurban passenger transportation other than the interurban, urban and suburban railway transport services of passengers, to which the CPC reference number 711 relates.

Directive 2004/18

15 Article 1 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Definitions’, provides:

‘1. For the purposes of this Directive, the definitions set out in paragraphs 2 to 15 shall apply.

2. ...

(d) “Public service contracts” are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.

…

4. “Service concession” is a contract of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in this right together with payment.

…’

16 Under Article 3 of that directive, entitled ‘Granting of special or exclusive rights: non-discrimination clause’:

‘Where a contracting authority grants special or exclusive rights to carry out a public service activity to an entity other than such a contracting authority, the act by which that right is granted shall provide that, in respect of the supply contracts which it awards to third parties as part of its activities, the entity concerned must comply with the principle of non-discrimination on the basis of nationality.’

17 Article 12 of that directive, entitled ‘Contracts in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors’, provides in the first paragraph thereof:

‘This Directive shall not apply to public contracts which, under [Directive 2004/17], are awarded by contracting authorities exercising one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7 of that Directive and are awarded for the pursuit of those activities, or to public contracts excluded from the scope of that Directive under Article 5(2) and Articles 19, 26 and 30 thereof.’

18 Article 17 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Service concessions’, is worded as follows:

‘Without prejudice to the application of Article 3, this Directive shall not apply to service concessions as defined in Article 1(4).’

19 Article 20 of that directive, entitled ‘Service contracts listed in Annex II A’, states:

‘Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II A shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 23 to 55.’

20 Article 21 of that directive, entitled ‘Service contracts listed in Annex II B’, provides:

‘Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II B shall be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4).’

21 Annexes II A and II B to that same directive contain a table similar to those in Annex XVII A and Annex XVII B to Directive 2004/17.

Directive 2014/24/EU

22 In accordance with Article 91 thereof, Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), repealed and replaced Directive 2004/18 with effect from 18 April 2016.

23 Article 12 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Public contracts between entities within the public sector’, provides:

‘1. A public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contracting authority exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of the controlled legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

A contracting authority shall be deemed to exercise over a legal person a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments within the meaning of point (a) of the first subparagraph where it exercises a decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of the controlled legal person. Such control may also be exercised by another legal person, which is itself controlled in the same way by the contracting authority.

2. Paragraph 1 also applies where a controlled legal person which is a contracting authority awards a contract to its controlling contracting authority, or to another legal person controlled by the same contracting authority, provided that there is no direct private capital participation in the legal person being awarded the public contract with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

3. A contracting authority, which does not exercise over a legal person governed by private or public law control within the meaning of paragraph 1, may nevertheless award a public contract to that legal person without applying this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled.

(a) the contracting authority exercises jointly with other contracting authorities a control over that legal person which is similar to that which they exercise over their own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of that legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authorities or by other legal persons controlled by the same contracting authorities; and

(c) there is no direct private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

For the purposes of point (a) of the first subparagraph, contracting authorities exercise joint control over a legal person where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(i) the decision-making bodies of the controlled legal person are composed of representatives of all participating contracting authorities. Individual representatives may represent several or all of the participating contracting authorities;

(ii) those contracting authorities are able to jointly exert decisive influence over the strategic objectives and significant decisions of the controlled legal person; and

(iii) the controlled legal person does not pursue any interests which are contrary to those of the controlling contracting authorities;

4. A contract concluded exclusively between two or more contracting authorities shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contract establishes or implements a cooperation between the participating contracting authorities with the aim of ensuring that public services they have to perform are provided with a view to achieving objectives they have in common;

(b) the implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations relating to the public interest; and

(c) the participating contracting authorities perform on the open market less than 20% of the activities concerned by the cooperation.

5. For the determination of the percentage of activities referred to in point (b) of the first subparagraph of paragraph 1, point (b) of the first subparagraph of paragraph 3 and point (c) of paragraph 4, the average total turnover, or an appropriate alternative activity-based measure such as costs incurred by the relevant legal person or contracting authority with respect to services, supplies and works for the three years preceding the contract award shall be taken into consideration.

Where, because of the date on which the relevant legal person or contracting authority was created or commenced activities or because of a reorganisation of its activities, the turnover, or alternative activity-based measure such as costs, are either not available for the preceding three years or no longer relevant, it shall be sufficient to show that the measurement of activity is credible, particularly by means of business projections.'

Directive 2014/25/EU

24 In accordance with Article 107 thereof, Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243), repealed and replaced Directive 2004/17 with effect from 18 April 2016.

25 Article 28 of Directive 2014/25, entitled 'Contracts between contracting authorities', contains provisions in essence similar to those of Article 12 of Directive 2014/24.

The disputes in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Case C-266/17

26 The Rhein-Sieg District, a local authority having the status of competent authority within the meaning of Article 2(b) of Regulation No 1370/2007, set up, in conjunction with other local authorities having that same status, the Zweckverband Verkehrsverbund Rhein-Sieg (Rhein-Sieg special purpose transport association, Germany), for the purposes of shared performance of tasks specified in the Gesetz über den öffentlichen Personennahverkehr in Nordrhein-Westfalen (Law on local public passenger transport in North Rhine-Westphalia).

27 Under its rules, that special purpose transport association is responsible, inter alia, for establishing the amount of tariffs.

28 Regionalverkehr Köln GmbH is a public transport company which is directly or indirectly owned by passenger transport authorities, which include the Rhein-Sieg District.

29 Regionalverkehr Köln provides public transport services for the Rhein-Sieg District, and for other authorities having an indirect or direct holding in Regionalverkehr Köln, on the basis of the tasks conferred before Regulation No 1370/2007 entered into force. In addition to those activities, it provides bus transport services for four municipalities in which there is a 'municipal bus' service, on the basis of contracts from the period before the entry into force of that regulation, which were not awarded on the basis of a competitive tender procedure.

30 On 21 August 2015, the shareholders' meeting of the Regionalverkehr Köln amended the latter's articles of association, so that in relation to the conclusion, amendment or termination of a transport contract the only shareholder entitled to vote is one which itself or whose indirect or direct owner awards a transport services contract referred to in Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007. According to the order for reference, that resolution is temporarily ineffective pursuant to final judgment of the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany).

31 It is apparent from the documents before the Court that, in accordance with Article 7(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007, on 30 September 2015 the Rhein-Sieg District had published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union a prior information notice concerning the intended direct award of a contract for the provision of public passenger transport services by bus not taking the form of a service concession contract for the purposes of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18.

32 That contract, which concerned the annual provision of several million kilometres of journeys, was to be awarded to Regionalverkehr Köln as internal operator, in accordance with Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007, for a duration of 120 months as from 12 December 2016.

33 Following the publication of that notice, Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker and BVR Busverkehr Rheinland challenged the intended direct award before the Vergabekammer (Public Procurement Chamber, Germany), contending in particular that the contract at issue in the main proceedings did not fall within the scope of Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007, since it did not take the form of a service concession contract.

34 The Vergabekammer (Public Procurement Chamber) prohibited the contract at issue in the main proceedings from being directly awarded to Regionalverkehr Köln, on the ground that the conditions for the application of Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 were not satisfied. To that effect, it found that the control which the Rhein-Sieg District ought to have exercised over that company did not exist and that, in addition, that company provided public passenger transport services in territories other than that administered by the contracting authority, which was likely to preclude any direct award of the transport contract.

35 The Rhein-Sieg District appealed to the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf).

36 The Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) states that, as regards transport services contracts not taking the form of service concessions contracts, Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 is the subject of diverging case-law at the national level.

37 According to some courts, those provisions are not intended to apply to contracts for passenger transport services by bus and tram which do not take the form of service concessions contracts, since Article 5(1) of Regulation No 1370/2007 expressly provides that those contracts remain governed by Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18, which does not, however, preclude them from being awarded directly, in accordance with the general regime established on the basis of those directives.

38 Conversely, other courts, including the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) itself, consider that, inasmuch as direct contract awards are not subject to the provisions of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18, Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 which governs the direct award of contracts for passenger transport services must, as a special rule and in accordance with the judgment of 27 October 2016, Hörmann Reisen (C-292/15, EU:C:2016:817), apply to direct awards of contracts for passenger transport services by bus even when those contracts do not take the form of public service concessions.

39 Given such a difference in interpretation, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) asks whether Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 is, as a rule, applicable in a case such as that in the main proceedings.

40 In addition, should the answer be in the affirmative, that court is uncertain whether that provision is indeed intended to apply to the case in the main proceedings, having regard to the specific and concrete circumstances mentioned in the order for reference, and raises the question of the date on which the conditions for the application of the provision must be met.

41 In those circumstances the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Does Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 apply to contracts which are not contracts which, within the meaning of the first sentence of Article 5(1) of Regulation No 1370/2007, take the form of service concessions contracts as defined in Directives [2004/17] or [2004/18]?

If Question 1 is answered in the affirmative:

(2) Where an individual competent authority awards a public service contract directly to an internal operator in accordance with Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007, is the joint exercise of control by that authority together with the other shareholders of the internal operator precluded if the power to intervene in public passenger transport in a given geographical area (Article 2(b) and (c) of Regulation No 1370/2007) is divided between the individual competent authority and a group of authorities which provides integrated public passenger transport services, for example where the power to award public service contracts to an internal operator remains with the individual competent authority but the responsibility for tariffs is transferred to a special purpose transport association to which, in addition to the individual authority, further authorities competent in their geographical areas belong?

(3) Where an individual competent authority awards a public service contract directly to an internal operator in accordance with Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007, is the joint exercise of control by that authority together with the other shareholders of the internal operator precluded if, according to that operator’s articles of association, in the case of resolutions concerning the conclusion, amendment or termination of a public service contract referred to in Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007, the only shareholder entitled to vote is the one which itself or whose indirect or direct owner awards a public service contract to the internal operator in accordance with Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007?

(4) Does point (b) of the second sentence of Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 permit the internal operator also to perform public passenger transport services for other competent local authorities within their territory (including through routes or other part services which enter the territory of neighbouring competent local authorities) if these are not awarded through organised competitive tender procedures?

(5) Does point (b) of the second sentence of Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 permit the internal operator also to perform public passenger transport activity outside the territory of the commissioning authority for other authorities on the basis of public service contracts covered by the transitional provisions of Article 8(3) of Regulation No 1370/2007?

(6) On which date must the requirements of Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 be satisfied?’

Case C-267/17

42 The Heinsberg District, a local authority having the status of competent authority within the meaning of Article 2(b) of Regulation No 1370/2007 is a member, together with other local authorities, of the Zweckverband Aachener Verkehrsverbund (Aachen special purpose transport association, Germany), formed to promote and support local public transport passenger services for its members.

43 It is apparent from the documents before the Court that, in accordance with Article 7(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007, on 15 March 2016 the Heinsberg District had published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union a prior information notice concerning the intended direct award of a contract for the provision of public passenger transport services by bus and other motor vehicles.

44 It was envisaged in that prior information notice that that contract, which was for several million kilometres of journeys to be provided from 1 January 2018, would be awarded directly to an internal operator, in this case WestVerkehr GmbH, in accordance with Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007.

45 Rhenus Veniro brought an action before the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Public Procurement Board of the Land of Rhineland-Palatinate, Germany) against the planned direct award, which that board dismissed.

46 Rhenus Veniro brought an appeal before the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf), arguing that, as regards public transport services by bus or by tram, Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 is intended to apply only in cases where the contracts concerned take the form of service concessions contracts.

47 For the same reasons as those referred to in Case C-266/17, that court asks whether Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 is, as a rule, applicable in a case such as that in Case C-267/17.

48 In addition, should the answer be in the affirmative, that court is uncertain whether that provision is indeed intended to apply to the case in the main proceedings, having regard to the specific and concrete circumstances mentioned in the order for reference, and raises the question of the date on which the conditions for the application of the provision must be met.

49 In those circumstances the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Is Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 applicable to directly awarded public service contracts within the meaning of Article 2(i) of the regulation which do not, for the purposes of the second sentence of Article 5(1) of the regulation, take the form of service concessions contracts under Directives [2004/17] or [2004/18]?

And if Question 1 is answered in the affirmative:

(2) Do Article 2(b) and Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 presume, as is conveyed by the word “or”, an exclusive competence either of an individual authority or of a group of authorities, or do those provisions also permit an individual authority to be a member of a group of authorities and to assign specific tasks to the group but at the same time to retain the power to intervene under Article 2(b) and to be the competent local authority within the meaning of Article 5(2) of the regulation?

(3) Does point (e) of the second sentence of Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007, which lays down the requirement to perform the major part of the public passenger transport service itself, prevent the internal operator from having that major part of the services performed by a wholly owned subsidiary?

(4) At what point in time must the conditions governing direct awards laid down in Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 be met: at the time of publication of an intended direct award pursuant to Article 7 of Regulation No 1370/2007 or not until the time of the direct award itself?’

50 By decision of the President of the Court of 6 March 2018, Cases C-266/17 and C-267/17 were joined for the purposes of the oral part of the procedure and of the judgment.

The request to have the oral part of the procedure reopened

51 By documents lodged at the Court Registry on 20 September 2018, Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker and BVR Busverkehr Rheinland, in Case C-266/17, and Rhenus Veniro, in Case C-267/17, requested the Court to order the oral part of the procedure to be reopened, pursuant to Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court.

52 In support of their requests, Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker and Rhenus Veniro submit that the interpretation of Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007, as adopted by the Advocate General in his Opinion, does not take sufficient account of the arguments that were submitted, in particular, at the hearing and which militate against that interpretation. In addition, some of the arguments developed in their written observations, in particular on the importance of Article 9(1) of Regulation No 1370/2007 for the interpretation of Article 5(2) of that regulation were not debated at the hearing.

53 BVR Busverkehr Rheinland, for its part, claims that the Advocate General was wrong to consider that the third question raised by the referring court in Case C-266/17 could be hypothetical, when the amendment to the articles of association of Regionalverkehr Köln on 21 August 2015 is now applicable.

54 In that regard, it must be borne in mind, first, that the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union and the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice make no provision for the interested parties referred to in Article 23 of the Statute to submit observations in response to the Advocate General's Opinion (judgment of 6 March 2018, Achmea, C-284/16, EU:C:2018:158, paragraph 26 and the case-law cited).

55 Secondly, under the second paragraph of Article 252 TFEU, the Advocate General, acting with complete impartiality and independence, is to make, in open court, reasoned submissions on cases which, in accordance with the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union, require the Advocate General's involvement. The Court is not bound either by the Advocate General's conclusion or by the reasoning which led to that conclusion. Consequently, a party's disagreement with the Opinion of the Advocate General, irrespective of the questions that he examines in his Opinion, cannot in itself constitute grounds justifying the reopening of the oral procedure (judgment of 6 March 2018, Achmea, C-284/16, EU:C:2018:158, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

56 Nevertheless, the Court may at any time, after hearing the Advocate General, order the reopening of the oral part of the procedure, in accordance with Article 83 of its Rules of Procedure, in particular if it considers that it lacks sufficient information or where the case must be decided on the basis of an argument which has not been debated between the interested persons (judgment of 6 March 2018, Achmea, C-284/16, EU:C:2018:158, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited).

57 In the present case, it must be pointed out that, in order to request the reopening of the oral part of the procedure, Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker, BVR Busverkehr Rheinland and Rhenus Veniro dispute the Advocate General's Opinion by using arguments already developed in their written observations or at the hearing.

58 Since the Court has therefore all the information necessary to rule on the requests for a preliminary ruling, it must, having heard the Advocate General, refuse the requests for the oral part of the procedure to be reopened.

Admissibility

59 In Case C-266/17, the Republic of Austria submits that the request for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible, on the ground that the referring court has failed to state, in the order for reference, the means of transport concerned by the public contract at issue in the main proceedings and that it is, therefore, impossible to ascertain whether the transport concerned is a transport service by rail or by bus, or indeed a service combining both those means of transport.

60 In Case C-267/17, the Republic of Austria contends that the request for a preliminary ruling is in part inadmissible, since, according to the referring court's findings, the public contract at issue in the main proceedings relates not only to buses, but also to other motor vehicles. Rhenus Veniro also contends that the first question referred in that case is inadmissible, on the ground that it is hypothetical.

61 In the present case, as regards Case C-266/17, it is true that the order for reference does not expressly specify that the contract at issue in the main proceedings relates to a contract for transport services by bus.

62 However, it is apparent from the documents before the Court, and in particular from the prior information notice of 30 September 2015 mentioned in the order for reference, that Case C-266/17 relates to a contract for passenger transport services by bus.

63 As regards Case C-267/17, while the contract at issue in the main proceedings does indeed relate to a passenger transport service by bus and 'by other motor vehicles', it is still the case that the request for a preliminary ruling remains relevant as regards passenger transport by bus, so that the Court's answer shall be given on the basis of that premiss.

64 In addition, contrary to Rhenus Veniro's claims, the order for reference demonstrates the relevance of the first question referred in that case, since the referring court states that it must decide on the challenge to the direct award of a contract for passenger transport services by bus and that it is unsure which legal rules are applicable to such a direct award.

65 It follows that both requests for a preliminary ruling are admissible.

Consideration of the questions referred

66 By its first question in Case C-266/17 and its first question in Case C-267/17, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 applies to the direct award of contracts for public passenger transport services by bus which do not take the form of service concessions contracts for the purposes of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18.

67 In that regard, the Court points out that, while the first sentence of Article 5(1) of Regulation No 1370/2007 provides that 'public service contracts shall be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down in this Regulation', the second sentence of Article 5(1) adds that, 'however, service contracts or public service contracts as defined in Directives [2004/17] or [2004/18] for public passenger transport services by bus or tram shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures provided for under those Directives where such contracts do not take the form of service concessions contracts as defined in those Directives', and the third sentence of Article 5(1) states that 'where contracts are to be awarded in accordance with Directives [2004/17] or [2004/18], the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 6 of this Article shall not apply'.

68 In this instance, in both cases in the main proceedings, the referring court seems to envisage that the direct award of contracts for public passenger transport services by bus is governed, where those contracts do not take the form of service concessions contracts, not by the public procurement rules laid down by Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18, but by those of Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007, with those latter provisions, as lex specialis, intended to replace the general rules for direct awards.

69 It must, however, be pointed out that the general scheme and origin of EU public procurement legislation cannot lead to such an interpretation.

70 In that regard, it must be found that, as the Commission stated in its observations, pursuant to Articles 5 and 31 of Directive 2004/17, read in conjunction with category 2 of Annex XVII A to that directive, and to Articles 12 and 20 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with category 2 of Annex II A to that directive, contracts for transport services by bus and by tram are subject to the entirety of the public procurement procedures laid down in those directives. By contrast, transport services by rail and by metro are subject, pursuant to Articles 5 and 32 of Directive 2004/17, read in conjunction with category 18 of Annex XVII B to that directive, and to Article 21 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with category 18 of Annex II B to that directive, only to a very limited number of those directives' provisions, in particular to Articles 34 and 43 of Directive 2004/17 and to Articles 23 and 35 of Directive 2004/18. As regards transport service concessions contracts, they are not subject to any provision of Directive 2004/17, pursuant to Article 18 of that directive, and are subject only to Article 3 of Directive 2004/18, pursuant to Article 17 of that directive.

71 Article 5(1) of Regulation No 1370/2007 makes concessions contracts and contracts for passenger transport services by rail and by metro subject to the rules laid down in Article 5(2) to (6) of that regulation whereas, for contracts for transport services by bus and by tram, it refers to Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18.

72 It follows from this that, since there are no rules in those directives specifically governing the award of public contracts in relation to contracts for passenger transport services by rail and by metro, and the award of contracts in the form of services concessions, the EU legislature, in the context of Article 5(2) to (6) of Regulation No 1370/2007, introduced a specific body of award rules applicable to those contracts and concessions, including as regards the direct award of such contracts.

73 Since contracts for public passenger transport services by bus and by tram not relating to concessions had already been made subject, as is apparent from paragraph 70 above, to Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18 prior to the adoption of Regulation No 1370/2007, new legislation was not felt to be necessary for the awards of such contracts which, therefore, remain as a matter of course subject, as the case may be, to the application of Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18.

74 In that regard, the Court points out that the case-law on the direct award of public contracts has been developed on the basis, and in consideration, of those directives, which implies that the origin and rationale of the direct award regime is to be found there.

75 According to the Court's case-law, the direct awards regime which applies to the situations falling within the scope of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18 constitutes an exception to the application of the procedures provided for by those directives (see, to that effect, judgment of 8 May 2014, Datenlotsen Informationssysteme, C-15/13, EU:C:2014:303, paragraph 25) and is, therefore, intrinsically linked to those two directives and their legal regime.

76 In the judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 50), which was the first to acknowledge that the specific nature of direct awards gives grounds for not applying the public procurement rules, the Court held that while, for the purposes of applying those rules in accordance with Article 1(a) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), it is, in principle, sufficient if the contract was concluded between, on the one hand, a local authority and, on the other, a person legally distinct from that local authority, the position can be otherwise in the case where the public authority, which is a contracting authority, exercises over the separate entity in question a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities. Following that judgment, the Court made clear the conditions for applying that regime, in particular in the judgments of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5), and of 11 May 2006, Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei (C-340/04, EU:C:2006:308), and then in the context of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18, in the judgments of 10 September 2009, Sea (C-573/07, EU:C:2009:532), and of 8 May 2014, Datenlotsen Informationssysteme (C-15/13, EU:C:2014:303).

77 In addition, it must be pointed out that Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25, which repealed and replaced Directives 2004/18 and 2004/17 respectively, both (in Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 and Article 28 of Directive 2014/25), codified and made clear the Court's case-law on direct awards.

78 Even though that codification of the general regime for direct awards does not apply ratione temporis to the disputes in the main proceedings, it demonstrates that the EU legislature intended that regime to be linked to Directives 2014/24 and 2014/25.

79 That incorporation of the direct award regime within the scope of the public procurement directives means that, in practice, any recourse to that type of award presupposes the application of those directives.

80 It follows from this that Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 does not apply to the direct award of contracts for public passenger transport services by bus which do not take the form of service concessions contracts.

81 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first question in Case C-266/17 and the first question in Case C-267/17 is that Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 does not apply to the direct award of contracts for public passenger transport services by bus which do not take the form of service concessions contracts for the purposes of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18.

82 Since the first question in Case C-266/17 and the first question in Case C-267/17 have been answered in the negative, there is no need to answer the other questions referred.

Costs

83 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2007 on public passenger transport services by rail and by road does not apply to the direct award of contracts for public passenger transport services by bus which do not take the form of service concessions contracts for the purposes of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: German.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 13 September 2018 (1)

Joined Cases C-266/17 and C-267/17

Rhein-Sieg-Kreis

v

Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker GmbH,

BVR Busverkehr Rheinland GmbH (C-266/17),

intervener:

Regionalverkehr Köln GmbH

and

Rhenus Veniro GmbH & Co. KG

v

Kreis Heinsberg (C-267/17),

intervener:

WestVerkehr GmbH

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Transport — Public passenger transport services by road — Direct award of public service contracts: internal operator — Conditions for the application of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 — Similar control — Further direct award by the internal operator — Point at which the conditions for direct award must be assessed)

1. At the root of these two references for a preliminary ruling are two contracts for public passenger transport services by bus which were directly awarded (or are in the course of being directly awarded) by German local authorities to their respective ‘internal operators’. The referring court emphasises that neither of those contracts takes the legal form of a transport services concession.

2. The proliferation of the aforementioned direct award mechanism, which dispenses with free competition and favours municipal transport undertakings, is a cause for concern to the other, privately-owned, undertakings in the sector concerned, whose market share is being eroded while that of publicly-capitalised undertakings is stable or growing.

3. The referring court wishes to ascertain, first and foremost, whether the direct award of those contracts to internal operators is governed by the lex specialis, which, in this case, would be Article 5 of Regulation No 1370/2007, (2) by the general public procurement directives or by the rules of the FEU Treaty. In addition to that principal point of uncertainty, it also raises questions concerning other aspects of the relationship between local authorities and their internal operators.

I. EU legal framework. Regulation No 1370/2007

4. Article 2 reads:

‘For the purposes of this Regulation:

…

(b) “competent authority” means any public authority or group of public authorities of a Member State or Member States which has the power to intervene in public passenger transport in a given geographical area or anybody vested with such authority;

(c) “competent local authority” means any competent authority whose geographical area of competence is not national;

…

(h) “direct award” means the award of a public service contract to a given public service operator without any prior competitive tendering procedure;

(i) “public service contract” means one or more legally binding acts confirming the agreement between a competent authority and a public service operator to entrust to that public service operator the management and operation of public passenger transport services subject to public service obligations; …

(j) “internal operator” means a legally distinct entity over which a competent local authority, or in the case of a group of authorities at least one competent local authority, exercises control similar to that exercised over its own departments;

...’.

5. Pursuant to Article 4:

‘…

7. ... If subcontracting takes place, the operator entrusted with the administration and performance of public passenger transport services in accordance with this Regulation shall be required to perform a major part of the public passenger transport services itself. ...’

6. Article 5 states:

‘1. Public service contracts shall be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down in this Regulation. However, service contracts or public service contracts as defined in Directives 2004/17/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1)] or 2004/18/EC [of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) (‘together the procurement directives’)] for public passenger transport services by bus or tram shall be awarded in accordance with the procedure provided for under those directives where such contracts do not take the form of service concessions contracts as defined in those directives. Where contracts are to be awarded in accordance with Directives [2004/17] or [2004/18], the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 6 of this Article shall not apply.

2. Unless prohibited by national law, any competent local authority, whether or not it is an individual authority or a group of authorities providing integrated public passenger transport services, may decide to provide public passenger transport services itself or to award public service contracts directly to a legally distinct entity over which the competent local authority, or in the case of a group of authorities at least one competent local authority, exercises control similar to that exercised over its own departments. Where a competent local authority takes such a decision, the following shall apply:

(a) for the purposes of determining whether the competent local authority exercises control, factors such as the degree of representation on administrative, management or supervisory bodies, specifications relating thereto in the articles of association, ownership, effective influence and control over strategic decisions and individual management decisions shall be taken into consideration. In accordance with Community law, 100% ownership by the competent public authority, in particular in the case of public-private partnerships, is not a mandatory requirement for establishing control within the meaning of this paragraph, provided that there is a dominant public influence and that control can be established on the basis of other criteria;

(b) the condition for applying this paragraph is that the internal operator and any entity over which this operator exerts even a minimal influence perform their public passenger transport activity within the territory of the competent local authority, notwithstanding any outgoing lines or other ancillary elements of that activity which enter the territory of neighbouring competent local authorities, and do not take part in competitive tenders concerning the provision of public passenger transport services organised outside the territory of the competent local authority;

(c) notwithstanding point (b), an internal operator may participate in fair competitive tenders as from two years before the end of its directly awarded public service contract under the condition that a final decision has been taken to submit the public passenger transport services covered by the internal operator contract to fair competitive tender and that the internal operator has not concluded any other directly awarded public service contract;

…

(e) if subcontracting under Article 4(7) is being considered, the internal operator shall be required to perform the major part of the public passenger transport service itself.

3. Any competent authority which has recourse to a third party other than an internal operator shall award public service contracts on the basis of a competitive tendering procedure, except in the cases specified in paragraphs 4, 5 and 6. The procedure adopted for competitive tendering shall be open to all operators, shall be fair and shall observe the principles of transparency and non-discrimination. Following the submission of tenders and any preselection, the procedure may involve negotiations in accordance with these principles in order to determine how best to meet specific or complex requirements.

…’

7. Article 7 provides:

‘…

2. Each competent authority shall take the necessary measures to ensure that, at least one year before the launch of the invitation to tender procedure or one year before the direct award, the following information at least is published in the Official Journal of the European Union:

(a) the name and address of the competent authority;

(b) the type of award envisaged;

(c) the services and areas potentially covered by the award.

…’

8. Article 8 stipulates:

‘…

2. Without prejudice to paragraph 3, the award of public service contracts by rail and by road shall comply with Article 5 as from 3 December 2019. During this transitional period Member States shall take measures to gradually comply with Article 5 in order to avoid serious structural problems in particular relating to transport capacity.

Within six months after the first half of the transitional period, Member States shall provide the Commission with a progress report, highlighting the implementation of any gradual award of public service contracts in line with Article 5. On the basis of the Member States’ progress reports, the Commission may propose appropriate measures addressed to Member States.

3. In the application of paragraph 2, no account shall be taken of public service contracts awarded in accordance with Community and national law:

(a) before 26 July 2000 on the basis of a fair and competitive tendering procedure;

(b) before 26 July 2000 on the basis of a procedure other than a fair competitive tendering procedure;

(c) as from 26 July 2000 and before 3 December 2009 on the basis of a fair competitive tendering procedure;

(d) as from 26 July 2000 and before 3 December 2009 on the basis of a procedure other than a fair competitive tendering procedure.

The contracts referred to in (a) may continue until they expire. The contracts referred to in (b) and (c) may continue until they expire, but for no longer than 30 years. The contracts referred to in (d) may continue until they expire, provided they are of limited duration comparable to the durations specified in Article 4.

Public service contracts may continue until they expire where their termination would entail undue legal or economic consequences and provided that the Commission has given its approval.

…’

II. Facts of the dispute and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

A. Case C-266/17

9. Rhein-Sieg-Kreis (District of Rhein-Sieg) is a local authority in the Land of North Rhine-Westphalia which, under national law, has the status of a competent authority within its geographical area for the purposes of the Regulation.

10. Rhein-Sieg-Kreis has an internal operator (Regionalverkehr Köln GmbH, ‘RV Köln’) with its own legal personality. (3) According to the order for reference, Rhein-Sieg-Kreis exerts over RV Köln a control ‘similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, in the form of shared control with the other shareholders’. (4)

11. In addition, Rhein-Sieg-Kreis, together with a number of other local authorities, established a management consortium (Verkehrsverbund Rhein-Sieg) which is responsible in particular for setting tariffs but does not engage in any transport activities.

12. Rhein-Sieg-Kreis announced that, (5) acting in accordance with Article 5(2) of the Regulation, it was going to make a direct award of the contract for providing public passenger transport services ‘within its geographical area, including on routes running into neighbouring geographical areas’. (6)

13. RV Köln holds the contract for providing public passenger transport services in the territory of Rhein-Sieg-Kreis, as well as on outgoing lines and in connection with other ancillary elements of that activity which enter the territory of neighbouring local authorities. (7)

14. The announcement of that award was challenged by Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker GmbH and BVR Busverkehr Rheinland GmbH before the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Public Procurement Chamber for the Rhineland, Germany), which prohibited that contract from being directly awarded to the internal operator because the conditions for the application of Article 5(2) of the Regulation were not satisfied: the local authority did not exercise control over the operator and the public passenger transport services were provided in territories other than that administered by the contracting authority.

15. The decision of the Vergabekammer Rheinland was appealed to the referring court. That court highlights the fact that there are differences of opinion among the German courts as regards contracts for passenger transport by road that do not take the form of service concessions:

– For some courts, a concession alone justifies the application of the Regulation. In the absence of a concession, the general regime laid down in the procurement directives applies.

– For others, Article 5(2) of the Regulation establishes a special regime that takes precedence over the general rules. The reference in Article 5(1) to the procurement directives is devoid of purpose in cases such as this, since internal awards are not subject to those directives.

16. It was in those circumstances that the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Does Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 apply to contracts which are not contracts which, within the meaning of the first sentence of Article 5(1) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007, take the form of service concession contracts as defined in Directives 2004/17/EC or 2004/18/EC?

If Question 1 is answered in the affirmative:

(2) Where an individual competent authority awards a public service contract directly to an internal operator in accordance with Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007, is the joint exercise of control by that authority together with the other shareholders of the internal operator precluded if the power to intervene in public passenger transport in a given geographical area (Article 2(b) and (c) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007) is divided between the individual competent authority and a group of authorities which provides integrated public passenger transport services, for example where the power to award public service contracts to an internal operator remains with the individual competent authority but the responsibility for tariffs is transferred to a special purpose transport association to which, in addition to the individual authority, further authorities competent in their geographical areas belong?

(3) Where an individual competent authority awards a public service contract directly to an internal operator in accordance with Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007, is the joint exercise of control by that authority together with the other shareholders of the internal operator precluded if, according to that operator’s articles of association, in the case of resolutions concerning the conclusion, amendment or termination of a public service contract referred to in Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007, the only shareholder entitled to vote is the one which itself or whose indirect or direct owner awards a public service contract to the internal operator in accordance with Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007?

(4) Does point (b) of the second sentence of Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 permit the internal operator also to perform public passenger transport services for other competent local authorities within their territory (including outgoing lines and ancillary elements of that activity which enter the territory of neighbouring competent local authorities) if these are not awarded through organised competitive tender procedures?

(5) Does point (b) of the second sentence of Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 permit the internal operator also to perform public passenger transport activity outside the territory of the commissioning authority for other authorities on the basis of public service contracts covered by the transitional provisions of Article 8(3) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007?

(6) On which date must the requirements of Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 be satisfied?'

B. Case C-267/17

17. Kreis Heinsberg (District of Heinsberg) is a local authority in the Land of North Rhine-Westphalia. Together with the city of Aachen, the metropolitan area of Aachen and the Kreis Düren (District of Düren), it is a member of the Aachener Verkehrsverbund, a consortium of municipal authorities governed by public law, which was formed to promote and support local public passenger transport services for its members. (8)

18. On 15 March 2016, Kreis Heinsberg announced (9) that it would be making a direct award, without call for competition, of the contract for public passenger transport services by bus and other vehicles under Article 5(2) of the Regulation.

19. The internal operator (10) to which Kreis Heinsberg intended to award the contract for those services, with effect from 1 January 2018 for a period of 120 months, was WestVerkehr GmbH, a company which had pursued its activities principally through its wholly-owned subsidiary, Kreisverkehrsgesellschaft Heinsberg mbH, and intended to carry on doing so after the direct award.

20. Rhenus Veniro GmbH challenged that award before the Vergabekammer Rheinland (Public Procurement Chamber for the Rhineland), which dismissed its application on 11 November 2016, whereupon that company brought an action before the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf), claiming (a) that Article 5(2) of the Regulation is not applicable and (b) in the alternative, that Kreis Heinsberg, as a member of the Aachener Verkehrsverbund, is not competent to make a direct award of the contract in question, since competence to do so lies with an individual authority or a group of authorities, but not with an authority in its capacity as a member of the group.

21. It was in those circumstances that the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 applicable to directly awarded public service contracts within the meaning of Article 2(i) of the regulation which do not, for the purposes of the second sentence of Article 5(1) of the regulation, take the form of service concessions contracts under Directives 2004/17/EC or 2004/18/EC?

(2) Do Article 2(b) and Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 presume, as is conveyed by the word "or", an exclusive competence either of an individual authority or of a group of authorities, or do those provisions also permit an individual authority to be a member of a group of authorities and to assign specific tasks to the group but at the same time to retain the power to intervene under Article 2(b) and to be the competent local authority within the meaning of Article 5(2) of the regulation?

(3) Does point (e) of the second sentence of Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007, which lays down the requirement to perform the major part of the public passenger transport service itself, prevent the internal operator from having the major part of the services performed by a wholly-owned subsidiary?

(4) At what point in time must the conditions governing direct awards laid down in Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 be met: at the time of publication of an intended direct award pursuant to Article 7 of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 or not until the time of the direct award itself?'

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice

22. The orders for reference were received at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 17 May 2017, after which the decision was made to join the two cases.

23. Written observations have been submitted by Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker GmbH, Rhenus Veniro GmbH, Rhein-Sieg-Kreis, Kreis Heisenberg, the Austrian Government and the European Commission.

24. Verkehrsbetrieb Hüttebräucker GmbH, Rhenus Veniro GmbH, BVR Busverkher Rhineland GmbH, Rhein-Sieg-Kreis, Kreis Heisenberg and the European Commission attended the hearing on 31 May 2018.

IV. Analysis

A. Application of the Regulation (first question in Cases C-266/17 and C-267/17)

25. The premiss from which we must start is that, in these two disputes, the legal relationship between the contracting authority and the operator entrusted with the provision of public passenger transport services by road is not, according to the referring court, a public service concession but a public service contract.

26. If that is the case, the applicable provision is Article 5(1) of the Regulation. This means that the public service contract in question should in principle be awarded in accordance with Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC. (11)

27. The problem is that those two directives, unlike the later 2014 directives, (12) do not make any provision for the direct award of such contracts to internal operators (also known as in-house operators). In those circumstances, the dilemma faced is whether to:

– rely on the case-law which, (13) under the legislation prior to the 2014 procurement directives, set out a framework for direct selection in cases where the supplier was simply an agency internal to the contracting authority department that exercised control over it. The Teckal case-law, which was specifically established as an exception to the application of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18, provides a number of guidelines, derived from other case-law, whereby public authorities may entrust such tasks to their agencies; or – apply the specific rules which the Regulation lays down with respect to awards made to internal operators in this way.

28. As is apparent from the difference of opinion among the German courts to which the orders for reference refer, there is no obvious solution to this problem and the disparity between legal regimes based on one or other of the aforementioned propositions is significant. It would be different if the 2014 Directives could be applied in the disputes giving rise to the present references for a preliminary ruling, inasmuch as those directives, barring a few minor exceptions, have, in essence, formally incorporated the Teckal case-law into their provisions. (14)

29. In that event, it could readily be accepted that the reference to the 2004 Directives in Article 5(1) of the Regulation should be understood as relating to the 2014 Directives once they are in force. (15) And since those directives already expressly lay down the rules governing the award of public contracts to in-house operators, it would fall to be determined whether those rules take precedence over the rules in Article 5(2) of the Regulation. (16) However, the application of the 2014 Directives is not feasible, ratione temporis, in this case. (17)

30. The Court of Justice has held that ‘the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract (judgment [of 11 July 2013,] Commission v Netherlands, C-576/10, EU:C:2013:510, paragraph 52 and the case-law cited). Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time (see, to that effect, the judgment [of 5 October 2000,] Commission v France, C-337/98, EU:C:2000:543, paragraphs 41 and 42)’. (18)

31. The two orders for reference show that the direct award announcements were made prior to the deadline for the transposition of the 2014 Directives. (19) There is, moreover, no objective evidence to support the inference that the option pursued by the contracting authority was any different from that which it had indicated in those announcements.

32. Consequently, we must turn our attention back to the dilemma I mentioned earlier without the option of using the rules laid down in the 2014 Directives on direct awards to internal operators.

33. The procedures provided for in Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC are not applicable to this type of in-house award. As I have said in other Opinions, '[u]nder the in-house system, the contracting authority does not, from a functional point of view, contract with a separate body but, in effect, contracts with itself, given the nature of the connection with the formally separate body. Strictly speaking, there is no award of a contract, but simply an order or task, which the other 'party' cannot refuse to undertake, whatever the name given to it. [...] The absence of a real relationship between two distinct parties explains why a contracting authority is not required to comply with public procurement procedures where it is using its own resources to perform its tasks'. (20)

34. The award to internal operators will therefore have to be governed either by the Teckal case-law or by the special rules contained in Article 5(2) of the Regulation (for cases involving land transport services).

35. While I recognise the weight of the arguments to the contrary, I incline to the view that Article 5(2) of the Regulation should prevail. To my mind, there are various arguments to support that position.

36. The first is consistent with a literal interpretation of the third sentence of Article 5(1), read a sensu contrario. If paragraphs 2 to 5 of that article cede, exceptionally and to a limited extent, (21) only where service contracts 'are to be awarded in accordance with Directives 2004/17/EC or 2004/18/EC', they will become fully applicable again if those directives do not provide for direct awards to internal operators, as is the case here. I have already made the point that, for the Court of Justice, in-house commissions are excluded from those two directives.

37. That literal interpretation is corroborated by the wording of Article 5(1): public service contracts for passenger transport by bus 'shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures provided for under … Directives [2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC]', where they do not take the form of service concessions contracts. If, as is the case, those directives do not provide for any procedure for awards to internal operators, which are more in the nature of mechanisms for self-provision by contracting authorities, the reference to such procedures is devoid of purpose and meaning.

38. The same would not be true of competitive awards (that is to say, awards not made to internal operators), in respect of which that reference is entirely valid. Where a public authority wishes to award to third parties a contract of this kind that does not take the form of a concession, it must do so by way of the competitive procedures for which Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC do indeed provide.

39. The second argument is drawn from a systemic assessment of the applicable rules, combined with the rule of specialty. If in 2007 (that is to say, after the adoption of the 2004 Directives) the EU legislature sought to introduce a dedicated scheme for the in-house award of contracts for land transport services, it is my opinion that, in the event of doubt, that scheme, as set out in Article 5(2) of the Regulation, must be regarded as taking precedence over the (general) scheme arising from the Teckal case-law.

40. The third and final argument takes into account the purpose intended to be served by Article 5(2) of the Regulation. In the light of the particular features of passenger transport by road, the EU legislature sought to ensure that 'any local authority … [could] provide its own public passenger transport services in the area it administers or to entrust them to an internal operator without competitive tendering'. The conditions for using the latter mechanism are fairly precise and reflect the balance between that objective and the objective of 'ensur[ing] a level playing field'. (22)

41. It is more in keeping with that purpose to give priority to the dedicated rules contained in the Regulation, which are tailored to the features of passenger transport by bus, than to adhere to the principles laid down in the Teckal case-law, which apply to any other services sector. Prominent among those rules is that which allows (and, to some extent, encourages) local authorities to form groups for the purposes of awarding such contracts to an internal operator over which they exercise a control similar to that which they exercise over their own departments.

42. In short, a local authority planning to award directly to an internal operator a contract for public passenger transport services by bus must do so in accordance with the conditions laid down in Article 5(2) of the Regulation.

B. Intervention by the local authority in the award of the contract and in the control over the internal operator (second question in Cases C-266/17 and C-267/17 and third question in Case C-266/17)

43. The local authorities (Kreise (Districts)) which awarded (or intended to award) contracts to their internal operators in these two cases had joined together with other similar authorities to form management consortia (Verkehrsverbund) operating at a higher territorial level. The powers assigned to such consortia include setting common tariffs for passenger transport services in their respective territories. (23)

44. The referring court wishes to ascertain whether that fact precludes the two local authorities (Kreise (Districts)) comprising the consortia from awarding their respective contracts.

45. As I have already said, the first subparagraph of Article 5(2) of the Regulation allows local authorities, either independently or in conjunction with others, to award contracts directly to internal operators, provided that they 'exercise … control similar to that [exercised] over their own departments'.

46. In the abstract, I see no reason why giving the management consortium the power to adopt tariffs should undermine the 'similar control' exercised by the individual authorities over their own internal operators. I therefore concur with the opinion expressed by the referring court in that regard. The establishment of a common tariff decided upon by the consortium provides users with an integrated transport service by enabling them to buy a single ticket irrespective of the internal operator providing that service and irrespective of the local authority to which that internal operator is attached.

47. The material point here is whether or not the 'similar control' exercised by each local authority (or, as the case may be, the joint control exercised by the group) over the internal operator continues in being. Depending on how it is done, giving powers to the management consortium could reduce the local authority's powers to such an extent that the latter no longer exercises over the internal operator a control comparable with that which it exercises over its own departments.

48. If the question referred is confined to the transfer of tariff-setting powers to the consortium, I do not consider that this fact necessarily entails an abdication of control over the internal operator. Furthermore, the fact that each Kreis (District), as a local authority forming part of the management consortium, participates in the tariff-setting decisions adopted by the latter, shows that it retains — albeit on a shared basis — control even over that aspect of the services in question.

49. Of course, the ultimate assessment as to whether, in the specific circumstances of the two disputes, control over the internal operator continues to be exercised by the Kreise (Districts), whether individually or as part of a group, is a matter which falls to be determined by the national court, which alone has before it the evidence necessary to enable it to make that assessment. (24) The fact is that the orders for reference do not provide enough detail to be able to form a true and full picture of the relationships between the local authorities and the internal operator.

50. In that same context, the third question referred for a preliminary ruling in Case C-266/17 refers to an amendment to RV Köln's articles of association, adopted at the general shareholders' meeting on 21 August 2015, that would restrict the right to vote to shareholders that award a contract under Article 5(2) of the Regulation. The referring court wishes to ascertain whether that amendment to the articles of association might have an effect on the control exercised by the local contracting authority.

51. The wording of the order for reference makes for difficult reading in this regard. In any event, paragraph 21 thereof states that 'it is at present unclear whether the additional party's articles of association will continue in their existing version or whether the amended version of 21 August 2015 will take effect', the reason for this being, as explained previously (in paragraph 6 of the order), that the amendment decision of 21 August 2015 was challenged and 'suspended pursuant to a final judgment'.

52. That being the case, (25) this question might perhaps be said to be hypothetical, since it deals with an element of fact (the amendment to the articles of association) which the referring court itself does not consider relevant to the judgment it must give because that amendment is not in force.

53. In any event, the new wording of RV Köln's articles of association would, in this case, serve only to confirm that the Kreis (District), because it was the authority that awarded the contract to that operator, is entitled to vote at its general shareholders' meeting, which is to say that it is able to exercise the control vested in it over the operating company. As the referring court rightly points out, the amendment to the third sentence of Paragraph 17(1) of the articles of association 'strengthens the influence of the shareholder which awards the public service contract and on whose territory the passenger transport activities are intended to be performed'.

C. The territory in which the internal operator may provide transport services (fourth and fifth questions in Case C-266/17)

54. By its fourth question in Case C-266/17, the referring court seeks to ascertain whether an internal operator to which a contract has been directly awarded may provide passenger transport services by land not only in the territory of the local contracting authority but also in that of other local authorities within the group of which the contracting authority is a member.

55. Again, the order for reference is not very clear in this regard. Its wording might once again support the inference that this question is hypothetical, since:

– in the award announcement, the local authority stated that the service in question was going to be provided 'within its territory, including on routes running into neighbouring geographical areas' (paragraph 10 of the order); and – the referring court itself confirms that information by stating that 'those services (apart from through routes or other part services which enter the territory of neighbouring competent local authorities) are provided within the territory of the contracting authority' (paragraph 22 of the order).

56. The fact remains, however, that the purpose of the question could be to determine — regardless of whether the award of the contract in question to RV Köln complied with that rule — whether that company is prevented from providing its services to other local authorities, that is to say from carrying out its activities in the territories of those authorities.

57. According to Article 5(2)(b) of the Regulation, the internal operator may pursue its public passenger transport services only within the territory of the competent local authority. That authority may, however, be both an individual local authority and a group of local authorities. (26) There is, therefore, nothing to stop one or more members of a group of local authorities from entrusting those services to a single operator, common to all of them, over which they exercise a control similar to that which they exercise over their own departments. In that event, the internal operator may carry out its activities in each of the territories administered by the (group of) local authorities which have entrusted the aforementioned services to it.

58. What is more, that possibility is not a new development confined to the Regulation. In building on its Teckal case-law, the Court of Justice has allowed some public authorities to discharge their public service functions in collaboration with others by availing themselves of a common entity over which they exercise a control similar (but not identical) to that which they exercise over their own departments. (27)

59. In the judgment in Coditel Brabant, (28) the Court considered the case of a local authority which 'sought to join a grouping composed of other public authorities, such as an inter-municipal cooperative society', for the purposes of performing its tasks. The Court recognised the joint control exercised by those local authorities, and that such control did not have to be individual. (29)

60. In short, if the internal operator is an entity common to a number of local authorities, which exercise over it a (joint) control similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, the territory referred to in Article 5(2)(b) of the Regulation must be construed as being the territory administered by each of those authorities.

61. In the fifth question, the national court seems to be referring now not to the territory of the group of local authorities but to that of any other 'commissioning authorities' which might hypothetically have concluded with RV Köln transport services contracts which predate 3 December 2003, that is to say which are subject to transitional arrangements under Article 8 of the Regulation.

62. That article provided for a series of measures gradually introducing the contract award rules laid down in the Regulation itself. Since there is no need to examine that article in detail, it is sufficient to note that public service contracts awarded in accordance with Community or national law, on the basis of the procedures and in the periods specified in Article 8(3), could continue until they expired, subject to certain limits.

63. As the order for reference provides no further details, I am of the view that any contracts predating those referred to are in force, pursuant to the transitional rules laid down in Article 8 that are mentioned in the question. Consequently, since the Regulation makes explicit provision for the continued existence of those contracts, the territorial restriction imposed in Article 5(2)(b) of that regulation must be interpreted as not encompassing them.

D. Point at which the conditions laid down in Article 5(2) of the Regulation must be fulfilled (sixth question in Case C-266/17 and fourth question in Case C-267/17)

64. The referring court is uncertain whether the conditions applicable under Article 5(2) of the Regulation must be fulfilled (a) at the time of the direct award or (b) at the time when it falls to the competent authority, in accordance with Article 7(2) of that regulation, to publish in the Official Journal of the European Union the information relating to the direct award which it is planning to make.

65. When setting out the information which the competent authority must include in its announcement (at least one year before the direct award), Article 7(2) of the Regulation does not require that authority to specify the identity of the future recipient of the award. There is nothing to stop the local authority, in the interval between the announcement and the award itself, from structuring its agencies one way or another: what matters is that the internal operator finally selected should satisfy the conditions laid down by law (in particular the condition that it must be under the control of the authority that entrusts the services to it).

66. In my estimation, on a combined reading of Article 5(2) and Article 7(2) of the Regulation, the point at which the conditions laid down in the first of those provisions must be fulfilled is indeed the point at which the direct award is made. Only then will the identity of the operator selected be known, and it is this piece of information which is crucial to determining whether, in the circumstances, the competent authority exercises over that operator a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, and whether or not that operator is in one of the situations referred to in Article 5(2)(b) and (c) of the Regulation.

E. Provision of the service by the internal operator via a subsidiary (third question in Case C-267/17)

67. In practice, the internal operator WestVerkehr GmbH provides the public transport services entrusted to it via a wholly-owned subsidiary. In the light of that fact, and the wording of Article 5(2)(e) of the Regulation ('if subcontracting … is being considered, the internal operator shall be required to perform the major part of the public passenger transport itself'), the referring court asks whether that provision allows the services to be entrusted to the subsidiary.

68. The Regulation provides for subcontracting as a means to open up the provision of services to undertakings other than the recipient of the award which are linked to that recipient by contract. Subcontractors may not, however, carry out more than a limited percentage of the service in question, thus:

– if the supplier awarded the contract is an autonomous undertaking, that is to say not an internal operator, it 'shall be required to perform a major part of the public passenger transport services itself' (Article 4(7)); (30)

– if, on the other hand, the supplier awarded the contract is an internal operator, 'it shall be required to perform the major part of the service itself' (Article 5(2)(e)).

69. To my mind, however, a situation such as that here cannot properly be described as subcontracting. I concur with the proposition put forward by Kreis Heinsberg in its written observations to the effect that the relationship between a subsidiary which is wholly owned by the internal operator that controls it and that internal operator is not one established by a subcontract. Subcontracting requires two autonomous undertakings (31) which, 'from a position of equality rather than dependence or hierarchical subordination', (32) agree between them the conditions that will govern their contractual relationship.

70. The subcontracting provided for by the aforementioned articles of the Regulation will take place in circumstances where the internal operator decides to use a third party external to its corporate structure to provide the services in question. (33) If, however, the entity which the internal operator uses to that end is a wholly-owned subsidiary company over which it exercises full control, to the extent of dictating its business decisions, then, from a functional point of view, those services are effectively being provided by the same economic and operational unit. There is, therefore, no real third party with which to subcontract.

71. In those circumstances, the in-house link between Kreis Heinsberg and its internal operator (WestVerkehr GmbH) extends to the latter's wholly-owned subsidiary, over which the local authority also exercises a (secondary) control equivalent to that which it exercises over its (other) departments.

72. Consequently, point (e) of the second sentence of Article 5(2) of the Regulation does not preclude an internal operator from entrusting to a subsidiary in which it has a 100% shareholding and over which it exercises full control the provision of the major part of the services awarded to it.

V. Conclusion

73. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf, Germany) as follows:

(1) Article 5(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2007 on public passenger transport services by rail and by road and repealing Council Regulations (EEC) No 1191/69 and 1107/70:

– is applicable to a direct award made by the competent local authorities to an internal operator over which they exercise a control similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, where that award relates to contracts for public passenger transport services which do not take the form of service concessions contracts within the meaning of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, or Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts;

– does not preclude local authorities from conferring on a consortium of local authorities of which they form part the power to set common tariffs for the services in question, provided that such empowerment does not prevent those authorities from exercising over the internal operator a control similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, which it is for the referring court to determine;

– does not preclude the internal operator to which a competent local authority has awarded the contract for providing the services in question from providing those services via a subsidiary over which the internal operator exercises full control, on which it can impose its decisions and in which it has a 100% shareholding;

– allows the internal operator, in its capacity as an entity acting on behalf of all members of the group of local authorities, to provide public passenger transport services in each of the territories administered by those authorities; and – also authorises the internal operator to continue to provide its services outside the territorial competence of the contracting local authority, provided that it does so under contracts subject to the transitional arrangements provided for in Article 8(3) of Regulation No 1370/2007.

(2) The conditions governing the direct award of contracts to an internal operator under Article 5(2) of Regulation No 1370/2007 must be satisfied at the time when the direct award is actually made.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Regulation (EC) of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2007 on public passenger transport services by rail and road and repealing Council Regulations (EEC) No 1191/69 and 1107/70 (OJ 2007 L 315, p. 1) (‘the Regulation’).

---

3 RV Köln is a limited liability company whose shares are held by a number of public entities including Rhein-Sieg-Kreis (which has an indirect shareholding via a wholly-owned subsidiary).

---

4 Paragraph 20 of the order for reference.

---

5 Communication published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union of 30 September 2015.

---

6 Paragraph 10 of the order for reference.

---

7 Ibidem, paragraph 22.

---

8 Paragraph 10 of the consortium’s articles of association, entitled ‘Formation of a group of authorities’, provides that ‘the consortium members shall form a group of authorities within the meaning of the first sentence of Article 5(2) of [the Regulation]. Its members shall be entitled to make direct awards of public service contracts to internal operators. Internal operators may perform public passenger transport services in the territories of all the consortium members, including on outgoing lines. To that end, it shall be necessary in each individual case to obtain the consent of a consortium member not participating in the internal operator to provide the public passenger transport services by road envisaged for its territory. For the purposes of these articles of association, direct awards shall be considered to have been made by all consortium members’. It goes on to say that ‘conduct of the procurement procedures as a contracting authority under Article 5(2) of [the Regulation] shall fall in principle to the member exercising control over the internal operator for the purposes of that provision’.

---

9 Announcement published in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union of 15 March 2016.

---

10 At the hearing, one of the parties expressed reservations about whether the undertaking awarded the contract could be classified as an internal operator. In the opinion of the referring court, however, its status as such is not a matter for debate.

---

11 According to that provision, ‘service contracts or public service contracts as defined in Directives 2004/17/EC or 2004/18/EC for public passenger transport services by bus or tram shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures provided for under those Directives where such contracts do not take the form of service concessions contracts as defined in those Directives. Where contracts are to be awarded in accordance with Directives 2004/17/EC or 2004/18/EC, the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 6 of this Article shall not apply’. Emphasis added.

---

12 Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65) and Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243) (‘the 2014 Directives’).

---

13 Judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562; ‘Teckal case-law’).

---

14 Thus, Article 12 of Directive 2014/24 regulates ‘public contracts between entities within the public sector’. Article 28 of Directive 2014/25 governs ‘contracts between contracting authorities’.

---

15 The Communication from the Commission on interpretative guidelines concerning Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 on public passenger transport services by rail and by road (OJ 2014 C 92, p. 1) states that, ‘since the directives referred to in Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 (Directive 2004/17/EC and Directive 2004/18/EC) have been repealed and replaced by … [D]irectives [2014/24 and 2014/25], the references in Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 should be understood as relating to the new directives’ (paragraph 2.1.1).

---

16 At the hearing, it was debated whether one or other set of rules could be applied simultaneously or in parallel. To my mind, however, now is not the time to be having that debate, although the same will not be true of in-house awards made after 18 April 2016.

---

17 According to the Commission, Article 5(2) is not applicable in these circumstances, since it is confined to concessions. The Commission’s position effectively brings forward the application of the in-house rules laid down in the 2014 Directives to facts subject to the 2004 Directives. Paradoxically, when the Commission analyses in detail the second and subsequent questions referred for a preliminary ruling in Case C-267/17, it relies on the content of Article 5(2) to support its arguments.

---

18 Judgment of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti (C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraph 31). See also the judgment of 27 October 2016, Hörmann Reisen (C-292/15, EU:C:2016:817, paragraph 32), which cites the judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz (C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 83).

---

19 These were to be transposed by 18 April 2016 at the latest and the award announcements in the disputes in the main proceedings were made on 30 September 2015 and 16 March 2016.

---

20 Opinion in LitSpecMet (C-567/15, EU:C:2017:319, points 70 and 71).

---

21 See the judgment of 27 October 2016, Hörmann Reisen (C-292/15, EU:C:2016:817, paragraph 39).

---

22 Recital 18 of the Regulation.

---

23 The orders for reference do not describe the scope of those powers in detail. The referring court refers only to the setting of tariffs.

---

24 The factors that must be taken into account 'for the purposes of determining whether [that] control [exists]' are spelled out in Article 5(2)(a) of the Regulation.

---

25 In its written observations, the Rhein-Sieg-Kreis states that, 'contrary to what the referring court states, the new version of the articles of association of 21 August 2015 … is intended to apply in full' (paragraph 29).

---

26 See expressly to this effect the first subparagraph of Article 5(2).

---

27 Judgment of 19 April 2007, Asemfo (C-295/05, EU:C:2007:227, paragraph 62): 'it follows from the case-law that, where several authorities control an undertaking, that condition [that the essential part of the undertaking's activities must be carried out with the authority or authorities which own it] may be met if that undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities not necessarily with any one of those authorities but with all of those authorities together ([judgment of 11 May 2006,] Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei [C-340/04, EU:C:2006:308], paragraph 70)'.

---

28 Judgment of 13 November 2008 (C-324/07, EU:C:2008:621).

---

29 Ibidem, paragraph 54 and the operative part of the judgment: 'where a public authority joins an inter-communal cooperative of which all the members are public authorities in order to transfer to that cooperative society the management of a public service, it is possible, in order for the control which those member authorities exercise over the cooperative to be regarded as similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, for it to be exercised jointly by those authorities, decisions being taken by a majority, as the case may be'.

---

30 In the judgment of 27 October 2016, Hörmann Reisen (C-292/15, EU:C:2016:817), the Court considered the application of that article to a tendering procedure subject to Directive 2004/18 and held that the setting of 70% as the proportion of the service that must be provided by the operator was not at odds with Article 7(4) of the Regulation.

---

31 When referring to subcontracting, recital 19 of the Regulation has in mind the participation of undertakings 'other than the public service operator'. Emphasis added.

---

32 I refer to my Opinion in LitSpecMet (C-567/15, EU:C:2017:319, point 71 et seq.).

---

33 I put forward the same argument in my Opinion in LitSpec Met (C-567/15, EU:C:2017:319, point 79): 'the contracting authority can make use of proxy entities, within the limits already mentioned, by entrusting them with particular tasks which should, in principle, be the subject of public procurement procedures but which are exempted. … However, where such proxy entities do not have the resources needed to carry out themselves the tasks assigned by the contracting authority and are obliged to have recourse to third parties in order to do so, the reasons for relying on the in-house exemption disappear and what emerges is actually a hidden public (sub-) procurement where the contracting authority, through an intermediary (the proxy entity) obtains goods and services from third parties without being subject to the directives which should govern the award'.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Ninth Chamber)

25 October 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2014/24/EU — Article 10(g) — Exclusions from its scope — Employment contracts — Definition — Decisions of public hospitals to conclude fixed-term labour contracts for the purposes of catering, the provision of meals and cleaning — Directive 89/665/EEC — Article 1 — Right to an effective remedy)

In Case C-260/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (Council of State, Greece), made by decision of 11 May 2017, received at the Court on 16 May 2017, in the proceedings

Anodiki Services EPE

v

GNA, O Evangelismos — Ofthalmiatreio Athinon — Polykliniki, Geniko Ogkologiko Nosokomeio Kifisias — (GONK) 'Oi Agioi Anargyroi',

intervener:

Arianthi Ilia EPE,

Fasma AE,

Mega Sprint Guard AE,

ICM — International Cleaning Methods AE,

Myservices Security and Facility AE,

Kleenway OE,

GEN — KA AE,

Geniko Nosokomeio Athinon 'Georgios Gennimatas',

Ipirotiki Facility Services AE,

THE COURT (Ninth Chamber), composed of C. Lycourgos, President of the Tenth Chamber, acting as President of the Ninth Chamber, E. Juhász and C. Vajda (rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: M. Wathelet,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of

– Anodiki Services EPE, by Z. Zouganeli, dikigoros, – GNA, O Evangelismos — Ofthalmiatreio Athinon — Polykliniki, by G. Statharas, dikigoros, – Geniko Nosokomeio Athinon ‘Georgios Gennimatas’, by M. Antonopoulou and N. Nikolopoulos, dikigoroi,

– Fasma AE, by N. Mourdoukoutas, dikigoros,

– Mega Sprint Guard AE, by S. Konstantopoulos, N. Meligos and G. Christodoulopoulos, dikigoroi,

– ICM — International Cleaning Methods AE and Kleenway OE, by E. Anagnostou, dikigoros, – Myservices Security and Facility AE, by A. Virvilios, dikigoros,

– GEN — KA AE, by C. Pelekis, dikigoros,

– the Greek Government, by M. Tassopoulou, A. Magreppi et E. Tsaousi, acting as Agents,

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by M. Patakia and P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 10(g) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2015/2170 of 24 November 2015 (OJ 2015 L 307, p. 5) (‘Directive 2014/24’), and Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1) (‘Directive 89/665’).

2 The request has been made in two sets of proceedings between, in the first set of proceedings, on the one hand, Anodiki Services EPE and, on the other, GNA, O Evangelismos — Ofthalmiatreio Athinon — Polykliniki, (‘GNA Evangelismos’) and, in the second set of proceedings, on the one hand, Anodiki Services EPE and, on the other, Geniko Ogkologiko Nosokomeio Kifisias — (GONK) ‘Oi Agioi Anargyroi’ (‘GONK Agioi Anargyroi’), concerning decisions taken by the administration boards of those public hospitals to conclude a number of fixed-term labour contracts under private law in order to meet their needs in relation to catering, the provision of meals and cleaning.

Legal context

EU law

3 Recital 5 of Directive 2014/24 states:

‘It should be recalled that nothing in this Directive obliges Member States to contract out or externalise the provision of services that they wish to provide themselves or to organise by means other than public contracts within the meaning of this Directive. The provision of services based on laws, regulations or employment contracts should not be covered. In some Member States, this might for example be the case for certain administrative and government services such as executive and legislative services or the provision of certain services to the community, such as foreign affairs services or justice services or compulsory social security services.’

4 Article 1(4) of that directive provides:

‘This Directive does not affect the freedom of Member States to define, in conformity with Union law, what they consider to be services of general economic interest, how those services should be organised and financed, in compliance with the State aid rules, and what specific obligations they should be subject to. Equally, this Directive does not affect the decision of public authorities whether, how and to what extent they wish to perform public functions themselves pursuant to Article 14 TFEU and Protocol No 26.’

5 Article 4(b) of that directive sets a threshold for its application of EUR 135 000 for public supply and service contracts awarded by central government authorities and design contests organised by such authorities. Article 4(d) sets a threshold of EUR 750 000 for public service contracts for social and other specific services listed in Annex XIV of that directive. Catering services are specifically mentioned in that annex.

6 Article 10 of Directive 2014/24 provides:

‘This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts for:

…

(g) employment contracts;

…’

7 Under Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665:

‘This Directive applies to contracts referred to in [Directive 2014/24], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 37 of that Directive.

…

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, works and services concessions, and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of [Directive 2014/24], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed [EU] law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.’

8 Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 provide:

‘The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure.’

Greek law

9 Article 103(2) of the Greek Constitution provides:

‘No one may be appointed as a civil servant to an established post which has not been provided for by law. Special laws may provide for exceptions in order to cover unforeseen and urgent needs with personnel hired for a certain period of time on a private law contract.’

10 Article 63(1) of Law 4430/2016 (FEK A’ 205) provides:

‘By decision of their relevant, single member or collective, governing body, the central and decentralised services, and all the general services of the ministries and the public law legal persons (PuLLP) and private law legal persons (PrLLP) under the authority of the ministries may, in order to meet the cleaning needs of the buildings for which they are responsible and their outdoor spaces, and the catering, meal provision and security needs, conclude fixed-term individual labour contracts under private law if the existing staff is not sufficient and in the event of emergency or unforeseen circumstances. For indicative purposes only, the following shall be regarded as such circumstances: (a) a legal or factual impediment to the unhindered provision of those services by legal or natural third persons, which is not caused by the recipients of those services, (b) the making of budgetary savings due to the conclusion of the labour contracts referred to in the present provision compared with other means. A finding that there are emergency or unforeseen circumstances requires a reasoned assessment by the above mentioned administrations. The above mentioned contracts shall be concluded in accordance with the provisions of this article, notwithstanding any other general or special legal provision. The derogating provisions under this article may be applied until 31 December 2018.’

11 Under Article 63(2) of that law, those contracts have a maximum duration of 24 months and may not be converted into permanent contracts.

12 Under Article 63(3) of that law, a provisional ranking list must be drawn up for the purposes of selecting the persons concerned by awarding them points based on how long they have been unemployed or their work experience.

13 Article 107(1) of Law 4461/2017 (FEK A’ 38) specifically governs certain issues relating to the application of Article 63 of Law 4430/2016 to legal persons, regardless of their form, which are under the authority of the Ministry of Health, in relation to awarding points to candidates on the basis of how long they have been unemployed, whether they have dependent children and their professional experience.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

14 It is clear from the order for reference that the fact that it was not possible to create statutory posts in accordance with Article 103(2) of the Greek Constitution, due to the economic crisis in Greece and its international commitments, led that Member State to adopt certain independent legal provisions.

15 In that regard, Law 4430/2016 was adopted in order to address certain exceptional circumstances, qualified as ‘unforeseen’ and ‘urgent’, and in view of the serious failings affecting the award and performance of public service contracts. According to the explanatory memorandum to Law 4430/2016, as reproduced in the order for reference, that law is intended to ensure that a financial benefit will ensue from the considerable reduction in the budget of the administrations in question, to improve the working conditions of the workers in the undertakings concerned and to address the urgent and unforeseen needs of the recipients of the services in a way that is compatible with the Constitution and EU law. Article 63 of that law makes it possible for legal persons under public law to conclude individual fixed-term contracts under private law in order to meet their needs, in particular in relation to catering, the provision of meals and cleaning.

16 By decisions taken in November 2016, the administration boards of GNA Evangelismos and GONK Agioi Anargyroi decided to conclude a number of fixed-term individual labour contracts under private law pursuant to Article 63 in order to meet the respective needs in catering, meal provision and cleaning at the hospitals which they manage.

17 Anodiki Services brought actions against those decisions before the referring court, the Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (Council of State, Greece). It claims that those decisions concern the provision of services which should have been subject to the public procurement procedures laid down in Directive 2014/24. In that regard, it claims that the value of the contracts which are the subject of those decisions, that is to say, between EUR 1 894 402.56 and EUR 2 050 418.16 over 24 months for the decision of GNA Evangelismos and EUR 550 000 per annum for the decision of GONK Agioi Anargyroi, is greater than the relevant thresholds laid down in Article 4 of that directive.

18 The referring court is unsure whether contracts such as those covered by the decisions of the administration boards of GNA Evangelismos and of GONK Agioi Anargyroi come under the notion of 'employment contracts' in Article 10(g) of Directive 2014/24, so that the public procurement contracts relating to the conclusion of those contracts is excluded from the scope of that directive.

19 It also asks whether Article 63 of Law 4430/2016, in so far as it allows such contracts to be concluded without using the procedures laid down in Directive 2014/24, infringes the provisions of that directive, those of the TFEU relating to freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, Articles 16 and 52 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter'), and the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, transparency and proportionality. In that regard, the referring court considers that, in view of the purpose and estimated cost of the labour contracts, there can be no doubt that a public procurement procedure with the same purpose would be the subject matter of a cross-border interest.

20 That court also wishes to know whether the decision of a public authority not to use a public procurement procedure in accordance with Directive 2014/24, on the ground that the contract in question does not come within the scope of that directive, is open to judicial review under Directive 89/665.

21 In those circumstances the Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (Council of State) decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) For the purposes of Article 10(g) of Directive [2014/24], is it sufficient ground, for the classification of a contract as an 'employment contract' under that provision, that it constitutes a contract with an employer-employee relationship or is it necessary that that contract have particular characteristics (for example with respect to the nature of the work, the contract terms, the qualifications of candidates, the procedural rules for their selection), so that the selection of each employee should be the result of an individualised judgment and subjective assessment of his or her personal qualities by the employer?

Can fixed term labour contracts which are allocated on the basis of objective criteria, such as the length of time the candidate has been unemployed, the candidate's previous experience or the number of minor children he or she has, as the result of a formal check of supporting documents and a predetermined weighting of the above criteria, such as contracts under Article 63 of Law 4430/2016, be regarded as "employment contracts" within the meaning of Article 10(g) of Directive 2014/24?

(2) For the purposes of the provisions of Directive [2014/24] (Articles 1(4), 18(1) and (2), 19(1), 32 and 57, read in conjunction with recital (5) of that directive), of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (Articles 49 and 56) and of the [Charter] (Articles 16 and 52), and the principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality, is it permitted for public authorities to have recourse to other means, including employment contracts, to the exclusion of public procurement contracts, in order to meet the same public interest requirements, and if so, on what conditions, when that recourse is not part of the recurrent organisation of the public service, but — as in the case of Article 63 of Law 4430/2016 — takes place for a defined period of time and to deal with extraordinary circumstances, as well as for reasons that relate to the effectiveness of competition or the legitimacy of the operations of undertakings which are active in the public procurement market?

Can reasons of that kind, as well as circumstances such as the weakness of the unhindered performance of public contracts or the realisation of greater financial benefit compared with a public contract, be regarded as overriding reasons in the public interest, which justify the adoption of a measure which leads to a serious restriction, in extent and duration, on business activity in the field of public procurement?

(3) For the purposes of Article 1 of Directive [89/665] … does the scope of that provision exclude judicial protection against the decision of a public authority, such as the contested decisions in the main proceedings, with respect to the award of contracts that are treated as not falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24 (for example, as an 'employment contract'), when an action is brought by an economic operator which would have a legal right to be awarded a comparable public contract and which claims that Directive [2014/24] has been unlawfully not implemented on the ground that its non-implementation was permissible?'

Procedure before the Court

22 In its request for a preliminary ruling, the referring court requested that the case be determined under an expedited procedure provided for in Article 105(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice. That request was refused by order of the President of the Court of 13 July 2017, Anodiki Services (C-260/17, not published, EU:C:2017:560).

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

23 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 10(g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted to the effect that the notion of 'employment contracts' referred to in that provision covers labour contracts, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, that is to say, fixed-term labour contracts which are concluded with persons selected on the basis of objective criteria, such as the duration of unemployment, previous experience and the number of minor dependent children they have.

24 It should be pointed out that, although in accordance with Article 10(g) of Directive 2014/24, public service contracts dealing with labour contracts are excluded from the scope of that directive, the notion of 'employment contracts', as it appears in that provision, is not defined by that directive. Nor does that article make any reference to the laws of the Member States concerning such a definition.

25 In accordance with the Court's settled case-law, the need for a uniform application of EU law requires that, where a provision of EU law makes no reference to the law of the Member States with regard to a particular concept, that concept must be given an independent and uniform interpretation throughout the European Union. That interpretation must be sought having regard not only to the wording of the provision at issue but also to its context and to the objective pursued by the legislation in question (see, to that effect, inter alia, judgments of 19 December 2013, Fish Legal and Shirley, C-279/12, EU:C:2013:853, paragraph 42, and of 19 June 2018, Baumeister, C-15/16, EU:C:2018:464, paragraph 24).

26 In that regard, first, it is apparent from recital 5 of Directive 2014/24 that that directive does not oblige Member States to contract out or externalise the provision of services which they wish to provide themselves or to organise by means other than public procurement contracts, within the meaning of that directive, and that the provision of services based on laws, regulations or employment contracts should not be covered by that directive. Accordingly, the conclusion of employment contracts is a means for the public authorities in Member States to provide services themselves and is therefore excluded from the obligations relating to public procurement contracts under that directive.

27 Contrary to what Anodiki Services submits in its written observations, the possibility for public authorities to meet some of their needs themselves by concluding employment contracts is not limited to the cases mentioned in the last sentence of that recital. In that respect, as regards that discretion which should be available to public authorities, the fact that the recital stipulates that 'this might for example be the case for' the services which it lists after those words sufficiently demonstrates that that list is not exhaustive.

28 Secondly, it must be observed that the conclusion of an employment contract, by its nature, gives rise to an employment relationship between the employee and the employer. In the broader context of EU law, it is settled case-law that the essential feature of an employment relationship is that for a certain period of time a person performs services for and under the direction of another in return for which he receives remuneration (see, inter alia, judgments of 3 July 1986, Lawrie-Blum, 66/85, EU:C:1986:284, paragraph 17, and of 19 July 2017, Abercrombie & Fitch Italia, C-143/16, EU:C:2017:566, paragraph 19 and the case-law cited).

29 It follows from those considerations that the notion of 'employment contracts', for the purposes of Article 10(g) of Directive 2014/24, covers all contracts by which a public authority employs natural persons in order to provide services itself, and which give rise to an employment relationship by which those persons, for a certain period of time, perform services for and under the direction of that public authority in return for which they receive remuneration.

30 For the purposes of that definition, the manner in which those persons are employed is therefore irrelevant. In particular, although it is true that an employment relationship, as Anodiki Services stated in its written observations, may be based on a special relationship of mutual trust between the employer and the worker, it does not follow that only contracts concluded on the basis of subjective criteria as regards the persons employed, to the exclusion of contracts arising from a selection made using purely objective criteria, constitute 'employment contracts', for the purposes of that provision.

31 In addition, in accordance with the definition of 'employment relationship' referred to in paragraph 28 above, in so far as the worker performs services for and under the direction of his employer 'for a certain period of time', fixed-term labour contracts cannot be excluded from the notion of 'employment contracts' for the purposes of Article 10(g) of Directive 2014/24 on the ground that the length of the employment relationship which they create is limited in time.

32 It is ultimately for the referring court to assess, in the light of those considerations, whether the contracts at issue in the main proceedings are 'employment contracts' for the purposes of that provision. In particular, as the Commission stated in its written observations, it is necessary to ascertain whether they are genuine individual labour contracts concluded by the public hospitals at issue in the main proceedings and the persons recruited. However, nothing in the file submitted to the Court indicates that that is not the case.

33 In view of the foregoing, the answer to the first question is that Article 10(g) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted to the effect that the notion of 'employment contracts' referred to in that provision covers labour contracts, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, that is to say, fixed-term, individual labour contracts which are concluded with persons selected on the basis of objective criteria, such as the duration of unemployment, previous experience and the number of minor dependent children they have.

The second question

34 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the provisions of Directive 2014/24, Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, the principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality, and Articles 16 and 52 of the Charter preclude a decision of a public authority to make use of employment contracts such as those at issue in the main proceedings in order to perform certain tasks falling within its public interest obligations.

35 In the first place, in view of the answer to the first question, it should be noted that the provisions of Directive 2014/24 do not apply to employment contracts such as those at issue in the main proceedings.

36 In the second place, with regard to Articles 49 and 56 TFEU and the principles of EU law referred to in the second question, it should be recalled that, although in the field of public procurement the principle of equal treatment and the specific expressions of that principle, namely the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality and Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, are to be applied in cases where a public authority entrusts the supply of economic activities to a third party, it is nevertheless not appropriate to apply EU law on public procurement in a case where a public authority performs tasks in the public interest for which it is responsible by its own administrative, technical and other means, without calling upon external entities (see, to that effect, judgments of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau, C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 48, and of 13 October 2005, Parking Brixen, C-458/03, EU:C:2005:605, paragraph 61).

37 Accordingly, those provisions of the TFEU and those principles of EU law do not apply to the circumstances of the main proceedings, in that the public hospitals in question in that action decided to meet some of their needs themselves when performing the tasks in the public interest for which they are responsible by entering into employment contracts.

38 In the third place, as regards Articles 16 and 52 of the Charter, it should be recalled that, in accordance with Article 51(1), the provisions of the Charter are addressed to the Member States only when they are implementing EU law. Under Article 51(2), the Charter does not extend the scope of EU law beyond the powers of the Union, and it does not establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks as defined in the Treaties. Accordingly, the Court is called upon to interpret EU law, in the light of the Charter, within the limits of the powers conferred on it (judgment of 8 November 2012, Iida, C-40/11, EU:C:2012:691, paragraph 78 and the case-law cited).

39 As is apparent from paragraphs 35 to 37 above, the public hospitals' decisions to conclude the employment contracts at issue in the main proceedings do not fall within the implementation of EU law within the meaning of Article 51 of the Charter, so that the conformity of those decisions with fundamental rights cannot be examined by reference to the rights established by the Charter.

40 Consequently, the answer to the second question is that the provisions of Directive 2014/24, Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, the principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality, and Articles 16 and 52 of the Charter do not apply to a decision of a public authority to make use of employment contracts such as those at issue in the main proceedings in order to perform certain tasks falling within its public interest obligations.

The third question

41 By its third question, the referring court asks in essence whether Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted to the effect that a decision of a contracting authority to conclude employment contracts with natural persons for the provision of certain services without using a public procurement procedure in accordance with Directive 2014/24, on the ground that, in its opinion, those contracts do not fall within the scope of that directive, may be challenged under that provision by an economic operator with an interest in participating in a public procurement procedure with the same purpose as those contracts and which considers that those contracts do fall within the scope of that directive.

42 The wording of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 assumes, by using the words 'as regards procedures', that every decision of a contracting authority falling under EU rules in the field of public procurement and liable to infringe them is subject to the judicial review provided for in Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of that directive. That provision thus refers generally to the decisions of a contracting authority, without distinguishing between those decisions according to their content or time of adoption (see judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others, C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 26 and the case-law cited).

43 That broad construction of the concept of a 'decision' taken by a contracting authority is confirmed by the fact that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature or content of the decisions to which it refers. Moreover, a restrictive interpretation of that concept would be incompatible with the terms of Article 2(1)(a) of that directive which requires Member States to make provision for interim relief procedures in relation to any decision taken by the contracting authorities (see judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others, C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

44 In addition, it must be noted that any act of a contracting authority adopted in relation to a public service contract within the material scope of Directive 2014/24 and capable of producing legal effects constitutes a decision amenable to review within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, regardless of whether that act is adopted outside a formal award procedure or as part of such a procedure (judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau, C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 34).

45 In that regard, where a contracting authority decides not to initiate an award procedure on the ground that the contract in question does not, in its opinion, fall within the scope of the relevant EU rules, such a decision is open to judicial review (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau, C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 33).

46 An approach in which Directive 89/665 does not require judicial protection outside a formal award procedure, so that neither the contracting authority's decision not to initiate such a procedure, nor the decision as to whether a public contract falls within the scope of the relevant EU rules, cannot be the subject of review, would have the effect of making the application of the relevant EU rules optional, at the option of every contracting authority, even though that application is mandatory where the conditions of application are satisfied (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau, C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 36 and 37).

47 Consequently, the answer to the third question is that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted to the effect that a decision of a contracting authority to conclude employment contracts with natural persons for the provision of certain services without using a public procurement procedure in accordance with Directive 2014/24, on the ground that, in its opinion, those contracts do not fall within the scope of that directive, may be challenged under that provision by an economic operator with an interest in participating in a public procurement procedure with the same purpose as those contracts and which considers that those contracts do fall within the scope of that directive.

Costs

48 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 10(g) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, as amended by Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2015/2170 of 24 November 2015, must be interpreted to the effect that the notion of 'employment contracts', referred to in that provision, covers labour contracts such as those at issue in the main proceedings, that is to say, fixed-term, individual labour contracts which are concluded with persons selected on the basis of objective criteria, such as the duration of unemployment, previous experience and the number of minor dependent children they have.

2. The provisions of Directive 2014/24, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2015/2170, Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, the principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality, and Articles 16 and 52 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union do not apply to a decision of a public authority to make use of employment contracts such as those at issue in the main proceedings in order to perform certain tasks falling within its public interest obligations.

3. Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014, must be interpreted to the effect that a decision of a contracting authority to conclude employment contracts with natural persons for the provision of certain services without using a public procurement procedure in accordance with Directive 2014/24, as amended by Delegated Regulation 2015/2170, on the ground that, in its opinion, those contracts do not fall within the scope of that directive, may be challenged under that provision by an economic operator with an interest in participating in a public procurement procedure with the same purpose as those contracts and which considers that those contracts do fall within the scope of that directive.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Greek.

EU:C:2018:1034

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Eighth Chamber)

19 December 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 1(5) — Article 32(2) — Award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Framework agreements — Clause extending the framework agreement to other contracting authorities — Principles of transparency and equal treatment of economic operators — No determination of the quantity covered by subsequent public procurement contracts or determination by reference to the usual requirements of the contracting authorities that are not signatories to the framework agreement — Prohibition)

In Case C-216/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), made by decision of 9 March 2017, received at the Court on 24 April 2017, in the proceedings

Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato — Antitrust,

Coopservice Soc. coop. arl

v

Azienda Socio-Sanitaria Territoriale della Vallecamonica — Sebino (ASST),

Azienda Socio-Sanitaria Territoriale del Garda (ASST),

Azienda Socio-Sanitaria Territoriale della Valcamonica (ASST),

intervener:

Markas Srl,

ATI - Zanetti Arturo & C. Srl e in proprio,

Regione Lombardia,

THE COURT (Eighth Chamber),

composed of J. Malenovský, acting as President of the Chamber, M. Safjan and D. Šváby (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: R. Șereș, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 12 July 2018,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of

– Coopservice Soc. coop. arl, by P. S. Pugliano, avvocato, – Markas Srl, by F.G. Scoca, P. Adami and I. Tranquilli, avvocati,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by B. Tidore and P. Palmieri, avvocati dello Stato,

– the Czech Government, by M. Smolek, J. Vláčil and T. Müller, acting as Agents,

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

– the Finnish Government, by S. Hartikainen, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 3 October 2018,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(5) and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44) and Article 33 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in the context of two actions, which were joined by the referring court, between, in the case of the first action, the Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato (Competition and Markets Authority, Italy; 'the AGCM') and, in the case of the second action, Coopservice Soc. coop. arl, the appellants in the main proceedings, and the Azienda Socio-Sanitaria Territoriale della Vallecamonica — Sebino (Regional Health and Social Care Authority of Valcamonica — Sebino, Italy; 'the ASST of Valcamonica'), with regard to the latter's decision to accede to the contract for environmental sanitation, collection and waste services ('the initial contract') concluded during 2012 by the Azienda Socio-Sanitaria Territoriale del Garda (Regional Health and Social Care Authority of Lake Garda, Italy; 'the ASST of Lake Garda') and ATI - Zanetti Arturo & C. Srl, an ad hoc association of undertakings comprising Markas Srl and Zanetti Arturo ('ATI Markas').

Legal context

Directive 2004/18

3 Recitals 11 and 15 of Directive 2004/18 state:

'(11) [An EU] definition of framework agreements, together with specific rules on framework agreements concluded for contracts falling within the scope of this Directive, should be provided. Under these rules, when a contracting authority enters into a framework agreement in accordance with the provisions of this Directive relating, in particular, to advertising, time limits and conditions for the submission of tenders, it may enter into contracts based on such a framework agreement during its term of validity either by applying the terms set forth in the framework agreement or, if all terms have not been fixed in advance in the framework agreement, by reopening competition between the parties to the framework agreement in relation to those terms. The reopening of competition should comply with certain rules the aim of which is to guarantee the required flexibility and to guarantee respect for the general principles, in particular the principle of equal treatment. For the same reasons, the term of the framework agreements should not exceed four years, except in cases duly justified by the contracting authorities.

…

(15) Certain centralised purchasing techniques have been developed in Member States. Several contracting authorities are responsible for making acquisitions or awarding public contracts/framework agreements for other contracting authorities. In view of the large volumes purchased, those techniques help increase competition and streamline public purchasing.

Provision should therefore be made for a Community definition of central purchasing bodies dedicated to contracting authorities. A definition should also be given of the conditions under which, in accordance with the principles of non-discrimination and equal treatment, contracting authorities purchasing works, supplies and/or services through a central purchasing body may be deemed to have complied with this Directive.'

4 Under the heading 'Definitions', Article 1(5) of that directive provides:

'A "framework agreement" is an agreement between one or more contracting authorities and one or more economic operators, the purpose of which is to establish the terms governing contracts to be awarded during a given period, in particular with regard to price and, where appropriate, the quantity envisaged.'

5 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, which is headed 'Principles of awarding contracts', states:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

6 Article 9 of that same directive, headed 'Methods for calculating the estimated value of public contracts, framework agreements and dynamic purchasing systems', provides:

'1. The calculation of the estimated value of a public contract shall be based on the total amount payable, net of VAT, as estimated by the contracting authority. This calculation shall take account of the estimated total amount, including any form of option and any renewals of the contract.

…

3. No works project or proposed purchase of a certain quantity of supplies and/or services may be subdivided to prevent its coming within the scope of this Directive.

…

7. In the case of public supply or service contracts which are regular in nature or which are intended to be renewed within a given period, the calculation of the estimated contract value shall be based on the following:

(a) either the total actual value of the successive contracts of the same type awarded during the preceding 12 months or financial year adjusted, if possible, to take account of the changes in quantity or value which would occur in the course of the 12 months following the initial contract;

(b) or the total estimated value of the successive contracts awarded during the 12 months following the first delivery, or during the financial year if that is longer than 12 months.

The choice of method used to calculate the estimated value of a public contract may not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive.

…

9. With regard to framework agreements and dynamic purchasing systems, the value to be taken into consideration shall be the maximum estimated value net of VAT of all the contracts envisaged for the total term of the framework agreement or the dynamic purchasing system.'

7 Article 32 of Directive 2004/18, which concerns 'framework agreements', provides:

'1. Member States may provide that contracting authorities may conclude framework agreements.

2. For the purpose of concluding a framework agreement, contracting authorities shall follow the rules of procedure referred to in this Directive for all phases up to the award of contracts based on that framework agreement. The parties to the framework agreement shall be chosen by applying the award criteria set in accordance with Article 53.

Contracts based on a framework agreement shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures laid down in paragraphs 3 and 4. Those procedures may be applied only between the contracting authorities and the economic operators originally party to the framework agreement.

When awarding contracts based on a framework agreement, the parties may under no circumstances make substantial amendments to the terms laid down in that framework agreement, in particular in the case referred to in paragraph 3.

The term of a framework agreement may not exceed four years, save in exceptional cases duly justified in particular by the subject of the framework agreement.

Contracting authorities may not use framework agreements improperly or in such a way as to prevent, restrict or distort competition.

3. Where a framework agreement is concluded with a single economic operator, contracts based on that agreement shall be awarded within the limits of the terms laid down in the framework agreement.

For the award of those contracts, contracting authorities may consult the operator party to the framework agreement in writing, requesting it to supplement its tender as necessary.

4. Where a framework agreement is concluded with several economic operators, the latter must be at least three in number, insofar as there is a sufficient number of economic operators to satisfy the selection criteria and/or of admissible tenders which meet the award criteria.

Contracts based on framework agreements concluded with several economic operators may be awarded either:

– by application of the terms laid down in the framework agreement without reopening competition, or

– where not all the terms are laid down in the framework agreement, when the parties are again in competition on the basis of the same and, if necessary, more precisely formulated terms, and, where appropriate, other terms referred to in the specifications of the framework agreement, in accordance with the following procedure:

…’

8 Article 35 of that directive, headed ‘Notices’, provides in paragraph 4:

‘Contracting authorities which have awarded a public contract or concluded a framework agreement shall send a notice of the results of the award procedure no later than 48 days after the award of the contract or the conclusion of the framework agreement.

In the case of framework agreements concluded in accordance with Article 32 the contracting authorities are not bound to send a notice of the results of the award procedure for each contract based on that agreement.

…’

9 Annex VII A to that directive, concerning ‘information which must be included in public contract notices’, states:

‘…

Contract Notices

…

3. ...

(c) Where appropriate, indicate whether a framework agreement is involved;

…

6. ...

(c) Public service contracts:

– category and description of service. Nomenclature reference number(s). Quantity of services to be provided. Indicate in particular options concerning supplementary purchases and, if known, the provisional timetable for recourse to these options as well as the number of renewals, if any. In the case of renewable contracts over a given period, an estimate of the time frame, if known, for subsequent public contracts for purchase of intended services, in the event of a framework agreement, indication also of the planned duration of the framework agreement, the estimated total value of the services for the entire duration of the framework agreement and, as far as possible, the value and the frequency of the contracts to be awarded,

– …

18. Where there is a framework agreement: the number and, where appropriate, proposed maximum number of economic operators who will be members of it, the duration of the framework agreement provided for, stating, if appropriate, the reasons for any duration exceeding four years.

…’

Italian law

National law

10 The last part of paragraph 449 of Article 1 of legge n. 296 (Law No 296) of 27 December 2006 (ordinary supplement No 244 published in GURI No 299 of 27 December 2006) provides:

‘National health service bodies shall, in all circumstances, be required to obtain supplies through agreements concluded by the competent regional authorities, or, where no regional agreements are in force, through framework agreements concluded by the central purchasing body of the [Italian public administration].’

11 The decreto legislativo n. 163 (Legislative Decree No 163) of 12 April 2006 (ordinary supplement No 107 to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), which was in force at the time of the facts at issue in the main proceedings, had the objective, inter alia, of transposing Directive 2004/18.

12 Article 3(13) of that decree states:

‘A “framework agreement” is an agreement between one or more contracting authorities and one or more economic operators, the purpose of which is to establish the terms governing contracts to be awarded during a given period, in particular with regard to price and, where appropriate, the quantity envisaged.’

13 The functioning of a framework agreement concluded with a single economic operator was described in Article 59 of that decree. Paragraphs 2 to 4 of that provision set out verbatim the first to third subparagraphs of Article 32(2) and Article 32(3) of Directive 2004/18. However, it omitted to transpose the fourth and fifth subparagraphs of Article 32(2) of that directive, which, respectively, have the objectives of limiting the term of a framework agreement to four years, except for in duly justified exceptional cases, and prohibiting contracting authorities from using framework agreements improperly or in such a way as to prevent, restrict or distort competition.

14 Article 1(12) of the decreto-legge 6 luglio 2012 n. 95, convertito con modificazioni dalla legge 7 agosto 2012, n. 135 (Decree Law No 95 of 6 July 2012 (ordinary supplement No 141 to GURI No 156 of 6 July 2012), amended and converted into law by Law No 135 of 7 August 2012, ordinary supplement No 173 to GURI No 189 of 14 August 2012), allows the terms of a public procurement contract to be amended during performance in order to improve the contract terms established by the initial tendering procedure.

15 Under Article 15(13)(b) of that decree law, a contract for the supply of goods or services that has become too onerous, in the light of the terms established by law, can be rescinded with a view to concluding, without the need for a new tendering procedure, a new contract the terms of which are consistent with those contained in ongoing contracts with other undertakings.

Regional law

16 In Lombardy (Italy), Article 3(7) of the legge regionale n. 14 (Regional Law No 14) of 19 May 1997 obliges all regional authorities to use centralised procurement methods, including the regional purchasing body.

17 Regional Council Decision No 2633 of 6 December 2011 reiterates the obligation on ASSTs to place group orders and use central purchasing bodies.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

18 The origin of the dispute in the main proceedings is Decree No 1158/2015, which was issued on 30 December 2015 by the Director-General of the ASST of Valcamonica for the purposes of acceding to the initial contract, without a new public tendering procedure, in respect of the period from 1 February 2016 to 15 February 2021.

19 For that purpose, the Director-General of the ASST of Valcamonica requested an extension of the public contract initially awarded to ATI Markas by Decree No 828/2011 issued on 4 November 2011 by the Director-General of the ASST of Lake Garda (‘Decree No 828/2011’).

20 That decree allocated to ATI Markas certain environmental sanitation, collection and waste services for a period of 108 months, which is 9 years, from 16 February 2012 to 15 February 2021. Paragraph 5 of the tender specifications relating to that public contract included a clause headed ‘Extension of the contract’ (‘the extension clause’), which allowed one or more of the bodies referred to in that clause to request that the successful bidder extend the contract to cover them ‘subject to conditions identical to those of the relevant procurement contract’. That clause, which referred, inter alia, to the ASST of Valcamonica, specified that the successful bidder was not obliged to accept the request for extension. Further, on the basis of that clause, an ‘independent contractual relationship’ arose, which covered the remaining part of the contract period set out in the initial contract.

21 Coopservice, which had until then provided cleaning services for the premises of the ASST of Valcamonica, and AGCM each brought a claim before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Italy) seeking, inter alia, annulment of Decree No 1158/2015, Decree No 828/2011 and the extension clause on the ground that those measures would allow a new services contract to be awarded in breach of both national and EU competition law and, in particular, of the obligation to organise a tendering procedure.

22 By judgment of 7 November 2016, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy) dismissed those two actions on the ground that a framework agreement may be concluded between a given economic operator and a single contracting authority acting on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities which, although mentioned in the agreement, are not parties to it directly. In addition, it held that it is not necessary that a framework agreement mention, expressly and at the outset, the quantity of services that may be required by the contracting authorities that may have recourse to the extension clause, as that quantity can be deduced by reference to their usual requirements.

23 Coopservice and the AGCM then brought an appeal against that judgment before the referring court, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy).

24 Before that court, Markas, which intervened in support of the ASST of Valcamonica, claims that its accession to the initial contract complied with Article 33 of Directive 2014/24 and requests that a reference for a preliminary ruling be made to the Court of Justice for an interpretation of that provision.

25 In that regard, the referring court arrived at three sets of findings.

26 In the first place, it takes the view that Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 applies to the case in the main proceedings. However, given that, first, that directive was repealed with effect from 18 April 2016 by Directive 2014/24 and, second, the provisions of the latter that are relevant to the outcome of the dispute in the main proceedings are the same as those in Directive 2004/18, the referring court concludes that it is appropriate to adopt a combined interpretation of Directives 2004/18 and 2014/24.

27 In the second place, the referring court takes the view that it is correct, in principle, to classify the initial contract as a 'framework agreement' within the meaning of Directives 2004/18 and 2014/24.

28 In the third place, the referring court finds that a 'framework agreement' within the meaning of Article 1(5) and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 has two main characteristics. First, the call for tenders is supposed to be launched beforehand, at the time when the successful bidder is named, and should therefore not be necessary for the purpose of concluding each of the contracts awarded under the framework agreement with the economic operator who was successful at the end of the public tendering procedure that led to the conclusion of that framework agreement ('the subsequent contracts'). Second, having regard to the adverbial phrase 'where appropriate' in Article 1(5) of Directive 2004/18, a framework agreement need not necessarily set out the quantities that it will cover.

29 According to the referring court, although the position of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy) may be justified in the light of the objective of promoting the group purchasing procedures endorsed by the Italian legislature, such a position does not, in any event, comply with EU law. Further, that court notes the lack of relevant case-law from the Court of Justice on this matter.

30 In that regard, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) takes the view that the interpretation given to the adverbial phrase 'where appropriate' by the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy) is too broad. From the referring court's point of view, the extension clause should be limited in two ways. Its standpoint, as reflected in a number of its judgments, is that, on a subjective level, that clause should identify the contracting authorities that can have recourse to it, while, on an objective level, it should set out the economic value of any extension, including a maximum amount. Any interpretation to the contrary would render it lawful for an unlimited series of contracts to be awarded directly, which would infringe the basic principles of EU law, under which public contracts are to be awarded through public tendering procedures, and would therefore undermine competition.

31 The referring court is therefore inclined to give that adverbial phrase a restrictive interpretation, in accordance with which the framework agreement determines, 'where appropriate', the quantity of the services that it will cover. That detail should be omitted only where the services themselves are clearly and unequivocally determined or determinable, bearing in mind the factual or legal situation which the parties to the framework agreement are aware of, even if they have not expressly included it in the agreement itself.

32 In reply to a request for clarification sent by the Court to the referring court, in accordance with Article 101 of the Rules of Procedure, in order to ascertain the reasons why that court classified the contract concluded between the original contracting authority and ATI Markas as a framework agreement within the meaning of Article 1(5) and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18, despite the fact that that public contract was for a term of nine years, the referring court explained in a decision of 20 February 2018 that it was obliged, as an administrative court, to comply with the principle that the parties delimit the subject matter of the proceedings and that a court could raise matters of its own motion only where an administrative measure is vitiated by defects that are so serious as to justify its annulment. According to the referring court, ‘it is manifestly appropriate … to conclude that a term longer than the maximum term provided by law does not constitute a defect of such seriousness as to justify the annulment of the measure, which the court could therefore, theoretically, raise of its own motion.’ In addition, the referring court notes that, in the light of its particular purpose, which is to guarantee the proper functioning of several hospitals, the initial contract could be covered by the derogation set out in the fourth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18.

33 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 1 and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 33 of Directive 2014/24 repealing Directive 2004/18 be interpreted as allowing the conclusion of a framework agreement in which:

– a contracting authority acts on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities specifically indicated, which are not, however, direct parties to the framework agreement;

– the quantity of services that may be required by the non-signatory contracting authorities when they enter into the subsequent contracts envisaged in the framework agreement itself is not determined?

(2) If the answer to question (1) should be in the negative, must Article 1 and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 33 of Directive 2014/24 be interpreted as allowing the conclusion of a framework agreement in which:

– a contracting authority acts on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities specifically indicated, which are not, however, direct parties to the framework agreement;

– the quantity of services that may be required by the non-signatory contracting authorities when they enter into the subsequent contracts envisaged in the framework agreement itself is determined by reference to their usual requirements?’

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

34 It is apparent from the request for a preliminary ruling that the reasoning of the referring court is based on the premiss that the initial contract should be classified as a ‘framework agreement’ within the meaning of Article 1(5) and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18.

35 However, Coopservice and the European Commission question the validity of that premiss. They submit that the initial contract infringes the fourth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18, under which the term of a framework agreement cannot exceed four years, save ‘in exceptional cases duly justified in particular by the subject of the framework agreement’. No explanation has been put forward to justify why the four-year maximum period has not been complied with. They argue that it follows that that agreement cannot be classified as a ‘framework agreement’ within the meaning of Directive 2004/18 and, consequently, that the request for a preliminary ruling should be declared inadmissible.

36 By failing to set out the reasons why the initial contract, which had a term of nine years, could be covered by the derogation set out in the fourth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18, the referring court has neither defined the factual and legislative context of the questions that it has referred to the Court nor explained the factual circumstances on which those questions are based, contrary to the requirements of Article 94 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court.

37 In that regard, it should be noted that it is apparent from the Court’s case-law that, in the context of the cooperation between the latter and national courts, instituted by Article 267 TFEU, the need to provide an interpretation of EU law which can be of use to the referring court means that it is necessary for that court to define the factual and legislative context of the questions referred or, at the very least, to explain the factual circumstances on which those questions are based. The Court of Justice is empowered to rule on the interpretation or validity of EU provisions only on the basis of the facts which the national court puts before it (see, recently, in the context of freedom of establishment, order of 31 May 2018, Bán, C-24/18, not published, EU:C:2018:376, paragraph 14 and the case-law cited).

38 That being said, in accordance with the Court's settled case-law, the procedure provided for by Article 267 TFEU is an instrument of cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts, by means of which the former provides the latter with the points of interpretation of EU law necessary in order for them to decide the disputes before them (see, in particular, to that effect, judgments of 16 July 1992, Meilicke, C-83/91, EU:C:1992:332, paragraph 22, and of 20 December 2017, Global Starnet, C-322/16, EU:C:2017:985, paragraph 24).

39 In the context of that cooperation, questions relating to EU law enjoy a presumption of relevance, which means that the Court may refuse to rule on a question referred by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see, to that effect, judgments of 5 December 2006, Cipolla and Others, C-94/04 and C-202/04, EU:C:2006:758, paragraph 25, and of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraph 42).

40 Moreover, EU law does not require national courts to raise of their own motion an issue concerning the breach of provisions of EU law where examination of that issue would oblige them to abandon the passive role assigned to them by going beyond the ambit of the dispute defined by the parties themselves and relying on facts and circumstances other than those on which the party with an interest in application of those provisions bases his claim (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 December 1995, van Schijndel and van Veen, C-430/93 and C-431/93, EU:C:1995:441, paragraphs 21 and 22).

41 However, it is for the referring court to examine whether, as the Advocate General points out in point 77 of his Opinion, it is not possible for it to assess the compatibility of the term laid down in the initial contract with the fourth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18, since the parties to the main proceedings appear to have relied on paragraph 6(c), headed 'Public service contracts', under the heading 'Contract Notices' in Annex VII A to that directive. The latter provision mentions, amongst the information that must always be included in public service contract notices, the estimated total value of the services for the entire duration of the framework agreement.

42 Moreover, it has not been established that a public contract, such as the initial contract, cannot be classified as a 'framework agreement' within the meaning of Article 1(5) and the fourth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18 simply on the basis that its term was greater than four years and the contracting authority has failed duly to justify why the term exceeds that limit. In a situation such as that in the main proceedings, it cannot be ruled out, in particular, that a contact such as the initial contract constitutes a valid framework agreement within the meaning of the latter provision during the first four years of its application and expires at the end of that period.

43 Consequently, the request for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

Consideration of the questions referred

44 In the questions that it puts before the Court, the referring court cites at the same time Directives 2004/18 and 2014/24.

45 In that regard, it should be recalled, as a preliminary point, that, in accordance with the Court's settled case-law, the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chose the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for tenders to be issued for the award of a public contract. Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraph 31, and of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 83).

46 In the case in the main proceedings, the initial contract took the form of Decree No 828/2011, adopted on 4 November 2011, whereas Directive 2014/24 repealed Directive 2004/18 with effect only from 18 April 2016.

47 Consequently, at the material time in the main proceedings, Directive 2004/18 was still applicable, which means that it is necessary to interpret the request for a preliminary ruling as seeking to obtain an interpretation of that directive rather than Directive 2014/24 (see, by analogy, order of 10 November 2016, Spinosa Costruzioni Generali and Melfi, C-162/16, not published, EU:C:2016:870, paragraph 21).

48 Therefore, it seems that, by its two questions, which it is appropriate to examined together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(5) and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as allowing the conclusion of a framework agreement in which, first, a contracting authority acts on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities specifically indicated, which are not, however, direct parties to the framework agreement and, second, the quantity of services that may be required by the non-signatory contracting authorities when they conclude the subsequent contracts envisaged in the framework agreement itself is not determined or is determined by reference to their usual requirements.

Whether a contracting authority has the power to act on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities specifically indicated, which are not, however, direct parties to the framework agreement

49 Under the second subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18, contracts based on a framework agreement are to be awarded in accordance with the procedures that may be applied only between the contracting authorities and the economic operators originally party to that agreement.

50 As the wording of that provision in isolation does not allow it to be determined whether the requirement to be an original party to the framework agreement applies to both contracting authorities and economic operators or solely to the latter, it is necessary to take into account not only the terms of that provision, but also its context and the objectives pursued by the legislation of which it is a part (see, to that effect, judgment of 17 November 1983, Merck, 292/82, EU:C:1983:335, paragraph 12).

51 In that regard, it is appropriate, first, to note that the second subparagraph of Article 32(4) of Directive 2004/18, read in the light of recital 11 of that directive, provides that, where a framework agreement has been concluded with several successful bidders, subsequent contracts are to be concluded after competition has been reopened between the parties to the framework agreement in relation to the terms that have not been fixed. Further, paragraph 18, under the heading ‘Contract Notices’, in Annex VII A to that directive obliges the contracting authority that is an original party to the framework agreement to indicate the ‘the number and, where appropriate, proposed maximum number of economic operators who will be members of it …’.

52 It follows from those provisions that the requirement to be an original party to the framework agreement applies only to economic operators, as it is out of the question that contracting authorities would be required to compete amongst themselves.

53 In addition, such an interpretation helps to ensure that practical effect is given to Article 1(5) and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18, the objective of which is, inter alia, to streamline public purchasing by encouraging, through framework agreements, collective public purchasing in order to achieve economies of scale.

54 Further, that interpretation is borne out, as the Advocate General noted in point 62 of his Opinion, by the wording of the second subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2014/24, in accordance with which the procedures for the awarding of contracts based on a framework agreement may be applied only between, on the one hand, those contracting authorities specifically identified for this purpose in the invitation to tender or in the invitation to confirm interest and, on the other hand, those economic operators party to the framework agreement as concluded.

55 It follows from the findings above that the purpose of the second subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18 is to allow a contracting authority to give other contracting authorities access to a framework agreement that it is proposing to conclude with the economic operators who will be original parties thereto.

56 It is not, therefore, a requirement of the second subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18 that a 'secondary' contracting authority, such as the ASST of Valcamonica in the main proceedings, be a signatory to the framework agreement in order for it to be able to award a subsequent contract at a later date. It is sufficient that such a contracting authority appear as a potential beneficiary of that framework agreement from the date on which it is concluded by being clearly identified in the tender documents with an explicit reference that makes both the 'secondary' contracting authority itself and any interested operator aware of that possibility. That reference can appear either in the framework agreement itself or in another document, such as an extension clause in the tender specifications, as long as the requirements as to advertising and legal certainty and, consequently, those relating to transparency are complied with.

Whether it is possible for contracting authorities that are not signatories to a framework agreement to refrain from determining the quantity of services that may be required when they conclude subsequent contracts or to determine that quantity by reference to their usual requirements

57 It is apparent from Article 1(5) of Directive 2004/18 that the purpose of a framework agreement is to establish the terms governing contracts to be awarded during a given period, in particular with regard to price and, where appropriate, the quantities envisaged.

58 Indeed, it could be inferred from the adverbial phrase 'where appropriate' that an indication of the quantity of the services which the framework agreement covers is merely optional.

59 That interpretation cannot, however, be accepted.

60 First, it follows from some of the other provisions of Directive 2004/18 that a framework agreement must, at the outset, determine the maximum volume of supplies or services that may form the subject of subsequent contracts. In particular, Article 9(9) of that directive, which sets out, inter alia, the methods for calculating the estimated value of framework agreements, provides that the value to be taken into consideration is the maximum estimated value net of VAT of all the contracts envisaged for the total term of that agreement. Paragraph 6(c), headed 'Public service contracts', under the heading 'Contract Notices' in Annex VII A to Directive 2004/18 also requires that the contract notice relating to such an agreement specify the estimated total value of the services for the entire duration of the framework agreement and, as far as possible, the value and the frequency of the contracts to be awarded. As the Commission submits, in essence, and as the Advocate General noted in point 78 of his Opinion, although the contracting authority that is an original party to the framework agreement is subject only to a requirement to use best endeavours with regard to the value and frequency of each of the subsequent contracts to be awarded, it is nevertheless imperative that that authority state the total quantity which the subsequent contracts may comprise.

61 Second, under Article 32(3) of Directive 2004/18, where a framework agreement is concluded with a single economic operator, contracts based on that agreement must be awarded within the limits of the terms laid down in the agreement. It follows that the contracting authority that is an original party to the framework agreement can make commitments on its own behalf or on behalf of the potential contracting authorities that are specifically indicated in that agreement only up to a certain quantity and once that limit has been reached the agreement will no longer have any effect.

62 Third, that interpretation ensures that the fundamental principles governing the awarding of public contracts, which apply to the conclusion of framework agreements in accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18, are observed. Generally, a framework agreement falls within the concept of public procurement to the extent that it turns into a whole the various specific contracts that it governs (see, to that effect, judgments of 4 May 1995, Commission v Greece, C-79/94, EU:C:1995:120, paragraph 15; of 29 November 2007, Commission v Italy, C-119/06, not published, EU:C:2007:729, paragraph 43; and of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 36).

63 Not only the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination, but also the principle of transparency that stems from them (see, to that effect, judgment of 17 December 2015, UNIS and Beaudout Père et Fils, C-25/14 and C-26/14, EU:C:2015:821, paragraph 38) imply that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or tender specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgment of 13 July 2017, INGSTEEL and Metrostav, C-76/16, EU:C:2017:549, paragraph 34).

64 The principles of transparency and equal treatment of economic operators with an interest in the conclusion of a framework agreement, as established, inter alia, by Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, would be affected if the contracting authority that is an original party to the framework agreement did not set out the total quantity which such an agreement covers.

65 The obligation of transparency is particularly important in the context of a subsequent contract, given that, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 35(4) of Directive 2004/18, contracting authorities are not bound to send a notice of the results of the award procedure for each contract based on the framework agreement.

66 Further, if the contracting authority that was an original party to the framework agreement were not obliged to indicate at the outset the quantity and maximum amount of services that will be covered by that agreement, the conclusion of the agreement could be used to divide a contract up artificially so that it remains below the thresholds laid down by Directive 2004/18, which is prohibited by Article 9(3) of that directive.

67 Additionally, even if it could be assumed that a reference to the usual requirements of contracting authorities specifically indicated in the framework agreement may prove to be sufficiently explicit for national economic operators, it cannot be assumed that the same can necessarily be said for an economic operator established in another Member State.

68 Finally, if the total quantity of services that those usual requirements represents is common knowledge, it should not be difficult to refer to it in the framework agreement itself or in another published document, such as the tender specifications, and, by doing so, ensure full observance of the principles of transparency and equal treatment.

69 Fourth, a requirement that the contracting authority that is an original party to the framework agreement indicate therein the quantity and amount of the services that that agreement will cover is a manifestation of the prohibition on using framework agreements improperly or in such a way as to prevent, restrict or distort competition, as laid down in the fifth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18.

70 Therefore, the reply to the questions referred is that Article 1(5) and the fourth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2014/18 must be interpreted as meaning that:

– a contracting authority may act on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities that are specifically indicated but are not direct parties to a framework agreement, provided that the requirements as to advertising and legal certainty and, consequently, those relating to transparency are complied with; and

– it cannot be accepted that contracting authorities that are not signatories to the framework agreement refrain from determining the quantity of services that may be required when they conclude contracts pursuant to the framework agreement or determine that quantity by reference to their usual requirements, because, if they do so, the principles of transparency and equal treatment of economic operators with an interest in the conclusion of that framework contract will be infringed.

Costs

71 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(5) and the fourth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that:

– a contracting authority may act on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities that are specifically indicated but are not direct parties to a framework agreement, provided that the requirements as to advertising and legal certainty and, consequently, those relating to transparency are complied with; and

– it cannot be accepted that contracting authorities that are not signatories to the framework agreement refrain from determining the quantity of services that may be required when they conclude contracts pursuant to the framework agreement or determine that quantity by reference to their usual requirements, because, if they do so, the principles of transparency and equal treatment of economic operators with an interest in the conclusion of that framework contract will be infringed.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Italian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 3 October 2018(1)

Case C-216/17

Autorità Garante della Concorrenza e del Mercato — Antitrust,

Coopservice Soc. coop. arl

v

Azienda Socio-Sanitaria Territoriale della Valcamonica — Sebino (ASST),

Azienda Socio-Sanitaria Territoriale del Garda (ASST),

Azienda Socio-Sanitaria Territoriale della Valcamonica (ASST)

Third parties:

Markas Srl,

ATI — Zanetti Arturo & C. Srl e in proprio,

Regione Lombardia

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Framework agreements — Extension clause)

1. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) once again seeks a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice on the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC. (2) On this occasion, the referring court's uncertainties concern whether a public health body acting as a contracting authority was, in 2015, entitled to award a contract for the provision of certain services directly to the successful tenderer with which another similar public body had previously (in 2011) concluded a similar contract, which the referring court describes as a framework agreement for the purposes of that directive.

2. The referring court also asks whether, in those same circumstances, it is mandatory for the framework agreement to state the quantity of services that contracting authorities may require when concluding subsequent contracts and, if so, whether that information may be provided by reference to their 'usual requirements'.

I. Legislative framework

A. EU law: Directive 2004/18

3. Recitals 11, 15 and 36 of Directive 2004/18 state:

‘(11) A Community definition of framework agreements, together with specific rules on framework agreements concluded for contracts falling within the scope of this Directive, should be provided. Under these rules, when a contracting authority enters into a framework agreement in accordance with the provisions of this Directive relating, in particular, to advertising, time limits and conditions for the submission of tenders, it may enter into contracts based on such a framework agreement during its term of validity either by applying the terms set forth in the framework agreement or, if all terms have not been fixed in advance in the framework agreement, by reopening competition between the parties to the framework agreement in relation to those terms. The reopening of competition should comply with certain rules the aim of which is to guarantee the required flexibility and to guarantee respect for the general principles, in particular the principle of equal treatment. For the same reasons, the term of the framework agreements should not exceed four years, except in cases duly justified by the contracting authorities.

…

(15) Certain centralised purchasing techniques have been developed in Member States. Several contracting authorities are responsible for making acquisitions or awarding public contracts/framework agreements for other contracting authorities. In view of the large volumes purchased, those techniques help increase competition and streamline public purchasing. Provision should therefore be made for a Community definition of central purchasing bodies dedicated to contracting authorities. A definition should also be given of the conditions under which, in accordance with the principles of non-discrimination and equal treatment, contracting authorities purchasing works, supplies and/or services through a central purchasing body may be deemed to have complied with this Directive.

…

(36) To ensure development of effective competition in the field of public contracts, it is necessary that contract notices drawn up by the contracting authorities of Member States be advertised throughout the Community. The information contained in these notices must enable economic operators in the Community to determine whether the proposed contracts are of interest to them. For this purpose, it is appropriate to give them adequate information on the object of the contract and the conditions attached thereto …’

4. In accordance with Article 1(5) of Directive 2004/18:

‘A “framework agreement” is an agreement between one or more contracting authorities and one or more economic operators, the purpose of which is to establish the terms governing contracts to be awarded during a given period, in particular with regard to price and, where appropriate, the quantity envisaged.’

5. Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

6. Article 9 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

‘1. The calculation of the estimated value of a public contract shall be based on the total amount payable, net of VAT, as estimated by the contracting authority. This calculation shall take account of the estimated total amount, including any form of option and any renewals of the contract.

…

3. No works project or proposed purchase of a certain quantity of supplies and/or services may be subdivided to prevent its coming within the scope of this Directive.

…

7. In the case of public supply or service contracts which are regular in nature or which are intended to be renewed within a given period, the calculation of the estimated contract value shall be based on the following:

(a) either the total actual value of the successive contracts of the same type awarded during the preceding 12 months or financial year adjusted, if possible, to take account of the changes in quantity or value which would occur in the course of the 12 months following the initial contract;

(b) or the total estimated value of the successive contracts awarded during the 12 months following the first delivery, or during the financial year if that is longer than 12 months.

The choice of method used to calculate the estimated value of a public contract may not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive.

…

9. With regard to framework agreements and dynamic purchasing systems, the value to be taken into consideration shall be the maximum estimated value net of VAT of all the contracts envisaged for the total term of the framework agreement or the dynamic purchasing system.'

7. Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 states:

'1. Member States may provide that contracting authorities may conclude framework agreements.

2. For the purpose of concluding a framework agreement, contracting authorities shall follow the rules of procedure referred to in this Directive for all phases up to the award of contracts based on that framework agreement. The parties to the framework agreement shall be chosen by applying the award criteria set in accordance with Article 53.

Contracts based on a framework agreement shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures laid down in paragraphs 3 and 4. Those procedures may be applied only between the contracting authorities and the economic operators originally party to the framework agreement.

When awarding contracts based on a framework agreement, the parties may under no circumstances make substantial amendments to the terms laid down in that framework agreement, in particular in the case referred to in paragraph 3.

The term of a framework agreement may not exceed four years, save in exceptional cases duly justified, in particular by the subject of the framework agreement.

Contracting authorities may not use framework agreements improperly or in such a way as to prevent, restrict or distort competition.

3. Where a framework agreement is concluded with a single economic operator, contracts based on that agreement shall be awarded within the limits of the terms laid down in the framework agreement.

For the award of those contracts, contracting authorities may consult the operator party to the framework agreement in writing, requesting it to supplement its tender as necessary.

4. Where a framework agreement is concluded with several economic operators, the latter must be at least three in number, insofar as there is a sufficient number of economic operators to satisfy the selection criteria and/or of admissible tenders which meet the award criteria.

Contracts based on framework agreements concluded with several economic operators may be awarded either:

– by application of the terms laid down in the framework agreement without reopening competition, or

– where not all the terms are laid down in the framework agreement, when the parties are again in competition on the basis of the same and, if necessary, more precisely formulated terms, and, where appropriate, other terms referred to in the specifications of the framework agreement, in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) for every contract to be awarded, contracting authorities shall consult in writing the economic operators capable of performing the contract;

(b) contracting authorities shall fix a time limit which is sufficiently long to allow tenders for each specific contract to be submitted, taking into account factors such as the complexity of the subject-matter of the contract and the time needed to send in tenders;

(c) tenders shall be submitted in writing, and their content shall remain confidential until the stipulated time limit for reply has expired;

(d) contracting authorities shall award each contract to the tenderer who has submitted the best tender on the basis of the award criteria set out in the specifications of the framework agreement.'

8. Article 35 of Directive 2004/18 is worded as follows:

'…

2. Contracting authorities which wish to award a public contract or a framework agreement by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 30, negotiated procedure with the publication of a contract notice or, under the conditions laid down in Article 29, a competitive dialogue, shall make known their intention by means of a contract notice.

…

4. Contracting authorities which have awarded a public contract or concluded a framework agreement shall send a notice of the results of the award procedure no later than 48 days after the award of the contract or the conclusion of the framework agreement.

In the case of framework agreements concluded in accordance with Article 32 the contracting authorities are not bound to send a notice of the results of the award procedure for each contract based on that agreement.

…'

9. Pursuant to Article 36(1) of Directive 2004/18:

'Notices shall include the information mentioned in Annex VII A and, where appropriate, any other information deemed useful by the contracting authority in the format of standard forms adopted by the Commission in accordance with the procedure referred to in Article 77(2).'

10. Annex VII A governs 'Information which must be included in public contract notices', in the following terms:

'…

Contract notices

…

3. ...

(c) Where appropriate, indicate whether a framework agreement is involved.

…

6. ...

(c) Public service contracts.

– Category and description of service. Nomenclature reference number(s). Quantity of services to be provided. Indicate in particular options concerning supplementary purchases and, if known, the provisional timetable for recourse to these options as well as the number of renewals, if any. In the case of renewable contracts over a given period, an estimate of the time frame, if known, for subsequent public contracts for purchase of intended services, in the event of a framework agreement, indication also of the planned duration of the framework agreement, the estimated total value of the services for the entire duration of the framework agreement and, as far as possible, the value and the frequency of the contracts to be awarded,

…

18. Where there is a framework agreement: the number and, where appropriate, proposed maximum number of economic operators who will be members of it, the duration of the framework agreement provided for, stating, if appropriate, the reasons for any duration exceeding four years.

…’

B. Italian law

11. The decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture (Legislative Decree No 163 establishing the code of public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts) of 12 April 2006, (3) which was in force at the material time, transposed Directive 2004/18 into Italian law. Article 3(13) thereof defines ‘framework agreement’ in the same terms as Article 1(5) of Directive 2004/18.

12. Article 59 of that legislative decree reproduces Article 32 of Directive 2004/18, but it does not provide that the term of a framework agreement may not exceed four years, save in exceptional cases. Nor does it expressly prohibit contracting authorities from using framework agreements improperly or in such a way as to prevent, restrict or distort competition.

13. The last part of Article 1(449) of legge n. 296 — Disposizioni per la formazione del bilancio annuale e pluriennale dello Stato (Law 296 — laying down provisions for drawing up the annual and pluriannual budget of the State) of 27 December 2006 (4) requires the bodies of the Servizio Sanitario Nazionale (National Health Service; ‘SSN’) to make purchases through central purchasing bodies.

14. Article 1(12) of Decreto legislativo n. 95 — Disposizioni urgenti per la revisione della spesa pubblica con invarianza dei servizi ai cittadini (Legislative Decree No 95 — Urgent provisions for reviewing public spending while maintaining services for citizens) of 6 July 2012 (5) allows, without the launching of a new tendering procedure and in order to make savings, subsequent amendments which improves the contract terms laid down in the initial tendering procedure.

15. Article 15(13)(b) of Decree-Law No 95 of 2012 provides for the rescission of a contract for the supply of goods or the provision of services which has become too onerous, and for the conclusion, without the need for a new tendering procedure, of a new contract the terms of which are the same as those contained in an ongoing contract with other undertakings.

II. Facts

16. Aziende socio sanitarie territoriali (local health and social care bodies; ‘ASSTs’) are regional public bodies which ensure that citizens receive assistance under the SSN. It is common ground that they qualify as contracting authorities within the meaning of Directive 2004/18.

17. For reasons relating to the adjustment of the budgetary balance and as a measure aimed at containing costs, the Italian legislature made it compulsory for SSN bodies, except in very limited circumstances, to purchase goods and services as a group through central purchasing bodies.

18. Against that background, following a restricted procedure, the ASST di Desenzano del Garda (which was subsequently taken over by the ASST del Garda), by Decree No 828 of 4 November 2011, awarded an ad hoc tendering consortium, consisting of Markas Srl and Zanetti Arturo & C. Srl, a contract for environmental sanitation, collection and disposal of waste services. (6) The contract term was 108 months, starting on 1 December 2011.

19. The ASST di Desenzano del Garda included in the tender specifications for that contract a clause entitled 'Extension of the contract', (7) which provided for the possibility of 'subsequent accession' by certain specified ASSTs which had previously concluded an agreement (8) for group purchasing of goods and services.

20. That clause, in point 2.5 of the special tender specifications (Annex 3), stipulated as follows:

- 'Entities identified as successful tenderers may be requested to extend the contract to one or more undertakings' listed at the end of the clause;
- the duration of the extension is to be equal to the remaining duration of the contractual period established by the original tendering procedure;
- every ASST is entitled to a single accession during the contractual period 'on the same conditions as the award in question';
- however, the successful tenderer is not obliged to accept the request for extension. If it does accept the request, it will result in 'an independent contractual relationship', distinct from the relationship relating to the original award.

21. The contract listed by name 18 'aziende ospedaliere/sanitarie' (hospitals and health centres) which were entitled to rely on the extension clause. These included the Azienda Sanitaria Locale della Valcamonica — Sebino (now called Azienda Socio-Sanitaria Territoriale della Valcamonica (ASST)), which is a respondent in the main proceedings.

22. By Decision No 1158 of 30 December 2015, the ASST della Valcamonica exercised the option to accede to a contract provided for in the clause described, in respect of the period from 1 February 2016 to 15 February 2021. Consequently, it concluded for that period a contract for the provision of sanitation services with Markas, without carrying out a further tendering procedure in addition to that initially carried out by the ASST di Desenzano del Garda.

23. Two actions were brought before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Italy) against that decision by the operator which had provided the services until then, Coopservice Soc. coop. arl ('Coopservice'), and by the Autorità garante della concorrenza e del mercato (Competition and Markets Authority; 'AGCM'), respectively.

24. The first-instance court dismissed both actions and the applicants appealed against those decisions to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), which has made the reference for a preliminary ruling.

III. Questions referred

25. The following questions have been submitted by the referring court:

'(1) Must Article 1 [(9)] and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 33 of Directive 2014/24 [(10)] be interpreted as allowing the conclusion of a framework agreement in which:

- a contracting authority acts on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities specifically indicated, which are not, however, direct parties to the framework agreement;

– the quantity of services that may be required by the non-signatory contracting authorities when they enter into the subsequent contracts envisaged in the framework agreement itself is not determined?

(2) If the answer to question 1 should be in the negative:

Must Article 1 [(11)] and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 33 of Directive 2014/24 be interpreted as allowing the conclusion of a framework agreement in which:

– a contracting authority acts on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities specifically indicated, which are not, however, direct parties to the framework agreement;

– the quantity of services that may be required by the non-signatory contracting authorities when they enter into the subsequent contracts envisaged in the framework agreement itself is determined by reference to their usual requirements?'

IV. Procedure before the Court and summary of the parties' submissions

26. The reference for a preliminary ruling was received at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 24 April 2017. Written observations were lodged by Coopservice, Markas, the Italian, Czech, Austrian and Finnish Governments and the European Commission.

27. The hearing, held on 12 July 2018, was attended by Markas, the Italian Government and the Commission.

28. Coopservice points out, first, that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) annulled the extension clause at issue in an action brought in relation to another award made under that clause (by the ASST Carlo Poma).

29. Coopservice submits that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible because: (a) the alleged framework agreement exceeds, without justification, the period of four years stipulated in Article 32 of Directive 2004/18; (b) the clause at issue has already been annulled by the referring court; and (c) there are no other statutory conditions which would enable an award procedure of the kind at issue in the main proceedings to be classified as a framework agreement.

30. In the alternative, Coopservice proposes that the two questions referred should be answered in the negative because, it argues, not only is the quantity of services not determined but the conditions for finding that there is a framework agreement are not met either.

31. Markas questions the relevance of the first question, arguing that it is inaccurate to state that the ASSTs which relied on the extension clause did not participate in the formation stage of the framework agreement. That agreement is the result of concerted action from the outset.

32. At all events, Markas contends that the first question should be answered in the affirmative. A procurement procedure involving an extension clause is a form of contract entailing a subsequent grouping together, which has many similarities to central purchasing. Both are protracted procedures involving a stage in which the contractor is selected by a single contracting entity which acts as a (potentially) broader contracting authority, and a subsequent accession stage which is open to other entities. The only difference, which in Markas' submission is irrelevant, is that the central purchasing body only acts as such but does not itself use the services it purchases under the framework agreement.

33. As regards the second question, Markas submits that it is not obligatory to determine exact quantities in advance; those quantities may vary depending on the entities' specific requirements. In this case, it is sufficient that the ASST del Garda indicated the value of the contract intended to cover its own requirements without having also to include the value of possible subsequent accessions.

34. The Italian Government, which does not accept that the case concerns a framework agreement within the meaning of Article 32 of Directive 2004/18, contends that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible. In the alternative, it maintains that the first question should be answered in the negative, since the fact that there is nothing which would enable the subject matter of subsequent services (in other words, services which may be required through the conclusion of subsequent implementation agreements) to be determined is not compatible with the framework agreement model.

35. The Italian Government submits that the second question should also be answered in the negative. It argues, like the Czech and Austrian governments, that the general reference to the 'requirements' of contracting authorities is insufficient in view of the vagueness of the term and because it entails an 'evolving concept' linked to the temporal context of the case.

36. The Austrian Government proposes that the two questions be examined together. In its submission, the conditions for the existence of a framework agreement set out in Directives 2004/18 and 2014/24 are not fulfilled. Even if it were accepted that such an agreement exists, for the purpose of EU law, the conduct at issue in this case would, nevertheless, be unlawful.

37. The unlawfulness flows from the fact that, first, the parties were not identified from the outset, as both directives require. Since a tenderer is entitled to refuse the accession of other contracting authorities, there is no mutually binding contractual relationship with all the entities benefiting under the extension clause. Second, it is alleged that the method used by the ASST del Garda and by the ASSTs which relied on that clause deprives of any substance the provisions relating to the calculation of the estimated value of the contracts and framework agreement.

38. The Czech Government maintains that EU law precludes a framework agreement to which the contracting authorities entitled to benefit thereunder, pursuant to an extension clause like that at issue, are not parties from the outset. The Czech Government contends, moreover, that it is essential that the substance of the service to be provided is established, at least in outline, during the procedure which led to the conclusion of the framework agreement. That is the only way of enabling potential tenderers to identify whether the contract is of interest to them and of making it possible to determine the estimated value of the contract, which is dependent on the maximum estimated value of all the contracts envisaged throughout the total term of the framework agreement.

39. The Finnish Government argues, in relation to the first question, that Directive 2004/18 permits a framework agreement under which: (a) a contracting authority acts on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities which are specifically mentioned but which are not directly parties to that framework agreement; and (b) the quantity of services which may be required by the non-signatory contracting authorities when they enter into the subsequent contracts provided for by the framework agreement is not determined. However, the entire term of that framework agreement must have been specified in accordance with the requirements of the directive and the various subsequent contracts entered into must not exceed that term overall.

40. As regards the second question, the Finnish Government argues that, in many cases, it is possible to establish, for supplies and services, a particular quantity by reference to the usual requirements of the contracting authorities. It is sufficient that the contracting authority uses as a reference the volume of purchases in previous years, adjusted, where appropriate, by an estimate of possible fluctuations in quantity. That information should be included in the tender documents, for, otherwise, former contractors would be placed at an advantage. If that is not the case, the Finnish Government submits that the question should be answered in the negative.

41. The Commission points out that Directive 2014/24 is inapplicable ratione temporis, before going on to observe also that the framework agreement at issue exceeds the period of four years laid down in Directive 2004/18. Since the questions submitted by the referring court do not relate to that point and it is not possible to ascertain whether it has been addressed in the main proceedings, the Commission does not formally submit that the reference for a preliminary ruling should be ruled inadmissible.

42. As regards the substance, the Commission states that the second subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18 does not provide that contracting authorities who were 'originally' parties to the agreement must have signed it. It will be enough if those authorities are referred to as potential beneficiaries under the agreement from the date of its conclusion, and an explicit reference in the tender documents or the specifications will suffice.

43. As far as the quantity of services is concerned, the Commission submits that the phrase ‘where appropriate’ (Article 1(5) of Directive 2004/18) does not imply that this is an optional matter. The intention is to make clear that, for certain subsequent contracts, it might be impossible to state the quantities to be provided, as would occur with the supply of spare parts for vehicles used for municipal transport services. That is not the case with regard to services such as those at issue in the present case, where the total quantity of the services should be expressly indicated in the framework agreement or the tender specifications, even if it is not possible to show the specific value of each subsequent contract. Thus, ‘usual requirements’ may be an acceptable criterion provided that these are defined with sufficient clarity, precision and transparency.

V. Analysis

A. Preliminary observation: the relevant directive for the purpose of the reference for a preliminary ruling

44. Although the questions refer to both Directive 2004/18 and Directive 2014/24, I agree with the Commission that it is not necessary to provide an interpretation of Directive 2014/24 because it is inapplicable ratione temporis, and that it is only necessary to interpret Directive 2004/18.

45. According to the information in the order for reference, both the original award of the contract (decree of 4 November 2011) and the accession of the contract (decree of 30 December 2015) took place before the period for transposition of Directive 2014/24 had expired, that is, before 18 April 2016.

B. Admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling

46. One of the grounds put forward by Coopservice in support of its argument that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible is that the initial contract exceeds the period of four years laid down in the fourth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18, (12) which means that it does not qualify as a ‘framework agreement’ within the meaning of that directive. The Commission, without formally proposing that the reference for a preliminary ruling should be ruled inadmissible, also draws attention to that fact.

47. When asked by the Court of Justice to explain the reasons why, despite having been entered into for a period of nine years, that contract may be classified as a framework agreement within the meaning of Article 1(5) of Directive 2004/18, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) stated that the parties concerned did not invoke the term of the agreement as a possible ground for annulment. In accordance with the principle that the subject matter of an action is defined by the parties, on which its jurisdiction is based, the referring court states that it is not even entitled to examine that issue of its own motion because it is not a sufficiently serious irregularity for a finding that the agreement is null and void. (13) The referring court takes the view that the fact that Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 allows a term of more than four years in exceptional circumstances shows that failure to observe that term is not an invalidating defect. (14)

48. In any event, the referring court maintains that, ‘bearing in mind its particular purpose, which is to ensure the proper functioning of a number of hospitals, the agreement at issue could be covered by that exception’. (15)

49. It is settled case-law that the Court may refuse to give a ruling on a question referred by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation, or the determination of validity, of a rule of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. (16)

50. In fact, both Coopservice’s plea relating to the term of the initial contract and the plea relating to failure to comply with other conditions necessary for classification as a ‘framework agreement’ — raised also by the Italian and Austrian Governments — contend that the referring court was incorrect in so classifying the agreement.

51. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has not referred to the Court any questions concerning the legal nature of the contract awarded in 2011. Furthermore, given that it takes it as given that that contract constitutes a framework agreement within the meaning of Article 1(5) of Directive 2004/18, the referring court's doubts are confined to whether, under that directive, it was actually possible for the agreement to be concluded under the circumstances concerned (without the signatures of all the contracting authorities and without a precise determination of the quantity of services which non-signatories may subsequently require).

52. I, like the Commission, believe that the reply to the questions referred must be confined to those two specific issues and that it is for the referring court, as the court adjudicating on the facts and primary interpreter of the applicable law, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to be able to decide the case before it and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. (17)

53. In this case, those questions are based on the premiss that, in principle, there was a framework agreement within the meaning of Directive 2004/18. That is clearly the interpretation of the referring court, in the light of the facts of the dispute.

54. It should be noted, however, that doubt could be cast on that premiss during the main proceedings if, following appropriate discussion instigated by the parties or as a result of a reconsideration by the referring court, of its own motion, of its original conclusion, (18) the referring court were to find that the agreement concerned raises difficulties as regards its compatibility with Directive 2004/18 other than those which led that court to initiate the present preliminary-ruling proceedings.

55. The third plea of inadmissibility put forward by Coopservice (the referring court already annulled in other proceedings the clause enabling accession) cannot be upheld either. Only the national court seised of the main proceedings can assess whether that annulment took place and, if so, what effect it may have on the proceedings in which it has decided to make the present reference for a preliminary ruling.

C. Substance

56. The two questions referred by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) are based on the premiss that there is a 'framework agreement under which a contracting authority may act on its own behalf and on behalf of other contracting authorities specifically indicated, which do not, however, play a direct part in the conclusion of that framework agreement'.

57. Since the referring court's uncertainties do not extend to that issue, I shall refrain from setting out my reservations about whether the formula used in the November 2011 contract genuinely satisfies the definition of a framework agreement within the meaning of Directive 2004/18.

58. In any event, I must make clear that, should the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) persist with its classification, it will have to establish whether, as a result of its specific features, the effect of that framework agreement is to 'prevent, restrict or distort competition' (Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18). (19)

59. The premiss is, therefore, that there was an initial framework agreement and that contracting authorities which, although mentioned in that agreement, did not play a direct part in the conclusion of that agreement, are active 'parties' to it. That raises the difficulty of whether Article 1(5) and Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 permit the conclusion of a framework agreement without the signatures of all the contracting authorities which later seek to rely on its provisions.

60. The substance of the second parts of each of the two questions is also the same, in that they relate to the determination of 'the quantity of services that may be required by the non-signatory contracting authorities when they enter into the subsequent contracts envisaged in the framework agreement itself'. Two questions are asked:

– first, whether it is possible under Directive 2004/18 for that quantity not to be determined at all;

– second, whether the quantity can be specified by reference to the 'usual requirements' of the non-signatory contracting authorities.

1. Extension of the contract to a contracting authority which did not sign the framework agreement

61. In accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18, contracts based on a framework agreement must be awarded in accordance with certain procedures (laid down in paragraphs 3 and 4 of that article) which 'may be applied only between the contracting authorities and the economic operators originally party to the framework agreement.'

62. It could be argued that, grammatically speaking, given its position in the sentence, the adverb 'originally' refers only to economic operators and not to contracting authorities. A number of reasons militate in favour of that interpretation, the most relevant of which is, perhaps, its subsequent confirmation by the corresponding article of Directive 2014/24. (20)

63. In any event, whatever the interpretation of the second subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18 may be, considered in isolation, I believe that contracting authorities which occupy an active position in a framework agreement must also be a party to that agreement. By its very nature, a 'framework agreement' is, according to Article 1(5) of Directive 2004/18, an agreement concluded 'between one or more contracting authorities and one or more economic operators, the purpose of which is to establish the terms governing contracts to be awarded'.

64. A separate matter is whether that status can be attributed only to a contracting authority which has played a direct part in the conclusion of the framework agreement or also to a contracting authority which, while not playing 'a direct part in the conclusion' of that agreement, is specifically indicated in it. That is the uncertainty with which the first question is concerned.

65. There is no reason why the status of party to a framework agreement should mean that a party that has that status must have signed the agreement or even have played a direct part in its conclusion. As the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) points out, (21) the provisions of civil law governing representation and negotiorum gestio permit a person (in this case, an ASST) to conclude a binding agreement on behalf of others where those others have entrusted that person with this task or ratify it a posteriori.

66. To my mind, when it refers to 'other contracting authorities which are not … direct parties to the framework agreement', the referring court is not alluding to the signing of the agreement in the sense of formally signing a legal act but rather to the 'conclusion' of an agreement in whose formation they are directly involved and to which they are therefore a party.

67. However, the status of party may be acquired without having to sign the framework agreement or even having been directly involved in its conclusion: it will suffice if a party seeking that status has agreed to be bound by the terms and conditions of that agreement. (22)

68. The decisive point is that contracting authorities other than the contracting authority which signed the framework agreement should be identified as 'potential beneficiaries' (23) at the time when the agreement was entered into and were aware of its contents. If the conclusion of the framework agreement is preceded by a collective decision, in which a number of contracting authorities agree to make group purchases of certain goods or services, that prior collective decision can be used as the basis for a framework agreement signed by just one of those authorities on behalf (or with the consent) of them all.

69. There is a relationship of continuity and dependence between a framework agreement in the strict sense and the subsequent contracts concluded on the basis of the terms laid down therein. Those contracts are not concluded ex novo or in a vacuum but rather in accordance with the conditions laid down in the framework agreement, which must of necessity comply with the requirements of Directive 2004/18. Being made subject to those requirements is a necessary condition for the lawfulness of the subsequent contracts, in so far as they are compatible with the EU public procurement legislation.

70. The close relationship between a framework agreement and the contracts concluded pursuant to that agreement means that the authorities which award those contracts must be those indicated in the framework agreement, even if they have not signed that agreement themselves. In my view, that is the most appropriate interpretation of the second subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18.

71. In summary, it is important, therefore, that the framework agreement stipulate, exhaustively, which contracting authorities are entitled to accede to public contracts concluded thereunder. While that stipulation must, in all cases, be clear and precise, there is no reason why it must be included in the text of the framework agreement itself and, instead, it may be included in one of the clauses of the tender specifications, like the clause in the specifications at issue in the main proceedings.

72. Therefore, I propose that the first question be answered to the effect that Article 1(5) and the second subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18 do not preclude a framework agreement under which a contracting authority which did not play a direct part in the conclusion of that agreement and was not a signatory to it may accede to contracts based on the agreement, provided that that contracting authority is identified in the framework agreement itself or in a document incorporated into the tender specifications, in accordance with the requirements of Directive 2004/18.

2. The indication of the quantity of services that may be required by contracting authorities which were not signatories to the framework agreement

73. The referring court seeks to ascertain whether it is compatible with Directive 2004/18 for a framework agreement not to state 'the quantity of services' that may be required by the non-signatory contracting authorities when they enter into subsequent contracts based on the framework agreement.

74. Pursuant to Article 1(5) of Directive 2004/18, the terms governing contracts to be awarded during the (limited) term of a framework agreement include those relating 'to price and, where appropriate, the quantity envisaged.'

75. In my view, the use of the phrase 'where appropriate' does not mean that of the 'quantity envisaged' is an optional matter. It is, on the contrary, a mandatory requirement, albeit subject to the degree of precision with which the volume of services can be anticipated in the framework agreement, having regards to the nature of the services with which the subsequent contracts will be concerned.

76. Any other interpretation would suggest that the original terms of the framework agreement are excessively vague as regards one of its most important elements, with a twofold negative effect: first, it would discourage the involvement of potentially interested economic operators who, owing to the lack of a precise definition of the subject matter of the contract, would refrain from participating in the procedure; second, the prohibition on inserting in the contracts awarded 'substantial amendments to the terms laid down in [the] framework agreement' (third subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18) would be ineffective.

77. Paragraph 6(c) of Annex VII A to Directive 2004/18, to which Article 36(1) of the directive refers, sets out the information to be included in contract notices prior to the award of a framework agreement. In particular, it is necessary to include 'the estimated total value of the services for the entire duration of the framework agreement (24) and, as far as possible, the value and the frequency of the contracts to be awarded'.

78. Therefore, the framework agreement must indicate the total value of all the services required. It must include an estimated value of the subsequent contracts by which the different parts into which all the services required are split will be awarded individually in succession. That, I repeat, is the only way of implementing the principles of transparency and equal treatment of the operators interested in participating in the framework agreement and the contracts derived therefrom. If the indication of the (estimated) total quantity of services is not included or the bases for calculating those services are hypothetical, it will be difficult for candidates to assess whether it is worth their while taking part in the tendering procedure. (25)

79. In my submission, the words 'as far as possible' are not intended to provide for an exception to compliance with that obligation. If that obligation were disregarded, it would not be possible to calculate, by aggregation, the total value of the services required for the whole duration of the framework agreement. That expression does, however, allow a certain amount of flexibility when it comes to specifying the number of contracts into which it is foreseeable that the totality of the services covered by the framework agreement will be split; in other words, by anticipating the 'frequency' with which contracts will be awarded, which will depend on the quantity of services with which each contract will be concerned.

80. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) also asks whether it is possible to calculate the quantity of services to be provided under subsequent contracts by reference to the 'usual requirements' of the contracting authorities.

81. In my view, which is shared by the Finnish Government and the Commission, there is nothing to preclude the use of that reference, provided that those requirements are defined clearly and precisely in the framework agreement itself or in the relevant tender specifications. The wording used must include terms which are accessible to all potential interested parties.

82. In that connection, 'usual requirements' may be those which can be assumed taking into account the quantities purchased in previous years. However, requirements which, without that historical basis, arise unexpectedly during the term of the framework agreement are not usual requirements. Otherwise, there would be scope for vagueness, which is not compatible with the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency laid down in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18.

83. In accordance with those principles, the (mandatory) information about the value of the services must be equally accessible to all economic operators, if not in exact terms then at least approximately. If the value of those services is estimated in relation to the requirements which the contracting authority has had to meet in the past, the information which establishes the (actual and certain) value of those historical requirements must be indicated, together with such updates and corrections as may be necessary (as an estimated value), in the documents incorporated into the framework agreement. Otherwise, I repeat, the 'usual requirements' will actually be a mystery to all economic operators apart from the operator who was awarded previous contracts for the same services.

84. Accordingly, I suggest that Articles 1(5) and 32 of Directive 2004/18 should be interpreted as not precluding the quantity of services that may be required by a contracting authority which did not play a part in the conclusion of a framework agreement and did not sign that agreement but has unquestionably been a party to that agreement from the outset being determined by reference to its usual requirements, provided that these can be ascertained from clear, precise and transparent information concerning requirements which the contracting authority has had to meet in the past.

VI. Conclusion

85. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court reply as follows to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy):

> Articles 1(5) and 32 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as:
>
> – not precluding a framework agreement under which a contracting authority which was not a direct party to the conclusion of that agreement and was not a signatory to it may be a party to the public contracts based on that agreement, provided that that contracting authority is identified in the framework agreement itself or in a document incorporated into the tender specifications, as required by Directive 2004/18;
>
> – precluding a situation where the quantity of services that may be required by that contracting authority, when concluding the subsequent contracts provided for in the framework agreement, is not determined in that agreement or cannot be determined unambiguously;
>
> – not precluding the quantity of those services being determined by reference to the contracting authority's usual requirements, provided that the framework agreement provides clear, precise and transparent information concerning the requirements which that contracting authority has had to meet in the past.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

3 GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006.

4 GURI No 299 of 27 December 2006.

5 GURI No 156 of 6 July 2012, now Law No 135 of 7 August 2012 (GURI No 189 of 14 August 2012).

6 The award criterion was the most economically advantageous tender.

7 The clause stated that it was based on the agreement for ‘activating procedures for group purchasing’, in accordance with the principles enshrined in the Lombardy Regional Health and Social Care Plan 2002-2004, ‘which advocate group purchasing arrangements between bodies forming part of the regional health scheme’, and with the corresponding agreements of the Lombardy Regional Council. The clause also referred, without citing them, to subsequent agreements of the Lombardy Regional Council which ‘placed an emphasis on open tendering procedures that provided for subsequent accessions’.

8 The ASST del Garda and the ASST della Valcamonica, among others, were members of the AIPEL Consortium (East Lombardy), which was created as a result of the ‘Accordo interaziendale tra le aziende ospedaliere e le aziende sanitarie locali (AIPEL) [...] per la disciplina delle forme aggregate riguardanti la fornitura di beni e l’appalto di servizi’.

9 The order for reference cites Article 2, undoubtedly in error.

10 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

11 See footnote 9.

12 ‘The term of a framework agreement may not exceed four years, save in exceptional cases duly justified, in particular by the subject of the framework agreement.’

13 Paragraph 27 of the Order of 20 February 2018, made by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) in response to the Court’s question.

14 Ibid., paragraph 28.

15 Ibid.

16 In that connection, see, inter alia, judgments of 16 June 2015, Gauweiler and Others (C-62/14, EU:C:2015:400, paragraphs 24 and 25); of 4 May 2016, Pillbox 38 (C-477/14, EU:C:2016:324, paragraphs 15 and 16); of 5 July 2016, Ognyanov (C-614/14, EU:C:2016:514, paragraph 19); of 15 November 2016, Ullens de Schooten (C-268/15, EU:C:2016:874, paragraph 54); and of 28 March 2017, Rosneft (C-72/15, EU:C:2017:236, paragraphs 50 and 155).

17 See, inter alia, judgment of 26 June 2007, Ordre des barreaux francophones et germanophone and Others (C-305/05, EU:C:2007:383, paragraph 18).

---

18 The order of 20 February 2018 appears to dismiss that option. However, it will be sufficient if the Court refers in its judgment to the time limit laid down in the fourth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18 in order for the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) to perhaps reconsider its initial reluctance to examine the effect of that factor on the proceedings; clearly, it must do so in accordance with the requirements and procedural guarantees laid down in national law.

---

19 That is the view of the AGCOM, which argues that clause 2.5 of the original contract and the accession to that contract of the ASST della Valcamonica — Sebino infringe the principles of 'fair competition and impartiality', preventing 'transparent competition'.

---

20 In accordance with Article 33(2) of Directive 2014/24, '[c]ontracts based on a framework agreement shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures laid down in this paragraph and in paragraphs 3 and 4. Those procedures may be applied only between those contracting authorities clearly identified for this purpose in the call for competition or the invitation to confirm interest and those economic operators party to the framework agreement as concluded' (emphasis added).

---

21 Paragraphs 7 and 8 of the order for reference.

---

22 It is clear that such consent must have been given prior formal expression in some way and that, for that purpose, the signature of those who have consented will, ultimately, be essential. However, there is no reason why they must be signatories of the agreement in which the status of party is acquired; they need only be signatories of the legal act expressing that consent, to which the framework agreement must refer and make an integral part of its contents.

---

23 I am using the expression used by the Commission in paragraph 37 of its written observations.

---

24 The duration of the framework agreement is, therefore, one of the key factors for determining the total value of the services, as an essential element of the call for tenders. That is why, in establishing whether a framework agreement can be said to exist in the instant case, the referring court must take that into account, which may give it grounds for assessing whether there was compliance with the fourth subparagraph of Article 32(2) of Directive 2004/18 or whether the contracting authorities duly explained in the agreement itself the objective reasons for extending the four-year term. It could therefore be argued that, as they had discussed how to determine the quantities required, the parties themselves indirectly raised the issue of the duration of the framework agreement, without which it is not possible to estimate the total value of those quantities.

---

25 That uncertainty increases in circumstances like those in the present case because the extension clause of the framework agreement permits ASSTs, on an optional basis, to decide whether or not to accede, during the term of the agreement, to the original contract; it also allows the original contractor to refuse a subsequent request for accession made by the ASSTs mentioned.

Provisional text

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Ninth Chamber)

19 April 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors — Directive 2004/17/EC — Obligation to review prices after the award of the contract — No such obligation in Directive 2004/17/EC or arising from the general principles underlying Article 56 TFEU and Directive 2004/17/EC — Cleaning and maintenance services linked to railway transport operations — Article 3(3) TEU — Articles 26, 57, 58 and 101 TFEU — Lack of sufficient information concerning the factual context of the dispute in the main proceedings and the reasons justifying the need for a reply to the questions referred — Inadmissibility — Article 16 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union — Provision of national law not implementing EU law — Lack of jurisdiction)

In Case C-152/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), made by decision of 24 November 2016, received at the Court on 24 March 2017, in the proceedings

Consorzio Italian Management,

Catania Multiservizi SpA

v

Rete Ferroviaria Italiana SpA

THE COURT (Ninth Chamber), composed of C. Vajda (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, E. Juhász and C. Lycourgos, Judges,

Advocate General : M. Bobek,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of

– Consorzio Italian Management and Catania Multiservizi SpA, by E. Giardino and A. Cariola, avvocati, – Rete Ferroviaria Italiana SpA, by U. Cossu, avvocato, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and S. Fiorentino, avvocato dello Stato,

– the Spanish Government, by M.J. García-Valdecasas Dorrego, acting as Agent,

– the European Parliament, by L. Visaggio and R. van de Westelaken, acting as Agents,

– the Council of the European Union, by E. Moro and M. Balta, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 3(3) TEU, Articles 26, 56 to 58 and 101 TFEU, Article 16 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union ('the Charter') and Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011 (OJ 2011 L 319, p. 43) ('Directive 2004/17'), and the assessment of the validity of Directive 2004/17.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Consorzio Italian Management and Catania multiservizi SpA on the one hand, and Rete Ferroviaria Italiana SpA ('RFI') on the other, concerning the latter's refusal to grant the former's request for a review of the contract price, after the award of a contract for, inter alia, cleaning services at railway stations.

Legal context

EU law

3 Directive 2004/17 coordinates procurement procedures in specific sectors, as referred to in Articles 3 to 7 of that directive, including transport services.

4 Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 which is in Chapter III, entitled 'General principles', of Title I, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts', provides:

'Contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

5 Under Article 16 of that directive, entitled 'Contract Thresholds':

'Save where they are ruled out by the exclusions in Articles 19 to 26 or pursuant to Article 30, concerning the pursuit of the activity in question, this Directive shall apply to contracts which have a value excluding value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be no less than the following thresholds:

(a) EUR 400 000 in the case of supply and service contracts;

...'

6 Article 20 of that directive, under the heading 'Contracts awarded for purposes other than the pursuit of an activity covered or for the pursuit of such an activity in a third country', provides in paragraph 1 thereof:

'This Directive shall not apply to contracts which the contracting entities award for purposes other than the pursuit of their activities as described in Articles 3 to 7 …'

7 Article 55 of Directive 2004/17, entitled 'Contract award criteria', provides in paragraph 1 thereof as follows:

'Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions on the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting entities shall base the award of contracts shall:

(a) where the contract is awarded on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting entity, be various criteria linked to the subject matter of the contract in question, such as delivery or completion date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance, commitments with regard to parts, security of supply, and price or otherwise

(b) the lowest price only.'

8 According to Article 94 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice:

'In addition to the text of the questions referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling, the request for a preliminary ruling shall contain:

(a) a summary of the subject matter of the dispute and the relevant findings of fact as determined by the referring court or tribunal, or, at least, an account of the facts on which the questions are based;

...

(c) a statement of the reasons which prompted the referring court or tribunal to inquire about the interpretation or validity of certain provisions of EU law, and the relationship between those provisions and the national legislation applicable to the main proceedings.'

Italian law

9 Article 2(4) of decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 establishing the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006) ('Legislative Decree No 163/2006') provides:

'In the absence of any express provisions in this Code, the contractual arrangements of the persons referred to in the first article shall also be regulated according to the provisions laid down in the Civil Code.'

10 Under Article 115 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, entitled 'Price adjustment':

'1. All contracts for the supply of goods or services on an ongoing basis must include a clause providing for periodic review of the price. The revision shall be carried out on the basis of an investigation by the managers responsible for the acquisition of goods and services on the basis of the data referred to in Article 7(4)(c) and (5).'

11 Article 115 of that Legislative Decree was one of the provisions which, under Article 206 thereof, were applicable to public contracts in the special sectors corresponding to those referred to in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17.

12 Article 1664 of the Codice Civile (Civil Code), entitled 'Onerous financial burdens or difficulties in performance', provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

'When, as a result of unforeseeable circumstances, there are increases or decreases in the cost of labour or materials which give rise to an increase or decrease of more than one-tenth of the overall price agreed, the contractor or developer may seek review of that price. The review may be granted only in respect of the difference which exceeds one-tenth.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

13 RFI awarded the applicants in the main proceedings a contract for the provision of services relating to the cleaning and maintenance of the decoration of the premises and other areas which are open to the public, as well as ancillary services at stations, installations, offices and workshops at various sites throughout the territory covered by the Direzione Compartimentale Movimento de Cagliari (Cagliari Regional Operations Division, Italy). The contract contained a specific clause laying down the procedures for review of the agreed price, which derogated from Article 1664 of the Civil Code.

14 During the performance of that contract, the applicants in the main proceedings submitted a request to RFI for a review of the previously agreed contract price in order to take account of higher contract costs resulting from an increase in staff costs. By decision of 22 February 2012, RFI refused that request.

15 Following that decision, the applicants in the main proceedings brought proceedings before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sardegna (Regional Administrative Court, Sardinia, Italy) seeking annulment of that decision.

16 By judgment of 11 June 2014, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sardegna (Regional Administrative Court, Sardinia) dismissed the action. That court held that Article 115 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 was not applicable to contracts relating to special sectors, such as the contract at issue in the main proceedings. That court took the view that the supply of cleaning services at stations, installations, offices and workshops was ancillary to the performance of activities covered by special sectors, in that those services related to elements forming an essential part of the rail transport network. The court added that price review was not mandatory under Article 1664 of the Civil Code, as the parties to a contract may derogate from that provision by inserting in the contract a contract term limiting price review, which was the case in the main proceedings.

17 The applicants in the main proceedings appealed against that judgment before the referring court, claiming, in their first and second pleas, that Article 115 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 or, in the alternative, Article 1664 of the Civil Code is, contrary to the finding of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sardegna (Regional Administrative Court, Sardinia), applicable to the contract at issue in the main proceedings. In addition, the applicants in the main proceedings have claimed that Articles 115 and 206 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, in particular, do not comply with EU law, arguing that those provisions, in so far as they seek to exclude price review in the transport sector, particularly in linked contracts for cleaning, are contrary to Article 3(3) TEU, Articles 26 and 101 TFEU et seq. and Directive 2004/17. They contend that the national legislation is excessive and unjustified compared to EU legislation. That legislation is also unjustly disproportionate and likely to place an undertaking that has been awarded a contract for the provision of cleaning services in a position of subordination and weakness, as compared to a public undertaking, which results in a disproportionate and unfair contractual imbalance and ultimately alters the rules governing the functioning of the market. Finally, they submit that if price review may be excluded in all contracts concluded and implemented in the special sectors as a direct result of Directive 2004/17, then that directive is invalid.

18 As regards the first plea in law raised by the applicants in the main proceedings, the referring court has indicated that it intends to reject it, confirming the view taken by the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sardegna (Regional Administrative Court, Sardinia) that, since it is functionally linked to special sectors, the contract at issue in the main proceedings is covered by the provisions of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 applicable to those sectors. The referring court states that it also intends to reject the second plea raised by the applicants in the main proceedings, on the grounds that those provisions, which are mandatory in nature, take precedence over Article 1664 of the Civil Code, that the parties in the main proceedings provided a special rule derogating from that article and that the condition relating to ‘unforeseeable circumstances’ referred to in that article was not satisfied in the present case. The referring court nonetheless considers, since it is a court of last instance and the applicants in the main proceedings have made a submission to that effect, that it is its duty to verify the compliance with EU law of, in particular, Article 206 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, in so far as it precludes the application of Article 115 of that decree not only to contracts in the special sectors but also, as a result of judicial interpretation, service contracts which, even if they are not covered by special sectors, are functionally linked to these sectors. In addition, the referring court considers that it is required, according to the case-law of the Court, to refer the question of the validity of Directive 2004/17 raised by the applicants in the main proceedings.

19 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Is an interpretation of national law that excludes price review in contracts relating to 'special sectors', particularly as regards contracts with a different object from those to which the Directive 2004/17 refers, but which are functionally linked to those sectors, compatible with EU law, in particular, Article 3(3) TEU, Articles 26, 56 to 58 and 101 TFEU, and Article 16 of the Charter and Directive 2004/17?;

(2) Is Directive 2004/17 (if it should be considered that price review may be excluded, in all contracts concluded and implemented within 'special sectors' as a direct result of that directive compatible with the principles of the European Union, in particular Articles 3(1) TEU, Articles 26, 56 to 58 and 101 TFEU, and Article 16 of the Charter, 'in the light of the unfairness, disproportionality and distortion of contractual balance and, therefore, of the rules governing an efficient market'?'

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

20 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 3(3) TEU, Articles 26, 56 to 58 and 101 TFEU, Article 16 of the Charter and Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as precluding national rules, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which do not provide for periodic review of prices after a contract has been awarded in the sectors covered by that directive.

21 As a preliminary point, it should be recalled that, according to the Court's settled case-law, in the context of the cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts, the need to provide an interpretation of EU law which will be of use to the national court means that the national court is bound to observe scrupulously the requirements concerning the content of a request for a preliminary ruling, expressly set out in Article 94 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice of which the national court is presumed to be aware (judgment of 26 July 2017, Persidera, C-112/16, EU:C:2017:597, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited). Moreover, those requirements are set out in the Court's recommendations to national courts and tribunals in relation to the initiation of preliminary ruling proceedings (OJ 2012 C 338, p. 1).

22 Thus, it is essential, as is stated in Article 94(a) and (c) of the Rules of Procedure, that the reference for a preliminary ruling itself contain a summary of the relevant findings of fact, or at least, an account of the facts on which the questions are based, and a statement of the reasons which prompted the national court to inquire about the interpretation or validity of certain provisions of EU law, and the relationship between those provisions and the national legislation applicable to the main proceedings (see, to that effect, judgment of 26 July 2017, Persidera, C-112/16, EU:C:2017:597, paragraphs 28 and 29 and the case-law cited).

23 It should be noted, in that regard, that the order for reference gives no explanation of the relevance of the interpretation of Article 3(3) TEU or Articles 26, 57, 58 and 101 TFEU for the resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings. The same is true of Article 56 TFEU, in so far as it relates to aspects other than those which are examined by the Court in paragraph 32 above.

24 It follows that the first question is, to that extent, inadmissible.

25 First, as regards the interpretation of Directive 2004/17 and of the underlying general principles, the referring court considers that the contract at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of that directive, since it was awarded by a contracting authority within the meaning of that directive, namely RFI, and that it is functionally linked to rail transport operations falling within the scope of that directive.

26 In that regard, it follows from the Court's case-law that Directive 2004/17 in fact applies not only to contracts awarded in the sphere of one of the activities expressly listed in Articles 3 to 7 thereof, but also to contracts which, even though they are different in nature and could as such normally fall within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), are used in the exercise of activities defined in Directive 2004/17. Consequently, where a contract awarded by a contracting entity is connected with an activity which that entity carries out in the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of that directive, that contract is subject to the procedures laid down in that directive (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 April 2008, Ing Aigner, C-393/06, EU:C:2008:213, paragraphs 56 to 59).

27 Moreover, although the order for reference does not contain any evidence on the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, it is apparent from the documents in the file before the Court that that value exceeds the relevant threshold for the application of that directive, set at EUR 400 000 under Article 16 (a) thereof.

28 Directive 2004/17 is therefore relevant for the purposes of the answer to be given to the first question.

29 In this respect, it should be noted that it is not apparent from any provision of that directive that it must be interpreted as precluding rules of national law, such as Article 115, in conjunction with Article 206, of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, which do not provide for periodic review of prices after contracts are awarded in the sectors covered by the directive, since the latter does not impose any specific obligation on Member States to lay down provisions requiring the contracting entity to grant its contractual partner an upwards review of the price after the contract has been awarded.

30 Similarly, the general principles underlying Directive 2004/17, in particular the principle of equal treatment and the consequent obligation of transparency enshrined in Article 10 of that directive do not preclude such rules either. On the contrary, it cannot be ruled out that a price review after the contract has been awarded may run counter to that principle and that obligation (see, by analogy, judgment of 7 September 2016, Finn Frogne, C-549/14, EU:C:2016:634, paragraph 40). Indeed, as the Commission points out in its written observations, the contract price is an element of great importance in the assessment of tenders by a contracting entity, as well as in its decision to award the contract to an operator. This is also clear from the reference to the price in both of the criteria for the award of contracts mentioned in Article 55(1) of Directive 2004/17. In those circumstances, rules of national law which do not provide for periodic price review after the award of contracts in the sectors covered by that directive are, in fact, likely to encourage compliance with those principles.

31 It follows from those considerations that Directive 2004/17 and the general principles that underlie it are to be interpreted as not precluding national rules, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which do not provide for periodic price review after a contract has been awarded in the sectors covered by that directive.

32 Secondly, as regards the interpretation of Article 56 TFEU, it should be noted that that article enshrines, with regard to freedom to provide services, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency, with which the compatibility of national rules such as those at issue in the main proceedings has already been examined in paragraph 30 above. Therefore, there is no need to give an interpretation again, in that regard, of that article.

33 Thirdly, as regards the interpretation of Article 16 of the Charter, it must be recalled that, under Article 51(1) of the Charter, its provisions are addressed to the Member States only when they are implementing EU law. Under Article 51(2) of the Charter, the Charter does not establish any new power or task for the Union, or modify powers and tasks as defined in the Treaties. Accordingly, the Court is called upon to interpret EU law, in the light of the Charter, within the limits of the powers conferred on it (see judgment of 10 July 2014, Julián Hernández and Others, C-198/13, EU:C:2014:2055, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

34 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that the concept of ‘implementing Union law’ within the meaning of Article 51 of the Charter presupposes a degree of connection between the measure of EU law and the national measure at issue. In particular, the Court has ruled that fundamental European Union rights could not be applied in relation to national legislation because the provisions of EU law in the area concerned did not impose any specific obligation on Member States with regard to the situation at issue in the main proceedings (see judgment of 10 July 2014, Julián Hernández and Others, C-198/13, EU:C:2014:2055, paragraphs 34 and 35 and the case-law cited).

35 In the present case, since it is apparent from paragraphs 29 and 30 above that neither Directive 2004/17 nor its underlying general principles impose on Member States a specific obligation to lay down provisions requiring the contracting entity to grant its contractual partner an upwards price review after the award of a contract, the provisions of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 at issue in the main proceedings, in so far as they do not provide for periodic price review within the sectors covered by that directive, do not have any connection with that directive and cannot, therefore, be regarded as implementing EU law.

36 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Directive 2004/17 and the general principles underlying that directive are to be interpreted as not precluding national rules such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which do not provide for periodic price review after a contract has been awarded in the sectors covered by that directive.

The second question

37 It is apparent from the case-law of the Court that where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of a provision of EU law or the assessment of its validity, which is sought by the national court bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose or where the problem is hypothetical, the Court may reject as inadmissible a request made by that national court (see, to that effect, judgment of 28 March 2017, Rosneft, C-72/15, EU:C:2017:236, paragraph 50 and the case-law cited).

38 In this respect, it should be noted that the second question, by which the referring court questions the validity of Directive 2004/17, is based on the premiss that the provisions of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 at issue in the main proceedings, in so far as they do not provide for periodic price review within the sectors covered by that directive, constitute an implementation of the directive.

39 However, since it is clear from the examination of the first question that neither Directive 2004/17 nor the general principles underlying it preclude national rules, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which do not provide for periodic price review after a contract has been awarded in the sectors covered by this directive, that question is a hypothetical one.

40 In those circumstances, it must be held that the second question is inadmissible.

Costs

41 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011, and the general principles underlying that directive are to be interpreted as not precluding national rules, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which do not provide for periodic price review after a contract has been awarded in the sectors covered by that directive.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Italian.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Sixth Chamber)

8 February 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Articles 49 and 56 TFEU — Directive 2004/18/EC — Reasons for exclusion from a tendering procedure — Insurance services — Participation of several Lloyd's of London syndicates in the same tendering procedure — Signature of tenders by the Lloyd's of London General Representative for the country concerned — Principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination — Proportionality)

In Case C-144/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Calabria (Regional Administrative Court, Calabria, Italy), made by decision of 22 February 2017, received at the Court on 22 March 2017, in the proceedings

Lloyd's of London

v

Agenzia Regionale per la Protezione dell'Ambiente della Calabria,

THE COURT (Sixth Chamber), composed of C.G. Fernlund, President of the Chamber, J.-C. Bonichot and E. Regan (Rapporteur), Judges, Advocate General: E. Tanchev,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Lloyd's of London, by R. Villata, A. Degli Esposti and P. Biavati, avvocati, – Agenzia Regionale per la Protezione dell'Ambiente della Calabria, by V. Zicaro, avvocato, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by E. De Bonis, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by N. Khan, G. Gattinara and P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination which derive from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU and are referred to in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Lloyd's of London ('Lloyd's') and the Agenzia Regionale per la Protezione dell'Ambiente della Calabria (Calabria Regional Environmental Protection Agency, Italy) ('Arpacal'), concerning the decision of the latter to exclude two syndicates of Lloyd's from the procedure for the award of a public service contract for insurance.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 2004/18

3 As stated in recital 46 of Directive 2004/18:

'Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in conditions of effective competition. …'

4 Article 2 of that directive provided:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

5 Article 45 of the directive specified the reasons for excluding an economic operator from participation in a tendering procedure.

6 Directive 2004/18 was repealed by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65). Under Article 90(1) of Directive 2014/24, the Member States were to bring into force the measures necessary to comply with that directive by 18 April 2016 at the latest. Pursuant to Article 91 of that directive, the repeal of Directive 2004/18 took effect on the same date.

Directive 2009/138/EC

7 Directive 2009/138/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 25 November 2009 on the taking-up and pursuit of the business of Insurance and Reinsurance (Solvency II) (OJ 2009 L 335, p. 1), provides, in Article 145(2), entitled 'Conditions for branch establishment', as follows:

'Member States shall require every insurance undertaking that proposes to establish a branch within the territory of another Member State to provide the following information when effecting the notification provided for in paragraph 1:

…

(c) the name of a person who possesses sufficient powers to bind, in relation to third parties, the insurance undertaking or, in the case of Lloyd's, the underwriters concerned and to represent it or them in relations with the authorities and courts of the host Member State (the authorised agent);

…

With regard to Lloyd's, in the event of any litigation in the host Member State arising out of underwritten commitments, the insured persons shall not be treated less favourably than if the litigation had been brought against businesses of a conventional type.'

8 Annex III to Directive 2009/138, entitled 'Legal Forms of Undertakings', contains, in each of its parts A to C on the forms of life insurance, non-life insurance and reinsurance undertakings, a point 27 which mentions, with regard to the United Kingdom, the association of underwriters known as Lloyd's.

Italian law

9 The Decreto Legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 — Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts implementing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), as amended by Decree-Law No 135 of 25 September 2009 (GURI No 223 of 25 September 2009), converted into law by Law No 166 of 20 November 2009 (GURI No 274 of 24 November 2009) ('Legislative Decree No 163/2006'), governed, in their entirety, the procedures in Italy for the award of public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts.

10 Article 38(1)(m), quater, of that legislative decree provided that tenderers which '… are, in relation to another participant in the same tendering procedure, in a situation of control for the purposes of Article 2359 of the Codice civile (Civil Code), or in any relationship, including a de facto relationship, where the situation of control or relationship means that the tenders are attributable to a single decision-making centre' would be excluded from participation in a procedure for the award of concessions and of public works, supply and service contracts, and could not conclude contracts pertaining thereto or sub-contracts.

11 As regards, in particular, the declarations that candidates or tenderers must submit, Article 38(2) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 provided:

'For the purposes of paragraph (1)(m), quater, the tenderer shall attach one of the following declarations:

(a) a declaration that it is not in a situation of control for the purposes of Article 2359 of the Civil Code in relation to any person, and that it is submitting the tender independently;

(b) a declaration that it is not aware of the participation in the procedure of persons that are, in relation to the tenderer, in any of the situations of control referred to in Article 2359 of the Civil Code, and that it is submitting the tender independently; or

(c) a declaration that it is not aware of the participation in the procedure of persons that are, in relation to the tenderer, in any of the situations of control referred to in Article 2359 of the Civil Code, and that it is submitting the tender independently.

In the situations described in points (a), (b) and (c), the contracting authority shall exclude those tenderers in respect of which it establishes that the tenders are attributable to a single decision-making centre, on the basis of unambiguous evidence. Verification shall take place and any tenders be excluded after the opening of the envelopes containing the financial bid.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

12 On 13 August 2015, Arpacal launched an open tendering procedure for the award of a contract for insurance cover services, with a view to covering risk linked to the agency's civil liability towards third parties and workers for the period covering the years 2016 to 2018. The contract was to be awarded on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender (MEAT) criterion.

13 Amongst others, two Lloyd's syndicates, Arch and Tokio Marine Kiln, participated in the call for tenders. The tenders were both signed by the Special Agent of Lloyd's General Representative for Italy.

14 By decisions of 29 September 2015 and 1 October 2016, Arpacal excluded those two syndicates from the procedure, on the ground of infringement of Article 38(1)(m), quater, of Legislative Decree No 163/2006.

15 Seised by Lloyd's through its General Representative for Italy, the referring court, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Calabria (Regional Administrative Court, Calabria, Italy), censured each of those two decisions by judgments, respectively, of 19 January and 21 November 2016 and ordered, at the end of each judgment, that the two syndicates be readmitted to the tendering procedure.

16 By two decisions adopted on 14 December 2016, Arpacal again excluded the two syndicates from the procedure for infringement of Article 38(1)(m), quater, of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 on the ground that the tenders were objectively attributable to a single decision-making centre, since the technical and economic tenders had been submitted, drafted and signed by one and the same person, namely the Special Agent of Lloyd's General Representative for Italy (hereinafter 'the decisions at issue').

17 Still through its General Representative for Italy, Lloyd's brought fresh proceedings against the decisions at issue before the referring court. In support of those proceedings, Lloyd's submitted that it is a 'collective legal person with multiple structures', forming a recognised grouping of natural and legal persons (the members) who act independently within individual groups, called syndicates, which operate independently from one another and in competition with one another whilst belonging to the same organisation. It argued that none of the internal structures has autonomous legal personality but acts through the General Representative who, for each country, is the sole representative for all syndicates operating in that territory.

18 Arpacal argued, for its part, that several factors suggest that both tenders are attributable to a single decision-making centre, namely the use of identical forms, the single signature of the same person as the Special Agent of the General Representative for Italy, the fact that the official stamps on both financial tenders bear consecutive numbers and the fact that the statements and declarations are identical. This, it was claimed, resulted in infringement of the principles of the confidentiality of tenders, fair and free competition, and equal treatment of tenderers.

19 The referring court observes that, according to national case-law, where several syndicates of Lloyd's participate in the same call for tenders, the fact that the applications to participate in the tender and the financial tenders of those syndicates are signed by Lloyd's General Representative for Italy entails no infringement either of Article 38(1)(m), quater, and (2) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, or of the principles of competition, independence and the confidentiality of tenders. That case-law has, in this regard, highlighted the particular structure of Lloyd's which, in accordance with United Kingdom rules and regulations, operates in different countries through a single General Representative. Likewise, in its Opinion No 110 of 9 April 2008, the Autorità di Vigilanza sui Contratti Pubblici (Supervisory Authority for Public Contracts, Italy), which has since become the Autorità Nazionale Anticorruzione (National Anti-Corruption Agency, Italy), stated that the independence of syndicates and competition between them serve to ensure free competition and the equal treatment of candidates.

20 The referring court is uncertain, however, as to whether the Italian legislation at issue, as interpreted by national case-law, complies with EU law. Admittedly, Directive 2009/138 recognises Lloyd's as a particular form of insurance undertaking, the members of which are authorised to operate within the European Union through the intermediary of a single General Representative for the Member State concerned. However, even if the syndicates of Lloyd's operate independently of one another and in competition with one another, the fact remains that tendering procedures are governed by mandatory rules intended to ensure observance of equal treatment. It is certain that, when Lloyd's General Representative signs tenders submitted by syndicates, he is aware of their content. Consequently, the fact that the same person signs several tenders submitted by different tenderers may undermine the independence and confidentiality of those tenders and, as a result, infringe the principle of competition laid down, in particular, in Articles 101 and 102 TFEU.

21 In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Calabria (Regional Administrative Court, Calabria) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Do the principles laid down by EU competition rules, as set out in the FEU Treaty, and the principles deriving therefrom, such as the independence and confidentiality of tenders, preclude national legislation, as interpreted by case-law, which allows the simultaneous participation, in the same tendering procedure launched by a contracting authority, of several syndicates of Lloyd's of London, whose tenders are signed by a single person, namely the General Representative for the Member State concerned?'

Consideration of the question referred

22 It should be noted that, in the procedure established by Article 267 TFEU providing for cooperation between national courts and the Court of Justice, it is for the latter to provide the national court with an answer which will be of use to it and enable it to determine the case before it. To that end, the Court may have to reformulate the questions referred to it (see, in particular, judgment of 11 March 2008, Jager, C-420/06, EU:C:2008:152, paragraph 46).

23 In this case, the main proceedings concern a public service contract for insurance, in respect of which it is not specified whether the value reaches the threshold set by Directive 2004/18. It should be noted, however, that the award of contracts which, in view of their value, do not fall within the scope of that directive is nonetheless subject to the fundamental rules and the general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and the consequent obligation of transparency, provided that those contracts have certain cross-border interest in the light of certain objective criteria (judgment of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions, C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228, paragraph 16).

24 Consequently, it must be considered that, by its question, the referring court is asking, in essence, whether the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination, which derive from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU and are referred to in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which does not allow two syndicates of Lloyd's to be excluded from participation in the same procedure for the award of a public service contract for insurance merely because their tenders were each signed by Lloyd's General Representative for that Member State.

25 In this regard, it should be stated at the outset that, while Directive 2004/18 was repealed by Directive 2014/24 with effect from 18 April 2016, it is apparent from settled case-law of the Court that the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract. Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time (see, inter alia, judgment of 14 September 2017, Casertana Costruzioni, C-223/16, EU:C:2017:685, paragraph 21).

26 The tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings was launched on 13 August 2015, whereas Directive 2014/24 was adopted on 26 February 2014 and, in any event, the time period for its transposition expired on 18 April 2016. Consequently, Directive 2004/18 is applicable ratione temporis to the main proceedings.

27 It is common ground between all interested persons having submitted written observations that Lloyd's is a recognised grouping of members that are natural and legal persons, which members, whilst acting through individual groups — the syndicates — operate independently from one another and in competition with one another. However, given that none of the internal structures has autonomous legal personality, syndicates may only act through the General Representative, who is the sole representative for each country. Lloyd's also stated that these syndicates constitute neither a fixed structure nor a stable association of members but rather a grouping of members, the composition of which may vary, and that they each operate through a specific management body which issues decisions that are binding on them, although they do not have their own legal personality.

28 It is apparent from the order for reference that although, according to the actual wording of the question referred for a preliminary ruling, the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings allows two syndicates of Lloyd's to participate in the same tendering procedure relating to insurance, even when their tenders have each been signed by Lloyd's General Representative for Italy, the main proceedings follow the adoption of several decisions, including the decisions at issue, whereby Arpacal excluded those two syndicates from the procedure on the ground, specifically, that as their tenders had each been signed by the Special Agent of that Representative, the latter must have been aware of the content of those tenders.

29 In this regard, it must be noted that Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, which specifies the grounds for the exclusion of an economic operator from participation in a tendering procedure, does not provide for a ground for exclusion such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which is intended to prevent any risk of collusion between entities that are members of the same organisation. The grounds for exclusion provided for in that provision relate only to the professional qualities of the persons concerned (see, to that effect, judgment of 16 December 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraphs 42 and 43).

30 However, it is clear from the case-law of the Court that Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the option for Member States to maintain or establish, in addition to those grounds for exclusion, substantive rules intended, in particular, to ensure, with regard to public procurement, observance of the principles of equal treatment of all tenderers and of transparency, which constitute the basis of the EU directives on public procurement procedures, provided that the principle of proportionality is observed (judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 21).

31 It is clear that national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which is intended to prevent any potential collusion between participants in the same procedure for the award of a public contract, seeks to safeguard the equal treatment of candidates and the transparency of the procedure (see, by analogy, judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 22).

32 In accordance with the principle of proportionality, which constitutes a general principle of EU law, such legislation must not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the intended objective (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraphs 23 and 24; of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraph 33; and of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraph 29).

33 It should be recalled, in this connection, that the EU rules on public procurement were adopted in pursuance of the establishment of a single market, the purpose of which is to ensure freedom of movement and eliminate restrictions on competition (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 25).

34 In that context, it is the concern of EU law to ensure the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 26; of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraph 40; and of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraph 36).

35 It thus follows, according to settled case-law of the Court, that the automatic exclusion of candidates or tenderers that are in a relationship of control or of association with other competitors goes beyond that which is necessary to prevent collusive behaviour and, as a result, to ensure the application of the principle of equal treatment and compliance with the obligation of transparency (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 28; of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraphs 38 and 40; and of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraphs 36 and 38).

36 Such an automatic exclusion constitutes an irrebuttable presumption of mutual interference in the respective tenders, for the same contract, of undertakings linked by a relationship of control or of association. Accordingly, it precludes the possibility for those candidates or tenderers of showing that their tenders are independent and is therefore contrary to the EU interest in ensuring the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders (see, to that effect, judgments of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraphs 29 and 30; of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraphs 39 and 40; and of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraph 36).

37 It should be pointed out in this regard that the Court has already held that groups of undertakings can have different forms and objectives, which do not necessarily preclude controlled undertakings from enjoying a certain autonomy in the conduct of their commercial policy and their economic activities, inter alia, in the area of their participation in the award of public contracts. Relationships between undertakings in the same group may in fact be governed by specific provisions such as to guarantee both independence and confidentiality in the drawing-up of tenders which may be submitted simultaneously by the undertakings in question in the same tendering procedure (judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 31).

38 Observance of the principle of proportionality therefore requires that the contracting authority be required to examine and assess the facts, in order to determine whether the relationship between two entities has actually influenced the respective content of the tenders submitted in the same tendering procedure, a finding of such influence, in any form, being sufficient for those undertakings to be excluded from the procedure (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 32).

39 As a result, in this case, the mere fact that tenders such as those in the main proceedings have been signed by the same person, namely the Special Agent of Lloyd's General Representative for Italy, cannot justify their automatic exclusion from the tendering procedure at issue.

40 The distinction made in that regard by Arpacal in its written observations, dependent on whether the signature relates to the candidates' applications to participate in the tender procedures or to the financial tenders themselves, is irrelevant. In any event, such a signature, even assuming that it involves the Special Agent and/or Lloyd's General Representative being aware of the content of the tenders, does not prove per se that the syndicates consulted one another as to the content of their respective tenders and that, as a result, the relationships between them, together with the involvement of the Special Agent for Lloyd's General Representative, actually influenced those tenders. The same applies to the other factors raised by Arpacal, at paragraph 18 of the present judgment.

41 In taking as their sole basis for excluding the syndicates the fact that the tenders were signed by the Special Agent of Lloyd's General Representative for Italy, the decisions at issue thus presumed there to be collusion, without the syndicates having the possibility of proving that their respective tenders had been drawn up wholly independently of one another.

42 In that regard, it is clear from Directive 2009/138, and in particular from Article 145(2)(c), that the EU law applicable to insurance activities expressly allows Lloyd's to be represented with regard to third parties by a single General Representative for each Member State, in such a way that Lloyd's may exercise its insurance activities in Member States only through the competent General Representative, including in the case of participation in calls for tenders concerning the award of public service contracts for insurance, in the context of which tenders submitted by syndicates must be signed and submitted by the General Representative.

43 In its written observations, Lloyd's stated in this regard, which is a matter to be determined by the referring court, that the General Representative for the Member State concerned confines himself, in accordance with Lloyd's internal procedures, to transmitting on headed paper, without participating in the decision-making process of each syndicate, the content of the model response to a call for tenders and standard forms completed and approved by each syndicate, which, it is argued, guarantees that each syndicate operates in complete autonomy in relation to other syndicates through its own management bodies.

44 In those circumstances, EU law precludes the automatic exclusion of the syndicates of Lloyd's from the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings merely because their respective tenders were signed by the Special Agent of Lloyd's General Representative for Italy. However, the referring court must be satisfied that the tenders in question were submitted independently by each syndicate.

45 Nevertheless, it must be noted, as the European Commission has submitted in its written observations, that the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings does not appear to allow such an automatic exclusion, but nonetheless allows the contracting authority to exclude tenderers where it finds, on the basis of unambiguous evidence, that their tenders were not drawn up independently, which is a matter that falls to be determined by the referring court.

46 Consequently, the answer to the question referred is that the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination which derive from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU and are referred to in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude legislation of a Member State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which does not allow two syndicates of Lloyd's of London to be excluded from participation in the same procedure for the award of a public service contract for insurance merely because their respective tenders were each signed by the General Representative of Lloyd's of London for that Member State but instead allows their exclusion if it appears, on the basis of unambiguous evidence, that their tenders were not drawn up independently.

Costs

47 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Sixth Chamber) hereby rules:

The principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination which derive from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU and are referred to in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude legislation of a Member State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which does not allow two syndicates of Lloyd's of London to be excluded from participation in the same procedure for the award of a public service contract for insurance merely because their respective tenders were each signed by the General Representative of Lloyd's of London for that Member State, but instead allows their exclusion if it appears, on the basis of unambiguous evidence, that their tenders were not drawn up independently.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Italian.

EU:C:2018:855

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

24 October 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Directive 2014/24/EU — Article 57 — Directive 2014/25/EU — Article 80 — Public procurement — Procedure — Exclusion grounds — Maximum duration of the exclusion period — Obligation for the economic operator to collaborate with the contracting authority in order to demonstrate its reliability)

In Case C-124/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Vergabekammer Südbayern (Public Procurement Board for Southern Bavaria, Germany), made by decision of 7 March 2017, received at the Court on 10 March 2017, in the proceedings

Vossloh Laeis GmbH

v

Stadtwerke München GmbH,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Seventh Chamber, acting as President of the Fourth Chamber, K. Jürimäe, C. Lycourgos, E. Juhász (Rapporteur) and C. Vajda, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: K. Malacek, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 21 February 2018,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Vossloh Laeis GmbH, by K. Fischer and H.-J. Hellmann, Rechtsanwälte, – Stadtwerke München GmbH, by H. Kern and M. Winstel, Rechtsanwälte,

– the German Government, by T. Henze and D. Klebs, acting as Agents,

– the Greek Government, by M. Tassopoulou, A. Magrippi, D. Tsagaraki and K. Georgiadis, acting as Agents,

– the Hungarian Government, by M.Z. Fehér, G. Koós and E. Sebestyén, acting as Agents,

– the Polish Government, by B. Majczyna, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by A.C. Becker and P. Ondrůšek, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 16 May 2018,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 80 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243), read in conjunction with Article 57(4), (6) and (7) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Vossloh Laeis GmbH and Stadtwerke München GmbH concerning the former's exclusion from the qualification system put in place by the latter company, in connection with the award of public procurement contracts in the field of the provision of railway material.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 2014/24

3 Recital 102 of Directive 2014/24 states:

'(102) Allowance should, however, be made for the possibility that economic operators can adopt compliance measures aimed at remedying the consequences of any criminal offences or misconduct and at effectively preventing further occurrences of the misbehaviour. Those measures might consist in particular of personnel and organisational measures such as the severance of all links with persons or organisations involved in the misbehaviour, appropriate staff reorganisation measures, the implementation of reporting and control systems, the creation of an internal audit structure to monitor compliance and the adoption of internal liability and compensation rules. Where such measures offer sufficient guarantees, the economic operator in question should no longer be excluded on those grounds alone. Economic operators should have the possibility to request that compliance measures taken with a view to possible admission to the procurement procedure be examined. However, it should be left to Member States to determine the exact procedural and substantive conditions applicable in such cases. They should, in particular, be free to decide whether to allow the individual contracting authorities to carry out the relevant assessments or to entrust other authorities on a central or decentralised level with that task.'

4 Article 57 of Directive 2014/24, headed 'Exclusion grounds', provides:

'1. Contracting authorities shall exclude an economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure where they have established, by verifying in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, or are otherwise aware that that economic operator has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment for one of the following reasons:

…

2. An economic operator shall be excluded from participation in a procurement procedure where the contracting authority is aware that the economic operator is in breach of its obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions and where this has been established by a judicial or administrative decision having final and binding effect in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which it is established or with those of the Member State of the contracting authority.

Furthermore, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure an economic operator where the contracting authority can demonstrate by any appropriate means that the economic operator is in breach of its obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions.

This paragraph shall no longer apply when the economic operator has fulfilled its obligations by paying or entering into a binding arrangement with a view to paying the taxes or social security contributions due, including, where applicable, any interest accrued or fines.

…

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(a) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by any appropriate means a violation of applicable obligations referred to in Article 18(2);

(b) where the economic operator is bankrupt or is the subject of insolvency or winding-up proceedings, where its assets are being administered by a liquidator or by the court, where it is in an arrangement with creditors, where its business activities are suspended or it is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(d) where the contracting authority has sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has entered into agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition;

(e) where a conflict of interest within the meaning of Article 24 cannot be effectively remedied by other less intrusive measures;

(f) where a distortion of competition from the prior involvement of the economic operators in the preparation of the procurement procedure, as referred to in Article 41, cannot be remedied by other, less intrusive measures;

(g) where the economic operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract which led to early termination of that prior contract, damages or other comparable sanctions;

(h) where the economic operator has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, has withheld such information or is not able to submit the supporting documents required pursuant to Article 59; or

(i) where the economic operator has undertaken to unduly influence the decision-making process of the contracting authority, to obtain confidential information that may confer upon it undue advantages in the procurement procedure or to negligently provide misleading information that may have a material influence on decisions concerning exclusion, selection or award.

Notwithstanding point (b) of the first subparagraph, Member States may require or may provide for the possibility that the contracting authority does not exclude an economic operator which is in one of the situations referred to in that point, where the contracting authority has established that the economic operator in question will be able to perform the contract, taking into account the applicable national rules and measures on the continuation of business in the case of the situations referred to in point (b).

…

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

An economic operator which has been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement or concession award procedures shall not be entitled to make use of the possibility provided for under this paragraph during the period of exclusion resulting from that judgment in the Member States where the judgment is effective.

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. They shall, in particular, determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 6 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability. Where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period shall not exceed five years from the date of the conviction by final judgment in the cases referred to in paragraph 1 and three years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4.’

Directive 2014/25

5 Article 77 of Directive 2014/25, which is headed ‘Qualification systems’, provides:

‘1. Contracting entities which so wish may establish and operate a system of qualification of economic operators.

Contracting entities which establish or operate a system of qualification shall ensure that economic operators are at all times able to request qualification.

2. The system under paragraph 1 may involve different qualification stages.

Contracting entities shall establish objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of economic operators requesting qualification and objective criteria and rules for the operation of the qualification system, covering matters such as inscription in the system, periodic updating of the qualifications, if any, and the duration of the system.

Where those criteria and rules include technical specifications, Articles 60 to 62 shall apply. The criteria and rules may be updated as required.

…’

6 Article 80 of Directive 2014/25, entitled ‘Use of exclusion grounds and selection criteria provided for under Directive 2014/24/EU’, provides:

‘1. The objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of economic operators requesting qualification in a qualification system and the objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of candidates and tenderers in open, restricted or negotiated procedures, in competitive dialogues or in innovation partnerships may include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57 of Directive 2014/24/EU on the terms and conditions set out therein.

Where the contracting entity is a contracting authority, those criteria and rules shall include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24/EU on the terms and conditions set out in that Article.

If so required by Member States, those criteria and rules shall, in addition, include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU on the terms and conditions set out in that Article.

…

3. For the purpose of applying paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article, Articles 59 to 61 of Directive 2014/24/EU shall apply.'

German law

7 Directive 2014/24 was transposed into German law by the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law against restrictions on competition, 'the GWB').

8 Paragraph 124 of the GWB provides:

'(1) Contracting authorities may, acting with due regard for the principle of proportionality, exclude an undertaking from participation in a public procurement procedure at any time during that procedure where:

…

3. the undertaking has, in the course of business, demonstrably engaged in serious misconduct calling into question the undertaking's integrity; Paragraph 123(3) shall apply by analogy,

4. the contracting authority has sufficient indications to support the conclusion that the undertaking has concluded with other undertakings agreements or arrangements having the object or effect of impeding, restricting or distorting competition.

…'

9 Paragraph 125 of the GWB states:

'(1) Contracting authorities shall not exclude from the procurement procedure an undertaking caught by a ground for exclusion provided for in Paragraph 123 or Paragraph 124 where that undertaking has proved that it:

1. has paid or undertaken to pay compensation for damage caused by an act constituting a criminal offence or misconduct;

2. has comprehensively clarified the facts and circumstances by actively cooperating with the investigating authorities and the contracting authority; and

3. has adopted specific technical, organisational and personnel measures to prevent further criminal offences or further misconduct.

…'

10 Paragraph 126 of the GWB is worded as follows:

'Where an undertaking caught by a ground for exclusion has adopted no or insufficient measures to reform itself in the manner laid down in Paragraph 125, it may:

1. if caught by a ground for exclusion provided for in Paragraph 123, be excluded from participation in procurement procedures for no more than five years from the date of the conviction by final judgment;

2. if caught by a ground for exclusion provided for in Paragraph 124, be excluded from participation in procurement procedures for no more than three years from the relevant event.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11 The dispute in the main proceedings is between Vossloh Laeis and Stadtwerke München, as the contracting authority, regarding the exclusion of that company from the qualification system, within the meaning of Article 77 of Directive 2014/25, put in place in the course of 2011 by that contracting authority in connection with the award of public procurement contracts in the field of the provision of railway material. Having been extended several times, the latest being on 22 December 2015, that qualification system expired at the end of 2016.

12 Vossloh Laeis manufactures railway material, particularly rails and other steel construction material, necessary for railway installations. In March 2016, the Bundeskartellamt (Federal Cartel Office, Germany) imposed on it a fine for having participated, until 2011, in agreements falling within the law on cartels, which concerned switches (‘the rail cartel’), while at the same time applying to it a leniency rule to take account of the cooperation which it had displayed in order to help that office to clarify its collusive conduct. Stadtwerke München, which is a body that is likely to have suffered harm because of the rail cartel, brought a civil action for damages against Vossloh Laeis.

13 Following the submission of a tender by Vossloh Laeis in connection with another tendering procedure, Stadtwerke München expressed, by letter of 15 June 2016, doubts about the reliability of that tendering undertaking, based on its participation in the rail cartel. In response to that letter, Vossloh Laeis set out, on 16 June 2016, the organisational and personnel ‘measures to reform itself’ which it had taken in order to prevent the repetition of unlawful cartels and unfair competitive conduct. Moreover, Vossloh Laeis expressed its willingness to make good the damage caused to Stadtwerke München owing to its unlawful conduct.

14 However, Vossloh Laeis refused to forward to Stadtwerke München the decision of the Federal Cartel Office imposing on it a fine, which it had been asked to disclose by that contracting authority, so that it could examine it and, by that collaboration, clarify the infringement of antitrust law by that company. In that regard, Vossloh Laeis asserted that, in its view, collaboration with the Federal Cartel Office was sufficient for the purposes of voluntary remediation.

15 Considering that the explanations provided by Vossloh Laeis did not establish that that undertaking had taken sufficient measures, for the purpose of Paragraph 125 of the GWB, Stadtwerke München informed Vossloh Laeis, on 4 November 2016, that it was permanently excluded with immediate effect from the qualification procedure concerned, pursuant to points 3 and 4 of Paragraph 124(1) of the GWB.

16 On 17 November 2016, Vossloh Laeis brought an action against the decision pronouncing that exclusion before the Vergabekammer Südbayern (Public Procurement Board for Southern Bavaria, Germany). It takes the view that the contracting authority erroneously interpreted points 1 and 2 of Paragraph 125(1) of the GWB and that it did not state sufficient reasons for that decision, based on the fact that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 requires only collaboration with the investigating authorities and not with the contracting authority. Moreover, according to point 2 of Paragraph 126 of the GWB, exclusion from the public procurement procedure is possible only in the three years following the facts which constitute a ground for exclusion. However, in this case, those facts occurred more than three years before that exclusion.

17 In those circumstances, the Vergabekammer Südbayern (Public Procurement Board for Southern Bavaria) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Is legislation of a Member State that makes successful voluntary remedial measures (Selbstreinigung) by an economic operator subject to the condition that it clarifies the facts and circumstances relating to the criminal offence or the misconduct and the damage caused by it in a comprehensive manner by actively cooperating not only with the investigating authorities, but also with the contracting authority, compatible with the provisions of Article 80 of Directive [2014/25] in conjunction with the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive [2014/24]?

(2) If Question (1) is answered in the negative: Must the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive [2014/24] be interpreted, in that context, as meaning that the relevant economic operator is, for there to be successful voluntary remedial measures, in any event required to clarify the facts for the contracting authority to such an extent that the latter may assess whether the measures taken (technical, organisational and personnel measures and compensation for damage) are appropriate and sufficient?

(3) For the optional grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4) of Directive [2014/24], the maximum period or time limit of exclusion is, pursuant to Article 57(7) of Directive [2014/24], three years from the date of the relevant event. Is the fulfilment of the optional grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4) of Directive [2014/24] to be understood as the relevant event or is the relevant date that on which the contracting entity has certain and reliable knowledge of the existence of the ground for exclusion?

(4) Accordingly, for the fulfilment of the conditions for exclusion under Article 57(4)(d) of Directive [2014/24] through participation of an economic operator in a cartel, is the relevant event within the meaning of Article 57(7) of Directive [2014/24] the termination of participation in the cartel or the contracting entity's acquisition of certain and reliable knowledge of the participation in the cartel?'

The first and second questions

18 By its first and second questions, which it is appropriate to consider together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 80 of Directive 2014/25, read in conjunction with Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, must be interpreted as precluding a provision of national law which requires an economic operator wishing to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion to clarify the facts and circumstances relating to the criminal offence or the misconduct in a comprehensive manner by actively cooperating not only with the investigating authority, but also with the contracting authority, in order to provide it with proof of the re-establishment of its reliability.

19 Article 57 of Directive 2014/24, to which Article 80 of Directive 2014/25 refers, imposes or gives the contracting authority the power to exclude an economic operator from participation in a public procurement procedure in the event that there is one of the exclusion grounds listed in paragraphs 1, 2 and 4 of that article.

20 According to the wording of the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, an economic operator wishing to establish its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 of that article is to prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

21 So far as concerns the context of that provision, it should, in the first place, be observed that, according to the first subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, if the evidence submitted by the economic operator is considered as sufficient in the light of the relevant rules of national law for that purpose, the economic operator is not to be excluded from the procurement procedure. By contrast, pursuant to the third subparagraph of Article 57(6) of that directive, where the measures taken are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator is to receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

22 In the second place, it is apparent from recital 102 of Directive 2014/24 that, where an economic operator has adopted compliance measures aimed at remedying the consequences of any criminal offences or misconduct and at effectively preventing further occurrences of the misbehaviour, offering sufficient guarantees, that operator should no longer be excluded on that ground alone. According to that recital, economic operators should have the possibility to request that compliance measures taken with a view to possible admission to the procurement procedure be examined. In addition, that recital states that it is for the Member States to determine the exact procedural and substantive conditions applicable in such cases and that they should, in particular, be free to decide whether to allow the individual contracting authorities to carry out the relevant assessments or to entrust other authorities on a central or decentralised level with that task.

23 Evidence that measures referred to in the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 have been adopted, including, in particular, collaboration with the investigating authorities, must therefore be adduced, on the basis of the national regulations, in the context of the relationship with the same contracting authority which decides on the exclusion under Article 57 of that directive. Thus, where the Member States authorise the contracting authority to carry out the relevant evaluations, it is for the contracting authority to assess not only whether there exists a ground for exclusion of an economic operator, but also whether, as the case may be, that economic operator has actually re-established its reliability.

24 In order to verify the existence of certain grounds for exclusion, the contracting authorities may, in given circumstances, be led to carrying out searches and verifications. Thus, pursuant to Article 57(4)(a) of Directive 2014/24, a contracting authority can demonstrate ‘by any appropriate means’ that an economic operator has failed to fulfil its obligations applicable in the fields of environmental, social and labour law, established by Union law, national law, collective agreements or by the international environmental, social and labour law provisions. Likewise, according to Article 57(4)(c) of Directive 2014/24, the contracting authority can demonstrate ‘by appropriate means’ that an economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable. The carrying out of a verification by the contracting authority may also be necessary, for example, in order to establish the existence of one of the exclusion situations set out in Article 57(4)(g) and (i) of that directive.

25 Nonetheless, in situations such as that at issue in the main proceedings, in which there is a specific procedure regulated by Union law or by national law for pursuing certain offences and in which specific bodies are entrusted with carrying out investigations in this connection, the contracting authority must, within the context of the assessment of the evidence provided, rely in principle on the outcome of such a procedure.

26 In that context, it is important to take account of the respective duties of the contracting authorities and the investigating authorities. Whereas the latter have the task of determining the responsibility of certain actors in the commission of a breach of a rule of law, by establishing, with impartiality, the truth of facts capable of constituting such a breach, and of penalising the past wrongful conduct of those actors, the contracting authorities must assess the risks which they could face by awarding a contract to a tenderer the integrity or reliability of which is subject to doubt.

27 It follows, as the European Commission has observed, that the clarification of the facts and circumstances by the investigating authorities, as provided for in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, does not relate to the same objective as that pursued by the examination of the reliability of the economic operator which adopted measures provided for in that provision and which must provide the contracting authority with evidence demonstrating that they are sufficient for the purpose of its admission to the procurement procedure. Thus, in so far as the respective duties of the contracting authority and of the investigating authorities so require, and to that extent, the economic operator wishing to establish its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion must collaborate effectively with the authorities to which those respective duties have been entrusted, regardless of whether this is the contracting authority or the investigating authority.

28 However, that collaboration with the contracting authority must be limited to the measures which are strictly necessary for the effective pursuit of the objective of the examination of the reliability of the economic operator, mentioned in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24.

29 In particular, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, the tenderer is required, inter alia, to prove that it clarified, in a comprehensive manner, the facts and circumstances of the cartel in which it participated by actively collaborating with the competition authority entrusted with investigating such facts.

30 In that regard, it should be noted that the contracting authority must be able to ask an economic operator which has been held responsible for a breach of competition law to provide the decision of the competition authority concerning it. The fact that the transmission of such a document might facilitate the introduction of a civil liability action by the contracting authority against that economic operator is not such as to call that finding into question. It must be borne in mind that, among the measures which an economic operator must take in order to establish its reliability is the provision of evidence that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct which it committed.

31 In addition, it should be noted that, in principle, the transmission to the contracting authority of the decision establishing the infringement of the competition rules by the tenderer, but applying a leniency rule to the tenderer on the ground that it collaborated with the competition authority, should be sufficient to prove to the contracting authority that that economic operator clarified, in a comprehensive manner, the facts and circumstances by collaborating with that authority, this, however, being a matter for the referring court to ascertain.

32 Moreover, in so far as the contracting authority may also ask the economic operator to provide evidence of the measures which it adopted and which are such as to prevent the infringements found from being repeated, it should be observed that the contracting authority may require that economic operator to provide elements of a factual nature making it possible to show that the measures on which it relies are indeed appropriate to avoid a repetition of the conduct complained of, having regard to the specific circumstances in which those infringements were committed. The fact that the evidence to be provided, in that regard, by the economic operator has already been requested by the competition authority in the course of its investigation does not, by itself, justify that economic operator being exempted from providing that evidence to the contracting authority, unless the facts or circumstances in respect of which evidence is thereby requested follow sufficiently clearly from other documents provided by the economic operator, in particular from the decision establishing the infringement of the competition rules.

33 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first and second questions is that Article 80 of Directive 2014/25, read in conjunction with Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, must be interpreted as not precluding a provision of national law which requires an economic operator wishing to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion to clarify the facts and circumstances relating to the criminal offence or the misconduct committed in a comprehensive manner by actively cooperating not only with the investigating authority, but also with the contracting authority, in the context of the latter’s specific role, in order to provide it with proof of the re-establishment of its reliability, to the extent that that cooperation is limited to the measures strictly necessary for that examination.

The third and fourth questions

34 By its third and fourth questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court essentially asks whether Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that, where an economic operator has been engaged in conduct falling within the ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4)(d) of that directive, which has been penalised by a competent authority, the maximum period of exclusion must be calculated from the date of the decision of that authority.

35 According to the information set out in the request for a preliminary ruling, the Federal Cartel Office imposed on Vossloh Laeis a penalty for its participation, until 2011, in agreements with the aim of distorting competition, in connection with the rail cartel. That undertaking asserts that the ‘relevant event’ within the meaning of Article 57(7) of that directive, from which the maximum period of exclusion is calculated, is constituted by the end of participation in the cartel. The referring court observes that the considerations of the GWB in relation to Paragraph 126 of that law, which seeks to transpose Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24, could support the view that that event is constituted by the decision of the competent competition authority.

36 First of all, in the words of Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24, Member States are to determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in Article 57(6) of that directive have been taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability, and, where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period is not to exceed three years from the date of the relevant event in the exclusion situations referred to in Article 57(4) of that directive.

37 Although Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 does not specify the nature of the ‘relevant event’ or, in particular, the time at which it occurs, it should be observed that that provision provides, for the obligatory grounds for exclusion referred to in paragraph 1 of that article and where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that the duration of five years must be calculated from the date of the conviction by that final judgment, without taking into account the date on which the facts giving rise to that conviction occurred. Thus, for those grounds for exclusion, that duration is calculated from a date which, in certain cases, occurs well after the commission of the facts which constitute the infringement.

38 In the present case, the conduct falling within the relevant ground for exclusion was penalised by a decision of the competent authority, delivered within the context of a procedure regulated by Union law or by national law and resulting in the finding of conduct which infringes a rule of law. In that situation, for reasons of consistency with the detailed rules for calculating the time limit laid down for the obligatory grounds for exclusion, but also for reasons of foreseeability and legal certainty, it must be held that the duration of three years referred to in Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 is calculated from the date of that decision.

39 That solution appears to be all the more justified where, as observed by the Advocate General in points 83 to 85 of his Opinion, the existence of conduct restrictive of competition may be regarded as proved only after the adoption of such a decision, which legally classifies the facts to that effect.

40 Moreover, as noted by the Commission, the interested economic operator retains the power, during that period, to adopt measures referred to in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 with a view to demonstrating its reliability, if it nevertheless wishes to participate in a public procurement procedure.

41 As a consequence, the period of exclusion must be calculated not as from the participation in the cartel, but from the date on which the conduct was the subject of a finding of infringement by the competent authority.

42 It follows that the answer to the third and fourth questions is that Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that, where an economic operator has been engaged in conduct falling within the ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4)(d) of that directive, which has been penalised by a competent authority, the maximum period of exclusion is calculated from the date of the decision of that authority.

Costs

43 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 80 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC, read in conjunction with Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC, must be interpreted as not precluding a provision of national law which requires an economic operator wishing to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion to clarify the facts and circumstances relating to the criminal offence or the misconduct committed in a comprehensive manner by actively cooperating not only with the investigating authority, but also with the contracting authority, in the context of the latter’s specific role, in order to provide it with proof of the re-establishment of its reliability, to the extent that that cooperation is limited to the measures strictly necessary for that examination.

2. Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as meaning that, where an economic operator has been engaged in conduct falling within the ground for exclusion referred to in Article 57(4)(d) of that directive, which has been penalised by a competent authority, the maximum period of exclusion is calculated from the date of the decision of that authority.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: German.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 16 May 2018 (1)

Case C-124/17

Vossloh Laeis GmbH

v

Stadtwerke München GmbH

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Vergabekammer Südbayern (Public Procurement Board for Southern Bavaria, Germany))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Procedure — Directives 2014/24/EU and 2014/25/EU — Grounds for exclusion — Obligation of the economic operator to collaborate with the contracting authority in order to demonstrate its reliability before the end of the period of exclusion — Concept of 'investigating authorities'— Calculation of the maximum period of exclusion)

1. An economic operator may be temporarily excluded from public procurement procedures if it has engaged in any of the behaviours set out in Article 57 of Directive 2014/24/EU. (2) However, that period of exclusion may be reduced if the economic operator can demonstrate to the contracting authority that, notwithstanding its previous misconduct, it has successfully reformed itself.

2. In order to be able to prove that it is again reliable, paragraph 6 of that article establishes, among other conditions, that the economic operator must 'clarif[y] the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities'. (3) The interpretation of that phrase forms much of the subject matter of this dispute.

3. When incorporating Directive 2014/24 into national law, the German legislature provided that that collaboration must be afforded not only to the investigating authorities but also to the contracting authority.

4. In that context, the Vergabekammer Südbayern (Public Procurement Board for Southern Bavaria, Germany) has raised with the Court of Justice two issues which the Court has not previously addressed:

— First, it wishes to ascertain whether the additional requirement of collaboration (with the contracting authority) imposed by the domestic legislature is compatible with EU law;

— Secondly, it seeks to determine the start date of the maximum period of exclusion (three years) provided for in Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 in the event that that period has not been set by final judgment and must run from 'the date of the relevant event'.

I. Legislative framework

A. EU law

1. Directive 2014/24

5. Recital 102 states:

‘Allowance should, however, be made for the possibility that economic operators can adopt compliance measures aimed at remedying the consequences of any criminal offences or misconduct and at effectively preventing further occurrences of the misbehaviour. Those measures might consist in particular of personnel and organisational measures such as the severance of all links with persons or organisations involved in the misbehaviour, appropriate staff reorganisation measures, the implementation of reporting and control systems, the creation of an internal audit structure to monitor compliance and the adoption of internal liability and compensation rules. Where such measures offer sufficient guarantees, the economic operator in question should no longer be excluded on those grounds alone. Economic operators should have the possibility to request that compliance measures taken with a view to possible admission to the procurement procedure be examined. However, it should be left to Member States to determine the exact procedural and substantive conditions applicable in such cases. They should, in particular, be free to decide whether to allow the individual contracting authorities to carry out the relevant assessments or to entrust other authorities on a central or decentralised level with that task.’

6. Article 57 (‘Exclusion grounds’) provides:

‘1. Contracting authorities shall exclude an economic operator from participation in a procurement procedure where they have established, by verifying in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, or are otherwise aware that that economic operator has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment for one of the following reasons:

(a) participation in a criminal organisation …;

(b) corruption …;

(c) fraud …;

(d) terrorist offences or offences linked to terrorist activities, … or inciting or aiding or abetting or attempting to commit an offence …;

(e) money laundering or terrorist financing …;

(f) child labour and other forms of trafficking in human beings …;

…

2. An economic operator shall be excluded from participation in a procurement procedure where the contracting authority is aware that [it] is in breach of its obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions and where this has been established by a judicial or administrative decision having final and binding effect …

Furthermore, contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure an economic operator where the contracting authority can demonstrate by any appropriate means that [it] is in breach of its obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions.

This paragraph shall no longer apply when the economic operator has fulfilled its obligations by paying or entering into a binding arrangement with a view to paying the taxes or social security contributions due, including, where applicable, any interest accrued or fines.

…

4. Contracting authorities may exclude or may be required by Member States to exclude from participation in a procurement procedure any economic operator in any of the following situations:

(a) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by any appropriate means a violation of applicable obligations referred to in Article 18(2);

(b) where the economic operator is bankrupt or is the subject of insolvency or winding-up proceedings, where its assets are being administered by a liquidator or by the court, where it is in an arrangement with creditors, where its business activities are suspended or it is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(c) where the contracting authority can demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable;

(d) where the contracting authority has sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has entered into agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition;

(e) where a conflict of interest within the meaning of Article 24 cannot be effectively remedied by other less intrusive measures;

(f) where a distortion of competition from the prior involvement of the economic operators in the preparation of the procurement procedure, as referred to in Article 41, cannot be remedied by other, less intrusive measures;

(g) where the economic operator has shown significant or persistent deficiencies in the performance of a substantive requirement under a prior public contract, a prior contract with a contracting entity or a prior concession contract which led to early termination of that prior contract, damages or other comparable sanctions;

(h) where the economic operator has been guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required for the verification of the absence of grounds for exclusion or the fulfilment of the selection criteria, has withheld such information or is not able to submit the supporting documents required pursuant to Article 59; or

(i) where the economic operator has undertaken to unduly influence the decision-making process of the contracting authority, to obtain confidential information that may confer upon it undue advantages in the procurement procedure or to negligently provide misleading information that may have a material influence on decisions concerning exclusion, selection or award.

Notwithstanding point (b) of the first subparagraph, Member States may require or may provide for the possibility that the contracting authority does not exclude an economic operator which is in one of the situations referred to in that point, where the contracting authority has established that the economic operator in question will be able to perform the contract, taking into account the applicable national rules and measures on the continuation of business in the case of the situation referred to in point (b).

…

6. Any economic operator that is in one of the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by the economic operator are sufficient to demonstrate its reliability despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion. If such evidence is considered as sufficient, the economic operator concerned shall not be excluded from the procurement procedure.

For this purpose, the economic operator shall prove that it has paid or undertaken to pay compensation in respect of any damage caused by the criminal offence or misconduct, clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities and taken concrete technical, organisational and personnel measures that are appropriate to prevent further criminal offences or misconduct.

The measures taken by the economic operators shall be evaluated taking into account the gravity and particular circumstances of the criminal offence or misconduct. Where the measures are considered to be insufficient, the economic operator shall receive a statement of the reasons for that decision.

An economic operator which has been excluded by final judgment from participating in procurement or concession award procedures shall not be entitled to make use of the possibility provided for under this paragraph during the period of exclusion resulting from that judgment in the Member States where the judgment is effective.

7. By law, regulation or administrative provision and having regard to Union law, Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article. They shall, in particular, determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 6 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability. Where the period of exclusion has not been set by final judgment, that period shall not exceed five years from the date of the conviction by final judgment in the cases referred to in paragraph 1 and three years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4.'

2. Directive 2014/25/EU (4)

7. According to Article 77 ('Qualification systems'):

'1. Contracting entities which so wish may establish and operate a system of qualification of economic operators.

Contracting entities which establish or operate a system of qualification shall ensure that economic operators are at all times able to request qualification.

2. The system under paragraph 1 may involve different qualification stages.

Contracting entities shall establish objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of economic operators requesting qualification and objective criteria and rules for the operation of the qualification system, covering matters such as inscription in the system, periodic updating of the qualifications, if any, and the duration of the system.

Where those criteria and rules include technical specifications, Articles 60 to 62 shall apply. The criteria and rules may be updated as required.

…'

8. Article 80 ('Use of exclusion grounds and selection criteria provided for under Directive 2014/24/EU') provides:

'1. The objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of economic operators requesting qualification in a qualification system and the objective rules and criteria for the exclusion and selection of candidates and tenderers in open, restricted or negotiated procedures, in competitive dialogues or in innovation partnerships may include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57 of Directive 2014/24/EU on the terms and conditions set out therein.

Where the contracting entity is a contracting authority, those criteria and rules shall include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24/EU on the terms and conditions set out in that Article.

If so required by Member States, those criteria and rules shall, in addition, include the exclusion grounds listed in Article 57(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU on the terms and conditions set out in that Article.

…'

B. National law

9. Paragraph 124 of the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (5) (Law against restrictions on competition) provides:

‘(1) Contracting authorities may, acting with due regard for the principle of proportionality, exclude an undertaking from participation in a public procurement procedure at any time during that procedure where:

…

3. the undertaking has, in the course of business, demonstrably engaged in serious misconduct calling into question the undertaking’s integrity; …

4. the contracting authority has sufficient indications to support the conclusion that the undertaking has concluded with other undertakings agreements or arrangements having the object or effect of impeding, restricting or distorting competition,

…’

10. Paragraph 125 provides:

‘(1) Contracting authorities shall not exclude from the procurement procedure an undertaking caught by a ground for exclusion provided for in Paragraph 123 or Paragraph 124 where that undertaking has proved that it:

1. has paid or undertaken to pay compensation for damage caused by an act constituting a criminal offence or misconduct;

2. has comprehensively clarified the facts and circumstances by actively cooperating with the investigating authorities and the contracting authority; and

3. has adopted specific technical, organisational and personnel measures to prevent further criminal offences or further misconduct.

…’

11. In accordance with Paragraph 126:

‘Where an undertaking caught by a ground for exclusion has adopted no or insufficient measures to reform itself in the manner laid down in Paragraph 125, it may:

1. if caught by a ground for exclusion provided for in Paragraph 123, be excluded from participation in procurement procedures for no more than five years from the date of the conviction by final judgment;

2. if caught by a ground for exclusion provided for in Paragraph 124, be excluded from participation in procurement procedures for no more than three years from the relevant event.’

II. Facts

12. In 2011, Stadtwerke München GmbH (‘Stadwerke München’ or ‘the contracting authority’) established a ‘qualification system’, within the meaning of Article 77 of Directive 2014/25, the purpose of which was to select undertakings to supply it with railway lines. (6)

13. On 4 November 2016, the undertaking Vossloh Laeis GmbH was excluded from that system on the ground that, on 9 March 2016, it had been fined by the Bundeskartellamt (Federal Competition Authority, Germany) for having participated in an active cartel for a number of years up until spring 2011.

14. Those adversely affected by the collusive conduct of the members of the cartel included Stadtwerke München itself, which, for that reason, brought a civil action for damages against Vossloh Laeis.

15. According to the order for reference, Vossloh Laeis had not collaborated with the contracting authority in order to clarify the infringements of the rules on anticompetitive practices. In particular:

— Following the discovery of the cartel in 2011, Vossloh Laeis had not approached the contracting authority or taken the initiative to clarify the facts in full.

— Not until 2016 had it stopped denying to the contracting authority that it had participated in the relevant collusive practices, although it pointed out that it had challenged the decision imposing a fine and described the organisational and personnel measures it had taken in order to clarify the facts and ensure that there would be no repetition of these in the future. It added that it would pay compensation for the damage caused by its unlawful conduct.

16. Nonetheless, Vossloh Laeis would not agree to forward the decision imposing a fine to the contracting authority so that it could examine it. Neither would it agree to cooperate with the contracting authority in order to clarify the offence committed, having taken the view that its cooperation with the competition authority was sufficient.

17. The referring court does not dispute (because the decision imposing a fine itself stated as much) that Vossloh Laeis had afforded ongoing and unrestricted collaboration to the German competition authority during the proceedings before it.

18. The contracting authority took the view that the explanations provided by Vossloh Laeis did not demonstrate that it had taken sufficient steps to reform itself in the manner provided for in Paragraph 125 of the GWB. For that reason, it finally informed the undertaking on 4 November 2016 that it was excluded from the qualification system with immediate effect.

19. Vossloh Laeis challenged that decision before the Vergabekammer Südbayern (Public Procurement Board for Southern Bavaria), which made a reference for a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice.

III. Questions referred

20. The questions referred for a preliminary ruling are worded as follows:

‘(1) Is legislation of a Member State that makes successful voluntary remedial measures (Selbstreinigung) by an economic operator subject to the condition that it clarifies the facts and circumstances relating to the criminal offence or the misconduct and the damage caused by it in a comprehensive manner by actively cooperating not only with the investigating authorities, but also with the contracting authority, compatible with the provisions of Article 80 of Directive [2014/25] in conjunction with the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive [2014/24]?

(2) If [Question 1] is answered in the negative: Must the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive [2014/24] be interpreted, in that context, as meaning that the relevant economic operator is, for there to be successful voluntary remedial measures, in any event required to clarify the facts for the contracting authority to such an extent that the latter may assess whether the measures taken (technical, organisational and personnel measures and compensation for damage) are appropriate and sufficient?

(3) For the optional grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4) of Directive [2014/24], the maximum period or time limit of exclusion is, pursuant to Article 57(7) of Directive [2014/24], three years from the date of the relevant event. Is the fulfilment of the optional grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 57(4) of Directive [2014/24] to be understood as the relevant event or is the relevant date that on which the contracting entity has certain and reliable knowledge of the existence of the ground for exclusion?

(4) Accordingly, for the fulfilment of the conditions for exclusion under Article 57(4)(d) of Directive [2014/24] through participation of an economic operator in a cartel, is the relevant event within the meaning of Article 57(7) of Directive [2014/24] the termination of participation in the cartel or the contracting entity’s acquisition of certain and reliable knowledge of the participation in the cartel?’

IV. Procedure before the Court of Justice and the positions of the parties

21. The reference for a preliminary ruling was registered at the Court on 10 March 2017.

22. Written observations have been lodged by Vossloh Laeis, Stadtwerke München, the German, Greek, Hungarian and Polish Governments and the European Commission, all of which, with the exception of Stadtwerke München and the Polish Government, attended the public hearing held on 21 February 2018.

V. Analysis

23. As a preliminary point, it is appropriate to recall the fact, albeit not called into question by any of the parties, that the classification of the Vergabekammer Südbayern (Procurement Board for Southern Bavaria) as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU was recognised by the Court of Justice in the judgment of 27 October 2016, Hörmann Reisen. (7)

24. The four questions raised in these proceedings may be grouped into two. The first and second questions seek to determine whether the collaboration required by the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 (in order to demonstrate the renewed reliability of an economic operator caught by one of the grounds for exclusion laid down in paragraphs 1 and 4 of that provision) has to be afforded only to the 'investigating authorities' or also to the contracting authority if this is provided for in the domestic legislation of a Member State.

25. The remaining two questions have to do with the period of exclusion that may apply to an economic operator which has not adopted the voluntary remedial measures set out in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24. In particular, it falls to be clarified what the 'relevant event' is to which paragraph 7 of that provision refers as the starting point for that period.

A. The concept of 'investigating authorities' within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 (first and second questions)

1. Summary of the arguments of the parties

26. Vossloh Laeis maintains that, in requiring active collaboration with the contracting authority, the German legislation imposed a condition additional to voluntary remediation, given that the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 refers only to active collaboration with the investigating authorities.

27. In its view, the terms 'contracting authority' and 'investigating authority' refer in EU law to different actors performing different functions: while the former awards public contracts, the latter is tasked with investigating criminal offences or any misconduct generally.

28. Vossloh Laeis submits that Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 distinguishes between the remedial measures adopted by the economic operator, on the one hand, and evidence of their effectiveness, on the other. The rationale behind that provision is that the economic operator should adopt the voluntary remedial measures necessary and, then, in the event of participating in a public procurement procedure (be this at the award or pre-qualification stage), should prove to the contracting authority that those measures have been effective. The German legislature departed from that scheme by extending the collaboration requirement, contrary to Directive 2014/24.

29. The Greek Government's position is, in essence, the same as that adopted by Vossloh Laeis.

30. In the view of Stadtwerke München and the German and Hungarian Governments, on the other hand, the fact that the German legislation has not transposed verbatim the wording of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 is not in any way problematic. The addition of the reference to the contracting authority served to take into account the fact that, in German law, the expression 'investigating authorities' could be interpreted as relating only to those responsible for prosecuting criminal offences. In order to avert inadequate transposition, it was essential that that expression be used in its broadest sense, and it was for this reason that the national legislature made it clear that the economic operator has an obligation to collaborate simultaneously with the ‘investigating authorities’ in a strict sense and with the contracting authority as an ‘investigating authority’ in a loose sense. The latter also ‘investigates’ in cases where, in accordance with Article 57(5) and (6) of Directive 2014/24, it examines whether a tenderer is caught by an optional ground for exclusion or satisfies the remediation criteria.

31. At the hearing, the German Government’s representative nonetheless qualified its initial position by stating that the joint reference to the investigating authorities and the contracting authority in the national legislation is not intended to duplicate the same obligation.

32. Stadtwerke München submits that, even if the extension of the duty to collaborate is considered not to be covered by Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, EU law does not preclude Member States from adopting stricter measures in this regard. This follows from the spirit, purpose and function of the grounds for exclusion from public procurement.

33. In this connection, it contends that the approach taken by the national legislature is transparent and non-discriminatory. Moreover, the directive does not expressly prohibit the adoption of stricter measures. Finally, the involvement of the contracting authorities in the voluntary remediation process is also necessary, since it is up to them to verify whether economic operators must be excluded from the procedure and, if so, to verify also the voluntary remedial measures which they have put into effect.

34. The Commission maintains that, unlike the term ‘contracting authority’ used in Article 2(1) of Directive 2014/24, the concept of ‘investigating authority’ has not been defined either by that directive or by Directive 2014/25. In its opinion, although the same authority may intervene simultaneously as contracting authority and as investigating authority, the reference to the latter in Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 does not appear to be a reference to the contracting authority.

35. The Commission submits that it follows from a schematic interpretation of the provision at issue that, in addition to collaboration with the investigating authorities, there is also a duty to collaborate with the contracting authority, albeit that the latter is of a different nature. In any event, collaboration with the two authorities must not lead to a duplication or repetition of the same obligations.

36. The Commission also takes the view that the cooperation which economic operators may be called upon to afford to each of the two authorities has unique features, which is to say that it is not identical in both cases. The aim pursued by the investigating authorities in conducting their procedures (to detect offences) differs from that of the examination for which the contracting authorities are responsible (to ensure that an economic operator is reliable). The former seek to determine the culpability of the parties involved for past offences. The latter seek to analyse the risks potentially associated with awarding a public contract to a particular tenderer in the future.

2. Assessment

37. Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 contains a series of grounds for excluding economic operators from public procurement procedures. Paragraph 1 sets out the mandatory grounds (‘contracting authorities shall exclude’) and paragraph 4 the optional grounds (‘contracting authorities may exclude’).

38. The optional grounds include the collusive conduct referred to in subparagraph (d): ‘where the contracting authority has sufficiently plausible indications to conclude that the economic operator has entered into agreements with other economic operators aimed at distorting competition’, it may deny that economic operator the right to participate in one of those procedures.

39. Unless that disqualification has been ordered by final judgment — in which case it lasts for as long as the court order directs —, the economic operator may make use of the possibility afforded to it by Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, that is to say to terminate the normal period of exclusion (8) before it runs its full course.

40. In order to benefit from that possibility, the aforementioned economic operator must show that, ‘despite the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion’ (first subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24), its later conduct has made it ‘reliable’. In order to ‘demonstrate its reliability’ (ibid.), it ‘may provide evidence to the effect that measures taken by [the economic operator] are sufficient' (ibid.) for those purposes.

41. The reliability referred to in that provision is a quality which the contracting authority must necessarily assess in accordance with the guidelines contained in the second subparagraph of paragraph 6. It may consider such reliability to have been demonstrated only if the economic operator has: (a) paid — or undertaken to pay — compensation for the damage caused by the offence on account of which it was excluded; (b) clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner; and (c) adopted concrete (technical, organisational and personnel) measures that are appropriate to prevent further offences.

42. The referring court's doubts are concerned only with the second of those conditions and are based on the discrepancy between the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 (according to which the economic operator must demonstrate that it has 'clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities') and Paragraph 125(1), point 2, of the GWB (pursuant to which the active collaboration must be with 'the investigating authorities and [with] the contracting authority').

43. The reference to 'contracting authority' was added to the reference which the EU legislature made to 'investigating authorities' with a view, according to Stadtwerke München, to avoiding a restrictive interpretation of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 that would limit the duty incumbent upon the economic operator to collaborate exclusively with the 'investigating authorities' in a strict sense (that is to say, with the authorities that prosecute criminal offences or misconduct), thus leaving out of account the fact that, in a broad sense, the contracting authority also investigates in cases where it examines whether an economic operator is caught by a ground for exclusion or has successfully demonstrated, notwithstanding its exclusion, that it is reliable.

44. In my view, however, there is no risk of any misunderstanding due to the presumed imprecision of the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24, in the light of its various language versions.

45. The German version uses the term 'Ermittlungsbehörden', which corresponds exactly to that used in other language versions such as the Spanish ('autoridades investigadoras'), the English ('investigating authorities'), the French ('autorités chargées de l'enquête'), the Italian ('autorità investigative'), the Portuguese ('autoridades responsáveis pelo inquérito') or the Dutch ('onderzoekende autoriteiten'). In all the language versions, moreover, the authorities and bodies that award public contracts or organise procurement procedures are referred to by equally unequivocal terms: 'poder adjudicador' in Spanish and 'öffentliche Auftraggeber' in German.

46. The issue, then, does not lie in the imprecision of the terms used by Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 to describe bodies of a different nature. The fact is that that same provision confers on contracting authorities, too, certain functions having investigative connotations. Thus, for example:

— Pursuant to paragraph 1, contracting authorities must exclude an economic operator 'where they have established … or are aware … that that economic operator has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment for [certain] reasons'.

— By the same token, the second subparagraph of paragraph 2 refers to the situation where 'the contracting authority can demonstrate by any appropriate means that the economic operator is in breach of its obligations relating to the payment of taxes or social security contributions'.

— Finally, other situations listed in paragraph 4 require some investigation (9) by the contracting authorities. For example, pursuant to subparagraph (c), the latter may 'demonstrate by appropriate means that the economic operator is guilty of grave professional misconduct, which renders its integrity questionable'.

47. In my view, the performance of those functions does not convert the contracting authority into one of the 'investigating authorities' referred to in the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24.

48. It is true that the contracting authority must necessarily engage in some investigative activity (in the sense indicated above) in order to establish whether any of the grounds for exclusion referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 of Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 are applicable. However, the intention behind paragraph 6 of that provision is henceforth not that the contracting authority should determine by itself and in every case the facts capable of triggering exclusion, but that, once the economic operator has been excluded, it should evaluate the evidence presented bythe operator claiming to have reformed itself.

49. The task of the contracting authority in the evaluation of that evidence is therefore passive, while the task that falls to the economic operator is active. The latter must provide the evidential material on the basis of which the contracting authority will make an adjudication, without — I would reiterate — being compelled on every occasion to engage in investigative activity in order to be able to do so.

50. An economic operator which claims to have reformed itself must demonstrate, inter alia, that it has 'clarified the facts and circumstances in a comprehensive manner by actively collaborating with the investigating authorities'. Logically, it must demonstrate this to the contracting authority, that is to say to the body which, after weighing up the evidence, will decide whether the tenderer has adequately shown itself to be reliable and can therefore be readmitted to procurement procedures.

51. Generally speaking, therefore, the 'investigating authorities' to which the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 refers will not be the same as the contracting authorities. It is to the latter that the tenderer (or the undertaking wishing to join a qualification system, as in this case) has to demonstrate that it has collaborated actively and comprehensively with the investigating authorities in order to clarify the facts. It must, however, necessarily afford that collaboration to an institution other than the contracting authority itself, since its collaboration would otherwise, from the point of view of the latter authority, be a known fact requiring no evidence whatsoever.

52. That conclusion is borne out by the time sequence of the actions to which Article 57(6) refers. What the economic operator has to demonstrate to the contracting authority comprises facts that lie in the past, that is to say at a point in time prior to that when it asks the contracting authority to recognise its reformed status.

53. Thus, the economic operator must have paid or undertaken to pay compensation for the damage caused and must already have adopted appropriate measures to prevent new offences. For exactly the same reason, the clarifications (of the facts and circumstances of the conduct warranting exclusion) must at the time have been offered to an authority other than the contracting authority, to which it need only be demonstrated that those clarifications — as to the payment of compensation or the adoption of appropriate measures, for example — had already been provided.

54. This, in my opinion, is the most plausible interpretation of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24. And it is, more specifically, the interpretation best suited to a situation such as that at issue here, in which the conduct giving rise to exclusion (the undertaking's participation in a cartel) had been assessed and penalised by an 'investigating authority': the Federal Competition Authority.

55. In that situation, it does not make any sense to duplicate the obligation to collaborate by also imposing a duty to do so with the contracting authority, as would be the case if an economic operator seeking reformed status after having been excluded were compelled to clarify the same facts and the same circumstances before two different authorities.

56. However, it could be argued (as Stadtwerke München does) that EU law does not preclude Member States from introducing stricter criteria against which economic operators must demonstrate their renewed reliability during the exclusion period. It is therefore feasible to require them to collaborate not only with investigating authorities but also with the contracting authority.

57. That position is supported by not insignificant arguments. On the one hand, Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 provides that 'Member States shall specify the implementing conditions for this Article'. On the other hand, the Court has held, (10) with respect to the optional grounds for exclusion, (11) that the Public Procurement Directive 'does not provide for uniform application at EU level …, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds for exclusion, or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level'.

58. In my opinion, this would be possible only in the case of collaboration different from that, complained of, with the investigating authorities. Thus, the view might be taken that the collaboration with the contracting authority provided for in Paragraph 125(1), point 2, of the GWB does not have the same focus as that which an economic operator is required to afford to the investigating authorities, being concerned rather with conduct the examination and assessment of which as a ground for exclusion is a matter for the contracting authority itself.

59. From this point of view, the provision contained in Paragraph 124(4) of the GWB (12) would make sense: the economic operator must actively collaborate with the contracting authority in order: (i) to clarify the facts and circumstances which may have prompted that authority to form the view that the ground for exclusion which it is responsible for assessing is applicable; and (ii) to persuade the authority that, notwithstanding the foregoing, it is capable of reform.

60. Conversely, an interpretation of the national provision as meaning that the economic operator must cooperate on an equal (and twofold) basis with the contracting authority and the investigating authorities in order to clarify the same facts and circumstances in connection with the same ground for exclusion would give rise to a result not compatible in my opinion with Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24:

— on the one hand, it would lead to a duplication of obligations owed to institutions, such as the investigating authorities and the contracting authorities, which perform different functions;

— on the other hand, it could leave the economic operator all but defenceless in the case where, in circumstances such as those at issue here, the contracting authority claims to have suffered damage, as a result of the offending conduct on account of which the economic operator was excluded, for which it is seeking compensation. (13)

61. After all, such a duplication of obligations fails to take into account the differences between the antitrust functions of the investigating authorities and the functions performed by the contracting authorities. Moreover, if a contracting authority were put in the position of having to determine whether or not the facts on account of which it considers itself to have suffered damage have been duly clarified, and its role were not therefore confined to ascertaining whether the economic operator collaborated in a comprehensive manner with the investigating authorities in order to clarify those facts, it might not be best placed to adjudicate on the application for recognition of its reformed status with the neutrality and impartiality required.

B. The concept of 'relevant event' within the meaning of Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 (third and fourth questions)

62. Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 provides that Member States 'shall … determine the maximum period of exclusion if no measures as specified in paragraph 6 are taken by the economic operator to demonstrate its reliability'.

63. However, Member States do not have absolute freedom in this regard, since that provision attaches certain limits to the length of the maximum period. In particular:

— If the period of exclusion has been set by final judgment, that period must be observed in any event.

— If, notwithstanding the existence of a final judgment, that judgment has not specified the period of exclusion, the latter may not last longer than five years from the time of the conviction, in cases involving mandatory grounds for exclusion (provided for in paragraph 1 of that article).

— If there is no final judgment, or that delivered does not indicate the maximum period of exclusion, that period is confined to 'three years from the date of the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4' (optional grounds for exclusion).

64. The foregoing qualification forms the subject matter of the last two questions raised by the referring court, which seeks to dispel doubts about the notion of 'relevant'.

1. Summary of the observations of the parties

65. Vossloh Laeis submits that the expression at issue refers to the objective existence of the ground for exclusion. If the legislature had preferred that account be taken of the contracting authority's subjective knowledge, it would have used a form of words to that effect. That inference is supported by the schematic interpretation of that provision, as the date would otherwise fall to be determined by each contracting authority, which would be incompatible with legal certainty.

66. In the view of Stadtwerke München, the decisive point in time is not that at which the conduct giving rise to the optional exclusion takes place (or stops), but when the conditions of exclusion, which include the subjective component (knowledge of the ground for exclusion by the contracting authority) are fully met. On that premiss, the relevant event would normally be the date on which the contracting authority has reliable information on the presence of a ground for exclusion.

67. The position taken by the German and Hungarian Governments is essentially the same. The 'relevant event', they contend, is determined by the point at which the contracting authority has certain and reliable information on the existence of the ground for exclusion, that is to say, in the submission of the Hungarian Government, the point at which there is a final decision on the matter.

68. The Greek Government is in favour of applying to the scope of public procurement the provisions of Article 25(2) of Regulation (EC) No 1/2003, (14) so as to ensure that there are no differences with the corresponding administrative or criminal proceedings. It infers from this that what is 'relevant' is the point at which the event giving rise to exclusion occurred, rather than when that event came to the knowledge of the contracting authority.

69. In the view of the Polish Government, which has submitted observations in relation to this question alone, the 'relevant event' is the conclusion of the agreement which sought to distort competition. If the date of that agreement cannot be specified, regard must be had to the date of the event supporting the likelihood that such an agreement was concluded (this might be, for example, the end date of the procurement procedure during which it was established that the participating economic operators had attempted to distort competition).

70. The Commission considers that account might be taken of three different dates: (1) the date of the behaviour constituting a ground for exclusion; (2) the point at which the criteria governing the application of one of those grounds for exclusion are fulfilled, which, in the case of Article 57(4)(c) and (d) of Directive 2014/24, would be when the contracting authority is able to demonstrate, or has sufficiently plausible indications of, the economic operator's misconduct; and (3) the date on which the investigating authority established by final decision the existence of improper conduct.

71. For the Commission, legal certainty (the reason behind the time limits on the grounds for exclusion) militates in favour of the first of those three options. However, the risk that the public contract will be awarded to a person who has committed acts of professional misconduct (the very reason for the grounds for exclusion provided for in Directive 2014/24) argues in favour of the second.

72. At the hearing, the Commission invoked the provisions regulating public contracts concluded by the EU institutions, in particular Article 106(14) and (15) of Regulation (EU, Euratom) No 966/2012, (15) which it considered useful for the purposes of interpreting Article 57 of Directive 2014/24 given that there has to be a degree of harmony between the latter and the former provisions. It infers from this that, ultimately, the maximum period for which an economic operator may be excluded is three years from the final decision imposing a penalty adopted by an investigating authority.

2. Assessment

73. As I have already pointed out, Article 57(7) in fine of Directive 2014/24 takes into account, for the purposes of determining the start of the maximum period of exclusion in cases where the latter has not been specified by final judgment, 'the relevant event in the cases referred to in paragraph 4'. (16) In principle, therefore, this concept includes the conduct or the circumstance described in each of the various situations provided for in the aforementioned Article 57(4).

74. The question, raised by the referring court, as to whether the period of exclusion must be counted from the date on which that conduct or circumstance actually occurs or from the point at which the contracting authority has certain and verifiable information on its existence, is a separate issue.

75. The parties represented in these preliminary ruling proceedings have adopted positions ranging from an objective interpretation predicated on the materialisation of the 'relevant event' and a subjective interpretation based on knowledge of that event by the awarding authority.

76. As the Commission has pointed out, while the first position gives priority to ensuring legal certainty, the second is focused on protecting procurement procedures against the risk inherent in admitting tenderers caught by grounds for exclusion.

77. In order to answer the referring court's question, however, it is not essential to carry out an exhaustive analysis of the timings of the exclusion periods provided for in Directive 2014/24, it being sufficient to have regard to the ground for exclusion specifically at issue here.

78. More particularly, so far as concerns Vossloh Laeis's participation in a cartel, proved and penalised by the German competition authority, the dispute turns on whether the three-year period starts: (i) when its participation took place or ended (objective approach); or (ii) when the authority, be it the investigating authority or the contracting authority, acquired reliable evidence of the unlawful conduct or imposed a penalty for it (subjective approach).

79. The Greek Government regards as relevant the form of words adopted in Article 25(2) of Regulation No 1/2003 in connection with the starting point for the limitation period applicable to unlawful conduct in matters of competition. That period 'shall begin to run on the day on which the infringement is committed. However, in the case of continuing or repeated infringements, time shall begin to run on the day on which the infringement ceases'.

80. One might indeed take the view that, if the EU legislature chose to give priority to the offender's legal certainty over the effectiveness of the Commission's power to impose penalties, the same criteria can be extrapolated to the start date for the period of exclusion in public procurement procedures.

81. To my mind, however, this is an incomplete view. If that analogy were applied, it would have to be so to its full extent, meaning that — as with limitation periods applicable to conduct that is restrictive of competition — the maximum period of exclusion, once it has started to run, might be interrupted. (17) It might then extend beyond the three years laid down as a limit by Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24. (18)

82. I am of the view, therefore, that the solution may be arrived at by way of analogy but in accordance with the aforementioned method of applying the rule with due regard to the remaining provisions of the article. It is apparent from those provisions that, where the ground for exclusion is unlawful conduct established by a judgment which does not specify the length of the period of exclusion, the five-year period of exclusion actually starts to run from the date of conviction.

83. That same criterion can in my opinion be applied, without interpretational difficulties, to conduct restrictive of competition the existence of which may be regarded as proved (account being taken of the presumption of innocence) only by way of decision of a court or administrative authority. In that situation, which is the situation at issue here, it is the date of that decision (the conviction in a loose sense) which operates as the 'relevant event' for the purposes of establishing the starting point for the three-year period of exclusion.

84. In the circumstances of this case, therefore, Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 does not take into account as the 'relevant event' the collusive conduct itself but the legal establishment of the existence of that conduct; or, to put it differently, the legal classification of an action for which the authority has already imposed a penalty on the ground that it is unlawful.

85. In other words, where there has been a decision explicitly assessing an economic operator's participation in a cartel, the 'relevant event' which the contracting authority — in receipt of the order or option, as the case may be, to exclude that economic operator — must use to calculate the maximum period of disqualification is not the offending undertaking's material conduct itself but its classification and punishment as conduct that is restrictive of competition.

86. In my opinion, which happens to be the same as that expressed by the Hungarian Government and, certainly at the hearing, by the Commission, it is that factor which the contracting authority must take as 'relevant' for the purposes of determining the maximum period of exclusion applicable to the economic operator in question. In the light of the penalty imposed by the competition authority, the contracting authority needs nothing further, having already been given legal notice of the existence of conduct warranting exclusion. The period of exclusion starts to run from then, that is to say from the date on which the corresponding decision imposing a penalty was issued.

VI. Conclusion

87. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court's reply to the Vergabekammer Südbayern (Public Procurement Board for Southern Bavaria, Germany) should be as follows:

(1) Article 80 of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC, in conjunction with the second subparagraph of Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC:

– preclude an economic operator seeking to demonstrate its reliability notwithstanding the existence of a relevant ground for exclusion from having to collaborate actively with the contracting authority in order to clarify in a comprehensive manner the facts and circumstances in the context of which it acted as joint author of agreements intended to distort competition, where that same operator, by clarifying its circumstances in a comprehensive manner, had already actively collaborated with the competition authority which investigated and penalised those facts;

– do not preclude a Member State from requiring such active collaboration with the contracting authority as a condition of the economic operator's being able to demonstrate its reliability and bring to an end its exclusion from the procurement procedure, in the case of offending conduct the facts and circumstances of which have to be determined by the contracting authority itself.

(2) Where an economic operator is caught by the ground for exclusion provided for in Article 57(4)(d) of Directive 2014/24 for having concluded agreements intended to distort competition which have already been the subject of a decision imposing a penalty, the maximum period of exclusion is calculated from the date of that decision.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

---

3 No italics in the original.

---

4 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243).

---

5 In the version published on 26 June 2013 (BGBl. I, p. 1750, 3245), as last amended by the Law of 13 October 2016 (BGBl. I, p. 2258) ('the GWB').

---

6 The qualification system at issue was later ended by order of 28 December 2016.

---

7 Case C-292/15, EU:C:2016:817, paragraph 29.

---

8 Article 57(7) of Directive 2014/24 provides that, in the absence of a final judgment determining its maximum duration, that period is not to last longer than five or three years, depending on the circumstances defined in that provision.

---

9 I use this adjective in the sense in which it is employed in legal process, that is to say to denote a procedure which the investigating body conducts of its own motion by gathering inculpatory or exculpatory evidence of a particular behaviour.

---

10 Judgment of 20 December 2017, Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani and Guerrato (C-178/16, EU:C:2017:1000, paragraph 31).

---

11 It has in mind those included in Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/CE of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114). I should recall, however, that Article 57(6) of Directive 2014/24 talks of 'the situations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 4 [of Article 57 itself]', that is to say both the mandatory and the optional grounds for exclusion.

---

12 Under that provision, an undertaking may be excluded where the contracting authority has evidence plausible enough to support the conclusion that that undertaking has entered into collusive arrangements.

---

13 The collaboration which the economic operator is required to afford to the contracting authority might be prejudicial to the economic operator where, as here, they are both parties to civil proceedings brought by the contracting authority on the ground that it was harmed by the conduct on the part of the tendering undertaking (that is to say, its participation in the cartel) that gave rise to the exclusion in relation to which the economic operator seeks reformed status.

---

14 Council Regulation of 16 December 2002 on the implementation of the rules on competition laid down in Articles 81 and 82 of the Treaty (OJ 2003 L 1, p. 1).

---

15 Regulation of the European Parliament and of the Council of 25 October 2012 on the financial rules applicable to the general budget of the Union and repealing Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 (OJ 2012 L 298, p. 1), as amended by Regulation (EU, Euratom) 2015/1929 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 28 October 2015 (OJ 2015 L 286, p. 1).

---

16 There will be situations in which some form of court order is in existence (such as, for example, in the case of insolvency or winding-up proceedings, the situation provided for in subparagraph (b)) but others in which a ground for exclusion is applicable without the need for any such court order to have been made (as in the case where the economic operator has attempted to obtain confidential information, the situation provided for in subparagraph (i)).

---

17 According to Article 25(3) and (5) of Regulation No 1/2003, 'any action taken by the Commission or by the competition authority of a Member State for the purpose of the investigation or proceedings in respect of an infringement shall interrupt the limitation period for the imposition of fines or periodic penalty payments. The limitation period shall be interrupted with effect from the date on which the action is notified to at least one undertaking or association of undertakings which has participated in the infringement. … Each interruption shall start time running again’.

---

18 Provision which, unlike Article 106 of Regulation No 966/2012, does not specifically lay down a limitation period for exclusion.

Provisional text

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Ninth Chamber)

19 April 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public service contracts — Health and social services — Award contrary to the rules on public procurement — Requirement to comply with the principles of transparency and equal treatment — Concept of 'certain cross-border interest' — Directive 92/50/EEC — Article 27)

In Case C-65/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation, Italy), made by decision of 7 June 2016, received at the Court on 6 February 2017, in the proceedings

Oftalma Hospital Srl

v

Commissione Istituti Ospitalieri Valdesi (CIOV),

Regione Piemonte

intervener:

Azienda Sanitaria Locale di Torino (TO1)

THE COURT (Ninth Chamber), composed of C. Vajda, President of the Chamber, E. Juhász (Rapporteur) and K. Jürimäe, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Oftalma Hospital Srl, by M. Moretto and P. Bianco, avvocati,

– the Regione Piemonte, by M. Scisciot, avvocato, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and F. Sclafani, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (‘Directive 92/50’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Oftalma Hospital Srl (‘Oftalma’) and the Commissione Istituti Ospitalieri Valdesi (Commission for Waldensian Hospital Institutions, Italy; ‘CIOV’) and the Regione Piemonte (Region of Piedmont, Italy) concerning payment for care services provided by Oftalma under a contract entered into with CIOV (‘the contract at issue’).

Legal context

EU law

Directive 92/50

3 Title II of Directive 92/50 defines ‘two-tier’ applications. Under Article 8, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A to that directive are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI thereof, that is, Articles 11 to 37 of that directive. On the other hand, under Article 9 of that directive, ‘contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16’.

4 Article 14 of Directive 92/50 appears under Title IV of that directive, which concerns the common rules in the technical field.

5 Article 16 of that directive, which falls within Title V thereof, headed ‘Common advertising rules’, provides in paragraph 1 that contracting authorities which have awarded a public contract or have held a design contest are to send a notice of the results of the award procedure to the Publications Office of the European Union.

6 Article 27(3) of Directive 92/50 provides that:

‘Where the contracting authorities award a contract by negotiated procedure as referred to in Article 11(2), the number of candidates admitted to negotiate may not be less than three, provided that there is a sufficient number of suitable candidates.’

7 Annex I B to that directive lists a series of categories of services, which includes, under category 25, health and social services.

Directive 2004/18/EC

8 Under Articles 20 and 21 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II A to the directive are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 23 to 55 thereof, whereas contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II B to that directive are to be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4) thereof.

9 Annex II B to that directive lists a series of categories of services, which includes, under category 25, health and social services.

10 Article 82 of Directive 2004/18, headed ‘Repeals’, provides, inter alia, that Directive 92/50 is to be repealed from 31 January 2006 and that references to that Directive are to be construed as being made to Directive 2004/18.

Italian law

11 Article 3 of the decreto-legislativo n. 157 — Attuazione della direttiva 92/50/EEC in materia di appalti pubblici di servizi (Legislative Decree No 157 implementing Directive 92/50/EEC on public service contracts) of 17 March 1995 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 104 of 6 May 1995), in the version applicable at the time of the facts in the main proceedings ('Legislative Decree No 157/95'), provides:

'1. Public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority as referred to in Article 2 relating to the provision of the services set out in Annexes 1 and 2.

2. For the service contracts referred to in Annex 2 and those in which the value of those services exceeds that of the services listed in Annex 1, this decree shall apply only to Article 8(3), Article 20 and Article 21.'

12 Article 7(1) of that legislative decree provides:

'Contracts that are subject to this decree may be negotiated privately, following publication of a contract notice, in the following cases:

(a) in the event of irregular tenders submitted following an invitation to tender, a restricted invitation to tender or a call for competitive tenders or in the event of tenders that are unacceptable under the provisions of Articles 11, 12(2), 18, 19 and 22 to 25, provided that the conditions of the contract are not substantially altered; contracting authorities shall publish, in such cases, a contract notice, unless they admit to the negotiated procedure all the undertakings satisfying the criteria laid down in Articles 11 to 16 that, during the procedures referred to above, submitted tenders in accordance with the formal requirements of the tendering procedure;

(b) in exceptional cases, when the nature of the services or the risks involved do not permit prior overall pricing;

(c) where, due to the nature of the services covered by the contracts, particularly if the services are of an intellectual nature or fall within Category 6 of Annex 1, it is impossible to determine the specifications of the contracts with adequate precision to enable them to be awarded by selection of the best tender according to the rules of open or restricted procedures.'

13 Article 22(3) of Legislative Decree No 157/95 provides:

'In a privately negotiated procedure initiated pursuant to Article 7(1), the number of candidates may not be less than three, provided that there is a sufficient number of suitable candidates.'

14 Annex 2 to Legislative Decree No 157/95 refers to 'Health and social services' under category 25 thereof.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

15 By the contract at issue, dated 2 January 1999, which was amended by a supplementary agreement in 2004 by which Oftalma waived the right to use the payment order procedure, CIOV entrusted to Oftalma the provision of specialist ophthalmological services at the ophthalmological centre of the Ospedale evangelico valdese di Torino (Waldensian Evangelical Hospital, Turin, Italy).

16 On 21 April 2005, the Tribunale di Torino (District Court, Turin, Italy) ordered CIOV and the Regione Piemonte to pay to Oftalma the sum of EUR 1 727 886.36, plus interest, by way of remuneration for care services provided in the course of 2004.

17 CIOV and the Regione Piemonte each applied to have the order for payment set aside before the Tribunale di Torino (District Court, Turin). Before that court, the Regione Piemonte argued, inter alia, that the contract at issue was invalid, since, in its view, it had been entered into in breach of public procurement procedures as governed by Legislative Decree No 157/95.

18 By judgment of 5 December 2007, the Tribunale di Torino (District Court, Turin) dismissed the applications brought by CIOV and the Regione Piemonte and, accordingly, upheld Oftalma's claims.

19 Prior to that first action, Oftalma had, in 2004 brought another action before the Tribunale di Torino (District Court, Turin) for an order that CIOV and the Regione Piemonte pay Oftalma the sum of EUR 1 226 535.07 by way of an adjustment based on the tariffs applicable to care services provided during 2002, 2003 and the first half of 2004.

20 By judgment of 9 October 2007, the Tribunale di Torino (District Court, Turin) dismissed Oftalma's action.

21 Oftalma and the Regione Piemonte lodged appeals against the two judgments referred to above.

22 After joining those two sets of proceedings, by judgment of 7 June 2010, the Corte d'appello di Torino (Court of Appeal, Turin, Italy) declared the contract at issue void and, accordingly, ordered Oftalma to repay the sums received under the order for payment.

23 That court took the view that the contract at issue had been entered into in breach of Directive 92/50 and Legislative Decree No 157/95, which had transposed it, since no tendering procedure had taken place before the contract was concluded, despite the fact that CIOV was, pursuant to Article 2 of Legislative Decree No 157/95, read in the light of Article 1 of Directive 92/50, a body governed by public law with the status of a contracting authority.

24 Oftalma brought an appeal before the referring court, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation, Italy) against that judgment.

25 In that respect, the referring court observes, in particular, that Article 3(2) of Legislative Decree No 157/95, like Directive 92/50, does not require any advertising or tendering procedure prior to the conclusion of contracts for the provision of health care services and that that legislative decree does not expressly provide that the award of such contracts is subject to the principles of effectiveness, impartiality, equal treatment and transparency being complied with.

26 That court has doubts about the validity of the case-law of the Italian administrative courts according to which contracts for the provision of health care services, although not directly covered by the legislation applicable in the field of public service contracts, are nonetheless subject to prior recourse to competitive tendering, even if informal, under the general rules of national law and EU law principles deriving from Articles 49, 56 and 106 TFEU.

27 That court observes, however, that Article 22(3) of Legislative Decree No 157/95, which transposes Article 27(3) of Directive 92/50, provides that, even if the call for tenders is limited, the number of candidates may not be less than three. While noting that those provisions are intended to apply to service contracts that are entirely subject to the provisions of that directive, it nevertheless submits that such a national provision 'may be regarded as the expression of a general principle' the application of which also extends to the provision of services that are only partially subject to the directive. According to that court, such an interpretation is consistent with the objectives of Directive 92/50, which aims to complete the internal market through good coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

28 The referring court adds that that interpretation is consistent with one of the objectives of Directive 92/50, which is to harmonise the rules for awarding contracts with those relating to works and supply contracts. In that respect, it notes that both Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1971 L 185, p. 5), as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1), and Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), require contracting authorities to ensure genuine competition, including in negotiated procedures.

29 That court points out that, subjecting contracts for the provision of health services to such obligations is consistent with the Court's case-law, according to which the fundamental principles of the TFEU are applicable to service contracts excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50.

30 In those circumstances, the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘1. On a proper construction of Article 9 of [Directive 92/50], which provides that contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B [to that directive] are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16 [of that directive], do such contracts in any case remain subject to the principles of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, equal treatment and the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality, transparency and non-discrimination, as referred to in Articles 49, 56 and 106 TFEU?

2. If the first question should be answered in the affirmative, must Article 27 of Directive 92/50, which provides that where a contract is awarded by negotiated procedure the number of candidates admitted to negotiate may not be less than three, provided that there is a sufficient number of suitable candidates, be interpreted as applying likewise to contracts having as their object services listed in Annex I B to that directive?

3. Does Article 27 of Directive 92/50, which provides that where a contract is awarded by negotiated procedure the number of candidates admitted to negotiate may not be less than three, provided that there is a sufficient number of suitable candidates, preclude the application of a national law that, for public contracts signed before Directive [2004/18] was adopted and relating to services listed in Annex I B to Directive 92/50, does not guarantee the opening up of public procurement to competition if the negotiated procedure is used?’

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

31 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether, when it awards a public service contract that falls within the scope of Article 9 of Directive 92/50 and, consequently, is in principle subject only to Articles 14 and 16 of that directive, a contracting authority is nonetheless also required to comply with the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and the consequent obligation of transparency.

32 According to the wording of Article 9 of Directive 92/50, ‘contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16’. Those articles contain obligations relating, respectively, to the technical specifications of a contract and the sending of a notice of the results of the procedure for the award of a contract.

33 In that regard, the Court has held that, where contracts concern services referred to in Annex I B, the contracting authorities are bound only by the obligations to define the technical specifications by reference to national standards implementing European standards, which must be given in the general or contractual documents relating to each contract, and to send a notice of the results of the award procedure for those contracts to the Publications Office of the European Union (judgment of 17 March 2011, Strong Segurança, C-95/10, EU:C:2011:161, paragraph 34).

34 The Court has also held that the classification of services in Annexes I A and I B to Directive 92/50 is in accordance with the system laid down by that directive, which envisages the application of the provisions of that directive on two levels (judgment of 17 March 2011, Strong Segurança, C-95/10, EU:C:2011:161, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

35 The Court has stated that the EU legislature assumed that contracts for the services referred to in Annex I B to Directive 92/50 are, in principle, in the light of their specific nature, not of sufficient cross-border interest to justify their award being subject to the conclusion of a tendering procedure intended to enable undertakings from other Member States to examine the contract notice and submit a tender (judgment of 17 March 2011, Strong Segurança, C-95/10, EU:C:2011:161, paragraph 35 and the case-law cited).

36 However, the Court has held that such contracts, where they nevertheless have a certain cross-border interest, are subject to the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and the consequent obligation of transparency (see, to that effect, judgment of 17 March 2011, Strong Segurança, C-95/10, EU:C:2011:161, paragraph 35 and the case-law cited). Without necessarily requiring that an invitation to tender be launched, that obligation implies a degree of advertising sufficient to ensure, first, the opening-up to competition and, second, the review of the impartiality of the procurement procedure (judgment of 13 November 2008, Coditel Brabant, C-324/07, EU:C:2008:621, paragraph 25 and the case-law cited).

37 In the absence of special circumstances, none of which are apparent from the case file, the assessment of whether there is certain cross-border interest must be carried out, for reasons of legal certainty, on the date of the award of the public contract at issue (see, by analogy, judgment of 10 November 2005, Commission v Austria, C-29/04, EU:C:2005:670, paragraph 38). In that regard, the fact that, in the main proceedings, the contract was subsequently amended by a supplementary agreement is not capable of altering the date on which it must be determined whether there was such an interest, where such a supplementary agreement is not of a nature substantially to alter the general scheme of the contract at issue, which remains, however, a matter for the referring court to verify.

38 It is thus for the referring court to carry out a detailed assessment of all the relevant evidence concerning the contract at issue so as to verify whether there was certain cross-border interest on the date on which the contract at issue in the main proceedings was awarded.

39 In that regard, it must be pointed out that, in the course of that assessment, a conclusion that there is certain cross-border interest cannot be inferred hypothetically from certain factors which, considered in the abstract, could constitute evidence to that effect, but must be the positive outcome of a specific assessment of the circumstances of the contract at issue in the main proceedings. This means that it cannot be held that certain cross-border interest is established on the basis of factors that do not rule out its existence, but that such an interest must be considered as having been established when its cross-border nature is proved on the basis of objective and consistent factors (see, to that effect, judgment of 6 October 2016, Tecnoedi Costruzioni, C-318/15, EU:C:2016:747, paragraph 22).

40 The Court has previously held that the value of the contract at issue, in conjunction with the place where the work is to be carried out or the technical nature of the contract and the specific characteristics of the goods concerned, could constitute objective criteria capable of indicating the existence of certain cross-border interest. In that context, it is also possible to take account of the fact that complaints have been made by operators situated in Member States other than that of the contracting authority, provided that it is established that those complaints are real and not fictitious (judgment of 6 October 2016, Tecnoedi Costruzioni, C-318/15, EU:C:2016:747, paragraph 20 and the case-law cited). Moreover, the fact that, at the time of the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, similar health care services may previously have been provided by entities established in other Member States may also be taken into account.

41 However, it must be noted that, as regards, more particularly, health care services, the Court has held, in an action for failure to fulfil obligations, that certain cross-border interest was not established solely on the basis of the fact that the contracts at issue were of significant economic value (see, to that effect, judgment of 29 April 2010, Commission v Germany, C-160/08, EU:C:2010:230, paragraphs 18, 54 and 123).

42 In the present case, as Oftalma pointed out in its written observations, the order for reference contains nothing to suggest that the contract at issue in the main proceedings had certain cross-border interest on the date when it was awarded.

43 In the event that it is nevertheless established that there was certain cross-border interest and, consequently, a lack of transparency could have given rise to a difference in treatment to the detriment of undertakings situated in a Member State other than that of the contracting authority, such a difference in treatment may be justified by objective circumstances (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 52 and the case-law cited).

44 With regard to such a justification, Oftalma relies, in its written observations, on paragraph 57 of the judgment of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others (C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440), in which the Court found that the objective of maintaining, on grounds of public health, a balanced medical and hospital service open to all may fall within one of the derogations on the grounds of public health.

45 In the event that certain cross-border interest is established, it is for the referring court, taking account of the case-law set out in the two preceding paragraphs, to examine whether the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings was justified.

46 In the light of all the considerations set out above, the answer to the first question is that, when it awards a public service contract that falls within the scope of Article 9 of Directive 92/50 and is, consequently, in principle, subject only to Articles 14 and 16 of that directive, a contracting authority is nonetheless also required to comply with the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on the grounds of nationality and the consequent obligation of transparency, provided that, at the date of its award, the contract had certain cross-border interest, which it is for the referring court to verify.

47 Moreover, in the same context, Oftalma objects to the claims of the Regione Piemonte and CIOV, and refers to the principle of nemo auditur propriam turpitudinem allegans. It states that, if the conclusion of the contract entered into with it is unlawful, such unlawfulness is attributable to the Regione Piemonte and CIOV. It further submits that a rejection of its claim for remuneration of services actually and duly provided by it would confer an undue advantage on CIOV.

48 In that regard, it must be noted that such principles must be assessed by the referring court through the application of national law.

The second and third questions

49 By its second and third questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 27(3) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as applying to public service contracts referred to in Annex I B to that directive.

50 It must be noted that, by adopting Article 9 of Directive 92/50, the EU legislature expressly provided that only Articles 14 and 16 of that directive were applicable to the services listed in Annex I B. In the absence of any indication to the contrary, it must be concluded that this is the case even if a public contract in respect of such a service has certain cross-border interest.

51 It follows that subjecting the services listed in Annex I B to Directive 92/50 to articles other than those expressly referred to in Article 9 of that directive would lead to an interpretation that contradicts the clear wording of that article and would therefore be contrary to the intention of the EU legislature.

52 It is clear that the obligations arising from Article 27(3) of that directive do not apply to a public contract in respect of a service listed in Annex I B thereto, even if the contract does have certain cross-border interest.

53 Thus, compliance with the fundamental rules and general principles of the Union and the obligations arising therefrom, as recognised, with regard to public contracts having certain cross-border interest, in the case-law cited in paragraph 36 above, does not entail, as such, the admission of a minimum number of candidates in a negotiated procedure, as referred to in Article 27(3).

54 Further, adopting an interpretation that, even where there is certain cross-border interest, Article 27(3) of Directive 92/50 would apply in a case such as the one in the main proceedings, could lead to other provisions of that directive that are applicable only to the services referred to in Annex I A to that directive being applied to service contracts under Annex I B, which would risk rendering entirely ineffective the distinction drawn between the services referred to in Annex I A and those in Annex I B to the directive (see, to that effect, with regard to Annexes II A and II B of Directive 2004/18, which correspond to Annexes I A and I B of Directive 92/50, judgment of 17 March 2011, Strong Segurança, C-95/10, EU:C:2011:161, paragraph 42).

55 In the light of all the above considerations, the answer to the second and third questions is that Article 27(3) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as not applying to public service contracts referred to in Annex I B to that directive.

Limitation of the temporal effects of the judgment to be delivered

56 In its observations, Oftalma asks the Court to limit the temporal effects of the judgment to be delivered in the event that the fundamental rules and the general principles of EU law and the consequent obligation of transparency are interpreted as meaning that the award of a contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings must be preceded by a sufficient degree of advertising where such a contract has certain cross-border interest. According to Oftalma, such a judgment could call into question the validity of all agreements for the provision of care services entered into by private institutions and public authorities and, accordingly, destabilise the entire Italian health system.

57 It should be recalled in this connection that it is only exceptionally that, in application of a general principle of legal certainty which is inherent in the EU legal order, the Court may decide to restrict the right to rely upon a provision, which it has interpreted, with a view to calling in question legal relations established in good faith. Such a restriction may, according to the Court's settled case-law, be allowed only in the actual judgment ruling upon the interpretation sought (judgment of 17 July 2008, Krawczyński, C-426/07, EU:C:2008:434, paragraphs 42 and 43).

58 As is apparent from paragraph 36 above, the Court has previously held that contracts relating to services referred to in Annex I B to Directive 92/50, where they have certain cross-border interest, are subject to the fundamental rules and general principles arising under the FEU Treaty, from which the obligation of transparency flows.

59 Accordingly, there is no need to limit the temporal effects of the present judgment.

Costs

60 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. When awarding a public service contract that falls within the scope of Article 9 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, and is, consequently, in principle, subject only to Articles 14 and 16 of that directive, a contracting authority is nonetheless also required to comply with the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on the grounds of nationality and the consequent obligation of transparency, provided that, at the date of its award, the contract had certain cross-border interest, which it is for the referring court to verify.

2. Article 27(3) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as not applying to public service contracts referred to in Annex I B to that directive.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Italian.

EU:C:2017:557

ORDONNANCE DE LA COUR (sixième chambre)

13 juillet 2017 (*)

« Renvoi préjudiciel – Article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour – Marchés publics – Principes de passation des marchés – Égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires – Durée de validité de la soumission et de la caution – Prorogation non explicitement prévue – Exclusion du marché »

Dans l'affaire C-35/17,

ayant pour objet une demande de décision préjudicielle au titre de l'article 267 TFUE, introduite par la Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (chambre nationale de recours, Pologne), par décision du 16 janvier 2017, parvenue à la Cour le 24 janvier 2017, dans la procédure

Saferoad Grawil sp. z o.o.,

Saferoad Kabex sp. z o.o.

contre

Generalna Dyrekcja Dróg Krajowych i Autostrad Oddział w Poznaniu,

en présence de :

Przedsiębiorstwo Budownictwa Drogowego S.A.,

Zakład Bezpieczeństwa Ruchu Drogowego (Zaberd) S.A.,

LA COUR (sixième chambre), composée de M. E. Regan, président de chambre, MM. J.-C. Bonichot et S. Rodin (rapporteur), juges, avocat général : M. M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

greffier : M. A. Calot Escobar,

vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée, conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation de l'article 2 de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO 2004, L 134, p. 114).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige opposant Saferoad Grawil sp. z o.o. et Saferoad Kabex sp. z o.o. agissant ensemble en tant que soumissionnaire unique (ci-après, ensemble, « Saferoad ») à la Generalna Dyrekcja Dróg Krajowych i Autostrad Oddział w Poznaniu (direction générale des routes nationales et des autoroutes de Poznań, Pologne) (ci-après le « pouvoir adjudicateur »), soutenu par Przedsiębiorstwo Budownictwa Drogowego S.A. et Zakład Bezpieczeństwa Ruchu Drogowego (Zaberd) S.A., au sujet de la décision du pouvoir adjudicateur d'attribuer un marché public à Zaberd.

Le cadre juridique

Le droit de l'Union

3 L'article 2 de la directive 2004/18, intitulé « Principes de passation des marchés », prévoit que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité, de manière non discriminatoire et agissent avec transparence. Cette disposition correspond matériellement à celle de l'article 10 de la directive 2004/17/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés dans les secteurs de l'eau, de l'énergie, des transports et des services postaux (JO 2004, L 134, p. 1).

Le droit polonais

4 L'article 2 de la directive 2004/18 et l'article 10 de la directive 2004/17 sont mis en œuvre en droit polonais par l'article 7, paragraphe 1, de la ustawa z dnia 29 stycznia 2004 r. – Prawo zamówień publicznych (Dz.U. z 2004 r., nr 19, poz. 177) (ci-après la « loi sur les marchés publics » du 29 janvier 2004). Aux termes de cette disposition, dans la version applicable au litige au principal, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs établissent et appliquent les procédures de passation de marchés de manière à garantir le respect d'une concurrence loyale et l'égalité de traitement des opérateurs économiques.

5 S'agissant de la prorogation de la durée de validité de la soumission, l'article 85, paragraphe 1, de la loi sur les marchés publics dispose qu'un soumissionnaire est lié par son offre pendant le délai indiqué dans le cahier des charges, mais sans que ce délai puisse excéder, en fonction de la valeur d'un marché, 30, 60 ou 90 jours. Aux termes du paragraphe 2 de cet article, un soumissionnaire a la possibilité de proroger la durée de validité de la soumission, de sa propre initiative ou à la demande du pouvoir adjudicateur. Or, ce dernier ne peut le demander qu'une fois et pour la période ne dépassant pas 60 jours. Conformément au paragraphe 4, ladite prorogation doit être suivie par la prorogation parallèle de la période de validité de la caution de soumission ou, si cela s'avère impossible, par le versement d'une nouvelle caution de soumission.

6 L'article 24, paragraphe 2, point 2, de la loi sur les marchés publics énumère les hypothèses d'exclusion d'un soumissionnaire. Parmi celles-ci, figure la situation dans laquelle le soumissionnaire a refusé de proroger la durée de validité de sa soumission à la demande du pouvoir adjudicateur. En revanche, il ressort de la demande de décision préjudicielle qu'une telle conséquence ne serait prévue ni à cet article 24 ni à d'autres articles, concernant l'absence de prorogation de la durée de validité de la soumission dans d'autres cas, à savoir sans aucune demande de la part du pouvoir adjudicateur.

7 S'agissant de la caution de soumission, selon l'article 45 de la loi sur les marchés publics, lorsque la valeur d'un marché est égale ou supérieure aux seuils définis dans la loi, le pouvoir adjudicateur demande aux soumissionnaires de verser la caution de soumission. Celle-ci doit être versée avant l'expiration du délai de dépôt des offres.

8 L'article 46, paragraphe 1, de la loi sur les marchés publics dispose que, à la suite de la sélection de l'offre la plus avantageuse ou de l'annulation de la procédure de passation du marché concerné, le pouvoir adjudicateur verse la caution de soumission immédiatement à tous les soumissionnaires, excepté au soumissionnaire dont l'offre a été sélectionnée.

9 L'article 184 de ladite loi impose au soumissionnaire dont l'offre a été sélectionnée une obligation de proroger la validité de la caution de soumission pour la période de procédure de recours.

Le litige au principal et les questions préjudicielles

10 Le pouvoir adjudicateur a attribué le marché public en cause à Zaberd. Saferoad, en tant que soumissionnaire, conteste cette attribution.

11 Le marché concerné avait pour objet le service de maintien d'une voie rapide autour de Poznań (Pologne). Conformément à l'avis de marché, publié au cours de l'année 2015, la valeur du marché dépassait le seuil prévu à l'article 7 de la directive 2004/18. Selon cet avis, le délai minimum pendant lequel chaque soumissionnaire était tenu de maintenir son offre s'élevait à 90 jours à compter de la date limite de réception des offres. De plus, afin de participer à la procédure de passation de marché, chaque soumissionnaire était tenu de verser une caution de soumission.

12 En réponse audit avis, huit soumissionnaires ont déposé leurs offres, dont Saferoad et Zaberd. Dans le cadre de la procédure de passation de marché, le pouvoir adjudicateur a demandé aux soumissionnaires de proroger la durée de validité de leurs soumissions pour une période de 60 jours. Un soumissionnaire, qui ne s'est pas conformé à cette demande, a été exclu du marché. Les autres ont prorogé la durée de validité de leurs soumissions pour la période demandée. Celle-ci a néanmoins expiré sans que la procédure ait abouti. Toutefois, la majorité des soumissionnaires, dont Zaberd, ont continué, de leur propre initiative, à proroger les périodes de validité de leurs soumissions, ainsi que la validité de leurs cautions de soumission, jusqu'à la date de prise de décision du pouvoir adjudicateur. Finalement, le marché a été attribué à Zaberd.

13 Dans ce contexte, Saferoad a introduit un recours contre la décision d'attribution du marché. Elle a fait valoir, notamment, que les soumissionnaires qui n'avaient pas prorogé, de leur propre initiative, après la période supplémentaire de 60 jours, la durée de validité de leur soumission, auraient dû également être exclus du marché. Dans ce cas, en vertu des règles de pondération des critères prévues dans l'avis de marché, le marché concerné aurait dû être attribué à Saferoad.

14 Dans ces conditions, la Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (chambre nationale de recours, Pologne) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour les questions préjudicielles suivantes :

« 1) L'article 2 de la directive 2004/18, compte tenu également du principe de proportionnalité, doit-il être interprété en ce sens que :

a) cette disposition permet d'exclure un opérateur économique de la procédure ou de rejeter son offre, en raison de l'expiration du délai de validité de celle-ci, lorsqu'une telle sanction ne découle pas explicitement et directement des dispositions de la loi ni des conditions d'attribution du marché décrites par le pouvoir adjudicateur dans l'avis de marché ou dans le cahier des charges, et que l'opérateur économique reste intéressé par la conclusion du contrat,

b) même en l'absence de décision formelle d'exclure l'opérateur économique de la procédure ou de rejeter son offre, au sens du point [a)], cette disposition permet de constater que l'offre de l'opérateur économique n'est plus valable, en raison de l'expiration de son délai de validité, de telle sorte qu'elle a cessé d'exister dans le cadre de la procédure d'attribution du marché, et que le contrat ne peut donc pas être conclu avec cet opérateur économique (interdiction de conclure le contrat), bien que celui-ci reste intéressé par la conclusion du contrat, lorsque la constatation de l'expiration du délai de validité de l'offre et de l'interdiction de conclure le contrat ne découle pas explicitement et directement des dispositions de la loi ni des conditions d'attribution du marché décrites par le pouvoir adjudicateur dans l'avis de marché ou dans le cahier des charges ?

2) L'article 2 de la directive 2004/18, compte tenu également du principe de proportionnalité, doit-il être interprété en ce sens qu'il permet aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs d'exiger des opérateurs économiques qu'ils maintiennent la validité du cautionnement constitué pour garantir l'offre, sans possibilité d'interruption, jusqu'au moment de la conclusion du contrat, alors que les dispositions de l'avis de marché ou du cahier des charges n'imposent aux opérateurs économiques aucune durée maximale raisonnable de maintien de la validité du cautionnement ? »

Sur les questions préjudicielles

15 Conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour, lorsqu'une question posée à titre préjudiciel est identique à une question sur laquelle la Cour a déjà statué, lorsque la réponse à une telle question peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence ou lorsque la réponse à la question posée à titre préjudiciel ne laisse place à aucun doute raisonnable, la Cour peut, à tout moment, sur proposition du juge rapporteur, l'avocat général entendu, décider de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

16 La réponse aux questions posées par la juridiction de renvoi pouvant être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence de la Cour et, en particulier, de son arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404), il y a lieu de faire application de la disposition procédurale susmentionnée.

17 Par ses deux questions, qu'il convient d'examiner ensemble, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, d'une part, si l'article 2 de la directive 2004/18, le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence permettent d'exclure, de rejeter ou de déclarer non valable l'offre du soumissionnaire qui n'a pas prorogé la durée de validité de son offre, alors que de telles conséquences ne sont pas expressément prévues par les documents afférents à la procédure de passation d'un marché public, et, d'autre part, si le pouvoir adjudicateur peut, dans de telles conditions, exiger des soumissionnaires qu'ils maintiennent la validité du cautionnement constitué pour garantir l'offre, sans possibilité d'interruption, jusqu'à la date de la conclusion du contrat.

18 À cet égard, il convient de rappeler, d'une part, que le principe d'égalité de traitement impose que les soumissionnaires disposent des mêmes chances dans la formulation des termes de leurs offres et implique donc que ces offres soient soumises aux mêmes conditions pour tous les soumissionnaires. D'autre part, l'obligation de transparence, qui en constitue le corollaire, a pour but de garantir l'absence de risque de favoritisme et d'arbitraire de la part du pouvoir adjudicateur. Cette obligation implique que toutes les conditions et les modalités de la procédure d'attribution soient formulées de manière claire, précise et univoque dans l'avis de marché ou dans le cahier des charges, de façon, premièrement, à permettre à tous les soumissionnaires raisonnablement informés et normalement diligents d'en comprendre la portée exacte et de les interpréter de la même manière et, deuxièmement, à mettre le pouvoir adjudicateur en mesure de vérifier effectivement si les offres des soumissionnaires correspondent aux critères régissant le marché en cause (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 6 novembre 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, point 44 et jurisprudence citée, ainsi que du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 36).

19 La Cour a également jugé que les principes de transparence et d'égalité de traitement qui régissent toutes les procédures de passation de marchés publics exigent que les conditions de fond et de procédure concernant la participation à un marché soient clairement définies au préalable et rendues publiques, en particulier les obligations pesant sur les soumissionnaires, afin que ceux-ci puissent connaître exactement les contraintes de la procédure et être assurés du fait que les mêmes exigences valent pour tous les concurrents (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 9 février 2006, La Cascina e.a., C-226/04 et C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94, point 32, ainsi que du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 37).

20 En outre, la directive 2004/18 prévoit, au point 17 de son annexe VII A, portant sur les informations qui doivent figurer dans les avis pour les marchés publics, dans sa partie relative aux « [a]vis de marchés », que les « [c]ritères de sélection concernant la situation personnelle des opérateurs économiques qui peuvent entraîner l'exclusion de ces derniers » de la procédure de passation du marché en cause doivent être énoncés dans l'avis de marché (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 38).

21 Ainsi, conformément à une jurisprudence constante de la Cour, en vertu de l'article 2 de la directive 2004/18, il incombe à un pouvoir adjudicateur d'observer strictement les critères qu'il a lui-même fixés (arrêts du 10 octobre 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, point 40 ; du 6 novembre 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, point 42, ainsi que du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 39).

22 Par ailleurs, une condition relative à l'expiration du délai de validité d'une offre dans le cadre d'une procédure de marché public qui découlerait de l'interprétation jurisprudentielle du droit national et de la pratique d'une autorité est particulièrement préjudiciable pour les soumissionnaires établis dans d'autres États membres, dans la mesure où leur niveau de connaissance du droit national et de son interprétation ainsi que de la pratique des autorités nationales ne peut être comparé à celui des soumissionnaires nationaux (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 46).

23 Il ressort de la décision de renvoi que, dans l'affaire au principal, l'exclusion d'un opérateur économique de la procédure, en raison de l'expiration du délai de validité de son offre, n'est pas

explicitement prévue par la loi applicable ni dans l'avis de marché ou dans le cahier des charges.

24 Ainsi que le souligne la juridiction de renvoi, malgré plusieurs années de contentieux relatif à la loi sur les marchés publics et, notamment, à la question de l'expiration du délai de validité de l'offre, la jurisprudence polonaise a développé deux analyses différentes en parallèle, entraînant ainsi une situation d'insécurité juridique tant pour les opérateurs économiques que pour les pouvoirs adjudicateurs.

25 À cet égard, la Cour a déjà jugé que le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un opérateur économique de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect, par celui-ci, d'une obligation qui résulte non pas expressément des documents afférents à cette procédure ou de la loi nationale en vigueur, mais d'une interprétation de cette loi et de ces documents ainsi que du comblement des lacunes, de la part des autorités ou des juridictions administratives nationales, présentées par lesdits documents (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 51).

26 A fortiori, ces principes s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un opérateur économique de la procédure de passation d'un marché public, lorsque, en raison d'une jurisprudence nationale divergente, la condition dont le respect est exigé ne ressort même pas de l'interprétation des règles pertinentes par les juridictions compétentes.

27 Eu égard à l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent, il convient de répondre aux questions posées que l'article 2 de la directive 2004/18, le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un opérateur économique de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect, par cet opérateur, d'une obligation qui ne résulte pas expressément des documents afférents à cette procédure.

Sur les dépens

28 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (sixième chambre) dit pour droit :

L'article 2 de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un opérateur économique de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect, par cet opérateur, d'une obligation qui ne résulte pas expressément des documents afférents à cette procédure.

Signatures

---

* Langue de procédure : le polonais.

EU:C:2018:568

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

12 July 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2004/17/EC — Article 34 — Supply of spare parts for buses and trolley-buses — Technical specifications — Equivalent products — Whether proof of equivalence may be provided after the contract has been awarded)

In Case C-14/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), made by decision of 17 November 2016, received at the Court on 11 January 2017, in the proceedings

VARSrl,

Azienda Trasporti Milanesi SpA (ATM)

v

Iveco Orecchia SpA,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, C. Vajda, E. Juhász (Rapporteur), K. Jürimäe and C. Lycourgos, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: R. Schiano, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 6 December 2017,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– VAR Srl, by M. Goria and S.E. Viscio, avvocati, – Azienda Trasporti Milanesi SpA (ATM), by M. Zoppolato and A. Rho, avvocati, – Iveco Orecchia SpA, by F. Brunetti and F. Scanzano, avvocati,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by C. Colelli and C. Pluchino, avvocati dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and A. Tokár, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 28 February 2018,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 34 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between, on the one hand, VAR Srl and Azienda Trasporti Milanesi SpA ('ATM') and, on the other, Iveco Orecchia SpA concerning the award of a contract for the supply of original or equivalent spare parts for buses and trolley-buses bearing the IVECO mark.

Legal context

EU law

3 Recital 42 of Directive 2004/17 states:

'The technical specifications drawn up by purchasers should allow public procurement to be opened up to competition. To this end, it should be possible to submit tenders which reflect the diversity of technical solutions. Accordingly, it should be possible to draw up the technical specifications in terms of functional performance and requirements and, where reference is made to the European standard or, in the absence thereof, to the national standard, tenders based on other equivalent arrangements which meet the requirements of the contracting entities and are equivalent in terms of safety should be considered by the contracting entities. To demonstrate equivalence, tenderers should be permitted to use any form of evidence. Contracting entities should be able to provide a reason for any decision that equivalence does not exist in a given case. ...'

4 Article 10 of that directive, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts', provides:

'Contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

5 Article 34 of the directive, entitled 'Technical specifications', provides:

'1. Technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex XXI shall be set out in the contract documentation, such as contract notices, contract documents or additional documents. Whenever possible these technical specifications should be defined so as to take into account accessibility criteria for people with disabilities or design for all users.

2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening-up of public procurement to competition.

3. Without prejudice to legally binding national technical rules, to the extent that they are compatible with [EU] law, the technical specifications shall be formulated:

(a) either by reference to technical specifications defined in Annex XXI and, in order of preference, to national standards transposing European standards, European technical approvals, common technical specifications, international standards, other technical reference systems established by the European standardisation bodies or — when these do not exist — national standards, national technical approvals or national technical specifications relating to the design, calculation and execution of the works and use of the products. Each reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent";

(b) or in terms of performance or functional requirements; the latter may include environmental characteristics. However, such parameters must be sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject matter of the contract and to allow contracting entities to award the contract;

(c) or in terms of performance or functional requirements as mentioned in subparagraph (b), with reference to the specifications mentioned in subparagraph (a) as a means of presuming conformity with such performance or functional requirements;

(d) or by referring to the specifications mentioned in subparagraph (a) for certain characteristics, and by referring to the performance or functional requirements mentioned in subparagraph (b) for other characteristics.

4. Where a contracting entity makes use of the option of referring to the specifications mentioned in paragraph 3(a), it cannot reject a tender on the ground that the products and services tendered for do not comply with the specifications to which it has referred, once the tenderer proves in his tender to the satisfaction of the contracting entity, by whatever appropriate means, that the solutions which he proposes satisfy in an equivalent manner the requirements defined by the technical specifications.

An appropriate means might be constituted by a technical dossier from the manufacturer or a test report from a recognised body.

5. Where a contracting entity uses the option provided for in paragraph 3 of laying down performance or functional requirements, it may not reject a tender for products, services or works which comply with a national standard transposing a European standard, with a European technical approval, a common technical specification, an international standard, or a technical reference system established by a European standardisation body, if these specifications address the performance or functional requirements which it has laid down.

In his tender, the tenderer shall prove to the satisfaction of the contracting entity and by any appropriate means that the product, service or work in compliance with the standard meets the performance or functional requirements of the contracting entity.

An appropriate means might be constituted by a technical dossier from the manufacturer or a test report from a recognised body.

…

7. "Recognised bodies", within the meaning of this Article, are test and calibration laboratories, and certification and inspection bodies which comply with applicable European standards.

Contracting entities shall accept certificates from recognised bodies established in other Member States.

8. Unless justified by the subject matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or to a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted, on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract pursuant to paragraphs 3 and 4 is not possible; such reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent."'

6 Article 49 of Directive 2004/17, entitled 'Information to applicants for qualification, candidates and tenderers', provides, in the second indent of its paragraph 2:

'On request from the party concerned, contracting entities shall, as soon as possible, inform:

…

– any unsuccessful tenderer of the reasons for the rejection of his tender, including, for the cases referred to in Article 34(4) and (5), the reasons for their decision of non-equivalence or their decision that the works, supplies or services do not meet the performance or functional requirements.'

7 Paragraph 3 of Article 51 of the directive, entitled 'General provisions', provides:

'Contracting entities shall verify that the tenders submitted by the selected tenderers comply with the rules and requirements applicable to tenders and award the contract on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 55 and 57.'

Italian law

8 Article 68 of decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163, establishing the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), in the version in force at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, ('Legislative Decree No 163/2006') provides:

'1. Technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex VIII shall be set out in the contract documentation, such as contract notices, contract documents or additional documents. Whenever possible these technical specifications must be defined so as to take into account accessibility criteria for people with disabilities or design for all users and the protection of the environment.

2. Technical specifications must afford equal access for tenderers and must not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening-up of public procurement to competition.

3. Without prejudice to legally binding national technical rules, to the extent that they are compatible with Community law, the technical specifications shall be formulated:

(a) either by reference to technical specifications defined in Annex VIII and, in order of preference, to national standards transposing European standards, European technical approvals, common technical specifications, international standards, other technical reference systems established by the European standardisation bodies or — when these do not exist — to national standards, national technical approvals or national technical specifications relating to the design, calculation and execution of the works and use of the products. Each reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent";

…

4. Where a contracting authority makes use of the option of referring to the specifications mentioned in paragraph 3(a), it cannot reject a tender on the ground that the products and services tendered for do not comply with the specifications to which it has referred, once the tenderer proves in its tender to the satisfaction of the contracting authority, by whatever appropriate means, that the solutions which it proposes satisfy in an equivalent manner the requirements defined by the technical specifications.

5. An appropriate means might be constituted by a technical dossier of the manufacturer or a test report from a recognised body.

6. An economic operator proposing equivalent solutions to the requirements defined by the technical specifications shall make this known by a separate declaration, which it shall attach to its tender.

…

13. Unless justified by the subject matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract pursuant to paragraphs 3 and 4 is not possible and on condition that such reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent."'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

9 By a contract notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 25 February 2015, ATM launched an open public procurement procedure for the award of a contract for the 'supply of original spare parts and/or original equipment and/or equivalent for buses and trolley-buses manufactured by Iveco'.

10 The value of the contract was estimated at EUR 3 350 000 plus value added tax (VAT). The tenders were to be assessed according to the criterion of the lowest price, with the possibility of a further bid after the initial tenders, the basis for reopening the competition being the best tender submitted.

11 The spare parts to be supplied were set out in a list drawn up by ATM. That list referred expressly to parts of a specific make (FIAT/IVECO). The number of distinct spare parts to be offered in the tender was approximately 2 200.

12 According to the specifications in the contract documentation, ‘original spare parts’ meant parts made by the vehicle manufacturer itself, but also those made by the vehicle manufacturer’s suppliers in a position to certify that the parts had been made in compliance with the specifications and manufacturing standards defined by the vehicle manufacturer. ‘Equivalent spare parts’ were defined as spare parts made by any undertaking which certifies that the quality of those parts matches that of components used for the assembly of the vehicle and the spare parts supplied by the vehicle manufacturer.

13 So far as the detailed rules governing the tender are concerned, the contract documentation specified that each product tendered as an ‘equivalent’ to IVECO’s spare part had to be designated by the tenderer by the acronym ‘EQ’.

14 The contract documents also specified that, in the event of the contract being awarded, the supply of equivalent parts would be accepted by ATM only if those parts were the subject of certifications or certificates of equivalence to the originals of the products tendered.

15 Two undertakings participated in the procedure: Iveco Orecchia, which, as the exclusive concessionaire of the group manufacturing the spare parts concerned for north-west Italy, was in a position to offer original spare parts, and VAR. At the end of the tendering procedure, VAR was placed first in the ranking.

16 Iveco Orecchia brought an action for annulment of the decision awarding the contract to VAR before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Italy), which upheld the action. That court thereby annulled the decision on the ground, inter alia, that VAR had not, either when it submitted its tender or during the procurement procedure, provided proof that the products which it offered were equivalent to the original spare parts. VAR, supported by ATM, appealed against that judgment to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy). ATM, supported by VAR, also appealed against the judgment to that court, which proceeded to join the cases.

17 The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) points out that neither the wording of the specific rules governing the procurement procedure nor that of Article 68(13) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 provides that the proof that the product is equivalent to the original must be provided by the tenderer at the time of the call for tenders. In that regard, Article 68(13) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, which transposes Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 into national law, is to be distinguished from the case in which the contracting authority defines the products which are the subject matter of the tender in accordance with Article 68(3) of that legislative decree, namely, where the tenderer is required to prove at the tendering stage that the solutions which it proposes satisfy in an equivalent manner the requirements defined by the technical specifications. In addition, that court points out that account should also be taken of the technical specifications in the contract documentation, which provide that, in the case of equivalent products, equivalence must be attested by an appropriate certificate from the manufacturer, to be presented to the contracting authority at ‘the time of the first delivery of an equivalent spare part’. However, a systematic interpretation of Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 could require proof of equivalence to be furnished at the time when a tender is submitted.

18 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 be interpreted as meaning that it requires that proof that the products to be supplied are equivalent to the original products be presented at the stage of submission of the tender?

(2) In the alternative, if the answer to the first question is in the negative, which steps are required to ensure that there is respect for the principles of equal treatment and impartiality, of open competition and sound administration, and for other tenderers’ rights of defence and right to be heard?’

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

19 By its first question, the referring court asks whether Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as meaning that, when the technical specifications in the contract documentation refer to a specific mark, origin or production, the contracting authority must require the tenderer to submit, as part of its tender, proof that the products which it proposes are equivalent to those defined in the technical specifications.

20 According to Article 34(2) of Directive 2004/17, technical specifications must afford equal access for tenderers and must not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening-up of public procurement to competition.

21 It is in the light of that objective that Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 provides that technical specifications may not refer to a specific make or source, or to a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products, unless they are justified by the subject matter of the contract. Such a reference is to be permitted on an exceptional basis only, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract pursuant to Article 34(3) and (4) is not possible, and it must be accompanied by the words ‘or equivalent’.

22 That provision does not state at what point in time or by what means the ‘equivalent’ nature of a product offered by a tenderer must be proved.

23 In that regard, Article 34(3) to (5) of Directive 2004/17 expressly states that, where the technical specifications are determined by reference to certain standards or in terms of performance or functional requirements, or to a combination of those standards or requirements, the tenderer must prove in its tender that it satisfies the requirements in the contract documentation. It also follows from that article that proof can be provided by ‘any appropriate means’ and that, in that regard, ‘an appropriate means might be constituted by a technical dossier from the manufacturer or a test report from a recognised body’.

24 It thus follows from paragraphs 3 to 5 of Article 34 of Directive 2004/17 that those paragraphs define general rules concerning the formulation of the technical specifications, the means by which the tenderer can prove that its tender satisfies the requirements in those specifications and the stage at which that proof must be provided.

25 In relation to those general rules, Article 34(8) lays down specific rules governing the conditions under which a particular way of defining the content of the technical specifications, inter alia the reference to a specific make or source, or to a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production, is permitted.

26 The exception which it establishes, which, by its very nature, must be interpreted narrowly, does not cover the point in time at which the tenderer must prove that its tender satisfies the requirements in the technical specifications or the means of proof available to it. Those criteria therefore remain subject to the general rules set out in Article 34(3) to (5) of Directive 2004/17.

27 It follows that, when the contracting authority makes use of the option available to it under the second sentence of Article 34(8) of that directive, it must require the tenderer which wishes to avail itself of the possibility of tendering products equivalent to those defined by reference to a specific mark, origin or production to provide, at the time of submission of its tender, proof of the equivalence of the products concerned.

28 That interpretation is supported by several provisions of Directive 2004/17 and by the principles governing that directive.

29 First of all, the principle of equal treatment and the duty of transparency enshrined in Article 10 of that directive require, in particular, that tenderers must be in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the contracting authority, and constitute the basis of the EU rules on procedures for the award of public contracts (judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 37).

30 If a tenderer, in a procedure in respect of which the technical specifications have been defined in accordance with the specific method on an exceptional basis provided for in Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17, were permitted to prove the equivalence of its products after it had submitted its tender, the tenders submitted by all of the tenderers would not be subject to the same conditions at the time when they are assessed.

31 Article 51(3) of Directive 2004/17 provides that contracting entities must verify that the tenders submitted by the selected tenderers comply with the rules and requirements applicable to tenders. Likewise, it is apparent from the second indent of Article 49(2) and from recital 42 of that directive that contracting entities should be able to provide a reason for any decision that equivalence does not exist.

32 Such verification and the possible adoption of a decision that equivalence does not exist can, however, take place only after the tenders have been opened, when they are assessed by the contracting entity, which means that that entity must have evidence that enables it to assess whether and to what extent the tenders submitted satisfy the requirements in the technical specifications, as otherwise it will run the risk that the principle of equal treatment may be infringed and that the tendering procedure may be vitiated by an irregularity.

33 With regard to the means by which tenderers can prove the equivalence of the solutions which they propose, the provisions of Article 34(4) and (5) of Directive 2004/17 are also applicable in procedures where the specific method of formulating the technical specifications, provided for in Article 34(8), has been adopted, which means that the use of any appropriate means is permitted.

34 As a result, although the contracting entity cannot permit tenderers to prove the equivalence of the solutions which they propose after they have submitted their tenders, that entity has a discretion in determining the means that may be used by tenderers to prove such equivalence in their tenders. That discretion must, however, be exercised in such a way that the means of proof allowed by the contracting entity actually enable that entity to carry out a meaningful assessment of the tenders submitted to it and do not go beyond what is necessary in order to do so, by preventing those means of proof from creating unjustified obstacles to the opening-up of public procurement to competition, in breach of Article 34(2) of Directive 2004/17.

35 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first question is that Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as meaning that, when the technical specifications in the contract documentation refer to a specific mark, origin or production, the contracting authority must require the tenderer to submit, already in its tender, proof that the products which it proposes are equivalent to those defined in the technical specifications.

The second question

36 In the light of the answer to the first question, there is no need to answer the second question.

Costs

37 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors must be interpreted as meaning that, when the technical specifications in the contract documentation refer to a specific mark, origin or production, the contracting authority must require the tenderer to submit, already in its tender, proof that the products which it proposes are equivalent to those defined in the technical specifications.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Italian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 28 February 2018(1)

Case C-14/17

VAR, Srl

v

Iveco Orecchia SpA,

intervener:

Azienda de Trasporti Milanesi SpA — (ATM)

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy))

(Preliminary-ruling proceedings — Transport contract — Supply of spare parts for buses, trolley-buses and tramways — Technical specifications — Products equivalent to those covered by a specific trade mark — Proof of equivalence — National law pursuant to which proof of equivalence may be provided after the contract is awarded)

1. Contracting authorities are required to define, in the contract documents they publish, the characteristics of the works, services or supplies of goods which they propose to purchase in the context of public procurement. Those characteristics may include the ‘technical specifications’ of the goods or services concerned.

2. A biased description of those technical specifications may, at the very least, amount to a significant ‘barrier to entry’ for certain tenderers and, in extreme cases, predetermine (including fraudulently) the final choice of successful tenderer if characteristics of products or services are stipulated which that tenderer alone is in a position to supply.

3. The concern to prevent these irregular practices and the intention to ‘allow public procurement to be opened up to competition’ (2) led the EU legislature to lay down legislative provisions in this area. Those provisions include Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17/EC, (3) which is applicable to these proceedings and provides that, on an exceptional basis, it is possible to ‘refer … to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production’, provided that such reference is accompanied by the words ‘or equivalent’.

4. In the proceedings to be decided by the Italian court, the contract documents used that derogating provision, stating that the contract was for the ‘supply of original spare parts and/or original equipment and/or equivalent for buses, trolley-buses and tramways manufactured by Iveco’.

5. The dispute does not concern the validity of that technical specification as such (since it respected the right to supply equivalent parts) but rather the time when a tenderer must provide the certificate of equivalence of the parts.

6. According to the contract documents, proof of equivalence could be presented to the contracting authority after the award of the contract, at ‘the time of the first delivery of an equivalent spare part’. However, the referring court wonders whether that clause may be incompatible with Article 34 of Directive 2004/17. That would be the case if, in accordance with that provision, proof of equivalence must be attached to the tender or, in any event, must be furnished before the contract is awarded.

I. Legal framework

A. EU law. Directive 2004/17

7. Article 34 provides:

‘1. Technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex XXI shall be set out in the contract documentation, such as contract notices, contract documents or additional documents. Whenever possible these technical specifications should be defined so as to take into account accessibility criteria for people with disabilities or design for all users.

2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.

3. Without prejudice to legally binding national technical rules, to the extent that they are compatible with Community law, the technical specifications shall be formulated:

(a) either by reference to technical specifications defined in Annex XXI and, in order of preference, to national standards transposing European standards, European technical approvals, common technical specifications, international standards, other technical reference systems established by the European standardisation bodies or — when these do not exist — national standards, national technical approvals or national technical specifications relating to the design, calculation and execution of the works and use of the products. Each reference shall be accompanied by the words “or equivalent”;

(b) or in terms of performance or functional requirements; the latter may include environmental characteristics. However, such parameters must be sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject matter of the contract and to allow contracting entities to award the contract;

(c) or in terms of performance or functional requirements as mentioned in subparagraph (b), with reference to the specifications mentioned in subparagraph (a) as a means of presuming conformity with such performance or functional requirements;

(d) or by referring to the specifications mentioned in subparagraph (a) for certain characteristics, and by referring to the performance or functional requirements mentioned in subparagraph (b) for other characteristics.

4. Where a contracting entity makes use of the option of referring to the specifications mentioned in paragraph 3(a), it cannot reject a tender on the ground that the products and services tendered for do not comply with the specifications to which it has referred, once the tenderer proves in his tender to the satisfaction of the contracting entity, by whatever appropriate means, that the solutions which he proposes satisfy in an equivalent manner the requirements defined by the technical specifications.

An appropriate means might be constituted by a technical dossier from the manufacturer or a test report from a recognised body.

…

8. Unless justified by the subject matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or to a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted, on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract pursuant to paragraphs 3 and 4 is not possible; such reference shall be accompanied by the words “or equivalent”.’

8. Under the heading ‘Criteria for qualitative selection’, Article 54 provides:

‘1. Contracting entities which establish selection criteria in an open procedure shall do so in accordance with objective rules and criteria ...’

B. Italian law

9. In accordance with Article 68(13) of Legislative Decree No 163 of 2006: (4)

‘Unless justified by the subject matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such references are permitted on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract pursuant to paragraphs 3 and 4 is not possible, on condition that they are accompanied by the expression “or equivalent”.’

II. Facts of the dispute and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10. The Azienda Trasporti Milanese (‘ATM’) launched an open procedure (5) for the award of a contract for the ‘supply of original spare parts and/or original equipment and/or equivalent for buses, trolley-buses and tramways manufactured by Iveco’.

11. The value of the contract was EUR 3 350 000.00 plus VAT, for the supply of 2 195 IVECO/FIAT-branded spare parts, or equivalent. The award criterion was the lowest price, with the possibility of a further bid after the initial tenders and between the tenderers placed first in the ranking.

12. The contract documents stipulated that:

– ‘Original spare parts’ meant either spare parts ‘made by the vehicle manufacturer itself’ or spare parts ‘made by the vehicle manufacturer’s suppliers … which are certified by the producer as having been manufactured according to the specifications and production standards defined by the vehicle manufacturer’.

– ‘Equivalent spare parts’ were defined as spare parts ‘made by any undertaking which certifies that the quality of those parts matches that of components used for the assembly of the vehicle and the spare parts supplied by the vehicle manufacturer’. (6)

13. The contract documents stated that ‘at the time of the first delivery of an equivalent spare part, the supplier must provide the certificate of equivalence to the original, this being a necessary condition for acceptance of the product’. (7)

14. Only VAR, s.r.l., tendering for equivalent spare parts, and Iveco Orecchia, s.p.a., tendering for original spare parts, took part in the tendering procedure. The contract was awarded to VAR.

15. Iveco Orecchia contested that decision before the Tribunal Amministrativo Regionale della Lombardia — Milano (Regional Administrative Court of Lombardy — Milan, Italy), which, by judgment No 679 of 11 April 2016, upheld the action.

16. The lower court held that it was the responsibility of the tenderer, pursuant to Article 68 of Legislative Decree No 163 of 2006, to prove, during the procedure, that the spare parts proposed were equivalent to the originals. Accordingly, VAR should be excluded since it had stated its willingness to supply spare parts equivalent to the originals (as permitted by the lex specialis) without providing, either with its tender or during the course of the tendering procedure, the certificates of equivalence to the original products or any other proof.

17. That judgment is the subject of an appeal before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), which points out that the contract documents did not require the tenderer to provide proof of equivalence before the contract was awarded but rather at the time of the first delivery of the spare parts.

18. That court takes the view that, since the Italian provision implementing Directive 2004/17 is a verbatim copy of Article 34(8) of that directive, any conflict between national law and EU law can, in principle, be ruled out. However, the referring court is uncertain whether Directive 2004/17 should be interpreted systematically, such that, pursuant to it, proof of equivalence must be furnished at the time when the tender is submitted.

19. Against that background, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) seeks a preliminary ruling from the Court on the following questions:

‘(a) Must Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17/EC be interpreted as meaning that it requires that proof that the products to be supplied are equivalent to the original products be presented at the stage of submission of the tender?

(b) In the alternative, in the event that Question (a) on interpretation is to be answered in the negative: Which steps are required to ensure that there is respect for the principles of equal treatment and impartiality, of open competition and sound administration, and for other tenderers’ rights of defence and right to be heard?’

III. Summary of the parties’ observations

20. VAR and the ATM submit that the first question must be answered in the negative. Relying on the fact that the interpretation of provisions of EU law must take account not only of the wording of those provisions but also of their context and the aim which they pursue, VAR and the ATM argue that:

– Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 contains no requirement that tenderers must present proof of equivalence with their tenders.

– In the cases referred to in Article 34(3) and (4) of Directive 2004/17, the quality of the goods to be supplied is described. Accordingly, a tender who proposes to submit a tender relating to the goods referred to in paragraph 4, whose technical features do not match those set out in the technical specifications of the contract documents, will have to prove that the alternatives he proposes are functionally equivalent in order to meet the contracting authority’s requirements.

– However, in the case referred to in Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17, the features, functions and performance of the product to be supplied are not described; all that is required is the supply of the product defined in the contract documents, albeit from a source different to that of the product made by the original manufacturer because these are cases where such a description is not possible without reference to a specific trade mark.

– In that situation, in order to protect free competition, tenderers are allowed to tender for equivalent products, even though these are covered by a different trade mark, without having to present proof of equivalence under Article 34(3) and (4) of Directive 2004/17. A converse interpretation would lead to unfair outcomes and it would be difficult to understand why, where the contracting authority used a reference to a trade mark with the intention of simplifying the procedure, the tenderer should be in a more unfavourable situation than if the traditional methods of defining the technical features had been used.

– the requirement that proof of equivalence must be provided with the tender is incompatible with the objective of enabling the opening-up of public procurement to competition, for it means that proof of equivalence must be available in advance, in relation to a large number (sometimes thousands) of products which, ultimately, the administrative authorities may not purchase. It is, therefore, an unnecessary and onerous burden which makes it excessively difficult for the suppliers of ‘equivalent products’ to participate in such procedures, to the benefit of distributors of original spare parts and vehicle manufacturers.

– The Commission notice of 28 May 2010 on Supplementary guidelines on vertical restraints in agreements for the sale and repair of motor vehicles and for the distribution of spare parts for motor vehicles (8) confirms, as regards competition policy in the motor vehicle sector, the need to protect access by spare parts manufacturers to the second-hand market. That ensures that competing brands of spare parts continue to be available to both independent and authorised repairers, as well as to wholesale distributors.

21. As regards the second question, VAR and the ATM submit that the mechanisms for guaranteeing respect for the principles which the referring court cites are derived from the documents governing the tendering procedure, as determined by the contracting authority.

22. Iveco Orecchia, the Italian Government and the Commission maintain that Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 does not require that proof of equivalence be furnished with the tender but, interpreted systematically, it leads to that conclusion.

23. Iveco Orecchia and the Italian Government submit that proof of equivalence must be presented with the tender, whereas the Commission submits that it is sufficient if proof is presented during the tendering procedure, provided this is done before the contract is awarded. Their arguments may be summarised as follows:

– Although Article 34(4) and (5) of Directive 2004/17 indicates the tender as the stage when a tenderer must provide proof of equivalence, the fact that Article 34(8) remains silent on that point does not meant that there is a derogation from that rule.

– The purpose of Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 is, first, to prohibit the use in the tender documents of technical specifications referring to a specific make or source and, second, to indicate the exceptional circumstances in which such wording is permitted. Since that is the specific content given to the provision by the EU legislature, it is unsurprising that the legislature did not find it necessary to state, in addition, the time when proof of equivalence must be included.

– Regardless of the subject matter of the contract, proof of equivalence is aimed at enabling the contracting authority to verify the extent to which a tenderer is capable of complying with the contractual conditions. That proof must be provided during the procedure for the award of the contract, for, at the end of that procedure, the contracting authority must decide on the award of the contract on the basis of the tender which best satisfies the terms of the conditions governing the invitation to tender.

– A different interpretation would lead to conflict between Article 34(4) and (5), on the one hand, and Article 34(8), on the other, of Directive 2004/17, contrary to the principle of equal treatment. If tenderers were permitted to provide proof of equivalence after the contract had been awarded, the tenders would no longer be comparable and some tenders might have presented such evidence whilst others might have chosen to do so later.

– More important still, the contracting authority would run the risk of undertaking to purchase products not suitable for meeting its requirements, which would leave it with the only option of declaring the contract null and void, which, Iveco Orecchia, the Italian Government and the Commission state, was not the EU legislature's intention when it drafted Directive 2004/17.

– That interpretation is confirmed by other provisions of Directive 2004/17, such as Article 49(2), second indent, which provides that 'contracting entities shall, as soon as possible, inform … any unsuccessful tenderer of the reasons for the rejection of his tender, including … the reasons for their decision of non-equivalence or their decision that the works, supplies or services do not meet the performance or functional requirements'. Naturally this means that the examination of the equivalence of the product, to the product described in the contract documents, through the use of technical specifications, must take place before the contract is awarded.

– Article 51(3) of Directive 2004/17 takes the same line. Proof of equivalence is essential in order to verify that the tender complies with the technical specifications, which must be done, in all cases, before the contract is awarded.

IV. Procedure before the Court of Justice

24. The order for reference was received at the Registry of the Court on 11 January 2017.

25. Written observations were lodged by VAR, Iveco Orecchia, the ATM, the Italian Government and the European Commission. All those parties, with the exception of the Italian Government, attended the hearing held on 6 December 2017.

V. Assessment

A. Introductory remarks

26. As I have pointed out above, the formulation of technical specifications in the terms governing public procurement procedures may have a significant (possibly negative) effect on competition, by erecting unjustified barriers to the participation of economic operators.

27. The EU legislature's concern in that regard is quite clear and that is why it included in Article 34(2) of Directive 2004/17 the rule that 'technical specifications shall … not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition'. (9)

28. Since the contract at issue concerns the supply of spare parts for motor vehicles, I believe it is helpful, before analysing Directive 2004/17, to recall that, in the motor vehicle sector, the EU legislature combined the protection of competition with a system of block exemptions, reflected in Regulation (EC) No 1400/2002. (10) Within the framework of that regulation, the EU legislature sought specifically to preserve competition (11) between original spare parts and spare parts of matching quality. (12)

29. The Commission shares that aim, which led it to adopt, in 2010, supplementary guidelines on Regulation No 461/2010. In point 18 of those guidelines the Commission points out that their objective is 'to protect access by spare parts manufacturers to the motor vehicle aftermarkets, thereby ensuring that competing brands of spare parts continue to be available to both independent and authorised repairers, as well as to parts wholesalers'.

30. The Commission observes in those guidelines that 'the availability of [spare parts] brings considerable benefits to consumers, especially since there are often large differences in price between parts sold or resold by a car manufacturer and alternative parts'. (13) The restriction of competition may harm consumers in particular by 'limiting the choice of products, lowering their quality or reducing the level of product innovation'. (14)

31. Whilst the protection of competition in relation to vertical agreements focuses on the market power of producers and its effect in controlling supply, public procurement is more concerned with the sphere of demand. However, the same effect of limiting supply may be felt from the perspective of a contracting authority which demands goods or services if it sets out technical specifications which unjustifiably reduce the pool of potential tenderers. On that basis, the benefits of competition in the area of private contracts may be transposed to the area of public contracts.

32. The legislative intervention referred to suggests that, in the sector of private procurement of motor vehicle spare parts, the principle of opening-up to competition must foster a trend whereby original spare parts and spare parts of matching quality can be supplied on an equal footing. That same trend must, a fortiori, apply to public procurement.

B. The first question

33. The inclusion, in invitations to tender for public contracts or in the relevant contract documents, of technical specifications which refer to a specific trade mark was examined by the Court before the adoption of the 2004 directives on public procurement.

34. While Directive 77/62/EEC (15) was in force, the Court examined, in Commission v Netherlands, (16) a term in a public contract which named the UNIX operating system without including the words 'or equivalent'. The Court found that 'the fact that the term UNIX was not followed by the words "or equivalent" may … deter economic operators using systems similar to UNIX from taking part in the tendering procedure'.

35. That line of case-law continued while Directive 93/37/EEC was in force. (17) In Commission v Austria, (18) the Court upheld the Commission's complaint that Austria's wording of the technical specification in the contract documents for a public contract 'had the effect of favouring "Unix products"', thereby infringing Article 10(6) of Directive 93/37.

36. The idea underpinning those judgments was that where, on an exceptional basis, it is permitted to use a trade mark to define the technical specifications, the category of persons targeted needs to be widened through use of the words 'or equivalent'. That enables the participation of tenderers other than those who manufacture the original articles, thus helping to prevent the creation of unjustified obstacles to the opening-up of public procurement to competition.

37. Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 contains no legislative direction regarding the time when proof of equivalence of spare parts must be provided to the contracting authority. That silence allows Member States to lay down rules of national law governing this matter in accordance with their own criteria, either using a general provision or granting discretion to their contracting authorities. However, they must be guided by the basic principles underpinning public procurement. (19)

38. Must Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17, in conjunction with Article 34(3) and (4) thereof, be interpreted as meaning that the certificate of equivalence must, of necessity, be provided with a tenderer's tender? The arguments relied on by those who opt for that approach are not without merit from the perspective of ensuring that the right contractor is selected. (20)

39. Such proof of equivalence is one of the criteria by means of which the contracting authority establishes whether a tenderer is in a position to meet his contractual obligations. It must, therefore, be provided before the contract is awarded because otherwise the only option would be to terminate the contract on the grounds that the contractor is in breach of his obligations.

40. Furthermore, given that Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 simply lays down the general prohibition of technical specifications which refer to a specific trade mark and defines the exceptional circumstances in which that is permitted, it is necessary to apply the same criteria as those in paragraphs 3 and 4. In line with those criteria, it appears that proof must accompany the tender.

41. Whilst that line of reasoning is acceptable, it is possible that it does not take into account other elements of the decision-making process. In particular, Article 34(3) and (4) of Directive 2004/17 allows contracting authorities considerable latitude, when drawing up technical specifications, to deal with the objectives of a contract from a functional point of view, meaning that tenderers may submit alternatives which satisfy those objectives, including, obviously, solutions equivalent to those sought in the contract documents. That is why it makes sense that, in those cases, the contracting authority should have the assessment criteria for the different tenders, including proof of equivalence, at its disposal from the outset.

42. The situation changes slightly when the technical specifications refer directly to a trade mark or a product model, as in this case. The general rule, laid down in Article 34(4) of 2004/17, that technical specifications must be openly worded is reaffirmed in Article 34(8), which prohibits the unjustified restriction of the field of assessment.

43. The reason for a specific reference to a trade mark, patent or similar concept (provided that the words 'or equivalent' are added) is that the scope for vagueness disappears. Where, for example, it is only possible to supply vehicle spare parts covered by a single trade mark (in this case, IVECO), or their equivalent, the contracting authority has already chosen to provide 'a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract'. That is the crucial difference vis-à-vis Article 34(3) and (4) of Directive 2004/17, which allows the requirements concerning certificates of equivalence to be treated differently. (21)

44. It is the contracting authority which is best placed to define its requirements by means of technical specifications. In a situation like that in the main proceedings, where the only option is to supply spare parts for a specific type of vehicle, the definition by reference to a trade mark appears to be appropriate and no one disputes it.

45. The Commission draws attention to the fact that the lack of prior certification of equivalence creates the risk for the contracting authority of purchasing a number of unsuitable products and being obliged to terminate the contract. To bolster its argument regarding selection of the best candidate, the Commission cites the judgment in CoNISMa, (22) in which the Court held that the harmonisation of the directives on procurement was also carried out in the interests of contracting authorities.

46. That judgment undoubtedly draws attention to the position of the public procuring entity, which is required to uphold the general interest. However, like others before and after it, the judgment also points out that 'one of the primary objectives of Community rules on public procurement is to attain the widest possible opening-up to competition … and that it is the concern of Community law to ensure the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders'. (23) In addition, I repeat, while that judgment refers to the interest of the contracting authority, it does so in so far as wider participation allows the contracting authority 'greater choice as to the most advantageous tender which is most suitable for the needs of the public authority in question'. (24)

47. Nevertheless, neither that judgment nor those cited above directly address the issue raised in this reference for a preliminary ruling: when, in accordance with Directive 2004/17, is a tenderer who tenders for equivalent spare parts required to provide documentary proof that those spare parts match the originals?

48. The concern not to undermine the success of the procedure is of course legitimate and that could occur where a contracting authority which has not required such proof at the outset is ultimately faced with the fact that the successful tenderer is not able to prove the equivalence of its spare parts.

49. However, that concern cannot override the fundamental principles of public procurement, in particular, the principle that tenderers must be guaranteed equal access and must not be faced with 'unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition'. I shall refer to both of these principles below.

50. The principle of equal treatment is not infringed if all tenderers are afforded the opportunity to provide their certificates of equivalence at the time of delivery of spare parts. Contrary to what one of the parties has argued, that requirement does not destabilise the position of tenderers, who are free, at their own choice, to attach that proof to their tenders or to wait until the outcome of the award procedure. All that is required of them, from that perspective, is that they comply with the relevant term, which must be clear and must be applied without exceptions. (25)

51. I do not believe, therefore, that the equal treatment of tenderers is jeopardised because proof of equivalence may be submitted during the stage of performance of the contract. On the contrary, requirement of such proof at an earlier stage could discriminate against tenderers by giving a manufacturer of original spare parts an advantage over a tenderer who tenders for equivalent spare parts, where the latter has not already made those parts. It must be assumed that, in many cases (and this would be one), a tenderer who tenders for equivalent spare parts is not in possession, beforehand, of all the certificates relating to each model.

52. There was a debate at the hearing regarding how a contracting authority could evaluate the quality of the products to be supplied before the award of the contract if proof that those products are not of 'matching quality' is not provided. It is helpful to refer to the Supplementary Guidelines for a clearer definition of the term 'matching quality' as applied to motor vehicle spare parts. (26)

53. Those guidelines establish a rebuttable presumption of qualitative suitability, in accordance with which the recipient of spare parts (in this case, the contracting authority) can be confident that the products made available to him, even though they are of equivalent quality, will meet the necessary requirements for the assigned function. When applied to the area of public procurement, that presumption helps to place all suppliers on an equal footing. (27)

54. An analysis from the perspective of the widest possible opening-up of procurement to competition supports that view: the duty to provide certificates of equivalence before the contract is awarded may, depending on the circumstances of each call for tenders, become a disproportionate obstacle which impedes the participation of economic operators seeking to tender for their products. (28)

55. The contract announced by ATM is a good example of a tendering procedure in which the contracting authority may reasonably be allowed sufficient latitude to set the standard of ex post facto proof that it stipulated in the contract documents. If it had imposed the obligation to provide the certificate of equivalence with the tender, a candidate tendering for non-original spare parts would have been obliged either to manufacture each of the parts (in the main proceedings, 2 195) 'as a precaution' or to have certificates (in the same amount) for all the parts to be supplied. However, a manufacturer of original spare parts would have the advantage of all the parts already being made.

56. According to the contract documents, the decisive criterion in the call for tenders published by ATM was the 'most economically advantageous tender', which was identified following the bids of the two tenderers which submitted tenders. Before that time, the contracting authority was required to weigh up each tenderer's suitability by evaluating, inter alia other factors, their technical ability to perform the contract.

57. In fact, the arguments put forward by those who maintain that the certificates of equivalence should, of necessity, have been submitted before the award of the contract make proof of equivalence the decisive driver in the evaluation of technical ability.

58. I believe, however, that a contracting authority may use other criteria to evaluate candidates' technical ability, (29) even if the certificates of equivalence for each of the parts sought in the call for tenders are not provided at the outset. To put it another way, proof that a manufacturer or supplier of non-original spare parts has the necessary technical ability to perform the contract may be provided by other means (for example, by requiring a certain amount of previous experience in the manufacture or supply of spare parts, even if these are covered by other trade marks).

59. Indeed, the tender specifications published by ATM contained a reference to the 'information and formalities required for evaluating conformity with the criteria' relating to technical ability. (30) In those tender specifications, candidates were asked, inter alia other requirements, for documentary proof that they had 'carried out successfully in the last three years (2012-2013-2014) the supply of original spare parts … or equivalent for buses, trolley-buses or commercial vehicles manufactured by IVECO' and that they had 'concluded successfully in the last three years … at least two contracts for the supply of the abovementioned products, for a value exceeding EUR 750 000'. (31)

60. Tender specifications worded in that way are, in themselves, restrictive, for they limit the class of person targeted to those who have already made spare parts under the IVECO brand, whether original or equivalent, which prevents other manufacturers from participating. In my view, the contracting authority, which had already imposed those strict conditions, could reasonably have taken them into account as criteria for evaluating the technical ability of the tenderers, without having to impose on them the additional requirement that they provide, at the outset, certificates of equivalence for the 2 195 parts to which the supply contract refers. (32)

61. Those considerations lead me to propose a negative answer to the first question referred for a preliminary ruling: limiting the uncertainty of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) to the question of whether Article 34(8) of Directive 2004/17 requires that proof of equivalence be presented at the stage of submission of the tender, the answer must be not necessarily.

62. That provision does not lay down such an obligation because it leaves the Member State (or, if the national legislation allows, the contracting authority) free to stipulate when certificates of equivalence must be presented. It does not predetermine a single solution because the legislature decided, wisely, that it should be the Member States and their contracting authorities which weigh up the advantages and disadvantages of choosing one or other solution.

63. In a situation like that in the instant case, in view of the number of spare parts for which certificates of equivalence were required, I believe it is appropriate that submission of the relevant certificates of equivalence should be accepted at a time after submission of the initial tenders or even after the award of the contract, since the contract documents include strict criteria for confirming the technical ability of tenderers.

64. I must add a final point, in line with those I made in the Opinion in Specializuotas transportas, (33) concerning a requirement 'which is not set out in the contract documents, is not provided for in national law and is not laid down in Directive 2004/18'. Where a tenderer has relied on the terms of the tender specifications which allow him, expressly, to provide the certificates of equivalence subsequently, refusal to allow those certificates to be provided subsequently will not pass the transparency test which the Court required, observing that 'the principles of transparency and equal treatment which govern all procedures for the award of public contracts require the substantive and procedural conditions concerning participation in a contract to be clearly defined in advance and made public, in particular the obligations of tenderers, in order that those tenderers may know exactly the procedural requirements and be sure that the same requirements apply to all candidates'. (34)

65. I therefore propose a negative reply to the first question referred for a preliminary ruling.

C. The second question

66. The second question is raised in case the first question is answered in the negative, as I propose. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) asks the Court how respect for the principles of equal treatment and impartiality, of open competition and sound administration, and for other tenderers' rights of defence and right to be heard are to be ensured.

67. The question is excessively general and the order for reference does not explain why those principles would be jeopardised if the certificate of equivalence were accepted after submission of the tender.

68. The order for reference (correctly) emphasises the issues of interpretation relating to the various articles of Directive 2004/17, but, I repeat, it includes no actual reference (by the referring court) (35) to those principles.

69. The Court's role in references for preliminary rulings is not to make abstract declarations concerning how certain general principles might be applied but rather to provide the national court with an interpretation of EU law which may be useful to it when it decides on the proceedings before it.

70. From that point of view, the considerations which I set out when proposing the answer to the first question already provide the referring court with sufficient interpretative guidance on the application to the instant case of at least some of the principles to which it refers: equal treatment, promotion of competition and impartiality of the contracting authority.

71. As regards the remaining principles referred to, I fail to see why the rights of defence and the principle that all tenderers (and perhaps all litigants) should be heard would be affected, whatever the reply to the first question. The two operators which took part in the tendering procedure at issue were able to explain their arguments, in favour of or against ATM's decision, before the national courts, without any infringement of their rights to a fair trial and to judicial protection (which, obviously, does not have to coincide with the success of their respective claims in the proceedings).

72. As regards the right to sound administration, presumably, in the context of the reference for a preliminary ruling, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) was seeking to refer to the principle of good administration enshrined in Article 41 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. Suffice it to state, in that connection, that that right may be exercised as against institutions, bodies, offices and agencies of the European Union and, therefore, may not be relied on as against a transport undertaking of a Member State which operates as a company limited by shares, as is the case of ATM (even if it could be treated in the same way as a public authority under national law).

73. In those circumstances, I believe that it is not necessary to reply to the second question.

VI. Conclusion

74. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court reply as follows to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy):

> Article 34(3), (4) and (8) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors must be interpreted as meaning that it does not require a tenderer to provide with his tender certificates confirming that motor vehicle spare parts are equivalent to the originals where:
>
> – the technical specifications in the contract documents have been expressed, on an exceptional basis, by a reference to a specific trade mark ‘or equivalent’; and
>
> – the contract documents have also stipulated that those certificates may be submitted at the time of the first delivery of an equivalent spare part.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Recital 29 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

---

3 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1).

---

4 Legislative Decree of 12 April 2006 implementing Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18 (GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006).

---

5 The contract notice was published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 25 February 2015 (2015/S 039-067523).

---

6 Document entitled ‘specifica tecnica’, paragraphs 2.1 and 2.2.

---

7 Ibid., paragraph 5.

---

8 (OJ 2010 C 138, p. 16; ‘Supplementary Guidelines’).

---

9 Article 60(2) of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17 is identically worded (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243).

---

10 Commission Regulation of 31 July 2002 on the application of Article 81(3) of the Treaty to categories of vertical agreements and concerted practices in the motor vehicle sector (known as the ‘Monti Regulation’; OJ 2002 L 203, p. 30), which was replaced, following its expiry on 31 May 2010, by Commission Regulation (EU) No 461/2010 of 27 May 2010 on the application of Article 101(3) of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union to categories of vertical agreements and concerted practices in the motor vehicle sector (OJ 2010 L 129, p. 52).

---

11 Recital 23 of Regulation No 1400/2002 states: ‘In order to ensure effective competition on the repair and maintenance markets and to allow repairers to offer end users competing spare parts such as original spare parts and spare parts of matching quality, the exemption should not cover vertical agreements which restrict the ability of authorised repairers within the distribution system of a vehicle manufacturer, independent distributors of spare parts, independent repairers or end users to source spare parts from the manufacturer of such spare parts or from another third party of their choice.’ Recital 17 in the preamble to Regulation No 461/2010 is similarly worded, albeit from the perspective of restricting spare parts manufacturers’ ability to sell spare parts and not from that of the ability to purchase spare parts.

---

12 According to Article 1(1)(u) of Regulation No 1400/2002, ‘“spare parts of matching quality” means exclusively spare parts made by any undertaking which can certify at any moment that the parts in question match the quality of the components which are or were used for the assembly of the motor vehicles in question’.

---

13 Supplementary Guidelines, point 18.

---

14 Ibid., point 28.

---

15 Council Directive of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1).

---

16 Judgment of 24 January 1995 (C-359/93, EU:C:1995:14, paragraphs 23 to 28). The subsequent order of 3 December 2001, Vestergaard (C-59/00, EU:C:2001:654, paragraph 22), refers to that judgment.

---

17 Council Directive of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54).

---

18 Judgment of 28 October 1999 (C-328/96, EU:C:1999:526, paragraph 68, in conjunction with paragraph 78).

---

19 Recital 9 of Directive 2004/17 refers to the opening up to competition of public procurement contracts, and respect for the principle of equal treatment, of which the principle of non-discrimination is no more than a specific expression, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality, as well as the principle of transparency.

---

20 The rules governing technical specifications have not altered in Directive 2014/25 (Article 60), for, in addition to the general rule (paragraph 3), there remains the exceptional rule (paragraph 4) which permits reference to be made to a trade mark ‘where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract pursuant to [the general rule] is not possible’, and requires that such reference be accompanied by the words ‘or equivalent’. Paragraphs 5 and 6 provide that proof of equivalence must be furnished in the tender in the case referred to in paragraph 3 but not in the cases referred to in paragraph 4.

---

21 Those same considerations are applicable, mutatis mutandis, to Articles 49 and 51 of Directive 2004/17, relied on by one of the parties in the proceedings.

---

22 Judgment of 23 December 2009 (C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807).

---

23 Ibid., paragraph 37.

---

24 Ibid., paragraph 37 in fine.

---

25 The Court repeated in the judgment of 13 July 2017, Ingsteel and Metrostav, C-76/16, EU:C:2017:549, paragraph 34, that 'the principle of equal treatment requires tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions. Second, the obligation of transparency, which is its corollary, is intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. That obligation implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or tender specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 36 and the case-law cited).'

---

26 Points 19 and 20 of those guidelines differentiate between 'original' spare parts and those of 'matching quality'. The latter are spare parts 'of a sufficiently high quality that their use does not endanger the reputation of the authorised network in question. As with any other selection standard, the motor vehicle manufacturer may bring evidence that a given spare part does not meet this requirement'.

---

27 The use of 'self-declarations' or similar legal forms, by means of which economic operators declare, in the initial stage, that they are in a position to supply the goods tendered for, subject to later final verification by the authorities, is permitted in a number of articles of Directive 2014/24.

---

28 In that connection, see recital 84 in the preamble to Directive 2014/24: 'Many economic operators, and not least SMEs, find that a major obstacle to their participation in public procurement consists in administrative burdens deriving from the need to produce a substantial number of certificates or other documents related to exclusion and selection criteria. Limiting such requirements, for example through use of a European Single Procurement Document (ESPD) consisting of an updated self-declaration, could result in considerable simplification for the benefit of both contracting authorities and economic operators.'

---

29 Directive 2014/24 includes an Annex XII, concerning 'means of proof of selection criteria', part II of which refers specifically to 'means providing evidence of the economic operators' technical abilities, as referred to in Article 58'.

---

30 Paragraph III.2.3 of the document entitled 'Aviso di gara- Settori speciale'.

---

31 Paragraph 6.1.A. points III and IV of the document 'disciplinare di gara'.

---

32 Iveco Orecchia has merely drawn attention to the (alleged) obligation to attach the certificate of equivalence to the tender, without calling into question its competitor's technical ability to perform the contract.

---

33 C-531/16, EU:C:2017:883, paragraphs 47 and 48.

---

34 Judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 37).

---

35 In fact, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) merely accepts the proposal to refer a number of the questions formulated by Iveco Orecchia. In particular, it does not explain why it accepts, as the second question, the question at b1) of that proposal.

EU:C:2018:142

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Third Chamber)

1 March 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2004/18/EC — Tendering procedure for public contracts for farm advisory services — Whether or not there is a public contract — Scheme for obtaining services open to any economic operator who satisfies previously established conditions — Scheme not subsequently open to other economic operators)

In Case C-9/17,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court, Finland), made by decision of 22 December 2016, received at the Court on 9 January 2017, in the proceedings brought by

Maria Tirkkonen,

intervener:

Maaseutuvirasto,

THE COURT (Third Chamber),

composed of L. Bay Larsen, President of the Chamber, J. Malenovský, M. Safjan, D. Šváby (Rapporteur) and M. Vilaras, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of

– Ms Tirkkonen, by A. Kuusniemi-Laine, asianajaja,

– the Finnish Government, by S. Hartikainen, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by A. Tokár and I. Koskinen, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 13 December 2017,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings brought by Ms Maria Tirkkonen concerning the rejection by the Maaseutuvirasto (Agency for Rural Affairs, Finland) (‘the Agency’) of the tender which she had presented in order to be selected as an advisor in the field of ‘livestock, health welfare plans’, in the context of the 'Neuvo 2020 — Maatilojen neuvontajärjestelmä' (Neuvo 2020 — Farm Advisory Scheme) ('the Neuvo 2020 Farm Advisory Scheme').

Legal context

EU law

Directive 2004/18

3 Article 1 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Definitions', provides, inter alia:

'…

2. (a) "Public contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

…

5. A "framework agreement" is an agreement between one or more contracting authorities and one or more economic operators, the purpose of which is to establish the terms governing contracts to be awarded during a given period, in particular with regard to price and, where appropriate, the quantity envisaged.

…'

4 Entitled '[f]ramework agreements' Article 32 of that directive provides, inter alia:

'…

2. For the purpose of concluding a framework agreement, contracting authorities shall follow the rules of procedure referred to in this Directive for all phases up to the award of contracts based on that framework agreement. The parties to the framework agreement shall be chosen by applying the award criteria set in accordance with Article 53.

Contracts based on a framework agreement shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures laid down in paragraphs 3 and 4. Those procedures may be applied only between the contracting authorities and the economic operators originally party to the framework agreement.

When awarding contracts based on a framework agreement, the parties may under no circumstances make substantial amendments to the terms laid down in that framework agreement, in particular in the case referred to in paragraph 3.

…

4. Where a framework agreement is concluded with several economic operators, the latter must be at least three in number, insofar as there is a sufficient number of economic operators that satisfy the selection criteria and/or of admissible tenders that meet the award criteria.

Contracts based on framework agreements concluded with several economic operators may be awarded either:

– by application of the terms laid down in the framework agreement without reopening competition, or

– where not all the terms are laid down in the framework agreement, when the parties are again in competition on the basis of the same and, if necessary, more precisely formulated terms, and, where appropriate, other terms referred to in the specifications of the framework agreement, in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) for every contract to be awarded, contracting authorities shall consult in writing the economic operators capable of performing the contract;

(b) contracting authorities shall fix a time limit which is sufficiently long to allow tenders for each specific contract to be submitted, taking into account factors such as the complexity of the subject-matter of the contract and the time needed to send in tenders;

(c) tenders shall be submitted in writing, and their content shall remain confidential until the stipulated time limit for reply has expired;

(d) contracting authorities shall award each contract to the tenderer who has submitted the best tender on the basis of the award criteria set out in the specifications of the framework agreement.'

Regulation (EU) No 1305/2013

5 Article 15 of Regulation (EU) No 1305/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 December 2013 on support for rural development by the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development (EAFRD) and repealing Council Regulation (EC) No 1698/2005 (OJ 2013 L 347, p. 487), in relation to '[a]dvisory services, farm management and farm relief services', provides, in paragraph 3:

'The authorities or bodies selected to provide advice shall have appropriate resources in the form of regularly trained and qualified staff and advisory experience and reliability with respect to the fields in which they advise. The beneficiaries under this measure shall be chosen through calls for tenders. The selection procedure shall be governed by public procurement law and shall be open to both public and private bodies. It shall be objective and shall exclude candidates with conflicts of interest.

…'

Regulation (EU) No 1306/2013

6 Article 12(1) of Regulation (EU) No 1306/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 December 2013 on the financing, management and monitoring of the common agricultural policy and repealing Council Regulations (EEC) No 352/78, (EC) No 165/94, (EC) No 2799/98, (EC) No 814/2000, (EC) No 1290/2005 and (EC) No 485/2008 (OJ 2013 L 347, p. 549, and corrigendum OJ 2016 L 130, p. 13) provides:

'Member States shall establish a system for advising beneficiaries on land management and farm management ("farm advisory scheme") …'

7 Article 13 of that regulation, entitled 'Specific requirements relating to the farm advisory scheme', states in paragraph 1:

'Member States shall ensure that advisors working within the farm advisory scheme are suitably qualified and regularly trained.'

Implementing Regulation (EU) No 808/2014

8 Under Article 7 of Commission Implementing Regulation (EU) No 808/2014 of 17 July 2014 laying down rules for the application of Regulation No 1305/2013 (OJ 2014 L 227, p. 18), which relates to the '[s]election of authorities or bodies offering advisory services':

'The calls for tenders referred to in Article 15(3) of Regulation (EU) No 1305/2013 shall follow the applicable Union and national public procurement rules. In that context, due consideration must be given to the degree of attainment by the applicants of the qualifications referred to in that article.'

Directive 2014/24/EU

9 Under Article 91 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), Directive 2004/18 was repealed as of 18 April 2016.

Finnish law

10 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Finnish law by the Laki julkisista hankinnoista (348/2007) (Law on public procurement (348/2007)) ('the Law on public procurement').

11 Moreover, Article 45(1) of the Laki maatalouden tukien toimeenpanosta (192/2013) (Law on the implementation of agricultural aid (192/2013)), in the version applicable to the dispute in the main proceedings, provides that advisors are selected in compliance with the provisions of public procurement law and for a period ending on the expiry of the 2014-2020 Rural Development Programme for Mainland Finland. Under Paragraph 45(2) of the law, a condition of selection and admittance is that the advisor possesses adequate expertise in terms of the status and scope of the advisory task and that he must, furthermore, meet the conditions as to suitability referred to in Article 46 of that law.

12 Under Paragraph 45(3) of that law, the advisor must maintain and develop the professional knowledge required for the farm advisory service.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

13 The order for reference indicates that the Republic of Finland has established a Rural Development Programme for Mainland Finland 2014-2020, for which the Agency, by a contract notice published on 16 September 2014, launched a tender procedure in order to conclude contracts for advisory services, under the Neuvo 2020 Farm Advisory Scheme, for the period from 1 January 2015 to 31 December 2020.

14 The provision of advisory services at issue in the main proceedings is subject to the conditions laid down in a draft framework agreement annexed to the invitation to tender.

15 The advisory services referred to in that contract notice are offered to farmers and other land managers who have entered into an environmental agreement concerning the payment of environmental compensation payments. Farmers who fulfil that condition and who wish to request advice are free to contact an advisor of their choice, who is a member of the Neuvo 2020 Farm Advisory Scheme. That advisor is then paid according to the work carried out, by way of an hourly rate excluding value added tax (VAT) paid by the Agency, the farmer only bearing the amount of VAT.

16 In order to allow the selection of farm advisory service providers and in accordance with the requirements of Article 15(3) of Regulation No 1305/2013 and Article 13(1) of Regulation No 1306/2013, the Agency required applicants wishing to be admitted under this scheme to demonstrate that they were qualified, duly trained and experienced as advisers in the fields in which they intended to provide advice.

17 As the referring court notes, the Agency initially adopted, on 18 December 2014, a conditional award decision ('the contested decision') admitting all advisors who had applied and had met the aptitude criteria as well as the minimum requirements required in the call for tenders and its annexes. In a second step, the Agency selected, in a final award decision, those candidates who had passed the examination mentioned in the annex to the tender.

18 Ms Tirkkonen was not among the advisors conditionally admitted by the contested decision, on the ground that she had not completed point 7 of the tender form, entitled 'Compliance of tender with the formal requirements and with the invitation to tender', in which the service provider must indicate whether he accepts the terms of the draft framework agreement annexed to the invitation to tender by ticking the 'yes' box or the 'no' box. Considering that it was imperative to accept the terms of that draft framework agreement, the Agency, by the contested decision, rejected Ms Tirkkonen's application and did not authorise her to adjust her tender by marking the box 'yes' in point 7 of that form.

19 The latter then challenged that decision before the Markkinaoikeus (Market Court, Finland) in order to obtain the right to complete her tender documents and to fill out point 7 of that form. To that end, it alleged that the invitation to tender at issue in the main proceedings constituted a licensing scheme and was therefore not covered by the concept of a public contract. Accordingly, she argued that she should have been allowed to complete her bid.

20 The case having been dismissed by a judgment of 7 September 2015, Ms Tirkkonen lodged an appeal before the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court, Finland).

21 The referring court asks about the applicability of public procurement law to the dispute in the main proceedings, in so far as it is apparent from the judgment of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma (C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399) that the choice of a tender and, thus, of a successful tenderer, is intrinsically linked to the concept of 'public contract' within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18. Nevertheless, in so far as the tenderers had to pass an examination described in the invitation to tender, before finally being admitted to the framework agreement annexed to the invitation to tender, the referring court notes that those requirements could constitute decisive characteristics within the meaning of the judgment of 26 March 2015, Ambisig (C-601/13, EU:C:2015:204, paragraphs 31 and 32), and, therefore may be characterised as a 'public contract' within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18.

22 At the same time, however, the referring court notes, first, that the invitation to tender at issue in the main proceedings lays down no award criteria on the basis of which the tenders submitted would have been compared with each other and, secondly, that the Agency did not award points to the bids or make a comparison of them. Thus, according to the referring court, all the tenderers satisfying the requirements of that invitation to tender and having passed the examination mentioned in the annex to that invitation to tender, were admitted to the framework agreement.

23 The referring court points out, however, that although the number of providers eligible to join the framework agreement is not limited in advance in the tender documents, it is factually limited by means of the obligation to fulfil those requirements.

24 The referring court points out, moreover, that a specific feature of the contractual scheme that gave rise to the judgment of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma (C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399), was that it remained permanently open to interested operators during its whole period of validity, which was sufficient to distinguish that scheme from a framework agreement within the meaning of Directive 2004/18. In the present case, an advisory service provider could no longer join the Neuvo 2020 Farm Advisory Scheme after the adoption, by the Agency, of the final award decision, which, it is claimed, limited the number of economic operators who could provide the advisory service.

25 It was in that context that the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Is Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 to be interpreted as meaning that the definition of "public contract" within the meaning of that directive encompasses a scheme

– by which a public body seeks to obtain services in the market for a contractual period limited in advance by entering into contracts, subject to the conditions of a draft framework agreement annexed to the invitation to tender, with all economic operators who meet the individual requirements laid down in the tender documents in regard to the suitability of the service provider and to the service offered, and pass an exanimation more particularly described in the invitation to tender, and

– which can no longer be joined during the validity period of the contract?'

Consideration of the question referred

26 By its question, the referring court asks essentially whether Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 is to be interpreted as meaning that a farm advisory scheme, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, through which a public entity admits all the economic operators, provided that they meet the suitability requirements set out in an invitation to tender and pass the examination referred to in that invitation to tender, and which does not admit any new operator during the limited validity period of that farm advisory scheme, must be classified as a public contract within the meaning of that directive.

27 As a preliminary point, it must be pointed out that as Directive 2004/18 was repealed after the date of adoption of the contested decision, its interpretation remains relevant to enable the referring court to resolve the dispute in the main proceedings.

28 As the European Commission has pointed out, the farm advisory scheme leads to the conclusion of contracts for a pecuniary interest between a public entity, which could be a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, and economic operators whose objective is to supply services, which corresponds to the definition of ‘public contracts’ laid down in Article 1(2)(a) of that directive.

29 It is important to remember, however, that the objective of Directive 2004/18 was to avoid the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities. That risk is closely connected to the exclusivity which will result from the award of the contract concerned to the operator whose tender has been accepted or to the economic operators whose tenders have been accepted, in the case of a framework agreement, constituting the objective of a public procurement procedure (see, to that effect, judgment of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma, C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399, paragraphs 35 and 36).

30 In that regard, the Court has already pointed out that the choice of a tender and, thus, of a successful tenderer, is intrinsically linked to the regulation of public contracts by that directive and, consequently, to the concept of ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Article 1(2) of that directive (see, to that effect, judgment of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma, C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399, paragraph 38).

31 It follows that the fact that the contracting authority does not designate an economic operator to whom contractual exclusivity is to be awarded means that there is no need to control, through the detailed rules of Directive 2004/18, the action of that contracting authority so as to prevent it from awarding a contract in favour of national operators (see, to that effect, judgment of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma, C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399, paragraph 37).

32 In the present case, it is therefore necessary to determine whether the Agency has chosen a tender from among all those which satisfied the conditions it had laid down in its invitation to tender.

33 In that regard, it is apparent from the decision to refer that the Agency intends to set up a large pool of advisers who must fulfil a number of conditions. However, in so far as the Agency admits all the candidates who satisfy those requirements, it is clear, as the Advocate General has pointed out in point 39 of his Opinion, that it makes no selection among the admissible tenders and that it confines itself to ensuring that qualitative criteria are respected.

34 The fact that, as is clear from the decision to refer, access to the farm advisory scheme at issue in the main proceedings is limited to a preliminary period, which ends when the examination is organised or, at the latest, when the final award decision is published, and that it is therefore not possible for an adviser, such as Ms Tirkkonen, to join that farm advisory scheme, cannot call that assessment into question.

35 As the Advocate General has pointed out in points 51 and 52 of his Opinion, the fact that, unlike the context that gave rise to the judgment of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma (C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399), a farm advisory scheme, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, is not permanently open to interested economic operators is irrelevant. In the present case, the decisive factor is that the contracting authority has not referred to any award criteria for the purpose of comparing and classifying admissible tenders. In the absence of that factor, which is, as is apparent from paragraph 38 of the judgment of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma (C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399), intrinsically linked to the regulation of public contracts, a farm advisory scheme, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, cannot constitute a public contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18.

36 Furthermore, it should be recalled that, even if the verification of the tenderers' suitability and the award of the contract are carried out simultaneously, those two operations must be regarded as two different operations governed by different rules (see, to that effect, judgments of 20 September 1988, Beentjes, 31/87, EU:C:1988:422, paragraphs 15 and 16, and of 24 January 2008, Lianakis and Others, C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, paragraph 26).

37 Accordingly, criteria that are not aimed at identifying the tender which is economically the most advantageous, but are instead essentially linked to the evaluation of the tenderers' suitability to perform the contract in question, cannot be regarded as 'award criteria'. Criteria relating mainly to the experience, qualifications and means to ensure the proper performance of the contract concerned were considered to relate to the suitability of tenderers to perform that contract and not as 'award criteria', even though the contracting authority had classified them as such (see, to that effect, judgment of 24 January 2008, Lianakis and Others, C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, paragraphs 30 and 31).

38 Finally, that conclusion is in no way affected by the solution adopted in the judgment of 26 March 2015, Ambisig (C-601/13, EU:C:2015:204, paragraphs 31 to 34), in which the Court pointed out, in essence, that the skills and experience of the members of the team assigned to performing the public contract may be included as award criteria in the contract notice or in the tender specifications, in so far as the quality of the performance of a contract may depend decisively on the 'professional merit' of the people entrusted with its performance, which is made up of their professional experience and background, particularly where the contract covers the provision of services of an intellectual nature and relates to training and advisory services.

39 That assessment must, however, be understood in the light of the circumstances of the case which gave rise to that judgment, that is, in the light of the contracting authority's choice of the tender which it intended to accept from several admissible tenders. In so doing, unlike the case at issue in the main proceedings, the contracting authority, in the case that gave rise to the judgment of 26 March 2015, Ambisig (C-601/13, EU:C:2015:204, paragraphs 11, 13 and 28 to 34), made a real comparison of the admissible tenders in order to identify the most economically advantageous tender. In the latter case, the experience of the proposed technical team was an intrinsic feature of the tender and was not merely a criterion for assessing the tenderers' suitability.

40 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the requirements set out in the invitation to tender published by the Agency cannot constitute award criteria within the meaning of Directive 2004/18.

41 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 is to be interpreted as meaning that a farm advisory scheme, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, through which a public entity accepts all the economic operators who meet the suitability requirements set out in the invitation to tender and who pass the examination referred to in that invitation to tender, even if no new operator can be admitted during the limited validity period of that scheme, does not constitute a public contract within the meaning of that directive.

Costs

42 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that a farm advisory scheme, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, through which a public entity admits all the economic operators who meet the suitability requirements set out in the invitation to tender and who pass the examination referred to in that invitation to tender, even if no new operator can be admitted during the limited validity period of that scheme, does not constitute a public contract within the meaning of that directive.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Finnish.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 13 December 2017 (1)

Case C-9/17

Maria Tirkkonen

intervening party:

Maaseutuvirasto

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court, Finland))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Directive 2004/18/EC — Tendering procedure for public contracts for farm advisory services — Whether or not there is a public contract — Scheme for obtaining services under contracts governed by a framework agreement and open to any economic operator who satisfies previously established conditions — Scheme not subsequently open to other economic operators)

1. The support for rural development financed by the European Agriculture Fund for Rural Development (EAFRD) includes aid schemes which are intended to provide advisory services to farmers. The national authorities select the advisors who are to give their professional advice to those farmers by means of procedures which are open, in principle, to all those who satisfy the appropriate requirements for carrying out that task.

2. In one of those selection procedures, Ms Tirkkonen submitted her application to be included in the list of rural advisors, by completing the requisite form. However, she omitted to fill in the point in which she had to indicate whether she accepted the ‘conditions of the draft framework agreement’, which led the contracting authority to reject her application.

3. According to the order of the reference, that omission could be rectified if the national law governing relations between the public administration and the public were applied. However, if it were governed by the national law on public procurement, it seems that the defect would be irreparable. That, at least, was stated by both the Finnish Administration and the court of first instance which confirmed the decision.

4. In those circumstances, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court, Finland) wishes to know, in essence, whether the mechanism for selecting rural advisors which is the subject of the dispute constitutes a ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC. (2)

5. In replying to its doubts, it will be necessary to take account of the case-law, in relation to that concept, of the Court of Justice in the Falk Pharma case, (3) which, in my view, provides sufficient guidance for settling the dispute.

I. Law

A. EU law

1. Directive 2004/18

6. Article 1 (‘Definitions’) provides:

‘…

2. (a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

…

5. A “framework agreement” is an agreement between one or more contracting authorities and one or more economic operators, the purpose of which is to establish the terms governing contracts to be awarded during a given period, in particular with regard to price and, where appropriate, the quantity envisaged.

…’

7. Article 32 (‘Framework agreements’) states:

‘…

2. For the purpose of concluding a framework agreement, contracting authorities shall follow the rules of procedure referred to in this Directive for all phases up to the award of contracts based on that framework agreement. The parties to the framework agreement shall be chosen by applying the award criteria set in accordance with Article 53.

Contracts based on a framework agreement shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures laid down in paragraphs 3 and 4. Those procedures may be applied only between the contracting authorities and the economic operators originally party to the framework agreement.

When awarding contracts based on a framework agreement, the parties may under no circumstances make substantial amendments to the terms laid down in that framework agreement, in particular in the case referred to in paragraph 3.

…

4. Where a framework agreement is concluded with several economic operators, the latter must be at least three in number, insofar as there is a sufficient number of economic operators that satisfy the selection criteria and/or of admissible tenders that meet the award criteria.

Contracts based on framework agreements concluded with several economic operators may be awarded either:

– by application of the terms laid down in the framework agreement without reopening competition, or

– where not all the terms are laid down in the framework agreement, when the parties are again in competition on the basis of the same and, if necessary, more precisely formulated terms, and, where appropriate, other terms referred to in the specifications of the framework agreement, in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) for every contract to be awarded, contracting authorities shall consult in writing the economic operators capable of performing the contract;

(b) contracting authorities shall fix a time limit which is sufficiently long to allow tenders for each specific contract to be submitted, taking into account factors such as the complexity of the subject matter of the contract and the time needed to send in tenders;

(c) tenders shall be submitted in writing, and their content shall remain confidential until the stipulated time limit for reply has expired;

(d) contracting authorities shall award each contract to the tenderer who has submitted the best tender on the basis of the award criteria set out in the specifications of the framework agreement.'

8. Article 53 ('Contract award criteria') provides:

'1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions concerning the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of public contracts shall be either:

(a) when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting authority, various criteria linked to the subject matter of the contract in question: for example, quality, price, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, cost-effectiveness, after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery date and delivery period or period of completion, or

(b) the lowest price only.

2. Without prejudice to the provisions of the third subparagraph, in the case referred to in paragraph 1(a) the contracting authority shall specify in the contract notice or in the contract documents or, in the case of a competitive dialogue, in the descriptive document, the relative weighting which it gives to each of the criteria chosen to determine the most economically advantageous tender.

The weightings can be expressed by providing for a range with an appropriate maximum spread.

Where, in the opinion of the contracting authority, weighting is not possible for demonstrable reasons, the contracting authority shall indicate in the contract notice or contract documents or, in the case of a competitive dialogue, in the descriptive document, the criteria in descending order of importance.'

2. Regulation (EU) No 1305/2013 (4)

9. Article 15(3) provides:

'The authorities or bodies selected to provide advice shall have the appropriate resources in the form of regularly trained and qualified staff and advisory experience and reliability with respect to the fields in which they advise. The beneficiaries under this measure shall be chosen through calls for tenders. The selection procedure shall be governed by public procurement law and shall be open to both public and private bodies. It shall be objective and shall exclude candidates with conflicts of interest.

…'

3. Implementing Regulation (EU) No 808/2014 (5)

10. Article 7 provides:

'The calls for tenders referred to in Article 15(3) of Regulation (EU) No 1305/2013 shall follow the applicable Union and national public procurement rules. They shall give due consideration to the degree of attainment by the applicants of the qualifications referred to in that Article.'

B. National law

11. Directive 2004/18 was transposed in Finland by the Law on public procurement (Law 348/2007).

12. Under Article 45(1) of the Law on the implementation of agricultural aid (Law 192/2003, as amended by Law 501/2014), advisors are selected in compliance with the provisions of the Law on public procurement and for a period ending on the expiry of the 2014-2020 Rural Development Programme for Mainland Finland.

13. Under Article 45(2), a condition of selection and admittance is that the advisor has adequate expertise in terms of the status and scope of the advisory task. He must also satisfy the conditions as to capability.

II. The facts

14. On 16 September 2014, the Maaseutuvirasto (Finnish Agency for Rural Affairs, 'the Agency') issued an invitation to tender for farm advisory services for the period 2015-2020 to be carried out as a framework agreement in an open procedure.

15. It was stated in the contract notice that the procedure was open to public and private advisors and that its aim was to have service providers who satisfied the conditions of Article 15(3) of Regulation No 1305/2013 and Article 13(1) of Regulation (EU) No 1306/2013, (6) and who also had advisory experience.

16. The system of selection was based on a framework agreement, in accordance with the public procurement law, in such a way that the service providers would be included in the agreement under an open procedure pursuant to Article 65 of that law.

17. The framework agreement set out the principal conditions for provision of the service. The subsequent contracts were awarded without a specific award procedure, in such a way as to permit the farmer/land user entitled to advisory services to obtain them from the person whom he considered would best fulfil his needs. In principle, advisors in nearby areas were called upon to provide services, but on proper grounds other advisors could also be used.

18. The advisors were to be paid an hourly rate by the Agency (not including VAT, which would be paid by the farmer who received the services).

19. Having regard to the need for the advisory service, all the advisors who met the conditions as to capability and the minimum requirements laid down in the annexes to the framework agreement would be selected. In addition, the candidates had to pass a separate examination, as part of the selection procedure.

20. By the decision of 18 December 2014, the Agency excluded the application submitted by Ms Tirkkonen, on the ground that she had not filled in Point 7 of the tender form entitled 'Observance of the formal requirements of the bid and compliance with tender conditions' (Annex 2 to the tender). In that paragraph, she should have indicated, by marking 'yes' or 'no', whether she 'accepted the tender conditions of the draft framework agreement appended to the tender'.

21. Ms Tirkkonen challenged the Agency's decision before the Markkinaoikeus (Market Court, Finland), maintaining that the procedure did not concern the award of a public contract. Accordingly, public procurement law was not applicable, but rather administrative law, which required the Agency to request her to complete her documentation.

22. Following the dismissal of her action, on 7 September 2015, by the Markkinaoikeus (Market Court), Ms Tirkkonen brought an appeal before the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court), which raises the question for a preliminary ruling.

23. According to the order for reference, the issue is whether 'the scheme of the [Agency] concerning an advisory service is a public contract falling within the scope of Procurement Directive 2004/18 and thus also of national public procurement law'. (7)

III. The question referred

24. The question referred is worded as follows:

> 'Is Article 1(2)(a) of Procurement Directive 2004/18/EC to be interpreted as meaning that the definition of 'public contract' within the meaning of that directive encompasses a scheme

– by which a public body seeks to obtain services in the market for a contractual period limited in advance by entering into contracts, subject to the conditions of a draft framework agreement annexed to the invitation to tender, with all economic operators who meet the individual requirements laid down in the tender documents in regard to the suitability of the service provider and to the service offered, and pass an examination more particularly described in the invitation to tender, and

– which can no longer be joined during the validity period of the contract?'

IV. Proceedings before the Court of Justice and position of the parties

25. The reference for a preliminary ruling was lodged at the Court Registry on 9 January 2017. Written observations have been submitted by Ms Tirkkonen, the Finnish Government and the Commission. It has not been considered necessary to hold an oral hearing.

26. Ms Tirkkonen maintains that, of the three stages of any tendering procedure (verification of the capability of the tenderers; evaluation of compliance of the tenders with the tender notice; selection of the tender on the basis of the criterion of the lowest price or cost-effectiveness), in this procedure the third has not been carried out, since the tenders were not compared with each other and it was for the farmer to select the service provider. In particular, she points out that the 140 advisors initially chosen took the examination and that 138 passed it, without that examination actually making it possible to classify them in order of merit. The lack of selection between the tenders received precludes the existence of a public contract.

27. The Finnish Government stresses the relevance of the case-law laid down in the judgment in Falk Pharma, but points out that, in this case, the scheme is not permanently open to new tenderers. It is of the opinion that the fact that the awarding authority 'imposes on service providers numerous specific requirements which are based on legislation' (8) brings that scheme close to the concept of a public contract. Application of the legislation on public contracts would be justified by the need to ensure that the selection criteria are not fixed in a discriminatory manner.

28. The Finnish Government claims, furthermore, that of the 163 tenders received only 140 were conditionally admitted, and 138 finally accepted. This demonstrates the selective nature of the procedure and the intention of the awarding authority to accept only the best tenders, and also the dissuasive nature of the conditions imposed on tenderers.

29. Finally, for the Finnish Government, the six-year period of validity of the scheme means that, during that time, new advisors may not be admitted, which differentiates the disputed procedure from a mere licensing system.

30. The Commission believes that the specific requirements of the tender notice concerning the suitability of the tenderer and the service, as set out by the referring court, do not constitute an award criterion but merely a selection criterion.

31. The Commission takes the view that the procedure contained no award criteria and the Agency could neither exclude nor reject a competent advisor chosen by a farmer. In short, only selection criteria were used in the procedure.

32. In those circumstances, the Commission maintains that the case is similar to that resolved in the judgment in Falk Pharma, the case-law of which has been confirmed by Directive 2014/14/EU. (9) In its view, it is immaterial that the scheme is not open permanently to interested parties, since the lack of selection is a sufficient reason for ruling out classification as a public contract.

V. Assessment

33. According to the referring court, the Finnish Administration has implemented a programme based on Regulation No 1305/2013, Article 15(3) of which states that the selection procedure is to be governed by public procurement law. Therefore the question referred for a preliminary ruling must be answered on the basis of the legislation concerning public contracts.

34. I think that that reference to public procurement law must be interpreted as meaning that the procedure for selecting farm advisors must comply with the principles (of non-discrimination, equal treatment and transparency) which govern that section of the legal code. It is not, in my view, a requirement which involves adhering to each and every one of the provisions of the EU directives on procurement by public bodies.

35. Specifically, the referring court wishes to know whether a scheme such as that at issue in the present case falls 'within the scope of Procurement Directive 2004/18'. I should point out that the purpose of the scheme is to have an indefinite number of persons to provide farm advisory services to farmers, selecting them by means of a procedure, subject to the conditions contained in a framework agreement, in which all those who satisfy the conditions laid down in the tender documents and pass an examination may participate. The scheme is applicable for a limited period, during which no new advisors may join.

36. From the information provided by the referring court it is apparent, as the Commission points out, (10) that, at first sight, the characteristics of contracts as defined by Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 would seem to be present. It is, in fact, a contract governed by a framework agreement, concluded in writing between an economic operator (the advisor) and a contracting authority (the Agency), the object of which is the provision of services for pecuniary interest. The latter point is particularly clear since, according to the referring court, (11) the advisory services are, of course, of benefit to the farmer who receives them, but also to the Agency which pays for them and on whose behalf they are provided, as part of its administrative powers.

37. However, it should not be forgotten that, for the Court of Justice, 'the choice of the tender and, thus, of a successful tenderer, is intrinsically linked to the regulation of public contracts by [Directive 2004/18] and, consequently, to the concept of "public contract" within the meaning of Article 1(2) of that directive'. (12)

38. I do not consider that this approach taken in the judgment in Falk Pharma is excessively reductionist. It is sought to indicate that, ultimately, in public contracts subject to Directive 2004/18, there must be a final successful tenderer, who is preferred to all his competitors on the basis of the qualities of his tender. This is a key element which is applicable 'for every contract, framework agreement, and the establishment of any dynamic purchasing system', in respect of which 'the contracting authorities are to draw up a written report which is to include the name of the successful tenderer and the reasons why his tender was selected' [Article 43, first paragraph, (e) of Directive 2004/18; emphasis added]. (13)

39. In my view, in the scheme at issue it is not possible to identify the existence of criteria for the award of advisory service contracts, but only criteria for the selection of economic operators capable of offering those services.

40. As Advocate General Wathelet pointed out in the Opinion in Ambisig, (14) the Court of Justice has been careful to distinguish two kinds of criteria. 'The examination of the suitability of contractors to perform the contracts to be awarded' and 'the award of the contract' are two different operations. 'Whilst selection of a tenderer concerns its personal situation and its ability to engage in the professional activity in question, the contract is awarded to the tenderer which submitted the tender that is most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority (Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18) or which offers the lowest price (Article 53(1)(b))'.

41. In other words, while the aim of the selection criteria is to assess the tenderers according to their suitability, the aim of the award criteria is to identify and choose the most advantageous tender of those submitted by the various tenderers. As the objective is 'the opening-up of public procurement to competition', (15) economic operators must compete with each other, as rivals, to provide the service.

42. I consider that, from that point of view, a key element is the assertion of the referring court that 'the invitation to tender lays down no award criteria on the basis of which the tenders submitted could be compared with each other, and the [Agency] did not award points to the tenders or make a comparison of them', but that 'all tenderers satisfying the requirements of the invitation to tender concerning inter alia training and professional experience were admitted to the framework agreement, provided that they passed the examination more particularly described in the invitation to tender'. (16)

43. The Finnish Government maintains that the admission criteria did indeed make the procedure selective in nature. Firstly, the fact that they were made public in advance could have dissuaded interested persons who thought that they did not satisfy those criteria to refrain from submitting a tender. Secondly, the conditions were so strict that not everybody could fulfil them, so that the procedure was in fact restricted to a 'selected group'. (17) Therefore, according to the Finnish Government, the selective nature of the procedure makes it essential that the criteria which confer that quality are not established in a discriminatory manner, which would lead to the application of public procurement legislation.

44. There is no doubt that to impose conditions of skill and merit for entry to the scheme at issue involves a certain selection mechanism. However, what is decisive, as regards contracts subject to Directive 2004/18, is not confirmation that the tenderers are capable of providing the advisory service (selection criterion), but the differences between the tenders of those tenderers, once their capability has been established, with the aim of making the final selection of the person or persons to whom that provision will be assigned (award criterion).

45. Of course, the conditions for access to the farm advisory scheme based on technical capacity (including the passing of an examination) make it possible to select candidates by reference to a pre-established threshold. However, the relevant selection, for the purposes of the concept of public contracts in Directive 2004/18, is that which results from comparing the capabilities and merits of the tenders of the different candidates. That is to say, the crucial point is the final award, by comparison or by weighing up differences, to the best tender, not the initial selection made in relation to a threshold which may be passed with no competition whatsoever between the candidates.

46. The referring court mentions the Ambisig case, (18) in which it was held that it is the abilities and experience of the members of a team which is to perform a contract concerning training and advisory services which are 'decisive for the evaluation of the professional quality of the team' and that 'that quality may be an intrinsic characteristic of the tender and linked to the subject matter of the contract for the purposes of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18', (19) so that 'that quality may be included as an award criterion in the contract notice or in the relevant tendering specifications'. (20)

47. However, that statement of the Court of Justice was made in a context in which the contracting authority chose one of the competing tenderers and excluded another, rightly using as a criterion the quality of their respective teams.

48. In the present case, on the contrary, the referring court assures us that the Agency did not limit ab initio the number of possible service providers, (21) or compare the tenders or make a final selection of one or more, on the basis of a comparative assessment of their respective contents, to the exclusion of the others. (22)

49. This, therefore, is a situation in which the case-law laid down in the Falk Pharma case is applicable, namely, that 'where a public entity seeks to conclude supply contracts with all the economic operators wishing to supply the goods concerned in accordance with the conditions specified by that entity, the fact that the contracting authority does not designate an economic operator to whom contractual exclusivity is to be awarded means that there is no need to control, through the detailed rules of Directive 2004/18, the action of that contracting authority so as to prevent it from awarding the contract in favour of national operators'. (23)

50. Both the Finnish Government (24) and the referring court agree that the case-law to which reference has just been made is relevant to the present case. Their only doubt, which in the case of Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court) appears to be that which has led it to make the reference for a preliminary ruling, (25) is that, unlike what happened in the judgment in Falk Pharma, the scheme designed by the Agency is not permanently open to all interested economic operators during its period of validity.

51. It is true that, strictly speaking, by limiting the procurement scheme, during its period of validity, to the economic operators initially admitted by the Agency (which precludes the subsequent access of other advisors) a second quantitative restriction is imposed. However, this is only the consequence of the clear and strict temporal restriction of the advisory aid scheme and of the 2014-2020 Rural Development Programme for Mainland Finland.

52. Furthermore, the reference of the Court of Justice in the judgment in Falk Pharma to the permanent availability of the contractual scheme to new tenderers was not, in my view, the ratio decidendi of that judgment, but a statement made for the sake of completeness. The key issue, therefore, was that the contracting authority had not awarded the contract exclusively to one of the tenderers. (26)

53. In the present case, as in the Falk Pharma case, there has also been no element of genuine competition between candidates, in order to assess which of the tenders is the best and at the same time to reject the others.

54. Furthermore, as the Court of Justice pointed out in the Falk Pharma judgment, (27) that essential element is expressly set out in the definition of the concept of 'procurement' in Directive 2014/24, and the fact that it is not applicable to the case ratione temporis does not render it unworthy of mention, if only because it expresses the intention of the legislature to state explicitly a feature of public contracts which, according to the Court, is intrinsic to its nature. (28)

55. The importance, both positive and negative, of that factor is clearly demonstrated when, in recital 4 of Directive 2014/24, it is stated that situations where all operators fulfilling certain conditions are entitled to perform a given task, without any selectivity, 'should not be understood as being procurement'.

VI. Conclusion

56. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court of Justice reply as follows to the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court, Finland):

> Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, is to be interpreted as meaning that a system for selecting providers of farm advisory services such as that which is the subject matter of the main proceedings, by which a public body admits all economic operators fulfilling the conditions of suitability and pass an examination, without awarding provision of the service exclusively to one or more of those advisors in a competitive procedure, does not constitute a public contract within the meaning of that directive. It is irrelevant for this purpose that the scheme has a limited period of validity, during which other advisors are not admitted.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

---

3 Judgment of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma (C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399) ('the judgment in Falk Pharma').

---

4 Regulation (EU) No 1305/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 December 2013 on support for rural development by the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development (EAFRD) and repealing Council Regulation (EC) No 1698/2005 (OJ 2013 L 347, p. 487).

---

5 Commission Regulation 17 July 2014 laying down rules for the application of Regulation (EU) No 1305/2013 of the European Parliament and of the Council on support for rural development by the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development (EAFRD) (OJ 2014 L 227, p. 18).

---

6 Regulation of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 December 2013 on the financing, management and monitoring of the common agricultural policy and repealing Council Regulations (EC)

No 352/78, (EC) No 165/94, (EC) No 2799/98, (EC) No 814/2000, (EC) No 1290/2005 and (EC) No 485/2008 (OJ 2013 L 347, p. 549).

---

7 The national court points out that the purpose of the reference is not to assess whether the Agency 'proceeded in the manner prescribed in the procurement legislation' (paragraph 8 of the order for reference). In any event, it might be of interest to note that, if Directive 2004/18 were applicable, it may be inferred that the awarding authority may allow, in a procurement procedure, the rectification of formal irregularities which do not amount to the submission of a new tender or significantly amend the terms of the original tender. I refer, on this point, to my Opinion in M.A.T.I. SUD and DUEMMESGR, (C-523/16 and C-536/16 EU:C:2017:868).

---

8 Paragraph 22 of the written observations.

---

9 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

---

10 Paragraphs 27 and 28 of the Commission's written observations.

---

11 Paragraph 56 of the order for reference: 'it may be assumed that the service relating to the provision of the services at issue is of immediate economic benefit to the Maaseutuvirasto'.

---

12 Judgment in Falk Pharma, paragraph 38.

---

13 Ibid., paragraph 39.

---

14 Case C-601/13, EU:C:2014:2474, points 17 and 19.

---

15 Recital 2 of Directive 2004/18.

---

16 Order for reference, paragraph 59.

---

17 Paragraph 38 of the observations of the Finnish Government. It points out that, of a total of 163 tenders, 140 were admitted provisionally and 138 definitively, which was 85% of the candidates.

---

18 Judgment of 26 March 2015 (C-601/13, EU:C:2015:204).

---

19 Ibid., paragraph 33.

---

20 Ibid., paragraph 34.

---

21 According to the referring court, the Agency stated that 'as big a group of service providers as possible is needed to ensure that the users of services reliably receive the service they need' (paragraph 50 of the order for reference).

---

22 Furthermore, the final selection of the person who is to provide the service, in each case, is not made by the Agency, but by the farmers who join the consultancy scheme. They may choose the advisor who is best suited to their needs, choosing as a rule those who offer their advice in the local area, although other advisors may be used in justified cases. See, to that effect, paragraph 14 of the order for reference.

---

23 As the Court of Justice pointed out in paragraph 35 of that judgment, 'the purpose of Directive 2004/18 is to avoid the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by contracting authorities'. A risk which, it was then said (paragraph 36), 'is closely connected to the selection which the contracting authority intends to make from the admissible tenders and to the exclusivity which will result from the award of the contract concerned to the operator whose tender has been accepted or to the economic operators whose tenders have been accepted, in the case of a framework agreement, that constituting the objective of the public procurement procedure'.

---

24 According to the Finnish Government, that factor distinguishes this procedure from a mere licensing system and brings it closer to the status of 'public contract' within the meaning of Directive 2004/18.

---

25 For the referring court, the doubt lies in deciding 'whether it follows from the … characteristic of the scheme being closed to other operators that it may be a public contract for the purposes of Article 1(2)(a) of the Procurement Directive' (order for reference, paragraph 63).

---

26 Judgment in Falk Pharma, paragraph 38.

---

27 Ibid., paragraph 40.

---

28 Under Article 1(2) of Directive 2014/24, 'procurement … is the acquisition by means of a public contract of works, supplies or services by one or more contracting authorities from economic operators chosen by those contracting authorities, whether or not the works, supplies or services are intended for a public purpose'. (Emphasis added).

EU:C:2018:752

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

20 September 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Article 267 TFEU — Jurisdiction of the Court — Whether the referring body qualifies as a court or tribunal — Directive 2014/24/EU — Public procurement procedures — Open procedure — Award criteria — Technical evaluation — Minimum score threshold — Price-based evaluation)

In Case C-546/16,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Órgano Administrativo de Recursos Contractuales de la Comunidad Autónoma de Euskadi (Administrative Board of Contract Appeals of the Autonomous Community of the Basque Country, Spain), made by decision of 21 October 2016, received at the Court on 28 October 2016, in the proceedings

Montte SL

v

Musikene,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, C. Vajda (Rapporteur), E. Juhász, K. Jürimäe and C. Lycourgos, Judges, Advocate General: M. Szpunar,

Registrar: L. Carrasco Marco, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure,

having regard to the order opening the oral procedure of 6 March 2018 and further to the hearing on 16 April 2018,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– the Spanish Government, by A. Gavela Llopis, acting as Agent,

– the Greek Government, by A. Dimitrakopoulou and K. Georgiadis, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by E. Sanfrutos Cano and A. Tokár, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 26 June 2018,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Montte SL and Musikene concerning a public procurement procedure.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Recital 90 of Directive 2014/24 is worded as follows:

‘Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria that ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment, with a view to ensuring an objective comparison of the relative value of the tenders in order to determine, in conditions of effective competition, which tender is the most economically advantageous tender. It should be set out explicitly that the most economically advantageous tender should be assessed on the basis of the best price-quality ratio, which should always include a price or cost element. It should equally be clarified that such assessment of the most economically advantageous tender could also be carried out on the basis of either price or cost effectiveness only. It is furthermore appropriate to recall that contracting authorities are free to set adequate quality standards by using technical specifications or contract performance conditions.

…’

4 Under recital 92 of that directive:

‘When assessing the best price-quality ratio contracting authorities should determine the economic and qualitative criteria linked to the subject-matter of the contract that they will use for that purpose. Those criteria should thus allow for a comparative assessment of the level of performance offered by each tender in the light of the subject-matter of the contract, as defined in the technical specifications. In the context of the best price-quality ratio, a non-exhaustive list of possible award criteria which include environmental and social aspects is set out in this Directive. Contracting authorities should be encouraged to choose award criteria that allow them to obtain high-quality works, supplies and services that are optimally suited to their needs.

The chosen award criteria should not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority and they should ensure the possibility of effective and fair competition and be accompanied by arrangements that allow the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified.

To identify the most economically advantageous tender, the contract award decision should not be based on non-cost criteria only. Qualitative criteria should therefore be accompanied by a cost criterion that could, at the choice of the contracting authority, be either the price or a cost-effectiveness approach such as life-cycle costing. However, the award criteria should not affect the application of national provisions determining the remuneration of certain services or setting out fixed prices for certain supplies.’

5 Article 18 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of procurement’, provides, in paragraph 1 thereof:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and without discrimination and shall act in a transparent and proportionate manner.

The design of the procurement shall not be made with the intention of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or of artificially narrowing competition. Competition shall be considered to be artificially narrowed where the design of the procurement is made with the intention of unduly favouring or disadvantaging certain economic operators.’

6 Under Article 27 of that directive, entitled ‘Open procedure’:

‘1. In open procedures, any interested economic operator may submit a tender in response to a call for competition.

The minimum time limit for the receipt of tenders shall be 35 days from the date on which the contract notice was sent.

The tender shall be accompanied by the information for qualitative selection that is requested by the contracting authority.

2. Where contracting authorities have published a prior information notice which was not itself used as a means of calling for competition, the minimum time limit for the receipt of tenders, as laid down in the second subparagraph of paragraph 1 of this Article, may be shortened to 15 days, provided that all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the prior information notice included all the information required for the contract notice in section I of part B of Annex V, in so far as that information was available at the time the prior information notice was published;

(b) the prior information notice was sent for publication between 35 days and 12 months before the date on which the contract notice was sent.

3. Where a state of urgency duly substantiated by the contracting authority renders impracticable the time limit laid down in the second subparagraph of paragraph 1, it may fix a time limit which shall be not less than 15 days from the date on which the contract notice was sent.

4. The contracting authority may reduce by five days the time limit for receipt of tenders set out in the second subparagraph of paragraph 1 of this Article where it accepts that tenders may be submitted by electronic means in accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 22(1), and Article 22(5) and (6).'

7 Article 29 of Directive 2014/24, entitled 'Competitive procedure with negotiation', provides, in paragraph 6 thereof:

'Competitive procedures with negotiation may take place in successive stages in order to reduce the number of tenders to be negotiated by applying the award criteria specified in the contract notice, in the invitation to confirm interest or in another procurement document. In the contract notice, the invitation to confirm interest or in another procurement document, the contracting authority shall indicate whether it will use that option.'

8 Article 30 of that directive, entitled 'Competitive dialogue', states, in paragraph 4 thereof:

'Competitive dialogues may take place in successive stages in order to reduce the number of solutions to be discussed during the dialogue stage by applying the award criteria laid down in the contract notice or in the descriptive document. In the contract notice or the descriptive document, the contracting authority shall indicate whether it will use that option.'

9 Article 31 of that directive, entitled 'Innovation partnership', provides, in paragraph 5 thereof:

'Negotiations during innovation partnership procedures may take place in successive stages in order to reduce the number of tenders to be negotiated by applying the award criteria specified in the contract notice, in the invitation to confirm interest or in the procurement documents. In the contract notice, the invitation to confirm interest or in the procurement documents, the contracting authority shall indicate whether it will use that option.'

10 Under Article 66 of that directive, entitled 'Reduction of the number of tenders and solutions':

'Where contracting authorities exercise the option of reducing the number of tenders to be negotiated as provided for in Article 29(6) or of solutions to be discussed as provided for in Article 30(4), they shall do so by applying the award criteria stated in the procurement documents. In the final stage, the number arrived at shall make for genuine competition in so far as there are enough tenders, solutions or qualified candidates.'

11 Article 67 of Directive 2014/24, entitled ‘Contract award criteria’, provides, in paragraphs 1, 2 and 4 thereof:

‘1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions concerning the price of certain supplies or the remuneration of certain services, contracting authorities shall base the award of public contracts on the most economically advantageous tender.

2. The most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting authority shall be identified on the basis of the price or cost, using a cost-effectiveness approach, such as life-cycle costing in accordance with Article 68, and may include the best price-quality ratio, which shall be assessed on the basis of criteria, including qualitative, environmental and/or social aspects, linked to the subject-matter of the public contract in question. Such criteria may comprise, for instance:

(a) quality, including technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, accessibility, design for all users, social, environmental and innovative characteristics and trading and its conditions;

(b) organisation, qualification and experience of staff assigned to performing the contract, where the quality of the staff assigned can have a significant impact on the level of performance of the contract; or

(c) after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery conditions such as delivery date, delivery process and delivery period or period of completion.

The cost element may also take the form of a fixed price or cost on the basis of which economic operators will compete on quality criteria only.

Member States may provide that contracting authorities may not use price only or cost only as the sole award criterion or restrict their use to certain categories of contracting authorities or certain types of contracts.

…

4. Award criteria shall not have the effect of conferring an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority. They shall ensure the possibility of effective competition and shall be accompanied by specifications that allow the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified in order to assess how well the tenders meet the award criteria. In case of doubt, contracting authorities shall verify effectively the accuracy of the information and proof provided by the tenderers.’

Spanish law

12 According to Article 40(6) of the Texto Refundido de la Ley de Contratos del Sector Público (consolidated text of the Law on Public Sector Contracts), resulting from Real Decreto Legislativo 3/2011 por el que se aprueba el Texto Refundido de la Ley de Contratos del Sector Público (Royal Legislative Decree 3/2011 approving the consolidated text of the Law on Public Sector Contracts) of 14 November 2011 (Boletín Oficial del Estado No 276 of 16 November 2011, p. 117729), a special appeal in public procurement proceedings is optional prior to the bringing of an administrative-law action.

13 The first subparagraph of Article 150(4) of the consolidated text of the Law on Public Sector Contracts provides as follows:

‘Where more than one criterion needs to be taken into consideration, it will be necessary to specify the relative weighting attributed to each criterion, which may be expressed by establishing a sufficiently broad band of values. If the award procedure is divided into several stages, it will also be necessary to indicate in which stages the various criteria will be applied, and the minimum number of points that must be obtained by the tenderer in order that he may continue to participate in the selection process.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

14 Musikene is a public-sector foundation in the Comunidad Autónoma de Euskadi (Autonomous Community of the Basque Country, Spain). In July 2016 it launched a tendering procedure for the award of a public contract relating to the 'supply of furniture and signage, specific musical equipment, musical instruments, electro-acoustic, recording and audiovisual equipment, computer equipment and reprographics' under the open procedure. The estimated value of the contract was EUR 1 157 430.59. The procurement documents were approved by Musikene's management on 14 July 2016 and the contract notice was published in the Official Journal of the European Union (2016/S 142-257363) on 26 July 2016.

15 The contract award criteria are set out in Annex VII – A to the particular administrative specifications governing the contract, as follows:

'(a) "Presentation and description of the project", with a weighting of 50 points out of 100, broken down into different subcriteria or secondary criteria for each of the five lots into which the contract is divided. In addition, the following clause applies to all lots:

"Minimum score threshold required to continue to participate in the selection process: tenderers who do not obtain 35 points in relation to the technical tender will not proceed to the economic stage."

(b) For all lots, the reduction offered in relation to the tender budget, with a weighting of 50 points out of 100, [will be decided] according to the following scale:

"A maximum of 50 points will be awarded. A tender of an amount equal to the tender budget will be awarded 0 points.

5 points will be applied for each 1% reduction in relation to the tender budget, so that:

1% reduction in relation to the tender budget: 5 points

5% reduction in relation to the tender budget: 25 points

10% reduction in relation to the tender budget: 50 points".'

16 On 11 August 2016 Montte lodged a special appeal against those procurement documents with the Órgano Administrativo de Recursos Contractuales de la Comunidad Autónoma de Euskadi (Administrative Board of Contract Appeals of the Autonomous Community of the Basque Country, Spain). Montte argues that the condition which states that it is necessary to reach a minimum score threshold at the end of the technical stage in order to continue to participate in the selection process must be annulled, because it restricts tenderers' access to the economic stage of the procurement procedure and renders the joint weighting of the technical and economic criteria laid down in those procurement documents entirely meaningless in practice. Montte submits that, unlike the price criterion, which is applied automatically by using a formula, the technical criteria, which are assessed by means of a less objective qualitative evaluation, are, in practice, assigned a weighting of 100% of the total points. Therefore, according to Montte, by applying such criteria, tenderers may not be judged equally depending on the price of their tender and Musikene may accordingly be unaware of the most advantageous tender after weighing all the criteria.

17 For its part, Musikene contends that that condition is justified. It argues that, given that the public contract at issue in the main proceedings concerns the installation of equipment that will be part of a building, it is acceptable to require tenderers to submit tenders that meet certain minimum requirements connected with compliance with time limits and the technical quality of the services provided.

18 The referring court considers that the national legislation and practice at issue in the main proceedings could be contrary to Directive 2014/24. In that regard, it notes, first of all, that that directive seems to allow contract award criteria to be established which apply during successive eliminatory stages only in the procedures in respect of which such a possibility is expressly laid down therein, and not in open and restricted procedures, which are governed by rules that state precisely how such procedures are to be conducted. Next, it considers that the system of contract award criteria which applies during successive eliminatory stages in open procedures may, contrary to Article 66 of Directive 2014/24, hinder genuine competition where the application of thresholds considerably reduces the number of tenderers in the final stage. Lastly, it considers that the eliminatory threshold at issue in the main proceedings, which requires a minimum of 35 out of 50 points in the technical evaluation, may prevent the most competitive tenders in terms of price from being analysed and evaluated.

19 In those circumstances, the Órgano Administrativo de Recursos Contractuales de la Comunidad Autónoma de Euskadi (Administrative Board of Contract Appeals of the Autonomous Community of the Basque Country) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Does Directive [2014/24] preclude national legislation, such as Article 150(4) of the [consolidated text of the Law on Public Sector Contracts], or a practice for interpreting and implementing that legislation, which authorises contracting authorities to establish in the documents governing an open tendering procedure award criteria which apply in successive elimination stages for tenders which do not exceed a predetermined minimum score threshold?

(2) If the answer to Question 1 is in the negative, does the aforementioned Directive 2014/24 preclude national legislation, or a practice for interpreting and implementing that legislation, which uses the aforementioned system of award criteria which apply in successive elimination stages in such a way that in the last stage there are not sufficient tenders to ensure “genuine competition”?

(3) If the answer to Question 2 is in the affirmative, does the aforementioned Directive 2014/24 preclude, because it does not ensure genuine competition or circumvents the mandate to award the contract to the tender with the best price-quality ratio, a clause such as that at issue, in which the price factor is evaluated only for tenders which have obtained 35 out of 50 points in the technical criteria?’

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

20 It is necessary at the outset to examine the question whether the Órgano Administrativo de Recursos Contractuales de la Comunidad Autónoma de Euskadi (Administrative Board of Contract Appeals of the Autonomous Community of the Basque Country) fulfils the necessary criteria to be regarded as a national court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU.

21 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, in accordance with settled case-law, in order to assess whether a body making a reference is a ‘court or tribunal’, which is a question governed by EU law alone, the Court will take account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent (judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited).

22 In the present case, first, it is apparent from the order for reference that the referring body is a permanent, independent body established under a legal provision which adopts its decisions on the basis of exclusively legal criteria following an inter partes procedure. Regarding, more specifically, that body’s independence, that order explains that that body, inasmuch as it is not subject to any hierarchical constraint and does not receive instructions from third parties, carries out its functions objectively, impartially and entirely autonomously.

23 Second, as regards whether the referring body’s jurisdiction is compulsory for the purposes of the case-law of the Court concerning Article 267 TFEU, it is true that that body’s jurisdiction is, under Article 40(6) of the consolidated text of the Law on Public Sector Contracts, only optional. Thus, a person who wishes to contest the lawfulness of a public procurement procedure may choose between a special appeal before the referring body and an administrative-law action.

24 Nevertheless, it is apparent from the order for reference that the decisions of the referring body, whose jurisdiction does not depend on the parties’ agreement, are binding on the parties. In those circumstances, that body also fulfils the criterion of compulsory jurisdiction (see, to that effect, judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme, C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraphs 23 to 25).

25 Accordingly, the Órgano Administrativo de Recursos Contractuales de la Comunidad Autónoma de Euskadi (Administrative Board of Contract Appeals of the Autonomous Community of the Basque Country) fulfils the necessary criteria to be regarded as a national court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU, and the questions referred to the Court are admissible.

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

26 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 2014/24 is to be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which allows contracting authorities to lay down, in the documents governing an open procurement procedure, minimum requirements as regards the technical evaluation, so that the tenders submitted which do not reach a predetermined minimum score threshold at the end of that evaluation are excluded from the subsequent evaluation based on both technical criteria and price.

27 Although the first subparagraph of Article 27(1) of Directive 2014/24 provides that, in open procedures, any interested economic operator may submit a tender in response to a call for competition, that directive allows contracting authorities to lay down, in the context of such procedures, minimum requirements in relation to the technical evaluation.

28 In that regard, as was noted by the Advocate General in point 37 of his Opinion, Article 27 of Directive 2014/24 does not contain any rule as to how the tendering procedure is to be conducted, with the exception of those relating to the minimum time limit for the receipt of tenders from the date on which the contract notice was sent.

29 In addition, recital 90 of that directive recalls that contracting authorities are free to set adequate quality standards by using technical specifications or contract performance conditions, while recital 92 thereof specifies that the purpose of that directive is to encourage contracting authorities to choose award criteria that allow them to obtain high-quality works, supplies and services that are optimally suited to their needs.

30 For its part, Article 67(1) of Directive 2014/24 states that contracting authorities are to base the award of public contracts on the most economically advantageous tender. Article 67(2) of that directive provides that the most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting authority is to be identified on the basis of the price or cost and may include the best price-quality ratio, which is to be assessed on the basis of criteria which comprise, inter alia, qualitative aspects such as quality, including technical merit.

31 It should be added that those criteria must, as can be seen from recital 90 of that directive and Article 67(4) thereof, ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment, so as to guarantee an objective comparison of the relative merits of the tenders and, accordingly, effective competition. That would not be the case for criteria having the effect of conferring on the contracting authority an unrestricted freedom of choice (see, by analogy, as regards Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), judgment of 10 May 2012, Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraph 87).

32 Consequently, contracting authorities are to be free, provided that they comply with the requirements set out in paragraph 31 above, to determine, according to their needs, the level of, inter alia, technical merit that the submitted tenders must provide depending on the characteristics and the subject matter of the contract in question and to establish a minimum threshold which those tenders must comply with from a technical point of view. To that end, as was argued by the Commission in its written observations, Article 67 of Directive 2014/24 does not preclude the possibility, at the contract award stage, of excluding, as a first step, submitted tenders which do not reach a predetermined minimum score threshold as regards the technical evaluation. In that regard, it appears that a tender which does not reach such a threshold does not correspond, in principle, to the needs of the contracting authority and must not be taken into account for the determination of the most economically advantageous tender. The contracting authority is thus not required, in such a case, to determine whether the price of such a tender is lower than the prices of tenders not eliminated which reach that threshold and thus correspond to the needs of the contracting authority.

33 In that context, it should also be specified that if the contract is awarded after the technical evaluation, the contracting authority will necessarily have to take account of the price of tenders which reach the minimum threshold from a technical point of view.

34 The finding in paragraph 32 above is not undermined by the fact, referred to by the referring court, that Directive 2014/24 expressly provides for the possibility of certain procurement procedures other than open procedures being conducted in successive stages, which is the case for the competitive procedure with negotiation (Article 29(6)), the competitive dialogue procedure (Article 30(4)), or the innovation partnership procedure (Article 31(5)).

35 As was noted, in essence, by the Advocate General in point 48 of his Opinion, the fact that Directive 2014/24 provides for the possibility of certain procedures, such as those referred to in Article 29(6), Article 30(4) and Article 31(5) thereof, being conducted in successive stages, does not permit the conclusion that a two-step evaluation of tenders during the contract award stage would be inadmissible in the case of an open procedure such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

36 In that regard, it should be noted that, as was argued by the Commission in its written observations, the possibility which those provisions offer the contracting authority to reject tenders which, although meeting the minimum requirements, are not among the best, is justified by the specific nature of the procedures concerned, in which it could prove difficult to conduct negotiations or dialogues if an excessive number of tenders or solutions were to be retained until the final stage of the procurement procedure.

37 However, the case in the main proceedings concerns a different situation from those referred to in the provisions mentioned in paragraph 34 above. It is not apparent from the public procurement documents at issue in the main proceedings that the contracting authority would be able to reject tenders fulfilling the award criteria and select only the best tenders. On the contrary, according to those documents, the only tenders which the contracting authority is authorised to exclude from the price-based evaluation are those which do not meet the minimum requirements relating to the technical evaluation and thus do not meet the needs of the contracting authority. Such an approach is not intended to limit the number of tenders subjected to the price-based evaluation, given that all the tenders submitted may, in principle, meet those minimum requirements.

38 In any event, it should be borne in mind that the contracting authorities must, throughout the procedure, observe the principles of procurement set out in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24, which include the principles of equal treatment, transparency and proportionality.

39 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first question is that Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which allows contracting authorities to lay down, in the documents governing an open procurement procedure, minimum requirements as regards the technical evaluation, so that the tenders submitted which do not reach a predetermined minimum score threshold at the end of that evaluation are excluded from the subsequent evaluation based on both technical criteria and price.

The second question

40 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether, in the event that the answer to the first question is in the negative, Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 is to be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which allows contracting authorities to lay down, in the documents governing an open procurement procedure, minimum requirements as regards the technical evaluation, so that the tenders submitted which do not reach a predetermined minimum score threshold at the end of that evaluation are excluded from the subsequent stages of the procurement procedure, regardless of the number of tenderers remaining.

41 In that regard, provided that, in the case at hand, the conditions laid down by Directive 2014/24, in particular in Articles 18 and 67 thereof, have been applied correctly, it must be held that the contracting authority has ensured that there is effective competition. In addition, it must be stated from the outset that even if, following the technical evaluation, there is only one tender left for the contracting authority to consider, that authority is in no way required to accept that tender (see, by analogy, judgment of 16 September 1999, Fracasso and Leitschutz, C-27/98, EU:C:1999:420, paragraphs 32 to 34). In such circumstances, if the contracting authority considers that the procurement procedure is, in view of the specificities and the subject matter of the contract concerned, characterised by a lack of effective competition, it is open to that authority to terminate that procedure and, if necessary, to launch a new procedure with different award criteria.

42 It is true that, under Article 66 of Directive 2014/24, contracting authorities, where they exercise the option of reducing the number of tenders to be negotiated as provided for in Article 29(6) of that directive, or that of reducing the number of solutions to be discussed as provided for in Article 30(4) thereof, must do so by applying the award criteria stated in the procurement documents, so that the number of tenders selected in the final stage makes for genuine competition in so far as there are enough tenders that meet the necessary requirements.

43 Nevertheless, for the reasons stated in paragraph 37 above, the case in the main proceedings concerns a different situation from those referred to in Article 29(6) and Article 30(4) of Directive 2014/24, so that it is not covered by Article 66 of that directive. Accordingly, the need to ensure genuine competition until the final stage of the procedure referred to in that article does not concern open procedures such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

44 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the second question is that Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which allows contracting authorities to lay down, in the documents governing an open procurement procedure, minimum requirements as regards the technical evaluation, so that the tenders submitted which do not reach a predetermined minimum score threshold at the end of that evaluation are excluded from the subsequent stages of the procurement procedure, regardless of the number of tenderers remaining.

The third question

45 As the third question was referred only in the event of the Court answering the second question in the affirmative, there is no need to answer that third question.

Costs

46 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which allows contracting authorities to lay down, in the documents governing an open procurement procedure, minimum requirements as regards the technical evaluation, so that the tenders submitted which do not reach a predetermined minimum score threshold at the end of that evaluation are excluded from the subsequent evaluation based on both technical criteria and price.

2. Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which allows contracting authorities to lay down, in the documents governing an open procurement procedure, minimum requirements as regards the technical evaluation, so that the tenders submitted which do not reach a predetermined minimum score threshold at the end of that evaluation are excluded from the subsequent stages of the procurement procedure, regardless of the number of tenderers remaining.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Spanish.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

SZPUNAR

delivered on 26 June 2018 (1)

Case C-546/16

Montte SL

v

Musikene

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Órgano Administrativo de Recursos Contractuales de la Comunidad Autónoma de Euskadi (Administrative Board of Contract Appeals of the Autonomous Community of the Basque Country, Spain))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Open procedure — Award criteria — Staged evaluation of tenders — Minimum score threshold)

I. Introduction

1. The present case concerns, in particular, the degree of freedom enjoyed by the Member States when implementing the provisions of Directive 2014/24/EU (2) into national law with regard to public procurement contracts awarded under an open procedure.

2. More precisely, the first question concerns whether national legislation may entitle contracting authorities to carry out a two-stage evaluation of tenders in an open procedure in such a way that in the second stage (economic stage) only those tenders that have obtained the required number of points in the first stage (technical stage) are evaluated. The second question concerns whether such national legislation relating to the open procedure must impose on the contracting authority an obligation to ensure that a certain number of tenders will be evaluated in the final stage of the procedure. Lastly, the third question concerns the compatibility with Directive 2014/24 of an approach which assumes that in the first stage (technical stage) of such a procedure a tender must obtain a certain number of points in order to be evaluated during the second stage (economic stage).

II. Legal framework

A. EU law

3. Pursuant to Article 26(1) and (2) of Directive 2014/24:

‘1. When awarding public contracts, contracting authorities shall apply the national procedures adjusted to be in conformity with this Directive, provided that, without prejudice to Article 32, a call for competition has been published in accordance with this Directive.

2. Member States shall provide that contracting authorities may apply open or restricted procedures as regulated in this Directive.'

4. Article 27 of that directive, entitled 'Open procedure', sets out the time limits within which interested economic operators may submit a tender in public procurement procedures where the contracting authority has used the open procedure.

5. Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 states:

'Where contracting authorities exercise the option of reducing the number of tenders to be negotiated as provided for in Article 29(6) or of solutions to be discussed as provided for in Article 30(4), they shall do so by applying the award criteria stated in the procurement documents. In the final stage, the number arrived at shall make for genuine competition in so far as there are enough tenders, solutions or qualified candidates.'

6. Pursuant to Article 67(1), (2) and (4) of that directive:

'1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions concerning the price of certain supplies or the remuneration of certain services, contracting authorities shall base the award of public contracts on the most economically advantageous tender.

2. The most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting authority shall be identified on the basis of the price or cost, using a cost-effectiveness approach, such as life-cycle costing in accordance with Article 68, and may include the best price-quality ratio, which shall be assessed on the basis of criteria, including qualitative, environmental and/or social aspects, linked to the subject-matter of the public contract in question. …

…

4. Award criteria shall not have the effect of conferring an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority. They shall ensure the possibility of effective competition and shall be accompanied by specifications that allow the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified in order to assess how well the tenders meet the award criteria …'

B. Spanish law

7. Article 150(4) of the Texto Refundido de la Ley de Contratos del Sector Público (consolidated text of the Spanish Law on Public Sector Contracts) ('the TRLCSP') states:

'Where more than one criterion needs to be taken into consideration, it will be necessary to specify the relative weighting attributed to each criterion, which may be expressed by establishing a sufficiently broad band of values. If the award procedure is divided into several stages, it will also be necessary to indicate in which stages the various criteria will be applied, and the minimum number of points that must be obtained by the tenderer in order that he may continue to participate in the selection process.'

8. Article 22(1)(d) of Real Decreto 817/2009, de 8 de mayo, por el que se desarrolla parcialmente la Ley 30/2007, de 30 de octubre, de Contratos del Sector Público (Royal Decree No 817/2009 of 8 May 2009 partially implementing Law No 30/2007 of 30 October 2007 on Public Sector Contracts), which governs the functions of the Mesas de Contratación (Procurement Boards), these being collegiate bodies that advise the contracting authorities, states in particular that:

'Without prejudice to the remaining functions entrusted to it by the Law on Public Sector Contracts and its additional provisions, the Procurement Board shall fulfil the following functions in open tendering procedures:

…

(d) Where the evaluation procedure [for submitted tenders] is divided into several stages, it will decide which tenderers are to be excluded for not obtaining the minimum number of points that a tenderer must obtain in order to continue to participate in the selection process.

…’

III. Facts of the dispute which is the subject of the main proceedings

9. Musikene (‘the contracting authority’) is a public-sector foundation in the Autonomous Community of the Basque Country, which organised an open procedure for the award of a supply contract described as ‘furniture and signage, specific musical equipment, musical instruments, electro-acoustic, recording and audiovisual equipment, computer equipment and reprographics’. The value of the contract was estimated to exceed the threshold that obliged the contracting authority to apply the provisions implementing Directive 2014/24 into Spanish law.

10. The call for tenders under the open procedure within the meaning of Article 27 of Directive 2014/24 was published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 26 July 2016.

11. The procurement documents specified the procurement procedure as well as the tender evaluation criteria. In simple terms, the documents distinguished two stages, referred to as the technical stage and the economic stage. In each of those stages, a tender could receive a maximum score of 50 points.

12. In the technical stage, a weighted criterion — ‘Presentation and description of the project’, broken down into various sub-criteria for each of the lots comprising the contract — was applied. In the economic stage, the price criterion was evaluated. This consisted in the award of points for a reduction in the tender price relative to the value of the contract.

13. In addition, the procurement documents required a minimum number of points to be obtained in the technical stage in order to be able to participate in the economic stage. Only those tenderers which had obtained at least 35 points in the technical stage could proceed to the economic stage.

14. The Órgano Administrativo de Recursos Contractuales de la Comunidad Autónoma de Euskadi (Administrative Board of Contract Appeals of the Autonomous Community of the Basque Country, Spain) (‘the OARC’) is a permanent body which deals with appeals in the field of public procurement.

15. On 11 August 2016 the OARC received an appeal from Montte, SL (‘the appellant’) regarding the procurement documents. In its appeal, the appellant challenged those documents in so far as they require a minimum number of points to be obtained during the technical stage. According to the appellant, such a requirement should be deemed inadmissible, since it renders meaningless the weighting of technical and economic criteria as provided for in the procurement documents. That requirement leads to a situation in which the contracting authority is unable to evaluate the tenders on the basis of the price offered, and is unable to select the most advantageous offer.

16. By contrast, the contracting authority is of the view that it was necessary to establish that requirement due to the subject matter of the contract, which concerned the supply of equipment that forms an integral part of a building. For that reason, a tender could proceed to the economic stage if it met certain minimum requirements, thereby ensuring that the contract would be performed within the established time limits and to the appropriate technical standards.

IV. The questions referred and the proceedings before the Court

17. In those circumstances, the OARC decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Does Directive [2014/24] preclude national legislation, such as Article 150(4) of the TRLCSP, or a practice for interpreting and implementing that legislation, which authorises contracting authorities to establish in the documents governing an open tendering procedure award criteria which apply in successive elimination stages for tenders which do not exceed a predetermined minimum score threshold?

(2) If the answer to Question 1 is in the negative, does the aforementioned Directive 2014/24 preclude national legislation, or a practice for interpreting and implementing that legislation, which uses the aforementioned system of award criteria which apply in successive elimination stages in such a way that in the last stage there are not sufficient tenders to ensure "genuine competition"?

(3) If the answer to Question 2 is in the affirmative, does the aforementioned Directive 2014/24 preclude, because it does not ensure genuine competition or circumvents the mandate to award the contract to the tender with the best price-quality ratio, a clause such as that at issue, in which the price factor is evaluated only for tenders which have obtained 35 out of 50 points in the technical criteria?'

18. The request for a preliminary ruling was lodged at the Court Registry on 28 October 2016.

19. Written observations have been submitted by the Spanish and Greek Governments and by the European Commission. Those governments and the Commission also took part in the hearing held on 16 April 2018.

V. Analysis

A. Admissibility

20. In its request for a preliminary ruling, the OARC begins by considering whether it can be regarded as a 'court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU. I will therefore begin by addressing this issue.

21. According to settled case-law, in order to determine whether a given national body is a 'court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU, the Court takes account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent. (3) Moreover, a national body may refer a question to the Court only if it is called upon to give a ruling in proceedings intended to lead to a decision of a judicial nature. (4) Those factors are indicative in the sense that they are neither decisive nor exhaustive. They provide a point of reference for determining the judicial nature of the referring body. (5)

22. Importantly, even if a body is regarded under the law of a given Member State as an administrative body, that fact is not, in itself, conclusive for the purpose of determining whether the body concerned is a 'court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU. (6)

23. It follows from the information referred to in the request for a preliminary ruling that the OARC is a permanent appeal body that was established on the basis of laws of general application. The OARC's jurisdiction to hear appeals in cases concerning public procurement does not depend on the parties' agreement. (7) The decisions of that body are binding on the parties. Furthermore, the OARC decides cases brought before it on the basis of rules of law, following inter partes proceedings. Lastly, the OARC is an independent body that is not subject to any external instructions.

24. In the light of those observations, I believe that the OARC fulfils the criteria allowing it to be regarded as a 'court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU.

B. The first question referred

25. By its first question, the referring court seeks to determine whether Directive 2014/24 precludes legislation which implements that directive into national law from authorising a contracting authority to establish a staged evaluation of tenders in documents governing the award of a contract under an open procedure, provided that in successive stages only those tenders that have reached the specified score threshold in previous stages are evaluated.

26. The referring court states that doubts as to the possibility of carrying out a staged evaluation of tenders in the context of an open procedure arise for several reasons.

27. First, the referring court states that Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 provides for the possibility of reducing the number of tenders and solutions by allowing competitive procedures with negotiation (Article 29(6) of Directive 2014/24) and competitive dialogues (Article 30(4) of that directive) to take place in successive stages as part of the public procurement procedure. Directive 2014/24 does not, however, contain an analogous provision for the open procedure referred to in Article 27 of that directive.

28. In that context, the referring court points out that the possibility of establishing stages in a public procurement procedure applies only to those procedures where it is possible to negotiate the tenders originally submitted. Consequently, the referring court is of the view that it is possible to defend the view that a contracting authority is not permitted to establish stages in public procurement procedures where it is not possible to negotiate tenders. Such procedures include the open procedure.

29. Secondly, the referring court points out that the content of recitals 90, 92 and 104 of Directive 2014/24 could also be an argument against the introduction of stages in the open procedure. According to the referring court, those recitals concern the function performed by the award criteria. Those criteria make it possible to compare tenders such that they can be assessed objectively. However, the purpose of the award criteria is not to eliminate tenders. This is done instead by the criteria that verify a tenderer's ability to perform a contract or by the criteria that relate to the minimum technical requirements as set out in the procurement documents.

30. Third and lastly, the referring court points out that a staged evaluation of tenders, carried out in a manner corresponding to that used in the national procedure, could lead to a situation in which the most economically advantageous tender would not be considered by the contracting authority. As a consequence, the contract would be awarded without taking into account the price criterion, which could prove contrary to Article 67(2) of Directive 2014/24 in particular.

1. Positions of the parties

31. Regarding the doubts of the referring court, the Spanish Government points out, first, that the EU legislature has not fully harmonised the rules governing the open procedure. A Member State may therefore freely regulate in national law issues related to the conduct of an open procedure, provided that the adopted national rules do not undermine the effectiveness of the provisions of Directive 2014/24.

32. Secondly, the Spanish Government disagrees with the interpretation of the referring court, which considers that the staged evaluation of tenders under the open procedure is intended to reduce the number of candidates or tenders. According to the Spanish Government, the purpose of establishing a two-stage evaluation of tenders in the national procedure was to ensure that only tenders which met the needs of the contracting authority would be taken into consideration.

33. Third and lastly, according to the Spanish Government, it is true that the contracting authority cannot determine the award criteria in such a way as to give itself unrestricted freedom. Nevertheless, it follows from Article 67(2) of Directive 2014/24 that the most economically advantageous tender may be selected on the basis of a criterion relating to the best price-quality ratio.

34. As regards the first question, the Greek Government and the Commission, in essence, take the same position as the Spanish Government.

2. Analysis

35. In my view, the doubts of the referring court, to which the parties refer in their observations, give rise to three issues. The first issue concerns the extent to which Member States are free to regulate the open procedure in national law. Secondly, the doubts of the referring court also concern whether a two-stage evaluation of tenders, carried out in a similar manner to the evaluation to which the main proceedings relate, leads to a situation in which the purpose of the tender evaluation criteria is, in essence, to eliminate tenders, whereas their purpose should be to evaluate them. Thirdly, the referring court asks whether the staged evaluation of tenders leads to circumventing the price criterion when awarding a contract. In the next section of this Opinion, I shall address each of these issues in turn.

(a) The extent to which Member States are free to regulate the open procedure

(1) Introductory remarks

36. Pursuant to Article 26(1) of Directive 2014/24, when awarding public contracts, contracting authorities are to apply the national procedures adjusted to be in conformity with that directive. Furthermore, pursuant to Article 26(2) of Directive 2014/24, Member States have an obligation to provide that contracting authorities may apply the open procedure as regulated in that directive. (8)

37. In that context, it should be noted that Directive 2014/24 does not regulate exhaustively the manner in which the open procedure is to be conducted. The Spanish and Greek Governments and the Commission also point to this. While it is true that Article 27 of Directive 2014/24 specifies the time limits within which tenders must be submitted in an open procedure, that directive does not contain any provisions concerning the procurement procedure that is to be carried out under that open procedure.

38. Given that, on the one hand, Member States are required to ensure that contracting authorities are able to use the open procedure and, on the other, that that procedure is adjusted to be in conformity with Directive 2014/24 and may be applied as regulated in that directive, it is for national legislators to lay down appropriate rules for the conduct of such a procedure, since that procedure is regulated only to a very limited extent by EU law.

39. Of course, the freedom of national legislators is not unrestricted in this regard. National legislation must not give rise to procedures under which contracting authorities would regularly infringe the principles of procurement laid down in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 and the general principles of EU law. Nor must national legislation undermine the effectiveness of the provisions of that directive (effet utile). (9) In my view, this is how the requirement that procedures should be adjusted to be in conformity with Directive 2014/24, and may be applied as regulated in that directive, should be understood.

40. In the light of the foregoing considerations, it is necessary to consider whether, given the silence of Directive 2014/24 on the admissibility of a staged evaluation of tenders in the context of an open procedure, it is appropriate to conclude that authorising contracting authorities to provide for such a solution in public procurement documents is contrary to the provisions of that directive. In that context, as regards the doubts of the referring court, reference must be made to a systematic interpretation of Directive 2014/24, in the light of Article 66 thereof.

(2) The role of Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 in the light of other provisions of that directive

41. The referring court states that its doubts concerning the possibility of establishing a two-stage tender evaluation in the documents governing an open tendering procedure derive from the inclusion in Directive 2014/24 of a provision that expressly permits solutions or tenders under certain procedures to be evaluated in stages (Article 66), whereas there is no analogous provision in that directive in relation to the open procedure.

42. I do not share the doubts of the referring court in this regard.

43. The establishment of an explicit rule that permits solutions or tenders to be evaluated in stages using award criteria in competitive procedures with negotiation and competitive dialogues is, in my view, dictated by the fact that it is possible in those procedures to negotiate the tenders originally submitted (Article 29(5) of Directive 2014/24) and to clarify, specify and optimise such tenders (Article 30(6) of that directive).

44. On the one hand, negotiating a large number of tenders or solutions could in some cases be problematic for contracting authorities. The Commission drew attention to this in its written observations. By reducing the number of tenders or solutions in successive stages of the procedure, only those that meet the needs of the contracting authorities can be negotiated.

45. On the other hand, as a result of dividing the procedure into successive stages in order to reduce the number of tenders or discussed solutions, it could transpire that only those tenderers whose tenders or solutions had not been eliminated in previous stages of the procedure would actually be able to negotiate the tender and conclude a contract with the contracting authority on the basis of that negotiation. This could give rise to doubts as to whether the principles of procurement laid down in Article 18 of Directive 2014/24 were being observed. The main principles at issue here are equal and non-discriminatory treatment, the obligation of transparency, and the prohibition on the artificial narrowing of competition.

46. For this reason, the EU legislature made it clear that the staged evaluation of tenders is admissible in procedures which provide for the possibility of negotiating tenders. In this way, doubts were removed as to the admissibility of establishing stages in such procedures. (10)

47. Such doubts do not arise, however, with regard to the open procedure, which does not provide for the possibility of negotiating the tenders originally submitted. (11) Therefore, in the absence of a provision analogous to Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 concerning the open procedure, it cannot be inferred that, in the context of such a procedure, it is inadmissible to introduce stages that relate to particular award criteria.

48. To conclude: it cannot be inferred from the inclusion in Directive 2014/24 of a provision such as Article 66 of that directive concerning competitive procedures with negotiation and competitive dialogues that the staged evaluation of tenders in an open procedure is inadmissible, provided that it does not infringe the principles of procurement laid down in Article 18 of that directive and the general principles of EU law, and that it does not undermine the effectiveness of the provisions of that directive.

(b) The nature and role of the award criteria

49. In its request for a preliminary ruling, the referring court expresses doubts as to whether the establishment of a staged open procedure, such as the one referred to in the procurement documents contested in the main proceedings, means that in practice the purpose of the award criteria is to verify a tenderer's ability to perform the contract and to eliminate tenders.

50. In order to address the doubts raised by the referring court, it seems necessary to explain the essence of the criteria used in the award of contracts under procedures falling within the scope of Directive 2014/24.

51. In Article 56 of Directive 2014/24, the EU legislature clearly distinguished two types of criteria, namely: the criteria for qualitative selection, which principally include the grounds for exclusion and the selection criteria that verify the economic operators' ability to perform the contract to be awarded (see Articles 57 and 58 of that directive), and the award criteria, which relate to the tenders themselves. Unlike the criteria for qualitative selection, the award criteria are objective in the sense that they are criteria linked to the subject matter of the contract in question (first sentence, in fine, of Article 67(2) thereof). (12)

52. An analysis of the reference for a preliminary ruling leads to the conclusion that the criteria applied in both stages of the open procedure concerned the tenders (award criteria) and not the economic operators' ability to perform the contract to be awarded (criteria for qualitative selection). Indeed, according to the information provided by the referring court, criteria referring to the presentation and description of the project were applicable at the technical stage.

53. While it is true that the application of award criteria in the way in which this was done in the national procedure means that in practice certain tenders are not considered by the contracting authority in subsequent stages of the procedure, in my view this is not about preselecting tenderers, but about improving the way in which the weighting of each of the award criteria is determined.

54. It is conceivable that the contracting authority could assess the technical and economic criteria under the open procedure without dividing it into stages. This would require the weighting of the various criteria in the procurement documents to be determined in such a way that a tender which did not meet certain technical requirements could not in practice obtain enough points to be selected by the contracting authority.

55. In my view, the solution described in the previous point, and the two-stage evaluation of tenders which is contested by the appellant in the main proceedings, are not in themselves contrary to Directive 2014/24. With respect to both of those solutions, the award criteria should of course, pursuant to Article 67(4) of that directive, be defined in such a way as to ensure the possibility of effective competition. Importantly, in this context, the appellant does not appear to contest in the main proceedings the proportionality of the contracting authority's expectations which led to the establishment of a 35-point threshold at the technical stage for the evaluation of tenders in qualitative terms.

56. I therefore consider that Directive 2014/24 does not preclude the specification of award criteria in the procurement documents, in accordance with Article 67(2) and (4) of that directive, in such a way that only those tenders which have obtained a certain number of points in the previous stages will be evaluated in the subsequent stages of the open procedure.

(c) The role of price as an award criterion

57. The referring court also points out that a staged evaluation of tenders, such as that provided for in the documents contested by the appellant, may lead to the contract being awarded with the omission of the price element. According to the referring court, this could be contrary to Directive 2014/24.

58. Indeed, the second sentence of recital 90 of Directive 2014/24 states that an assessment based on the best price-quality ratio should always include a price or cost element.

59. However, Article 67(1) of Directive 2014/24 provides that contracting authorities are to base the award of public contracts on the most economically advantageous tender. This means, pursuant to Article 67(2) of that directive, the most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting authority, and the most economically advantageous tender may include the best price-quality ratio. (13)

60. Furthermore, according to the second paragraph of recital 90 of Directive 2014/24, a greater quality orientation of public procurement is to be encouraged. For this reason, Member States should be permitted to prohibit or restrict use of price only or cost only to assess the most economically advantageous tender where they deem this appropriate. In addition, according to the fourth sentence of the first paragraph of recital 92 of that directive, contracting authorities should be encouraged to choose award criteria that allow them to obtain high-quality works, supplies and services that are optimally suited to their needs.

61. This does not mean that contracting authorities have unrestricted freedom to determine the award criteria. In this regard, the aforementioned Article 67(4) of Directive 2014/24 applies. It imposes an obligation on contracting authorities to define the award criteria in such a way as to ensure the possibility of effective competition.

62. The obligation arising from Article 67(4) of Directive 2014/24 must, however, be respected by contracting authorities regardless of whether they establish a staged evaluation of tenders in the procurement documents. That obligation would therefore also apply if, in the procurement documents contested by the appellant, there had been a decision to assess the qualitative and economic criteria without distinguishing individual stages. The staged evaluation of tenders does not have the effect of adding to the obligations of the contracting authority under Article 67(4) of Directive 2014/24 in such a way that the contracting authority is compelled to assign a special role to the price criterion.

63. To conclude: first, it cannot be inferred from the inclusion of Article 66 in Directive 2014/24 that it is not possible to establish a staged evaluation of tenders in documents governing the award of a contract under an open procedure, provided that it does not infringe the principles of procurement laid down in Article 18 of that directive and the general principles of EU law, and that it does not undermine the effectiveness of the provisions of the directive. Secondly, the criteria used in such a staged evaluation of tenders remain award criteria provided that they comply with Article 67(2) and (4) of Directive 2014/24. Thirdly, this kind of staged evaluation of tenders does not mean that the contracting authority does not base the award of the contract on the most economically advantageous tender.

64. In the light of those considerations, I propose that the Court should answer the first question as follows: Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding a contracting authority from being entitled, by using award criteria in accordance with Article 67(2) and (4) of that directive, to establish a staged evaluation of tenders in the documents governing the award of a contract under an open procedure.

C. The second question referred

65. The second question was formulated in the event that the Court's answer to the first question should mean that the national legislature could authorise contracting authorities to establish a staged evaluation of tenders in documents governing the award of a contract under the open procedure. By its second question, the referring court, in essence, seeks clarification as to whether Directive 2014/24 precludes a situation where a contracting authority is not obliged, in the final stage of the procedure, to arrive at a sufficient number of tenders to ensure ‘genuine competition’ within the meaning of Article 66 of that directive.

66. The Spanish Government considers that the second question is hypothetical. In that government’s view, there is nothing to suggest that the staged evaluation of tenders in the national procedure could have led to the contract being awarded in the absence of competition. In addition, the Spanish Government points out that the issue in the main proceedings is the assessment of the procurement documents contested by the appellant. The Greek Government and the Commission, by contrast, take the view that the requirement to ensure ‘genuine competition’ does not apply in relation to the open procedure.

1. Admissibility

67. It is necessary to begin by addressing the doubts of the Spanish Government regarding the admissibility of the second question.

68. The provisions of Spanish law that refer to the open procedure do not lay down a requirement of ‘genuine competition’. There is no indication that such a requirement was laid down in the procurement documents contested by the appellant.

69. In my view, the referring court is asking whether there is a need to comply with the requirement of ‘genuine competition’ in the context of a staged evaluation of tenders under the open procedure in view of the wording of Article 66 of Directive 2014/24, which is referred to several times in the reference for a preliminary ruling. If it transpired that the requirement laid down in Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 was also applicable directly or by analogy to open procedures in which tenders are evaluated in stages, the referring court would have to examine whether the procurement documents enabled the contracting authority to ensure ‘genuine competition’ in the final stage of the procedure.

70. In the light of the foregoing considerations, the second question is admissible.

2. Substance

71. In order to answer this question it is necessary to determine whether Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 applies either directly or by analogy to open procedures in which tenders are evaluated in stages.

72. In my view, Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 cannot be applied to open procedures.

73. First, Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 refers exclusively to competitive procedures with negotiation and competitive dialogues. It is not, however, applicable in the case of open procedures. (14) Moreover, a contracting authority may continue an open procedure even if the award criteria mean that only a small number of economic operators may tender for the contract. (15)

74. Secondly, the second sentence of Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 provides that the number of tenders or solutions arrived at in the final stage must ensure genuine competition in so far as there are enough tenders, solutions or qualified candidates.

75. It follows from the wording of that provision that the requirement to ensure a certain number of tenders and solutions in the final stage of the procedure is not an absolute requirement. It is applicable where it is possible to arrive at an appropriate number of tenders, solutions or qualified candidates. (16) I consider, therefore, that the aim of arriving at a number that ensures genuine competition in the final stage of a competitive procedure with negotiation and competitive dialogue is to avoid a situation where the tenderer or candidate concerned would not be interested in negotiating the tender because it would be the only economic operator taken into consideration by the contracting authority, even though other economic operators could offer the contracting authority a tender that would meet its expectations and needs.

76. Therefore, in my view, there is no need to apply Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 by analogy in the case of an open procedure in which tenders are evaluated in stages. At subsequent stages of such a procedure situations arise in which only those tenders that meet the needs and expectations of the contracting authority are taken into account. However, there is no possibility to negotiate them.

77. In the light of the foregoing considerations, the requirement to arrive at a certain number of tenders in the final stage of an open procedure such that that number ensures ‘genuine competition’ within the meaning of Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 is not applicable either directly or by analogy in an open procedure such as that referred to in the procurement documents contested by the appellant.

78. Therefore, I propose that the Court should answer the second question as follows: Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding a situation where a contracting authority which establishes a staged evaluation of tenders in the documents governing a contract awarded under an open procedure is not obliged, in the final stage of such a procedure, to arrive at a number of tenders sufficient to ensure ‘genuine competition’ within the meaning of Article 66 of that directive.

D. The third question referred

79. By its third question, the referring court, in essence, seeks clarification as to whether a requirement such as that contested by the appellant is contrary to Directive 2014/24 because it is not possible to ensure genuine competition or to award a contract to the economic operator that has submitted the tender with the best price-quality ratio.

80. The third question was formulated in the event that the answer to the second question was in the affirmative. Such an answer would mean that the requirement to arrive at a sufficient number of tenders in the final evaluation stage to ensure genuine competition within the meaning of Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 is also applicable in an open procedure.

81. In the light of my proposed answer to the second question, there is no need to answer the third question. However, in the event that the Court does not share my position in regard to the second question, I shall also briefly refer to the third question.

82. In the context of the requirement to arrive at a sufficient number of tenders in the final stage of the procedure to ensure genuine competition, it should be borne in mind that even if such a requirement were to be deduced from Article 66 of Directive 2014/24 applied directly or by analogy, it is not an absolute requirement. It would apply only in so far as the number of appropriate tenders would allow it. (17) In any event, the final assessment in this regard would have to be left to the referring court.

83. As regards the award of a contract to the economic operator that has submitted the tender with the best price-quality ratio, Directive 2014/24 requires contracting authorities to award contracts on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender. However, that criterion cannot be interpreted to mean that the contracting authority is obliged to select the most advantageous tender in terms of price, even if that tender does not meet that authority’s quality requirements as specified in the procurement documents. The freedom of contracting authorities to set award criteria is, however, restricted by Article 67(4) of Directive 2014/24. (18) It is for the referring court to decide whether the contracting authority has complied with the requirements laid down in that provision.

VI. Conclusions

84. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Órgano Administrativo de Recursos Contractuales de la Comunidad Autónoma de Euskadi (Administrative Board of Contract Appeals of the Autonomous Community of the Basque Country, Spain) as follows:

(1) Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC must be interpreted as not precluding a contracting authority from being entitled, by using award criteria in accordance with Article 67(2) and (4) of that directive, to establish a staged evaluation of tenders in the documents governing the award of a contract under an open procedure.

(2) Directive 2014/24 must be interpreted as not precluding a situation where a contracting authority which establishes a staged evaluation of tenders in the documents governing a contract awarded under an open procedure is not obliged, in the final stage of such a procedure, to arrive at a number of tenders sufficient to ensure ‘genuine competition’ within the meaning of Article 66 of that directive.

---

1 Original language: Polish.

---

2 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

---

3 See judgments of 31 May 2005, Syfait and Others (C-53/03, EU:C:2005:333, paragraph 29), and of 31 January 2013, Bełov (C-394/11, EU:C:2013:48, paragraph 38).

---

4 Judgments of 31 May 2005, Syfait and Others (C-53/03, EU:C:2005:333, paragraph 29), and of 31 January 2013, Bełov (C-394/11, EU:C:2013:48, paragraphs 39 and 40).

---

5 See my Opinion in Ascendi (C-377/13, EU:C:2014:246, point 33).

---

6 See judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme (C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraph 17).

---

7 I note in passing that in its judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme (C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664), the Court interpreted the provisions of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), which preceded Directive 2014/24, in the context of questions referred by a Catalan appeal body. It is true that reference was made in that context to a provision of Spanish law which provides that a special appeal in public procurement proceedings is optional prior to an administrative-law action. I cannot rule out the possibility that that provision of Spanish law may apply to the main proceedings, which also concern an appeal body of another Autonomous Community. However, in its judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme (C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraphs 22 to 25), the Court held that the Catalan appeal body also satisfied the criterion of compulsory jurisdiction, despite the fact that a person bringing proceedings in a public procurement case may choose between a special appeal to the referring body and an administrative-law action. The decisive factor is that the jurisdiction of the referring body does not depend on the parties’ agreement and its decisions are binding on the parties.

---

8 Emphasis added.

---

9 In this spirit, with reference to Directive 2004/18, see judgment of 28 February 2018, MA.T.I. SUD and Duemme SGR (C-523/16 and C-536/16, EU:C:2018:122, paragraph 48). With reference to the national procedural rules governing legal actions in the field of public procurement, see judgment of 5 April 2017, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others (C-391/15, EU:C:2017:268, paragraph 33).

---

10 Moreover, unlike the open procedure, the competitive procedure with negotiation and competitive dialogue can be applied so long as certain conditions are met. In addition, the EU legislature has regulated those procedures more restrictively than in the case of the open procedure. In legal academic writings, this is explained by the fact that the risk of restricting competition is generally higher when a contracting authority uses such special procedures as opposed to the open procedure. For the legal status quo prior to the adoption of Directive 2014/24, see Bovis, C., Public Procurement in the European Union, Palgrave, New York, 2005, pp. 132 and 133.

---

11 See González García, J., in Caranta, R., Edelstam, G., and Trybus, M. (editors), EU Public Contract Law: Public Procurement and Beyond, Bruylant, Brussels, 2013, Chapter 3, point 4. Indeed, authorising a contracting authority to conduct negotiations could lead to an infringement of the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency. See judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz (C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 62 and the case-law cited).

---

12 Importantly, in the context of the statement concerning the objective character of the award criteria, those criteria may also apply to staff assigned to performing the contract, where the quality of the staff assigned can have a significant impact on the level of performance of the contract. See Article 67(2)(b) of Directive 2014/24. See also judgment of 26 March 2015, Ambisig (C-601/13, EU:C:2015:204, paragraphs 33 and 34). It is worth noting, also against the background of Article 66 of Directive 2014/24, which is referred to several times in the request for a preliminary ruling, that a reduction in the number of tenders or solutions is achieved by dividing the competitive procedure with negotiation or competitive dialogue through the use of award criteria, and not criteria for qualitative selection. See Pawelec, J. (editor), Dyrektywa Parlamentu Europejskiego i Rady 2014/24/UE w sprawie zamówień publicznych, uchylająca dyrektywę 2004/18/WE. Komentarz, C.H. Beck, Warsaw, 2017, p. 315; Sánchez Graells, A., Public Procurement and the EU Competition Rules, Hart Publishing, Oxford — Portland, 2015, p. 312.

---

13 Emphasis added.

---

14 See point 47 of this Opinion.

---

15 In that spirit, see judgment of 17 September 2002, Concordia Bus Finland (C-513/99, EU:C:2002:495, paragraph 85). Moreover, in the judgment of 16 September 1999, Fracasso and Leitschutz (C-27/98, EU:C:1999:420, paragraphs 32 to 34), regarding the legal status quo prior to the entry into force of Directive 2014/24, the Court pointed out that if, on conclusion of a public procurement procedure, there is only one tender remaining, the contracting authority is not required to award the contract to the tenderer which submitted that tender. It does not follow, however, that the contracting authority has to annul such a procedure.

---

16 In accordance with the explanatory note on competitive dialogue drafted by the Commission (European Commission Directorate-General Internal Market and Services Public Procurement Policy, Explanatory Note — Competitive Dialogue — Classic Directive, accessible via the webpage ec.europa.eu, pp. 8 and 9), reducing the number of solutions may lead to only one solution being considered in the final stage of the procedure. However, this does not prevent the contracting authority from continuing the procedure. In this spirit, see also the second sentence of recital 41 of Directive 2004/18, which clarifies that a reduction in the number of tenders to be discussed or negotiated in the case of competitive dialogues and negotiated procedures with publication of a contract notice should, in so far as the number of appropriate solutions or candidates allows, ensure that there is genuine competition.

---

17 See point 75 of this Opinion.

---

18 See points 61 and 62 of this Opinion.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

17 May 2018 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Directive 2004/18/EC — Procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Links between tenderers having submitted separate tenders in the same procedure — Obligations of the tenderers, of the contracting authority and of the national court)

In Case C-531/16,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court, Lithuania), made by decision of 11 October 2016, received at the Court on 18 October 2016, in the proceedings

Šiaulių regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras,

'Ecoservice projektai' UAB, formerly 'Specializuotas transportas' UAB,

interveners:

'VSA Vilnius' UAB,

'Švarinta' UAB,

'Specialus autotransportas' UAB,

'Ecoservice' UAB,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, C. Vajda, E. Juhász (Rapporteur), K. Jürimäe and C. Lycourgos, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of

– Šiaulių regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras, by L. Songaila, advokatas, – 'Ecoservice projektai' UAB, by J. Elzbergas, advokatas, and V. Mitrauskas, – 'VSA Vilnius' UAB, by D. Krukonis, advokatas,

– 'Švarinta' UAB, par K. Smaliukas, advokatas,

– the Lithuanian Government, by D. Kriaučiūnas, G. Taluntytė and R. Butvydytė, acting as Agents, – the Czech Government, by M. Smolek, T. Müller and J. Vláčil, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by A. Tokár and A. Steiblytė, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 22 November 2017,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 45, 56 and 101 TFEU, of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), and of the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) (‘Directive 89/665’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between ‘VSA Vilnius’ UAB and Šiaulių regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras (centre for waste management for the region of Šiauliai, Lithuania) concerning the award, by that centre, of a public service contract relating to the collection of communal waste of the municipal authority of Šiauliai and its transportation to the place of treatment.

Legal context

Directive 89/665

3 The third paragraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides as follows:

‘Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed [EU] law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.’

4 Under Article 2(1)(b) of that directive:

‘Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

…

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

…’

Directive 2004/18

5 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 is worded as follows:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

6 Article 45(2) of that directive states:

‘Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(a) is bankrupt or is being wound up, where his affairs are being administered by the court, where he has entered into an arrangement with creditors, where he has suspended business activities or is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(b) is the subject of proceedings for a declaration of bankruptcy, for an order for compulsory winding up or administration by the court or of an arrangement with creditors or of any other similar proceedings under national laws and regulations;

(c) has been convicted by a judgment which has the force of res judicata in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of any offence concerning his professional conduct;

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate;

(e) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(f) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section or has not supplied such information.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

7 On 9 July 2015, the centre for waste management for the region of Šiauliai announced a public call for tenders for the provision of services relating to the collection of communal waste of the municipal authority of Šiauliai and its transportation to the place of treatment.

8 Four tenderers submitted tenders: 'Specializuotas transportas' UAB ('tenderer B'), 'Ekonovus' UAB, 'Specialus autotransportas' UAB ('tenderer A') et and the group of operators VSA Vilnius and 'Švarinta' UAB.

9 Tenderers A and B are subsidiaries of 'Ecoservice' UAB, which holds 100% and 98.2%, respectively, of the shares of those undertakings. The Boards of Directors of tenderers A and B are made up of the same persons.

10 The national legislation applicable at the time of publication of the call for tenders did not expressly provide that a tenderer is obliged to disclose its links with other operators participating in the same tendering procedure, or that the contracting authority is obliged to verify, assess or take account of those links for the purpose of its decisions. Nor were those obligations provided for in the tender specifications.

11 Nonetheless, tenderer B submitted, along with its tender, a declaration of honour to the effect that it was taking part in the tendering procedure autonomously and independently of any other economic operators that might be connected to it, and it requested the contracting authority to treat all other operators as competitors. It further stated that it undertook, should it be so required by the contracting authority, to provide a list of economic operators connected to it.

12 On 24 September 2015, the contracting authority rejected tenderer A's tender on the ground that the engines of two of its collection vehicles did not meet the required quality standards. Tenderer A did not contest that decision.

13 On 22 October 2015, the contracting authority informed the tenderers of the classification of the tenders and the award of the contract to tenderer B.

14 VSA Vilnius, which had been classified directly after tenderer B, filed a complaint with the contracting authority, arguing that the tenderers' offers had not been properly evaluated and that the principles of equal treatment and transparency had been infringed. It considered that tenderers A and B had acted as an association of undertakings, that their offers constituted variants and that, given that the call for tenders prohibited the submission of variants, their offers should have been rejected by the contracting authority.

15 Following the rejection of its complaint by the contracting authority, VSA Vilnius brought an action before the Šiaulių apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Šiauliai, Lithuania). By judgment of 18 January 2016, that court annulled the decisions of the contracting authority establishing a classification of the tenders and awarding the contract to tenderer B. On 5 April 2016, the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal, Lithuania) confirmed that judgment.

16 The courts of first instance and appeal considered that the contracting authority, although it was aware of the link between tenderers A and B, took no steps to determine the influence of that link on whether the competition between those tenderers was genuine. Although national legislation does not provide for such an obligation, since tenderers A and B were each aware of the other's participation in the tendering procedure, they should have disclosed their links to the contracting authority. The declaration of honour submitted by tenderer B was insufficient to establish that that obligation had been properly performed.

17 VSA Vilnius and tenderer B both subsequently appealed on a point of law to the referring court.

18 In those circumstances, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court, Lithuania) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Must the free movement of persons and services provided for in Articles 45 TFEU and 56 TFEU respectively, the principles of equality of tenderers and of transparency provided for in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 and the principle, which flows from those principles, of free and fair competition between economic operators (together or separately, but without limitation to those provisions) be understood and interpreted as meaning that:

if related tenderers, whose economic, management, financial or other links may give rise to doubts as to their independence and the protection of confidential information and/or may provide the preconditions (potential) for them to have an advantage over other tenderers, have decided to submit separate (independent) tenders in the same public procurement procedure, are they, in any event, obliged to disclose those links between them to the contracting authority, even if the contracting authority does not inquire of them separately, irrespective of whether or not the national legal rules governing public procurement state that such an obligation does in fact exist?

(2) If the answer to the first question:

(a) is in the affirmative (that is to say, tenderers must in any event disclose their links to the contracting authority), is the circumstance that that obligation was not performed in such a case, or that it was not properly performed, sufficient for the contracting authority to take the view, or for a review body (court) to decide, that related tenderers having submitted separate tenders in the same public procurement procedure are participating without genuinely being in competition (and are engaged in sham competition)?

(b) is in the negative (that is to say, tenderers have no obligation to disclose their links other than that laid down in legislation or in the tendering conditions), must the risk posed by participation of related economic operators and the risk of the consequences flowing from this then be borne by the contracting authority, if the contracting authority did not indicate in the public tendering documentation that tenderers had such an obligation of disclosure?

(3) Irrespective of the answer to the first question, and having regard to the judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166), must the provisions of law referred to in the first question and the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 and Article 2(1)(b) of that directive (together or separately, but without limitation to those provisions) be understood and interpreted as meaning that:

(a) if, in the course of the public procurement procedure, it becomes clear, in whatever way, to the contracting authority that significant links (connections) exist between certain tenderers, that contracting authority must, irrespective of its own assessment of that fact and (or) of other circumstances (for example, the formal and substantive dissimilarity of the tenders submitted by the tenderers, the formal undertaking given by a tenderer to engage in fair competition with other tenderers, etc.), separately address the related tenderers and request them to clarify whether, and if so how, their personal situation is compatible with free and fair competition between tenderers?

(b) if the contracting authority has such an obligation but fails to perform it, is there a sufficient basis for the court to declare that the contracting authority has acted unlawfully, having failed to ensure procedural transparency and objectivity, and having failed to request evidence from the applicant or having failed to take a decision, on its own initiative, as to the possible influence that the personal situation of related persons might have on the outcome of the tendering procedure?

(4) Must the legal provisions referred to in the third question and Article 101(1) TFEU (together or separately, but without limitation to those provisions), be understood and interpreted, in the light of the judgments of 12 March 2015, eVigilo (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166); of 21 January 2016, Eturas and Others (C-74/14, EU:C:2016:42); and of 21 July 2016, VM Remonts and Others (C-542/14, EU:C:2016:578), as meaning that:

(a) where a tenderer (the applicant) has become aware of the rejection of the lowest-priced tender submitted by one of two related tenderers in a public tendering procedure (tenderer A) and of the fact that the other tenderer (tenderer B) has been declared the successful tenderer, and also having regard to other circumstances connected with those tenderers and their participation in the tendering procedure (the fact that tenderers A and B have the same board of directors; the fact that they have the same parent company, which did not take part in the tendering procedure; the fact that tenderers A and B did not disclose their links to the contracting authority and did not separately provide additional clarifications as to those links, inter alia because no inquiries had been made of them; the fact that tenderer A provided, in its tender, inconsistent information on the compliance by the proposed means of transport (refuse lorries) with the EURO V condition of the call for tenders; the fact that that tenderer, which submitted the lowest-priced tender, which was rejected because of deficiencies identified in it, first, did not challenge the contracting authority’s decision and, second, lodged an appeal against the judgment of the court of first instance, in which appeal, inter alia, it [challenged] the lawfulness of the rejection of its tender; etc.), and where, in respect of all of those circumstances, the contracting authority did not take any action, is that information alone sufficient to found a claim addressed to the review body that it should regard as unlawful the actions of the contracting authority in failing to ensure procedural transparency and objectivity, and, in addition, in not requiring the applicant to provide concrete evidence that tenderers A and B were acting unfairly?

(b) tenderers A and B did not prove to the contracting authority that they were genuinely and fairly taking part in the public tendering procedure solely because tenderer B voluntarily submitted a declaration of genuine participation, the management quality standards for participating in public tendering were applied by tenderer B, and, in addition, the tenders submitted by those tenderers were not formally and substantively identical?

(5) Can the actions of mutually related economic operators (both of which are subsidiaries of the same company) which are participating separately in the same tendering procedure, the value of which reaches the value for international competitive tendering, and where the seat of the contracting authority which announced the tendering procedure and the place where the services are to be provided are not very far distant from another Member State (the Republic of Latvia), be in principle assessed — regard being had to, inter alia, the voluntary submission by one of those economic operators that it would be engaging in fair competition — under the provisions of Article 101 TFEU and the case-law of the Court of Justice which interprets those provisions?'

Consideration of the questions referred

19 At the outset, it must be noted that, in the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, the referring court refers to Articles 45 and 56 TFEU, without however explaining to what extent the interpretation of those articles is necessary for the purpose of answering those questions. In addition, as is apparent from the order for reference, Directive 2004/18 is relevant to the resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings. In those circumstances, there is no need to interpret Articles 45 and 56 TFEU.

The first and second questions

20 By its first and second questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, failing any express legislative provision or specific condition in the call for tenders or in the tender specifications governing the conditions for the award of a public contract, related tenderers submitting separate offers in the same procedure are obliged to disclose, on their own initiative, the links between them to the contracting authority.

21 In that regard, it should be recalled, first of all, that EU law, Directive 2004/18 specifically, does not generally prohibit related undertakings from submitting offers in a public procurement procedure. In addition, according to case-law, in the light of EU interest in ensuring the widest possible participation by tenderers in a tendering procedure, it would run counter to the effective application of EU law to exclude systematically related undertakings from participating in the same public procurement procedure (see, to that effect, judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraphs 26 and 28).

22 The Court has also pointed out that groups of undertakings can have different forms and objectives, which do not necessarily preclude controlled undertakings from enjoying a certain autonomy in the conduct of their commercial policy and their economic activities, inter alia, in the area of their participation in the award of public contracts. Moreover, relationships between undertakings in the same group may be governed by specific provisions, for example of a contractual nature, such as to guarantee both independence and confidentiality in the drawing-up of tenders to be submitted simultaneously by the undertakings in question in the same tendering procedure (judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 31).

23 Next, with regard to whether, failing any express legislative provision or specific condition in the call for tenders or the tender specifications governing the conditions for the award of a public contract, tenderers are nonetheless obliged to disclose the links between them to the contracting authority, it must be noted that the Court has stated that the principles of transparency and equal treatment which govern all public procurement procedures require the substantive and procedural conditions concerning participation in a contract to be clearly defined in advance and made public, in particular the obligations of tenderers, in order that those tenderers may know exactly the procedural requirements and be sure that the same requirements apply to all candidates (judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited).

24 Requiring tenderers to disclose, on their own initiative, their links to other tenderers, although neither applicable national legislation nor the call for tenders or the tender specifications provide for such an obligation, does not constitute a clearly defined condition for the purpose of the case-law in the previous paragraph. In those circumstances, it would be difficult for tenderers to determine the exact scope of that obligation, all the more so since it is not always possible, due to the very nature of a public procurement procedure, to know the identity of all the tenderers in the same procedure before the closing date for the submission of tenders.

25 In addition, it should be noted that, failing any obligation imposed on the tenderers to inform the contracting authority of any links they may have to other tenderers, the contracting authority must treat the concerned tenderer's offer, throughout the procedure, as an offer that complies with Directive

2004/18, provided that there is no evidence that tenders submitted by related tenderers are coordinated or concerted.

26 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first and second questions is that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, failing any express legislative provision or specific condition in the call for tenders or in the tender specifications governing the conditions for the award of a public contract, related tenderers submitting separate offers in the same procedure are not obliged to disclose, on their own initiative, the links between them to the contracting authority.

The third to fifth questions

27 By its third to fifth questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether, in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, Article 101 TFEU is applicable and whether Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 and the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority, when it has evidence that calls into question the autonomous character of the tenders submitted by certain tenderers, is obliged to verify, requesting, where appropriate, additional information from those tenderers, whether their offers are in fact autonomous and, if it fails to do so, whether the contracting authority's failure to act is capable of vitiating the ongoing public procurement procedure.

28 It must be borne in mind that Article 101 TFEU does not apply where the agreements or practices it prohibits are carried out by undertakings which constitute an economic unit (see, to that effect, judgments of 4 May 1988, Bodson, 30/87, EU:C:1988:225, paragraph 19, and of 11 April 1989, Saeed Flugreisen and Silver Line Reisebüro, 66/86, EU:C:1989:140, paragraph 35). It is, however, for the referring court to verify whether tenderers A and B constitute an economic unit.

29 Where the companies concerned do not constitute an economic unit, that is to say, where the parent company does not have a determining influence on its subsidiaries, it should be noted that, in all events, the principle of equal treatment under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 would be infringed if related tenderers were allowed to submit coordinated or concerted tenders, that is to say, tenders that are neither autonomous nor independent, which would be likely to give them unjustified advantages in relation to the other tenderers, without there being any need to examine whether the submission of such tenders constitutes conduct in breach of Article 101 TFEU.

30 Consequently, in order to answer the third to fifth questions, Article 101 TFEU need not be applied or interpreted in the present case.

31 As regards the obligations of contracting authorities under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, the Court has already stated that contracting authorities are assigned an active role in the application of the principles of public procurement set out in that article (see, to that effect, judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 42).

32 Since that obligation relates to the very essence of the public procurement directives, the Court has ruled that the contracting authority is, at all events, required to determine whether any conflicts of interests concerning the contracting authority's expert exist and to take appropriate measures in order to prevent and detect conflicts of interests and remedy them (judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 43).

33 That case-law is, in the light of the findings in paragraph 29 of the present judgment, applicable to situations such as that at issue in the main proceedings where related tenderers are participants in a public procurement procedure. Therefore, a contracting authority that acquaints itself with objective evidence calling into question the autonomous and independent nature of a tender is obliged to examine all the relevant circumstances having led to the submission of the tender concerned in order to prevent and detect the elements capable of vitiating the tendering procedure and remedy them, where appropriate, requesting the parties to provide certain information and evidence (see, by analogy, judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 44).

34 As far as concerns the evidence capable of demonstrating whether tenders submitted by related tenderers are autonomous and independent, it appears from the order for reference that the referring court is uncertain, inter alia, whether any kind of evidence, or direct evidence in the context of judicial proceedings only, may be taken into account.

35 The third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665, to which the third and fourth questions refer, merely require, in particular, Member States to set up rapid and efficient review procedures in the field of public procurement. Neither those provisions of Directive 89/665, nor any other provision of that directive or Directive 2004/18, lay down rules governing the taking and assessment of evidence of a breach of the EU rules governing public procurement.

36 In those circumstances and in accordance with settled case-law of the Court, failing any EU rules governing the matter, it is for every Member State to lay down the detailed rules of administrative and judicial procedures for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from EU law. Those detailed procedural rules must, however, be no less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and must not render impossible in practice or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by EU law (principle of effectiveness) (judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 39 and the case-law cited).

37 As concerns the standard of proof required in order to determine that a tender is neither autonomous nor independent, the principle of effectiveness requires that a breach of the EU rules governing public procurement may be proved not only by direct evidence, but also through indicia, provided that they are objective and consistent and that the related tenderers are in a position to submit evidence in rebuttal (see, by analogy, judgment of 21 January 2016, Eturas and Others, C-74/14, EU:C:2016:42, paragraph 37).

38 As regards a case such as that in the main proceedings, the finding that the links between tenderers had a bearing on the content of the tenders they submitted during the same procedure suffices, in principle, for those tenders not to be taken into consideration by the contracting authority, as tenders by related undertakings must be submitted completely autonomously and independently. However, a mere finding of a relationship of control between the undertakings concerned, by reason of ownership or the number of voting rights exercisable at ordinary shareholders' meetings, is not sufficient for the contracting authority to exclude automatically those tenders from the procedure for the award of the contract, without ascertaining whether such a relationship had a specific effect on the independence of those tenders (see, by analogy, judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 32).

39 It is for the referring court, in the light of the circumstances of the dispute in the main proceedings, to carry out the necessary verifications and assessments in that regard, as well as with regard to the circumstances in paragraph (a) of the fourth question and to the probative value of the spontaneous declaration made by a tenderer, mentioned in paragraph (b) of that question. In the event that that court should come to the conclusion, following those verifications and assessments, that the tenders at issue in the main proceedings were not submitted autonomously and independently, it is to be recalled that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding the award of the contract to the tenderers having submitted those tenders.

40 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the third to the fifth questions is that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority, when it has evidence that calls into question the autonomous and independent character of the tenders submitted by certain tenderers, is obliged to verify, requesting, where appropriate, additional information from those tenderers, whether their offers are in fact autonomous and independent. If the offers prove not to be autonomous and independent, Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 precludes the award of the contract to the tenderers having submitted those tenders.

Costs

41 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 2 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that:

- failing any express legislative provision or specific condition in the call for tenders or in the tender specifications governing the conditions for the award of a public contract, related tenderers submitting separate offers in the same procedure are not obliged to disclose, on their own initiative, the links between them to the contracting authority;

- the contracting authority, when it has evidence that calls into question the autonomous and independent character of the tenders submitted by certain tenderers, is obliged to verify, requesting, where appropriate, additional information from those tenderers, whether their offers are in fact autonomous and independent. If the offers prove not to be autonomous and independent, Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 precludes the award of the contract to the tenderers having submitted those tenders.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Lithuanian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 22 November 2017(1)

Case C-531/16

Šiaulių regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras,

‘Ecoservice projektai’ UAB, formerly ‘Specializuotas transportas’ UAB

interveners:

‘VSA Vilnius’ UAB,

‘Švarinta’ UAB,

‘Specialus autotransportas’ UAB,

‘Ecoservice’ UAB

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania))

(Preliminary ruling — Directive 2004/18/EC — Procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Equal treatment — Transparency — Genuine competition between tenderers — Links between tenderers which submit separate tenders in the same procedure — Duty to disclose links between tenderers — Obligations of the contracting authority and the national court)

1. When two or more related tenderers submit tenders in procedures for the award of public contracts, the suspicion may arise that they are acting in a coordinated (or even collusive) way, to the detriment of transparency and other rules or principles of EU law by which such procedures must be governed.

2. That is the context of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania), in view of the fact that two subsidiaries of a third company sought, inter alia, to win the contract for collection and transportation of waste in a Lithuanian municipality.

3. By its questions the referring court seeks to ascertain, in short, whether, even in the absence of a specific legislative provision, those tenderers are obliged to disclose the connections between them to the contracting authority and how the contracting authority must act when it has evidence of the existence of those connections.

4. The reference for a preliminary ruling therefore provides the Court with the opportunity to supplement its case-law on the principles of equal treatment and transparency in procedures governed by Directive 2004/18/EC, (2) where participants in those procedures belong to the same group of companies.

I. Legislative framework

A. EU law

1. Directive 2004/18

5. Recital 46 states:

‘Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in conditions of effective competition ...’

6. In accordance with Article 2:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

7. According to Article 45(2):

‘Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(a) is bankrupt or is being wound up, where his affairs are being administered by the court, where he has entered into an arrangement with creditors, where he has suspended business activities or is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(b) is the subject of proceedings for a declaration of bankruptcy, for an order for compulsory winding up or administration by the court or of an arrangement with creditors or of any other similar proceedings under national laws and regulations;

(c) has been convicted by a judgment which has the force of res judicata in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of any offence concerning his professional conduct;

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate;

(e) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(f) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section or has not supplied such information.’

2. Directive 89/665/EEC (3)

8. The third subparagraph of Article 1(1) provides:

‘Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.’

9. Article 2(1)(b) stipulates:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

…

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure.’

B. National law

1. Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law of the Republic of Lithuania on Public Contracts) (4)

10. Pursuant to Article 3(1):

‘The contracting authority shall ensure that, during procedures relating to procurement and the award of contracts, the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination, mutual recognition, proportionality and transparency are observed.’

2. Lietuvos Respublikos konkurencijos įstatymas (Law of the Republic of Lithuania on Competition) (5)

11. In accordance with Article 3(14):

‘“group of related economic operators” [means] two or more economic operators which, in so far as they are controlled or owned by each other and are in a position to engage in concerted action, are deemed to form a single economic operator for the purposes of calculating their gross revenue and market share. Unless there is evidence to the contrary, a group of related economic operators will be deemed to be formed by every economic operator concerned and

…

(2) economic operators which are jointly managed with it or which share administrative services with it and whose supervisory board, board of directors or other management body is composed, as to at least half, of the same members as those of the economic operator concerned;

(3) economic operators in which the economic operator concerned holds at least one third of the capital or one third of all the voting rights or which have a duty to coordinate their financial decisions with it, are answerable to it for the fulfilment of their obligations to third parties, are required to transfer to it all or part of their profits or have authorised it to use at least one third of their assets;

…’

12. Article 5(1) reads:

‘1. Agreements the purpose of which is to restrict competition or which restrict or are liable to restrict competition are prohibited and shall be void from the time of their conclusion, in particular:

(1) agreements which directly or indirectly fix the price of certain goods or other conditions of purchase or sale;

…’

II. Facts

13. On 9 July 2015, the Viešoji įstaiga Šiaulių regiono atliekų tvarkymo centras (the Centre for Waste Management for the Region of Šiauliai; ‘the waste management centre’) announced a call for tenders for the provision of municipal waste collection and transportation services in the municipality of Šiauliai.

14. According to the information in the order for reference, the invitation to tender prohibited tenderers from submitting variants of their tenders. (6)

15. Four tenderers submitted tenders:

(A) Specialus autotransportas UAB (‘tenderer A’).

(B) Specializuotas transportas UAB (‘tenderer B’).

(C) Ekonovus UAB.

(D) Commercial group VSA Vilnius UAB (‘VSA Vilnius’) and Švarinta UAB.

16. Tenderers A and B are subsidiaries of Ecoservice UAB (‘Ecoservice’). (7)

17. Along with its tender,(8) tenderer B voluntarily submitted a declaration of honour to the effect that it was taking part in the call for tenders on an autonomous basis and independently of any other economic operators which might be connected to it, and it requested the waste management centre to treat all other persons as competitors. It further stated that it undertook, should it be so required, to provide a list of economic operators connected to it.

18. The waste management centre rejected tenderer A’s tender on the ground that it did not comply with one of the conditions set out in the tender specifications; (9) tenderer A did not contest that decision. (10)

19. The contract was ultimately awarded to tenderer B.

20. VSA Vilnius submitted a complaint, arguing that the tenders submitted by tenderers A and B had not been properly evaluated and that the principles of transparency and equality before the law had been infringed.

21. Following the rejection of its complaint, VSA Vilnius brought an action (11) which was essentially upheld by the Šiaulių apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Šiauliai, Lithuania) by judgment of 18 January 2016; that judgment was confirmed by the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania) by order of 5 April 2016.

22. The waste management centre and tenderer B appealed in cassation to the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania), which has made this reference for a preliminary ruling.

III. The questions referred

23. The questions are worded as follows:

‘(1) Must the free movement of persons and services set out, respectively, in Articles 45 TFEU and 56 TFEU, the principles of equality of tenderers and of transparency set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 and the principle, which flows from the aforementioned principles, of free and fair competition between economic operators (together or separately, but without limitation to those provisions) be understood and interpreted as meaning that:

if related tenderers, whose economic, management, financial or other links may give rise to doubts as to their independence and the protection of confidential information and/or may provide the preconditions (potential) for them to have an advantage over other tenderers, have decided to submit separate (independent) tenders in the same public procurement procedure, are they, in any event, under a duty to disclose those links between them to the contracting authority, even if the contracting authority does not inquire of them separately, irrespective of whether or not the national legal rules governing public procurement state that such a duty does in fact exist?

(2) If the answer to the first question:

(a) is in the affirmative (that is to say, tenderers must in any event disclose their links to the contracting authority), is the circumstance that that duty was not complied with in such a case, or that it was not properly complied with, sufficient for the contracting authority to take the view, or for a review body (court) to decide, that related tenderers which have submitted separate tenders in the same public procurement procedure are participating without being genuinely in competition (and are engaged in a pretence of competition)?

(b) is in the negative (that is to say, tenderers do not have any additional duty — which is not laid down in legislation or in the tendering conditions — to disclose their links), must the risk posed by participation of related economic operators and the risk of the consequences flowing from this then be borne by the contracting authority, if the contracting authority did not indicate in the public tendering documentation that tenderers were under such a duty of disclosure?

(3) Irrespective of the answer to the first question, and having regard to the judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166), must the provisions of law referred to in the first question and the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 and Article 2(1)(b) of that directive (together or separately, but without limitation to those provisions) be understood and interpreted as meaning that:

(a) if, in the course of the public procurement procedure, it becomes clear, in whatever way, to the contracting authority that significant links (connections) exist between certain tenderers, that contracting authority must, irrespective of its own assessment of that fact and (or) of other circumstances (for example, the formal and substantive dissimilarity of the tenders submitted by the tenderers, the public commitment given by a tenderer to engage in fair competition with other tenderers, and so forth), separately address the related tenderers and request them to clarify whether and how their personal situation is compatible with free and fair competition between tenderers?

(b) if the contracting authority has such a duty but fails to discharge it, is there a sufficient basis for the court to declare the actions of that contracting authority to be unlawful, as having failed to ensure procedural transparency and objectivity, and as having failed to request evidence from the applicant or having failed to take a decision, on its own initiative, as to the possible influence that the personal situation of related persons might have on the outcome of the tendering procedure?

(4) Must the legal provisions referred to in the third question and Article 101(1) TFEU (together or separately, but without limitation to those provisions), be understood and interpreted, in the light of the judgments of 12 March 2015, eVigilo (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166), of 21 January 2016, Eturas and Others (C-74/14, EU:C:2016:42), and of 21 July 2016, VM Remonts and Others (C-542/14, EU:C:2016:578), as meaning that:

(a) where a tenderer (the applicant) has become aware of the rejection of the lowest-priced tender submitted by one of two related tenderers in a public tendering procedure (tenderer A) and of the fact that the other tenderer (tenderer B) has been declared the successful tenderer, and also having regard to other circumstances connected with those tenderers and their participation in the tendering procedure (the fact that tenderers A and B have the same board of directors; the fact that they have the same parent company, which did not take part in the tendering procedure; the fact that tenderers A and B did not disclose their links to the contracting authority and did not separately provide additional clarifications as to those links, inter alia because no inquiries had been made of them; the fact that tenderer A provided, in its tender, inconsistent information on the compliance by the proposed means of transport (refuse lorries) with the EURO V condition of the call for tenders; the fact that that tenderer, which submitted the lowest-priced tender, which was rejected because of deficiencies identified in it, first, did not challenge the contracting authority's decision and, second, lodged an appeal against the judgment of the court of first instance, in which appeal, inter alia, it [challenged] the lawfulness of the rejection of its tender; etc.), and where, in respect of all of those circumstances, the contracting authority did not take any action, is that information alone sufficient to found a claim addressed to the review body that it should regard as unlawful the actions of the contracting authority in failing to ensure procedural transparency and objectivity, and, in addition, in not requiring the applicant to provide concrete evidence that tenderers A and B were acting unfairly?

(b) tenderers A and B did not prove to the contracting authority that they were genuinely and fairly taking part in the public tendering procedure solely because tenderer B voluntarily submitted a declaration of genuine participation, the management quality standards for participating in public tendering were applied by tenderer B, and, in addition, the tenders submitted by those tenderers were not formally and substantively identical?

(5) Can the actions of mutually related economic operators (both of which are subsidiaries of the same company) which are participating separately in the same tendering procedure, the value of which reaches the value for international competitive tendering, and where the seat of the contracting authority which announced the tendering procedure and the place where the services are to be provided are not very far distant from another Member State (the Republic of Latvia), be in principle assessed — regard being had to, inter alia, the voluntary submission by one of those economic operators that it would be engaging in fair competition — under the provisions of Article 101 TFEU and the case-law of the Court of Justice which interprets those provisions?'

IV. Proceedings before the Court of Justice and the positions of the parties

24. The reference for a preliminary ruling was received by the Court Registry on 18 October 2016.

25. Written observations were lodged by the waste management centre, VSA Vilnius, Ecoservice projektai UAB (formerly tenderer B), the Lithuanian and Czech governments, and the Commission. It was not considered necessary to hold a hearing.

26. The waste management centre has not specifically stated its position on each of the five questions submitted by the referring court and has confined itself to stating that it was aware of the links between the tenderers as this was public knowledge and that at no time was it misled when it took its decisions.

27. The waste management centre submits that, quite apart from the relationship between the tenderers, which does not of itself imply an absence of competition, there are a number of objective factors in the instant case which enabled it to conclude that those tenderers were in competition with one another.

28. In relation to the first question, all the parties except VSA Vilnius propose a negative answer. They contend in short that neither the TFEU nor Directive 2004/18 preclude the submission of tenders by related undertakings or prohibit a tenderer from submitting more than one tender. Further, EU legislation does not provide for any process whereby operators are informed about the identities of other tenderers, which would enable tenderers to check if there are any links between other tenderers and notify these to the contracting authority. As regards the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination, these principles cannot be interpreted as meaning that tenderers are under a duty to declare their mutual links on their own initiative, without prejudice to the duty to provide such information as the contracting authority may require from them.

29. VSA Vilnius, on the other hand, proposes an affirmative answer to Question 1, which leads it to consider the first situation referred to in Question 2. VSA Vilnius contends that it would be disproportionate if tenderers were unable to overturn the presumption of concerted action based on the fact that they failed to declare the links between them. However, their passivity or failure to provide information in that regard may be interpreted, in conjunction with other evidence or other additional proof, as establishing uncompetitive conduct.

30. In relation to the second situation referred to in Question 2, Ecoservice projektai and the Lithuanian Government favour an affirmative reply, drawing attention to the contracting authority's obligation to ensure substantive and not strictly formal compliance with the principles set out in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18.

31. VSA Vilnius maintains that the contracting authority is required to bear the risk of participation by related tenderers only if it becomes aware by other means of the existence of that relationship but does not take steps to examine the circumstances surrounding the participation of those tenderers.

32. The Commission submits that if the contracting authority is not able to prove that a tenderer has committed grave professional misconduct, it cannot prevent that tenderer from participating in the procedure.

33. The parties have examined Questions 3, 4 and 5 together.

34. Ecoservice projektai contends that the contracting authority only has to request information from tenderers if it has reasons to doubt that they are participating in the procedure in a competitive manner, without the circumstances referred to in Question 4 being sufficient for a declaration that the contracting authority's conduct is unlawful. Ecoservice projektai submits that Article 101 TFEU does not justify the examination of the acts of related operators which participate separately in the procedure.

35. VSA Vilnius puts forward the opposite view. VSA Vilnius argues, inter alia, that, according to the Court, contracting authorities must play an active role in the application of the principles which govern public procurement. That duty includes the duty to make enquiries of related operators about the form of their participation in the procedure, since, otherwise, the burden of proving their unfair conduct would rest, unreasonably, on the other tenderers. In VSA Vilnius' submission, the obligation to establish the existence of genuine competition lies with the related operators, without prejudice to the obligation of the contracting authority to demand that they dispel any doubts regarding the nature of their involvement in the procedure.

36. The Lithuanian Government submits that the contracting authority has a duty actively to check that the procedure is carried out transparently. In the case of related tenderers, the contracting authority has to verify whether that relationship affects the content of their respective tenders. If there is objective evidence capable of casting doubt on the transparency of the procedure, the contracting authority should examine all the relevant circumstances and, if appropriate, request information from the parties.

37. The Lithuanian Government further contends that, if steps to ensure transparency are not taken, the contracting authority's conduct will be illegal in two cases: where the contracting authority knew or could have known that two related tenderers might participate but fails to take steps to ensure that their respective tenders are separate, and where, despite having taken those steps, the contracting authority later finds that its action was not sufficient.

38. Lastly, the Lithuanian Government argues that it is apparent from the facts of the situation at issue that the related tenderers form an 'economic unit', with the result that Article 101 TFEU is not applicable.

39. In the Czech Government's submission, the mere existence of links between tenderers is not sufficient to justify their exclusion from the procedure. What matters is whether the links are liable to affect the outcome of the procedure, and this requires the contracting authority to examine the specific situation of the tenderers. Given that the protection of competition in the sphere of public contracts is guaranteed by secondary legislation, it is not necessary to rely on Article 101 TFEU.

40. The Commission observes that the information which a contracting authority may request from tenderers in accordance with Directive 2004/18 does not include a declaration of their links with other tenderers, although the contracting authority does have a duty to confirm that there are no reasons for exclusion. With regard to the case-law of the Court cited by the referring court in its third and fourth questions, the Commission submits that it is not relevant for the purposes of replying to the questions referred.

41. As concerns Article 101 TFEU, the Commission maintains that that article is not applicable to agreements or concerted practices between a parent company and its subsidiary, or between subsidiaries in the same group, and nor does it apply to a parent company which has a decisive influence on its subsidiaries. In the circumstances of the present dispute, subject to the decision adopted by the referring court, tenderers A and B constitute an economic unit, which rules out the application of that provision.

V. Assessment

42. The questions submitted by the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) may be grouped together in the manner I suggested at the beginning of this Opinion:

– First (Questions 1 and 2), it is necessary to determine whether related tenderers which submit separate tenders are under a duty, in all cases, to disclose that relationship to the contracting authority and, if so, what the consequences of failure to do so are.

– Second (Questions 3, 4 and 5), it is necessary to establish how the contracting authority — and any court which reviews its actions — must proceed where it becomes aware of the existence of important links between certain tenderers.

A. The duty of tenderers to disclose their links with other tenderers to the contracting authority (Questions 1 and 2)

43. The referring court seeks to ascertain, first, whether related tenderers which participate in a procedure for the award of a public contract are under a duty to disclose that relationship 'even if the contracting authority does not inquire of them separately, irrespective of whether or not the national legal rules governing public procurement state that such a duty does in fact exist'. (12)

44. Of course, the presumption underlying the question — and, in general, the observations of the parties — is that it is not possible simply to prohibit related tenderers from submitting their own tenders in a procedure of that kind. The Court stated as much in the judgment in Assitur, (13) without there being any dispute about that presumption.

45. On that basis, the duty to disclose those links does not appear in Directive 2004/18 (or in the Lithuanian Law on public contracts), a matter on which all the parties are also agreed.

46. VSA Vilnius alone contends that that duty is imposed indirectly or implicitly by the need to overturn the presumption that, as a result of the lack of autonomy they entail, links between tenderers are liable to jeopardise the transparency of procurement procedures and distort competition.

47. From the outset, VSA Vilnius' position is faced with a serious obstacle, since the Court has specifically stated that 'the principles of transparency and equal treatment which govern all procedures for the award of public contracts require the substantive and procedural conditions concerning participation in a contract to be clearly defined in advance and made public, in particular the obligations of tenderers, in order that those tenderers may know exactly the procedural requirements and be sure that the same requirements apply to all candidates'. (14)

48. A requirement (the alleged duty to declare links with other companies) which is not set out in the contract documents, is not provided for in national law and is not laid down in Directive 2004/18 does not pass the transparency test referred to by the Court. The reply to the first question must therefore be that, in the absence of an express legislative provision (of EU law or of national law), related tenderers are not under a duty to disclose the relationship between them to the contracting authority.

49. Is it possible to argue, in line with the argument put forward by VSA Vilnius, (15) that, although not explicit, that duty is apparent from the case-law of the Court on public contracts?

50. I do not believe so, for that case-law acknowledged that undertakings which are part of a group of undertakings may enjoy 'a certain autonomy in the conduct of their commercial policy and their economic activities, inter alia, in the area of their participation in the award of public contracts' and be 'governed by specific provisions, for example, of a contractual nature, such as to guarantee both independence and confidentiality in the drawing-up of tenders to be submitted simultaneously … in the same tendering procedure.' (16)

51. In my view, it may be inferred from those assertions that, in the absence of an express provision which requires them to do so, where related undertakings are of the opinion that their tenders are separate, they do not necessarily have to disclose their corporate links to the contracting authority.

52. Further, if — hypothetically — the line of argument advanced by VSA Vilnius were accepted, the duty would not be derived from the inclusion in the contract documents of a 'clearly defined condition', which is what the Court has required. It would, in those circumstances, be a duty which could be inferred to a greater or lesser extent from the interpretation of EU law and, therefore, would not necessarily be known to tenderers in general. (17)

53. The problem could, perhaps, be approached from another angle, in view of the fact that the tender specifications in this case specifically prohibited (18) the submission of alternative or 'variant' tenders by the same tenderer. (19)

54. Is it possible to infer from that prohibition that tenderers A and B were required to disclose the links between them to the contracting authority? Furthermore, were they under a duty to provide evidence that, notwithstanding their relationship, both tenders were separate and could not be regarded as variants? (20)

55. In fact, that clause of the tender specifications complies with Article 24(2) of Directive 2004/18, applicable to public service contracts, pursuant to which '[c]ontracting authorities shall indicate in the contract notice whether or not they authorise variants: variants shall not be authorised without this indication.' (21) It is appropriate to conclude, therefore, that alternative or variant tenders are prohibited in principle, (22) unless, in the case of certain contracts, the contracting authority allows them.

56. However, I find it difficult to agree that it is possible to infer from the prohibition on the submission of variants — both where it is set out in the tender specifications (as occurred in this case) and where it is not — an implicit duty that related tenderers must disclose their corporate links to the contracting authority.

57. At most, that prohibition requires related tenderers to establish that their tender is not a mere variant or alternative of another competitor's tender. Accordingly, it is not a question of fulfilling a general obligation to disclose the fact that they are related undertakings, since there is no obligation of that kind in EU law. Directive 2004/18 does not in principle prohibit related economic operators from participating in the same tendering procedure; it does so only where there is a 'real risk of occurrence of practices capable of jeopardising transparency and distorting competition between tenderers'. (23)

58. Following that line of reasoning, it is only in such extreme cases that the clause prohibiting variants laid down in the tender specifications would entail the need for tenderers to disclose the links between them to the contracting authority, in order to remove that risk.

59. However, few practical consequences for the outcome of the dispute can be derived from that line of interpretation of Directive 2004/18, for two reasons.

60. First, in its voluntary declaration of honour, tenderer B guaranteed that it would participate separately and independently of any other economic operators which might be linked to it, and it asked the waste management centre to treat all other tenderers as competitors. The fact that it did not refer expressly to tenderer A in that declaration is irrelevant for the present purposes, since, as the waste management centre has asserted, (24) the connection between the two companies was public knowledge. The important point, in my view, is that, in declaring that its tender was separate, tenderer B may be deemed to have been seeking to comply with the clause of the tender specifications which prohibited the submission of alternative tenders.

61. Second, the purpose of disclosure to the waste management centre would have been to ensure that the latter was aware of the corporate links between the tenderers so that it could scrutinise their tenders more closely and identify any concerted practices. Since, as has been stated, the waste management centre admits that, in this case, it was aware of those links because they were well known, and it concluded without difficulty that, through their tenders (which were different in content), both operators were genuinely in competition, (25) the disclosure was superfluous.

62. Quite apart from those specific circumstances, which are closely connected to the facts, I believe that, for the present purposes, that interpretation of Directive 2004/18 is rather convoluted, to the extent that it is not compatible with the clarity which the case-law of the Court requires of the definition of the substantive and procedural conditions relating to participation in tendering procedures. (26)

63. Accordingly, I suggest that the answer to Question 1 should be that Articles 45 TFEU and 56 TFEU and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 should be interpreted as meaning that, in the absence of an express provision or specific requirement in the clauses governing the procedure, related tenderers which submit separate tenders are not under a duty to disclose their links to the contracting authority.

64. The reply to Question 2 follows from the reply to Question 1. In that same situation (no express provision or specific requirement in the clauses governing the procurement procedure), as the referring court states, 'the risk posed by participation of related economic operators and the risk of the consequences flowing from this [must] then be borne by the contracting authority'.

65. However, I would not refer to the bearing of the risk by the contracting authority but rather to the duty of the contracting authority to guarantee the equal treatment of tenderers and the transparency of the procedure. In discharging that duty, the contracting authority must ensure that the participation of related tenderers is not detrimental to other tenderers by distorting the competition required between all tenderers. According to the contracting authority itself, that is what occurred in this case.

B. The duties of the contracting authority where there is a relationship between tenderers (Questions 3, 4 and 5)

66. I agree with the Commission's view that Questions 3, 4 and 5 may be answered together, although the rewording I propose is not exactly the same as that proposed by the Commission. (27)

67. In my view, by those questions the referring court wishes to know whether, in circumstances such as those of the main proceedings, the contracting authority is under a duty to ask related tenderers to provide evidence that their situation does not run counter to the principle of competition. The question extends to whether inactivity on the part of the contracting authority would be sufficient for a declaration that its conduct in the procedure is unlawful.

68. As indicated above, it is not disputed that tenderers A and B were related operators or that, from the point of view of the waste management centre, that relationship was public knowledge (which is why it did not consider it necessary to ask them to make a declaration about the matter).

69. Furthermore, all the indications are that the two tenderers, A and B, form an economic unit on account of the fact that they are subsidiaries of the same parent company, in circumstances from which it may be presumed that the latter exercises a decisive influence over both of them. (28) Since that is the case, it will be sufficient, as most of the parties have observed, to conclude that Article 101 TFEU is not applicable to this case.

70. It is well known that, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, that article does not apply where the agreements or practices it prohibits are carried out by undertakings which constitute an economic unit. (29)

71. In the area of tendering procedures, the aim is not so much to protect the (general) competition between independent operators in the internal market as to protect the (more specific) competition which must operate in procedures for the award of public contracts. (30) From that perspective, what really matters is the separateness of and genuine difference between the respective tenders (which will enable the contracting authority to choose the tender most favourable to public interests), whether the tenderers are independent or related economic operators. That is why, as the Czech Government states, (31) the protection of competition in tendering procedures must be sought, first, in secondary legislation; in this case, Directive 2004/18. (32)

72. The inapplicability of Article 101 TFEU to the instant case does not mean, however, that the case-law invoked by the referring court in its third and fourth questions is irrelevant.

73. Although eVigilo (33) concerned a conflict of interests between the contracting authority and the experts who had evaluated the tenders submitted, the Court made a statement of principle in that case which may be applied to the present case. The Court declared that, where there is objective evidence calling into question the impartiality of an expert, 'it is for that contracting authority to examine all the relevant circumstances having led to the adoption of the decision relating to the award of the contract in order to prevent and detect conflicts of interests and remedy them, including, where appropriate, requesting the parties to provide certain information and evidence.' (34)

74. The Court pointed out that that obligation is a consequence of the 'active role' assigned to the contracting authority for the purpose of applying the principles of public procurement, on account of the duty to treat economic operators equally and to act in a transparent way, as required by Article 2 of Directive 2004/18. (35) The Court observed that that duty 'relates to the very essence of the public procurement directives (see judgment of 16 December 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 45)'. (36)

75. The judgments in Eturas and Others (37) and VM Remonts and Others, (38) as the Commission rightly observes, (39) concerned collusion on prices between independent undertakings and the liability of a tenderer for the acts of an independent provider supplying it with services. Nevertheless, a number of the assertions made in those judgments regarding proof of collusive behaviour may be helpful in this case.

76. For example, the judgment in Eturas and Others states that 'the principle of effectiveness requires that an infringement of EU competition law may be proven not only by direct evidence, but also through indicia, provided that they are objective and consistent.' (40) The judgment in VM Remonts and Others states that, in the absence of EU rules on the matter, 'the rules relating to the assessment of evidence and the requisite standard of proof … are covered … by the procedural autonomy of the Member States'. (41)

77. Applying that case-law to the facts at issue in the main proceedings, where the contracting authority is aware that related tenderers are participating in the procedure, the 'active role' expected of it, as the guarantor of genuine competition between tenderers, should normally lead it to make certain that the tenders submitted by those tenderers are separate. (42)

78. In short, that requirement is just one of the measures aimed at '[examining] all the relevant circumstances … in order to prevent and detect conflicts of interests and remedy them, including, where appropriate, requesting the parties to provide certain information and evidence.' (43)

79. However, the contracting authority may, in cases such as the present one, dispense with a communication to the related tenderers, asking them, in the words of the question from the referring court, 'to clarify whether and how their personal situation is compatible with free and fair competition between tenderers'. Clearly, 'where appropriate, requesting the parties to provide certain information and evidence' may be important if the information and evidence available to the contracting authority is not sufficient for it to form a view regarding the risk that the tenders are not separate and distort competition.

80. Therefore, what matters is not that the contracting authority contacts the related tenderers, asking them for information about their relationship and seeking their view regarding the protection of the principle of competition between tenderers. The decisive factor is, rather, that the contracting authority is in a position to conclude that the simultaneous participation of those related operators does not jeopardise competition. The contracting authority may, of course, reach that conclusion by requesting that information or that view from the tenderers but it may also do so by referring to the information already available in the procedure and therefore without the need to approach the tenderers.

81. The Court has also held that 'the question whether the relationship of control at issue influenced the respective content of the tenders submitted by the undertakings concerned in the same public procurement procedure requires an examination and assessment of the facts which it is for the contracting authorities to carry out.' (44)

82. As the waste management centre states in its written observations, its examination and assessment of the facts led it to declare that, since it was aware — because it was well known — of the connection between tenderers A and B, it was able to conclude that their respective tenders were competitive based on a number of objective factors:

– The fact that one of the related tenderers voluntarily declared that its tender was independent constituted 'conduct that was fair and compatible with the provisions' of national legislation.

– The tenderers submitted by the related tenderers were different in form and content.

– The tender submitted by tenderer A was rejected ‘completely independently of its wishes, in other words, on the initiative of the contracting authority’. (45)

83. Based on the information in its possession, the waste management centre took the view that there was no risk of distortion of competition between tenderers A and B. The waste management centre added that, if it had found that those tenderers ‘were behaving in a way which demonstrated that they did not wish to be awarded the contract’, that fact ‘could constitute evidence which might lead it to investigate their links and consider that their conduct during the procurement procedure might constitute a concerted practice’. (46)

84. It could be debated whether the information held by the waste management centre was sufficient to rule out any risk to competition between the tenderers, but that is an assessment which at all events falls to the waste management centre, subject to subsequent review by the national court which, if called on to do so, must scrutinise its decisions.

85. To my mind, the Court should not intervene in the dispute regarding the extent of the probative value to be attributed to the evidence to which the referring court refers in Question 4(a) and (b). That is an adjudication on factual circumstances and on the assessment of the evidence in proceedings which must be resolved exclusively by the national court, in accordance with the rules of reasoned opinion and applying its domestic provisions on evidence. (47)

86. Returning, therefore, to the question whether the contracting authority is under an ineluctable duty to make enquiries of the related operators in the manner set out above, I believe that that question should be answered in the negative, both in general terms and in this particular instance. Everything will depend on the sufficiency or insufficiency of the available evidence and, therefore, on the objective soundness of the contracting authority’s decision to allow related tenderers to participate in the tendering procedure, on which it ultimately falls to the national court to rule.

VI. Conclusion

87. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court reply as follows to the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania):

Articles 45 TFEU and 56 TFEU and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that, in circumstances such as those of the main proceedings:

(1) in the absence of an express legislative provision or a specific requirement in the specifications governing the conditions for the award of a service contract, related tenderers which submit separate tenders in the same procedure are not under an ineluctable duty to disclose their links to the contracting authority;

(2) the contracting authority will be obliged to request from those tenderers the information it considers necessary if, in the light of the evidence available in the procedure, it harbours doubts concerning the risk that the simultaneous participation of those tenderers will undermine transparency and distort competition between operators tendering to provide the service.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

---

3 Council Directive of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665/EEC and No 92/13/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31).

4 Law of 13 August 1996 (Žin., 1996, No 84-2000).

5 Law of 23 March 1999 (Žin., 1999, No 30-856).

6 Clause 39 of the tender specifications, which contained that prohibition, is transcribed in tenderer B's written observations (point 34).

7 According to the order for reference (paragraph 10 of the French version), the parent company holds 100% and 98.12%, respectively, of the shares in tenderers A and B, whose boards of directors are made up of the same persons.

8 In it, tenderer B referred to a subcontractor which is also a subsidiary of Ecoservice and whose board of directors comprises the same natural persons as the boards of tenderers A and B.

9 Specifically, that it did not satisfy the requirement that, for the purpose of providing the service, specific vehicles would be used whose engines were compliant with at least the Euro 5 standard.

10 However, subsequently, when the court of first instance allowed an action brought by an independent tenderer, tenderer A appealed against that judgment.

11 VSA Vilnius contended in its action that, as subsidiaries of Ecoservice, tenderers A and B had to be regarded as related undertakings within the meaning of Article 3(14) of the Law on Competition and that their tenders had to be treated as variants. It further argued that those companies had not participated in the tendering procedure in conditions of genuine competition and had acted in collusion. In view of the fact that variants were prohibited under the tendering conditions, it argued that the tenders submitted by tenderers A and B should be rejected.

12 Question 1, second paragraph, in fine.

13 Judgment of 19 May 2009 (C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 28): 'it would run counter to the effective application of Community law to exclude systematically undertakings affiliated to one another from participating in the same procedure for the award of a public contract. Such a solution would considerably reduce competition at Community level'.

14 Judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 37).

15 Point 18 of its written observations.

16 Judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur (C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 31).

17 The Court referred to the criterion of the reasonably well-informed tenderer acting with normal diligence in, for example, the judgment of 4 December 2003, EVN and Wienstrom (C-448/01, EU:C:2003:651, paragraph 57).

---

18 See point 14 of this Opinion. The national court refers to that prohibition in paragraph 18 of the order for reference (in the French version of that document).

---

19 On alternative or variant tenders, see, for example, Arrowsmith, S.; The Law of Public Utilities Procurement, vol. 1, Sweet & Maxwell, London, 3rd ed., 2014, 7-246 to 7-251.

---

20 As Sánchez Graells, A., Public Procurement and the EU Competition Rules, Hart, Oxford, 2nd ed., 2015, p. 341, maintains, the basic rule in this area is the prohibition of multiple proposals by a single entity. A corollary of that rule is that that prohibition is extended to entities belonging to the same group.

---

21 According to paragraph 1 of that article, variants may be submitted only where the criterion for award of the contract is that of the most economically advantageous tender.

---

22 SeeArrowsmith, S., The Law of Public Utilities Procurement, op. cit., 7-247.

---

23 Judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur (C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 30).

---

24 Second paragraph of its observations.

---

25 Fourth paragraph of its observations.

---

26 I refer again to the judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 37).

---

27 The Commission recommends that the three questions should be reworded to the effect that ‘the national court seeks to ascertain whether Article 101 TFEU applies to this case and whether Article 101 TFEU (if it is applicable), the provisions of Directives 89/665/EC and 2004/18/EC and the case-law, in particular the judgments in eVigilo, Eturas and VM Remonts, are to be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority must continue scrutinising the existence of links between two tenderers in the case examined by the national court’ (point 42 of the Commission’s observations).

---

28 See, for example the judgment of 16 June 2016, Evonik Degussa and AlzChem v Commission (C-155/14 P, EU:C:2016:446, paragraph 28).

---

29 In that connection, see the judgments of 4 May 1989, Bodson (30/87, EU:C:1988:225, paragraph 19), and of 11 April 1989, Saeed Flugreisen and Silver Line Reisebüro (66/86, EU:C:1989:140, paragraph 35).

---

30 Naturally, there may be collusive conduct between unrelated undertakings seeking to distort competition in public procurement procedures by agreeing not to submit a tender or to do so in conditions unlawfully agreed between them.

---

31 Point 10 of its written observations.

32 As I pointed out above, that directive does not preclude the participation of related tenderers in principle.

33 Judgment of 12 March 2015 (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166).

34 Judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilio (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 44).

35 Ibid., paragraph 42.

36 Ibid., paragraph 43.

37 Judgment of 21 January 2016 (C-74/14, EU:C:2016:42).

38 Judgment of 21 July 2016 (C-542/14, EU:C:2016:578).

39 Points 46 and 47 of its written observations.

40 Judgment of 21 January 2016, Eturas and Others (C-74/14, EU:C:2016:42, paragraph 37).

41 Judgment of 21 July 2016, VM Remonts and Others (C-542/14, EU:C:2016:578, paragraph 21).

42 A wide range of tenders is likely to increase competition between tenderers, so that each tender is genuinely ‘contestable’ (to use an expression from competition law) by the others and the contract is awarded to whoever deserves it on his own merits.

43 Judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 44).

44 Judgment of 19 May 2009, Assitur (C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraph 32).

45 Fourth paragraph of the waste management centre’s observations.

46 Sixth paragraph of the contracting authority’s observations. In the same paragraph, the contracting authority goes on to state that concerted practices are possible not only between related operators but also between operators which formally compete with one another but enter into agreements prohibited by competition law.

47 I refer to the judgment of 21 July 2016, VM Remonts and Others (C-542/14, EU:C:2016:578, transcribed at point 76).

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Eighth Chamber)

28 February 2018(*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 51 — Rectification of procedural shortfalls in tenders — Directive 2004/17/EC — Clarification of tenders — National legislation making the rectification by tenderers of the documentation submitted subject to the payment of a financial penalty — Principles relating to the award of public works contracts — Principle of equal treatment — Principle of proportionality)

In Joined Cases C-523/16 and C-536/16,

REQUESTS for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy) made by decisions of 13 and 15 July 2016, received at the Court on 12 and 24 October 2016 respectively, in the proceedings

MA.T.I. SUD SpA

v

Centostazioni SpA,

intervener:

China Taiping Insurance Co. Ltd (C-523/16),

and

Duemme SGR SpA

v

Associazione Cassa Nazionale di Previdenza e Assistenza in favore dei Ragionieri e Periti Commerciali (CNPR) (C-536/16),

THE COURT (Eighth Chamber), composed of J. Malenovský, President of the Chamber, D. Šváby and M. Vilaras (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of

– Duemme SGR SpA, by F. Brunetti and F. Scanzano, avvocati, – the Associazione Cassa Nazionale di Previdenza e Assistenza in favore dei Ragionieri e Periti Commerciali (CNPR), by M. Brugnoletti, avvocato, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by F. Sclafani, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by A. Tokár and C. Zadra, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 15 November 2017,

gives the following

Judgment

1 These requests for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Articles 45 and 51 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) and of the principles of the maximum possible competition, of proportionality, of equal treatment and of non-discrimination in matters concerning the procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts.

2 In Case C-523/16, the request for a preliminary ruling has been made in proceedings between MA.T.I. SUD SpA and Centostazioni SpA concerning a procedure for the award of a public contract for ‘integrated routine and non-routine maintenance activities and the provision of energy services at the premises of railway station buildings which form part of Centostazioni’s network’.

3 In Case C-536/16, the request for a preliminary ruling has been made in proceedings between DuemmeSGR SpA (‘Duemme’) and the Associazione Cassa Nazionale di Previdenza e Assistenza in favore dei Ragionieri e Periti Commerciali (CNPR) (National Welfare and Assistance Fund for Accountants (CNPR)) in connection with an open procedure for the conclusion of a framework agreement on the management of CNPR’s securities portfolio.

Legal context

EU law

Directive 2004/17/EC

4 Recital 9 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) states as follows:

‘In order to guarantee the opening-up to competition of public procurement contracts awarded by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, it is advisable to draw up provisions for Community coordination of contracts above a certain value. Such coordination is based on the requirements inferable from Articles 14, 28 and 49 of the EC Treaty and from Article 97 of the Euratom Treaty, namely the principle of equal treatment, of which the principle of non-discrimination is no more than a specific expression, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality, as well as the principle of transparency. In view of the nature of the sectors affected by such coordination, the latter should, while safeguarding the application of those principles, establish a framework for sound commercial practice and should allow maximum flexibility.

…’

5 Article 10 of that directive, headed ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

‘Contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

Directive 2004/18

6 Recital 2 of Directive 2004/18 states:

‘The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law …, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and with other rules of the Treaty.'

7 Article 2 of that directive, also entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts', provides:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

8 Article 45 of the directive provides:

'1. Any candidate or tenderer who has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment of which the contracting authority is aware for one or more of the reasons listed below shall be excluded from participation in a public contract:

(a) participation in a criminal organisation, as defined in Article 2(1) of Council Joint Action 98/733/JHA [of 21 December 1998 adopted by the Council on the basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, on making it a criminal offence to participate in a criminal organisation in the Member States of the European Union (OJ 1998 L 351, p. 1)];

(b) corruption, as defined in Article 3 of the Council Act of 26 May 1997 [drawing up, on the basis of Article K.3(2)(c) of the Treaty on European Union, the Convention on the fight against corruption involving officials of the European Communities or officials of Member States of the European Union (OJ 1997 C 195, p. 1),] and Article 3(1) of Council Joint Action 98/742/JHA [of 22 December 1998 adopted by the Council on the basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, on corruption in the private sector (OJ 1998 L 358, p. 2)];

(c) fraud within the meaning of Article 1 of the Convention [drawn up on the basis of Article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union] on the protection of the financial interests of the European Communities [(OJ 1995 C 316, p. 49)];

(d) money laundering, as defined in Article 1 of Council Directive 91/308/EEC of 10 June 1991 on prevention of the use of the financial system for the purpose of money laundering [(OJ 1991 L 166, p. 77)].

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.

They may provide for a derogation from the requirement referred to in the first subparagraph for overriding requirements in the general interest.

For the purposes of this paragraph, the contracting authorities shall, where appropriate, ask candidates or tenderers to supply the documents referred to in paragraph 3 and may, where they have doubts concerning the personal situation of such candidates or tenderers, also apply to the competent authorities to obtain any information they consider necessary on the personal situation of the candidates or tenderers concerned. Where the information concerns a candidate or tenderer established in a State other than that of the contracting authority, the contracting authority may seek the cooperation of the competent authorities. Having regard for the national laws of the Member State where the candidates or tenderers are established, such requests shall relate to legal and/or natural persons, including, if appropriate, company directors and any person having powers of representation, decision or control in respect of the candidate or tenderer.

2. Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(a) is bankrupt or is being wound up, where his affairs are being administered by the court, where he has entered into an arrangement with creditors, who has suspended business activities or is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(b) is the subject of proceedings for a declaration of bankruptcy, for an order for compulsory winding up or administration by the court or of an arrangement with creditors or of any other similar proceedings under national laws or regulations;

(c) has been convicted by a judgment which has the force of res judicata in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of any offence concerning his professional conduct;

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proved by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate;

(e) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(f) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section or has not supplied such information.

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.

3. Contracting authorities shall accept the following as sufficient evidence that none of the cases specified in paragraphs 1 or 2(a), (b), (c), (e) or (f) applies to the economic operator:

(a) as regards paragraphs 1 and 2(a), (b) and (c), the production of an extract from the "judicial record" or, failing that, of an equivalent document issued by a competent judicial or administrative authority in the country of origin or the country whence that person comes showing that these requirements have been met;

(b) as regards paragraph 2(e) and (f), a certificate issued by the competent authority in the Member State concerned.

Where the country in question does not issue such documents or certificates, or where these do not cover all the cases specified in paragraphs 1 and 2(a), (b) and (c), they may be replaced by a declaration on oath or, in Member States where there is no provision for declarations on oath, by a solemn declaration made by the person concerned before a competent judicial or administrative authority, a notary or a competent professional or trade body, in the country of origin or in the country whence that person comes.

4. Member States shall designate the authorities and bodies competent to issue the documents, certificates and declarations referred to in paragraph 3 and shall inform the Commission thereof. Such notification shall be without prejudice to data protection law.'

9 Article 51 of the directive provides:

'The contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50.'

Italian law

10 Article 38(2a) of Decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 adopting the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts and transposing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006) ('the Public Procurement Code') provided:

'Any absence, incompleteness or any other substantial irregularity in the elements and replacement declarations referred to in paragraph 2 shall oblige the tenderer responsible to pay the contracting authority the financial penalty specified in the contract notice, the amount of which cannot be less than 0.1% or more than 1% of the value of the contract and must not exceed EUR 50 000, the payment of which shall be guaranteed by the provisional security. In such cases, the contracting authority shall grant the tenderer a period of not more than 10 days in which to submit, complete or rectify the declarations required and shall state their content and the persons obliged to make them. In the case of non-substantial irregularities or the absence or incompleteness of non-essential declarations, the contracting authority shall not require their rectification or impose any penalty. If the period mentioned in the second sentence is exceeded, the tenderer shall be excluded from the tendering procedure. Any amendment to the tender, including following a judicial decision, after the admission, rectification or exclusion of tenders shall not be relevant for the calculation of averages in the procedure or for the determination of the anomaly threshold of tenders.'

11 Article 46 of that code provided that 'within the limits laid down in Articles 38 to 45, the contracting authorities, should they deem it necessary, are to ask tenderers to supplement or clarify the certificates, documents or declarations submitted'.

The disputes in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Case C-523/16

12 By a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 8 January 2016, Centostazioni, part of the Ferrovie dello Stato Italiane SpA group, launched an open tendering procedure for the award of a public contract of an estimated value of EUR 170 864 780.81 excluding value added tax (VAT), for 'integrated routine and non-routine maintenance activities and the provision of energy services at the premises of railway station buildings' forming part of its network for a period of 36 months. This contract was divided into four geographical lots (south, south-central, north-central and north-west, north-central and north-east) to be awarded according to the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender.

13 Point VI.3(w) of the contract notice made it possible for a contracting authority to ask for the rectification, on pain of exclusion from the procedure, of any incomplete or irregular tender, and consequently the payment of a financial penalty of EUR 35 000 by the tenderer invited to rectify its tender, in accordance with Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code.

14 Point 1.1(G) of the tender specifications relating to that contract stated that a tender submitted by a temporary association of undertakings not yet incorporated as a legal person had to be accompanied, as part of the requisite administrative documentation, by a special ad hoc declaration containing a commitment in the event that a lot was awarded to it to grant a special collective mandate giving powers of representation to the lead undertaking, which was to be expressly identified ('the declaration of commitment'). This declaration had to be signed by all the undertakings making up the association, it being noted that, where a tenderer participated in several lots in a different form, it had to submit a declaration of commitment for each lot.

15 MA.T.I. SUD, in its capacity as manager of the temporary joint venture formed with Graded SpA ('the Association'), submitted an application for lots 1 and 2 of the call for tenders.

16 On 16 March 2016, the procurement committee noted that the declaration of commitment required for the award of lot 2, designating MA.T.I. SUD as the lead undertaking of the Association, lacked the signature of its legal representative. Accordingly, the contracting authority, in accordance with Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code, requested that the Association remedy that irregularity within seven days, on pain of exclusion from the tender procedure, and that it pay a financial penalty of EUR 35 000.

17 On 21 March 2016, MA.T.I. SUD forwarded the requested declaration of commitment signed by the legal representatives of the two companies constituting the Association. It also requested the annulment of the financial penalty imposed, on the ground that the declaration in question was ‘neither missing nor incomplete nor vitiated by a substantial irregularity’. It argues, in that regard, that the tender specifications in question required a declaration of commitment for each lot only where the association intended to participate ‘in a different form’. However, the Association, in this instance, stated its intention to participate in the tender for lots 1 and 2 in the same form, with MA.T.I. SUD as the lead undertaking, by submitting a declaration of commitment for lot 1 containing all the elements required.

18 On 30 March 2016, the contracting authority served notice on MA.T.I. SUD to pay the amount of the financial penalty imposed, stating that, otherwise, that amount would be levied on the provisional security.

19 On 7 April 2016, MA.T.I. SUD brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy) requesting the suspension and annulment of that financial penalty, submitting inter alia that it had not committed any substantial irregularity in the presentation of preliminary documents for participation in the tendering procedure.

20 The referring court questions the compatibility of the mechanism of paid assistance in compiling the documentation established by Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code with EU law, in particular with Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 which provides for the possibility of supplementing or clarifying the certificates and documents accompanying the tenders submitted in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract, but without imposing any penalties, and with the principles of proportionality, exhaustiveness of the grounds of exclusion, the greatest possible participation in the tendering procedure and the maximum possible competition.

21 It points out that, although in general, the mechanism of assistance in compiling the documentation appears to be compatible with Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, of which it is an iteration, this is not the case for the financial penalty that accompanies it. This particular aspect of the mechanism, moreover, encourages a kind of ‘quest for errors’ on the part of contracting authorities, while also discouraging tenderers from participating in tender procedures, since they risk incurring large fines merely because substantial irregularities are found in their offer, irrespective of whether or not they intend to make use of assistance in compiling the documentation.

22 The referring court points out, in particular, that this penalty is set in advance by the contracting authority, albeit with a minimum range of 0.1% to a maximum of 1.0% and with an absolute maximum of EUR 50 000, in a largely discretionary way, it may not be adjusted according to the seriousness of the irregularity committed, and that it is applied automatically to every substantial irregularity found.

23 That court also notes that the introduction of the paid assistance in compiling the documentation, provided for in Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code, aims to ensure the soundness of the requests to participate and the tenders submitted, and thus place the responsibility on tenderers with respect to the submission of documents relating to the call for tenders, and to compensate the contracting authority for the increase of its monitoring activities.

24 It believes, however, that, having regard to the characteristics of the penalty it lays down, that mechanism is not compatible with the principle of proportionality, in so far as its implementation may lead to the payment to the contracting authority of compensation manifestly disproportionate to the additional activities which it may have to assume. A significant economic penalty is all the more disproportionate given that the period within which the documents are to be completed is short (10 days) and does not, therefore, entail an excessive prolongation of the tendering procedure. It is also incompatible with the principle of equal treatment, since a penalty in the same amount may be imposed on a tenderer who has committed a substantial irregularity, but of limited scope, and a tenderer who has committed serious breaches of the requirements of the contract notice. This mechanism also undermines the principle of the maximum possible competition by its deterrent effects on the participation of enterprises, in particular small and medium-sized undertakings, in public procurement procedures.

25 In those circumstances the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Even if the Member States have the ability to require payment for assistance in establishing the documentation with remedial effect (soccorso istruttorio), is Article 38(2a) of [the Public Procurement Code] in the version in force at the time of the tendering procedure in question …, which makes provision for the payment of a “financial penalty”, in so far as that penalty must be fixed by the contracting authority (“not less than 0.1% and not more than 1% of the value of the contract and in any event not more than EUR 50 000, the payment of which shall be guaranteed by the provisional security”), contrary to EU law in view of the excessively high amount and the predetermined nature of that penalty, which cannot be adjusted according to the specific situation to be regulated or the seriousness of the irregularity to be remedied?

(2) Is Article 38(2a) of [the Public Procurement Code], rather, contrary to EU law, in that that requirement to pay for soccorso istruttorio may be regarded as contrary to the principle of opening up the market to competition as widely as possible, an aim which that mechanism is intended to achieve, so that the tasks of the procurement committee in that regard are to be attributed to it by law in the public interest in achieving that aim?’

Case C-536/16

26 By a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union in October 2014, the CNPR launched an open call for tenders with a view to the conclusion of a framework agreement on the management of its securities portfolio, of an estimated value of EUR 20 650 000.00 excluding VAT, which it wished to assign to five entities.

27 The contract notice relating to that call for tenders provided, pursuant to Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code, that in the case of missing or incomplete declarations and in all other cases of substantial irregularity, the tenderer would be required to pay a fine of EUR 50 000, and that it would have a period of 10 days in which to complete and/or rectify the declaration by the submission of missing documents.

28 The specifications relating to the contract in question stated that the tenderers were required to submit, on pain of exclusion, a declaration on honour that the conditions laid down in Article 38 of the Public Procurement Code had been met.

29 At its first session, the procurement committee concerned opened the official envelopes and discovered that Duemme had failed to attach the aforementioned declarations on honour attesting that its vice-chairperson and its general manager had not been the subject of any conviction by final judgment. It therefore requested that Duemme, pursuant to Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code and Article 7 of that specification, supply the missing declarations and pay the corresponding financial penalty, namely EUR 50 000.

30 Duemme provided the missing documents required within the prescribed period, but refused to pay the financial penalty, disputing the principle. The CNPR thereupon sent Duemme a formal notice to pay that fine, informing it that failure to do so would result in a levy on the provisional security.

31 On 9 January 2015, Duemme brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) seeking annulment of that financial penalty, on the basis, in particular, of the incompatibility of Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code with Article 51 of Directive 2004/18. At the same time, the tenderer paid EUR 8 500 to the contracting authority for the payment of the reduced penalty, which was accepted by the latter as partial payment.

32 In those circumstances the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer for a preliminary ruling two questions which are identical to those referred in Case C-523/16.

33 By decision of 15 November 2016, the President of the Court decided to join Cases C-523/16 and C-536/16 for the purposes of the written procedure, the oral procedure and the judgment.

Preliminary observations

34 It should be noted, at the outset, that although in both Case C-523/16 and Case C-536/16 the questions raised by the referring court relate in a very general way to the interpretation of EU law, without further precision, it has however raised, in its orders for reference, doubts as to the compatibility of Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code, with, on the one hand, Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 and the principles of the maximum possible competition, equal treatment, transparency and proportionality and, on the other hand, the second subparagraph of Article 59(4) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

35 However, in the light of the dates of publication of the contract notices at issue in the main proceedings, namely in January 2016 (Case C-523/16) and October 2014 (Case C-536/16), Directive 2014/24 — the transposition period for which expired, in accordance with Article 90 of the directive, on 18 April 2016 — is not applicable ratione temporis to the dispute in the main proceedings.

36 Those dates are necessarily after the time when the contracting authority selected the type of procedure which it intended to pursue and determine conclusively whether or not there was an obligation to conduct a prior call for competition for the award of the public contract in question. According to the settled case-law of the Court, the applicable directive in the field of public procurement procedures is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority makes such a choice. Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time (see, to that effect, judgments of 5 October 2000, Commission v France, C-337/98, EU:C:2000:543, paragraphs 36, 37, 41 and 42; of 11 July 2013, Commission v Netherlands, C-576/10, EU:C:2013:510, paragraphs 52 to 54; of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraphs 31 to 33; of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 83; and of 27 October 2016, Hörmann Reisen, C-292/15, EU:C:2016:817, paragraphs 31 and 32).

37 It should also be noted that, in view of the subject matter of the contract at issue in the main proceedings in Case C-523/16, it is Directive 2004/17 and not Directive 2004/18 which, as the Commission has pointed out, is most likely to apply.

38 However, Directive 2004/17 does not contain any provisions equivalent to those of Article 51 of Directive 2004/18.

39 However, it should be borne in mind, in this regard, that, notwithstanding the absence of any express provision to that effect in Directive 2004/17, the Court has acknowledged that the contracting authority can ask a tenderer to clarify a tender or to correct an obvious clerical error contained therein, subject to the fulfilment of certain requirements, in particular that such an invitation is sent to all tenderers in the same situation, that all tenderers are treated equally and fairly, and that that clarification or correction may not be equated with the submission of a new tender (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraphs 29 to 39 and the case-law cited).

40 Moreover, it is apparent from the observations submitted to the Court that Article 230 of the Public Procurement Code provides that Article 38(2a) of that code applies to the special sectors covered by Directive 2004/17.

41 Finally, even if, as has been recalled in paragraph 34 above, the national court has formally limited its request for a preliminary ruling to the interpretation of Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, that does not preclude the Court from providing it with all the elements of interpretation of EU law which may enable it to rule on the cases before it, whether or not reference is made thereto in the question referred (see, to that effect, judgments of 12 December 1990, SARPP, C-241/89, EU:C:1990:459, paragraph 8, and of 24 January 2008, Lianakis andOthers, C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, paragraph 23).

42 In those circumstances, it being noted that it is for the national court to determine which directive is applicable in Case C-523/16, the questions referred to the Court in the two requests for a preliminary ruling before it must be understood as covering not only Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 but also, more generally, the principles of public procurement, in particular the principles of equal treatment and of transparency, referred to in both Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, and the principle of proportionality.

Consideration of the questions referred

43 By its two questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether EU law, in particular Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, the principles relating to the award of public contracts, including the principles of equal treatment and transparency referred to in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, and the principle of proportionality must be interpreted as precluding national legislation establishing a mechanism of assistance in compiling the documentation, under which the contracting authority may in a procedure for the award of a public contract, invite any tenderer whose tender is vitiated by serious irregularities within the meaning of that regulation to rectify its tender, subject to the payment of a financial penalty, the high amount of which, set in advance by the contracting authority and guaranteed by the provisional security, cannot be adjusted according to the gravity of the irregularity that it remedied.

44 In the first place, it is to be borne in mind, that, according to Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authority may, in a procedure for the award of a public contract, invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50 of that directive.

45 That provision thus confines itself to laying down the mere possibility for the contracting authority to invite tenderers submitting a tender in a tendering procedure to supplement or clarify the documentation to be provided for the purposes of assessing whether their tender fulfils the conditions of admissibility, demonstrating their economic and financial capacity and their professional and technical knowledge or ability. Neither that provision nor any other provision of Directive 2004/18 contains details on how such a rectification may take place or on the conditions to which it may be subject.

46 It follows that, in the context of the measures transposing Directive 2004/18 that Member States must adopt, they are in principle, as the Advocate General observed in point 57 of his Opinion, not only free to include such a possibility of rectifying tenders in their national law (see, to that effect, judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 35), but also to regulate it.

47 Member States may therefore decide to subject that possibility of rectification to the payment of a financial penalty, as provided for in the present case by Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code.

48 However, when they implement the possibility provided for in Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, the Member States must ensure that they do not jeopardise the attainment of the objectives pursued by that directive or undermine the effectiveness of its provisions and other relevant provisions and principles of EU law, particularly the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination, transparency and proportionality (see to that effect, judgment of 2 June 2016, Falk Pharma, C-410/14, EU:C:2016:399, paragraph 34).

49 It must also be borne in mind that Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 cannot be interpreted as allowing the contracting authority to accept any rectification of omissions which, as expressly provided for in the contract documentation, had to lead to the exclusion of the tenderer (judgments of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 46, and of 10 November 2016, Ciclat, C-199/15, EU:C:2016:853, paragraph 30).

50 In the second place, although Directive 2004/17 does not contain a provision equivalent to Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, the Court has held that neither of those two directives precluded the possibility that data relating to the tender of a tenderer may be corrected on specific points, particularly when it is clear that such data require mere clarification, or to correct obvious clerical errors, subject, however, to the fulfilment of certain requirements (judgments of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 40, and of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

51 The Court has thus held, inter alia, that a request for clarification cannot make up for the lack of a document or information whose production was required by the contract documents, the contracting authority being required to comply strictly with the criteria which it has itself laid down (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 40, and of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraph 33).

52 In addition, such a request may not lead to the submission by a tenderer of what would appear in reality to be a new tender (see judgments of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 40, and of 11 May 2017, Archus and Gama, C-131/16, EU:C:2017:358, paragraph 31).

53 In the third place, it must be noted that, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, which constitutes a general principle of EU law and with which the award of contracts concluded in the Member States must comply, as is apparent from recital 9 of Directive 2004/17 and from recital 2 of Directive 2004/18, the measures adopted by the Member States must not go beyond what is necessary in order to achieve that objective (see, to that effect, judgments of 16 December 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraphs 48 and 61; of 19 May 2009, Assitur, C-538/07, EU:C:2009:317, paragraphs 21 and 23; of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraph 33; and of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraph 29).

54 It is in the light of the foregoing considerations that it is for the referring court, which alone has jurisdiction to find and assess the facts of the disputes in the main proceedings, to examine whether, in the light of the circumstances of the two cases in the main proceedings, the rectifications requested by the contracting authorities concerned the producton of documents whose absence had to lead to the exclusion of the tenderers or whether, on the contrary, they were clearly mere requests for clarification of tenders needing correction or completion on some specific points or a correction of obvious clerical errors.

55 However, it should be noted that, as observed by the Advocate General in points 60 and 61 of his Opinion, the very concept of substantial irregularity, which is not defined in Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code, does not appear to be compatible with Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 or with the requirements to which the clarification of a tender in the context of a public contract falling within the scope of Directive 2004/17 is subject, according to the case-law of the Court referred to in paragraphs 49 to 52 above.

56 It follows that the mechanism of assistance in compiling the documentation provided for in Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code is not applicable if the tender submitted by a tenderer cannot be rectified or clarified within the meaning of the case-law referred to in paragraphs 49 to 52 above, and that, consequently, no penalty can be imposed on the tenderers in such a case.

57 In those circumstances, it is only in the event that the referring court comes to the conclusion that the rectification or clarification requests made by the contracting authorities fulfil the requirements set out in paragraphs 49 to 52 above that it should consider whether the financial penalties in the two cases in the main proceedings under Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code were imposed in compliance with the principle of proportionality.

58 However, to provide the referring court with a useful answer to its questions, the Court has jurisdiction to give guidance based on the documents in the main proceedings and on the written and oral observations which have been submitted to it, enabling it to give judgment (see, to that effect, judgments of 30 March 1993, Thomas and Others, C-328/91, EU:C:1993:117, paragraph 13; of 14 March 2017, G 4S Secure Solutions, C-157/15, EU:C:2017:203, paragraph 36; and of 21 September 2017, SMS group, C-441/16, EU:C:2017:712, paragraph 48).

59 In the present case, it should be noted that, in accordance with Article 38(2a) of the Public Procurement Code, it is for the contracting authority to fix, within the limits of the range defined in this provision, the amount of the financial penalty that may be imposed on the tenderer requested to rectify its tender.

60 The referring court asks the Court to take into account that the financial penalty is set in advance by the contracting authority and that the amount is high and cannot be adjusted according to the gravity of the irregularity rectified. It states, furthermore, that the introduction of such a penalty is justified by the need, first, to place the responsibility on tenderers and to encourage them to prepare their tender carefully and diligently and, secondly, to offset the financial burden that any rectification represents for the contracting authority.

61 In that regard, it should be noted, first, that the setting in advance by the contracting authority of the amount of the penalty in the contract notice does indeed fulfil, as the Commission observed in its written observations, the requirements arising from the principles of equal treatment of tenderers, transparency and legal certainty, in that it is objectively such as to avoid any arbitrary or discriminatory treatment of tenderers by that contracting authority.

62 The fact remains, however, that the automatic application of the penalty thus set in advance, irrespective of the nature of the rectifications made by the errant tenderer and therefore also in the absence of any specific reasons, does not appear to be compatible with the requirements deriving from the principle of proportionality.

63 It should be noted, secondly, that the imposition of a financial penalty is indeed an appropriate means of achieving the legitimate objectives pursued by the Member State related to the need to place responsibility on the tenderers in submitting their tenders and to offset the financial burden that any regularisation represents for the contracting authority.

64 However, as the Advocate General noted in point 74 of his Opinion, the amounts of penalties such as those set out in the contract notices by the contracting authorities in the two cases in the main proceedings appear manifestly disproportionate as such, taking into account the limits placed on the rectification of a tender under Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 and on the clarification of a tender within the framework of Directive 2004/17. That is, in particular, the case of a penalty such as that imposed by the contracting authority in Case C-523/16, which appears manifestly excessive in the light of the facts complained of, namely the absence of a signature on a declaration of commitment nominating the lead company of the association submitting the tender.

65 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the questions referred should be answered as follows:

– EU law, in particular Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, the principles relating to the award of public contracts, including the principles of equal treatment and transparency referred to in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, and the principle of proportionality must be interpreted as not precluding, in principle, national legislation establishing a mechanism of assistance in compiling the documentation, under which the contracting authority may, in a procedure for the award of a public contract, invite any tenderer whose tender is vitiated by serious irregularities within the meaning of that regulation to rectify its tender, subject to the payment of a financial penalty, provided that the amount of that penalty is consistent with the principle of proportionality, which it is for the referring court to determine.

– However, those provisions and principles must be interpreted as precluding national legislation establishing a mechanism of assistance in compiling the documentation under which the contracting authority may require a tenderer, on payment of a financial penalty, to remedy the lack of a document which, according to the express provisions in the contract documentation, must result in the exclusion of that tenderer, or to eliminate the irregularities affecting its tender such that any corrections or changes would amount to a new tender.

Costs

66 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

European Union Law, in particular Article 51 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, the principles relating to the award of public contracts, including the principles of equal treatment and transparency referred to in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, and the principle of proportionality must be interpreted as not precluding, in principle, national legislation establishing a mechanism of assistance in compiling the documentation, under which the contracting authority may in a procedure for the award of a public contract, invite any tenderer whose tender is vitiated by serious irregularities within the meaning of that regulation to rectify its tender, subject to the payment of a financial penalty, provided that the amount of that penalty is consistent with the principle of proportionality, which it is for the referring court to determine.

However, those provisions and principles must be interpreted as precluding national legislation establishing a mechanism of assistance in compiling the documentation under which the contracting authority may require a tenderer, on payment of a financial penalty, to remedy the lack of a document which, according to the express provisions in the contract documentation, must result in the exclusion of that tenderer, or to eliminate the irregularities affecting its tender such that any corrections or changes would amount to a new tender.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Italian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 15 November 2017 (1)

Joined Cases C-523/16 and C-536/16

MA.T.I. SUD S.p.A.

v

Società Centostazioni S.p.A. (C-523/16),

interveners:

China Taiping Insurance Co. Ltd

and Duemme SGR S.p.A.

v

Associazione Cassa Nazionale di Previdenza e Assistenza in favore dei Ragionieri e Periti Commerciali (CNPR) (C-536/16)

(Requests for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy))

(Questions referred for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Tenderer who has submitted incomplete documentation — National legislation making the possibility of supplementing it subject to payment of a fine — Proportionality)

1. Italian law transposed Article 51 of Directive 2004/18/EC (2) in a manner which enabled tenderers for public contracts to remedy any irregularities in their tenders but at the same time imposed on them a financial penalty proportional to the value of the contract.

2. The referring court asks the Court, in essence, whether the power to impose a penalty and the rules for fixing the amount of the fine, within the framework of the mechanism for ‘remedying procedural shortcomings in return for payment’, are compatible with the provisions of EU law.

I. Legal framework

1. EU law: Directive 2004/18

3. According to Article 2:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

4. Article 51 provides:

‘The contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50.’

2. Italian law

(1) Legislative Decree No 163 of 2006 adopting the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts and transposing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (3) (‘the Code’)

5. Article 38(2a) provides:

‘Any absence, incompleteness or any other substantial irregularity in the information and replacement declarations referred to in paragraph 2 shall require payment, to the contracting authority, by the tenderer responsible therefor of the financial penalty specified in the contract notice, the amount of which cannot be less than 0.1% or more than 1% of the value of the contract and must not exceed EUR 50 000, the payment of which shall be guaranteed by the provisional security.

In such cases, the contracting authority shall grant the tenderer a period of not more than ten days in which to submit, supplement or rectify the declarations required and shall state their content and the persons obliged to make them.

In the case of non-substantial irregularities, that is, any non-essential absence or incompleteness of declarations, the contracting authority shall not require the remedying thereof or impose any penalty.

If the period granted is exceeded, the tenderer shall be excluded from the tendering procedure.’

6. Article 46 provides that, within the limits laid down in Articles 38 to 45, the contracting authorities, should they deem it necessary, are to ask tenderers to supplement or clarify the certificates, documents or declarations submitted.

7. Article 230(1), concerning public works, public service and public supply contracts in special sectors, provides that Article 38 of the Code is to be applicable to them.

(2) Legislative Decree No 50/2016 of 18 April, amending the Public Contracts Code (4)

8. The reformed Code, which has been in force since 2016, relaxed, in Article 83(9) thereof, the conditions for requiring the fine (imposing it only if rectification is required) and reduced its maximum ceiling (from EUR 50 000 to EUR 5 000). (5)

II. Facts of the disputes and question referred for a preliminary ruling

1. Case C-523/16.

9. In January 2016, Società Centostazioni S.p.A., which forms part of the Ferrovie dello Stato Italiane S.p.A. group, launched an open procedure for the award of contracts for the carrying on of routine and non-routine maintenance activities and for the provision of energy services at the premises of its railway station buildings, with an estimated value of EUR 170 864 780.81.

10. The contract notice referred to Articles 38(2a) and 46(1c) of the Code, as regards remedying substantial irregularities in the tenderers’ bids. A tenderer intending to remedy an irregularity would be obliged to pay to the contracting authority the amount of EUR 35 000 for each lot by way of a financial penalty.

11. Società Centostazioni, as the contracting authority, established that the documentation submitted by the temporary joint venture constituted by Ma.t.i. Sud S.p.A. and Graded S.p.A. (‘Ma.t.i. Sud’), contained some essential irregularities. (6) It urged the tenderer to remedy the shortcomings by 23 March 2016 and imposed on it a penalty of EUR 35 000.

12. Ma.t.i. Sud, when remedying the defect, indicated its disagreement with that measure and sought to have that penalty annulled. The contracting authority rejected its claim and demanded payment from the tenderer, warning that it would otherwise enforce the provisional security submitted.

13. Ma.t.i. Sud lodged an appeal against that decision before the referring court.

2. Case C-536/16

14. In October 2014, the Associazione Cassa Nazionale di Previdenza e Assistenza in favore dei Ragionieri e Periti Commerciali (CNPR) launched an open procedure for the conclusion of a framework agreement on the appointment of five managers of its securities portfolio.

15. The contract notice referred to Articles 38(2a) of the Code, as regards remedying substantial irregularities in the tenderers' bids. In the case of any absence, incompleteness or other essential irregularity in the information or declarations submitted, the tenderer would be penalised by a fine of EUR 50 000 and would be given a period of ten days to remedy the shortcoming.

16. The contracting authority noted that there was a substantial irregularity in the documentation of Duemme SGR S.p.A, (7) the remedying of which also required the imposition on it of a fine of EUR 50 000.

17. As Duemme SGR refused to pay the penalty, the contracting authority ordered it to do so, warning that the amount would otherwise be deducted from its provisional security.

18. On 9 January 2015, Duemme SGR lodged an appeal before the referring court against the decision imposing the penalty.

3. Questions referred

19. The Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy) has referred, in both cases, the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

> '(1) Although the Member States have the ability to require payment for soccorso istruttorio, a procedure whereby the tenderer is given an opportunity to remedy shortcomings in its tendering documentation, which has the effect of remedying any irregularity, is Article 38(2a) of Legislative Decree No 163 of 2006, in the version in force at the time of the tendering procedure in question …, which makes provision for the payment of a "pecuniary penalty", in so far as that penalty must be fixed by the contracting authority ("not less than 0.1% and not more than 1% of the value of the contract and in any event not more than EUR 50 000, the payment of which shall be guaranteed by the provisional security"), contrary to EU law in view of the excessively high amount and the predetermined nature of that penalty, which cannot be adjusted according to the specific situation to be regulated or the seriousness of the irregularity to be remedied?
>
> (2) Is Article 38(2a) of Legislative Decree No 163 of 2006 (in the version in force at the time indicated above) contrary to EU law, in that that requirement to pay for soccorso istruttorio may be regarded as contrary to the principle of opening up the market to competition as widely as possible, an aim which the soccorso istruttorio mechanism is intended to achieve, the facility which the contracting authority is required to offer in that regard therefore being a logical consequence of the duties imposed on that authority by law in the light of the public interest in achieving that aim?'

III. Summary of the parties' observations

20. Duemme SGR considers that, in general, Directive 2004/18 precludes the remedying of procedural shortcomings in return for payment as laid down in Article 38(2a) of the Code.

21. It claims that that mechanism is contrary to the principle of opening up contracts to competition as widely as possible, as it restricts the participation of undertakings, especially small and medium-sized undertakings. (8) Small and medium-sized undertakings have a more limited economic capacity than large undertakings, so that difficulties in paying the penalty caused by their liquidity may constitute an obstacle to free competition.

22. It adds that, although Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU permit the existence of restrictive national measures, those measures must not be discriminatory, must be justified by overriding reasons relating to the general interest and must be appropriate and proportionate to the objective pursued. In its view, the remedying of procedural shortcomings in return for payment is an unjustified obstacle to free competition.

23. Duemme SGR asks whether the fine of EUR 50 000 and the scope for adjustment provided for in Article 38(2a) of the Code are compatible with the principle of proportionality, since they do not allow for any variation in the light of the specific circumstances of the infringement committed.

24. Finally, even if the Italian State is authorised to require payment for the remedying of procedural shortcomings, Article 38(2a) goes beyond what is required by the aims and objectives of Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 (which, it should be remembered, has been repealed).

25. The CNPR considers that the legislation at issue aims to open up administrative contracting procedures to more competition. In contrast to the previous rules (under which substantial irregularities necessarily and automatically resulted in the exclusion of the tenderer concerned), such shortcomings may be remedied since the reform introduced by Decree-Law No 90 of 2014. Thus, the substantive conditions for participation in that type of procedure take precedence over formal aspects relating to the submission of any required documents.

26. The financial penalty imposed on any persons who fail to fulfil their documentation obligations constitutes the quid pro quo for that opening up to competition. That penalty, which appears in the tender specifications, is intended to compensate for the additional work involved for the contracting authority because of the tenderer’s negligent conduct.

27. The CNPR considers that determination of the amount of the fine in the tender specifications ensures that full information is given and complies with the principles of equal treatment and transparency. Both the procedural and substantive requirements for participation in the procurement process must be made public in advance and in a clear manner, so that tenderers are aware of their obligations, including the obligation to submit essential documentation, and of the consequences of failing to fulfil them.

28. In the CNPR’s view, establishing the penalty according to the value of the contract and on the basis of the seriousness of the irregularity ensures the proportionality of that penalty. Establishing a minimum and maximum percentage (with a ceiling of EUR 50 000) enables the contracting authority to take account of the aspects of the specific case, and it should not be forgotten that the penalty may be imposed only for substantial irregularities.

29. Finally, the CNPR points out that, even accepting that Article 38(2a) of the Code goes beyond the limits of Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, the Court recognises that the Member States have a certain discretion for the purpose of adopting measures to ensure observance of the principles of transparency and equal treatment. (9)

30. The Italian Government, after stating that the legislation at issue has been amended, focuses on its compatibility with EU law. In its view, the doubts of the referring court are based on the argument that Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 does not provide for any penalty, and on the possibility that the risk of being penalised hinders participation in procurement procedures.

31. It claims that the first argument must be rejected, since the Member States might not provide for a rectification mechanism or may provide for one which has a narrower or broader scope. It also does not agree with the second argument, for various reasons:

– Because the fine is not a deterrent which affects tenderers in all cases but is only a possibility which depends on their free will, since they can easily avoid it by scrupulously fulfilling their obligations.

– Because that mechanism promotes competition and reinforces respect for the rules of participation in the tendering process by preventing the rectification of irregular tenders free of charge from becoming an instrument of discrimination against diligent undertakings. That objective is achieved by reasonable means, as the penalty is imposed only on tenderers committing substantial irregularities. Accordingly, it also encourages undertakings to be responsible, since it encourages them to submit full and correct tenders. Finally, the contracting authority is compensated for the additional work involved in administering irregular tenders.

– Because Article 38(2a) does not establish the penalty as a fixed amount and that penalty cannot be considered excessive. On the contrary, it allows the contracting authority discretion in determining the amount of the fine between a maximum and a minimum in relation to the value of the contract, which enables it to adjust the penalty according to the circumstances of the specific case and in accordance with the principle of proportionality.

– Because the fact that the penalty must be provided for in the contract notice does not imply that it should be expressed as a single amount. However, even assuming that this were so, proportionality is guaranteed not only by establishing the amount of the penalty according to the value of the contract, but also by excluding non-substantial irregularities. The amount is not excessive in so far as, although it is a deterrent, it is tailored to the individual concerned.

– Because the amount of the penalty is calculated according to the value of the contract, within the stated range, and is subject to judicial review. Italian law authorises the courts to exercise their powers of unlimited jurisdiction, so that a court may directly determine the amount of the penalty and reduce a penalty regarded as excessive.

32. The Commission, first, points out that, although the procurement procedure in Case C-523/16 falls within the scope of Directive 2004/17, (10) the request for a preliminary ruling is relevant because, according to Article 230 of the Code, Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 must be applied to the special sectors of Directive 2004/17/EC. (11)

33. It also observes that the remedying of procedural shortcomings in return for payment is consistent with Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, an article which the Member States have the option of applying. Since the national legislature decided to transpose that provision, it must be examined whether the penalty regime established by it ensures the correct application of that option.

34. The Commission agrees with the referring court's approach where it maintains that the Italian legislation must be considered in the light of the principle of proportionality and of opening up the market to competition. It doubts, however, whether the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination are relevant since, from the time when penalty is determined in the contract notice, it applies without distinction to all candidates. Moreover, that manner of establishing the amount of the penalty is aimed, precisely, at preventing arbitrariness and discrimination.

35. From that perspective, the Commission considers that the raison d'être of Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 is to accord the contracting authorities a margin of discretion in assessing merely formal irregularities in order not to exclude suitable tenderers. To that extent, it is instrumental in achieving the objectives of EU law on public procurement, which are intended to ensure the widest opening-up of tendering procedures to competition.

36. The Commission points out that the Court has stated that that possibility is intended to correct or supplement minor irregularities relating to particulars or information which can be objectively shown to pre-date the deadline for submitting tenders, which are authorised by the contract notice and which potentially apply to all tenderers. (12) In its view, this applies in both the present cases.

37. In the Commission's view, a Member State making use of the option afforded by Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 is obliged to guarantee its practical effectiveness ('effectiveness') by ensuring that tenderers can fully exercise the rights conferred on them by the directive. The penalty mechanism provided for in Article 38(2a) of the Code may be regarded as lawful only if it serves a legitimate purpose, does not constitute an obstacle to the attainment of the objectives of Article 51 of the directive or to the exercise of the rights provided for therein and respects the principles of establishment, freedom to provide services and proportionality.

38. The Commission considers that a financial penalty imposable on tenderers, whose participation in the process is subject to the condition of supplementing or rectifying the declarations or documents submitted, may hinder or make less attractive the exercise of the freedoms guaranteed by Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU, thereby discouraging the widest possible participation of tenderers. As the referring court itself points out, the contrast between paying a fine for a minor irregularity and the uncertainty of being awarded a contract may cause tenderers, especially small and medium-sized undertakings, not to participate in tenders or, where applicable, to withdraw their participation after the tenders have been submitted.

39. However, that restriction may be justified, provided that it pursues a legitimate objective of general interest. Such objectives may include both the aim of making undertakings behave responsibly (encouraging them to act seriously and promptly when supplying the documentation for their tenders) and that of financially compensating the contracting authority for the work involved in the more complicated and extended procedure of remedying procedural shortcomings.

40. Nonetheless, the Commission does not consider that Article 38(2a) of the Code is an appropriate instrument for attaining the objective pursued for two reasons. The first concerns the establishment of the maximum ceiling of the penalty and the second concerns the contracting authority's discretion in setting the amount of the fine.

41. Thus, the first reason starts from the basis that the irregularities to be remedied in the context of Article 38(2a) of the Code are normally limited to cases which do not give rise to particular difficulties and are to be amended within the short period of ten days. However, the Italian legislature does not state how the establishment of an absolute maximum limit of EUR 50 000 will assist the smooth running of the tendering process. On the contrary, that amount, owing to its deterrent nature, may undermine the effectiveness of the option provided for in Article 51 of Directive 2004/18. The Commission remarks that a maximum ceiling of EUR 5 000, such as that adopted by the new Public Contracts Code, is more reasonable. In any event, it is for the national court to assess the proportionality of the EUR 50 000 limit in relation to the additional burden on the contracting authority and whether it is justified.

42. As to the second reason, the Commission considers that Article 38(2a) of the Code does not refer either to the principle of proportionality or to any obligation on the contracting authority to state reasons in the tender specifications for the amount of the penalty imposed in line with the number and type of irregularities to be remedied. In particular, it considers that the amounts of EUR 50 000 and EUR 35 000, imposed in the main proceedings, were calculated in a random and disproportionate manner.

43. The Commission therefore concludes that the establishment of those amounts is not attributable either to the wording of Article 38(2a) of the Code or to its specific application by the contracting authority. It will be for the referring court to decide whether that article can be interpreted and applied in accordance with the principle of proportionality and in a manner guaranteeing the effectiveness of Article 51 of Directive 2004/18.

IV. Procedure before the Court

44. The orders for reference were received at the Registry of the Court on 12 and 24 October 2016.

45. On 15 November 2016, Cases C-523/16 and C-536/16 were joined.

46. Duemme SGR, the CNPR, the Italian Government and the European Commission have submitted written observations. It was not considered necessary to hold an oral hearing.

V. Assessment

47. By means of the mechanism for 'remedying procedural shortcomings in return for payment', which is the subject matter of these references for a preliminary ruling, Italian law allowed tenderers for public contracts to amend specific shortcomings in their tenders. Where those irregularities were substantial, the contracting authority imposed a fine on the tenderer in question.

48. The initial draft of the Code did not allow substantial irregularities to be remedied. (13) The rule was amended in 2014 precisely in order to allow for that possibility, albeit on condition that the tenderer responsible for them would be penalised by a fine with the following characteristics: (i) its amount would range from 0.1 to 1 per cent of the value of the contract and could not exceed the maximum ceiling of EUR 50 000; (ii) that amount would be established in advance in the contract notice, in an equal amount for all tenderers; and (iii) recovery of the penalty would be guaranteed, as the contracting authority could deduct its amount from the provisional security provided for participation in the procedure.

49. It must now be examined whether that mechanism, as contained in the national law, complies with the provision (Article 51) of Directive 2004/18, under which the contracting authority may invite tenderers to 'supplement or clarify the certificates and documents' submitted with their tenders.

1. Preliminary remarks

50. The referring court mentions Directive 2014/24/EU, (14) because, although it had not yet been transposed into Italian law, it was in force when Article 38(2a) of the Code was adopted. I believe, however, that that directive is not applicable to either of the two disputes.

51. The Court has held that 'the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract. Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time'. (15)

52. As the contract notices which are the subject matter of the dispute were published in October 2014 and January 2016, before Directive 2014/24 was incorporated into Italian law (which occurred on 18 April 2016, the day on which the transposition deadline expired), the application of that case-law requires that Directive 2004/18 must be taken into account in both cases.

53. The Commission does not question the applicability to Case C-536/16 of Directive 2004/18, (16) but argues, as stated above, that the call for tenders in Case C-523/16 falls within the scope of Directive 2004/17 (concerning special sectors). However, it adds that, as the Code extends the application of Article 38 thereof to the aforementioned special sectors, the problem is resolved by reversion to the general rule which in Italy has transposed Article 51 of Directive 2004/18.

54. In neither situation do I see any problem as regards the admissibility of the two references for a preliminary ruling, and I consider it appropriate to resolve them by providing the national court with the guidance it requests on the interpretation of Directive 2004/18.

55. Lastly, I consider it more logical to reverse the order of the answers to the questions referred, as the first question (on the conditions determining the amount of the fine) presupposes that the second question (on the Member State's power to impose that penalty) is answered in the affirmative.

2. The Member State's power to establish a mechanism for 'remedying procedural shortcomings in return for payment'

56. Without prejudice to what I shall forthwith point out concerning the limits to the possibility of remedying certain shortcomings in tenders, according to the case-law of the Court on Directive 2004/18, I can find nothing in that case-law which might preclude the Member States from providing for contracting authorities to charge a certain amount (in this case, as a penalty) (17) to tenderers who have placed themselves in that situation.

57. Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 provides that contracting authorities 'may invite economic operators' to supplement or clarify certain certificates or documents. (18) It says nothing about the means by which such provision should be made, leaving it to the discretion of the Member States. In my view, the Member States enjoy significant freedom to choose the means, in accordance with their own legislative options, (19) provided that the legislation which they adopt does not conflict with that provision or with the rest of EU law.

58. Within that freedom, the national legislation may, in my view, authorise the remedying of formal shortcomings in the tenders, while imposing on the tenderers a certain economic burden in order to encourage them to submit their tenders correctly and to pass on to them the additional cost (if any) arising from the procedure for remedying shortcomings. However, national legislation of that kind, which, owing to the magnitude of that burden, constitutes a not easily surmountable obstacle to the participation of undertakings (in particular, small and medium-sized ones) in public procurement procedures, would run counter to Directive 2004/18 and to the principles underlying it; (20) moreover, this would also undermine the competition to be desired in respect of those procedures. (21)

59. I do not consider, therefore, that objections of principle can be raised to a mechanism which makes the correction of shortcomings in the submission of a tender subject to a payment by the person responsible for those shortcomings and required to remedy them. I shall return to that question when examining the characteristics of the onus imposed by the Italian legislation.

60. However, Article 38(2a) of the Code refers to 'substantial irregularities' as shortcomings which may be remedied. That provision might cause difficulties if it paved the way for the continued participation in the tendering procedure of tenderers who should have been excluded because they did not comply with the obligation to submit the documents required in the contract notice at the proper time and in due form. Those difficulties are compounded when the Court's case-law on that point is considered.

61. This is a controversial (and delicate) subject concerning which the Court has held that, as a rule, Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 'cannot be interpreted as permitting that authority to accept any rectification of omissions which, as expressly provided for in the contract documentation, must result in the exclusion of the [tenderer]'. (22)

62. The judgment of 4 May 2017, Esaprojekt, (23) has recently helped to determine the scope for remedying irregularities. The following extracts are worthy of special mention:

– 'First, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination require tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their bids, which therefore implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions. Second, the principle of transparency is essentially intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority'.(24)

– Furthermore, those principles 'preclude any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure, which means that, as a general rule, a tender cannot be amended after it has been submitted, whether at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderer concerned. It follows that, where the contracting authority regards a tender as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications, it cannot require the tenderer to provide clarification'. (25)

– 'However, the Court has explained that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the correction or amplification of details of a tender, on a limited and specific basis, particularly when it is clear that they require mere clarification, or to correct obvious material errors'. (26)

63. A 'clarification made on a limited or specified basis or a correction of obvious material errors' is therefore accepted, but not a 'substantive and significant amendment of the initial bid, which is more akin to the submission of a new tender'. The provision of 'documents which are not included in the initial bid' is also ruled out where their subsequent submission would, in reality, amount to the making of a new bid. (27)

64. Nor would it be possible to remedy irregularities 'if the contract documents required provision of the missing particulars or information, on pain of exclusion[, since] it falls to the contracting authority to comply strictly with the criteria which it has itself laid down'. (28)

65. The referring court will therefore have to assess, in accordance with that guidance on the interpretation of Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 and in the circumstances of these two cases, (a) whether the required rectification of the documents is concerned with purely formal irregularities, so that it does not amount to the submission of a new bid or give the tenderer an additional advantage over competitors, (29) and (b) whether or not it is contrary to what was clearly stated in the tender specifications as being a reason for exclusion.

3. The amount of the penalty and the principle of proportionality

66. The view that a mechanism for ‘remedying procedural shortcomings in return for payment’ is, in principle, compatible with Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 must immediately be accompanied by a specific analysis of the particular characteristics of the penalty provided for in Article 38(2a) of the Code, in the version prior to the reform of 2016, as applied in national practice and illustrated by the two cases which are the subject of the two disputes.

67. Before undertaking that analysis, I consider it appropriate to refer to a legislative point from which the referring court might, in theory, infer consequences going beyond those expressed by it (in its view, ‘the new Code is not applicable to the call for tenders in question, which was announced before its entry into force’). I am referring, specifically, to the reform of Article 38(2a) of the Code promulgated in 2016. (30)

68. The national court might, if appropriate, apply the principle of retroactivity in melius to proceedings which are still pending, and governed by the legislation most unfavourable to the penalised party, in the event of fulfilment of the twofold condition that, (a) in its domestic system, that principle is applied to administrative penal law, and (b) the penalty imposed by that article of the Code really is of a punitive nature.

69. If such retroactive application is not possible (quite apart from the fact that the disappearance of the national provision applied in these two cases means that the judgment to be delivered by the Court will have very limited general scope), (31) it will be necessary to examine whether the characteristics of the penalty, as applied in these two cases, actually fulfil the objectives justifying it, in terms which conform to the principle of proportionality.

70. In the observations of the CNPR, the Italian Government and the Commission, it is pointed out that the establishment of the penalty for substantial irregularities aims, first, to make the tenderer responsible for acting diligently when producing the documentation which will accompany his tender and, second, to compensate the contracting authority for the additional work involved in administering a procurement procedure which allows for the possibility of remedying those irregularities.

71. The two criticisms of that instrument, as established in the Code, are, on the one hand, that the amount of the penalty is determined a priori, in the contract notice itself, without attempting to assess the magnitude of the irregularities committed or the infringing tenderer’s economic circumstances, and, on the other hand, that the resulting amounts (up to a maximum of EUR 50 000) do not comply with the principle of proportionality. Moreover, the exorbitant amount of the penalty is such as to deter participation in the tendering process, especially by small and medium-sized undertakings, thereby restricting competition.

72. I consider that the objectives which might justify the imposition of the penalties are not consistent with the minimum and maximum amounts of those penalties, as provided for in the Code before its reform of 2016. Perhaps that reform, by significantly reducing the absolute maximum ceiling to EUR 5 000, was a response to the national legislature’s belief that that ceiling had been excessive, as the referring court implies.

73. Of course, the argument of higher administrative costs does not justify such substantial amounts: it should be borne in mind that even the minimum of 0.1 per cent (and a fortiori 1 per cent), in contracts subject to Community directives, is in itself high, given the lower thresholds for the application of those directives. That argument is also not consistent with a single amount which is established a priori and consists in a percentage of the amount of the contract, since it would be logical, following that line of thought, to tailor to each individual case to the resulting higher costs.

74. The disproportionate nature of the penalties is evident in the present two cases, which merely arise from the practical application of the legal provision: an executive’s forgetting to sign and the failure to provide a sworn statement regarding a criminal record result in fines of EUR 35 000 and EUR 50 000 respectively. I find it difficult to accept that the higher cost to the contracting authorities, merely for detecting those two anomalies and for inviting the tenderers to remedy them, (32) corresponds to those amounts, which seem rather to be designed to increase their revenue. (33) I agree with the referring court (which is ultimately responsible for making the assessment concerning proportionality) that such amounts may be described as ‘objectively exorbitant in relation to the [contracting authority’s] additional activity’.

75. Nor does the aim of ensuring the seriousness of tenders justify such large fines. In the first place, because such fines are imposed (as stated in the tender specifications) regardless of the number of irregularities, that is, regardless of the type of information or document which is missing or must be supplemented and of its greater or lesser significance. The provision treats the offences in a uniform manner and allows their level of complexity to be disregarded. (34)

76. In the second place, that aim must be weighed against that of promoting the widest possible participation of tenderers, resulting in greater competition and, in general, the best service to public interests. (35) An excessive penalty will probably deter (36) undertakings with smaller financial resources from participating in calls for tenders for high-value contracts, given the percentage limits stated above. They might also be deterred from participating in future calls for tenders which include the same penalty provision.

77. Moreover, such a burden will be even more of a deterrent to ‘tenderers established in other Member States, inasmuch as their level of knowledge of national law and the interpretation thereof and of the practice of the national authorities cannot be compared to that of national tenderers’. (37)

78. In short, a provision the purpose of which was, precisely, to help to remedy formal errors made by tenderers (by amending the previous national rule) and, thereby, to increase their chances of successfully participating in public procurement procedures ultimately deters such participation by imposing financial burdens which are disproportionate to its objective.

79. On the basis of the above arguments, I am inclined to consider that, in that respect, the application of the national provision, which is no longer in force, fails to comply with the principle of proportionality.

VI. Conclusion

80. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court provide the following answer to the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy):

(1) Article 51 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts does not preclude a national provision making the remedying of certain formal irregularities committed by the tenderer when formulating his proposal subject to the payment of an amount, provided that it ensures compliance with the principles of transparency and equal treatment, that the remedying of those irregularities does not make possible the submission of what, in reality, would be a new tender and that the burden is proportionate to the objectives justifying it.

(2) In circumstances such as those in the present proceedings, Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, interpreted in accordance with the principles of EU law underlying the provisions applicable to public contracts, does not allow for the imposition on tenderers of financial penalties the amount of which cannot be less than 0.1% or more than 1% of the value of the contract, with a maximum ceiling of EUR 50 000.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

---

3 In the version arising from Decree-Law No 90 of 2014 (Decreto-legge 24 giugno 2014, n. 90, misure urgenti per la semplificazione e la trasparenza amministrativa e per l'efficienza degli uffici giudiziari (14G00103) (GU No 144 of 24 June 2014), endorsed by Law No 114/2014 (Legge 11 agosto 2014, n. 114, conversione in legge, con modificazioni, del decreto-legge 24 giugno 2014, n. 90) (GU No 190 of 18 August 2014)).

4 Legislative Decree No 50 of 18 April 2016, Codice dei contratti pubblici (GU No 91 of 19 April 2016).

5 Although it can have no bearing on the consideration of the questions referred, since, given the date of its publication (later than the closure of the written procedure before the Court), it did not form the subject matter of the inter partes proceedings, in contrast to what happened with the reform of 2016, it should be noted that a further, more radical amendment of the Code in that respect occurred in 2017. In fact, Legislative Decree No 56/2017 of 19 April issued a new draft of Article 89(3) which definitively removed the requirement to pay for the remedying of shortcomings upon its entry into force (20 May 2017). Since then, economic operators have been able to rectify the absence of any formal element from their proposals (except those relating to the economic and technical aspects of the tender) without incurring any kind of penalty or other similar charge.

6 Specifically, it pointed out that the declaration containing the undertaking to grant a special collective power of representation to the principal undertaking of the group (Ma.t.i. Sud) had not been signed by the legal representative of that undertaking.

7 Specifically, it had not incorporated the sworn statements that its vice-president and director general had no criminal record, as requested in the tender specifications.

8 It relies on the ‘Green Paper on the modernisation of EU public procurement policy’ (COM/2011/15.final), stating that the provision in the Code runs counter to the objective of ‘reducing administrative burdens in the selection phase’, which aims to improve access by small and medium-sized undertakings to selection processes.

9 It relies on the judgment of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF (C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraphs 26 and 28).

10 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1).

11 In the Commission’s view (footnote 5 of its written observations), in Case C-536/16, ‘the contracting authority appears to be among those listed in Annex IV to Directive 2004/17, and the subject matter of that invitation to tender appears to fall within the scope of Articles 3(1) and 20(1) of that directive’.

12 It cites the judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova (C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647).

13 Only ‘simple’ irregularities could be remedied under Article 46(1) of the preceding version of the Code.

14 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

15 Judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz (C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 83).

16 That statement might need to be qualified in the light of the subjective characteristics (the organising body was a social welfare and assistance association representing accountants and chartered accountants, with legal personality governed by private law) and the objective features of the call for tenders (it was published in order to select five securities managers for that association). However, the application to that case of Directive 2004/18 is not questioned in the observations of any party, perhaps because the CNPR undertook in the tender specifications 'to act, for these purposes, as a body governed by public law' and because the call for tenders consistently referred to the legal rules governing public procurement in Italy, the decisions of that body having been contested before the national administrative courts.

---

17 In the observations of Duemme SGR, an account is given of the discussion among the Italian authorities themselves as to the true nature of that charge: for some, it clearly constitutes an administrative penalty, as its name suggests; for others, (in particular, the National Anti-Corruption Authority, according to its agreement of 8 January 2015), it is merely a compensatory instrument. The referring court also echoes 'some commentators' and the judgment of another administrative court, according to which the penalty might rather be 'redefined' as compensation.

---

18 Article 56(3) of the (subsequent) Directive 2014/24 is more precise on this matter: 'Where information or documentation to be submitted by economic operators is or appears to be incomplete or erroneous or where specific documents are missing, contracting authorities may, unless otherwise provided by the national law implementing this Directive, request the economic operators concerned to submit, supplement, clarify or complete the relevant information or documentation within an appropriate time limit, provided that such requests are made in full compliance with the principles of equal treatment and transparency'.

---

19 A number of options have found favour in Italy; as is attested by Opinion No 855/2016 of 1 April 2016, which was delivered before the adoption of Legislative Decree No 50 of 2016, in which the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) proposed that the Government remove the requirement to pay for the remedying of procedural shortcomings. That recommendation was not adopted in its entirety at that time (although the penalties were reduced), in contrast to what would subsequently occur, in 2017, when the above-mentioned Decree Law No 56/1017 was adopted.

---

20 In particular, 'the principles of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services as well as … those deriving therefrom', as referred to in the judgment of 10 November 2016, Ciclat (C-199/15, EU:C:2016:853, paragraph 25). Moreover, under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, contracting authorities must treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and act in a transparent way. Those principles are emphasised in recitals 2 and 46 of that directive.

---

21 The Court has held in the judgment of 23 December 2009, CoNISMa (C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 37), that 'one of the primary objectives of Community rules on public procurement is to attain the widest possible opening-up to competition (see, inter alia, to that effect[, judgment of 13 December 2007,] Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, [C-337/06, EU:C:2007:786,] paragraph 39) and that it is the concern of Community law to ensure the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders ([judgment of 19 May 2009,] Assitur,[C-538/07 [EU:C:2009:317], paragraph 26). It should be added that the widest possible opening-up to competition is contemplated not only from the point of view of the Community interest in the free movement of goods and services but also the interest of the contracting authority concerned itself, which will thus have greater choice as to the most advantageous tender which is most suitable for the needs of the public authority in question.'

---

22 That form of words is repeated in the judgments of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda (C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 46), and of 10 November 2016, Ciclat (C-199/15, EU:C:2016:853, paragraph 30). The judgments of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others (C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191); of 10 October 2013, Manova (C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647), and of 7 April 2016, Partner

Apelski Dariusz (C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214), inter alia, have also considered the problems raised by the application of Article 51 of Directive 2004/18.

---

23 Case C-387/14, EU:C:2017:338.

---

24 Ibid., paragraph 36.

---

25 Ibid., paragraph 37.

---

26 Ibid., paragraph 38.

---

27 In my opinion, paragraph 45 of the judgment of 4 May 2017, Esaprojekt (C-387/14, EU:C:2017:338), must be interpreted in that manner, because, in that case, the omission affected precisely the documentation accrediting experience, in accordance with the requirements of the tender specifications, which was remedied in terms which had little to do with the initial bid. On other occasions (judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraphs 39 and 40), the Court accepted that the contracting authority could request new documents, such as a published balance sheet, containing the 'correction or amplification of details of such an application, on a limited and specific basis, so long as that request relates to particulars or information … which can be objectively shown to pre-date the deadline for applying to take part in the tendering procedure concerned'.

---

28 Judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova (C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 40). In similar terms, the judgment of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda (C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345) held that the tenderer's exclusion was valid as it was required by the terms of the tender specifications. In that judgment, the Court examined the possibility of rectifying omissions under Articles 2 and 51 of Directive 2004/18 in connection with Article 38 of the Code in the version prior to its reform of 2014. It considered that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 did not preclude exclusion because it was stated in the tender specifications: 'in particular, in so far as the contracting authority takes the view that that omission is not a purely formal irregularity, it cannot allow the tenderer subsequently to remedy the omission in any way after the expiry of the deadline for submitting bids' (paragraph 45).

---

29 The absence of the signature of the tendering undertaking's legal representative in Case C-523/16 may have that characteristic. As regards Case C-536/16, the lack of a sworn statement that the person concerned does not have a criminal record might be akin to the shortcoming (declared irremediable) which was the subject matter of the judgment of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda (C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345). However, as was pointed out in the previous footnote, the legal framework at that time was different and, in particular, the irremediable nature of the irregularity arose from the tender specifications themselves, in contrast with the situation in this case.

---

30 As I have already observed, the amendment consisted, as far as is relevant here, in reducing the absolute maximum limit to EUR 5 000 and in providing that the fine would be imposed only in the event of rectification. The provision that the fine is covered by the tenderer's provisional security is also removed.

---

31 The Court must, of course, provide an answer to the referring court. However, that answer concerns, in reality, the compliance of national legislation and a national practice which are no longer in force with a directive (Directive 2004/18) which has also been repealed.

---

32 The contracting authority must, in any event, examine the documents submitted and the tender's conformity with the tender specifications. Where an irregularity is detected, if the tenderer is invited to remedy it, he is given ten days to do so. The additional work involved cannot, therefore, be deemed to be excessive.

---

33 The order for reference goes so far as to state that the measure adopted would seem to ‘encourage contracting authorities to play “spot the mistake”’.

---

34 The referring court also points out that the ‘blame’ for the error attributed to the candidate may sometimes be related to the ‘degree of descriptive clarity’ with which the requirements laid down by the contracting authority are set out.

---

35 See, to that effect, point 58 and the case-law cited in footnote 21.

---

36 In its Opinion No 855/2016, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) referred to the ‘undoubtedly deterrent’ effect of the mechanism.

---

37 Judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 46).

EU:C:2017:940

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Eighth Chamber)

6 December 2017 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2004/18/EC — Scope — Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 — European Regional Development Fund, European Social Fund and Cohesion Fund — Finance agreement for the construction of a motorway concluded with the European Investment Bank before the accession of the Member State to the European Union — Concept of 'irregularity' within the meaning of Regulation No 1083/2006)

In Case C-408/16,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Curtea de Apel Bucureşti (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania), made by decision of 20 May 2016, received at the Court on 21 July 2016, in the proceedings

Compania Naţională de Administrare a Infrastructurii Rutiere SA, formerly Compania Naţională de Autostrăzi şi Drumuri Naţionale din România SA,

v

Ministerul Fondurilor Europene — Direcţia Generală Managementul Fondurilor Externe,

THE COURT (Eighth Chamber), composed of J. Malenovský, President of the Chamber, D. Šváby (Rapporteur) and M. Vilaras, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Compania Naţională de Administrare a Infrastructurii Rutiere SA, by C. Homor, A. Docu, R. Simionescu, I.L. Axente and N.C. Mărgărit and by A. Filipescu, H. Nicolae and M. Curculescu,

– the Ministerul Fondurilor Europene — Direcţia Generală Managementul Fondurilor Externe, by D.C. Dinu, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by B.-R. Killmann and A. Tokár and by L. Nicolae, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 15 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), and of Articles 2(7), 9(5) and 60(a) of Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 of 11 July 2006 laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund and repealing Regulation (EC) No 1260/1999 (OJ 2006 L 210, p. 25).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Compania Naţională de Administrare and Infrastructurii Rutiere SA, formerly Compania Naţională de Autostrăzi şi Drumuri Naţionale of România SA ('the CNADNR'), and the Ministerul Fondurilor Europene - Direcţia Generală Managementul Fondurilor Externe (Ministry of European Funds - Directorate-General of Foreign Funds Management, Romania) concerning a decision of the Autoritatea de Management pentru Programul Operaţional Sectorial 'Transport' (Management Authority Sectoral Operational Programme 'Transport', Romania, 'the AMPOST'), applying a financial correction for infringement of Directive 2004/18 in connection with the award of a public contract for co-financed works, initially by the European Investment Bank (EIB), then in full and retrospectively by the European Union by way of the European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) and the Cohesion Fund.

Legal context

EU law

The Adhesion Protocol

3 Article 2 of the Protocol concerning the conditions and arrangements for admission of the Republic of Bulgaria and Romania to the European Union (OJ 2005 L 157, p. 29, 'the Adhesion Protocol'), provides:

'From the date of accession, … the acts adopted by the institutions before accession shall be binding on Bulgaria and Romania and shall apply in those States under the conditions laid down in the [Treaty Establishing a Constitution for Europe], in the EAEC Treaty and in this Protocol.'

4 The fourth part of that protocol, headed 'Temporary provisions', includes Title III, on 'Financial provisions', which contains Article 27, which states, in paragraph 2:

'Financial commitments made before accession under the pre-accession financial instruments referred to in paragraph 1 as well as those made under the Transition Facility referred to in Article 31 after accession, including the conclusion and registration of subsequent individual legal commitments and payments made after accession shall continue to be governed by the rules and regulations of the pre-accession financing instruments and be charged to the corresponding budget chapters until closure of the programmes and projects concerned. Notwithstanding this, public procurement procedures initiated after accession shall be carried out in accordance with the relevant Union provisions.'

5 The fifth part of that protocol, headed 'Provisions relating to the implementation of this protocol' includes Title II, entitled 'Applicability of the acts of the institutions', and includes Article 53, which provides, in paragraph 1:

'Bulgaria and Romania shall put into effect the measures necessary for them to comply, from the date of accession, with the provisions of European framework laws and those European regulations which are binding as to the result to be achieved but leave the national authorities the choice of form and methods within the meaning of Article I-33 of the [Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe] and of directives and decisions within the meaning of Article 249 [EC] and of Article 161 of the EAEC Treaty, unless another time limit is provided for in this Protocol. They shall communicate those measures to the Commission at the latest by the date of accession or, where appropriate, by the time limit provided for in this Protocol.'

Directive 2004/18

6 Recital 22 of Directive 2004/18 states:

'Provision should be made for cases in which it is possible to refrain from applying the measures for coordinating procedures … because specific rules on the awarding of contracts … which are specific to international organisations are applicable.’

7 Article 15 of that directive, headed ‘Contracts awarded pursuant to international rules’, provides:

‘This Directive shall not apply to public contracts governed by different procedural rules and awarded:

…

(c) pursuant to the particular procedure of an international organisation.’

Regulation No 1083/2006

8 Recital 22 of Regulation No 1083/2006 states:

‘The activities of the Funds and the operations which they help to finance should be consistent with the other Community policies and comply with Community legislation.’

9 Article 2 of that regulation provides:

‘For the purposes of this Regulation:

…

(7) “irregularity”: any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the general budget.’

10 Article 9(5) of that regulation provides:

‘Operations financed by the Funds shall comply with the provisions of the Treaty and of acts adopted under it.’

11 In Section 2 of Chapter II of Title III of Regulation No 1083/2006, entitled ‘Main projects’, Article 39 of that regulation provides:

‘As part of an operational programme, the ERDF and the Cohesion Fund may finance expenditure in respect of an operation comprising a series of works, activities or services intended in itself to accomplish an indivisible task of a precise economic or technical nature, which has clearly identified goals and whose total cost exceeds EUR 25 million in the case of the environment and EUR 50 million in other fields (hereinafter referred to as major projects).’

12 Article 41 of that regulation, headed ‘Decisions of the Commission’, states:

‘1. The Commission shall appraise the major project, if necessary consulting outside experts, including the EIB, in the light of the factors referred to in Article 40, its consistency with the priorities of the operational programme, its contribution to achieving the goals of those priorities and its consistency with other Community policies.

2. The Commission shall adopt a decision as soon as possible but no later than three months after the submission by the Member State or the managing authority of a major project, provided that the submission is in accordance with Article 40. That decision shall define the physical object, the amount to which the co-financing rate for the priority axis applies, and the annual plan of financial contribution from the ERDF or the Cohesion Fund.

3. Where the Commission refuses to make a financial contribution from the Funds to a major project, it shall notify the Member State of its reasons within the period and the related conditions laid down in paragraph 2.’

13 Article 60 of Regulation No 1083/2006 is worded as follows:

‘The Managing Authority shall be responsible for managing and implementing the operational programme in accordance with the principle of sound financial management and in particular for:

(a) ensuring that operations are selected for funding in accordance with the criteria applicable to the operational programme and that they comply with applicable Community and national rules, for the whole of their implementation period;

…’

14 Article 98(2) of that regulation provides:

‘Member States shall make the financial corrections required in connection with individual or systemic irregularities detected in operations or operational programmes. The corrections made by a Member State shall consist of cancelling all or part of the public contribution to the operational programme. Member States shall take into account the nature and gravity of the irregularities and the financial loss to the Fund.

The resources from the Funds released in this way may be reused by the Member State until 31 December 2015 for the operational programme concerned in accordance with the provisions referred to in paragraph 3.’

EIB Guide to Procurement

15 The EIB has a ‘Guide to procurement for projects financed by the EIB’. That guide, in its 2004 version (‘the EIB Guide’), is intended to inform the promoters of a project whose contracts are financed in whole or in part, by the EIB, of the arrangements to be made for procuring works, goods and services required for the project concerned and receiving financing from the EIB. It is structured in three chapters and distinguishes between the rules governing operations within the Union, which are the subject of Chapter 2 and those governing operations outside the Union, which are the subject of Chapter 3. Chapter 3 of the EIB Guide states that ‘accession States … are progressively incorporating [EU] directives into their legislation. In [this] guide, those countries come under the provisions laid down in Chapter 3, “Operations outside the European Union …”, until the deadline when they were committed to applying the EU Directives on procurement as agreed during their negotiations with the Commission to the extent that they have transposed these Directives into their national legislation at that moment. Thus the provisions of Chapter 2, “Operations within the European Union” apply to them.’

Romanian law

OUG No 34/2006

16 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Romanian law by the Ordonanța de urgență a Guvernului nr. 34/2006 din 19 aprilie 2006 privind atribuirea contractelor de achiziție publică, a contractelor de concesiune de lucrări publice și a contractelor de concesiune de servicii (Government Emergency Order No 34/2006 on the award of procurement contracts, public works concession contracts and service concession contracts, published in the Monitorul Oficial al României, Partea I, No 418 of 15 Mai 2006, ‘OUG No 34/2006’). Article 14(1) of that Order provides:

‘The present Emergency Order shall not apply where the public contract is awarded following:

…

(c) the application of a specific procedure of an international body or institution;

…’

OUG No 72/2007

17 The Ordonanţa de urgenţă a Guvernului nr. 72/2007 din 28 iunie 2007 privind unele măsuri derogatorii de la OUG nr. 34/2006 (Government Emergency Order No 72/2007 laying down measures derogating from OUG No 34/2006, Monitorul Oficial al României, Partea I*,* No 441 of 29 June 2007, 'OUG No 72/2007', has a single article, under which:

'By way of derogation from the provisions of [OUG No 34/2006] … for the purposes of the procedure for the award of public works contracts …, EIB Loan VI, signed in December 2006, relating to the Arad-Timișoara-Lugoj motorway …, the [CNADNR] shall apply the provisions of the [EIB Guide], Chapter 3; …'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

18 The project for the construction of the Arad-Timişoara-Lugoj motorway was initially the subject of a finance agreement concluded on 23 December 2003 between Romania, the EIB and the CNADNR, the contracting authority for the works contract at issue in the case in the main proceedings.

19 On the basis of that agreement, a loan agreement to finance the construction of several sections of motorway was concluded, between the same parties, on 2 December 2004. That agreement states that 'the CNADNR shall comply with the EIB's procedures for the procurement of goods, the guarantee of services and the undertaking of works necessary for the projects, [that it] negotiates and concludes the agreements in accordance with the provisions of [that finance agreement]', namely 'through international calls for tender open to candidates from all countries'.

20 In the context of that loan agreement and with a view to organising the award of the public works contract for the construction of the Arad-Timişoara-Lugoj motorway, the CNADNR awarded a contract on 28 February 2006 to provide the consulting services necessary for the preparation of the procurement file for that contract. As Romania was not yet a member of the Union, the procurement file was drawn up in accordance with Chapter 3 of the EIB Guide, entitled 'Operations outside the European Union …'.

21 It is apparent from the order for reference that, first, the procedure for the award of the public works contract for the construction of the Arad-Timişoara-Lugoj motorway began on 17 July 2007 in the form of a restricted call for tenders with pre-selection by the publication of the pre-selection notice, and, second, that that contract was awarded on 15 December 2008.

22 On 27 October 2009, Romania requested the Commission that the planned construction of the Arad-Timişoara-Lugoj motorway benefit, in the context of the Sectoral Operational Programme 'Transport 2007-2013', from retrospective financing by way of the ERDF and the Cohesion Fund as a 'major project' within the meaning of Article 39 of Regulation No 1083/2006.

23 By two successive decisions, adopted in 2010 and 2014 respectively, the Commission approved the full financing of that project by way of the ERDF and the Cohesion Fund. A finance agreement has thus amended the source of funding for that project so that it now benefits from non-reimbursable European funds under the Sectoral Operational Programme 'Transport 2007-2013'.

24 In order to reimburse the costs incurred by the contracting authority and taking into account the Commission's recommendations concerning compliance with EU public procurement rules in the event of retrospective project financing, the AMPOST reviewed the file for the award of the works contract at issue in the case in the main proceedings. At the end of that review, AMPOST declared irregularities by a memorandum of 29 June 2015 and by a decision of 24 August 2015 applied a financial correction of 10% of the value of the eligible costs of the works contract concluded on 15 December 2008.

25 AMPOST justified that financial correction by pointing out, in the first place, that in order to grant non-reimbursable European financing to an operation, the Commission requires that the directives on public procurement in force on the date of publication of the invitation to participate in the procurement procedure concerned be respected. In that regard, AMPOST took the view that Directive 2004/18 was applicable to the procedure for the award of the works contract at issue in the case in the main proceedings, since the latter began solely after Romania's accession to the European Union. In the second place, AMPOST noted that three pre-selection criteria laid down by that contract were more restrictive than those provided for by Directive 2004/18, namely, firstly, a criterion relating to the candidate's personal situation and in particular, the background of non-performance of contracts, which is contrary to Articles 44 and 45 of Directive 2004/18, and secondly, a criterion relating to the applicant's financial situation which is contrary to Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 and, thirdly, a criterion relating to the applicant's experience which does not comply with Article 48 of that directive. In the last place, AMPOST nevertheless noted that the use of those criteria had been authorised under national law, namely OUG No 72/2007, which expressly derogated from OUG No 34/2006, an order transposing Directive 2004/18.

26 The CNADNR brought an action before the referring court seeking the annulment of AMPOST's decision of 24 August 2015 and of the memorandum declaring irregularities and setting financial corrections of 29 June 2015, issued concerning the construction project of the Arad-Timişoara-Lugoj motorway.

27 In support of its action, the CNADNR takes the view that the financial correction of 10% of the value of the eligible expenses of the works contract for the construction of the Arad-Timişoara Lugoj motorway is based on a misinterpretation of the provisions of OUG No 34/2006, of OUG No 72/2007 as well as of Directive 2004/18. The CNADNR submits that the contracting authority cannot be criticised for having set pre-selection criteria that were unlawful or restrictive in the light of that directive, in so far as, ab initio, the award of that contract was carried out in accordance with Chapter 3 of the EIB Guide.

28 The Ministry for European Funds — Directorate-General for the management of external finances maintains that the reviews were carried out by AMPOST in accordance with Directive 2004/18, precisely because the procurement procedure for the contract concerned derogated from the application of OUG No 34/2006. In view of the change to the source of funding, since the operation was then financed by the Cohesion Fund under the Sectoral Operational Programme 'Transport 2007-2013', AMPOST had to ensure that the award of that contract respects the provisions of EU law and, in particular, the public procurement rules.

29 The referring court questions, in the first place, the applicable rules ratione temporis and refers, in that regard, not only to Article 27 of the Protocol of Accession, which concerns the financial commitments made by the Member States concerned before their accession to the European Union, but also Article 53 of that protocol, which provides for the immediate entry into force, from the date of accession of those Member States to the European Union, of secondary legislation.

30 In the second place, the referring court asks whether Article 15(c) of Directive 2004/18 may be interpreted as meaning that that directive does not apply to public contracts governed by different procedural rules and awarded under the particular procedure of an international body, as authorising a Member State to not apply that directive, after that Member State's accession to the European Union, in so far as that Member State is bound by a finance agreement concluded with the EIB before its accession to the European Union, and under which the public procurement procedures comply with specific criteria which are more restrictive than those provided for by that directive.

31 The referring court also questions whether Directive 2004/18 precludes a legislative measure of national law, adopted by the Member State concerned after its accession to the European Union, which requires the contracting authority to follow the EIB Guide by derogation from the legislative measure transposing that directive.

32 In that regard, the referring court takes the view that, after accession to the Union, a candidate State which has received funding for the duration of the negotiations is no longer subject to Chapter 3 of the EIB Guide, as regards operations outside the European Union, but is then subject to Chapter 2, entitled 'Operations within the European Union', of that guide, which confirms that Directive 2004/18 is applicable.

33 In the third place, in so far as AMPOST pointed out that some of the pre-selection criteria provided for by the works contract at issue in the case in the main proceedings were more restrictive than those laid down by Directive 2004/18, the referring court asks, in that context, whether such a contract may be considered to comply with EU rules and be eligible for non-reimbursable European funding granted retrospectively.

34 In those circumstances, the Curtea de Apel București (Court of Appeal, Bucharest, Romania) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Is Article 15(c) of Directive 2004/18 to be interpreted as permitting a Member State not to apply the directive, following its accession to the … Union, if it has the benefit of a finance agreement concluded with the [EIB] which was signed before the accession and under which specific requirements imposed by the lending institution, such as those at issue in the present case, which are more restrictive than those laid down by the directive, are applied to public contracts to be awarded?

(2) Is Directive 2004/18 to be interpreted as precluding a legislative measure under national law, such as [OUG] No 72/2007, which provides for the application of the [EIB Guide], by way of derogation from the legislative measure by which the directive was transposed into national law, namely, in the present case, [OUG] No 34/2006, on grounds such as those set out in the explanatory memorandum [relating to the former OUG], for the purpose of compliance with the finance agreement concluded prior to accession?

(3) On a proper interpretation of Article 9(5) and Article 60(a) of Regulation No 1083/2006, may such a public contract, concluded in compliance with the [EIB Guide] and with national law, be regarded as consistent with EU law and eligible for European non-reimbursable financial support, granted retrospectively?

(4) In the event that Question 3 is answered in the negative, if such a public contract was nonetheless considered to be consistent with EU law at the time the check was carried out to verify compliance with the qualification requirements for the Sectoral Operational Programme "Transport 2007-2013", does such an alleged breach of EU public procurement law (determination of certain pre-selection criteria for the tenderers which are similar to those set out in the [EIB Guide] and more restrictive than those laid down in Directive 2004/18 …) constitute an "irregularity" within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, giving rise to an obligation on the part of the Member State concerned to make a financial correction/percentage reduction pursuant to Article 98(2) of the regulation?'

Consideration of the questions referred

Preliminary observations

35 In order to answer the questions referred, it is necessary, first of all, to determine that Directive 2004/18 is in fact applicable ratione temporis insofar as certain facts mentioned by the referring court have taken place before Romania's accession to the European Union. It follows from Article 2 of the Protocol of Accession that from the day of that accession acts adopted by the EU institutions before accession are to be binding on Romania and are to be applicable in that State, under the conditions laid down in the Treaties and that protocol.

36 In that regard, it follows from Article 53(1) of that protocol that Romania is to put into effect the measures necessary for it to comply, from the date of its accession to the European Union, with the provisions of directives which are binding as to the result to be achieved but leave the national authorities the choice of form and methods unless another time limit is provided for in that protocol.

37 It must be stated that no such time limit has been provided for transposing Directive 2004/18 into national law. Romania therefore had to comply with that directive as from its accession to the European Union in accordance with the principle that the provisions of EU law apply ab initio and in toto to new Member States (see, to that effect, judgment of 3 December 1998, KappAhl, C-233/97, EU:C:1998:585, paragraph 15).

38 That being said, it must be ensured that Directive 2004/18 is in fact applicable to a procedure for the award of public works contracts such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings.

39 In that regard, according to settled case-law, the directive applicable to a public contract is, as a rule, the one in force on the date when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of that contract (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 83).

40 Where a public procurement procedure is the subject of publication of a contract notice, it must be considered that the date on which the contracting authority definitively decides whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of that contract is that of the day of that publication. Therefore, it is on that date that the lawfulness of the conditions relating to a procedure for awarding a public contract must be assessed.

41 In the present case, the procedure for the award of the public works contract at issue in the case in the main proceedings was the subject of a contract notice published in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union on 17 July 2007, that is, after the accession of Romania to the European Union. Since the Accession Protocol did not provide for any transitional measure capable of postponing the application of Directive 2004/18, it must therefore be considered that it is applicable ratione temporis to a public procurement procedure such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings.

The first and second questions

42 By its first and second questions, which must be examined jointly, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 2004/18, and in particular Article 15(c) thereof, must be interpreted as meaning that it precludes a Member State's legislation that provides, for the purposes of a public procurement procedure initiated after the date of its accession to the European Union, in order to complete a project started on the basis of a finance agreement concluded with the EIB prior to that accession, the application of the specific criteria laid down by the provisions of the EIB Guide which do not comply with the provisions of that directive.

43 Article 15(c) of Directive 2004/18 states that that directive does not apply to public contracts governed by particular procedural rules of an international organisation.

44 In addition, it should be noted that that article, read in conjunction with recital 22 of Directive 2004/18, lists three cases of public contracts to which that directive does not apply to the extent that those public contracts are governed by different procedural rules. Moreover, it is clear that that article forms part of Section 3, entitled 'Excluded contracts', of Chapter II, entitled 'Scope', of Title II, itself entitled 'Rules on public contracts' of Directive 2004/18.

45 It thus follows both from the wording of Article 15(c) of Directive 2004/18 and from the context in which it appears, that that article constitutes an exception to the material scope of that directive. Such an exception must necessarily be interpreted strictly (see, to that effect, order of 20 June 2013, Consiglio Nazionale degli Ingegneri, C-352/12, not published, EU:C:2013:416, paragraph 51 and the case-law cited).

46 In order to assess whether a public procurement procedure such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings, governed by Chapter 3 of the EIB Guide, may fall within the exception provided for in Article 15(c) of Directive 2004/18, it is necessary to determine whether such a procedure can be considered to be governed by particular procedural rules of an international organisation.

47 As has been stated in paragraph 41 of the present judgment, the contract notice at issue in the case in the main proceedings was published subsequent to Romania's accession to the European Union.

48 In those circumstances, a procedure such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings cannot be regarded as being governed by particular rules of procedure of an international organisation within the meaning of Article 15(c) of Directive 2004/18.

49 Therefore, after the date of its accession to the European Union, Romania cannot rely on the exception relating to compliance with the particular rules of an international organisation provided for in Article 15(c) of Directive 2004/18.

50 Moreover, as the referring court has pointed out, such an interpretation is supported by the wording of the EIB Guide under which, after accession to the Union, a candidate State which has received EIB funding to complete a project is no longer subject to Chapter 3 of the EIB Guide, as regards operations outside the European Union, but is then subject to Chapter 2 concerning operations within the European Union, and must apply the directives on public procurement procedures.

51 It follows from the foregoing that Directive 2004/18 precludes the existence of a legislative act of national law, such as OUG No 72/2007, which provides that the provisions of Chapter 3 of the EIB Guide are to apply by way of derogation from the provisions of that directive.

52 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first and second questions referred is that Directive 2004/18, and in particular Article 15(c) thereof, must be interpreted as meaning that it precludes a Member State's legislation that provides, for the purposes of a public procurement procedure initiated after the date of its accession to the European Union, in order to complete a project started on the basis of a finance agreement concluded with the EIB prior to that accession, the application of the specific criteria laid down by the provisions of the EIB Guide which do not comply with the provisions of that directive.

The third and fourth questions

53 By its third and fourth questions, which should be examined together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 9(5) and 60(a) of Regulation No 1083/2006 must be interpreted as meaning that a public procurement procedure such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings, in which more restrictive criteria than those laid down in Directive 2004/18 have been applied, may be considered to comply with EU law and be eligible for non-reimbursable European funding, granted retrospectively, and whether, where appropriate, Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 must be interpreted as meaning that the use of pre-selection criteria of tenderers that are more restrictive than those provided for in Directive 2004/18 constitutes an 'irregularity', within the meaning of Article 2(7), justifying the application of a financial correction pursuant to Article 98 of that regulation.

54 As regards the first aspect, it is apparent from the wording of Article 9(5) of Regulation No 1083/2006, read in the light of recital 22 of that regulation, that the European Funds are intended to finance only operations that comply with the provisions of the Treaty and the acts adopted under it.

55 In addition, under Article 60(a) of Regulation No 1083/2006, it is the responsibility of the managing authority to ensure that operations selected for funding comply with applicable EU and national rules for the whole of their implementation period.

56 Accordingly, Regulation No 1083/2006 forms part of the mechanism designed to ensure the proper management of EU funds and the safeguarding of the European Union's financial interests (see, to that effect, judgment of 26 May 2016, Judeţul Neamţ and Judeţul Bacău, C-260/14 and C-261/14, EU:C:2016:360, paragraph 34).

57 It follows that the role of the European Union is to finance through its funds only actions conducted in complete conformity with EU law, including the rules applicable to public procurement (see to that effect, judgment of 14 July 2016, Wrocław — Miasto na prawach powiatu, C-406/14, EU:C:2016:562, paragraph 43 and the case-law cited).

58 In the present case, it is common ground that, for the purposes of the pre-selection of tenderers, the CNADNR followed the rules of Chapter 3 of the EIB Guide. In that regard, the fact of following the rules of that guide cannot rule out, ab initio, that the EU rules as they result from Directive 2004/18 are observed. Nevertheless, it is clear from the referring court's statements that the pre-selection criteria at issue in the case in the main proceedings are more restrictive than those set out in Articles 44, 45 and 47 of Directive 2004/18.

59 In view of the above, a public procurement procedure such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings, in which more restrictive criteria than those laid down in Directive 2004/18 have been applied, cannot be considered as having been conducted in complete conformity with EU law.

60 As regards the second aspect referred to in paragraph 53, it follows from the definition in Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 that an infringement of EU law constitutes an ‘irregularity’, within the meaning of that provision, only if it has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to that budget. Therefore, the Court has held that such an infringement is to be considered to be an irregularity only in so far as it was capable, as such, to have a budgetary impact. By contrast, there is no requirement that the existence of a specific financial impact be shown (judgment of 14 July 2016, Wrocław — Miasto na prawach powiatu, C-406/14, EU:C:2016:562, paragraph 44 and the case-law cited).

61 Consequently, it should be considered that a failure to comply with the public procurement rules constitutes an ‘irregularity’ within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 in so far as the possibility may not be excluded that that failure will have an impact on the budget of the Funds concerned (judgment of 14 July 2016, Wrocław — Miasto na prawach powiatu, C-406/14, EU:C:2016:562, paragraph 45).

62 In the present case, the use of pre-selection criteria for tenderers that are more restrictive than those provided for by Directive 2004/18 constitutes an ‘irregularity’ within the meaning of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, provided that it cannot be ruled out that such use has had an impact on the budget of the Funds at issue.

63 In that regard, it is clear from the order for reference that, in the main proceedings, AMPOST has shown that the pre-selection criteria for tenderers were more restrictive than those laid down in Directive 2004/18 and that they had the effect of restricting the circle of participants in the public procurement procedure at issue in the case in the main proceedings so that the impact on the budget of the Funds cannot be ruled out, which it is for the national court to determine.

64 Finally, as to whether that irregularity justifies the application of a financial correction pursuant to Article 98 of Regulation No 1083/2006, it is appropriate to note that it is for the Member States to make a financial correction, provided that an irregularity has been established.

65 For that purpose, Article 98(2) thereof also requires the competent national authority to calculate the amount of the correction to apply by taking into account three criteria, namely the nature and gravity of the irregularities and the resulting financial loss to the Funds (judgment of 14 July 2016, Wrocław — Miasto na prawach powiatu, C-406/14, EU:C:2016:562, paragraph 47).

66 Where, as in the case at issue in the main proceedings, a specific, and not a systematic, irregularity is concerned, that requirement necessarily involves a case-by-case examination, taking into account all of the relevant circumstances in the light of one of those three criteria.

67 In the present case, the fact that the CNADNR acted in accordance with the national legislation which required it to derogate from Directive 2004/18, so that it had no discretion as to the public procurement award procedure to follow, is a circumstance likely to affect the final amount of the financial correction to be applied, which it is for the national court to determine in the light of the specific circumstances of the case.

68 In the light of the above considerations, the answer to the third to fourth questions is:

– Articles 9(5) and 60(a) of Regulation No 1083/2006 must be interpreted as meaning that a public procurement procedure such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings, in which criteria more restrictive than those laid down in Directive 2004/18 have been applied, cannot be considered as having been conducted in complete conformity with EU law and is not eligible for non-reimbursable European funding, granted retrospectively.

– Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 must be interpreted as meaning that the use of pre-selection criteria for tenderers that are more restrictive than those provided for by Directive 2004/18 constitutes an ‘irregularity’, within the meaning of that article, justifying the application of a financial correction pursuant to Article 98 of that regulation, provided that it cannot be ruled out that such use had an impact on the budget of the Funds at issue, which it is for the national court to determine.

Costs

69 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, and in particular Article 15(c) thereof, must be interpreted as meaning that it precludes a Member State's legislation that provides, for the purposes of a public procurement procedure initiated after the date of its accession to the European Union in order to complete a project started on the basis of a finance agreement concluded with the European Investment Bank prior to that accession, the application of the specific criteria laid down by the provisions of the European Investment Bank's public procurement guide which do not comply with the provisions of that directive.

2. Articles 9(5) and 60(a) of Council Regulation (EC) No 1083/2006 of 11 July 2006 laying down general provisions on the European Regional Development Fund, the European Social Fund and the Cohesion Fund and repealing Regulation (EC) No 1260/1999 must be interpreted as meaning that a public procurement procedure such as that at issue in the case in the main proceedings, in which criteria more restrictive than those laid down in Directive 2004/18 have been applied, cannot be considered as having been conducted in complete conformity with EU law and is not eligible for non-reimbursable European funding, granted retrospectively.

Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 must be interpreted as meaning that the use of pre-selection criteria for tenderers that are more restrictive than those provided for by Directive 2004/18 constitutes an 'irregularity', within the meaning of that article, justifying the application of a financial correction pursuant to Article 98 of that regulation, provided that it cannot be ruled out that such use had an impact on the budget of the Funds at issue, which it is for the national court to determine.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Romanian.

EU:C:2017:685

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (First Chamber)

14 September 2017 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Directive 2004/18/EC — Articles 47(2) and 48(3) — Tenderer relying on the capacities of other entities to meet the requirements of the contracting authority — Loss by those entities of the capacities required — National legislation providing for the exclusion of the tenderer from the call for tenders and for the award of the contract to a competitor)

In Case C-223/16,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), made by decision of 3 November 2015, received at the Court on 20 April 2016, in the proceedings

Casertana Costruzioni Srl

v

Ministero delle Infrastrutture e dei Trasporti — Provveditorato Interregionale per le opere pubbliche della Campania e del Molise,

Agenzia Regionale Campana per la Difesa del Suolo — A.R.Ca.Di.S.,

third parties:

Consorzio Stabile Infratech,

W.E.E. Water Environment Energy SpA,

Massimo Fontana,

Studio Tecnico Associato Thinkd,

Claudio Della Rocca,

Nicola Maione,

Vittorio Ciotola,

Fin.Se.Co. SpA,

Edilgen SpA,

Site Srl,

THE COURT (First Chamber), composed of R. Silva de Lapuerta, President of the Chamber, E. Regan, A. Arabadjiev, C.G. Fernlund and S. Rodin (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: N. Wahl,

Registrar: I. Illéssy, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 15 March 2017,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Casertana Costruzioni Srl, by E. Sticchi Damiani and G. Ceceri, avvocati, – Consorzio Stabile Infratech, by L. Lentini and F. Migliarotti, avvocati,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and C. Colelli, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and A. Tokár, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 11 May 2017,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) and Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

2 The request has been made in proceedings brought by Casertana Costruzioni Srl (‘Casertana’) against the Ministero delle Infrastrutture e dei Trasporti — Provveditorato Interregionale per le opere pubbliche della Campania e del Molise (Ministry for Infrastructure and Transport — Interregional Authority for Public Works in Campania and Molise, Italy) and the Agenzia Regionale Campana per la Difesa del Suolo — A.R.Ca.Di.S. (Campania Regional Agency for Soil Protection) regarding the tendering procedure for the executive design, for safety coordination at the planning stage and for the execution of works relating to the project called ‘La Bandiera Blu’ on the Domitian coast.

Legal context

EU law

Directive 2004/18

3 Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 provided:

‘An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.’

4 Article 48(3) of that directive was worded as follows:

‘An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.’

5 Directive 2004/18 was repealed by Directive 2014/24.

Directive 2014/24

6 Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 states as follows:

‘With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. … Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.

The contracting authority shall, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify whether the entities on whose capacity the economic operator intends to rely fulfil the relevant selection criteria and whether there are grounds for exclusion pursuant to Article 57. The contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces an entity which does not meet a relevant selection criterion, or in respect of which there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by the Member State to require that the economic operator substitutes an entity in respect of which there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.

Where an economic operator relies on the capacities of other entities with regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing, the contracting authority may require that the economic operator and those entities be jointly liable for the execution of the contract.

…’

Italian law

7 Article 40(1) and (2) of decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 establishing the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006) provides:

‘1. Entities carrying out public works in any capacity must be duly authorised and must ensure that their activities comply with the principles of quality, professionalism and fairness. To that end, the goods, processes, services and business quality control systems used by those entities shall be subject to a system of certification in accordance with the legislation in force.

2. The regulation set out in Article 5 shall govern the single certification scheme for any entities carrying out, in any capacity, public works for an amount exceeding EUR 150 000, on the basis of the type and amount of the works. The regulation under Article 5 also allows the categories of certification to be periodically reviewed and possible new categories to be provided for.’

8 Article 49 of that decree provides:

‘The tenderer, be it an individual tenderer or a member of a consortium or group within the meaning of Article 34, in a specific tendering procedure for a public works, services or supply contract, may fulfil the requirements relating to possession of economic, financial, technical and organisational capacity, or possession of an SOA certificate [a Certification Body certificate], by relying on the capacity of another entity or the SOA certificate of another entity.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

9 It follows from the order for reference that, in the course of June 2013, the Interregional Authority for Public Works in Campania and Molise, on behalf of the Campania Regional Agency for Soil Protection, launched an open tendering procedure of EU interest for the executive design, for safety coordination at the planning stage and for the execution of works relating to the project ‘La Bandiera Blu’ on the Domitian coast.

10 The tender specifications stated that, in order to take part in the call for tenders, it was necessary to obtain a certificate from the Società Organismo di Attestazione (Certification Body) relating to the qualifications required to provide design and execution services falling within certain categories.

11 Casertana participated in the call for tenders within the framework of an ad hoc tendering consortium under formation, as lead company, and declared that it relied, as regards the qualifications required by Legislative Decree No 163, on those of two auxiliary undertakings, one being Consorzio Stabile GAP.

12 In the course of the procedure and after the end of the stage of admission to the call for tenders, that auxiliary undertaking lost qualification for the required category of services, thus becoming qualified for a lower category of services only.

13 By decision of 8 October 2014, the contract was awarded to the ad hoc tendering consortium led by Consorzio Stabile Infratech, while the consortium led by Casertana was ranked second.

14 Casertana brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (Campania Regional Administrative Court, Italy), contesting several aspects of the final award decision for the contract at issue.

15 Subsequently, the ad hoc tendering consortium to which the contract was awarded brought a counterclaim intended to preclude the action brought by the applicant in the main proceedings, arguing that it should have been excluded from the call for tenders on the ground that its auxiliary undertaking had, in the course of the tendering procedure, lost the classification required for participating in the call for tenders. In defence, the applicant in the main proceedings stated that the loss of rank attributable to the auxiliary undertaking amounted to a case of force majeure and could not result in the automatic exclusion of its consortium.

16 By judgment of 27 March 2015, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (Campania Regional Administrative Court) granted the counterclaim brought by the ad hoc tendering consortium that had been awarded the contract; it upheld the first plea in law, holding that the loss in the course of the tendering procedure of qualification for the classification required of the auxiliary undertaking had the effect of excluding the consortium of the applicant in the main proceedings from that procedure. In addition, that court took the view that the arguments of the applicant in the main proceedings regarding the occurrence of a case of force majeure were irrelevant.

17 On 8 July 2015, Casertana brought an appeal against the judgment of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (Campania Regional Administrative Court). In essence, the applicant in the main proceedings considers that the tenderer, trusting that the auxiliary undertaking had the required qualifications, cannot be called upon to answer for the loss of that qualification as long as that loss cannot be attributed to it. It is impossible to identify a ‘fault’ attributable to the tenderer and that court should, consequently, have recognised the tenderer’s right to replace the auxiliary undertaking, a right which follows from the Court’s case-law, as well as from Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, which expressly lays down that right.

18 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) decided to stay proceedings and refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Do Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive [2004/18], as replaced by Article 63 of Directive [2014/24], preclude national rules which exclude, or may be construed as excluding, any possibility for an economic operator, that is to say a tenderer, of appointing another undertaking to replace the undertaking originally selected as “auxiliary undertaking” where the latter no longer has the capacity to participate or that capacity is diminished, thus resulting in the economic operator being excluded from the tendering procedure for reasons that are neither objectively nor subjectively imputable to it?’

Consideration of the question referred

19 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, read in the light of Article 63 of Directive 2014/24, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which excludes the possibility for an economic operator taking part in a tendering procedure to replace an auxiliary undertaking that has lost required qualifications after the submission of the tender and which results in the automatic exclusion of that operator.

Applicability of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24

20 The referring court raises the question of whether Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 should be interpreted by taking Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 into consideration.

21 In order to answer that question, it must be recalled, as a preliminary point, that, according to settled case-law, the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract. Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time (judgments of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU;C:2014:2067, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited, and of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 83).

22 In the main proceedings, the contract notice was sent to the Official Journal of the European Union on 7 June 2013 and published in the Gazzetta Ufficiale della Repubblica Italiana (Official Gazette of the Italian Republic) on 10 June 2013, whereas Directive 2014/24 was adopted on 26 February 2014 and, in any event, the period for transposing it expired, in accordance with Article 90 thereof, on 18 April 2016.

23 That being so, when the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings was published in June 2013, Directive 2014/24 was not applicable ratione temporis.

24 As for the question whether Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted by taking into consideration the content of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24, which is the provision corresponding inter alia to Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, it must be observed that Article 48(3) is formulated in general terms and does not expressly set out the detailed rules in accordance with which an economic operator may rely on the capacities of other entities in a public procurement procedure (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraphs 87 and 88).

25 On the other hand, Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 now provides that economic operators may ‘only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required’ (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 89) and that ‘the contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces an entity which does not meet a relevant selection criterion, or in respect of which there are compulsory grounds for exclusion’.

26 Although it is true that, as stated, inter alia, in recital 2 thereof, Directive 2014/24 aims to clarify basic notions and concepts to ensure legal certainty, and to incorporate certain aspects of related well-established case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union, the fact remains that Article 63 of that directive introduces substantial amendments as regards the right of an economic operator to rely on the capacities of other entities in the context of public contracts (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 90).

27 Far from preserving the continuity of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 and clarifying its scope, Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 introduces new conditions which were not provided for under the previous legislation (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 91).

28 Accordingly, that provision of Directive 2014/24 cannot be used as a criterion for the interpretation of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 since there is no question in the present case of dispelling a problem of interpretation concerning the content of the latter provision (judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 92).

Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18

29 According to settled case-law, Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 confer on every economic operator the right to rely, for a particular contract, on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it proves to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract (judgment of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 29).

30 Those provisions do not lay down any general prohibition regarding a tenderer's reliance on the capacities of one or more third-party entities in addition to its own capacities in order to fulfil the criteria set by a contracting authority. In addition, the Court has expressly referred to an economic operator's right to use resources belonging to one or more other entities, possibly in addition to its own resources, in order to carry out a contract (judgment of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraphs 30 and 32).

31 Such an interpretation is consistent with the objective pursued by the directives in this area of attaining the widest possible opening up of public contracts to competition to the benefit not only of economic operators but also of contracting authorities. In addition, that interpretation also facilitates the involvement of small and medium-sized undertakings in the contracts procurement market, an aim also pursued by Directive 2004/18, as stated in recital 32 thereof (judgment of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and MannocchiLuigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 34).

32 In the present case, Casertana disputes the assessment of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (Campania Regional Administrative Court) that it was automatically excluded from the procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings because Consorzio Stabile GAP had lost its qualification for classification in the service category concerned.

33 In this regard, it must be recalled that, in accordance with recital 46 and Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, contracting authorities are required to afford economic operators equal, non-discriminatory and transparent treatment (judgments of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 60, and of 4 May 2017, Esaprojekt, C-387/14, EU:C:2017:338, paragraph 35).

34 Thus, first, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination require tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their bids, which therefore implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions. Secondly, the obligation of transparency is intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. That obligation implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or tender specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, secondly, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (judgments of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 61 and the case-law cited, and of 4 May 2017, Esaprojekt, C-387/14, EU:C:2017:338, paragraph 36).

35 Furthermore, it is apparent from the Court's case-law that the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency preclude any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure, which means that, as a general rule, a tender cannot be amended after it has been submitted, whether at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderer concerned. It follows that, where the contracting authority regards a tender as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications, it cannot require the tenderer to provide clarification (judgments of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 62 and the case-law cited, and of 4 May 2017, Esaprojekt, C-387/14, EU:C:2017:338, paragraph 37).

36 However, the Court has explained that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the correction or amplification of details of a tender, on a limited and specific basis, particularly when it is clear that they require mere clarification, or to correct obvious clerical errors (judgments of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 63 and the case-law cited, and of 4 May 2017, Esaprojekt, C-387/14, EU:C:2017:338, paragraph 38).

37 As regards amendments relating to successful tenderers, the Court has already held that the decision authorising the change in composition of the consortium to which the contract was awarded necessitates an amendment of the award decision which may be regarded as substantial if, in the light of the particular features of the procurement procedure in question, it relates to one of the essential elements that were decisive in the adoption of the award decision. In that situation, the relevant measures provided for by national law would have to be taken to remedy that irregularity, which might extend to organisation of a new award procedure (judgment of 8 May 2014, Idrodinamica Spurgo Velox and Others, C-161/13, EU:C:2014:307, paragraph 39 and the case-law cited).

38 In addition, in the field of concession contracts, the Court has held that a change of subcontractor, even if the possibility of a change is provided for in the contract, may in exceptional cases constitute a substantial amendment to one of the essential provisions of a concession contract where the use of one subcontractor rather than another was, in view of the particular characteristics of the services concerned, a decisive factor in concluding the contract (judgment of 13 April 2010, Wall, C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182, paragraph 39).

39 In the main proceedings, as the Advocate General observed in point 47 of his Opinion, the possibility afforded, unpredictably, exclusively to a consortium of undertakings to replace a third-party undertaking which belongs to that consortium and has lost a qualification that is required in order not to be excluded would amount to a substantial change of the tender and the very identity of the consortium. Indeed, such a change of the tender would compel the contracting authority to carry out new checks whilst at the same time granting a competitive advantage to that consortium which might attempt to optimise its tender in order to deal better with its competitors' tenders in the procurement procedure at issue.

40 Such a situation would be contrary to the principle of equal treatment which requires that tenderers be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their bids and which implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions, and would amount to a distortion of healthy and effective competition between undertakings participating in a public procurement procedure.

41 Finally, regarding the force majeure argument relied on by Casertana, it must be noted that, although Directive 2004/18, as has been stated in paragraphs 30 and 31 of the present judgment, enables a tenderer to rely on the capacities of one or more third party entities in addition to its own capacities in order to fulfil the criteria set by a contracting authority, that tenderer remains responsible, in its capacity as the lead undertaking in a consortium of undertakings, for the compliance of those undertakings with the obligations and conditions for participation in the call for tenders laid down by the contracting authority in the documents relating to the procurement procedure at issue.

42 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred is that Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which excludes the possibility for an economic operator taking part in a tendering procedure to replace an auxiliary undertaking that has lost required qualifications after the submission of its tender and which results in the automatic exclusion of that operator.

Costs

43 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which excludes the possibility for an economic operator taking part in a tendering procedure to replace an auxiliary undertaking that has lost required qualifications after the submission of its tender and which results in the automatic exclusion of that operator.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Italian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

WAHL

delivered on 11 May 2017 (1)

Case C-223/16

Casertana Costruzioni Srl

v

Ministero delle Infrastrutture e dei Trasporti — Provveditorato Interregionale per le opere pubbliche della Campania e del Molise

Azienda Regionale Campana per la Difesa del Suolo — A.R.CA.DI.S.

joined parties:

Consorzio Stabile Infratech,

W.E.E. Water Environment Energy SpA,

Massimo Fontana,

Studio Tecnico Associato Thinkd,

Claudio Della Rocca,

Nicola Maione,

Vittorio Ciotola,

FIN.SE.CO SpA,

Edilgen SpA,

Site Srl

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy))

(Public procurement — Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/CE — Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU — Reliance by tenderers on the capacities of other entities — National legislation providing for the automatic exclusion, from the tendering procedure, of a tenderer that relies on the capacities of another entity which, during that procedure, ceases to have the required capacities — Interpretation of national law in conformity with EU law — Principle of proportionality — Force majeure)

1. This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. (2)

2. In essence, the present proceedings concern the question whether those provisions preclude a national rule which provides for the automatic exclusion, from the tendering procedure, of a tenderer that has relied on the capacities of another entity which, during that procedure, ceases to have the required capacities ('the national rule in question').

I. Legal framework

A. EU law

1. Directive 2004/18

3. Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 ('Economic and financial standing'), provides:

> 'An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.'

4. Article 48(3) of the same directive ('Technical and/or professional ability'), states:

> 'An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.'

2. Directive 2014/24

5. Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (3) ('Reliance on the capacities of other entities'), states:

> 'With regard to criteria relating to economic and financial standing as set out pursuant to Article 58(3), and to criteria relating to technical and professional ability as set out pursuant to Article 58(4), an economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. With regard to criteria relating to the educational and professional qualifications as set out in point (f) of Annex XII Part II, or to the relevant professional experience, economic operators may however only rely on the capacities of other entities where the latter will perform the works or services for which these capacities are required. Where an economic operator wants to rely on the capacities of other entities, it shall prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing a commitment by those entities to that effect.
>
> The contracting authority shall, in accordance with Articles 59, 60 and 61, verify whether the entities on whose capacity the economic operator intends to rely fulfil the relevant selection criteria and whether there are grounds for exclusion pursuant to Article 57. The contracting authority shall require that the economic operator replaces an entity which does not meet a relevant selection criterion, or in respect of which there are compulsory grounds for exclusion. The contracting authority may require or may be required by the Member State to require that the economic operator substitutes an entity in respect of which there are non-compulsory grounds for exclusion.
>
> ...'

6. Under Article 90(1) of that directive ('Transposition and transitional provisions'):

‘Member States shall bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with this Directive by 18 April 2016 …’

B. National law

7. Article 40 of Decreto legislativo 12 aprile 2006, n. 163, Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006, Code of public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC), (4) (‘Eligibility to carry out public works’), provides, inter alia, that:

‘1. Entities carrying out public works in any capacity must be duly authorised and must ensure that their activities comply with the principles of quality, professionalism and fairness. To that end, the goods, processes, services and business quality control systems used by those entities shall be subject to a system of certification in accordance with the legislation in force.

2. The regulation set out in Article 5 shall govern the single certification scheme for any entities carrying out, in any capacity, public works for an amount exceeding EUR 150 000, on the basis of the type and amount of the works. The regulation under Article 5 also allows the categories of certification to be periodically reviewed and to provide for possible new categories.’

8. Article 49 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 (‘Reliance on the capacity of other entities’), provides, inter alia, that:

‘The tenderer, be it an individual or a member of a consortium or group within the meaning of Article 34, in a specific tendering procedure for a public works, services or supply contract, may fulfil the requirements relating to possession of economic, financial, technical and organisational capacity, or possession of an SOA certificate [a Certification Body certificate], by relying on the capacity of another entity or the SOA certificate of another entity.’

II. Facts, procedure and the question referred

9. By invitation to tender transmitted to the Official Journal of the European Union on 7 June 2013 and published in the Gazzetta Ufficiale della Repubblica Italiana (the Italian official journal) on 10 June 2013, the Provveditorato Interregionale per le opere pubbliche della Campania e del Molise (Interregional Authority for Public Works in Campania and Molise), launched an open tendering procedure for the award of a contract for the executive design, safety coordination at the planning stage and the execution of works for the project called ‘La Bandiera Blu’ relating to the Domitian coast area, to be awarded on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender. The works concerned mainly sewage and purification infrastructures.

10. Under that procedure, tenderers were required to demonstrate their technical and professional ability by presenting an SOA certificate corresponding to the nature and value of the works covered by the contract works falling under categories OG 6, Class VII (main category), and OS 22, Class VII.

11. The Raggruppamento Temporaneo d’Imprese (an ad hoc tendering consortium, ‘RTI’), formed by Casertana Costruzioni Srl and Qatar Costruzioni Srl, participated in that procedure. In order to meet the requirement concerning the relevant class of SOA certificate, they relied on the SOA certificates of two third-party undertakings. One of those undertakings was the Consorzio Stabile Grandi Attività Progettuali (‘Consorzio Stabile GAP’), which held the SOA certificate as regards category OS 22, Class VII.

12. On completion of the tendering procedure, the contract was awarded to the RTI Consorzio Stabile Infratech — SIBA SpA — Idroeco Srl, while the RTI Casertana Costruzioni — Qatar Costruzioni was ranked second best tenderer.

13. Casertana Costruzioni brought an action against that decision before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Campania (Regional Administrative Court, Campania, Italy, ‘TAR Campania’), alleging that the successful tenderer should have been excluded from the tendering procedure. Consorzio Stabile Infratech joined the proceedings and brought a counterclaim, maintaining that the RTI Casertana Costruzioni — Qatar Costruzioni ought to have been excluded from the tendering procedure because, in the course of that procedure, Consorzio Stabile GAP (the auxiliary undertaking of the principal Qatar Costruzioni), had ceased to be eligible for classification in relation to category OS 22, Class VII. By judgment of 27 March 2015, the TAR Campania upheld the counterclaim brought by Consorzio Stabile Infratech and thus dismissed Casertana Costruzioni's action.

14. Casertana Costruzioni lodged an appeal against the judgment of the TAR Campania before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy). Before that court, Casertana Costruzioni alleged that an automatic exclusion of its RTI during the tendering procedure, on the ground that one of the auxiliaries had lost the required certification, without the possibility of replacing that undertaking, is incompatible with the EU rules on public procurement. In particular, Casertana Costruzioni invoked Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 63 of Directive 2014/24 as well as the principle of proportionality.

15. In those circumstances, having doubts as to the correct interpretation of EU law, the referring court decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

> 'Do Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC, as replaced by Article 63 of Directive 2014/24/EU, preclude national rules which exclude, or may be construed as excluding, any possibility for an economic operator, that is to say a tenderer, of appointing another undertaking to replace the undertaking originally relied upon as "auxiliary undertaking" where the latter no longer has the capacity to participate or that capacity is diminished, thus resulting in the economic operator being excluded from the tendering procedure for reasons that are neither objectively nor subjectively imputable to it?'

16. Written observations have been submitted by Casertana Costruzioni, Consorzio Stabile Infratech, the Italian Government and the Commission. Consorzio Stabile Infratech and the Commission also presented oral argument at the hearing held on 15 March 2017.

III. Analysis

17. A number of preliminary remarks seem appropriate in order to identify the legal issues raised by the present proceedings.

18. Before the referring court, as well as in these proceedings, Casertana Costruzioni essentially argues that the EU rules on public procurement preclude national rules which provide for the automatic exclusion from the tendering procedure of a tenderer that has relied on the capacity of another entity which, in the course of that procedure, has lost the required capacity. In the view of Casertana Costruzioni, EU law requires Member States to permit the substitution of that entity with one which possesses the required capacity.

19. To my mind, the question whether a tenderer should be permitted to replace a third party on whose capacity it has relied cannot be examined in general. Three situations should be distinguished, depending on the point in time at which the loss of the required capacity occurs.

20. However, as regards the tender procedure at issue in the main proceedings, it is not clear exactly when Consorzio Stabile GAP lost the required capacity. This compels me to briefly discuss the three different scenarios below, focusing especially on the one that seems to be the most likely, on the basis of the information contained in the Court's file.

21. First, I would point out that, if a third party loses the required capacity before the time limit for receipt of the bids expires, the tenderer may always withdraw its bid and submit a new one in which it relies on the capacity of another third party. If the tenderer does not do that, however, its bid should be excluded: the offer does not meet the criteria and requirements set out in the contract notice.

22. Accordingly, there is no possibility of replacing a third party which, at the expiry of the time limit for receipt of the bids, does not have the required capacity. Permitting a tenderer to do so would be in clear breach of Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18. Thus, from that angle, the national rule in question does not appear incompatible with the provisions of Directive 2004/18.

23. Second, a different issue is whether a tenderer that has been awarded a contract is entitled to replace a third party on whose capacity it has relied, when that capacity was lost after the award. That is, however, an issue which is not raised in the present proceedings. Indeed, it is undisputed that Consorzio Stabile GAP lost the requisite capacity before the national authorities took any final decision on the award of the contract in question in the main proceedings.

24. A third scenario — which, if my understanding is correct, is the one relevant to the main proceedings — is the situation in which a third party loses the required capacity after the expiry of the time limit for receipt of the bids, but before the public authority makes the final award.

25. In that regard, I take the view that there is no EU rule or general principle of law that requires national authorities to permit tenderers, in that situation, to replace the third party that has lost the required capacity. For the reasons which follow, my view is that, also analysed from that angle, the national rule in question is compatible with EU law.

A. Applicability of Directive 2014/24

26. At the outset, it should be pointed out that the provisions of Directive 2014/24 are, in the main proceedings, not applicable ratione temporis.

27. According to settled case-law, in the field of public procurement the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract. Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time. (5)

28. In the main proceedings, the notice of the procurement procedure in question was published in June 2013. Directive 2014/24 was, however, adopted on 26 February 2014 and the period prescribed for its transposition expired on 18 April 2016, that is to say, after the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to make the present reference for a preliminary ruling.

29. It is, in fact, common ground between the parties that Directive 2014/24 is not applicable in the main proceedings.

B. Article 63 of Directive 2014/24 as a criterion of interpretation

30. Casertana Costruzioni nonetheless takes the view that Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 should be interpreted in the light of Article 63 of Directive 2014/24. It argues that that should be the case, in particular because the latter provision corresponds to Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18.

31. I do not find Casertana Costruzioni's arguments persuasive.

32. In Partner Apelski Dariusz, the Court emphasised that, in principle, an interpretation of an existing legal provision in the light of, for example, a provision not yet in force may be appropriate only where there is a need to '[dispel] a problem of interpretation concerning the content' of the former provision. Conversely, such a method of interpretation is pointless when there is no interpretative doubt concerning the provision in question which needs to be dispelled. (6)

33. That is the precisely the case here. To my mind, there is no need to have recourse to Article 63 of Directive 2014/24 in order to interpret Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 since the latter provisions are, as will be explained at points 40 to 43 below, by no means ambiguous.

34. Be that as it may, in Partner Apelski Dariusz the Court also dismissed an argument very similar to that put forward by Casertana Costruzioni. In that case too, one of the parties contended that Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 ought to be interpreted in the light of Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24.

35. The Court, however, pointed out that ‘Article 63 of [Directive 2014/24] introduces substantial amendments as regards the right of an economic operator to rely on the capacities of other entities in the context of public contracts’. The Court went on to emphasise that ‘far from preserving the continuity of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, and clarifying its scope, Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 introduces new conditions which were not provided for under the previous legislation’. In those circumstances, the Court concluded that Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 could not be used as a criterion for the interpretation of Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18. A different approach would have ‘incorrectly anticipate[d] the application of the new legislation which differs from that laid down by Directive 2004/18, and … would be manifestly contrary to the principle of the legal certainty for economic operators’. (7)

36. The same reasoning is, mutatis mutandis, valid in the present proceedings. In permitting economic operators to replace entities which are to be excluded or which do not meet the relevant criteria, Article 63(1) of Directive 2014/24 manifestly introduces new elements as compared to the rules laid down in Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18.

37. Nor is it possible to argue that the referring court is under an obligation to interpret the old directive in conformity with the new directive pursuant to the Inter-Environnement Wallonie case-law. (8) It is true that, in that line of case-law, the Court has held that, during the period prescribed for transposition of a directive, Member States must refrain from taking any measures liable seriously to compromise the attainment of the result prescribed by that directive. (9)

38. However, that obligation to refrain from taking measures liable seriously to compromise the attainment of the result prescribed by a directive during its period for transposition cannot be understood as requiring the applicable national rules to be interpreted in conformity with that directive. As the Court made clear in Adeneler, ‘the general obligation owed by national courts to interpret domestic law in conformity with [a non-transposed] directive exists only once the period for its transposition has expired’. (10) In doing so, the Court refused to endorse the view of some Advocates General, who had suggested — precisely on the basis of the Inter-Environnement Wallonie case-law — that the obligation to interpret domestic law in conformity with non-transposed directives should apply even before expiry of the period prescribed for their implementation. (11)

39. Accordingly, in the present proceedings, Article 63 of Directive 2014/24 cannot be used as a criterion for the interpretation of Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18.

C. Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18

40. Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 confer on every economic operator the right to rely on, for a particular contract, the capacities of other entities, regardless of the nature of the links it has with them, provided that it proves to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract. (12)

41. However, Directive 2004/18 does not contain any provision which expressly requires Member States to allow tenderers to replace economic entities on whose capabilities they have relied, when those entities are to be excluded or do not meet the relevant criteria. Nor is there any provision, in that directive, that could be read as implicitly containing such a rule or principle.

42. Thus, the possible replacement of third parties on which a tenderer has relied for the purposes of Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 is an aspect which is, in principle, for the Member States to regulate. (13) It should not be forgotten, in this context, that Directive 2004/18 is an instrument of minimum harmonisation, (14) which leaves some regulatory discretion to the Member States for what is not expressly regulated therein.

43. Against that background, one could, however, wonder whether the national rule in question might nevertheless infringe Directive 2004/18, in particular in the light of the general principles of EU law.

44. That question should, to my mind, be answered in the negative. The arguments of Casertana Costruzioni, which invokes primarily the provisions of Directive 2004/18 as well as the principle of proportionality and a claim of force majeure, are unconvincing. On the contrary, it seems to me that such a rule is wholly in keeping with the provisions of Directive 2004/18, as interpreted by the Court.

1. The principles of equal treatment and transparency

45. According to settled case-law, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency preclude any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure. That means, as a general rule, that a tender cannot be amended after it has been submitted, whether at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderer concerned. It follows that, where the contracting authority regards a tender as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications, it cannot require the tenderer to provide clarification. (15)

46. However, the Court has explained that Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the correction or amplification of details of a tender, on a limited and specific basis, particularly when it is clear that they require mere clarification, or to correct obvious clerical errors. (16)

47. To my mind, allowing a tenderer to replace an entity on whose capabilities it sought to rely cannot be regarded either as a clarification of, or as the correction of clerical errors in, its tender. In point of fact, such a change appears to constitute an amendment of an important element of the tender which is, therefore, in principle not permissible.

48. That position has also been expressed in the recent Opinion of Advocate General Bobek in Esaprojekt,in which he approached the issue from the angle of Article 51 of Directive 2004/18. (17) He took the view that ‘a tenderer, in principle, cannot be permitted to demonstrate that it fulfils the technical and professional requirements of a tender by relying on the experience of third parties not referred to prior to the submission deadline’. In his view, by relying on a different third party, the tenderer alters ‘the very identity of the entities carrying out the work, or at least whose experience is being called upon to do so’. That constitutes, in his opinion, ‘a material change affecting a key element of the procedure’. (18)

49. Moreover, he considered that such a change may lead to the contracting authority being required to carry out additional checks and could even affect the choice of candidates being invited to present an offer. Furthermore, he noted that giving a tenderer a second chance to decide on which entities’ capabilities it wishes to rely, ‘could certainly procure it an advantage that would be at odds with the requirement of equal treatment’. (19)

50. I agree. I would also add that upholding Casertana Costruzioni’s argument would essentially amount to creating a judge-made rule that grants the possibility of amending bids at a late stage, a possibility which, in the light of the applicable national and EU rules, was not foreseeable by the other tenderers. As mentioned, that would hardly be reconcilable with the principle of equal treatment. Nor would it be compatible with the obligation of transparency incumbent upon the public authorities. Indeed, neither the Italian nor the EU rules in force at the material time provided for such a possibility. Nor was a specific provision on this point included in the invitation to tender.

51. In that regard, it should be pointed out that the principle of equal treatment ‘requires tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their bids, which therefore implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions’. In turn, the obligation of transparency ‘is intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. It implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the bids submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question.’ (20)

52. That interpretation of Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 is, in my view, borne out by other judgments of the Court.

53. First, in Wall, the Court held that ‘a change of subcontractor, even if the possibility of a change is provided for in the contract, may in exceptional cases constitute [a substantial] amendment to one of the essential provisions of a concession contract where the use of one subcontractor rather than another was, in view of the particular characteristics of the services concerned, a decisive factor in concluding the contract’. (21) In that regard, it is worthy of note that, in that case, the Court was dealing with a service concession contract: a sector not governed by any of the directives by which the EU legislature has regulated the field of public procurement. Therefore, its findings on that point were based only on (now) Articles 49 and 56 TFEU. (22)

54. Interestingly, in his Opinion in the same case, Advocate General Bot emphasised that the change of a subcontractor (despite having been permitted in the contract) could be considered '[to alter] an essential term of the concession and [thus necessitate] a new tender procedure' because, in particular, 'the concession-holder [had] relied on the reputation and technical expertise of the subcontractor when submitting its tender'. (23)

55. The reasoning followed by the Court in Wall is a fortiori applicable in the present case. Indeed, the sector concerned by the main proceedings is governed by a specific directive: at the material time, Directive 2004/18. In addition, the loss of the required capacity occurred not after the award but at an earlier stage.

56. More importantly, as in Wall, in the main proceedings the change of a third party might have altered an essential term of the bid: Casertana Costruzioni needed to rely on the capabilities of that third party in order to be able to qualify for the tender.

57. Second, in Idrodinamica Spurgo Velox and Others,the Court ruled that a 'decision authorising the change in composition of the consortium to which the contract had been awarded necessitates an amendment of the award decision which may be regarded as substantial if, in the light of the particular features of the tender award procedure in question, it alters one of the essential elements that were decisive in the adoption of the award decision. In that situation, all relevant measures provided for by national law would have to be taken to remedy that irregularity, which might extend to a new award procedure.' (24)

58. The logic behind the Court's decision is the same as that in Wall. A tenderer may not alter an essential element of its bid after the submission. To my mind, the capabilities of a third party which allow a tenderer to participate in a tender procedure can hardly be regarded as a non-essential element of a bid. The conclusion might have been different, obviously, if the tenderer had itself the required capabilities or if it had relied, for the same requirement, on more than one entity having those capabilities. (25)

59. It is true that, in Forposta, the Court held that the EU rules on public procurement do not allow, in certain situations, national rules 'requiring the contracting authorities to automatically exclude an economic operator from a procedure for the award of a public contract'. (26) However, in that case, the national rules at issue went against the very wording of Directive 2004/18. (27)

60. Indeed, the legislation reviewed by the Court provided that a situation of 'grave professional misconduct' would lead to the automatic exclusion of an economic operator from a procedure for the award of a public contract in progress, when, owing to circumstances for which that economic operator was responsible, the contracting authority had annulled or terminated a contract with that economic operator in the framework of a previous public contract. That situation was, however, expressly regulated in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18. Thus, by altering the scope of the exclusion laid down in that provision, the Member State in question had exceeded the discretion it enjoyed under that directive.

61. Therefore, Forposta does not support the interpretation of Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 suggested by Casertana Costruzioni.

D. The principle of proportionality

62. Next, Casertana Costruzioni argues that the national rule in question infringes the principle of proportionality. It takes the view that such a rule goes beyond what is necessary to achieve the aims pursued by Directive 2004/18, including that of opening up the public procurement market for all economic operators, regardless of their size.

63. In that regard, it suffices to observe that, if the public procurement rules do pursue the aim of opening up the public procurement market for all economic operators, including small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), (28) that aim is obviously to be reconciled with the other aims pursued by that directive as well as with certain key principles underlying the legal framework which that directive brings about.

64. As explained in points 45 to 51 above, the interpretation of Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 proposed by Casertana Costruzioni does not appear to be consistent with the principles of equal treatment and transparency. Those are two principles of the utmost importance in the context of the EU public procurement rules. (29)

65. In any event, I can hardly see how the principle of proportionality can lend support to the interpretation of Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 put forward by Casertana Costruzioni. To put it very simply, Casertana Costruzioni does not actually propose reading those provisions in the light of that principle. Rather, it refers to that principle as a means of introducing a new rule which does not flow from those provisions: a rule which has, in fact, only been introduced by Directive 2014/24.

E. Force majeure

66. Last, it is only in passing that I shall deal with the argument, put forward by Casertana Costruzioni, concerning a possible situation of force majeure. In essence, that undertaking argues that a tenderer cannot be held responsible for the loss by a third party of the required capacity during the course of the tender process, when that loss is due to events which the tenderer cannot foresee and which are beyond its control.

67. That argument deserves short shrift. The threshold for a case of force majeure — if that principle is at all applicable to the situation at hand, which I doubt — is very high, and clearly not met in the present case.

68. According to settled case-law, force majeure ‘presupposes that the external cause relied on by individuals has consequences which are inexorable and inevitable to the point of making it objectively impossible for the persons concerned to comply with their obligations’. (30)

69. It seems obvious to me that tenderers are — and should be — responsible for the choices they make as regards the entities on whose capabilities they wish to rely. Those choices are business decisions of great significance. A prudent tenderer needs to assess carefully and verify the capabilities of its potential business partners. In relying on them, it makes a commitment vis-à-vis the contracting authority. It cannot be argued that the possibility that a third party might lose the capabilities required for a certain public certification is inexorable or inevitable.

70. As the Court held in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 permit tenderers to rely on the capacities of more than one third-party entity in order to prove that they meet a minimum capacity level. Thus, a prudent tenderer might consider, when submitting a bid, relying on the capabilities of more than one entity in order to avoid the negative consequences that would arise in the event of one of those entities losing the required capacity. (31)

71. A lax attitude towards the possibility for tenderers of changing their business partners would in fact give an unfair advantage to irresponsible and negligent undertakings over prudent and observant ones. Arguably, retaining an undertaking capable of ensuring — not only for the present but also for the future — the necessary solidity, stability and professionalism may be more expensive than retaining an undertaking which does not have those qualities.

72. In the light of the foregoing, I take the view that a national provision such as the national rule in question is not precluded by Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18.

IV. Conclusion

73. In conclusion, I propose that the Court answer the question referred for a preliminary ruling by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) as follows:

> On a proper construction, Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts do not preclude a national rule which automatically excludes, from the tendering procedure, a tenderer that has relied on the capacities of another entity where that entity subsequently loses the required capacities.

1 Original language: English.

2 OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum, OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44.

3 OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65.

4 GURI General Series No 100 of 2 May 2006.

5 See judgment of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited. So far as concerns Directive 2014/24, see judgments of 26 March 2015, Ambisig, C-601/13, EU:C:2015:204, paragraph 24; and of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 31.

6 Judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 92.

7 Ibid., paragraphs 87 to 94.

8 Judgment of 18 December 1997, Inter-Environnement Wallonie, C-129/96, EU:C:1997:628.

9 Ibid., paragraph 45. More recently, see also judgment of 4 May 2016, Commission v Austria, C-346/14, EU:C:2016:322, paragraph 50.

10 Judgment of 4 July 2006, Adeneler and Others, C-212/04, EU:C:2006:443, paragraph 115.

11 See Opinion of Advocate General Jacobs in Hansa Fleisch Ernst Mundt, C-156/91, EU:C:1992:279, point 23; Opinion of Advocate General Tizzano in Mangold, C-144/04, EU:C:2005:420, point 120; and Opinion of Advocate General Kokott in Adeneler and Others, C-212/04, EU:C:2005:654, point 42 et seq.

12 Judgment of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 29.

13 See, to that effect, by analogy, judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 35.

14 Opinion of Advocate General Trstenjak in Commission v Germany, C-160/08, EU:C:2010:67, footnote 43 and the case-law cited.

15 See judgments of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 31; and of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 62.

16 See, inter alia, judgment of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 40.

17 Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 (‘Additional documentation and information’) provides: ‘The contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50.’

---

18 Opinion of Advocate General Bobek in Esaprojekt, C-387/14, EU:C:2016:899, points 29 and 30.

---

19 Ibid., point 31.

---

20 See judgment of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell’Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 44 and the case-law cited.

---

21 Judgment of 13 April 2010, Wall, C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182, paragraph 39.

---

22 Ibid., paragraph 33.

---

23 See Opinion of Advocate General Bot in Wall, C-91/08, EU:C:2009:659, points 63 to 67.

---

24 Judgment of 8 May 2014, Idrodinamica Spurgo Velox and Others, C-161/13, EU:C:2014:307, paragraph 39.

---

25 See, by analogy, judgment of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraphs 43 and 44.

---

26 Judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact, C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801, paragraph 41.

---

27 Ibid., paragraphs 37 to 40.

---

28 See, for example, Opinion of Advocate General Jääskinen in Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:130, point 33.

---

29 See, for example, Article 2 of Directive 2004/18.

---

30 See, inter alia, judgment of 17 October 2013, Billerud Karlsborg and Billerud Skärblacka, C-203/12, EU:C:2013:664, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited.

---

31 Judgment of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraphs 30 to 32.

EU:C:2018:194

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Grand Chamber)

20 March 2018 (*)

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations — Directives 92/50/EEC and 2004/18/EC — Public service contracts — State printing office — Production of identity documents and other official documents — Award of contracts to an undertaking governed by private law without a procurement procedure first being conducted — Special security measures — Protection of the essential interests of the Member States)

In Case C-187/16,

ACTION for failure to fulfil obligations under Article 258 TFEU, brought on 4 April 2016, European Commission, represented by A. Tokár and B.-R. Killmann, acting as Agents, applicant,

v

Republic of Austria, represented by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent, defendant,

THE COURT (Grand Chamber), composed of K. Lenaerts, President, A. Tizzano, Vice-President, L. Bay Larsen (Rapporteur), T. von Danwitz, J.L. da Cruz Vilaça, A. Rosas and J. Malenovský, Presidents of Chambers, E. Juhász, A. Borg Barthet, D. Šváby, M. Berger, A. Prechal, C. Lycourgos, M. Vilaras and E. Regan, Judges, Advocate General: J. Kokott,

Registrar: I. Illéssy, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 7 June 2017, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 20 July 2017,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By its application, the European Commission asks the Court to declare that, first, by awarding service contracts for the production of documents such as chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, fireworks display permits, credit card-sized driving licences and credit card-sized vehicle registration certificates directly to Österreichische Staatsdruckerei GmbH (‘ÖS’) and, second, by maintaining national provisions which require contracting authorities to award those service contracts directly to that company, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, Article 4 and Article 8 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), read in conjunction with Articles 11 to 37 of that directive, and Article 14 and Article 20 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), read in conjunction with Articles 23 to 55 of that directive.

Legal context

EU law

2 For the award of public contracts which have as their object ‘publishing and printing services on a fee or contract basis’, both Directive 92/50 and Directive 2004/18 require the conduct of award procedures in accordance with EU law.

Directive 92/50

3 The 14th recital of Directive 92/50 is worded as follows:

‘Whereas … in the field of services, the same derogations as in [Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682)] and [Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1)] should apply as regards State security or secrecy and the priority of other procurement rules such as those pursuant to international agreements, those concerning the stationing of troops, or the rules of international organisations’.

4 Article 1(a) of that directive provides, inter alia, that ‘public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority’.

5 Article 3(1) of that directive states:

‘In awarding public service contracts … contracting authorities shall apply procedures adapted to the provisions of this Directive.’

6 Article 4(2) of that directive provides:

‘This Directive shall not apply to services which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member State concerned or when the protection of the basic interests of that State’s security so requires.’

7 Article 8 of Directive 92/50 provides:

‘Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.’

8 Titles III to VI contain Articles 11 to 37 of that directive.

9 Annex I A to that directive covers inter alia, in Category No 15, ‘Publishing and printing services on a fee or contract basis’.

Directive 2004/18

10 Article 14 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Secret contracts and contracts requiring special security measures’, provides:

‘This Directive shall not apply to public contracts when they are declared to be secret, when their performance must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member State concerned, or when the protection of the essential interests of that Member State so requires.’

11 Article 20 of that directive, entitled ‘Service contracts listed in Annex II A’, provides:

‘Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II A shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 23 to 55.’

12 That annex covers inter alia, in Category No 15, ‘Publishing and printing services on a fee or contract basis’.

Regulation (EC) No 2252/2004

13 In accordance with Article 3(2) of Council Regulation (EC) No 2252/2004 of 13 December 2004 on standards for security features and biometrics in passports and travel documents issued by Member States (OJ 2004 L 385, p. 1):

‘Each Member State shall designate one body having responsibility for printing passports and travel documents. It shall communicate the name of that body to the Commission and the other Member States. The same body may be designated by two or more Member States. Each Member State shall be entitled to change its designated body. It shall inform the Commission and the other Member States accordingly.’

Austrian law

The StDrG

14 Paragraph 1a of the Bundesgesetz zur Neuordnung der Rechtsverhältnisse der Österreichischen Staatsdruckerei (Federal law on the reorganisation of the legal relationships of the ÖS, Bundesgesetzblatt I, 1/1997, ‘the StDrG’) is worded as follows:

‘… The company … shall trade under the name “Österreichische Staatsdruckerei GmbH”; it shall undertake the manufacture of print products for the federal offices in the manufacturing process for which secrecy or compliance with security rules (security printing) is necessary. …’

15 Paragraph 2(2) of the StDrG provides:

‘The company shall undertake, in any event, the following tasks:

> 1. The manufacture of print products for the federal offices in the manufacturing process for which secrecy or compliance with security rules (security printing) is necessary …’

16 Paragraph 2(3) of the StDrG provides:

‘The federal bodies shall entrust [ÖS] exclusively … with the manufacture of the products referred to in Paragraph 2(2)(1) … unless, for factual or legal reasons, [that] company is unable duly to carry out these tasks at a reasonable price, or if the product in question is offered to a federal body by a third party, with the same supply and contractual conditions, at a lower price. …’

17 Under the heading ‘Supervision of security printing’, Paragraph 6(1) of the StDrG provides that business and work processes relating to the manufacture, processing and storage of security printing products are subject to supervision by the federal minister responsible for the security printing product in question.

18 In accordance with Paragraph 6(2) of the StDrG, ÖS is required to take all security measures in connection with the manufacture, processing and storage of security printing products that are necessary to prevent abuse.

19 Pursuant to Paragraph 6(3) of that law, ÖS must grant the federal minister responsible for the security printing product in question access to its business premises and an opportunity to inspect the relevant business records in so far as is necessary for the purposes of supervision.

The ministerial regulation relating to passports

20 The production of chip passports, which include service passports and diplomatic passports, of identity cards and of emergency passports is governed by the Verordnung der Bundesministerin für Inneres über die Gestaltung der Reisepässe und Passersätze (Regulation of the Federal Minister for the Interior on the design of passports and passport substitutes, Bundesgesetzblatt 861/1995, ‘the ministerial regulation relating to passports’).

21 Annexes A, D and E to the ministerial regulation relating to passports contain specimens of the passports, service passports and diplomatic passports to be produced, which contain on their last page the reference ‘PRINT by ÖSD’.

22 As regards, more specifically, identity cards, Paragraph 5 of the ministerial regulation relating to passports provides for their protection against counterfeiting or forgery.

23 It thus follows from an application of Paragraph 2(3) of the StDrG in conjunction with the ministerial regulation relating to passports that, subject to the exceptions set out in that provision, chip passports, identity passports and emergency passports must be produced by ÖS.

The ministerial regulation relating to residence permits

24 Pursuant to Paragraph 3(3), Paragraph 10a(2) and Paragraph 10c(2) of the Verordnung der Bundesministerin für Inneres zur Durchführung des Niederlassungs- und Aufenthaltsgesetzes (Regulation of the Federal Minister for the Interior implementing the Law on settlement and residence, Bundesgesetzblatt II, 451/2005), registration certificates, documents certifying permanent residence, certificates attesting submission of an application and documents certifying lawful residence must be produced exclusively by ÖS.

The ministerial regulation relating to credit card-sized driving licences

25 The format of credit card-sized driving licences is governed by the Verordnung des Bundesministers für Wissenschaft und Verkehr über die Durchführung des Führerscheingesetzes (Regulation of the Federal Minister for Science and Transport on the implementation of the Law on driving licences, Bundesgesetzblatt II, 320/1997).

26 In accordance with Paragraph 1(2) of that ministerial regulation, driving licences must contain features protecting them against counterfeiting or forgery.

27 That provision also states that credit card-sized driving licences can be produced only by a service provider designated by the competent federal minister.

28 In view of Paragraph 2(3) of the StDrG, subject to the exceptions set out in that provision, that service provider can only be ÖS.

The ministerial regulation relating to credit card-sized vehicle registration certificates

29 The format of credit card-sized vehicle registration certificates is governed by the Verordnung des Bundesministers für Wissenschaft und Verkehr, mit der Bestimmungen über die Einrichtung von Zulassungsstellen festgelegt werden (Regulation of the Federal Minister for Science and Transport on the establishment of vehicle registration offices, Bundesgesetzblatt II, 464/1998).

30 Paragraph 13(1a) of that ministerial regulation provides for features protecting those vehicle registration certificates against counterfeiting or forgery.

31 Paragraph 13(3) of that ministerial regulation states that vehicle registration certificates can be produced only by a service provider designated by the competent federal minister.

32 In view of Paragraph 2(3) of the StDrG, subject to the exceptions set out in that provision, that service provider can only be ÖS.

The ministerial regulation relating to fireworks display permits

33 In accordance with Paragraph 8 of the Verordnung der Bundesministerin für Inneres über die Durchführung des Pyrotechnikgesetzes 2010 (Regulation of the Federal Minister for the Interior on the implementation of the Law on fireworks 2010, Bundesgesetzblatt II, 499/2009), the application form for a fireworks display permit must conform to the specimen in Annex II to that regulation. That specimen requires the application to be addressed to ÖS.

34 Paragraph 9 of that regulation provides for the protection of fireworks display permits against counterfeiting or forgery.

Pre-litigation procedure

35 By its letter of formal notice dated 6 April 2011, the Commission made the Republic of Austria aware of its doubts as to the compatibility with the FEU Treaty and with Directives 92/50 and 2004/18 of the direct award to ÖS of certain public service contracts relating to the printing of official documents, namely, chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, credit card-sized driving licences, paper and credit card-sized vehicle registration certificates, fireworks display permits, boatmasters' certificates, security document forms, labels for narcotic substances and moped licences.

36 In that regard, the Commission specified that ÖS, a company governed by private law, provided, by the printing of those documents, a supply of services which should have been awarded in accordance with Directive 92/50 or Directive 2004/18, to the extent that the supply falls within the scope of one of those directives, or in conformity with the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services as enshrined in Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, to the extent that it does not fall within the scope of those directives.

37 In its reply of 7 June 2011, the Republic of Austria argued that the service contracts in question protect its essential security interests and consequently do not fall within the scope of either the FEU Treaty or Directives 92/50 and 2004/18. It added that the direct award to ÖS alone of the printing contracts for the documents in question was justified by the need to protect secret information, to safeguard the authenticity and veracity of those documents, to ensure the provision of those documents and to guarantee the protection of sensitive data.

38 By letters of 17 July 2012 and 28 March 2013, the Republic of Austria supplemented its reply to the letter of formal notice.

39 Taking the view that the responses provided by that Member State were unsatisfactory, the Commission, by letter of 11 July 2014, sent it a reasoned opinion. In that reasoned opinion, the Commission stated that the Republic of Austria had not proved that the direct award to ÖS of the printing contracts for chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, credit card-sized driving licences, credit card-sized vehicle registration certificates and fireworks display permits was justified by the protection of its security interests, and that it was possible to organise a public call for tenders in such a way that only undertakings which specialised in the printing of documents subject to special security requirements and were supervised accordingly could be considered.

40 On the other hand, the Commission withdrew its complaints in relation to moped licences, paper vehicle registration certificates, boatmasters' certificates, security document forms and labels for narcotic substances, either because those documents had been abolished or because their production was put out to tender.

41 The Republic of Austria responded to the reasoned opinion by letter of 10 September 2014. In essence, that Member State again relied on national security interests and emphasised that the performance of the printing contracts in question was closely linked to public order and the institutional operation of that State. It argued in particular that the observance of security requirements could be enforced against undertakings other than ÖS only by means of civil law, whereas, by law, the Austrian public authorities enjoyed special supervisory powers in relation to ÖS.

42 As regards the printing contracts for fireworks display permits, the Republic of Austria stated that the value of those contracts is so small that their performance is not of interest to other undertakings, with the result that the award of those contracts does not fall within the scope of the freedoms enshrined in the FEU Treaty.

43 Since it was not satisfied with the responses provided by the Republic of Austria, the Commission brought the present action.

The action

44 The action brought by the Commission relates to, first, printing service contracts for chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, credit card-sized driving licences and credit card-sized vehicle registration certificates and, second, a printing service contract for fireworks display permits.

The printing service contracts for chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, credit card-sized driving licences and credit card-sized vehicle registration certificates

Arguments of the parties

45 The Commission notes that, since the estimated value of the contracts in question exceeds the thresholds applicable pursuant to Directives 92/50 and 2004/18, those contracts fall within the material scope of those directives. Consequently, in relation to those contracts, the procurement procedures provided for in Article 8 of Directive 92/50, read in conjunction with Articles 11 to 37 of that directive, and in Article 20 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Articles 23 to 55 of that directive, should have been applied by the Republic of Austria.

46 The Commission argues, in essence, that the derogations laid down in Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18, relied on by the Republic of Austria, must be interpreted strictly.

47 Furthermore, those articles cannot confer on the Member States the power to derogate from the provisions of the FEU Treaty or from Directives 92/50 and 2004/18 by simply invoking their essential security interests.

48 Accordingly, the mere assertion by the Republic of Austria that the service contracts in question require special security measures or that a derogation from the provisions of EU law is necessary to protect the essential security interests of that Member State is insufficient to show the existence of circumstances justifying the application of Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 or Article 14 of Directive 2004/18.

49 Furthermore, the Commission states that ÖS is a limited liability company governed by private law, the sole shareholder of which is Österreichische Staatsdruckerei Holding AG whose shares are listed on the stock market and held by private individuals. Moreover, unlike the earlier legislative provisions, the StDrG no longer contains any special mechanism for State supervision. At the hearing, the Commission explained in that regard that the Austrian authorities are vested with supervisory powers which are stipulated in a contract entered into with ÖS.

50 According to the Commission, the Republic of Austria does not show that a call for tenders is completely impossible on the basis that it would seriously undermine compliance with the obligation of confidentiality and the security and supervision arrangements. Whilst the need to safeguard the authenticity and veracity of documents serving as proof of the identity of individuals, to protect personal data, and to guarantee supply for the purposes of the printing of the documents concerned is a matter of public interest, such an interest, however, does not systematically correspond to an essential security interest.

51 As regards the need for a guaranteed supply of official documents, pleaded by the Republic of Austria, the Commission considers that such a guarantee is not a security interest and may be achieved, where appropriate, by entering into a number of framework contracts.

52 The Commission accepts that a Member State may take measures to avoid the forgery of official documents. Nevertheless, there is nothing to indicate that those objectives would be undermined if the printing of documents were assigned to other printing companies, even those located in other Member States, since the confidentiality of the processed data necessary for the printing of those documents may be guaranteed by an obligation of confidentiality on the part of the undertakings taking part in an award procedure.

53 The centralised performance of the contracts in question can be achieved by making the printing of all secure documents subject to a call for tenders since the opportunities for supervision by the Austrian authorities can be included in the contract entered into with the successful undertaking.

54 As regards confidence in the undertaking carrying out the printing service in relation to residence permits, the Commission contends that the argument put forward by the Republic of Austria cannot be accepted since the Austrian authorities can also award printing contracts for secure documents to undertakings other than ÖS, in particular when the latter is not in a position to perform those contracts.

55 The Republic of Austria disputes the claim that it has failed to fulfil its obligations. It argues that, pursuant to Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18, the contracts in question do not fall within the scope of those directives. It is entitled to protect its essential security interests and to attach special security measures to the performance of the contracts in question, in accordance with the legal and administrative provisions in force in Austria.

56 At the hearing, the Republic of Austria stated that the derogations laid down in Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18 apply irrespective of the derogation laid down in Article 346(1)(a) TFEU.

57 It notes, in essence, that security policy is an essential element of State sovereignty and that it is for the Member States to define their essential security interests and to determine whether security measures are necessary, the Member States having wide discretion in that regard.

58 The Republic of Austria highlights certain aspects of its essential interests in the field of public security which are important when printing secure documents. In that regard, it is necessary, according to it, first, to safeguard the authenticity and veracity of the documents serving to prove the identity of a person since identity documents are documents which are closely linked to the public order and institutional operation of the State. Next, it is necessary to ensure the protection of the sensitive personal data. Lastly, it is also a question of ensuring security of supply.

59 In the first place, as regards the need to safeguard the authenticity and veracity of identity documents, the Republic of Austria argues that that imperative requires a high technical level of security to be set in order to avoid any risk of forgeries, in particular in the context of the fight against terrorism and crime.

60 In the second place, as regards the protection of sensitive personal data, since identity documents contain such information, in particular biometric data, the protection of those documents requires high security requirements. In that regard, the Republic of Austria disputes the Commission’s argument that only individual interests are at issue here since, according to that Member State, interference with such data should, on the contrary, be regarded as being, in particular in the context of the fight against terrorism, a threat to internal public security and accordingly should be prevented by all possible means.

61 In the third place, the quick receipt of the official documents in question requires the State to have a guaranteed supply. If undertakings other than ÖS were entrusted with the printing of identity documents that would have a lasting negative effect on the Republic of Austria’s security strategy since, if it were impossible to provide the number of passports necessary, provisional passports would admittedly be printed, but in less secure conditions.

62 The Republic of Austria submits that, in a context of terrorist threats and activity, only a printing company under the effective supervision of the State must be empowered to produce identity documents.

63 The Republic of Austria notes that the centralisation of all relevant supplies in the field of security in the hands of a single supplier also constitutes an essential element of security strategy. In that regard, it argues that it is clear from Article 3(2) of Regulation No 2252/2004 and, more specifically, from the requirement to designate ‘one body having responsibility for printing passports and travel documents’, that such documents cannot be manufactured by more than one body. Furthermore, in order to avoid sensitive security information from being spread, a centralisation of printing for the documents in question is an appropriate measure.

64 According to the Republic of Austria, the strategy that it pursues, which consists in awarding the contracts at issue to a single contractor having its production site or sites in Austria, seeks, in the first place, to prevent knowledge of the security measures being spread among other contractors, whether they operate in Austria or in another Member State.

65 In the second place, such an award has the objective of more effective supervision of that printing company by the national authorities in the exercise of their administrative supervisory powers. The Republic of Austria argues that supervision implemented judicially, which would result in penalties for a failure to comply with the security conditions under contractual provisions following potentially protracted proceedings, would not be as effective as State supervision.

66 With regard to the Commission's complaint that it is for the Republic of Austria to show that a call for tenders is completely impossible, that Member State argues that neither Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 nor Article 14 of Directive 2004/18 contains such a condition.

67 Furthermore, the Republic of Austria did not merely invoke interests relating to its security, but identified the interests to be protected and the measures taken for the protection of those interests.

68 Lastly, at the hearing, the Republic of Austria argued that the contracts in question cannot be performed in the context of a call for tenders since undertakings established in other Member States cannot entirely escape intervention by the authorities of their respective States and those undertakings are sometimes required to cooperate with those authorities or the intelligence services of those States, which would be the case even if they performed the contracts from an establishment located in Austria, with the result that sensitive information would be at risk of being disclosed.

Findings of the Court

69 It should be noted at the outset that, as is clear from the case file before the Court, since the first contracts awarded to ÖS which are the subject matter of the present action date from 2004, those contracts may fall within the scope of Directive 92/50, while the contracts awarded to that undertaking between 31 January 2006 and 12 September 2014, when the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion expired, may fall within the scope of Directive 2004/18, the latter directive having repealed and replaced the relevant provisions of Directive 92/50 from 31 January 2006.

70 Moreover, first, the contracts in question are contracts which have as their object services referred to in Annex I A to Directive 92/50 and Annex II A to Directive 2004/18 and, more specifically, publishing and printing services on a fee or contract basis. Second, it is agreed between the parties that the estimated value of those contracts exceeds the thresholds for the application of those directives.

71 Pursuant to Article 8 of Directive 92/50, read in conjunction with Articles 11 to 37 of that directive, and Article 20 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Articles 23 to 55 of that directive, given that the printing of the documents in question constitutes a publishing and printing service on a fee or contract basis, that service is, in principle, subject to the obligation to conduct a procurement procedure in accordance with the requirements of those articles.

72 However, first, under Article 346(1)(a) TFEU, no Member State is to be obliged to supply information the disclosure of which it considers to be contrary to its essential security interests. As the Advocate General observed in point 42 of her Opinion, that provision, given the general nature of its wording, is intended to apply, inter alia, in the field of non-military public contracts, such as the printing contracts in question in the present action.

73 Second, it is clear from Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18, which are drafted in almost identical terms, that those directives do not apply to services when, inter alia, their execution must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member State concerned or when the protection of that Member State's essential interests so requires.

74 Those derogations are relied on in the present proceedings by the Republic of Austria in order to justify the direct award to ÖS of the printing service contracts in question.

75 In that regard, it should be noted that, as the Republic of Austria argues, it is for the Member States to define their essential security interests and, in the present case, for the Austrian authorities to define the security measures necessary for the protection of the public security of that Member State in the context of the printing of identity documents and other official documents such as those at issue in the present case (see, by analogy, judgment of 16 October 2003, Commission v Belgium, C-252/01, EU:C:2003:547, paragraph 30).

76 Nevertheless, it should also be noted that, as the Court has previously held, measures adopted by the Member States in connection with the legitimate requirements of national interest are not excluded in their entirety from the application of EU law solely because they are taken, inter alia, in the interests of public security (see, to that effect, judgment of 8 April 2008, Commission v Italy, C-337/05, EU:C:2008:203, paragraph 42 and the case-law cited).

77 Moreover, the derogations at issue in the present action must, in accordance with the settled case-law relating to derogations from fundamental freedoms, be interpreted strictly (see, by analogy, as regards Article 346(1)(b) TFEU, judgment of 7 June 2012, Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi, C-615/10, EU:C:2012:324, paragraph 35 and the case-law cited).

78 Furthermore, even though Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18, upon which the Republic of Austria principally relies, afford the Member States discretion in deciding the measures considered to be necessary for the protection of their essential security interests, those articles cannot, however, be construed as conferring on Member States the power to derogate from the provisions of the FEU Treaty simply by invoking those interests. A Member State which wishes to avail itself of those derogations must show that such derogation is necessary in order to protect its essential security interests. Such a requirement also applies to the extent that that Member State relies, in addition, on Article 346(1)(a) TFEU (see, by analogy, judgment of 4 September 2014, Schiebel Aircraft, C-474/12, EU:C:2014:2139, paragraph 34).

79 Accordingly, a Member State which wishes to avail itself of those derogations must establish that the protection of such interests could not have been attained within a competitive tendering procedure as provided for by Directives 92/50 and 2004/18 (see, by analogy, judgment of 8 April 2008, Commission v Italy, C-337/05, EU:C:2008:203, paragraph 53).

80 In the present case, although the Republic of Austria has admittedly identified the essential security interests which it considers must be protected and the guarantees inherent in the protection of those interests, it is however necessary to verify, having regard to what is noted in paragraph 75 and 76 above, whether that Member State has shown that the objectives it pursues could not have been attained within a competitive tendering procedure as provided for by those two directives.

81 In that regard, the Republic of Austria submits, in the first place, that the protection of essential national security interests necessitates the centralised performance of the printing contracts for official documents by means of their award to a single undertaking.

82 While accepting that the centralised performance of the contracts in question could be regarded, for the reasons put forward by the Republic of Austria, as a means of protecting its essential national security interests, it should be noted that compliance with the procurement procedures laid down, respectively, in Article 8 of Directive 92/50, read in conjunction with Articles 11 to 37 of that directive, and in Article 20 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Articles 23 to 55 of that directive, does not preclude the performance of the contracts in question from being entrusted to a single operator.

83 Although, as the Republic of Austria notes, the Member States have an obligation to comply with the requirements of Article 3(2) of Regulation No 2252/2004, which requires them to designate a single body having responsibility for printing passports and travel documents, that provision confines itself to laying down an obligation to designate such a single body, without ruling out in any way a procurement procedure first being conducted for the purposes of such designation.

84 As regards, in the second place, the Republic of Austria's argument alleging the need for the Austrian authorities to be able to ensure, in the exercise of the powers conferred on them by Paragraph 6(3) of the StDrG, effective administrative supervision of a single contractor having its production and storage premises in the territory of that Member State, in the present case supervision of ÖS, it should be noted that, although, admittedly, the contractor entrusted with performance of the printing contract in question must meet the security requirements in order to ensure the confidentiality of the information to be protected, the Republic of Austria does not show that the administrative supervision of ÖS that may be carried out by the Austrian authorities pursuant to that provision is the only means of ensuring that confidentiality and that it is necessary, to that end, to dispense with the application of the provisions relating to public procurement laid down by Directives 92/50 and 2004/18.

85 In that regard, it does not appear that such administrative supervision could not be exercised over undertakings established in Austria other than ÖS. Furthermore, the Republic of Austria does not show that verification of respect for the confidentiality of the information which would be communicated for the printing of the official documents at issue would be less well safeguarded if that printing were awarded, in the context of a tendering procedure, to other undertakings having confidentiality and security arrangements imposed on them under a contractual mechanism subject to the rules of private law, whether those undertakings are established in Austria or in other Member States.

86 In particular, it would be possible to require the contractual partner chosen in the context of a procurement procedure to accept security controls, visits or inspections at the premises of that undertaking, regardless of whether the undertaking is established in Austria or in another Member State, or to comply with technical requirements as regards confidentiality, even particularly high ones, in the performance of the contracts in question.

87 As regards, in the third place, the requirement, relied on by the Republic of Austria, to ensure guaranteed provision, it should be noted that, whilst the official documents in question are closely linked to public order and the institutional operation of the State, which require that guaranteed provision be ensured, that Member State has, however, failed to show that the supposed objective could not be ensured in the context of a call for tenders and that such guaranteed provision would be jeopardised if the printing of those documents were entrusted to other undertakings, including, as the case may be, undertakings established in other Member States.

88 As regards, in the fourth place, the need to guarantee the trustworthiness of the successful tenderer, although the Member States need to be able to satisfy themselves that, for the award of public contracts such as those at issue in the present case, only reliable undertakings are awarded those contracts within the framework of a system which ensures compliance with special secrecy and security standards as regards the printing of the documents in question, the Republic of Austria has not, however, established that the confidentiality of the data communicated could not be sufficiently guaranteed if the printing of those documents were awarded to an undertaking other than ÖS following a tendering procedure.

89 In that regard, it should be noted that the Court has held that the requirement to impose an obligation of confidentiality does not in itself prevent the use of a competitive tendering procedure for the award of a contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 8 April 2008, Commission v Italy, C-337/05, EU:C:2008:203, paragraph 52).

90 Furthermore, the Court has also held that the confidential nature of data can be protected by a duty of secrecy, without it being necessary to contravene public procurement procedures (see, by analogy, judgment of 5 December 1989, Commission v Italy, C-3/88, EU:C:1989:606, paragraph 15).

91 As the Advocate General noted in point 68 of her Opinion, there is nothing to prevent the contracting authority from imposing particularly high requirements for the suitability and reliability of contractors, formulating tender specifications and service contracts accordingly and requiring the necessary proof from potential candidates.

92 In that regard, the Republic of Austria argued at the hearing that there is a risk that sensitive information will be disclosed since undertakings established outside that Member State cannot entirely escape intervention by the authorities of their respective Member States, inasmuch as, in some cases, they are themselves required, pursuant to the laws applicable in those States, to cooperate with those authorities or with the intelligence services of those States, even when performing public contracts from an establishment located in Austria.

93 It must, however, be pointed out that it is permissible for the Austrian authorities to insert into the conditions governing calls for tenders for the award of the contracts in question clauses obliging the successful tenderer to maintain general confidentiality, and to stipulate that a candidate undertaking which is not in a position, due in particular to the law of its Member State, to provide sufficient guarantees as regards compliance with that obligation vis-à-vis the authorities of that State will be excluded from the award procedure. It is also permissible for the Austrian authorities to provide for the application of penalties against the successful tenderer, in particular contractual penalties, if there is a failure to comply with such an obligation during the performance of the contract in question.

94 In that regard, the Republic of Austria has not shown that the objective of preventing the disclosure of sensitive information relating to the production of the official documents in question could not have been achieved within a competitive tendering procedure as provided for, respectively, in Article 8 of Directive 92/50, read in conjunction with Articles 11 to 37 of that directive, and in Article 20 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Articles 23 to 55 of that directive.

95 It follows that the failure to comply with the procurement procedures laid down by those directives is disproportionate having regard to that objective.

96 In the light of all of the foregoing, Article 346(1)(a) TFEU, Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18 cannot be effectively relied on by the Republic of Austria in order to justify the failure to comply with the procurement procedures laid down by those two directives.

The printing service contract for fireworks display permits

Arguments of the parties

97 The Commission argues that, in so far as the value of the contract for producing fireworks display permits does not exceed the thresholds laid down by those directives, it must nonetheless be entered into in conformity with the principles laid down by the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services.

98 According to the Commission, the general principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, from which the obligation of transparency arises, require that that contract be the subject of a notice with a sufficient degree of publicity.

99 The Commission explains that, even if the value of a contract for the production of fireworks display permits seems relatively low, such a contract could, taking account of its technical characteristics, attract interest from undertakings in other Member States. There is therefore certain cross-border interest since the market of undertakings which produce secure identity documents is specialised, limited and internationalised and geographic proximity does not constitute a requirement for the performance of a contract for the production of secure documents.

100 Furthermore, the Commission highlights the fact that ÖS itself has been entrusted by a number of Member States with the printing of visas and passports, which is a strong indication of the existence of certain cross-border interest.

101 The Republic of Austria contends that, as regards a contract with a value below the threshold laid down by EU law, the fundamental principles relied on by the Commission do not apply. In view of the low value of that contract, certain cross-border interest is not established by the Commission.

102 In addition, the fact that ÖS manufactures secure documents for other Member States does not show that there is certain cross-border interest in the printing service contracts relating to fireworks display permits.

Findings of the Court

103 It is agreed between the parties that the estimated value of the contract for the production of fireworks display permits is EUR 56 000, namely, an amount which is well below the thresholds laid down by Directives 92/50 and 2004/18 for public service contracts. Accordingly, there was no obligation flowing from those directives to conduct a procurement procedure.

104 Nonetheless, according to settled case-law, the award of contracts which, in view of their value, do not fall within the scope of the directives on the award of public contracts is subject to the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and the consequent obligation of transparency, provided that those contracts have certain cross-border interest (judgment of 6 October 2016, Tecnoedi Costruzioni, C-318/15, EU:C:2016:747, paragraph 19 and the case-law cited).

105 In that regard, it should be noted that it is for the Commission to establish that the contract in question has certain interest for an undertaking located in a Member State other than that of the contracting authority in question, and the Commission is unable to rely on any presumption for that purpose (see, to that effect, judgment of 13 November 2007, Commission v Ireland, C-507/03, EU:C:2007:676, paragraphs 32 and 33 and the case-law cited).

106 With regard to the objective criteria which may indicate certain cross-border interest, the Court has previously held that such criteria may be, inter alia, the fact that the contract in question is for a significant amount, in conjunction with the place where the work is to be carried out or the technical characteristics of the contract and the specific characteristics of the products concerned (see, to that effect, judgment of 6 October 2016, Tecnoedi Costruzioni, C-318/15, EU:C:2016:747, paragraph 20 and the case-law cited).

107 Whilst, as the Commission argued, the existence of such cross-border interest cannot be determined solely on the basis of the value of the contract, an overall assessment of other criteria and of all the relevant circumstances of the case being necessary, it should be noted that the contract for the production of fireworks display permits is distinguished not only by its relatively low value but also by its very technical nature, furthermore requiring compliance with special security measures with the costs that the implementation of such measures entails.

108 The argument put forward by the Commission, that the fact that ÖS has been entrusted by a number of foreign States with the printing of visas and passports is a strong indication of the existence of certain cross-border interest, is irrelevant with regard to the printing of fireworks display permits.

109 In those circumstances, the information provided by the Commission is not sufficient to show that that contract had certain cross-border interest.

110 Since the Commission has failed to prove its contentions, its action must be dismissed inasmuch as it relates to the printing service contract for the fireworks display permits in question.

111 In the light of all of the foregoing, it must be held that, first, by having awarded, without an EU-wide call for tenders, service contracts for the production of chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, credit card-sized driving licences and credit card-sized vehicle registration certificates directly to ÖS and, second, by maintaining national provisions which require contracting authorities to award those service contracts directly to that company, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 4(2) and Article 8 of Directive 92/50, read in conjunction with Articles 11 to 37 of that directive, and Article 14 and Article 20 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Articles 23 to 55 of that directive.

112 The action must be dismissed as to the remainder.

Costs

113 Under Article 138(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings.

114 In the present case, the Commission and the Republic of Austria applied, respectively, for the other party to be ordered to pay the costs.

115 Under Article 138(3) of the Rules of Procedure, if it appears justified in the circumstances of the case, the Court may order one party, in addition to bearing its own costs, to pay a proportion of the other party's costs. In the present case, since the Commission's action has been successful, save as regards printing service contracts for fireworks display permits, the Republic of Austria should be ordered, pursuant to that provision, to bear its own costs and to pay four fifths of the Commission's costs.

116 The Commission must bear one fifth of its own costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by having awarded, without an EU-wide call for tenders, service contracts for the production of chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, credit card-sized driving licences and credit card-sized vehicle registration certificates directly to Österreichische Staatsdruckerei GmbH and by maintaining national provisions which require contracting authorities to award those service contracts directly to that company, without an EU-wide call for tenders, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 4(2) and Article 8 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, read in conjunction with Articles 11 to 37 of that directive, and Article 14 and Article 20 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, read in conjunction with Articles 23 to 55 of that directive;

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders the Republic of Austria to bear its own costs and to pay four fifths of the costs of the European Commission, and the Commission to bear one fifth of its own costs.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: German.

EU:C:2017:578

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

KOKOTT

delivered on 20 July 2017 (1)

Case C-187/16

European Commission

v

Republic of Austria

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations — Public service contracts — Directives 92/50/EEC, 2004/18/EC and 2009/81/EC — Article 346 TFEU — Need for special security measures — Protection of the State's essential security interests — Manufacture of identity documents and other official documents — Award of a contract to Österreichische Staatsdruckerei without first conducting a procurement procedure)

I. Introduction

1. It goes without saying that official documents such as biometric passports, identity cards, driving licences and residence permits must be manufactured in compliance with particular secrecy and security requirements, as the issue of such documents is an expression of the exercise of fundamental State functions. The documents are used as part of everyday life and the importance of public confidence in their authenticity and veracity is not to be underestimated. Consequently, highest priority is given to security of supply, protection against counterfeiting and responsible handling of these documents, including of data processed in their manufacture, and abuse must be effectively prevented. (2)

2. In these infringement proceedings, however, the Court will be required to clarify whether such considerations justify entrusting the manufacture of such documents, without any procurement procedure, exclusively to a certain undertaking which is considered to be particularly trustworthy.

3. Specifically, the European Commission alleges that, by reserving the manufacture of security-related documents exclusively for Österreichische Staatsdruckerei GmbH, a formerly State-owned undertaking which has now been privatised, the Republic of Austria has infringed EU public procurement law.

4. Going beyond the case at issue, the present proceedings are also significant because in them the Court will once again shed light on the leeway available to Member States to derogate from EU law where they rely on their essential national security interests within the meaning of Article 346(1) TFEU. At a time when the threat from international terrorism and organised crime and the question of effective control of migration flows are a focus of public interest everywhere, this case could scarcely be more timely.

II. Legislative framework

A. EU law

5. The EU law framework for the present case is defined, first, by the provisions of primary law contained in Articles 49, 56 and 346(1)(a) TFEU (formerly Articles 43, 49 and 296(1)(a) EC) and, second, by a number of rules of secondary law in Directives 92/50/EEC (3) and 2004/18/EC, (4) the former directive being relevant for the period up to 31 January 2006 and the latter for all periods thereafter.

The directives relating to the award of public service contracts

6. For the award of public service contracts concerning 'publishing and printing services on a fee or contract basis', both Directive 92/50 and Directive 2004/18 require in principle that a procurement procedure be conducted in accordance with EU law. This is clear from Article 3(1), Article 11(1), Article 8 and Article 15(2) of, in conjunction with Annex IA(15) to, Directive 92/50 and from Article 20 of, in conjunction with Annex II(A)(15) to, Directive 2004/18.

Derogations from the duty to conduct a procurement procedure

7. However, both Directive 92/50 and Directive 2004/18 exclude from their scope secret contracts and contracts requiring special security measures.

In the case of Directive 92/50, such provision is made in Article 4(2), which reads as follows:

'This Directive shall not apply to services which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member State concerned or when the protection of the basic interests of that State's security so requires.'

A substantively identical provision is contained in Article 14 of Directive 2004/18:

'This Directive shall not apply to public contracts when they are declared to be secret, when their performance must be accompanied by special measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member State concerned, or when the protection of the essential interests of the Member State so requires.'

8. The background to this exclusion from the scope of the procurement procedures laid down in EU law for public service contracts is explained for the first time in the 14th recital of Directive 92/50:

'Whereas, in the field of services, the same derogations as in Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC should apply as regards State security or secrecy and the priority of other procurement rules such as those pursuant to international agreements, those concerning the stationing of troops, or the rules of international organisations'.

9. In recital 22 of Directive 2004/18 this derogation for State security and State secrecy is updated as follows:

'Provision should be made for cases in which it is possible to refrain from applying the measures for coordinating procedures on grounds relating to State security or secrecy, or because specific rules on the awarding of contracts which derive from international agreements, relating to the stationing of troops, or which are specific to international organisations are applicable.'

10. Reference should also be made to Article 10 of Directive 2004/18, which was given the following wording by Directive 2009/81/EC (5) for 'contracts in the fields of defence and security':

'Subject to [Article 346 TFEU], this Directive shall apply to public contracts awarded in the fields of defence and security, with the exception of contracts to which Directive 2009/81/EC … applies.

This Directive shall not apply to contracts to which Directive 2009/81/EC does not apply pursuant to Articles 8, 12 and 13 thereof.'

11. Under Article 13(a) of Directive 2009/81, which is headed 'Specific exclusions', that directive does not apply to 'contracts for which the application of the rules of this Directive would oblige a Member State to supply information the disclosure of which it considers contrary to the essential interests of its security'.

12. The period for the transposition of Directive 2009/81 expired on 21 August 2011, as provided for in Article 72(1) of that directive.

Special rules of EU law for passports and identity cards

13. Furthermore, specifically with respect to passports and identity cards, reference should be made to Regulation (EC) No 2252/2004. (6) As regards the object of that regulation, it is worth noting recital 4 thereof, which contains these explanations:

> ‘This Regulation is limited to the harmonisation of the security features including biometric identifiers for the passports and travel documents of the Member States. The designation of the authorities and bodies authorised to have access to the data contained in the storage medium of documents is a matter of national legislation, subject to any relevant provisions of Community law, EU law or international agreements.’

14. Article 3 of Regulation No 2252/2004 then provides as follows:

> ‘1. In accordance with the procedure referred to in Article 5(2) [(7)] it may be decided that the specifications referred to in Article 2 [(8)] shall be secret and not be published. In that case they shall be made available only to the bodies designated by the Member States as responsible for the printing and to persons duly authorised by a Member State or the Commission.
>
> 2. Each Member State shall designate one body having responsibility for printing passports and travel documents. It shall communicate the name of that body to the Commission and the other Member States. The same body may be designated by two or more Member States. Each Member State shall be entitled to change its designated body. It shall inform the Commission and the other Member States thereof.’

B. National law

15. Österreichische Staatsdruckerei (9) is incorporated in private law in the form of a Gesellschaft mit beschränkter Haftung (limited liability company, GmbH). The sole shareholder in the GmbH is Österreichische Staatsdruckerei Holding AG, whose shares are listed on the stock market and held by private individuals.

16. On the basis of the factual and legal situation as at 12 September 2014, (10) the manufacture of chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, credit card-sized driving licences, credit card-sized vehicle licences and fireworks display permits is entrusted to Staatsdruckerei.

17. Under the second sentence of Paragraph 1a and Paragraph 2(2)(1) of the Staatsdruckereigesetz 1996 (Law on the State Printing Office 1996), (11) Staatsdruckerei is responsible in particular for ‘the manufacture of print products for the federal offices in the manufacturing process for which secrecy or compliance with security rules (security printing) is necessary’. Furthermore, Paragraph 2(3) of the Staatsdruckereigesetz 1996 provides that the federal bodies are required to ‘entrust [Staatsdruckerei] exclusively’ with the manufacture of the abovementioned print products. (12)

18. Under the heading ‘Supervision of security printing’, Paragraph 6(1) of the Staatsdruckereigesetz 1996 further provides that business and work processes relating to the manufacture, processing and storage of security printing products are subject to supervision by the Federal Minister responsible for the security printing product in question. Under Paragraph 6(2) of that law, Staatsdruckerei is required to take all security measures necessary to prevent abuse in connection with the manufacture, processing and storage of security printing products. Lastly, under Paragraph 6(3) of that law, Staatsdruckerei must grant the Federal Minister responsible for the security printing product in question, to the extent necessary for supervision, access to its business premises and an opportunity to inspect the relevant business records.

III. Facts and pre-litigation procedure

19. By letter of formal notice of 6 April 2011, the Commission made Austria aware of concerns regarding the compatibility with the provisions of the TFEU and of Directives 92/50 and 2004/18 of the direct award of certain service contracts for the printing of official documents to Staatsdruckerei. The documents concerned at the time were chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, credit card-sized driving licences, paper and card-sized vehicle licences, fireworks display permits, boatmasters' certificates, security document forms, labels for narcotic substances and moped licences.

20. In its reply of 7 June 2011, Austria relied on the protection of essential national security interests. Protection of secret information, safeguarding of the authenticity and veracity of the documents concerned, security of supply and guaranteed protection of sensitive data justified awarding the printing contracts exclusively to Staatsdruckerei, as Staatsdruckerei alone demonstrated the appropriate organisational, technical and structural security measures for performing those contracts. By letters of 17 July 2012 and 28 March 2013, Austria supplemented its arguments in this regard.

21. On 10 July 2014, the Commission issued a reasoned opinion. In that opinion, the Commission emphasised that it was perfectly possible to organise a public invitation to tender in such a way that only undertakings which specialised in the manufacture of documents subject to special security requirements and were supervised accordingly could be successful.

22. Austria responded to the reasoned opinion on 10 September 2014. In essence, the Member State relied again on its national security interests and emphasised that the performance of the printing contracts was closely linked to public order and the institutional operation of the State. Their direct award to Staatsdruckerei was justified by the need for a guaranteed supply and for production conditions which ensured compliance with special secrecy and security rules. Observance of security requirements by undertakings other than Staatsdruckerei could be enforced only by means of civil law, whereas the Austrian State authorities enjoyed special supervisory powers vis-à-vis Staatsdruckerei by law.

23. In the course of the pre-litigation procedure, the Commission gradually withdrew its complaints in relation to moped licences, paper vehicle licences, boatmasters' certificates, security document forms and labels for narcotic substances, as in some cases those documents were abolished and in some cases their manufacture was put out to competitive tender. (13) In all other respects, however, it maintained its complaints and stated that it was for Austria to prove the need for a direct award of the printing contracts at issue to Staatsdruckerei.

IV. Forms of order sought and procedure before the Court

24. By written pleading of 4 April 2016, the Commission brought the present action at the Court pursuant to the second paragraph of Article 258 TFEU. It claims that the Court should:

1. declare that

   – by awarding public service contracts for the manufacture of certain documents, such as chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, fireworks display permits, credit card-sized driving licences and credit card-sized vehicle licences, under and above the thresholds applicable under Directive 92/50 and Directive 2004/18 in the time before and after the transposition of Directive 2004/18 directly to Österreichische Staatsdruckerei GmbH, and

   – by maintaining national provisions, such as in particular Paragraph 2(3) of the Bundesgesetz zur Neuordnung der Rechtsverhältnisse der Österreichischen Staatsdruckerei (Federal Law on the reorganisation of the legal relationships of Österreichische Staatsdruckerei), which require contracting authorities to award such public service contracts exclusively to Österreichische Staatsdruckerei GmbH, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 49 and 56 TFEU or under Article 4 read in conjunction with Articles 11 to 37 of Directive 92/50/EEC and Articles 14, 20 and 23 to 55 of Directive 2004/18/EC;

2. order the Republic of Austria to pay the costs.

25. The Republic of Austria contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the action brought by the Commission in the present case; and – order the applicant to pay the costs.

26. The action brought by the Commission was examined before the Court on the basis of the written documents and at the hearing on 7 June 2017.

V. Assessment

27. At the present stage, the subject matter of these infringement proceedings is now confined only to the manufacture of chip passports, emergency passports, identity cards, residence permits, credit card-sized driving licences, credit card-sized vehicle licences and fireworks display permits. In the course of the extrajudicial pre-litigation procedure the Commission withdrew its complaints in relation to the manufacture of paper vehicle licences, boatmasters' certificates, labels for narcotic substances, security document forms and moped licences.

28. The action brought by the Commission is well founded if and in so far as certain requirements existed under EU law for the award of the printing contracts at issue (see immediately below, section A), with which Austria failed to comply and which it could not evade by relying on essential national security interests (see further below, section B).

29. It is noted for the sake of completeness that in this case it is not possible to apply the case-law concerning 'in-house' transactions, (14) as the Republic of Austria no longer controls Staatsdruckerei like it does its own departments. Rather, Staatsdruckerei is an undertaking incorporated purely under private law and is wholly privately owned.

A. Duties under EU law in respect of the award of public service contracts by national authorities

30. The printing contracts at issue are undeniably public service contracts under the EU public procurement law applicable in the material period. Specifically, this follows for the period up to 31 January 2006 from Annex IA(15) to Directive 92/50 and for the period thereafter from Annex II(A)(15) to Directive 2004/18, each of which classify 'publishing and printing services on a fee or contract basis' as priority services. For such services both directives lay down detailed rules for contracting authorities regarding the procurement procedure to be applied.

1. Duty under secondary law to conduct a procurement procedure for the printing of all documents except for fireworks display permits

31. The parties agree that the values of all the printing contracts at issue except for the contract for the manufacture of fireworks display permits were above the thresholds for public service contracts laid down in Directives 92/50 and 2004/18.

32. Consequently, there was in principle — subject to the question of protection of essential national security interests which will be discussed below (15) — a duty to conduct a procurement procedure in accordance with EU secondary law for all of those contracts. This is clear from Article 3(1), Article 11(1), Article 8 and Article 15(2) of, in conjunction with Annex IA(15) to, Directive 92/50 and from Article 20 of, in conjunction with Annex II(A)(15) to, Directive 2004/18.

2. No duty under primary law to produce a minimum amount of publicity for the contract for the printing of fireworks display permits

33. As regards the contract for the printing of fireworks display permits, on the other hand, whose estimated value was only EUR 56 000 and thus well below the thresholds for public service contracts laid down in Directives 92/50 and 2004/18, there was no obligation under secondary law to conduct a procurement procedure.

34. It is true that this does not mean that such public contracts would fall completely outside the scope of EU law. Rather, it is established case-law (16) that the fundamental freedoms of the European internal market — in this case the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services (Articles 43 and 49 EC for the period before 1 December 2009 and Articles 49 and 56 TFEU since 1 December 2009) — and in particular the duty of transparency implicit in those fundamental freedoms require that a sufficient degree of advertising is also ensured before the award of public service contracts below the threshold, provided that the contract in question is of certain cross-border interest.

35. In the present case, however, the Commission and Austria disagree on whether the contract at issue for the printing of fireworks display permits was actually of such certain cross-border interest.

36. As Austria rightly states, the low value of a contract is an indication that there is no certain cross-border interest. The Commission is correct to state that the existence or non-existence of such cross-border interest cannot be determined on the basis of the value of the contract alone, but that an overall assessment of all the relevant circumstances of the individual case is essential. (17) In my view, however, such an overall assessment also shows that there is no certain cross-border interest in the present case.

37. The market for the manufacture of counterfeit-proof documents is certainly characterised in general by a high degree of specialisation and international integration. Under these circumstances it cannot be ruled out that even smaller contracts from a Member State may attract considerable cross-border interest elsewhere in the European Union or in the European Economic Area (EEA). The Commission has nevertheless failed to explain adequately in the present case to what extent the printing of Austrian fireworks display permits which, according to the undisputed submissions of Austria, are manufactured in volumes of approximately 400 per year and at a unit price of EUR 35, might be of certain cross-border interest.

38. The fact cited by the Commission that Staatsdruckerei has also been commissioned by a number of foreign States to manufacture visas and passports casts little light on the matter, as visas and passports are printed in much larger volumes and according to uniform EU rules, unlike fireworks display permits. The cross-border interest in printing contracts for visas and passports is thus much greater and not comparable with the interest in printing contracts for fireworks display permits.

39. All in all, the circumstances invoked by the Commission do not therefore clearly indicate the existence of cross-border interest in the printing contract for fireworks display permits. Consequently, the Commission has not complied in this regard with the burden of proof on it. (18) Austria cannot therefore be considered to have been required by EU primary law to produce a minimum amount of publicity before the award of the printing contract for fireworks display permits. Austria was thus permitted, from the point of view of EU law, to award that contract directly to Staatsdruckerei without first considering other undertakings as contractors.

B. Derogations from the duties under EU law

40. With regard to the part of the Commission's action which is not concerned with fireworks display permits, it must now be considered whether and to what extent the undeniably sensitive nature of the printing contracts at issue could mean that Austria was permitted to award those contracts directly to Staatsdruckerei, in derogation from the abovementioned duties under EU law, without considering other undertakings as contractors in any manner.

41. Austria cites Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18 in this connection. Article 346(1)(a) TFEU (formerly Article 296(1)(a) EC), which has also been the subject of intensive discussion between the parties, is not relied on by Austria here, as was made clear at the hearing. (19) I nevertheless consider it appropriate to include consideration of Article 346(1)(a) TFEU hereinafter, as all the abovementioned directive provisions can ultimately be traced back to it and are closely connected with it.

1. General remarks

42. Article 346(1)(a) TFEU makes clear at the level of primary law that no Member State is to be obliged to supply information the disclosure of which it considers contrary to the essential interests of its security. Unlike the subsequent point (b) of that article, point (a) is not restricted, according to its wording, only to arms, munitions and war material, but offers general protection to the essential security interests of the Member States and may therefore also be applied to non-military procurement processes such as the printing contracts at issue here. (20) If a Member State refuses to invite tenders for or otherwise publicise a public contract, it ultimately withholds relevant information regarding a forthcoming procurement project from the interested public. It thus departs from its duty to supply information which is laid down by EU law for this area in Article 346(1)(a) TFEU.

43. In secondary law, the possibility set out in Article 346(1)(a) TFEU to derogate from duties under EU law is fleshed out for public procurement law, on the one hand, in Article 13(a) of Directive 2009/81 and, on the other, in Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18. The latter two provisions each stipulate, using substantively identical wordings, that the rules in those directives do not apply to public contracts

– when they are declared to be secret,

– when their performance must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member State concerned, – or when the protection of the essential interests of that Member State so requires.

44. Austria relies only on the latter two variants of Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18, that is to say, it considers that the printing contracts at issue must be accompanied by special security measures (second variant) and the protection of essential security interests of the State is concerned (third variant). On the other hand, Austria does not assert any need for secrecy in respect of the printing contracts (first variant).

45. In essence, Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50, Article 14 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 346(1)(a) TFEU all express the same legal principle, namely that Member States are permitted to depart from the obligations actually incumbent on them under EU law in order to protect essential national security interests. It is therefore appropriate to assess all these exceptions together, the extensive case-law on Article 346(1) TFEU — on point (b) in particular — also providing guidance for the interpretation of Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and of Article 14 of Directive 2004/18.

2. Discretion of Member States as to their essential security interests

46. Essential national security interests constitute a concept of EU law which must be given an autonomous interpretation. That concept covers both the Member State's internal security and its external security. (21)

47. It has been acknowledged that each Member State must be granted a wide discretion in the definition of its essential security interests; (22) this is shown by the use of the words 'as it considers necessary' in Article 346(1) TFEU.

48. The provisions of EU law on the protection of essential national security interests cannot, however, be read in such a way as to confer on Member States a power to depart from their duties under EU law based on no more than reliance on those interests. (23) Rather, it is for the Member States in each case to offer substantiated evidence to show precisely which national security interests are affected and to what extent compliance with certain obligations under EU law would in practice be contrary to those security interests.

49. Austria argues convincingly in this case that the issue of the official documents in question affects fundamental functions of the State. (24) For example, passports and identity cards are used to prove a person's identity, nationality and age. In practice, the presentation of such documents ensures the holders' right to participate in elections and their freedom to travel, to reside in other Member States of the European Union or in other EEA Member States and possibly to study or work there. A driving licence provides information about its holder's entitlement to drive motor vehicles and thus to make active use of the roads; in some cases it may even be recognised as proof of identity.

50. As Austria rightly states, in printing these and similar documents it must be ensured, first, that their authenticity and protection against counterfeiting are guaranteed, second, that unauthorised parties do not become aware of the security arrangements for their manufacture, third, that the reliable supply of public bodies with the documents concerned is guaranteed and, fourth, that a high level of protection is provided for personal data processed in the manufacture of the documents.

51. Even if the Commission is correct and there is doubt whether and to what extent this latter aspect of data protection can specifically be regarded as a matter of national security, (25) it is nevertheless undeniable that in any case all the other factors mentioned — authenticity and protection against counterfeiting for official documents, protection of the security arrangements for their manufacture and guaranteed security of supply — can affect essential national security interests.

52. In principle, Austria may therefore rely on its essential national security interests and the measures necessary for their protection, as mentioned in Article 346(1)(a) TFEU, Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18. However, the resolution of the present case hinges on the question whether those security interests and measures can justify completely dispensing with the practice prescribed by EU law for the award of public contracts. I will now turn to this question.

3. Exceptional character of measures for the protection of essential national security interests and the principle of proportionality

53. As Article 346(1)(a) TFEU permits derogations from fundamental freedoms, which are of basic importance in the system established by the treaties, it is an exception which is to be interpreted strictly. (26) The same applies to Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 14 of Directive 2004/18, which provide for exclusions from the scope of EU public procurement law and thus ultimately also exceptions to the fundamental freedoms under the treaties. (27)

54. Where recourse is had to such exceptions, even though the Member State concerned is accorded a wide discretion in security matters, it is not entirely free, but is subject to review by the Court. In particular, it is for that Member State to prove that it is necessary to have recourse to the measures taken by it in order to protect its essential national security interests. (28) The Member State concerned must therefore ultimately undergo a proportionality test.

55. Austria essentially invokes three arguments in this regard to justify a direct award of the printing contracts at issue to Staatsdruckerei. First, the protection of essential national security interests necessitates the centralised performance of the printing contracts by a single undertaking; second, effective official controls are necessary in connection with the implementation of security-related printing contracts; and, third, the contractor as such must be trustworthy. As I will explain below, I do not think that any of these arguments stands up to closer scrutiny in the case at issue.

(a) The need for the centralised performance of the printing contracts

56. First of all, Austria relies on the need for the centralised performance of the printing contracts at issue by a single undertaking. This makes it easier for the Austrian authorities to monitor the proper performance of the contracts in compliance with the necessary secrecy and security arrangements. In addition, it reduces the risk of unauthorised parties becoming aware of those security arrangements or of sensitive materials (such as forms for passports or residence permits) falling into the hands of unauthorised parties.

57. The centralised performance of the contract may, in a case like the present one and for the reasons cited by Austria, be regarded as contributing to the protection of essential national security interests, and possibly also as contributing to data protection. However, the centralisation argument can ultimately only explain why the printing contracts at issue are only ever awarded to a single undertaking (and not to several at the same time). On the other hand, there is no plausible justification, based on the need for centralisation, why it should be necessary, in order to protect essential national security interests, to commission only ever the same undertaking, namely Staatsdruckerei.

58. Nothing else follows from Article 3(2) of Regulation No 2252/2004, which is cited by Austria. It is true that that provision requires Member States to designate one body having responsibility for printing passports and travel documents. The provision does not, however, indicate how that body having responsibility should be selected by Member States. In particular, it certainly does not preclude a procurement procedure first being conducted in accordance with the requirements of EU law. This is also confirmed by a glance at the overall context of that provision. According to recital 4 thereof, Regulation

No 2252/2004 is limited to the harmonisation of the security features for passports and travel documents, while the designation of the responsible authorities and bodies by the Member States is expressly subject to any relevant provisions of EU law. These provisions of EU law, compliance with which is not affected by Regulation No 2252/2004, include in particular public procurement law, as expressed in the fundamental freedoms and Directives 92/50 and 2004/18.

(b) The need for effective official controls

59. Second, Austria stresses the importance of effective official controls in connection with the manufacture of the documents in question. For this reason too, it is justified to award the printing contracts at issue to Staatsdruckerei.

60. It should be noted in this regard that the sensitive nature of these printing contracts may undoubtedly necessitate the implementation of strict official controls on the undertaking commissioned, including unannounced controls. However, in this context Austria is permitted to take only measures which are actually necessary to ensure the effectiveness of those controls. A practice whereby all potential tenderers other than Staatsdruckerei are excluded a priori from the award of contract goes beyond what is necessary in order to attain the legitimate objective of effective controls.

61. Austria objects that, on the basis of the applicable law — and more precisely Paragraph 6(3) of the Staatsdruckereigesetz 1996 — its authorities have public supervisory powers only vis-à-vis Staatsdruckerei and not vis-à-vis other undertakings. In particular, if problems arose, action could not be taken against foreign undertakings on the basis of public powers, but at best under civil law.

62. I do not find this objection convincing, however. It cannot be disputed that public supervisory powers may specifically be necessary for the protection of essential national security interests because they are more effective than rights of supervision simply agreed in a civil-law contract. Nevertheless, this does not, in itself, justify disregarding the existing EU public procurement rules entirely and only ever considering a certain undertaking — Staatsdruckerei — a priori as a contractor.

63. Rather, the Member State in question — in this case Austria — must ensure as careful a balance as possible between its security-related supervision requirements and its obligations under EU law. In this connection, much less restrictive measures would be possible, in the light of public procurement law, which would have permitted undertakings other than Staatsdruckerei to apply for the printing contracts at issue:

– Rather than excluding undertakings established in other EEA Member States entirely from the award of the contract, Austria could, if necessary, stipulate for all interested parties that the printing contracts at issue, if awarded, must be carried out from a permanent establishment in Austria, (29) that data obtained in connection with the contracts must be processed solely in Austria and that neither such data nor security-related information may be transmitted via foreign data cables or servers or passed on to parts of the undertaking located abroad or to foreign authorities.

– And rather than providing for public supervisory powers such as those in Paragraph 6(3) of the Staatsdruckereigesetz 1996 solely vis-à-vis Staatsdruckerei, the Austrian legislature could authorise the competent State bodies in general to exercise such supervision of all undertakings with permanent establishments in Austria if they perform security-related printing contracts there.

(c) The need for the trustworthiness of the contractor

64. Third and last, Austria submits that Staatsdruckerei was entrusted with the printing contracts at issue specifically because there was a special relationship of trust between that undertaking and the competent State bodies.

65. It is correct that it may be necessary, for the protection of a Member State’s essential security interests, to restrict the list of possible candidates for the award of a public contract to undertakings which are regarded as particularly reliable and trustworthy.

66. However, it would run flagrantly counter to the basic principle underpinning the European internal market in general and public procurement law in particular (30) if a Member State almost arbitrarily classified a single undertaking — especially its formerly State-owned and now privatised 'historic' provider in a certain area — as particularly reliable and trustworthy according to the motto 'tried and tested', whilst a priori denying or at least questioning the reliability and trustworthiness of all other undertakings.

67. This is demonstrated not least by a comparison with public contracts in the military and security fields, which also relate to highly sensitive matters and are nevertheless, as a rule, subject to a procurement procedure under the rules of EU law. (31) In particular, the Court has ruled that the requirement to impose an obligation of confidentiality in no way prevents the use of a competitive tendering procedure for the award of a contract. (32) The EU public procurement rules allow contracting authorities sufficient leeway for the necessary security and secrecy arrangements in sensitive areas, whether in the procedure to select the most suitable contractor or at the later stage of contract performance.

68. There is thus nothing to prevent the contracting authority, in connection with the award of sensitive public contracts like those at issue for the manufacture of official documents, imposing particularly high requirements for the suitability and reliability of contractors, formulating tender specifications and service contracts accordingly and requiring the necessary proof from candidates. In addition, conditions may be imposed on contractors relating to the performance of the printing contracts, covering in particular data protection, secrecy and security arrangements and the applicable official controls, including a security review of all employees involved in the performance of the contract. However, all this does not make the manufacture of official documents a contract intuitu personae which can be performed only by one very specific person.

69. At the hearing, Austria stated that foreign undertakings were not entirely outside the control of the authorities of their respective country of origin and in some cases were even required to cooperate with the intelligence services there, even if they carried out public contracts from a permanent establishment in Austria. Such undertakings could not therefore be considered as contractors for sensitive printing contracts like those at issue.

70. As I have already stated elsewhere, (33) certain derogations from the procurement procedures prescribed by EU law may actually be justified by the fact that a Member State does not wish simply to disclose security-related information to foreign undertakings or undertakings controlled by foreign nationals, in particular undertakings or persons from non-member countries. A Member State can also legitimately ensure that it does not become dependent on non-member countries or on undertakings from non-member countries for its supplies of sensitive goods.

71. According to settled case-law, however, a measure is appropriate for ensuring attainment of the objective pursued only if it genuinely reflects a concern to attain it in a consistent and systematic manner. (34) In the present case, Austria has not, as far as can be seen, taken precautions which could effectively prevent Staatsdruckerei falling under the control of foreign shareholders or becoming a subsidiary of a foreign legal person. The Austrian State has neither stipulated, for reasons of security, voting rights in Staatsdruckerei in the form of a special share ('golden share') (35) nor made the sale of shares in Staatsdruckerei subject to any restrictions on security grounds.

72. Under these circumstances, there is no security-related justification for Austria's categorical refusal to consider other undertakings, whether other Austrian undertakings or undertakings from other EEA Member States, as contractors in addition to its 'historic' provider.

C. Conclusion

73. All in all, the action brought by the Commission must therefore be dismissed in so far as the award of printing contracts for fireworks display permits is concerned. In respect of all other parts of the subject matter of the proceedings, on the other hand, its action must be granted in its entirety and it should be declared that Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations as alleged by the Commission.

VI. Costs

74. In principle, pursuant to the first sentence of Article 138(3) of the Rules of Procedure, where, as in this case, each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads, the parties must bear their own costs. However, on the basis of the second sentence of that provision, if it appears justified in the circumstances of the case, the Court may order that one party, in addition to bearing its own costs, pay a proportion of the costs of the other party.

75. According to my proposed solution, the Commission is largely successful, whereas Austria's arguments can be upheld in respect of only a small part of the subject matter of the proceedings, namely the fireworks display permits. Accordingly, it would seem appropriate in the present case to order Austria, in addition to bearing its own costs, to pay three quarters of the costs of the Commission, while the Commission should bear one quarter of its own costs.

VII. Conclusion

76. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court should:

(1) declare that

– first, by maintaining national legislation such as Paragraph 2(3) of the Staatsdruckereigesetz 1996, under which contracting authorities have a duty to award printing contracts for the manufacture of certain official documents to Österreichische Staatsdruckerei GmbH, and – second, by awarding specific service contracts for the manufacture of chip passports, emergency passports, residence permits, identity cards, credit card-sized driving licences and credit card-sized vehicle licences directly to Österreichische Staatsdruckerei without a procurement procedure, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its duties under Directives 92/50/EEC and 2004/18/EC;

(2) dismiss the action as to the remainder;

(3) order the Republic of Austria to bear its own costs and to pay three quarters of the costs of the European Commission. The European Commission must bear one quarter of its own costs.

---

1 Original language: German.

---

2 See, for example, the Action plan to strengthen the European response to travel document fraud, which the European Commission outlined in its Communication of 8 December 2016 to the European Parliament and the Council (COM(2016) 790 final).

---

3 Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

---

4 Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

---

5 Directive 2009/81/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 July 2009 on the coordination of procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts by contracting authorities or entities in the fields of defence and security, and amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (OJ 2009 L 216, p. 76).

---

6 Council Regulation (EC) No 2252/2004 of 13 December 2004 on standards for security features and biometrics in passports and travel documents issued by Member States (OJ 2004 L 385, p. 1).

---

7 This is a ‘comitology procedure’ under Articles 5 and 7 of Council Decision 1999/468/EC of 28 June 1999 laying down the procedures for the exercise of implementing powers conferred on the Commission (OJ 1999 L 184, p. 23).

---

8 This refers to technical specifications relating to additional security features and requirements, the storage medium of the biometric features and their security, and requirements for quality and common standards for the facial image and the fingerprint.

---

9 Austrian State Printing Office; also ‘Staatsdruckerei’.

---

10 On 12 September 2014, the period laid down by the Commission in its reasoned opinion in accordance with the first paragraph of Article 258 TFEU expired.

---

11 BGBl. I No 1/1997.

---

12 For chip passports, emergency passports and identity cards such provision is also made in the Regulation of the Federal Minister for the Interior on the design of passports and passport substitutes, for residence permits in the Regulation of the Federal Minister for the Interior on the implementation of the Law on Settlement and Residence, for credit card-sized driving licences in the Regulation of the Federal Minister for Science and Transport on the implementation of the Law on driving licences, for credit card-sized vehicle licences in the Regulation of the Federal Minister for Science and Transport on the establishment of vehicle licencing offices, and for fireworks display permits in the Regulation of the Federal Minister for the Interior on the implementation of the Law on fireworks 2010. Where the obligation to assign the contract to Staatsdruckerei is not expressly laid down in those regulations, it follows from the requirement to protect those documents against counterfeiting in conjunction with Paragraph 2(3) of the Staatsdruckereigesetz 1996.

---

13 According to the documents before the Court, on 17 July 2012 Austria had envisaged abolishing moped licences and conducting an open award procedure for fireworks display permits, paper vehicle licences, boatmasters’ certificates, security document forms and labels for narcotic substances. On 28 March 2013, Austria eventually confirmed to the Commission that it had abolished moped licences and implemented its announcement regarding security document forms and labels for narcotic substances. It asserted that the Commission’s complaints regarding boatmasters’ certificates had also been remedied, as the Commission expressly stated in the application.

---

14 See in this regard, inter alia, judgments of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 50); of 8 April 2008, Commission v Italy (C-337/05, EU:C:2008:203, paragraph 36); and of 8 December 2016, Undis Servizi (C-553/15, EU:C:2016:935, paragraph 31). The exception for ‘in-house’ transactions applies in cases covered by the public procurement directives as well as in cases which are to be assessed solely by reference to the fundamental freedoms of the European internal market: judgments of 13 October 2005, Parking Brixen (C-458/03, EU:C:2005:605, paragraphs 60 to 62); of 29 November 2012, Econord (C-182/11 and C-183/11, EU:C:2012:758, paragraph 26); and of 8 December 2016, Undis Servizi (C-553/15, EU:C:2016:935, paragraph 24).

---

15 See below, points 40 to 72 of this Opinion.

---

16 Judgments of 7 December 2000, Telaustria and Telefonadress (C-324/98, EU:C:2000:669, paragraphs 60 to 62); of 18 June 2002, HI (C-92/00, EU:C:2002:379, paragraphs 42, 45 and 46); of 13 November 2007, Commission v Ireland (C-507/03, EU:C:2007:676, paragraphs 29 to 31); of 17 December 2015, UNIS and Beaudout Père et Fils (C-25/14 and C-26/14, EU:C:2015:821, paragraphs 27, 38 and 39); and of 6 October 2016, Tecnoedi Costruzioni (C-318/15, EU:C:2016:747, paragraph 19).

---

17 See, to that effect, judgment of 6 October 2016, Tecnoedi Costruzioni (C-318/15, EU:C:2016:747, paragraph 20).

---

18 With regard to the burden of proof on the Commission, see for example judgment of 13 November 2007, Commission v Ireland (C-507/03, EU:C:2007:676, paragraph 32).

---

19 Austria relies on Article 346(1)(a) TFEU only with regard to the previously discussed fireworks display permits.

---

20 As the Commission makes clear in its Interpretative communication of 7 December 2006 on the application of Article 296 of the Treaty in the field of defence procurement (COM(2006) 779 final, also '2006 Communication'); it states that Article 296(1)(a) EC (now Article 346(1)(a) TFEU) 'goes beyond defence, aiming in general at protecting information which Member States cannot disclose to anyone without undermining their essential security interests' (section 1 of the Communication). Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer also seems to take a similar approach in his Opinion in Commission v Finland and Others (C-284/05, C-294/05, C-372/05, C-387/05, C-409/05, C-461/05 and C-239/06, EU:C:2009:67, point 106).

---

21 Judgments of 26 October 1999, Sirdar (C-273/97, EU:C:1999:523, paragraph 17), and of 11 January 2000, Kreil (C-285/98, EU:C:2000:2, paragraph 17); in the same vein, judgments of 10 July 1984, Campus Oil and Others (72/83, EU:C:1984:256, paragraphs 34 to 36); of 4 October 1991, Richardt and 'Les Accessoires Scientifiques' (C-367/89, EU:C:1991:376, paragraph 22); and of 15 December 2009, Commission v Denmark (C-461/05, EU:C:2009:783, paragraph 51, first sentence).

---

22 Judgment of 30 September 2003, Fiocchi munizioni v Commission (T-26/01, EU:T:2003:248, paragraph 58); see also the 2006 Communication (cited in footnote 20), according to which Article 296 EC (now Article 346 TFEU) 'has been acknowledged to grant to Member States a broad degree of discretion' in deciding how to protect their essential security interests (section 4 of the Communication) and '[i]t is the Member States' prerogative to define their essential security interests' (section 5 of the Communication).

---

23 Judgments of 16 September 1999, Commission v Spain (C-414/97, EU:C:1999:417, paragraphs 22 and 24); of 15 December 2009, Commission v Finland (C-284/05, EU:C:2009:778, paragraph 47); of 7 June 2012, Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi (C-615/10, EU:C:2012:324, paragraph 35); and of 4 September 2014, Schiebel Aircraft (C-474/12, EU:C:2014:2139, paragraph 34).

---

24 Similarly, see the statements made by the Court in the judgment of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (C-44/96, EU:C:1998:4, paragraph 24), regarding the tasks transferred to Staatsdruckerei.

---

25 The Commission points out that data protection is an important public interest, but not a matter of national security.

---

26 Judgments of 15 December 2009, Commission v Finland (C-284/05, EU:C:2009:778, paragraph 48), of 15 December 2009, Commission v Denmark (C-461/05, EU:C:2009:783, paragraph 52); and of 7 June 2012, Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi (C-615/10, EU:C:2012:324, paragraph 35).

---

27 See, to that effect, judgment of 7 June 2012, Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi (C-615/10, EU:C:2012:324, paragraph 35), in relation to Article 10 of Directive 2004/18.

---

28 Judgments of 16 September 1999, Commission v Spain (C-414/97, EU:C:1999:417, paragraphs 22 and 24); of 15 December 2009, Commission v Finland (C-284/05, EU:C:2009:778, paragraphs 48 and 49); of 8 April 2008, Commission v Italy (C-337/05, EU:C:2008:203, in particular paragraph 53); of 2 October 2008, Commission v Italy (C-157/06, EU:C:2008:530, paragraph 31); and of 7 June 2012, Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi (C-615/10, EU:C:2012:324, paragraph 45); similarly, see the 2006 Communication (cited in footnote 20, section 5), according to which it must be demonstrated why the non-application of public procurement rules in the specific case is necessary for the protection of an essential security interest.

---

29 While such a requirement of a permanent establishment in national territory is de factothevery negation of the freedom to provide services, Member States may nevertheless impose such a requirement, very exceptionally, if they show that it is indispensable to the necessary controls (see judgment of 4 December 1986, Commission v Germany, 205/84, EU:C:1986:463, paragraph 52 in conjunction with paragraph 54, last sentence).

---

30 It is settled case-law that the primary aim of the rules of EU law in the field of public contracts is the attainment of freedom of establishment and free movement of goods and services and the opening-up of undistorted competition in all the Member States; see, inter alia, judgments of 16 December 2008, Michaniki (C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraphs 39 and 53), and of 8 December 2016, Undis Servizi (C-553/15, EU:C:2016:935, paragraph 28).

---

31 See Article 10 of Directive 2004/18 and, in general, Directive 2009/81.

---

32 Judgments of 8 April 2008, Commission v Italy (C-337/05, EU:C:2008:203, paragraph 52), and of 2 October 2008, Commission v Italy (C-157/06, EU:C:2008:530, paragraph 30); in the same vein, judgment of 7 June 2012, Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi (C-615/10, EU:C:2012:324, end of paragraph 45).

---

33 See my Opinion in Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi (C-615/10, EU:C:2012:26, point 66).

---

34 Judgments of 10 March 2009, Hartlauer (C-169/07, EU:C:2009:141, paragraph 55), of 17 November 2009, Presidente del Consiglio dei Ministri (C-169/08, EU:C:2009:709, paragraph 42); and of 13 July 2016, Pöpperl (C-187/15, EU:C:2016:550, paragraph 33). This case-law on the fundamental freedoms must also apply to secondary legislation on public procurement, particularly since the latter is intended to give effect to the fundamental freedoms (see also my Opinion in Persidera, C-112/16, EU:C:2017:250, point 66 with footnote 46).

---

35 See, for example, judgment of 4 June 2002, Commission v Belgium (C-503/99, EU:C:2002:328).

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

20 December 2017 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public works contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 45(2) and (3) — Conditions for exclusion from participation in public procurement — Declaration regarding the absence of convictions of former directors of the tendering company — Criminal conduct of a former director — Criminal conviction — Actual and complete dissociation between the tendering company and that director — Evidence — Assessment by the contracting entity of the requirements relating to that obligation)

In Case C-178/16,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), made by decision of 1 December 2015, received at the Court on 24 March 2016, in the proceedings

Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani SpA,

Guerrato SpA

v

Provincia autonoma di Bolzano,

Agenzia per i procedimenti e la vigilanza in materia di contratti pubblici di lavori servizi e forniture (ACP),

Autorità nazionale anticorruzione (ANAC),

intervening parties:

Società Italiana per Condotte d'Acqua SpA,

Inso Sistemi per le Infrastrutture Sociali SpA,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, C. Vajda, E. Juhász (Rapporteur), K. Jürimäe and C. Lycourgos, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: L. Hewlett, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 5 April 2017,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani SpA and Guerrato SpA, by M.A. Sandulli and L. Antonini, avvocati,

– the Provincia autonoma di Bolzano and the Agenzia per i procedimenti e la vigilanza in materia di contratti pubblici di lavori servizi e forniture (ACP), by C. Guccione, avvocato, R. von Guggenberg, Rechtsanwältin, L. Fadanelli, A. Roilo and S. Bikircher, avvocati, – Società Italiana per Condotte d'acqua SpA, by A. Guarino and C. Martelli, avvocati,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by C. Pluchino and P. Grasso, avvocati dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by G. Gattinara and A. Tokár, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 21 June 2017,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 45(2)(c) and (g) and Article 45(3)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) and of certain general principles of EU law.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani SpA ('Mantovani') and Guerrato SpA, the former acting in its own name and capacity as lead contractor of the temporary association of undertakings to be established with Guerrato, and the Provincia autonoma di Bolzano (Autonomous Province of Bolzano, Italy; 'the Province of Bolzano'), the Agenzia per i procedimenti e la vigilanza in materia di contratti pubblici di lavori servizi e forniture (ACP) (Agency in charge of the procedures governing and monitoring of public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts (ACP)) and the Autorità nazionale anticorruzione (ANAC) (National Anti-Corruption Authority (ANAC)) concerning the exclusion of Mantovani from the tender procedure relating to the award of a works contract for the financing, design of the final executive project, construction and management of the new Bolzano correctional facility.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Recital 2 of Directive 2004/18 states:

'The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. ...'

4 Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, headed 'Personal situation of the candidate or tenderer', provides as follows:

'1. Any candidate or tenderer who has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment of which the contracting authority is aware for one or more of the reasons listed below shall be excluded from participation in a public contract:

…

For the purposes of this paragraph, the contracting authorities shall, where appropriate, ask candidates or tenderers to supply the documents referred to in paragraph 3 and may, where they have doubts concerning the personal situation of such candidates or tenderers, also apply to the competent authorities to obtain any information they consider necessary on the personal situation of the candidates or tenderers concerned. Where the information concerns a candidate or tenderer established in a State other than that of the contracting authority, the contracting authority may seek the cooperation of the competent authorities. Having regard for the national laws of the Member State where the candidates or tenderers are established, such requests shall relate to legal and/or natural persons, including, if appropriate, company directors and any person having powers of representation, decision or control in respect of the candidate or tenderer.

2. Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

…

(c) has been convicted by a judgment which has the force of res judicata in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of any offence concerning his professional conduct;

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proved by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate;

…

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section, or has not supplied such information.

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.

3. Contracting authorities shall accept the following as sufficient evidence that none of the cases specified in paragraphs 1 or 2(a), (b), (c), (e) or (f) applies to the economic operator:

(a) as regards paragraphs 1 and 2(a), (b) and (c), the production of an extract from the "judicial record" or, failing that, of an equivalent document issued by a competent judicial or administrative authority in the country of origin or the country whence that person comes showing that these requirements have been met;

…'

Italian law

5 Decreto legislativo No 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163/2006 establishing the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), as amended by Decree-Law No 70 of 13 May 2011 (GURI No 110 of 13 May 2011, p. 1), converted into law by Law No 106 of 12 July 2011 (GURI No 160 of 12 July 2011, p. 1) ('Legislative Decree No 163/2006'), governs, in their entirety, the procedures in Italy for the award of public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts.

6 Legislative Decree No 163/2006 contains, in Part II thereof, Article 38, which lays down the general requirements for taking part in procedures for the award of concessions and public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts. Article 38(1)(c) of the decree provides:

'The following persons shall be excluded from any participation in procedures for the award of concessions and public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts, and are prohibited from taking part as subcontractors or from concluding any related contract:

…

(c) any person who has been the subject of a conviction that has the force of res judicata or a criminal order against which no appeal lies, or who has been the subject of a judgment implementing a sentence resulting from a negotiated plea, as provided for in Article 444 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in respect of the commission of grave professional conduct offences to the detriment of the State or the Community; the following constitute, in any event, grounds for exclusion: a conviction set out in a judgment which has the force of res judicata for one or more offences relating to participation in a criminal organisation, corruption, fraud or money laundering, as defined by the Community measures cited in Article 45(1) of Directive 2004/18; the exclusion and prohibition shall apply if the judgment or order was made against: the owner or the technical director, if the case involves a sole trader; partners or the technical director, if the case involves a general partnership; the general partners or the technical director, if the case involves a semi-limited partnership; directors with powers of representation, the technical director or the natural person sole shareholder, or the majority shareholder in the case of a company with less than four shareholders, if the case involves another type of company or consortium. In any event, the exclusion and prohibition shall also apply to persons dismissed from their posts in the year preceding the date of publication of the contract notice, where the undertaking does not show that it has fully and effectively dissociated itself from the criminal conduct sanctioned; the exclusion and prohibition in any event shall not be effective where the offence was decriminalised or if rehabilitation has been deemed to have occurred, namely where the conviction was declared spent or where the conviction has been overturned; ...'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

7 By a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 27 July 2013 (S 145-251280), the Province of Bolzano launched an open tendering procedure for the award of a public works contract concerning the financing, design of the final executive project, construction and management of the new Bolzano correctional facility. The estimated amount of the works was EUR 165 400 000.

8 Mantovani submitted a request for participation on 16 December 2013 in its own name and as lead contractor of a temporary association of undertakings which was to be established. That undertaking produced two declarations concerning compliance with the general requirements laid down in Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006. On 4 December 2013, it stated that Mr B., in his capacity as Chairman of the Board, Managing Director and legal representative who had ceased to perform his duties on 6 March 2013, had not been the subject of a conviction having the force of res judicata. On 16 December 2013, Mantovani reiterated that declaration.

9 At its meeting on 9 January 2014, the contracting authority conditionally authorised Mantovani's application, while awaiting it to provide further information with respect to Mr B. An article in the local press, published on 6 December 2013, revealed that Mr B. had been the subject of a criminal prosecution, for having instigated a system of false invoices, and had negotiated a plea entailing a conviction and sentence of 1 year and 10 months' imprisonment.

10 Subsequently, the contracting authority obtained Mr B.'s criminal record, which showed that that conviction was handed down on 5 December 2013, and became final on 29 March 2014. At its meeting on 29 May 2014, the contracting authority requested Mantovani to provide it with details of that conviction.

11 Mantovani replied by claiming, inter alia, that Mr B.'s conviction had become final following its own declarations of 4 and 16 December 2013, the judgment of 6 December 2013 having been given in camera without any public hearing, and its publication having occurred only on 3 February 2014. Mantovani further stated that, in order to fully and effectively dissociate the company from Mr B.'s actions, the latter was immediately removed from his management role in the Mantovani group, the management bodies of the company had been reorganised, Mr B.'s shares had been bought back and an action for damages had been brought against him.

12 After having established a classification in which Mantovani was conditionally positioned in fifth place, the contracting authority requested an opinion from the ANAC concerning the lawfulness of a possible exclusion of Mantovani. The ANAC replied, in essence, that although, in the absence of a final judgment, Mantovani's statement could not be classified as a 'misrepresentation', the lack of timely notification of criminal proceedings concerning one of the persons mentioned in Article 38(1)(c) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 may constitute an infringement of the obligation of sincere cooperation with the contracting authority, and accordingly impede the full and effective dissociation from the person concerned.

13 In those circumstances, the contracting authority decided, at its meeting of 27 February 2015, to exclude Mantovani from the tender procedure. According to the minutes of that meeting, it was found that the general requirements laid down in Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 were not met 'because of the late and inadequate information provided by the company in order to prove that it had dissociated itself from the criminal conduct of the person having ceased to perform management functions' and that the conviction 'was handed down prior to the statement submitted in the tender procedure and could, as such, have been notified by Mantovani at the stage when its participation was being assessed'.

14 Mantovani brought an action before the Tribunale regionale di giustizia amministrativa, Sezione Autonoma di Bolzano (Regional Administrative Court, Autonomous Division of Bolzano, Italy) against that exclusion decision. By judgment of 27 August 2015, that court confirmed the lawfulness of the exclusion, on the basis that Mr B.'s conviction could have been the subject of a declaration during the tendering procedure and that only a tenderer who submitted factually accurate statements without misleading the contracting authority was entitled to claim the benefit of the dissociation referred to in Article 38(1)(c) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006.

15 Mantovani appealed against that judgment before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) on the ground, inter alia, that Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 is contrary to EU law, and applied for a request for a preliminary ruling to be referred to the Court.

16 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Is it contrary to the correct application of Article 45(2)(c) and (g) and Article 45(3)(a) of Directive 2004/18, and of the EU law principles of protection of legitimate expectations and legal certainty, equal treatment, proportionality and transparency, of the prohibition of making the procedure more cumbersome, and of the greatest possible openness to competition of public tender procedures, as well as of the principle of completeness and accuracy of the requirements governing the implementation of penalties, for national legislation such as Article 38(1)(c) of Legislative Decree [No 163/2006] to extend the legal obligation to make a declaration regarding the absence of convictions by way of final judgment (including judgments implementing a sentence resulting from a negotiated plea), for the offences referred to in that provision, to office holders in the companies intending to submit a tender who ceased to hold office in the year preceding the publication of the tender notice, which amounts to a corresponding ground for exclusion of that company from the call for tenders if the undertaking fails to show that there has been complete and genuine dissociation from the conduct which carries criminal sanctions, where assessment of compliance with the dissociation requirement is a matter for the contracting authority, which contracting authority can effectively introduce certain obligations entailing the exclusion of the tenderer in the event that they are not fulfilled, namely:

(i) an obligation to provide information and make declarations relating to criminal activities not yet settled by a final judgment (and the outcome of which is therefore uncertain), not laid down in the Legislative Decree, even in respect of office holders;

(ii) an obligation of voluntary dissociation, without describing the kind of conduct which would be exculpatory, the period to be taken into account (including whether it must occur before the criminal conviction becomes final) and the stage of the proceedings at which those obligations must be implemented;

(iii) an obligation of sincere cooperation, not clearly defined, except with reference to the general principle of good faith?'

Consideration of the question referred

Admissibility

17 The Province of Bolzano takes the view that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible. In its view, the Court of Justice has already ruled, in the judgment of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile

Libor Lavori Pubblici (C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063), on an issue relating to the interpretation of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 which is similar to that raised in the present case.

18 In that regard, it is sufficient to note that a request for a preliminary ruling on interpretation is not inadmissible simply because it is similar to a request for a preliminary ruling on which the Court has already ruled. In any event, the case which gave rise to the judgment referred to in the previous paragraph concerned a different legal situation, characterised by the exclusion of a tenderer for non-payment of social security contributions in the context of a tendering procedure to which only the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty were applicable, since the threshold laid down in Article 7(c) of Directive 2004/18 had not been reached.

19 The Province of Bolzano is of the opinion, moreover, that the question referred for a preliminary ruling has no connection with the main proceedings, since the exclusion was not a penalty for breach of the requirement governing notification or reporting, but for the lack of full and effective dissociation between Mantovani and the conduct of Mr B., its former director. Moreover, the reference to the ground for exclusion relating to misrepresentation referred to in Article 45(2)(g) and (3) of Directive 2004/18 is neither relevant nor decisive.

20 In that regard, it should be recalled that questions concerning EU law enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred by a national court for a preliminary ruling only where it is obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought is unrelated to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (judgment of 8 September 2015, Taricco and Others, C-105/14, EU:C:2015:555, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

21 In the present case, the referring court stated that, admittedly, the statements made by Mantovani on 4 and 16 December 2013 concerning the lack of a judgment having the force of res judicata cannot be described as a ‘misrepresentation’ within the meaning of Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18. Nonetheless, that court stated that it was faced with the question of whether EU law permits the taking into consideration of the absence of a declaration concerning criminal proceedings against former directors of the tendering company, who have not yet been the subject of a final judgment.

22 In those circumstances, it is not clear that the question referred has no bearing on the actual situation or on the subject matter of the main proceedings.

23 The request for a preliminary ruling is therefore admissible.

Substance

24 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 2004/18, in particular Article 45(2)(c) and (g) and Article 45(3)(a) thereof, and the principles of protection of legitimate expectations, legal certainty, equal treatment, proportionality and transparency are to be interpreted as meaning that they preclude national legislation allowing the contracting authority to take into consideration, under the conditions established by that authority, the criminal conviction of the director of a company for an offence relating to the professional conduct of that undertaking, where that director ceased to perform his duties in the year preceding the publication of the tender notice and to exclude that undertaking from participating in the public tender procedure at issue, on the ground that, by failing to declare the conviction which was not yet final, it had not fully and effectively dissociated itself from the activities of that director.

25 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that the referring court refers, in the wording of the question referred, to the grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 45(2)(c) and (g) of Directive 2004/18, relating to the exclusion of a tenderer who has been the subject of a judgment which has the force of res judicata in accordance with the legislation of the country concerned in respect of an offence concerning his professional conduct, and of a tenderer who is guilty of misrepresentation in supplying the information required under Section 2 of Chapter VII of that directive or has not supplied that information.

26 As is apparent from the information contained in the order for reference, Mantovani was excluded from the tendering procedure on the ground that it had submitted, late and incomplete, the evidence which proved that it had dissociated itself from the conduct of its director. It was in particular criticised for not having indicated, in its statements of 4 and 16 December 2013, that its former director was the subject of criminal proceedings which resulted in a conviction negotiated in camera on 6 December 2013.

27 Therefore, as submitted by the European Commission, it could be held that the facts in the main proceedings may fall within the ground for exclusion laid down in Article 45(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18, which allows the exclusion of a tenderer who is guilty of grave professional misconduct, of which the contracting authorities may provide evidence by any means.

28 According to settled case-law, the fact that the referring court's question refers to certain provisions of EU law does not mean that the Court may not provide the national court with all the guidance on points of interpretation which may be of assistance in adjudicating on the case pending before it, whether or not that court has referred to those points in its question. It is, in that regard, for the Court to extract from all the information provided by the referring court, in particular from the grounds of the order for reference, the points of EU law which require interpretation in view of the subject matter of the dispute (see, inter alia, judgment of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraph 20 and the case-law cited).

29 In those circumstances, it must be held that the request for a preliminary ruling also seeks the interpretation of the optional grounds for exclusion contained in Article 45(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18.

30 As regards the optional grounds of exclusion, it should be noted at the outset that, in accordance with the last subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, it is for the Member States, in compliance with EU law, to lay down 'the implementing conditions'.

31 In accordance with settled case-law, Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 does not provide for uniform application at EU level of the grounds of exclusion it mentions, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds of exclusion, or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level. In that context, Member States have the power to make the criteria laid down in Article 45(2) less onerous or more flexible (judgment of 14 December 2016, Connexxion Taxi Services, C-171/15, EU:C:2016:948, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

32 Member States therefore enjoy some discretion in determining the requirements governing the application of the optional grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18.

33 As regards the optional ground for exclusion provided for in Article 45(2)(c) of the directive, which authorises contracting authorities to exclude from participation in a tendering procedure a tenderer who has been the subject of a judgment which has the force of res judicata, in accordance with the legislation of the country at issue, relating to an offence concerning the professional conduct of the tenderer, it should be noted, first, that it does not specify to what extent the offences committed by managers or directors of a legal person may result in the exclusion of that legal person under that provision.

34 However, as noted by the Advocate General in points 54 and 58 of his Opinion, EU law is based on the premiss that legal persons act through their representatives. Conduct contrary to the professional ethics of those representatives may thus constitute a relevant factor in assessing the professional conduct of an undertaking. It is thus perfectly permissible for Member States to retain, as part of the exercise of their powers to determine the requirements governing the application of the optional grounds for exclusion, among the relevant factors in assessing the integrity of the tendering company, the possibility that certain actions of directors of that company are contrary to professional ethics.

35 In that regard, Article 45(1), in fine, of Directive 2004/18 acknowledges, in the context of the mandatory grounds for exclusion, that national law may take into account the existence of wrongdoing on the part of the directors of the legal person. There is therefore nothing to preclude Member States, when implementing the ground for exclusion laid down in Article 45(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18, from considering that acts of a director representing the tendering company are imputable to that company.

36 The taking into account, in the context of the ground for exclusion laid down in Article 45(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18, of the conduct of the directors of a tenderer constituted as a legal person cannot therefore be regarded as an ‘extension’ of the scope of that ground for exclusion; it constitutes an implementation of that scope which maintains the effectiveness of that ground for exclusion.

37 Next, the fact that the factual elements which may lead to the exclusion of the tenderer, as a result of the conduct of a director who had ceased to hold office on the date of the submission of the application to take part in the tender procedure, does not preclude the application of that ground for exclusion.

38 That ground for exclusion relates, self-evidently, to the wrongful conduct of an economic operator before the procedure for the award of a public contract. It is up to the Member States to determine, taking into account the principle of proportionality, the date from which such conduct may justify the exclusion of the tenderer.

39 As regards, moreover, the question whether or not an offence affected the professional conduct of the tendering company, it should be noted that participation in the issuing of false invoices by the director of a company may be regarded as an offence involving professional misconduct.

40 Finally, as regards the requirement that the judgment must have the force of res judicata, it should be noted that that condition was fulfilled in the case in the main proceedings, given that the decision to exclude was taken after the judgment relating to Mr B. had acquired the force of res judicata.

41 In accordance with the case-law cited in paragraph 31 of the present judgment, the Member State is entitled to ease the requirements governing the application of the optional grounds for exclusion and, thus, to waive the application of a ground for exclusion in the event of a dissociation between the tenderer and the conduct constituting an offence. In the present case, it is also entitled to determine the requirements governing that dissociation and to require, as Italian law does, that the tenderer inform the contracting authority of a conviction of its director, even if the conviction is not yet final.

42 The tendering company, which must meet those requirements, may submit all the evidence which, in its view, is evidence of such a dissociation.

43 If that dissociation cannot be proved to the satisfaction of the contracting authority, the necessary consequence is the application of the ground for exclusion.

44 Having regard to what was established in paragraph 27 of the present judgment, in a situation where the judgment relating to an offence concerning the professional conduct of the director of a tendering company is not yet final, Article 45(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18 may apply. That provision makes it possible to exclude a tendering company which has been found guilty of grave professional misconduct, established by any means which the contracting authorities can provide proof of.

45 In that respect, it should be noted that the considerations set out in paragraphs 34 to 43 of the present judgment are valid and applicable mutatis mutandis in respect of grave professional misconduct.

46 In relation to the application of Article 45(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18, one of the differences lies in the fact that the contracting authority may provide proof ‘by any means’ of the existence of such grave professional misconduct.

47 To that effect, a judicial decision, even though it is not yet final may, depending on the subject of the decision, provide the contracting authority with the appropriate means by which to substantiate the existence of grave professional misconduct, its decision being, in any event, open to judicial review.

48 It should be added that, under Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18, a tenderer may be excluded if it is guilty of misrepresentation, but also where it does not provide the information required pursuant to Section 2 of Chapter VII of Title II of that directive, namely the ‘criteria for qualitative selection’. Thus, failure to inform the contracting authority of the criminal conduct of the former director may also make it possible to exclude, under that provision, a tenderer from participating in a procedure for the award of a public works contract.

49 As regards Article 45(3)(a) of the directive, it is sufficient to note that the referring court does not explain how the interpretation of that provision is necessary in the light of the facts in the main proceedings.

50 The national court, in its reference for a preliminary ruling, further refers to several principles, of which only some have been elevated to principles of EU law, without explaining precisely how, having regard to the facts of the case, they may be relevant and preclude the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings.

51 As regards the principle of equal treatment, it is sufficient, in those circumstances, to point out that, in view of the objective of that legislation, which is to protect the integrity of the public procurement procedure, the situation of a tendering company whose director has committed an offence relating to the professional conduct of that undertaking or grave professional misconduct cannot be regarded as comparable to that of a tenderer whose director is not guilty of such conduct.

52 As regards the principle of legal certainty, of the protection of legitimate expectations and of the principle of transparency, the request for a preliminary ruling gives no indication of how those principles may need to be interpreted in the light of the case in the main proceedings.

53 As regards the principle of proportionality, it is necessary to examine its application in the light of the impact of the date from which the wrongful conduct of the administrator may be regarded as leading to the exclusion of the tendering company. If the intervening period is too significant, the national legislation is likely to reduce the scope of the EU directives on public procurement.

54 In that context, the taking into account of wrongful conduct during the year preceding the date of publication of the tender notice does not appear to be disproportionate, especially since the legislation at issue in the main proceedings provides that an undertaking may prove that it effectively and completely dissociated itself from the conduct of its director.

55 In the light of all of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Directive 2004/18, in particular Article 45(2)(c), (d) and (g) of that directive, and the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which allows the contracting authority:

– to take into consideration, in accordance with the conditions it has laid down, a criminal conviction of the director of a tendering company, even if the conviction is not yet final, in respect of an offence concerning the professional conduct of that company where the director ceased to perform his duties in the year preceding the publication of the tender notice, and

– to exclude that company from taking part in the tendering procedure at issue, on the ground that, by failing to declare the conviction which was not yet final, it had not fully and effectively dissociated itself from that director’s activities.

Costs

56 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, in particular Article 45(2)(c), (d) and (g) of that directive, and the principles of equal treatment and proportionality, must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which allows the contracting authority:

– to take into consideration, in accordance with the conditions it has laid down, a criminal conviction of the director of a tendering company, even if the conviction is not yet final, for an offence concerning the professional conduct of that company where the director ceased to perform his duties in the year preceding the publication of the tender notice, and

– to exclude that company from taking part in the tendering procedure at issue, on the ground that, by failing to declare the conviction which was not yet final, it had not fully and effectively dissociated itself from that director's activities.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Italian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 21 June 2017 (1)

Case C-178/16

Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani SpA,

Guerrato SpA

v

Provincia autonoma di Bolzano,

Agenzia per i procedimenti e la vigilanza in materia di contratti pubblici di lavori servizi e forniture (ACP),

Autorità nazionale anticorruzione (ANAC)

intervening parties:

Società Italiana per Condotte d'Acqua SpA,

Inso Sistemi per le Infrastrutture Sociali SpA

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy))

(Public procurement — Declaration that former directors of the tendering company have no final criminal convictions — Requirement that the company show complete and genuine dissociation from the conduct of the former director in order to avoid exclusion — Assessment by the contracting authority of the conditions relating to that requirement)

1. The Italian legislation on public procurement states that (subject to the qualifications that shall be examined subsequently) public contracts are not be awarded to persons who have been convicted of serious professional conduct offences against the State 'or the Community'. This prohibition extends to undertakings whose directors are convicted of such offences, unless those undertakings can show that they have completely and genuinely dissociated themselves from the criminal conduct of their directors.

2. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) is being called upon to decide an appeal against a judgment upholding the decision of a contracting authority to exclude from a procurement procedure a tendering company whose director was convicted of one of those offences. In order to resolve the dispute, it is asking the Court of Justice, in essence, whether the Italian legislation under which the exclusion was effected is compatible with Directive 2004/18/EC. (2)

3. The reference for a preliminary ruling will allow the Court of Justice to refine its case-law on the ability of Member States to determine and vary the content of the optional grounds for excluding tenderers that are set out in Directive 2004/18.

I. Legislative framework

A. European Union law

Directive 2004/18

4. By virtue of Article 45 (‘Personal situation of the candidate or tenderer’):

‘1. Any candidate or tenderer who has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment of which the contracting authority is aware for one or more of the reasons listed below shall be excluded from participation in a public contract:

(a) participation in a criminal organisation, as defined in Article 2(1) of Council Joint Action 98/773/JHA;

(b) corruption, as defined in Article 3 of the Council Act of 26 May 1997 … and Article 3(1) of Council Joint Action 98/742/JHA … respectively;

(c) fraud within the meaning of Article 1 of the Convention relating to the protection of the financial interests of the European Communities;

(d) money laundering, as defined in Article 1 of Council Directive 91/308/EEC of 10 June 1991 on prevention of the use of the financial system for the purpose of money laundering.

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.

They may provide for a derogation from the requirement referred to in the first subparagraph for overriding requirements in the general interest.

For the purposes of this paragraph, the contracting authorities shall, where appropriate, ask candidates or tenderers to supply the documents referred to in paragraph 3 and may, where they have doubts concerning the personal situation of such candidates or tenderers, also apply to the competent authorities to obtain any information they consider necessary on the personal situation of the candidates or tenderers concerned. Where the information concerns a candidate or tenderer established in a State other than that of the contracting authority, the contracting authority may seek the cooperation of the competent authorities. Having regard for the national laws of the Member State where the candidates or tenderers are established, such requests shall relate to legal and/or natural persons, including, if appropriate, company directors and any person having powers of representation, decision or control in respect of the candidate or tenderer.

2. Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

…

(c) has been convicted by a judgment which has the force of res judicata in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of any offence concerning his professional conduct;

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate;

…

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section or has not supplied such information.’

5. By virtue of Article 45(3):

‘Contracting authorities shall accept the following as sufficient evidence that none of the cases specified in [paragraph] … 2 … (c) … applies to the economic operator:

(a) ... the production of an extract from the ‘judicial record’ or, failing that, of an equivalent document issued by a competent judicial or administrative authority in the country of origin or the country whence that person comes showing that these requirements have been met;

...’

B. Italian law

6. The order for reference indicates that Article 38(1)(c) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, (3) in the version applicable at the material time, provides that the ground for exclusion [from participating in procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts] consisting of a conviction by final judgment or the issuing of a judgment imposing a sentence that has been negotiated between the parties pursuant to Article 444 of the Codice di procedura penale (Code of Criminal Procedure), for the offences specified, (4) ‘applies also in respect of persons having ceased to hold [managerial] office in the year preceding the date of publication of the contract notice, if the undertaking does not show that there has been complete and genuine dissociation from the conduct which carries criminal sanctions’.

7. Article 38(1)(f) and (h) of the Legislative Decree No 163/2006 also provide for the exclusion from this type of competitive tendering of: (i) persons guilty of serious professional error, established by the contracting authority using any means of proof; and (ii) persons who have submitted false statements or documents concerning the criteria and requirements for participation in public tendering procedures.

II. Facts of the case and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

8. On 27 July 2013 a contract notice was published in the Official Journal of the European Union (5) for the financing, definitive planning and final design, construction and management of a new prison in Bolzano. The value of the contract was EUR 165 400 000.

9. Impresa di Costruzioni Ing. E. Mantovani SpA (‘Mantovani’) responded to the invitation to tender both on its own behalf and as part of a temporary association of undertakings and submitted two declarations (dated 4 and 16 December 2013) stating that it satisfied the general requirements in the invitation to tender.

10. In particular, Mantovani stated (in the first declaration) that Mr B., formerly chairman of the board of directors and [managing] director of the company, with powers to act on its behalf, had ceased to hold office on 6 March 2013 and that Mantovani was not aware of any judgment of the type referred to in Article 38(1)(c) of the Legislative Decree No 163/2006 having been issued. The second declaration was similarly worded.

11. At a meeting held on 9 January 2014, the contracting authority conditionally authorised Mantovani to take part in the procedure, pending certain clarifications, since it was ‘common knowledge’ according to a story published in a local newspaper, that, having been accused of running a system of false invoices, Mr B had negotiated a sentence of one year and 10 months’ imprisonment.

12. In the course of verifying that the requirements had been met, the contracting authority obtained an extract from the judicial record in relation to Mr B., which stated that he had been sentenced to one year and 10 months’ imprisonment for various offences that he had committed (judgment of the Tribunale di Venezia (District Court, Venice, Italy) of 5 December 2013, which became final on 29 March 2014).

13. At a meeting held on 29 May 2014, the contracting authority decided not to lift the condition relating to Mantovani’s authorisation to take part in the procedure and on 3 June 2014 it requested Mantovani to give further details regarding the judgment in question.

14. By statements of 10 June 2014 and 17 October 2014, Mantovani provided the further details requested, claiming that:

– the judgment had been published and become final only after it had submitted the statements concerning compliance with the general requirements;

– it had put in place a series of measures demonstrating that it had promptly, genuinely and completely dissociated itself from the conduct of Mr B. The latter had been immediately removed from all positions of responsibility in the Mantovani group, which had implemented an internal restructuring of the company's management bodies, recovered the shares held by Mr B. and brought an action for damages against him.

15. The contracting authority requested an opinion from the Autorità nazionale anticorruzione (National Anti-Corruption Authority, 'ANAC'), which was issued on 25 February 2015 and stated, in summary, as follows:

– Where the tenderer submits a statement attesting that, in relation to the grounds of exclusion referred to in Article 38(1)(c) of the CCP, persons who have ceased to hold office in the year preceding the date of publication of the contract notice are not covered by those grounds, using the wording 'to the best of its knowledge' and duly identifies such persons, it is for the contracting authority to undertake the necessary checks.

– In this case, there was no misrepresentation as that would have required a final judgment rather than the mere existence of pending criminal proceedings.

– It was for the contracting authority to assess whether the measures taken by Mantovani to demonstrate that the company had genuinely and completely dissociated itself from the criminal activities of the former director were actually effective.

– These measures may have been compromised by Mantovani's failure to declare the conviction in the tendering procedure. According to the case-law, a failure to keep the contracting authority informed in a timely manner of the progress of criminal proceedings involving the persons mentioned in Article 38(1)(c) of the CCP is indicative of a lack of dissociation, as it is contrary to the duty of sincere cooperation.

16. In the light of the opinion issued by ANAC, on 27 February 2015, the contracting entity decided to exclude Mantovani from the tendering procedure on the grounds of its delayed and inadequate disclosure of the evidence required to demonstrate its dissociation from the director who had been convicted. It added that the conviction of the director preceded the submission of the declarations in the tendering procedure and Mantovani could therefore have reported it.

17. Mantovani brought an action in the Tribunale regionale di giustizia amministrativa, Sezione autonoma di Bolzano (Regional Administrative Court, Bolzano autonomous section, Italy) in respect of the exclusion and, by judgment No 270 of 27 August 2015, that court held that the action was inadmissible in so far as it challenged both the opinion of the ANAC (which was merely a procedural step) and the award (which had not yet been put into effect). The judgment also rejected the arguments made for granting access to all the documents on the case-file relating to the tendering procedure and held that the company had failed to show that it had dissociated itself from the former director's criminal conduct.

18. Mantovani brought an appeal against that judgment before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), arguing, inter alia, that Article 38 of the CCP is incompatible with EU law and seeking a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

19. By a decision of 1 December 2015, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) referred the following question for a preliminary ruling:

> 'Is it contrary to the correct application of Article 45(2)(c) and (g), and Article 45(3)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts … and of the EU law principles of protection of legitimate expectations and legal certainty, equal treatment, proportionality and transparency, of the prohibition of making the procedure more cumbersome, and of the greatest possible openness to competition of public tender procedures, as well as of the principle of completeness and accuracy of the requirements governing the implementation of penalties, for national legislation such as Article 38(1)(c) of Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 (Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts implementing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) and subsequent amendments:

– to extend the legal obligation to make a declaration regarding the absence of convictions by way of final judgment (including judgments implementing a sentence resulting from a negotiated plea), for the offences referred to in that provision, to office-holders in the companies intending to submit a tender who ceased to hold office in the year preceding the publication of the tender notice,

– which amounts to a corresponding ground for exclusion of that company from the call for tender if the undertaking fails to show that there has been complete and genuine dissociation from the conduct which carries criminal sanctions,

– where assessment of compliance with the dissociation requirement is a matter for the contracting authority, which contracting authority can effectively introduce certain obligations entailing the exclusion of the tenderer in the event that they are not fulfilled, namely:

(i) an obligation to provide information and make declarations relating to criminal activities not yet settled by a final judgment (and the outcome of which is therefore uncertain), not laid down in the Legislative Decree, even in respect of office holders;

(ii) an obligation of voluntary dissociation, without describing the kind of conduct which would be exculpatory, the period to be taken into account (including whether it must occur before the criminal conviction becomes final) and the stage of the proceedings at which those obligations must be implemented;

(iii) an obligation of sincere cooperation, not clearly defined, except with reference to the general principle of good faith?’

III. Procedure before the Court of Justice

20. The order for reference was received at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 24 March 2016.

21. Written observations were submitted by Mantovani, Provincia Autonoma di Bolzano (Autonomous Province of Bolzano), the Italian Government and the European Commission within the time-limit specified in the second paragraph of Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice.

22. Following the Court’s decision to hold a hearing and in accordance with Article 61(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, it invited the parties to focus their submissions on the interpretation of Article 45(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18.

23. The hearing took place on 5 April 2017 and was attended by Mantovani, the Autonomous Province of Bolzano, the Italian Government and the European Commission.

IV. Summary of the observations of the parties

24. Mantovani argues that Article 38(1)(c) of the CCP is contrary to Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 because it extends the ground of exclusion (based on a criminal conviction) to persons who were company directors until up to one year preceding the publication of the contract notice and because it requires the company to show that it has genuinely dissociated itself from such directors.

25. In its view, once directors are no longer in office, they cease to have any influence in the company, with the result that to require the company to provide information about them would, in addition to being superfluous, be disproportionate and would constitute a burden which is contrary to the aim of opening up public procurement to market forces as much as possible.

26. Even if it were accepted that EU law does not preclude extending the scope of the ground in this way, the additional requirement that the company demonstrate that it has genuinely dissociated itself is unlawful, since it is entirely lacking in precision and it is left to the discretion of the contracting authority to determine whether or not it is met. Legal certainty would be particularly affected in that a judgment need not be final, there is no clear indication as to the manner in which declarations are to be made, the period that they should cover or the stage in the procedure at which they should be submitted. Furthermore, the nature of the tenderer's duty of sincere cooperation is not specified.

27. The Autonomous Province of Bolzano argues that the question referred is inadmissible because:

– it is similar to the question already answered by the Court of Justice in its judgment of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici (C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063), particularly paragraph 36 thereof, which refers to the ability of the Member States to incorporate the optional grounds of exclusion into national law and to vary their content;

– Mantovani was not excluded for a breach of the duty to provide information or to make declarations but because the measures taken to demonstrate that it had completely and genuinely dissociated itself from the criminal acts of its former director were taken too late and were inadequate. In that regard, the references to Article 45(2)(g) and Article 45(3)(a) of Directive 2004/18 are irrelevant.

28. On the merits, the Autonomous Province of Bolzano does not perceive any incompatibility between Article 38(1)(c) of the CCP and Directive 2004/18. Article 45 of the directive gives the Member States the freedom both to choose which of the optional grounds of exclusion mentioned in Article 45(2) will operate in their domestic law and to determine the manner in which contracting authorities will assess the elements covered by the grounds selected. The national legislation at issue is consistent with this system.

29. The Italian Government notes that the rationale behind Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 38 of the CCP is to ensure that those persons proposing to conclude contracts with governments are morally, financially and professionally reliable. The Italian legislature adopted a less stringent system than that of the directive by limiting the range of offences which can form the basis of an exclusion.

30. In the view of the Italian Government, the exclusion of an undertaking due to the conduct of its directors can be justified by that very rationale: without such a provision the contractor could easily elude the assessment of its reliability. Moreover, the tenderer has the opportunity to demonstrate to the contracting authority that it has entirely dissociated itself from the criminal conduct of its directors.

31. The Commission notes that even if the referring court is seeking an interpretation of Article 45(2)(c) and (g) and Article 45(3)(a) of Directive 2004/18, in order to provide it with a helpful answer, it is necessary to have regard to Article 45(2)(d), which relates to grave professional misconduct.

32. Although the order for reference focuses on the fact that the judgment was not final at the time that Mantovani made the declarations, the conduct of its director (issuing false invoices relating to sums in excess of EUR 9 000 000 and criminal association) could be considered grave professional misconduct. Even if the director was no longer in office when the tendering procedure took place, Article 45(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18 also covers the past conduct of an operator and encompasses all wrongful conduct which has an impact on the professional credibility of that operator. (6) Consequently, the conduct of directors only recently removed from office may affect the contracting authority's assessment of professional credibility.

33. According to the Commission, the fact that the director's conviction did not have the force of res judicata at the time the declarations were submitted is immaterial. It has been stated in the case-law of the Court of Justice that the grounds of exclusion set out in Article 45(2)(d) and (g) of Directive 2004/18 do not require the economic operator to have been convicted by a judgment that has become final. (7) Both EU law and national law allow grave professional misconduct to be proven by any means, so that the mere fact that criminal proceedings are pending may be sufficient.

34. The Commission goes on to state that, in assessing whether there was grave professional misconduct, the contracting authority should have taken account of the measures that Mantovani had taken to dissociate itself from the criminal conduct of its director.

35. The fact that Mantovani may not have been aware of the criminal proceedings involving its director might also form part of the ground of exclusion under Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18. The duty of the tenderer to declare grave professional misconduct is separate from the review and verification powers given to the contracting authority under Article 45(3) and Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, since the latter are concerned only with a purely formal verification or confirmation of matters already established.

36. Finally, the Commission asserts that, in the circumstances of the case, it is not contrary to the principle of proportionality to apply those grounds of exclusion.

V. Analysis

A. Preliminary remark

37. The questions referred by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) principally concern the compatibility of a provision of Italian law (Article 38(1)(c) of the CCP) with Directive 2004/18. Nevertheless, both in the dispute before that court and in the observations of some of the parties over the course of the preliminary ruling proceedings, the debate has extended to include the interpretation (and application) of the national provision, an issue over which the Court of Justice has no jurisdiction.

38. The answer provided by the Court of Justice must be limited to the interpretation of Directive 2004/18, in order to clarify for the benefit of the referring court whether the provision of domestic law, as described by the national court, is contrary to EU law. If it is established that it is compatible, then it is for the national court to explain how the various paragraphs of Article 38 of the CCP are to be interpreted and applied.

39. I shall be examining how the Italian legislature has a large measure of discretion when it comes to adopting the optional grounds of exclusion referred to in Directive 2004/18 and determining their content. It is for the Member States to decide, in accordance with their own legislative policies, the content of the relevant national legislation, provided that it does not contravene that directive.

40. The fact that, in previous preliminary ruling proceedings, the Court of Justice has already answered certain questions relating to the optional grounds of exclusion is not a sufficient reason to hold that the question now being referred is inadmissible, as the Autonomous Province of Bolzano alleges, as there are specific features that distinguish it from previous cases. (8)

B. The wording of the question referred for a preliminary ruling

41. It may be inferred from the account provided by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) that Mantovani was excluded from the tendering procedure due to its late and inadequate disclosure of the evidence required to prove its dissociation from the conduct of its director, who had been convicted prior to submission of the declarations to the contracting authority.

42. From the account of the facts it is already possible to state that the first of the EU law provisions to which the request for a preliminary ruling relates (Article 45(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18) can be of little relevance.

43. This provision refers to an economic operator who ‘has been convicted by a judgment which has the force of res judicata … of any offence concerning his professional conduct’. Prima facie, the contracting authority’s decision does not seem to be based on that premiss, perhaps because the director’s conviction became final on 29 March 2014, after Mantovani had submitted its declarations concerning the general requirements contained in the contract notice (on 4 and 16 December 2013).

44. Indeed, a reading of the grounds of the administrative decision excluding Mantovani shows that the contracting authority did not rely directly on the criminal conviction of Mr B., but on the late and inadequate disclosure (by Mantovani) of the evidence required to prove its dissociation from the criminal conduct of its director. The decisive factor was therefore the failure of the tenderer properly to report the existence of Mr B.’s criminal conviction, as evidence, pursuant to national case-law, of the severing of ties between the undertaking and its director.

45. This might suggest, as the Commission argues, that the real ground of exclusion does not fall under Article 45(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18, although it does relate to it. However, the conduct of Mantovani could be seen as potentially falling under Article 45(2)(d), namely 'grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate'.

46. The fact is, however, that even though the ground of exclusion based on 'grave misconduct' was incorporated into Italian law under Article 38(1)(f) of the CCP, the question raised by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) does not mention this ground. Nevertheless, there is nothing to prevent the Court of Justice from examining this ground in its answer. (9)

47. As the Court of Justice has repeatedly held, 'the fact that the referring court's question refers only to certain provisions of EU law does not mean that the Court may not provide the national court with all the guidance on points of interpretation that may be of assistance in adjudicating on the case pending before it, whether or not that court has referred to those points in its question. It is, in this regard, for the Court to extract from all the information provided by the referring court, in particular from the grounds of the decision to make the reference, the points of EU law which require interpretation in view of the subject matter of the dispute'. (10)

48. In this regard, and specifically in relation to Directive 2004/18, the Court of Justice saw fit in its judgment in the Croce Amica One Italia case, (11) to point out to the referring court that, although that court appeared to associate 'the conduct of [the] legal representative [of …] only with the grounds for exclusion relating to criminal law and entailing a conviction by a judgment that has become final … the grounds for exclusion set out in Article 45(2)(d) and (g) of the directive also give contracting authorities the power to exclude any economic operator who has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate … without there being any need for the economic operator concerned to have been convicted by a judgment that has become final'.

49. It might therefore be helpful for the Court's answer to address not only the ground of exclusion set out in Article 45(2)(c) and (g) (which are the subject matter of the question being referred) but also the ground set out in Article 45(2)(d). The Court would essentially be clarifying whether a provision of national law such as the one at issue is precluded by these provisions of Directive 2004/18.

50. It is worth repeating that if the question of the compatibility of the Italian legislation with Directive 2004/18 is answered in the affirmative, it will be for the national court to decide whether, in the light of the circumstances of the case, it was lawful for the contracting authority to exclude Mantovani from the contract for failing to pass on the information concerning the conviction of its former director, who had been removed from office less than one year prior to publication of the contract notice.

C. The optional grounds of exclusion

51. On the subject of the discretion enjoyed by contracting authorities in relation to the optional grounds of exclusion set out in Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, I drew attention in my Opinion in the Connexxion Taxi Services case (12) to the statements already made by the Court in the judgment in La Cascina and Others (13) under Directive 92/50/EEC (14) (Article 29 of which is worded in a similar way to Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18), to the effect that application of the cases of optional exclusion are to be left to the assessment of the Member States, as shown by the phrase 'may be excluded from participation in a contract', which appears at the beginning of Article 29. The Member States cannot add grounds of exclusion to those referred to in the provision, but Article 29 of Directive 92/50 does not provide for uniform application of those grounds of exclusion.

52. After Directive 2004/18 came into force, the Court of Justice pursued the same line of reasoning in Consorcio Stabile Libor Lavori Publicci, (15) restating in paragraph 35 of the judgment the points made in La Cascina and Others. (16) It reiterated that the Member States must specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard to EU law, the implementing conditions for Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18. The Court therefore again endorsed the power of the Member States to apply the exclusion criteria and, should they so wish, make them more flexible, and repeated this in its judgment of 14 December 2016, Connexxion Taxi Services. (17)

53. As I highlighted in my Opinion in that case, (18) it follows from the judgment in Consorcio Stabile Libor Lavori Publicci (19) that the exercise of that power by Member States is not, however, unconditional. First, the European Union attaches great importance to freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, which impels it to facilitate opening up procurement procedures as far as possible, an aim which could be hindered by application of the optional grounds for exclusion. Secondly, it is legitimate to justify the grounds for exclusion in terms of general interest objectives, such as guarantees of the tenderer's reliability, diligence, professional honesty and seriousness. In order to balance those interests, the Court applies the principle of proportionality.

D. Impact on the tendering company of the criminal acts of its directors (Article 45(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18)

54. At the root of the lack of reliability of the tenderer in the present case is the criminal conduct of a former director at the time he was managing the company. Can the consequences of that offence extend to the company of which he was a director? EU law provides that this is indeed the case, based on the premiss that legal persons can only act through their officers. It follows, therefore, that any assessment of the credibility of a legal person should take into consideration the criminal acts of those in whose hands its management rests.

55. By virtue of the final sentence of Article 45(1) of Directive 2004/18, requests for information concerning the ground of exclusion for certain serious offences (which is a mandatory rather than an optional ground) may relate to 'legal and/or natural persons, including, if appropriate, company directors and any person having powers of representation, decision or control in respect of the candidate or tenderer'.

56. This provision shows that certain criminal acts committed by those managing a legal person are important enough to exclude that legal person from participation in a public tendering procedure. It seems to me that there can be no objection from an EU law perspective to the same principle being extended (albeit optionally) to other types of offences and even to irregularities in the conduct of directors of legal persons, to the extent that they have repercussions which concern the professional conduct of such legal persons.

57. Admittedly, Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, unlike Article 45(1), does not contain a specific provision to that effect. However, I do not think that this omission necessarily precludes national law from associating one of the optional grounds for excluding legal persons with irregular conduct on the part of their directors.

58. As I have mentioned, the final subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 gives the Member States wide discretion to determine the 'implementing conditions' for the optional grounds of exclusion. In exercising that freedom, the national legislation containing the specific content of certain grounds (such as those relating to the probity of the tendering company) may include the unprofessional conduct of company directors as a relevant factor.

59. By the same token, based on the discretion of Member States to shape their legislation, there is nothing to prevent domestic law from providing that, when assessing optional grounds of exclusion, the failure of the undertaking to dissociate itself from the criminal behaviour of its director should be taken into consideration where this '[concerns] his professional conduct'. It is also for the national legislature and, where relevant, the court called upon to decide the case, to determine what indicators or relevant factors may be relied on to ascertain whether or not that dissociation took place.

60. Those factors include those mentioned by the referring court, namely the voluntary nature of the dissociation, 'the extent to which exculpatory conduct is described', the relative timing and the stage of the procedure at which such dissociation should occur. It is, I repeat, for the national courts to define the scope of these factors, which are in reality simply 'clarifications' introduced by the national legislature in order to define the parameters of the optional grounds of exclusion and the evidence needed to establish them. (20)

61. The question referred by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), is framed so as to emphasise that Article 38(1)(c) of the CCP on the one hand 'extends' the obligation to disclose convictions by making it cover situations where senior office-holders of tendering companies have been convicted and, on the other hand, '[treats .. as a ground for exclusion]' the fact that the 'undertaking does not show' that it has dissociated itself from the criminal conduct of such persons.

62. This reasoning leads me to assert that there is nothing in Directive 2004/18 to prevent the national legislature from clarifying this optional ground of exclusion in the way that the CCP has done. I do not see how this might harm the freedom of establishment or the freedom to provide services. Furthermore, this ground of exclusion is likely to protect the general interest which underlies the requirement that tenderers should be reliable, diligent and honest in their professional dealings.

63. In this regard, I do not think that the referring court's appeal (in rather general and unreasoned terms) to the 'EU law principles of protection of legitimate expectations and legal certainty, equal treatment, proportionality and transparency, of the prohibition of making the procedure more cumbersome, and of the greatest openness of the public procurement market …' adds anything significant to the debate.

64. In conclusion, the fact that Article 45(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18 does not specifically refer to the undertaking dissociating itself from the offences committed by its directors does not mean that the national legislature cannot incorporate this factor into the relevant provision of the CCP. As I have already mentioned several times, it is for the Member States to define the 'implementing conditions' for Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 in its domestic law.

65. Consequently, a provision such as Article 38(1)(c) of the CCP, by virtue of which it is possible to exclude from participating in a tendering procedure undertakings that fail to show that there has been complete and genuine dissociation from certain offences (21) previously committed by their directors, is compatible with EU law.

E. Exclusion of an economic operator for having failed to supply the contracting authority with the appropriate information (Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18)

66. The referring court refers to the 'discretion of the contracting authority' which allows it to 'introduce effectively' an obligation on tendering undertakings to provide information which is 'not laid down in the Legislative Decree'. The contracting authority is also supposed to have introduced 'obligations of sincere cooperation, not clearly defined, except with reference to the general clause of good faith'.

67. In so far as these comments made by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) call into question the actions of an administrative body which is subject to judicial review by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) itself, then it is for that court to draw any conclusions as far as domestic law is concerned. (22) The answer provided in preliminary ruling proceedings should not affect the jurisdiction of the national courts.

68. I should also point out that the question has been referred for a preliminary ruling in order to identify any incompatibility between national legislation and Directive 2004/18. With that in mind, when answering the question, the wording of Article 38(1)(h) of the CCP should be analysed in comparison with Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18.

69. However, the fact is that (as noted in the observations of the Autonomous Province of Bolzano) the exclusion was not based on those grounds, but rather on the grounds that the silence of the tenderer indicated that it had not dissociated itself from the criminal conduct of the director. It does not seem that it is therefore strictly necessary to interpret Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18, since the national legislation transposing that particular provision of the directive has not been applied in this case.

70. Even so, I do not think that the national provision can be criticised for being incompatible in this respect, since its wording is substantially the same as that of the EU provision which it transposes. Both require that the information supplied by tenderers to the contracting authority should not contain any misrepresentations. Article 45(2)(g) of Directive 2004/18 adds that tenderers can be excluded not only for misrepresentations but also where they fail to supply information relating to the 'criteria for qualitative selection' (Section II of Chapter VII, under Title II of the directive).

71. However, concealing the criminal acts of a former director from the contracting authority may also constitute a factor to be considered by the national court when assessing whether there has been grave professional misconduct, which I will now proceed to assess.

F. Exclusion of an economic operator for grave professional misconduct (Article 45(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18)

72. Even though the question referred by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) does not, strictly speaking, relate to this ground of exclusion, as I have already explained, there is nothing to prevent the Court of Justice offering its observations on the subject. The submissions of the parties at the hearing focused on precisely this aspect, as requested by the Court of Justice itself.

73. The professional misconduct to which Article 45(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18 refers covers all wrongful conduct which has an impact on the professional credibility of the operator. (23) The concept of 'grave misconduct' refers to conduct which denotes a wrongful intent or negligence of a certain [gravity]. (24) A conviction, even one that has not become final, (25) is a good indicator that acts which amount to a criminal offence should be assessed in terms of grave professional misconduct. (26) The conviction itself is a justifiable means of objectively establishing the way in which the tendering company was being run.

74. On that basis, and having regard to the nature of the offences of which the director was convicted, which were unquestionably indicative of a lack of business ethics in his professional conduct, the failure of Mantovani to dissociate itself from that conduct might legitimately be covered by that ground of exclusion.

75. In this regard, it is necessary to make a distinction between questions of substance and those relating to proving the facts. In terms of the latter, Article 45(3) of Directive 2004/18 is of assistance in seeing the logic and system of the different methods of obtaining information that may be used by the contracting authority to assess the tenderer's reliability.

76. This provision requires contracting authorities to accept, by way of evidence, the methods specified therein in respect of the situations referred to in Article 45(1) and Article 45(2)(a), (b), (c), (e) and (f). These are situations in which there is a (relatively simple) way of officially establishing the conduct by means of registers or certificates issued by public bodies.

77. By contrast, in relation to the other situations (namely, those relating to Article 45(2)(d) and (g) of Directive 2004/18), I am not aware of any such means by which to obtain documentation. This is only logical since in respect of these grounds of exclusion (grave professional misconduct and misrepresentation or failure to supply the required information) the means of establishing the facts are more varied. It is unlikely that there is a sufficient degree of convergence, in the different Member States, in respect of the legal mechanisms making it possible to record officially those circumstances in a harmonised manner.

78. When it comes to the optional grounds of exclusion in respect of which no official method of recording a finding is specified, as is the case for grave professional misconduct, the discretion of the contracting authority is not confined to any particular document or certificate. The misconduct can be assessed on the basis of the contracting authority's knowledge of the relevant facts, however that knowledge was obtained.

79. As far as the evidence is concerned, it should be borne in mind that, in this case, the existence of the conviction (under the negotiated procedure) of the director of Mantovani for offences concerning his professional conduct at the time he was in office was properly documented and has not been called into question.

80. In the light of that incontrovertible fact, it is for the national courts before which Mantovani's claim has been brought, to ascertain whether or not the tendering company had genuinely and completely dissociated itself from the criminal conduct of its director. The debate on this question then becomes one of substance, as I have called it, and is no longer simply procedural.

81. In that debate, the conduct of Mantovani must be assessed not only from the viewpoint of characterising the actual conduct, but also from the perspective of the proportionality of the contracting authority's response. One factor which may be important in this context is the length of time between the criminal conduct, the conduct of the undertaking and the date of the contract notice.

82. It seems to me that the period of time referred to in the CCP (the year preceding the date of publication of the contract notice) is reasonable for assessing the connection between the conduct of the director and the undertaking, in relation to the acts immediately prior to the tendering procedure. Moreover, that period of time does not mean that there is an absolute presumption that the company had been involved in the activities of the director, since the company may show that it had genuinely and completely dissociated itself from the director.

83. Finally, I do not think that the discretion granted to the contracting authority by the national legislation necessarily leads to a disproportionate result. On the contrary, I think that Article 38(1)(c) of the CCP respects the necessary balance between the means used and the objective sought, which is simply to exclude from such selection procedures any tenderers that are untrustworthy, precisely because they have failed to dissociate themselves within a defined period from the earlier criminal conduct of their directors.

84. Thus, the exclusion of the tenderer is not automatic, (27) but is the result of a careful assessment of the particular case, which the contracting authority must carry out. Neither is the tenderer put in a compromising position as far as protection of its legal position is concerned, since there is always the possibility of an effective review by the courts of the exercise of the public authority's powers to evaluate how the operator has satisfied its professional obligations.

85. In short, I can find no basis on which to hold that the national legislation which is the subject matter of the referring court's question is incompatible with EU law.

VI. Conclusion

86. In the light of the foregoing, I suggest that the Court reply to the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy) in the following terms:

> It is not contrary to Article 45(2)(c), (d) and (g), and to Article 45(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts for a provision of national law to permit a contracting authority to:
>
> – take into consideration the criminal conviction of a director of a tendering company for an offence concerning his professional conduct in the case where that director ceased to hold office during the year preceding the publication of the contract notice, even if the conviction had not become final at that time;
>
> – exclude the tendering company from participating in the procurement on the basis that it had failed to dissociate itself completely and genuinely from the criminal conduct of the director.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

---

3 Decreto legislativo n. 163, Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163, Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts implementing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), ('the CCP').

---

4 Namely the offences of 'participation in a criminal organisation, corruption, fraud and money laundering, as defined in the provisions referred to in Article 45(1) of Directive 2004/18'.

---

5 S 145-251280.

---

6 On this point, the Commission cites the judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801), paragraph 27.

---

7 Judgment of 11 December 2014, Croce Amica One Italia (C-440/13, EU:C:2014:2435), paragraph 28.

---

8 The point made at the hearing by the Autonomous Province of Bolzano and also raised in the opinion of the ANAC of 25 February 2015 to the effect that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has already ruled in a similar case, in which the exclusion of Mantovani from another public procurement for similar reasons was upheld, does not constitute an obstacle to the admissibility of the question either. That judgment of 22 December 2014 (number 6284), delivered by the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) sitting in a formation (the fourth section) which differed from the formation which is now making the reference for a preliminary ruling (the sixth section) held that it was lawful to exclude Mantovani from the tendering procedure for having failed to show genuine disassociation from the criminal conduct of directors by not disclosing their convictions.

---

9 The observations made at the hearing indicate that there would be no procedural obstacles under domestic law to the referring court taking this part of the Court's answer into consideration when ultimately deciding the case.

---

10 Judgment of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF (C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721), paragraph 20 and the case-law referred to therein.

---

11 Judgment of 11 December 2014 (C-440/13, EU:C:2014:2435), paragraph 28.

---

12 C-171/15, EU:C:2016:506, paragraph 41 et seq.

---

13 Judgment of 9 February 2006 (C-226/04 and C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94), paragraphs 21 and 23.

---

14 Council Directive of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

---

15 Judgment of 10 July 2014 (C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063).

---

16 Judgment of 9 February 2006 (C-226/04 and C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94).

---

17 C-171/15, EU:C:2016:948, paragraph 29.

---

18 Connexxion Taxi Services (C-171/15, EU:C:2016:506), paragraph 44.

---

19 Judgment of 10 July 2014 (C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063), paragraphs 29, 31 and 32.

---

20 I will be referring to evidence, in connection with Article 45(3) of Directive 2004/18, when analysing exclusion for professional misconduct in point 75 et seq. of this Opinion.

---

21 These are listed in footnote 4. All concern the professional conduct of the offenders.

---

22 At the hearing, some of the parties relied on Article 38(2) and Article 46 of the CCP, claiming that they demonstrate that tenderers have a duty to disclose in the declarations made to the contracting authority any judgments by which they were convicted. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) referred to the same provisions in the judgment of 22 December 2014 cited in footnote 8.

---

23 Mantovani submits that, under Italian law, the only grave misconduct that meets the conditions of Article 38(1)(f) of the CCP is that which occurs in the context of its previous relationships with contracting authorities (although it accepts that it could be extended to other areas, such as breaches of competition law). Even if this were the case (and this argument is rejected by the Autonomous Province of Bolzano), this would not affect the reply to the question referred, which only concerns the interpretation of Article 45(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18, to which this supposed restriction clearly does not apply. Furthermore, it should also be noted that the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) has confirmed that the wording of Article 38(1)(f) of the CCP ‘reproduces that of the Community legislation, which therefore makes all professional misconduct relevant (judgment of section 5 of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) of 20 November 2015, No 5299, issued in respect of Case No 7974 of 2012).

---

24 Judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801), paragraphs 27, 30 and 31.

---

25 In paragraph 28 of the judgment of 11 December 2014, Croce Amica One Italia (C-440/13, EU:C:2014:2435), the Court of Justice indicated that, in the case of grave professional misconduct, there is no need for the economic operator concerned to have been convicted by a judgment that has become final.

---

26 Judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801), paragraph 28.

---

27 It follows from the judgment of 13 December 2012, Forposta and ABC Direct Contact (C-465/11, EU:C:2012:801), paragraph 31 that automatic exclusion (in relation to a tenderer guilty of grave misconduct) may go beyond the discretion given to the Member States under Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18.

EU:C:2016:870

ORDONNANCE DE LA COUR (sixième chambre)

10 novembre 2016 (*)

« Renvoi préjudiciel – Article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour – Marchés publics – Directive 2004/18/CE – Directive 2014/24/UE – Participation à un appel d'offres – Soumissionnaire ayant omis de mentionner dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – Obligation prétorienne de porter cette mention – Exclusion du marché sans possibilité de rectifier cette omission »

Dans l'affaire C-162/16,

ayant pour objet une demande de décision préjudicielle au titre de l'article 267 TFUE, introduite par le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Molise (tribunal administratif régional du Molise, Italie), par décision du 27 janvier 2016, parvenue à la Cour le 18 mars 2016, dans la procédure

Spinosa Costruzioni Generali SpA,

Melfi Srl

contre

Comune di Monteroduni,

en présence de :

I.c.i Impresa Costruzioni Industriali Srl e.a.,

Alba Costruzioni ScpA,

Ottoerre Group Srl,

LA COUR (sixième chambre),

composée de M. A. Arabadjiev, faisant fonction de président de chambre, MM. C. G. Fernlund et S. Rodin (rapporteur), juges, avocat général : M. M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

greffier : M. A. Calot Escobar,

vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée, conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation des principes de protection de la confiance légitime et de sécurité juridique, lus en combinaison avec les principes de la libre circulation des marchandises, de la liberté d'établissement, de la libre prestation de services, d'égalité de traitement, de non-discrimination, de reconnaissance mutuelle, de proportionnalité, de transparence, repris par la directive 2014/24/UE, du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014 sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE (JO 2014, L 94, p. 65).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre de deux litiges opposant, respectivement, Spinosa Costruzioni Generali SpA et Melfi Srl au Comune di Monteroduni (commune de Monteroduni, Italie) au sujet des décisions relatives à l'attribution d'un marché public de travaux.

Le cadre juridique

Le droit de l'Union

3 L'article 2 de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO 2004, L 134, p. 114), disposait :

« Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité, de manière non discriminatoire et agissent avec transparence. »

4 Aux termes de l'article 18, paragraphe 1, premier alinéa, de la directive 2014/24 :

« Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité et sans discrimination et agissent d'une manière transparente et proportionnée. »

5 L'article 56, paragraphe 3, de cette directive prévoit :

« Lorsque les informations ou les documents qui doivent être soumis par les opérateurs économiques sont ou semblent incomplets ou erronés ou lorsque certains documents sont manquants, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent, sauf disposition contraire du droit national mettant en œuvre la présente directive, demander aux opérateurs économiques concernés de présenter, compléter, clarifier ou préciser les informations ou les documents concernés dans un délai approprié, à condition que ces demandes respectent pleinement les principes d'égalité de traitement et transparence. »

Le droit italien

6 L'article 86, paragraphe 3 bis, du decreto legislativo n. 163 – Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (décret législatif n° 163, portant sur le code des marchés publics de travaux, de services et de fournitures en application des directives 2004/17/CE et 2004/18/CE), du 12 avril 2006 (supplément ordinaire à la GURI n° 100, du 2 mai 2006), tel que modifié par le decreto legislativo n° 152 (décret législatif n° 152), du 11 septembre 2008 (supplément ordinaire à la GURI n° 231, du 2 octobre 2008) (ci-après le « décret législatif n° 163/2006 »), dispose :

« Lors de la préparation des appels d'offres et pour l'évaluation de l'anomalie des offres dans les procédures de passation de marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, les entités adjudicatrices sont tenues de déterminer si la valeur économique est adéquate et suffisante au regard du coût du travail et du coût afférent à la sécurité, lequel doit être spécifiquement mentionné et être raisonnable au regard de l'ampleur et des caractéristiques des travaux, des services ou des fournitures. Aux fins du présent paragraphe, le coût du travail est fixé périodiquement, dans des tableaux spéciaux, par le ministre du Travail et de la Prévoyance sociale, sur la base des valeurs économiques prévues par la négociation collective conclue par les syndicats comparativement les plus représentatifs, des normes en matière de prévoyance et d'assistance, des différents secteurs commerciaux et des différentes zones territoriales. En l'absence de convention collective applicable, le coût du travail est établi en fonction de la convention collective du secteur commercial le plus proche de celui concerné. »

7 Aux termes de l'article 87, paragraphe 4, du décret législatif n° 163/2006 :

« Ne sont pas admises les justifications concernant les charges de sécurité au titre de l'article 131, ainsi que le plan de sécurité et de coordination visé à l'article 12 du décret législatif n° 494 du 14 août 1996, et l'évaluation y afférente des coûts au sens de l'article 7 du décret n° 222 du président de la République du 3 juillet 2003. Lors de l'évaluation de l'anomalie, le pouvoir adjudicateur tient compte

des coûts afférents à la sécurité, qui doivent être spécifiquement mentionnés dans l'offre et être raisonnables au regard de l'ampleur et des caractéristiques des services ou des fournitures. »

8 L'article 26, paragraphe 6, du decreto legislativo n. 81 – Attuazione dell'articolo 1 della legge 3 agosto 2007, n. 123, in materia di tutela della salute e della sicurezza nei luoghi di lavoro (décret législatif n° 81, – Mise en œuvre de l'article 1 de la loi du 3 août 2007, n° 123, dans le cadre de la réglementation concernant la protection de la santé des travailleurs et de la sécurité sur les lieux de travail), du 9 avril 2008, dispose :

« Lors de la préparation des appels d'offres et pour l'évaluation de l'anomalie des offres dans les procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, les entités adjudicatrices sont tenues de déterminer si la valeur économique est adéquate et suffisante au regard du coût du travail et du coût afférent à la sécurité, lequel doit être spécifiquement mentionné et être raisonnable au regard de l'ampleur et des caractéristiques des travaux, des services ou des fournitures. Aux fins du présent paragraphe, le coût du travail est fixé périodiquement, dans des tableaux spéciaux, par le ministre du Travail, de la Santé et des Politiques sociales, sur la base des valeurs économiques prévues par la négociation collective conclue par les syndicats comparativement les plus représentatifs, des normes en matière de prévoyance et d'assistance, des différents secteurs commerciaux et des différentes zones territoriales. En l'absence de convention collective applicable, le coût du travail est établi en fonction de la convention collective du secteur commercial le plus proche de celui concerné. »

Les litiges au principal et la question préjudicielle

9 La commune de Monteroduni a lancé une procédure d'appel d'offres ouverte, complétée ultérieurement, aux fins de l'attribution d'un marché public de travaux ayant pour objet la « réalisation de la viabilité et des services en réseaux de la zone pour les installations de production » situés sur son territoire. Le cahier des charges de ce marché prévoyait que pouvaient participer à cette procédure les entreprises détenant la qualification dite « SOA », inscrites dans certaines catégories.

10 Quatre concurrents ont participé à l'appel d'offres. Par une décision du 5 août 2015, le marché a été attribué à l'association temporaire d'entreprises en constitution, composée d'I.c.i. Impresa Costruzioni Industriali Srl et d'Alba Costruzioni ScpA.

11 Spinosa Costruzioni Generali a été classée en deuxième position et Melfi a été classée en troisième position.

12 Spinosa Costruzioni Generali et Melfi ont chacune saisi le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Molise (tribunal administratif régional du Molise, Italie) d'un recours tendant à l'annulation de cette décision, à la réadmission à la procédure d'appel d'offres ainsi qu'à la réparation du préjudice qu'elles estiment avoir subi.

13 Par un arrêt n° 3 du 20 mars 2015, rendu en assemblée plénière, le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État, Italie) aurait considéré que, dans le cadre des procédures de passation de marchés publics de travaux, les soumissionnaires devaient obligatoirement mentionner, dans leur « offre économique », les coûts internes de sécurité au sein de l'entreprise, sous peine d'exclusion de la procédure, et cela même si cette obligation et les conséquences de son non-respect n'étaient pas prévues dans les documents de marché.

14 Par un arrêt n° 9 du 2 novembre 2015, l'assemblée plénière du Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État), confirmant son interprétation, aurait précisé que, « en cas de défaut de mention des coûts de l'entreprise afférents à la sécurité, les pouvoirs relatifs à l'assistance à l'établissement du dossier ne peuvent pas être valablement exercés, notamment pour les procédures dans lesquelles la phase de la soumission des offres s'est achevée avant la publication de l'arrêt de l'assemblée plénière n° 3 de 2015 ».

15 Dans ces conditions, le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Molise (tribunal administratif régional du Molise) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour la question préjudicielle suivante :

« Les principes communautaires de protection de la confiance légitime et de sécurité juridique, en combinaison avec les principes de libre circulation des marchandises, de liberté d'établissement et de libre prestation de services, qui sont énoncés dans le traité FUE, ainsi que les principes qui en découlent, tels que l'égalité de traitement, la non-discrimination, la reconnaissance mutuelle, la proportionnalité et la transparence, énoncés (en dernier lieu) dans la directive 2014/24, s'opposent-ils à une réglementation nationale, comme la réglementation italienne résultant des dispositions combinées de l'article 87, paragraphe 4, et de l'article 86, paragraphe 3 bis, du décret législatif n° 163/2006 ainsi que de l'article 26, paragraphe 6, du décret législatif n° 81 de 2008, telles qu'interprétées par les arrêts n^{os} 3 et 9 rendus en 2015 par l'assemblée plénière du Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État) dans sa fonction d'interprétation uniforme du droit, conformément à l'article 99 du code de procédure administrative, en vertu de laquelle le défaut de mention, dans les offres économiques d'une procédure de passation de marchés publics de travaux, des coûts de sécurité au sein de l'entreprise entraîne en tout état de cause l'exclusion de l'entreprise soumissionnaire, même dans le cas où l'obligation de mention séparée n'a été spécifiée ni dans la réglementation de l'appel d'offres ni dans le formulaire annexé à remplir pour la soumission des offres, et même indépendamment de la circonstance que, du point de vue substantiel, l'offre respecte les coûts minimums de sécurité au sein de l'entreprise ? »

Sur la question préjudicielle

Observations liminaires

16 Conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour, lorsqu'une question posée à titre préjudiciel est identique à une question sur laquelle celle-ci a déjà statué, lorsque la réponse à une telle question peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence ou lorsque la réponse à la question posée à titre préjudiciel ne laisse place à aucun doute raisonnable, la Cour peut, à tout moment, sur proposition du juge rapporteur, l'avocat général entendu, décider de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

17 Dans son arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404), la Cour a été amenée à statuer sur des questions en substance identiques à celles qui sont soulevées dans la présente affaire par le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Molise (tribunal administratif régional du Molise).

18 Les réponses apportées par cet arrêt étant pleinement transposables à la présente affaire, il y a lieu de faire application de la disposition procédurale susmentionnée.

Sur la directive applicable

19 À titre liminaire, il convient de rappeler que l'arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404), procède à l'interprétation des dispositions de la directive 2004/18. Cette directive a été abrogée par la directive 2014/24, avec effet au 18 avril 2016.

20 L'article 90 de la directive 2014/24 dispose que les États membres doivent mettre en vigueur les dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives nécessaires pour se conformer à cette directive au plus tard le 18 avril 2016, sous réserve de certaines exceptions dont, notamment, celles relatives aux marchés publics électroniques, pour lesquelles le délai de transposition est fixé au 18 octobre 2018.

21 En conséquence, à la date des faits en cause au principal, la directive 2004/18 était encore applicable, de sorte qu'il convient d'interpréter la demande de décision préjudicielle comme visant à l'interprétation de celle-ci et non à celle de la directive 2014/24.

Sur le fond

22 Par sa question, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence, tels que mis en œuvre par la directive 2004/18, doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un soumissionnaire de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect, par celui-ci, de l'obligation d'indiquer de façon distincte dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – dont le non-respect est sanctionné par l'exclusion de la procédure – qui résulte non pas expressément des documents de marché ou de la réglementation nationale, mais d'une interprétation de cette réglementation ainsi que du comblement des lacunes présentées par lesdits documents, par la juridiction nationale.

23 Afin de répondre à cette question, il importe, à titre liminaire, de rappeler, d'une part, que le principe d'égalité de traitement impose que les soumissionnaires disposent des mêmes chances dans la formulation des termes de leurs offres et implique donc que ces offres soient soumises aux mêmes conditions pour tous les soumissionnaires. D'autre part, l'obligation de transparence, qui en constitue le corollaire, a pour but de garantir l'absence de risque de favoritisme et d'arbitraire de la part du pouvoir adjudicateur (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 36 et jurisprudence citée).

24 Cette obligation implique que toutes les conditions et les modalités de la procédure d'attribution soient formulées de manière claire, précise et univoque dans l'avis de marché ou dans le cahier des charges, de façon, premièrement, à permettre à tous les soumissionnaires raisonnablement informés et normalement diligents d'en comprendre la portée exacte et de les interpréter de la même manière et, deuxièmement, à mettre le pouvoir adjudicateur en mesure de vérifier effectivement si les offres des soumissionnaires correspondent aux critères régissant le marché en cause (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 36 et jurisprudence citée).

25 De même, la Cour a précisé que les principes de transparence et d'égalité de traitement exigent que les conditions de fond et de procédure concernant la participation à un marché soient clairement définies au préalable et rendues publiques, en particulier les obligations pesant sur les soumissionnaires, afin que ceux-ci puissent connaître exactement les contraintes de la procédure et être assurés du fait que les mêmes contraintes valent pour tous les concurrents (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 37 et jurisprudence citée).

26 En outre, il y a lieu de relever que la directive 2004/18, à son annexe VII A portant sur les informations qui doivent figurer dans les avis pour les marchés publics, dans sa partie relative aux « Avis de marchés », point 17, prévoit que les « [c]ritères de sélection concernant la situation personnelle des opérateurs économiques qui peuvent entraîner l'exclusion de ces derniers et [les] informations requises prouvant qu'ils ne relèvent pas des cas justifiant l'exclusion » de la procédure de passation du marché en cause doivent être énoncés dans l'avis de marché (voir arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 38).

27 Dans les litiges au principal, la juridiction de renvoi précise que l'obligation d'indiquer de manière distincte dans l'offre les coûts de l'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail, sous peine d'exclusion de la procédure de passation du marché, n'était prévue ni dans l'avis de marché ni explicitement dans la loi.

28 Ainsi que l'expose cette juridiction, cette obligation résulterait de l'interprétation de la réglementation nationale par le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État).

29 Il convient de relever que, en application de l'article 27, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2004/18, le pouvoir adjudicateur peut indiquer ou peut être obligé par un État membre d'indiquer dans le cahier des charges l'organisme ou les organismes auprès desquels les candidats ou les soumissionnaires peuvent obtenir les informations pertinentes sur les obligations relatives à la fiscalité, à la protection de l'environnement, aux dispositions de protection et aux conditions de travail qui sont en vigueur dans l'État membre. Toutefois, il ne résulte pas des dispositions de cette directive, notamment des articles 49 à 51 de celle-ci, que l'absence d'indications par les soumissionnaires du respect de ces obligations entraînerait automatiquement l'exclusion de la procédure de passation (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 43).

30 Une condition subordonnant le droit de participer à une procédure de marché public qui découlerait de l'interprétation du droit national et de la pratique d'une autorité, telle que celle en cause au principal, serait particulièrement préjudiciable pour les soumissionnaires établis dans d'autres États membres, dans la mesure où leur niveau de connaissance du droit national et de son interprétation ainsi que de la pratique des autorités nationales ne peut être comparé à celui des soumissionnaires nationaux (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 46).

31 Dans l'hypothèse où, comme dans les litiges au principal, une condition de participation à la procédure de passation du marché, sous peine d'exclusion de cette dernière, n'est pas expressément prévue par les documents du marché et où cette condition ne peut être identifiée que par une interprétation jurisprudentielle du droit national, le pouvoir adjudicateur peut accorder au soumissionnaire exclu un délai suffisant pour régulariser son omission (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 50).

32 Il résulte de l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent qu'il convient de répondre à la question posée que le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence, tels que mis en œuvre par la directive 2004/18, doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un soumissionnaire de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect par celui-ci de l'obligation d'indiquer de façon distincte dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – dont le non-respect est sanctionné par l'exclusion de la procédure – qui résulte non pas expressément des documents de marché ou de la réglementation nationale, mais d'une interprétation de cette réglementation et du comblement des lacunes présentées par lesdits documents, par la juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort. Les principes d'égalité de traitement et de proportionnalité doivent également être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas au fait d'accorder à un tel soumissionnaire la possibilité de remédier à la situation et de satisfaire à ladite obligation dans un délai fixé par le pouvoir adjudicateur.

Sur les dépens

33 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (sixième chambre) dit pour droit :

Le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence, tels que mis en œuvre par la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un soumissionnaire de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect par celui-ci de l'obligation d'indiquer de façon distincte dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – dont le non-respect est sanctionné par l'exclusion de la procédure – qui résulte non pas expressément des documents de marché ou de la réglementation nationale, mais d'une interprétation de cette réglementation et du comblement des lacunes présentées par lesdits documents, par la juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort. Les principes d'égalité de traitement et de proportionnalité doivent également être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas au fait d'accorder à un tel soumissionnaire la possibilité de remédier à la situation et de satisfaire à ladite obligation dans un délai fixé par le pouvoir adjudicateur.

Signatures

---

* Langue de procédure : l'italien.

ORDONNANCE DE LA COUR (sixième chambre)

10 novembre 2016 (*)

« Renvoi préjudiciel – Article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour – Marchés publics – Directive 2004/18/CE – Directive 2014/24/UE – Participation à un appel d'offres – Soumissionnaire ayant omis de mentionner dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – Obligation prétorienne de porter cette mention – Exclusion du marché sans possibilité de rectifier cette omission »

Dans l'affaire C-140/16,

ayant pour objet une demande de décision préjudicielle au titre de l'article 267 TFUE, introduite par le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per le Marche (tribunal administratif régional des Marches, Italie), par décision du 5 février 2016, parvenue à la Cour le 7 mars 2016, dans la procédure

Edra Costruzioni Soc. coop.,

Edilfac Srl

contre

Comune di Maiolati Spontini,

en présence de :

Torelli Dottori SpA,

LA COUR (sixième chambre),

composée de M. A. Arabadjiev, faisant fonction de président de chambre, MM. C. G. Fernlund et S. Rodin (rapporteur), juges, avocat général : M. M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

greffier : M. A. Calot Escobar,

vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée, conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation des principes de protection de la confiance légitime et de sécurité juridique, lus en combinaison avec les principes de la libre circulation des marchandises, de la liberté d'établissement, de la libre prestation de services, d'égalité de traitement, de non-discrimination, de reconnaissance mutuelle, de proportionnalité, de transparence, repris par la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE (JO 2014, L 94, p. 65).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre de deux litiges opposant, respectivement, Edra Costruzioni Soc. coop. et Edilfac Srl au Comune di Maiolati Spontini (commune de Maiolati Spontini, Italie) au sujet des décisions d'exclusion de ces sociétés de la procédure de passation d'un marché public et de l'attribution de ce marché à une entreprise tierce.

Le cadre juridique

Le droit de l'Union

3 L'article 2 de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO 2004, L 134, p. 114), disposait :

« Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité, de manière non discriminatoire et agissent avec transparence. »

4 Aux termes de l'article 18, paragraphe 1, premier alinéa, de la directive 2014/24 :

« Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité et sans discrimination et agissent d'une manière transparente et proportionnée. »

5 L'article 56, paragraphe 3, de cette directive prévoit :

« Lorsque les informations ou les documents qui doivent être soumis par les opérateurs économiques sont ou semblent incomplets ou erronés ou lorsque certains documents sont manquants, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent, sauf disposition contraire du droit national mettant en œuvre la présente directive, demander aux opérateurs économiques concernés de présenter, compléter, clarifier ou préciser les informations ou les documents concernés dans un délai approprié, à condition que ces demandes respectent pleinement les principes d'égalité de traitement et transparence. »

Le droit italien

6 L'article 86, paragraphe 3 bis, du decreto legislativo n. 163 – Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (décret législatif n° 163, portant sur le code des marchés publics de travaux, de services et de fournitures en application des directives 2004/17/CE et 2004/18/CE), du 12 avril 2006 (supplément ordinaire à la GURI n° 100, du 2 mai 2006), tel que modifié par le decreto legislativo n. 152 (décret législatif n° 152), du 11 septembre 2008 (supplément ordinaire à la GURI n° 231, du 2 octobre 2008) (ci-après le « décret législatif n° 163/2006 »), dispose :

« Lors de la préparation des appels d'offres et pour l'évaluation de l'anomalie des offres dans les procédures de passation de marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, les entités adjudicatrices sont tenues de déterminer si la valeur économique est adéquate et suffisante au regard du coût du travail et du coût afférent à la sécurité, lequel doit être spécifiquement mentionné et être raisonnable au regard de l'ampleur et des caractéristiques des travaux, des services ou des fournitures. Aux fins du présent paragraphe, le coût du travail est fixé périodiquement, dans des tableaux spéciaux, par le ministre du Travail et de la Prévoyance sociale, sur la base des valeurs économiques prévues par la négociation collective conclue par les syndicats comparativement les plus représentatifs, des normes en matière de prévoyance et d'assistance, des différents secteurs commerciaux et des différentes zones territoriales. En l'absence de convention collective applicable, le coût du travail est établi en fonction de la convention collective du secteur commercial le plus proche de celui concerné. »

7 Aux termes de l'article 87, paragraphe 4, du décret législatif n° 163/2006 :

« Ne sont pas admises les justifications concernant les charges de sécurité au titre de l'article 131, ainsi que le plan de sécurité et de coordination visé à l'article 12 du décret législatif n° 494 du 14 août 1996, et l'évaluation y afférente des coûts au sens de l'article 7 du décret n° 222 du président de la République du 3 juillet 2003. Lors de l'évaluation de l'anomalie, le pouvoir adjudicateur tient compte des coûts afférents à la sécurité, qui doivent être spécifiquement mentionnés dans l'offre et être raisonnables au regard de l'ampleur et des caractéristiques des services ou des fournitures. »

8 L'article 26, paragraphe 6, du decreto legislativo n. 81 – Attuazione dell'articolo 1 della legge 3 agosto 2007, n. 123, in materia di tutela della salute e della sicurezza nei luoghi di lavoro (décret législatif n° 81, – Mise en œuvre de l'article 1 de la loi du 3 août 2007, n° 123, dans le cadre de la réglementation concernant la protection de la santé des travailleurs et de la sécurité sur les lieux de travail), du 9 avril 2008, dispose :

« Lors de la préparation des appels d'offres et pour l'évaluation de l'anomalie des offres dans les procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, les entités adjudicatrices sont tenues de déterminer si la valeur économique est adéquate et suffisante au regard du coût du travail et du coût afférent à la sécurité, lequel doit être spécifiquement mentionné et être raisonnable au regard de l'ampleur et des caractéristiques des travaux, des services ou des fournitures. Aux fins du présent paragraphe, le coût du travail est fixé périodiquement, dans des tableaux spéciaux, par le ministre du Travail, de la Santé et des Politiques sociales, sur la base des valeurs économiques prévues par la négociation collective conclue par les syndicats comparativement les plus représentatifs, des normes en matière de prévoyance et d'assistance, des différents secteurs commerciaux et des différentes zones territoriales. En l'absence de convention collective applicable, le coût du travail est établi en fonction de la convention collective du secteur commercial le plus proche de celui concerné. »

Le litige au principal et la question préjudicielle

9 Par un avis de marché du 22 avril 2015, la commune de Maiolati Spontini a lancé une procédure d'appel d'offres ouverte en vue de l'attribution d'un marché public de travaux ayant pour objet la construction du nouveau complexe scolaire. La valeur de base de ce marché était de 3 250 179,50 euros. Le critère d'attribution retenu était celui de l'offre économiquement la plus avantageuse.

10 Le délai de dépôt des offres a expiré le 22 juin 2015.

11 Edra Costruzioni et Edilfac ont rédigé leurs offres selon les indications figurant dans le cahier des charges du marché en cause.

12 Après l'évaluation de leurs offres techniques, Edra Costruzioni et Edilfac ont été exclues de la procédure de passation, au seul motif que leurs offres économiques ne mentionnaient pas les coûts internes de sécurité au travail. L'obligation de faire figurer ces coûts dans les offres n'était pas prévue dans les documents de marché, mais résulterait, selon la juridiction de renvoi, de la réglementation nationale telle qu'elle a été interprétée par le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État, Italie) dans son arrêt n° 3 du 20 mars 2015, rendu en assemblée plénière.

13 Par cet arrêt, le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État) aurait considéré que, dans le cadre des procédures de passation de marchés publics de travaux, les soumissionnaires devaient obligatoirement mentionner, dans leur « offre économique », les coûts internes de sécurité au sein de l'entreprise, sous peine d'exclusion de la procédure, et cela même si cette obligation et les conséquences de son non-respect n'étaient pas prévues dans les documents de marché.

14 Par un arrêt n° 9 du 2 novembre 2015, l'assemblée plénière du Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État), confirmant son interprétation, aurait précisé :

« En cas de défaut de mention des charges de sécurité de l'entreprise, les pouvoirs relatifs à l'assistance à l'établissement du dossier ne peuvent pas être valablement exercés, notamment pour les procédures dans lesquelles la phase de la soumission des offres s'est achevée avant la publication de l'arrêt de l'assemblée plénière n° 3 de 2015. »

15 La commune de Maiolati Spontini, en application de cet arrêt du 2 novembre 2015, a refusé aux requérantes au principal, lors de l'adjudication définitive du marché en cause, l'exercice de l'assistance à l'établissement du dossier.

16 Edra Costruzioni et Edilfac ont, chacune, formé un recours devant le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per le Marche (tribunal administratif régional des Marches, Italie) aux fins d'obtenir l'annulation des décisions les excluant de la procédure de passation du marché en cause et de celle attribuant le marché à une entreprise tierce, la réadmission à la procédure d'appel d'offres ainsi que la réparation du préjudice qu'elles estiment avoir subi.

17 Cette juridiction précise qu'elle a rejeté la demande en référé formée par Edra Costruzioni, dans la mesure où les décisions du pouvoir adjudicateur dont la suspension était demandée procédaient de la stricte application des arrêts susmentionnés du Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État).

18 Dans ces conditions, le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per le Marche (tribunal administratif régional des Marches) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour la question préjudicielle suivante :

« Les principes communautaires de protection de la confiance légitime et de sécurité juridique, en combinaison avec les principes de libre circulation des marchandises, de liberté d'établissement et de libre prestation de services, qui sont énoncés dans le traité FUE, ainsi que les principes qui en découlent, tels que l'égalité de traitement, la non-discrimination, la reconnaissance mutuelle, la proportionnalité et la transparence, énoncés (en dernier lieu) dans la directive 2014/24, s'opposent-ils à une réglementation nationale, comme la réglementation italienne résultant des dispositions combinées de l'article 87, paragraphe 4, et de l'article 86, paragraphe 3 bis, du décret législatif n° 163/2006 ainsi que de l'article 26, paragraphe 6, du décret législatif n° 81 de 2008, telles qu'interprétées par les arrêts n^{os} 3 et 9 rendus en 2015 par l'assemblée plénière du Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État) dans sa fonction d'interprétation uniforme du droit, conformément à l'article 99 du code de procédure administrative, en vertu de laquelle le défaut de mention, dans les offres économiques d'une procédure de passation de marchés publics de travaux, des coûts de sécurité au sein de l'entreprise entraîne en tout état de cause l'exclusion de l'entreprise soumissionnaire, sans la possibilité d'une assistance à l'établissement du dossier et [d'une procédure] contradictoire, même dans le cas où l'obligation de mention séparée n'a été spécifiée ni dans la réglementation de l'appel d'offres ni dans le formulaire annexé à remplir pour la soumission des offres, et même indépendamment de la circonstance que, du point de vue substantiel, l'offre respecte effectivement les coûts minimums de sécurité au sein de l'entreprise ? »

Sur la question préjudicielle

Observations liminaires

19 Conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour, lorsqu'une question posée à titre préjudiciel est identique à une question sur laquelle celle-ci a déjà statué, lorsque la réponse à une telle question peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence ou lorsque la réponse à la question posée à titre préjudiciel ne laisse place à aucun doute raisonnable, la Cour peut, à tout moment, sur proposition du juge rapporteur, l'avocat général entendu, décider de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

20 Dans son arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404), la Cour a été amenée à statuer sur des questions en substance identiques à celles qui sont soulevées dans la présente affaire par le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per le Marche (tribunal administratif régional des Marches).

21 Les réponses apportées par cet arrêt étant pleinement transposables à la présente affaire, il y a lieu de faire application de la disposition procédurale susmentionnée.

Sur la directive applicable

22 À titre liminaire, il convient de rappeler que l'arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404), procède à l'interprétation des dispositions de la directive 2004/18. Cette directive a été abrogée par la directive 2014/24, avec effet au 18 avril 2016.

23 L'article 90 de la directive 2014/24 dispose que les États membres doivent mettre en vigueur les dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives nécessaires pour se conformer à cette directive au plus tard le 18 avril 2016, sous réserve de certaines exceptions dont, notamment, celles relatives aux marchés publics électroniques, pour lesquelles le délai de transposition est fixé au 18 octobre 2018.

24 En conséquence, à la date des faits en cause au principal, la directive 2004/18 était encore applicable, de sorte qu'il convient d'interpréter la demande de décision préjudicielle comme visant à l'interprétation de celle-ci et non à celle de la directive 2014/24.

Sur le fond

25 Par sa question, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence, tels que mis en œuvre par la directive 2004/18, doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un soumissionnaire de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect, par celui-ci, de l'obligation d'indiquer de façon distincte dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – dont le non-respect est sanctionné par l'exclusion de la procédure – qui résulte non pas expressément des documents de marché ou de la réglementation nationale, mais d'une interprétation de cette réglementation et du comblement des lacunes présentées par lesdits documents, par la juridiction nationale.

26 Afin de répondre à cette question, il importe, à titre liminaire, de rappeler, d'une part, que le principe d'égalité de traitement impose que les soumissionnaires disposent des mêmes chances dans la formulation des termes de leurs offres et implique donc que ces offres soient soumises aux mêmes conditions pour tous les soumissionnaires. D'autre part, l'obligation de transparence, qui en constitue le corollaire, a pour but de garantir l'absence de risque de favoritisme et d'arbitraire de la part du pouvoir adjudicateur (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 36 et jurisprudence citée).

27 Cette obligation implique que toutes les conditions et les modalités de la procédure d'attribution soient formulées de manière claire, précise et univoque dans l'avis de marché ou dans le cahier des charges, de façon, premièrement, à permettre à tous les soumissionnaires raisonnablement informés et normalement diligents d'en comprendre la portée exacte et de les interpréter de la même manière et, deuxièmement, à mettre le pouvoir adjudicateur en mesure de vérifier effectivement si les offres des soumissionnaires correspondent aux critères régissant le marché en cause (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 36 et jurisprudence citée).

28 De même, la Cour a précisé que les principes de transparence et d'égalité de traitement exigent que les conditions de fond et de procédure concernant la participation à un marché soient clairement définies au préalable et rendues publiques, en particulier les obligations pesant sur les soumissionnaires, afin que ceux-ci puissent connaître exactement les contraintes de la procédure et être assurés du fait que les mêmes contraintes valent pour tous les concurrents (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 37 et jurisprudence citée).

29 En outre, il y a lieu de relever que la directive 2004/18, à son annexe VII A portant sur les informations qui doivent figurer dans les avis pour les marchés publics, dans sa partie relative aux « Avis de marchés », point 17, prévoit que les « [c]ritères de sélection concernant la situation personnelle des opérateurs économiques qui peuvent entraîner l'exclusion de ces derniers et [les] informations requises prouvant qu'ils ne relèvent pas des cas justifiant l'exclusion » de la procédure de passation du marché en cause doivent être énoncés dans l'avis de marché (voir arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 38).

30 Dans les litiges au principal, la juridiction de renvoi précise que l'obligation d'indiquer de manière distincte dans l'offre les coûts de l'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail, sous peine d'exclusion de la procédure de passation du marché, n'était prévue ni dans l'avis de marché ni explicitement dans la loi.

31 Ainsi que l'expose cette juridiction, cette obligation résulterait de l'interprétation de la réglementation nationale par le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État).

32 Il convient de relever que, en application de l'article 27, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2004/18, le pouvoir adjudicateur peut indiquer ou peut être obligé par un État membre d'indiquer dans le cahier des charges l'organisme ou les organismes auprès desquels les candidats ou les soumissionnaires peuvent obtenir les informations pertinentes sur les obligations relatives à la fiscalité, à la protection de l'environnement, aux dispositions de protection et aux conditions de travail qui sont en vigueur dans l'État membre. Toutefois, il ne résulte pas des dispositions de cette directive, notamment des articles 49 à 51 de celle-ci, que l'absence d'indications par les soumissionnaires du respect de ces obligations entraînerait automatiquement l'exclusion de la procédure de passation (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 43).

33 Une condition subordonnant le droit de participer à une procédure de marché public qui découlerait de l'interprétation du droit national et de la pratique d'une autorité, telle que celle en cause au principal, serait particulièrement préjudiciable pour les soumissionnaires établis dans d'autres États membres, dans la mesure où leur niveau de connaissance du droit national et de son interprétation ainsi que de la pratique des autorités nationales ne peut être comparé à celui des soumissionnaires nationaux (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 46).

34 Dans l'hypothèse où, comme dans les litiges au principal, une condition de participation à la procédure de passation du marché, sous peine d'exclusion de cette dernière, n'est pas expressément prévue par les documents du marché et où cette condition ne peut être identifiée que par une interprétation jurisprudentielle du droit national, le pouvoir adjudicateur peut accorder au soumissionnaire exclu un délai suffisant pour régulariser son omission (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 50).

35 Il résulte de l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent qu'il convient de répondre à la question posée que le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence, tels que mis en œuvre par la directive 2004/18, doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un soumissionnaire de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect par celui-ci de l'obligation d'indiquer de façon distincte dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – dont le non-respect est sanctionné par l'exclusion de la procédure – qui résulte non pas expressément des documents de marché ou de la réglementation nationale, mais d'une interprétation de cette réglementation et du comblement des lacunes présentées par lesdits documents, par la juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort. Les principes d'égalité de traitement et de proportionnalité doivent également être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas au fait d'accorder à un tel soumissionnaire la possibilité de remédier à la situation et de satisfaire à ladite obligation dans un délai fixé par le pouvoir adjudicateur.

Sur les dépens

36 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (sixième chambre) dit pour droit :

Le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence, tels que mis en œuvre par la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un soumissionnaire de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect par celui-ci de l'obligation d'indiquer de façon distincte dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – dont le non-respect est sanctionné par l'exclusion de la procédure – qui résulte non pas expressément des documents de marché ou de la réglementation nationale, mais d'une interprétation de cette réglementation et du comblement des lacunes présentées par lesdits documents, par la juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort. Les principes d'égalité de traitement et de proportionnalité doivent également être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas au fait d'accorder à un tel soumissionnaire la possibilité de remédier à la situation et de satisfaire à ladite obligation dans un délai fixé par le pouvoir adjudicateur.

Signatures

* Langue de procédure : l’italien.

EU:C:2017:358

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Eighth Chamber)

11 May 2017 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2004/17/EC — Principles of awarding contracts — Article 10 — Principle of equal treatment of tenderers — Requirement for contracting authorities to request tenderers to amend or supplement their tender — Right of the contracting authority to retain the bank guarantee in the event of refusal — Directive 92/13/EEC — Article 1(3) — Review procedures — Decision to award a public contract — Exclusion of a tenderer — Actions for annulment — Interest in bringing proceedings)

In Case C-131/16,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber, Poland), made by decision of 19 February 2016, received at the Court on 1 March 2016, in the proceedings

Archus sp. z o.o.,

Gama Jacek Lipik

v

Polskie Górnictwo Naftowe i Gazownictwo S.A.,

intervener:

Digital-Center sp. z o.o.,

THE COURT (Eighth Chamber), composed of M. Vilaras, President of the Chamber (Rapporteur), M. Safjan and D. Šváby, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Polskie Górnictwo Naftowe i Gazownictwo S.A., by A. Olszewska,

– the Polish Government, by B. Majczyna, acting as Agent,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by F. Di Matteo, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by K. Herrmann and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 10 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) and Article 1(3) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) (‘Directive 92/13’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Archus sp. z o.o. and Gama Jacek Lipik (together, ‘Archus and Gama’) and Polskie Górnictwo Naftowe i Gazownictwo S.A. (Polish oil extraction and gas industry company) concerning that company’s decisions rejecting their tender in the procedure for the award of a public service contract and accepting the tender submitted by Digital-Center sp. z o.o.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 provides:

‘Contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

4 Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 provides:

‘Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.’

5 The third paragraph of Article 2a(2) of Directive 92/13 provides as follows:

‘Candidates shall be deemed to be concerned if the contracting entity has not made available information about the rejection of their application before the notification of the contract award decision to the tenderers concerned.’

Polish law

6 Article 25 of the Ustawa z dnia 29 stycznia 2004 r. — Prawo zamówień publicznych (Dz. U. 2015, position 2164) (law of 29 January on public procurement) (‘the Pzp’) provides:

‘1. In the procedure for the award of a contract the contracting authority may request from economic operators only declarations and documents necessary to conduct the procedure. The declarations and documents proving that:

(1) the conditions for participation in the procedure have been fulfilled, and

(2) the tendered supplies, services or works satisfy the requirements laid down by the contracting authority, shall be indicated by the contracting authority in the contract notice, the tender specifications or the invitation to tender.

2. The President of the Council of Ministers shall determine, by order, the kinds of documents which a contracting authority can request from an economic operator and the forms in which those documents may be submitted ...’

7 Article 26(3) of the Pzp states:

‘The contracting authority shall request economic operators which within the period laid down did not submit the declarations or documents referred to in Article 25(1) required by the contracting authority, or which did not submit authorisations, which submitted declarations or documents referred to in Article 25(1) required by the contracting authority that contain errors, or which submitted incorrect authorisations, to submit them within a specified period unless, notwithstanding the submission thereof, the economic operator’s tender is to be rejected or it would be necessary to annul the procedure. The declarations and documents submitted at the request of the contracting authority must prove that the economic operator fulfils the conditions for participation in the procedure and that the tendered supplies, services or works fulfil the requirements laid down by the contracting authority, no later than on the date on which the period for submitting applications to participate in the procedure or the period for submitting tenders expires.’

8 Article 46(4)(a) of the Pzp is worded as follows:

‘The contracting authority shall retain the guarantee and interest if the economic operator, in reply to the invitation referred to in Article 26(3), has not provided, for reasons for which it is responsible, the documents or declarations referred to in Article 25(1), the authorisations, the list of entities belonging to the same group referred to in Article 24(2)(5), or the information that they do not belong to a group, or if they have not consented to the correction of an error referred to in Article 87(2)(3), which has made it impossible to select its tender as being the most advantageous.’

9 Article 87 of the Pzp provides:

‘1. During the examination and assessment of tenders the contracting authority may request an economic operator to clarify the content of submitted tenders. Negotiations between the contracting authority and an economic operator concerning the submitted tender and, subject to paragraphs 1a and 2, any changes to the content thereof shall not be permitted.

1a. During the examination and assessment of tenders in a competitive dialogue procedure the contracting authority may request economic operators to clarify and improve the content of tenders and to provide additional information; however, fundamental changes to the content of tenders or changes to the requirements contained in the tendering specifications shall not be permitted.

2. The contracting authority shall correct in the tender:

(1) obvious drafting errors,

(2) obvious calculation errors, having regard to the calculation consequences of the corrections made,

(3) any other errors consisting of inconsistency of the tender with the tendering specifications not giving rise to fundamental changes to the content of the tender — informing the economic operator whose tender has been corrected thereof without delay.’

10 Article 179(1) of the Pzp provides:

‘The legal protection measures laid down in this section shall be available to an economic operator, competition participant or other person where it has, or has had, an interest in obtaining a particular contract or sustained, or may sustain, damage as a result of the breach of the provisions of this Law by the contracting authority.’

11 Article 180(1) of the Pzp states:

‘An appeal shall be available only against action taken by the contracting authority in the procedure for the award of a contract which is inconsistent with this Law or failure to take the action which the contracting authority is required to take under this Law.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 On 3 June 2015 Polskie Górnictwo Naftowe i Gazownictwo published in the Official Journal of the European Union, under number 2015/S 105-191838, a notice of a restricted invitation to tender for the award of a public service contract for the digitalisation of documents in its central geological archives and the preparation of an electronic version of the documents available on its internal network. The subject matter of the contract consisted of scanning the paper documents in those archives, digitally processing the scanned documents and recording them on durable data carriers in common use in given digital formats and in the form of microfilms.

13 Paragraph 4.1 of the tender specification stated that tenderers had to attach two documents to their tender. One was to be a scanned copy of a document prepared by the contracting authority, recorded on a durable medium and edited in accordance with a detailed description in paragraph 4.1(a) of the specification. The other was to be a sample of 35mm microfilm containing the exposed result of the work submitted for quality assessment in A4 format and an enlargement thereof (16 times) to A O format, together with a description of the microfilming method and the technical parameters specified in paragraph 4.1(b) of the specification (‘the microfilm sample’).

14 The quality of the first document was to be assessed under the tender evaluation criteria, while the quality of the microfilm sample was to be assessed according to the ‘satisfies/does not satisfy’ rule, it being stipulated that if the sample was not satisfactory the offer was to be rejected pursuant to Article 89(1)(2) of the Pzp.

15 Tenders were also required to secure their tender by means of a deposit in the amount of PLN 20 000.

16 Two tenders were submitted in that procedure, one jointly by Archus and Gama, the other by Digital-Center.

17 On 15 October 2015 Archus and Gama, stating that there had been an inadvertent mistake, sent the contracting authority a request for correction of their tender, pursuant to Article 87(2)(3) of the Pzp, seeking to substitute a new microfilm sample for that annexed to their tender, which did not conform to the tender specifications.

18 On 17 November 2015 the contracting authority replied to that request, stating that it considered that the new microfilm sample supplemented the documents sent, pursuant to Article 26(3) of the Pzp. However, it also informed them that they had not provided information on the method for microfilming the sample and the technical parameters required in accordance with paragraph 4(1)(b) of the tender specification and, therefore, invited them to supplement that information.

19 After examination of the two microfilm samples provided by Archus and Gama, the contracting authority finally rejected their tender as not being in accordance with paragraph 4(1)(b) of the tender specification. It took the view that the samples of microfilm submitted by those companies were not readable at a minimum resolution of 200 dots per inch (dpi) from a microfilmed copy of an A O sheet. In addition, it considered that the tender submitted by Digital-Center was the most favourable.

20 Archus and Gama then brought an action before the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber, Poland) against the decisions of the contracting authority rejecting their tender and accepting Digital-Center’s tender.

21 The referring court argues, in essence, that under the national legislation on public procurement the contracting authority may require tenderers to present ‘documents and declarations’ and samples of the products which are to be supplied in connection with the call for tenders. It is also required to ask them to supplement, where appropriate, documents which are missing or which contain errors so that they comply with the requirements of the tender specification, except where the bid ought to be rejected for other reasons or where it is necessary to cancel the procedure.

22 The referring court expresses uncertainty, first, on the lawfulness of the requirement imposed on the contracting authority to invite a tenderer to supplement a document required by the tender specification or to submit a new sample in accordance with that specification, as in the case in the main proceedings, in so far as that may lead that tenderer to alter the content of his tender, which would be detrimental to the transparency of the procurement procedure. It is also uncertain as to the lawfulness of the retention of the guarantee paid by the tenderer where the tenderer does not take up the contracting authority's invitation to supplement such a document. Lastly, it questions the legal interest of Archus and Gama in the cancellation of Digital-Center's tender.

23 In those circumstances, the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (National Appeal Chamber, Poland) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Can Article 10 of [Directive 2004/17] be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority can be required to invite economic operators which have not submitted within the prescribed period (that is to say, the period specified for submitting tenders) "declarations or documents" requested by the contracting authority proving that the tendered supplies, services or works satisfy the requirements laid down by the contracting authority (that term also covering samples of the subject matter of the contract), or which submitted "declarations or documents" requested by the contracting authority containing errors, to submit "declarations or documents" (samples) which are missing or which correct errors within a specified additional period, without laying down a prohibition under which supplemented "declarations or documents" (samples) cannot alter the content of the tender?

(2) Can Article 10 of [Directive 2004/17] EC be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority can retain the deposit lodged by the economic operator if that operator, in response to the contracting authority's invitation to supplement the tender, did not submit "documents or declarations" (samples) proving that the tendered supplies, services or works satisfy the requirements laid down by the contracting authority, where that supplementation would result in a change to the content of the tender, or did not consent to the contracting authority's correction of the tender, which made it impossible to select the tender submitted by the economic operator as being the most advantageous?

(3) Must Article 1(3) of [Directive 92/13] be interpreted as meaning that "a particular contract", as referred to in that provision in the phrase "interest in obtaining a particular contract", means "a particular procedure carried out for the award of a public contract" (in this case: that published in the notice of 3 June 2015), or "the particular subject matter of the contract" (in this case: the service of digitising the contracting authority's archive documents), irrespective of whether, as a consequence of an appeal being allowed, the contracting authority will be required to annul the procedure for the award of a public contract and possibly to initiate a subsequent procedure for the award of a public contract?'

The first question

24 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the principle of equal treatment of economic operators laid down in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as precluding, in the context of a call for tenders, a contracting authority from inviting tenderers to provide the required declarations or documents which were not supplied by them within the prescribed period for the submission of tenders or to correct those declarations or documents in case of errors, without that contracting authority also being required to point out to those tenderers that they are prohibited from altering the content of the tenders submitted.

25 In that regard, it must be recalled, first of all, that the requirement for the contracting authority to observe the principle of equal treatment of tenderers which has the aim of promoting the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure (see, inter alia, judgments of 29 April 2004, Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta, C-496/99 P, EU:C:2004:236, paragraph 110, and of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 33) and which lies at the very heart of the EU rules on public procurement procedures (see, inter alia, judgments of 22 June 1993, Commission v Denmark, C-243/89, EU:C:1993:257, paragraph 33; of 25 April 1996, Commission v Belgium, C-87/94, EU:C:1996:161, paragraph 51; and of 18 October 2001, SIAC Construction, C-19/00, EU:C:2001:553, paragraph 33) means, inter alia, that tenderers must be in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the contracting authority (see judgments of 16 December 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 45, and of 24 May 2016, MT Højgaard and Züblin, C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 37).

26 That principle requires, in particular, that all tenderers are afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the tenders of all competitors must be subject to the same conditions (judgments of 25 April 1996, Commission v Belgium, C-87/94, EU:C:1996:161, paragraph 54; of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 93, and of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 33).

27 The principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency also preclude any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure, which means that, as a general rule, a tender cannot be amended after it has been submitted, whether at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderer (see, to that effect, judgments of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 36, and of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 31).

28 To enable the contracting authority to require a tenderer whose tender it regards as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications to provide clarification in that regard would be to run the risk of making the contracting authority appear to have negotiated with the tenderer on a confidential basis, in the event that that tenderer was finally successful, to the detriment of the other tenderers and in breach of the principle of equal treatment (judgment of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 37).

29 However, the Court has also previously held that the principle of equal treatment does not preclude the correction or amplification of details of a tender, where it is clear that they require clarification or where it is a question of the correction of obvious clerical errors, subject, however, to the fulfilment of certain requirements (see, to that effect, in the context of tendering procedures under Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), judgments of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraphs 35 to 45, concerning the evaluation of offers stage, and of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraphs 30 to 39, concerning the stage of pre-selection of tenderers).

30 First of all, a request for clarification of a tender, which may not be made until after the contracting authority has looked at all the tenders, must, as a general rule, be sent in an equivalent manner to all undertakings which are in the same situation and must relate to all sections of the tender which require clarification (see judgments of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovenskoand Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraphs 42 to 44, and of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraphs 34 and 35).

31 In addition, that request may not lead to the submission by a tenderer of what would appear in reality to be a new tender (see judgments of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 40, and of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 36).

32 Lastly, as a general rule, when exercising its discretion as regards the right to ask a tenderer to clarify its tender, the contracting authority must treat tenderers equally and fairly, in such a way that a request for clarification does not appear unduly to have favoured or disadvantaged the tenderer or tenderers to which the request was addressed, once the procedure for selection of tenders has been completed and in the light of its outcome (see judgments of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 41, and of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 37).

33 A request for clarification cannot, however, make up for the lack of a document or information whose production was required by the contract documents, the contracting authority being required to comply strictly with the criteria which it has itself laid down (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 40).

34 In the present case, the referring court stated, in its request for a preliminary ruling, that the tenderers had to include, as an annex to their bid, samples of digitised archive documents, which had to be prepared following the instructions set out at paragraph 4.1 of the tender specification, and had to indicate the process for the digitisation and its quality.

35 In the circumstances of the main proceedings, it was Archus and Gama as tenderers who sent the contracting authority a request for their tender to be corrected, based on Article 87(2)(3) of the Pzp, in order to replace the sample which they had annexed to their bid, which did not comply with the specifications in the tender specification, with a new microfilm sample.

36 In accordance with the case-law referred to in paragraph 29 above, a request sent by the contracting authority to a tenderer to supply the declarations and documents required cannot, in principle, have any other aim than the clarification of the tender or the correction of an obvious error vitiating the tender. It cannot, therefore, permit a tenderer generally to supply declarations and documents which were required to be sent in accordance with the tender specification and which were not sent within the time limit for tenders to be submitted. Nor can it, in accordance with the case-law referred to in paragraph 31 above, result in the presentation by a tenderer of documents containing corrections where in reality they constitute a new tender.

37 In any event, the obligation which a contracting authority may have under national law, to invite tenderers to submit the declarations and documents required which they have not sent within the time limit given for the submission of offers, or to correct those declarations and documents in the event of errors, cannot be permitted except in so far as the additions or corrections made to the initial tender do not result in a substantial amendment of that tender. It is apparent from paragraph 40 of the judgment of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others (C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191) that the initial tender cannot be amended to correct obvious clerical errors other than exceptionally and where that amendment does not result, in reality, in the proposal of a new tender.

38 It is for the referring court to determine whether, in the circumstances of the main proceedings, the substitution made by Archus and Gama remained within the limits of the correction of an obvious error vitiating its tender.

39 Consequently, the answer to the first question referred is that the principle of equal treatment of economic operators set out in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as precluding, in a public procurement procedure, the contracting authority from inviting a tenderer to submit declarations or documents whose communication was required by the tender specification and which have not been submitted within the time limit given for the submission of tenders. On the other hand, that article does not preclude the contracting authority from inviting a tenderer to clarify a tender or to correct an obvious clerical error in that tender, on condition, however, that such an invitation is sent to all tenderers in the same situation, that all tenderers are treated equally and fairly and that that clarification or correction may not be equated with the submission of a new tender, which is for the referring court to determine.

The second question

40 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 10 of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as not precluding, in circumstances such as those of the main proceedings, the contracting authority from retaining the guarantee lodged by a tenderer in a public procurement procedure, where the tenderer either did not submit the documents showing that its tender satisfied the requirements set in the tender specification by the contracting authority, because that would change the content of its offer, or did not consent to the contracting authority correcting its tender, with the consequence that its tender could not be selected.

41 According to settled case-law, the procedure laid down in Article 267 TFEU is an instrument of cooperation between the Court and the national courts, by means of which the former provides the latter with the points of interpretation of European Union law which they need in order to decide the disputes before them (see, inter alia, judgments of 12 June 2003, Schmidberger, C-112/00, EU:C:2003:333, point 30; of 15 September 2011, Unió de Pagesos de Catalunya, C-197/10, EU:C:2011:590, paragraph 16; and of 19 June 2012, Chartered Institute of Patent Attorneys, C-307/10, EU:C:2012:361, paragraph 31).

42 In the context of that cooperation, questions relating to EU law enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought is unrelated to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see, inter alia, judgments of 21 January 2003, Bacardi-Martini and Cellier des Dauphins, C-318/00, EU:C:2003:41, paragraph 43; of 15 September 2011, Unió de Pagesos de Catalunya, C-197/10, EU:C:2011:590, paragraph 17, and of 19 June 2012, Chartered Institute of Patent Attorneys, C-307/10, EU:C:2012:361, paragraph 32).

43 The Court's function in preliminary rulings is to assist in the administration of justice in the Member States and not to deliver advisory opinions on general or hypothetical questions (see, inter alia, judgments of 12 June 2003, Schmidberger, C-112/00, EU:C:2003:333, paragraph 32, and of 15 September 2011, Unió de Pagesos de Catalunya, C-197/10, EU:C:2011:590, paragraph 18).

44 It must be noted that, as is apparent from the order for reference, the circumstances of the main proceedings clearly do not correspond to either of the two scenarios envisaged by the referring court in its second question.

45 The dispute in the main proceedings essentially relates, as is clear from the consideration of the first question, to whether the contracting authority may, without disregarding the principle of equal treatment set out in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17, allow a tenderer, after his tender has been lodged, to replace a document which was required to be produced by the tender specification, in the present case a microfilm sample, where the sample sent had allegedly been sent in error. It is in no way apparent from the order for reference that Archus and Gama failed to provide the documents required by the specification or refused to consent to the contracting authority correcting their tender. It must therefore be held that the issue raised by the referring court in its second question is hypothetical.

46 The second question of the referring court must, in those circumstances, be declared to be manifestly inadmissible.

The third question

47 By its third question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 must be interpreted as meaning that the concept of 'a particular contract' within the meaning of that provision refers to a specific public procurement procedure or the actual subject matter of the contract which is to be awarded following a public procurement procedure, in a situation where only two tenders have been submitted and where the tenderer whose tender has been rejectedmay be regarded as having an interest in seeking the rejection of the tender of the other tenderer and, as a result, the initiation of a new public procurement procedure.

48 The referring court pointed out in that regard that an economic operator who has submitted a tender in a public procurement procedure does not, where his tender is rejected, have an interest in bringing proceedings against the decision awarding the public contract. Consequently, whilst a tenderer like Archus and Gama clearly has an interest in challenging a decision rejecting his tender, in so far as in such a case he retains the opportunity to be awarded the contract, on the other hand he no longer has any interest in the result of the public procurement procedure, since his tender was definitively rejected, at least where several tenders were submitted and selected.

49 It is in that context that the referring court asks whether the concept of 'a particular contract' within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 relates to the possible initiation of a new public procurement procedure.

50 It should be recalled, in that connection, that Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 provides that Member States must ensure that review procedures are available, under detailed rules which they themselves may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

51 When called upon to interpret the equivalent provisions of Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), the Court has previously held that, in a public procurement procedure, tenderers have a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bids submitted by the other tenderers with a view to obtaining the contract (see, to that effect, judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb, C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448, paragraph 33; of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 27; and of 21 December 2016, Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung und Caverion Österreich, C-355/15, EU:C:2016:988, paragraph 29), whatever the number of participants in the procedure and the number of participants who have instigated review procedures (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 29).

52 On the one hand, the exclusion of one tenderer may lead to the other being awarded the contract directly in the same procedure. On the other, if all tenderers are excluded and a new public procurement procedure is launched, each of those tenderers may participate in the new procedure and thus obtain the contract indirectly (see judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 27).

53 The principle of case-law established by the judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448) and 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199) applies to the situation at issue in the main proceedings.

54 In connection with a public procurement procedure in which two tenders have been submitted and the contracting authority has adopted two simultaneous decisions rejecting the tender of one of the tenderers and awarding the contract to the other, an action has been brought before the referring court by the unsuccessful tenderer concerning those two decisions. In that action, the unsuccessful tenderer seeks the exclusion of the tender of the successful tenderer on the ground that it does not comply with the tender specifications.

55 In such a situation, the tenderer who has brought the action must be regarded as having a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bid submitted by the successful tenderer, which may lead, where appropriate, to a finding that the contracting authority is unable to select a lawful bid (see, to that effect, judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb, C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448, paragraph 33, and of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 24).

56 That interpretation is confirmed by the provisions of Article 2a(1) and (2) of Directive 92/13, which expressly provide a right of review for tenderers who are not definitively excluded against, inter alia, award decisions taken by contracting authorities.

57 Admittedly, the Court ruled in its judgment of 21 December 2016, Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung und Caverion Österreich (C-355/15, EU:C:2016:988, paragraphs 13 to 16, 31 and 36), that a tenderer whose offer had been excluded by the contracting authority from a public procurement procedure could be refused access to a review of the decision awarding the public contract. However, the decision to exclude that tenderer had, in that case, been confirmed by a decision that had the force of res judicata before the court hearing the review of the contract award decision gave its decision, so that that tenderer had to be regarded as definitively excluded from the public procurement procedure at issue.

58 In the main proceedings, on the other hand, Archus and Gama brought an action against the decision excluding their tender and against the decision awarding the contract, which were adopted simultaneously, and cannot therefore be considered to be definitively excluded from the public procurement procedure. In such a situation, the concept of ‘a particular contract’ within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 93/13 may, where appropriate, apply to the possible initiation of a new public procurement procedure.

59 It follows from the foregoing considerations that Directive 92/13 must be interpreted as meaning that, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings in which in a public procurement procedure two tenders have been submitted and the contracting authority has adopted two simultaneous decisions rejecting the offer of one tenderer and awarding the contract to the other, the unsuccessful tenderer who brings an action against those two decisions must be able to request the exclusion of the tender of the successful tenderer, so that the concept of 'a particular contract' within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13 may, where appropriate, apply to the possible initiation of a new public procurement procedure.

Costs

60 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. The principle of equal treatment of economic operators set out in Article 10 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors must be interpreted as precluding, in a public procurement procedure, the contracting authority from inviting a tenderer to submit declarations or documents whose communication was required by the tender specification and which have not been submitted within the time limit given for the submission of tenders. On the other hand, that article does not preclude the contracting authority from inviting a tenderer to clarify a tender or to correct an obvious clerical error in that tender, on condition, however, that such an invitation is sent to all tenderers in the same situation, that all tenderers are treated equally and fairly, and that that clarification or correction may not be equated with the submission of a new tender, which is for the referring court to determine.

2. Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, must be interpreted as meaning that, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings in which, in a public procurement procedure two tenders have been submitted and the contracting authority has adopted two simultaneous decisions rejecting the offer of one tenderer and awarding the contract to the other, the unsuccessful tenderer who brings an action against those two decisions must be able to request the exclusion of the tender of the successful tenderer, so that the concept of 'a particular contract' within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13, as amended by Directive 2007/66, may, where appropriate, apply to the possible initiation of a new public procurement procedure.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Polish.

EU:C:2017:549

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Second Chamber)

13 July 2017 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 47(1), (4) and (5) — Economic and financial standing of the tenderer — Directives 89/665/EEC and 2007/66/EC — Judicial review of a decision to exclude a tenderer from a tendering procedure — Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union — Article 47 — Right to an effective remedy)

In Case C-76/16,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic), made by decision of 28 January 2016, received at the Court on 11 February 2016, in the proceedings

Ingsteel spol. s r. o.,

Metrostav a.s.

v

Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie,

intervener:

Slovenský futbalový zväz,

THE COURT (Second Chamber),

composed of M. Ilešič, President of the Chamber, A. Prechal, A. Rosas, C. Toader (Rapporteur) and E. Jarašiūnas, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– the Slovak Government, by B. Ricziová, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by A. Tokár, acting as Agent, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 21 March 2017,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 47(1)(a), (4) and (5) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p 114); Articles 1(1) and 2(3) and (6) to (8) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) (‘Directive 89/665’); and Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (‘the Charter’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between, on the one hand, Ingsteel spol. s r. o. and Metrostav a.s. (together, ‘the unsuccessful tenderer’) and, on the other hand, l’Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority, Slovak Republic) concerning a public procurement procedure launched by Slovenský futbalový zväz (Slovak Football Federation, ‘the contracting authority’).

Legal context

EU law

Directive 2004/18

3 Pursuant to Article 91 of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65), Directive 2004/18 was repealed as of 18 April 2016. Given the date of the material facts in the main proceedings, the present reference for a preliminary ruling will be considered by reference to Directive 2004/18, as in force before its repeal.

4 Recital 39 of Directive 2004/18 read as follows:

‘Verification of the suitability of tenderers, in open procedures, and of candidates, in restricted and negotiated procedures with publication of a contract notice and in the competitive dialogue, and the selection thereof, should be carried out in transparent conditions. For this purpose, non-discriminatory criteria should be indicated which the contracting authorities may use when selecting competitors and the means which economic operators may use to prove they have satisfied those criteria. In the same spirit of transparency, the contracting authority should be required, as soon as a contract is put out to competition, to indicate the selection criteria it will use and the level of specific competence it may or may not demand of the economic operators before admitting them to the procurement procedure.’

5 Article 44 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts’, provided in the second paragraph thereof as follows:

‘The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.

These minimum levels shall be indicated in the contract notice.’

6 Article 47 of that directive, entitled ‘Economic and financial standing’, provided:

‘1. Proof of an economic operator’s economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) appropriate statements from banks or, where appropriate, evidence of professional risk indemnity insurance;

…

4. Contracting authorities shall specify, in the contract notice or in the invitation to tender, which reference or references mentioned in paragraph 1 they have chosen and which other references must be provided.

5. If, for any valid reason, the economic operator is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.'

7 Article 48 of that directive set out the conditions relating to the technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators.

Directives 89/665 and 2007/66

8 Recital 36 of Directive 2007/66 states:

'This Directive respects the fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised in particular by the [Charter]. In particular, this Directive seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second subparagraphs of Article 47 of the Charter.'

9 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides:

'1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive [2004/18], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

…

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2004/18], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

…

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

…

5. Member States may require that the person concerned first seek review with the contracting authority. In that case, Member States shall ensure that the submission of such an application for review results in immediate suspension of the possibility to conclude the contract.

…

The suspension referred to in the first subparagraph shall not end before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting authority has sent a reply if fax or electronic means are used, or, if other means of communication are used, before the expiry of either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contracting authority has sent a reply, or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of a reply.'

10 Article 2 of that directive, which governs the requirements for review procedures, states:

'1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

2. The powers specified in paragraph 1 and Articles 2d and 2e may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

3. When a body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting authority, reviews a contract award decision, Member States shall ensure that the contracting authority cannot conclude the contract before the review body has made a decision on the application either for interim measures or for review. The suspension shall end no earlier than the expiry of the standstill period referred to in Article 2a(2) and Article 2d(4) and (5).

4. Except where provided for in paragraph 3 and Article 1(5), review procedures need not necessarily have an automatic suspensive effect on the contract award procedures to which they relate.

…

6. Member States may provide that, where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.

7. Except where provided for in Articles 2d to 2f, the effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract in accordance with Article 1(5), paragraph 3 of this Article or Articles 2a to 2f, the powers of the body responsible for review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

8. Member States shall ensure that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures can be effectively enforced.

9. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of [Article 267 TFEU] and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

…’

Slovak law

11 According to Article 9(3) of Law No 25/2006 on public procurement, in the version applicable in the case under consideration:

‘In procedures for the award of public contracts, the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination between tenderers and competitors, transparency, economy and effectiveness shall apply.’

12 Article 27 of that law, entitled ‘Economic and financial standing’, provides as follows:

‘1. Financial and economic standing shall generally be proved by:

(a) a statement made by a bank or a statement by a branch of a foreign bank, such as a loan commitment by the bank or a branch of a foreign bank.

…

3. If the tenderer or competitor, for objective reasons, is not in a position to demonstrate his economic and financial standing by means of financial or economic references, the contracting authority may agree to such proof being provided by means of any other document.’

13 Article 32(1)(b) of that law is worded as follows:

‘The contracting authority shall specify in the contract notice the selection criteria concerning

…

(b) economic and financial standing and references referred to in Article 27

…’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

14 By notice published on 16 November 2013 in the supplement to Official Journal of the European Union No 223/2013 and in the Slovak Official Journal for Procurement Notices of the same date under reference 18627-MSP, the contracting authority launched a call for tenders with a view to the award of a public contract relating to restructuring, modernisation and construction works at 16 football stadiums (‘the contract’).

15 According to the information provided by the referring court in answer to a request for clarification, the value of the contract was EUR 25 500 000, plus value added tax (VAT).

16 As regards the requirements in respect of economic and financial standing, the contract notice, with reference to Article 27(1)(a) of Law No 25/2006, required the participants in the tendering procedure to provide a statement from a Slovak bank or a Slovak branch office of a foreign bank confirming that it would grant them credit in the amount of at least EUR 3 000 000, a sum which should be available to them throughout the entire duration of the contract. That statement was to be in the form of a loan agreement or credit facility agreement and have been given by a person authorised to commit the bank in question.

17 The unsuccessful tenderer took part in that call for tenders. To show that it met the requirements referred to in the preceding paragraph, it provided a statement, given by a bank, which contained information on the opening of a current-account credit facility for an amount exceeding EUR 5 000 000, and a sworn statement from the tenderer certifying that, if its bid was successful, it would have available in its current account, at the time of conclusion of the contract for works and throughout the period of performance of the contract, a minimum amount of EUR 3 000 000.

18 The unsuccessful tenderer claimed that it was objectively impossible for it to satisfy the requirements relating to economic and financial standing set by the contracting authority in any other way, drawing on statements made by Slovak banks questioned by the latter to the effect that a binding undertaking to grant credit, such as that required by the contract notice, could be issued only after approval of the transaction covered by the credit and satisfaction of all the requirements laid down by the bank for the conclusion of a loan agreement.

19 Taking the view that the unsuccessful tenderer had not satisfied the requirements, particularly those in respect of economic and financial standing referred to in Article 27(1)(a) of Law No 25/2006, the contracting authority decided to exclude it from the tendering procedure. That decision was confirmed by the Public Procurement Regulatory Authority. The Krajský súd de Bratislava (Bratislava Regional Court, Slovakia) having dismissed the action brought against that decision by judgment of 13 January 2015, the unsuccessful tenderer brought an appeal against that judgment before the referring court, the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic).

20 The referring court questions the legality of the decision of the contracting authority which — despite the fact that the unsuccessful tenderer had, at the time of the tendering procedure, a commitment from a bank for the provision of credit in the amount of EUR 5 000 000 — considered that it did not fulfil the criterion with regards to economic and financial standing laid down in the contract notice.

21 The referring court is also uncertain whether economic and financial standing could be shown by other means and, if so, whether a sworn statement provided by the unsuccessful tenderer certifying that, should its bid be successful, it would, at the time of conclusion of the contract for works and throughout the period of performance of the contract, have available in its account a minimum amount of EUR 3 000 000, would suffice for that purpose.

22 Lastly, the referring court is uncertain whether the judicial remedy available to the unsuccessful tenderer at national level may be regarded as 'effective' within the meaning of EU law, since the subject matter of the action has ceased to exist, the successful tenderer having performed the contract almost in its entirety.

23 In those circumstances, the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic) decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) May the conduct of a national authority, which finds that a tenderer for a contract with an estimated value of EUR 3 000 000 does not satisfy the selection criterion relating to economic and financial standing, even though a sworn statement submitted by the tenderer and a statement provided by its bank certify that it will be able to draw on funds under a secured loan, which can be used for any purpose, up to a maximum amount exceeding the value of the contract, be considered compatible with the objective in particular of Article 47(1)(a) and (4) of Directive [2004/18]?

(2) Where, in a binding undertaking to grant credit, a bank operating on the banking-services market of a Member State, makes the release of funds conditional upon fulfilment of conditions for granting credit which are not specifically indicated in the loan agreement at the time of the tendering procedure, does such conduct constitute, for the purpose of Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18, a "valid reason" why the tenderer cannot produce the references requested by the contracting authority, so that it is possible for the tenderer to prove its economic and financial standing by means of a sworn statement to the effect that its credit arrangement with the bank is sufficient for the purpose in question?

(3) In an action for review of the decision of a national authority responsible for public tendering procedures to exclude a tenderer, may the fact that the successful tenderer has almost completed performance of the various contracts be regarded as an objective impediment precluding the national court from giving effect to the provisions of Article 47(1) and (2) of the [Charter], in conjunction with Article 1(1) and Article 2(3) and (6) to (8) of Directive [89/665]?'

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

24 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 47(1)(a) and (4) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may not exclude a tenderer from a tendering procedure on the ground that it does not fulfil the criterion regarding economic and financial standing laid down in the contract notice with respect to the provision of a statement given by a bank undertaking to grant credit in the amount specified in the contract notice and to guarantee that that amount will be available to the tenderer throughout the period of performance of the contract.

25 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that Article 267 TFEU does not empower the Court to apply rules of EU law to a particular case, but only to rule on the interpretation of the Treaties and of acts adopted by the EU institutions. The Court may, however, in the framework of the judicial cooperation provided for by that article and on the basis of the material presented to it, provide the national court with an interpretation of EU law which may be useful to it in assessing the effects of one or other of its provisions (judgment of 16 July 2015, CHEZ Razpredelenie Bulgaria, C-83/14, EU:C:2015:480, paragraph 71 and the case-law cited).

26 Article 44 of Directive 2004/18 provides that the contracting authority may require the tenderers to satisfy minimum capacity levels. Such minimum capacity levels must be indicated in the contract notice.

27 In this regard, Article 47(1) of the same directive lists the references that may, as a general rule, be required from an economic operator to demonstrate its economic and financial standing. Those references are intended to establish that the tenderer has the necessary means to perform a public contract. Among those references is listed ‘appropriate statements from banks’.

28 In accordance with Article 47(4) of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authorities must specify in the contract notice the references that they have chosen from that list as well as the references that must be provided.

29 In the present case, as a criterion for proving economic and financial standing, the contract notice at issue in the main proceedings required the tenderers to provide a document issued by a bank certifying that it had been granted credit of a minimum amount of EUR 3 000 000 that would be available throughout the period of performance of the contract, namely 48 months.

30 It is apparent from the documents submitted to the Court that the unsuccessful tenderer provided a statement, given by a bank, that included information on its financial situation and a declaration confirming the opening of a current-account credit facility for an amount exceeding EUR 5 000 000. The unsuccessful tenderer also provided a sworn statement attesting that, should its bid be successful, it would have a minimum of EUR 3 000 000 available in its account throughout the period of performance of the contract.

31 The contracting authority considered, however, that the unsuccessful tenderer had not met the economic and financial standing requirements since its economic and financial situation did not satisfy the condition for participation requiring the submission of evidence with the content and in the form prescribed.

32 In this respect it must be noted that Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 leaves a fair degree of freedom to the contracting authorities, which is apparent, in particular, from the expression ‘as a general rule’ in that provision. As is clear from the Court’s case-law, unlike Article 48 of that directive, which establishes a closed system limiting the methods of assessment and verification available to those authorities and, therefore, limits their opportunities to lay down requirements, Article 47(4) expressly authorises contracting authorities to choose the references that must be produced by candidates or tenderers in order to prove their economic and financial standing. As Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 refers to Article 47 thereof, the same freedom of choice exists as regards the minimum levels of economic and financial standing (see, to that effect, judgment of 18 October 2012, Édukövízig and Hochtief Construction, C-218/11, EU:C:2012:643, paragraph 28).

33 That said, it is expressly stated in the second subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 that the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract. It follows that the requirements in terms of economic and financial standing must be objectively such as to provide information on such standing of an economic operator and must be adapted to the size of the contract concerned in that they constitute objectively a positive indication of the existence of a sufficient economic and financial basis for the performance of that contract, without, however, going beyond what is reasonably necessary for that purpose (see, to that effect, judgment of 18 October 2012, Édukövízig and Hochtief Construction, C-218/11, EU:C:2012:643, paragraph 29).

34 Furthermore, it must be noted, first, that the principle of equal treatment requires tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions. Second, the obligation of transparency, which is its corollary, is intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. That obligation implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or tender specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (judgment of 2 June 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, paragraph 36 and the case-law cited).

35 As regards, first, the requirement expressly laid down in the contract notice that the financial guarantee should be provided 'to ensure performance of the contract', it appears from the wording of the first question referred that the contracting authority believed that that requirement was not satisfied since the credit granted to the tenderer, although exceeding the amount required by the contract notice, was a current-account credit facility that was not tied to performance of the contract.

36 In this respect, it must be noted that a requirement to obtain a loan tied to performance of the contract is, objectively, a reasonable means of obtaining information on the economic ability of the tenderer to perform the contract successfully. As the European Commission noted, the grant of a loan is an appropriate means of establishing that the tenderer has at its disposal resources which it does not itself own and which are necessary for the performance of the contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 2 December 1999, Holst Italia, C-176/98, EU:C:1999:593, paragraph 29). It is, however, once again for the referring court to confirm that the amount required in the contract notice is proportionate to the subject matter of the contract.

37 In respect, second, of the requirement, also laid down in the contract notice, regarding the grant of credit in a minimum amount of EUR 3 000 000 'for the period of performance of the contract (48 months)', although, admittedly Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 does not expressly provide that the contracting authority may require a tenderer to have at its disposal the resources necessary for the performance of the contract throughout the duration of the performance of the contract, it must be noted, as the Advocate General observed in point 46 of his Opinion, that the contracting authority's verification of the tenderer's compliance with the economic and financial criteria in a tendering procedure, is intended to provide that authority with the assurance that the successful tenderer will indeed be able to use whatever resources it relies on throughout the period covered by the contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 14 January 2016, Ostas celtnieks, C-234/14, EU:C:2016:6, paragraph 26 and the case-law cited).

38 Moreover, the continued availability of the amount required throughout the period of performance of the contract is a useful tool in assessing, in a tangible manner, the economic and financial standing of the tenderer with respect to its commitments. The proper performance of the contract is indeed intrinsically linked to whether the tenderer has the financial means for the execution of the contract.

39 Therefore, in the present case, the condition requiring the tenderer to have the funds available throughout the period of performance of the contract is appropriate for securing the objectives of Article 47(1) of Directive 2004/18.

40 However, it is for the national court to determine the relevance of the evidence provided by the tenderer for that purpose, in particular the contract opening a current-account credit facility.

41 It follows from the foregoing that the answer to the first question is that Article 47(1)(a) and (4) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may exclude a tenderer from a tender procedure on the ground that it does not fulfil the criterion regarding economic and financial standing laid down in the contract notice with respect to the provision of a statement given by a bank undertaking to grant credit in the amount specified in the contract notice and to guarantee that that amount will be available to the tenderer throughout the period of performance of the contract.

The second question

42 By its second question, the referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, whether, when a contract notice requires the provision of a statement given by a bank undertaking to grant credit in the amount specified in the contract notice and to guarantee that that amount will be available to the tenderer throughout the duration of the performance of the contract, the fact that the banks approached by the tenderer consider themselves unable to provide the tenderer with a statement in the terms specified by the contract notice may constitute a ‘valid reason’, within the meaning of Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18, allowing the tenderer, where appropriate, to prove its economic and financial standing by any other document considered appropriate by the contracting authority, such as a sworn statement certifying that, should its bid be selected, its current account will be credited with an amount corresponding to the amount specified in the contract notice from the time of conclusion of the contract and throughout the duration of performance of the contract.

43 Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18 allows tenderers that are unable for any valid reason to provide the references required by the contracting authority to prove their economic and financial standing by any other document, provided that the contracting authority considers such a document to be appropriate for this purpose.

44 In the present case, the unsuccessful tenderer provided a sworn statement certifying that, should its bid be selected, its account would be credited with at least EUR 3 000 000 throughout the duration of the performance of the contract, claiming that it was impossible to obtain a statement from a bank undertaking to grant it credit in the amount specified by the contract notice.

45 In this regard, it is for the referring court to determine whether it was objectively impossible for the unsuccessful tenderer to provide the references required by the contracting authority. This would be the case, in particular, as the Advocate General noted in point 53 of his Opinion, if, in Slovakia, the tenderer was not able to obtain the references required in the contract notice.

46 Only if the referring court should find that that was objectively impossible would that court be required to determine whether the contracting authority was entitled to take the view that the sworn statement provided by the tenderer was not an appropriate document to prove its economic and financial standing. It would also be for the referring court to determine, in accordance with Article 44(2) of Directive 2003/18, read in the light of recital 39 thereof, whether the extent of the information and the competence required were related and proportionate to the subject matter of the contract and whether the selection criteria were applied in a non-discriminatory way.

47 With regard to factual considerations, it is for the referring court to determine whether it was objectively impossible for the unsuccessful tenderer to provide the references required by the contracting authority and, if so, whether the contracting authority was entitled to consider that the sworn statement provided by the tenderer was not an appropriate document for proving its economic and financial standing.

48 Therefore, the answer to the second question is that Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, when a contract notice requires the production of a statement given by a bank undertaking to grant credit in the amount specified by the contract notice and to guarantee that that amount will be available to the tenderer throughout the duration of the performance of the contract, the fact that the banks approached by the tenderer consider themselves unable to provide the tenderer with a statement in the terms specified by the contract notice may constitute a ‘valid reason’, within the meaning of that article, allowing the tenderer, where appropriate, to prove its economic and financial standing by any other document considered appropriate by the contracting authority, provided that it was objectively impossible for the tenderer to provide the references required by the contracting authority, which is a matter for the referring court to determine.

The third question

49 In accordance with the Court’s settled case-law, the procedure provided for by Article 267 TFEU is an instrument of cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts and tribunals, by means of which the former provides the latter with interpretation of such EU law as is necessary for them to give judgment in cases upon which they are called to adjudicate (see, inter alia, order of 8 September 2016, Caixabank and Abanca Corporación Bancaria, C-91/16 and C-120/16, not published, EU:C:2016:673, paragraph 13 and the case-law cited).

50 In this respect, the Court has noted many times that the need to provide an interpretation of EU law which will be of use to the national court means that the national court must define the factual and legal context of the questions it is asking or, at the very least, explain the assumptions of fact on which those questions are based (see, inter alia, order of 8 September 2016, Caixabank and Abanca Corporación Bancaria, C-91/16 and C-120/16, not published, EU:C:2016:673, paragraph 14 and the case-law cited).

51 The requirements concerning the content of a request for a preliminary ruling are set out expressly in Article 94 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice as well as in paragraph 15 of the Recommendations of the Court of Justice of the European Union to national courts and tribunals in relation to the initiation of preliminary ruling proceedings (OJ 2016 C 439, p. 1), according to which any request for a preliminary ruling must contain ‘a summary of the subject-matter of the dispute and the relevant findings of fact as determined by the referring court or tribunal, or, at the very least, an account of the facts on which the questions are based’, ‘the tenor of any national provisions applicable in the case and, where appropriate, the relevant national case-law’ as well as ‘a statement of the reasons which prompted the referring court or tribunal to inquire about the interpretation or validity of certain provisions of EU law, and the relationship between those provisions and the national legislation applicable to the main proceedings’ (see, to that effect, order of 20 July 2016, Stanleybet Malta and Stoppani, C-141/16, not published, EU:C:2016:596, paragraphs 8 and 9 and the case-law cited).

52 In the present case, the order for reference does not give any indication of the national provisions intended to transpose those of Directive 89/665 relating to review procedures and their effects, as amended by Directive 2007/66. It fails, in particular, to state whether the Slovak Republic provided, as established under Article 2(6) of that directive, that the contested decision must first be set aside so that damages can be claimed, or whether, as the second subparagraph of Article 2(7) of that directive allows, it provided that after the conclusion of the contract the powers of the body responsible for review procedures are limited to awarding damages.

53 Moreover, the order for reference lacks precision as regards the facts of the main proceedings with respect to the appeal brought by the unsuccessful tenderer and the reasons why the tendering procedure continued despite the fact that an appeal against the decision of the contracting authority was pending.

54 Without this information the Court is unable to give a useful answer to the third question referred, which, as a result, is inadmissible.

Costs

55 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Article 47(1)(a) and (4) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may exclude a tenderer from a tendering procedure on the ground that it does not fulfil the criterion regarding economic and financial standing laid down in the contract notice with respect to the provision of a statement given by a bank undertaking to grant credit in the amount specified in the contract notice and to guarantee that that amount will be available to the tenderer throughout the period of performance of the contract.

2. Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, when a contract notice requires the provision of a statement given by a bank undertaking to grant credit in the amount specified in the contract notice and to guarantee that that amount will be available to the tenderer throughout the duration of the performance of the contract, the fact that the banks approached by the tenderer consider themselves unable to provide the tenderer with a statement in the terms specified by the contract notice may constitute a ‘valid reason’, within the meaning of that article, allowing the tenderer, where appropriate, to prove its economic and financial standing by any other document considered appropriate by the contracting authority, provided that it was objectively impossible for the tenderer to provide the references required by the contracting authority, which is a matter for the referring court to determine.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Slovak.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

Campos Sánchez-Bordona

delivered on 21 March 2017 (1)

Case C-76/16

INGSTEEL spol. s r.o.,

Metrostav, as

v

Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic)

(Public procurement — Qualitative selection criteria — Proof of an economic operator's economic and financial standing — Judicial review of a decision to exclude an economic operator from a tendering procedure)

1. In its reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling, the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic) has referred three questions on the interpretation of the European Union provisions relating to the criteria for the award of public contracts and the procedures for review of decisions of contracting authorities.

2. The first two questions concern proof of the economic and financial standing of tenderers, within the meaning of Directive 2004/18/EC. (2) The referring court's uncertainties concern proof of economic and financial standing and the time to which that proof has to relate. The third question concerns the review mechanisms provided for in Directive 89/665/EEC, (3) in relation to which the Najvyšší súd (Supreme Court) asks, in short, whether these remain effective where performance of the contract is almost complete by the time a ruling has to be given on the challenge.

I – Legal framework

A – EU law

1. The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union

3. The first and second paragraphs of Article 47 provide:

> 'Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.
>
> Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.'

2. Directive 2004/18

4. In accordance with recital 33 in the preamble:

‘Contract performance conditions are compatible with this Directive provided that they are not directly or indirectly discriminatory and are indicated in the contract notice or the contract documents. They may, in particular, be intended to favour on-site vocational training, the employment of people experiencing particular difficulty in achieving integration, the fight against unemployment or the protection of the environment. For instance, mention may be made, amongst other things, of the requirements — applicable during performance of the contract — to recruit long-term job-seekers or to implement training measures for the unemployed or young persons, to comply in substance with the provisions of the basic International Labour Organisation (ILO) Conventions, assuming that such provisions have not been implemented in national law, and to recruit more handicapped persons than are required under national legislation.’

5. Recital 39 in the preamble states:

‘Verification of the suitability of tenderers, in open procedures, and of candidates, in restricted and negotiated procedures with publication of a contract notice and in the competitive dialogue, and the selection thereof, should be carried out in transparent conditions. For this purpose, non-discriminatory criteria should be indicated which the contracting authorities may use when selecting competitors and the means which economic operators may use to prove they have satisfied those criteria. In the same spirit of transparency, the contracting authority should be required, as soon as a contract is put out to competition, to indicate the selection criteria it will use and the level of specific competence it may or may not demand of the economic operators before admitting them to the procurement procedure.’

6. Article 26 (‘Conditions for performance of contracts’) provides:

‘Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with Community law and are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications. The conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.’

7. Article 44, headed ‘Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts’, provides in paragraph (2):

‘The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.

These minimum levels shall be indicated in the contract notice.’

8. Article 47 (‘Economic and financial standing’) stipulates:

‘1. Proof of an economic operator’s economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

a) appropriate statements from a bank or, where appropriate, evidence of professional risk indemnity insurance;

…

4. Contracting authorities shall specify, in the contract notice or in the invitation to tender, which reference or references mentioned in paragraph 1 they have chosen and which other references must be provided.

5. If, for any valid reason, the economic operator is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.’

3. Directive 89/665 (4)

9. Article 1 (‘Scope and availability of review procedures’) provides in paragraph (1):

‘…

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.’

10. Article 2 (‘Requirements for review procedures’) states:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

…

4. Except where provided for in paragraph 3 and Article 1(5), review procedures need not necessarily have an automatic suspensive effect on the contract award procedures to which they relate.

…

6. Member States may provide that where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.

7. Except where provided for in Articles 2d to 2f, the effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract in accordance with Article 1(5), paragraph 3 of this Article or Articles 2a to 2f, the powers of the body responsible for review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

8. Member States shall ensure that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures can be effectively enforced.

…’

11. Article 2d (‘Ineffectiveness’) reads:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

a) if the contracting authority has awarded a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union without this being permissible in accordance with Directive 2004/18/EC;

b) in case of an infringement of Article 1(5), Article 2(3) or Article 2a(2) of this Directive, if this infringement has deprived the tenderer applying for review of the possibility to pursue pre-contractual remedies where such an infringement is combined with an infringement of Directive 2004/18/EC, if that infringement has affected the chances of the tenderer applying for a review to obtain the contract;

c) in the cases referred to in the second subparagraph of Article 2b(c) of this Directive, if Member States have invoked the derogation from the standstill period for contracts based on a framework agreement and a dynamic purchasing system.

2. The consequences of a contract being considered ineffective shall be provided for by national law.

National law may provide for the retroactive cancellation of all contractual obligations or limit the scope of the cancellation to those obligations which still have to be performed. In the latter case, Member States shall provide for the application of other penalties within the meaning of Article 2e(2).

3. Member States may provide that the review body independent of the contracting authority may not consider a contract ineffective, even though it has been awarded illegally on the grounds mentioned in paragraph 1, if the review body finds, after having examined all relevant aspects, that overriding reasons relating to a general interest require that the effects of the contract should be maintained. In this case, Member States shall provide for alternative penalties within the meaning of Article 2e(2), which shall be applied instead.

Economic interests in the effectiveness of the contract may only be considered as overriding reasons if in exceptional circumstances ineffectiveness would lead to disproportionate consequences.

However, economic interests directly linked to the contract concerned shall not constitute overriding reasons relating to a general interest. Economic interests directly linked to the contract include, inter alia, the costs resulting from the delay in the execution of the contract, the costs resulting from the launching of a new procurement procedure, the costs resulting from the change of the economic operator performing the contract and the costs of legal obligations resulting from the ineffectiveness.

…’

B – Slovak law

1. Law on Public Contracts (‘LPC’)

12. Article 27, entitled ‘Economic and financial standing’, reads:

‘1. Financial and economic standing shall generally be proved by:

a) a statement made by a bank or a statement by a branch of a foreign bank, such as a loan commitment by the bank or a branch of a foreign bank,

…

3. If the tenderer or competitor, for objective reasons, is not in a position to demonstrate his economic and financial standing by means of financial or economic references, the contracting authority may agree to such proof being provided by means of any other document.’

II – Facts of the dispute and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

13. The Slovenský futbalový zväz (Slovak Football Federation) issued an invitation to tender (5) for a contract for ‘restructuring, modernisation and construction of football stadiums’ (‘the contract’), (6) the object of which was to erect stands in 16 football stadiums (eight of which were category 2, seven category 3 and one category 4). (7)

14. According to the contract notice, candidates were required to provide proof of their economic and financial standing by means of 'the presentation of a statement made by a bank or a statement by a branch of a foreign bank concerning the grant of credit of a minimum amount of EUR 3 000 000 for the period of performance of the contract (48 months).' (8)

15. In particular, the contract notice required a 'statement by the bank (loan agreement or credit facility agreement) recording the bank's undertaking to the effect that the tenderer, in the event of acceptance of its tender, will be in a position to provide a guarantee of EUR 3 000 000 to ensure performance of the contract. The evidence must show that the funds will be available to the tenderer after conclusion of the contract. The evidence must be certified by a person authorised by the bank for that purpose.'

16. The companies INGSTEEL spol. s r.o. and Metrostav, a.s ('Ingsteel and Metrostav') participated in the procurement procedure as a group of economic operators. The Regulatory Authority confirmed the rejection of their joint application because it did not satisfy the condition set out in clause III.2.2 of the contract notice.

17. Specifically, the Regulatory Authority did not accept as evidence of the economic and financial standing of Ingsteel and Metrostav the bank declaration confirming that the tender fulfilled all relevant requirements (which also contained information concerning the opening of a current-account credit facility for an amount exceeding EUR 5 000 000), or the sworn statement given by those companies stating that, if they were awarded the contract, they would have in their account, at the time of conclusion of the contract and throughout the period of performance of the contract, a minimum amount of EUR 3 000 000.

18. Ingsteel and Metrostav brought an action before the Krajský súd Bratislava (Regional Court, Bratislava, Slovak Republic) seeking annulment of the decision excluding them from the tendering procedure. The action was dismissed by judgment of 13 January 2015.

19. An appeal against the judgment at first instance was brought before the Najvyšší súd (Supreme Court), which has expressed doubts concerning the interpretation of Article 47 of Directive 2004/18, in particular, paragraphs 1(a) and (4) thereof. The Najvyšší súd (Supreme Court) questions whether the Regulatory Authority's conduct is compatible with those provisions when, on the basis of the documents provided by the tenderer, it took the view that the tenderer had not established that its economic and financial standing satisfied the conditions set out in the contract notice.

20. The Najvyšší súd (Supreme Court) focuses its attention on the necessity of submitting, as evidence of economic and financial standing, a binding undertaking to grant credit and on the refusal to accept a statement by a national bank, formally lodged as such a binding undertaking to grant credit, that makes the grant of that credit conditional on the fulfilment of certain conditions set out in a subsequent contract. The referring court asks whether, in those circumstances, economic and financial standing can be proved by alternative means and whether a sworn statement confirming the existence of a credit arrangement with a bank, for an amount higher than that required in the contract notice, is sufficient.

21. Lastly, the referring court asks whether the fact that the contract has been almost completely performed is an impediment to the grant of the judicial protection required by Directive 89/665, in conjunction with Article 47 of the Charter.

22. The Najvyšší súd (Supreme Court) has therefore referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) May the conduct of a national authority, which finds that a tenderer for a contract with an estimated value of EUR 3 million does not satisfy the selection criterion relating to economic and financial standing, even though a sworn statement submitted by the tenderer and a declaration provided by its bank, certify that it will be able to draw on funds under a secured loan which can be used for any purpose up to a maximum amount exceeding the value of the contract, be considered compatible with the objective of Article 47, in particular Article 47(1)(a) and (4), of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts?

(2) Where, in a binding undertaking to grant credit, a bank operating on the banking-services market of a Member State, makes the release of funds conditional upon fulfilment of conditions for granting credit which are not specifically indicated in the loan agreement at the time of the tendering procedure, does such conduct constitute, for the purpose of Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18, a valid reason why the tenderer cannot produce the references requested by the contracting authority, so that it is possible for the tenderer to prove its economic and financial standing by means of a sworn statement to the effect that its credit arrangement with the bank is sufficient for the purpose in question?

(3) In an action for review of the decision of a national authority responsible for public tendering procedures to exclude a tenderer, may the fact that the successful tenderer has almost completed performance of the various contracts be regarded as an objective impediment precluding the national court from giving effect to the provisions of Article 47(1) and (2) of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, in conjunction with Article 1(1) and Article 2(3), (6), (7) and (8) of Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts?'

III – Proceedings before the Court of Justice

23. The order for reference was received at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 11 February 2016.

24. On 23 March 2016, the Court asked the Najvyšší súd (Supreme Court) to specify the value of the contract at issue in the proceedings. The reply, dated 25 April 2016, stated that the value was EUR 25 500 000 plus VAT.

25. The Slovak Government and the European Commission lodged written observations. Ingsteel and Metrostav declined to participate in the preliminary-ruling proceedings. It was not considered necessary to hold a hearing.

IV – Summary of the observations of the parties

A – The first question

26. The Slovak Government argues that the statement made by a bank that the tenderers had to provide included a guarantee of more than EUR 3 000 000 for the whole period of performance of the contract (48 months). The Slovak Government states that, although the wording of Article 47(1) and (4) of Directive 2004/18 does not provide for such a condition, the scheme and aim of the directive support the proposition that the tenderer is required to have available the necessary funds during the period of performance of the contract. That follows, by analogy, from Article 47(2) of that directive, which permits tenderers to rely on the capacities of other entities for performance of the contract.

27. The Slovak Government submits that it is contrary to the principle of effectiveness of the tendering procedure for a tenderer to participate in that procedure if the contracting authority may not require proof of genuine economic and financial standing, in order for performance of the contract to be guaranteed.

28. The Commission contends that Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 relates to the economic and financial standing of the tenderer at the time of award of the contract. However, the tenderer's economic and financial standing during performance of the contract is governed by Article 26 of that directive, concerning conditions for performance of the contract. At all events, in the light of the wording of the question, the Commission suggests that the condition imposed on the tenderer should be examined under both Article 26 and Article 47 of Directive 2004/18.

29. According to the Commission, Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 provides that the conditions for performance must appear in the contract notice, a requirement fulfilled in this case, and must be compatible with EU law. Citing the case-law of the Court, the Commission argues that, as Directive 2004/18 does not exhaustively govern the special conditions for performance, those conditions may be assessed in accordance with primary EU law.

30. Having considered the difficulty in the light of Article 47 of Directive 2004/18, the Commission, after accepting that the contracting authority has broad discretion, points out that the difficulty lies in the method of providing evidence of economic and financial standing. The Commission questions whether the contract notice expressed clearly the necessity of having available a loan assigned to performance of the contract

(which would afford the contracting authority certainty that the financial resources provided by the bank would actually be used for performance of the contract). In its opinion, given that the conditions for participation must be set out so clearly and precisely in the contract notice, a tenderer may not be excluded for failing to provide evidence of the grant of credit assigned to performance of the contract, unless such a requirement was precisely and unequivocally indicated in the contract notice.

B – The second question

31. The Slovak Government states that the group composed of Ingsteel and Metrostav lodged the documents substantiating its economic and financial standing on the date for submission of tenders, but did not prove that it would have funds during the period of performance of the contract, from which it followed that it did not satisfy the conditions of the tender.

32. As regards the question whether a sworn statement is acceptable as a means of proving economic and financial standing in accordance with Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18, the Slovak Government denies that there were circumstances justifying this, for which purpose it relies on an examination of Slovak banking practice in relation to securing loans allocated for a specific purpose.

33. The Commission cites as sufficient reason for the application of Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18 the existence of objective facts that cannot be attributed to the tenderer and prevent it from submitting the documents required by the contracting authority to guarantee its economic and financial standing.

C – The third question

34. The Slovak Government takes as its starting-point the fact Directive 89/665 does not provide for review proceedings against decisions on the award of public contracts to have suspensive effect and establishes mechanisms for annulment of the decision to award or formally execute the contract and for the award of damages.

35. The Commission submits that, by the third question, the referring court asks whether performance of the contract, even though the decision to exclude a tenderer has been challenged, is sufficient reason to stay the court proceedings. The Commission contends that Directive 89/665 does not provide a sufficient basis for such a stay.

V – Assessment

A – The first question

36. Although a dividing line, if there is one, cannot easily be drawn between the application, on the one hand, and the interpretation, on the other, of the legal provisions, it is for the referring court to apply its national law (including, in this case, the clauses of the invitation to tender) and for the Court of Justice to provide the national court with an interpretation of Article 47(1)(a) and (4) of Directive 2004/18. It is not the task of the Court of Justice but of the national court to determine whether the documents submitted by Ingsteel and Metrostav as evidence of their economic and financial standing complied with the contract notice.

37. I make that point because, in the first question, the referring court states that the national contracting authority took the view that the tender submitted by Ingsteel and Metrostav did not satisfy one of the criteria in the contract notice. The issue of whether or not that decision was legally correct is a matter which only the national courts can determine. By interpreting Directive 2004/18, the Court of Justice can provide the national courts with certain guidance as to interpretation, but cannot replace those courts for the purposes of carrying out their own tasks, which include that of analysing in detail the documents submitted by the excluded tenderer and establishing whether those documents satisfy the specific terms of the invitation to tender.

38. In accordance with Articles 44 and 47 of Directive 2004/18, in order to verify the suitability of tenderers, they may be asked for minimum levels of economic and financial standing, which they must prove either by means of the references stipulated in the contract notice (Article 47(1) and (4)) or by means of such other documents as the contracting authority considers appropriate (Article 47(5)).

39. In accordance with the Court's settled case-law, Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 'leaves a fair degree of freedom to the contracting authorities', for, unlike Article 48, it 'expressly authorises contracting authorities to choose the probative references which must be produced by candidates or tenderers to furnish proof of their economic and financial standing. As Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 refers to Article 47, the same freedom of choice exists as regards the minimum levels of economic and financial standing'. (9)

40. Clause III.2.2 of the contract notice required, as evidence of a tenderer's economic and financial standing, the statement made by a bank concerning the grant of credit for a minimum amount of EUR 3 000 000 to state that that credit would remain effective 'for the period of performance of the contract (48 months)'.

41. There is no dispute between the parties regarding the necessary level of economic and financial standing (which is reflected in the amount of the bank credit) or regarding the requirement that it should be proved by means of a document issued by a financial institution. Rather, the dispute concerns the temporal scope of the bank loan required in the contract notice: the credit was to remain available 'for the period of performance of the contract', that is, for the 48 months during which the contract was to be performed. Does that specific requirement infringe Articles 44 and 47 of Directive 2004/18? For the reasons I shall set out below, I think not.

42. As I have already observed, the Commission distinguishes the rules laid down in Article 26 from those laid down in Article 47 of Directive 2004/18: the latter is concerned with proof of the economic and financial standing of the tenderer at the time the contract is awarded, whereas Article 26 is appropriate for stipulating the conditions relating to the period of its performance.

43. I do not share that view. Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 focuses on certain special conditions for performance of the contract and applies, in particular, to social and environmental objectives. The wording of recital 33 in the preamble to the directive (10) is illuminating when it suggests that conditions for performance of the contract 'may, in particular, be intended to favour on-site vocational training, the employment of people experiencing particular difficulty in achieving integration, the fight against unemployment or the protection of the environment.'

44. However, in requiring certain minimum levels of economic and financial standing, the presumption in Articles 44 and 47 of Directive 2004/18 is that the proof of that standing must refer to the period of performance of the contract. It would not be reasonable to require economic and financial standing only at the time of award of the contract and for the contracting authority not to have the right to request guarantees that the future successful contractor will retain its economic and financial standing during the period of performance of the contract.

45. In my view, it is consistent with that interpretation for Article 47(4) of Directive 2004/18 to permit, as an expression of the broad discretion granted to the contracting authority, the addition to the means of furnishing proof provided for in Article 47(1) of 'which other references', and for Article 47(2) to authorise a tenderer to 'rely on the capacities of other entities', if it proves to the contracting authority that, with their assistance, it will have the resources to carry out its undertaking.

46. The case-law of the Court provides valuable information about the aim of that legislation. While Directive 92/50/EEC was in force, (11) the judgment in Holst Italia (12) stated that 'the contracting authority is required to verify the suitability of the service providers in accordance with the criteria laid down. That verification is intended, in particular, to enable the contracting authority to ensure that the successful tenderer will indeed be able to use whatever resources it relies on throughout the period covered by the contract.' That judgment went on to state, in relation to resources resulting from links to other entities that, 'in order to prove its financial, economic and technical standing with a view to being admitted to participate in a tendering procedure, … it must establish that it actually has available to it the resources of those entities or undertakings which it does not itself own and which are necessary for the performance of the contract'. (13)

47. That finding that economic and financial standing must be assessed as an indicator of suitability for correct performance of the contract remains present in the case-law on the interpretation of Directive 2004/18. In the judgment of 18 October 2012, Édukövízig and Hochtief Solutions, (14) the Court observed that the aspects chosen by the contracting authority (in that case, aspects of the balance sheets of the undertakings) 'to establish a minimum level of economic and financial standing must be objectively such as to provide information on such standing of an economic operator and … the threshold thus fixed must be adapted to the size of the contract concerned in that it constitutes objectively a positive indication of the existence of a sufficient economic and financial basis for the performance of that contract'. (15)

48. Lastly, in other cases in which the right for tenderers to rely upon the capacities of third parties was analysed, the Court made that possibility conditional on those tenderers proving to the contracting authority that they would have at their disposal the resources necessary for performance of the contract. (16) When financial or economic resources are concerned, it is reasonable that these should not be ephemeral but should last until the contractual obligations have been performed.

49. To my mind, Articles 44 and 47 of Directive 2004/18, while enabling contracting authorities to require of tenderers a minimum level of economic and financial standing, also authorise those authorities to require, in the relevant contract notice, the provision of certain evidence establishing a sufficient economic and financial basis for the performance of the contract throughout the period of performance provided for. As I have already stated, the contracting authorities have broad discretion when it comes to giving concrete expression to that requirement.

50. Relying upon that freedom to formulate the conditions governing economic and financial standing and the means of furnishing proof of that standing, I believe that, in this case, the contract awarder was entitled to request the banking documents in the terms set out in clause III.2.2 of the invitation to tender, because:

– The amount of credit of up to EUR 3 000 000 was related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract (the overall value of which came to more than EUR 25 000 000), as stipulated in Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18.

– The period to be covered by that guarantee of economic and financial standing, backed by a bank, was the same as the period of performance of the contract, which, I repeat, is consistent (and reasonable) in the light of the above considerations.

51. Those propositions having been set down, it is for the national court to establish whether, specifically, the documentary evidence furnished by Ingsteel and Metrostav satisfied the terms of the invitation to tender relating to their economic and financial capacity, including the term relating to the temporal scope of the bank credit and the assigning of that credit for performance of the contract throughout the period necessary for the contract to be performed.

B – The second question

52. Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18 states that '[i]f, for any valid reason, the economic operator is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.'

53. The application of that provision to the instant case would make it necessary to establish that Ingsteel and Metrostav were not in a position to accept the 'normal' conditions which the contracting authority had stipulated for providing proof of their economic and financial standing. That would be the case if, in Slovakia, a tenderer was unable to obtain from a financial institution credit linked to performance of the contract in accordance with the requirements of clause III.2.2 of the contract notice.

54. In those circumstances, the referring court asks whether a sworn statement by the tenderer stating that, if it were awarded the works contract, it would have available in its account a minimum amount of EUR 3 000 000, corresponding to the amount of credit required, both when the contract was concluded with the contract awarder and throughout the period of performance of the contract, is valid.

55. Application of Article 47(5) of the directive means, first, that the economic operator is unable to obtain the references requested by the contracting authority. Second, it means that that inability is due to a 'valid reason'. Only if both criteria are satisfied can recourse be had to other means of proving economic and financial standing.

56. In the instant case, therefore, the 'objective' impossibility (17) of obtaining from a bank credit assigned to performance of the contract, throughout the period of performance of the contract, would have to be established. This is purely a finding of fact that must be made by the national court. That court must examine whether banking practice in Slovakia precludes undertakings bidding for contracts, like Ingsteel and Metrostav, from obtaining a statement made by a bank in the terms set out in the contract documents. (18)

57. If the solution reached by the referring court is that in that country such an undertaking by a bank can be obtained, the argument in support of the application of Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18 would simply not exist.

58. If, on the other hand, such an undertaking by a bank cannot be obtained, it will be possible to move on to the assessment of the alternative evidence of its economic and financial standing furnished by the tenderer. However, inability to provide the references required in the contract documents must be examined from an objective point of view: the mere fact that, owing to particular circumstances characterised specifically by a lack of economic resources, the tenderers could not obtain credit from a bank in accordance with the terms of the contract documents will not be a 'valid reason'.

59. According to the order for reference, the tenderer provided, as an alternative reference, the sworn statement to which I referred above. The validity of that self-declaration of economic and financial standing must be examined, first, by the contracting authority, for it is that authority that, under Article 47(5), in fine, of Directive 2004/18, has the power to examine whether the document is 'appropriate' for that task.

60. The decision not to accept that document may, as is logical, be challenged before the national court which, in turn, must examine the grounds and the reasoning for the decision when determining whether the contracting authority exceeded the discretion granted to it by Article 47(5), in fine, to '[consider] appropriate' the alternative proof submitted by the tenderer. Again, the Court may not replace the national court for the purpose of making that decision, which is closely connected to factual elements, or for the purpose of determining whether the sworn statement of the tenderer is, in a specific situation, a sufficient economic and financial guarantee for performance of the contract.

C – The third question

61. I agree with the Slovak Government that there is a certain lack of clarity in the third question referred by the Najvyšší súd (Supreme Court), in terms both of the facts it describes and of its content.

62. As regards the facts, the referring court transcribes, first, the view of the Regulatory Authority to the effect that the situation was 'irreversible, and cannot be changed even in the event of a decision reviewing the award of the contract by the Board of the regulatory authority' because performance of the contracts was already under way. (19) Second, the order accepts, as a premiss for the question referred for a preliminary ruling, the hypothesis that 'the object of the initial administrative action, that is to say, taking part in the public procurement contract, has ceased to exist, and the tendering procedure cannot be relaunched because the contract has been performed by the successful tenderer.'

63. Following that approach, the referring court appears to ask, in short, whether, under Article 47 of the Charter, in conjunction with Article 1(1) and Article 2(3), (6), (7) and (8) of Directive 89/665, the fact that the performance of the contract has almost been completed is an impediment preventing the excluded tenderer from bringing the relevant action (review proceedings) against the award decision, including seeking annulment of that decision.

64. The articles of Directive 89/665 transcribed by the referring court are from its original version, no longer in force when the invitation to tender was issued (16 November 2013). Accordingly, the references to legislation must be brought into line with the consolidated text following the entry into force of the amendments introduced by Directive 2007/66. (20)

65. In the Opinion in Connexxion Taxi Services, (21) I pointed out that '[w]ith regard to the decisions of contracting authorities (in so far as they concern, obviously, contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18), Member States must ensure that the persons concerned have available review mechanisms suitable for determining, quickly and effectively, whether they have infringed EU law on public procurement or national rules transposing EU law into their respective legal systems. That is, ultimately, the purpose of Directive 89/665.'

66. With that general aim, Article 2 of Directive 89/665 provides for two different procedural situations: (a) interlocutory proceedings enabling interim measures to be adopted in the period before the contract is concluded, and (b) the other types of review procedure, aimed at securing annulment of the administrative act awarding the contract and, where appropriate, the award of damages; the order for reference refers only to the latter.

67. The action brought by Ingsteel and Metrostav before the Slovak courts being an action for annulment of the decision, if they should be successful in their claims that would, in principle, mean that the decision awarding the contract would be declared null and void. (22) However, the referring court assumes (23) that annulment would not, in practice, lead to retroaction of the procedure so that the situation created could be reversed.

68. As Article 2(4) of Directive 89/665 provides that a review procedure does not have automatic suspensive effect, it is logical that the directive should provide for the possibility that an action for annulment can be brought in relation to a contract which is either being performed or has already been performed.

69. In fact, Directive 89/665 does not provide for an unequivocal solution in that regard. In some cases (Articles 2d to 2f) the rules laid down in the directive are applied, (24) which even provide that national review bodies may not consider a contract ineffective, even though it has been awarded illegally, if there are overriding reasons relating to a general interest requiring the effects of the contract to be maintained, without prejudice to the imposition of the appropriate penalties and the award of damages. (25) However, in other cases (Article 2(7) of the directive), it is the rules of national law that determine the effect that review procedures are to have on concluded contracts.

70. Within that range of possibilities which the referring court (or the review body at first instance) will have to consider, it would be unacceptable for the de facto situation regarding the performance of the contract to be treated as an insurmountable obstacle to determining whether the decision excluding the tenderer was lawful. Whatever the procedural solution may be that is most compatible with Directive 89/665 (and with the national law transposing that directive), and its practical consequences for the effects of the contract, the appellants still have an interest in obtaining the appropriate judgment, at least with a view to obtaining damages, if their action is successful, for the loss and harm suffered as a result of having been unlawfully excluded from the selection process.

71. Once again, it is for the national court to assess the consequences of the possible annulment of the decision for the award of the contract concluded.

VI – Conclusion

72. In the light of the arguments set out, I propose that the Court reply as follows to the questions referred by the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic):

(1) Article 47, in particular Article 47(1)(a) and (4), of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, does not preclude including in a contract notice, as selection criteria relating to economic and financial standing, the criteria included in the contract notice giving rise to the main proceedings. It is for the national court to establish whether the excluded tenderers satisfied those criteria.

(2) It is for the referring court to determine whether there was a “valid reason”, for the purposes of Article 47(5) of Directive 2004/18/EC, precluding a tenderer from providing the references requested by the contracting authority. If that should be the case, the referring court must also determine whether, in accordance with Slovak law, a sworn statement by the tenderer concerning its economic and financial standing is acceptable as an appropriate economic and financial guarantee.

(3) The fact that the successful tenderer has almost completed performance of the contract does not prevent the excluded tenderers bringing the appropriate proceedings, in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, in conjunction with Articles 1 and 2 of Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts.

---

1 – Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

---

3 Council Directive of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33).

---

4 The wording is transcribed as it results from Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665/EEC and 92/13/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31).

---

5 Although the Slovenský futbalový zväz (Slovak Football Federation) acted as the contract awarder, in the last stage of the procedure the Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Regulatory Authority; 'the Regulatory Authority') took part.

---

6 The contract notice was published on 16 November 2013 in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union No 223/2013 and in the Slovak Official Journal for Procurement Notices (reference 18627-MSP).

---

7 The classification of football stadiums is set out in the UEFA Regulations approved at the meeting of 24 March 2010. Four categories are stipulated in ascending order from 1 to 4, on the basis of criteria relating to the area allocated to players and officials (including parking capacity), spectators and the media.

---

8 Clause III.2.2.

---

9 Judgment of 18 October 2012, Édukövízig and Hochtief Solutions, C-218/11, EU:C:2012:643, paragraph 28.

---

10 Expressly referred to by the Court in its judgment of 17 November 2015, RegioPost, C-115/14, EU:C:2015:760, paragraph 56.

---

11 Council Directive of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

---

12 Judgment of 2 December 1999, Holst Italia, C-176/98, EU:C:1999:593, paragraph 28. Emphasis added.

---

13 The Opinion of Advocate General Léger in Holst Italia (C-176/98, EU:C:1999:447) contains, in points 24 to 26, useful guidance on the powers of the contracting authority to evaluate the suitability of tenderers to perform the contract in the required manner That is the objective of Articles 31 and 32 of Directive 92/50 (concerning economic and financial standing and technical capability, respectively) in seeking to 'protect the interests of the contracting authority against applications from economic operators more concerned about securing lucrative contracts than about the main task, that is to say, performing them scrupulously.'

---

14 Case C-218/11, EU:C:2012:643, paragraph 29.

---

15 No italics in the original. That was the ratio decidendi of the judgment and was reflected in the answers to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling.

---

16 Judgments of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 29; of 14 January 2016, Ostas celtnieks, C-234/14, EU:C:2016:6, paragraph 23; and of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 33.

---

17 Paragraph 16 of the order for reference specifically uses the words 'objective impossibility of obtaining the references required by the contract awarder'.

---

18 According to paragraph 20 of the order for reference, 'the regulatory authority relied on the statements of two Slovak banks, which gave their views on the possibility of obtaining a non-binding undertaking to provide credit and a binding undertaking, and the difference between those two options.'

---

19 The order sets out these remarks by the Regulatory Authority: 'The contract awarder, on 3 August 2014, concluded a framework agreement by virtue of which four contracts for work were concluded for construction of the following stadiums: NTC Poprad on 15 August 2014. Baredejov football stadium on 24 February 2015. Zvolene football stadium [on] 20 May 2015. Podbrezová football stadium on 22 May 2015.'

---

20 See footnote 4 of this Opinion.

---

21 Case C-171/15, EU:C:2016:506.

---

22 In the Opinion in Prezes Urzędu Komunikacji Elektronicznej and Petrotel, C-231/15, EU:C:2016:440, points 62 to 69, I stated that, as a general rule, the annulment of an administrative decision leads to the creation of retroactive effects so that, in the absence of an interim measure suspending the effectiveness of that decision, the invalidity of the administrative decision entails the obligation to undo, from the outset, its effects. However, that general rule is open to a number of exceptions which are not unknown in EU law, and I mentioned specifically the scope of the award of public contracts and the review system introduced into Directive 89/665 by Directive 2007/66.

---

23 As transcribed in paragraph 23 of the order for reference, the Regulatory Authority stated that 'once the decision of the regulatory authority on the complaint became final, the contract awarder decided to resume the tendering procedure'.

---

24 On actions for annulment and the ineffectiveness of concluded contracts, the judgment of 11 September 2014, Fastweb, C-19/13, EU:C:2014:2194, paragraph 42, states that, 'in the situations contemplated, in particular, in Article 2d of Directive 89/665, the measures that may be taken for the purposes of actions brought against the contracting authorities are to be determined solely by the rules laid down in that directive.’

---

25 Article 2d(3). In accordance with Article 2d(2), ‘[n]ational law may provide for the retroactive cancellation of all contractual obligations or limit the scope of the cancellation to those obligations which still have to be performed.’

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Ninth Chamber)

13 July 2017 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Transport — Definition of "exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of the provisions of airports or other terminal facilities to carriers by air" — Directives 2004/17/EC and 96/67/EC — National legislation which does not require a tendering procedure to be conducted prior to the allocation of areas within an airport)

In Case C-701/15,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy, Italy), made by decision of 4 November 2015, received at the Court on 31 December 2015, in the proceedings

Malpensa Logistica Europa SpA

v

Società Esercizi Aeroportuali SpA (SEA),

intervening party:

Beta-Trans SpA,

THE COURT (Ninth Chamber),

composed of E. Juhász (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, C. Vajda and K. Jürimäe, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: R. Schiano, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 15 February 2017,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Malpensa Logistica Europa SpA, by G. Greppi, P. Ferraris, G. Razeto and A. Bazzi, avvocati, – Società Esercizi Aeroportuali SpA (SEA), by R. Bertani, E. Raffaelli and A. Pavan, avvocati,

– Beta—Trans SpA, by C. Mele and M. Giordano, avvocati,

– the European Commission, by C. Zadra, W. Mölls and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 3 May 2017,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 7 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Malpensa Logistica Europa SpA and Società Esercizi Aeroportuali SpA (SEA), the manager of Milan's Malpensa Airport (Italy) ('Malpensa Airport'), concerning the allocation of areas for the provision of groundhandling services within that airport without any prior tendering procedure.

Legal context

European Union law

Directive 96/67/EC

3 Council Directive 96/67/EC of 15 October 1996 on access to the groundhandling market at Community airports (OJ 1996 L 272, p. 36), applies, as stated in Article 1(1) thereof, to 'any airport located in the territory of a Member State, subject to the provisions of the Treaty, and open to commercial traffic in the following circumstances'.

4 Article 6 of Directive 96/67, headed 'Groundhandling for third parties', provides in paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof:

'1. Member States shall take the necessary measures … to ensure free access by suppliers of groundhandling services to the market for the provision of groundhandling services to third parties.

…

2. Member States may limit the number of suppliers authorised to provide the following categories of groundhandling services:

– baggage handling,

– ramp handling,

– fuel and oil handling,

– freight and mail handling as regards the physical handling of freight and mail, whether incoming, outgoing or being transferred, between the air terminal and the aircraft.

They may not, however, limit this number to fewer than two for each category of groundhandling service.'

5 Article 9 of Directive 96/67, under the heading 'Exemptions', provides in paragraph 1 thereof as follows:

'Where at an airport, specific constraints of available space or capacity, arising in particular from congestion and area utilization rate, make it impossible to open up the market and/or implement self-handling to the degree provided for in this Directive, the Member State in question may decide:

(a) to limit the number of suppliers …'

6 Article 11 of Directive 96/67, headed 'Selection of suppliers', states in paragraph 1 thereof:

'Member States shall take the necessary measures for the organization of a selection procedure for suppliers authorized to provide groundhandling services at an airport where their number is limited in the cases provided for in Article 6(2) or Article 9. …'

7 Article 16 of Directive 96/67, headed 'Access to installations', provides, in paragraph 2 thereof:

'The space available for groundhandling at an airport must be divided among the various suppliers of groundhandling services and self-handling airport users, including new entrants in the field, to the extent necessary for the exercise of their rights and to allow effective and fair competition, on the basis of the relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory rules and criteria.'

Directive 2004/17

8 Article 1 of Directive 2004/17, headed 'Definitions', provides as follows:

'1. For the purposes of this Directive, the definitions set out in this Article shall apply.

2. (a) "Supply, works and service contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more of the contracting entities referred to in Article 2(2), and one or more contractors, suppliers, or service providers.

…

(d) "Service contracts" are contracts other than works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex XVII.

…

3. …

(b) A "service concession" is a contract of the same type as a service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right together with payment.'

9 Article 2 of that directive, entitled 'Contracting entities', provides in paragraph 2(a) thereof:

'This Directive shall apply to contracting entities:

(a) which are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7.'

10 Article 7 of Directive 2004/17, headed 'Exploration for, or extraction of, oil, gas, coal or other solid fuels, as well as ports and airports', is worded as follows:

'This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of:

…

(b) the provision of airports and maritime or inland ports or other terminal facilities to carriers by air, sea or inland waterway.'

11 Article 18 of that directive, headed 'Works and service concessions', states as follows:

'This Directive shall not apply to works and service concessions which are awarded by contracting entities carrying out one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7, where those concessions are awarded for carrying out those activities.'

Italian law

12 Directive 96/67 was transposed into Italian law by decreto legislativo n. 18 — Attuazione della direttiva 96/67/CE relativa al libero accesso al mercato dei servizi di assistenza a terra negli aeroporti della Comunità (Legislative Decree No 18 implementing Directive 96/67/EC on access to the groundhandling market at Community airports) of 13 January 1999 (GURI No 28, 4 February 1999) ('Legislative Decree No 18/1999'). Articles 4 and 11 of that decree transpose, respectively, Articles 16 and 11 of Directive 96/67.

13 Article 4 of Legislative Decree No 18/1999 grants free access to the groundhandling market to any service provider, on the basis of the criteria set out in Article 13 of the legislative decree, at an airport in which the annual volume of traffic is not less than 3 million passenger movements or 75 000 tonnes of freight or which has recorded traffic of not less than 2 million passenger movements or 50 000 tonnes of freight during the six-month period prior to 1 April or 1 October of the previous year. Article 4(2) of Legislative Decree No 18/1999 empowers the Ente Nazionale per l'aviazione civile (ENAC) (National Civil Aviation Authority) to limit the number of suppliers on the ground that there are specific constraints of space, available capacity or safety, and Article 12 thereof also imposes restrictions on access to the market.

14 Pursuant to Article 11 of Legislative Decree No 18/1999, an invitation for tenders must be published, which is open to all interested suppliers, solely for the purpose of identifying suppliers of groundhandling services whose access to the market is subject to limitations or derogations.

15 Directive 2004/17 was transposed into Italian law by Articles 207 et seq. of decreto legislative n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 establishing the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts and transposing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (GURI No 100, 2 May 2006). Article 213 of that legislative decree transposed Article 7 of Directive 2004/17.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

16 SEA, as the managing body responsible for Malpensa airport, awarded a hangar at that airport, with an area of approximately 1 000 square metres, to Beta-Trans for the provision of groundhandling services.

17 By application lodged on 18 April 2015 before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy), Malpensa Logistica Europa, a concession company for airport areas intended for the performance of groundhandling activities at Malpensa Airport, sought the suspension and annulment of the measure granting that award.

18 According to Malpensa Logistica Europa, that measure is vitiated by unlawfulness because it was adopted without any prior tendering procedure. In particular, that company argues that it had insufficient space at its disposal at the Malpensa Airport site to pursue its groundhandling activities. Accordingly, it was entitled to entertain the same expectations as Beta-Trans as regards the new areas to be allocated, and the decision by which SEA awarded the area in question, which was originally intended to be used as a hangar, directly to Beta-Trans, without any tendering procedure, caused it to suffer loss.

19 SEA and Beta-Trans have argued before the referring court that the contested area was made available to Beta-Trans only temporarily, in order to enable it, as a new operator, to begin its activity as supplier of groundhandling services at Malpensa Airport pending completion of the fitting out of the areas allocated to Beta-Trans at the conclusion of a public tendering procedure in which Malpensa Logistica Europa had also participated. Moreover, according to SEA and Beta-Trans, Malpensa Logistica Europa already had at its disposal a storage area of approximately 18 000 square metres, as well as two covered areas of 2 700 and 3 227 square metres, respectively, for the temporary storage of cargo where it could be protected in bad weather.

20 The referring court stated that two national legal provisions, transposing Directive 2004/17 and Directive 96/67 respectively, would appear to be applicable, in abstracto, to the facts of the case.

21 With regard to the applicability of Directive 2004/17, the referring court considers that SEA, as manager of Malpensa Airport, is a contracting authority that is required to comply with public procurement rules in special sectors. Moreover, the activity pursued by SEA falls within the category of activities relating to the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of the provision of airports to air carriers, in accordance with Article 7 of Directive 2004/17. That court explains that, according to national case-law, the exploitation of airport areas (geographical areas), including, therefore, internal areas, in connection with the activities usually performed by air carriers falls within the material scope of the rules governing special sectors.

22 The referring court concludes from this that the provision of groundhandling services in airports, by the exploitation of geographical areas, also falls within the material scope of those rules

23 However, according to the national court, the applicability of Directive 2004/17 might be at odds with the specific provisions of Legislative Decree No 18/1999, which transposed Directive 96/67. On the basis of that legislation, the requirement to launch a prior public tendering procedure is applicable only to the selection of suppliers falling within categories of groundhandling services whose access to the market is subject to restrictions and derogations.

24 The referring court states in that regard that, according to the information available to it, those restrictions and derogations are not currently in force in so far as Malpensa Airport is concerned. As a consequence, it is necessary, according to that court, to accept the applicability of Article 4(1) of Legislative Decree No 18/1999, which grants free access by suppliers to the market for the provision of groundhandling services without the need for any prior public tendering procedure, provided that the space available at the airport is divided among the various suppliers of groundhandling services and self-handling airport users ‘to the extent necessary for the exercise of their rights and to allow effective and fair competition, on the basis of the relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory rules and criteria’, as required pursuant to Article 16(2) of Directive 96/67.

25 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy) has decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Does Article 7 of Directive 2004/17, which requires the application of the EU rules governing the award of public contracts to activities relating to the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of the provision of airports to air carriers, as defined in the national case-law referred to in paragraphs 6.4 and 6.5 [of the order for reference], preclude national provisions, such as those set out in Articles 4 and 11 of Legislative Decree No 18/1999, which do not require a prior public selection procedure to be conducted for every allocation, including temporary allocations, of areas within airports for the purpose of such activities?’

Consideration of the question referred

26 By its question, the referring court seeks to ascertain, in essence, whether Article 7 of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which does not require a selection procedure to be conducted prior to every allocation, including temporary allocations, of areas within airports to be used for the provision of groundhandling services.

27 Article 7 of Directive 2004/17 provides that the activities to which the directive applies include activities relating to the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of providing airports to air carriers.

28 However, it is necessary to consider whether the contract for the allocation of airport areas at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 2004/17.

29 As observed by, inter alia, the Commission, the contract at issue in the main proceedings, as described by the referring court, cannot be classified as a ‘services contract’, as the managing body responsible for Malpensa Airport did not acquire a service provided by the supplier in return for remuneration.

30 Moreover, it is not necessary to consider whether that contract may be classified as a ‘concession’, given that, under Article 18 of Directive 2004/17, services concessions relating to the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of providing airports to air carriers fall, in any event, outside the scope of that directive.

31 As a consequence, in the light of the information provided by the referring court, it does not appear that the award at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 2004/17.

32 On the other hand, a body responsible for the management of an airport, such as SEA, is subject to the provisions of Directive 96/67.

33 It is apparent from Article 16(2) of Directive 96/67 that the managing body concerned must comply with the requirements laid down in that provision, under which the space available for groundhandling at an airport must be divided among the various suppliers of groundhandling services and self-handling airport users, including new entrants in the field, to the extent necessary for the exercise of their rights and to allow effective and fair competition, on the basis of the relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory rules and criteria. That body is not obliged, however, to organise a prior tendering procedure.

34 It is therefore for the referring court to verify whether, in the case before it, the requirements set out in the above paragraph have been met.

35 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 7 of Directive 2004/17 is to be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which does not require a public selection procedure to be conducted prior to the allocation, including a temporary allocation, of areas within airports to be used for the provision of groundhandling services for which no remuneration is to be paid by the manager of the airport.

Costs

36 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Ninth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 7 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors is to be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which does not require a public selection procedure to be conducted prior to the allocation, including a temporary allocation, of areas within airports to be used for the provision of groundhandling services for which no remuneration is to be paid by the manager of the airport.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Italian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 3 May 2017 (1)

Case C-701/15

Malpensa Logistica Europa SpA

v

SEA — Società Esercizi Aeroportuali SpA,

intervener:

Beta-Trans SpA

(Request for a preliminary ruling
from the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court of Lombardy, Italy))

(Public procurement — Transport — Exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of making it available to air carriers at airports or other terminal facilities — Directives 2004/17/EC and 96/67/EC — National legislation not requiring any selection procedure for the allocation of areas within airports)

1. The dispute forming the subject matter of this reference for a preliminary ruling arises in the context of dealings between the managing body of Milan's Malpensa airport (2) and two companies providing groundhandling services. One of them (Malpensa Logistica Europa SpA, 'Malpensa Logistica') challenges SEA's decision to make available, on a temporary basis, directly to the other (Beta-Trans SpA, 'Beta-Trans') certain airport facilities, without any prior tendering procedure.

2. The Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court of Lombardy, Italy), which has to decide on the dispute, is dealing with national rules governing the award of public contracts which, in its opinion, are at odds with the rules governing groundhandling services at airports. Since those rules transpose, respectively, Directives 2004/17/EC (3) and 96/67/EC (4), the national court has asked the Court to interpret EU law in order to determine whether the allocation of the area assigned to Beta-Trans ought to have been preceded by a selection procedure subject to the rules on public procurement.

I. Legal framework

A. EU law

1. Directive 2004/17

3. Article 1 ('Definitions') provides:

‘1. For the purposes of this Directive, the definitions set out in this Article shall apply.

2. (a) “Supply, works and service contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more of the contracting entities referred to in Article 2(2), and one or more contractors, suppliers, or service providers.

…

(d) “Service contracts” are contracts other than works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex XVII.

…

3. …

(b) A “service concession” is a contract of the same type as a service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right together with payment.’

4. Paragraph 2 of Article 2 (‘Contracting entities’) provides:

‘This Directive shall apply to contracting entities:

(a) which are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7;

…’

5. Article 7, entitled ‘Exploration for, or extraction of, oil, gas, coal or other solid fuels, as well as ports and airports’, states:

‘This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of:

…

(b) the provision of airports … or other terminal facilities to carriers by air…’

6. According to Article 18 (‘Works and service concessions’):

‘This Directive shall not apply to works and service concessions which are awarded by contracting entities carrying out one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7, where those concessions are awarded for carrying out those activities.’

2. Directive 96/67

7. The recitals state that:

‘(5) … the opening-up of access to the groundhandling market should help reduce the operating costs of airline companies and improve the quality of service provided to airport users;

(6) … in the light of the principle of subsidiarity it is essential that access to the groundhandling market should take place within a Community framework, while allowing Member States the possibility of taking into consideration the specific nature of the sector;

(7) … in its communication of June 1994 entitled “The way forward for civil aviation in Europe” the Commission indicated its intention of taking an initiative before the end of 1994 in order to achieve access to the groundhandling market at Community airports; … the Council, in its resolution of 24 October 1994 on the situation in European civil aviation …, confirmed the need to take account of the imperatives linked to the situation of airports when opening up the market;

…

(11) … for certain categories of groundhandling services access to the market and self-handling may come up against safety, security, capacity and available-space constraints; … it is therefore necessary to be able to limit the number of authorised suppliers of such categories of groundhandling services; … it should also be possible to limit self-handling; … in that case, the criteria for limitation must be relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory;

…

(14) … in certain cases these constraints can be such that they may justify restrictions on market access or on self-handling to the extent that these restrictions are relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory;

…

(16) … if effective and fair competition is to be maintained where the number of suppliers of ground-handling services is limited, the latter need to be chosen according to a transparent and impartial procedure; … airport users should be consulted when it comes to selecting suppliers of ground-handling services, since they have a major interest in the quality and price of the ground-handling services which they require;

…

(25) … access to airport installations must be guaranteed to suppliers authorised to provide ground-handling services and to airport users authorised to self-handle, to the extent necessary for them to exercise their rights and to permit fair and genuine competition; … it must be possible however, for such access to give rise to the collection of a fee'.

8. Article 2 ('Definitions') provides:

'For the purposes of this Directive:

…

(c) "managing body of the airport" means a body which, in conjunction with other activities or not as the case may be, has as its objective under national law or regulation the administration and management of the airport infrastructures, and the coordination and control of the activities of the different operators present in the airport or airport system concerned;

…

(e) "groundhandling" means the services provided to airport users at airports as described in the Annex;

…

(g) "supplier of groundhandling services" means any natural or legal person supplying third parties with one or more categories of groundhandling services.'

9. Under paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article 6 ('Groundhandling for third parties'):

'1. Member States shall take the necessary measures … to ensure free access by suppliers of groundhandling services to the market for the provision of groundhandling services to third parties.

…

2. Member States may limit the number of suppliers authorised to provide … groundhandling services.'

10. Paragraph 1 of Article 9 (‘Exemptions’), provides:

‘Where at an airport, specific constraints of available space or capacity, arising in particular from congestion and area utilisation rate, make it impossible to open up the market and/or implement self-handling to the degree provided for in this Directive, the Member State in question may decide:

(a) to limit the number of suppliers … of groundhandling services …’.

11. According to paragraph 1(b) of Article 11 (‘Selection of suppliers’):

‘Member States shall take the necessary measures for the organisation of a selection procedure for suppliers authorised to provide groundhandling services at an airport where their number is limited in the cases provided for in Article 6(2) or Article 9. This procedure must comply with the following principles:

…

(b) An invitation to tender must be launched and published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, to which any interested supplier of groundhandling services may reply;

…’

12. Article 16 (‘Access to installations’) provides:

‘…

2. The space available for groundhandling at an airport must be divided among the various suppliers of groundhandling services …, including new entrants in the field, to the extent necessary for the exercise of their rights and to allow effective and fair competition, on the basis of the relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory rules and criteria.

3. Where access to airport installations gives rise to the collection of a fee, the latter shall be determined according to relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory criteria.’

B. Italian law

1. Legislative Decree No 163/2006 (5)

13. Article 213 (‘Ports and airports’) provides:

‘The provisions of this part shall apply to activities relating to the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of the provision of airports and maritime or inland ports or other terminal facilities to carriers by air, sea or inland waterway.’

2. Legislative Decree No 18/1999 (6)

14. Article 4(1) provides that there is, ordinarily, to be free access to the groundhandling market for service providers, subject solely to the requirements laid down in Article 13.

15. Under Article 4(2), it is possible for free access to be restricted ‘on proper grounds relating to security, capacity or the available space at the airport’.

16. Article 12(1) lays down the derogations from free access, defined as ‘specific constraints of available space or capacity, arising in particular from congestion and the area utilisation rate, notified by the managing body’.

17. Article 11 imposes an obligation to conduct a prior public selection procedure ‘to identify providers of the categories of groundhandling services access to which is subject to restrictions or derogations’.

II. Proceedings before the Court

18. The request for a preliminary ruling was lodged at the Court Registry on 31 December 2015.

19. Written observations were submitted by Malpensa Logistica, Beta-Trans, SEA and the European Commission.

20. A public hearing was held on 25 May 2016, which Malpensa Logistica and Beta-Trans declined to attend. The hearing was, however, attended by SEA and the European Commission.

III. Background to the case and question referred for a preliminary ruling

21. SEA, as the managing body of Milan's Malpensa airport, awarded a hangar at that airport with an area of approximately 1 000 square metres to Beta-Trans for the provision of groundhandling services.

22. It is apparent from the written observations and information supplied at the hearing that, prior to the award of the hangar to Beta-Trans, a competitive procedure had been conducted in order to allocate certain areas within the airport to groundhandling operators. Both Beta-Trans and Malpensa Logistica submitted bids in that selection procedure for the performance of handling activities at the airport. The former was successful.

23. Beta-Trans was unable to occupy the area assigned to it because the space was not yet ready and had to be fitted out. SEA therefore gave Beta-Trans the temporary use of a hangar of 1 000 square metres so that it could commence its groundhandling activities immediately. The allocation of the area was therefore merely temporary until the 'final area' was ready for use (scheduled for July 2017).

24. On 18 April 2015, Malpensa Logistica applied for the annulment of the decision awarding the hangar to Beta-Trans. It claimed that since, like Beta-Trans, it also needed more space, both undertakings ought to have been treated equally within the framework of a public selection procedure.

25. The court which has been called upon to decide on the dispute states that, in principle, Legislative Decree No 163/2006 applies because, according to the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State, Italy), (7) domestic public procurement legislation governs concessions of areas within airports for the provision of groundhandling services. Since the award of areas comes within the material scope of the legislation on special sectors, a public selection procedure has to be conducted.

26. However, the referring court is confronted with the fact that another set of domestic rules (Legislative Decree No 18/1999 governing groundhandling services at airports) takes a different approach in that it does not require a selection procedure to be conducted.

27. In so far as these two Italian legislative instruments transpose Directives 2004/17 and 96/67, respectively, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court of Lombardy) considers it necessary to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

> 'Does Article 7 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, which requires the application of the EU rules governing the award of public contracts to activities relating to the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of the provision of airports to air carriers, as defined in the national case-law referred to in paragraphs 6.4 and 6.5 [of the order for reference], preclude national provisions, such as those set out in Articles 4 and 11 of Legislative Decree No 18/1999, which do not require a prior public selection procedure to be conducted for every allocation, including temporary allocations, of areas within airports for the purpose of such activities?'

IV. Summary of the arguments of the parties

28. Malpensa Logistica submits that Directive 96/67 was guided by the need to open up the market for groundhandling services, removing them from the monopolistic influence of airport managing bodies at a time when the allocation of areas within airports by those bodies fell within the scope of the ‘special sectors’ covered by the rules on public procurement.

29. Directive 2004/17, which was adopted at a later point in time, governs the procedures for the award of contracts in the special sectors and provides that its principles are to apply to contracts on the provision of airports (Article 7) for purposes directly related to the pursuit of an airport activity (Article 20). Specifically, Article 10 of that directive requires contracting entities to treat economic operators on non-discriminatory and equal terms, while Article 31 provides that contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex XVII A are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 34 to 59.

30. In Italy, responsibility for making awards lies with airport concession holders and those contracts are directly related to the activities of the managing body. SEA is therefore under an obligation to allocate the areas necessary for the exploitation of services relating to airport management in accordance with the procedures laid down in Directive 2004/17.

31. Malpensa Logistica argues that this system is on a different level from the system set out in Directive 96/67, the aim of which was not to abolish managing bodies’ monopoly, but to establish equal treatment for all operators seeking to exploit areas within an airport. Under Community principles, such equality is ensured by means of selection procedures that are open to competition.

32. In Malpensa Logistica’s opinion, there is no conflict between Directives 96/67 and 2004/17, which are different in scope. Since the entry into force of Directive 2004/17 and its transposing legislation, providers of services directly related to airport activities have had to access the exploitation of the areas assigned to them through open and transparent selection procedures.

33. Lastly, Malpensa Logistica considers the fact that the disputed award was only temporary to be irrelevant as it also had an interest in the temporary allocation of the area at issue, which should have been effected by means of a selection procedure.

34. Beta-Trans submits, in the first place, that the hangar was made available to it because it had previously been awarded, as a result of a competitive procedure, similar facilities still under construction. The disputed assignment was for a limited time, until those facilities were ready for use.

35. Beta-Trans refers to the commercial context of the dealings between it, Malpensa Logistica and a former client of the latter (Nippon Cargo Airlines) to assert that, even though Malpensa Logistica had vastly more space at the airport, Beta-Trans had succeeded in establishing commercial links with Nippon Cargo Airlines, which it could not have done without the disputed award. In its view, SEA’s approach ensures access to the market for new operators, as well as effective and genuine competition, since it makes it easier for third parties to choose freely between different suppliers of services at airports. In that connection, it stresses the importance of Article 16 of Directive 96/67, in so far as it helps open the market up to new operators, such as itself.

36. Lastly, Beta-Trans focuses its analysis on Directive 96/67 and Legislative Decree No 18/1999, which transposes that directive into Italian law, to submit that the general rule of free access is subject to exceptions (including lack of space) which may justify restrictions on the number of service providers and the requirement that such providers be appointed by means of competitive selection procedures.

37. SEA contends that Directive 2004/17 does not apply in this case, which is governed by Directive 96/67, pursuant to the principle that special rules override general rules. It argues that, when Directive 96/67 was approved, sectors such as air transport were already regulated by Directive 531/90/EEC, (8) which Directive 2004/17 later replaced with substantially the same provisions as far as their scope was concerned. Accordingly, by approving Directive 96/67, the Community legislature was aware of the existence of such provisions on public procurement in the special sectors, despite which it established a special set of rules for groundhandling services at airports.

38. From a different angle, SEA states that Directive 2004/17 necessarily presupposes that the contract concluded between the contracting entity and the contractor, (9) under which the former gives the latter remuneration in payment for the service it receives, is for pecuniary interest. This element is lacking in the instant case, in which it is the successful tenderer who pays the other party a fee as consideration for the occupation of a publicly owned area. Directive 2004/17 does not, therefore, apply to the dispute.

39. SEA then turns its attention to the possibility under Directive 96/67 of imposing limits on the access by suppliers of groundhandling services, in which case a public selection procedure must be conducted. This possibility does not necessarily mean that a selective process must also be conducted for the assignment of areas to be used in such activities.

40. The Commission, taking the same approach as SEA, argues that Directive 2004/17 does not apply because the requirement under Article 1(2)(c) and (d) thereof that the contract be for pecuniary interest is not met, there being no remuneration from the contracting authority to the contractor in exchange for the provision of a service by the contractor. The relationship between them falls within the ambit of service concessions, which are excluded from the scope of Directive 2004/17 by Article 18 thereof.

41. Even if it were to be accepted that the concession of areas within airports was governed by Directive 2004/17, it would fall within category 20 of Annex XVII B, with the result that the managing body would not be under an obligation to organise a selection procedure.

42. In short, the Commission states that Directive 96/67 is the point of reference and it can be inferred from that directive alone that the managing body is required to divide the space available among the different operators, to the extent necessary for the exercise of their rights and to allow effective and fair competition based on relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory rules and criteria. The national court must determine whether, in this specific case, those criteria were met, even in the absence of a selection procedure.

V. Assessment

43. As a preliminary observation, it is pertinent to note that the Court's answer to the referring court cannot play a part in the debate on the interpretation of the domestic rules which, according to the referring court, could be used 'in the abstract' (10) to decide on the case.

44. It is for the referring court (and, as the case may be, the court that may have to review its judgment) to clarify whether Legislative Decree No 163/2006 (on public procurement), as general legislation, takes precedence over the provisions of Legislative Decree No 18/1999 (governing groundhandling services at airports) in order to determine whether, under Italian law and in accordance with those legal instruments, the allocation of areas within airports must be preceded by a public selection procedure.

45. The fact that both sets of national provisions 'are derived from EU law', as the referring court states, (11) does not prevent the Italian legislature from requiring that public selection procedures apply in the case of allocations of areas within airports, such as the area in the present case, allocations which, as I will argue below, are not covered by Directive 2004/17. Whilst that directive certainly requires that contracts falling within its scope be awarded in accordance with its provisions, there is nothing to prevent a Member State from deciding, on its own initiative, to extend those rules to other contractual arrangements.

46. Leaving aside the indisputable jurisdiction of the Italian courts to determine whether, under Italian law, the award of areas within airports must always be preceded by a public selection procedure, I will confine myself to providing some interpretative guidelines on the two directives in question. After identifying the directive which I consider applies from the standpoint of EU law, it will be necessary to examine whether Italian law conflicts with that directive in any way.

A. The application of Directive 2004/17

47. The first point to be addressed is the classification of the relationship between the managing body of the airport and the suppliers of groundhandling services, in order to determine whether it constitutes a public service contract or a service concession, with a public property element. In the latter situation, Directive 2004/17 would not apply, in accordance with Article 18 thereof.

48. The case-law of the Court (12) lays down the basis for distinguishing between these categories. Although its decisions relate to the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC, (13) I am of the view that they may be applied to Directive 2004/17, in view of the similarities between the relevant provisions of those directives.

49. The Court has held that 'it follows from a comparison of the definitions of a public service contract and a service concession provided, respectively, by Article 1(2)(a) and (d) and by Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18 [corresponding to Article 1(2)(a) and (d) and Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17] that the difference between a public service contract and a service concession lies in the consideration for the provision of services. A service contract involves consideration which, although it is not the only consideration, is paid directly by the contracting authority to the service provider, while, for a service concession, the consideration for the provision of services consists in the right to exploit the service, either alone, or together with payment.' (14)

50. The Court has also found that the classification of a relationship as a service concession 'implies that the service supplier takes the risk of operating the services in question and that the absence of a transfer to the service provider of the risk connected with operating the service shows that the transaction concerned is a public service contract and not a service concession'. (15)

51. In the context of groundhandling services, the close relationship between the managing body of the airport and the supplier of those services to airlines is given concrete expression in the surrender by the former to the latter of the relevant airport land and facilities. In exchange for public property being made available in this way, the managing body receives remuneration (usually in the form of a fee) from the operator. In turn, the operator uses the assigned areas in its commercial dealings with third parties, namely with users who agree to pay the operator for the services performed. (16) The operator bears the commercial risk associated with the pursuit of its business.

52. At the hearing, it was confirmed that this basic arrangement is precisely the one in use at Milan's Malpensa airport. The suppliers of groundhandling services pay SEA, as managing entity, an annual fee based on the number of square metres of the facilities they occupy. This remuneration takes the form of consideration for the use of areas at the airport and is based on Article 16(3) of Directive 96/67. (17)

53. A concession of airport facilities to a supplier so that the latter can provide groundhandling services to third parties cannot be classified as a public service contract for the purpose of Article 1(2)(a) and (d) of Directive 2004/17, with the result that the relationship referred to in the main proceedings falls outside the scope of that directive.

54. Lastly, as the Commission points out, if it is accepted that the award of this type of facilities, which enable groundhandling services to be provided, is subject to the requirements of Directive 2004/17, it would come under supporting and auxiliary transport services (category 20 of Annex XVII B to Directive 2004/17). Article 32 of Directive 2004/17 provides that the award of contracts which have as their object that category of services is 'governed solely by Articles 34 and 43' (technical specifications and contract award notices, respectively), that is, not by the remaining general rules.

B. The possible application of both Directive 2004/17 and Directive 96/67

55. If, hypothetically speaking, the award of areas within airports to suppliers of groundhandling services was of the same nature as a contract for the provision of services (quod non), both Directive 2004/17 and Directive 96/67 would apply to the same factual situation. The first directive requires that the award be preceded by a formal selection procedure while the second does not, with the result that the conflict is evident.

56. As the Commission noted in its written observations and recalled at the hearing, managing bodies such as SEA have a distinctive structure which allows them to act either as contracting authorities, under Directive 2004/17, or as administrators of airport infrastructure, a status which, under Directive 96/67, empowers them to coordinate and control the activities of the different operators present at the airport. This dual role calls for an examination of the duties performed in each case.

57. Awards such as that at issue in the main proceedings fall within the second category of functions, governed by Directive 96/67, and are not subject to the procedures set out in Directive 2004/17, as I have just pointed out. This conclusion can be drawn, in my opinion, simply by considering the scope of each directive, without it being necessary to resort to criteria of interpretation based on the lex generalis/lex specialis pairing.

58. If those criteria had to be applied, the case-law of the Court would enable the conflict between the two sets of rules to be resolved. In such cases, the Court has diffused any legislative friction by having recourse to the principle that special rules override general rules, which in turn is related to the principle of legal certainty 'requir[ing] that rules of law be clear and precise and predictable in their effect, so that interested parties can ascertain their position in situations and legal relationships governed by EU law'. (18)

59. Particularly apposite is the recent judgment of 27 October 2016 in Hörmann Reisen, (19) in which the apparent overlap, also in the transport field, occurred between Regulation (EC) No 1370/2007 (20) and the directives on public procurement. (21)

60. The Court, in setting out the premiss of its decision, stated that 'Directive 2004/18 … is of general application, whereas Regulation No 1370/2007 applies only to public passenger transport services by rail and road'. Based on that finding, and bearing in mind that both Regulation No 1370/2007 and Directive 2004/18 'contain rules on subcontracting, the view must be taken that the first provision constitutes a special rule with respect to the rules laid down in the second provision, and, as a lex specialis, takes precedence over the latter'.

61. Malpensa Logistica nonetheless argues that Directive 2004/17 applies as it postdates Directive 96/67. However, an analysis of the time sequence leads instead to the opposite conclusion, since the wording of Directive 2004/17 is the same, in this respect, as that of its predecessor, Directive 90/531/EEC, (22) which already included airports within its scope (Article 2(2)(b)(ii)), under the same terms as Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/17. Accordingly, when it approved Directive 96/67, the Community legislature was fully aware of the specific nature of the rules it was establishing, which differed from those set out in the directive on procurement in the special sectors.

62. The uniqueness of the rules relating to airports is justified by Directive 96/67 itself, where it makes clear in its recitals (23) that the objectives of the directive are to help reduce the operating costs of airlines and improve the quality of service provided to users by opening up access to the groundhandling market, (24) at the same time as acknowledging the possibility for the Member States to take the specific nature of the sector into account and the need to weigh up the imperatives linked to the situation of airports when such opening-up occurs.

63. From that perspective, also, the application of Directive 2004/17 would be excluded in favour of the application of Directive 96/67.

C. The consequences of the foregoing assessment for the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling

64. The question referred by the national court is confined to ascertaining only whether Article 7 of Directive 2004/17 'preclude[s]' national provisions (Articles 4 and 11 of Legislative Decree No 18/1999) which do not require a public tendering procedure in the case of the award of areas within airports.

65. In the light of the above assessment, my view is that the answer to that question, as it is worded, should be in the negative. To that end, it would be sufficient to state that Directive 2004/17 does not apply to awards of this kind, notwithstanding the fact that the national legislature may, if it considers it appropriate and acting on its own authority, make them subject to rules similar to those governing public contracts in the special sectors. To the extent that Legislative Decree No 18/1999 does not require there to be a formal tendering system for the award of the use of such areas, it does not conflict with Directive 2004/17.

66. However, that answer might be insufficient and detract from the two-way process of preliminary rulings, since the referring court, in its meticulous presentation of the applicable law, also mentioned Directive 96/67 and the legislation transposing it into Italian law. An answer which did not examine the effect of that directive on the main proceedings would, in my view, be incomplete.

67. In addition, as the Court has repeatedly held, 'the fact that the referring court's question refers only to certain provisions of EU law does not mean that the Court may not provide the national court with all the guidance on points of interpretation that may be of assistance in adjudicating on the case pending before it, whether or not that court has referred to those points in its question'. (25)

68. It is therefore appropriate to address the problems raised in the order for reference also from the standpoint of Directive 96/67.

D. The allocation of areas within airports under Directive 96/67

69. Pursuant to Directive 96/67, access by suppliers of groundhandling services to the market for the provision of services to third parties at airports is free (Article 6). However, in keeping with its recitals, (26) Directive 96/67 allows the Member States, in specified circumstances, to reduce the number of suppliers authorised to provide groundhandling services (Article 6(2) in conjunction with Article 9). In those circumstances, it is necessary to initiate a competitive procedure to select operators, which is governed by the same directive (Article 11).

70. In both scenarios (unrestricted access or selective access), (27) the chosen suppliers must obviously have access to airport facilities, which the managing body provides to them. Under Article 16(2) of Directive 96/67, the space available for groundhandling services at an airport must be divided among the various suppliers 'to the extent necessary for the exercise of their rights and to allow effective and fair competition, on the basis of the relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory rules and criteria'.

71. This provision therefore requires the managing body to observe, when allocating areas or facilities within airports, the abovementioned 'relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory rules and criteria', but it does not require that body to have recourse to a formal public tendering procedure similar to that in place for the award of contracts covered by Directive 2004/17.

72. The fact that Directive 96/67 does not require the managing entity to initiate a selection procedure in order to award areas within airports to suppliers obviously does not mean that the managing entity is not able to organise such a procedure. What is more, an open tendering procedure between authorised operators may undoubtedly be one of the mechanisms (not necessarily the only mechanism) suitable for distributing areas, if it is implemented in accordance with the criteria of objectivity, transparency and non-discrimination referred to in Article 16(2) of that directive.

73. Indeed, according to the documents in the case and information provided at the hearing, SEA awarded Beta-Trans the definitive airport facilities as the result of a competitive selection procedure in which Malpensa Logistica also participated. (28) As indicated above, the assignment of the temporary hangar, which is the only matter in dispute, came about because the area which had been definitively awarded was not ready.

74. These factors (the temporary nature of the hangar and the existence of an earlier competitive procedure) may be relevant in determining whether SEA complied with Article 16(2) of Directive 96/67. Since this provision allows the managing body a broad discretion, subject to the limits mentioned above, responsibility for assessing it lies with the national courts.

75. It should also be borne in mind that the objectives of Directive 96/67 include encouraging the presence of new suppliers of groundhandling services and that one of the criteria for assigning available space within airports is to promote 'effective and fair' competition between all operators, 'including new entrants in the field'. Effective competition precisely requires the removal of barriers preventing the entry of new operators. From that perspective, the principles of objectivity, transparency and non-discrimination may justify decisions on the allocation of areas which take account of the situation of suppliers of groundhandling services already in place and their possible dominance in the provision of those services at a given airport. (29)

76. I therefore suggest a twofold answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling:

– First, it must be acknowledged that the national rules, which do not require a prior public selection procedure to be conducted for every award, including temporary awards, of areas within airports for the purpose of providing groundhandling services (Articles 4 and 11 of Legislative Decree No 18/1999), are compatible with Article 7 of Directive 2004/17.

– Secondly, it must be pointed out to the referring court that Article 16(2) of Directive 96/67 requires managing bodies to distribute available space under the terms examined above.

VI. Conclusion

77. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court give the following answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court of Lombardy, Italy):

(1) Article 7 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors must be interpreted as not precluding national provisions, such as those set out in Articles 4 and 11 of Legislative Decree No 18/1999, which do not require a prior public selection procedure to be conducted for every award, including temporary awards, of areas within airports for the purpose of providing groundhandling services.

(2) The award must comply with Article 16(2) of Council Directive 96/67/EC of 15 October 1996 on access to the groundhandling market at Community airports, so that those areas are divided among the various suppliers of groundhandling services, including new entrants in the field, to the extent necessary for the exercise of their rights and to allow effective and fair competition, on the basis of relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory rules and criteria, this being a matter for the national court to determine.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Società Esercizi Aeroportuali SpA (‘SEA’).

---

3 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1).

---

4 Council Directive of 15 October 1996 on access to the groundhandling market at Community airports (OJ 1996 L 272, p. 36).

---

5 This decree transposes Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC into Italian law (Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006)).

---

6 This decree transposes Directive 96/67 into Italian law (Attuazione della direttiva 96/67/CE relativa al libero accesso al mercato dei servizi di assistenza a terra negli aeroporti della Comunità (GURI No 28 of 4 February 1999)).

---

7 According to the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) cited by the referring court (judgments 4934/2013 and 2026/2014), Article 213 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 covers not only the operations of take-off, landing and management of aircraft, but also activities relating to passenger transit and security, baggage sorting and, in general, all services which are ordinarily complementary thereto. It has also been held that the concession of areas within airports for the provision of groundhandling services, as a form of exploitation of airport areas in connection with the activities normally carried on by air carriers, falls within the material scope of the legislation on special sectors.

---

8 Council Directive of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1).

---

9 It distinguishes between passive public contracts (inter alia, those governed by Directive 2004/17), which represent a source of expenditure for contracting entities that purchase goods or services, and active public contracts, which include concessions over publicly owned property, for which the authorities receive income.

---

10 Paragraph 6.2 of the order for reference.

---

11 Ibidem.

---

12 Judgments of 10 March 2011, Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler (C-274/09, EU:C:2011:130), paragraphs 24 and 26, and of 8 September 2016, Politanò (C-225/15, EU:C:2016:645), paragraphs 29 to 31.

---

13 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

---

14 Judgment of 8 September 2016, Politanò (C-225/15, EU:C:2016:645), paragraph 30.

---

15 Ibidem, paragraph 31. The EU legislature included these defining features of service concessions in Article 5(1)(b) of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1).

---

16 The economic content of the relationship between the parties involved is set out, in some countries, in a document approved by the managing body. That document usually specifies the amount of the fee (or similar financial obligation, of a public nature) to be paid (or performed) by the operator, in proportion to the areas assigned and, where appropriate, the different kinds of service provided. It may also establish the rate, or maximum price, that the operator may charge its customers, depending on the nature of the services they request, including handling services.

---

17 In its judgment of 16 October 2003, Flughafen Hannover-Langenhagen (C-363/01, EU:C:2003:548), the Court held that Article 16(3) of Directive 96/67 enables the managing body of an airport to charge a fee for the use of airport facilities which takes account of that body's interest in achieving a profit and which must be calculated in accordance with the criteria laid down in that article.

---

18 Judgment of 12 February 2015, Parliament v Council (C-48/14, EU:C:2015:91), paragraph 45, citing judgments of 8 December 2011, France Télécom v Commission (C-81/10 P, EU:C:2011:811), paragraph 100, and of 31 January 2013, LVK-56 (C-643/11, EU:C:2013:55), paragraph 51.

---

19 Case C-292/15, EU:C:2016:817.

---

20 Regulation of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2007 on public passenger transport services by rail and by road and repealing Council Regulations (EEC) Nos 1191/69 and 1107/70 (OJ 2007 L 315, p. 1).

21 The problem arose due to the differing scope of subcontracting, depending on whether Directive 2004/18 or Regulation No 1370/2007 applied.

22 Council Directive of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1).

23 Recitals 5 to 7, reproduced in point 7 of this Opinion.

24 The Court drew attention to this objective in its judgment of 11 September 2014, Commission v Portugal (C-277/13, EU:C:2014:2208), paragraph 48.

25 Judgment of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF (C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721), paragraph 20 and the case-law cited.

26 Recitals 11, 14 and 16 provide for the limitation of the number of suppliers for reasons of safety, security, capacity and available space, provided that those constraints are relevant, objective, transparent and non-discriminatory, in which case suppliers must be chosen on the basis of a transparent and impartial procedure.

27 According to information provided by SEA at the hearing, the access by suppliers of groundhandling services to Milan's Malpensa airport is not subject to any prior selection procedure.

28 There is no record of Malpensa Logistica having challenged that award.

29 According to the order for reference (paragraph 3), SEA and Beta-Trans had claimed that Malpensa Logistica already had a storage area of 18 000 square metres, as well as a further 2 700 square metres of covered area, and that the managing body, in response to Malpensa Logistica's requests, had ordered the construction of an additional covered area of 3 327 square meters to store cargo where it could be 'protected from the weather'.

EU:C:2016:867

ORDONNANCE DE LA COUR (sixième chambre)

10 novembre 2016 (*)

« Renvoi préjudiciel – Article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour – Marchés publics – Directive 2004/18/CE – Directive 2014/24/UE – Participation à un appel d'offres – Soumissionnaire ayant omis de mentionner dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – Obligation prétorienne de porter cette mention – Exclusion du marché sans possibilité de rectifier cette omission »

Dans l'affaire C-697/15,

ayant pour objet une demande de décision préjudicielle au titre de l'article 267 TFUE, introduite par le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (tribunal administratif régional du Piémont, Italie), par décision du 11 novembre 2015, parvenue à la Cour le 28 décembre 2015, dans la procédure

MB Srl

contre

Società Metropolitana Acque Torino (SMAT) SpA,

en présence de :

De Campo Egidio Eredi di De Campo Danilo & C.,

LA COUR (sixième chambre),

composée de M. A. Arabadjiev, faisant fonction de président de chambre, MM. C. G. Fernlund et S. Rodin (rapporteur), juges, avocat général : M. M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

greffier : M. A. Calot Escobar,

vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée, conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation des principes de protection de la confiance légitime et de sécurité juridique, lus en combinaison avec les principes de la libre circulation des marchandises, de la liberté d'établissement, de la libre prestation de services, d'égalité de traitement, de non-discrimination, de reconnaissance mutuelle, de proportionnalité, de transparence, repris par la directive 2014/24/UE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 26 février 2014, sur la passation des marchés publics et abrogeant la directive 2004/18/CE (JO 2014, L 94, p. 65).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige opposant MB Srl à Società Metropolitana Acque Torino (SMAT) SpA, au sujet d'une décision de cette dernière, en sa qualité de pouvoir adjudicateur, d'exclure MB de la procédure de passation d'un marché public de travaux.

Le cadre juridique

Le droit de l'Union

3 L'article 2 de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO 2004, L 134, p. 114), disposait :

« Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité, de manière non discriminatoire et agissent avec transparence. »

4 Aux termes de l'article 18, paragraphe 1, premier alinéa, de la directive 2014/24 :

« Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité et sans discrimination et agissent d'une manière transparente et proportionnée. »

5 L'article 56, paragraphe 3, de cette directive prévoit :

« Lorsque les informations ou les documents qui doivent être soumis par les opérateurs économiques sont ou semblent incomplets ou erronés ou lorsque certains documents sont manquants, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent, sauf disposition contraire du droit national mettant en œuvre la présente directive, demander aux opérateurs économiques concernés de présenter, compléter, clarifier ou préciser les informations ou les documents concernés dans un délai approprié, à condition que ces demandes respectent pleinement les principes d'égalité de traitement et transparence. »

Le droit italien

6 L'article 86, paragraphe 3 bis, du decreto legislativo n. 163 – Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (décret législatif n° 163, portant sur le code des marchés publics de travaux, de services et de fournitures en application des directives 2004/17/CE et 2004/18/CE), du 12 avril 2006 (supplément ordinaire à la GURI n° 100, du 2 mai 2006), tel que modifié par le decreto legislativo n. 152 (décret législatif n° 152), du 11 septembre 2008 (supplément ordinaire à la GURI n° 231, du 2 octobre 2008) (ci-après le « décret législatif n° 163/2006 »), dispose :

« Lors de la préparation des appels d'offres et pour l'évaluation de l'anomalie des offres dans les procédures de passation de marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, les entités adjudicatrices sont tenues de déterminer si la valeur économique est adéquate et suffisante au regard du coût du travail et du coût afférent à la sécurité, lequel doit être spécifiquement mentionné et être raisonnable au regard de l'ampleur et des caractéristiques des travaux, des services ou des fournitures. Aux fins du présent paragraphe, le coût du travail est fixé périodiquement, dans des tableaux spéciaux, par le ministre du Travail et de la Prévoyance sociale, sur la base des valeurs économiques prévues par la négociation collective conclue par les syndicats comparativement les plus représentatifs, des normes en matière de prévoyance et d'assistance, des différents secteurs commerciaux et des différentes zones territoriales. En l'absence de convention collective applicable, le coût du travail est établi en fonction de la convention collective du secteur commercial le plus proche de celui concerné. »

7 Aux termes de l'article 87, paragraphe 4, du décret législatif n° 163/2006 :

« Ne sont pas admises les justifications concernant les charges de sécurité au titre de l'article 131, ainsi que le plan de sécurité et de coordination visé à l'article 12 du décret législatif n° 494 du 14 août 1996, et l'évaluation y afférente des coûts au sens de l'article 7 du décret n° 222 du président de la République du 3 juillet 2003. Lors de l'évaluation de l'anomalie, le pouvoir adjudicateur tient compte des coûts afférents à la sécurité, qui doivent être spécifiquement mentionnés dans l'offre et être raisonnables au regard de l'ampleur et des caractéristiques des services ou des fournitures. »

8 L'article 26, paragraphe 6, du decreto legislativo n. 81 – Attuazione dell'articolo 1 della legge 3 agosto 2007, n. 123, in materia di tutela della salute e della sicurezza nei luoghi di lavoro (décret législatif n° 81, – Mise en œuvre de l'article 1 de la loi du 3 août 2007, n° 123, dans le cadre de la réglementation concernant la protection de la santé et de la sécurité sur les lieux de travail), du 9 avril 2008, dispose :

« Lors de la préparation des appels d'offres et pour l'évaluation de l'anomalie des offres dans les procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, les entités adjudicatrices sont tenues de déterminer si la valeur économique est adéquate et suffisante au regard du coût du travail et du coût afférent à la sécurité, lequel doit être spécifiquement mentionné et être raisonnable au regard de l'ampleur et des caractéristiques des travaux, des services ou des fournitures. Aux fins du présent paragraphe, le coût du travail est fixé périodiquement, dans des tableaux spéciaux, par le ministre du Travail, de la Santé et des Politiques sociales, sur la base des valeurs économiques prévues par la négociation collective conclue par les syndicats comparativement les plus représentatifs, des normes en matière de prévoyance et d'assistance, des différents secteurs commerciaux et des différentes zones territoriales. En l'absence de convention collective applicable, le coût du travail est établi en fonction de la convention collective du secteur commercial le plus proche de celui concerné. »

Le litige au principal et la question préjudicielle

9 Par lettres d'invitation du 22 juin 2015, SMAT, une société à capital entièrement public qui gère les services des eaux, d'assainissement et d'épuration des communes de l'arrière-pays turinois, a lancé une procédure restreinte simplifiée en vue de l'attribution d'un marché public de travaux ayant pour objet l'extension du « réservoir des Vallées » et le raccordement du réseau communal à celui d'Andrate (Italie). Il ressort de la décision de renvoi que les documents afférents à cette procédure prévoyaient que le critère d'attribution du marché en cause était celui du prix le plus bas, avec application de la procédure d'exclusion automatique des offres qui auraient présenté un pourcentage de rabais égal ou supérieur à un certain seuil, qualifié de seuil d'anomalie.

10 MB a présenté une offre au moyen d'un formulaire, prévu à cet effet, qui avait été joint en annexe de la lettre d'ouverture de la procédure. Son offre ayant été retenue, elle a été désignée comme adjudicataire provisoire par SMAT.

11 Toutefois, par une note du 13 octobre 2015, SMAT, sans accorder préalablement un délai pour régulariser l'offre et sans avoir vérifié si, effectivement, l'offre en question respectait ou non les prescriptions requises en matière de sécurité, a retiré sa décision portant adjudication provisoire du marché à MB et a exclu cette société de la procédure de passation de ce marché, au seul motif que l'offre qu'elle avait présentée ne mentionnait pas les coûts internes de sécurité au travail. L'obligation de faire figurer ces coûts dans les offres résulterait, selon la juridiction de renvoi, de la réglementation nationale telle qu'elle a été interprétée par le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État, Italie) dans son arrêt n° 3 du 20 mars 2015, rendu en assemblée plénière.

12 Par cet arrêt, le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État) aurait considéré que, dans le cadre des procédures de passation de marchés publics de travaux, les soumissionnaires devaient mentionner, dans leur « offre économique », les coûts internes de sécurité au sein de l'entreprise, sous peine d'exclusion de la procédure, et cela même si cette obligation d'une telle mention et les conséquences de son non-respect n'étaient pas prévues dans les documents de marché.

13 Par un arrêt n° 9, du 2 novembre 2015, l'assemblée plénière du Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État), confirmant son interprétation, aurait précisé :

« En cas de défaut de mention des charges de sécurité de l'entreprise, les pouvoirs relatifs à l'assistance à l'établissement du dossier ne peuvent pas être valablement exercés, notamment pour les procédures dans lesquelles la phase de la soumission des offres s'est achevée avant la publication de l'arrêt de l'assemblée plénière n° 3 de 2015. »

14 De Campo Egidio Eredi di De Campo Danilo & c. Snc a été déclarée adjudicataire provisoire du marché public en cause au principal.

15 MB a alors formé devant le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (tribunal administratif régional du Piémont, Italie) un recours tendant à l'annulation de la décision l'excluant de la procédure d'adjudication et de l'ensemble des actes liés à cette décision d'exclusion.

16 Au soutien de son recours, MB fait valoir que l'obligation d'indiquer de manière distincte dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail, sous peine d'exclusion de la procédure de passation du marché, ne ressortait pas des documents du marché. Elle n'était en effet prévue ni dans l'invitation à participer au marché ni dans le formulaire à remplir pour présenter l'offre, fourni par le pouvoir adjudicateur.

17 Dans ces conditions, le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (tribunal administratif régional du Piémont) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour la question préjudicielle suivante :

« Les principes communautaires de protection de la confiance légitime et de sécurité juridique, en combinaison avec les principes de libre circulation des marchandises, de liberté d'établissement et de libre prestation de services, qui sont énoncés dans le traité FUE, ainsi que les principes qui en découlent, tels que l'égalité de traitement, la non-discrimination, la reconnaissance mutuelle, la proportionnalité et la transparence, énoncés (en dernier lieu) dans la directive 2014/24, s'opposent-ils à une réglementation nationale, comme la réglementation italienne résultant des dispositions combinées de l'article 87, paragraphe 4, et de l'article 86, paragraphe 3 bis, du décret législatif n° 163/2006 ainsi que de l'article 26, paragraphe 6, du décret législatif n° 81 de 2008, telles qu'interprétées par les arrêts n^{os} 3 et 9 rendus en 2015 par l'assemblée plénière du Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État) dans sa fonction d'interprétation uniforme du droit, conformément à l'article 99 du code de procédure administrative, en vertu de laquelle le défaut de mention, dans les offres économiques d'une procédure de passation de marchés publics de travaux, des coûts de sécurité au sein de l'entreprise entraîne en tout état de cause l'exclusion de l'entreprise soumissionnaire, sans la possibilité d'une assistance à l'établissement du dossier et [d'une procédure] contradictoire, même dans le cas où l'obligation de mention séparée n'a été spécifiée ni dans la réglementation de l'appel d'offres ni dans le formulaire annexé à remplir pour la soumission des offres, et même indépendamment de la circonstance que, du point de vue substantiel, l'offre respecte effectivement les coûts minimums de sécurité au sein de l'entreprise ? »

Sur la question préjudicielle

Observations liminaires

18 Conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour, lorsqu'une question posée à titre préjudiciel est identique à une question sur laquelle celle-ci a déjà statué, lorsque la réponse à une telle question peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence ou lorsque la réponse à la question posée à titre préjudiciel ne laisse place à aucun doute raisonnable, la Cour peut, à tout moment, sur proposition du juge rapporteur, l'avocat général entendu, décider de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

19 Dans son arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404), la Cour a été amenée à statuer sur des questions en substance identiques à celles qui sont soulevées dans la présente affaire par le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (tribunal administratif régional du Piémont).

20 Les réponses apportées par cet arrêt étant pleinement transposables à la présente affaire, il y a lieu de faire application de la disposition procédurale susmentionnée.

Sur la directive applicable

21 À titre liminaire, il convient de rappeler que l'arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo (C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404), procède à l'interprétation des dispositions de la directive 2004/18. Cette directive a été abrogée par la directive 2014/24, avec effet au 18 avril 2016.

22 L'article 90 de la directive 2014/24 dispose que les États membres doivent mettre en vigueur les dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives nécessaires pour se conformer à cette directive au plus tard le 18 avril 2016, sous réserve de certaines exceptions dont, notamment, celles relatives aux marchés publics électroniques, pour lesquelles le délai de transposition est fixé au 18 octobre 2018.

23 En conséquence, à la date des faits en cause au principal, la directive 2004/18 était encore applicable, de sorte qu'il convient d'interpréter la demande de décision préjudicielle comme visant à l'interprétation de celle-ci et non à celle de la directive 2014/24.

Sur le fond

24 Par sa question, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence, tels que mis en œuvre par la directive 2004/18, doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un soumissionnaire de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect, par celui-ci, de l'obligation d'indiquer de façon distincte dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – dont le non-respect est sanctionné par l'exclusion de la procédure – qui résulte non pas expressément des documents de marché ou de la réglementation nationale, mais d'une interprétation de cette réglementation et du comblement des lacunes présentées par lesdits documents, par la juridiction nationale.

25 Afin de répondre à cette question, il importe, à titre liminaire, de rappeler, d'une part, que le principe d'égalité de traitement impose que les soumissionnaires disposent des mêmes chances dans la formulation des termes de leurs offres et implique donc que ces offres soient soumises aux mêmes conditions pour tous les soumissionnaires. D'autre part, l'obligation de transparence, qui en constitue le corollaire, a pour but de garantir l'absence de risque de favoritisme et d'arbitraire de la part du pouvoir adjudicateur (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 36 et jurisprudence citée).

26 Cette obligation implique que toutes les conditions et les modalités de la procédure d'attribution soient formulées de manière claire, précise et univoque dans l'avis de marché ou dans le cahier des charges, de façon, premièrement, à permettre à tous les soumissionnaires raisonnablement informés et normalement diligents d'en comprendre la portée exacte et de les interpréter de la même manière et, deuxièmement, à mettre le pouvoir adjudicateur en mesure de vérifier effectivement si les offres des soumissionnaires correspondent aux critères régissant le marché en cause (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 36 et jurisprudence citée).

27 De même, la Cour a précisé que les principes de transparence et d'égalité de traitement exigent que les conditions de fond et de procédure concernant la participation à un marché soient clairement définies au préalable et rendues publiques, en particulier les obligations pesant sur les soumissionnaires, afin que ceux-ci puissent connaître exactement les contraintes de la procédure et être assurés du fait que les mêmes contraintes valent pour tous les concurrents (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 37 et jurisprudence citée).

28 En outre, il y a lieu de relever que la directive 2004/18, à son annexe VII A portant sur les informations qui doivent figurer dans les avis pour les marchés publics, dans sa partie relative aux « Avis de marchés », point 17, prévoit que les « [c]ritères de sélection concernant la situation personnelle des opérateurs économiques qui peuvent entraîner l'exclusion de ces derniers et [les] informations requises prouvant qu'ils ne relèvent pas des cas justifiant l'exclusion » de la procédure de passation du marché en cause doivent être énoncés dans l'avis de marché (voir arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 38).

29 Dans l'affaire au principal, la juridiction de renvoi précise que l'obligation d'indiquer de manière distincte dans l'offre les coûts de l'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail, sous peine d'exclusion de la procédure de passation du marché, n'était prévue ni dans l'avis de marché ni explicitement dans la loi.

30 Ainsi que l'expose cette juridiction, cette obligation résulterait de l'interprétation de la réglementation nationale par le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État).

31 Il convient de relever que, en application de l'article 27, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2004/18, le pouvoir adjudicateur peut indiquer ou peut être obligé par un État membre d'indiquer dans le cahier des charges l'organisme ou les organismes auprès desquels les candidats ou les soumissionnaires peuvent obtenir les informations pertinentes sur les obligations relatives à la fiscalité, à la protection de l'environnement, aux dispositions de protection et aux conditions de travail qui sont en vigueur dans l'État membre. Toutefois, il ne résulte pas des dispositions de cette directive, notamment des articles 49

à 51 de celle-ci, que l'absence d'indications par les soumissionnaires du respect de ces obligations entraînerait automatiquement l'exclusion de la procédure de passation (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 43).

32 Une condition subordonnant le droit de participer à une procédure de marché public qui découlerait de l'interprétation du droit national et de la pratique d'une autorité, telle que celle en cause au principal, serait particulièrement préjudiciable pour les soumissionnaires établis dans d'autres États membres, dans la mesure où leur niveau de connaissance du droit national et de son interprétation ainsi que de la pratique des autorités nationales ne peut être comparé à celui des soumissionnaires nationaux (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 46).

33 Dans l'hypothèse où, comme dans l'affaire au principal, une condition de participation à la procédure de passation du marché, sous peine d'exclusion de cette dernière, n'est pas expressément prévue par les documents du marché et où cette condition ne peut être identifiée que par une interprétation jurisprudentielle du droit national, le pouvoir adjudicateur peut accorder au soumissionnaire exclu un délai suffisant pour régulariser son omission (arrêt du 2 juin 2016, Pizzo, C-27/15, EU:C:2016:404, point 50).

34 Il résulte de l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent qu'il convient de répondre à la question posée que le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence, tels que mis en œuvre par la directive 2004/18, doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un soumissionnaire de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect par celui-ci de l'obligation d'indiquer de façon distincte dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – dont le non-respect est sanctionné par l'exclusion de la procédure – qui résulte non pas expressément des documents de marché ou de la réglementation nationale, mais d'une interprétation de cette réglementation et du comblement des lacunes présentées par lesdits documents, par la juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort. Les principes d'égalité de traitement et de proportionnalité doivent également être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas au fait d'accorder à un tel soumissionnaire la possibilité de remédier à la situation et de satisfaire à ladite obligation dans un délai fixé par le pouvoir adjudicateur.

Sur les dépens

35 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (sixième chambre) dit pour droit :

Le principe d'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence, tels que mis en œuvre par la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à l'exclusion d'un soumissionnaire de la procédure de passation d'un marché public à la suite du non-respect par celui-ci de l'obligation d'indiquer de façon distincte dans l'offre les charges d'entreprise concernant la sécurité au travail – dont le non-respect est sanctionné par l'exclusion de la procédure – qui résulte non pas expressément des documents de marché ou de la réglementation nationale, mais d'une interprétation de cette réglementation et du comblement des lacunes présentées par lesdits documents, par la juridiction nationale statuant en dernier ressort. Les principes d'égalité de traitement et de proportionnalité doivent également être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas au fait d'accorder à un tel soumissionnaire la possibilité de remédier à la situation et de satisfaire à ladite obligation dans un délai fixé par le pouvoir adjudicateur.

Signatures

* Langue de procédure : l’italien.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

5 October 2017 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 1(9) — Concept of contracting authority — Company wholly owned by a contracting authority — Transactions internal to the group)

In Case C-567/15,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius, Lithuania), made by decision of 21 October 2015, received at the Court on 2 November 2015, in the proceedings

'LitSpecMet' UAB

v

'Vilniaus lokomotyvų remonto depas' UAB,

intervening party:

'Plienmetas' UAB,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, K. Lenaerts, President of the Court, acting as a Judge of the Fourth Chamber, E. Juhász (Rapporteur), C. Vajda and C. Lycourgos, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Campos Sánchez-Bordona,

Registrar: I. Illéssy, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and following the hearing of 9 February 2017,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– 'LitSpecMet' UAB, by C. Maczkovics, R. Martens and V. Ostrovskis, advokatai, – 'Vilniaus lokomotyvų remonto depas' UAB, by D. Soloveičik, advokatas, and G. Jokubauskas, representative of the undertaking, – the Lithuanian Government, by D. Kriaučiūnas and by D. Stepanienė and R. Butvydytė, acting as Agents,

– the German Government, by J. Möller, acting as Agent,

– the Portuguese Government, by L. Inez Fernandes, M. Figueiredo and F. Batista, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by A. Tokár and A. Steiblytė and J. Jokubauskaitė, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 27 April 2017,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011 (OJ 2011 L 319, p. 43; 'Directive 2004/18').

2 The request has been made in proceedings between 'LitSpecMet' UAB ('LSM') and 'Vilniaus lokomotyvų remonto depas' UAB ('VLRD') concerning a contract for the supply of ferrous metal bars awarded in part by VLRD to LSM.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Directive 2004/18 was repealed and replaced, with effect from 18 April 2016, by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

4 Article 1(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18 defined 'Public supply contracts' as public contracts other than public works contracts having as their object the purchase, lease, rental or hire purchase, with or without option to buy, of products.

5 Article 1(9) of that directive stated:

'"Contracting authorities" means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

(a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) having legal personality; and

(c) or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

…'

6 Article 7 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Threshold amounts for public contracts', provided as follows:

'This directive shall apply to public contracts which are not excluded in accordance with the exceptions provided for in Articles 10 and 11 and Articles 12 to 18 and which have a value exclusive of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than the following thresholds:

…

(b) EUR 200 000:

– for public supply and service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than those listed in Annex IV,

…'

Lithuanian law

7 The Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Lithuanian Law on public contracts), which transposes Directive 2004/18 into Lithuanian law, provides in Article 4, entitled ‘Contracting authorities’:

‘1. A contracting authority is:

(1) a State or local authority;

(2) a legal person governed by public or private law meeting the conditions set out in paragraph 2 of this article;

(3) an association of authorities referred to in subparagraph 1 of this paragraph and/or of the legal persons governed by public or private law referred to in point 2 of this paragraph;

(4) the contracting undertakings operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors referred to in points 2 to 4 of Article 70(1) of this law.

2. A legal person governed by public or private law (other than national or local governments) established for the purpose of specifically meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and which satisfies at least one of the following conditions is a contracting authority if:

(1) more than 50% of its activity is financed from State or local authority budgets or from other resources of the State or local authorities or from the funds of other legal persons governed by public or private law referred to in this paragraph;

(2) it is controlled (managed) by national or local government or by other legal persons governed by public or private law referred to in this paragraph;

(3) more than half of the members of its administrative, managerial or supervisory board are appointed by national or local government or by legal persons governed by public or private law referred to in this paragraph. ...’

8 Article 10(5) of the Lithuanian Law on public contracts provides:

‘The provisions of this law are not applicable where the contracting authority concludes an agreement with an entity that is legally separate, over which the contracting authority exercises an exclusive control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments or organs (or in respect of which the contracting authority is the only shareholder and exercises the rights and duties of the State or of a local authority) and where at least 90% of the turnover of the controlled entity in the previous accounting period (or in the period since its creation if it has been operating for less than a full accounting period) has been generated through activities intended to meet the needs of the contracting authority or to enable it to perform its functions.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

9 VLRD is a commercial company which was established in 2003, following a restructuring of ‘Lietuvos geležinkeliai’ AB (Lithuanian Railways, the State railway company; ‘LG’), and its object is the manufacture and maintenance of locomotives and railway carriages.

10 VLRD is a subsidiary of LG, which is its only partner company. LG was, at the material time, the main client of VLRD, its orders representing nearly 90% of the turnover of VLRD.

11 In 2013, VLRD published a notice of a simplified tendering procedure for the procurement of bars of ferrous metals to which LSM responded before being awarded the contract in respect of part of its bid.

12 LSM sought the annulment of that contract and the publication of a new notice which complied with the Lithuanian Law on public contracts on the ground that, in its view, VLRD was a contracting authority within the meaning of the Lithuanian Law on public contracts.

13 LSM argued, in essence, firstly, that VLRD had been established to meet the needs of LG, which was an undertaking financed by the State and which had a public service remit, and, secondly, that the conditions under which VLRD governing the services and sales which it carried out to the benefit of its parent company did not reflect normal competitive conditions. According to LSM, those elements were a sufficient indication of the fact that the activity of VLRD was intended to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and that it was therefore a contracting authority and subject to the rules on public procurement.

14 The Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius, Lithuania) rejected LSM's claims. That decision was upheld by the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania).

15 In confirming the decision given at first instance, the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania) noted in particular that VLRD had been established to carry out commercial activity and make profits, which was shown by the fact that it alone bore the risks of its activity without the State covering its losses. The Court of Appeal also considered that VLRD's activity could not be regarded as meeting a need in the general interest of all citizens, since it had been shown that VLRD was developing in a competitive environment and that although, at the material time, almost all its sales were concluded with LG, the projections made showed that, in 2016, those sales would no longer represent more than 15% of VLRD's commercial transactions.

16 The Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) overturned the decision of the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania).

17 To that effect, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) took as its basis the premiss that the resolution of the dispute before it depended on the interpretation to be given to the expression 'body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character' used in the second subparagraph, (a), of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 and repeated in Article 4 of the Lithuanian Law on public contracts.

18 In that regard, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) pointed out in particular that the functional approach to the concept of 'body governed by public law' adopted by the Court led to various factors being taken into account to determine whether a person was a contracting authority, such as whether or not there was competition in the market in which it operates, the circumstances in which the entity under consideration was established, whether or not it is possible to replace that entity by another operator or whether or not that entity bore the risks engendered by its activity.

19 The Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) has stated, in essence, that both the court of first instance and the appeal court had failed to examine the specific nature of the economic activities carried out by VLRD, in particular as regards the intensity of the competition prevalent in the economic sector in which that company was developing. It took the view that those courts had attributed too great an importance to the legal form of VLRD, that of a commercial company, to find that VLRD was not a contracting authority.

20 The Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) noted in addition that VLRD carried out on average 15 internal transactions per year in favour of its parent company which, for that type of transactions, was exempted from the rules on public contracts. In that regard, it pointed out that, if the parent company itself carried out the activities undertaken by its subsidiary, it would be subject to those rules as regards the purchase of vehicles, materials and other supplies necessary to the maintenance of locomotives and rolling stock or to other work, in accordance with the Lithuanian Law on public contracts. It stated that, in such a situation, it was necessary to analyse whether the fact that a parent company used the services of a subsidiary to carry out economic transactions in the general interest was not such as to permit circumvention of the legislation on public contracts.

21 The case was referred back to the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania) which, after having set aside the decision of the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius), referred the matter back to it.

22 Under those circumstances, the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius) decided to stay its proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 be interpreted as meaning that a company:

– which has been founded by a contracting authority which engages in activity in the field of rail transport, namely: management of public railway infrastructure; passenger and freight transportation;

– which independently engages in business activity, establishes a business strategy, adopts decisions concerning the conditions of the company’s activity (product market, customer segment and so forth), participates in a competitive market throughout the European Union and outside the EU market, providing the services of rolling stock manufacture and rolling stock repair, and participates in procurement procedures connected with that activity, seeking to obtain orders from third parties (not the parent company);

– which provides rolling stock repair services to its founder on the basis of in-house transactions and the value of those services represents 90 per cent of the company’s entire activity;

– whose services provided to its founder are intended to ensure the founder’s passenger and freight transportation activity;

is not to be considered to be a contracting authority?

(2) If the Court determines that the company is to be considered to be a contracting authority in the circumstances set out above, must Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 be interpreted as meaning that the company loses the status of contracting authority where the value of the rolling stock repair services provided on the basis of in-house transactions to the contracting authority which is the company’s founder falls and constitutes less than 90% or not the main part of the total financial turnover from the company’s activity?’

Consideration of the questions referred

23 By its questions, which it is appropriate to consider together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a company which, firstly, is wholly owned by a contracting authority the activity of which is to meet needs in the general interest and which, secondly, carries out both transactions for that contracting authority and transactions on the competitive market may be classified as a ‘body governed by public law’ within the meaning of that provision and if so, in that regard, what is the effect of the fact that the value of the in-house transactions may in future represent less than 90% or not the main part of the total financial turnover of the company.

24 As a preliminary point, it is appropriate to note that the referring court does not give any indication in the present case as regards the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, so that it is not possible to determine with certainty whether or not the value of that contract exceeds the threshold set in Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18 and, in consequence, whether or not one of the essential conditions for the application of that directive is satisfied in the case giving rise to the main proceedings.

25 By reason of the spirit of cooperation in relations between the national courts and the Court of Justice in the context of the procedure for a preliminary ruling, the lack of such preliminary findings by the referring court does not lead to the request being inadmissible if, in spite of those failings, the Court, having regard to the information available from the file, considers that it is in a position to provide a useful answer to the referring court. That is the case, in particular, where the order for reference contains sufficient relevant information for it to be determined whether the conditions for application of a measure of secondary legislation are likely to be satisfied. Nevertheless, the answer provided by the Court is given subject to the proviso that the referring court has found that those conditions are met

(see, by analogy, judgment of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 48).

26 It is therefore for the referring court to ascertain whether, in the present case, the condition concerning the threshold of EUR 200 000, as laid down in Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18, is met.

27 It is not in dispute that the activity of LG, which includes the supply of public passenger transport services, is regarded as being carried out to meet needs in the general interest and that that company must be classified as a 'body governed by public law' and, accordingly, a 'contracting authority'.

28 Thus, the first question seeks to clarify whether VLRD must also be classified as a 'body governed by public law'.

29 Under the second subparagraph, points (a) to (c), of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, a 'body governed by public law' is any body which, firstly, was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, secondly, has legal personality and, thirdly, is financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

30 As the Court has consistently held, the conditions set out in that article are cumulative, so that if a single one of those conditions is unfulfilled a body cannot be regarded as a 'body governed by public law' and, therefore, as a 'contracting authority' within the meaning of Directive 2004/18 (see, to that effect, judgments of 22 May 2003, Korhonen and Others, C-18/01, EU:C:2003:300, paragraph 32, and of 10 April 2008, Ing.Aigner, C-393/06, EU:C:2008:213, paragraph 36 and the case-law cited.

31 The concept of 'contracting authority', including that of 'body governed by public law', must, in the light of the objectives of the directives on public procurement, seeking to exclude both the risk of preferring national tenderers or bidders in any contract award made by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional authorities or other bodies governed by public law may be guided by considerations other than economic ones, must be interpreted in functional terms and broadly (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 May 2003, Commission v Spain, C-214/00, EU:C:2003:276, paragraph 53 and the case-law cited).

32 It must be noted that VLRD appears to satisfy the conditions laid down in the second subparagraph, (b) and (c), of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18. It is not, in fact, in dispute that it has legal personality. In addition, the referring court has noted that VLRD is a wholly owned subsidiary of LG and that it is 'controlled' by the latter company.

33 Consequently, the only question which needs to be analysed concerns whether or not VLRD constitutes a 'body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character' within the meaning of the second subparagraph, (a), of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

34 It is clear from the wording of the second subparagraph, (a), of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 that the requirement laid down therein must be satisfied by the entity whose classification is being examined and not by another entity, even if the latter is the parent company of the former which supplies the latter with goods or services. It is therefore not sufficient that an undertaking was established by a contracting authority or that its activities are financed by funds derived from activities pursued by a contracting authority in order for it to be regarded as a contracting authority itself (judgment of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others, C-44/96, EU:C:1998:4, paragraph 39).

35 In addition, it is necessary to take into consideration the fact that the use of the term 'specific' shows the EU legislature's intention to make only entities established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, the activity of which meets such needs, subject to the binding rules on public contracts.

36 Accordingly, it is necessary to determine, first of all, whether VLRD was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, the activity of which meets such needs before, if necessary, examining whether or not those needs have an industrial or commercial character (see, to that effect, judgment of 22 May 2003, Korhonen and Others, C-18/01, EU:C:2003:300, paragraph 40).

37 In the present case, it is apparent from the terms of the first question that VLRD supplies goods and services to 'enable [its parent company] to carry out its activity of passenger and freight transportation'.

38 It is apparent from the order for reference that VLRD was established after the restructuring of LG and that 'both the establishment of [VLRD] and its activity remain devoted to meeting its founder's needs, namely needs in the general interest'. In that regard, it must be noted that, in the main proceedings, VLRD's activity, in particular the manufacture and maintenance of locomotives and rolling stock and the supply of those goods and services to LG, appears necessary for LG to be able to carry out its activity intended to meet needs in the general interest.

39 It therefore appears that VLRD was established with the specific aim of meeting its parent company's needs and that the needs which VLRD was tasked with meeting constitute a condition necessary to the parent company's carrying out of activities in the general interest, which it is, however, for the referring court to ascertain.

40 It must be noted that it is irrelevant that, in addition to the activities intended to meet needs in the general interest, the entity in question also carries out other activities for profit on the competitive market (see, to that effect, judgments of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others, C-44/96, EU:C:1998:4, paragraph 25, and of 10 April 2008, Ing. Aigner, C-393/06, EU:C:2008:213, paragraph 47 and the case-law cited).

41 Thus, the fact that VLRD does not carry out only activities intended to meet needs in the general interest through internal transactions with LG, so that LG may carry out its transport activities, but also other profit-making activities is irrelevant in that regard.

42 In order to assess whether a body is covered by the concept of a 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of the second subparagraph, (a), of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, it is also necessary for it to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

43 In that regard, it is appropriate to note that in the assessment of that character account must be taken of relevant legal and factual circumstances, such as those prevailing when the body concerned was formed and the conditions in which it carries on its activity, including, inter alia, lack of competition on the market, the fact that its primary aim is not the making of profits, the fact that it does not bear the risks associated with the activity, and any public financing of the activity in question.

44 As the Court has held, if, with regard to the activities intended to meet needs in the general interest, the body operates in normal market conditions, aims to make a profit and bears the losses associated with the exercise of its activity, it is unlikely that the needs it seeks to meet are not of an industrial or commercial nature (judgment of 16 October 2003, Commission v Spain, C-283/00, EU:C:2003:544, paragraphs 81 and 82 and the case-law cited).

45 That being the case, the existence of significant competition does not, of itself, allow the conclusion to be drawn that there is no need in the general interest, which is not of an industrial or commercial character.

46 In those circumstances, it is for the referring court to ascertain, on the basis of all the legal and factual circumstances of the case, whether, at the time of the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, the activities carried out by VLRD, seeking to meet needs in the general interest, were exercised in competitive conditions and in particular whether VLRD was able, having regard to the circumstances of the present case, to be guided by non-economic considerations.

47 The fact raised by the referring court, in the order for reference, that the extent of the internal transactions with LG in relation to the overall turnover of VLRD could diminish in future is irrelevant in that regard, given that it is for that referring court to examine the situation of that company at the time of award of the contract in question.

48 Consequently, the answer to the questions referred is that the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a company which, on the one hand, is wholly owned by a contracting authority whose activity consists of meeting needs in the general interest and which, on the other, carries out both internal transactions for that contracting authority and transactions on the competitive market must be classified as a 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of that provision, provided that the activities of that company are necessary for the contracting authority to exercise its own activity and, in order to meet needs in the general interest, that company is able to be guided by non-economic considerations, which it is for the referring court to ascertain. The fact that the value of the internal transactions may in future represent less than 90% or an insignificant part of the overall turnover of the company is irrelevant in that regard.

Costs

49 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

The second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011, must be interpreted as meaning that a company which, on the one hand, is wholly owned by a contracting authority whose activity consists of meeting needs in the general interest and which, on the other, carries out both transactions for that contracting authority and transactions on the competitive market must be classified as a 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of that provision, provided that the activities of that company are necessary for the contracting authority to exercise its own activity and, in order to meet needs in the general interest, that company is able to be guided by non-economic considerations, which it is for the referring court to ascertain. The fact that the value of the internal transactions may in future represent less than 90% or an insignificant part of the overall turnover of the company is irrelevant in that regard.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Lithuanian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

CAMPOS SÁNCHEZ-BORDONA

delivered on 27 April 2017 (1)

Case C-567/15

LitSpecMet UAB

v

Vilniaus lokomotyvų remonto depas UAB

intervening party:

Plienmetas UAB

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius, Lithuania))

(Preliminary ruling — Public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors — Directive 2004/17/EC — Concept of contracting authority — Company wholly owned by the State through another State-owned company — 'in-house' exemption)

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling provides the Court of Justice with the opportunity to develop its case-law in the field of public procurement procedures. In particular, it will be necessary to further clarify the concept of 'contracting authority' within the meaning of Directive 2004/17/EC (2) and Directive 2004/18/EC. (3)

2. The questions submitted by the national court have arisen in the context of proceedings to challenge a tendering procedure commenced without regard to those directives by a company (4) which is wholly owned by the Lithuanian State railway company (5) (whose status as a contracting authority is not disputed), to which the aforementioned company supplies certain goods and services. The subsidiary claims that, despite its links with the parent company, it is not a 'public body' within the meaning of the procurement directives since it was not established 'for the … purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character'.

3. Initially the debate focussed on the activity in which VLRD is engaged, with a view to ascertaining whether its purpose is directly to meet a need in the general interest that does not have either an industrial or a commercial character. During the proceedings before the Court of Justice the debate also covered the issue of whether, by selling goods or services to a body (LG) which does meet needs of that kind, VLRD is also, in an indirect way, meeting those needs and might therefore be considered a contracting authority within the meaning of the directives in question.

I. Legislative framework

A. EU law

1. Directive 2004/17

4. Article 2 states:

'1. For the purposes of this Directive,

(a) "Contracting authorities" are State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

"A body governed by public law" means any body:

– established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, – having legal personality and – financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law;

…

2. This Directive shall apply to contracting entities:

(a) which are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7;

…'.

5. Article 5 provides:

'1. This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.

2. This Directive shall not apply to entities providing bus transport services to the public which were excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38/EEC [(6)] pursuant to Article 2(4) thereof.'

2. Directive 2004/18

6. Under Article 1(9):

'"Contracting authorities" means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

(a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) having legal personality; and

(c) financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

Non-exhaustive lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in (a), (b) and (c) of the second subparagraph are set out in Annex III. Member States shall periodically notify the Commission of any changes to their lists of bodies and categories of bodies.'

3. Directive 2014/24/EU (7)

7. Recital 10 states:

'The notion of "contracting authorities" and in particular that of "bodies governed by public law" have been examined repeatedly in the case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Union. To clarify that the scope of this Directive ratione personae should remain unaltered, it is appropriate to maintain the definitions on which the Court based itself and to incorporate a certain number of clarifications given by that case-law as a key to the understanding of the definitions themselves, without the intention of altering the understanding of the concepts as elaborated by the case-law. For that purpose, it should be clarified that a body which operates in normal market conditions, aims to make a profit, and bears the losses resulting from the exercise of its activity should not be considered as being a "body governed by public law" since the needs in the general interest, that it has been set up to meet or been given the task of meeting, can be deemed to have an industrial or commercial character.

Similarly, the condition relating to the origin of the funding of the body considered, has also been examined in the case-law, which has clarified inter alia that being financed for "the most part" means for more than half, and that such financing may include payments from users which are imposed, calculated and collected in accordance with rules of public law.'

8. Article 2(1)(4) contains a definition of 'bodies governed by public law' which is similar to that set out in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

9. Article 12(1) provides:

‘A public contract awarded by a contracting authority to a legal person governed by private or public law shall fall outside the scope of this Directive where all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

(a) the contracting authority exercises over the legal person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments;

(b) more than 80% of the activities of the controlled legal person are carried out in the performance of tasks entrusted to it by the controlling contracting authority or by other legal persons controlled by that contracting authority; and

(c) there is no [direct] private capital participation in the controlled legal person with the exception of non-controlling and non-blocking forms of private capital participation required by national legislative provisions, in conformity with the Treaties, which do not exert a decisive influence on the controlled legal person.

A contracting authority shall be deemed to exercise over a legal person a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments within the meaning of point (a) of the first subparagraph where it exercises a decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of the controlled legal person. Such control may also be exercised by another legal person, which is itself controlled in the same way by the contracting authority.’

B. National law

10. The Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law of the Republic of Lithuania on Public Procurement; ‘the LPP’) transposes Directive 2004/18 into Lithuanian law.

11. Article 4 states

‘1. The following are contracting authorities:

(1) a State or local authority;

(2) a legal person governed by public or private law meeting the conditions set out in paragraph 2 of this article;

(3) an association of authorities referred to in subparagraph 1 of this paragraph and/or of the legal persons governed by public or private law referred to in subparagraph 2 of this paragraph;

(4) the contracting undertakings operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors referred to in subparagraphs 2 to 4 of Article 70(1) of this law.

2. A legal person governed by public or private law (other than national or local governments) established for the purpose of specifically meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and which satisfies at least one of the following conditions:

(1) more than 50% of its activity is financed from State or local authority budgets or from other resources of the State or local authorities or from the funds of other legal persons governed by public or private law referred to in this paragraph;

(2) it is controlled (managed) by national or local government or by other legal persons governed by public or private law referred to in this paragraph;

3) more than half of the members of its administrative, managerial or supervisory board are appointed by national or local government or by legal persons governed by public or private law referred to in this paragraph.

…’

12. Article 10(5) states:

‘The provisions of this law are not applicable where the contracting authority concludes an agreement with an entity that is legally separate, over which the contracting authority exercises an exclusive control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments or organs (or in respect of which the contracting authority is the only shareholder and exercises the rights and duties of the State or of a local authority) and where at least 90% of the turnover of the controlled entity in the previous accounting period (or in the period since its creation if it has been operating for less than a full accounting period) has been generated through activities intended to meet the needs of the contracting authority or to enable it to perform its functions. In the circumstances referred to in this paragraph, a request for tenders may be issued only with the prior consent of the Public Procurement Office …’

II. Facts

13. VLRD was set up in 2003, following a restructuring of the State railway company, LG, as a wholly owned subsidiary of that company.

14. The object of VLRD is the manufacture and maintenance of locomotives and railway carriages. At the material time for the purposes of the litigation, orders from LG accounted for almost 90% of VLRD’s turnover.

15. In 2013, VLRD published notice of a simplified open tendering procedure for the procurement of bars of ferrous metals (‘the Tendering Procedure’). The tender specifications stated that the Tendering Procedure would be carried out in accordance with VLRD’s Interim Procurement Regulations.

16. LitSpecMet UAB (‘LitSpecMet’) submitted a tender in the Tendering Procedure and was awarded a contract for the supply of some but not all of the goods in question.

17. However, LitSpecMet sought to have the Tendering Procedure declared invalid and a new procedure started under the LPP. In support of the claim, it argued that VLRD had been established to meet the needs of LG, which was an undertaking financed by the State and which had a public service remit; furthermore, it argued that the conditions under which VLRD provided goods and services to its parent company did not reflect normal competitive conditions. According to LitSpecMet, this indicates that the activity of VLRD was intended to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and that it was therefore a contracting authority and subject to the rules on public procurement.

18. LitSpecMet’s claims were rejected by the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius, Lithuania) in a judgment of 2 June 2014, which was upheld by the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania) in a judgment of 25 September 2014.

19. Both courts took the view that, under Article 4(2) of the LPP, for a person governed by public or private law to be considered a contracting authority, it is not sufficient to show that it is connected with or controlled by a public-sector undertaking. It is also necessary to show that its activity is intended to meet general interests not having an industrial or commercial character, which would not be true of VLRD, since it was a company that was founded to carry out a commercial activity and to make a profit, whilst bearing the associated risks.

20. By a judgment of 27 May 2015, the civil chamber of the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) overturned the judgment given on appeal. It held that neither of the two lower courts had adequately assessed the circumstances of VLRD’s establishment, the specific nature of its activities and its relationship to the parent company.

21. The case was referred back to the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania), which, by a judgment of 14 July 2015, set aside the decision of the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius) of 2 June 2014 and referred the case back to that court, which is now making a reference for a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice.

III. The question referred for a preliminary ruling

22. The question referred was lodged on 9 November 2015 and is worded as follows:

‘Must Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC be interpreted as meaning that a company:

– which has been founded by a contracting authority which engages in activity in the field of rail transport, namely: management of public railway infrastructure; passenger and freight transportation;

– which independently engages in business activity, establishes a business strategy, adopts decisions concerning the conditions of the company’s activity (product market, customer segment and so forth), participates in a competitive market throughout the European Union and outside the EU market, providing the services of rolling stock manufacture and rolling stock repair, and participates in procurement procedures connected with that activity, seeking to obtain orders from third parties (not the parent company);

– which provides rolling stock repair services to its founder on the basis of in-house transactions and the value of those services represents 90 per cent of the company’s entire activity;

– whose services provided to its founder are intended to ensure the founder’s passenger and freight transportation activity;

is not to be considered to be a contracting authority?

If the Court of Justice of the European Union determines that the company is to be considered to be a contracting authority in the circumstances set out above, must Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC be interpreted as meaning that the company loses the status of contracting authority where the value of the rolling stock repair services provided on the basis of in-house transactions to the contracting authority which is the company’s founder falls and constitutes less than 90 per cent or not the main part of the total financial turnover from the company’s activity?’

IV. Procedure before the Court of Justice and submissions of the parties

23. LitSpecMet, VLRD, the Lithuanian and Portuguese Governments and the Commission submitted written observations and attended the hearing held on 9 February 2017, which was also attended by the German Government.

24. LitSpecMet argues that the maintenance activity carried out by VLRD falls under general interest, in that it enables LG to ensure provision of the public service for which it is responsible, namely the management of railway infrastructure and the provision of passenger transport. In its view, this activity is not of an industrial or commercial nature, since LG is the only undertaking in Lithuania engaged in it, which means that it can easily operate according to considerations which are not purely economic. To accept that public procurement rules do not apply to VLRD would mean that a contracting authority (LG) would be able to avoid those rules simply by setting up a subsidiary (VLRD) for in-house transactions.

25. LitSpecMet therefore maintains that VLRD is a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, the proportion of in-house transactions conducted with the parent company being immaterial. In the alternative, it could also be considered a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17, as this is the directive that is actually applicable here, given LG's activity and in the light of the interpretation of Articles 3 to 7 of that directive in the judgment of the Court of Justice of 10 April 2008, Ing. Aigner. (8)

26. VLRD asserts that it was not established in order to fulfil a specific general interest remit for the benefit of citizens in general, but in order to supplement LG's commercial activities in the field of passenger transport. In its view, the fact that it enters into in-house transactions with LG, which is a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 2(1) of Directive 2004/17, does not mean that it is itself a contracting authority.

27. The Lithuanian Government makes reference to the judgment of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others, (9) in which the Court of Justice relied on the 'infection theory', holding that a body which performs an activity only a part of which meets needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, can also be considered a contracting authority. However, the Lithuanian Government is of the view that the 'infection theory' does not apply vertically and that the nature of the activity carried out by a company is not dependent on whether it was established by a contracting authority with which it engages in in-house transactions.

28. The German Government advocates a functional approach to interpretation and believes that, in the circumstances, this offers sufficient indicators that VLRD is carrying on an activity in the general interest, since, while not being directly involved in the transport activity performed by LG, it is engaged in an activity which is closely linked to it: the manufacture of locomotives. On the commercial nature of VLRD's activities the German Government believes that the decisive factor is whether it meets its objectives in a competitive market, which it does not, since 90% of its business is with LG, such that it does not assume a genuine commercial risk. In short, the German Government posits that the subsidiary of a contracting authority is also a contracting authority where the purpose of its activities is to meet the needs in the general interest served by its parent company. Furthermore, in the light of Directive 2014/24 (which, although not applicable ratione temporis can be used as guidance), a subsidiary cannot be a contracting authority if its business with the parent company does not exceed 80%.

29. The Portuguese Government observes that, although VLRD appears to have been set up for general interest purposes, its activity is industrial and commercial in character, since VLRD fully assumes the risks of its activities. Under the case-law established in the judgment of 16 October 2003, Commission v Spain, (10) and referred to in recital 10 of Directive 2014/24, VLRD should not be considered a contracting authority.

30. The Commission submits that only Directive 2004/18 should be taken into consideration in this case, as VLRD supplies goods and services to the Lithuanian State railway company and it is immaterial that the activities of the latter company (LG) fall within the scope of Directive 2004/17.

31. According to the Commission, VLRD is not subject to Directive 2004/18, inasmuch as it is not a 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of Article 1(9), since it was established to serve the specific interests of LG — making it an internal supplier of that company — rather than the general interest. It argues that the fact that LG's object is to meet a need in the general interest and that it has had recourse to VLRD for this purpose, is irrelevant because the conclusive factor is that the sole object of VLRD's activities is to look after the specific interests of the parent company.

32. The Commission therefore questions whether VLRD was established specifically to meet needs in the general interest, although it makes the point that only the national court is in a position to evaluate all the circumstances of the case and to confirm that the pre-eminent non profit-making goal at the time of its establishment does not have precedence over the commercial environment in which it operates.

V. Assessment

A. Introductory remarks

33. The referring court and most of the parties participating in the preliminary ruling proceedings assume that Directive 2004/18 governs this case. LitSpecMet, however, suggests, albeit only in the alternative, that it is Directive 2004/17 (known as the 'Sectoral Directive' in relation to public procurement) that is in fact applicable.

34. In practice, since Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 and the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 contain identical definitions of 'bodies governed by public law', (11) the questions raised by the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius) can be answered without making a prior determination on the applicability of either directive.

35. The second point to be noted is that, although the case file does not state the sum involved in the tendering procedure, VLRD's legal representative asserted at the hearing that it was EUR 600 000 or 700 000 and, as such, it exceeds the threshold for application of the relevant European Union provisions. It is for the referring court to investigate this point. (12)

36. Thirdly and finally, the Court must necessarily give its answer on the basis of the factual information pertaining to VLRD provided by the referring court. It is, however, possible that this information has not been reviewed by the court of first instance, after the case was referred back to it, in quite the manner indicated by the judgment of the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) of 27 May 2015. (13)

B. The first question referred for a preliminary ruling

1. Directly (or indirectly) meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character

37. It is common ground between the parties that VLRD meets two of the three conditions necessary to be considered a 'body governed by public law' (and therefore a 'contracting authority') under Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 and the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

38. Of the three conditions, which must be met cumulatively, (14) VLRD satisfies the second and third: it has legal personality and it cannot be disputed that another body governed by public law (LG) has a role in its financing, the supervision of its management or the composition of its administrative, managerial or supervisory board.

39. There is, however, no agreement with respect to the requirement that VLRD should have been 'established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character'.

40. The written observations of the parties are dedicated to analysing whether the activity of VLRD itself addresses needs in the general interest that do not have an industrial or commercial character, the majority arguing that it does not. At the hearing, the debate was extended, at the request of the Court, to the issue of whether VLRD indirectly meets needs of this kind, in that it provides goods or services to a body governed by public law, LG, which does so. The positions of the parties on this point were substantially aligned with those taken in relation to the question of whether the activity carried out by VLRD is in the general interest.

41. According to the information provided by the referring court, LG is a public company which operates a rail transport network. As I have already mentioned, there is no doubt that it is a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 2004/17. (15) VLRD, on the other hand, is engaged in the manufacture and maintenance of locomotives and rolling stock. In other words, its role, although closely linked to rail transport, does not consist of 'the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway', which is the activity to which Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 is restricted.

42. LitSpecMet maintains that, in any event, VLRD performs an essential task in relation to 'the provision or operation' of the Lithuanian rail network such that it also meets the general interest needs served by LG. Not to be overlooked, it argues, is the fact that under Article 5(1) of Directive 2001/14/EC, (16) railway undertakings are entitled to what is called 'the minimum access package and track access to service facilities' that are described in Annex II to the directive, point 2(h) of which refers to 'maintenance and other technical facilities'. It therefore concludes that 'in the absence of realistic alternatives in the market', VLRD is 'obliged to provide rolling stock maintenance services to … LG, disregarding all commercial considerations'. (17)

43. I do not agree with LitSpecMet on that point, since it is the facilities in which maintenance services are provided that Directive 2001/14 makes part of the 'access package' rather than the maintenance services themselves. So, if VLRD does serve a need in the general interest in an immediate and direct way, it is not the need addressed by the activity specifically referred to in Article 5 of that directive.

44. The analysis must therefore focus on the interpretation of Directive 2004/18, with a view to clarifying whether VLRD meets the needs in the general interest (other than those of an industrial or commercial nature) that are inherent to public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts.

45. By the use of logical reasoning, we must, first of all, determine whether needs in the general interest are being met in this case; the second step, assuming that the answer is in the affirmative, is to determine whether their commercial or industrial character predominates over any other.

46. From that standpoint, it does not seem to me that simply manufacturing and repairing rolling stock in the rail transport sector has, in itself, the purpose of meeting needs that are closely linked to the institutional operation of the State, (18) the promotion and development of the conditions of social welfare which it is the duty of the State to provide, (19) or other similar purposes.

47. It can, of course, be argued, as the German Government does, that in providing its parent company with goods and services which enable that company to meet its own needs — which are in the general interest — VLRD is also, indirectly, meeting the need served by LG.

48. This approach to the problem, however, encounters certain difficulties, at least from a general point of view.

49. If it is in general hard to ascertain whether the purpose of an economic activity is to meet needs in the general interest (a term with various meanings to start off with), then it is harder still to determine the extent to which an activity which is in principle private and commercial in nature might, by virtue of its connection to activities which are inherently in the general interest, take on the nature of the latter. The consequences of this assimilation are not insignificant: as the Lithuanian Government observed at the hearing, a private operator could, possibly without realising it, become a provider of services in the general interest by virtue of its necessary association with a contracting authority.

50. The level of interconnection and interdependence of all public and private economic activities is so great in the market economy of today that it would be difficult to prevent 'meeting needs in the general interest' from growing uncontrollably if it were to be accepted that this concept also covers private activities which are, to some extent, necessary in order to meet those needs. Furthermore, this would give rise to the very problematic issue of the extent to which this relationship of necessity would be relevant in each case.

51. However, even working on the assumption that the activity carried out by VLRD does have the purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, this would not be a sufficient basis on which to conclude that VLRD is a 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of Directive 2004/18. The reason for this is that meeting needs in the public interest is not enough: those needs must also not be industrial or commercial in character. The case-law of the Court of Justice has stated that for this to be the case, those needs must be met under conditions which are not subject to market forces.

52. As the Court of Justice affirmed in its judgment of 22 May 2003, Korhonen and Others, the point is to 'avert both the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by other than economic considerations'. (20)

53. Working from those assumptions, a body which aims to meet needs of this kind (which should not be mistaken for needs which cannot be met by private undertakings) (21) might easily fall victim to that risk if it operates outside market conditions, in the sense of not being subject to free competition. On the other hand, if it operates under competitive pressure from its rivals, (22) it is less likely to run this risk, since any behaviour motivated by considerations other than economic ones would eventually cause it to be expelled from the market.

54. In other words, the key factor in answering the question is not so much the public nature of the need to be met but the conditions in which this is done. When interpreting the expression 'needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character' it is essential to ascertain on what terms these are to be met.

55. It is worth repeating that this is so because, according to the spirit of the procurement directives, what is important is to safeguard competition in the market and to prevent it being altered or distorted by participants who do not operate according to free trade principles. Consequently, the determining factor is not whether, by supplying goods and services to LG, VLRD is itself meeting a need in the general interest, or whether it does so indirectly, but whether, in either case, it is operating under the same conditions as any private competitors, that is to say, without incentives to offer unfair advantages to national producers.

56. As noted by the referring court, for these purposes it is necessary to take into account multiple legal and factual circumstances, amongst which the Court of Justice has mentioned, by way of example, the circumstances prevailing when the body concerned was formed (23) and matters such as 'the fact that it does not aim primarily at making a profit, the fact that it does not bear the risks associated with [its] activity, and any public financing of the activity in question'. (24)

57. It is my view that only the referring court is in a position to determine whether, in the light of all the relevant legal and factual circumstances, VLRD meets a need in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character. Although it may be inferred from the wording of the question (25) that the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius) is inclined towards its original conclusion, which was upheld by the appeal court but not by the Lithuanian Supreme Court, the fact is that the order for reference really goes no further than setting out the dispute between the parties and the reasoning behind the three judgments given to date in the case, and does not include any analysis of its own of the 'relevant circumstances' (26) in the dispute which might enable a definitive answer to be provided.

58. This being the case, the Court of Justice should perhaps confine itself to informing the referring court that it should pay particular attention to the question of whether VLRD operates under market conditions, (27) and, beyond that, to factors such as whether or not it is largely publicly financed, whether it aims to make a profit and whether it bears the risks (and the losses) associated with its activity, these being matters on which the referring court has shed little light but which cannot be sidestepped when ruling on the nature of this company's activities.

59. It seems, however, from the information on the case file and that produced at the hearing that the essential part of VLRD's activity (90% of it at the relevant time) is carried out against an economic backdrop characterised by the monopoly in supplying LG with railway equipment, that is, in conditions which are not those of the free market. LG is supplied with railway equipment by its subsidiary, without going through the public procurement procedures which would increase competitive pressure on VLRD. VLRD is thus able to operate according to considerations other than those of the market, safe in the knowledge (or without incurring any risk in that respect) that it will be able to meet its orders, which will always be forthcoming from LG.

2. Meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, in the context of in-house transactions

60. The foregoing would suggest that VLRD can be considered a contracting authority, within the meaning given. It is possible, however, to see the question that has been referred from another point of view. Leaving to one side for the moment the nature of the activities carried out by VLRD and LG, the relationship between these two companies should be examined in order to determine whether the former is a proxy entity of the latter (or its own resource) which can use the 'in-house exemption'. I therefore propose analysing the substantive issue from an organic perspective as opposed to the perspective of the activity.

61. From that point of view, the order for reference of the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius) contains two paragraphs that are of interest. The first is paragraph 23, which states that 'around 90 per cent of the subsidiary's [VLRD's] revenue comes from the parent company [LG] under transactions between the two legal persons', leading to the conclusion that 'the activities of the defendant [VLRD] and of the company controlling it [LG] are closely connected'.

62. This point was fundamental in the decision of the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) to overturn the decision of the appeal court. According to the same paragraph of the order for reference, that fact was basis enough not to 'reject as unfounded the applicant's [LipSpecMet's] claim that the founding of VLRD, which followed [LG's] reorganisation, did not actually create qualitatively new legal and economic relations between separate economic operators but was more of a change in the form of organisation of the latter company's activity'. (28)

63. The second paragraph of the order for reference to note is paragraph 25, which states that VLRD ‘entered into an average of 15 in-house transactions per year with [LG] in the period from 2011 to 2014’; transactions which, the order continues, ‘under the case-law of the Court of Justice are not to be classified as public procurement contracts’. (29)

64. The national court’s references to the in-house contracting system did not go unnoticed by the parties to the preliminary ruling proceedings. In particular, the Commission has argued (30) that VLRD is an internal supplier to LG and that, consequently, transactions concluded between them are not subject to procurement procedures but are covered by the ‘in-house exemption’. (31)

65. The Lithuanian Government likewise referred to the in-house system in its written observations, (32) specifically mentioning Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24. (33) The German Government also made reference to these rules in its oral submissions.

66. At the hearing, the legal representative of VLRD was asked about the intended use of the goods involved in the tendering procedure in question and replied that they were intended for use in the manufacture of equipment ordered by LG under their in-house arrangements.

67. As the Court of Justice has repeatedly stated, the in-house exemption ‘is justified by the consideration that a public authority which is a contracting authority has the possibility of performing its public-interest tasks by using its own administrative, technical and other resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments, and that that exception may be extended to situations in which the other contracting party is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, where the latter exercises control over the contractor similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that contractor carries out the essential part of its activities with the contracting authority or authorities which own it’, as it is possible in such a situation to regard ‘the contracting authority … as employing its own resources’. (34)

68. It must therefore be concluded that the establishment of VLRD as an instrument of LG, although resulting in the creation of a separate entity, in a formal sense, (they are actually two legally distinct companies), seems, from a functional point of view, to have perpetuated the previous position. Ultimately, it was done in order to reorganise the activities of the Lithuanian State railway company. (35)

69. If the two bodies are analysed functionally, they ultimately belong under the ‘in-house exemption’. (36) This, which automatically entails exemption from the procurement directives, reflects the fact that a public authority has the right to organise itself in such a way that certain tasks are entrusted to the proxy entities through which it operates (where it exercises the same control over them as it does over its own departments), without having to go to the market for the relevant works, services or supplies.

70. Under the in-house system, the contracting authority does not, from a functional point of view, contract with a separate body but, in effect, contracts with itself, given the nature of its connection with the formally separate body. Strictly speaking, there is no award of a contract, but simply an order or task, which the other ‘party’ cannot refuse to undertake, whatever the name given to it.

71. The absence of a real relationship between two distinct parties explains why a contracting authority is not required to comply with public procurement procedures where it is using its own resources to perform its tasks, in other words, where it makes use of undertakings that, over and above their separate legal personality, merge with it in a material sense. Procurement procedures make sense only between two separate and autonomous bodies, since what those procedures seek to do is precisely to create between them the kind of bilateral legal relationship that is essential for concluding a contract for consideration (37) on equal terms rather than those of dependence or subordination in a hierarchy.

72. It is therefore logical that — within the strict limits set by the case-law of the Court of Justice — economic relationships between a contracting authority and a body that is subordinated to it, acting simply as its proxy and controlled by it in the same way as the authority controls its (other) departments, should be exempted from the formal procurement procedures of the directives. Neither would it be sensible to turn the procurement procedure into a procedure for the internal regulation of the workings of the authority in question by applying it in cases where it has chosen to use only its own resources.

73. Consequently, working from the single effective identity principle at the root of the in-house exemption, it is my view that, if the exemption was applicable to the transactions concluded between LG and VLRD, in the manner set out in the order for reference, this is because the two companies meet the conditions already mentioned which have been established in the case-law (and which have now been crystallised in Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24). This is ultimately a matter for the referring court to determine.

74. The Commission submits that the fact that VLRD is an internal supplier to LG does not of itself make it a contracting authority, although it offers very few reasons in support of this assertion. (38) It could, in fact, be said that, in general, subordinated in-house bodies qualify as ‘bodies governed by public law’ within the meaning of Directives 2004/18 and 2004/17 only where they themselves meet the three cumulative conditions mentioned.

75. This assertion, however, should be immediately qualified by making a distinction between ‘marginal’ activities and the ‘essential’ activities of proxy entities which justify the application of the in-house exemption. With respect to the former, (39) I do not think that there can be any difficulty in accepting the Commission’s position, since in relation to these activities the undertaking is operating within the market and can compete on an equal footing with rival economic operators.

76. In my opinion, the same is not true of the ‘essential’ tasks which have been entrusted or assigned to the subordinate undertaking by the contracting authority under the in-house system. Where in order to carry out those tasks the undertaking (VLRD in this case) needs to obtain goods, services or supplies from third parties to a value which exceeds the level for harmonised procurement, then the public procurement directives apply.

77. Any other interpretation would give rise not only to inconsistency but to a potential circumvention of the law; the former because it would be inconsistent with the single effective identity of the two bodies, which was acknowledged for the purposes of exempting them from procurement procedures when dealing with each other, and the latter because it would make it easy to escape the application of the EU public procurement rules.

78. The relationship between LG and VLRD already gives rise to an exception concerning the application of Union rules to in-house transactions between them, which are deemed not to be contractual. If, in addition, VLRD were exempted from the obligation to comply with those rules in respect of transactions which are formally external, which are concluded with third parties but are actually part of the turnover of the LG/VLRD unit, then the in-house exemption might take on unforeseen proportions.

79. In other words, the contracting authority can make use of proxy entities, within the limits already mentioned, by entrusting them with particular tasks which should, in principle, be subject to public procurement procedures but which are exempted. This exception is not, of itself, open to question, legally speaking, in the light of the case-law of the Court of Justice (and, now, Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24). However, where such proxy entities do not have the resources needed to themselves carry out the tasks assigned by the contracting authority and are obliged to have recourse to third parties in order to do so, the reasons for relying on the in-house exemption disappear and what emerges is actually a hidden public (sub-)procurement where the contracting authority, through an intermediary (the proxy entity) obtains goods and services from third parties without being subject to the directives which should govern the award.

80. This is what would happen in this case. Transactions of LG which would necessarily have had to comply with public procurement legislation if VLRD had not existed (and the State body had carried them out directly) would escape those rules by virtue of the argument that they are attributable to a different company, which is, however, so closely connected to the former that both companies can use the in-house exception when dealing with each other. (40)

81. It seems to me that if the connection between LG and VLRD is such as to justify the application of the in-house exemption to transactions between them, then the external transactions that are essential to the performance of the tasks entrusted to VLRD by LG cannot avoid being caught by the procurement directives (provided they are in excess of the relevant value threshold). Otherwise, simply by reorganising the activities of LG through the establishment of VLRD, LG would be able to avoid the consequences that flow from its status as a contracting authority.

82. I therefore do not think that it is essential to determine whether VLRD is a body governed by public law due to the fact that it, itself, meets needs that are inherently in the general, non-industrial or commercial interest, since it must be concluded that VLRD does this in so far as it is functionally part of a company (LG) which meets this type of need and on behalf of which it acts under the in-house system.

83. As for the question of precisely which directive governs the contracts entered into by VLRD, it should be noted that ‘contracts awarded in the sphere of one of the activities expressly listed in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17 and contracts which, although different in nature and thus capable normally, as such, of falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18, are used in the exercise of activities defined in Directive 2004/17 fall within the scope of the latter directive’. (41) It is therefore for the referring court, which did not raise this issue with the Court of Justice, to determine which directive would be applicable, depending on the subject matter of the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

84. In conclusion, I propose that the answer to the first question raised by the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius) should be that Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 and the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a company that is connected in terms of substance and function to a contracting authority such that the in-house exemption is justified in respect of their mutual transactions, is subject to those directives when concluding works, supply and service contracts with third parties for the purpose of performing the task entrusted to it by the contracting authority.

C. The second question referred for a preliminary ruling

85. In the event that the Court of Justice decides to answer the previous question in the affirmative, as I am proposing, the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius) would like to know whether a company such as VLRD would lose the status of contracting authority if the value of the services which it provides on the basis of in-house transactions to LG were to fall to the point of constituting less than 90% or not the main part of the total financial turnover from its activity.

86. The question is a purely hypothetical one (and, to that extent, inadmissible), since what the main proceedings are attempting to resolve is not some future situation but the situation which existed at the time when VLRD published the invitation to tender for the supply of bars of ferrous metals (2013). The original proceedings are concerned only with the annulment of that specific tendering procedure, which has been challenged by LitSpecMet.

87. The relevant time to be considered for the purposes of resolving the dispute is right at the beginning, as may be inferred from the case-law of the Court of Justice. This states that the principle of legal certainty requires Community rules to be clear and their application foreseeable by all those affected by them, (42) and as a result of that requirement, and of the requirements on the protection of the interests of tenderers, it is necessary for a body which is a contracting authority on the date of the commencement of a procurement procedure to remain subject to the requirements of the public procurement directives until the relevant procedure has been completed. (43)

88. As I have explained, in determining whether the public procurement directives applied to VLRD, the relevant consideration is whether the 2013 invitation procedure concerned goods supplied by third parties and used in performing the task that LG had entrusted to it in the context of their in-house relationship.

89. Obviously, if at a later date, some years into the future, that were no longer to be the case and, whether due to the circumstances mentioned by the referring court (namely if the ‘essential’ part of the activity of VLRD were no longer to be serving the purposes of LG), (44) or for some other reason of that kind, VLRD were to lose its status as a proxy entity of LG and start to operate in the free market, then it would be necessary to evaluate the new circumstances and decide accordingly.

90. The legislation applicable in this hypothetical future scenario would be Directive 2014/24, and it would be necessary to determine in accordance with the criteria and requirements of that directive whether VLRD should still, at that time, be considered a contracting authority.

VI. Conclusion

91. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court of Justice reply to the Vilniaus apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Vilnius, Lithuania) as follows:

> Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that:
>
> (a) a company that is connected to a contracting authority in terms of substance and function such that the in-house exemption is justified in respect of their mutual transactions, is subject to those directives when concluding works, supply and service contracts with third parties for the purpose of performing the task entrusted to it by that contracting authority; and
>
> (b) in any event, that company should be considered a body governed by public law where it has legal personality, is controlled by a contracting authority and the essential part of its activity is to supply the contracting authority, free of any pressure from competitors and not in free market conditions, with railway equipment to enable the authority to provide its designated service of transporting passengers and freight.

---

1 Original language: Spanish.

---

2 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1).

---

3 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

---

4 Vilniaus lokomotyvų remonto depas UAB (‘VLRD’).

---

5 Lietuvos Geležinkeliai AB (‘LG’).

---

6 Council Directive of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84).

---

7 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

---

8 C-393/06, EU:C:2008:213.

---

9 C-44/96, EU:C:1998:4.

---

10 C-283/00, EU:C:2000:544.

---

11 Judgment of 10 April 2008, Ing. Aigner (C-393/06, EU:C:2008:213), paragraph 35.

---

12 Judgment of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 ‘Spezzino’ and Others (C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440), paragraph 43.

---

13 This point is made by the Lithuanian Government at the end of paragraph 7 of its written observations when it states that it is not clear from the case file submitted by the referring court whether the latter had taken into consideration the ‘relevant circumstances' indicated by the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) when it referred the case back to the lower courts for fresh consideration.

14 See, inter alia, judgment of 12 September 2013, IVD (C-526/11, EU:C:2013:543), paragraph 19.

15 LG is listed as a contracting authority in Annex IV (Contracting entities in the field of rail services) to Commission Decision 2008/963/EC of 9 December 2008 amending the Annexes to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement procedures, as regards their lists of contracting entities and contracting authorities (OJ 2008, L 349, p. 1). Also included in that Annex, without naming them, are 'other entities in compliance with the requirements of Article 70(1) and (2) of the Law on Public Procurement of the Republic of Lithuania (Official Gazette, No 84-2000, 1996; No 4-102, 2006) and operating in the field of railway services in accordance with the Code of Railway Transport of the Republic of Lithuania (Official Gazette, No 72-2489, 2004)'.

16 Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2001 on the allocation of railway infrastructure capacity and the levying of charges for the use of railway infrastructure and safety certification (OJ 2001 L 75, p. 29);

17 Written observations of LitSpecMet, paragraph 33.

18 Judgment of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (C-44/96, EU:C:1998:4), paragraph 24.

19 The list of such needs in the case-law of the Court of Justice is very long. It covers, for example, matters ranging from the provision of heating by means of an environmentally friendly process (judgment of 10 April 2008, Ing. Aigner, C-393/06, EU:C:2008:213, paragraph 39) to promoting the location of private undertakings on a particular territory (judgment of 22 May 2003, Korhonen and Others, C-18/01, EU:C:2003:300, paragraph 48).

20 C-18/01, EU:C:2003:300, paragraph 52, citing, in particular, the judgments of 3 October 2000, University of Cambridge (C-380/98, EU:C:2000:529), paragraph 17; of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others (C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746), paragraph 52; and of 27 February 2003, Adolf Truley (C-373/00, EU:C:2003:110), paragraph 4. To the same effect, see judgment of 13 December 2007, Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others (C-337/06, EU:C:2007:786), paragraph 36.

21 Judgment of 10 April 2008, Ing. Aigner (C-393/06, EU:C:2008:213), paragraph 40.

22 According to the judgment of 22 May 2003, Korhonen and Others (C-18/01 EU:C:2003:300), paragraph 49, 'the existence of such competition may… be an indication that a need in the general interest has an industrial or commercial character'.

23 See, for example, judgment of 16 October 2003, Commission v Spain (C-283/00, EU:C:2000:544), paragraph 81.

24 See, once again, judgment of 22 May 2003, Korhonen and Others (C-18/01 EU:C:2003:300), paragraph 59.

25 The referring court notes in the second indent of its question that VLRD 'independently engages in business activity, establishes a business strategy, adopts decisions concerning the conditions of the company's activity …, participates in a competitive market throughout the European Union and outside the EU market, … and participates in procurement procedures connected with that activity, seeking to obtain orders from third parties (not the parent company)' (emphasis added).

26 See, to that effect, the observations of the Lithuanian Government referred to in footnote 13.

27 It is stated in paragraph 24 of the description of the '[facts and procedure in the main proceedings]' set out in the order for reference that 'the in-house relationships between LG and VLRD demonstrate not only the … close economic ties between those undertakings but perhaps also the fact that VLRD essentially does not operate under free market conditions' (emphasis added).

28 Emphasis added.

29 The order for reference then goes on to cite several judgments of the Court of Justice in which the in-house exception has been applied: judgments of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, ECLI:EU:C:1999:562), and of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, ECLI:EU:C:2005:5).

30 Paragraphs 21 and 22 of its written observations.

---

31 This would be confirmed by the data provided by Kanapinskas, V., Plytnikas, Z., and Tvaronavičienė, A., 'In-house procurement exception: Threat for sustainable procedure of public procurement?', Journal of Security and Sustainability Issues (http://dx.doi.org/10.9770/jssi.2014.4.2(4), which for 2011 gives VLRD 39.2% of all contracts awarded by LG under the in-house system; in 2013 this rose to 74%.

---

32 Paragraphs 31 to 36.

---

33 Directive 2014/24, and Article 12(1) in particular, which is based on the case-law of the Court of Justice in this area (although it deviates from this in certain important respects), does not apply ratione temporis to the main proceedings.

---

34 Judgment of 8 May 2014, Datenlotsen Informationssysteme (C-15/13, EU:C:2014:303), paragraph 25 and the case law cited. More recent is the judgment of 8 December 2016, Undis Servizi (C-553/15, EU:C:2016:935), paragraph 30.

---

35 The referring court itself takes the view that the establishment of VLRD was an attempt to reorganise the activities of LG (paragraph 26 of the order for reference).

---

36 See, in general, Sánchez Graells, A., Public procurement and the competition rules, 2nd edition, Hart, Oxford, 2015, pp. 265 to 272.

---

37 The Court of Justice referred to consideration as a feature which distinguishes contracts governed by Directive 2004/18 in its judgment of 8 September 2016, Politanò (C-225/15 EU:C:2016:645), paragraphs 29 to 31.

---

38 Paragraph 23 of the written observation of the Commission.

---

39 In the judgment of 11 May 2006, Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei (C-340/04,ECLI:EU:C:2006:308), the Court of Justice reiterated what it had already stated in the judgment of 18 November 1999, Teckal (C-107/98, ECLI:EU:C:1999:562), namely that the subordinate body must carry out 'the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority or authorities' (paragraph 59), stating that the activity must be 'devoted principally to that authority and any other activities are only of marginal significance' (paragraph 63, without emphasis in the original version). Article 12(1) of Directive 2014/24 has (controversially) set the limits of what is 'essential' and what is 'marginal' at 80% and 20% respectively.

---

40 On the risk that subcontracting may be used under the in-house system as a means of avoiding the rules on free competition, see the report of the Comisión Nacional de la Competencia (National Competition Commission, Spain) entitled Los medios propios y las encomiendas de gestión:implicaciones de su uso desde la óptica de la promoción de la competencia, pp. 30 to 57. (https://www.cnmc.es/Portals/0/Ficheros/Promocion/Informes_y_Estudios_Sectoriales/2013/2014_MediosPropios_Inf_sectorial.PDF).

---

41 Judgment of 10 April 2008, Ing. Aigner (C-393/06, EU:C:2008:213), paragraph 57.

---

42 See, for example, judgment of 15 January 1998, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (C-44/96, EU:C:1998:4), paragraph 34.

---

43 Judgment of 3 October 2000, University of Cambridge (C-380/98, EU:C:2000:529), paragraph 43.

---

44 However, according to the information made available at the hearing, in fact, 85% of the supplies effected by VLRD in 2016 were still to LG and, of these, two thirds were under in-housearrangements.

EU:C:2016:730

ORDONNANCE DE LA COUR (septième chambre)

28 septembre 2016 (*)

« Renvoi préjudiciel – Article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour – Questions préjudicielles identiques – Articles 49 et 56 TFUE – Liberté d'établissement – Libre prestation de services – Jeux de hasard – Restrictions – Raisons impérieuses d'intérêt général – Proportionnalité – Marchés publics – Conditions de participation à un appel d'offres et évaluation de la capacité économique et financière – Exclusion du soumissionnaire pour défaut de présentation d'attestations de sa capacité économique et financière, délivrées par deux établissements bancaires distincts – Directive 2004/18/CE – Article 47 – Applicabilité »

Dans l'affaire C-542/15,

ayant pour objet une demande de décision préjudicielle au titre de l'article 267 TFUE, introduite par le Tribunale di Santa Maria Capua Vetere (tribunal de Santa Maria Capua Vetere, Italie), par décision du 10 septembre 2015, parvenue à la Cour le 16 octobre 2015, dans la procédure pénale contre

Angela Manzo,

LA COUR (septième chambre), composée de M^me^ C. Toader (rapporteur), président de chambre, M. A. Rosas et M^me^ A. Prechal, juges, avocat général : M. N. Wahl,

greffier : M. A. Calot Escobar,

vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée, conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation des articles 49 et 56 TFUE ainsi que de l'article 47 de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO 2004, L 134, p. 114).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'une procédure pénale engagée contre M^me^ Angela Manzo en raison d'une infraction à législation italienne régissant la collecte de paris.

Le litige au principal et les questions préjudicielles

3 L'affaire au principal s'inscrit dans un cadre juridique et factuel pour l'essentiel analogue à celui des affaires ayant donné lieu aux arrêts du 12 septembre 2013, Biasci e.a. (C-660/11 et C-8/12, EU:C:2013:550), ainsi que du 8 septembre 2016, Politanò (C-225/15, EU:C:2016:645).

4 Ainsi qu'il ressort du dossier soumis à la Cour, un contrôle effectué le 24 septembre 2013 par la Guardia di Finanza di Mondragone (police douanière et financière de Mondragone, Italie) dans les locaux d'un centre de transmission de données géré par M^me^ Manzo et affilié à UniqGroup ltd., une société de droit maltais, a permis de mettre à jour l'existence, dans ce centre, d'une activité non autorisée de collecte de paris. À la suite de ce contrôle, il a été procédé à la saisie conservatoire de certains équipements utilisés pour la collecte de paris.

5 Une procédure pénale a été également engagée à l'encontre de M^me^ Manzo.

6 Devant la juridiction de renvoi elle a soutenu que sa conduite n'est pas constitutive d'une infraction, car la collecte de paris sur des événements sportifs pour le compte d'UniqGroup doit être considérée comme licite dans la mesure où la législation interne est contraire aux articles 49 et 56 TFUE.

7 Elle soutient à cet égard que UniqGroup a été exclue de la procédure d'appel d'offres lancée au cours de l'année 2012, au motif qu'elle n'aurait pas présenté deux attestations de capacité économique et financière délivrées par deux établissements bancaires différents.

8 Dans ces conditions, le Tribunale di Santa Maria Capua Vetere (tribunal de Santa Maria Capua Vetere) a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour les questions préjudicielles suivantes, qui sont partiellement identiques à celles posées dans les affaires ayant donné lieu aux arrêts du 12 septembre 2013, Biasci e.a. (C-660/11 et C-8/12, EU:C:2013:550), ainsi que du 8 septembre 2016, Politanò (C-225/15, EU:C:2016:645).

« 1) Les articles [49 et 56 TFUE] ainsi que les principes de l'égalité de traitement et d'effectivité doivent-ils être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à une législation nationale en matière de jeux de hasard qui, pour l'octroi de concessions, met en place une nouvelle procédure d'appel d'offres [...] qui, sans prévoir à cet égard d'autre critère que deux références bancaires provenant de deux établissements financiers différents, contient une clause d'exclusion pour défaut de capacité économique et financière ?

2) L'article 47 de la directive 2004/18/CE [...] doit-il être interprété en ce sens qu'il s'oppose à une législation nationale en matière de jeux de hasard qui, pour l'octroi de concessions, met en place une nouvelle procédure d'appel d'offres [...] qui, sans prévoir à cet égard d'autres documents ni options, comme le fait la législation supranationale, [contient une clause d'exclusion pour défaut] de capacité économique et financière ?

3) Les articles [49 et 56 TFUE] s'opposent-ils à une législation nationale qui empêche de fait toute activité transfrontalière dans le secteur des jeux, indépendamment de la forme sous laquelle cette activité s'exerce et, en particulier [selon les termes de l'arrêt du 12 septembre 2013, Biasci e.a. (C-660/11 et C-8/12, EU:C:2013:550)], dans les cas où les intermédiaires de l'entreprise présents sur le territoire national peuvent être soumis à un contrôle physique à des fins de police ? »

Sur les questions préjudicielles

9 Conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour, lorsqu'une question posée à titre préjudiciel est identique à une question sur laquelle la Cour a déjà statué ou lorsque la réponse à une telle question peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence, la Cour peut, à tout moment, après avoir entendu l'avocat général, statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

10 Il convient de faire application de cette disposition dans le cadre de la présente affaire.

11 À titre liminaire, il y a lieu de relever que si, certes, la juridiction de renvoi s'est référée, dans le libellé de la première question, aux principes d'égalité de traitement et d'effectivité, il convient de constater que la décision de renvoi ne contient aucune précision sur les raisons qui ont conduit ladite juridiction à s'interroger sur l'interprétation de ces principes dans le cadre de l'affaire au principal ni sur le lien entre ces principes et la législation nationale en cause au principal.

12 Eu égard à ce qui précède, il y a lieu de considérer que, par sa première question, la juridiction de renvoi cherche en substance à savoir si les articles 49 et 56 TFUE doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils s'opposent à une disposition nationale, telle que celle en cause au principal, qui impose aux opérateurs désireux de répondre à un appel d'offres visant à l'octroi de concessions en matière de jeux et de paris, l'obligation d'apporter la preuve de leur capacité économique et financière au moyen de déclarations délivrées par au moins deux établissements bancaires, sans permettre que cette capacité puisse également être autrement établie.

13 Dans la mesure où, au point 50 de l'arrêt du 8 septembre 2016 Politanò (C-225/15, EU:C:2016:645), la Cour a répondu, s'agissant de l'article 49 TFUE, à une question identique à la première question posée dans la présente affaire, la réponse apportée par la Cour dans ledit arrêt est pleinement transposable à cette première question en ce qui concerne l'article 49 TFUE.

14 Par ailleurs, ainsi que la Cour l'a rappelé au point 37 de l'arrêt du 8 septembre 2016, Politanò (C-225/15 EU:C:2016:645), doivent être considérées comme des restrictions à la liberté d'établissement et/ou à la libre prestation de services toutes les mesures qui interdisent, gênent ou rendent moins attrayant l'exercice des libertés garanties par les articles 49 et 56 TFUE.

15 Une disposition d'un État membre, telle que celle en cause au principal, est susceptible de dissuader les opérateurs économiques de participer à une procédure d'appel d'offres et est, dès lors, susceptible de constituer également une restriction à la libre prestation de services au sens de l'article 56 TFUE.

16 S'agissant de la justification d'une telle restriction, les considérations évoquées aux points 39 à 49 de l'arrêt du 8 septembre 2016, Politanò (C-225/15 EU:C:2016:645) dans le contexte de la liberté d'établissement apparaissent pleinement transposables à la libre prestation de services.

17 Eu égard à l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent, il convient de répondre à la première question que les articles 49 et 56 TFUE doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas à une disposition nationale, telle que celle en cause au principal, qui impose aux opérateurs désireux de répondre à un appel d'offres visant à l'octroi de concessions en matière de jeux et de paris l'obligation d'apporter la preuve de leur capacité économique et financière au moyen de déclarations délivrées par au moins deux établissements bancaires, sans permettre que cette capacité puisse également être autrement établie, dès lors qu'une telle disposition est susceptible de satisfaire aux conditions de proportionnalité établies par la jurisprudence de la Cour, ce qu'il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier.

18 Par sa deuxième question, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si l'article 47 de la directive 2004/18 doit être interprété en ce sens qu'il s'oppose à une disposition nationale, telle que celle en cause au principal, qui impose aux opérateurs désireux de répondre à un appel d'offres visant à l'octroi de concessions en matière de jeux et de paris l'obligation d'apporter la preuve de leur capacité économique et financière au moyen de déclarations délivrées par au moins deux établissements bancaires, sans permettre que cette capacité soit établie par tout autre document.

19 Dans la mesure où, au point 34 de l'arrêt du 8 septembre 2016 Politanò (C-225/15, EU:C:2016:645), la Cour a répondu à une question identique à la deuxième question posée dans la présente affaire, la réponse apportée par la Cour dans ledit arrêt est pleinement transposable à cette deuxième question.

20 Dans ces conditions, il convient de répondre à la deuxième question que la directive 2004/18, en particulier son article 47, doit être interprétée en ce sens qu'une réglementation nationale régissant l'octroi de concessions dans le domaine des jeux de hasard, telle que celle en cause au principal, ne relève pas de son champ d'application.

21 S'agissant de la troisième question, il y a lieu de relever que ni sa formulation, au demeurant peu claire, ni les explications fournies par la juridiction de renvoi dans sa décision de renvoi ne permettent de déceler clairement en quoi cette question comporte une interrogation distincte de celle de la première question portant, elle aussi, sur l'interprétation des articles 49 et 56 TFUE au regard de la même disposition de droit national. Dans ces conditions, cette troisième question n'appelle pas de réponse distincte de celle qui a déjà été apportée à la première question.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (septième chambre) dit pour droit :

1) Les articles 49 et 56 TFUE doivent être interprétés en ce sens qu'ils ne s'opposent pas à une disposition nationale, telle que celle en cause au principal, qui impose aux opérateurs désireux de répondre à un appel d'offres visant à l'octroi de concessions en matière de jeux et de paris l'obligation d'apporter la preuve de leur capacité économique et financière au moyen de déclarations délivrées par au moins deux établissements bancaires, sans permettre que cette capacité puisse également être autrement établie, dès lors qu'une telle disposition est susceptible de satisfaire aux conditions de proportionnalité établies par la jurisprudence de la Cour, ce qu'il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier.

2) La directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, en particulier son article 47, doit être interprétée en ce sens qu'une réglementation nationale régissant l'octroi de concessions dans le domaine des jeux de hasard, telle que celle en cause au principal, ne relève pas de son champ d'application.

Signatures

---

* Langue de procédure : l'italien.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

5 April 2017 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Review procedures — Directive 89/665/EEC — Article 1(1) — Article 2(1) — Decision of a contracting authority allowing an economic operator to participate in a procurement procedure — Decision not amenable to review under the applicable national legislation)

In Case C-391/15,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Andalucía (High Court of Justice of Andalusia, Spain), made by decision of 9 July 2015, received at the Court on 20 July 2015, in the proceedings

Marina del Mediterráneo SL and Others

v

Agencia Pública de Puertos de Andalucía,

intervening parties:

Consejería de Obras Públicas y Vivienda de la Junta de Andalucía,

Nassir Bin Abdullah and Sons SL,

Puerto Deportivo de Marbella SA,

Ayuntamiento de Marbella,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, E. Juhász (Rapporteur), C. Vajda, K. Jürimäe and C. Lycourgos, Judges,

Advocate General: M. Bobek,

Registrar: V. Giacobbo-Peyronnel, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 29 June 2016,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Marina del Mediterráneo SL and Others, by J.L. Torres Beltrán, procurador, and A. Jiménez-Blanco, abogado,

– the Agencia Pública de Puertos de Andalucía, by J.M. Rodríguez Gutiérrez, abogado, – the Consejería de Obras Públicas y Vivienda de la Junta de Andalucía, by I. Nieto Salas, abogada,

– the Spanish Government, by M.A. Sampol Pucurull and M.J. García-Valdecasas Dorrego, acting as Agents,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, assisted by P. Pucciariello and F. Di Matteo, avvocati dello Stato,

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by E. Sanfrutos Cano and M.A. Tokár, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 8 September 2016,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(1) and Article 2(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) ('Directive 89/665').

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Marina del Mediterráneo SL and Others, a temporary consortium known as 'Marina Internacional de Marbella', and the Agencia Pública de Puertos de Andalucía (Ports Agency of Andalusia; the 'Agency'), concerning the lawfulness of a decision by which that Agency allowed another temporary consortium to submit a tender in a public procurement procedure it had launched for the award of a public works concession contract.

Legal context

EU law

3 Recital 2 of Directive 89/665 states:

'… the existing arrangements at both national and Community levels for ensuring the [effective application of directives on public procurement] are not always adequate to ensure compliance with the relevant Community provisions particularly at a stage when infringements can be corrected'.

4 Article 1 of that directive, headed 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides in paragraphs 1 and 3:

'1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts [(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, public works concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

…

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

5 Article 2 of Directive 89/665, headed 'Requirements for review procedures', provides in paragraph 1:

‘Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.’

6 Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) was repealed by Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243). Articles 3 to 7 in Section 2 of Chapter II of Title I of Directive 2014/25 set out the activities to which it applies.

7 Directive 2004/18 was repealed by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65). Article 57 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Exclusions from the scope’, which is included in Title III, headed ‘Rules on public works concessions’, provides:

‘This Title shall not apply to public works concessions which are awarded:

(a) in the cases referred to in Articles 13, 14 and 15 of this Directive in respect of public works contracts;

(b) by contracting authorities exercising one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17/EC where those concessions are awarded for carrying out those activities.

However, this Directive shall continue to apply to public works concessions awarded by contracting authorities carrying out one or more of the activities referred to in Article 6 of Directive 2004/17/EC and awarded for those activities, insofar as the Member State concerned takes advantage of the option referred to in the second subparagraph of Article 71 thereof to defer its application.’

Spanish law

8 Section 25(1) of Ley 29/1998 reguladora de la Jurisdicción Contencioso-administrativa (Law 29/1998 governing administrative courts) of 13 July 1998 (BOE No 167 of 14 July 1998, p. 23516) sets out what may be the subject of a review in the context of contentious administrative proceedings and, more specifically, the administrative acts open to challenge as follows:

‘Administrative appeal proceedings are admissible in respect of provisions of a general nature and express and implicit measures, whether definitive or procedural, adopted by the public authority which bring an end to the administrative procedure, if they decide, directly or indirectly, the substantive issues, render it impossible to continue the procedure, render it impossible to conduct a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests.’

9 Section 107(1) of Ley 30/1992 de Régimen Jurídico de las Administraciones Públicas y del Procedimiento Administrativo Común (Law 30/1992 on the legal provisions governing public authorities and ordinary administrative procedure) of 26 November 1992 (BOE No 285 of 27 November 1992, p. 40300), as amended by Ley 4/1999 (Law 4/1999) of 13 January 1999 (BOE No 12 of 14 January 1999, p. 1739) (‘Law 30/1992’), provides:

‘The parties concerned may seek review of decisions and administrative acts which decide, directly or indirectly, the substance of the case, make it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests, which may be based on any of the grounds of invalidity or annulment provided for in Sections 62 and 63 of this Law.

The parties concerned may challenge the remaining preparatory acts for consideration in the decision bringing the procedure to an end.’

10 The Ley 30/2007 de Contratos del Sector Público (Law 30/2007 on public procurement) of 30 October 2007 (BOE No 261 of 31 October 2007, p. 44336), was amended by Ley 34/2010 (Law 34/2010) of 5 August 2010 (BOE No 192 of 9 August 2010, p. 69400) (‘Law 30/2007’), with the objective of including, in Sections 310 to 320, provisions relating to the special application in procurement proceedings.

11 Section 310(2) of Law 30/2007, which specifically relates to public procurement and implements the general rule laid down in Section 107(1) of Law 30/1992, provides:

‘The following acts may be the subject of an application:

(a) Contract notices, specifications and contractual documents laying down the conditions which will govern the procurement procedure;

(b) Preparatory acts adopted in the tendering procedure, provided that they decide, directly or indirectly, the award of the contract, make it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests. Acts of the procurement board which decide to exclude tenderers will be considered preparatory acts which make it impossible to continue the procedure;

(c) Award decisions adopted by the contracting authorities.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 On 12 April 2011, Marina del Mediterráneo SL and Others lodged, with the competent administrative body, a special application in procurement proceedings against the decision of the procurement board to allow the temporary consortium comprised of Nassir bin Abdullah and Sons SL, Puerto Deportivo de Marbella SA and l’Ayuntamiento de Marbella (Marbella City Council, Spain) (‘the second temporary consortium’) to submit a tender in the public procurement procedure for the award of the public works concession contract known as ‘Extension of the port of Marbella “la Bajadilla”’.

13 That procurement procedure was launched by the Agency, a special purpose public entity with operational autonomy and its own legal personality, forming part of the Consejería de Obras Públicas y Vivienda de la Junta de Andalucía (Department of Public Works and Housing of Andalucía, Spain). The call for tenders was published on 27 November 2010. According to statements made at the hearing before the Court, the value of that contract is EUR 77 000 000.

14 The two temporary consortia at issue in the main proceedings were the only tenderers that participated in the procurement procedure.

15 In their application, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others claimed, in essence, that the participation of the second temporary consortium in the procurement procedure infringed both national legislation and EU legislation, since, first, Marbella City Council is a public authority which does not have the status of an undertaking within the meaning of national legislation and which cannot be considered an economic operator without distorting the rules of free competition and equality of tenderers, and, secondly, that temporary consortium does not fulfil the requirements of economic and financial solvency in so far as the financial risks it takes are covered by the budget of that City Council.

16 By decision of 3 May 2011, the executive director of the Agency dismissed the application. In that decision, he referred to the case-law of the Court and, in particular, the judgment of 23 December 2009, CoNISMa (C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807), which confers the status of tenderer to any public entity or group consisting of such entities offering services on the market, even if only occasionally. In addition, the executive director took the view that the financial solvency of the second temporary consortium had been established on account of Marbella City Council's revenue budget.

17 As is apparent from the documents before the Court, the public contract at issue in the main proceedings was awarded, by decision of 6 June 2011, to the second temporary consortium. An action brought against that decision by Marina del Mediterráneo and Others was dismissed by decision of 11 July 2011.

18 By letter of 5 July 2011, Marina del Mediterráneo and Others lodged a contentious administrative appeal with the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Andalucía (High Court of Justice of Andalusia, Spain) against the decision of 3 May 2011 of the executive director of the Agency. In the appeal, that temporary consortium, on the basis of the same arguments it put forward before the Agency in the context of the special application in procurement proceedings, seeks annulment of that decision and, accordingly, annulment of the measures that followed it, particularly the decision of 6 June 2011 awarding the contract at issue to the second temporary consortium.

19 By decision of 19 February 2015, the national court hearing the case informed the parties to the main proceedings that there might be grounds for inadmissibility of the contentious administrative appeal on the basis of national legislation which defines the acts that may be the subject of a special application in procurement proceedings. In accordance with that legislation, preparatory acts which decide, directly or indirectly, the award of the contract, make it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests, may be the subject of an action in procurement proceedings.

20 Accordingly, the decision of a procurement board which does not exclude a tenderer but which, on the contrary, admits the tender and allows the tenderer to participate in the procurement procedure that has been initiated does not constitute a decision-making act which is open to review; that does not, however, prevent the person concerned from reporting any irregularities noted and using them subsequently when challenging the act awarding the contract at issue, which is indeed a decision-making act.

21 The referring court entertains doubts as to whether this national legislation is compatible with EU public procurement law as interpreted by the Court, in particular in its judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5).

22 In the light of those considerations, the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Andalucía (High Court of Justice of Andalusia) decided to stay proceedings and to refer to the Court the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

‘1. In the light of the principles of sincere cooperation and the effectiveness of directives, are Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as precluding national legislation such as Section 310(2) of Law 30/2007 … in so far as it prevents access to the special application in procurement proceedings in respect of the preparatory acts of the procurement board, such as the decision to admit a tender from a tenderer which, it is alleged, fails to comply with the provisions concerning proof of technical and economic solvency laid down in the national and EU legislation?

2. If the reply to the first question is in the affirmative, do Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 have direct effect?’

Consideration of the questions referred

Preliminary observations

23 As a preliminary point, in relation to the doubts expressed by the Spanish Government concerning the admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling in the present case, it must be borne in mind that, in accordance with the first and second subparagraphs of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of recital 2 of Directive 2007/66, Directive 89/665 applies, in a context such as that in the main proceedings, only to contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18, unless, however, such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that directive. The following considerations are therefore based on the premiss that Directive 2004/18 is applicable to the contract at issue in the main proceedings and, therefore, that Directive 89/665 is also applicable to the procedure in the main proceedings, which it is for the referring court to ascertain.

The first question

24 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which a decision allowing a tenderer to participate in a procurement procedure — a decision allegedly adopted in breach of EU public procurement law or the national legislation transposing it — is not classed among the preparatory acts of a contracting authority which may be subject to an independent judicial review.

25 Article 310(2)(b) of Law 30/2007 allows an independent review to be sought of preparatory acts which decide, directly or indirectly, the award of a contract, make it impossible to continue a procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests; however, any other preparatory acts, such as a decision allowing a tenderer to participate in a procurement procedure, may, as is apparent from the file submitted to the Court, be challenged only in the context of a review of a decision awarding a public contract.

26 It should be noted that the wording of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 assumes, by using the words ‘as regards … procedures’, that every decision of a contracting authority falling under EU rules in the field of public procurement and liable to infringe them is subject to the judicial review provided for in Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of that directive. That provision thus refers generally to the decisions of a contracting authority without distinguishing between those decisions according to their content or time of adoption (see judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau, C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited).

27 That broad construction of the concept of a ‘decision’ taken by a contracting authority is confirmed by the fact that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature or content of the decisions it refers to. Moreover, a restrictive interpretation of that concept would be incompatible with the terms of Article 2(1)(a) of that directive which requires Member States to make provision for interim relief procedures in relation to any decision taken by the contracting authorities (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau, C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

28 It follows that a decision allowing a tenderer to participate in a public procurement procedure, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, constitutes a decision within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665.

29 That interpretation of the concept of ‘decisions taken by the contracting authorities’ which are amenable to review is not called into question by the fact that the Court held, in paragraph 35 of the judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5), that acts which form part of the internal reflections of the contracting authority with a view to a public award procedure are not amenable to review. As regards the decision at issue in the main proceedings to admit the tender submitted by a tenderer, it must be held that such a decision, by its very nature, falls outside the internal reflections of the contracting authority. Moreover, that decision was communicated to Marina del Méditerraneo and Others.

30 As regards the time from which review procedures must be available, it is appropriate to recall that, as is apparent from its first and second recitals, Directive 89/665 is intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms, both at national and EU levels, to ensure the effective application of the directives relating to public procurement, in particular at a stage when infringements can still be corrected. To that effect, the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of that directive requires Member States ‘to ensure that … decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible' (see judgment of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others, C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 74).

31 As the Court has already held, although Directive 89/665 has not formally laid down the time from which the possibility of review, as provided for in Article 1(1), must be open, the objective of that directive, as referred to in the preceding paragraph, does not authorise Member States to make the exercise of the right to apply for review conditional on the fact that the public procurement procedure in question has formally reached a particular stage (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 38).

32 It is settled case-law that, in the absence of EU rules laying down the time from which a possibility of review must be open, it is for national law to lay down the detailed rules of judicial procedures governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from EU law. Those detailed procedural rules must, however, be no less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and must not render practically impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by EU law (principle of effectiveness) (judgments of 30 September 2010, Strabag and Others, C-314/09, EU:C:2010:567, paragraph 34; 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 46; and 26 November 2015, MedEval, C-166/14, EU:C:2015:779, paragraphs 32, 35 and 37).

33 In particular, the detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by EU law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 (see, to that effect, judgments of 3 March 2005, Fabricom, C-21/03 and C-34/03, EU:C:2005:127, paragraph 42; 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute, C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 47; and 15 September 2016, Star Storage and Others, C-439/14 and C-488/14, EU:C:2016:688, paragraph 43).

34 As regards, more specifically, a decision such as that at issue in the main proceedings allowing a tenderer to participate in a public procurement procedure, the fact that the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings requires, in all cases, a tenderer to wait for a decision awarding the contract in question before it may apply for a review of a decision allowing another tenderer to participate in that procurement procedure infringes the provisions of Directive 89/665.

35 That interpretation is not called into question by the finding that full implementation of the objective sought by Directive 89/665 would be undermined if candidates and tenderers were allowed to invoke, at any stage of the award procedure, infringements of the rules of public procurement, thus obliging the contracting authority to restart the entire procedure in order to correct such infringements (judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo, C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 51 and the case-law cited). That finding concerns the justification of reasonable time limits for applying for review of decisions which may be challenged and not the barring of an independent review of a decision allowing a tenderer to participate in a public procurement procedure, such as follows from the legislation at issue in the main proceedings.

36 Furthermore, it is for the referring court to determine whether the other conditions relating to the availability of review procedures, as provided for in Directive 89/665, are satisfied. In that regard, it should be noted that, in accordance with the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of that directive, in order for the review of decisions taken by a contracting authority to be regarded as effective, review procedures must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement of EU public procurement law or rules transposing that law (see, to that effect, judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 23). It is therefore, more specifically, for the national court to determine, in the context of the main proceedings, whether Marina del Mediterráneo and Others have or have had an interest in obtaining the contract in question and have been or risk being harmed by the decision of the Agency to admit the tender of the second temporary consortium.

37 It follows from all of the foregoing considerations that the answer to the first question is that, in a situation such as that in the main proceedings, Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which a decision allowing a tenderer to participate in a procurement procedure — a decision allegedly adopted in breach of EU public procurement law or the national legislation transposing it — is not classed among the preparatory acts of a contracting authority which may be subject to an independent judicial review.

The second question

38 By its second question, the referring court asks whether Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 have direct effect.

39 In that regard, it should be recalled that the Court has already held that Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of that directive are unconditional and sufficiently clear to create rights for individuals on which they may rely, where necessary, against contracting authorities (see judgment of 2 June 2005, Koppensteiner, C-15/04, EU:C:2005:345, paragraph 38).

40 As the Advocate General noted in point 70 of his Opinion, such an assessment applies equally to Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 89/665 in the light of both its clear and precise wording and the proximity of its subject matter to that of Article 2(1)(b) of the directive.

41 It follows from all of the foregoing considerations that the answer to the second question is that Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 have direct effect.

Costs

42 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation under which a decision allowing a tenderer to participate in a procurement procedure — a decision allegedly adopted in breach of EU public procurement law or the national legislation transposing it — is not classed among the preparatory acts of a contracting authority which may be subject to an independent judicial review.

2. Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2007/66, have direct effect.

[Signatures]

 Language of the case: Spanish.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

BOBEK

delivered on 8 September 2016 (1)

Case C-391/15

Marina del Mediterráneo, SL,

Marina del Mediterráneo Duquesa, SL,

Marina del Mediterráneo Estepona, SL,

Marina del Mediterráneo Este, SL,

Marinas del Mediterráneo Torre, SL,

Marina del Mediterráneo Marbella, SL,

Gómez Palma, SC,

Enrique Alemán, SA,

Cyes Infraestructuras, SA,

Cysur Obras y Medioambiente, SA

v

Consejería de Obras Públicas y Vivienda de la Junta de Andalucía,

Agencia Pública de Puertos de Andalucía,

Nassir Bin Abdullah and Sons, SL,

Puerto Deportivo de Marbella, SA,

Ayuntamiento de Marbella

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Andalucía (High Court of Justice of Andalusia, Spain))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Award procedure — Decision of admission of a candidate — Alleged illegality — Preparatory act — Immediate or deferred review — Direct effect)

I – Introduction

1. Marina del Mediterráneo, SL and others (the applicants) applied for a public works concession contract for the expansion of a port in Spain. A second group of undertakings also applied for the contract. The applicants considered that the second group did not fulfil the conditions for submitting a bid. They therefore challenged the admission of the second group of undertakings to the tendering procedure by way of a special application in public procurement proceedings. However, the referring court informed the applicants that a contentious administrative appeal such as that of the applicants might be inadmissible on the grounds that its subject matter was a mere preparatory act, namely, the admission of a candidate.

2. In the present case, the Court is called upon to determine the standard set by EU law for the review of preparatory acts, such as a decision to admit an undertaking to submit a bid in a public procurement procedure. More particularly, does Directive 89/665/EEC (2) ('the Remedies Directive') require Member States to provide for immediate and autonomous review of any decision of the contracting authority or is it possible to defer review until a later stage of the award procedure?

II – Legal background

A – EU law

3. The Remedies Directive, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC, (3) aims at ensuring the application of EU directives on public procurement by imposing obligations on Member States to provide for effective and speedy remedies in the case of infringement of EU law or of national rules implementing EU law.

4. Recital 2 of that directive states that 'the existing arrangements at both national and Community levels for ensuring their application are not always adequate to ensure compliance with the relevant Community provisions particularly at a stage when infringements can be corrected'.

5. Article 1 of the Remedies Directive reads as follows:

> '1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, (4) unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.
>
> Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, public works concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.
>
> Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.
>
> …
>
> 3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

6. Article 2(1) requires Member States to:

> 'ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:
>
> (a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;
>
> (b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;
>
> (c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.'

7. Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992, as amended by Directive 2007/66, coordinates the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunication sectors. (5)

8. Article 1 of Directive 92/13 corresponds to Article 1 of Directive 89/665 but entails two differences: first, it applies to the sectors regulated by Directive 2004/17/EC (6) (instead of Directive 2004/18); second, it does not explicitly concern public works concessions.

9. Article 2(1) of Directive 92/13 also corresponds to a large extent to Article 2(1) of the Remedies Directive, but the former explicitly includes, under (b), the possibility to set aside discriminatory technical, economic and financial specifications that are to be found in the notice of contract, the periodic indicative notice and the notice on the existence of a system of qualification, whereas the latter does not.

B – National law

10. The administrative activity which is open to challenge is defined in Section 25(1) of Ley 29/1998 reguladora de la Jurisdicción Contencioso-administrativa (Law governing Administrative Courts), of 13 July 1998, which provides that: 'administrative appeal proceedings are admissible in respect of provisions of a general nature and express and implicit measures, whether definitive or preparatory, adopted by the public authority which bring an end to the administrative procedure, if they decide, directly or indirectly, the substantive issues, render it impossible to continue the procedure, render it impossible to conduct a defence or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests'.

11. Section 107(1) of Ley 30/1992 de Régimen Jurídico de las Administraciones Públicas y del Procedimiento Administrativo común (Law No 30/1992 on the legal provisions governing public authorities and ordinary administrative procedure) of 26 November 1992, as amended by Ley 4/1999 of 13 January 1999, limits access to administrative appeals in the following terms:

> 'The parties concerned may seek review of decisions and administrative acts which decide, directly or indirectly, the substance of the case, make it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests, which may be based on any of the grounds of invalidity or annulment provided for in Sections 62 and 63 of this Law.
>
> The parties concerned may challenge the remaining preparatory acts for consideration in the decision bringing the procedure to an end.'

12. Ley 30/2007 de Contratos del Sector Público (Law on Public Procurement) of 30 October 2007, as amended by Ley 34/2010 of 5 August 2010, establishes the rules relating to special applications which may be made in public procurement proceedings. Section 310(2) is the expression, in the context of public procurement, of the general rule laid down in Section 107(1) of the aforementioned Ley 30/1992. It provides that 'the following acts may be the subject of the application:

> (a) Contract notices, specifications and contractual documents laying down the conditions which will govern the procurement procedure;
>
> (b) Preparatory acts adopted in the tendering procedure, provided that they decide, directly or indirectly, the award of the contract, make it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests. Acts of the procurement board which decide to exclude tenderers will be considered preparatory acts which make it impossible to continue the procedure;
>
> (c) Award decisions adopted by the contracting authorities

III – The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred to the Court

13. The Agencia Pública de Puertos de Andalucía (Ports Agency of Andalusia) is a special purpose (ad hoc) entity with operational autonomy and its own legal personality. It forms part of the Consejería de Obras Públicas y Vivienda de la Junta de Andalucía (Department of Public Works and Housing of Andalusia).

14. The Ports Agency of Andalusia launched a tendering procedure for the award of a public works concession contract for the expansion of the port of La Bajadilla, in Marbella. In the course of the tendering procedure, the procurement board admitted the participation of two groups of undertakings: (i) Marina del Mediterráneo, SL and others, which is a 'union temporal de empresas' (temporary business association) operating under the name Marina internacional de Marbella and (ii) another temporary business association made up of the Ayuntamiento de Marbella (Marbella City Council), the municipal company Puerto Deportivo de Marbella, SA and the commercial company Nasir Bin Abdullah and Sons, SL

15. The decision of the procurement board to admit the second temporary business association to submit a bid was contested by the applicants before the Director Gerente de la Agencia Pública de Puertos de Andalucía (Head of the Ports Agency of Andalusia) by way of a special application in procurement proceedings (recurso especial en materia de contratación), lodged on 12 April 2011.

16. The applicants considered that there had been an infringement of EU and national legislation. In their view, the second temporary business association should not have been admitted as a tenderer, because (a) the Marbella City Council is a public authority that does not have the status of 'undertaking' to which national law refers when defining the term 'tenderer'; (b) the second temporary business association does not fulfil the requirements of economic and financial solvency; and (c) the Marbella City Council cannot be considered as an economic operator because that would distort the rules of free competition and equality of tenderers.

17. On 3 May 2011, the Head of the Ports Agency of Andalusia issued the contested decision dismissing the applicants' claims, holding that, first, public authorities may participate in a tendering procedure without undermining the principle of free competition and second, the solvency of the second temporary business association had been established.

18. Marina del Mediterráneo, SL and others then brought a contentious administrative appeal before the referring court on 5 July 2011. They seek annulment of the contested decision and of the measures that followed it, particularly the decision to award the contract to the second temporary business association. They also request to be declared as the sole tenderer and awarded compensation for the harm suffered.

19. By order of 19 February 2015, the referring court informed the parties that there might be grounds for inadmissibility of their contentious administrative appeal because national legislation precludes the review of merely preparatory acts. According to that national legislation, a decision of a procurement board which does not exclude a tenderer but which admits a tenderer to participate in the procurement procedure is not an act that may be challenged judicially.

20. By order of 9 July 2015, the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Andalucía (High Court of Justice of Andalusia, Spain) stayed its proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court:

'(1) In the light of the principles of sincere cooperation and the effectiveness of directives, are Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as precluding national legislation such as Section 310(2) of Ley 30/2007, de 30 de octubre, de Contratos del Sector Público (now Section 40(2) RDLeg 3/2011, que aprueba el texto refundido de la Ley de Contratos del Sector Público), in so far as it prevents access to the special application in procurement proceedings in respect of the preparatory acts of the procurement board, such as the decision to admit a tender from a tenderer which, it is alleged, fails to comply with the provisions concerning proof of technical and economic solvency laid down in the national and EU legislation?

(2) If the reply to the first question is in the affirmative, do Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 have direct effect?'

21. Marina del Mediterráneo, SL and others, the Department of Public Works and Housing of Andalusia, the Ports Agency of Andalusia, the Austrian, Italian and Spanish Governments and the European Commission submitted written observations. All of the participants to the written procedure except the Italian Government presented oral arguments at the hearing held on 29 June 2016.

IV – Assessment

22. Two preliminary issues have to be addressed at the outset. First, as stated at the hearing, the value of the public contract in this case is EUR 77 000 000. Therefore it appears that the contract value thresholds laid down in Article 7 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 16 of Directive 2004/17 have been met.

23. Second, the Spanish Government submits that the present request for a preliminary ruling should nevertheless be declared inadmissible because the Remedies Directive is only applicable to the contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18, which governs classic public sector procurement. It argues that the situation at hand instead falls within the scope of Directive 2004/17 (and is therefore governed by Directive 92/13) since Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/17 provides that it shall apply to activities relating to the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of the provision of airports and maritime or inland ports or other terminal facilities to carriers by air, sea or inland waterway.

24. It is up to the national court to determine, in full knowledge of the facts of the case, the details of the public contract at issue and the precise nature of the activity envisaged by that contract, which of the two directives — the Remedies Directive or Directive 92/13 — is applicable in the present case. In this Opinion, given that the referring court asked its questions expressly on the basis of the Remedies Directive, I will confine myself to the interpretation of that directive. However, it should also be kept in mind that the relevant provisions of both directives are, to a great extent, similar.

A – Question 1

25. The first question referred by the national court asks, in essence, whether the Remedies Directive requires the immediate review of any decision of the contracting authority, including preparatory acts such as the admission of a candidate to submit a bid in a tendering procedure.

26. In answering that question, this part proceeds as follows: after setting out some general observations (Section 1), I will explain why, in my opinion, the Remedies Directive generally permits the deferral of the review of mere preparatory acts of a contracting authority (Section 2). The decision to admit another competitor to an open competition would qualify as such a preparatory act (Section 3).

1. General considerations

27. First, the Spanish Government claims that the Court has already decided in Commission v Spain (7) that Section 310(2) of the Law on Public Procurement (or rather its legislative predecessor, worded in similar terms) is not contrary to the Remedies Directive.

28. In that case, the Commission argued that Spain had infringed the Remedies Directive by, inter alia, failing to ‘allow review to be sought of all decisions adopted by the contracting authorities, including all procedural measures, during the procedure for the award of public contracts’. In rejecting that particular claim, the Court stated: ‘the Commission has not established that that legislation does not provide adequate judicial protection for individuals harmed by infringements of the relevant rules of Community law or of the national rules transposing that law’. (8)

29. It is my understanding of Commission v Spain that the Court, without passing any judgment on the merits of the Commission’s claim, simply dismissed it because the Commission had failed to adduce satisfactory evidence to prove the existence of a breach of EU law. Thus, that decision cannot be read, in my view, as a declaration of the compliance of Spanish law with EU law. That question was left open.

30. Second, it should be stressed that the question asked in the present request for a preliminary ruling is not about the exclusion of review of preparatory acts. It concerns the possibility of deferral of review until a later stage. Under the relevant Spanish legislation, mere preparatory acts cannot be challenged autonomously by making the special (judicial) application in public procurement proceedings. As stated by the Spanish Government, this exclusion is meant to serve the objective of procedural economy. It is intended to avoid undue delays in the award procedure. However, it has also been pointed out that this exclusion does not prevent the assessment of preparatory acts at a later stage, when the final award decision is being reviewed.

31. Third, the first question of the referring court invokes only Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of the Remedies Directive. However Article 1(3) of the Remedies Directive is also relevant in the present case. There is a logical connection between the notion of a reviewable decision taken by the contracting authority and the issue of standing. Pursuant to Article 1(3) of the Remedies Directive, Member States shall ensure that review procedures are available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

32. The question to be assessed in the following section is thus whether those three provisions, taken together, require immediate and autonomous review of any decision of the contracting authority, including preparatory acts such as the admission of a candidate to submit a bid.

2. The deferral of the review of preparatory acts under the Remedies Directive

33. It is true that, if taken to its literal limit, the second part of Article 1(3) could be interpreted as requiring that any decision taken in the course of an award procedure should be reviewable as long as the two conditions relating to standing are fulfilled: the applicant must (i) have an interest in obtaining a particular contract and (ii) have been or risk being harmed by an alleged infringement.

34. However, such an interpretation would have far-reaching consequences. Defining standing in such a broad and rather limitless way would mean that every single decision, however marginal and ancillary, could be immediately attacked, and the award procedure effectively halted. Yet, in my view, a reasonable balance must be struck between the different interests at stake in public procurement procedures, (9) namely, the right of access to court and judicial review to challenge aspects of the procedure, on the one hand, and effectiveness of the overall procedure and judicial expediency, on the other.

35. Admittedly, as claimed by the Commission, the Court has adopted a broad interpretation of the notion of 'decisions taken by contracting authorities'. The Court has stated that: Article 1(1) of the Remedies Directive does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature and content of those decisions; (10) the scope of the judicial review cannot be interpreted restrictively; (11) and any act of the contracting authority adopted in relation to a public service contract within the material scope of public procurement directives and capable of producing legal effects constitutes a decision amenable to review within the meaning of Article 1(1). (12)

36. However, 'amenable to review' does not, from my perspective, necessarily amount to 'amenable to an immediate and autonomous review'. I do not think that the Remedies Directive requires Member States to provide for immediate review of every step of the award procedure, such as the admission of a candidate to tender. This follows from the wording, nature, evolution and purpose of the Remedies Directive.

37. First, it should be borne in mind that the relatively broad definition of standing in Article 1(3) of the Remedies Directive is preceded by an important qualification: 'Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to …' (13)

38. This wording, containing an explicit referral to the laws of the Member States, confirms the nature of the Remedies Directive as a tool of minimum harmonisation. The aim of the Remedies Directive is, as its title suggests, that of coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts. It does not expressly define the scope of the remedies which Member States must establish for that purpose. (14) It only lays down the minimum conditions to be satisfied by the review procedures established in national legal systems so as to ensure compliance with the requirements of EU law on public contracts. (15)

39. Accordingly, Member States enjoy a wide discretion in the choice of the procedural guarantees mentioned in the Remedies Directive. (16) In the absence of EU rules governing the matter, it is for each Member State, in accordance with Article 1(3) of the Remedies Directive and the principle of procedural autonomy of the Member States, to lay down detailed administrative and judicial procedures which safeguard the rights which individuals derive from EU law. However, Member States must exercise their discretion in accordance with the principle of effectiveness. They cannot therefore render the exercise of rights derived from EU law by an individual practically impossible or excessively difficult. (17)

40. In particular, the Court has accepted that domestic law can make the review of public procurement acts subject to certain conditions, such as a time limit beyond which it is no longer possible to challenge decisions of the contracting authority, (18) or other kinds of procedural limitations, including concentration of proceedings. (19)

41. By the same token, Member States may also, while exercising their procedural autonomy, provide for rules preventing applicants from challenging, at any time, certain acts in public procurement procedures, since the Remedies Directive does not impose specific timings for the conduct of review. (20) Far from requiring immediate review of any type of act during the award procedure, the directive only states, in the second recital, that compliance with the relevant EU provisions must be ensured 'at a stage when infringements can be corrected'. That statement has been interpreted by the Court, in accordance with other linguistic versions, as meaning 'when infringements can still be rectified' or 'corrected'. (21)

42. Thus, if the second part of Article 1(3) of the Remedies Directive is considered in the light of its wording, broader context and the case-law of the Court, it does not appear to require immediate review of any potential illegality at any moment. Review can be carried out at a later stage, provided that the alleged illegality can still be rectified.

43. Second, the genesis and evolution of the directive indicate that the EU legislator did not intend to require immediate review for every single act adopted throughout the course of the award procedure.

44. In its original proposal, the Commission drafted Article 1(1) in the following way: 'Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure, at all stages of the contract award procedure, effective administrative and/or judicial remedies …' (22) Following the Opinion of the European Parliament after its first reading, the Commission kept a similar formulation in its amended proposal. (23) It could be argued that if the original wording had been retained, it would indeed mean that any act adopted during the award procedure should be immediately challengeable. However, as the Council ultimately abandoned the requirement 'at all stages of the contract award procedure', it seems that the final legislative intent was rather the opposite.

45. In addition, this legislative intent has not changed over time, as illustrated by Directive 2007/66, which amended the Remedies Directive. Indeed, Directive 2007/66 did not single out any particular weaknesses in the review mechanisms offered by Member States before the award decision. Directive 2007/66 primarily provided for a minimum standstill period starting immediately after the decision to award the contract in order to avoid a rush to sign the contract and to ensure the effective review of the award decision itself.

46. Third, both in written observations as well as at the oral hearing, much was said about the purpose of the Remedies Directive. Would the overall purpose, or the effet utile, of the Remedies Directive be impaired if any single act adopted during the award procedure could (or could not) be immediately challenged?

47. The answer to that question naturally depends on what the purpose of the Remedies Directive is. It will not come as a surprise that the specific purpose of the Remedies Directive is to provide undertakings with effective remedies, so that, as stated in the recitals to the directive, they are not deterred from submitting tenders because of a lack of remedial protection, and to provide for stronger guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination in procurement procedures.

48. However, as in any other area of law, any procedure and procedural rights guaranteed thereby must remain linked to the substance and the overall purpose of the procedure. Procedural rights should not be allowed to mutate into a set of free-floating rights, cut loose from any discernible connection to the legal position of the concrete individual. Put in a metaphorical nutshell: procedure may be a good servant, but a bad master.

49. In my opinion, the Remedies Directive and the rights it sets out are not ends in themselves. They are a means to an end: an advised, fair, competitive, transparent and non-discriminatory decision on the award of a public contract, delivered, if possible, in a reasonably speedy manner. Restated in such general terms, it is apparent that in order to achieve that end, a balance must be struck between, on the one hand, access to effective judicial review and, on the other, conclusion of a contract within a reasonable time frame.

50. If, as suggested by the Commission, it ought to be possible to judicially challenge any act at any time, the speed of public procurement procedures (which arguably in a number of Member States is not currently among the fastest administrative procedures (24)) would hardly improve. Furthermore, the possibility of attacking any preparatory act individually would not actually lead to increased effective judicial protection but rather congestion of the system. (25) As the Court itself made clear, the full implementation of the objective sought by the Remedies Directive would be undermined if candidates and tenderers were allowed to invoke, at any stage of the award procedure, infringements of the rules of public procurement, thus obliging the contracting authority to restart the entire procedure in order to correct such infringements. (26)

51. Lastly, when seeking a reasonable balance between the conflicting interests of unfettered access to judicial review, on the one hand, and judicial economy and overall effectiveness of the procedure, on the other, it might be useful to recall that neither EU law, nor Member States' legal systems in general, (27) require immediate review of preparatory acts.

52. As far as preparatory acts adopted by the European Union are concerned, whilst measures of a purely preparatory character may not themselves be the subject of an application for a declaration that they are void, any legal defects therein may be relied upon in an action directed against the definitive act for which they represent a preparatory step. (28)

53. Equally, as far as Member States are concerned, the Court has held, in the context of domestic acts that have been taken during an award procedure, that national law should safeguard the possibility of raising pleas in law alleging a breach of EU law by a prior decision of the contracting authority in support of applications for review of other decisions of the contracting authority. (29)

54. In conclusion, I do not think that national rules that defer the judicial review of preparatory acts until a later stage should be per se considered incompatible with the Remedies Directive, subject to the condition that effective review of those acts is made available at a later stage and at the very least when the award decision — 'the most important decision of the contracting authority' (30) — is made.

3. A decision to admit a participant to the tendering procedure

55. If the deferral of review of certain types of preparatory acts is deemed compatible with the Remedies Directive, the next key question is determining what types of acts may be deferred.

56. In my opinion, the dividing line between acts which have to be immediately reviewable and those which do not, should be between acts which have adverse legal effects on undertakings and those that do not produce such effects. Immediate review must be provided for the former but does not necessarily have to be provided for the latter.

57. In Stadt Halle, the Court already distinguished between mere preparatory acts that are not amenable to review — such as preliminary studies of the market or acts which are purely preparatory and form part of the internal reflections of the contracting authority (31) — and decisions by the contracting authority that must be challengeable. It held in particular that the latter kinds of decisions are those that are capable of producing legal effects. The Court did not provide further details of that holding in the context of that case. (32)

58. Developing the approach of the Court in Stadt Halle further, I would suggest that, under the Remedies Directive, Member States are obliged to provide for immediate review of unlawful acts that adversely affect the legal position of a would-be tenderer in such a way that it makes it excessively difficult or impossible for that tenderer to meaningfully further participate in a tendering procedure, thus compromising the transparency of, and fair competition within, the tendering procedure.

59. That would notably be the case when an undertaking can no longer effectively take part in the competition or, if it still can, where the competition will be significantly distorted as a result of the disputed act. (33) In Grossmann Air Service, the Court held that a person should immediately seek review of an allegedly discriminatory decision of the contracting authority determining the specifications of an invitation to tender in so far as it effectively disqualifies him from participating in the award procedure. Making a person wait until the notification of the decision awarding the contract before being able to challenge the legality of the specifications was found not to be in keeping with the objectives of speed and effectiveness of the Remedies Directive. Such a delay in the commencement of review procedures was held to impair the effective implementation of the directives on the award of public contracts. (34)

60. When specifically applied to the decision to admit a candidate to submit a bid, it appears that such a decision does not adversely affect the legal situation of the other candidates, especially in an open procedure where competition must be as broad as possible.

61. In this regard, adverse legal effects that have immediate repercussions on the legal position of an undertaking are to be distinguished from mere factual implications for an undertaking partaking in a tender. I readily acknowledge that the decision to admit another competitor to an open competition may have some factual repercussions on the position of other competitors. They might be obliged to react in some ways and possibly to adapt their strategy. But, unless all public procurement rules are construed as maxims of objective, abstract legality, that may be enforced by any would-be competitor as their subjective right, the decision to admit a candidate does not (yet) adversely affect their legal position.

62. Finally, the deferral of the review of a decision to admit a candidate finds further support in the fact that the distinction between selection criteria and award criteria seems to be gradually vanishing. In open procedures, the new public procurement directives explicitly allow the examination of the tenders before verifying the absence of grounds for exclusion and the fulfilment of the selection criteria. (35) Also, certain elements that are usually part of the selection procedure of candidates, such as the organisation, qualification and experience of staff, can now be assessed at the award stage. (36)

63. It would therefore go also against the more recent approach of the EU legislator to hold that autonomous review of the decision to admit a candidate, separate from the review of the decision to award a contract, should follow from the existence of a separate, autonomous step in the award procedure if the two steps are actually getting closer. (37)

64. For these reasons, I am of the opinion that the Remedies Directive does not oblige a Member State to provide for immediate and autonomous review of a decision to admit another competitor to an open public procurement procedure. However, the Member State's rules must guarantee that a plea of illegality relating to that decision can be made in support of an action against the final decision awarding the contract taken on the basis of prior decisions to admit candidates.

65. As for Section 310(2) of the Spanish Law on Public Procurement, I note that it makes a distinction between two types of preparatory acts adopted in tendering procedures: (i) those that decide, directly or indirectly, the award of the contract, make it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests; and (ii) others that do not fulfil any of those three criteria. The former may be subject to immediate review through the special application in procurement proceedings. The latter may not.

66. It is not up to the Court to interpret national law in order to determine whether the entirety of Section 310(2) and all potential preparatory acts that might fall within or beyond that provision are compatible with EU law. The answer suggested in this Opinion relates only to one type of preparatory act: a decision to admit a competitor to an open public procurement procedure. As for other preparatory acts that can be adopted under Spanish law, it is a matter for the national court to decide in concreto whether Section 310(2) hinders the immediate review of preparatory acts that produce adverse legal effects on undertakings.

67. Therefore, I am of the opinion that Article 1(1), Article 1(3) and Article 2(1) of the Remedies Directive do not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, provided that:

– the national legislation does not hinder immediate review of preparatory acts that produce adverse legal effects on undertakings;

– a plea of illegality of preparatory acts that do not produce adverse legal effects on undertakings, such as a decision to admit a candidate to a tendering procedure, can be made in support of an action against the final decision awarding the contract taken on the basis of those preparatory acts.

B – Question 2

68. In view of my suggested answer to the first question posed by the referring court, there is, at least according to the express formulation of the questions by the referring court, no need to provide an answer to the second question. However, for the sake of completeness and in order to fully assist the Court, my concise answer to the second question, concerning the direct effect of Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of the Remedies Directive, would be as follows:

69. In Koppensteiner, the Court has already held that Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of the Remedies Directive are unconditional and sufficiently clear as to create rights for individuals on which they may rely. (38) Thus, those provisions undoubtedly have direct effect.

70. In view of the clear and precise wording of Article 2(1)(a), as well as its functional proximity to Article 2(1)(b), I see no reason why the same conclusion should also not apply to Article 2(1)(a).

71. Thus, in my view, all three provisions, namely Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(a) and (b) of the Remedies Directive, have direct effect.

C – A post scriptum

72. The Remedies Directive requires effective review, but not necessarily uniform review. A balance needs to be struck between unfettered access to courts during the award procedure and procedural and judicial economy in order to guarantee effective judicial protection. What ultimately matters is effective and swift review of the award decision itself, in the course of which all prior steps may be called into question to ensure that any illegality can be fixed in due time.

73. The Remedies Directive thus sets a minimal threshold. For the reasons set out above, I do not think that the obligation to make any decision of the contracting authority subject to immediate and autonomous review is necessary to meet that minimum standard.

74. Indeed a number of models are conceivable which would comply with the minimum standards laid down by the Remedies Directive: a Member State may choose to concentrate review as much as possible to one point of time, in one final decision. Conversely, another Member State may decide to allow for review of every individual step of the procedure, but then exclude those issues already dealt with previously from the potential review of the final decision. There is thus some flexibility, providing that there is effective and swift judicial review of all of the steps of the award procedure at some stage.

75. At the same time, the fact that Member States are not obliged to do something under a minimal harmonisation threshold in no way prevents them from doing so. In particular, Member States are certainly not precluded from providing for more extensive remedies, including autonomous and immediate judicial review of preparatory acts that may be adopted in the course of an award procedure, should they choose to do so.

V – Conclusion

76. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I recommend to the Court to answer Question 1 referred to it by the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Andalucía (High Court of Justice of Andalusia, Spain) as follows:

> Article 1(1), Article 1(3) and Article 2(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts do not preclude national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, provided that:

– the national legislation does not hinder immediate review of preparatory acts that produce adverse legal effects on undertakings;

– a plea of illegality of preparatory acts that do not produce adverse legal effects on undertakings, such as a decision to admit a candidate to a tendering procedure, can be made in support of an action against the final decision awarding the contract taken on the basis of those preparatory acts.

---

1 – Original language: English.

---

2 – Council Directive of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33).

3 – Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665 and 92/13/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31).

4 – OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114.

5 – OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14.

6 – Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1).

7 – See judgment of 15 May 2003, Commission v Spain (C-214/00, EU:C:2003:276).

8 – Judgment of 15 May 2003, Commission v Spain (C-214/00, EU:C:2003:276, paragraph 80).

9 – See judgment of 11 September 2014, Fastweb (C-19/13, EU:C:2014:2194, paragraph 63); and order of 23 April 2015, Commission v Vanbreda Risk & Benefits (C-35/15 P(R), EU:C:2015:275, paragraphs 31 and 34).

10 – See judgment of 28 October 1999, Alcatel Austria and Others (C-81/98, EU:C:1999:534, paragraph 35).

11 – See judgment of 18 June 2002, HI (C-92/00, EU:C:2002:379, paragraph 61).

12 – See judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 34).

13 – Emphasis added.

14 – See judgment of 18 June 2002, HI (C-92/00, EU:C:2002:379, paragraphs 58 to 59).

15 – See judgments of 27 February 2003, Santex (C-327/00, EU:C:2003:109, paragraph 47), and of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 46).

16 – See judgments of 18 June 2002, HI (C-92/00, EU:C:2002:379, paragraph 62); of 9 December 2010, Combinatie Spijker Infrabouw-De Jonge Konstruktie and Others (C-568/08, EU:C:2010:751, paragraph 57); and of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 44).

17 – See judgment of 6 October 2015, Orizzonte Salute (C-61/14, EU:C:2015:655, paragraph 46 and the case-law cited).

18 – See judgment of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others (C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 79).

19 – See judgment of 9 December 2010, Combinatie Spijker Infrabouw-De Jonge Konstruktie and Others (C-568/08, EU:C:2010:751).

---

20 – See judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 38).

---

21 – See judgments of 28 October 1999, Alcatel Austria and Others (C-81/98, EU:C:1999:534, paragraph 33); of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others (C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 74); and of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 39). Emphasis added.

---

22 – COM(87) 134 final (OJ 1987 C 230, p. 6). Emphasis added.

---

23 – COM(88) 733 final (OJ 1989 C 15, p. 8): ‘Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure, at all stages of the procedure for the award of public contracts, that any contractor … taking part in a procedure for the award of a public … contract, or any third person entitled to tender for such an award, can seek effective and rapid administrative and judicial remedies in respect of any decision by a contracting authority … which infringes Community or national rules on public procurement’ (emphasis added).

---

24 – For a general comparative overview, see, for example, the individual country reports and the general report in Neergaard, U., et al. (eds), Public Procurement Law: Limitations, Opportunities and Paradoxes: The XXVI FIDE Congress in Copenhagen 2014, Congress Publications Vol. 3, DJØF Publishing, Copenhagen, 2014; also, Delvolvé, P., (ed.), ‘Le contentieux des contrats publics en Europe’, Revue française de droit administratif, 2011, No 1, p. 1 et seq.

---

25 – Thus not really limiting propositions that complex procedures ‘make building a bungalow in the 20th century slower than building a cathedral in the 12th century’ to the realm of political satire (‘Yes Minister’, Series 1, Episode 1: Open Government, first aired on BBC on 25 February 1980).

---

26 – See judgment of 12 December 2002, Universale-Bau and Others (C-470/99, EU:C:2002:746, paragraph 75).

---

27 – See, for instance, for France: Guyomar, M., and Seiller, B., Contentieux administratif, 3rd ed., Dalloz, 2014, p. 295 et seq.; for Germany: Maurer, H., Allgemeines Verwaltungsrecht, 12th ed., Verlag C.H. Beck, Munich, 1999, p. 181 et seq. and p. 480 et seq.; for Italy: Gallo, C.E., Manuale di Giusitizia Amministrativa, 6th ed., G. Giappichelli Editore, Turin, 2012, p. 143 et seq.; for Spain, García de Enterría, E., and Fernández, T.R., Curso de Derecho Administrativo I, 15th ed., Civitas, 2011, p. 595 et seq.

---

28 – See judgments of 11 November 1981, IBM v Commission (60/81, EU:C:1981:264, paragraph 12), and of 18 March 1997, Guérin automobiles v Commission (C-282/95 P, EU:C:1997:159, paragraph 34).

---

29 – See judgment of 27 February 2003, Santex (C-327/00, EU:C:2003:109, paragraphs 64 to 65).

---

30 – See judgment of 28 October 1999, Alcatel Austria and Others (C-81/98, EU:C:1999:534, paragraph 38). Also, pursuant to recital 13 of Directive 2007/66, an illegal direct award of contracts amounts to the ‘most serious breach of Community law in the field of public procurement’.

---

31 – See judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 35).

32 – See judgment of 11 January 2005, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (C-26/03, EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 34).

33 – See judgment of 12 February 2004, Grossmann Air Service (C-230/02, EU:C:2004:93).

34 – See judgment of 12 February 2004, Grossmann Air Service (C-230/02, EU:C:2004:93, paragraphs 37 to 38).

35 – See notably Article 56(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2014/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65). See also Article 76(7) of Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2014/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243).

36 – See Article 67(2)(b) of Directive 2014/24 and Article 82(2)(b) of Directive 2014/25.

37 – In its explanatory memorandum on the draft directive, the Commission stated that ‘the distinction between selection of tenderers and award of the contract which is often a source of errors and misunderstandings has been made flexible’ (Proposal for a directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement, COM(2011) 896 final, p. 9).

38 – See judgment of 2 June 2005, Koppensteiner (C-15/04, EU:C:2005:345, paragraphs 38 to 39).

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Eighth Chamber)

21 December 2016 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 89/665/EEC — Review procedures in the area of public procurement — Article 1(3) — Legal interest in bringing proceedings — Article 2a(2) — Concept of a 'tenderer concerned' — Right of a tenderer definitively excluded by the contracting authority to seek review of a subsequent award decision)

In Case C-355/15,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Administrative Court, Austria), made by decision of 20 May 2015, received at the Court on 13 July 2015, in the proceedings

Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung GesmbH und Caverion Österreich GmbH

v

Universität für Bodenkultur Wien,

VAMED Management und Service GmbH & Co. KG in Wien,

THE COURT (Eighth Chamber), composed of M. Vilaras, President of the Chamber, M. Safjan and D. Šváby (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: M. Wathelet,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung GesmbH und Caverion Österreich GmbH, by J. Schramm, Rechtsanwalt, – Universität für Bodenkultur Wien, by O. Sturm, Rechtsanwalt,

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by S. Varone, avvocato dello Stato,

– the Polish Government, by B. Majczyna, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by B.-R. Killmann and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) (‘Directive 89/665’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Bietergemeinschaft Technische Gebäudebetreuung GesmbH und Caverion Österreich GmbH (‘the consortium’), and Universität für Bodenkultur Wien (University of Natural Resources and Life Sciences, Vienna, Austria, ‘the BOKU Wien’) concerning the latter’s award of a framework contract for public services to VAMED Management und Service GmbH & Co. KG in Wien (‘Vamed’).

Legal context

EU law

Directive 89/665

3 Recitals 3, 4, 6, 8, 18, 25 and 27 of Directive 2007/66, the directive amending the original Directive 89/665, states:

‘(3) Consultations of the interested parties and the case-law of the Court of Justice have revealed a certain number of weaknesses in the review mechanisms in the Member States. As a result of these weaknesses, the mechanisms established [in particular by Directive 89/665] do not always make it possible to ensure compliance with Community law, especially at a time when infringements can still be corrected. …

…

(4) The weaknesses which were noted include in particular the absence of a period allowing an effective review between the decision to award a contract and the conclusion of the contract in question. This sometimes results in contracting authorities and contracting entities who wish to make irreversible the consequences of the disputed award decision proceeding very quickly to the signature of the contract. In order to remedy this weakness, which is a serious obstacle to effective judicial protection for the tenderers concerned, namely those tenderers who have not yet been definitively excluded, it is necessary to provide for a minimum standstill period during which the conclusion of the contract in question is suspended …

…

(6) The standstill period should give the tenderers concerned sufficient time to examine the contract award decision and to assess whether it is appropriate to initiate a review procedure. When the award decision is notified to them, the tenderers concerned should be given the relevant information which is essential for them to seek effective review. …

…

(8) ... [A] standstill period is not necessary if the only tenderer concerned is the one who is awarded the contract and there are no candidates concerned. In this case there is no other person remaining in the tendering procedure with an interest in receiving the notification and in benefiting from a standstill period to allow for effective review.

…

(18) In order to prevent serious infringements of the standstill obligation and automatic suspension, which are prerequisites for effective review, effective sanctions should apply. Contracts that are concluded in breach of the standstill period or automatic suspension should therefore be considered ineffective in principle if they are combined with infringements [in particular of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum, OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44) to the extent that those infringements have affected the chances of the tenderer applying for review to obtain the contract.

…

(25) … The need to ensure over time the legal certainty of decisions taken by contracting authorities and contracting entities requires the establishment of a reasonable minimum period of limitation on reviews seeking to establish that the contract is ineffective.

…

(27) ... For reasons of legal certainty the enforceability of the ineffectiveness of a contract is limited to a certain period. The effectiveness of these time limits should be respected.'

4 Article 1 of Directive 89/665 is worded as follows:

'1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive [2004/18], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

…

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2004/18], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

…

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

...'

5 Directive 89/665 provides for several cases in which, after the decision awarding the contract has been adopted, the contracting authority is temporarily prohibited from concluding a contract with the successful tenderer. Such a prohibition stems in particular from the automatic suspensive effect attaching to any applications for review lodged beforehand with the contracting authority, in accordance with Article 1(5) of that directive, and to applications for review to a first-instance review body, in accordance with Article 2(3) of that directive. Those prohibitions supplement the obligation imposed on the contracting authority, under Article 2a of that directive, to observe a standstill period between the adoption of the decision awarding the contact and the conclusion of the contract with the successful tenderer. Article 2a provides:

'1. The Member States shall ensure that the persons referred to in Article 1(3) have sufficient time for effective review of the contract award decisions taken by contracting authorities, by adopting the necessary provisions respecting the minimum conditions set out in paragraph 2 of this Article and in Article 2c.

2. A contract may not be concluded following the decision to award a contract falling within the scope of Directive [2004/18] before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned if fax or electronic means are used or, if other means of communication are used, before the expiry of a period of either at least 15 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which the contract award decision is sent to the tenderers and candidates concerned or at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the receipt of the contract award decision.

Tenderers shall be deemed to be concerned if they have not yet been definitively excluded. An exclusion is definitive if it has been notified to the tenderers concerned and has either been considered lawful by an independent review body or can no longer be subject to a review procedure.

…

The communication of the award decision to each tenderer and candidate concerned shall be accompanied by the following:

– a summary of the relevant reasons …, and – a precise statement of the exact standstill period applicable pursuant to the provisions of national law transposing this paragraph.'

6 Under the first paragraph of Article 2b of Directive 89/665:

'Member States may provide that the periods referred to in Article 2a(2) of this Directive do not apply in the following cases:

…

(b) if the only tenderer concerned within the meaning of Article 2a(2) of this Directive is the one who is awarded the contract and there are no candidates concerned;

…'

7 Article 2d(1) of that directive provides:

'Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

…

(b) in case of an infringement of Article 1(5), Article 2(3) or Article 2a(2) of this Directive, if this infringement has deprived the tenderer applying for review of the possibility to pursue pre-contractual remedies where such an infringement is combined with an infringement of Directive [2004/18], if that infringement has affected the chances of the tenderer applying for a review to obtain the contract;

…'

Directive 2004/18

8 In accordance with Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18, as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1251/2011 of 30 November 2011 (OJ 2011 L 319, p. 17) ('Directive 2004/18'), that directive is to apply to public service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than Central Government authorities, which have a value exclusive of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than EUR 200 000.

9 Article 44(1) of that directive provides:

'Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 53 and 55, taking into account Article 24, after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded under Articles 45 and 46 has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52, and, where appropriate, with the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in paragraph 3.'

Austrian law

10 Paragraph 331 of the Bundesvergabegesetz 2006 (the 2006 Federal Law on public procurement, BGBl. I, 17/2006), in the version applicable to the main proceedings, appears in the part of that law relating to declaratory procedures. Paragraph 331(1) provides:

‘An undertaking which had an interest in the conclusion of a contract falling within the scope of this Federal Law may, in so far as it has suffered harm or is at risk of suffering harm in consequence of the alleged infringement, apply for a declaration that …’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11 In October 2012, BOKU Wien issued a call for tenders in the form of a negotiated procedure with prior publication of a contract notice, with a view to concluding with a single successful tenderer a framework agreement for the technical management, maintenance, repair and servicing of its buildings and laboratory facilities.

12 Only the consortium and Vamed submitted a tender within the deadline set.

13 By a decision of 20 December 2013, notified to the consortium, the latter was excluded from the tendering procedure because the original of the proof of a bank guarantee had not been submitted in good time.

14 The application brought by the consortium against that decision was dismissed by a judgment of the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court, Austria) of 31 January 2014. The extraordinary appeal on a point of law against that judgment was also dismissed by an order of the Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Administrative Court, Austria) of 25 May 2014.

15 By an award decision of 14 March 2014, notified to Vamed, the BOKU Wien accepted its bid. The framework contract was subsequently concluded and Vamed began to perform the services concerned.

16 The consortium brought an action against that award decision before the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court). That action was dismissed by a judgment of 8 August 2014 on the ground that the rights of a tenderer whose bid has been properly excluded cannot be infringed by illegalities relating to the procedure followed to select another bid for the purposes of awarding the contract.

17 In the appeal on a point of law brought against that judgment before the referring court, the consortium submits that the situation at issue in the main proceedings and the case giving rise to the judgment of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), are similar. In both cases, only two tenderers were present and, although the consortium was indeed excluded, it submits that the Vamed’s bid ought to have been rejected because the business management calculations at key points in its bid are neither explicable nor comprehensible. Consequently, as in the abovementioned judgment, there are two tenderers both of which have an equivalent economic interest in the other tenderer’s bid being excluded and could assert that interest even if their own bid must be rejected.

18 The referring court states that, in accordance with Paragraph 331 of the 2006 Federal Law on Public Procurement, in order for an application for a declaration that a public procurement decision is unlawful to be admissible, the economic operator bringing proceedings must have had an interest in the conclusion of the contract concerned and the unlawfulness must have harmed or risks harming it.

19 Examining the judgment of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), the referring court observes that, in the context of that judgment, it was not the contracting authority which found, in the procurement procedure concerned, that the bid of the tenderer bringing the legal proceedings was unlawful, but that unlawful nature came to light in the legal proceedings brought by that tenderer with a view to challenging the decision to award the contract to another tenderer. The referring court notes that, in paragraph 33 of that judgment, the Court of Justice held that, where the validity of the bid submitted by each of the operators is challenged in the course of the same proceedings and on identical grounds, each competitor can claim a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bid submitted by the other. It follows from this that, in that situation, the unsuccessful tenderer whose bid has been rejected enjoys judicial protection, although that bid does not comply with all the technical rules for the contract at issue.

20 The referring court is uncertain whether the principles laid down in the judgment of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), also apply when, after two tenderers have initially submitted bids, the tenderer which intends to challenge the award decision has already been definitively excluded by the contracting authority itself. Its doubts are based on various factors which it identifies in Directive 89/665, chief among which is the concept of the 'tenderer concerned' within the meaning of Article 2a(2) of that directive.

21 However, although it appears to the referring court that that directive does not protect definitively excluded tenderers against the illegalities which may vitiate the decision awarding the contract after they have been definitively excluded, it asks whether the principle of equal treatment applicable to tenderers could nonetheless give grounds for granting such a definitively excluded tenderer a right to seek review of the award decision when it benefits the only other tenderer competing.

22 In addition, if the tenderer definitively excluded from the tender procedure still has a right to seek review of the award decision, the referring court explains, first, that the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) also took the view that there was no need to take into account the grounds for excluding Vamed's bid alleged by the consortium since they were not readily apparent from the case-file. However, such a position could be justified by the need for reviews to be carried out as rapidly as possible, referred to in Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665. Secondly, the referring court is unsure as to the significance, in the context of the right to effective judicial protection, of the fact that the grounds on which the two bids present should be rejected are the same or different.

23 In those circumstances the Verwaltungsgerichtshof (Administrative Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) In the light of the judgment of the Court of Justice of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), is Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 … to be interpreted as meaning that a tenderer whose bid was definitively excluded by the contracting authority and who is therefore not a tenderer concerned within the meaning of Article 2a of Directive 89/665 may be refused access to a review of the award decision (decision on the conclusion of a framework agreement) and of the conclusion of the contract (including the award of damages required under Article 2(7) of the Directive), even where only two tenderers submitted bids and the bid submitted by the successful tenderer, to whom the contract was awarded, should, in the submission of the tenderer not concerned [who sought that review], also have been excluded?

(2) If the answer to Question 1 is in the negative, in the light of the … judgment of the Court of Justice of 4 July 2013 in Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), is Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as meaning that the tenderer not concerned (within the meaning of Article 2a of the Directive) must be granted access to a review only:

(a) where it is apparent from the documents forming part of the review procedure that the successful tenderer's bid is not valid; or

(b) where the successful tenderer's bid is not valid on identical grounds?'

Consideration of the questions referred

24 First of all, it is to be noted that, in accordance with Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, that directive applies only to reviews relating to public procurement procedures referred to in Directive 2004/18 not excluded from the scope of that directive by Articles 10 to 18 thereof.

25 Although the order for reference does not indicate the value of the framework contract at issue in the main proceedings in the light of the threshold for applying Directive 2004/18, set at EUR 200 000 for public service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than Central Government authorities in accordance with Article 7(b) of that directive, it is apparent from various pieces of information in the file for the national proceedings that that threshold has been largely exceeded as regards that framework contract, which must, however, be verified by the referring court.

26 Since the framework contract does not indeed by its nature fall within the exclusions laid down in Articles 10 to 18 of Directive 2004/18, there is nothing to preclude the Court from answering the questions raised.

The first question

27 By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 must, in the light of the judgment of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), be interpreted as precluding a tenderer who has been excluded from a public procurement procedure by a decision of the contracting authority which has become final, and who is therefore not a tenderer concerned within the meaning of Article 2a of that directive, from being refused access to a review of the decision awarding the public contract concerned and of the conclusion of the contract where only that unsuccessful tenderer and the successful tenderer submitted bids and the unsuccessful tenderer maintains that the successful tenderer's bid should also have been rejected.

28 In that regard, it should be noted that, in accordance with the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, in order for the review of decisions taken by contracting authorities to be regarded as effective, review procedures must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement (judgment of 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 23).

29 In paragraphs 26 and 27 of that judgment, the Court emphasised that the judgment of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), gave concrete expression to the requirements of the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) and Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 in a situation in which, following a public procurement procedure, two tenderers bring an action for review, each seeking the exclusion of the other. In such a situation, both of the tenderers have an interest in obtaining a particular contract.

30 However, the situation at issue in the main proceedings is very clearly distinguishable from the situations at issue in the two cases giving rise to the judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), and 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199).

31 First, the bids of the tenderers concerned in the cases giving rise to those two judgments had not been the subject of an exclusion decision of the contracting authority, unlike the bid submitted by the consortium in the main proceedings in the present case.

32 Secondly, it was in the course of the same, single set of review proceedings relating to the award decision that, in both cases, each tenderer challenged the validity of the other tenderer's bid, each competitor having a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bid submitted by the other, which may lead to a finding that the contracting authority is unable to select a lawful bid (see, to that effect, judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb, C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448, paragraph 33, and 5 April 2016, PFE, C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199, paragraph 24). In the main proceedings in the present case, by contrast, the consortium brought an action, first, against the exclusion decision adopted in respect of it and, secondly, against the award decision, and it is in the course of that second set of proceedings that it contends that the successful tenderer's bid is unlawful.

33 It follows that the principle of case-law stemming from the judgments of 4 July 2013, Fastweb (C-100/12, EU:C:2013:448), and 5 April 2016, PFE (C-689/13, EU:C:2016:199), does not apply to the procedure and litigation at issue in the main proceedings.

34 It is also to be noted that, as is apparent from Article 1(3) and Article 2a of Directive 89/665, that directive ensures effective review of unlawful decisions adopted in the context of a public procurement procedure, by enabling any excluded tenderer to challenge not only the exclusion decision, but also, as long as that challenge has not been resolved, the subsequent decisions which would harm it if its exclusion were annulled.

35 In those circumstances, Article 1(3) of that directive cannot be interpreted as precluding a tenderer such as the consortium from being refused access to the review of the award decision, provided that it must be considered a definitively excluded tenderer within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 2a(2) of that directive.

36 In the light of all of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as not precluding a tenderer who has been excluded from a public procurement procedure by a decision of the contracting authority which has become final from being refused access to a review of the decision awarding the public contract concerned and of the conclusion of the contract where only that unsuccessful tenderer and the successful tenderer submitted bids and the unsuccessful tenderer maintains that the successful tenderer's bid should also have been rejected.

The second question

37 In the light of the answer to the first question, there is no need to answer the second question.

Costs

38 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Eighth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, must be interpreted as not precluding a tenderer who has been excluded from a public procurement procedure by a decision of the contracting authority which has become final from being refused access to a review of the decision awarding the public contract concerned and of the conclusion of the contract where only that unsuccessful tenderer and the successful tenderer submitted bids and the unsuccessful tenderer maintains that the successful tenderer's bid should also have been rejected.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: German.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

5 April 2017 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 2004/17/EC — Contract not reaching the threshold laid down by that directive — Articles 49 and 56 TFEU — Limit on reliance on subcontracting — Submission of a common tender — Professional capacities of the tenderers — Changes to the tender specifications)

In Case C-298/15,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court, Lithuania), made by decision of 12 June 2015, received at the Court on 18 June 2015, in the proceedings

'Borta' UAB

v

Klaipėdos valstybinio jūrų uosto direkcija VĮ,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber), composed of J.L. da Cruz Vilaça, President of the Chamber, A. Tizzano (Rapporteur), Vice-President de la Cour, A. Borg Barthet, E. Levits and F. Biltgen, Judges, Advocate General: E. Sharpston,

Registrar: M. Aleksejev, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 1 June 2016, after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– 'Borta' UAB, by V. Kilišauskaitė, advokatė, – Klaipėdos valstybinio jūrų uosto direkcija VĮ, by N. Šilaika, advokatas, and by A. Vaitkus, A. Kamarauskas, I. Vaičiulis and L. Rudys,

– the Lithuanian Government, by D. Kriaučiūnas and by A. Svinkūnaitė and R. Butvydytė, acting as Agents, – the European Commission, by J. Jokubauskaitė and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 1 December 2016,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1336/2013 of 13 December 2013 (OJ 2013 L 335, p. 17) ('Directive 2004/17').

2 The reference has been made in proceedings between ‘Borta’ UAB (‘Borta’) and Klaipėdos valstybinio jūrų uosto direkcija VĮ (Klaipėda State Seaport Authority, Lithuania) (‘the port authority’) concerning the legality of the tender specifications for a public works contract concerning the reconstruction of the quays of that port.

Legal context

EU law

3 Recital 9 of Directive 2004/17 states:

‘(9) In order to guarantee the opening up to competition of public procurement contracts awarded by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, it is advisable to draw up provisions for Community coordination of contracts above a certain value. …

For public contracts the value of which is lower than that triggering the application of provisions of Community coordination, it is advisable to recall the case-law developed by the Court of Justice according to which the rules and principles of the Treaties … apply.’

4 Article 16 of that directive provides:

‘… [T]his Directive shall apply to contracts which have a value excluding value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be no less than the following thresholds:

…

(b) EUR 5 186 000 in the case of works contracts.’

5 Article 37 of that directive is worded as follows:

‘In the contract documents, the contracting entity may ask, or may be required by a Member State to ask, the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he intends to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors. This indication shall be without prejudice to the question of the principal economic operator’s liability.’

6 Article 38 of Directive 2004/17 provides that:

‘Contracting entities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with Community law and are indicated in the notice used as a means of calling for competition or in the specifications. …’

7 Article 54 of that directive states:

‘1. Contracting entities which establish selection criteria in an open procedure shall do so in accordance with objective rules and criteria which are available to interested economic operators.

…

6. Where the criteria referred to in [paragraph 1] include requirements relating to the technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operator, the latter may where necessary and for a particular contract rely on the abilities of other entities, whatever the legal nature of the link between itself and those entities. In this case the economic operator must prove to the contracting entity that for the performance of the contract those resources will be available to it, for example by delivering an undertaking by those entities to make the necessary resources available to the economic operator.

Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 11 may rely on the abilities of participants in the group or of other entities.’

8 Annex XVI of that directive, entitled ‘Information to be included in the contract award notice’, provides, in Part I thereof:

‘I. Information for publication in the Official Journal of the European Union:

…

10. State, where appropriate, whether the contract has been, or may be, subcontracted.

…

13. Optional information:

– value and share of the contract which has been or may be subcontracted to third parties,

…’

Lithuanian law

Lithuanian Law on public procurement

9 Article 24(5) of Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law of the Republic of Lithuania on Public Procurement) (‘the Law on public procurement’) provides:

‘The procurement documents may require that the candidate or tenderer specify in its tender any proposed subcontractors … and may require the candidate or tenderer to specify the share of the contract that it is intended to subcontract to those subcontractors … However, where subcontractors are invited to carry out a works contract, the main works, as specified by the contracting authority, must be performed by the tenderer. …’

10 Under Article 27(4) of the Law on public procurement:

‘The contracting authority may, of its own motion, at any time prior to the deadline for the submission of tenders, clarify the procurement documents.’

11 Article 32(3) of the Law on public procurement provides that, where necessary in a specific tendering context, a tenderer may rely on the capacities of other economic operators, irrespective of the nature of its legal relationship with them. In this case, the tenderer must prove to the contracting authority that those resources will be available to it to carry out the contract. A group of economic operators may, under the same conditions, rely on the capacities of members of the group or on those of other economic operators.

The tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings

12 Under Clause 3.2.1 of the tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings, concerning the requirements relating to the professional capacities of tenderers:

‘Tenderer’s average annual volume of work relating to the main construction and installation work (seaport quay construction or reconstruction) over the last five years or over the period since the date of registration of the tenderer (in the case where the tenderer has operated for less than five years) shall correspond to a value of at least LTL 5 000 000 (EUR 1 448 100.09), excluding VAT.’

13 Clause 4.2.3 of the tender specifications regulating the presentation of several subcontractors of a common tender under a joint-activity agreement, provides:

‘… the commitments of the partners operating under a joint-activity agreement in relation to the implementation of the contract [must be specified], and [must] state that this division of the volume of services applies only to the partners and creates no obligations for the client (the port authority)’.

14 Clause 4.3 of the tender specifications in the version resulting from its successive amendments, provides:

‘Where the bid is submitted by tenderers operating under a joint-activity agreement, the requirements of [paragraph 3.2.1] must be satisfied by at least one partner engaged in the joint-activities or by all of the partners operating under the joint-activity agreement taken together. … A partner’s contribution (volume of work completed) under the joint-activity agreement must be proportionate to its contribution to satisfying the requirement under paragraph 3.2.1 … and to the volume of work that will actually be carried out by it in the event of a successful bid (contract implementation). … Pursuant to Article 24(5) of [the Law on public procurement], the Seaport Authority indicates that the main works consist of Item 1.2.8 in the Construction Section of the Bill of Quantities and, therefore, this work must be carried out by the tenderer itself.’

15 Clause 4.4 of the tender specifications provides that if the tenderer wishes to rely on subcontractors it must indicate the volume of work that the latter are to carry out, which is to be limited to works defined as ‘subsidiary’, adding that the experience of those subcontractors is not taken into account for the verification of the requirements laid down in Clause 3.2.1.

16 Clause 7.2 of the tender specifications allows the port authority to clarify, on its own initiative, the procurement documents before the expiry of the time limit for submitting tenders.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

17 On 2 April 2014, the port authority published a call for tenders under an open procedure for the award of a public works contract for the reconstruction of the quays of the national seaport of Klaipėda (Lithuania). That call for tenders was also published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 5 April 2014. Borta participated in the award procedure for that contract.

18 In its initial version, the tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings reproduced, in Clause 4.3 thereof, the provisions of Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement concerning subcontracting work and also provided that where several tenderers submit a common tender under a joint-activity agreement, pursuant to Clause 4.2.3 thereof (‘the common tender’), the requirements applicable regarding professional capacities laid down in Clause 3.2.1 thereof were to be satisfied either by all the subcontractors considered together, or by one of them.

19 Following two successive revisions, one carried out on the initiative of the port authority and the other after complaints made by Borta, Clause 4.3 adds to the requirements that, where such a common tender is submitted, the contribution of each tenderer, in order to satisfy the abovementioned criteria, must correspond proportionally to the share of the work that it undertakes to perform under the joint-activity agreement and that it will actually perform if the contract is awarded.

20 On account of those changes, published in the Official Journal of the European Union, the Seaport Authority extended the time limit for submitting tenders.

21 As the port authority dismissed the further complaints made by Borta with regard to the most recent changes, that company brought an action before the Klaipėdos apygardos teismas (Regional Court, Klaipėda, Lithuania) seeking annulment of the abovementioned Clause 4.3, challenging the legality of its content and the possibilty for the authority to change it. As the action was dismissed by that court by decision of 18 August 2014, which was confirmed on appeal by an order of the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal, Lithuania) of 13 November 2014, Borta brought an appeal on a point of law before the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court, Lithuania).

22 In order to decide the dispute before it, that court asks about the compatibility with EU law, and with Directive 2004/17 in particular, of Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement, to which Clause 4.3 of the tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings refers, in so far as that article prohibits reliance on subcontracting activities for works defined by the contracting authority as ‘main works’. In the light of that directive, it also expresses doubts as to the legality of Clause 4.3, as amended, where a common tender is submitted by a number of tenderers, as that clause requires, in order to satisfy the applicable requirements regarding professional capacities, that the contribution of each tenderer must correspond proportionally to the share of the works it will actually perform if the contract is awarded. In that context, the referring court also asks whether the port authority was able to change the first version of that clause after the publication of the contract notice without infringing that directive and, in particular, the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency which derives from it.

23 That court considers that the Court of Justice has jurisdiction to give a preliminary ruling on those questions. It is true that the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is less than the threshold of EUR 5 186 000 laid down in Article 16(b) of Directive 2004/17, below which the latter is not applicable. However, first, that contract has a certain cross border interest, as evidenced by the participation in the award procedure of two foreign companies, which include the successful tenderer, and the publication of the call for tenders in the Official Journal of the European Union. Second, in any event, the port authority intended to make the call for tenders subject to the rules applicable to public procurement referred to in Directive 2004/17, and the Lithuanian legislature chose to extend certain rules laid down by that directive to contracts with a value less than the abovementioned threshold.

24 In those circumstances, the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must the provisions of Articles 37, 38, 53 and 54 of Directive 2004/17 be understood and interpreted, whether together or separately (but without limitation to those provisions), as meaning that:

(a) they preclude a national rule under which, in the case where subcontractors are invited to perform a works contract, the main work, as identified by the contracting authority, must be carried out by the successful tenderer?

(b) they preclude a scheme, laid down in the procurement documents, for combining the professional capacities of successful tenderers, such as that specified by the contracting authority in the contested tender specification, which requires that the share representing the professional capacity of the relevant economic operator (a joint-activity partner) must correspond to the share of the specific work which it will actually carry out under the public procurement contract?

(2) Must the provisions of Articles 10, 46 and 47 of Directive 2004/17 be understood and interpreted, whether together or separately (but without limitation to those provisions), as meaning that:

(a) the principles of equal treatment of tenderers and transparency are not infringed in the case where the contracting authority:

– provides beforehand, in the procurement documents, a general option of combining the professional capacities of tenderers, but does not set out the scheme for implementing this option;

– subsequently, in the course of the public procurement procedure, it defines in greater detail the requirements governing the appraisal of the qualifications of tenderers by laying down certain restrictions on combining the professional capacities of tenderers;

– because of this more detailed definition of the content of the qualification requirements, it extends the deadline for tender submissions and announces this extension in the Official Journal [of the European Union]?

(b) a restriction on the combining of tenderers’ capacities does not have to be clearly indicated in advance if the specific character of the contracting authority’s activities and the special features of the public procurement contract make such a restriction foreseeable and justifiable?’

Consideration of the questions referred

Preliminary observations

25 In its written observations and at the hearing, the Lithuanian Government submitted that, in order to answer the questions referred, it is appropriate to take into account Directive 2004/17 and Directive 2014/25/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243), as the Lithuanian legislature chose to include certain provisions of Directive 2014/25 into its domestic law even before its adoption, in particular Article 79(3) thereof relating to subcontracting activities.

26 The European Commission takes the opposite view, arguing that there is no need to interpret Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2014/25, but that it is appropriate to answer the questions referred in the light of the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty.

27 First, as regards Directive 2014/25, it must be recalled, as a preliminary point, that according to settled case-law the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract. Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 83 and the case-law cited).

28 In the present case, the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings was published on 2 April 2014, whereas Directive 2014/25 entered into force on 17 April 2014 and repealed Directive 2004/17 with effect from 18 April 2016, the date on which its period for transposition expired. Furthermore, although the Lithuanian Government claims to have incorporated into its national law certain provisions of Directive 2014/25 even before its adoption, that government also acknowledges in its written submissions that that directive had not yet been transposed at the material time.

29 In those circumstances, Directive 2014/25 cannot be taken into consideration in order to answer the questions referred.

30 Second, as regards Directive 2004/17, it is apparent from the decision to refer that the contract at issue in the main proceedings has a value which is less than the threshold of EUR 5 186 000 laid down in Article 16(b) of Directive 2004/17. Therefore, that directive is not applicable to the contract (see, by analogy, judgment of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions, C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228, paragraph 15 and the case-law cited).

31 The referring court considers nonetheless that the Court of Justice has jurisdiction to give a ruling on the questions referred and that the interpretation of the provisions of that directive is justified for the reasons set out in paragraph 23 of the present judgment.

32 At the hearing, the Lithuanian Government, which shares the referring court's view, stated that under Lithuanian law the contracting entity can choose to make the award procedure for a contract with a value below the threshold mentioned above subject either to the rules laid down by Directive 2004/17 or to the simplified procedure laid down by national law for that type of contract. If, as in the present case, that entity chooses the first option, it is required, according to the Lithuanian Government, to apply all the provisions of that directive.

33 In that connection, it must be recalled that where, in regulating situations outside the scope of the EU measure concerned, national legislation seeks to adopt the same solutions as those adopted in that measure, it is clearly in the interest of the European Union that, in order to forestall future differences of interpretation, provisions taken from that measure should be interpreted uniformly (see, to that effect, judgments of 18 October 2012, Nolan, C-583/10, EU:C:2012:638, paragraph 46, and of 7 November 2013, Romeo, C-313/12, EU:C:2013:718, paragraph 22).

34 Thus, an interpretation by the Court of provisions of EU law in situations outside its scope is justified where those provisions have been made applicable to such situations by national law in a direct and unconditional way in order to ensure that internal situations and situations governed by EU law are treated in the same way (see, to that effect, judgments of 18 October 2012, Nolan, C-583/10, EU:C:2012:638, paragraph 47; of 7 November 2013, Romeo, C-313/12, EU:C:2013:718, paragraphs 22 and 23; and of 14 January 2016, Ostas celtnieks, C-234/14, EU:C:2016:6, paragraph 20).

35 That being the case, it is also clear from settled case-law that, where the conditions set out in the two preceding paragraphs of the present judgment are not met, in order to provide a useful answer to a national court which has referred a question to it, the Court may deem it necessary to consider rules of EU law to which the national court has not referred in its request for a preliminary ruling (judgment of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions, C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228, paragraph 17 and the case-law cited).

36 More particularly, with respect to the award of a contract which, having regard to its value, does not come within the scope of Directive 2004/17, the Court may take account of the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular Articles 49 and 56 thereof and the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency which derive from them, provided that it is of certain cross-border interest. Although not covered by Directive 2004/17, such contracts are still subject to compliance with those rules and principles (see, to that effect, judgments of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraphs 22 to 24; of 18 December 2014, Gennerali-Providencia Biztositó, C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469, paragraph 27; and of 6 October 2016, Tecnoedi Costruzioni, C-318/15, EU:C:2016:747, paragraph 19).

37 It is in the light of the foregoing that each of the questions referred must be examined to determine whether the interpretation of the provisions of Directive 2004/17 is justified in the present case, having regard to the considerations set out in paragraphs 33 and 34 of the present judgment, or whether those questions must be answered in the light of the fundamental rules and general principles in the FEU Treaty mentioned above, taking account of the considerations in paragraphs 35 and 36 of this judgment.

Question 1(a)

38 By Question 1(a), the referring court asks essentially whether Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as precluding a provision of a national law, such as Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement, which states that where subcontractors are invited to carry out a works contract, the main works, as defined by the contracting entity, must be performed by the successful tenderer itself.

39 As a preliminary point, it must be held that, as regards reliance on subcontracting activities, Directive 2004/17 merely lays down, in Article 37 and Annex XVI thereof, certain obligations relating to information and the liability of the tenderer. In Article 38, it adds that the contracting entities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with EU law.

40 However, as the referring court observed, that directive does not contain any provision having contents analogous to those in Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement. Furthermore, according to that court, the Lithuanian legislature has not indicated that it took account of that directive when it adopted the latter provision.

41 In those circumstances, where Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement applies to contracts which do not fall within the scope of Directive 2004/17, it cannot be held that that provision makes a direct and unconditional reference to the directive within the meaning of the case-law set out in paragraph 34 of the present judgment (see, by analogy, judgment of 7 July 2011, Agafiţei and Others, C-310/10, EU:C:2011:467, paragraph 45).

42 It follows that the interpretation of that directive is not required in order to answer Question 1(a).

43 However, as set out in paragraphs 35 and 36 of the present judgment, in order to provide a useful answer to the referring court, the Court may take account of the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular Articles 49 and 56 thereof and the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency which derive from them, provided that the contract at issue has a certain cross border interest.

44 A contract may have such interest, having regard in particular to the fact that is for a significant amount, in conjunction with the place where the work is to be carried out or the technical characteristics of the contract. The referring court may, in its overall assessment of the existence of certain cross-border interest, also take account of the existence of complaints brought by operators situated in other Member States, provided that it is determined that those complaints are real and not fictitious (see, to that effect, judgment of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions, C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228, paragraph 20 and the case-law cited).

45 In the present case, the referring court has established that the contract at issue in the main proceedings had a certain cross-border interest. As the Advocate General observed, in point 37 of her Opinion, the value of that contract, although below the thresholds laid down in Article 16(b) of Directive 2004/17, is relatively significant. Furthermore, as the Lithuanian Government stated, that contract concerns the construction of quays of a seaport of strategic importance for national security. It is also apparent from the order for reference that two foreign undertakings, including the successful tenderer, participated in the call for tenders.

46 It follows that Question 1(a) must be answered in the light of the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular Articles 49 and 56 thereof. Specifically, in order to give a useful answer to the referring court, it must be determined whether a provision of national law, such as Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement, may constitute an unjustified impediment to the freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services.

47 For that purpose, it must be recalled that Articles 49 and 56 TFEU preclude any national measure which, even if it applies without discrimination as to nationality, prohibits, impedes or renders less attractive the freedom of establishment and/or the freedom to provide services (judgments of 27 October 2005, Contse and Others, C-234/03, EU:C:2005:644, paragraph 25; of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraph 41; and of 8 September 2016, Politanò, C-225/15, EU:C:2016:645, paragraph 37).

48 As regards public contracts, it is the concern of the European Union to ensure the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders, including contracts which are not covered by Directive 2004/17 (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici, C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063, paragraph 29, and of 28 January 2016, CASTA and Others, C-50/14, EU:C:2016:56, paragraph 55). The use of subcontractors, which is likely to facilitate access of small and medium-sized undertakings to public contracts, contributes to the pursuit of that objective.

49 A national measure, such as Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement, is liable to prohibit, impede or render less attractive the participation of economic operators established in other Member States in the award procedure or the performance of a public contract, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, since it prevents them either from subcontracting to third parties all or part of the works identified as the ‘main works’ by the contracting entity, or from proposing their services as subcontractors for that part of the works.

50 Therefore, that provision constitutes a restriction on the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services.

51 However, such a restriction may be justified in so far as it pursues a legitimate objective in the public interest, and to the extent that it complies with the principle of proportionality in that it is suitable for securing the attainment of that objective and does not go beyond what is necessary in order to attain it (see, to that effect, judgments of 27 October 2005, Contse and Others, C-234/03, EU:C:2005:644, paragraph 25, and of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraph 44).

52 In the case in the main proceedings, it is clear from the documents before the Court, first, that Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement aims to ensure that the works are properly executed. Thus, it was adopted specifically with the aim of preventing a current practice which consists in a tenderer claiming to have professional capacities solely in order to win the contract concerned, not with the intention of performing the works itself, but of entrusting all or most of those works to subcontractors, a practice which affects the quality of the works and their proper performance. Second, by limiting the reliance on subcontractors to works identified as ‘subsidiary’, Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement aims to encourage the participation of small and medium-sized undertakings in public contracts as joint-tenderers in a group of economic operators rather than as subcontractors.

53 First, as regards the objective of the proper execution of the works, it must be held that it is legitimate.

54 However, it is possible that such an objective may justify certain limits on the use of subcontracting (see, to that effect, judgments of 18 March 2004, Siemens and ARGE Telekom, C-314/01, EU:C:2004:159, paragraph 45, and of 14 July 2016, Wrocław - Miasto na prawach powiatu, C-406/14, EU:C:2016:562, paragraph 34), it must be held that a provision of a national law, such as Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement, goes beyond what is necessary in order to achieve that objective, in that it prohibits in a general manner reliance on subcontractors for works treated as ‘main’ works by the contracting entity.

55 That prohibition applies whatever the economic sector concerned by the contract at issue, the nature of the works and the qualifications of the subcontractors. Furthermore, such a general prohibition does not allow for any assessment on a case-by-case basis by that entity.

56 It is true that the contracting entity is free to specify which works are to be treated as ‘main’ works. However, it must still stipulate, with respect to all contracts, that those works are to be carried out by the tenderer itself. Thus, Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement prohibits reliance on subcontractors for those works, including in situations in which the contracting entity is able to verify the capacities of the subcontractors concerned and to take the view, after that verification, that such a prohibition is unnecessary for the proper execution of the works having regard, in particular, to the nature of the tasks that the tenderer plans to delegate to those subcontractors.

57 Thus, as the Advocate General observed in point 51 of her Opinion, an alternative less restrictive measure which guarantees the achievement of the objective pursued would have been to require the main contractor to indicate in their tender the proportion of the contract that they intend to contract out, the proposed subcontractors and their capacities. It might also be possible for the contracting entity to prohibit tenderers from changing subcontractors if that entity was not able beforehand to verify the identity and capacity of the latter.

58 Moreover, in so far as the referring court and the Lithuanian Government submit that Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement was adopted in order to prevent a current practice by which tenderers claim to have professional capacities solely in order to win the contract concerned with the intention of entrusting the largest part or most of the works to subcontractors, it must be observed that that provision does not specifically target that practice. Thus, it prohibits the tenderer from delegating the performance of all the works identified as the ‘main’ works by the contracting entity, including the tasks which represent, proportionally, only a small part of those works. Therefore, that provision goes beyond what is necessary to prevent the abovementioned practice.

59 Second, as regards the justification based on the encouragement of small and medium-sized undertakings to participate in a contract as tenderers rather than subcontractors, it is of course conceivable that such an objective may, in certain circumstances and under certain conditions, constitute a legitimate objective (see, by analogy, judgment of 25 October 2007, Geurts and Vogten, C-464/05, EU:C:2007:631, paragraph 26).

60 However, and in any event, none of the evidence before the Court explains how a provision of national law, such as Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement, is necessary in order to achieve that objective.

61 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to Question 1(a) is that, as regards a public contract which is not covered by the scope of Directive 2004/17, but which has a certain cross-border interest, Articles 49 and 56 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding a provision of national law, such as Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement, which provides that, where subcontractors are relied on for the performance of a public works contract, the tenderer is required to carry out the main works itself, as defined by the contracting entity.

The second question

62 By the second question, the referring court asks essentially whether Directive 2004/17 and, in particular, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency which derives from that directive must be interpreted as meaning that they allow the contracting entity, after publication of the tender notice, to change certain clauses in the tender specifications, such as Clause 4.3 at issue in the main proceedings, if that entity has, on account of the changes made which have been announced by publication in the Official Journal of the European Union, extended the time limit for submission of tenders.

63 As a preliminary point, it must be observed that such a possibility to amend the procurement documents is provided for in Article 27(4) of the Law on public procurement.

64 As the referring court states in its reference for a preliminary ruling, Directive 2004/17 does not contain any provision in that respect.

65 In those circumstances, it cannot be held that Article 27(4) of the Law on public procurement, when it applies to contracts falling outside the scope of that directive, makes a direct and unconditional reference to it within the meaning of the case-law set out in paragraph 34 of the present judgment (see, by analogy, judgment of 7 July 2011, Agafiţei and Others, C-310/10, EU:C:2011:467, paragraph 45).

66 It follows that the interpretation of that directive is not necessary in order to answer the second question.

67 That being the case, in order to provide a useful answer to the referring court, for the reasons set out in paragraphs 43 to 45 of the present judgment, that question must be answered in the light of the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty, among which are the principles of non-discrimination and equal treatment and the obligation of transparency which derive, in particular, from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, and to which the national court refers.

68 In that connection, it must be recalled that, according to settled case-law, those principles and that obligation require, in particular, that tenderers must be in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the contracting authority. The obligation of transparency aims more specifically to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority (see, to that effect, judgments of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 44, and of 14 July 2016, TNS Dimarso, C-6/15, EU:C:2016:555, paragraph 22).

69 Those principles and that obligation require, in particular, that the subject matter and the award criteria for the contract concerned are clearly determined from the beginning of the award procedure for that contract and that the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the bids submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 May 2012, Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraphs 56, 88 and 109; of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 44; and of 14 July 2016, TNS Dimarso, C-6/15, EU:C:2016:555, paragraph 23). The obligation of transparency also means that the subject matter and the award criteria must be adequately publicised by the contracting authorities (see, to that effect, judgment of 24 January 2008, Lianakis and Others, C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, paragraph 40).

70 It is also clear from the case-law of the Court that the contracting authority cannot, in principle, during an award procedure, amend the scope of the essential conditions of the contract, which include the technical specifications and the award criteria, and on which the economic operators concerned have legitimately relied in order to take the decision to prepare the submission of a tender, or to the contrary to decide not to participate in the award procedure for the contract concerned (see, to that effect, judgments of 10 May 2012, Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraph 55, and of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions, C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228, paragraphs 27 to 29).

71 That being the case, it does not follow that any amendment to the tender specifications after the publication of the tender notice would, as a matter of principle and in all circumstances, be prohibited.

72 Thus, the contracting authority has the possibility, on an exceptional basis, to correct or amplify the information in the tender specifications which require mere clarification, or to correct obvious material errors, provided that all the tenderers are informed (see, by analogy, judgment of 29 March 2012, SAG ELV Solvensko and Others, C-599/10, EU:C:2012:191, paragraph 40).

73 That entity must also be authorised to make certain amendments to the tender specifications, in particular as regards the conditions and the scheme for combining professional capacities, provided that the principles of non-discrimination and equal treatment and the obligation of transparency are respected.

74 That stipulation requires, first, that the amendments concerned, although they may be substantial, must not be so substantial that they have attracted potential tenderers which, in the absence of such changes, would not be in a position to submit a tender. That might be the case, in particular, where the changes make the contract noticeably different in nature from the way it was initially described.

75 Second, it requires that those changes are adequately publicised, so as to enable all those potential tenderers which are reasonably informed and exercising ordinary care to become acquainted with it under the same conditions and at the same time.

76 Third, that stipulation also requires, first, that those changes are made before the tenderers submit their bids and, second, that the time limit for the submission of those tenders is extended where those changes are substantial, the length of the extension depending on the extent of those changes and that it is sufficient to allow the economic operators concerned to adapt their tender as a consequence.

77 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second question is that, as regards a public contract which is not covered by the scope of Directive 2004/17, but which has a certain cross-border interest, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency which derive from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude the contracting entity from making changes to a clause in the tender specifications, after publication of the tender notice, relating to the conditions and scheme for combining professional capacities, such as Clause 4.3 at issue in the main proceedings, provided, first, that the changes made are not so substantial that they have attracted potential tenderers which, in the absence of such changes, would not be in a position to submit a tender, second, they are adequately publicised and, third, they are made before the tenderers submit their bids, that the time limit for submitting those tenders is extended when the changes concerned are substantial, the length of that extension depending on the extent of those changes, and that the length of time is sufficient to allow the economic operators concerned to adapt their tender as a consequence, which is for the referring court to ascertain.

Question 1(b)

78 By Question 1(b), the referring court asks essentially whether Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as precluding a clause in tender specifications, such as Clause 4.3 at issue in the main proceedings, which, in circumstances in which a common tender is submitted by several tenderers, requires that the contribution of each of them in order to satisfy the requirements applicable with regard to professional capacities corresponds proportionally to the share of the works they will actually carry out if the relevant contract is awarded to them.

79 As a preliminary point, the port authority stated essentially at the hearing that Clause 4.3 of the tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings had to be read together with Clause 4.2.3 thereof. According to the latter clause, tenderers wishing to submit a common tender must indicate in a joint-association agreement the share of works that each of them undertakes to perform, it being stated that that division is freely determined by those tenderers. Clause 4.3 enables the contracting authority to verify when examining the tenders that each of the tenders concerned has professional capacities corresponding proportionally to the share of the works it undertakes to perform in accordance with that contract, and that it will actually execute if the contract is awarded.

80 As the Advocate General pointed out in point 56 of her Opinion, Clause 4.3 of the tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings concerns the award of the contract and, more specifically, the possibility for tenderers to submit a common tender to combine their professional capacities in order to satisfy the requirements of those specifications.

81 Such a possibility is provided for in Article 32(3) of the Law on public procurement.

82 It is apparent from the decision to refer that that provision, which applies to all works contracts, whatever their value, faithfully reproduces the content of Article 54(6) of Directive 2004/17. Furthermore, the referring court indicated that, during the transposition of that directive into Lithuanian law, the national legislature chose to extend some of its provisions to contracts with a value less than the thresholds established in Article 16(b) thereof, in particular, by laying down similar provisions expressis verbis to those in that directive.

83 In those circumstances, it must be held that Article 54(6) of Directive 2004/17 was made applicable directly and unconditionally to contracts excluded from its scope by Article 32(3) of the Law on public procurement.

84 Therefore, having regard to the case-law set out in paragraphs 33 and 34 of the present judgment, Question 1(b) must be examined in the light of Article 54(6) of Directive 2004/17.

85 That provision recognises the right of every economic operator, where the contracting entity lays down a qualitative selection criterion consisting of requirements relating to technical or professional abilities, to rely for a particular contract upon the capacities of other entities, regardless of the nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it proves to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the performance of the contract (see, by analogy, judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited). In accordance with that provision, that right extends to groups of economic operators submitting a common tender, which may, under the same conditions, rely on the capacities of their participants or of other entities.

86 Therefore, Directive 2004/17 does not preclude the exercise of the right established in Article 54(6) thereof from being limited in exceptional circumstances (see, by analogy, judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 39).

87 In particular, it is conceivable that, in specific circumstances, having regard to the nature and objectives of a particular contract, the capacities of a third party entity, which are necessary for the performance of a particular contract, cannot be transferred to the tenderer. Accordingly, in such circumstances, the tenderer may rely on those capacities only if the third party entity directly and personally participates in the performance of the contract concerned (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 41).

88 In such circumstances, the contracting entity may, for the purposes of the proper performance of the contract concerned, expressly set out in the tender notice or the tender specifications the specific rules authorising an economic operator to rely on the capacities of other entities, provided that those rules are related and proportionate to the subject matter and objectives of that contract (see, to that effect, judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraphs 54 to 56).

89 Likewise, it cannot be excluded from the outset that, in specific circumstances, having regard to the nature of the works concerned and the subject matter and purpose of the contract, the capacities of the various participants of a group of economic operators submitting a common tender which are necessary for the proper execution of that contract cannot be transmitted to those participants. In such a case, the contracting entity is therefore justified in requiring each of the participants to execute the works corresponding to its own capacities.

90 In the present case, the port authority and the Lithuanian Government submit essentially that Clause 4.3 of the tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings aims to avoid the situation in which, in order to win the contract, a tenderer relies on capacities that he does not intend to use or, conversely, that a tenderer may be awarded a contract and perform part of the works without having the capacities and resources necessary for the proper performance of those works.

91 In that connection, it is of course possible that, taking account of the technical nature and size of the works at issue in the main proceedings, their proper performance requires that, in cases in which a common tender is submitted by several tenderers, each one of them performs specific tasks corresponding to its own professional capacities, having regard to the subject matter or the nature of those works or tasks.

92 However, that does not appear to be the scope of Clause 4.3 of the tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings. As the Advocate General noted essentially, in points 63 and 64 of her Opinion, that clause requires there to be an arithmetic correspondence between the contribution of each of the tenderers concerned to satisfy the requirements applicable with regard to professional capacity and the share of the works that that tenderer undertakes to perform and that it will in fact perform if the contract is awarded. However, that clause does not take account of the nature of the tasks to be carried out or to the technical capacities specific to each of them. In those circumstances, Clause 4.3 does not prevent one of the tenderers concerned from carrying out specific tasks for which it does not in fact have the experience or capacities required.

93 Furthermore, the port authority and the Lithuanian Government stated that Clause 4.3 of the tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings does not prevent the tenderers concerned from relying on subcontractors for carrying out works defined as ‘subsidiary’ and that, in accordance with Clause 4.4 of the tender specifications, the professional capacities of the subcontractors are not verified. If such is the case, which is for the referring court to ascertain, it must be held, first, that Clause 4.3 does not guarantee that the tenderers will actually use the capacities that they have declared in the procurement procedure and which were taken into consideration by the port authority for the purpose of examining the bids. Second, it does not prevent works defined as ‘subsidiary’ from being carried out by subcontractors without the professional capacities required.

94 It follows that Clause 4.3 of the tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings is not appropriate to ensure the attainment of the objectives pursued.

95 Therefore, it must be held that the limit on the right laid down in Article 54(6) of Directive 2004/17 resulting from that clause in unjustified having regard to the subject matter and purpose of the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

96 In those circumstances, the answer to Question 1(b) is that Article 54(6) of Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as precluding a clause in tender specifications, such as Clause 4.3 at issue in the main proceedings, which, in a case where a common tender is submitted by several tenderers, requires that the contribution of each of them in order to satisfy the requirements applicable with regard to professional capacities correspond, proportionally, to the share of the works that it will actually perform if that bid is successful.

Costs

97 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. As regards a public contract which is not covered by the scope of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, as amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1336/2013 of 13 December

2013, but which has a certain cross-border interest, Articles 49 and 56 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding a provision of national law, such as Article 24(5) of the Lietuvos Respublikos viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law on public procurement), which provides that, where subcontractors are relied on for the performance of a public works contract, the tenderer is required to perform itself the main works, as defined by the contracting entity.

2. As regards such a public contract, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency which derive from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that they do not preclude the contracting entity from making changes to a clause in the tender specifications, after publication of the tender notice, relating to the conditions and scheme for combining professional capacities, such as Clause 4.3 at issue in the main proceedings, provided, first, that the changes made are not so substantial that they have attracted potential tenderers which, in the absence of such changes, would not be in a position to submit a tender, second, they are adequately publicised and, third, they are made before the tenderers submit their bids, that the time limit for submitting those tenders is extended when the changes concerned are substantial, the length of that extension depending on the extent of those changes, and that the length of time is sufficient to allow the economic operators concerned to adapt their tender as a consequence, which is for the referring court to ascertain.

3. Article 54(6) of Directive 2004/17, as amended by Regulation No 1336/2013, must be interpreted as precluding a clause in tender specifications, such as Clause 4.3 at issue in the main proceedings, which, in a case where a common tender is submitted by several tenderers, requires that the contribution of each of them in order to satisfy the requirements applicable with regard to professional capacities correspond, proportionally, to the share of the works that it will actually perform if that bid is successful.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Lithuanian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

Sharpston

delivered on 1 December 2016 (1)

Case C-298/15

UAB “Borta”

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania))

(Public contracts – Qualitative selection criteria – Requirement for the successful tenderer to carry out ‘the main work’ itself – Demonstration of professional capacity – Tender submitted by a group of operators – Requirement that each partner’s contribution be proportionate to its contribution in demonstrating professional capacity – Contract award procedure – Modification of tender specifications in the course of the procedure – Principles of equal treatment and transparency)

1. This request for a preliminary ruling from the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) concerns a tender specification for the award of a public works contract for constructing a quay at the port of Klaipėda (Lithuania). The specification in question contains provisions governing tenders submitted by joint-activity partners. These require each partner to perform a proportion of the contract equivalent to its contribution to establishing the partnership’s professional experience, at the level of the award of the public contract. The referring court has doubts as to whether such a requirement is compatible with the rules on the pooling of professional capacities under EU public procurement law. Since the contested specification was only made known several weeks after the call for tenders had been published, the referring court also seeks guidance on whether (and if so in what circumstances) contracting authorities may change the tender specifications during the course of the contract award procedure. It also raises of its own motion the question whether EU public procurement law precludes a provision of Lithuanian law that prohibits subcontracting ‘the main work’ in the context of public works contracts.

2. An initial difficulty arises as to the Court’s jurisdiction to answer those questions. The referring court expresses its concerns in the context of Directive 2004/17/EC. (2) However, it is common ground that the estimated value of the public contract at issue does not reach the relevant threshold and that that directive therefore does not apply in the main proceedings. Has that directive been rendered directly and unconditionally applicable to the contract by Lithuanian law? If so, it is settled case-law that the Court has jurisdiction to interpret the relevant provisions of that directive. Alternatively, if the contract at issue has a clear cross-border interest, its award will be subject to the fundamental rules and general principles of the TFEU (in particular the free movement principles in Articles 49 and 56 TFEU) and it is then the Court’s duty to provide useful guidance to the referring court on that basis.

Legal background

EU law

3. Recital 9 of Directive 2004/17 states:

> ‘In order to guarantee the opening-up to competition of public procurement contracts awarded by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, it is advisable to draw up provisions for Community coordination of contracts above a certain value. Such coordination is based on the requirements inferable from Articles 14, 28 and 49 of the EC Treaty and from Article 97 of the Euratom Treaty, namely the principle of equal treatment, of which the principle of non-discrimination is no more than a specific expression, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality, as well as the principle of transparency. In view of the nature of the sectors affected by such coordination, the latter should, while safeguarding the application of those principles, establish a framework for sound commercial practice and should allow maximum flexibility.

…'

4. Recital 43 indicates that it is advisable to include provisions on subcontracting in order to encourage small and medium-sized undertakings to become involved in the public contracts procurement market.

5. Article 10 provides that 'contracting entities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way'.

6. Article 11(2) states:

'Groups of economic operators may submit tenders or put themselves forward as candidates. In order to submit a tender or a request to participate, these groups may not be required by the contracting entities to assume a specific legal form; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract, to the extent to which this change is necessary for the satisfactory performance of the contract.'

7. Article 37 ('Subcontracting') provides:

'In the contract documents, the contracting entity may ask, or may be required by a Member State to ask, the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he intends to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors. This indication shall be without prejudice to the question of the principal economic operator's liability.'

8. Pursuant to Article 38 ('Conditions for performance of contracts'):

'Contracting entities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with [EU] law and are indicated in the notice used as a means of calling for competition or in the specifications. The conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.'

9. Article 53 ('Qualification systems') provides in particular:

'1. Contracting entities which so wish may establish and operate a system of qualification of economic operators.

…

2. The system under paragraph 1 may involve different qualification stages.

It shall be operated on the basis of objective criteria and rules for qualification to be established by the contracting authority.

…

5. Where the criteria and rules for qualification referred to in paragraph 2 include requirements relating to the technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operator, the latter may where necessary rely on the capacity of other entities, whatever the legal nature of the link between itself and those entities. In this case the economic operator must prove to the contracting entity that those resources will be available to it throughout the period of the validity of the qualification system, for example by producing an undertaking by those entities to make the necessary resources available to the economic operator.

Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 11 may rely on the abilities of participants in the group or of other entities.

…’

Lithuanian law

10. Article 2(29) of the Lietuvos Respublikos Viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law of the Republic of Lithuania on Public Procurement; ‘the Law on public procurement’) defines a supplier in general terms as any economic operator, whether a natural person, a private legal person, a public legal person, other organisations or branches thereof, or a group of such persons, which is able to offer, or is offering, goods, services or works.

11. According to Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement, the procurement documents require the candidate or tenderer to specify in its tender any proposed subcontractors and may require the candidate or tenderer to specify the share of the contract that it is intended to subcontract to those subcontractors. However, where subcontractors are invited to carry out a works contract, the main work, as specified by the contracting authority, must be performed by the supplier.

12. According to Article 27(4) of the Law on public procurement the contracting authority may, of its own motion, at any time prior to the deadline for the submission of tenders, clarify the procurement documents.

13. Article 32(3) of the Law on public procurement states that, where necessary in a specific tendering context, a supplier may rely on the capacities of other economic operators, irrespective of the nature of its legal relationship with them. In this case, the supplier must prove to the contracting authority that those resources will be available to it to carry out the contract. A group of economic operators may, under the same conditions, rely on the capacities of members of the group or on those of other economic operators.

Factual background, procedure and questions referred

14. On 2 April 2014, VĮ Klaipėdos valstybinio jūrų uosto direkcija (Klaipėda State Seaport Authority; ‘the Seaport Authority’), a Lithuanian public undertaking, published an open call for tenders for ‘Construction work relating to “Reconstruction of Quays No 67 and No 68. Stage 1”’. That call for tenders was also published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 5 April 2014. (3)

15. Paragraph 3.2.1 of the tender specifications included the following requirement: ‘Suppliers’ average annual volume of work relating to the main construction and installation work (seaport quay construction or reconstruction) over the last five years or over the period since the date of registration of the supplier (in the case where the supplier has operated for less than five years) shall correspond to a value of at least LTL 5 000 000 (EUR 1 448 100.09), excluding VAT.’

16. Paragraph 4.2.3 of the tender specifications required any tender ‘to specify the commitments of the partners operating under a joint-activity agreement in relation to the implementation of the contract, together with the percentage share of those commitments, and to state that this division of the volume of services applies only to the partners and creates no obligations for the client (contracting authority)’.

17. The original version of paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications provided as follows:

‘Where the tender is submitted by suppliers operating under a joint-activity agreement, the requirements of [paragraph 3.2.1] must be satisfied by at least one partner engaged in the joint-activities or by all of the partners operating under the joint-activity agreement taken together. … Pursuant to Article 24(5) of [the Law on public procurement], [the Seaport Authority] states that the main work consists of Item 1.2.8 in the Construction Section of the Bill of Quantities and, therefore, this work must be carried out by the supplier itself.’ (4)

18. The Seaport Authority, acting of its own motion, issued a first amendment to paragraph 4.3 of the specifications on 24 April 2014. That new version, which was published in the Official Journal of the European Union, provided, in particular, that, where the tender was submitted by suppliers operating under a joint-activity agreement, each partner engaged in the joint-activities had to satisfy at least 50% of the requirement under paragraph 3.2.1. As a result of that change, the Seaport Authority extended the deadline for submitting tenders.

19. On 3 May 2014, UAB Borta, a limited company incorporated under Lithuanian law, challenged that redefinition before the Seaport Authority. As a result, the Seaport Authority, by decision of 9 May 2014, amended paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications for the second time. (5) The new (and final) version of that paragraph provided as follows:

> ‘Where the tender is submitted by suppliers operating under a joint-activity agreement, the requirements of paragraphs 3.2.1 … must be satisfied by at least one partner engaged in the joint activities or by all of the partners operating under the joint-activity agreement taken together. A partner’s contribution (volume of work completed) under the joint-activity agreement must be proportionate to its contribution to satisfying the requirement under paragraph 3.2.1 … and to the volume of work that will actually be carried out by it in the event of a successful bid (contract implementation) [(6)] … Pursuant to Article 24(5) of [the Law on public procurement], [the Seaport Authority] states that the main work consists of Item 1.2.8 in the Construction Section of the Bill of Quantities and, therefore, this work must be carried out by the supplier itself.’

20. As a result of that last change, which was published in the Official Journal of the European Union, the deadline for submitting tenders was extended for the second time and fixed as 12 June 2014.

21. Borta submitted a tender on 12 June 2014, in which it proposed to carry out these works for the equivalent in LTL of approximately EUR 4 761 460. That was the most expensive bid. (7)

22. Borta however contested the final version of paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications before the Seaport Authority and, following rejection of that challenge, before the Klaipėdos apygardos teismas (Klaipėda Regional Court). The Klaipėda Regional Court dismissed that action on 18 August 2014. Borta appealed against that decision to the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania), which rejected the appeal on 13 November 2014. Both courts considered in essence that the contested tender specification was justified by the nature of the subject matter of the contract and its significance for the public interest, and that the joint and several liability of joint-activity partners vis-à-vis the Seaport Authority did not, by itself, guarantee successful implementation of the public procurement contract. They also rejected the claim that successive changes in the tender specifications were illegal, as Article 27(4) of the Law on public procurement expressly entitled the Seaport Authority to clarify those specifications.

23. Borta appealed on a point of law against the judgment of the Lietuvos apeliacinis teismas (Court of Appeal of Lithuania) to the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania), which stayed the proceedings and requested a preliminary ruling on the following questions:

‘(1) Must the provisions of Articles 37, 38, 53 and 54 of Directive 2004/17 be understood and interpreted, whether together or separately (but without limitation to those provisions), as meaning that:

(a) they preclude a national rule under which, in the case where subcontractors are invited to perform a works contract, the main work, as identified by the contracting authority, must be carried out by the supplier? [(8)]

(b) they preclude a scheme, laid down in the procurement documents, for combining the professional capacities of suppliers, such as that specified by the contracting authority in the contested tender specification, which requires that the portion representing the professional capacity of the relevant economic operator (a joint-activity partner) must correspond to the portion of the specific work which it will actually carry out under the public procurement contract?

(2) Must the provisions of Articles 10, 46 and 47 of Directive 2004/17 be understood and interpreted, whether together or separately (but without limitation to those provisions), as meaning that:

(a) the principles of equal treatment of suppliers and transparency are not infringed in the case where the contracting authority:

– provides beforehand, in the procurement documents, a general option of combining the professional capacities of suppliers, but does not set out the scheme for implementing this option;

– subsequently, in the course of the public procurement procedure, it defines in greater detail the requirements governing the appraisal of the qualifications of suppliers by laying down certain restrictions on combining the professional capacities of suppliers;

– because of this more detailed definition of the content of the qualification requirements, it extends the deadline for tender submissions and announces this extension in the Official Journal [of the European Union]?

(b) a restriction on the combining of suppliers' capacities does not have to be clearly indicated in advance if the specific character of the contracting authority's activities and the special features of the public procurement contract make such a restriction foreseeable and justifiable?'

24. The Seaport Authority, the Lithuanian Government and the European Commission have submitted written observations. The same parties and Borta presented oral argument at the hearing on 1 June 2016.

Assessment

Preliminary remarks

25. The Lithuanian Government submitted at the hearing that Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement transposed the new rule on subcontracting in Article 79(3) of Directive 2014/25/EU (9) before the expiry of the period prescribed for transposing that directive and that, consequently, the Court should examine the present reference from the perspective of that directive only. (10) The Seaport Authority took a similar position. The Commission argued that, on the contrary, Directive 2014/25 could not be taken into account. First, Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement was passed before that directive was adopted. Second, Lithuania had omitted to notify the measures transposing Directive 2014/25 into Lithuanian law to the Commission.

26. According to settled case-law, the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether a prior call for competition must be issued for the award of a public contract. Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time. (11)

27. Directive 2014/25 repealed Directive 2004/17 with effect from 18 April 2016. It therefore does not apply to the main proceedings, in which the call for tenders was published on 2 April 2014. As the Court has held recently in relation to Directive 2014/24, to apply that directive before the expiry of the period prescribed for its transposition would prevent not only the Member States but also contracting authorities and economic operators from benefiting from a sufficient period in which to adapt to the new provisions it introduced. (12) In my view, to do so would also be inconsistent with the principle of legal certainty. (13) The same applies by analogy to Directive 2014/25.

28. Next, it is common ground that the value of the contract at issue (which can presumably be assessed by reference to the most expensive bid submitted, that is to say, the equivalent in LTL of EUR 4 761 459.72) is below the threshold of EUR 5 186 000 set out for works contracts, at the material time, in Article 16(b) of Directive 2004/17. As the referring court observes, the public contract at issue thus falls outside the scope of Directive 2004/17.

29. The referring court however submits that the Court has jurisdiction to answer the questions referred. First, the Seaport Authority clearly intended to regard the call for tenders as having international scope by publishing it and the subsequent amendments to the tender specifications in the Official Journal of the European Union. That is confirmed by the fact that two non-Lithuanian companies submitted tenders. The referring court also indicates in essence that the Lithuanian legislature, when it transposed Directive 2004/17 in the Law on public procurement, decided to apply certain rules laid down in that directive to procurement procedures falling outside the directive's scope of application.

30. At the hearing, the Lithuanian Government added that Lithuanian law requires contracting authorities to make a procedural choice when they organise an award procedure for a contract whose estimated value is below the relevant threshold. They may decide to apply either the simplified procedure under national law for such contracts or the procedure applicable to public contracts above the relevant threshold. In that latter case, and applying the EU legislation in force at the material time, the provisions of – depending on the subject matter of the public contract – Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18/EC (14) would have become binding on the contracting authority. The national courts would also have been under a duty to apply them.

31. In certain circumstances, the purely internal nature of a situation does not prevent the Court from replying to a question referred pursuant to Article 267 TFEU. (15) That is so, in particular, where national law requires the referring court to allow a national of the Member State of its jurisdiction to enjoy the same rights as those which a national of another Member State would derive from EU law in the same situation, or where the request for a preliminary ruling concerns provisions of EU law to which the national law of a Member State refers in order to determine the rules applicable to a purely internal situation within that State. (16)

32. As regards the latter situation, the Court's jurisdiction extends to questions concerning provisions of EU law where the facts of the main proceedings are outside the scope of EU law but where those provisions have been rendered directly and unconditionally applicable by domestic law, in order to ensure that internal situations and situations governed by EU law are treated in the same way. (17) It is indeed in the European Union's interest that, in order to forestall future differences of interpretation, provisions or concepts taken from EU law should be interpreted uniformly where, in regulating situations outside the scope of the EU measure concerned, national legislation seeks to adopt the same solutions as those adopted in that measure, in order to ensure that internal situations and situations governed by EU law are treated in the same way, irrespective of the circumstances in which the provisions or concepts taken from EU law are to apply. (18)

33. In the present case, however, there are no sufficiently precise indications to suggest that the provisions of EU law cited have been 'rendered directly and unconditionally applicable by domestic law', in order to ensure that internal situations and situations governed by EU law are all subject to the same rules. (19) In particular, neither the referring court nor the Lithuanian Government have identified for the Court any specific provision of Lithuanian law making Directive 2004/17 directly and unconditionally applicable to public contracts with a value below the relevant threshold laid down in Article 16 of that directive. (20) I therefore conclude that the Court has no jurisdiction to interpret Directive 2004/17 in the context of the present proceedings.

34. The questions referred seek interpretation of Directive 2004/17 only. However, in order to provide a useful answer to a national court which has referred a question to it, the Court may deem it necessary to consider rules of EU law to which the national court has not referred in its request for a preliminary ruling. (21)

35. It is therefore necessary to ascertain whether the Court has jurisdiction to answer the questions referred on the basis of the general principles of the TFEU, in particular the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and the consequent obligation of transparency. That presupposes, according to settled case-law, that the contract concerned has a clear cross-border interest in the light of, inter alia, its value and the place where it is carried out. (22) The existence of such a cross-border interest must be assessed on the basis of all the relevant factors, such as the financial value of the contract, the place where it is to be performed or its technical features, and having regard to the particular characteristics of the contract concerned. (23)

36. The Court has already held that the existence of a cross-border interest may be established, in particular, by the fact that the contract in question is for a significant amount, in conjunction with the place where the work is to be carried out or the technical characteristics of the contract. (24) Thus, a works contract can be of cross-border interest because of its estimated value in conjunction with its technical complexity or the fact that the works are to be located in a place which is likely to attract the interest of foreign operators. (25)

37. The Court will on occasion leave it to the national court to ascertain the existence of a cross-border interest. (26) In the present case, however, there are sufficient elements available to the Court to conclude that the public contract at issue does indeed have such a cross-border interest. First, the estimated value of the contract is significant. (27) Moreover, Klaipėda seaport is one of the major ports of the Baltic Sea. Seaport quay construction such as that envisaged by the contract award procedure at issue moreover requires high technical skills which only a limited number of undertakings can be assumed to possess. Lastly, this public contract's attractiveness for foreign operators is confirmed by the fact that two non-Lithuanian undertakings submitted tenders, (28) one of which ultimately obtained the contract.

38. The questions referred must therefore be examined against the background of the general principles of transparency and equal treatment arising from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, which must be respected when awarding public contracts. (29) Given that Articles 49 and 56 TFEU apply to a contract such as the contract at issue in the main proceedings, the Seaport Authority is required to respect the prohibition on discrimination on the grounds of nationality and the obligation as to transparency which those articles lay down. (30)

The restriction on subcontracting in Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement (point (a) in question 1)

39. By point (a) in the first question, the referring court asks whether EU law precludes a provision such as Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement, which requires that, in the case of public works contracts, the tenderer itself should carry out the 'main work', as identified by the contracting authority.

40. Borta did not challenge the lawfulness of that restriction on subcontracting in its appeal on a point of law before the referring court. The latter has raised the question 'of its own motion' in the public interest. It is, indeed, not immediately clear whether the facts in the main proceedings involve subcontracting. A tender submitted under a joint-partnership agreement may imply that, where that tender is successful, all partners become individual parties to the public contract with the contracting authority. Such a situation does not involve subcontracting, which occurs only where (all or part of) the contract is carried out by third parties to the contract. (31) Conversely, a joint-partnership agreement would involve subcontracting if only one of the partners were formally to operate as the tenderer but all of them perform the contract or if they set up a joint venture company, which will become the signatory to the contract in place of the partners themselves. Only limited information is available about the tender Borta submitted and it is not for this Court to ascertain whether that tender actually or potentially involved subcontracting.

41. According to settled case-law, the Court cannot give a ruling on a question referred by a national court where it is quite obvious that the interpretation or the assessment of the validity of a provision of EU law sought by the national court bears no relation to the actual nature of the case or to the subject matter of the main action. (32) That is not however the case here. Paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications, which lies at the centre of the dispute in the main proceedings, contains an express reference to Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement. Against that background, it does not appear that point (a) in the first question manifestly bears no relation to the actual nature or the subject matter of the action and that question is therefore admissible. (33)

42. I turn now to the substance.

43. According to settled case-law, Articles 49 and 56 TFEU preclude any national measure which, even though it is applicable without discrimination on grounds of nationality, is liable to prohibit, impede or render less attractive the exercise by nationals of the European Union of the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services guaranteed by those provisions. (34)

44. As regards public contracts and the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, the European Union is concerned to ensure the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders, even where directives on public procurement are not applicable. (35) That is in the interest of the contracting authority itself, which will thus have greater choice as to the most advantageous tender which is most suitable for its needs. (36) One of the principal functions of the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and the corollary obligation of transparency is thus to ensure the free movement of services and the opening-up of undistorted competition in all the Member States. (37)

45. Subcontracting contributes to those objectives as it is likely to encourage small and medium-sized undertakings to get involved in the public contracts procurement market and therefore to increase the number of potential candidates for the award of public contracts. (38)

46. In the present case, a provision such as Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement clearly limits the possibility for undertakings established in other Member States to exercise their rights under Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, in so far as it precludes them, if they tender for the contract, from either subcontracting all or part of 'the main work' as defined by the contracting authority or proposing their own services as subcontractors for that part of the contract. As the Commission correctly submits, Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement therefore restricts the freedom to provide services and the freedom of establishment.

47. However, such a restriction may be justified in so far as it pursues a legitimate objective in the public interest, and to the extent that it complies with the principle of proportionality in that it is suitable for securing the attainment of that objective and does not go beyond what is necessary in order to attain it. (39)

48. The Lithuanian Government explains that the restriction on subcontracting at issue was introduced in order to make it easier for contracting authorities to protect their interests and to ensure that subcontracted works are properly executed. That restriction was aimed in particular at addressing the common situation where economic operators participated in tendering procedures with a view, if successful, to subcontracting the major part of the contract. Lower quality work or difficulties in their execution was often the result. The Lithuanian Government argues in addition that Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement is in line with the common position reached on similar issues within the Council and which resulted, in particular, on the rule now contained in Article 79(3) of Directive 2014/25. (40) At the hearing, the Seaport Authority submitted, in essence, that it had a legitimate interest in ensuring that public works such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which are of strategic importance for national security, were correctly executed.

49. A contracting authority may legitimately seek to ensure that a public work contract will be effectively and properly carried out. (41) That applies in particular where the works in question are deemed necessary for safeguarding national security, which, according to Article 4(2) TEU, is among the essential State functions that the European Union must respect. (42) Thus, a tenderer may be required to produce evidence that it actually has available to it the resources of the entities or undertakings on which it relies, which it does not itself own, and which are necessary for the performance of the contract. (43) Accordingly, the contracting authority is entitled to prohibit the use of subcontractors whose capacities could not be verified during the examination of tenders and selection of the contractor for the performance of essential parts of the contract. (44)

50. However, the restriction on the freedom to provide services and freedom of establishment that Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement involves does not appear proportionate to that objective.

51. First, that restriction applies even where the contracting authority is in fact in a position to verify the technical and economic capacity of subcontractors during the contract award procedure. An alternative to that restriction would (for example) have been to require the main contractor to identify subcontractors when submitting his tender and to demonstrate both that he will actually have available to him the resources of those subcontractors necessary for the performance of the contract and that those subcontractors are suitable for carrying out the tasks he intends to entrust to them.

52. Second, Article 24(5) is also both too rigid and too vague to satisfy the proportionality test. Although contracting authorities appear to enjoy flexibility when defining, for each contract, what 'the main work' is, the restriction on subcontracting resulting from that provision is defined in particularly broad terms. It applies regardless of the subject matter of the public works contract and is binding upon contracting authorities when they conclude any type of public works contract, even when they may consider that there is no obvious reason for imposing such a restriction at all.

53. As the Commission submits, the restriction on subcontracting in Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement differs in that regard from Article 79(3) of Directive 2014/25. That provision merely enables a contracting authority, in particular, to require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself. Contracting authorities may thus assess whether such a limitation is opportune, depending on the circumstances. It follows that, even if, as the Lithuanian Government submits, Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement were to be regarded as transposing Article 79(3) of Directive 2014/25 into Lithuanian law, (45) that transposition would be incorrect.

54. For those reasons, I consider that, in the context of a public contract not subject to Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18, but which has a clear cross-border interest, the prohibition on discrimination on the grounds of nationality and the obligation of transparency which arise under Articles 49 and 56 TFEU preclude a national rule such as that contained in Article 24(5) of the Law on public procurement, under which the tenderer has itself to carry out the 'main work', as identified by the contracting authority, without it being possible to subcontract that part of the contract.

Lawfulness of paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications (point (b) in question 1)

55. Point (b) in the first question raises the issue whether EU law precludes tender specifications requiring that, where partners propose to combine their professional capacities by submitting a common tender, there must be an arithmetic correspondence between the proportion of the contract which each joint-activity partner performs and its contribution in fulfilling a condition concerning professional experience.

56. In the case before the national court, paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications relates to the award of the public contract. That specification must be read together with point 4.2.3 of the tender specifications, which requires tenders submitted by joint-activity partners to indicate the commitments (works or services) that will be carried out by each of them and the percentage share of those commitments. The contracting authority is thus in a position to verify, when examining the tenders and selecting the successful tender, that each partner will be responsible for a part of the work or services corresponding to its contribution to the requirement relating to professional experience in point 3.2.1 of the tender specifications.

57. The principles that I have set out above regarding subcontracting are equally relevant to joint-activity partners pooling their capacities. (46)

58. As I see it, a requirement such as that laid down in paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications is liable to limit the flexibility of joint-activity partners. It not only affects how they agree to share responsibilities at the time of submitting their common tender but also precludes them from modifying each partner's contribution to the works contract at a later stage if the contract is attributed to them.

59. Thus, the requirement in paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications is capable of having a dissuasive effect on economic operators established in other Member States. It will affect operators wishing to establish themselves in the Member State concerned through the establishment of a permanent consortium, possibly composed of national and foreign companies. It will also affect operators wishing to offer their services by joining consortia of that kind already in existence, in order to be able to participate more easily in public tendering procedures launched by the contracting authorities of that Member State. (47) Such specification therefore constitutes a restriction within the meaning of Articles 49 and 56 TFEU.

60. The Seaport Authority and the Lithuanian Government submit, in essence, that paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications merely seeks to ensure that each joint-activity partner has the professional capacity to perform that part of the public works contract for which it will be responsible.

61. I have already indicated that the objective of ensuring proper performance of a public contract can justify a (non-discriminatory) restriction to the freedom to provide services and freedom of establishment. (48) Partners acting under a joint-activity agreement may be able to satisfy collectively the condition(s) relating to professional capacity (including professional experience) stipulated by the contracting authority when they submit a tender. That however offers no guarantee that each partner will then actually be entrusted with those specific tasks for which its professional capacity has been verified prior to the award of that contract. Articles 49 and 56 TFEU do not therefore in principle preclude a contracting authority from requiring tenders submitted under joint-activity agreements to specify how the various tasks will be distributed among the partners, from verifying the capacity of each partner to carry out the tasks for which it will be responsible and from monitoring that, following the award of the contract, each partner duly performs those tasks for which its professional capacity has been demonstrated. (49)

62. However, paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications at issue here is not suitable for ensuring attainment of that objective.

63. That paragraph requires there to be an arithmetic correspondence between the contribution of each partner to the professional experience requirement in paragraph 3.2.1 and the 'volume' (or money value) of tasks effectively carried out by that partner when performing the contract.

64. As the Commission correctly submits, that specification is unrelated to the specific works or services required to perform the public contract at issue properly. For example, each partner under a joint-activity agreement might be able to demonstrate that it has acquired experience in seaport quay construction or reconstruction over the last 5 years. Collectively, the partners thus fulfil the professional experience requirement in paragraph 3.2.1 of the tender specifications. However, each of them might specialise in a different aspect of seaport quay construction, such as dredging harbour basins, laying foundation works, building grooved steel walls, or supplying and installing seaport quay equipment. The requirement set out in paragraph 4.3 does not preclude an individual partner from carrying out specific tasks for which it actually has no such experience (although, in arithmetical terms, those tasks might correspond to its contribution in fulfilling the requirement in paragraph 3.2.1 of the tender specifications and thus comply with paragraph 4.3 thereof).

65. I therefore consider that the objective of ensuring proper performance of the public contract cannot, in a situation such as that in the main proceedings, justify the restriction on freedom to provide services and freedom of establishment which results from paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications. That is all the more the case since even tasks which represent a small proportion of the total value of the contract may be critical to its proper performance. (50)

66. The Seaport Authority argues that compliance with the principles of equal treatment of tenderers and transparency requires that only professional capacities that will effectively be utilised for performing the public contract can be taken into account when assessing the professional capacity of individual joint-activity partners.

67. Although these objectives are legitimate, (51) that argument cannot succeed. In answer to a question from the Court at the hearing, the Seaport Authority explained that the tender specifications did not preclude partners tendering under a joint-activity agreement, in the same ways as other tenderers, from subcontracting performance of the public works contract (with the exception of the ‘main work’) and that, in those circumstances, subcontractors’ professional experience did not have to be declared when the joint tender was submitted. Therefore, contrary to the submission made by the Seaport Authority, the tender specifications in the main proceedings did not in fact ensure that professional capacities that partners declared they possessed when submitting a common tender and that the contracting authority had verified would effectively be utilised to carry out the public works contract at issue.

68. I therefore conclude that, in the context of a public contract with a value below the threshold laid down in Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18, but with a clear cross-border interest, the prohibition on discrimination on the grounds of nationality and the obligation of transparency which flow from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU preclude a tender specification such as paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications at issue, which requires that, where partners propose to combine their professional capacities by submitting a common tender, there must be an arithmetical correspondence between the proportion of the contract which each joint-activity partner performs and its contribution in fulfilling a condition concerning professional experience.

Lawfulness of the changes to paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications in the course of the contract award procedure (question 2)

69. Did the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality flowing from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU, and the consequent obligation of transparency, preclude the Seaport Authority from modifying clause 4.3 of the tender specifications as it did?

70. The Court’s case-law interpreting Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 offers useful guidance to answer that question. According to that provision, ‘contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily, and shall act in a transparent way’. That provision is therefore based on the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency which arise from the TFEU. (52)

71. Thus, the Court has held that both the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency which flows from it require the subject matter of each contract and the criteria governing its award to be clearly defined from the beginning of the award procedure. (53) Equal treatment requires tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their bids. That implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions. (54) Furthermore, the obligation of transparency is intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. It means that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the bids submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question. (55)

72. Therefore, a contracting authority cannot, even by means of corrections, change the meaning of the essential contractual conditions as they were formulated in the specifications, upon which the economic operators concerned legitimately relied in taking the decision to prepare to submit a tender or, on the other hand, not to participate in the procurement procedure concerned. (56)

73. The same principles apply where a contract not governed by Directive 2004/18 has a clear cross-border interest. In Enterprise Focused Solutions, (57) the Court held that a contracting authority cannot, after publication of a contract notice, amend the technical specification in respect of an element of the contract in breach of the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency. (58) That is consistent with other judgments where the Court has made clear that the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency, as a general rule, preclude a tender from being amended after it has been submitted, whether at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderer concerned, unless the amendment corrects an obvious material error or clarifies a point of detail in the tender. (59)

74. In the present case, the Seaport Authority acted in breach of those principles in twice amending paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications.

75. First, as the Commission submits, those amendments cannot be regarded as minor clarifications of that paragraph or corrections of a clerical error. The original version of paragraph 4.3 clearly allowed the professional capacity requirement laid down in point 3.2.1 of the tender specifications to be satisfied by at least one partner engaged in the joint activities or by all of the partners taken together. Both modifications (on 24 April and on 9 May 2014) introduced restrictions concerning the demonstration of professional capacity in the case of joint-partnership. Those restrictions plainly did not form part of the original version of that paragraph. On the contrary, they altered the essence of paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications, on which the operators concerned were already legitimately relying in taking the decision to prepare to submit a tender or not to participate in the procurement procedure. For that reason, I disagree with the Seaport Authority's submission that reasonably informed tenderers could anticipate the changes in question.

76. Furthermore, the Seaport Authority has not advanced any objective justification to explain why it twice made substantial modifications to paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications after publishing the initial call for tenders. Thus, whilst this is ultimately a matter for the referring court to verify, as sole judge of fact, nothing in the material available to the Court suggests that those amendments were rendered necessary by a fundamental change of the circumstances under which the public contract at issue was to be awarded or performed since the call for tenders was published.

77. It is possible to imagine circumstances in which such a fundamental change might occur and in which the contracting authority would be faced with the dilemma of either restarting the tender procedure ab initio or changing the tender specifications. Either solution would entail disadvantages, in terms of wasted costs for those already engaged in the original tendering process; and obvious issues would arise, particularly as regards the risk of abuse or manipulation, the need for transparency and equality of treatment between (potential) tenderers and (possibly) reimbursement of (some part of) wasted costs. Fortunately, none of those thorny points require to be decided by the Court here and I do not propose to explore them further.

78. In the circumstances of the present case, I therefore conclude that the prohibition on discrimination on the grounds of nationality and the obligation of transparency which flow from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU preclude changes of the tender specifications such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which introduce restrictions concerning the demonstration of professional capacity by joint-activity partners that were plainly not included in the original version of the specifications.

79. That conclusion is not called into question by the fact that the changes took place before any tender was submitted or by the fact that the Seaport Authority both published the changes in the Official Journal of the European Union and extended the deadline for submitting tenders. As I have explained, the successive amendments of paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications by the Seaport Authority entailed an essential modification of the conditions under which a tender could be submitted by joint-activity partners, without objective justification. (60)

80. Finally, I would emphasise that the analysis I offer here flows from the specific situation in the main proceedings. It therefore does not in any way prejudge how the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination and the obligation of transparency arising from the TFEU would apply in different circumstances.

Conclusion

81. In the light of all the foregoing considerations, I am of the opinion that the Court should answer the questions raised by the Lietuvos Aukščiausiasis Teismas (Supreme Court of Lithuania) to the following effect:

(1) In the context of a public contract not subject to Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors or to Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, but which has a clear cross-border interest, the prohibition on discrimination on the grounds of nationality and the obligation of transparency which arise under Articles 49 and 56 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding a national rule, such as that contained in Article 24(5) of the Lietuvos Respublikos Viešųjų pirkimų įstatymas (Law on public procurement), under which the tenderer has itself to carry out itself the 'main work', as identified by the contracting authority, without it being possible to subcontract that part of the contract.

(2) In the same context, the prohibition on discrimination on the grounds of nationality and the obligation of transparency which flow from Articles 49 and 56 TFEU preclude a tender specification such as paragraph 4.3 of the tender specifications at issue in the main proceedings, which requires that, where partners propose to combine their professional capacities by submitting a common tender, there must be an arithmetic correspondence between the proportion of the contract which each joint-activity partner performs and its contribution in fulfilling a condition concerning professional experience.

(3) The prohibition on discrimination on the grounds of nationality and the obligation of transparency which arise under Articles 49 and 56 TFEU preclude changes of the tender specifications such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which introduce without objective justification restrictions concerning the demonstration of professional capacity by joint-activity partners that were plainly not included in the original version of the specifications.

---

1 – Original language: English.

---

2 – Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1). The relevant version of that directive is that last amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1336/2013 of 13 December 2013 (OJ 2013 L 335, p. 17).

---

3 – OJ 2014/S 68-117458.

---

4 – The referring court explains that this main work consists, inter alia, in building a grooved steel wall supported by positional girders.

---

5 – At the same time, the contracting authority slightly redrafted of its own motion paragraph 4.2.3 of the tender specifications. That change to the tender specification is however not at issue in the main proceedings.

---

6 – I shall refer to that latter requirement as the ‘correspondence requirement’. The ‘volume of work’ is presumably measured in money terms.

7 – The successful tenderer’s bid amounted to the equivalent in LTL of approximately EUR 3 168 400.

8 – The order for reference records that that court has raised that question ‘of its own motion’ for the protection of the public interest.

9 – Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on procurement by entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and repealing Directive 2004/17 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 243). Pursuant to that provision, ‘in the case of works contracts, service contracts and siting and installation operations in the context of a supply contract, contracting entities may require that certain critical tasks be performed directly by the tenderer itself or, where the tender is submitted by a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 37(2), a participant in that group’. A similar rule is laid down in Article 63(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement and repealing Directive 2004/18/EC (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65).

10 – It appears from the Lithuanian Government’s written submissions that, at the material time, Directive 2014/25 had not yet been fully transposed into Lithuanian law.

11 – Judgments of 10 July 2014, Impresa Pizzarotti, C-213/13, EU:C:2014:2067, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited, and of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 83.

12 – Judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 86.

13 – See, by analogy, judgment of 15 October 2009, Hochtief and Linde-Kca-Dresden, C-138/08, EU:C:2009:627, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited. See also judgment of 5 October 2000, Commission v France, C-337/98, EU:C:2000:543, paragraph 40.

14 – Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

15 – See, inter alia, order of 3 July 2014, Tudoran, C-92/14, EU:C:2014:2051, paragraph 38.

16 – See, inter alia, orders of 3 July 2014, Tudoran, C-92/14, EU:C:2014:2051, paragraph 39 and the case-law cited, and of 12 May 2016, Security Service and Others, C-692/15 to C-694/15, EU:C:2016:344, paragraph 27.

17 – Judgments of 22 December 2008, Les Vergers du Vieux Tauves, C-48/07, EU:C:2008:758, paragraph 21 and the case-law cited, and of 18 December 2014, Generali-Providencia Biztosító, C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469, paragraph 23.

18 – Judgment of 7 November 2013, Romeo, C-313/12, EU:C:2013:718, paragraph 22 and the case-law cited.

19 – See, inter alia, judgment of 18 October 2012, Nolan, C-583/10, EU:C:2012:638, paragraph 51. In its judgment of 14 January 2016, Ostas celtnieks (C-234/14, EU:C:2016:6, paragraphs 19 to 21), the Court agreed to interpret Directive 2004/18 taking into account, in particular, the submission made by the Latvian Government that the Latvian law on public works contracts was applicable to public works contracts of an amount less than the threshold laid down by Directive 2004/18. The Court however accepted its jurisdiction to answer the question referred only 'subject to the verifications to be made by the referring court'.

---

20 – See, by analogy, judgment of 18 December 2014, Generali-Providencia Biztosító, C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469, paragraph 25.

---

21 – See, inter alia, judgments of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 24 and the case-law cited, and of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions, C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228, paragraph 17 and the case-law cited.

---

22 – See, inter alia, judgments of 19 December 2012, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 23; of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici, C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063, paragraph 24; and of 18 December 2014, Generali-Providencia Biztosító, C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469, paragraph 27.

---

23 – See, most recently, judgment of 14 July 2016, Promoimpresa and Others, C-458/14 and C-67/15, EU:C:2016:558, paragraph 66 and the case-law cited. See also my Opinion in Commission v Finland, C-195/04, EU:C:2007:28, point 55.

---

24 – Judgment of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions, C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228, paragraph 20.

---

25 – See judgments of 15 May 2008, SECAP and Santorso, C-147/06 and C-148/06, EU:C:2008:277, paragraph 24, and of 17 November 2015, RegioPost, C-115/14, EU:C:2015:760, paragraph 51.

---

26 – See, inter alia, judgments of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraph 25, and of 14 November 2013, Belgacom, C-221/12, EU:C:2013:736, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited.

---

27 – See, by analogy, judgment of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions, C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228, paragraph 20.

---

28 – See judgments of 15 May 2008, SECAP and Santorso, C-147/06 and C-148/06, EU:C:2008:277, paragraph 24, and of 17 November 2015, RegioPost, C-115/14, EU:C:2015:760, paragraph 51.

---

29 – See, inter alia, judgments of 13 November 2007, Commission v Ireland, C-507/03, EU:C:2007:676, paragraph 26, and of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici, C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063, paragraph 27. The Court has held on many occasions that the purpose of coordinating the procedures for the award of public contracts at EU level is precisely to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, for example, judgments of 3 October 2000, University of Cambridge, C-380/98, EU:C:2000:529, paragraph 16; of 18 October 2001, SIAC Construction, C-19/00, EU:C:2001:553, paragraph 32; and of 24 January 2008, Lianakis and Others, C-532/06, EU:C:2008:40, paragraph 39).

---

30 – See, by analogy, judgment of 18 December 2014, Generali-Providencia Biztosító, C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited.

---

31 – See, as regards that distinction, the Opinion of Advocate General Jääskinen in Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2015:558, point 22.

---

32 – See, inter alia, judgment of 12 May 2011, Runevič-Vardyn and Wardyn, C-391/09, EU:C:2011:291, paragraph 33.

---

33 – See, by analogy, judgment of 12 May 2011, Runevič-Vardyn and Wardyn, C-391/09, EU:C:2011:291, paragraph 34.

---

34 – Judgments of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraph 41, and of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici, C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited.

---

35 – See judgments of 23 December 2009, CoNISMa, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 37; of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici, C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063, paragraph 29; and of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others, C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 51 and the case-law cited.

---

36 – Judgment of 23 December 2009, CoNISMa, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited.

---

37 – Judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 28.

---

38 – See, by analogy, judgments of 10 October 2013, Swm Costruzioni 2 and Mannocchi Luigino, C-94/12, EU:C:2013:646, paragraph 34, and of 14 January 2016, Ostas celtnieks, C-234/14, EU:C:2016:6, paragraph 24. See also my Opinion in Wrocław - Miasto na prawach powiatu, C-406/14, EU:C:2015:761, point 30.

---

39 – See, inter alia, judgments of 27 October 2005, Contse and Others, C-234/03, EU:C:2005:644, paragraph 25, and of 10 July 2014, Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici, C-358/12, EU:C:2014:2063, paragraph 31. See also, on the principle of proportionality applied as a general principle of EU law in the context of contract award procedures falling outside the scope of Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18, judgment of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraph 29.

---

40 – Directive 2004/17 contains no rule comparable to that provision.

---

41 – See, by analogy, judgment of 14 July 2016, Wrocław - Miasto na prawach powiatu, C-406/14, EU:C:2016:562, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited. See also my Opinion in that case, EU:C:2015:761, point 32 and the case-law cited.

---

42 – Whether considerations of national security might be such as to justify a restriction to the Treaty principles relevant to the present proceedings is a different question which does not require to be addressed here.

---

43 – See, by analogy, judgment of 7 April 2016, Partner Apelski Dariusz, C-324/14, EU:C:2016:214, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited.

---

44 – See, by analogy, judgments of 18 March 2004, Siemens and ARGE Telekom, C-314/01, EU:C:2004:159, paragraph 45, and of 14 July 2016, Wrocław - Miasto na prawach powiatu, C-406/14, EU:C:2016:562, paragraph 34.

---

45 – See point 25 above.

---

46 – See points 43 to 45, 47 and 49 of this Opinion.

---

47 – See, by analogy, judgment of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraph 42.

---

48 – See point 49 of this Opinion.

---

49 – The underlying rationale is the same as in the context of subcontracting. See point 49 of this Opinion and the case-law cited by analogy in footnotes 43 and 44.

---

50 – For example, water proofing an infrastructure.

---

51 – See to that effect judgments of 23 December 2009, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraphs 31 and 32 and the case-law cited, and of 22 October 2015, Impresa Edilux and SICEF, C-425/14, EU:C:2015:721, paragraph 36.

---

52 – Judgment of 7 September 2016, Finn Frogne, C-549/14, EU:C:2016:634, paragraph 34.

---

53 – Judgments of 10 December 2009, CommissionvFrance, C-299/08, EU:C:2009:769, paragraph 41, and of 10 May 2012, Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraph 56.

---

54 – Judgment of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 44.

---

55 – See, inter alia, judgment of 6 November 2014, Cartiera dell'Adda, C-42/13, EU:C:2014:2345, paragraph 44 and the case-law cited; see also judgment of 10 May 2012, Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraph 88.

---

56 – Judgment of 10 May 2012, Commission v Netherlands, C-368/10, EU:C:2012:284, paragraph 55.

---

57 – Judgment of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions, C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228.

---

58 – Judgment of 16 April 2015, Enterprise Focused Solutions, C-278/14, EU:C:2015:228, paragraph 29.

---

59 – See, inter alia, judgment of 10 October 2013, Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraphs 31 and 32.

60 – See points 75 and 76 above.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Third Chamber)

8 June 2017 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Medicinal products for human use — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) — Articles 34 and 36 TFEU — Public contract for supplying a hospital — National legislation requiring that hospitals are to be supplied as a matter of priority with medicinal products obtained from national plasma — Principle of equal treatment)

In Case C-296/15,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal, Slovenia), made by decision of 14 May 2015, received at the Court on 18 June 2015, in the proceedings

Medisanus d.o.o.

v

Splošna Bolnišnica Murska Sobota

THE COURT (Third Chamber),

composed of L. Bay Larsen, President of the Chamber, M. Vilaras, J. Malenovský, M. Safjan and D. Šváby (Rapporteur), Judges, Advocate General: H. Saugmandsgaard Øe,

Registrar: I. Illéssy, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 22 September 2016,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Medisanus d.o.o., by A. Godec, odvetnik, G. Backmann and M. Žlebnik,

– the Slovenian Government, by A. Grum, acting as Agent,

– the Spanish Government, by A. Gavela Llopis, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by G. Braga da Cruz, A. Sipos and B. Rous Demiri, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 1 December 2016,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum, OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44), read in conjunction with Article 83 of Directive 2001/83/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 6 November 2001 on the Community code relating to medicinal products for human use (OJ 2001 L 311, p. 67) as amended by Directive 2002/98/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 27 January 2003 (OJ 2003 L 33, p. 30) ('Directive 2001/83'), with Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 and with Article 18 TFEU.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Medisanus d.o.o. and Splošna Bolnišnica Murska Sobota (Murska Sobota General Hospital, Slovenia) ('the hospital') concerning the legality of a clause in the tender specifications relating to a public procurement procedure launched by that hospital for the supply of medicinal products.

Legal context

EU law

Directive 2004/18

3 Directive 2004/18, which applies ratione temporis to the dispute in the main proceedings, was repealed as from 18 April 2016 by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on public procurement (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 65). Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 defined public contracts as 'contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this directive'.

4 Article 2 of the directive, headed 'Principles of awarding contracts', provided that contracting authorities were to treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and act in a transparent way.

5 Under Article 23 of the directive:

'…

2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.

…

8. Unless justified by the subject matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject matter of the contract pursuant to paragraphs 3 and 4 is not possible; such reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent".'

6 The meaning of 'technical specification' was defined in paragraph 1 of Annex VI to the directive. With regard in particular to public supply and public service contracts, paragraph 1(b) of that annex defined such a specification as one set out 'in a document defining the required characteristics of a product or a service, such as quality levels, environmental performance levels, design for all requirements (including accessibility for disabled persons) and conformity assessment, performance, use of the product, safety or dimensions, including requirements relevant to the product as regards the name under which the product is sold, terminology, symbols, testing and test methods, packaging, marking and labelling, user instructions, production processes and methods and conformity assessment procedures'.

Rules of EU law concerning human blood

7 According to recitals 2, 4, 23 and 32 of Directive 2002/98, which governs various operations in relation to human blood:

'(2) The availability of blood and blood components used for therapeutic purposes is dependent largely on Community citizens who are prepared to donate. …

…

(4) ... Furthermore, Member States should take measures to promote Community self-sufficiency in human blood or blood components and to encourage voluntary unpaid donations of blood and blood components.

…

(23) Voluntary and unpaid blood donations are a factor which can contribute to high safety standards for blood and blood components and therefore to the protection of human health. The efforts of the Council of Europe in this area should be supported and all necessary measures should be taken to encourage voluntary and unpaid donations through appropriate measures and initiatives and through ensuring that donors gain greater public recognition, thereby also increasing self-sufficiency. …

…

(32) ... The objectives of this directive, namely to contribute to general confidence both in the quality of donated blood and blood components and in the health protection of donors, to attain self-sufficiency at a Community level and to enhance confidence in the safety of the transfusion chain among the Member States ...'

8 Article 2(1) of Directive 2002/98 defines the scope of that directive as follows:

'This Directive shall apply to the collection and testing of human blood and blood components, whatever their intended purpose, and to their processing, storage, and distribution when intended for transfusion.'

9 Article 4(2) of the directive provides as follows:

'This directive shall not prevent a Member State from maintaining or introducing in its territory more stringent protective measures which comply with the provisions of the Treaty.

In particular, a Member State may introduce requirements for voluntary and unpaid donations, which include the prohibition or restriction of imports of blood and blood components, to ensure a high level of health protection and to achieve the objective set out in Article 20(1), provided that the conditions of the Treaty are met.'

10 Under Article 20(1) of the directive:

'Member States shall take the necessary measures to encourage voluntary and unpaid blood donations with a view to ensuring that blood and blood components are in so far as possible provided from such donations.'

11 Recital 19 of Directive 2001/83, a directive which concerns, essentially, industrially manufactured medicinal products for human use, states:

'The Community entirely supports the efforts of the Council of Europe to promote voluntary unpaid blood and plasma donation to attain self-sufficiency throughout the Community in the supply of blood products, and to ensure respect for ethical principles in trade in therapeutic substances of human origin.'

12 Article 1 of that directive contains, inter alia, the following definitions:

'10. Medicinal products derived from human blood or human plasma:

Medicinal products based on blood constituents which are prepared industrially by public or private establishments, such medicinal products including, in particular, albumin, coagulating factors and immunoglobulins of human origin;

…

17. Wholesale distribution of medicinal products:

All activities consisting of procuring, holding, supplying or exporting medicinal products, apart from supplying medicinal products to the public. Such activities are carried out with manufacturers or their depositories, importers, other wholesale distributors or with pharmacists and persons authorised or entitled to supply medicinal products to the public in the Member State concerned;

…’

13 Article 83 of Directive 2001/83, which is part of Title VII on the wholesale distribution and brokering of medicinal products, provides:

‘The provisions of this Title shall not prevent the application of more stringent requirements laid down by Member States in respect of the wholesale distribution of:

…

– medicinal products derived from blood,

…’

14 In Title X of Directive 2001/83, which concerns specific provisions on medicinal products derived from human blood and human plasma, Article 109 provides:

‘For the collection and testing of human blood and human plasma, Directive [2002/98] shall apply.’

15 Under Article 110 of Directive 2001/83:

‘Member States shall take the necessary measures to promote Community self-sufficiency in human blood or human plasma. For this purpose, they shall encourage the voluntary unpaid donation of blood and plasma and shall take the necessary measures to develop the production and use of products derived from human blood or human plasma coming from voluntary unpaid donations. They shall notify the Commission of such measures.’

Slovenian law

Law on medicinal products

16 Concerning the definition of the principle of priority supply of medicinal products manufactured industrially from plasma collected in Slovenia, Article 6(71) of the Zakon o zdravilih (Law on medicinal products) (Uradni list RS, No 17/14) provides:

‘The priority supply of medicinal products industrially manufactured from Slovenian plasma (that is to say, from frozen fresh plasma for processing, collected in the Republic of Slovenia) constitutes a principle whereby medicinal products obtained from foreign plasma which originate in the European Union are to be supplied on the basis of a marketing authorisation, in the event that medicinal products prepared from Slovenian plasma fail to cover the total demand for such products in the Republic of Slovenia, except where the introduction or importation of a specific medicinal product obtained from foreign plasma is justified on scientific or strategic grounds, as defined by the Strateški svet za zdravila [(Strategic Council for pharmaceutical products, Slovenia)] and by the Strokovni svet za preskrbo s krvjo in z zdravili iz plazme [(Scientific Council for the supply of blood and medicinal products obtained from plasma, Slovenia)].’

17 Article 6(106) of the Law on medicinal products defines ‘medicinal products obtained from blood or plasma’ as follows:

‘Medicinal products obtained from blood or plasma are industrially manufactured medicinal products, such as, for example, medicinal products containing, in particular, albumin … and immunoglobulin of human origin, which are manufactured by specialist operators using blood components collected in accordance with the rules governing the supply of blood and blood products and the rules governing medicinal products.’

18 Article 11(6) of the Law on medicinal products defines the scope of that law as follows:

‘The provisions of the present law shall not apply to … blood, plasma or blood cells which are subject to the legislation on the supply of blood, with the exception of plasma which is prepared using a method involving an industrial process and used in the manufacture of medicinal products.’

The Law on the supply of blood

19 Article 2 of the Zakon o preskrbi s krvjo (Law on the supply of blood) (Uradni list RS, No 104/06) provides as follows:

‘1. The supply of blood under this Law forms part of transfusion activities, which include planning, collection, processing, testing, storage, distribution and medical treatment as well as the regular and sufficient supply of blood and blood products to the population and the marketing of such products.

2. The activities referred to in the previous paragraph shall be carried out in accordance with the principles of national self-sufficiency and of voluntary unpaid blood donation, in order to guarantee a sufficient number of donors and the safety of blood transfusions.

…’

20 In Article 3(11), (12), (13), (18) and (27) of that law, the following terms are defined as follows:

– ‘blood’ is defined as ‘whole human blood’; – ‘blood component’ is defined as ‘an active component of blood (... plasma), which may be prepared from blood by various methods’;

– ‘blood product’ is defined as ‘any therapeutic product (component or agent) which is derived from human blood or human plasma’;

– ‘self-sufficiency’ is defined as ‘the principle relating to the supply of blood and blood products under which the State is to meet its demand for blood and blood products using its own resources’; and – ‘blood-based medicinal product’ is defined as ‘any medicinal product obtained from human blood or human plasma’.

21 Article 5(1) of that law, which concerns, in particular, blood collection, provides:

‘The activity of collecting and testing blood and blood components, whatever their intended purpose, and their processing, storage and distribution, when intended for transfusion, shall constitute a public service. The service shall be performed by the institute of transfusion or by the transfusion centre designated and licensed by the Agency.’

22 Article 10(1) and (2) of that law determines the function of the Zavod Republike Slovenije za transfuzisko medecino (Institute of Transfusion Medicine of the Republic of Slovenia) (‘the Institute’) in the following terms:

‘1. The [Institute] is … responsible at national level for the supply of blood and blood products to professional bodies, and for the integration of transfusion medicine in hospital practice.

2. The [Institute] shall coordinate all activities concerning donor selection, the collection, testing, processing, storage and distribution of blood and blood products, the clinical use of blood …’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

23 By decision of 14 January 2015, the hospital launched a public procurement procedure for the purchase of two types of medicinal products derived from plasma, namely human albumin, 200 mg/ml infusion solution, and human immunoglobulin for intravenous administration, 50 mg/ml or 100 mg/ml.

24 It was specified in the tender specifications that the medicinal products that were the subject matter of the contract were to be ‘obtained from Slovenian plasma’. On enquiry from an economic operator, that requirement was justified by reference to the principle that supplies must come as a matter of priority from medicinal products manufactured industrially from plasma collected in Slovenia, as set out in Article 6(71) of the Law on medicinal products.

25 Disputing that national origin requirement for medicinal products derived from plasma, Medisanus requested the hospital to withdraw the requirement and amend the tender specifications accordingly. Indeed, since the Institute enjoys a monopoly for blood collection in Slovenia, by definition it is the only body that is able to supply medicinal products obtained from plasma collected in Slovenia and thus satisfy the national origin requirement for the plasma as prescribed in the tender specifications. However, according to Medisanus, such a requirement infringes EU law.

26 The hospital rejected Medisanus’s request on the ground that the requirements stemmed from national legislation, that they were justified from a scientific point of view and that, in addition, they were consistent with an objective of EU self-sufficiency set out in Article 110 of Directive 2001/83. The contracting authority also pointed out that medicinal products derived from Slovenian plasma failed to meet the total demand of the Slovenian population for medicinal products derived from plasma. Part of that demand would therefore be covered by a call for tenders relating to the purchase of medicinal products obtained from blood originating in various Member States.

27 Medisanus then challenged the decision to reject its request before the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal, Slovenia).

28 That body is a special national authority governed by the Zakon o pravnem varstvu v postopkih javnega naročanja (Law on appeals in public procurement procedures) (Uradni list RS, No 43/11), with exclusive jurisdiction to rule on the legality of decisions adopted by contracting authorities in the context of public procurement procedures.

29 In the context of the application for review pending before it, the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal) has doubts whether the Slovenian origin requirement for the plasma used to manufacture the medicinal products covered by the public procurement at issue in the main proceedings is compatible with Articles 2 and 23 of Directive 2004/18, in so far as that requirement might infringe the principle of equal treatment and respect for competition between economic operators.

30 The referring tribunal observes, however, that that requirement is based on Slovenian law. In the first place, Article 6(71) of the Law on medicinal products requires that supplies must come as a matter of priority from medicinal products manufactured industrially from plasma collected in Slovenia. In the second place, the Law on the supply of blood lays down the principle of self-sufficiency, pursuant to which the Republic of Slovenia has decided to meet its demand for blood and medicinal preparations obtained from human blood and plasma by using its own resources. In the third place, that law entrusts the Institute with carrying out the public service relating to the activity of collecting and testing blood and blood components, whatever their intended purpose, and to their processing, storage and distribution, when intended for transfusion.

31 In that context, the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Must Directive [2004/18], in particular Article 23(2), Article 23(8) and Article 2 thereof, read in conjunction with

– Directive [2001/83], in particular Article 83 thereof;

– Directive [2002/98], in particular Article 4(2) thereof; and

– the FEU Treaty, in particular Article 18 thereof, be interpreted as precluding a specification that industrially manufactured medicinal products must be obtained from “Slovenian plasma” (a requirement based on the domestic legislation ...)?’

Consideration of the question referred

Admissibility

32 At the outset, consideration should be given to whether the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal) meets the criteria for being regarded as a ‘national court or tribunal’ for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU.

33 Whether a body making a reference is a ‘court or tribunal’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU depends on a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent (see, to that effect, judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme, C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraph 17 and the case-law cited).

34 In the present case, on the basis of the information provided by the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal) in the annex to the order for reference, it is clear that that body has no connection with the public authorities whose decisions it reviews. Furthermore, its members enjoy the safeguards laid down in the Zakon o sodniški službi (Law on the duties of a judge) concerning their appointment, their term of office and the grounds for removal from office, so that their independence is guaranteed.

35 Moreover, the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal) is provided for by the Law on appeals in public procurement procedures, which makes it permanent and its jurisdiction mandatory.

36 Also, not only does that body rule on the basis of that law, but it also applies the Zakon o pravdnem postopku (Law on Civil Procedure) and its own rules of procedure, which were published in the Uradni list Republike Slovenije (Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia). In addition, referrals to that body are made by appeals and its decisions have the force of res judicata.

37 Lastly, the parties and, as the case may be, the tenderer whose bid is accepted are entitled to present their views in the course of the proceedings and to comment on the evidence and arguments presented by the other parties and by the representative of the public interest. The procedure before the referring body is therefore inter partes.

38 It follows that the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (State Public Procurement Tribunal) meets the criteria for being regarded as a ‘national court or tribunal’ for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU and that the question referred by it to the Court is admissible.

Substance

Preliminary observations

39 The purpose of the question referred is, in essence, to determine whether the requirement to manufacture medicinal products from plasma collected in Slovenia is compatible, first, with Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Article 83 of Directive 2001/83 and Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 and, secondly, with Article 18 TFEU.

40 It is apparent from the order for reference that, with regard to medicinal products manufactured industrially from human plasma, the Slovenian legislature established a system based on the following elements.

41 In the first place, Article 3(18) of the Law on the supply of blood lays down a principle of self-sufficiency in human blood and in components and medicinal products obtained from human blood or human plasma, under which the Slovenian State is to meet by using its own resources the demand for blood, and for medicinal products obtained from blood or plasma, of patients being treated in its territory (‘the national self-sufficiency principle’).

42 Under Article 2 of that law, the national self-sufficiency principle must be observed in all transfusion activities, namely, inter alia, the collection, processing, distribution and supply to the population of blood and of components or medicinal products obtained from blood and plasma as well as the marketing of such components and medicinal products.

43 Article 2 of that law also lays down the principle of voluntary unpaid blood donation. It states that the combined application of the national self-sufficiency principle and the principle of voluntary unpaid donation is aimed at guaranteeing both a sufficient number of donors and the safety of blood transfusions.

44 In the second place, Article 10 of the Law on the supply of blood provides that the Institute, a public body, is, inter alia, responsible at national level for the supply of blood and of components and medicinal products obtained from blood and plasma. It also coordinates activities concerning, inter alia, the collection, processing and distribution of such components and medicinal products.

45 In the third place, Article 6(71) of the Law on medicinal products lays down the principle that supplies must come as a matter of priority from medicinal products manufactured industrially from plasma collected in Slovenia (‘Slovenian plasma’). Accordingly, the marketing of medicinal products derived from plasma collected outside Slovenia is authorised, as a matter of principle, only in the event that the medicinal products derived from Slovenian plasma do not meet the total demand (‘the priority supply principle’).

46 Therefore, it follows from that principle that the demand of Slovenian hospitals for medicinal products derived from plasma is to be met as a matter of priority by medicinal products obtained from Slovenian plasma (‘the national origin requirement’) and, where medicinal products of Slovenian origin are not sufficient, if necessary by using medicinal products obtained from plasma collected in other Member States.

47 In practice, the Institute allocates the quantities of Slovenian plasma that are not used for transfusion purposes to the manufacture of medicinal products. To this end, the Institute organises procedures for public service contracts with a view to selecting the economic operator that will undertake the manufacturing process, while the Institute will continue to own the plasma and become the owner of the medicinal products obtained from that plasma. The Institute then supplies those medicinal products to hospitals against payment of an amount equivalent to their production costs.

48 In addition, in order to meet the demand for medicinal products obtained from plasma that is not satisfied by the medicinal products derived from Slovenian plasma, the Institute, jointly with Slovenian hospitals, organises procedures for public supply contracts.

49 It is in that context that the public procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings takes place, by which the hospital seeks to purchase medicinal products obtained from plasma that, under the priority supply principle, must be of Slovenian origin and for which the Institute is the only possible supplier.

The categorisation of human blood and components thereof

50 Both in its written observations and at the hearing the Slovenian Government relied on Article 168(7) TFEU to argue that human blood and components thereof are ‘resources’ and not goods for the purpose of Article 34 TFEU.

51 Under Article 168(7) TFEU, admittedly, the allocation of resources is included in the Member States' responsibilities regarding the definition of their health policy, as are the organisation and delivery of health services and medical care.

52 However, the wording of Article 168(7) TFEU provides no ground for inferring that the drafters of the Treaties intended the generic term 'resources' to specifically cover blood or components thereof.

53 In addition, nothing precludes medicinal products derived from human blood or human plasma from coming under the definition of 'goods' for the purposes of the provisions of the FEU Treaty on the free movement of goods, given the particularly broad interpretation of that term in the Court's case-law on, inter alia, medicinal products and blood and blood components (see, to that effect, judgments of 11 September 2008, Commission v Germany, C-141/07, EU:C:2008:492, paragraphs 27 to 32, and of 9 December 2010, Humanplasma, C-421/09, EU:C:2010:760, paragraphs 27 and 30). It follows that medicinal products derived from human blood or human plasma are 'goods' for the purpose of Article 34 TFEU.

54 Moreover, as the Advocate General has pointed out in points 62 to 66 of his Opinion, the medicinal products at issue in the main proceedings are 'products' within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) and (c) of Directive 2004/18 that can be valued in money and thus be the subject of commercial transactions.

The applicable provisions

55 It should be recalled that a question referred for a preliminary ruling must be examined in the light of all the provisions of the Treaties and of secondary legislation which may be relevant to the issue raised (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 July 1985, Mutsch, 137/84, EU:C:1985:335, paragraph 10). The fact that a national court's question refers to certain provisions of EU law does not mean therefore that the Court of Justice may not provide the national court with all the guidance on points of interpretation that may be of assistance in adjudicating on the case pending before it, whether or not that court has referred to those points in its question (see, to that effect, judgment of 12 December 1990, SARPP, C-241/89, EU:C:1990:459, paragraph 8).

56 With regard to the provisions of EU law that the referring tribunal has asked the Court of Justice to interpret, consideration should be given, as a preliminary point, to whether Article 83 of Directive 2001/83, Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 and Article 18 TFEU apply to a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

57 In the first place, Article 83 of Directive 2001/83 authorises Member States to apply more stringent requirements in respect of the wholesale distribution of medicinal products derived from blood than those which govern, on the one hand, the wholesale distribution of other medicinal products and, on the other hand, other distribution methods for medicinal products not covered by that provision.

58 'Wholesale distribution of medicinal products' is defined in Article 1(17) of Directive 2001/83 as 'all activities consisting of procuring, holding, supplying or exporting medicinal products, apart from supplying medicinal products to the public. Such activities are carried out with manufacturers or their depositories, importers, other wholesale distributors or with pharmacists and persons authorised or entitled to supply medicinal products to the public in the Member State concerned'.

59 The substance of the hospital's activities is clearly different. It follows that Article 83 of Directive 2001/83 does not apply in circumstances such as those of the dispute in the main proceedings.

60 In the second place, under Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 a Member States may prohibit or restrict imports of blood and blood components with a view to encouraging the voluntary unpaid donation of blood and blood components.

61 In that respect, the Court notes that Article 2(1) of Directive 2002/98 governs the distribution of human blood and blood components only 'when intended for transfusion'. Since medicinal products derived from plasma have a different purpose, Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 does not apply in circumstances such as those of the dispute in the main proceedings.

62 In the third place, and as the Advocate General has explained in points 37 and 38 of his Opinion, it should be borne in mind that Article 18 TFEU is to apply independently only to situations governed by EU law in regard to which the Treaty lays down no specific prohibition of discrimination (see, inter alia, to that effect, judgments of 21 June 1974, Reyners, 2/74, EU:C:1974:68, paragraphs 15 and 16; of 30 May 1989, Commission v Greece, 305/87, EU:C:1989:218, paragraphs 12 and 13; and of 18 December 2014, Generali-Providencia Biztosító, C-470/13, EU:C:2014:2469, paragraph 31).

63 In the circumstances of the main proceedings and to the extent that the free movement of goods is concerned, the Court finds that the national origin requirement falls within the scope of Article 34 TFEU, which prohibits obstacles to the free movement of goods.

64 In that regard, it must be borne in mind that the Court has consistently held that the prohibition, laid down in Article 34 TFEU, of measures having equivalent effect to quantitative restrictions covers any measure of the Member States that is capable of hindering, directly or indirectly, actually or potentially, imports between Member States (judgment of 19 October 2016, Deutsche Parkinson Vereinigung, C-148/15, EU:C:2016:776, paragraph 22 and the case-law cited).

65 Read in conjunction with Article 36 TFEU, Article 34 thereof prohibits, inter alia, all discriminatory obstacles to the free movement of goods and thus provides for a specific prohibition of discrimination as against Article 18 TFEU.

66 It follows that, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, Article 83 of Directive 2001/83, Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 and Article 18 TFEU do not apply to the main proceedings.

Whether a national origin requirement for medicinal products derived from plasma such as the requirement at issue in the main proceedings is compatible with Articles 2 and 23 of Directive 2004/18 and Article 34 TFEU

67 In the light of the above, the question referred should be understood as seeking to ascertain whether Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18, and Article 34 TFEU read in conjunction with Article 36 TFEU, must be interpreted as precluding a clause in the tender specifications for a public contract which, in accordance with the law of the Member State to which the contracting authority belongs, requires medicinal products derived from plasma, which are the subject matter of the public contract at issue, to be manufactured from plasma collected in that Member State.

68 In the present case, clearly, the national origin requirement is inherently discriminatory. Indeed, the requirement that supplies must be obtained as a matter of priority from medicinal products derived from Slovenian plasma precludes any undertaking with medicinal products derived from plasma collected in another Member State of the European Union from tendering effectively in response to calls for tenders such as that issued by the hospital.

69 In that respect, the Court notes, as the Advocate General has observed in point 94 of his Opinion, that Directive 2004/18 does not bring about exhaustive harmonisation of the aspects relating to the free movement of goods. That finding follows in particular from the wording of Article 23(8) of the directive, in that it accepts that technical specifications may be justified by the subject matter of the contract.

70 Moreover, on the one hand, the contracting authority in the main proceedings is subject to the requirements for the award of public contracts, namely those under Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18; on the other hand, it must bear in mind Article 110 of Directive 2001/83, pursuant to which Member States are to take the necessary measures to promote EU self-sufficiency in human blood and human plasma. The latter provision states that, for this purpose, the Member States are to encourage the voluntary unpaid donation of blood and plasma and take the necessary measures to develop the production and use of products derived from human blood or human plasma coming from voluntary unpaid donations.

71 With regard to the Member States' powers and responsibilities under Article 168(7) TFEU in respect, inter alia, of blood donations, in the field of health policy, of the management of health services and medical care and of the allocation of the resources assigned to them, it must be noted that in exercising those powers, especially in the context of public procurement, Member States must comply with EU law, in particular the provisions on the free movement of goods (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 September 2008, Commission v Germany, C-141/07, EU:C:2008:492, paragraphs 22 to 25 and the case-law cited).

72 It follows that, with regard to both the discriminatory obstacles to the free movement of goods and the grounds for their justification, examination of the national origin requirement at issue in the main proceedings, according to which medicinal products derived from plasma must be obtained from plasma collected in Slovenia, cannot be limited to an assessment under Directive 2004/18; it must also take the provisions of primary law into account.

73 With regard to Directive 2004/18, the finding in paragraph 68 of the present judgment is sufficient to establish non-compliance with Article 2 of the directive, which requires that the contracting authority is, inter alia, to treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily.

74 It should be noted, moreover, that under Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18 technical specifications that are set out in the public contract documentation should afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.

75 It is apparent, however, that the conditions laid down in Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18 are not satisfied in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings.

76 It is clear from the wording of Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18 that a technical specification may not refer to a specific source unless this is justified by the subject matter of the public contract, and that this is permitted on an exceptional basis only. In any event, any reference to a technical specification, such as a specific source or origin, must be accompanied by the words ‘or equivalent’ (see, to that effect, judgment of 22 September 1988, Commission v Ireland, 45/87, EU:C:1988:435, paragraph 22).

77 With regard to the main proceedings, by not adding the words ‘or equivalent’ after imposing the national origin requirement, the hospital may not only have deterred economic operators with analogous medicinal products from taking part in the tendering procedure, but also have impeded the flow of imports in trade between Member States by reserving the contract for medicinal products derived from Slovenian plasma exclusively to the Institute. In so doing, the hospital has failed to comply with Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, Article 23(2) and (8) thereof and Article 34 TFEU (see, by analogy, judgment of 24 January 1995, Commission v Netherlands, C-359/93, EU:C:1995:14, paragraph 27).

The justification for the obstacle to the free movement of goods

78 In order to determine whether a clause in the tender specifications for a public contract that imposes a national origin requirement for medicinal products derived from plasma, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, constitutes a restriction that is prohibited under Article 34 TFEU, the Court must examine whether it can be justified on grounds of public health protection, as the Slovenian Government and the Commission in particular have submitted (see, by analogy, judgment of 9 December 2010, Humanplasma, C-421/09, EU:C:2010:760, paragraph 31).

79 As a preliminary point, the Court notes that in the main proceedings the contracting authority is subject to two potentially conflicting requirements, as mentioned in paragraph 70 of the present judgment. Indeed, the contracting authority must comply with Article 6 of the Law on medicinal products, which lays down the principles of priority supply and national self-sufficiency, the latter stemming from Article 2 of the Law on the supply of blood. At the same time, the contracting authority must, pursuant to Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, afford equal access to public procurement and, accordingly, ensure non-discriminatory treatment of economic operators that have medicinal products derived from plasma.

80 In the present case, since the national origin requirement is discriminatory, as established in paragraph 68 of the present judgment, the Slovenian legislation can be justified only on one of the grounds listed in Article 36 TFEU (see, inter alia, by analogy, judgments of 17 June 1981, Commission v Ireland, 113/80, EU:C:1981:139, paragraphs 7, 8, 10 and 11, and of 30 November 1995, Gebhard, C-55/94, EU:C:1995:411, paragraph 37).

81 In that regard, the Slovenian Government takes the view that the system for the collection of human blood and human plasma at issue in the main proceedings is justified on grounds of public health.

82 The Court has consistently held that, in order to assess whether a Member State has observed the principle of proportionality in the field of public health, account must be taken of the fact that the health and life of humans rank foremost among the assets and interests protected by the FEU Treaty and that it is for the Member States to determine the degree of protection which they wish to afford to public health and the way in which that degree of protection is to be achieved. Since the degree of protection may vary from one Member State to another, Member States must be allowed a measure of discretion (see, inter alia, judgments of 11 September 2008, Commission v Germany, C-141/07, EU:C:2008:492, paragraph 51; of 19 May 2009, Apothekerkammer des Saarlandes and Others, C-171/07 and C-172/07, EU:C:2009:316, paragraph 19; of 21 June 2012, Susisalo and Others, C-84/11, EU:C:2012:374, paragraph 28; of 5 December 2013, Venturini and Others, C-159/12 to C-161/12, EU:C:2013:791, paragraph 59; and of 19 October 2016, Deutsche Parkinson Vereinigung, C-148/15, EU:C:2016:776, paragraph 30).

83 However, it is apparent also from the Court's case-law that legislation that is capable of restricting a fundamental freedom guaranteed by the FEU Treaty, such as the free movement of goods, can be properly justified only if it is appropriate for securing the attainment of the legitimate objective pursued and does not go beyond what is necessary in order to attain it (see, to that effect, in the context of human health, judgments of 11 September 2008, Commission v Germany, C-141/07, EU:C:2008:492, paragraph 48, and of 9 December 2010, Humanplasma, C-421/09, EU:C:2010:760, paragraph 34).

84 As a first step, it is therefore necessary to examine whether the national origin requirement at issue in the main proceedings pursues a legitimate objective.

85 According to the Slovenian Government, the national origin requirement is intended (a) to encourage voluntary unpaid blood donations and (b) to ensure observance of the principle of national self-sufficiency. The Slovenian Government, which underlines the overlapping nature of the two objectives, draws attention to the fact that the strict conditions surrounding voluntary unpaid blood donations have a considerable impact on the quantities of human blood and blood components collected, which has an effect on self-sufficiency in blood supplies and, therefore, on the supply of blood components.

86 The Court notes, as a preliminary point, that the fact that the two objectives put forward by the Slovenian Government overlap follows from the very wording of Article 110 of Directive 2001/83. As provided in that article, 'Member States shall take the necessary measures to promote Community self-sufficiency in human blood or human plasma. For this purpose, they shall encourage the voluntary unpaid donation of blood and plasma ...'.

87 Encouraging voluntary unpaid blood donations is a way of addressing public health concerns such as those referred to in Article 36 TFEU. Therefore, that objective is, in principle, capable of justifying a restriction on the free movement of goods (see, to that effect, judgment of 9 December 2010, Humanplasma, C-421/09, EU:C:2010:760, paragraph 33).

88 Since the second objective put forward by the Slovenian Government consists in ensuring compliance with the principle of national self-sufficiency, it is necessary to examine whether national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which pursues that objective contributes to the promotion of EU self-sufficiency in human blood and human plasma, referred to in Article 110 of Directive 2001/83.

89 In the first place, since the EU legislature did not set out detailed rules on how to attain EU self-sufficiency in human blood and human plasma, it may be accepted, as the Commission has, that as EU law currently stands EU self-sufficiency is achieved through the pursuit by each Member State of a national objective of self-sufficiency.

90 In the second place, the Court notes that the EU legislature uses various terms to define the scope of EU self-sufficiency. Whereas Article 110 of Directive 2001/83 mentions only human blood and human plasma, Article 20(1) of Directive 2002/98, read in the light of recital 4 thereof, requests Member States to take the necessary measures to encourage voluntary unpaid donations with a view to ensuring that blood and blood components are in so far as possible provided from such donations.

91 The scope of the principle of EU self-sufficiency is made even broader in recital 19 of Directive 2001/83, which refers to 'self-sufficiency throughout the Community in the supply of blood products'.

92 Since the intended objective of ensuring EU self-sufficiency in the supply of blood products is to protect public health, its scope must be interpreted broadly.

93 Consequently, national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings pursues legitimate objectives of public health protection.

94 As a second step, it is necessary to assess whether such legislation is proportionate in achieving the objective of public health protection.

95 Since Article 36 TFEU is an exception, to be interpreted strictly, to the free movement of goods within the European Union, any national legislation must be necessary to achieve the declared objective and it must not be possible to achieve that objective by prohibitions or restrictions that are less extensive or have less effect on trade within the European Union (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 September 2008, Commission v Germany, C-141/07, EU:C:2008:492, paragraph 50).

96 In that regard, the material before the Court clearly does not lead to the conclusion that the priority supply principle for medicinal products manufactured industrially from Slovenian plasma collected from Slovenian hospitals contributes decisively to encouraging the Slovenian population to make voluntary unpaid blood donations.

97 It is true that recital 19 and Article 110 of Directive 2001/83 are both in line with the concept of solidarity. Since they are not paid, all blood donors act in the interest of all individuals with whom they share the same interests, by making it possible, together, inter alia, to guard against risks of insufficient quantities of medicinal products derived from blood or plasma. However, the priority supply principle at issue in the main proceedings, in that it excludes economic operators wishing to import into Slovenia medicinal products derived from plasma coming also from voluntary unpaid blood donations, collected in other Member States, is in clear contradiction to that concept underlying the objective of EU self-sufficiency. Accordingly, inasmuch as (a) the blood donors' motivation is the same in other Member States as in Slovenia and (b) all donors in the Member States have objectively concurring interests with regard to the manufacture and use of products derived from human blood and human plasma coming from such voluntary unpaid donations, there is no reason to consider, as the Slovenian Government claims, that conditions based on a purely national concept of solidarity are the only ones liable to have a major impact, in Slovenia, on the quantities of human blood and blood components collected and, thus, on the quantities of blood products derived from such donations.

98 It is not therefore evident that the objective of encouraging and maintaining a high level of voluntary unpaid blood donations necessarily requires recourse to the national origin requirement at issue in the main proceedings. In those circumstances, the Court finds that the priority supply principle is disproportionate.

99 That finding cannot be called into question by the argument that a system of priority supply, such as that described in paragraphs 41 to 48 of the present judgment, may be regarded as the least detrimental solution to the free movement of goods, having regard in particular to the fact that the medicinal products are supplied to hospitals against payment of an amount corresponding exclusively to their production costs.

100 It is true that a system of plasma collection such as that at issue in the main proceedings has been established in a global context characterised by a prolonged and undeniable shortage of quality blood and plasma and by a highly concentrated sector for industrial processing of blood and plasma into medicinal products. Moreover, as the Commission has pointed out in its written observations, that continuing tendency induces the few undertakings working in that field to prefer selling medicinal products derived from plasma in countries that can pay a higher price or buy them on a larger scale, and smaller States are thus facing a significantly higher price for medicinal products derived from plasma.

101 Admittedly, interests of an economic nature that aim at maintaining a quality hospital service that is safe and accessible to all may come within the derogation on grounds of public health set out in Article 36 TFEU, to the extent that they contribute to the attainment of a high level of health protection (see, to that effect, judgment of 11 September 2008, Commission v Germany, C-141/07, EU:C:2008:492, paragraph 60).

102 However, a system of priority supply of medicinal products manufactured industrially from Slovenian plasma, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, cannot be considered to be necessary to avoid higher costs for medicinal products derived from plasma, since the price of all medicinal products manufactured industrially from plasma, whether in Slovenia or in another Member State, is set on the same basis, namely voluntary unpaid blood donations.

103 Having regard to all of the foregoing considerations, the Court finds that a restriction such as that stemming from the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings has not been shown to be an appropriate means of attaining the objectives invoked and cannot therefore be regarded as justified by the achievement of those objectives.

104 Consequently, the answer to the question referred is that Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18, and Article 34 TFEU read in conjunction with Article 36 TFEU, must be interpreted as precluding a clause in the tender specifications for a public contract which, in accordance with the law of the Member State to which the contracting authority belongs, requires medicinal products derived from plasma, which are the subject matter of the public procurement at issue, to be obtained from plasma collected in that Member State.

Costs

105 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national tribunal, the decision on costs is a matter for that tribunal. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, and Article 34 TFEU read in conjunction with Article 36 TFEU, must be interpreted as precluding a clause in the tender specifications for a public contract which, in accordance with the law of the Member State to which the contracting authority belongs, requires medicinal products derived from plasma, which are the subject matter of the public procurement at issue, to be obtained from plasma collected in that Member State.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Slovenian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

SAUGMANDSGAARD ØE

delivered on 1 December 2016 (1)

Case C-296/15

Medisanus d.o.o.

v

Splošna Bolnišnica Murska Sobota

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (National Commission for the review of awards of public procurement procedures, Slovenia))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Article 267 TFEU — Status of a 'court or tribunal' — Directive 2004/18/EC — Public procurement — Articles 2 and 23 — Equal treatment and non-discrimination — Directive 2001/83/EC– Medicinal products for human use — Medicinal products derived from industrially prepared plasma — Directive 2002/98/EC — Human blood and blood components — National rules requiring supplies to be obtained as a matter of priority from medicinal products manufactured on the basis of plasma collected in the territory of the Member State concerned — Article 34 TFEU — Free movement of goods — Discrimination between imports — Article 36 TFEU — Justification — Promotion of blood donations — National self-sufficiency — Autarky)

I – Introduction

1. By decision of 14 May 2015, received at the Court on 18 June 2015, the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (National Commission for the review of awards of public procurement procedures, Slovenia) requested the Court to give a preliminary ruling on the interpretation of Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18/EC, (2) Article 83 of Directive 2001/83/EC, (3) Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98/EC (4) and Article 18 TFEU.

2. That request was submitted in the context of an action brought by Medisanus d.o.o. against the Splošna Bolnišnica Murska Sobota (Murska Sobota general hospital, Murska Sobota, Slovenia) concerning the legality of a clause in the tender specifications relating to a public procurement procedure for the supply of medicinal products launched by that hospital. Under that clause, the medicinal products forming the subject matter of that procedure had to be manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma ('the national origin requirement').

3. That clause was introduced by the Murska Sobota general hospital in order to comply with national rules under which imports of medicinal products manufactured on the basis of plasma collected in another Member State may be authorised only if the medicinal products manufactured on the basis of plasma collected in the national territory are not sufficient to cover the needs of the national population ('the priority supply principle').

4. For the reasons which I shall set out below, I consider that Directive 2004/18 and Articles 34 and 36 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude both the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement.

II – Legal framework

A – EU law

1. Directive 2004/18

5. Article 1(2)(a) Directive 2004/18 defines ‘public contracts’ as ‘contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive’.

6. Article 2 of that directive, entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, states that contracting authorities are to treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and are to act in a transparent way.

7. Article 23 of that directive concerns technical specifications.

8. That concept of ‘tender specifications’ is defined in point 1 of Annex VI to that directive. As regards, in particular, public supply and public service contracts, point 1(b) contains the following definition:

> ‘… a specification in a document defining the required characteristics of a product or service, such as quality and environmental performance levels, design for all requirements (including accessibility for people with disabilities), and conformity-assessment, performance, use of the product, its safety or dimensions, including requirements relevant to the product as regards the name under which the product is sold, terminology, symbols, testing and test methods, packaging, marking and labelling, user instructions, production methods and procedures, as well as conformity assessment procedures’.

9. In the words of Article 23 of that directive:

> ‘…
>
> 2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.
>
> …
>
> 8. Unless justified by the subject matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. …’

2. Directive 2002/98

10. Article 2(1) of Directive 2002/98 defines the scope of that directive as follows:

> ‘This Directive shall apply to the collection and testing of human blood and blood components, whatever their intended purpose, and to their processing, storage, and distribution when intended for transfusion.’

11. Article 4(2) of that directive provides:

> ‘This directive shall not prevent a Member State from maintaining or introducing in its territory more stringent protective measures which comply with the provisions of the Treaty.
>
> In particular, a Member State may introduce requirements for voluntary and unpaid donations, which include the prohibition or restriction of imports of blood and blood components, to ensure a high level of health protection and to achieve the objective set out in Article 20(1), provided that the conditions of the Treaty are met.’

12. In the words of Article 20(1) of that directive:

‘Member States shall take the necessary measures to encourage voluntary and unpaid blood donations with a view to ensuring that blood and blood components are in so far as possible provided from such donations.’

3. Directive 2001/83

13. Article 1 of Directive 2001/83 contains, in particular, the following definitions:

‘2. Medicinal product:

(a) Any substance or combination of substances presented as having properties for treating or preventing disease in human beings, or;

(b) Any substance or combination of substances which may be used in or administered to human beings either with a view to restoring, correcting or modifying physiological functions by exerting a pharmacological, immunological or metabolic action, or to making a medical diagnosis.

…

10. Medicinal products derived from human blood or human plasma: Medicinal products based on blood constituents which are prepared industrially by public or private establishments, such medicinal products including, in particular, albumin, coagulating factors and immunoglobulins of human origin.

…

17. Wholesale distribution of medicinal products: All activities consisting of procuring, holding, supplying or exporting medicinal products, apart from supplying medicinal products to the public. Such activities are carried out with manufacturers or their depositories, importers, other wholesale distributors or with pharmacists and persons authorised or entitled to supply medicinal products to the public in the Member State concerned.’

14. According to Article 2(1) of Directive 2001/83, that directive is to apply to medicinal products for human use intended to be placed on the market in Member States and either prepared industrially or manufactured by a method involving an industrial process.

15. Article 83 of Directive 2001/83, which is part of Title VII, on wholesale distribution and brokering of medicinal products, provides:

‘The provisions of this Title shall not prevent the application of more stringent requirements laid down by Member States in respect of the wholesale distribution of:

…

– medicinal products derived from blood,

…’

16. Article 109 of Directive 2001/83, under Title X on special provisions on medicinal products derived from human blood and plasma, states that Directive 2002/98 is to apply for the collection and testing of human blood and human plasma.

17. In the words of Article 110 of Directive 2001/83:

‘Member States shall take the necessary measures to promote Community self-sufficiency in human blood or human plasma. For this purpose, they shall encourage the voluntary unpaid donation of blood and plasma and shall take the necessary measures to develop the production and use of products derived from human blood or human plasma coming from voluntary unpaid donations. They shall notify the Commission of such measures.’

B – Slovenian law

1. The Law on medicinal products

18. Concerning the definition of the priority supply principle in medicinal products industrially manufactured from plasma collected in Slovenia, Article 6(71) of the Zakon o zdravilih (Law on medicinal products) of 4 March 2014 (Uradni list RS, No 17/2014) provides:

> ‘The priority supply of medicinal products industrially manufactured from Slovenian plasma (that is to say, from frozen fresh plasma for processing, collected in Slovenia) constitutes a principle whereby medicinal products obtained from foreign plasma originating in the European Union are to be supplied on the basis of a marketing authorisation, in the event that medicinal products prepared from Slovenian plasma fail to cover the total demand for such products in Slovenia, except where the introduction or importation of a specific medicinal product obtained from foreign plasma is justified on scientific or strategic grounds, as defined by the Strateški svet za zdravila (Strategic Council for pharmaceutical products) and by the Strokovni svet za preskrbo s krvjo in z zdravili iz plazme (Scientific Council for the supply of blood and medicinal products obtained from plasma)’.

19. Paragraph 106 of that article defines ‘medicinal products obtained from blood or plasma’ as follows:

> ‘Medicinal products obtained from blood or plasma are industrially manufactured pharmaceutical products, such as, for example, medicinal products containing, in particular, human albumin and human immunoglobulin, which are produced for that purpose by specialist operators using blood compounds which are obtained in accordance with the rules governing the supply of blood and blood products and the rules governing medicinal products.’

20. Article 11(6) of the Law on medicinal products defines the scope of that law as follows:

> ‘The provisions of the present law shall not apply to … blood, plasma or blood cells, which are subject to the legislation on the supply of blood, with the exception of plasma which is prepared using a method involving an industrial process and is used in the manufacture of medicinal products’.

2. The Law on the supply of blood

21. The Zakon o preskrbi s krvjo (Law on the supply of blood) of 5 October 2006 (Uradni list RS, No 104/2006) contains the following definitions in Article 3(11) to (13), (18) and (27), respectively:

‘11. Blood: whole human blood; …

12. blood component: active component of blood (… plasma), which may be prepared from blood by various methods;

13. blood product: any therapeutic product (component or agent) which is derived from human blood or human plasma;

…

18. self-sufficiency: principle relating to the supply of blood and blood products under which the State is to meet its demand for blood and blood products using its own resources;

…

27. blood-based medicinal product: any medicinal product prepared from human blood or human plasma.’

22. Article 2 of that Law, relating to the supply of blood, is worded as follows:

> ‘The supply of blood forms part of transfusion activities, including the planning, collection, processing, testing, storage, distribution, treatment and regular, adequate supply of blood and blood products to the population, and the marketing of blood and such products. Those activities shall be carried out in accordance with the principles of national self-sufficiency and the voluntary unpaid donation of blood, in order to guarantee an adequate number of donors and the safety of blood transfusions.’

23. Article 5(1) of that Law, which concerns, in particular, the collection of blood, provides:

> ‘The activity of collecting and testing human blood and blood components, whatever their intended purpose, and their processing, storage and distribution when intended for transfusion shall constitute a public service. The service shall be performed by the Institute [of Transfusion Medicine] or by the transfusion centre designated and licensed by the Agency.’

24. Article 10(1) and (2) of that Law determines the function of the Zavod Republike Slovenije za transfuzisko medecino (Institute of Transfusion Medicine of the Republic of Slovenia, ‘the ZTM’) as follows:

‘1. The [ZTM] is a transfusion institute responsible at national level for the supply of blood and blood products to professional bodies, and for the integration of transfusion medicine in hospital practice.

2. The [ZTM] shall coordinate all activities concerning donor selection, the collection, testing, processing, storage and distribution of blood and blood products, and the clinical use of blood.’

III – The main proceedings and the question for a preliminary ruling

25. On 14 January 2015, Murska Sobota general hospital decided to launch a tendering procedure for the supply of medicinal products.

26. It is apparent from the tender specifications for the call for tenders that that public contract concerned medicinal products having the following characteristics:

– ‘human blood albumin 200 mg/ml infusion solution, obtained from Slovenian plasma’, – ‘human immunoglobulin for intravenous administration, 50 mg/ml or 100 mg/ml, obtained from Slovenian plasma’.

27. In answer to an economic operator which had objected to the national origin requirement, Murska Sobota general hospital claimed that that requirement was consistent with the priority supply principle in medicinal products manufactured industrially on the basis of Slovenian plasma, as provided for in Article 6(71) of the Law on medicinal products. It stated, moreover, that another call for tenders had been published jointly with the Ministry of Health concerning human albumin and human immunoglobulin obtained from foreign plasma.

28. On 25 February 2015, Medisanus, a company having its seat in Ljubljana (Slovenia), requested the contracting authority to review the tender specifications. In support of its request, Medisanus claimed that only the ZTM was in a position to satisfy the national origin requirement as it had an exclusive right in respect of blood collected in Slovenia, from which it followed that the ZTM was the only operator able to supply medicinal products obtained from plasma collected in Slovenia. Medisanus was therefore of the view that such a requirement was incompatible with EU law, as regards industrially-manufactured medicinal products.

29. On 23 March 2015, Murska Sobota general hospital rejected that request for review as unfounded, for the following reasons. First of all, the national origin requirement followed from domestic law. Next, that requirement was scientifically justified. Last, the requirement was consistent with an objective of self-sufficiency promoted within the European Union. In the latter regard, the hospital in question referred to Article 83 of Directive 2001/83 and stated that the objective pursued was to ensure not absolute territorial self-sufficiency but the adequate use, limited to certain medicinal products, of the proportion of plasma collected in Slovenia that is available for the production of medicinal products derived from blood. It further stated that a certain percentage of its needs was covered by a call for tenders relating to the acquisition of medicinal products derived on blood from other Member States.

30. Following the rejection of its request, Medisanus submitted a request for revision to the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (National Commission for the review of awards of public procurement procedures). That commission has doubts as to the compatibility of the national origin requirement with Articles 2 and 23 of Directive 2004/18, in that it might give rise to a breach of the principle of equal treatment and respect for competition between economic operators.

31. That commission observes, however, that that requirement is based on Slovenian law. Article 6(71) of the Law on medicinal products imposes a priority supply of medicinal products produced industrially from plasma collected in Slovenia. Furthermore, the Law on the supply of blood establishes the principle of self-sufficiency, under which the Republic of Slovenia is to cover its needs for blood by its own resources. That law entrusts the ZTM with carrying out the public service relating to the activity of collecting and testing blood and blood components, independently of their intended use, and also with their preparation, storage and distribution when they are intended for transfusion.

32. In that context, the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (National Commission for the review of awards of public procurement procedures) decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

> ‘Must Directive 2004/18, in particular Article 23(2), Article 23(8) and Article 2 thereof, read in conjunction with
>
> – Directive 2001/83, in particular Article 83 thereof,
>
> – Directive 2002/98, in particular Article 4(2) thereof, and with
>
> – the TFEU, in particular Article 18 thereof,
>
> be interpreted as precluding a specification that industrially manufactured medicinal products must be obtained from “Slovenian plasma” (a requirement based on the domestic legislation …)?’

IV – Procedure before the Court

33. The request for a preliminary ruling was lodged at the Court Registry on 18 June 2015.

34. Written observations have been submitted by Medisanus, the Slovenian and Spanish Governments and the European Commission.

35. The representatives of Medisanus, the Slovenian Government and the Commission appeared at the hearing on 22 September 2016 and presented oral argument.

V – Analysis of the question for a preliminary ruling

36. I consider that the question for a preliminary ruling referred by the referring body should be reformulated, for the following reasons.

37. First of all, the question submitted to the Court refers to the principle of non-discrimination as provided for in Article 18 TFEU. However, it follows from its wording that that provision is to apply without prejudice to any special provisions contained in the Treaties. Consequently, and as the Court has explained on numerous occasions, that article is to apply independently only to situations governed by EU law in regard to which the Treaty lays down no specific prohibition of discrimination. (5)

38. In fact, it has consistently been held that Article 34 TFEU reflects, inter alia, the obligation to comply with the principle of non-discrimination. (6) Since the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement come under Article 34 TFEU, (7) I shall examine them in the light of that article, as the Commission has suggested.

39. Next, the question refers to Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 and Article 83 of Directive 2001/83. For the reasons which I shall set out in points 155 to 164 of this Opinion, I consider that those provisions are not relevant in the circumstances of the main proceedings.

40. Last, it is necessary to take account of the respective scope of Directive 2004/18 and of Article 34 TFEU and also of the existence of two national measures at issue in the main proceedings:

– the priority supply principle and – the national origin requirement.

41. The priority supply principle cannot be appraised, as such, by reference to Directive 2004/18, which applies only in the context of public contracts. Conversely, that principle must be appraised by reference to Article 34 TFEU, which guarantees the free movement of goods. (8)

42. On the other hand, the national origin requirement comes within the scope of both Directive 2004/18 and Article 34 TFEU. (9)

43. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the question for a preliminary ruling should be reformulated as follows. By its question, the referring body asks the Court:

– whether Articles 34 and 36 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude the priority supply principle; and – whether Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18 and Articles 34 and 36 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude the national origin requirement.

44. For the reasons which I shall set out below, I consider that the abovementioned provisions must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude both the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement.

45. Before addressing those questions, however, I must ascertain whether the Court has jurisdiction to answer the question referred, by examining the status as a ‘court or tribunal’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU of the referring body. I shall then set out a number of considerations on the factual and legal context of the main proceedings.

A – The jurisdiction of the Court

46. It follows from Article 267 TFEU that the Court has jurisdiction only to answer questions referred by ‘courts or tribunals’.

47. In accordance with settled case-law, in order to determine whether a body making a reference is a ‘court or tribunal’ for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU, which is a question governed by EU law alone, the Court takes account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent. (10)

48. I consider that it follows from the following factors, communicated by the referring body, that the latter does indeed have the status of a ‘court or tribunal’ for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU:

– it was set up by the national legislation on public contracts;

– it is permanent;

– its jurisdiction is compulsory, since its competence does not depend on the parties’ agreement and its decisions are binding; (11)

– the procedure before it is inter partes;

– it applies rules of law; and – the guarantees of its independence and the independence of its members are analogous to those applicable to the ordinary courts and tribunals.

49. In addition, it should be borne in mind that, when appraising the legal status of national non-judicial bodies referred to in Article 2(9) of Directive 89/665/EEC (12) responsible for public procurement review procedures, the Court has already confirmed that several other national bodies essentially comparable to the referring body in the present case were ‘courts or tribunals’. (13)

50. Consequently, I consider that the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (National Commission for the review of awards of public procurement procedures) has the status of a ‘court or tribunal’ for the purposes of Article 267 TFEU and that the Court therefore has jurisdiction to answer the question referred by that body.

B – Considerations concerning the factual and legal context of the main proceedings

51. Before answering the question submitted by the referring body, it seems to me to be important to provide certain information, derived from the observations submitted to the Court, concerning the legal and factual context of the main proceedings.

52. I recall that the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings related to the acquisition not of blood or blood components but rather of medicinal products manufactured industrially on the basis of plasma. The national origin requirement was imposed by the awarding authority in order to comply with the priority supply principle provided for in Article 6(71) of the Zakon o zdravilih (Law on medicinal products).

53. Within the system established by the Law on the supply of blood, and in particular by Article 10 thereof, the ZTM is responsible at national level for the supply of blood and blood products to bodies and for the integration of transfusion medicine in hospital practice.

54. According to the observations submitted by Medisanus, the Slovenian Government and the Commission, that law confers exclusive competence on the ZTM for the collection of blood and blood products in the territory of the Republic of Slovenia. It follows from that exclusive competence that only the ZTM is authorised to supply medicinal products based on Slovenian plasma, in such a way that the ZTM was in practice the only operator capable of supplying medicinal products in conformity with the national origin requirement.

55. The Slovenian Government has explained that the blood collected by the ZTM is primarily intended to be used for transfusion purposes. Only the surplus amounts of blood collected are intended to be processed into medicinal products such as human albumin or human immunoglobulin, which form the subject matter of the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings.

56. It also follows from the observations submitted by the Slovenian Government that the ZTM does not itself process the blood collected in Slovenian territory into medicinal products, but sends that blood to a private operator which manufacturers the medicinal products by means of an industrial process. The ZTM selects that operator within the framework of an open procurement procedure in accordance with Directive 2004/18.

57. The medicinal products thus obtained are intended exclusively for the Slovenian market. The ZTM distributes those medicinal products to other public health services in Slovenia, and in particular to the hospitals. By way of consideration, the ZTM receives only the costs of manufacturing the medicinal products and does not make a profit.

58. Furthermore, it is only if and in so far as the quantity of medicinal products manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma is not sufficient to satisfy the needs of the Slovenian population that medicinal products manufactured on the basis of foreign plasma are bought, within the framework of an open public procurement procedure in accordance with Directive 2004/18.

C – The infringement of Directive 2004/18

59. In this section, I shall consider whether Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude the national origin requirement.

60. In order to do so, it is necessary to assess (i) the applicability of Directive 2004/18 in the circumstances of the main proceedings and (ii) the existence of an infringement of the abovementioned provisions.

1. The applicability of Directive 2004/18

61. In the first place, it is clear from the Slovenian Government’s observations that Murska Sobota general hospital is a public body created by the Republic of Slovenia. On that basis, it must be regarded as a ‘contracting authority’ within the meaning of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18; moreover, that capacity has not been disputed by any of the parties which have submitted observations to the Court.

62. Nor, in the second place, to my mind, can it be disputed that the medicinal products at issue in the main proceedings constitute ‘products’ within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) and (c) of Directive 2004/18.

63. Admittedly, the Slovenian Government has claimed that those medicinal products were not ‘products’ within the meaning of that directive or ‘goods’ for the purposes of Article 34 TFEU, on the ground that the ZTM and the Slovenian hospitals together provided a public service of general interest consisting in the supply of medicinal products manufactured on the basis of plasma.

64. In that regard, I would emphasise that the Court established long ago a particularly broad definition of ‘goods’ for the purposes of the FEU Treaty provisions on the free movement of goods, as referring to any product that can be valued in money and thus be the subject of commercial transactions. (14) In the absence of a different definition within Directive 2004/18, that definition seems to me to be capable of being transposed to the concept of ‘product’ within the meaning of that directive.

65. To my mind, there is scarcely any doubt that the medicinal products at issue in the main proceedings are products that can be valued in money and as such be the subject of commercial transactions. The fact that the supply of such medicinal products pursues an objective of general interest is not in my view capable of calling in question the quality of ‘products’ or ‘goods’ of the medicinal products at issue, but may, if appropriate, be taken into consideration at the justification stage.

66. My conviction in that respect is borne out by the Court’s case-law on the free movement of goods. The Court has considered on numerous occasions that medicinal products came within the scope of Articles 34 and 36 TFEU. (15) Furthermore, the Court held in the judgment in Humanplasma that a prohibition on the importation and marketing of blood and blood components obtained from paid blood donations constituted a measure having equivalent effect to a quantitative restriction on imports within the meaning of Article 34 TFEU. (16)

67. In the third place, the Slovenian Government has disputed the pecuniary nature, for the purposes of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18, of the supply of medicinal products manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma, relying on the fact that the ZTM was prohibited from making a profit on that supply. (17)

68. I recall, in that regard, that a contract cannot fall outside the definition of ‘public contract’ merely because the remuneration remains limited to reimbursement of the expenditure incurred in providing the agreed good or service. (18) In the present case it is apparent from the observations submitted by the Slovenian Government, that the ZTM requests, by way of consideration for the supply of the medicinal products manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma, reimbursement of the costs of manufacturing the medicinal products. In doing so, it passes on to the purchasers the expenditure incurred in the processing, by a third operator, of the surplus blood collected in Slovenian territory. Accordingly, the supply of medicinal products manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma must, in those circumstances, be characterised as a ‘contract for pecuniary interest’.

69. In the fourth place, under the first indent of Article 7(b), the applicability of Directive 2004/18 is also subject to the condition that the estimated value, exclusive of value added tax (VAT), of the public contract must be equal to or greater than a threshold of EUR 207 000, that being the threshold applicable in the case of public supply contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than those referred to in Annex IV, such as Murska Sobota general hospital.

70. In answer to a question for clarification addressed to it by the Court, the referring body stated that the estimated value, exclusive of VAT, of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings was EUR 791 476. That contract is therefore above the threshold provided for in the first indent of Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18.

71. In the fifth place, the Slovenian Government has also relied on the exception established by the Court in the judgment of 9 June 2009, Commission v Germany, (19) in support of its contention that Directive 2004/18 is not applicable. To my mind, however, that exception does not seem to be applicable to the circumstances of the main proceedings.

72. That judgment concerned a contract concluded for a period of 20 years between the City of Hamburg (Germany) and four Landkreise, for the purpose of establishing long-term cooperation between those local authorities for reciprocal treatment of waste. Thus, that contract, which had been concluded without launching a call for tenders, formed both the basis and the legal framework for the future construction and operation of facility intended to perform a public service, namely thermal incineration of waste. The Court held that such a contract was not required to be the subject matter of a prior call for tenders. (20)

73. Admittedly, the circumstances of the main proceedings bear certain resemblances to those of the judgment in Commission v Germany, and in particular the public nature of the contracting parties, namely Murska Sobota general hospital and the ZTM. However, in that judgment it was not the Court's intention to exclude all contracts between public entities (21) from the rules applicable to public contracts, but only those forming both the basis and the legal framework for long-term co-operation with the intention of carrying out a public service. That is not the case of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, the object of which is limited to the occasional supply of medicinal products manufactured on the basis of human plasma.

74. Consequently, I consider that the contract at issue in the main proceedings does not come within the exception established by the Court in the judgment in Commission v Germany.

75. It follows from the foregoing that Directive 2004/18 is applicable in circumstances such as those of the main proceedings.

2. The existence of an infringement of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18

76. Under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authorities are required to treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily.

77. According to the Court's case-law, in application of the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, the aim of which is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure, all tenderers must be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the tenders of all competitors must be subject to the same conditions. (22)

78. Strictly speaking, the national origin requirement distinguishes not between economic operators but between products, by excluding medicinal products not manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma.

79. Nonetheless, it has consistently been held that the principle of equal treatment, of which Article 2 of that directive is a particular expression, prohibits not only overt discrimination based on nationality but also all covert forms of discrimination which, by applying other distinguishing criteria, in fact achieve the same result. (23)

80. A clause requiring that a medicinal product be manufactured on the basis of plasma collected in the national territory is liable to operate mainly to the detriment of economic operators of other Member States, since they will find it more difficult to have access to plasma collected in the national territory than the economic operators of the Member State concerned. (24)

81. In the circumstances of the main proceedings, the discriminatory effects of that national origin requirement are all the more apparent because the ZTM, a Slovenian body, is in practice the only economic operator capable of supplying medicinal products manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma, which precludes all operators in other Member States.

82. I conclude from the foregoing that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that it precludes the national origin requirement. (25)

3. The existence of an infringement of Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18

83. Article 23 of Directive 2004/18 imposes a number of obligations in relation to technical specifications. According to the definition provided in point 1(b) of Annex VI to that directive, 'technical specification' covers, in particular, any specification defining 'the required characteristics of a product or service', including requirements relevant to the product as regards 'production processes and methods'.

84. In the light of that definition, it seems indisputable — and, moreover, it has not been disputed by the parties which have submitted observations to the Court — that the national origin requirement is a technical specification for the purposes of Article 23 of Directive 2004/18.

85. According to Article 23(2) of that directive, technical specifications are to afford equal access for tenderers and are not to have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition. For the reasons set out in points 79 to 81 of this Opinion, I consider that the national origin requirement does not permit equal access for tenderers within the meaning of that provision.

86. In addition, that requirement is contrary to Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18, in that it refers to a specific source or origin, which has the effect of eliminating medicinal products manufactured on the basis of plasma of foreign origin.

87. I conclude from the foregoing that Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude the national origin requirement. (26)

D – The infringement of Article 34 TFEU

88. In the context of this section, I shall consider whether Article 34 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that it precludes the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement. (27)

89. In order to do so, it is necessary to assess (i) the applicability of Article 34 TFEU in the circumstances of the main proceedings and (ii) the existence of an infringement of that article.

1. The applicability of Article 34 TFEU

90. A number of questions must be examined before it can be concluded that Article 34 TFEU is applicable.

91. In the first place, it is necessary to assess whether Article 34 TFEU is still applicable in the circumstances of the main proceedings when it has just been established that there has been an infringement of Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18.

92. I would emphasise in that regard that the scope of the priority supply principle, as provided for in Article 6(71) of the Law on medicinal products, is not limited to the sphere of public contracts. It is therefore necessary to determine whether that principle is compatible with Article 34 TFEU in all situations not coming under Directive 2004/18.

93. Furthermore, as regards the situations that do come within the scope of Directive 2004/18, it is necessary to determine whether that directive brings about exhaustive harmonisation, which would mean that the national measures in question could not be assessed in the light of the provisions of primary law. (28)

94. I consider that Directive 2004/18 does not bring about exhaustive harmonisation of the aspects relating to the free movement of goods, (29) in such a way that the national origin requirement may be assessed in the light of Article 34 TFEU. (30) The Commission has rightly claimed, in that regard, that that requirement was imposed by a public body, namely Murska Sobota general hospital, (31) which as such is subject to the obligations arising under the free movement of goods. (32)

95. In the second place, the Slovenian Government has claimed that the priority supply principle comes within an exclusive power afforded to the Member States by Article 168(7) TFEU in connection with the allocation, use, processing and distribution of human blood.

96. In that regard, the Court has already had occasion to rule that, in accordance with Article 168(7) TFEU, EU law does not affect the power of the Member States to adopt provisions intended to organise health services. In exercising that power, however, the Member States must respect EU law, in particular the FEU Treaty provisions on freedoms of movement. (33)

97. Contrary to what the Slovenian Government's apparent contention, therefore, Article 168(7) TFEU does not confer on the Member States any exemption from the obligations imposed on them by Article 34

TFEU or other provisions of EU law.

98. In the third place, I would observe that, for the reasons set out in points 62 to 66 of this Opinion, medicinal products manufactured on the basis of blood or blood components are ‘goods’ within the meaning of Article 34 TFEU.

99. Consequently, it is necessary to consider whether the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement establish a difference in treatment prohibited by Article 34 TFEU.

2. The existence of an infringement of Article 34 TFEU

100. It is apparent from the observations submitted by the Slovenian Government and from those submitted by the Commission that the medicinal products manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma are prepared not in Slovenian territory, but in another Member State. As the Republic of Slovenia does not have plasma fractionation facilities in its territory, the ZTM has the surplus blood collected processed by a private operator established in another Member State. (34)

101. Accordingly, the priority supply principle does not distinguish between medicinal products manufactured in the Republic of Slovenia and those imported from other Member States, but, rather, distinguishes between medicinal products imported from other Member States. Among the latter medicinal products, only those manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma at the request of the ZTM can be freely imported, whereas other medicinal products, manufactured on the basis of foreign plasma, can be imported only if the former do not permit the needs of the Slovenian population to be covered.

102. Such a difference in treatment, which leads to the channelling of imports in the sense that only certain economic operators can import the products concerned while others are precluded from doing so, constitutes a measure having equivalent effect to a quantitative restriction on imports, as the Commission has claimed. (35)

103. For the same reasons, the national origin requirement also constitutes a measure having equivalent effect to a quantitative restriction on imports, since only suppliers of medicinal products manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma are authorised to participate in the public procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings.

104. I conclude from the foregoing that Article 34 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that it precludes the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement.

E – The existence of justification on the basis of Article 36 TFEU

105. After having established that Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18 and Article 34 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement, it remains to be ascertained whether those measures may be justified by an objective recognised as legitimate by EU law.

106. As regards the differences in treatment prohibited by the provisions of Directive 2004/18, I would observe that that directive does not effect an exhaustive harmonisation of the aspects relating to the grounds of justification, in such a way that those differences may be assessed, in that regard, in the light of the relevant provisions of primary law and the relevant case-law of the Court. (36)

107. In the judgment in Humanplasma, (37) the Court set out the principles applicable to the grounds of justification based on the protection of health and life of humans referred to in Article 36 TFEU.

108. First of all, public health ranks foremost among the assets or interests protected by Article 36 TFEU and it is for the Member States, within the limits imposed by the Treaty, to decide on the degree of protection which they wish to afford to human health and on the way in which that protection is to be achieved. Since the level may vary from one Member State to another, Member States should be allowed some measure of discretion. (38)

109. Next, it follows from the case-law that a provision which is capable of restricting a fundamental freedom guaranteed by the Treaty, such as the free movement of goods, can be properly justified only if it is appropriate for securing the attainment of the legitimate objective pursued and does not go beyond what is necessary in order to attain it. (39)

110. Last, as regards, more specifically, the assessment of the proportionate nature of the provision at issue, it follows from the Court's case-law that since Article 36 TFEU constitutes an exception, which is to be strictly interpreted, to the rule of free movement of goods within the European Union, it is for the national authorities to demonstrate that that provision is necessary in order to achieve the declared purpose and that that objective could not be achieved by less extensive prohibitions or restrictions, or by prohibitions or restrictions having less effect on trade between Member States. (40)

111. In application of that case-law, it is appropriate to examine the legitimacy of the objectives put forward by the Slovenian Government and also the appropriateness and necessity, in the light of those objectives, of the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement imposed in the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings.

112. The Slovenian Government has invoked the objective of encouraging voluntary unpaid blood donations in the national territory and also the objective of national self-sufficiency in blood and in blood products, including medicinal products manufactured on the basis of blood. The Commission has, in essence, examined the same grounds of justification under the more general objective of protection of the health and life of humans referred to in Article 36 TFEU.

113. I would emphasise that the Slovenian Government has not claimed, as a ground of justification, that medicinal products manufactured on the basis of non-Slovenian plasma might be dangerous. I also note, in that regard, that the competent authorities import such medicinal products when the medicinal products manufactured on the basis of Slovenian plasma are exhausted. (41)

114. I shall examine separately the two objectives invoked by the Slovenian Government, in the light of the case-law cited above.

1. The objective of encouraging voluntary unpaid blood donations

115. In the first place, to my mind there is scarcely any doubt that encouraging voluntary unpaid blood donations is a legitimate objective forming part of the more general objective of protecting the health and life of humans.

116. I would emphasise that that objective has been supported on many occasions by the Parliament, the Council and the Commission since the 1990s, (42) following, in particular, the 'contaminated blood' affair in France. (43)

117. Encouraging blood donations is a legitimate objective having regard to the considerable therapeutic importance of blood and blood products. In a communication of 21 December 1994, the Commission wrote in that respect:

> 'Blood and the products derived from it have become an indispensable facet of modern medicine. Their use has brought about dramatic advances in therapy and surgery, saved countless lives, and improved significantly the longevity as well as the quality of life for those who suffer from long-term blood disorders such as haemophilia. Ensuring the safety and the supply of blood and blood products, therefore, is of vital importance. …' (44)

118. As emphasised in recital 2 of Directive 2002/98, the availability of blood and blood components used for therapeutic purposes is dependent largely on Community citizens who are prepared to donate.

119. In addition, the voluntary and unpaid nature of these donations is the consequence of ethical and sanitary considerations put forward by the Slovenian Government. First of all, the principle of inalienability and non-commercialisation of the human body operates against the purchase and sale of blood. (45) Next, the fact that no payment is made for donations makes it possible to preserve the health of donors by ensuring that they are not exploited, in particular those among the most vulnerable categories of the population. (46) Last, the fact that no payment is made makes it possible to protect the health of recipients, by eliminating the risk that a donor may conceal certain relevant medical information in order to receive payment. (47)

120. That political will was implemented by a legal obligation which is now found in Article 20 of Directive 2002/98 and Article 110 of Directive 2001/83, which require Member States to take the necessary measures to encourage voluntary and unpaid blood donations. (48)

121. Having regard to the foregoing, encouraging voluntary and unpaid blood donations constitutes a legitimate objective with regard to Article 36 TFEU.

122. As regards, in the second place, the appropriateness of the measures at issue in the main proceedings, it must be ascertained whether the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement are capable of achieving that legitimate objective of encouraging voluntary and unpaid blood donations.

123. I must confess to having serious doubts in that regard. I see no obvious relationship between those measures, which seek to steer national demand towards products manufactured on the basis of national plasma, and the objective of promoting voluntary and unpaid donations, which seeks to increase the supply of blood and blood components in the national territory.

124. More specifically, how can the fact that Murska Sobota general hospital is required to obtain its supplies from medicinal products manufactured on the basis of national plasma, as is the case in the main proceedings, encourage potential donors to make voluntary and unpaid donations of blood or blood components?

125. The Slovenian Government has claimed, in that regard, that it is important to prohibit the commercial exploitation of the blood and blood components collected, in order to preserve the motivation of potential donors.

126. From that viewpoint, the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement again seem to me to be incapable of achieving the objective ascribed to them, since those measures do not directly or indirectly prohibit the commercial exploitation of the blood collected in the national territory. Furthermore, those measures fail the necessity test, since it is sufficient in that regard to impose a ban on commercial exploitation on the ZTM and on any other person involved in the collection, processing or distribution of the blood collected.

127. Having regard to the foregoing, I consider that the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement cannot be justified by the objective of encouraging voluntary and unpaid donations of blood.

2. The objective of national self-sufficiency (or sufficiency)

128. The Slovenian Government has also relied on the objective of national self-sufficiency in blood and blood products in order to justify the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement.

129. Like the promotion of voluntary and unpaid donations, the objective of self-sufficiency in blood and in blood products has been supported on many occasions by the Parliament, the Council and the Commission. (49)

130. That political will has also been implemented by a legal obligation, now provided for in Article 110 of Directive 2001/83, (50) which provides that Member States are to take the necessary measures to promote EU self-sufficiency in human blood or in human plasma.

131. However, the concept of ‘self-sufficiency’ contains two ambiguities that affect its ability to justify the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement. It should be emphasised in that regard that that concept has not been defined by the EU legislature, in particular not in either Directive 2001/83 or Directive 2002/98.

132. The first ambiguity concerns the territorial scale of the objective of self-sufficiency in blood and blood products. Must that objective be pursued at EU level or may it be pursued at national level? I note that that question is not novel within the EU. (51)

133. None of the parties which have submitted observations to the Court has disputed the fact that self-sufficiency in blood and blood products is a legitimate objective at EU level. (52) However, although the objective of self-sufficiency at EU level may justify restrictions on products imported from third countries, (53) it cannot readily justify a restriction on imports between Member States, such as those at issue in the main proceedings.

134. Therefore, the question that arises in the context of the present case is that of the legitimacy of the objective of self-sufficiency pursued at national level. I consider that that objective of national self-sufficiency is legitimate for the following reasons.

135. First, I recall the considerable therapeutic importance assumed by the use of blood and blood products. (54) In the light of the objective of protecting the health and life of humans referred to in Article 36 TFEU, it is therefore legitimate for a State to ensure that the health services in its territory have sufficient quantities of blood and blood products, without being dependent in that regard on any imports from other Member States.

136. Second, it is apparent from the Commission's observations that lightly populated States, such as the Republic of Slovenia, may encounter difficulties in obtaining supplies on the international markets. According to the Commission, the tendency on those markets, on which the demand for medicinal products derived from blood exceeds the supply of plasma, should encourage undertakings to sell the final product, out of preference, in countries that can pay a higher price or that buy larger quantities. Accordingly, it is legitimate for a lightly populated State to adopt measures to ensure that it is self-sufficient in blood and blood products.

137. Third, and as the Commission has claimed, in the absence of harmonisation at EU level, the objective of self-sufficiency pursued at the level of each State contributes indirectly to the self-sufficiency of the European Union in blood and blood products, an objective the legitimacy of which is not disputed.

138. Fourth, I note that a number of documents issued by the EU institutions approve of the objective of self-sufficiency in blood and in blood products pursued at Member State level. (55)

139. Having regard to the foregoing, I consider that national self-sufficiency in blood and in blood products constitutes a legitimate objective in the light of Article 36 TFEU.

140. A second ambiguity concerns the material scope of the concept of 'self-sufficiency', which may be interpreted in two appreciably different ways. According to a first, more moderate, approach, the objective of national self-sufficiency consists in promoting the capacity of the population of a Member State to satisfy its needs, whether by means of its own resources or by means of imports.

141. According to a second, more radical, approach, that objective means that the needs of the population of a Member State are satisfied solely by means of its own resources, to the exclusion of any imports. This second approach to national self-sufficiency thus promotes an objective of autarky, namely satisfaction, in a closed circuit, of national demand by national supply. (56)

142. I would emphasise that, in a recent working document of the Commission's services, (57) these two approaches were designated respectively by the expressions 'national sufficiency' (58) and 'national self-sufficiency' (59) and, in the interest of clarity, I shall use those terms.

143. It should be strongly emphasised that the objective of national self-sufficiency, based on the idea of autarky, represents the simple negation of the freedoms of movement and the internal market. Since exceptions to the free movement of goods must be interpreted strictly, (60) it does not seem to me to be possible to describe that objective as 'legitimate' in the light of Article 36 TFEU.

144. Admittedly, I cannot rule out the possibility that the second sentence of Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 allows Member States to pursue such an objective by prohibiting imports of blood. However, that provision refers to blood and blood products to the exclusion of medicinal products manufactured industrially on the basis of plasma, such as those at issue in the main proceedings. (61)

145. I recall, moreover, that such medicinal products come under Directive 2001/83 and, accordingly, under the rules of free movement based on mutual recognition of marketing authorisations as provided for in Articles 28 to 39 of that directive. (62) The fact that those medicinal products are included in those rules on free movement shows that the EU legislature did not intend to allow Member States to pursue an objective of autarky with respect to those products.

146. To my mind, therefore, it must be precluded that the objective of national self-sufficiency, based on the idea of autarky, may constitute a legitimate objective in the case of medicinal products manufactured industrially on the basis of plasma, such as those at issue in the main proceedings.

147. On the other hand, I consider that the objective of national sufficiency, conceived as the promotion of the capacity of the population of a Member State to satisfy its needs, whether by means of its own resources or by means of imports, represents such a legitimate objective, for the reasons set out in points 135 to 138 of this Opinion.

148. In addition, that approach seems to me to be consistent with the ultimate objective of the blood policy conducted by the EU and the Member States, which is to ensure the availability of blood products. The fact of authorising imports of blood products makes it possible to counteract, to a certain degree, the risks affecting the collection of blood in the national territory. In other words, the availability of blood and blood products seems to me to be better ensured where there are two supply channels, the national offer and imports from other Member States. (63)

149. It nonetheless remains to be ascertained whether that objective of national sufficiency, conceived as promoting the ability of the population of a Member State to satisfy its needs, whether by means of its own resources or by means of imports, may justify the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement.

150. To my mind, those measures are not appropriate for the pursuit of that objective.

151. The priority supply principle and the national origin requirement have the effect of restricting imports of medicinal products manufactured on the basis of plasma collected in another Member State. By limiting the potential of that first channel of the supply of blood products, those measures reduce the ability of the national population to satisfy its needs.

152. Furthermore, the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement do not have a positive impact on the second channel of supply of blood products, namely the national offer. I have already set out the reasons why those measures, which seek to steer national demand towards products manufactured on the basis of national plasma, are not in my view capable of promoting the collection of blood in the national territory. (64)

153. Consequently, I consider that the priority supply principle and the national origin requirement cannot be justified by the objective of national self-sufficiency in blood products.

154. Having regard to the foregoing, I consider that the infringements of Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18 and of Article 34 TFEU, which result from those measures, are not justified in the light of the objective of protection of the health and life of humans referred to in Article 36 TFEU.

3. The irrelevance of Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 and Article 83 of Directive 2001/83

155. The question for a preliminary ruling expressly mentions Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 and Article 83 of Directive 2001/83. Both of those provisions permit the Member States to introduce more stringent requirements or measures than those laid down in those directives.

156. In the interest of completeness, I wish to set out briefly the reasons why those provisions are not relevant in the circumstances of the main proceedings.

157. As regards Directive 2002/98, it follows from Article 2(1) thereof that the distribution of medicinal products manufactured industrially on the basis of plasma, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, does not fall within the scope of that directive.

158. As the Court explained in the judgment in Octapharma France, (65) the collection and testing of plasma fall within the scope of Directive 2002/98 even where an industrial process is involved, as confirmed by Article 109 of Directive 2001/83. On the other hand, the intervention of an industrial process removes the processing, storage and distribution of plasma from the scope of Directive 2002/98.

159. Consequently, Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 is not applicable in the circumstances of the main proceedings, as Medisanus, the Spanish Government and the Commission have claimed. I find confirmation of that interpretation in the wording of the second sentence of Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98, which provides that a Member State may prohibit or restrict 'imports of blood and blood components'. That provision cannot be interpreted as referring to the import of medicinal products manufactured industrially on the basis of plasma, such as those at issue in the main proceedings.

160. As regards Directive 2001/83, it cannot be disputed that the medicinal products at issue in the main proceedings fall within its scope, since they constitute medicinal products based on blood components and prepared industrially. That solution follows from Article 2(1) of that directive, which defines its scope, and also from the definitions in Article 1(1) and (10) of that directive. (66)

161. Article 83 of Directive 2001/83 comes under Title VII of that directive, which lays down certain requirements that must be met when carrying out the activities of wholesale distribution and brokerage of medicinal products. In particular, Article 77 requires Member States to ensure that wholesale distribution is subject to the requirement of an authorisation, while the conditions on which such authorisation may be granted are defined in Articles 79 and 80.

162. It is in that context that Article 83 of Directive 2001/83, which allows Member States to impose more stringent requirements in respect of the wholesale distribution of certain medicinal products, including medicinal products derived from blood, must be interpreted. In fact, that article refers only to the conditions of the exercise of the activity of wholesale distribution, as defined in the provisions of Title VII of that directive, and which may be supplemented by other obligations determined by the Member States, as confirmed in recital 38 of that directive.

163. The priority supply principle and the national origin requirement relate not to the conditions of the activity of wholesale distribution of medicinal products derived from blood, but to the conditions in which such medicinal products may be imported from another Member State. Consequently, Article 83 of Directive 2001/83 is not relevant in the circumstances of the main proceedings, as Medisanus, the Slovenian and Spanish Governments and the Commission have correctly maintained.

164. It follows from the foregoing that neither Article 4(2) of Directive 2002/98 nor Article 83 of Directive 2001/83 is relevant in the circumstances of the main proceedings.

VI – Conclusion

165. Having regard to the foregoing, I propose that the Court should answer the question for a preliminary ruling referred by the Državna revizijska komisija za revizijo postopkov oddaje javnih naročil (National Commission for the review of awards of public procurement procedures, Slovenia) as follows:

– Articles 34 and 36 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude national rules authorising the import of medicinal products manufactured on the basis of plasma collected in another Member State only if the medicinal products manufactured on the basis of plasma collected in the national territory are not sufficient to cover the needs of the national population, and – Article 2 and Article 23(2) and (8) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public work contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude a clause requiring, in accordance with those national rules, medicinal products forming the subject matter of a public supply contract procedure to be manufactured on the basis of plasma collected in the national territory.

---

1 Original language: French.

---

2 Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44), as most recently amended by Commission Regulation (EU) No 1336/2013 of 13 December 2013 (OJ 2013 L 335, p. 17) (‘Directive 2004/18’).

---

3 Directive 2001/83/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 6 November 2001 on the Community code relating to medicinal products for human use (OJ 2001 L 311, p. 67), as most recently amended by Directive 2012/26/EU of 25 October 2012 (OJ 2012 L 299, p. 1) (‘Directive 2001/83’).

---

4 Directive 2002/98/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 27 January 2003 setting standards of quality and safety for the collection, testing, processing, storage and distribution of human blood and blood components and amending Directive 2001/83/EC (OJ 2003 L 33, p. 30), as most recently amended by Regulation (EC) No 596/2009 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 18 June 2009 (OJ 2009 L 188, p. 14) (‘Directive 2002/98’).

---

5 See, in particular, judgments of 14 July 1994, Peralta (C-379/92, EU:C:1994:296, paragraph 18); of 18 December 2007, Laval un Partneri (C-341/05, EU:C:2007:809, paragraphs 54 and 55); and of 16 December 2010, Josemans (C-137/09, EU:C:2010:774, paragraphs 51 and 52 and the case-law cited).

---

6 See, to that effect, judgments of 7 May 1997, Pistre and Others (C-321/94 to C-324/94, EU:C:1997:229, paragraphs 49 and 54); of 2 December 2010, Ker-Optika (C-108/09, EU:C:2010:725, paragraph 48); and of 26 April 2012, ANETT (C-456/10, EU:C:2012:241, paragraph 33).

---

7 See points 90 to 99 of this Opinion.

---

8 See points 91 and 92 of this Opinion.

---

9 See points 93 and 94 of this Opinion.

---

10 Judgments of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme (C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraph 17 and the case-law cited), and of 24 May 2016, MTHøjgaard and Züblin (C-396/14, EU:C:2016:347, paragraph 23).

---

11 See in that regard judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme (C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited).

---

12 Council Directive of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as most recently amended by Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2014 L 94, p. 1).

---

13 See, in particular, judgments of 17 September 1997, Dorsch Consult (C-54/96, EU:C:1997:413, paragraphs 22 to 38); of 4 February 1999, Köllensperger and Atzwanger (C-103/97, EU:C:1999:52, paragraphs 16 to 25); of 18 September 2014, Bundesdruckerei (C-549/13, EU:C:2014:2235, paragraphs 20 to 23); and of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme (C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraphs 17 to 27).

---

14 Judgment of 10 December 1968, Commission v Italy (7/68, EU:C:1968:51, p. 626). This judgment concerned a tax imposed by the Italian Republic on exports of objects of artistic or historic interest.

---

15 See, in particular, judgments of 20 May 1976, de Peijper (104/75, EU:C:1976:67); of 28 February 1984, Commission v Germany (247/81, EU:C:1984:79); of 1 June 1994, Commission v Germany (C-317/92, EU:C:1994:212); and of 11 September 2008, Commission v Germany (C-141/07, EU:C:2008:492).

---

16 Judgment of 9 December 2010, Humanplasma (C-421/09, EU:C:2010:760, paragraphs 24 and 30).

---

17 It will be recalled that, in practice, the ZTM is the only operator able to supply medicinal products that conform to the national origin requirement and therefore to participate in the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings. See point 54 of this Opinion.

---

18 See, in particular, judgments of 19 December 2012, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others (C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 29), and of 11 December 2014, Azienda sanitaria locale n. 5 'Spezzino' and Others (C-113/13, EU:C:2014:2440, paragraph 37).

---

19 C-480/06, EU:C:2009:357.

---

20 Judgment of 9 June 2009, Commission v Germany (C-480/06, EU:C:2009:357, paragraphs 5, 6, 31, 37, 44 and 49).

---

21 It will be recalled that contracts between public entities are not for that reason excluded from the scope of the EU legislation on public contracts. See the definition of 'economic operator' provided for in Article 1(8) of Directive 2004/18 and also the judgment of 6 October 2015, Consorci Sanitari del Maresme (C-203/14, EU:C:2015:664, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited).

---

22 Judgment of 12 March 2015, eVigilo (C-538/13, EU:C:2015:166, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

---

23 See, to that effect, judgments of 5 December 1989, Commission v Italy (C-3/88, EU:C:1989:606, paragraph 8); of 26 September 2000, Commission v France (C-225/98, EU:C:2000:494, paragraph 80); of 21 February 2008, Commission v Italy (C-412/04, EU:C:2008:102, paragraph 66); and of 17 July 2008, ASM Brescia (C-347/06, EU:C:2008:416, paragraph 60).

---

24 See, by analogy with the criterion of residence on the national territory, judgment of 16 January 2003, Commission v Italy (C-388/01, EU:C:2003:30, paragraph 14).

---

25 As regards the existence of possible justification, see points 105 to 164 of this Opinion.

---

26 As regards the existence of possible justification, see points 105 to 164 of this Opinion.

---

27 I would point out that I have reformulated the question for a preliminary ruling, which referred to Article 18 TFEU, for the reasons set out in points 36 to 43 of this Opinion.

---

28 On the concept of ‘exhaustive harmonisation’, see, in particular, judgments of 14 December 2004, Swedish Match (C-210/03, EU:C:2004:802, paragraph 81); of 16 July 2015, UNIC and Uni.co.pel (C-95/14, EU:C:2015:492, paragraph 33); and of 12 November 2015, Visnapuu (C-198/14, EU:C:2015:751, paragraph 40).

---

29 I find confirmation of that interpretation in recital of Directive 2004/18, which states that that directive lay downs coordinating provisions which are to be interpreted in accordance with the principle of free movement of goods

---

30 This approach was taken by the Court in the judgment of 22 June 1993, Commission v Denmark (C-243/89, EU:C:1993:257), in which it was found that there had been an infringement of both the EU legislation on public contracts and Article 34 TFEU. In the judgment of 9 December 2010, Humanplasma (C-421/09, EU:C:2010:760), which also concerned a call for tenders for the supply of blood products, the Court held that there had been an infringement of Article 34 EU, but was not asked whether there had been an infringement of EU law relating to public contracts.

---

31 See point 61 of this Opinion.

---

32 According to settled case-law, the obligations arising under the free movement of goods also apply to autonomous bodies established by the State. See, to that effect, judgments of 18 June 1975, IGAV (94/74, EU:C:1975:81, paragraph 11); of 13 December 1983, Apple and Pear Development Council (222/82, EU:C:1983:370, paragraph 17); of 12 December 1990, Hennen Olie (C-302/88, EU:C:1990:455, paragraphs 13 to 16); and of 5 November 2002, Commission v Germany (C-325/00, EU:C:2002:633, paragraphs 17 to 20).

---

33 See, as regards freedom of establishment, judgment of 26 September 2013, Ottica New Line (C-539/11, EU:C:2013:591, paragraph 24 and the case-law cited). See also judgment of 21 June 2012, Susisalo and Others (C-84/11, EU:C:2012:374, paragraphs 26 and 27 and the case-law cited). That broad interpretation of the scope of the freedoms of movement is not limited to the areas referred to in Article 168(7) TFEU. See, in particular, judgments of 27 January 2011, Commission v Luxembourg (C-490/09, EU:C:2011:34, paragraph 32) and of 4 February 2015, Melchior (C-647/13, EU:C:2015:54, paragraph 21), and order of 17 November 2015, Plaza Bravo (C-137/15, EU:C:2015:771, paragraph 19).

---

34 See point 56 of this Opinion.

---

35 See, in that regard, judgments of 11 July 1974, Dassonville (8/74, EU:C:1974:82, paragraphs 8 and 9), and of 20 May 1976, de Peijper (104/75, EU:C:1976:67, paragraph 13).

---

36 See the case-law on the concept of ‘exhaustive harmonisation’ cited in footnote 28. Only Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18 refers to the possibility of justification ‘by the subject matter of the contract’, which has not been relied on as such in the observations submitted to the Court. I observe that the Court examined the grounds of justification based on the provisions of primary law, when faced with a national measure contrary to EU legislation on public service contracts, in the judgment of 29 April 2010, Commission v Germany (C-160/08, EU:C:2010:230, paragraphs 73 to 86 and 125 to 130).

---

37 Judgment of 9 December 2010, Humanplasma (C-421/09, EU:C:2010:760).

---

38 Judgment of 9 December 2010, Humanplasma (C-421/09, EU:C:2010:760, paragraphs 32 and 39 and the case-law cited). See also judgments of 11 September 2008, Commission v Germany (C-141/07, EU:C:2008:492, paragraphs 46 and 51) and of 19 October 2016, Deutsche Parkinson Vereinigung (C-148/15, EU:C:2016:776, paragraph 30).

---

39 Judgment of 9 December 2010, Humanplasma (C-421/09, EU:C:2010:760, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited). See also judgment of 11 September 2008, Commission v Germany (C-141/07, EU:C:2008:492, paragraph 48).

---

40 Judgment of 9 December 2010, Humanplasma (C-421/09, EU:C:2010:760, paragraph 38 and the case-law cited). See also judgment of 11 September 2008, Commission v Germany (C-141/07, EU:C:2008:492, paragraph 50).

---

41 See point 58 of this Opinion.

---

42 See, in particular, Resolution of the Parliament of 14 September 1993 on self-sufficiency in and safety of blood and its derivatives in the European Community (OJ 1993 C 268, p. 29); Resolution of the Parliament of 18 November 1993 on safe blood transfusions and use of blood derivatives (OJ 1993 C 329, p. 268); Council Conclusions of 13 December 1993 on self-sufficiency in blood in the European Community (OJ 1994 C 15, p. 6); Communication from the Commission of 25 May 1993 on blood self-sufficiency in the European Community (COM(93) 198 final); Communication from the Commission of 21 December 1994 on Blood safety and self-sufficiency in the European Community (COM(94) 652 final); Council Resolution of 2 June 1995 on blood safety and self-sufficiency in the Community (OJ 1995 C 164, p. 1); Resolution of the Parliament of 14 July 1995 on blood safety in the European Union (OJ 1995 C 249, p. 231); Resolution of the Parliament of 17 April 1996 on the communication from the Commission on blood safety and self-sufficiency in the European Community (OJ 1996 C 141, p. 131); and Council Resolution of 12 November 1996 on a strategy towards blood safety and self-sufficiency in the European Community (OJ 1996 C 374, p. 1).

---

43 This affair, which concerned inoculation with the AIDS virus in the course of blood transfusions in the 1980s, was revealed by the press in the course of 1991.

---

44 Communication COM(94) 652 final, p. 2. See also 2nd Report from the Commission of 23 March 2011 on Voluntary and Unpaid Donation of Blood and Blood Components (COM (2011) 138 final), p. 3.

---

45 See, in particular, Resolution of the Parliament of 14 September 1993 on self-sufficiency in and safety of blood and its derivatives in the European Community, point F; Communication COM(94) 652 final, p. 8; Resolution of the Parliament of 17 April 1996 on the communication from the Commission on blood safety and self-sufficiency in the European Community, point 7.

---

46 See, in particular, Communication COM(93) 198 final, p. 4, and Communication COM(94) 652 final, p. 8.

---

47 See, in particular, Communication COM(93) 198 final, p. 4; Report from the Commission of 21 April 2016 on the implementation of Directives 2002/98/EC, 2004/33/EC, 2005/61/EC and 2005/62/EC setting standards of quality and safety for human blood and blood components (COM(2016) 224 final), p. 10.

---

48 See also recital 19 of Directive 2001/83 and recital 23 of Directive 2002/98.

---

49 See documents cited in footnote 42.

50 This provision was first introduced into the EU legal order by Article 3(4) of Council Directive 89/381/EEC of 14 June 1989 extending the scope of Directives 65/65/EEC and 75/319/EEC on the approximation of provisions laid down by Law, Regulation or Administrative Action relating to proprietary medicinal products and laying down special provisions for medicinal products derived from human blood or human plasma (OJ 1989 L 181, p. 44).

51 See written question E-146/95 submitted by José Valverde Lopez (PPE) to the Commission on 8 February 1995, on difficulties with interpretation of the concept of blood self-sufficiency (OJ 1995 C 152, p. 34).

52 As regards human blood and human plasma, that objective is clear from Article 110 of Directive 2001/83.

53 See, in particular, Resolution of the Parliament of 14 July 1995 on blood safety in the European Union, point 3.

54 See point 117 of this Opinion.

55 See, in particular, Resolution of the Parliament of 14 September 1993 on self-sufficiency in and safety of blood and its derivatives in the European Community points D and 2; Communication COM(93) 198 final, p. 8; Council conclusions of 13 December 1993 on self-sufficiency in blood in the European Community; Council Resolution of 2 June 1995 on blood safety and self-sufficiency in the Community.

56 The Republic of Slovenia adopted this second approach when defining the concept of self-sufficiency provided for in Article 3(18) of the Law on the supply of blood.

57 Commission Staff working document of 21 April 2016 on the implementation of the principle of voluntary and unpaid donation for human blood and blood components as foreseen in Directive 2002/98/EC on setting standards of quality and safety for the collection, testing, processing, storage and distribution of human blood and blood components and amending Directive 2001/83/EC [SWD(2016) 130 final].

58 Ibid., p. 4: ‘National sufficiency means fulfilling the needs of blood, blood components and plasma derivatives for medical application of the resident population by accessing resources from within the country and through regional/international co-operation’. See also the answer to the written question E-146/95, submitted by José Valverde Lopez (PPE) to the Commission on 8 February 1995, on difficulties with interpretation of the concept of blood self-sufficiency (OJ 1995 C 152, p. 34): ‘The concept of Community self-sufficiency implies that patients should always have access to the medicinal products they need’.

59 Ibid.: ‘National self-sufficiency means fulfilling the needs of human blood, blood components and plasma derivatives for medical application of the resident population by accessing resources from within the country’s population’. See also Communication COM(93) 198 final, p. 7: ‘Self-sufficiency — Provision of human blood and blood products from within a population to satisfy the clinical needs of that population’.

60 See 110 of this Opinion.

61 See points 157 to 159 of this Opinion.

62 See point 160 of this Opinion.

---

63 On the positive effect of trade between Member States on safety of supply in blood and blood products, see, in particular, Resolution of the Parliament of 14 September 1993 on self-sufficiency in and safety of blood and its derivatives in the European Community, points B and 3(i); Resolution of the Parliament of 14 July 1995 on blood safety in the European Union, point 1; and Resolution of the Parliament of 17 April 1996 on the communication from the Commission on blood safety and self-sufficiency in the European Community, point 1.

---

64 See points 122 to 127 of this Opinion.

---

65 Judgment of 13 March 2014, Octapharma France (C-512/12, EU:C:2014:149, paragraph 40): ‘plasma from whole blood which is prepared by a method involving an industrial process and which is intended for transfusions comes, in accordance with Article 109 of Directive 2001/83, within the scope of Directive 2002/98 with respect to its collection and testing, and within the scope of Directive 2001/83, as amended by Directive 2004/27, with respect to its processing, storage and distribution, on condition that it satisfies the definition of a medicinal product under Article 1(2) of the latter directive.’

---

66 See also judgment of 13 March 2014, Octapharma France (C-512/12, EU:C:2014:149, paragraphs 38 and 39).

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Second Chamber)

8 September 2016 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Article 49 TFEU — Freedom of establishment — Betting and gambling — Restrictions — Overriding reasons of public interest — Proportionality — Public procurement — Conditions for participating in a call for tenders and assessment of economic and financial standing — Exclusion of the tenderer for not presenting certificates of economic and financial standing issued by two different banks — Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 47 — Applicability)

In Case C-225/15,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale di Reggio Calabria (District Court, Reggio Calabria, Italy), made by decision of 28 February 2015, received at the Court on 15 May 2015, in the criminal proceedings against

Domenico Politanò,

THE COURT (Second Chamber),

composed of M. Ilešič, President of the Chamber, C. Toader (Rapporteur), A. Rosas, A. Prechal and E. Jarašiūnas, Judges,

Advocate General: N. Wahl,

Registrar: L. Carrasco Marco, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 13 April 2016,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Mr Politanò, by D. Agnello and D. Neto, avvocati,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and C. Colelli, avvocato dello Stato,

– the Belgian Government, by M. Jacobs and L. Van den Broeck, acting as Agents, and P. Vlaemminck, R. Verbeke and B. Van Vooren, advocaten,

– the German Government, by T. Henze and J. Möller, acting as Agents,

– the Polish Government, by B. Majczyna, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by E. Montaguti, H. Tserepa-Lacombe and A. Tokár, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 16 June 2016,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 49 TFEU, the principles of equal treatment and effectiveness and Article 47 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in criminal proceedings against Mr Domenico Politanò for failing to comply with the Italian legislation governing the collection of bets.

Legal context

EU law

3 Under Article 1(2)(a) and (d) and (4) of Directive 2004/18:

‘2. (a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

...

(d) “Public service contracts” are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.

...

4. “Service concession” is a contract of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in this right together with payment.’

4 Article 17 of that directive, entitled ‘Service concessions’, provided:

‘Without prejudice to the application of Article 3, this Directive shall not apply to service concessions as defined in Article 1(4).’

5 Article 47 of that directive, entitled ‘Economic and financial standing’, was worded as follows:

‘1. Proof of the economic operator’s economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) appropriate statements from banks or, where appropriate, evidence of relevant professional risk indemnity insurance;

(b) the presentation of balance-sheets or extracts from the balance-sheets, where publication of the balance-sheet is required under the law of the country in which the economic operator is established;

(c) a statement of the undertaking’s overall turnover and, where appropriate, of turnover in the area covered by the contract for a maximum of the last three financial years available, depending on the date on which the undertaking was set up or the economic operator started trading, insofar as information on such turnovers is available.

2. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.

3. Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 4 may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.

4. Contracting authorities shall specify, in the contract notice or in the invitation to tender, which reference or references mentioned in paragraph 1 they have chosen and which other references must be provided.

5. If, for any valid reason, the economic operator is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.'

6 Directive 2004/18 was repealed by Directive 2014/24/EU of the European Parliament and the Council of 26 February 2014 (OJ 2004 L 94, p. 65).

Italian law

7 Article 10(9g) and (9h) of decreto-legge n. 16 — Disposizioni urgenti in materia di semplificazioni tributarie, di efficientamento e potenziamento delle procedure di accertamento (Decree-Law No 16 laying down urgent provisions related to fiscal simplification, improving effectiveness and reinforcing monitoring procedures) of 2 March 2012 (GURI No 52, of 2 March 2012, p. 1), converted into statute, after amendment, by Law No 44 of 26 April 2012 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 99, of 28 April 2012) ('the 2012 Decree-Law') provides:

'9g As part of a reform of the legislation relating to public gambling, including that relating to the collection of bets on sporting events, including horse racing, and non-sporting events, the provisions of the present paragraph have the aim of promoting that reorganisation, through an initial alignment of the expiry dates of the licences for the collection of bets in question, while observing the requirement that the national rules on the selection of persons who, on behalf of the State, collect bets on sporting events, including horse racing, and non-sporting events, are adjusted to the principles laid down by the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union, on 16 February 2012, in Joined Cases C-72/10 and C-77/10. To that end, in view of the impending expiry of a group of licences for the collection of those bets, the Independent Authority for the Administration of State Monopolies shall immediately, and in any event by 31 July 2012 at the latest, initiate a call for tenders for the selection of persons who are to collect such bets with due regard, at the very least, to the following criteria:

(a) the possibility of participation for persons already carrying out an activity related to the collection of bets in one of the States of the European Economic Area, as a result of having their legal and operational seat there, on the basis of a valid and effective authorisation issued under the provisions in force in the law of that State and who fulfil the requirements as to reputation, reliability and financial standing specified by the Independent Authority for the Administration of State Monopolies, account being taken of the provisions in this matter referred to in Law No 220 of 13 December 2010, and in Decree-Law No 98 of 6 July 2011, converted, after amendment, into statute by Law No 111 of 15 July 2011;

(b) the award of a licence, expiring on 30 June 2016, for the collection, exclusively in a physical network, of bets on sporting events, including horse racing, and non-sporting events, from agencies, up to a maximum of 2 000, whose sole activity is the marketing of public gambling products, without restriction as to the minimum distances between those agencies or with respect to other collection points, which are already active, for identical bets;

(c) provision, as a price component, for a basic contract value of EUR 11 000 for each agency;

(d) the conclusion of a licence agreement whose content is consistent with any other principle laid down in the abovementioned judgment of the Court of Justice of the European Union of 16 February 2012 and with the compatible national provisions in force regarding public gambling;

(e) the possibility of managing agencies in any municipality or province, without numerical limits on a territorial basis or more favourable conditions by comparison with licensees who are already authorised to collect identical bets or which may, in any event, be favourable to those licensees;

(f) the lodging of deposits consistent with the provisions of Article 24 of Decree-Law No 98 of 6 July 2011, converted, after amendment, into statute by Law No 111 of 15 July 2011.

9h The licensees who are to collect bets referred to in paragraph 9g, whose contracts expire on 30 June 2012, shall continue their collection activities until the date of the conclusion of the licence contracts awarded in accordance with the above paragraph. The following paragraphs are repealed: paragraphs 37 and 38 of Article 24 of Decree-Law No 98 of 6 July 2011, converted, after amendment, into statute by Law No 111 of 15 July 2011, subparagraph e of paragraph 287 of Article 1 of Law No 311 of 30 December 2004, and subparagraph e of paragraph 4 of Article 38 of Decree-Law No 223 of 4 July 2006, converted, after amendment, into statute by Law No 248 of 4 August 2006.'

8 In accordance with the provisions of the 2012 Decree-Law, tendering procedures were launched by the Italian authorities in the course of 2012. Article 3.2 of the Administrative Rules for the awarding of concessions and the signature of agreements annexed to the corresponding contract notice ('the Monti contract notice') required tenderers which had been formed for less than two years and whose overall revenues linked to the activity of gaming operator were below two million euros during the two most recent business years to submit statements issued by at least two banks, in order to prove their economic and financial standing.

9 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Italian law by decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE (Legislative Decree No 163 establishing the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC) of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006).

10 Under Article 41 of that legislative decree, the conditions to be satisfied in order to prove the economic and financial standing to carry out the service are to be specified by the contracting authority. However, according to the same article, a candidate who, for valid reasons, is unable to submit the requisite bank or accounting references may prove his economic and financial standing by producing any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11 On 6 February 2015, during a check carried out in the business premises called 'Betuniq' in Polistena (Italy), which is managed by Mr Politanò and affiliated to UniqGroup Ltd, a Maltese company, the administrative police from the Questura di Reggio Calabria (police headquarters of Reggio Calabria, Italy) established that the activity of collecting bets was being carried out there without a concession first having been issued.

12 Accordingly, by decision of 13 February 2015, the Giudice per le indagini preliminari (judge responsible for preliminary investigations) of the Tribunale di Palmi (District Court, Palmi, Italy) ordered the preventive sequestration of the assets used for that activity.

13 Following that decision, Mr Politanò brought an action against the sequestration before the referring court, claiming that certain clauses of the Monti contract notice were incompatible with Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU.

14 According to the applicant in the main proceedings, therefore, his conduct does not constitute an offence, since the collecting of bets on sporting events on behalf of the Maltese company UniqGroup must be considered to be lawful, in so far as the domestic legislation is contrary to Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU.

15 He maintains in that regard that UniqGroup was excluded from the tendering procedure launched in 2012 on the ground that it had not submitted two certificates of economic and financial standing issued by two different banks, as required by Article 3.2 of the Administrative Rules annexed to the Monti contract notice.

16 According to the referring court, a tendering procedure involving gambling operators established in different Member States, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, was necessarily required to comply with Article 47 of Directive 2004/18, which provides for the possibility of evaluating economic and financial standing 'by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate'.

17 The definition by the Italian authorities of strict conditions for participation in the tendering procedure had to be reconciled with the principle of the widest possible participation in the tendering procedure, and any interested parties should be guaranteed the possibility of proving his economic and financial standing by any document — other than those requested by the contracting authority — considered appropriate.

18 According to the referring court, it follows that those authorities were required to state expressly the criteria considered appropriate and effective for demonstrating the requisite economic and financial standing, so that each tenderer may in any event prove such standing effectively.

19 That court considers that, in this instance, the Administrative Rules annexed to the Monti contract notice did not allow UniqGroup to prove, other than by producing the documents specified therein, its economic and financial standing.

20 In those circumstances, the Tribunale di Reggio Calabria (District Court, Reggio Calabria, Italy) decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 49 TFEU, as well as the principles of equal treatment and effectiveness, be interpreted as precluding national legislation in the field of betting and gambling which provides for the organisation of a fresh call for tenders (as governed by Article [10(9g) of the 2012 Decree-Law]) for the award of licences that includes clauses excluding from the tendering procedure undertakings which have failed to meet the condition relating to economic and financial standing as a result of the failure to provide for criteria other than the requirement of two bank references from two separate banks?

(2) Must Article 47 of Directive 2004/18/EC ... be interpreted as precluding national legislation in the field of betting and gambling which provides for the organisation of a fresh call for tenders (as governed by Article [10(9g) of the 2012 Decree-Law]) for the award of licences [that includes clauses excluding from the tendering procedure undertakings which have failed to meet the condition] relating to economic and financial standing, as a result of the failure to provide for alternative documentation and options, as laid down under [EU] legislation?’

Consideration of the questions referred

Admissibility

21 The Italian Government and, as regards the second question only, the European Commission submit that the request for a preliminary ruling should be declared inadmissible, since the order for reference does not set out the factual context sufficiently so as to allow the Court to provide a useful answer.

22 In that regard, it should be noted that, according to settled case-law, questions on the interpretation of EU law referred by a national court in the factual and legislative context which that court is responsible for defining, and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court to determine, enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (judgment of 22 January 2015, Stanley International Betting and Stanleybet Malta, C-463/13, EU:C:2015:25, paragraph 26 and the case-law cited).

23 It is also settled case-law that the need to provide an interpretation of EU law which will be of use to the national court makes it necessary for that court to define the factual and legal context of the questions it is asking or, at the very least, to explain the factual circumstances on which those questions are based. The order for reference must also set out the precise reasons why the national court is unsure as to the interpretation of EU law and considers it necessary to refer a question to the Court for a preliminary ruling (judgment of 22 January 2015, Stanley International Betting and Stanleybet Malta, C-463/13, EU:C:2015:25, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

24 Moreover, the Court has found that the requirements recalled in paragraphs 22 and 23 above may be satisfied more easily where the request for a preliminary ruling comes within a context that is already largely familiar (see, in particular, order of 17 July 2014, 3D I, C-107/14, not published, EU:C:2014:2117, paragraph 12 and the case-law cited).

25 However, it is apparent from the order for reference, first, that it describes with sufficient clarity and precision the legal and factual context of the case in the main proceedings and, secondly, that the information it contains allow the scope of the questions asked to be determined, as evidenced, moreover, by the written observations of the various governments and the Commission.

26 In those circumstances, the request for a preliminary ruling must be held to be admissible.

The second question

27 By its second question, which it is appropriate to examine first, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding a national provision, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which imposes on operators wishing to respond to a call for tenders for the grant of concessions in the field of betting and gambling the obligation of providing evidence of their economic and financial standing by means of statements issued by at least two banks, without allowing that standing to be proved by any other document.

28 As a preliminary point, it should be ascertained whether the directive in question is applicable in a case such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

29 In that regard, it must be pointed out that Directive 2004/18 involves procedures for the award of public service contracts and not those relating to service concessions, which are excluded from the scope of that directive pursuant to Article 17 thereof. That provision actually expressly excludes service concessions, which are defined in Article 1(4) of that directive as contracts of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right together with payment.

30 According to the case-law of the Court, it follows from a comparison of the definitions of a public service contract and a service concession provided, respectively, by Article 1(2)(a) and (d) and by Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18 that the difference between a public service contract and a service concession lies in the consideration for the provision of services. A service contract involves consideration which, although it is not the only consideration, is paid directly by the contracting authority to the service provider, while, for a service concession, the consideration for the provision of services consists in the right to exploit the service, either alone, or together with payment (see judgment of 10 March 2011, Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, C-274/09, EU:C:2011:130, paragraph 24 and the case-law cited).

31 It also follows from that case-law that, while the method of remuneration is, therefore, one of the determining factors for the classification of a service concession, such a classification implies that the service supplier takes the risk of operating the services in question and that the absence of a transfer to the service provider of the risk connected with operating the service shows that the transaction concerned is a public service contract and not a service concession (see, to that effect, judgment of 10 March 2011, Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, C-274/09, EU:C:2011:130, paragraph 26 and the case-law cited).

32 However, as was observed by the Advocate General in point 51 of his Opinion, in the case in the main proceedings, the service provider receives no remuneration from the contracting authority and bears the entire risk associated with the activity of collecting and transmitting bets.

33 It follows that a concession relating to the organisation of bets, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, cannot be classified as a public contract for services within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) and (b) of Directive 2004/18.

34 Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to the second question is that the directive in question, in particular Article 47, must be interpreted as meaning that national legislation governing the grant of concessions in the field of betting and gambling, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, does not fall within its scope.

The first question

35 As a preliminary point, it must be pointed out that although the referring court did make reference, in the formulation of the first question, to the principles of equal treatment and effectiveness, the order for reference contains no details on the reasons that prompted it to inquire about the interpretation of those principles in the context of the case in the main proceedings or on the relationship between those principles and the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings.

36 Having regard to the foregoing, it must be considered that, by its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 49 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding a national provision, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which imposes on operators wishing to respond to a call for tenders for the grant of concessions in the field of betting and gambling the obligation of providing evidence of their economic and financial standing by means of statements issued by at least two banks, without also allowing that standing to be proved by other means.

37 First of all, it is settled case-law that all measures which prohibit, impede or render less attractive the exercise of the freedoms guaranteed by Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU must be regarded as restrictions on the freedom of establishment and/or the freedom to provide services (see judgment of 22 January 2015, Stanley International Betting and Stanleybet Malta, C-463/13, EU:C:2015:25, paragraph 45 and the case-law cited).

38 A provision of a Member State, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which subjects the exercise of an economic activity to the obtaining of a concession and subjects, in that context, tenderers to the obligation of producing certificates from two different banking providers, might dissuade economic operators from participating in a tendering procedure and is therefore capable of constituting a restriction of the freedom of establishment within the meaning of Article 49 TFEU.

39 Next, it is appropriate to bear in mind that legislation on betting and gambling is one of the areas in which there are significant moral, religious and cultural differences between the Member States. In the absence of harmonisation on the issue at EU level, the Member States enjoy a wide discretion as regards choosing the level of consumer protection and the preservation of order in society which they deem the most appropriate (see, to that effect, judgment of 22 January 2015, Stanley International Betting and Stanleybet Malta, C-463/13, EU:C:2015:25, paragraphs 51 and 52 and the case-law cited).

40 The Member States are therefore free to set the objectives of their policy on betting and gambling and, where appropriate, to define in detail the level of protection sought. However, the restrictive measures that the Member States impose must satisfy the conditions laid down in the case-law of the Court as regards inter alia their justification by overriding reasons in the general interest and their proportionality (see, to that effect, judgment of 8 September 2009, Liga Portuguesa de Futebol Profissional and Bwin International, C-42/07, EU:C:2009:519, paragraph 59 and the case-law cited).

41 It is appropriate, therefore, to determine whether a restriction, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, may be allowed as a derogation, on grounds of public policy, public security or public health, as expressly provided for under Articles 51 TFEU and Article 52 TFEU, which are also applicable in the area of freedom to provide services by virtue of Article 62 TFEU, or justified, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, by overriding reasons in the public interest (judgment of 12 June 2014, Digibet and Albers, C-156/13, EU:C:2014:1756, paragraph 22 and the case-law cited).

42 In the present case, the Italian Government submits that the restrictive provision at issue is justified, as part of the objective of combating criminality linked to betting and gambling, by the interest in ensuring the continuation of the lawful activity of collecting bets in order to curb the growth of parallel illegal activities and by the interest in protecting consumers. Thus, it is essential that the economic and financial capacities of concession holders enable them to carry out their activity on the market over the longer term.

43 In that regard, it is worthwhile bearing in mind that such an objective may be a reason of overriding public interest capable of justifying a restriction on fundamental freedoms, such as that at issue in the main proceedings (see, to that effect, judgment of 28 January 2016, Laezza, C-375/14, EU:C:2016:60, paragraphs 34 and 35). The Court has, moreover, previously held that the objective of combating criminality linked to betting and gambling is capable of justifying restrictions on fundamental freedoms under restrictive rules (see, to that effect, judgments of 12 September 2013, Biasci and Others, C-660/11 and C-8/12, EU:C:2013:550, paragraph 23, and of 28 January 2016, Laezza, C-375/14, EU:C:2016:60, paragraph 32).

44 However, it is still necessary to determine whether the restriction at issue in the main proceedings is suitable for ensuring the attainment of the objective pursued and does not go beyond what is necessary in order to achieve that objective, including by ensuring that the national legislation at issue genuinely reflects a concern to attain it in a consistent and systematic manner (see, to that effect, judgment of 12 July 2012, HIT and HIT LARIX, C-176/11, EU:C:2012:454, paragraph 22 and the case-law cited).

45 In relation to the question of whether that restriction is suitable for ensuring the attainment of the objective pursued, it should be noted that bank statements from two different banks, such as those required by the provision at issue in the main proceedings, are able to prove the economic and financial standing of the tenderer to exercise the activity of collecting bets.

46 The obligation of providing statements from two banks is manifestly capable of ensuring that the economic operator has an economic and financial standing enabling him to fulfil the obligations he may contract towards winning gamblers. In that regard, the Court has previously held that the requirement for a share capital of a certain amount may prove to be of use in order to ensure such an economic and financial standing (see, to that effect, judgment of 15 September 2011, Dickinger and Ömer, C-347/09, EU:C:2011:582, paragraph 77).

47 Furthermore, it must be determined whether, given the wide discretion enjoyed in the non-harmonised area of betting and gambling by national authorities for determining what is required in order to ensure consumer protection and the preservation of order in society (see, to that effect, judgment of 12 June 2014, Digibet and Albers, C-156/13, EU:C:2014:1756, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited), the obligation of producing two statements from two different banks does not go beyond what is necessary in order to achieve the objective pursued, as such an assessment must be carried out solely by reference to the objectives pursued by the competent authorities of the Member State concerned and the level of protection which they seek to ensure (see judgment of 15 September 2011, Dickinger and Ömer, C-347/09, EU:C:2011:582, paragraph 46 and the case-law cited).

48 In that context, it is appropriate to note, as the Advocate General observed, in essence, in points 80 and 81 of his Opinion, that, in view of the particular nature of economic activities in the betting and gambling sector, the requirement imposed on tenderers which had been formed for less than two years and whose overall revenues linked to the activity of gaming operator were below two million euros during the two most recent business years to provide appropriate statements issued by at least two banks does not appear to go further than is necessary in order to achieve the objective pursued.

49 However, it is for the referring court, taking account of the indications given by the Court of Justice, to verify, in an overall assessment of the circumstances surrounding the grant of the new licences, whether the restrictions imposed by the Member State concerned satisfy the conditions laid down in the Court's case-law concerning their proportionality (see, to that effect, judgment of 12 June 2014, Digibet and Albers, C-156/13, EU:C:2014:1756, paragraph 40 and the case-law cited).

50 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 49 TFEU must be interpreted as not precluding a national provision, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which imposes on operators wishing to respond to a call for tenders for the grant of concessions in the field of betting and gambling the obligation of providing evidence of their economic and financial standing by means of statements issued by at least two banks, without also allowing that standing to be proved by other means, where such a provision is capable of satisfying the conditions of proportionality laid down by the case-law of the Court, which is for the referring court to ascertain.

Costs

51 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, in particular Article 47, must be interpreted as meaning that national legislation governing the grant of concessions in the field of betting and gambling, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, does not fall within its scope.

2. Article 49 TFEU must be interpreted as not precluding a national provision, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which imposes on operators wishing to respond to a call for tenders for the grant of concessions in the field of betting and gambling the obligation of providing evidence of their economic and financial standing by means of statements issued by at least two banks, without also allowing that standing to be proved by other means, where such a provision is capable of satisfying the conditions of proportionality laid down by the case-law of the Court, which is for the referring court to ascertain.

[Signatures]

---

* Language of the case: Italian.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL

WAHL

delivered on 16 June 2016 (1)

Case C-225/15

Domenico Politanò

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunale di Reggio Calabria (District Court, Reggio Calabria, Italy))

(Reference for a preliminary ruling –Article 49 TFEU — Freedom of establishment — Principles of equivalence and of effectiveness — Betting and gaming — Restrictions — Conditions of participation in the call for tenders and assessment of economic and financial standing — Exclusion of tenderer for failure to submit certificates of economic and financial standing issued by two separate banks — Overriding reasons of public interest — Proportionality — Applicability of Article 47 of Directive 2004/18/EC)

